Southwest Border Tour, Spring 2019

We will return to parts of eastern Arizona and Mexico on our next border tour.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Jerry Kammer, a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist who has lived and written extensively on the border, will once again lead our excursion through vast expanses of high desert, grasslands, mountains, and areas of wilderness. Along the way we will receive briefings and tours from the Border Patrol, visit ranchers, and meet with law enforcement officials. A local guide will show us around the Mexican town of Agua Prieta, including stops at a malquiladora, a coffee company, and the first drug tunnel constructed by the notorious El Chapo Guzman. The trip also includes visits to Tucson Mountain Park and the Sonora Desert Museum.

We will see the border from several different perspectives while taking in the captivating landscapes and experiencing the culture of the southwest. These tours are invaluable to anyone seeking to understand illegal immigration. If you are interested in joining us, check out our border tour page and contact John Wahala at jaw@cis.org

Endangered Animal Smuggling Increases for the First Time in Nearly a Decade

Smuggling from Latin America mirrors immigration trends

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (December 18, 2018) - A new analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies of Department of the Interior data shows that live, endangered animal smuggling into the U.S. has increased for the first time in nearly a decade. The analysis also demonstrates that animal smuggling from Latin America closely mirrors trends in illegal immigration.

Matt Sussis, the Center's Assistant Director of Communications and author of the analysis, said, "Animal smuggling, drug smuggling, and human smuggling are all closely tied, and often involve the same dangerous transnational cartels. This new data demonstrates that as border crossings declined during the early months of the Trump presidency, so too did wildlife seizures. However, as the number of migrants crossing our southern border continues to rebound, it's likely that we'll see another surge in the number of animals being smuggled, too."

In 2017, 157 live endangered animals were seized by FWS that were being smuggled across the northern or southern border, or through various American ports. That marks a slight increase from the 148 seizures in 2016 — the first increase since 2008-2009. Driving the increase was Indonesia, which accounted for 36 percent of seizures.

Historically, Latin America has accounted for over one-quarter of all live, endangered animals seized in the United States. However, in 2017, Latin American seizures fell to just 14 percent. This is likely because 2017 includes the initial months of the Trump presidency, when levels of illegal border crossings fell drastically to as low as 10,000 monthly apprehensions on fears that Trump would tighten security at the border.

It will be nearly another year before the 2018 CITES data becomes available, but when it does, it will be important to see whether there is once again an uptick in Latin American animal smuggling. The "Trump deterrent effect" has evidently worn off with regard to illegal immigration across the southern border. Only time will tell if that same deterrent effect has also worn off for Latin American animal smuggling.

CIS Investigates Terror Travel Threat in Panama and Costa Rica

Videos, interviews, and articles from the field

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (December 19, 2018) – The Center for Immigration Studies sent a reporting team to Panama and Costa Rica to learn more about potential terrorist travel to the U.S. after President Donald Trump prompted a national debate by claiming Islamic terrorists were traveling through Central America to the U.S. border. The Center found that hundreds of migrants from countries of terrorism concern in the Middle East and elsewhere (referred to by law enforcement as "special interest aliens") are indeed on their way to the U.S. border. The reporting makes clear that U.S. border security is concerned with more than Central Americans and Mexicans; the migration of special interest aliens is a significant American counterterrorism issue and national security issue.

Todd Bensman, the Center's senior national security fellow, traveled to Panama, a key bottleneck country where migrants from countries of terrorism concern typically have to move through to reach the Central American routes to the American border. Bensman visited jungle camps, spoke with government officials, intelligence officers, border patrol officers, and interviewed several of the hundreds of U.S.-bound migrants from countries of terror concern he met from Iran, Iraq, Pakistan, and Bangladesh.

Videos photos, and articles: https://cis.org/Immigration-Topic/CIS-Investigates-Terror-Travel-Threat-Panama-and-Costa-Rica

Bensman said, "Smuggling networks provide a permanent bridge for Islamic terrorists to follow in the path of Central American caravans in reaching the southern border. This bridge is just as viable as the ones used by terrorists to continually conduct attacks in Europe. Luckily, and sometimes quite serendipitously, migrant terrorist suspects have been caught in Panama and in Costa Rica while en route. American policy makers and the public need to consider this traffic as the reality it is in any debate and policy creation about our borders, now confirmed through direct observation and in interviews with the migrants themselves by CIS."

Canada Gets Royal Assent to Share Border Entry and Exit Data with the U.S.

December 21, 2018

This impending law will help both nations, because an entry into one of the two countries from the other obviously constitutes an exit as well. Given that departure data collection is incomplete in both nations, this will help fill a critical gap, particularly for foreigners coming and going across the shared border. It is obviously important for each country to be aware that an alien seeking an immigration benefit (asylum, for instance) within its boundaries has decided to cross the border into foreign turf, because such a move has legal consequences that might otherwise be concealed from the relevant authorities.

The data will include both citizens and resident aliens ("landed immigrants" as they are called in Canada).

State Department Announces New Public-Private Foreign Assistance Partnership for Southern Mexico and Central America

Will it be effective and taint-free?

The announcement is potentially good news, and will certainly help bolster AMLO's public profile at home, and hopefully ensure that there is no substantive domestic resistance to his announced plan to beef up military and border security resources at Mexico's own southern border. Although after the recent unruly acts of Central Americans participating in caravans there and elsewhere in Mexico, including Tijuana, gateway to the United States, Mexico's people seem decidedly much cooler about the trespasses of southern neighbors into their sovereign territory while en route to the United States.

But the age-old question, as it always has been with foreign development aid, is this: Will it be effective? Or, because money is always fungible, will it simply be sponged up and used ineffectively — or worse, corruptly — by the host governments and a variety of nongovernmental agencies, some of which are well-intended but inept, and some of which are nothing more than parasites created to siphon off the handouts, often into politicians' pockets?

No Billion-Dollar Immigration Slush Fund? It Already Exists

Yes, heaven forfend that an administration should have unfettered access to such an immigration slush fund to do virtually anything it wishes, unchecked by the Congress!

Oh, wait a minute. We already have one. It's called the Examinations Fee Account, which derives from the dollars collected for each and every immigration application filed with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(USCIS), the Department of Homeland Security's standalone successor to what used to be the Examinations Division of the now-defunct Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). I can recall when the fee account was so bare that, even though it was designed to offset taxpayer costs to fund both the human resources and work of the Examinations Division, INS continued to have to seek yearly congressional appropriations to hobble along with its work.

But now that fund is so fat that it not only funds the entire USCIS enterprise, there is an additional $1 billion-plus surplus sitting in it. What has it been used for? Why, such things as the constitutionally dubious and extra-statutory DACA and DAPA programs. Although DAPA never got off the ground because it was blocked by court decisions, DACA has never been fully self-funding from the various fees that are collected for enrolling in the program.

Judge Sullivan Takes Control of Asylum Law

A result Congress never intended

Under the expansive jurisdictional standard announced by Judge Sullivan, any precedential decision by the BIA or AG relating to asylum could be subject to review by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia under section 242(e)(3) of the INA in any case brought by any alien who had been denied a finding of credible fear in accordance with that decision, because that decision would, by operation of law, have an effect on credible-fear determinations.

That was the opposite of the intent of Congress in providing for expedited procedures for the removal of aliens seeking to enter or who had entered illegally without proper documents. DOJ must appeal, and the circuit court must restore the authority of the court to its proper limited role in expedited removal proceedings on review.

A Child's Death in the Boot Heel

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And the recriminations that have followed

> On Thursday, [incoming Hispanic Caucus Chairman Rep. Joaquin] Castro issued a statement saying that he would be asking for a "full investigation by the Inspector General and Congress into the conditions and circumstances that led to (Jakelin's) death."
> "We can do better as a nation," he said. "This is a humanitarian crisis and we have a moral obligation to ensure these vulnerable families can safely seek asylum, which is legal under immigration and international law at our borders."

I would concur with Castro's call for a "full investigation by the Inspector General and Congress into the conditions and circumstances that led to (Jakelin's) death." That investigation, however, should begin in the village of Raxruhá, Alta Verapaz, Guatemala, and continue all the way up to Providence Hospital. It should include the name of the smuggler or smugglers who were paid to bring the Caals to the United States, and they should be extradited (assuming they are not already here) and prosecuted on any ground that could enter into the imagination of a U.S. Attorney. Not to blame a grieving parent, either, but that investigation should also involve what Caal's father did during that entire trip, what he knew, and whom he told.

I also agree with Castro that: "We can do better as a nation." I likely disagree, however, with the proposed response. I have detailed, CBP has detailed, and even U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) and the New York Times have detailed the dangers of alien smuggling and illegal migration. Encouraging people to enter the United States illegally is the depth of congressional malpractice.

Judges Want Courtrooms Off-Limits to ICE
'Gentlemen. You can't fight in here! This is the War Room!'
December 17, 2018

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Accepting that proposition as true, it is unclear how immigration enforcement would differ from law enforcement generally. Rather, those 68 judges have apparently made a determination that immigration enforcement is not an important law-enforcement activity. If that is their position, they should run for Congress and change the laws. Moreover, it is not entirely clear what "physical altercations involving court employees" constitutes, but I sincerely hope that it does not involve attempts by court employees to prevent immigration-enforcement actions.

Finally, and most shockingly, is the following:

> We understand that ICE favors courthouse arrests because it considers courts to be safe environments where officers are confident they can operate without danger. But it is exactly that sense of safety that we as judges tried to foster for anyone seeking access to justice, and that we believe ICE's courthouse activities put at risk.

Put differently, those judges appear to discount (or disregard) the very real dangers both to ICE officers and the public at large of immigration enforcement outside of "safe environments". I detailed those dangers in May 2017 post. Additionally, they fail to identify the reason why ICE must turn to courthouse arrests at all: the prevalence of sanctuary policies that prevent local police from assisting ICE in the apprehension of criminal aliens, a fact that I also noted in that post.

Q. You didn't pay someone to help you get into the Darien jungle and everything?

A. No. We made it by ourself. Of course another people that has agent, yeah, you know, smuggler called agent. They had agent. An Interview with a Bangladeshi in Costa Rica en Route to the U.S. Southwest Border

American authorities do — and should — feel obligated to fully interview Farouk and check into his background should he show up at the border. He'll be appropriately tagged as a "special interest alien", warranting a deeper intelligence dive because, as I have written, Bangladesh these days is "highly trammeled by ISIS and al-Qaeda sympathizers, brooding members of a radical Islamist party now out of power, homegrown jihadists of various strands, mosques where extremism is preached, and returning foreign terrorist fighters with combat experience in Syria."

On the surface, the English-speaking Farouk did not appear to be any of these things and, here at the Costa Rican immigration processing center, he had just submitted to providing his fingerprints, retinal eye scans, and three-angle facial recognition photos via American-provided equipment. By design and prior collaborative arrangement, this material will all end up with U.S. law enforcement intelligence. Plus, he submitted to an interview with me, an American gringo stranger. All of this augurs pretty well for an argument that Farouk likely is no terrorist but an economic migrant, even though Bangladesh is booming economically. Most Bangladeshis are not terrorists nor do they sympathize with terrorists.

Their 72-hour deadline has passed. Now what? Here's my proposal. Someone over at DHS ought to call Comandante or one of his consiglieres and say, "Look, we know we missed the deadline, but we've reconsidered and we'd like to get you folks your money. Trump's Battle For a Border Wall

National security, public safety, and Americans' jobs are "on the line."

By Michael Cutler

FrontPageMag.com, December 21, 2018

Now the debate about the construction of a border wall is coming to a head.

A line has been drawn, and not in the sand, but along the highly porous and dangerous U.S./Mexican border that permits huge numbers of illegal aliens to enter the United States without inspection and permits huge quantities of narcotics and other contraband to be smuggled into the United States as well.

President Trump is arguably the first U.S. President in many decades who truly understands that border security equals national security. He also understands that flooding America with exploitable foreign workers from Third World countries is not compassionate for those foreign workers and certainly not for the American workers that they displace.

President Trump is determined to build that wall but incredibly, the Democrats are adamantly opposed to the construction of a border wall.

Republicans Should Fight into January for the Wall

By Deroy Murdock

National Review Online, December 21, 2018

Bafflingly, President Trump has not used all his tools to promote the border wall. He has yet to address the nation from the Oval Office on this or any other topic. He should cancel his Mar-a-Lago vacation and, at the earliest opportunity, tell his fellow Americans in prime time the importance of securing this country's colander-like border. He should restate that limiting immigration to those with passports and visas is fundamental to national sovereignty. Beyond the 396,579 illegal aliens apprehended at the border in fiscal year 2018 — atop those who successfully broke into America — the southern frontier is a hotbed of human smuggling, a conveyor belt for illegal narcotics (including opioids), and a veritable moving sidewalk for members of MS-13 and other vicious, bloodthirsty gangs.

Even more amazing, Trump rarely discusses the potentially lethal threat of special-interest aliens from such terror states as Iran, Sudan, and Syria. U.S. officials nabbed, respectively, 111, 86, and 44 illegal aliens from those dangerous countries in 2016. The Center for Immigration Studies' Todd Bensman last week interviewed four Iranians wandering north through Costa Rica — to America. A wall would reduce this national-security risk. President Trump should explain this clear and present danger. This unassailable argument for the wall cannot be dismissed as "anti-Hispanic racism." Inexplicably, the president barely mentions this.. . .

Mexico Is Building Its Wall — and the U.S. Is Paying for It

By Kevin D. Williamson

Of course we are not funding a literal wall on Mexico's southern border. Mexico already has one of those — not a coast-to-coast border wall but miles of fencing in and around populated areas and popular crossing points, rather like what exists on the U.S. border with Mexico and what will exist there irrespective of the outcome of the current debate about funding "the wall." But the wall is not Mexico's preferred instrument of immigration control — nor the one the U.S. government prefers for it. Under Programa Frontera Sur, a 2014 initiative supported by the United States, Mexico relies more on stepped-up police and military interdiction and internal checkpoints, a strategy that has led to a large increase in deportations.

It Was Always About the Wall

By Victor Davis Hanson

So, what happened? Again, numbers.

Hundreds of thousands of undocumented immigrants have flocked into the United States over the last decade. In addition, the Obama administration discouraged the melting-pot assimilationist model of integrating only legal immigrants.

Salad-bowl multiculturalism, growing tribalism and large numbers of unassimilated immigrants added up to politically advantageous demography for Democrats in the long run.

In contrast, a wall would likely reduce illegal immigration dramatically and with it future Democratic constituents. Legal, meritocratic, measured and diverse immigration in its place would likely end up being politically neutral. And without fresh waves of undocumented immigrants from south of the border, identity politics would wane.

A wall also would radically change the optics of illegal immigration. Currently, in unsecured border areas, armed border patrol guards sometimes stand behind barbed wire. Without a wall, they are forced to rely on dogs and tear gas when rushed by would-be border crossers. They are easy targets for stone-throwers on the Mexican side of the border.

A high wall would end that. Border guards would be mostly invisible from the Mexican side of the wall. Barbed wire, dogs and tear gas astride the border — the ingredients for media sensationalism — would be unnecessary. Instead, footage of would-be border crossers trying to climb 30-foot walls would emphasize the degree to which some are callously breaking the law.

Trump Blew His Chances of Building the Wall
By Jim Geraghty
National Review Online Morning Jolt, December 20, 2018
Everything he said in that meeting was a bluff. Pelosi and Schumer called his bluff. And now Trump has to slink away from the table with a loss and lamely insist that the border wall that was the centerpiece of his campaign wasn't really needed all along.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Whatever happened to “He’s a fighter”? I thought everybody who disagreed with him was a squish and a cuck and a wimp and simply wasn’t as strong and tough as the president.

This was the guy who declared in his convention speech, “Nobody knows the system better than me, which is why I alone can fix it.” We’re two years into his presidency, and he had a GOP Senate and GOP House ... and he didn’t get significant wall funding. (About 40 miles worth of old, damaged, or porous fencing have been replaced or are being replaced by bollard fencing in six spots.) He’s going to have a much harder time with a House of Representatives controlled by Democrats. This negotiation was his last chance — and he folded.

Trump Should Shut Down the Southern Border AND The Government Until We Fix Our Immigration System
By Ned Ryun
Fox News, December 17, 2018
As troubling as the current situation is with our broken immigration and welfare systems, it can get much, much worse. As mass automation and AI and machine learning become a reality, this country should confront the fact that it is likely to face a period of great change and social upheaval. We hear discussions of trucking, which is in many states the number one employer, being automated. What we haven’t heard much about is what happens when AI and machine learning replace radiologists, anesthesiologists, or people working in the banking industry. This is all very possible in the not too distant future. Then what will those native-born Americans do when they have no jobs? Now throw on top of that mix millions of low skilled or unskilled illegal immigrants who won’t have jobs either.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

So when Donald Trump says that he would be proud to shut down the government to get the funding for the wall and address our immigration crisis, this is absolutely the right thing to do. He should shut down the southern border and shut down the government until we actually solve fix our immigration system.

The 'Wall' Is Now 'Steel Slats' and Trump Has Screwed His Supporters

By Eddie Scarry

Washington Examiner, December 19, 2018

The “wall” is now “steel slats.” The White House last month proudly sent out photos of said steel slats, calling it a wall. I guess those awe-inspiring wall prototypes we saw photographed in San Diego back in March were simply placed in some dump, right next to Trump’s regard for his supporters.

Those walls were nearly indestructible. We know now that they were scrapped in favor of steel slats that look like something you might let your children play safely behind. But the southern border isn’t in a Minnesota suburb. It’s up against Mexico, where drugs and immigrants are aggressively pushed into the country, overwhelming what little security we currently have.

Trump Set Himself Up For Failure on the Shutdown, Unless He's Serious About Immigration

By Eddie Scarry

Schumer gave no indication that Senate Democrats, whose votes Trump needs, are interested. And the president has caved on immigration before, as when he pathetically gave in to the media lie over the summer that there was a "family separation" crisis at the border. But if there is a shutdown, and if Trump commits to it each day, reminding the public that he was elected to deal with border security and our broken immigration system, he can win.

The president's positions on immigration are overwhelmingly popular, particularly among independents (whose votes he needs to win re-election in 2020), but he appears to have forgotten.

Understanding the Caravan — the Map Says It All

By Kris Kobach

Breitbart.com, December 5, 2018

Notice the difference? The path to McAllen is approximately 1,300 miles long; whereas the path to San Diego is approximately 2,700 miles long. So the caravan travelled more than twice as far as it needed to.

Why in the world would they do that? They didn't have their own vehicles, and they weren't carrying enough food or resources to justify the longer journey.

The second reason for travelling twice the distance is that California is a sanctuary state with dozens of sanctuary cities like Los Angeles and San Francisco. Those jurisdictions will actively seek to protect the migrants who enter illegally from deportation.

On top of that, the state may interfere more directly with federal immigration enforcement. State Attorney General Xavier Becerra said recently that he might sue the federal government to stop the use of tear gas to defend the border or to stop the federal government from shutting down ports of entry. His argument is full of holes, but with the right judge that might not matter.

Lawless Judge Strikes Down Trump's Asylum Policy
A Democrat-appointed judge ignores what the actual law says.
By Matthew Vadum
FrontPageMag.com, December 21, 2018

Sullivan enjoined the administration "from continuing to apply those policies and from removing plaintiffs who are currently in the United States without first providing credible fear determinations consistent with the immigration laws," and directed federal officials "to return to the United States the plaintiffs who were unlawfully deported and to provide them with new credible fear determinations consistent with the immigration laws."

Sullivan doesn't seem to understand the fundamentals of asylum law.
Federal law gives the government authority "to grant asylum if an alien is unable or unwilling to return to her country of origin because she has suffered past persecution or has a well-founded fear of future persecution on account of 'race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.'"

Being a victim of crime by itself isn't a valid ground for asylum, no matter how badly abused the claimant may have been in his or her home country. California ICE Capades Crackdown on sheriffs, comfort for criminal illegals.

By Lloyd Billingsley

FrontPageMag.com, December 20, 2018

In California's ICE Capades, sheriffs like Scott Jones get criticism and illegals get special treatment. As Newsweek reports, "the California city of Sacramento dedicated $300,000 last year to helping undocumented immigrants with everything from legal services to fight deportations to assistance in applying for citizenship and visas."

The money "went toward helping 28 undocumented immigrants facing deportation receive legal aid in their bid to stay in the U.S., as well as helping residents in encounters with U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents." In addition, the city funds a response network "which includes a 24-hour hotline that people can call to report ICE activity within the Sacramento area."

Country Outside of Latin America Continues to Contribute to Illegal Immigration Into the US

By Matthew Tragesser
ImmigrationReform.com, December 21, 2018

The permeable Southwest border simply invites Chinese nationals and other foreign individuals from near and far to enter the country illegally. As we have learned on 9/11, it only takes a small number of people to cause horrific and irreversible damage to a nation. The 9/11 terrorists did not sneak across the border, but they exploited a vulnerability with catastrophic consequences.

As a whole, Chinese national apprehensions along the Southwest border are still relatively low in comparison to Mexico and the Northern Triangle countries (Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador). Yet, interestingly enough, Chinese figures for FY 2017 are still more than the figures combined for Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, and Colombia.

Typically known for its large immigration numbers into the U.S. through legal mechanisms, such as through family chain migration or the H1-B Visa program, it is noteworthy to see that Chinese nationals are still tempted to cross the Southwestern border illegally, when millions are already granted legal status into the country annually. From these numbers, it appears that high levels of legal immigration do not deter illegal immigration, but rather fuel it. Ironically enough, it seems that almost every country with high levels of legal immigration to the U.S. is also responsible for high levels of illegal immigration.

Congress Continues to Jumble Immigration Priorities

By Heather Ham-Warren

Because the program does not have a multi-year cap, as many as 50,000 American positions could be filled by foreign nationals by 2025. This could become especially harmful to young, American college graduates, who as a result, can lose job opportunities, wages, and bargaining power to their foreign counterparts that may be more willing to accept lower wages simply to remain in the country. If American companies are not utilizing the full number of available visas under the E-3 program, Congress should be looking to lower the cap—not expand the eligibility categories.

The Truth Emerges: US Border Patrol Not Responsible For Young Girl's Death, Her Father Confirms

By Guy Benson

Twitter's 'AG Conservative' (who is worth a follow) noted that in story after story, headline after headline, wrongdoing by US officials was at least implied. The truth simply doesn't matter. Fakery is the shameless order of business in this industry today. Anything goes in the continuing assault against President Trump and his policies, most especially where the left's top-shelf issues, immigration and abortion, are concerned.

Growing Blame America First Crowd Rushes to the Border

By Rob Thomson

The purposeful juxtaposition of the girl's arrest by the Border Patrol — which was obviously her best hope for survival — was meant to blame the Americans for her death. No other way to read it. (Yes, this all conflates with raging Trump hatred in the media.)

Even the girl's father said the American agents did everything they could and he had no complaints about the care — which was probably a thousand times better than it would have been in rural Honduras. Terror Attack in France Is a Fresh Reminder of Why We Need the Wall

By Tony Shaffer

The Minnesota Sun, December 14, 2018

France was once again reminded on Wednesday of the great need to assimilate foreigners. Once Islamists establish a foothold in a country — once a jihadist community and its apparatus of radicalization are planted — it is exceedingly difficult to control them. Like thousands of others, Chekatt was on France's terror watch list, but that didn't stop him from killing. There are simply too many names on the list for French authorities to keep track of them all.

To avoid France's predicament, we must have a firm understanding of exactly who is entering the United States. At the moment, we don't even have reliable data on the number of illegal immigrants residing in our country.

We simply don't know how many terrorists might be among the hundreds of thousands of illegal aliens who slip through the border every year despite the valiant efforts of our overstretched Border Patrol agents. What we do know, however, is that terrorist organizations are targeting the southern border as a promising means of entry. As things stand now, the Department of Homeland Security is already stopping an average of ten known or suspected terrorists from entering the United States every day.

Three Times Previous Presidents Closed the Southern Border

By Fred Lucas

The Daily Signal, November 26, 2018

Section 215(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act gives the president broad leeway to indefinitely close border traffic, said Art Arthur, a former federal immigration judge and general counsel to the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

"Inevitably, permanent always means temporary," Arthur told The Daily Signal, referring to Trump's terminology. "The president has the authority to set limits at U.S. designated ports of entry."

However, Arthur, a resident fellow of law and policy at the Center for Immigration Studies, said he doesn't doubt lawsuits could ensue.

"Anything can be litigated," Arthur said. "It could either be a citizen who wants to go to Mexico or a transportation company suing over travel. But the president has broad authority under 215a. A district judge could always grant an

If Trump Ended Birthright Citizenship by Executive Order, He'd Be Enforcing Existing Law

By Ed Fuelner

Sen. Jacob Howard of Michigan, a member of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction and a strong supporter of the Citizenship Clause, noted that Congress intended to exclude "persons born in the United States who are foreigners, aliens, [or] who belong to the families of ambassadors or foreign ministers accredited to the Government of the United States." Supreme Court cases decided in the years soon after the amendment's passage confirm this view.

Moreover, says constitutional scholar Edward Erler: "It is hard to conclude that the framers of the 14th Amendment intended to confer citizenship on the children of aliens illegally present when they explicitly denied that boon to Native Americans legally present but subject to a foreign jurisdiction."

Notes Hillsdale College's Matthew Spalding: "Few developed nations practice the rule of jus soli, or 'right of the soil.' More common is jus sanguinis, 'right of blood,' by which a child's citizenship is determined by parental citizenship, not place of birth."

In short, it was wise of Congress to limit the scope of the amendment. And those who misinterpret it are wrong. Trump should be commended for trying to bring current understanding back in line with the original intent of the framers.

Let ICE Do Its Job — Enforcing the Law

The Boston Herald, December 14, 2018

Judges from 23 states signed a letter stating that immigrants should be free to visit halls of justice without fearing that ICE will converge upon them.

Thankfully, U.S. Attorney Andrew E. Lelling stood behind ICE officials who say they will not stop making courthouse arrests, regardless of the letter. “The ICE agents who are enforcing immigration laws? They’re doing just that. They’re enforcing a federal law. And so, if you don’t like that federal law, change the law,” Lelling said Wednesday.

The law is the law and ICE should be allowed to do its job. Empty rhetoric about illegal immigrants’ fears keeping them “in the shadows” is progressive propaganda from the same people who want blanket amnesty and no border security.

In Sanctuary Boston, Some Immigrants More Equal Than Others

By Michael Graham

The Boston Herald, December 19, 2018

England, “almost all wanted on drug or other criminal charges,” ICE reports.

“Sanctuary policies endanger immigrant communities by leading to the release of criminal aliens who would otherwise be deported,” Mark Krikorian of the Center for Immigration Studies told me yesterday. “They’re even bad for regular illegal aliens, since they force ICE to make arrests in immigrant communities, on the street or at homes, rather than in the controlled environment of a local jail.”

“The only people who benefit from sanctuary policies are illegal-alien wife-beaters, drunk drivers, drug dealers and others who have already been arrested for those other crimes but whom local police are forced to release back to their neighborhoods,” Krikorian said.

Marty, like the rest of the supporters of the insane “sanctuary city” policies, doesn’t care. With his “diversity” defense, he intentionally conflates enforcing immigration law on everyone (including, by the way, the tens of thousands of Irish illegals in Massachusetts) with racism and xenophobia.

The Art of the Deal: Mexico Agrees to House Asylum Applicants
By Ed Morrissey
HotAir.com, December 20, 2018
Mexico may not be paying for a wall, Trump can argue, but they're paying for the housing. The statement from Mexico seems to indicate that the deal is just temporary, but that might be because the two nations are partnering on disincentives to cross the southern border — of Mexico. When writing about this yesterday, Jazz noted that it lacked an agreement to "keep migrants on their side of the border permanently," which Mexico's read on this deal suggests still remains an issue. If they can dry up the demand, though, it may not matter.

Of course, this could have some potential for backfire. If those trying to cross legally with asylum applications can no longer do so, it might incentivize them to cross illegally instead. That would make a border barrier more necessary, not less, at least in the short run until that demand dried up. However, in the shorter political run, it's a legit win for Donald Trump, one that might take the sting off of an inevitable retreat on the border wall funding fight before Christmas.

We won't argue against the Trump administration's hard-line approach to immigration that is clearly popular with a significant percentage of American citizens and voters. Enforcement is a legitimate and necessary component of this nation's rule of law.

Time for "Cocaine Mitch" to Deliver; House Passes Wall Funding Bill, Goes to the Senate

No Brainer: An Immigration/Budget Deal

By Mort Kondracke

RealClearPolitics.com, December 20, 2018

There are any number of compromise deals that could have been reached this week -- and should be agreed to before the next budget battle to avoid a shutdown and address immigration.

One that seems reasonable to me has been advanced by long-standing immigration reformer Rick Swartz, largely comprised of elements that have been endorsed in the past by significant numbers in Congress and even (at moments) by Trump.

Swartz proposes that Democrats agree to give Trump the $5 billion he wants for his border wall, but offer it as a three-year package.

In return for the wall money, under Swartz's proposal, Trump would agree to "permanent solutions" for 1.8 million Dreamers and 300,000 foreigners given Temporary Protected Status by the federal government owing to natural disasters or ongoing violence in their home countries.

How Legalizing Marijuana Is Securing the Border: The Border Wall, Drug Smuggling, and Lessons for Immigration Policy

By David Bier

CATO Institute Policy Analysis No. 860, December 19, 2018

Given these trends, a border wall or more Border Patrol agents to stop drugs between ports of entry makes little sense. State marijuana legalization starting in 2014 did more to reduce marijuana smuggling than the doubling of Border Patrol agents or the construction of hundreds of miles of border fencing did from 2003 to 2009. As more states — particularly on the East Coast — legalize marijuana in 2019, these trends will only accelerate. The administration should avoid endangering this success and not prosecute state-legal sellers of marijuana. This success also provides a model for addressing illegal immigration. Just as legalization has reduced the incentives to smuggle marijuana illegally, greater legal migration opportunities undercut the incentive to enter illegally. Congress should recognize marijuana legalization's success and replicate it for immigration.

A New U.S. Immigration Law Would Hurt Iranians the Most

H.R. 392 will help skilled immigrants from India jump the green-card queue—at the expense of everyone else.

By Maziar Motamedi

Forbes.com, December 20, 2018

Proponents mainly argue that removing the per-country numerical cap can solve a major backlog problem that is exacerbated by the country caps and adversely affects Indian employment-based immigrants the most because so many of them are seeking permanent residency. More than 306,000 Indians and 67,000 Chinese immigrants were waiting in the employment-based green-card queue, according to USCIS figures reported in May. If it becomes law, the bill will most probably mean that the majority of employment-based green cards issued in the next decade will go to people from India.

On one level, this could result in added wage suppression and potential job loss for Americans working in the tech sector. This possibility is strengthened by the fact that the Indian backlog problem is self-sustaining: immigrants with H-1B status are usually unable to switch jobs for fear of losing their place in line, allowing opportunistic employers to take advantage of the situation and enjoy cheap labor for years, even as their immigrant workforce may have become deserving of several pay raises.

New Government Data Reveals Immigration Arrests and Deportations Increased in 2018
By Tory Johnson
ImmigrationImpact.com, December 20, 2018
Specifically, in FY 2018 ICE reported making 158,581 arrests for civil violations of immigration law, which is about an 11 percent increase from FY 2017. Deportations increased about 13 percent to 256,085 in FY 2018, with 95,360 removals tied to ICE interior enforcement and the rest stemming from Customs and Border Protection (CBP) apprehensions in the border zone.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

While these numbers are far below record levels—the nearly 400,000 removals in FY 2012—they still represent increases since President Trump took office. What's the reason for the increases? In part, immigration enforcement under the Trump administration expanded in scope, after the President eliminated enforcement priorities from the Obama administration that focused resources and enforcement efforts on groups of individuals deemed to be a priority for removal.

Sick From Eating That Salad? Blame Trump's Immigration Policies

By Melissa Cruz

Immigrant workers (many of whom are undocumented) make up 80 percent of the entire food production industry. They are not just providing manual labor, either—they work in management, recordkeeping, and harvest logistics as well. President Trump's attempts to disparage, deter, and deport our critical food service workforce puts the safety of our food system in jeopardy.

For example, farms and meat processing plants throughout the country have been hit with labor shortages following U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) raids. Some farmers have lost nearly all their employees after enforcement operations.

This higher turnover rate means workers are less likely to be trained in food safety practices or have multiple years of experience. Basic safety practices—such as keeping crops, water, and equipment clean—have the potential to fall to the wayside.

Two Grotesque Immigration Stories Demonstrate Our Nation's Moral Decay

A vicious operation by ICE, and the death of a seven-year-old girl in Border Patrol custody, are searing reminders.

By Jack Holmes

Esquire.com, December 14, 2018

They don't care about these kids, who are alone in a strange land where they don't speak the language, sleeping in tent-city barracks in the Texas desert. (The Obama administration built facilities to house unaccompanied children in response to a 2014 wave of migration, though they were not tent cities in the desert and they didn't separate kids from their parents.) They don't care. These children's need—any child's need—for a loving, stable home to grow in, and the empathetic intervention of strangers to help them find it, are just an opportunity to get more of those Certain People out. People with no criminal record who want to help kids? Not the kind of people we want in this country. Or is there something else about them that's a sticking point?

Immigration Law Values

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Trump presidency has sought to comprehensively dismantle mechanisms that welcome, value, and integrate immigrants in favor of a stance maintaining that the United States does not welcome or value immigrants—thereby calling into question basic principles that many have believed to have long since been resolved and settled. But the values implicated by immigration law are complex and difficult to define. While the United States has long proclaimed to be a "nation of immigrants," immigration law has always sent conflicting signals. This session will examine fundamental values of contemporary immigration law and examine immigration law values past, present, and future. The session will also explore whether there are values not currently be understood as settled principles that should be. For example, is immigration law immoral if it results in separation of families? Does immigration adjudication meet basic norms of fairness? What would make immigration law closer to realizing immigration ideals?

Asylum and Refugee Rights in Islamic Law

This is a two-panel session. The first will feature Dr. Leonard Wood, who recently published a book on legal education in modern Egypt, and another scholar who will offer some reflections on the work and engage in conversations with the author as well as the audience. The second panel wil discuss asylum and refugee rights in Islamic law. The Muslim world today is currently experiencing the greatest rate of refugee movement in the world. This will allow us to explore historical and contemporary discourses on migration and refugee rights.

Civil Rights, Liberty, and Immigration Control

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Recent events highlight the frequent conflict between individual liberty interests and the government's migration control policies. The executive order banning the entry of Muslims into the United States has impinged on religious liberty, freedom to travel, and the liberty interest in family. Immigration detention, now greatly expanded, curtails freedom from physical restraint. "Zero tolerance" border control policies have caused large-scale family separation and detention, placed refugees at risk of refoulement, and infringed upon various rights of the child. Denial of noncitizen minors' access to abortion while in government custody has implicated overlapping liberty interests. This session explores the doctrinal, practical, and theoretical issues arising at the intersection of liberty and migration control, including how exercises of the immigration power have affected individual liberty interests, the narrative and advocacy strategies used to advance immigrants' rights, and how courts are assessing and weighing liberty interests in cases involving migration control.

After 1898: Empire, Law, and Citizenship

"Birds of Prey": The Expansion of US Immigration Law to Puerto Rico and

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

the Philippines

Julian Lim, Arizona State University

Abstract: My paper examines the intersections of empire and immigration law in the aftermath of the Spanish-American War. Scholars have paid attention to the contested political and legal status of Filipinos and Puerto Ricans within the U.S.' colonial regime, and their eventual liminal status as "U.S. nationals" who were neither alien nor citizen, but could move freely within the borders of U.S. jurisdiction. Meanwhile, the expansion of U.S. immigration law from the mainland United States to its territories has remained less well known. An emphasis on domestic, nation-bound frameworks in the study of U.S. immigration history has obscured the ways in which U.S. immigration law extended far beyond its immediate borders.

American empire generated a variety of new migration streams and immigration issues, however, for U.S. officials. While increasing numbers of Puerto Ricans and Filipinos set their sights on the mainland United States, colonial officials worried about Chinese migration into the Philippines and the invasion of Puerto Rico by neighboring island residents. Thus not only did U.S. officials seek to regulate the migrations of their newly-acquired colonial subjects, they also redefined the distant borders of entry and exit for those "birds of prey," as one U.S. immigration official called them in 1900, who sought to use the territories as a stepping-stone to the mainland United States. The expansion of U.S. territorial control thus also demanded, according to colonial officials, the expansion of the U.S.' increasingly restrictive immigration regulation apparatus.

The paper thus provides a deeper understanding of transnational migration and law in the era of American empire. It begins to show how the laws of immigration were deeply entwined with the laws of empire – both serving as regimes of inclusion and exclusion, of expansion and contraction that ultimately sought to pull the territories into the U.S.' jurisdictional orbit.

Teaching Changing Loyalties and Histories: The Queens Immigration Project

Session Abstract The Queens Immigration Project is funded by the National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC) for three years. It supports funding for teachers to enhance their digital skills while learning new approaches to teaching world history. The New York City borough of Queens is the most diverse county in the United States, and its libraries and archives have served as a model to study change over time in NYC. Many of the New York City high school students are first generation Americans, and their family's histories are an integral part of a changing United States.

The project offers the opportunity for teachers and students to analyze their family histories as tools to teach Units 5 and 6 of the NYC Social Studies Scope and Sequence that focus on the essential questions of modernization and globalization. In these units, teachers and their students address two questions: What is the price of modernization? And, Is globalization a force for progress and prosperity? In the units, family history offers a way to contemplate the questions in the sequence such as "How has modernization created tension and conflict regarding social norms, gender norms, and institutions?" The family histories inspire teachers and students to consider changing loyalties through time and place within the stories of migration and immigration.

The project's principal investigators and teachers will demonstrate how they have created and employed open educational resources to assist students in collecting and positioning personal digital archives and interpreting open-access historical documents to understand their and their families' pasts. In doing history, students also contribute to "open" repositories and to local community archive projects such as the Queens Memory Project by creating online family histories. In the process, the students develop an individual understanding of the technologies and concepts behind archiving. They also develop key skills of historical thinking by considering the continuity of the history of immigration and changing neighborhoods in NYC. By researching their family histories like a historian, NYC students challenge the history of U.S. immigration by expanding the traditional narratives through an exploration of the motivating (or push) factors that contribute to migration and immigration in recent history.

The presentation is an interactive roundtable. All participants and attendees will have access to the materials that have been created for the project by the principle investigators, teachers, NYC high school students, and graduate students on the project. The lesson ideas, digital archives, and methodological approaches have been collected and made open to all who wish to use the materials to teach global studies and world history.

What Everyone Needs to Know about Central America in an Age of Deportation, Part 1: Views from the Northern Triangle

Session Abstract U.S. support of Central American counterinsurgencies during the Cold War produced the first waves of Central American migration to the United States. In the 2000s, popular awareness of the region in the U.S. receded. At the same time, the Central American population in the U.S. grew tenfold, mostly coming from the "Northern Triangle" of Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras. Central Americans have returned to public view as child migrants, workers, victims of crime, gang members, targets of deportation, and families with generational roots in the U.S. We urgently need to consider Central America in the current context of racialization, special relationships, legacies of violence, and surveillance in the U.S.

“Views from the Northern Triangle,” the first of two sessions that bring Central American and U.S. history into conversation over these issues, asks Central Americanists who have worked in the region many decades what are the essential points they think students, the general public, and our colleagues in other fields should know in the current political and deportation climate. The panel aims for even temporal and geographical coverage from ancient to modern including Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador, with viewpoints also from archaeology and anthropology. We envision going beyond the usual though important discussion of US-Central American foreign relations, further back in time and stemming from our research. What is the deep historical backdrop of Central American immigration to and deportation from the U.S.? What do Central Americanists need to know from U.S. history?

Decolonizing the Sojourner/Settler Paradigm: Reimagining Histories of Yemenis in the United States

Neama Alamri, University of California, Merced

Session Abstract: In Sojourners and Settlers: The Yemeni Immigrant Experience (1988), an anthology on the lives of Yemeni immigrants in the U.S., the trope of the "sojourner" versus the "settler" served as a guiding framework that informed the trajectory of the case studies, the types of research questions that were asked, and the scholarly claims that were made. Under the sojourner/settler binary, is the categorization of two types of Yemeni immigrants: those who come to the U.S. temporarily with plans of eventually returning to Yemen and those who permanently settle in the U.S. and successfully assimilate to "American" culture and lifestyle. Implicit in this generalizing categorization, however, is the erasure of complex and lived experiences within Yemeni communities. While the title, Sojourners and Settlers, preempted the possibility of complicated, non-binary narratives, it did accurately point to the ways in which Yemeni immigrant experiences were (and continue to be) portrayed in the academic scholarship. In this paper, I will explore the ways in which, unlike other Middle Eastern communities, scholarship on Yemenis the U.S. has overwhelmingly been informed by the sojourner/settler framework. This is partly due to the fact that historically Yemeni immigrant communities have been overwhelmingly Muslim and working class. As a result, Yemeni communities have been racialized through both religion and class and are often described as being isolationist, non-assimilative, and traditional. Through a critical historical analysis, this paper seeks to decolonize the sojourner/settler paradigm and re-imagine histories of Yemeni diasporic communities. In doing so, this paper will contribute to imagining new ways of doing community-engaged research in Middle Eastern communities.

Many Diasporas, One Valley: Middle Eastern Refugee Resettlement and the Politics of Community in California's Central Valley

Stacy Fahrenthold, University of California, Davis

Session Abstract: California's central valley has been a favored site for resettlement of refugees from the Middle East for a century, beginning with

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Armenians and Assyrians displaced by the genocides of World War I and continuing with new waves of Palestinian, Iraqi, Iranian, and now Syrian refugees. Many of the local aid societies working with refugees from Syria and Iraq themselves represent historical refugee populations in the region, and they collaborate with federal agencies to foster local networks for care provision extending beyond basic subsistence. The complex ways in which the politics of community introduces conflict within resettled communities, however, poses a persistent challenge and must be negotiated by scholars working in refugee history. What does it mean, for instance, when recently-resettled refugees fit themselves into older ethnic communities that do not recognize them as co-ethnics? How do the politics of wars in Syria and Iraq follow the resettled to the U.S.? Employing two case studies—Syrians resettled in Fresno, California and Iraqi Assyrians resettled in Turlock and Modesto, California—this paper argues two things. First, it argues that community-engaged scholarship can be of service to the recently-resettled by helping them claim a historical space within a valley culture that is deeply imbricated with historical post-displacement experiences. And second, it cautions that community-engaged and public historical scholarship must be sensitive towards the ways in which “new” and “old” refugee communities do—and do not—recognize one another. The paper concludes with a critique of “refugee” as a catch-all category; with many diasporas in one valley, the category’s comparative utility comes at the expense of regional particularisms.

"Well, First, I'm Not a Refugee": Interrogating Intra-diasporic Boundaries within Assyrian, Chaldean, and Kurdish Communities in the United States

Erin Hughes, independent scholar

Session Abstract: As scholars including Paul Gilroy and Stuart Hall have argued, the roots and routes of displacement matter. They shape not only individual experiences of migration and identity but are often carried into narratives of how the greater ethnic or national group defines itself within the diverse fabric of American society. For stateless nations in particular, whose homelands have been chipped away by centuries of displacement and divided by modern state boundaries, this defining of who “we" are becomes complicated and often contested. As researchers, there is consequentially a risk of painting these communities with an overly-broad brush and overlooking intra-communal wedges that define how people understand themselves, shape experiences within the U.S., and influence political demands on the U.S. and on the homeland.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Using a comparative study of Assyrian, Chaldean, and Kurdish communities in the U.S., this paper examines the layers of identity and intra-communal boundaries within these populations. On a community engagement level, such differences help researchers better understand individual lived experiences and how roots and routes factor in navigating society. For example, for Chaldeans and Assyrians, diasporic leadership largely migrated for employment prior to 2000 and encounter differences with community members who fled ethno-sectarian conflict after 2003. Internal divisions become further significant when politicized. Claims for autonomy and self-governance in Iraq have heightened Chaldean identity, challenging the understanding that Chaldeans and Assyrians are one ethnic group. This paper discusses how communal differences can become increasingly salient, and the significance of locality, particularly socio-economic factors in the place of resettlement, in shaping identity, ideology, and communal boundaries. It highlights how labels like 'Iraqi refugee' overlook the rich diversity of people and ideologies contained therein. Lastly, it addresses the challenge of balancing representative, community-engaged research with analysis that holds relevance for policy-makers and wider scholarship.

Unsettled Lives: Refugees Reaching Out to One Another

Sally Howell, University of Michigan–Dearborn

Session Abstract: Middle Easterners have been settling in the Americas for well over a century now. They have come here to study, settle, or make money. Some have come to stay while others have had more temporary ambitions. Many came by choice, but many, especially in recent years, have come as refugees and exiles fleeing war or persecution (religious or political). Increasingly, the United States is an active combatant in the wars that have governed mass displacements from the Middle East, which presents distinct challenges to historians and other scholars working with Middle Eastern refugee communities. This panel draws together scholars working with recently displaced communities from Yemen, Syria, and Iraq on public history projects. The four papers focus on unique methodological and moral challenges public historians face when working with resettled refugees. Scholarly work on these communities is often supported by institutions intending to facilitate the settlement and incorporation of the newly arriving community, to help a group create a record of their collective trauma and displacement, or to empower the group in some capacity related to their homeland. Support for this work often comes with political motives that can impact research design. As public historians and community-engaged scholars working within the field of Refugee Studies, we discuss how our scholarly motivations and institutional partners impact our relationships with our research subjects.

Panelists will broach the challenge of working with diverse—and often divided—post-displacement communities in America. And in a climate of intense Islamophobia and xenophobia, our work can take on a sense of political urgency that is at odds with the professional demands of teaching and writing oriented toward scholarly (rather than public) audiences. Furthermore, our subjects are frequently eager to define their lives and experiences beyond the "refugee" label and its specific cultural and political associations. As scholars, we want to think through new ways to frame our work to honor this expectation. These are a few of the complex challenges we seek to address in our discussion among public history practitioners located in the heart of empire and working with communities that defy our understandings of what it means to migrate in the 21st century.

What Everyone Needs to Know about Central America in an Age of Deportation, Part 2: Views from the United States

Session Abstract: U.S. support of Central American counterinsurgencies during the Cold War produced the first waves of Central American migration to the United States. In the 2000s, popular awareness of the region in the U.S. receded. At the same time, the Central American population in the U.S. grew tenfold, mostly coming from the "Northern Triangle" of Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras. In Part 2, "Views from the United States", historians of the United States consider how to fit Central America(ns) into existing narratives of U.S. immigration, US-Mexican transnational and borderlands history, and Latinx history. The southern border has constituted a Native ground, a crossing place for immigrants not just from Mexico but also from other parts of Latin America and the world, a transnational community, and a regulated landscape. Latinx history has been dominated by Mexico on the one hand and the Caribbean on the other. Where does this leave Central Americans, and what do U.S.

The Height of US Immigration Restriction Reconsidered

Papers:

Contested Terrain: Debating Refugee Admissions in the Cold War
Laura Madokoro, McGill University

Session Abstract: The historiography on refugee admissions to the United States and other white settler societies generally focuses on the work of state actors and the role of policies, regulations and laws in shaping the legal landscape in which refugees and migrants move. Lost in this focus is the critical role that civil society actors, namely secular and religious humanitarians, have played in shaping the social, cultural and political landscape in which reforms and initiatives have occurred.

To address this lacuna, this paper considers the history of civil society activism in effecting change to refugee admissions and humanitarian resettlement policies in the United States during the Cold War. It considers the critical years between 1945 and 1965 when diverse groups including the American Jewish Committee, the National Lutheran Council, the American Friends Service Committee, Aid Refugee Chinese Intellectuals Inc. and the United Presbyterians worked in different ways to secure the admission of refugees from Europe and Asia.
As this paper shows, these groups did not operate in tandem, indeed they often pursued reforms at cross-purposes. Yet it was the very diversity of their approaches and objectives that created a rich and robust environment in which discussions about moral responsibilities vis-à-vis the world's refugees could flourish. Still, this diversity also ensured that the federal government could continue to minimize state responsibilities for assisting the world's refugees. While civil society actors proved to be increasingly committed to refugee admissions from around the world over the course of the cold war period, the US government remained selective in its approach to refugee admissions. These tensions were ultimately captured in the language and scope of the immigration reforms advanced in the 1965 Immigration and Nationality Act.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Setting the Stage for the "Highly Skilled"

Monique Laney, Auburn University

Session Abstract: While immigration laws of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century became increasingly restrictive based on an applicant's national origin, they always included exceptions for those who could presumably further the nation's interests. Earlier laws already provided exemptions for teachers, students, and merchants, then for skilled laborers, professionals, actors, ministers, professors, domestic servants, nurses, and agricultural workers. What was new after World War II was an emphasis on professionals with scientific or technical skills. By 1948, the Displaced Persons Act included the first conscious labor preferences and job requirements for refugees entering from Europe. Not much later, the 1952 McCarran-Walter Act allocated 50% of visas to highly skilled professionals. This presentation discusses a precedent for these new stipulations.

The military undertaking Project Paperclip brought hundreds of German and Austrian scientists, engineers, and technicians to the United States after World War II to work on military projects. Most of the specialists came between 1945 and 1952 as enemy aliens, but soon the State, War, and Justice Departments worked out a process that would allow them to become American citizens.

The involved agencies went to extraordinary lengths to pave a way for former enemies to become U.S. citizens in the name of "national security" for military uses or "national interest" for civilian exploitation, putting them ahead of displaced persons barely surviving in Europe. The additional involvement of the Commerce Department from the beginning signals the important role that employers would play in future immigration debates and programs.
Typically, only discussed in the context of military history or as the operation that brought Wernher von Braun and his rocket team to the United States, this presentation discusses Project Paperclip as an important step in the development of immigration policies that offer preferential treatment for the highly skilled ever since.

The Undertow of Reforming Immigration

Ruth Wasem, University of Texas at Austin

Session Abstract: Over the two decades between the end of World War Two and the passage of the Immigration Act of 1965, the agents of immigration reform were checked by a strong undertow that kept them just short of achieving their objectives. Powerfully entrenched legislators supported the status quo of the racially-based national origins quotas.

In the years leading up to the Immigration Act of 1965, a growing sense of citizenship as well as an actual increase in naturalization among immigrant groups was shifting the balance. More precisely, the naturalization rate (i.e., percent of foreign-born residents who become U.S. citizens) rose from just over half (52%) in 1920 to over three-quarters (80%) in 1950. Just as the accomplishments of immigrants and successes of their children were directly challenging old notions of selectivity and racial superiority, the electoral clout of naturalized immigrants and their children was beginning to alter the political landscape.

Coupled with the increasing civic engagement of immigrants was a broader societal push toward equality in mid-20th Century United States. There is considerable scholarship on how the war against fascism abroad turned the mirror on inequality in the United States and fueled campaigns for civil rights, workers' rights, women's rights, and other struggles for equality. At issue was how long the undertow of beliefs in a deserving class, race and ethnic superiority and entrenched political power would hold back the societal and political currents for equality.

Measuring Gains from International Migration

Let their knowledge flow: The effect of returning refugees on export performance in the former Yugoslavia

Dany Bahar, Brookings Institution; Andreas Hauptmann, Institute for Employment Research (IAB); Hillel Rapoport, Paris School of Economics; and Cem Ozguzel, Paris School of Economics

During the early 1990s Germany received over half a million Yugoslavian refugees fleeing war. By 2000, many of these refugees, who were under temporary protection, had been repatriated. We exploit this historical episode to provide causal evidence on the role that migrants play explaining export performance in global markets after returning to their home country. We find that the elasticity of exports to return migration is between 0.1 to 0.24 in industries where migrants were employed during their stay in Germany. In order to deal with endogeneity we use historic exogenous rules of allocation of asylum seekers across different German states to construct an instrumental variable for the treatment. The results are mostly driven by knowledge-intensive industries, and by workers in occupations intensive in analytical and managerial skills.

Border Walls

Treb Allen, Dartmouth College; Cauê Dobbin, Stanford University; and Melanie Morten, Stanford University

During 2007-2010 the US government built border fences along one-third of the US-Mexico border. We apply a number of new datasets to study the effect of this fence construction on migration and the labor market in both the U.S. and Mexico. We document that the construction of a fence: (i) reduced migration between aected origin-destination pairs by 4%, (ii) reduced the stock of migrants in a US destination region by 2% for every 100 origins affected by the fence, (iii) lead to an internal general equilibrium response, with an inflow of the stock of high-educated US-born workers of 0.6% (0.1% for low-educated US-born workers), and (iv) lead to a decrease in the wages of low-educated US-born workers of 0.7% and high-educated US-born workers of 0.5%, with no statistically signicant change to the wage of migrant workers. We then develop a quantitative general equilibrium spatial model incorporating multiple types of labor and the costly movement of goods and people across space. We show that this model can match the above facts and estimate the model using the construction of the border fence. Finally, we use the model to predict the effect of a proposed border fence that spans the entire border.

Open Borders in the European Union and Beyond: Migration Flows and Labor Market Implications

John Kennan, University of Wisconsin-Madison

In 2004, the European Union admitted 10 new countries, and wages in these countries were generally well below the levels in the existing member countries. Citizens of these newly admitted countries were subsequently free to take jobs anywhere in the EU, and many did so. In 2015, a large number of refugees from Syria and other broken countries sought to migrate to EU countries (along very dangerous routes), and these refugees were met with fierce resistance, at least in some places. This paper seeks to understand the labor market implications of allowing free migration across borders, with particular reference to the EU. The aim is to quantify the migration flows associated with EU enlargement, and to analyze the extent to which these flows affected equilibrium wages. The main conclusion is that the real wage effects are relatively small, and the gains from open borders are very large.

The IT Boom and Other Unintended Consequences of Chasing the American Dream

Gaurav Khanna, University of California-San Diego and Nicolas Morales, University of Michigan

We study how US immigration policy coupled with the Internet boom affected not just the US economy, but also led to a tech boom in India. Indian students enrolled in engineering schools to gain employment in the rapidly growing US IT industry via the H-1B visa program. Those who could not join the US workforce, due to the H-1B cap, remained in India, enabling the growth of an Indian IT sector. Those who returned with acquired human capital and technology after the expiration of their H-1Bs also contributed to the growing tech-workforce in India. The increase in IT productivity allowed India to eventually surpass the US in software exports. Our general equilibrium model captures firm-hiring across various occupations, innovation and technology diffusion, and dynamic worker decisions to choose occupations and fields of major in both the US and India. We identify key elasticities using an instrumental variables strategy, and show that our model captures levels and trends of key variables in validation tests. We perform counterfactual exercises and find that on average, workers in each country are better off because of high-skill migration. The H-1B program induced Indians to switch to computer science (CS) occupations, increasing the CS workforce in India and raising overall IT output. It also induced US workers to switch to non-CS occupations, reducing the US native CS workforce.

The Fading Mark of Migration: Assimilation as Information Loss among United States Immigrants
Noe Wiener, University of Massachusetts-Amherst

The labor market integration of immigrants raises thorny issues regarding both the behavior and composition of the immigrant groups as well as the structure of opportunities at the destination. Standard economics accounts of income "assimilation" are based on 1.) the marginal productivity theory of income distribution and 2.) the modeling of conditional expectations of wages. I argue that 1.) misconstrues the process of value creation and 2.) neglects information contained in the wage distributions themselves. Instead, I start from the fundamentally incomplete nature of socioeconomic data and propose a meso-level measure of income assimilation that is founded in information theory. For immigrants to become assimilated in this sense turns on the extent to which the various social processes involved in income allocation "forget" about the immigrant status of a cohort. I present results for different cohorts and regions of origin between 1970 and 2010 using Census data for the United States.

Immigration Debate: Balancing Security and Compassion

7:30-9:00 p.m., Tuesday, January 8, 2019
Jewish Community Center of Greater Boston
333 Nahanton Street
Newton, MA 02459
https://www.bostonjcc.org/classes-and-events/jonathan-samen-hot-buttons-cool-conversations-discussion-series

Description: Comprehensive immigration reform has been a hot button issue for decades in this country. Immigration policy forces politicians and citizens alike to weigh economic and security concerns against humanitarian interests.

The current administration has approached this issue with an emphasis on

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"security first" regarding immigration policy, looking to slash immigration to the United States. Measures including the "travel ban," the proposed border-wall with Mexico, and pledges to deport millions of undocumented immigrants all raise questions on how to balance keeping America safe from terrorism while still being a "nation of immigrants."

Panelists:

Matthew Segal

Legal Director of the ACLU of Massachusetts since 2012. Leading a team of civil rights lawyers, he has litigated cases that halted the Muslim ban, overturned 21,587 wrongful convictions and protected cell phone location data. Previously, as an assistant federal defender, Matt argued a case that led to hundreds of exonerations and re-sentencings.

Rodrigo Saavedra

Memory Program Director at the Ayni Institute, which focuses on creating a more reciprocal world through the development of training and research for social movements and preserving the wisdom and traditions of indigenous communities from around the world. A DACA recipient and community organizer, Rodrigo has appeared in major nationwide news outlets.

Jessica Vaughn

Director of Policy Studies for the Center for Immigration Studies, a Washington, DC-based immigration research institute. As an expert on immigration policy and operations, she educates policymakers and agencies on immigration topics. She has been widely published in the media, and has testified before Congress several times.

Moderator:

Julia Preston, Contributing Writer at The Marshall Project, a non-profit journalism organization focusing on criminal justice and immigration. She previously worked at The New York Times as the national correspondent covering immigration. Ms. Preston was a member of The New York Times staff that won the 1998 Pulitzer Prize for reporting on international affairs, for a series that revealed the corrosive effects of drug corruption in Mexico.

Irregular Citizenship, Immigration, and Deportation

11:30 a.m.-2:20 p.m., Monday, January 14, 2019

4700 Keele Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada

Description and Speakers:
Peter Nyers, University Scholar and Associate Professor of the Politics of Citizenship and Intercultural Relations, Department of Political Science, McMaster University
Irregular Citizenship, Immigration, and Deportation

The talk is based on Nyers' recent book, which brings deportation and anti-deportation together with the aim of understanding the political subjects that emerge in this contested field of governance and control, freedom and struggle. Rather than focusing on the typical subjects of removal – refugees, the undocumented and irregular migrants – Irregular Citizenship, Immigration and Deportation looks at the ways that citizens get caught up in the deportation apparatus and must struggle to remain in or return to their country of citizenship. The transformation of 'regular' citizens into deportable 'irregular' citizens involves the removal of the rights, duties, and obligations of citizenship. This includes unmaking citizenship through official revocation or denationalization, as well as through informal, extra-legal, and unofficial means. The book features stories about struggles over removal and return, deportation and repatriation, rescue and abandonment.

Omer Ozcan, Visiting Assistant Professor, Department of Anthropology and affiliated with the Department of Sociology and Centre for Refugee Studies at York University
Enforced Disappearance: A Stretched-out Present and Unending Grief

This talk concerns the practices of waiting that occur when people are placed outside of the protection of the law. I trace life stories of Halit and Eysan, a displaced elderly Kurdish couple, to discuss how the counterinsurgency practice of enforced disappearance, a distinct exercise of sovereign power, produces a specific form of waiting, which I call enforced waiting. I examine temporal effects of the prolonged armed conflict between the Turkish state and Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK) on everyday life in Yuksekova where violence is not always instantaneous or spectacular but often gradual and uneventful. I argue that waiting in Kurdistan is intrinsic to sovereign practices and it is the embodiment of continuous and uneventful violence that suffuses across time and space.

All that glitters is not gold: The limits of progressive refugee protection in Latin America

http://www.migrationpolicycentre.eu/event/mpc-seminar-all-that-glitters-is-not-gold-the-limits-of-progressive-refugee-protection-in-latin-america/

Abstract: In recent years experts have hailed Latin America as the new avant-garde of generous asylum and refugee policies. Understanding the extent and sustainability of Latin America's liberal approach to refugee protection holds important theoretical and normative implications for refugee studies and politics. The first part of the paper offers a short review of the characteristics and variance of refugee policy liberalization in the region and its relationship to universal refugee law. The second part of the paper analyses the implementation gaps of progressive refugee legislation in three cases: extra-continental asylum seekers from Africa, Asia and the Caribbean, the resettlement of Syrian refugees, and the massive forced displacement of Venezuelans. The paper specifically discusses the applicability of the "numbers versus rights" hypothesis to explaining such policy gaps, and ends with some considerations regarding the future sustainability of expanded refugee protection and international co-operation in the region.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Description: Borders, migration, exclusion: The role of civil society and humanitarian aid in an increasingly polarized political context

The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

Panama and Costa Rica Governments Are Doing Smugglers' Job for Them terrorism concern to the U.S. southern border

Washington, D.C. (December 27, 2018) – The Center for Immigration Studies sent a reporting team to Panama and Costa Rica where they investigated the policy of "controlled flow", in which the governments of Panama and Costa Rica are moving thousands of migrants — including many from terror-prone Middle Eastern countries — toward the U.S. southern border.

Todd Bensman, the Center's Senior National Security Fellow who led the CIS reporting team, said, "At a time when the U.S. government remains partially shut down because congressional leaders have dismissed President Trump's national security concerns at the border, these Central American governments have effectively become human smugglers. They are moving huge flows of migrants (including many Middle Easterners) northward to our border. I interviewed migrants from terror-prone countries, including Pakistan and Iran, who outlined to me step-by-step how the authorities in Panama and Costa Rica are helping transport them closer to the United States."

View the full analysis and video: https://www.cis.org/Bensman/Panama-and-Costa-Rica-Doing-Smugglers-Work-Controlled-Flow-Policy

The "controlled flow" policy originated in 2016, when the Panamanian government experienced large flows of Haitian migrants, and encouraged them to travel north rather than stay in Panama. The Haitian wave of migrants has abated, but the policy remains in place, as outlined in the video below.

CIS traveled to Panama and Costa Rica to investigate the "controlled flow" policy, speaking with both Central American authorities and the migrants themselves.

The Canadian immigrant labour market: Recent trends from 2006 to 2017
Statistics Canada, December 24, 2018
https://www150.statcan.gc.ca/n1/en/daily-quotidien/181224/dq181224a-eng.pdf?st=KtNVqAwz

Excerpt: Employment-rate gap between immigrants and Canadian-born narrowing

The employment rate for core-working-age immigrants rose to 78.9% in 2017, the highest since 2006—when comparable data became available. The corresponding rate for the Canadian-born population was 84.0%. In 2017, the gap between these two rates narrowed to its lowest level since 2006—after widening during and after the 2008-2009 recession.

Employment rates among immigrants tend to increase the longer they have been in the country. In 2017, immigrants who had been in Canada for five years or less had an employment rate of 69.8%, compared with 82.0% for immigrants who had been living in the country for more than a decade.

Canada's population estimates, third quarter 2018

Excerpt: Canada's population is growing fast

Canada's population was 37,242,571 on October 1, 2018, up 183,715 from July 1, 2018, according to preliminary population estimates. This was the largest increase in number since the beginning of the period covered by the current demographic accounting system in July 1971. The country's population growth rate in the third quarter of 2018 was 0.5%, an increase rarely seen in past quarters.

International migration is the main source of population growth

This growth was largely driven by international migration. In the third quarter, an unprecedented international migratory increase was observed (+146,531), stemming from strong immigration levels and the arrival of a large number of non-permanent residents. International migratory increase takes into account the number of new immigrants admitted to Canada on a permanent basis (+82,316) as well as the increase in non-permanent residents (+79,417), from which net emigration (-15,202) is subtracted. The gain in non-permanent residents was mostly due to an increase in the number of work and study permit holders and, to a lesser extent, an increase in the number of refugee claimants.

Finland's preliminary population figure 5,522,015 at the end of November
https://www.stat.fi/til/vamuu/2018/11/vamuu_2018_11_2018-12-21_tie_001_en.html

Summary: According to Statistics Finland's preliminary data, Finland's population was 5,522,015 at the end of November. Our country's population increased by 8,885 persons during January-November. The reason for the increase was migration gain from abroad, since immigration exceeded emigration by 14,574. The number of births was 5,689 lower than that of deaths.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

According to the preliminary statistics for November, 29,616 persons immigrated to Finland from abroad and 15,042 persons emigrated from Finland. The number of immigrants was 7 higher and the number of emigrants 714 lower than in the corresponding period of the previous year. In all, 7,924 of the immigrants and 10,105 of the emigrants were Finnish citizens.

Forecast: 18 million inhabitants in 2029
Statistics Netherlands, December 18, 2018
https://www.cbs.nl/en-gb/news/2018/51/forecast-18-million-inhabitants-in-2029

Excerpt: Two-thirds of population growth due to migration

By the year 2030, the population is expected to have grown by 745 thousand. Two-thirds of the growth can be attributed to migration (more immigration than emigration), one-third is caused by a higher natural growth (more live births than deaths). The share of inhabitants with a migration background will increase from 24 percent at the start of 2019 to 27 percent in 2030. This group includes people born abroad as well as their Dutch-born children.

Until 2030, an average 230 thousand immigrants per year are expected to arrive in the Netherlands, while 187 thousand emigrants are expected to leave the country. For a large part, these are former immigrants leaving again. This would mean a net migration of 43 thousand per year on average, 5 thousand down on the period 2010-2018.

According to the forecast, the number of live births will rise by an average 187 thousand per year between 2019 and 2030. Due to an ageing population, mortality will go up as well, to 162 thousand on average during this period. The changes in these flows will have a downward effect on the population growth in the coming ten years.

Provisional migration estimates by citizenship
Statistics New Zealand, December 12, 2018
https://www.stats.govt.nz/news/provisional-migration-estimates-by-citizenship-now-available

Excerpt: Recent net migration gains driven by non-New Zealand citizens

The migration estimates in the downloadable file 'Estimated monthly migrant arrivals by citizenship and country of last residence, 2013–18 – CSV' and figure 1 reinforce that the high net migration gains experienced in each of the years from 2015 to 2018 were driven by non-New Zealand ('rest of world') citizenship arrivals, complemented by fewer departures of New Zealand citizens.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Using outcomes data, New Zealand had net migration gains of between 60,000 and 70,000 non-New Zealand citizens in each of the years from 2015 to 2018. These compare with a net migration gain of 30,000 non-New Zealand citizens in 2012.

Healthcare, Immigration Down as Most Important Problem
By RJ Reinhart
Gallup.com, December 18, 2018
https://news.gallup.com/poll/245513/healthcare-immigration-down-important-problem.aspx

Excerpt: Sixteen percent of Americans mention immigration as the top problem facing the country. This is down five percentage points from the 21% who named the problem last month, which at the time exceeded the percentage mentioning government.

The November survey had been conducted in the midst of the midterm Congressional elections, as a caravan of migrants from Central America was making its way toward the U.S. and many Republican candidates were taking a hard line on immigration. At that time, 37% of Republicans cited immigration as the country's top problem in November, up 17 percentage points from October. After the election, as the migrant caravan became less prominent, the percentage of Republicans citing immigration as the top problem declined to 29%, largely fueling the decline among all Americans.

Unaccompanied Migrant Children: Social, Legal, and Ethical Perspectives

By Hille Haker, Molly Greening, Philip M. Anderson, Adam Avrushin, et al.

Lexington Books, 262 pp., $95.00, 1498574521

Book Description: Unaccompanied migrant children are the most vulnerable group of migrants and refugees. Their experiences, their contested legal status in the host countries, and their treatment before, during, and after migration call for an ethics of child migration that places unaccompanied migrant children at the center.

This volume gathers international experts from the fields of social work, social science, law, philosophy, and Catholic ethics. Social science, psychological, and social work studies, analyses of US and international law of child migration, refuge and asylum policies, and several case studies regarding law enforcement highlight the more recent shifts in policies both in the United States and Europe. The current policies are confronted with two major normative frameworks that go beyond migration laws or the international refugee and asylum provisions: the United Nations Convention of the Rights of the Child, and the approach of the Catholic social ethics of migration.

The authors address the challenges of childhood under the conditions of migration: the uprooting of lives, the journey and transition into foreign countries and cultures, and the transition into adulthood. They discern the legal provisions and obstacles of the immigration process, the securitization of the borders, and the criminalization of unaccompanied migrant children. Catholic social ethics, the theological authors argue, must offer more than its pastoral call for charity, solidarity, and compassion that is already in place, inspiring multiple Catholic organizations, groups, and individuals. The Christian emphasis on family rights and values, originating in the story of the Holy Family, is necessary, yet insufficient when children are separated from their parents—instead, children must be recognized as vulnerable agents in their own right, and the moral dilemmas families sometimes face be acknowledged. US and European policies must be informed by the interpretation of justice, and the principle of the common good must be held against the firewalling of the West. As a political ethics, Catholic social ethics must critique and reject the use of the Christian religion for nationalist policies and depictions of migrant children as a threat to the cultural identity of Western societies.

Book Description: Scholars, journalists, and policymakers have long argued that the 1965 Immigration and Nationality Act dramatically reshaped the demographic composition of the United States. In A Nation of Immigrants Reconsidered, leading scholars of immigration explore how the political and ideological struggles of the so-called "age of restriction"--from 1924 to 1965--paved the way for the changes to come. The essays examine how geopolitics, civil rights, perceptions of America's role as a humanitarian sanctuary, and economic priorities led government officials to facilitate the entrance of specific immigrant groups, thereby establishing the legal precedents for future policies. Eye-opening articles discuss Japanese war brides and changing views of miscegenation, the recruitment of former Nazi scientists, a temporary workers program with Japanese immigrants, the emotional separation of Mexican immigrant families, Puerto Rican youth's efforts to claim an American identity, and the restaurant raids of conscripted Chinese sailors during World War II. Contributors: Eiichiro Azuma, David Cook-Martín, David FitzGerald, Monique Laney, Heather Lee, Kathleen López, Laura Madokoro, Ronald L. Mize, Arissa H. Oh, Ana Elizabeth Rosas, Lorrin Thomas, Ruth Ellen Wasem, and Elliott Young.

Kindle, 2304 KB, ASIN: B07L6SWHN8, $31.17

Book Description: With over 240 million migrants in the world, including over 65 million forced migrants and refugees, states have turned to draconian measures to stem the flow of irregular migration, including the criminalization of migration itself. Canada, perceived as a nation of immigrants and touted as one of the most generous countries in the world today for its reception of refugees, has not been immune from these practices. This book examines "crimmigration" – the criminalization of migration – from national and comparative perspectives, drawing attention to the increasing use of criminal law measures, public policies, and practices that stigmatize or diminish the rights of forced migrants and refugees within a dominant public discourse that not only stereotypes and criminalizes but marginalizes forced migrants. Leading researchers, legal scholars, and practitioners provide in-depth analyses of theoretical concerns, legal and public policy dimensions, historic migration crises, and the current dynamics and future prospects of crimmigration. The editors situate each chapter within the existing migration literature and outline a way forward for the decriminalization of migration through the vigorous promotion and advancement of human rights. Building on recent legal, policy, academic, and advocacy initiatives, The Criminalization of Migration maps how the predominant trend toward the criminalization of migration in Canada and abroad can be reversed for the benefit of all, especially those forced to migrate for the protection of their inherent human rights and dignity.

Global Diaspora Politics and Social Movements: Emerging Research and Opportunities

By Emily B. Stacey

IGI Global, 142 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1522577572, $165.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1522577572/centerforimmigra

Book Description: Global politics has transformed in recent years due to a rise in nationalist ideology, the breakdown of multiple societies, and even nation-state legitimacy. The nation-state, arguably, has been in question for much of the digital age, as citizens become transnational and claim loyalty to many different groups, causes, and in some cases, states. Thus, politics that accompany diasporic communities have become increasingly important focal points of comparative and political science research.

Global Diaspora Politics and Social Movements: Emerging Research and Opportunities provides innovative insights into the dispersion of political and social groups across the world through various research methods such as case studies. This publication examines migration politics, security policy, and social movements. It is designed for academicians, policymakers, government officials, researchers, and students, and covers topics centered on the distribution of social groups and political groups.

Kindle, 1030 KB, ASIN: B07H7MWPBK, $37.95

Book Description: Deportation has again taken a prominent place within the immigration policies of nation-states. Irregular Citizenship, Immigration, and Deportation addresses the social responses to deportation, in particular the growing movements against deportation and detention, and for freedom of movement and the regularization of status.

The book brings deportation and anti-deportation together with the aim of understanding the political subjects that emerge in this contested field of governance and control, freedom and struggle. However, rather than focusing on the typical subjects of removal – refugees, the undocumented, and irregular migrants – Irregular Citizenship, Immigration, and Deportation looks at the ways that citizens get caught up in the deportation apparatus and must struggle to remain in or return to their country of citizenship. The transformation of 'regular' citizens into deportable 'irregular' citizens involves the removal of the rights, duties, and obligations of citizenship. This includes unmaking citizenship through official revocation or denationalization, as well as through informal, extra-legal, and unofficial means. The book features stories about struggles over removal and return, deportation and repatriation, rescue and abandonment. The book features eleven 'acts of citizenship' that occur in the context of deportation and anti-deportation, arguing that these struggles for rights, recognition, and return are fundamentally struggles over political subjectivity – of citizenship.

The Gray Zone: Sovereignty, Human Smuggling, and Undercover Police Investigation in Europe

Kindle, 653 KB, ASIN: B07K5FBCLY, 281 pp., $25.22

Book Description: Based on rare, in-depth fieldwork among an undercover police investigative team working in a southern EU maritime state, Gregory Feldman examines how "taking action" against human smuggling rings requires the team to enter the "gray zone", a space where legal and policy prescriptions do not hold. Feldman asks how this seven-member team makes ethical judgments when they secretly investigate smugglers, traffickers, migrants, lawyers, shopkeepers, and many others. He asks readers to consider that gray zones create opportunities both to degrade subjects of investigations and to take unnecessary risks for them. Moving in either direction largely depends upon bureaucratic conditions and team members' willingness to see situations from a variety of perspectives. Feldman explores their personal experiences and daily work in order to crack open wider issues about sovereignty, action, ethics, and, ultimately, being human. Situated at the intersection of the EU migration apparatus and the global, clandestine networks it identifies as security threats, this book allows Feldman to outline an ethnographically-based theory of sovereign action.

ɔed into three general baskets:

:, you have the well-intended but probably deluded developed nations — such as Germany, France, Belgium, and ada — whose progressive leaders have predictably gone in directions their own people are beginning to doubt. ainly that's the case in France, where the "yellow vest" demonstrations have gone far beyond a revolt over gas taxe into a general protest against President Emanuel Macron's vision for France's future. It is also the case in Belgium, re the prime minister has been obliged to step down after signing onto the compacts against the wishes of large nents of the populace, and thus broke the governing coalition. And it's started to come home to roost in Germany as , which Chancellor Angela Merkel has discovered to her political disadvantage.

t, you have the cynical and/or hypocritical nations—such as Laos, Cuba, and Russia, by way of example — which inely sign onto such declarations with high principles of humanitarian purpose, and then go on about their business or no intent to ensure that the principles are in any way meaningfully embedded either into the fabric of life or the utory framework of law. Thus, they get away with "virtue signaling" to the world their moral bona fides with little belief ectation that they will actually follow through on their commitments; those are for other people and other nations to w through.

lly, you have any number of nations — such as Haiti, Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, and even Mexico, to name a very few — whose people actually form the wave of humanity-in-motion that constitutes mass migration today, and do so because their governments have failed them politically, economically, socially, or in any number of other way the elite in those nations, it is often better practice to use migration outflows as a pressure valve than to confront an easingly restive population that might at some point erupt into action to take down the governing structures. Thus it is interest to see unfettered migration accepted as an international principle that they use to ensure remaining on top hierarchical pyramid within their countries. Really what they are voting for is for other nations to keep them afloat by g willing to take on the responsibility for those massive outflows.

president's request — if barriers along the border were necessary 12 years ago, why aren't they necessary today?

answer may lie in the fact that the Democrats will control the House of Representatives in the upcoming 116th first proposition is risky for the Democrats. There is a saying in Washington: "Win a vote, create a law, lose a vote, te an issue." Elections are a zero-sum game — if one side wins a seat, the other necessarily loses it. And border rity is an issue that can move the needle in an election in the favor of the party that supports it (and therefore move

Worst Alien Worker Programs Are Those Managed by the State Department

ember 27, 2018

ıaps the largest and most controversial of these J-1 programs is the Summer Work Travel Program, which my eague Jerry Kammer exposed in a book-length report a couple of years ago.

program, which has been repeatedly criticized by the Government Accountability Office and by State's own inspect eral, recruits overseas college students and recent grads for low-paid summertime work and provides more profits fo employers that use it than cultural exchange for its participants. It also takes some 100,000 jobs away from America ıagers and college students.

sense is that the State Department has other, more important challenges — China and Russia, for example — and uld remove itself from the grubby task of providing workers at below-market wages for some favored U.S. employers

lurred Message on the Shutdown of Most of the EB-5 Program

ember 26, 2018

temporary shutdown of the government, due to the conflict between the president and Congress over funding the W suspend about 95 percent of the activities in the immigrant investor (EB-5) program, but you cannot tell that from the licting messages that USCIS has issued on this admittedly complex subject.

reality, which USCIS fails to explain, is that something like 95 percent of the EB-5 program is no longer authorized, ut 5 percent remains. This has nothing to do with the lack of money to pay the feds; that is another matter.

part of EB-5 that has ground to a halt is that which allows regional centers to provide visas to aliens making $500,0 stments in government-recognized (but not government-guaranteed) projects; that which will continue is the tiny por e program that grants visas to those making $1 million investments in businesses in this country. The two segments EB-5 program have different congressional authorizations; the million-dollar one is permanent, the half-million-dollar is temporary; the latter expired on December 21 after a long series of short-term extensions patched onto spending .

Daniel Greenfield

ntPageMag.com, December 21, 2018

government faces a shutdown over Trump's call for $5 billion for a wall. Meanwhile the $8.6 billion we've spent on manitarian assistance" in Syria has never been challenged. Operation Inherent Resolve in Syria and Iraq was budge 15.3 billion for FY2019. But that $5 billion can't be found.

billion was diverted from counterterrorism to arm and train Syrian Jihadis, some of whom were Muslim Brotherhooc e others joined up with Al Qaeda. Some of the Jihadis we funded in Syria even ended up fighting each other. Still otl ed our weapons over to ISIS. And many ran away.

had $500 million to spend on training Syrian Jihadis in 2018, but nobody can find $5 billion to build a wall and keep dis out of our country.

re was outrage when the Trump administration diverted $200 million for cross-border stabilization efforts… in Syria. t's more than the $182 million the first 2,000 troops sent to the border cost. If Congress really can't find $5 billion in a ounting error somewhere to build the wall, then it can find the money by withdrawing from Syria and using the cash v e going to spend on an RPG for Abdul.

if there still isn't enough money, then withdrawing from Afghanistan should do it.

re spending $45 billion a year in Afghanistan to help former Taliban fight the current Taliban, who are also fighting IS ban, with all the groups of warlords, militias, bandits and Koranic meth heads taking the occasional break from fightir n other to take a few shots at us.

/ Compassionate Is the Democrats' Open-Borders Policy?

David Limbaugh

servative Review, December 28, 2018

s put aside that Ocasio-Cortez is conflating the Nativity story described in Luke's Gospel, in which Mary and Joseph t to Bethlehem to register for the Roman census, with Matthew's description of the couple's fleeing to Egypt to prote us from King Herod's decree to murder every boy age 2 or younger in Bethlehem. The latter example also fails beca e was no illegal border crossing into Egypt, as it, too, was part of the Roman Empire and, in any event, because Ma Joseph were following God's command for them to flee to protect Jesus; a divine order trumps all man-made laws. s also defer until a later time the bizarre scolding about refugee babies from one whose party virtually supports abort lemand.

sio-Cortez's biblical illiteracy is irrelevant. The point is that she is carrying on an unfortunate practice of cherry-pickir pture for political gain. She's simply trying to show that conservatives have no compassion for "foreigners" or the los that they are egregious hypocrites and frauds for holding themselves out as Christians while declining to model Jes .

erlying Ocasio-Cortez's tweet on refugees is her implied charge that Republicans don't care about refugees, foreign ther vulnerable people — that we would deny asylum to those truly fleeing their countries to escape harm and we stically desire to separate children from their parents.

se are all malicious lies. Republicans don't want to repeal asylum laws, but they do want the laws to be applied in ar rly fashion to ensure that we help those truly in need. When Democrats support open borders, sanctuary cities, acro board amnesty and a catch-and-release policy, they are incentivizing border anarchy, human trafficking and essness. They are endangering American citizens and discriminating against immigrants who played by the rules.

ıocrats Hate the Wall Because Trump Loves It

)eroy Murdock

onal Review Online, December 28, 2018

sident Trump is on to something. Democrats seem determined to stop his plans for a southern-border wall as revenc eating Hillary Clinton. They hate Trump's guts more than they love America. In Fiscal Year 2018 alone, federal offic rehended 396,579 illegal aliens on the southwest border. The Left loves the fact that those who were caught and ased, and others who break into America undetected, likely will become Democrats. So, from their perspective, why President Trump this win?

ıe of this might be semantics. The name for the U.S.–Mexican divide could matter politically.

ıd over a half a dozen Senate Democrats tell me just Friday [December 21], that if we call it anything but a wall, they ll for it," Senator David Perdue (R., Ga.) told Fox News Channel's Maria Bartiromo on Sunday. "This is ridiculous. Tl media's reaction to a shutdown is predictable: they will spin it as a calamity caused, as per Chuck Schumer's latest emark sound bite, by a Trumpian “temper tantrum.” Walls are dumb, the press will say, and Trump is wasting yone's time, since the Democrats will never vote for a wall. The obvious rejoinder is...Trump clearly believes in the essity of a wall, as do many of his core supporters. We shall see whether a day, or a week, or a month, or a year, of ially disabled government is enough to bring Democrats to the negotiating table, but they will crack, sooner or later. end that means meeting President Trump halfway and voting for slightly less than $5 billion for the wall, that would b ly better than nothing.

pite all these positive signs about President Trump's seriousness about defending our border and our sovereignty nst the tide of illegal immigration, there is still more to be done. A wall will not, by itself, prevent all illegal crossings, t stop people from coming to the U.S. as tourists or as students and then choosing to stay here. What will put an en e forms of illegal immigration is strong sanctions on U.S. employers who hire undocumented workers. The Trump inistration has so far not moved as aggressively as it should in this regard. Millions of U.S. businesses continue to s ur labor and immigration laws. There still exists no better way to disincentivize illegal immigration than by depriving al aliens of work opportunities. Despite the carping this will engender from corporate America, it is in the long run the way that illegal immigration can be defeated.

ther option would be to utilize funds in the same way USDA undertakes in-kind swaps with private parties to the tune dreds of millions of dollars worth of commodities and services. This would entail swapping the proceeds of the mercial paper sales for the wall, with construction companies being the counterparties.

Such an ressive approach is a sure way for Trump to regain the initiative and get the attention of lawmakers who have an rest in killing any threat to their control over spending, thus giving the president leverage in negotiations as pressure nts to end the shutdown.

also worth pointing out that DHS isn't talking about a single, 215 stretch of the border to be reinforced. The initial pla ld put this round of fencing up in four locations. Two would be in Texas, in the Rio Grande Valley area, and in Lared rest would go up in western Arizona and eastern California. All of this is seen as just an opening gambit, with the er being 700 miles of new barrier over the next couple of years.

sn't that sound like a deal that could be made before the new class of Congress is seated? It should, but the lunchro cs we're seeing in these negotiations make it seem less likely than it might. In olden times, they could have roughly s difference and just approved $2.7B and sent out the construction crews to get started. se caravans have been forming up for a few years now, but they were originally home-grown affairs attracting only a ple hundred participants at most. ing Away Foreign Aid Won't Stop Immigration

Bangor Daily News, December 29, 2018

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

e U.S. wants to stop this migration, it must continue to work to improve living and economic conditions in countries s Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador. Turning our backs on such countries will only make the refugee crisis worse, ign policy experts like Laurence Pope, a former ambassador and foreign service officer who served as charge d'affa bya after the Benghazi attacks, who lives in Portland.

e conditions in Central America that generate these desperate families of migrants can only be alleviated by sustaina nomic development, the goal of American assistance," Pope wrote in an email to the BDN. "Threats to cut it off will o te more desperate people, making the problem at the border worse."

y goal of foreign aid is to improve economic conditions in the countries that receive that aid, says Kristin Vekasi, an stant professor of political science at the University of Maine. In this instance, American investments aims to create e economic opportunity for Hondurans, for example, so fewer of them will want to leave the country. Further, there is incentive for Honduras and the other countries to divert money from such investments to tighter border security in th ntries. Instead, if the U.S. stops its aid, these countries will simply have less money to make needed improvements t d improve their economies and decrease violence — and they will blame the U.S. if conditions deteriorate.

Immigration Law Values

The Trump presidency has sought to comprehensively dismantle mechanisms that welcome, value, and integrate immigrants in favor of a stance maintaining that the United States does not welcome or value immigrants—thereby calling into question basic principles that many have believed to have long since been resolved and settled. But the values implicated by immigration law are complex and difficult to define. While the United States has long proclaimed to be a "nation of immigrants," immigration law has always sent conflicting signals. This session will examine fundamental values of contemporary immigration law and examine immigration law values past, present, and future. The session will also explore whether there are values not currently be understood as settled principles that should be. For example, is immigration law immoral if it results in separation of families? Does immigration adjudication meet basic norms of fairness? What would make immigration law closer to realizing immigration ideals?

1:30-4:30 p.m.
Asylum and Refugee Rights in Islamic Law

This is a two-panel session. The first will feature Dr. Leonard Wood, who recently published a book on legal education in modern Egypt, and another scholar who will offer some reflections on the work and engage in conversations with the author as well as the audience. The second panel wil discuss asylum and refugee rights in Islamic law. The Muslim world today is currently experiencing the greatest rate of refugee movement in the world. This will allow us to explore historical and contemporary discourses on migration and refugee rights.

Civil Rights, Liberty, and Immigration Control

Recent events highlight the frequent conflict between individual liberty interests and the government's migration control policies. The executive order banning the entry of Muslims into the United States has impinged on religious liberty, freedom to travel, and the liberty interest in family. Immigration detention, now greatly expanded, curtails freedom from physical restraint. "Zero tolerance" border control policies have caused large-scale family separation and detention, placed refugees at risk of refoulement, and infringed upon various rights of the child. Denial of noncitizen minors' access to abortion while in government custody has implicated overlapping liberty interests. This session explores the doctrinal, practical, and theoretical issues arising at the intersection of liberty and migration control, including how exercises of the immigration power have affected individual liberty interests, the narrative and advocacy strategies used to advance immigrants' rights, and how courts are assessing and weighing liberty interests in cases involving migration control.

After 1898: Empire, Law, and Citizenship

"Birds of Prey": The Expansion of US Immigration Law to Puerto Rico and the Philippines
Julian Lim, Arizona State University

Abstract: My paper examines the intersections of empire and immigration law in the aftermath of the Spanish-American War. Scholars have paid attention to the contested political and legal status of Filipinos and Puerto Ricans within the U.S.' colonial regime, and their eventual liminal status as "U.S. nationals" who were neither alien nor citizen, but could move freely within the borders of U.S. jurisdiction. Meanwhile, the expansion of U.S. immigration law from the mainland United States to its territories has remained less well known. An emphasis on domestic, nation-bound frameworks in the study of U.S. immigration history has obscured the ways in which U.S. immigration law extended far beyond its immediate borders.

American empire generated a variety of new migration streams and immigration issues, however, for U.S. officials. While increasing numbers of Puerto Ricans and Filipinos set their sights on the mainland United States, colonial officials worried about Chinese migration into the Philippines and the invasion of Puerto Rico by neighboring island residents. Thus not only did U.S. officials seek to regulate the migrations of their newly-acquired colonial subjects, they also redefined the distant borders of entry and exit for those "birds of prey," as one U.S. immigration official called them in 1900, who sought to use the territories as a stepping-stone to the mainland United States. The expansion of U.S. territorial control thus also demanded, according to colonial officials, the expansion of the U.S.' increasingly restrictive immigration regulation apparatus.

The paper thus provides a deeper understanding of transnational migration and law in the era of American empire. It begins to show how the laws of immigration were deeply entwined with the laws of empire – both serving as regimes of inclusion and exclusion, of expansion and contraction that ultimately sought to pull the territories into the U.S.' jurisdictional orbit.

Teaching Changing Loyalties and Histories: The Queens Immigration Project

Session Abstract The Queens Immigration Project is funded by the National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC) for three years. It supports funding for teachers to enhance their digital skills while learning new approaches to teaching world history. The New York City borough of Queens is the most diverse county in the United States, and its libraries and archives have served as a model to study change over time in NYC. Many of the New York City high school students are first generation Americans, and their family's histories are an integral part of a changing United States.

The project offers the opportunity for teachers and students to analyze their family histories as tools to teach Units 5 and 6 of the NYC Social Studies Scope and Sequence that focus on the essential questions of modernization and globalization. In these units, teachers and their students address two questions: What is the price of modernization? And, Is globalization a force for progress and prosperity? In the units, family history offers a way to contemplate the questions in the sequence such as "How has modernization created tension and conflict regarding social norms, gender norms, and institutions?" The family histories inspire teachers and students to consider changing loyalties through time and place within the stories of migration and immigration.

The project's principal investigators and teachers will demonstrate how they have created and employed open educational resources to assist students in collecting and positioning personal digital archives and interpreting open-access historical documents to understand their and their families' pasts. In doing history, students also contribute to “open” repositories and to local community archive projects such as the Queens Memory Project by creating online family histories. In the process, the students develop an individual understanding of the technologies and concepts behind archiving. They also develop key skills of historical thinking by considering the continuity of the history of immigration and changing neighborhoods in NYC. By researching their family histories like a historian, NYC students challenge the history of U.S. immigration by expanding the traditional narratives through an exploration of the motivating (or push) factors that contribute to migration and immigration in recent history.

The presentation is an interactive roundtable. All participants and attendees will have access to the materials that have been created for the project by the principle investigators, teachers, NYC high school students, and graduate students on the project. The lesson ideas, digital archives, and methodological approaches have been collected and made open to all who wish to use the materials to teach global studies and world history.

What Everyone Needs to Know about Central America in an Age of Deportation, Part 1: Views from the Northern Triangle

Session Abstract U.S. support of Central American counterinsurgencies during the Cold War produced the first waves of Central American migration to the United States. In the 2000s, popular awareness of the region in the U.S. receded. At the same time, the Central American population in the U.S. grew tenfold, mostly coming from the "Northern Triangle" of Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras. Central Americans have returned to public view as child migrants, workers, victims of crime, gang members, targets of deportation, and families with generational roots in the U.S. We urgently need to consider Central America in the current context of racialization, special relationships, legacies of violence, and surveillance in the U.S.

“Views from the Northern Triangle,” the first of two sessions that bring Central American and U.S. history into conversation over these issues, asks Central Americanists who have worked in the region many decades what are the essential points they think students, the general public, and our colleagues in other fields should know in the current political and deportation climate. The panel aims for even temporal and geographical coverage from ancient to modern including Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador, with viewpoints also from archaeology and anthropology. We envision going beyond the usual though important discussion of US-Central American foreign relations, further back in time and stemming from our research. What is the deep historical backdrop of Central American immigration to and deportation from the U.S.? What do Central Americanists need to know from U.S. history?

Refugees and the Resettled: The Challenges of Public History Research within Middle Eastern American Communities

Papers:

Decolonizing the Sojourner/Settler Paradigm: Reimagining Histories of Yemenis in the United States

Neama Alamri, University of California, Merced

Session Abstract: In Sojourners and Settlers: The Yemeni Immigrant Experience (1988), an anthology on the lives of Yemeni immigrants in the U.S., the trope of the "sojourner" versus the "settler" served as a guiding framework that informed the trajectory of the case studies, the types of research questions that were asked, and the scholarly claims that were made. Under the sojourner/settler binary, is the categorization of two types of Yemeni immigrants: those who come to the U.S. temporarily with plans of eventually returning to Yemen and those who permanently settle in the U.S. and successfully assimilate to "American" culture and lifestyle. Implicit in this generalizing categorization, however, is the erasure of complex and lived experiences within Yemeni communities. While the title, Sojourners and Settlers, preempted the possibility of complicated, non-binary narratives, it did accurately point to the ways in which Yemeni immigrant experiences were (and continue to be) portrayed in the academic scholarship. In this paper, I will explore the ways in which, unlike other Middle Eastern communities, scholarship on Yemenis the U.S. has overwhelmingly been informed by the sojourner/settler framework. This is partly due to the fact that historically Yemeni immigrant communities have been overwhelmingly Muslim and working class. As a result, Yemeni communities have been racialized through both religion and class and are often described as being isolationist, non-assimilative, and traditional. Through a critical historical analysis, this paper seeks to decolonize the sojourner/settler paradigm and re-imagine histories of Yemeni diasporic communities. In doing so, this paper will contribute to imagining new ways of doing community-engaged research in Middle Eastern communities.

Stacy Fahrenthold, University of California, Davis

Session Abstract: California's central valley has been a favored site for resettlement of refugees from the Middle East for a century, beginning with Armenians and Assyrians displaced by the genocides of World War I and continuing with new waves of Palestinian, Iraqi, Iranian, and now Syrian refugees. Many of the local aid societies working with refugees from Syria and Iraq themselves represent historical refugee populations in the region, and they collaborate with federal agencies to foster local networks for care provision extending beyond basic subsistence. The complex ways in which the politics of community introduces conflict within resettled communities, however, poses a persistent challenge and must be negotiated by scholars working in refugee history. What does it mean, for instance, when recently-resettled refugees fit themselves into older ethnic communities that do not recognize them as co-ethnics? How do the politics of wars in Syria and Iraq follow the resettled to the U.S.? Employing two case studies—Syrians resettled in Fresno, California and Iraqi Assyrians resettled in Turlock and Modesto, California—this paper argues two things. First, it argues that community-engaged scholarship can be of service to the recently-resettled by helping them claim a historical space within a valley culture that is deeply imbricated with historical post-displacement experiences. And second, it cautions that community-engaged and public historical scholarship must be sensitive towards the ways in which "new" and "old" refugee communities do—and do not—recognize one another. The paper concludes with a critique of "refugee" as a catch-all category; with many diasporas in one valley, the category's comparative utility comes at the expense of regional particularisms.

"Well, First, I'm Not a Refugee": Interrogating Intra-diasporic Boundaries within Assyrian, Chaldean, and Kurdish Communities in the United States

Erin Hughes, independent scholar

Session Abstract: As scholars including Paul Gilroy and Stuart Hall have argued, the roots and routes of displacement matter. They shape not only individual experiences of migration and identity but are often carried into narratives of how the greater ethnic or national group defines itself within the diverse fabric of American society. For stateless nations in particular, whose homelands have been chipped away by centuries of displacement and divided by modern state boundaries, this defining of who “we" are becomes complicated and often contested. As researchers, there is consequentially a risk of painting these communities with an overly-broad brush and overlooking intra-communal wedges that define how people understand themselves, shape experiences within the U.S., and influence political demands on the U.S. and on the homeland.

Using a comparative study of Assyrian, Chaldean, and Kurdish communities in the U.S., this paper examines the layers of identity and intra-communal boundaries within these populations. On a community engagement level, such differences help researchers better understand individual lived experiences and how roots and routes factor in navigating society. For example, for Chaldeans and Assyrians, diasporic leadership largely migrated for employment prior to 2000 and encounter differences with community members who fled ethno-sectarian conflict after 2003. Internal divisions become further significant when politicized. Claims for autonomy and self-governance in Iraq have heightened Chaldean identity, challenging the understanding that Chaldeans and Assyrians are one ethnic group. This paper discusses how communal differences can become increasingly salient, and the significance of locality, particularly socio-economic factors in the place of resettlement, in shaping identity, ideology, and communal boundaries. It highlights how labels like ‘Iraqi refugee’ overlook the rich diversity of people and ideologies contained therein. Lastly, it addresses the challenge of balancing representative, community-engaged research with analysis that holds relevance for policy-makers and wider scholarship.

Unsettled Lives: Refugees Reaching Out to One Another

Sally Howell, University of Michigan–Dearborn

Session Abstract: Middle Easterners have been settling in the Americas for well over a century now. They have come here to study, settle, or make money. Some have come to stay while others have had more temporary ambitions. Many came by choice, but many, especially in recent years, have come as refugees and exiles fleeing war or persecution (religious or political). Increasingly, the United States is an active combatant in the wars that have governed mass displacements from the Middle East, which presents distinct challenges to historians and other scholars working with Middle Eastern refugee communities. This panel draws together scholars working with recently displaced communities from Yemen, Syria, and Iraq on public history projects. The four papers focus on unique methodological and moral challenges public historians face when working with resettled refugees. Scholarly work on these communities is often supported by institutions intending to facilitate the settlement and incorporation of the newly arriving community, to help a group create a record of their collective trauma and displacement, or to empower the group in some capacity related to their homeland. Support for this work often comes with political motives that can impact research design. As public historians and community-engaged scholars working within the field of Refugee Studies, we discuss how our scholarly motivations and institutional partners impact our relationships with our research subjects.

Panelists will broach the challenge of working with diverse—and often divided—post-displacement communities in America. And in a climate of intense Islamophobia and xenophobia, our work can take on a sense of political urgency that is at odds with the professional demands of teaching and writing oriented toward scholarly (rather than public) audiences. Furthermore, our subjects are frequently eager to define their lives and experiences beyond the "refugee" label and its specific cultural and political associations. As scholars, we want to think through new ways to frame our work to honor this expectation. These are a few of the complex challenges we seek to address in our discussion among public history practitioners located in the heart of empire and working with communities that defy our understandings of what it means to migrate in the 21st century.

What Everyone Needs to Know about Central America in an Age of Deportation, Part 2: Views from the United States

Session Abstract: U.S. support of Central American counterinsurgencies during the Cold War produced the first waves of Central American migration to the United States. In the 2000s, popular awareness of the region in the U.S. receded. At the same time, the Central American population in the U.S. grew tenfold, mostly coming from the "Northern Triangle" of Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras. Central Americans have returned to public view as child migrants, workers, victims of crime, gang members, targets of deportation, and families with generational roots in the U.S. We urgently need to consider

Central America in the current context of racialization, special relationships, legacies of violence, and surveillance in the U.S.

In Part 2, "Views from the United States", historians of the United States consider how to fit Central America(ns) into existing narratives of U.S. immigration, US-Mexican transnational and borderlands history, and Latinx history. The southern border has constituted a Native ground, a crossing place for immigrants not just from Mexico but also from other parts of Latin America and the world, a transnational community, and a regulated landscape. Latinx history has been dominated by Mexico on the one hand and the Caribbean on the other. Where does this leave Central Americans, and what do U.S. historians need to know about Central America?

The Height of US Immigration Restriction Reconsidered

Papers:

Contested Terrain: Debating Refugee Admissions in the Cold War
Laura Madokoro, McGill University

Session Abstract: The historiography on refugee admissions to the United States and other white settler societies generally focuses on the work of state actors and the role of policies, regulations and laws in shaping the legal landscape in which refugees and migrants move. Lost in this focus is the critical role that civil society actors, namely secular and religious humanitarians, have played in shaping the social, cultural and political landscape in which reforms and initiatives have occurred.

To address this lacuna, this paper considers the history of civil society activism in effecting change to refugee admissions and humanitarian resettlement policies in the United States during the Cold War. It considers the critical years between 1945 and 1965 when diverse groups including the American Jewish Committee, the National Lutheran Council, the American Friends Service Committee, Aid Refugee Chinese Intellectuals Inc. and the United Presbyterians worked in different ways to secure the admission of refugees from Europe and Asia.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As this paper shows, these groups did not operate in tandem, indeed they often pursued reforms at cross-purposes. Yet it was the very diversity of their approaches and objectives that created a rich and robust environment in which discussions about moral responsibilities vis-à-vis the world's refugees could flourish. Still, this diversity also ensured that the federal government could continue to minimize state responsibilities for assisting the world's refugees. While civil society actors proved to be increasingly committed to refugee admissions from around the world over the course of the cold war period, the US government remained selective in its approach to refugee admissions. These tensions were ultimately captured in the language and scope of the immigration reforms advanced in the 1965 Immigration and Nationality Act.

Monique Laney, Auburn University

Session Abstract: While immigration laws of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century became increasingly restrictive based on an applicant's national origin, they always included exceptions for those who could presumably further the nation's interests. Earlier laws already provided exemptions for teachers, students, and merchants, then for skilled laborers, professionals, actors, ministers, professors, domestic servants, nurses, and agricultural workers. What was new after World War II was an emphasis on professionals with scientific or technical skills. By 1948, the Displaced Persons Act included the first conscious labor preferences and job requirements for refugees entering from Europe. Not much later, the 1952 McCarran-Walter Act allocated 50% of visas to highly skilled professionals. This presentation discusses a precedent for these new stipulations.

The military undertaking Project Paperclip brought hundreds of German and Austrian scientists, engineers, and technicians to the United States after World War II to work on military projects. Most of the specialists came between 1945 and 1952 as enemy aliens, but soon the State, War, and Justice Departments worked out a process that would allow them to become American citizens.

The involved agencies went to extraordinary lengths to pave a way for former enemies to become U.S. citizens in the name of "national security" for military uses or "national interest" for civilian exploitation, putting them ahead of displaced persons barely surviving in Europe. The additional involvement of the

Commerce Department from the beginning signals the important role that employers would play in future immigration debates and programs. Typically, only discussed in the context of military history or as the operation that brought Wernher von Braun and his rocket team to the United States, this presentation discusses Project Paperclip as an important step in the development of immigration policies that offer preferential treatment for the highly skilled ever since.

The Undertow of Reforming Immigration

Ruth Wasem, University of Texas at Austin

Session Abstract: Over the two decades between the end of World War Two and the passage of the Immigration Act of 1965, the agents of immigration reform were checked by a strong undertow that kept them just short of achieving their objectives. Powerfully entrenched legislators supported the status quo of the racially-based national origins quotas.

In the years leading up to the Immigration Act of 1965, a growing sense of citizenship as well as an actual increase in naturalization among immigrant groups was shifting the balance. More precisely, the naturalization rate (i.e., percent of foreign-born residents who become U.S. citizens) rose from just over half (52%) in 1920 to over three-quarters (80%) in 1950. Just as the accomplishments of immigrants and successes of their children were directly challenging old notions of selectivity and racial superiority, the electoral clout of naturalized immigrants and their children was beginning to alter the political landscape.

Coupled with the increasing civic engagement of immigrants was a broader societal push toward equality in mid-20th Century United States. There is considerable scholarship on how the war against fascism abroad turned the mirror on inequality in the United States and fueled campaigns for civil rights, workers' rights, women's rights, and other struggles for equality. At issue was how long the undertow of beliefs in a deserving class, race and ethnic superiority and entrenched political power would hold back the societal and political currents for equality.

Measuring Gains from International Migration

Let their knowledge flow: The effect of returning refugees on export performance in the former Yugoslavia

Dany Bahar, Brookings Institution; Andreas Hauptmann, Institute for Employment Research (IAB); Hillel Rapoport, Paris School of Economics; and Cem Ozguzel, Paris School of Economics

During the early 1990s Germany received over half a million Yugoslavian refugees fleeing war. By 2000, many of these refugees, who were under temporary protection, had been repatriated. We exploit this historical episode to provide causal evidence on the role that migrants play explaining export performance in global markets after returning to their home country. We find that the elasticity of exports to return migration is between 0.1 to 0.24 in industries where migrants were employed during their stay in Germany. In order to deal with endogeneity we use historic exogenous rules of allocation of asylum seekers across different German states to construct an instrumental variable for the treatment. The results are mostly driven by knowledge-intensive industries, and by workers in occupations intensive in analytical and managerial skills.

Border Walls

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Morten, Stanford University

During 2007-2010 the US government built border fences along one-third of the US-Mexico border. We apply a number of new datasets to study the effect of this fence construction on migration and the labor market in both the U.S. and Mexico. We document that the construction of a fence: (i) reduced migration between aected origin-destination pairs by 4%, (ii) reduced the stock of migrants in a US destination region by 2% for every 100 origins affected by the fence, (iii) lead to an internal general equilibrium response, with an inflow of the stock of high-educated US-born workers of 0.6% (0.1% for low-educated US-born workers), and (iv) lead to a decrease in the wages of low-educated US-born workers of 0.7% and high-educated US-born workers of 0.5%, with no statistically signicant change to the wage of migrant workers. We then develop a quantitative general equilibrium spatial model incorporating multiple types of labor and the costly movement of goods and people across space. We show that this model can match the above facts and estimate the model using the construction of the border fence. Finally, we use the model to predict the effect of a proposed border fence that spans the entire border.

Open Borders in the European Union and Beyond: Migration Flows and Labor Market Implications

John Kennan, University of Wisconsin-Madison

In 2004, the European Union admitted 10 new countries, and wages in these countries were generally well below the levels in the existing member countries. Citizens of these newly admitted countries were subsequently free to take jobs anywhere in the EU, and many did so. In 2015, a large number of refugees from Syria and other broken countries sought to migrate to EU countries (along very dangerous routes), and these refugees were met with fierce resistance, at least in some places. This paper seeks to understand the labor market implications of allowing free migration across borders, with particular reference to the EU. The aim is to quantify the migration flows associated with EU enlargement, and to analyze the extent to which these flows affected equilibrium wages. The main conclusion is that the real wage effects are relatively small, and the gains from open borders are very large.

The IT Boom and Other Unintended Consequences of Chasing the American Dream

Gaurav Khanna, University of California-San Diego and Nicolas Morales,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

University of Michigan

We study how US immigration policy coupled with the Internet boom affected not just the US economy, but also led to a tech boom in India. Indian students enrolled in engineering schools to gain employment in the rapidly growing US IT industry via the H-1B visa program. Those who could not join the US workforce, due to the H-1B cap, remained in India, enabling the growth of an Indian IT sector. Those who returned with acquired human capital and technology after the expiration of their H-1Bs also contributed to the growing tech-workforce in India. The increase in IT productivity allowed India to eventually surpass the US in software exports. Our general equilibrium model captures firm-hiring across various occupations, innovation and technology diffusion, and dynamic worker decisions to choose occupations and fields of major in both the US and India. We identify key elasticities using an instrumental variables strategy, and show that our model captures levels and trends of key variables in validation tests. We perform counterfactual exercises and find that on average, workers in each country are better off because of high-skill migration. The H-1B program induced Indians to switch to computer science (CS) occupations, increasing the CS workforce in India and raising overall IT output. It also induced US workers to switch to non-CS occupations, reducing the US native CS workforce.

The Fading Mark of Migration: Assimilation as Information Loss among United States Immigrants
Noe Wiener, University of Massachusetts-Amherst

The labor market integration of immigrants raises thorny issues regarding both the behavior and composition of the immigrant groups as well as the structure of opportunities at the destination. Standard economics accounts of income "assimilation" are based on 1.) the marginal productivity theory of income distribution and 2.) the modeling of conditional expectations of wages. I argue that 1.) misconstrues the process of value creation and 2.) neglects information contained in the wage distributions themselves. Instead, I start from the fundamentally incomplete nature of socioeconomic data and propose a meso-level measure of income assimilation that is founded in information theory. For immigrants to become assimilated in this sense turns on the extent to which the various social processes involved in income allocation "forget" about the immigrant status of a cohort. I present results for different cohorts and regions of origin between 1970 and 2010 using Census data for the United States.

Description: Comprehensive immigration reform has been a hot button issue for decades in this country. Immigration policy forces politicians and citizens alike to weigh economic and security concerns against humanitarian interests.

The current administration has approached this issue with an emphasis on "security first" regarding immigration policy, looking to slash immigration to the United States. Measures including the "travel ban," the proposed border-wall with Mexico, and pledges to deport millions of undocumented immigrants all raise questions on how to balance keeping America safe from terrorism while still being a "nation of immigrants."

Panelists:

Matthew Segal
Legal Director of the ACLU of Massachusetts since 2012. Leading a team of civil rights lawyers, he has litigated cases that halted the Muslim ban, overturned 21,587 wrongful convictions and protected cell phone location data. Previously, as an assistant federal defender, Matt argued a case that led to hundreds of exonerations and re-sentencings.

Rodrigo Saavedra

A DACA recipient and community organizer, Rodrigo has appeared in major nationwide news outlets.

Jessica Vaughn

Description and Speakers:

Irregular Citizenship, Immigration, and Deportation

The talk is based on Nyers' recent book, which brings deportation and anti-deportation together with the aim of understanding the political subjects that emerge in this contested field of governance and control, freedom and struggle. Rather than focusing on the typical subjects of removal – refugees, the undocumented and irregular migrants – Irregular Citizenship, Immigration and Deportation looks at the ways that citizens get caught up in the deportation apparatus and must struggle to remain in or return to their country of citizenship. The transformation of 'regular' citizens into deportable 'irregular' citizens involves the removal of the rights, duties, and obligations of citizenship. This includes unmaking citizenship through official revocation or denationalization, as well as through informal, extra-legal, and unofficial means. The book features stories about struggles over removal and return, deportation and repatriation, rescue and abandonment.

Enforced Disappearance: A Stretched-out Present and Unending Grief

This talk concerns the practices of waiting that occur when people are placed outside of the protection of the law. I trace life stories of Halit and Eysan, a displaced elderly Kurdish couple, to discuss how the counterinsurgency practice of enforced disappearance, a distinct exercise of sovereign power, produces a specific form of waiting, which I call enforced waiting. I examine temporal effects of the prolonged armed conflict between the Turkish state and Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK) on everyday life in Yuksekova where violence is not always instantaneous or spectacular but often gradual and uneventful. I argue that waiting in Kurdistan is intrinsic to sovereign practices and it is the embodiment of continuous and uneventful violence that suffuses across time and space.

Abstract: In recent years experts have hailed Latin America as the new avant-garde of generous asylum and refugee policies. Understanding the extent and sustainability of Latin America's liberal approach to refugee protection holds important theoretical and normative implications for refugee studies and politics. The first part of the paper offers a short review of the characteristics and variance of refugee policy liberalization in the region and its relationship to universal refugee law. The second part of the paper analyses the implementation gaps of progressive refugee legislation in three cases: extra-continental asylum seekers from Africa, Asia and the Caribbean, the resettlement of Syrian refugees, and the massive forced displacement of Venezuelans. The paper specifically discusses the applicability of the "numbers versus rights" hypothesis to explaining such policy gaps, and ends with some considerations regarding the future sustainability of expanded refugee protection and international co-operation in the region.

Building the Foundations for Inclusion: What Does the Future Hold for Immigrant Integration in Europe?

2:30–5:30 p.m., Friday, January 25, 2019
Residence Palace, 155 Rue de la Loi
Brussels, Belgium
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/building-foundations-inclusion-what-does-future-hold-immigrant-integration-europe

Description: The migration crisis transformed the landscape of immigrant integration in Europe. Large-scale and spontaneous movements placed unprecedented pressures on public services and amplified social divisions, which, in turn, fueled the rise of populist parties. But while the everyday pressures of the migration crisis have absorbed most of the bandwidth of integration policymakers in recent years, larger challenges could lie ahead. Aging populations will place extreme pressure on welfare-state institutions and public spending. Digitization, automation, and artificial intelligence will transform labor markets as we know them. And greater cultural clashes and social unrest—especially if accompanied by another migration crisis—could further splinter the political landscape. How well Europe can weather tomorrow's challenges will depend on the institutions and systems built today.

This meeting will highlight lessons from MPI Europe's flagship Integration Futures initiative, which seeks to develop creative and strategic approaches to addressing today's toughest integration challenges—and to better plan for those around the corner.

The meeting will consider three questions in particular:

* How has the landscape of integration policymaking shifted, and how can policymakers build a sense of common ground in this state of flux?
* What challenges and opportunities could future economic, social, technological, and demographic trends create for integration?
* What are the most promising new innovations to help integration officials solve entrenched integration challenges in an age of populism?

Description: Borders, migration, exclusion: The role of civil society and

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

humanitarian aid in an increasingly polarized political context

The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

The Costa Rican and Panamanian Versions of Catch-and-Release, Courtesy of U.S. Taxpayers

January 4, 2019

He's right. In fact, I've been wondering why this hasn't been done already. As Bensman makes clear, the United States is already providing both of those nations substantial funding for interdicting these aliens, holding them in detention long enough to take biometric and biographic data that is shared and can be added to U.S. databases and also scrubbed against our terrorism and national security information in advance of their arrival ... and then letting them go by the simple expedient of granting temporary travel permits to move through and out of those countries on their way north.

While certainly there is value in having that data, is it worth the money? I think not. Why would we not go the further step of ensuring that these aliens never reach our southern border?

Did a Trump Property in New Jersey Break Immigration Law by Providing Fake Documents to Illegal Aliens?
Given that the aliens themselves would be implicated in criminal conduct by having accepted and used fake documents, why would they acquiesce to their lawyer providing such assertions to law enforcement — which, notably, according to the article, were made to Special Counsel Robert Mueller?

The superficial answer is an illegal alien might do so to get ahead of the curve, seek "use immunity" for his or her crimes, and then even perhaps ask for U visas to gain the right to live and work in the United States. Of course, given that no one appears to have been looking at this facility, eyes having instead been focused mostly on Mar-a-Lago, there appears to be a measure of self-interest involved on the part of these aliens that should be scrutinized closely. What better way to accrue status when no other avenue is available? How far would an alien be willing to go to make such claims if the end game was the right to stay legally?

And in the case of one alien, according to the article, she now already has legal status — presumably a real green card — and has much to lose by admitting she previously participated in this fraud, because the first thing any immigration officer would do is go back to her application for status and see if she withheld admitting to that materially significant crime (which clearly she did or they would never have granted status). So why is she coming forward now? What has been promised to her, and by whom?

A Middle Ground on Funding The "Big Beautiful Wall": Border Bonds
December 31, 2018
One way that the president might have worked with Congress to obtain the funds was through a tax on remittances sent abroad, much of which is derived from aliens working illegally in the United States who send funds back to relatives in their home countries. Such a tax is something we at the Center have discussed at length and continue to believe should be done to curb the flow of outbound money that is permanently lost to our economy, whether or not the income to the Treasury ends up apportioned to the wall or not. But, for reasons known only to the president, that path was never pursued.

Now, along comes a third way: H.R.7325, the Border Bonds for America Act of 2018, introduced by Rep. Steven Palazzo (R-Miss.), "To provide for the issuance of revenue bonds to fund construction of a physical border barrier and related technology, roads, and lighting along the United States border with Mexico." The bill would provide for the issuance of federal government bonds to fund the wall. Will it gain traction? I doubt it, especially not once the House is once again controlled by Democrats.

But it's not a bad idea at all. It is a means by which the government could test the popularity of the wall: If investors buy these bonds, it certainly signals that they in some way, shape, or form support the construction of a barrier, and might in the end even make a profit doing so, in the same way that you earn interest on any other government-issued bonds.

Trump's 'Operation Hold the Line' on the Border Wall

Setting an early tone with a new Congress

That is why the president's current posture on funding for a border wall has become a marker for what he will, or will not, accept as it relates to funding for immigration enforcement. Anyone who has read my posts on the subject, or heard me interviewed about it, knows that a wall (or a barrier of any sort) is not as important to stemming the flow of illegal immigration as closing the loopholes that encourage foreign nationals to seek illegal entry into the United States, particularly by using their children as pawns in that effort.

That said, barriers are needed where barriers are needed to slow the entry of drugs and alien smugglers into the United States, and thereby act as a force-multiplier for our still under-resourced Border Patrol. Simply put, the longer that it takes smugglers to bring their illicit loads of people, drugs, or other contraband into the United States, the more effectively Border Patrol agents can respond, and that is what barriers do — delay entry, even if they don't stop it entirely.

Ocasio-Cortez's View of Immigration and the Economy

Bad signs for the 116th Congress

Which brings me to AOC's fifth point: "End For-Profit Prisons & ICE Detention." There is much that can be said about the cost-effectiveness of for-profit immigration detention, and it is a subject that I will take up soon. For the moment, however, I want to focus on the second part of that point: "End ... ICE Detention."

Put another way, the more aliens who enter illegally who are released, the more aliens who will enter illegally with the expectation that they will be released, too. Or, as I wrote in a December 2018 post:

https://cis.org/Arthur/OcasioCortezs-View-Immigration-and-Economy

Looking Back and Looking Forward

As noted above, 2019 is not stacking up to be much better. The Democrats seized control of the House of Representatives in the 2018 election, while the Republicans continue to hold the Senate. It is doubtful that Speaker-designee Nancy Pelosi and her caucus will be interested in much other than attempting to thwart the president's policies (and especially his immigration policies), and possibly seeking his impeachment. The current partial government shutdown over border security does not bode well for the prospects of meaningful reform of the laws that currently draw foreign nationals toward illegal entry along the Southwest border.

Ever the optimist, however, I am hopeful that the Supreme Court (which seems to all the more play the role of adult in the room in the federal judiciary) will undo lower court orders on DACA and TPS, and possibly even curb some of the worst parts of the Flores settlement agreement. This will give the president bargaining chips that he can use to squeeze concessions out of the Democratic caucus in the House. If that occurs, the president must be resolute in driving the best bargain he can get. Funding for a border wall is not enough. Closing the border loopholes, ending the diversity visa lottery, and cutting chain migration (among other immigration reforms) must be included in any agreement.

House Homeland Security Committee Releases Special Report on Terrorist Border Infiltration Threat

Other than organizations such as the Center for Immigration Studies, few non-government or media entities ever attempt to address this avenue of approach to the homeland in the illegal immigration context, because reporting about this corner of the problem resides mostly in protected classified realms. Another reason for the under-reporting is because the U.S. information ecosystem is over-weighted with a counterproductive denialism that this kind of migration is even happening. Or that if some Middle Easterners show up at the border without identification, or foreign intelligence reports show links to terrorist organizations, there's really nothing to see here folks because no one ended up specifically convicted in federal courts under federal terrorism statutes, and no attack was carried out because suspects were caught first. (See this Psychology Today article about the social dysfunction phenomenon known as "anti-intellectualism" for more on the denialism of which I speak).

I and the House Homeland Security Committee, at least under the Republican majority control that has just ended, beg to differ. The committee left this report as a parting message to incoming Democrats who likely will put it on a shelf. But before that happens, let's take a quick look-see.

Some Proposed Incentives for Mexico and Central America to Stop U.S.-Bound Third-Country Migrants

Proposal for Central America

Let's take a leaf from the European precedent regarding migrants from Syria, and strike formal deals with the Central American nations, as Europe has with Turkey. In this case, we would simply work out financial arrangements with the nations of Panama, Costa Rica, and perhaps others to cause those SIAs and other non-Central Americans who seek to use their countries on their way to the United States illegally to be identified and shipped home at U.S. expense.

These aliens (probably including a terrorist or three) are not of sympathetic interest to the Central American nations as some of the Central Americans are to Mexico. The Central America nations simply want to get rid of them, so why not pay them to get rid of them in a way that is useful to us?

The individuals, by and large, are guilty of illegal entry into the Central American country in which they are identified, and the rough and ready process of deportation from, say, Panama, probably has few appeals processes.

How the Washington Post Exposé of Trump Missed the Story of How Reagan Wrecked Immigration Reform
Mettler gives the impression that Reagan, as the chief of the executive branch, was committed to enforcing the laws that required employers to verify that workers were authorized. She notes that when Reagan signed the legislation he declared: "Future generations of Americans will be thankful for our efforts to humanely regain control of our borders and thereby preserve the value of one of the most sacred possessions of our people — American citizenship."

That was certainly one of Reagan's least prescient statements as president. It was also one of his most disingenuous. It belies the fact that Reagan was never committed to the worksite regulation that was essential to the effort to control the border. Reagan was a small-government conservative and a frequent critic of just the sort of regulation that was a linchpin of the 1986 immigration reform.

Indeed, Reagan showed his fealty to the California agribusiness interests that — in concert with Mexican-American congressmen — led the effort to ensure the failure of IRCA's procedures for verifying that a worker was not an illegal immigrant. The power of the California growers was legendary. During the congressional debate that preceded passage of IRCA, an exasperated Rep. John Bryant (D-Texas) asked, "The question today is: How much are we going to do for the California growers."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Reagan did a great deal for California growers by letting IRCA enforcement die from neglect. He was never committed to the control that IRCA promised and that he so enthusiastically endorsed at the signing ceremony. His performance illustrated conservative writer David Frum's observation that "the most dangerous legacy Reagan bequeathed to his party was his legacy of cheerful indifference to detail."

You've Heard of the Might of Big Ag. Now Francis Fukuyma Illustrates the Power of Big Identity

Now political scientist Francis Fukuyama has illuminated a force that rivals the clout of Big Ag. His new book is Identity: The Demand for Dignity and the Politics of Resentment. It explains the long drift of the left away from working-class demands for limits on immigration.

Many Democrats, typified by Sen. Kamala Harris of California, now regard illegal immigrants as one of many marginalized groups needing protection from the oppression of government authority imposed by a racist white majority. They see the "undocumented" as part of the noble, necessary struggle for diversity, inclusiveness, and equality.

Fukuyma explains how liberal battle lines that once formed along lines of class struggle have shifted to a broad front occupied by battalions of aggrieved identity groups. The book is concise, a compelling read. Here are a few excerpts:

Trump Must Not Include DACA "Fix" in Exchange for Wall

DACA compromise would undermine national security.

By Michael Cutler

FrontPageMag.com, January 4, 2019

One of the issues that has been noted in the news is the idea that perhaps a "compromise" could be reached between the administration and the Democrats to include a massive amnesty program under the aegis of DACA (Deferred Action- Childhood Arrival). This would be nothing short of catastrophic, compromising national security for decades to come.

Let's briefly review the sordid history of DACA. DACA was a program concocted by the Obama administration to overcome the failure of Congress to pass a massive amnesty program known as Comprehensive Immigration Reform and the follow-up attempt to pass a massive amnesty program known as "The DREAM Act." (Development, Relief, and Education for Alien Minors Act). It is noteworthy that for all of the howls that typically accompany any use of the term "Alien" to describe non-citizens present in the United States, the term Alien became incredibly palatable when it was needed to create legislation to legalize millions of heretofore illegal aliens! The concept behind the DREAM Act and DACA was to exploit the well-known empathy and compassion Americans have for children. Both of those efforts were sold as means of helping children who were brought to the United States by their parents. Ostensibly these children had no control over their parents' actions and thus became victims. In order to qualify, these "young aliens" had to claim that they were brought to the United States illegally prior to their 16th birthdays but, under the DREAM Act could apply to participate in that program provided that they filed such an application before they became 35 years of age.

Open Borders Facilitate America's Race to the Bottom

"Cheap labor" is anything but cheap.

By Michael Cutler

Today most of those jobs in all too many local restaurants and other businesses are not taken by teenage American kids, but but illegal aliens, thereby shutting out Americans.

Consequently, these American kids are often unable to get that first job that would mean so much to them and provide them with important life lessons including a sense of self-worth and empowerment.

Unable to find legitimate employment, some kids, particularly in the poor neighborhoods, resort to committing crimes to get their hands on some money to take a girl on a date or make purchases. This often puts these teenagers on a trajectory that does not end well for them or for their communities, or for America.

Illegal alien day laborers often displace construction workers, resulting in massive unemployment for American and lawful immigrant workers, boosting the profits of their employers who hire them "off the books" and pay them extremely low wages.

The open-borders/immigration anarchists are quick to invoke arguments about the need for compassion. The reality is that there's no compassion in the exploitation of vulnerable foreign workers nor is there compassion in the destruction of wages and jobs for Americans.

Border Patrol Agent Destroys 'Experts' Wall Arguments in Trump's Surprise Press Briefing

By Ben Marquis

Conservative Tribune, January 3, 2019

Up next was Art Del Cueto, a vice president of the National Border Patrol Council, who also expressed gratitude and support for Trump and the shutdown in order to obtain what has been deemed necessary to protect the nation's border. Noting that the border issue had nothing to do with politics, he asked the gathered reporters, "If I come to your home, do you want me to knock on the front door, or do you want me to climb through that window?"

Another vice president of the council, Hector Garza, took a moment to speak about the dangerous criminals his agents see at the border on a daily basis — murders and rapists and other serious criminals — and lamented that even after those criminals are deported by ICE, they "come right back into the United States." He added, "However, if we had a physical barrier, if we had a wall, we would be able to stop that."

Say His Name: R.I.P. Corporal Ronil Singh

By Michelle Malkin

National Review Online, January 2, 2019

Border-wall opponent Senator Dianne Feinstein released a public letter to the Customs and Border Patrol agency on the day of Singh's murder to voice her "strong concern about the recent deaths and illnesses of children detained in Border Patrol custody, and to request a full accounting and a revised protocol to prevent such tragedies from occurring in the future."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But not a peep was heard from Feinstein about Singh, no call for investigation of how the suspected murderer and his alleged accomplices arrived in the U.S., how they were able to evade arrest and detection, and who employed them and aided, abetted, and sheltered them.

Neighbors, friends, and coworkers turned out in full force for a candlelight vigil this week memorializing the dedicated, patriotic, compassionate, hard-working husband and father of a five-month-old baby. But rabble-rousing liberal politicians, so quick to rush down to the border to exploit the migrant-caravan crisis and sabotage President Donald Trump's efforts to keep America safe, were nowhere to be found.

'The Irrational Allergy to the Wall'

By Rich Lowry

A wall or fencing is relatively mild as far as immigration enforcement goes. It doesn't involve deporting anyone. It doesn't separate families. It doesn't prosecute and detain anyone. It doesn't deny any illegal immigrant currently working in the United States a job. All it does is seek to avoid getting in a situation where any of these things is necessary in the first place.

A wall doesn't close down the border, or close us off to the world. There are still ports of entry. People can still travel to and from Mexico. People can still, for that matter, fly to Paris. It just diminishes illegal entry at certain strategic points.

Sorry, America. You Lose Again.
Please, No More 'Border Security'
By Ann Coulter
Human Events Online, January 2, 2019
The Democrats' latest idea is to call a wall "immoral, ineffective and expensive."

If they think a wall is "immoral," then they're admitting it's effective. An ineffective wall would merely be a place for illegals to stop and get a little shade before continuing their march into the United States.

Democrats' backup argument is to cite — every four minutes on MSNBC — Trump's claim that Mexico would pay for the wall. We're all baffled by Trump not having already taxed remittances to Mexico to pay for the wall (100 percent within the president's authority under various banking regulations), but if we're going to start listing the promises Trump hasn't kept, this is going to be a long column.

In point of fact, however, he never said Mexico would pre-pay. We can tax remittances anytime.

The Immorality of Illegal Immigration

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By Victor Davis Hanson
The Corner at National Review Online, December 31, 2018
Local law enforcement blamed state sanctuary restrictions on their inability to notify ICE that the felonious illegal alien Garcia was about to be released among the general public. Or as the sheriff put it, "Gustavo Garcia would have been turned over to ICE officials. That's how we've always done it, day in and day out. But after SB 54, we no longer have the power to do that. Under the new state law, we must have a 'federally signed warrant' in order to do that. We didn't honor the detainer because state law doesn't allow us to."

Less than two weeks later, there was yet another example of Central Valley illegal-immigration mayhem. To the north in Newman, another twice-deported illegal alien, Gustavo Perez Arriaga (he apparently had a number of aliases), stands accused of shooting and killing Newman policeman Ronil Singh, who pulled him over on suspicion of drunk driving (Arriaga also had two prior DUIs).

The Border Invasion Intensifies, While Congressional Republicans Sleep
By Daniel Horowitz
Conservative Review, January 4, 2019
The type of crime we are now seeing across the country is a sign that the most brutal cartel violence has already crept into America. Derek Maltz, former head of the DEA's Special Operations Division, told me that he was seeing this trend already toward the end of his career during the Obama era, and the violence from the cartels was as "ruthless" as anything he saw. "Mexican cartels have exported their evil, violent, and radical tactics into the communities of America. They have no concern for innocent citizens when they are trying to carry out their drug operations," said the veteran DEA agent in an exclusive interview with

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CR. “We have seen incredible cartel-on-cartel violence in cities all over America. Humans are burned, shot, stabbed, and tortured, and there is no regard for human life.”

But there is no passion from Republicans on this issue. Where are the op-eds, speeches on the Senate floor, bills being proposed? Why, to this day, are Senate Republicans refusing to force votes on the Senate floor on cutting off magnets for criminal aliens, identity fraud, sanctuary cities, and asylum fraud? Why are they not forcing Democrats to hold the floor and sustain a talking filibuster?

Unfortunately, we have negative energy among Republicans. Sens. Susan Collins and Cory Gardner have already complained about the partial fake shutdown of the bureaucracy, not the shutdown of our nation-state. Lamar Alexander is trying to revive the Gang of Eight amnesty. Lindsey Graham and Joe Manchin are trying to work on a “dream” amnesty deal, the very amnesty that spawned this invasion to begin with!

In addition, the following seven House Republicans voted for the Democrat budget bill: Brian Fitzpatrick, Penn.; Will Hurd, Texas; John Katko, N.Y.; Peter King, N.Y.; Elise Stefanik, N.Y.; Fred Upton, Mich.; and Greg Walden, Ore. Walden recently ran the very GOP organ responsible for recruiting other Republicans, and Stefanik is being tapped to recruit more women candidates.

We Need Trump’s Border Wall Plus Other Measures to Reduce Illegal Immigration
By James Jay Carafano
The Heritage Foundation, December 26, 2018

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A mass migration of such a large number of people to the U.S. would be profoundly destabilizing – economically, socially and culturally.

How would we provide the food, housing, clothing, jobs, schools, transportation, infrastructure, English language instruction, and everything else needed for so many new immigrants?
And where would we get the money to do all this?
Enemies of the West have already tried to weaponize migrant flows, as has happened with Syrian migrants. If the open-borders crowd gets its way, sooner or later evil-doers will launch a deliberate effort to send refugees to America. That would have far more impact than tweets from Russian President Vladimir Putin.
President Trump didn't start Washington's border wars. But if he sticks with his entire border control strategy, he should succeed in winning the immediate political debate and fixing our broken immigration system for the long haul.

The Illegal Alien Continuum of Crime

By Matt O'Brien

ImmigrationReform.com, January 3, 2019

California became a sanctuary state in order to encourage illegal aliens to cooperate with law enforcement, unencumbered by the fear of deportation. Nevertheless, not a single one of Perez Arriaga’s unlawfully present associates felt compelled to inform police that they knew where he was. Instead, they actively aided and abetted his attempts to flee to Mexico.

Aside from trespassing in the United States, illegal aliens regularly commit a host of other serious crimes – ranging from identity fraud to tax evasion – in order to conceal their unlawful presence and work without authorization. Studies have repeatedly shown that the tolerance of minor crime within a given community inevitably gives rise to more significant criminal acts. In fact, that notion is the basis for the “broken windows policing” strategies that have proven effective in many urban areas.

Government Shutdown: Money, Money Everywhere, But Not a Drop for a Wall

By Larry Elder

The Epoch Times, January 3, 2019

Beyond "racist," say many Democrats, the wall is "wasteful" and "ineffective." Rep. Ted Lieu, D-Calif., said, "Democrats are certainly happy to talk about border security, but we're not going to build this stupid vanity wall of Donald Trump's with U.S. taxpayer dollars." He called the wall "inefficient, wasteful technology." Pelosi said: "(The wall's) the wrong thing to do. It doesn't work. It's not effective. It's the wrong thing to do and it's a waste of money."

News bulletin: Democrats base legislation on efficiency and effectiveness?!

Fine, let's examine the massive spending that's occurred since President Lyndon Johnson's so-called war on poverty, an effort launched in the mid-'60s. In the following five decades, according to The Heritage Foundation, taxpayers have spent over $22 trillion in this effort. The result? Poverty, trending down in America before the mid-'60s, reversed itself.

Trump HUD Keeps Funding Obama Plan to Revamp Slums, La Raza Group Gets Millions

Judicial Watch Corruption Chronicles, December 20, 2018

Instead of cutting back on these dubious programs that give huge sums of taxpayer dollars to leftist groups, the Trump administration keeps filling their coffers. This month HUD announced more than $60 million in grants for Choice Neighborhoods and other housing counseling grants. Among the recipients is the National Council of La Raza (NCLR), which recently changed its name to UNIDOS US. The renowned open borders group that specializes in promoting the Mexican La Raza ("the race") agenda is getting approximately $2.6 million, according to government records. Other likeminded groups getting cash include the Refugee Family Assistance Program ($32,000) and the Center for New York City Neighborhoods ($16,000), which lists the Mutual Housing Association of New York (an Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now—ACORN—offshoot) as a partner. The center's board chair, Herbert Sturz, is a senior advisor to the Open Society Foundations (OSF), the deeply politicized groups billionaire George Soros uses to promote his radical leftist agenda worldwide. Read all about it in a Judicial Watch investigative report.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Weeks earlier HUD gave dozens of leftist groups that purport to fight housing discrimination $37 million. The biggest allocation—$999,962—went to a nonprofit that attacked Trump for terminating an Obama program that protects hundreds of thousands of illegal immigrants living in the U.S. Shortly before getting its money the Washington D.C. group, National Fair Housing Alliance (NFHA), bashed the president over a contentious policy known as Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) that shields nearly 800,000 illegal aliens under the age of 31 from deportation and lets them obtain work permits and drivers' licenses. An administration that continues funding leftist housing programs carried out by groups hostile to the president makes you wonder if Trump knows what's going on under his nose?

Dems' Opposition to Trump's Wall Exposes Hypocrisy on Immigration – Here Are Five Ways to Move Forward

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By Liz Peek
Fox News, January 2, 2019
2) Many argue that the majority of undocumented people in the country did not enter illegally but rather overstayed their visa, a problem The wall would not address. The solution is making E-Verify mandatory. E-Verify is a reliable, free government service which will prevent people without papers from working.

3) Scrap the diversity visa program. In that Harvard-Harris poll last year, 68% opposed the random selection of 50,000 people allowed to enter the country each year. We should admit people based on what they offer our country. Other countries have done this; why not the U.S.?

4) Resolve the DACA problem by granting those young people who have grown up in the U.S. a path to citizenship. It is unconscionable that their futures remain uncertain.

5) Allow people living in the country illegally a one-time opportunity to achieve legal status. They would not be given a path to citizenship, but rather could become registered legal aliens. There is a penalty for not waiting your turn.

6) Rationalize our work-visa programs to assure sufficient labor to meet the needs of our agricultural and hospitality industries.

Republicans should join with the White House to offer these common-sense fixes of our broken immigration system. If Democrats refuse to strike a deal, we will know that they do not care about the Dreamers, or about border security, but want to preserve what they view as a valuable wedge issue.

DREAMers Discuss Going Ballot-Harvesting in California to Flip the House Blue

By Monica Showalter

American Thinker, January 2, 2019

The story doesn't say what the DREAMer/ballot-harvester would do if the voter decided to vote some other way from the way she wanted the indifferent man to fill it out. Naturally, the incurious reporter also omits the obvious question: did the foreigner tell the indifferent man how to fill out the ballot? Let's just say the reporter showed a strong interest, based on the rest of her reportage, in protecting the foreigner from any accusation of illegal voting.

But only a fool would think she didn't tell the indifferent man whom to vote for, effectively voting by proxy.

This pretty well amounts to foreign nationals voting, without any fear of prosecution. That changes the nature of the election and, in fact, the U.S. republic itself. Voting up until now has been a practice reserved for citizens. Today, non-citizens vote – by getting hold of indifferent Americans and filling in the ballots by proxy, no fingerprints visible. Who knows what kind of coercion may be employed by some of them? And if DREAMers can do it to promote their own political agenda, what's to stop other foreigners, with far more malign agendas, from doing it? Shall a team of Russian or Chinese agents, or Arab terrorists, or Mexican cartels, be allowed in next to help harvest the ballots? (You know the Chinese are thinking about it.) They're as foreign as DREAMers, and it would be perfectly legal under the current California law. Ballot-harvesting, which is illegal in most states, makes this all possible. What that means is that the House has been flipped in no small part by foreigners, who not only cast one ballot, but may have cast dozens and dozens of ballots, all from the advantages of ballot-harvesting.

Genocide, Slavery and Immigration

By Richard W. Rahn

The Washington Times, December 31, 2018

The open borders movement is not just a child of the American left but also has many adherents among libertarians. Simply put, their argument is that immigrants have historically brought new ideas and energy to the American economy, making everyone better off. That was largely true before the advent of the welfare state, which Milton Friedman and others realized necessitated some reasonable restrictions of immigration. If all immigrants spoke English and had a better than average education level, large numbers could be admitted with few problems. The reality is that some immigrants are value subtractors rather than value adders, thus reducing the social and economic standards for those who are already citizens.

In the past, most new immigrants wanted to get away from the institutions and practices of their old country that made life miserable, and readily adopted what is known as the American Way. Now, there are some immigrant groups that seek to bring their old institutions to America, like Sharia law, which would undermine the existing successful institutions and structure. There are others who come to America seeking free stuff, rather than seeking to create the wealth necessary to provide the support that they and others really need.

America has served as a great example of what can be accomplished with the right institutions and policies. Because America cannot accommodate all of those who wish to become U.S. citizens, the best thing it can do is continue to admit those who will benefit the country, becoming an even brighter city on the hill for rest of mankind to emulate.

Next Caravan Rising

Organizing in Honduras - while Congress sleeps.

By Matthew Vadum

Another large caravan of would-be illegal aliens is forming down in Central America with the intention of moving north to demand jobs and government benefits, according to media reports.

The formation of this new army of migrants drives home the point that a border wall at the lengthy, porous U.S.-Mexico boundary is urgently needed. The failure to move forward with wall construction sends a message to the world that America is a weak country that lacks the moral fiber and political will to defend its national sovereignty. Not building the wall also provides would-be border jumpers extra incentives to enter the United States unlawfully.

The new caravan is estimated at 15,000 people and is reportedly planning to leave Honduras on Jan. 15.

The Difference Between God and 'Saint Nancy' on the Border Wall Issue

By Scott Morefield

Townhall.com, December 31, 2018

But the logic gets even more convoluted. The wall, to the new moralizers like Saint Nancy, is both "immoral" AND "ineffective," which raises perhaps the most important question of all - How can it be both? If the wall was "ineffective" at stopping illegal immigration, then how could it be "immoral," assuming that their definition of the word relates to the possibility that it would actually stop illegals from crossing the border?

So, the wall is "immoral" because "U.S. imperialism" is somehow responsible for "pressuring people to emigrate," thus our government should do nothing to impede "freedom of movement" because it "owes migrants."

Blood of Officer Ronil Singh Is on Nancy Pelosi and Chuck Schumer Hands

By Daniel John Sobieski

FloppingAces.com, January 3, 2018

The blood of Kate Steinle, Mollie Tibbetts, and now Ronil Singh and others is on the hands of open border advocates and the sanctuary city loons who provide no sanctuary for the American citizen victims of illegal alien criminals.

Even if it were true that illegal aliens commit crimes, including murder, at rates lower than American citizens, that would be irrelevant. The murder rate for illegal aliens should be zero because none of them should be here and the indisputable fact is that Jamiel Shaw Jr., Kate Steinle and Mollie Tibbetts would be alive today if the illegal aliens who slew them were still staring at the other side of a border wall liberals refuse to build.

Pelosi has said that a border wall would be "immoral, ineffective, and expensive" when it has been documented when it has been demonstrated that none of that is true. The fact is that walls are so effective they have been built in scores of countries around the world and in the U.S. places like San Diego and Yuma have demonstrated their effectiveness as Pelosi and Schumer worry more about Syria's borders than our own:

ABC Claims 'No Evidence' Dems Responsible for Encouraging Illegal

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Immigration

By Nicholas Fondacaro

MRC Newsbusters, December 30, 2018

Of course, ABC played dumb to the influence the Democratic Party policy of sanctuary cities and sanctuary states play in encouraging people to try to break into the country. There's a reason that the infamous migrant caravan chose to travel to California's southern border instead of a closer state like Texas. They know that if they managed to make it in, the state's policies will protect them. They even know the Oakland Mayor will tip them off to raids by Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

A short time later, GMA co-host Dan Harris brought on chief global affairs correspondent Martha Raddatz to discuss "the President blaming Democrats for the deaths of those children at the border ... Is there any validity to the President's claim that if we had a wall there, migrants wouldn't even try to make this dangerous journey?"

"Well, it depends who you ask," Raddatz began. "Of course Dan, there's no evidence as you've said as Tara said, that these deaths can be blamed on Democrats, certainly. What I've seen when I'm down there is people still try to climb some of those barriers. They still get through in certain places along that very vast border of 2,000 miles."

Of course, after dismissing the border wall, Harris's solution to illegal immigration was to send even more of your hard earned money to the third world counties the migrants were fleeing. "There's a lot of talk that one of the best ways to prevent people from making the journey, would be to invest in fixing situations on the ground in those troubled Central American countries," he told viewers.

The Wall, The Wall, The Wall: Are We a Country or a Destination for Freeloaders?

By Frosty Wooldridge

NewsWithViews.com, December 27, 2018

Those two culprits don't stand alone. Look at Mitch McConnel, (R-KY), speaker of the Senate, does nothing to protect America's borders in his 'forever' corrupt criminal career as a U.S. senator. Same with all 100 senators who do nothing to stop the invasion of our borders. Same with Speaker of the House Paul Ryan, (R-WI), who did nothing during his career to stop the illegal invasion.

Thus, those people shut down the U.S. government to stop Trump's wall that would cost a fraction of what it costs to support over 22 million illegal aliens inside our country, and growing by 500,000 annually according to Dr. Steven Camarota of www.cis.org .

We pay an astounding estimated $296 billion annually across 15 federal agencies to feed, house, medically care for, education and births of illegal aliens. It never ends. It continues year after year.

Mexican President Still Won't Criticize Trump, Mexico Denies Third-Country Pact, But Isn't Refusing Deportees; Spain's EL PAIS Discovers Why Andalusians Voted for Immigration Patriot Party; Etc.

Then he made the biggest mistake you can make—not that he cares!—if you don't want to be burned in effigy. In yet another gift not only to immigration but also America First patriots, he threatened to cut off foreign aid to the countries sending migrants.

Darn right! Why do these countries feast on the largesse of American taxpayers, then look the other way as their people strike out for the United States?

Because mass migration doesn't just offload who knows how many of the illiterate and unemployed. Once here, they get jobs and send remittances home to help the illiterate and unemployed who stayed behind. It's a win-win. That's why they won't stop it.

The Outlook on Immigration in 2019

By Stuart Anderson

Forbes.com, January 2, 2019

Congressional Oversight of Immigration Policy: In the past two years, there has been virtually no Congressional oversight of even the most controversial administration immigration policies. That will change with the Democrats taking control of the House of Representatives.

Expect the House Judiciary Committee and its immigration subcommittee to hold hearings on the separation of children from parents at the border, administration asylum policy (border policies and Department of Justice actions), the functioning of the travel ban and, particularly after the tragic death of a second child in Border Patrol custody, the treatment of migrants in detention. Hearings could also look at international student policy, immigrant entrepreneurs, the H-4 rule, DACA, Temporary Protected Status (TPS), the administration's public charge rule and other topics. (Other committees may hold hearings as well.)

How Long Will Mexico Play Ball With Trump?

By Duncan Wood

The San Diego Union~Tribune, December 27, 2018

President Trump's latest move of forcing asylum seekers to stay in Mexico until their applications have been processed puts the pressure firmly on AMLO. While it seems that the new Mexican administration is going along with the decision for now, pressure will mount on the Mexican president for his apparent acquiescence to Trump's anti-immigrant tactics.

The opposition and a number of actors within his own Morena party will call on AMLO to resist Trump and to show solidarity with Central America and its citizens by adopting a less collaborative approach with the U.S.

When the next caravan emerges, as it surely will, AMLO will find himself caught between a rock and hard place. Acquiesce to U.S. demands and risk the wrath of the Mexican electorate and his own party or adopt a more forceful attitude and risk a major dispute with Trump.

Should Immigration Status Information Be Considered Protected Health Information?

By Scott J. Schweikart

AMA Journal of Ethics, January 2019

In light of questions and uncertainties health professionals face about how to regard and respond to a patient's immigration status, this article offers a legal and clinically supported argument for the view that, under the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) Privacy Rule, immigration status should be regarded as protected health information (PHI) with no valid exception for unauthorized release. As such, clinicians and health care organizations are not free to disclose a patient's immigration status to government authorities or anyone else without liability or penalty.

Privacy Rule Exceptions

As PHI, a patient's immigration status is protected by HIPAA and cannot be released for purposes other than treatment, payment, or hospital operations without the patient's consent without incurring legal consequences. This means that clinicians and health care organizations may not release such status to any authority, including officials of the federal government; if they do, they face a penalty under HIPAA. Some disclosures for other purposes require patient authorization, such as disclosure of PHI for marketing purposes. Other exceptions allow release of PHI absent patient authorization; most of these exceptions are for public health activities or are applicable to specific situations, such as reporting domestic violence or complying with workers' compensation laws. The "crime on premises" exception is often considered in scenarios in which a patient of undocumented status seeks treatment. This exception states that "a covered entity may disclose to a law enforcement official protected health information that the covered entity believes in good faith constitutes evidence of criminal conduct that occurred on the premises of the covered entity." Applying this exception can be flawed, however, as the fact that a person with undocumented status seeks treatment does not, without additional facts, constitute a crime on the premises. Additionally, it should be noted that the language of the exception specifies that a covered entity may disclose PHI in cases of a crime on the premises, not that the entity is required to do so. Thus, even when a patient with undocumented status seeking treatment commits what is deemed a crime on the premises, a clinician or health care organization is not mandated to disclose PHI.

Cato's 2018 Immigration Research in Review

By Alex Nowrasteh

CATO at Liberty blog, December 31, 2018

Four states have mandated E-Verify for all new hires, but only 56 percent of new hires in those states were run through E-Verify in the second quarter of 2017. To be effective, a much higher percentage of new hires must be checked through E-Verify. The four states that mandated E-Verify are Arizona, Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina. Over time, the rate of new hires has barely budged in those states – even in South Carolina where the state conducts random audits of employers to supposedly guarantee compliance. If those conservative states can't effectively enforce an E-Verify mandate, there is no hope for doing so nationally.

Our next piece of original research confirmed that California's TRUST Act, which limited state law enforcement cooperation with ICE, dramatically reduced deportations from that state.

Although deportations from California were falling prior to the TRUST Act going into effect in 2014, deportations from California that year dropped 39 percent relative to 2013. In the rest of the country, the number of deportations only dropped 9 percent over the same period.

Up-Close Look at Cruel Immigration Policy

Mrs. Sarmiento left Bogota, Colombia, in 1990, at a time when a guerrilla war fueled by drug money brought horrific violence to the city and nation. Human Rights Watch reports that hundreds of children died during those violent years. Mrs. Sarmento's 4-year-old son escaped that possible fate when she took him to America, and today, Camilo Bermudez, who grew up in Lenox, operates a translation business in town and coaches youth sports. He has two brothers in the Berkshires, and his mother, who is divorced, has lived a quiet life in Lenox, doting on grandchildren, and enjoying her circle of family and friends.

That life was perhaps permanently disrupted when immigration officials notified her that she has a month to move back to Colombia after 28 years in the United States. Mr. Bermudez confirmed to the Eagle's Larry Parnass that the family entered the U.S. with proper visas. It is possible that the visas expired, but under the policy of past presidential administrations, immigrants with lapsed visas were allowed to stay if they were productive citizens and guilty of no crimes.

That changed under Donald Trump, who has made immigrant-bashing and ugly verbal and Twitter assaults upon blacks, Latinos and Muslims a core part of his appeal to his base of supporters. There was a time early in his administration when the president asserted he was only interested in pursuing "bad hombres" among immigrants, but that has devolved into a transparent anti-immigrant policy personified by the attempt to exile a Lenox grandmother in her 60s.

How Higher Ed Will Be a Battleground for Immigration Debates in 2019

By Marnette Federis

Public Radio International's The World, January 3, 2019

'Public charge' rule

Numerous colleges have publicly opposed the Trump administration's move to widen the definition of the federal "public charge" rule. The government uses the rule to deny green cards to those who have received certain benefits and are deemed likely to become a "public charge." By expanding the list of programs within the rule, more people could be denied a green card.

A final ruling has not yet been announced.

The proposal "will bring real and lasting harm to the health and well being of immigrant students, children, parents, and families, and result in significantly diminished prospects for immigrant student success," the Community College Consortium for Immigrant Education, (a network of community colleges working to increase educational opportunities for immigrants and refugees) and the Presidents' Alliance said in a statement. They pointed to reports of students turning down or not applying for Pell grants, money given to undergraduates from the federal government that do not need to be repaid and other types of financial aid for fear of being deemed a "public charge" under the new rule — even though these types of aid are not included in the proposal.

Why Republicans Should Support Immigration

Just look to California to see what President Trump's strident anti-immigration policies could do to the national Republican Party.

By Jordan Bruneau

If national Republicans want to avoid the fate of their 1990s California brethren, they must reject Mr. Trump's approach and make a Republican case for immigration. Prominent Republicans who have criticized Mr. Trump's divisiveness, such as Utah's incoming senator, Mitt Romney, should pick up this mantle.

My organization, the Becoming American Initiative, seeks to persuade conservatives that expanding immigration will benefit the country. Members of our board, including William Kristol, Linda Chavez and Mona Charen, have worked in the administrations of Ronald Reagan and George W. Bush. They have seen firsthand how those presidents' support for more open immigration systems was not just good for America, but also helped neutralize immigration as a political issue.

With Comment Period Expired, Uncertainty Remains About H-1B Registration Process

By Walter Ewing

ImmigrationImpact.com, January 3, 2019

Hasty implementation of the proposal in 2019 could disrupt the Fiscal Year (FY) 2020 H-1B petition process and impose significant costs on employers. The proposed rule would also change how H-1B visa petitions are counted, likely restricting the ability of businesses to get the most qualified workers.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The most obvious problem with the proposed registration system is that it is not yet functional, yet USCIS is counting on it being in place by April 1—which seems unlikely. Even if the system is up and running in time and performs as expected, it would still wreak havoc on the H-1B petition process.

Immigration Debate: Balancing Security and Compassion

https://www.bostonjcc.org/classes-and-events/jonathan-samen-hot-buttons-cool-conversations-discussion-series

Description: Comprehensive immigration reform has been a hot button issue for decades in this country. Immigration policy forces politicians and citizens alike to weigh economic and security concerns against humanitarian interests.

The current administration has approached this issue with an emphasis on "security first" regarding immigration policy, looking to slash immigration to the United States. Measures including the "travel ban," the proposed border-wall with Mexico, and pledges to deport millions of undocumented immigrants all raise questions on how to balance keeping America safe from terrorism while still being a "nation of immigrants."

The talk is based on Nyers' recent book, which brings deportation and anti-deportation together with the aim of understanding the political subjects that emerge in this contested field of governance and control, freedom and struggle. Rather than focusing on the typical subjects of removal – refugees, the undocumented and irregular migrants – Irregular Citizenship, Immigration and Deportation looks at the ways that citizens get caught up in the deportation apparatus and must struggle to remain in or return to their country of citizenship. The transformation of 'regular' citizens into deportable 'irregular' citizens involves the removal of the rights, duties, and obligations of citizenship. This includes unmaking citizenship through official revocation or denationalization, as well as through informal, extra-legal, and unofficial means. The book features stories about struggles over removal and return, deportation and repatriation, rescue and abandonment.

Omer Ozcan, Visiting Assistant Professor, Department of Anthropology and affiliated with the Department of Sociology and Centre for Refugee Studies at York University

Enforced Disappearance: A Stretched-out Present and Unending Grief

This talk concerns the practices of waiting that occur when people are placed outside of the protection of the law. I trace life stories of Halit and Eysan, a displaced elderly Kurdish couple, to discuss how the counterinsurgency practice of enforced disappearance, a distinct exercise of sovereign power, produces a specific form of waiting, which I call enforced waiting. I examine temporal effects of the prolonged armed conflict between the Turkish state and Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK) on everyday life in Yuksekova where violence is not always instantaneous or spectacular but often gradual and uneventful. I argue that waiting in Kurdistan is intrinsic to sovereign practices and it is the embodiment of continuous and uneventful violence that suffuses across time and space.

Abstract: In recent years experts have hailed Latin America as the new avant-garde of generous asylum and refugee policies. Understanding the extent and sustainability of Latin America's liberal approach to refugee protection holds important theoretical and normative implications for refugee studies and politics. The first part of the paper offers a short review of the characteristics and variance of refugee policy liberalization in the region and its relationship to universal refugee law. The second part of the paper analyses the implementation gaps of progressive refugee legislation in three cases: extra-continental asylum seekers from Africa, Asia and the Caribbean, the resettlement of Syrian refugees, and the massive forced displacement of Venezuelans. The paper specifically discusses the applicability of the "numbers versus rights" hypothesis to explaining such policy gaps, and ends with some considerations regarding the future sustainability of expanded refugee protection and international co-operation in the region.

Description: Undocumented Politics: Place, Gender, and the Pathways of Mexican Migrants traces migrant communities' struggles for rights and resources across the U.S.-Mexico divide. For two years, Dr. Andrews lived with unauthorized migrants and their families in the mountains of Oaxaca, Mexico, and the barrios of Southern California. By setting two distinct groups side-by-side, Dr. Andrews reveals how local laws, policing, and power dynamics shape migrants' political agency. Yet she insists that the process does not begin or end in the United States. Rather, migrants interpret their destinations in light of the different hometowns they leave behind. As they do, their counterparts in Mexico must also come to grips with migrant globalization. Finally, Dr. Andrews upends assumptions about gender and migration. She exposes how U.S. policies abet gendered violence. Yet, Dr. Andrews also uncovers how men and women transform patriarchy as they fight to belong. Thus, the book reveals how the excluded find unexpected spaces for political voice.

The Future of Immigration Post-Brexit: Developing New Legislation and Promoting Successful Integration

10:15 a.m.-4:30 p.m., Wednesday January 16, 2019
Hallam Conference Centre
44 Hallam Street
London W1W 6JJ
https://www.publicpolicyexchange.co.uk/events/JA16-PPE

Overview: Since taking office, the Conservative Party has pledged to reduce net migration into Britain to the 'tens of thousands'. However, the UK's population increased by 244,000 in 2017 due to inward migration, despite this being the lowest number since 2014 (ONS 2017). A substantial minority of immigrants have not adapted to British society successfully and are socially excluded, due to insufficient language and education skills, as well segregation (Casey Review 2016). There are 682 wards where the non-white population is over 40% (ONS 2016).Immigrants make up a substantial section of the British population, accounting for 14% of the total number. 6% of the British population is from the EU; however Brexit is expected to significantly decrease immigration from member states. This is expected to have a substantial effect on the British economy. It has been estimated that decreasing immigration since 2016 has cost the UK £1 billion annually (Global Future 2018).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Efforts to reduce immigrant numbers stem from public hostility to large-scale immigration. Nevertheless, 70% of Britons support the continued immigration of skilled labour, and Government policy reflects this goal. Doctors and nurses have been removed from Tier Two Visa consideration, which required applicants to have a wage of £60,000, in an effort to increase NHS staff numbers. Additionally, to qualify for indefinite leave to remain, an applicant's absences from the UK must not exceed 180 days per year during the qualifying period (typically five years).From 11 January 2018 new Government policy dictates this will also apply to dependent family members of points based system visa holders

Numerous criticisms have been levelled at the Government's immigration policies. Reducing immigration to the 'tens of thousands' has been labelled as ineffective, while plans to include EU citizens in the same category as all other immigrants have been labelled "highly complex, time-consuming and expensive" by the CBI. Critics have warned leaving the EU may lead to a substantial rise in non-documented migrants entering the country, putting further pressure on already stretched UK border authorities. The unresolved issue of the Irish border also remains; as continued freedom of movement on the island may see EU citizens enter mainland Britain unrestricted from Northern Ireland, via the Republic. Government efforts to integrate immigrants have also been seen as insufficient, leaving many without the linguistic skills and societal knowledge to acclimatise.

This symposium therefore offers immigration officials, local authorities, university officials, employers and other key stakeholders the opportunity to develop strategies for the post-Brexit environment, and to ensure migrants become fully integrated into their new society.

Delegates will:

* Develop strategies to promote integration and cohesion in communities experiencing the growth of immigrant communities
* Learn how the UK can continue to sell itself as an attractive place for talented immigrants to live and work
* Debate the best methods of improving learning at schools for the children of immigrants
* Develop an awareness of current immigration legislation and future policy
* Suggest ideas on how to improve immigrant awareness of essential benefits

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

and services available for them
* Build an understanding of how immigration impacts on the UK economy and workers' wages
* Uncover solutions to the issues which lead to social exclusion amongst immigrant groups
* Analyse the best methods to limit illegal immigration and to assist those smuggled into the country

Social Innovation for Refugee Inclusion: A Sense of Home

2:30–6:00 p.m. CET, Thursday, January 24, 2019
9:00 a.m.–1:00 p.m. CET, Friday, January 25, 2019
EESC, Rue Belliard 99
Brussels, Belgium
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/social-innovation-refugee-inclusion-sense-home

Description: The United States Mission to the European Union, the Mission of Canada to the European Union, the Migration Policy Institute Europe (MPI Europe), and the European Economic and Social Committee are pleased to invite you to a conference on 'Social Innovation for Refugee Inclusion: A Sense of Home'.

The two-day event will explore how innovations in housing, community engagement, and mentoring can build social ties, create supportive communities, establish a robust base for economic opportunities, and foster a sense of belonging and 'home' for refugees and asylum seekers. The first day of the conference will dive into the bold ideas and actions that social initiatives, urban designers, refugee-led organisations and more have developed for inclusion, while the second day will examine tools and strategies supporting innovations to create lasting change.

Sessions will explore topics such as: the potential of co-housing for community building; the role of urban planning for more inclusive cities; building innovative cross-sectoral partnerships; and novel approaches to measuring and communicating success in social innovation.

The perspective of housing experts, refugee and migrant organisations, social enterprises, and urban designers will feature prominently in the conference, alongside other nongovernmental actors and government representatives at the local and national level. This year, more breakout sessions will allow participants to interactively engage with core themes and topics, and thematic breakout dinners will permit discussions to continue into the evening.

Building the Foundations for Inclusion: What Does the Future Hold for Immigrant Integration in Europe?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2:30–5:30 p.m., Friday, January 25, 2019
Residence Palace, 155 Rue de la Loi
Brussels, Belgium
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/building-foundations-inclusion-what-does-future-hold-immigrant-integration-europe

Description: The migration crisis transformed the landscape of immigrant integration in Europe. Large-scale and spontaneous movements placed unprecedented pressures on public services and amplified social divisions, which, in turn, fueled the rise of populist parties. But while the everyday pressures of the migration crisis have absorbed most of the bandwidth of integration policymakers in recent years, larger challenges could lie ahead. Aging populations will place extreme pressure on welfare-state institutions and public spending. Digitization, automation, and artificial intelligence will transform labor markets as we know them. And greater cultural clashes and social unrest—especially if accompanied by another migration crisis—could further splinter the political landscape. How well Europe can weather tomorrow's challenges will depend on the institutions and systems built today.

This meeting will highlight lessons from MPI Europe's flagship Integration Futures initiative, which seeks to develop creative and strategic approaches to addressing today's toughest integration challenges—and to better plan for those around the corner.

The meeting will consider three questions in particular:

* How has the landscape of integration policymaking shifted, and how can policymakers build a sense of common ground in this state of flux?
* What challenges and opportunities could future economic, social, technological, and demographic trends create for integration?
* What are the most promising new innovations to help integration officials solve entrenched integration challenges in an age of populism?

Certificate program course in International Migration Studies

XCPD-703 - Newcomers to Citizens: Immigrant Integration

9:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Wednesday-Friday, February 25-27, 2019
Georgetown University School of Continuing Studies
640 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Room C227
Washington, DC 20001
https://portal.scs.georgetown.edu/search/publicCourseSearchDetails.do?method=load&courseId=14536

Course Description: With a record 200 million people living outside their country of birth, immigration is a global phenomenon with profound demographic, economic, social, and political implications for both sending and receiving countries. The debate over immigration law and policy has become increasingly volatile and, in some instances, characterized by misinformation, hate, and xenophobia. Beyond the politics of immigration, genuine challenges to immigrant integration abound. Successful integration of immigrants is critical to the long-term prosperity of host countries that rely on immigrants as workers, consumers, taxpayers, innovators, and entrepreneurs in light of their aging native-born populations and lower birth rates. In this course we will explore integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving countries--such as the United States and Canada and new countries of permanent immigration such as France, Germany, the United Kingdom. We will raise questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity. We will also discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism, paradigms that challenge an integrationist reading of migration. Using case studies from North America and Europe we will pay special attention to the different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation on their road from newcomers to citizens.

Course Objectives:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Discuss the integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving and source countries.
* Recognize questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity.
* Discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism.
* Compare different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation.

Notes: This course is an open enrollment course. No application is required and registration is available by clicking "Add to Cart." Current students must register with their Georgetown NetID and password. New students will be prompted to create an account prior to registration.

Borders, migration, exclusion: The role of civil society and humanitarian aid in an increasingly polarized political context

1:00-2:30 p.m., Wednesday, February 27, 2019

626 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-humanitarian-series-i?instance_id=146

Speaker:
Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Description: The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Speaker: Linn Biorklund Belliveau, Researcher/analyst Dahdaleh Institute for Global Health Research and Médecins Sans Frontières, CRS Affiliated Scholar

Description: Linn will discuss how migration can be weaponized to serve diverse political agendas, including the growing tendency to frame refugees and migrants as political liabilities. The result is a degradation of access to adequate protection and humanitarian assistance, as well as the mechanisms they use to reach target destinations. Linn will present this perspective using first-hand experience working with Eritrean refugees fleeing towards the shores of Europe between 2013 – 2016 and sharing a critical perspective of State and humanitarian responses to the so-called 'migrant-caravans' from the Northern Triangle of Central America to the United States and Canada.

Can a Wall Pay for Itself?: An Update

A wall would have to prevent just 3 to 4 percent of illegal crossers

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (January 8, 2018) – Ahead of President Trump's speech tonight, where he is expected to call for funding for border security, new analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies finds that a border wall would fund itself. This updated analysis indicates that to pay for the president's $5 billion wall request, a wall would have to prevent about 60,000 crossings — or 3 to 4 percent of expected illegal crossers in the next decade.

Steve Camarota, the Director of Research at the Center and the author of the analysis, said, "While it is true that more illegal immigrants come through overstayed visas than through our southern border, the reality is that even if a border wall reduced just a tiny fraction of illegal crossings, it would pay for itself. Like any investment, the wall's costs must be measured against its returns. A border wall in areas where it is needed, combined with broadly popular enforcement measures such as E-Verify and the closing of asylum loopholes, would effectively curb illegal immigration and secure America's porous borders."

View the full analysis: https://www.cis.org/Camarota/Can-Wall-Pay-Itself-Update

Findings

- In a prior analysis we took the likely education level of illegal border-crossers and applied fiscal estimates developed by the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine (NAS) for immigrants by education level — excluding their children. These estimates indicated an average lifetime net fiscal cost of $74,722 per illegal crosser — $82,191 in 2018 dollars.
- Analysis by the Institute for Defense Analyses (IDA) indicates that there are 1.95 to 2.28 apprehensions for every successful illegal crossing. This translates to about 170,000 to 200,000 successful illegal crossings in 2018, or 1.7 million to two million over the next 10 years, assuming this level continues.
- The House passed a funding bill before Christmas with $5 billion for the wall, which means the wall would have to stop or deter 3 to 4 percent (60,000) of the future illegal crossers over the next decade to pay for itself.
- If we make conservative alternative assumptions that illegal crossers cost half what we estimate, and we further assume the future flows will be only half the 2018 level, then the wall would have to stop or deter 12 to 14 percent of expected illegal border-crossers in the next decade.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Important Caveats

- A large share of the net fiscal cost of illegal immigrants is at the state and local level, not the federal level. The costs of building the wall will be borne by the federal government.
- These cost estimates, based on the NAS research, only include original illegal immigrants, not their children and grandchildren. In our prior analysis, we found that if the cost of descendants is included, then the net fiscal drain raises to $94,391 — $103,826 in 2018 dollars.
- To create its long-term fiscal estimates for immigrants by education level, the NAS uses the concept of "net present value" (NPV). This concept, which is common in economics, has the effect of reducing the size of the net fiscal drain that less-educated immigrants, which describes most illegal immigrants, will create in the future. The NAS does this because costs or benefits years from now are valued less in economics relative to more immediate costs. If the actual net lifetime fiscal cost of illegal border-crossers were used it would likely roughly double the lifetime fiscal drain illegal crossers create. (We have a longer discussion of this issue in our original report. See the section "Do Net Present Values Make Sense?" The bottom line is that NPVs do make sense when thinking about the costs of a wall because the cost of a wall is immediate and with NPV the fiscal impact of illegal immigrants is also measured in current dollars.)

CIS Executive Director Mark Krikorian Reacts to President Trump's Speech

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (January 8, 2018) – Following President Trump's speech to the nation on border security tonight, the Center for Immigration Studies' Executive Director, Mark Krikorian, offered his immediate reactions:

- A pretty good speech, and smart that the wall was the final item he listed, after plugging loopholes, more technology, and more manpower. In other words, border security isn't just about the wall--but it is an important part.
- The best line of the night: "They don't build walls because they hate the people on the outside, but because they love the people on the inside."
- President Trump is correct to point out that the children being smuggled are being used as pawns.
- It's unclear how a trade deal will pay for the wall. He should instead have pushed Congress to levy a remittance tax.
- The whole "martial law/property seizure" idea was probably a head fake, so that when the speech was not about those things, it would seem more reasonable.
- The government is shut down because Democrats won't fund border security.

President Trump Heads to Texas Border

CIS toured south Texas last year, speaking with both residents and Border Patrol

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (January 10, 2019) – President Trump is set to travel to the southern border today, starting in McAellen, Texas, to meet with Border Patrol and learn more about the southern border as he fights for wall funding in Washington. Last spring, the Center sent a team to visit these areas in Texas along the border, where we met with both residents and agents and obtained footage.

Rio Grande, near Brownsville, Texas

Our team started at the checkpoint in Falfurrias, Texas. According to Customs and Border Protection, Falfurrias is the most trafficked inland checkpoint in the country and is situated in the heaviest area of alien and narcotic traffic. It is their job to interdict tractor trailers packed with migrants that are headed for San Antonio, another 160 miles north.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The checkpoints serve as a second border. That reality is not lost on residents living south of them. A border sheriff told us that the checkpoints are there because the federal government has failed to secure the actual border, causing a host of problems that have gotten progressively worse with the growth of human and drug smuggling cartels. This includes a range of criminal activity occurring just under the surface of civil society. Everyone is aware of the problem. The sheriff says he deals with border-related crime on a daily basis. Just a few days earlier he was eating in a restaurant when a young woman approached him to seek help escaping a sex smuggling ring.

Mark Krikorian at the Falfurrias checkpoint, where agents conduct traffic stops 24 hours a day, 7 days a week in search of possible criminal activities

Closer to the Rio Grande, the ranchers and growers whose land is along the border must take extra precautions. Downriver, a produce grower explained to us how smugglers will send groups of aliens across as a diversion to move their drug loads. He said the smugglers study the topography and the habits of the locals. They watch everything and will send people and drugs across during school and work rush hours to avoid detection. His workers are routinely harassed and recruited by the cartels. Smugglers once hijacked one of his tractors and loaded it with narcotics disguised as produce. After getting discovered, they tried to outrun authorities in the plodding vehicle. Authorities have warned him to wear a bullet-proof vest.

Population up by 100 thousand for third year in a row

https://www.cbs.nl/en-gb/news/2019/01/population-up-by-100-thousand-for-third-year-in-a-row

Summary: The population of the Netherlands grew by an estimated 104 thousand people in 2018. The growth rate was similar to that in the past two years. Just as in 2016 and 2017, growth was mainly due to migration. The Netherlands currently has nearly 17.3 million inhabitants, according to the latest estimates by Statistics Netherlands (CBS).

Although not all data over 2018 have been processed, CBS projects that 88 thousand more people settled in the Netherlands than left the country. This number is slightly higher than the year before. In addition, births exceeded deaths by 16 thousand, resulting in a lower natural population growth compared to 2017. The contribution of births minus deaths to total population growth has now fallen to 15 percent, versus 20 percent last year.

Just in the last two months, the Immigration Court active backlog has grown by over 40 thousand cases, from 768,257 at the end of September to 809,041 at the end of November. Particularly high growth rates of 10 percent or higher were experienced at nine Immigration Courts.

The two courts with the highest rate of growth in their backlog were two courts at ICE detention facilities. The Eloy Immigration Court in Arizona saw its backlog increase by 144 percent, while the Conroe Immigration Court (Houston SPC) in Texas had an increase of 62 percent. Border apprehensions increased in 2018 – especially for migrant families

By Kristen Bialik

Pew Research Center, January 8, 2019

http://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2019/01/08/border-apprehensions-of-migrant-families-have-risen-substantially-so-far-in-2018/

Excerpt: All told, nearly 136,000 family members were apprehended between January and November last year – more than three times as many as during the same time period in 2017, and the highest number during any January-November period since at least 2012.

Family members accounted for a third (33%) of all border apprehensions over this period – the highest share within the past seven years. The months leading up to the shutdown drove this increase: Family member apprehensions in November made up nearly half (49%) of total Southwest border apprehensions that month, the third consecutive high since September (40%).

No Safe Places – Death at the Hands of Illegal Aliens

By Dave Gibson

Social Contract Press

ISBN: 9781881780397, $18.95

Book Description: In this book, crime investigator Dave Gibson profiles more than 50 innocent Americans of all races, ages, and backgrounds who have lost their lives at the hands of illegal aliens. In interviews with victims' parents and relatives, the book brings to life the terrible human toll resulting from the nation's ongoing failure to control its borders.

From a 3-year-old boy killed by a drunk driver while waiting for his ice cream, to a 93-year-old woman beaten to death in her own home, the circumstances of their untimely and brutal deaths are told in unblinking detail.

While the media is full of stories that portray illegal aliens as sympathetic victims of their circumstances, it systematically ignores the plight of Americans who are being raped, robbed, and killed by people who should never have been allowed to enter their country. Nothing else has ever been published which focuses so much attention on the fallen victims of this ongoing invasion and allows the reader a glimpse at what life is like for those left behind.

Author Dave Gibson has worked in law enforcement, as a legislative aide to a Virginia State Senator, and has written about crime and immigration for more than a decade. His website (www.illegalaliencrimereport.com) features daily reports on those crimes, including murders, rapes, child sexual assaults, and other types of crimes, now plaguing Americans cities, both large and small.

Immigration and Health
By Reanne Frank

Emerald Publishing Limited, 290 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1787430626, $118.70
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1787430626/centerforimmigra

Kindle, ASIN: B07GNC8ZK2, $112.76

Book Description: The current politicized climate around immigration includes heated debate over the potential costs of continued immigration for the health and well-being of the nation. Amid the controversy one pattern that has escaped significant notice is that immigrants today are healthier than the native-born. Even more striking is that these positive health profiles are found among those immigrants who tend to have less education and lower income, factors that population health researchers have typically associated with poor health. A final feature of contemporary immigrant health is evidence of a gradual loss of the immigrant health advantage with time in the U.S. and across generations.

These paradoxical patterns lie at the center of Volume 19 of Advances in Medical Sociology. Too often, immigrant health is set apart and treated as a specialty research area rather than as a topic that is central to understanding such core sociological concepts as stratification and inequality. The contributors in this volume all leverage a population health perspective to help unravel the patterns and paradoxes of immigrant health, and in doing so, help to clarify more broadly how health dis-parities emerge and persist in the contemporary U.S.

Lights In The Distance: Exile and Refuge at the Borders of Europe
By Daniel Trilling

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Verso, 304 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1786632799, $18.32
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1786632799/centerforimmigra

Paperback, Picador; Main Market edition, ISBN: 1509815635, $9.61, 320 pp.
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1509815635/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 1386 KB, ASIN: B0782X1ZJ1, $9.99

Book Description: A mother puts her children into a refrigerator truck and asks, "What else could I do?" A runaway teenager comes of age on the streets, sleeping in abandoned buildings. A student leaves his war-ravaged country behind because he doesn't want to kill. Everyone among the thousands of people who come to Europe in search of asylum each year possesses a unique story. But those stories don't end as they cross into the West.

In Lights in the Distance, acclaimed journalist Daniel Trilling draws on years of reporting to build a portrait of the refugee crisis as seen through the eyes of the people who experienced it firsthand. As the European Union has grown, so has a tangled and often violent system designed to filter out unwanted migrants. Visiting camps and hostels, sneaking into detention centers, and delving into his own family's history of displacement, Trilling weaves together the stories of people he met and followed from country to country. In doing so, he shows that the terms commonly used to define them — "refugee" or "economic migrant," "legal" or "illegal," "deserving" or "undeserving"—fall woefully short of capturing the complex realities.

The founding story of the EU is that it exists to ensure the horrors of the twentieth century are never repeated. Now, as it comes to terms with the worst refugee crisis since the Second World War, its declared values of freedom, tolerance and respect for human rights are being put to the test. Lights in the Distance is a uniquely powerful and illuminating exploration of the nature and human dimensions of the crisis.

Sweet Home Chicago?: Mexican Migration and the Question of Belonging and Return

By Franziska Bedorf

Transcript-Verlag, 380 pp.

Paperback, ISBN: 3837641317, $45.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/ 3837641317/centerforimmigra

Book Description: Based on long-term ethnographic fieldwork among aged Mexican migrants in Chicago, Franziska Bedorf investigates the phenomenon of return migration by tracing how people's intentions to go back change over time. Considering global labor mobility, she evaluates transformations of belonging and the wider economic, political, social and cultural frameworks that shape them. Against the backdrop of debates on integration, transnationalism and belonging, the study explores why migrants keep and form attachments to and detachments from places, people, and cultures.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Book Description: In Islands of Sovereignty, anthropologist and legal scholar Jeffrey S. Kahn offers a new interpretation of the transformation of US borders during the late twentieth century and its implications for our understanding of the nation-state as a legal and political form. Kahn takes us on a voyage into the immigration tribunals of South Florida, the Coast Guard vessels patrolling the northern Caribbean, and the camps of Guantánamo Bay—once the world's largest US-operated migrant detention facility—to explore how litigation concerning the fate of Haitian asylum seekers gave birth to a novel paradigm of offshore oceanic migration policing. Combining ethnography—in Haiti, at Guantánamo, and alongside US migration patrols in the Caribbean—with in-depth archival research, Kahn expounds a nuanced theory of liberal empire's dynamic tensions and its racialized geographies of securitization. An innovative historical anthropology of the modern legal imagination, Islands of Sovereignty forces us to reconsider the significance of the rise of the current US immigration border and its relation to broader shifts in the legal infrastructure of contemporary nation-states across the globe.

Currencies of Imagination: Channeling Money and Chasing Mobility in Vietnam

Kindle, 3844 KB, ASIN: B07BLL5349, $13.99

Book Description: In Vietnam, international remittances from the Vietnamese diaspora are quantitatively significant and contribute important economic inputs. Yet beyond capital transfer, these diasporic remittance economies offer insight into an unfolding transformation of Vietnamese society through the extension of imaginations and ontological possibilities that accompany them. Currencies of Imagination examines the complex role of remittances as money and as gifts that flow across, and mediate between, transnational kinship networks dispersed by exile and migration.

Long distance international gift exchanges and channels in a neoliberal political economy juxtapose the increasing cross-border mobility of remittance financial flows against the relative confines of state bounded bodies. In this contradiction Ivan V. Small reveals a creative space for emergent imaginaries that disrupt local structures and scales of desire, labor and expectation. Furthermore, the particular characteristics of remittance channels and mediums in a global economy, including transnational mobility and exchangeable value, affect and reflect the relations, aspirations, and orientations of the exchange participants. Small traces a genealogy of how this phenomenon has shifted through changing remittance forms and transfer infrastructures, from material and black market to formal bank and money services. Transformations in the affective and institutional relations among givers, receivers, and remittance facilitators accompany each of these shifts, illustrating that the socio-cultural work of remittances extends far beyond the formal economic realm they are usually consigned to.

IMMIGRATION

Caravans, Birthright, Census

Caravans. Several thousand Hondurans on October 12, 2018 left San Pedro Sula to march through Guatemala and Mexico to the US to apply for asylum. As they marched north, President Trump threatened to cut off aid to Honduras and to tear up the new USMCA trade agreement if they reached the US. Trump said that border security is "far more important" to him than USMCA, the successor to NAFTA.

In 2014, when Central Americans first began arriving in large numbers, Congress approved a $750 million aid package for the Northern Triangle countries of Guatemala (17 million residents), El Salvador (6.5 million) and Honduras (nine million).

When the migrant caravan reached Mexico's southern border, migrants were told that 100 to 200 a day could apply for asylum in Mexico, after which they would have to remain in government shelters at least 10 days and wait 45 days for a decision on their application.

https://migration.ucdavis.edu/rmn/more.php?id=2246

DHS: Shutdown, Wall

Congress failed to appropriate $5 billion for a wall on the Mexico-US border in FY19 funding bills. In retaliation, President Trump allowed nine of the 15 federal agencies to close on December 22, 2018 for several weeks. The House approved $5.7 billion for the wall, but the Senate did not.

Trump says that Mexico will pay for the border wall with savings and revenue generated from the newly signed US-Mexico-Canada (USMCA) trade agreement. Trump said he may invoke national security to build the wall without Congressional appropriations.

A third of the 2,000-mile Mexico-US border has fences and walls to deter the entry of unauthorized people and vehicles. Some $1.7 billion was allocated for physical barriers on the Mexico-US border in FY17 and FY18. Less than 10 percent was spent by the end of 2018, but most of the appropriated funds have been designated for particular projects.

Ex-DHS Secretary John Kelly said that instead of a concrete wall on the Mexico US border, "we need a physical barrier in certain places, we need technology across the board, and we need more people."

https://migration.ucdavis.edu/rmn/more.php?id=2247

H-2A; H-2B

DOL and DHS in November 2018 published regulatory notices that would require employers seeking H-2A and H-2B guest workers to post job vacancies online for at least 14 days at https://seasonaljobs.dol.gov/ to recruit US workers. The American Farm Bureau Federation wants farm employers to continue to satisfy their recruitment of US workers obligation by using only print ads.

Senator Dianne Feinstein (D-CA) was re-elected to a fifth six-year term in November 2018. Feinstein, who was endorsed by both the UFW and the Western Growers Association, has been a driving force for an earned legalization program for unauthorized farm workers and a new guest worker program for farmers.

Under Feinstein's various Blue Card proposals, unauthorized farm workers would earn immigrant visas for themselves and their families by continuing to do farm work. A new guest worker program eliminates requirements that farmers try and fail to recruit US workers, ends requirements for employers to provide free housing, and reduces the Adverse Effect Wage Rate that must be paid to guest workers.

Canada, Mexico
Canada. Countries such as Canada and the US that offer citizenship to all babies born in the country are attracting ?birth tourists,? women who give birth in Canada and the US so that their children will be Canadian or American citizens. Over half of the 200,000 residents of Richmond near Vancouver are ethnic Chinese, and short-term mothers account for 20 percent of the births at Richmond hospital.

Most mothers-to-be stay in some of the dozens of Richmond "baby houses" for three months, and pay about $18,000 for the stay-and-birth package. Some 1,500 to 2,000 babies are born each year to birth tourists. Chinese mothers say that they want their children to have the opportunity to access Canadian K-12 schools and universities, and to have an escape valve. Critics say granting citizenship to short-term mothers devalues Canadian citizenship.
Mexico. President Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador took office December 1, 2018. AMLO is a symbolic politician from Tabasco with a genuine concern for rural poverty but without a clear strategy to reduce it. AMLO announced the cancellation of a new $13 billion Mexico City airport in October 2018, which was a third completed, and turned the official presidential residence into a cultural center. AMLO insisted that no government employee can earn more than his salary of $5,350 a month.

Migration was one of AMLO's first challenges. AMLO's government in December 2018 said that Central Americans could apply for asylum in Mexico and receive work visas, and promised a $25 billion Comprehensive Development Plan with Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador to curb migration to the United States; the US will add $10 billion.

https://migration.ucdavis.edu/rmn/more.php?id=2249

Europe, Asia

Europe continues to grapple with foreigners seeking asylum. In November 2018, 77 migrants from South Sudan, Somalia, Pakistan, Ethiopia and Somalia who were rescued in the Mediterranean and taken to Misrata in Libya refused to dis-embark, saying they feared torture in Libya. Some 8,000 migrants were being held in Libyan detention centers in November 2018.

The EU-funded Libyan Coast Guard has reduced the number of migrants reaching Europe across the Mediterranean from 27,000 in October 2015 to less than 1,300 in October 2018. Spain has become the major southern European destination for migrants, with over 57,200 arriving by sea in 2018, followed by 32,500 arriving in Greece and 23,4000 in Italy.

Japan. Beginning April 1, 2019, the Japanese government will allow up to 345,150 semi-skilled foreign workers to work in 14 occupations with renewable five-year work visas. The government suggested that 50,000 caregivers for the elderly could be admitted; 45,000 restaurant workers; 35,000 construction workers; 30,000 janitors; and 25,000 farm workers. Those with technical skills may arrive with families and stay indefinitely.

December 2018 polls suggest that two-thirds of Japanese oppose the new guest worker program. Japan has put a higher priority on social stability rather than faster economic growth. The new labor migration policy will test how this balance.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Japan had 2.6 million foreign residents and 1.3 million foreign workers in October 2017. Over 40 percent of these foreign workers were trainees who work-and-learn on farms and in construction and small manufacturing firms and foreign students who may work a maximum 28 hours a week, but in practice often work far more hours in convenience stores and restaurants.

GCM, Remittances, ANZ
The UN's Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration (GCM), which includes 23 objectives to improve the management of international migration, was adopted by 164 of the UN's 193 member states in Marrakesh, Morocco in December 2018 and then formally adopted by the UN's General Assembly. The Czech Republic, Hungary, Israel, Poland, and the United States voted no, and 12 other countries abstained from voting on the GCM.

The Shutdown and Emergency Powers

The president is now suggesting that he will use his powers to declare a national emergency to build a border barrier, presumably using other pots of money from places such as the Defense Department. I don't know enough about those emergency powers at this point to speak with any authority on the matter, although others have weighed in on both sides of the equation saying he can, or he can't.

One Democratic representative acknowledged that such powers have been used to build facilities with existing appropriated funds — but then went on to say that this was for facilities in Afghanistan and Iraq, not the southern U.S. border, and thus was clearly a legitimate exercise of presidential power. Wait, what? Does anyone else see a problem with that statement? It's okay to spend taxpayer money to construct things in the Middle East and South Asia, but not in our own backyard, the very gateway to our nation, where security is clearly an issue?

Failing to Put Your (Appropriations) Money Where Your Mouth Is

Second, why is this an "either-or" proposition? That defies logic on any level whatsoever. How often have we heard politicians from both parties speak of "smart border security" and "layered defenses"? Translated into plain English, that means tens of billions of dollars for humans and technology — and yet they refuse to pony up $5 billion for a physical barrier that will do more to prevent illegal crossers than any type of technology on the market, short of lethal force technology which we all know and agree is a non-starter. The patent hypocrisy in the position is made obvious by the just-passed House bill that, while denying border barrier funds, adds an additional $12 billion for foreign aid.

Can a Wall Pay for Itself?: An Update

We can, of course, put different numbers into our model and see the results. If we assume that the number of successful illegal crossings in the next decade without a wall will be half (850,000 to one million) the 2018 level, and we further assume that the cost of each illegal crosser is half ($41,096) of what we have estimated, then the wall would have to stop or deter 12 to 14 percent of expected crossers in the next decade rather than the 3 to 4 percent. Alternatively, if the costs of illegal immigrants are higher than we have estimated and the level of future illegal crossings is also higher, then a wall would have to stop or deter a smaller share of than the 3 to 4 percent we report. But the range of reasonable assumptions indicates that a wall would not have to come close to being anywhere near 100 percent effective to pay for itself. This would be true even if a wall cost twice as much. A wall that is only partially effective could pay for itself by offsetting the cost that otherwise successful illegal crossers would create.

If You Don't Fund Judges, Don't Complain About Backlogs

And other takeaways from the president's border security funding request

Fair enough. So how do you get rid of backlogs? More immigration judges, as I have explained numerous times in the past. Then-Attorney General (AG) Jeff Sessions hired 128 new immigration judges (IJs) in just two years (a fact alluded to in the screed above), bolstering a drastically underfunded IJ corps, but this doesn't even come close to the number of IJs our nation's immigration courts currently need.

The website of the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR), the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Department of Justice (DOJ) component responsible for the immigration courts notes that there are "approximately 400 immigration judges located in 62 immigration courts throughout the Nation." TRAC's latest report states that there were 809,041 pending cases before the immigration courts as of November 2018. That is more than 2,022 cases per IJ. An additional 75 immigration judges would bring that down 1,703, or 16 percent. Not perfect, but a start. Democrats will no longer be able to complain about backlogs, or even alien respondents' access to justice, if they don't pay for more IJs.

Polling Shows Why Border Security Funding is Crucial to Trump

Specifically, 29 percent of Republicans and 14 percent of independents cited immigration as the top problem facing the United States, as opposed to 7 percent of Democrats. In total, 16 percent of those surveyed identified immigration as the top problem. Interestingly, these figures are actually down (eight, four, three, and five percentage points, respectively) from the November survey, which Gallup notes "had been conducted in the midst of the midterm Congressional elections, as a caravan of migrants from Central America was making its way toward the U.S. and many Republican candidates were taking a hard line on immigration."

Despite the decline, the heavy emphasis placed on this issue shows its importance to the American people. By way of comparison, the next leading problem ("unifying the country") was identified by only 8 percent of those surveyed, with the environment/pollution named by 5 percent, and the economy coming in at a paltry 3 percent. And, as noted, immigration was identified by almost one out of three Republicans, and more than one out of seven independents. These are key voting blocs for the president in the primary and general elections, again respectively.

Why Democrats Will Be Blamed for the Shutdown

January 8, 2019

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Denigrating the president, and then refusing to give in even a little bit on something that costs relatively little in the grand scheme of the federal budget to the degree that citizens are deprived of services and hundreds of thousands of government workers are not getting paid will eventually put the majority of Americans in the position advanced by Rep. Tom Reed (R-N.Y.), who stated: "This is such a silly and asinine debate." Granted, this is a partisan statement, but one borne out by logic. "Just let the kid have the Mentos and leave already." "Who cares if that was a strike/fumble/moving pick/slash? I'm trying to watch a game here."
Democrats may not accept the logic, but they should not avoid the analogies. They would be better off treating the president as a master negotiator, with whom they are engaged in a high-stakes game.

Notes on the Trump Administration's Claim of 3,000-Plus Terrorist Apprehensions at U.S. Borders
From a former intelligence worker once immersed in the numbers
From my government experience, I know that the vast majority of on-radar suspected terrorists are encountered at airports, not at sea, land, or by cops on American roadways. The. Vast. Majority. So when Nielsen and other administration officials said 3,000-plus suspected terrorists had been apprehended or prevented from generally entering U.S. borders, I knew her numbers had to have been in reference to airport borders staffed by U.S. Customs and Border Protection inspectors or maybe at American embassies and consulate offices abroad, which process visas for U.S. airport-bound travelers. Later, she switched to talking about the separate issue of special interest alien apprehensions at the southern land border, which unfortunately also is about 3,000, so everything got conflated and muddled up.

But I also knew that the number of land border encounters with special interest aliens who also had terrorism reporting records about them was always small, even if highly potentially consequential.

Finally, Someone Does the Right Thing in the South Dakota EB-5 Scandals

The 65 investors lent $32.5 million to Tentexkota, a firm funded by eight wealthy Americans (who, as the firm's name suggests, hail from Tennessee, Texas, and one of the Dakotas), and were supposed to get their money back in 2015, but they were not paid. The loan was defaulted in 2016, following an extension. So they sued.

Judge Charles Kornmann agreed with the plaintiffs, and ordered that they be paid. But, as so often in EB-5 cases, things have become more complicated, probably because (my speculation) the Deadwood Mountain Grand (which looks like an ex-gold sliming plant on the outside) is not worth anything like $32.5 million.

Opposition to A Border Wall Is Opposition to Public Safety

Open borders cost innocent lives.

Additionally, convicted felons, human rights violators, war criminals, terrorists and spies are to be excluded as well as aliens who would seek unlawful employment thus displacing American workers or driving down the wages of American workers who are similarly employed and aliens who would likely become public charges.

Yet the leadership of the Democratic Party opposes the enforcement of our nation's immigration laws from within the interior of the United States. Some Democratic Party mayors and governors have declared their towns, cities and states to be "Sanctuaries" that are eager to harbor and shield illegal aliens from detection from ICE (Immigration and Customs Enforcement).

Unbelievably, many Democrats have called for the termination of ICE altogether.

Border Wall: A Monument for the People, Not Pols
By Michelle Malkin
National Review Online, January 9, 2019

Wouldn't it be refreshing, for once, for the federal government to prioritize infrastructure that serves the national interest over special interests? And how about dedicating and consecrating this project in the memory of the thousands of Americans and law-abiding immigrants who have sacrificed their lives for our security? We've already got Adopt-a-Highway sponsors. Why not an Adopt-a-Wall program?

Open-borders academics and media propagandists keep lecturing that Americans don't want a wall. Yet, more than 325,000 citizens have raised $19.5 million in 22 days to fund the border that the Beltway obstinately refuses to fund.

National Emergencies and the Long-Lost Legislative Veto

By Andrew C. McCarthy

Congress should be working now to address the new dynamic of attempted entry by families from Central America — providing for security, ensuring expeditious processing, expanding detention facilities, prescribing standards for conditions of confinement of children, etc. If the president declares an emergency, both houses of Congress should consider resolutions supporting or rejecting the declaration. A rejection would not have the binding effect of a veto, but it would undoubtedly influence the inevitable litigation, and it might communicate to the president the perils of going it alone in a constitutional system based on separation of powers.

Of course, I'm not holding my breath. Many congressional Democrats do not want to take an accountable vote that would put them on the wrong side of border security. Many congressional Republicans are content to have Trump do the heavy lifting and bear the political risks. Congress is apt to do what it usually does — nothing.

Media Throw Everything at the Wall to See What Sticks

By Ann Coulter

Human Events Online, January 9, 2019

All we're getting from the media on immigration is an avalanche of lies, neurotically repeated by people citing one another:

Polls show Americans don't want a wall!

We're a nation of immigrants!

Immigrants commit less crime than the native born!

Studies show: Black Americans are NOT hurt by illegal immigration.

Every one of these claims is a lie, as demonstrated in my book Adios, America. (Also a smash best-seller.)

People assume a minimal standard of decency in others and think to themselves, Well, Joe Scarborough wouldn't say that if it weren't true.

What viewers don't understand is how lazy media personalities are. They are merely quoting what someone told them. They don't know. Their expertise consists of memorizing a set of talking points, like ABBA memorizing the syllables to English words without knowing what they meant.

"Crisis" of Seriously Ill Migrants Slams Border Patrol — TB, Pneumonia, Influenza, Parasites
Judicial Watch Corruption Chronicles, January 7, 2019
Judicial Watch has interviewed medical experts that confirm illegal immigrants do indeed pose a serious public health threat to the U.S. by bringing dangerous diseases into the country. This includes tuberculosis, dengue and Chikungunya. After returning from covering the Central American caravan along the Guatemala-Honduras border, Judicial Watch spoke with a prominent physician in a border state who warned that the migrants will undoubtedly bring infectious diseases into the U.S. Among them are extremely drug resistant strands of tuberculosis and mosquito-borne diseases such as dengue and chikungunya that are widespread in the region.

The same week Judicial Watch published the story about the caravan health threat a major newspaper reported on the health crisis created by the influx of Venezuelans fleeing to neighboring countries. The migrants are spreading malaria, yellow fever, diphtheria, dengue, tuberculosis and AIDS throughout South America. Many of the diseases had been considered eradicated in the neighboring Latin American countries, according to government officials cited in the article, which states that "contagion from Venezuela's economic meltdown is starting to spread to neighboring countries—not financially, but literally, in the form of potentially deadly diseases carried among millions of refugees." As an example, the story reveals that "measles reappeared with a vengeance" in a Brazilian city near the Venezuelan border that had declared the highly contagious airborne disease "vanquished" nearly two decades ago. "Measles is already spreading beyond the Brazilian Amazon to other Brazilian states, as well as Colombia, Peru and as far south as Argentina, according to recent Pan American Health Organization reports," the article states. "Other diseases racing through communities in Venezuela are now crossing borders and raising concerns among health authorities as far away as the U.S."

The Ironies of Illegal Immigration
By Victor Davis Hanson
National Review Online, January 10, 2019

Second, popular progressive narratives in both Mexico and the United States cite America for all sorts of pathologies, past and present. The United States is often damned for prior colonialism and imperialism, as well as current racism and xenophobia.

Why, then, would millions of people south of the border leave their own homeland and potentially risk their lives to encounter a strange culture and language, to live in such a purportedly inhospitable place, and to adopt to an antithetical system based on supposedly toxic European and Protestant traditions?

The answers to these two paradoxes are as obvious as they are politically incorrect and therefore seldom voiced. Life in Mexico is relatively poor, dangerous, and often unfree. In contrast, the United States is rich, generous, and secure.

Yes, the President Has the Authority to Build the Wall
By Daniel Horowitz
There are no parameters governing the criteria for such a declaration or defining the types of projects that might be in order. The only thing the secretary of defense has to do is to communicate the nature of the decision and its costs to the relevant congressional committee, but he does not need to obtain congressional approval. One might legitimately feel uncomfortable with such broad authority delegated to the president, but nonetheless, this is the law on the books. Congress has delegated a lot of authority to the president for the purpose of protecting our sovereignty and security, not for nullifying immigration law and sovereignty, as Obama did with the DACA amnesty. Thus, any comparison to Obama is absurd.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Nothing about these sections should be justiciable in a court, but according to our courts, everything is justiciable. Nobody should get standing to sue in this case. If Congress doesn't like what Trump does, it has many tools to check him.

Seemingly, the president would need some sort of deployment of troops that the wall would be supporting, in order to fulfill Sec. 2808 authority, but that is not required for Sec. 2293 authority. However, the president, in my view, would be wise to deploy our military anyway. As I've chronicled in my series on the border, the threats from the cartels and the degree of violence on our border are quite literally the reason why we have the military, not to spend $125 billion on rebuilding Kabul. As for Sec. 2293, I can't imagine what is more essential for "national defense" than blocking the most dangerous transnational criminal networks from placing spotters on our soil monitoring all of our border agents for the purpose of bringing in drugs, gangs, criminals, and terrorists.

No, Don't Declare an Emergency

By Rich Lowry

National Review Online, January 11, 2019

First, there's the timing. Trump didn't declare an emergency over the past two years, even though his administration was rightly already fixated on the influx of Central American families and minors.

Then there's the fact that the natural response to a national emergency isn't to say, "Let's undertake a yearslong building project."

Legalities aside, a declaration of a national emergency won't achieve what Trump wants, unless his goal is simply getting out from under the shutdown. That's easy. He can say he's going it alone under his emergency powers and agree to open the shuttered parts of the government, then fight it out in the courts.

But in terms of his substantive goal of building a fence, and his political goal of building enough of it to showcase in his 2020 reelection campaign, it would get him very little. A district court somewhere would immediately issue an injunction blocking the action.

Once the administration gets to the Supreme Court, it might have a chance to prevail if the court concludes that it shouldn't second-guess the chief executive on questions related to national security. But when would such a decision get handed down? Sometime in 2020?

Trump 1, Pelosi-Schumer 0 -- Border Wall Debate Did Not Turn Out Well for Dems Tuesday Night

To a degree no one could have anticipated, the two Democrats just looked bad. A friend of mine who consults on political media wrote me: "Trump should pay these guys to speak to the nation. They look like mummies risen from an ancient tomb. It's like [an] SNL sketch."

The self-destructive appearance of Pelosi and Schumer reminded me of "The Ev and Charlie Show" named for Senate Republican Leader Everett Dirksen and House Republican leader Charles Halleck. They tried to compete with President John F. Kennedy, who was a young charismatic master of television, and they ended up being ridiculed and becoming a symbol of ineffective old politics. Nancy and Chuck were building that reputation last night with their appearance.

Hold Tight on the Wall, President Trump
By David Limbaugh
Townhall.com, January 11, 2019

Note: Democrats aren't even offering Trump as much as yesteryear's Democrats offered Reagan and Bush 41. This time around, they aren't even pretending to make certain concessions in the future beyond the anemic $1.3 billion they've already committed. They're just demanding that he unilaterally abandon his signature campaign promise for their half agreement to contemplate certain half measures on border enforcement at an unspecified future time.

Yet Trump is the one who is being unreasonable and overly political?

Many conservative commentators are saying that Democrats are solely focused on making Trump look bad and handing him a devastating political defeat, but I think it's more than that. Of course they want to lure him into forfeiting any chance he may have for re-election, but they also now actively oppose serious border security.

A Tale of Two Immigrants – The Tragic Killing of Police Officer Ronil Singh

Corporal Singh is gone for good because Gustavo Perez Arriaga shot him dead, officials say. This small-town case has national repercussions. This tale of two immigrants finds Singh and Arriaga as the apotheoses of how Republicans and Democrats respectively see immigration.

Singh, 33, was a model immigrant. He came to America from Fiji – legally. He reportedly drove a four-hour round trip to attend Yuba City's police academy. He took speech classes to smooth his heavily accented English, his third language. He became a public servant and spent seven-and-a-half years as a cop.

Arriaga, 33, is not a model immigrant. He came to America from Mexico – illegally, crossing the border via Arizona. Yet the notion that the United States suffers a border-security crisis seems lost on Senate Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer of New York and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi of California. They reportedly refused even to listen to Secretary of Homeland Security Kirstjen Nielsen's classified border-security briefing in the White House Situation Room on Wednesday. Instead, they repeatedly interrupted Nielsen as she tried to detail national security threats on the southern front.

They toss around ideas like “virtual wall,” drones, or more border patrol agents, but none of those stop or even slow down illegal aliens and human or drug smugglers entering the country. Enabling Criminal Aliens
By David Clarke

California is a state that provides a safe harbor for people illegally in the country. California boasts its status as a sanctuary state in violation of federal law and the supremacy clause in Article VI of the U.S. Constitution. California cities have passed laws prohibiting local law enforcement agencies from cooperating with law enforcement officers from the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) with the apprehension of illegal immigrants even after they have committed a crime. 'Danger Dyslexia': Toy Guns are Dangerous, Open Borders Are Not
By Karen Kataline
In fact, in 2017, 174 House Democrats voted against legislation that would have helped to ensure that aliens associated with a gang would not be admitted into the United States; In February 2018, Senate Democrats blocked legislation that would have cracked down on dangerous sanctuary cities.

Massive amounts of drugs are also coming through our porous southern border. They will be in even greater demand when we get all those “safe drug injection sites.”

While the relentless Left has been lecturing us about the danger of toy guns, they have assiduously avoided focus on the death of innocent Americans, native-born and naturalized alike, such as Kate Steinle or the recent murder of police Corporal Ronil Singh of the Newman Police Department. Why Trump Shouldn't Cave On Border Wall, By The Numbers

Time To Hang Tough

Indeed, the only concrete examples of problems caused by the shutdown are overflowing trash cans and closed bathrooms at national parks. (But this simply argues for having the national parks pay for themselves through entrance fees. As it stands, the National Park Service spends $2.9 billion a year operating national parks, but collects only about $400 million in fees and concessions from its more than 300 million annual visitors.)

By hanging tough, Trump can make serious gains on border security, while at the same time exposing the vast amounts of wasteful spending in the federal government.

That's what we'd call a win-win.

Borderline Christmas

Where America meets the sea

By Clark Whelton

City Journal, December 30, 2018

As it turned out, the border was quiet. But it didn't matter, because the real story is that the border is almost always quiet: busy, but quiet. Despite attempts to manipulate the news and hijack American goodwill, the legal international crossing between San Ysidro and Tijuana remains the busiest in the world, with plenty of cross-border travel and trade. America's immigrant roots are still holding strong, and its generous immigration rules, as well. The real story is that just about everyone in the mini international Christmas caravan that walked the sandy path south to the Mexican border agrees with Robert Frost, and with Donald Trump, too: Good fences make good neighbors.

Yes, There Is a Crisis at the Border — The Numbers Show It

Critics also complain that Trump overstated the risk of illegal immigrants committing crimes. They all point to a report from the Cato Institute, a pro-immigration libertarian think tank. Cato did a statistical analysis of census data and concluded that incarceration rates for Hispanic illegals were slightly lower than those of the native-born.

But the Center for Immigration Studies looked at federal crime statistics. It found that noncitizens accounted for more than 20% of federal convictions, even though they make up just 8.4% of the population.

"It is almost certain that a majority of noncitizens convicted of federal crimes are illegal immigrants," said Steven Camarota of the CIS.

To Obstruct Trump's Agenda, Democrats and the Media Have to Pretend Borders Don't Matter

By Sean Hannity

Think about it. In order to obstruct the president's agenda, the hate-Trump Democrats, hate-Trump media actually have to pretend that border security doesn't matter. That walls are somehow immoral -- walls they voted for in the past. And that it is, of course, one big "manufactured crisis." And they keep saying it again and again and again.

These are the facts that the mainstream media and the Democratic Party refuse to show you. They are all in-sync together. They're just an extension of each other. 4,000 criminal aliens were arrested for homicide, 30,000 criminal aliens were arrested for sex crimes, over 100,000 for violent assaults. And last year, 800 gang members were apprehended at our border. That's a 50 percent increase over 2017.

There were also 122 percent increase in fentanyl. And that's being smuggled across the border as well. 90 percent of the heroin is being smuggled across the border. That's in every small town and big city in America

Schumer Is Lying About Democrats' Border Security

By Julio Gonzalez

The Revolutionary Act, January 4, 2019

The Democrats support catch and release and want to abolish ICE — literally our enforcement arm for border security. They oppose allocating $5.7 billion of the national, multi-trillion dollar budget to the construction of a wall at our southern borders despite the fact that the President has compromised on his initial ask of more than $20 billion and despite the fact that the difference between the two parties is $3.3 billion. And when Schumer repeatedly goes to the airwaves and says that the President will never get his wall despite risking a government shutdown, it is clear that Schumer could not care less about border security.

Adding to the evidence of their contempt for border security is the Democrats' ire towards any attempt at keeping illegal immigrants out of the United States and their repeated misrepresentations of both the demographics of the problem and America's justifiable response to it.

Turns Out California Democrats Used Illegals For Ballot Harvesting

By Rod Thomson

Let's be clear. The Democratic Party employed the manpower of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of foreigners living in the United States to effect the outcome of an election. And the media applauds. Further, there were no controls on the actions of those involved with ballot harvesting — whether legal or illegal — in how they handle ballots.

Is there really any doubt that the Time's example, Gabriela Cruz, or other Democrat ballot harvesters, would be highly incentivized to "help" these indifferent and obviously politically ignorant "voters" in how they should vote? Remember her comment about "us." She was pursuing Hispanics to vote in Democrats to help other Hispanics like her in the country illegally become legalized.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In most states, laws require political activity at polling places to be a certain distance from where voters are actually voting to limit undo political pressure.

Just in Time for Democrats Arguing Walls Don't Work: New Caravan Readies to Roll In
By Monica Showalter
American Thinker, January 13, 2019
Anyone left outside still waiting for their number to be called in Tijuana must wonder why they're doing that instead of just running through. The incentives, based in existing U.S. law, are pretty amazing.

A wall would stop that, at least to some extent, and make migrating legally a more attractive prospect. People are not stupid, and they weigh their best options. What the coming caravans, and their increased organizational muscle, are telling us, is that it makes more sense to migrate illegally than legally.

Obviously, the attractive nuisance of the unwalled U.S. still stands, at least for now. Combine that with the legal incentives to come illegally, and it's no surprise that the caravans -- many, many, caravans -- are coming.

If that's not a case for President Trump's wall, what is? How is the prospect of 15,000 people, or 80,000 people, or 500,000 people, (with criminals salted in), storming our border, not a crisis, as Trump has argued.

California Admits It Has No Idea Whether Non-Citizens Voted in Last Primary

By Monica Showalter

This doesn't even include the undoubtedly significant numbers of voters who answered that they were eligible to vote when they were not. Could that have happened when the ballot-harvestors were out patrolling illegal immigrant neighborhoods in search of votes? At a minimum, it most certainly was possible, especially, since claims to voter-eligibility on drivers license forms are never checked in California (it's the honor system), according to voter-integrity activists. It also doesn't help that California sneakily had residents sign to certify on their yellow mail-in ballots that they were California residents (rather than voting-eligible citizens) so as to prevent for illegals any potential perjury charges in addition to vote-fraud charges.

If California has no idea who's a citizen, and has resisted every effort out there to get that information (it has defied cooperation with President Trump's electoral integrity commission), well, then what we can conclude is that they don't want to know if a non-citizen is voting and now the word is out that they don't. Apparently, Democratic interests in 'counting all the ballots' as they say, means counting illegal ones, too.

Did Ballot-Harvesting By Illegals Flip Elections To Democrats?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Investor's Business Daily, January 8, 2019

According to the San Diego Tribune, Fred Whitaker, the chairman of the Republican Party in Orange County, told supporters that GOP losses in the county were the "direct result of ballot harvesting allowed under California law for the first time."

It gets worse from there. In California, at least, it's possible that at least some of the ballots harvested by Dreamers were from people who were themselves ineligible to vote.

That's in part because for decades California wasn't clearing out its voter database of inactive voters.

In fact, it took a lawsuit by Judicial Watch to get the state and Los Angeles County to start removing 1.5 million inactive names from the registration list that could be invalid, as required by the National Voter Registration Act.

Why President Trump Can and Should Declare a National Emergency at Our Southern Border (Part I)

By Jonathon Moseley

BigLeaguePolitics.com, January 9, 2019

Second,the declaration of an emergency allows the President to reprogram funds in the military budget. See 33 U.S. Code § 2293 “Reprogramming during national emergencies.” Federal funds appropriated by Congress can be “reprogrammed” to a different purpose than originally intended when Congress passed the appropriations bill. It happens all the time. It will happen maybe dozens of times this year as it did last year and the year before that. Usually, these are very minor, even trivial, changes in which funds are applied to nearly-identical purposes due to changing circumstances or the like. (Just as an example, money can't be spent on a research project because a company goes out of business, so the money is used for the nearest equivalent purpose.)

The rules for reprogramming appropriations are vastly complex depending on the exact wording of particular appropriations bills, the regulations governing each individual department or agency, the nature of the proposed reprogramming of funds, etc. Doing this will require true federal budgeting experts to carefully lay the groundwork and do this meticulously and correctly. It cannot be done with bluster and bravado.

Calif. Gov. Gavin Newsom's 'Sanctuary for All' Vow Is a Challenge to Federal Authority That Can't Go Unanswered

By Jon Dougherty
The National Sentinel, January 8, 2019

Incoming Leftist Gov. Gavin Newsom of California, in his inaugural speech on Monday, fired a broadside against the rule of law: At his direction, the state will continue to openly defy Washington's authority on a number of issues, further weakening federalism and bringing our country one step closer to open rebellion.

He then pledged that California will provide "sanctuary to all who seek it" regardless of their legal status just a week after a police corporal in his state was buried after being gunned down by an illegal alien criminal who was in custody but let go rather than turned over to immigration authorities, as federal law requires.

Refusal to Budge on Border Wall Shows Dems Still Hung Up on 2016

Like generals fighting the last war, Nancy Pelosi and Chuck Schumer are fixated on the last presidential election. Their refusal to let it go and get on with governing in a divided Congress is a shameful sign of how radical their party has become since President Trump's election.

Build the Wall and Allow DACA Recipients Like Me to Stay in America, the Only Country I Know and Love

By Hilario Yanez

Fox News, January 8, 2019

I understand that America can't let everyone who wants to come into this country enter, nor can the U.S. allow illegal drugs to flow freely across the border.

As a result, I support the president's call for a barrier along the U.S.-Mexico border. And I understand that he has promised to build a border wall or fence and feels duty-bound to fulfill his promise.

So I hope the president will propose – and Democrats and Republicans in Congress will support – a deal to fund the border wall in return for giving me and my fellow Dreamers the right to stay in the U.S. permanently. This is a reasonable and obvious compromise – give the president something he wants, and give immigrant advocates something we want.

The DACA community is not asking to skip to the head of the line or to be granted citizenship immediately. All we want is a chance to earn citizenship while still being able to stay in this country by paying our taxes, serving our country, supporting our communities, and continuing to pledge allegiance to the only flag we have ever known and loved.

Dems Flip-Flop on Border Security

By Howie Carr

The Boston Herald, January 8, 2019

Everything these Democrats predicted — welfare fraud, drugs, rampant crime of every variety — has come to pass, and then some. And yet, they are demanding that we allow more hordes of these criminals from the Third World to invade the U.S.

Here are some (pre-shutdown) press releases from the U.S. attorney in Boston concerning prosecution of illegal immigrants:

This catastrophe all started with the Immigration Reform Act of 1965, sponsored by Sen. Ted Kennedy. Let's close with his lies, which the Democrats continue to perpetuate to this very day:

"The bill will not flood our cities with immigrants. It will not upset the ethnic mix of our society. It will not relax the standards of admission. It will not cause American workers to lose their jobs."

Never Mind Donald Trump's Plan for the Border; Chuck Schumer's Was Bigger and Better

By Paul Mulshine

The Newark Star-Ledger, January 6, 2019

In 2009, the senior senator from New York attended a conference on immigration at Georgetown University. During that conference he boasted about the progress that Congress had made on immigration.

"Between 2005 and 2009, a vast amount of progress has been made on our borders and ports of entry," the New York Senator told the conference. Part of that progress was "construction of 630 miles of border fence that create a significant barrier to illegal immigration on our southern land border."

Videos of that speech are now circulating in conservative circles, with much of the attention devoted to Schumer's assertion that "Any immigration solution must recognize that we must do as much as we can to gain operational control of our borders as soon as possible."

But the real news lies in the seven principles for immigration reform that Schumer advanced. When you boil them down, Schumer doesn't sound like he has all that much of a dispute with his fellow New Yorker in the White House.

What Dems Are Really Fighting in Border Battle

By Michael Graham

Democrats overwhelmingly oppose deportations — the only way to legally deal with the visa cheats they've suddenly started calling out. Instead, as the Center for Immigration Studies reports, under President Obama, ICE deportations hit a 10-year low.

In a nation with about 12 million illegal immigrants, the total number of interior-enforcement deportations (as opposed to people caught at the border) was 65,322. That's a 0.5 percent chance of being deported for overstaying your visa.

And, at least until last night, Democrats complained that percentage was too high.

Immigration-Induced Transformation Makes House Dems Tough to Reason With

By Allan Wall

VDare.com, January 12, 2019

With President Trump fighting valiantly for a border wall, as last week's speech from the Oval Office well showed, it's worth taking a look at just what he is up against in the 116th Congress. The Lamestream Media tell us it's a Congress of "firsts"—by which it means "diversity" and the increased number of Leftist women. As VDARE.com Editor Peter Brimelow has noted, the Democratic Party "tipped" in the 2016 Presidential election, with only a minority of its vote coming from white heterosexual American Christians. That revolution has now reached the Democrat House caucus, which in 2019 is 41% non-white (and 11% Jewish). Thanks to immigration, the parties in effect represent different nations.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Illegal Immigration Isn't the Cause of All of California's Problems

It's surely linked to some of them, especially the state's low percentage of high school graduates. But there's a lot it can't explain.

By Justin Fox

Also generally true is that non-citizen immigrants in the U.S. are much more likely to be in the labor force and have jobs than the native-born and have a similar unemployment rate (3.5 percent for non-citizen immigrants to 3.4 percent for the native-born in 2017). We don't know exactly what the numbers are for undocumented immigrants, but the evidence here and in the preceding paragraph would seem to indicate that their presence doesn't automatically translate into higher unemployment.

Gender-Related Violence Should be Grounds for Asylum. Congress Must Fix This for Women.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By Stephen Legomsky
USA Today, January 2, 2019
Without specific congressional recognition of gender-based persecution, women and girls fleeing the most horrific violence imaginable have had to argue that they will be persecuted because of their “particular social group.” Today that is easier said than done. The nation’s highest administrative tribunal that decides asylum claims — the Justice Department’s Board of Immigration Appeals — has been adding more and more roadblocks to asylum claims that are based on "particular social group."

This was not always the case. In 1985, the board defined “particular social group” as one in which membership is “immutable.” Gender, of course, meets that definition.

Trump's Border Claims Once Again Overplay His Hand on Immigration
Trump wants, or perhaps needs, a crisis because he thinks it will gain him leverage in a mundane but damaging dispute he is in with congressional Democrats that has shut down parts of the government since Dec. 22. He wants $5.7 billion for his border wall (which he now calls a physical barrier made of steel) — the one Mexico was supposed to pay for. In their awkward response to the president's address, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Senate Democratic leader Charles Schumer also broke no new ground, and talks to reopen the government broke down Wednesday at the White House.

In the days leading up to the speech, Trump said he was considering an even more overwrought response: declaring a national emergency in a bid to repurpose national security spending to his wall project. But that would tie the wall up in lengthy legal challenges, and on Tuesday he stopped short of that, at least for the time being.

Vital Industries Could Suffer Significant Damage as Workers With TPS

In addition to workforce losses, ending TPS for migrants from El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti could trigger other economic repercussions in the United States. All workers—be they TPS beneficiaries or native-born—do not simply "fill" jobs; they create jobs, too. For instance, it's estimated that TPS recipients from El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti live in 206,000 households, of which nearly a third have mortgages.

What's Happening at the Center

In a recent analysis, Steven Camarota finds that to pay for the $5 billion in wall funding which the House approved last month, the wall would have to stop 3 to 4 percent of expected illegal crossers in the next decade. These numbers are based on the projected education levels and fiscal costs of illegal crossers over their lifetime, as developed by the National Academies of Sciences. The Institute for Defense Analyses estimates that there are 1.95 to 2.28 apprehensions for every successful illegal crossing. This translates to 170,000 to 200,000 successful illegal crossings in 2018, or 1.7 million to two million over the next 10 years, assuming this level continues.

All That Glitters Is Not Gold: The limits of progressive refugee protection in Latin America

http://www.migrationpolicycentre.eu/event/mpc-seminar-all-that-glitters-is-not-gold-the-limits-of-progressive-refugee-protection-in-latin-america/

Abstract: In recent years experts have hailed Latin America as the new avant-garde of generous asylum and refugee policies. Understanding the extent and sustainability of Latin America's liberal approach to refugee protection holds important theoretical and normative implications for refugee studies and politics. The first part of the paper offers a short review of the characteristics and variance of refugee policy liberalization in the region and its relationship to universal refugee law. The second part of the paper analyses the implementation gaps of progressive refugee legislation in three cases: extra-continental asylum seekers from Africa, Asia and the Caribbean, the resettlement of Syrian refugees, and the massive forced displacement of Venezuelans. The paper specifically discusses the applicability of the "numbers versus rights" hypothesis to explaining such policy gaps, and ends with some considerations regarding the future sustainability of expanded refugee protection and international co-operation in the region.

Promising Strategies for Reintegration of Migrants Returning to Mexico and Central America

1:00 p.m., Wednesday, January 16, 2019
MPI Webinar
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/reintegration-migrants-returning-mexico-and-central-america

Description: The highly politicized debate over a U.S.-Mexico border wall and intense focus on Central American caravans traveling across Mexico have elevated tensions about the best methods to manage regional migration while providing humanitarian protection to those who qualify. The composition of regional migration flows has changed significantly during the past five years, with U.S. apprehensions of migrants from the Northern Triangle countries of Central America (El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras) at the U.S.-Mexico border typically outpacing those of Mexican migrants, and migration shifting from predominantly single males to families and unaccompanied children. The Trump administration's increasing arrests and removals of Mexicans and Central Americans who have lived illegally in the United States for years and its decision to terminate Temporary Protected Status (TPS) for Salvadorans and Hondurans are putting pressure on home-country governments to expand reception and reintegration service capacity.

This Migration Policy Institute (MPI) webinar will focus on reception and reintegration services for returning migrants, along with the heightened pressure policymakers in Mexico and Central America are facing to design systems and programs that support both returnees and the communities in which they settle. Authors of a new year-long study of reception and reintegration services in Mexico and the Northern Triangle being released on January 16 will discuss the findings of their fieldwork. They will focus on the differing reintegration needs of individual migrant groups, promising reception and reintegration programs, and ongoing challenges for origin communities in welcoming returnees. They will also unveil short- and long-term policy recommendations to improve reintegration strategies, with the goal that successful reception and reintegration will reduce migration flows from Central America and Mexico.

Book Launch: Undocumented Politics: Place, Gender, and the Pathways of Mexican Migrants

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Speaker:
Abigail Leslie Andrews, Assistant Professor of Sociology and Urban Studies at UC San Diego and co-director of the Mexican Migration Field Research Program

Discussant:
Luis Escala Rabadán, Professor at El Colegio de la Frontera Norte (El Colef) in Baja California and the Director of the Department of Cultural Studies

Description: Undocumented Politics: Place, Gender, and the Pathways of Mexican Migrants traces migrant communities' struggles for rights and resources across the U.S.-Mexico divide. For two years, Dr. Andrews lived with unauthorized migrants and their families in the mountains of Oaxaca, Mexico, and the barrios of Southern California. By setting two distinct groups side-by-side, Dr. Andrews reveals how local laws, policing, and power dynamics shape migrants' political agency. Yet she insists that the process does not begin or end in the United States. Rather, migrants interpret their destinations in light of the different hometowns they leave behind. As they do, their counterparts in Mexico must also come to grips with migrant globalization. Finally, Dr. Andrews upends assumptions about gender and migration. She exposes how U.S. policies abet gendered violence. Yet, Dr. Andrews also uncovers how men and women transform patriarchy as they fight to belong. Thus, the book reveals how the excluded find unexpected spaces for political voice.

The Future of Immigration Post-Brexit: Developing New Legislation and Promoting Successful Integration

10:15 a.m.-4:30 p.m., Wednesday January 16, 2019
Hallam Conference Centre
44 Hallam Street
London W1W 6JJ
https://www.publicpolicyexchange.co.uk/events/JA16-PPE

Overview: Since taking office, the Conservative Party has pledged to reduce net migration into Britain to the 'tens of thousands'. However, the UK's population increased by 244,000 in 2017 due to inward migration, despite this being the lowest number since 2014 (ONS 2017). A substantial minority of immigrants have not adapted to British society successfully and are socially excluded, due to insufficient language and education skills, as well segregation (Casey Review 2016). There are 682 wards where the non-white population is over 40% (ONS 2016).Immigrants make up a substantial section of the British population, accounting for 14% of the total number. 6% of the British population is from the EU; however Brexit is expected to significantly decrease immigration from member states. This is expected to have a substantial effect on the British economy. It has been estimated that decreasing immigration since 2016 has cost the UK £1 billion annually (Global Future 2018).

Efforts to reduce immigrant numbers stem from public hostility to large-scale immigration. Nevertheless, 70% of Britons support the continued immigration of skilled labour, and Government policy reflects this goal. Doctors and nurses have been removed from Tier Two Visa consideration, which required applicants to have a wage of £60,000, in an effort to increase NHS staff numbers. Additionally, to qualify for indefinite leave to remain, an applicant's absences from the UK must not exceed 180 days per year during the qualifying period (typically five years).From 11 January 2018 new Government policy dictates this will also apply to dependent family members of points based system visa holders

Numerous criticisms have been levelled at the Government's immigration policies. Reducing immigration to the 'tens of thousands' has been labelled as ineffective, while plans to include EU citizens in the same category as all other immigrants have been labelled "highly complex, time-consuming and expensive" by the CBI. Critics have warned leaving the EU may lead to a substantial rise in non-documented migrants entering the country, putting further pressure on already stretched UK border authorities. The unresolved issue of the Irish border also remains; as continued freedom of movement on the island may see EU citizens enter mainland Britain unrestricted from Northern Ireland, via the Republic. Government efforts to integrate immigrants have also been seen as insufficient, leaving many without the linguistic skills and societal knowledge to acclimatise.

This symposium therefore offers immigration officials, local authorities, university officials, employers and other key stakeholders the opportunity to develop strategies for the post-Brexit environment, and to ensure migrants become fully integrated into their new society.

Delegates will:

* Develop strategies to promote integration and cohesion in communities experiencing the growth of immigrant communities
* Learn how the UK can continue to sell itself as an attractive place for talented immigrants to live and work
* Debate the best methods of improving learning at schools for the children of immigrants
* Develop an awareness of current immigration legislation and future policy
* Suggest ideas on how to improve immigrant awareness of essential benefits and services available for them
* Build an understanding of how immigration impacts on the UK economy and workers' wages
* Uncover solutions to the issues which lead to social exclusion amongst immigrant groups
* Analyse the best methods to limit illegal immigration and to assist those smuggled into the country

Description: The United States Mission to the European Union, the Mission of Canada to the European Union, the Migration Policy Institute Europe (MPI Europe), and the European Economic and Social Committee are pleased to invite you to a conference on 'Social Innovation for Refugee Inclusion: A Sense of Home'.

The two-day event will explore how innovations in housing, community engagement, and mentoring can build social ties, create supportive communities, establish a robust base for economic opportunities, and foster a sense of belonging and 'home' for refugees and asylum seekers. The first day of the conference will dive into the bold ideas and actions that social initiatives, urban designers, refugee-led organisations and more have developed for inclusion, while the second day will examine tools and strategies supporting innovations to create lasting change.

Sessions will explore topics such as: the potential of co-housing for community building; the role of urban planning for more inclusive cities; building innovative cross-sectoral partnerships; and novel approaches to measuring and communicating success in social innovation.

The perspective of housing experts, refugee and migrant organisations, social enterprises, and urban designers will feature prominently in the conference, alongside other nongovernmental actors and government representatives at the local and national level. This year, more breakout sessions will allow participants to interactively engage with core themes and topics, and thematic breakout dinners will permit discussions to continue into the evening.

For any questions related to the event, please contact Annemarie Wiersma at annemarie.wiersma@eesc.europa.eu or +32(0)2 546 93 76.

Building the Foundations for Inclusion: What Does the Future Hold for Immigrant Integration in Europe?

2:30–5:30 p.m., Friday, January 25, 2019
Residence Palace, 155 Rue de la Loi
Brussels, Belgium
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/building-foundations-inclusion-what-does-future-hold-immigrant-integration-europe

Description: The migration crisis transformed the landscape of immigrant integration in Europe. Large-scale and spontaneous movements placed unprecedented pressures on public services and amplified social divisions, which, in turn, fueled the rise of populist parties. But while the everyday pressures of the migration crisis have absorbed most of the bandwidth of integration policymakers in recent years, larger challenges could lie ahead. Aging populations will place extreme pressure on welfare-state institutions and public spending. Digitization, automation, and artificial intelligence will transform labor markets as we know them. And greater cultural clashes and social unrest—especially if accompanied by another migration crisis—could further splinter the political landscape. How well Europe can weather tomorrow's challenges will depend on the institutions and systems built today.

This meeting will highlight lessons from MPI Europe's flagship Integration Futures initiative, which seeks to develop creative and strategic approaches to addressing today's toughest integration challenges—and to better plan for those around the corner.

The meeting will consider three questions in particular:

* How has the landscape of integration policymaking shifted, and how can policymakers build a sense of common ground in this state of flux?
* What challenges and opportunities could future economic, social, technological, and demographic trends create for integration?
* What are the most promising new innovations to help integration officials solve entrenched integration challenges in an age of populism?

Hayek Auditorium, Cato Institute
1000 Massachusetts Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20001-5403

Description: The new year began with America's immigration debate at white-hot intensity. President Trump's demand for a border wall and the House Democratic majority's refusal to give him money for one sparked the longest government shutdown in decades. American troops remain at the border, raising the level of militarization of the border region to dangerous new heights. Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) agents remain in conflict with residents in border communities, and CBP checkpoints throughout the country continue to stop and detain motorists on mere suspicion. Is there a way to end America's "Border War" and restore constitutional norms within the border region? Join us as a group of distinguished experts will address that and related questions.

Description: Immigration policy has long divided America. It continues to be one of the country's biggest issues, yet substantive discussion often gets sidelined. In "Melting Pot or Civil War? A Song of Immigrants Makes the Case Against Open Borders" (Sentinel, 2018), Reihan Salam delivers a rational, considered, and egalitarian argument against open borders.

In his book, Mr. Salam argues that uncontrolled immigration is bad for almost all Americans, including those who belong to immigrant communities. Our current system has intensified the isolation of our native poor, and it risks ghettoizing the children of poor immigrants. It ignores the challenges posed by the declining demand for less-skilled labor, even as it exacerbates ethnic inequality and deepens our political divides. Rejecting both cosmopolitan extremism and white identity politics, Mr. Salam makes the case that limiting total immigration and favoring skilled immigrants will combat rising inequality, balance diversity with assimilation, and foster a new, unifying nationalism.

Certificate program course in International Migration Studies

XCPD-703 - Newcomers to Citizens: Immigrant Integration

9:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Wednesday-Friday, February 25-27, 2019
Georgetown University School of Continuing Studies

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

640 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Room C227
Washington, DC 20001
https://portal.scs.georgetown.edu/search/publicCourseSearchDetails.do?method=load&courseId=14536

Course Description: With a record 200 million people living outside their country of birth, immigration is a global phenomenon with profound demographic, economic, social, and political implications for both sending and receiving countries. The debate over immigration law and policy has become increasingly volatile and, in some instances, characterized by misinformation, hate, and xenophobia. Beyond the politics of immigration, genuine challenges to immigrant integration abound. Successful integration of immigrants is critical to the long-term prosperity of host countries that rely on immigrants as workers, consumers, taxpayers, innovators, and entrepreneurs in light of their aging native-born populations and lower birth rates. In this course we will explore integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving countries--such as the United States and Canada and new countries of permanent immigration such as France, Germany, the United Kingdom. We will raise questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity. We will also discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism, paradigms that challenge an integrationist reading of migration. Using case studies from North America and Europe we will pay special attention to the different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation on their road from newcomers to citizens.

Course Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Discuss the integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving and source countries.
* Recognize questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity.
* Discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism.
* Compare different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation.

CRS Seminar: Humanitarian Series I

Borders, migration, exclusion: The role of civil society and humanitarian aid in an increasingly polarized political context

1:00-2:30 p.m., Wednesday, February 27, 2019
York University Center for Refugee Studies
626 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-humanitarian-series-i?instance_id=146

Speaker:
Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

Description: The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Speaker:
Maria-Elena De Trinidad Young, PhD, MPH
Project Director, Research on Immigrant Health and State Policy (RIGHTS) Study at the Center for Health Policy Research, University of California, Los Angeles
Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow, UC Merced

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Center for Immigration Studies Files a Civil RICO Lawsuit Against the President of Southern Poverty Law Center

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CIS seeks damages and an injunction prohibiting repetition of the false claim that the Center is a hate group

Washington, D.C. (January 16, 2018) – The Center for Immigration Studies has filed a civil lawsuit under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) against Richard Cohen, President of the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) of Montgomery, Ala. The case is filed in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia and seeks damages and an injunction prohibiting Cohen and his colleague, Heidi Beirich, who heads the group's "hate group" project, from repeating the false claim that the Center is a hate group.

Read the Complaint.

Overview of the SPLC's "Hate Groups" List.

The case is brought pursuant to the federal RICO statute because Cohen and Beirich have been carrying out their scheme to destroy CIS through the SPLC "enterprise" for two years and will not stop without judicial intervention. "CIS does not hate immigrants or anyone else" said CIS Executive Director Mark Krikorian. "Our purpose is to make the case for a pro-immigrant policy of lower immigration – fewer immigrants but a warmer welcome for those admitted. SPLC attacks us simply because it disagrees with these policy views. SPLC and its leaders have every right to oppose our work on immigration, but they do not have the right to label us a hate group and suggest we are racists. The Center for Immigration Studies is fighting back against the SPLC smear campaign and its attempt to stifle debate through intimidation and name-calling."

The complaint makes clear that SPLC knows CIS does not meet its own definition of a "hate group," which SPLC describes as an organization whose "official statements or principles... attack or malign an entire class of people, typically for their immutable characteristics." (Complaint, ¶14, quoting from SPLC's website) CIS has not attacked or maligned immigrants. Moreover, the Supreme Court has held that being an immigrant is not an immutable characteristic because it is the result of a personal choice. (Plyler v. Doe, 487 U.S. 202, 220 (1982).) CIS regularly opposes higher levels of immigration for sound public policy reasons, not because of any animus toward immigrants as human beings. CIS hopes this lawsuit will cause Mr. Cohen and Ms. Beirich to turn their attention to actual cases of racial animus.

S Should Take a Stand Against Child Marriage

ary 17, 2019

e commentators have observed that the report, shocking though it is, comports with what many European nations ha obliged to confront as they accept increasing numbers of immigrants from countries where tradition and hewing to al or religious norms lead to such results; in some instances, the receiving countries are rethinking their own norms t whether to accept practices involving underage marriage.

e that we do not reach that point. It seems to me a moral wrong of epic proportions to allow one's society to accept s an age and stage of maturity to undertake certain acts: voting, joining the military, drinking or (in those states now een scratching my head over that since I read the article. I myself don't see any conflict at all in both those actions b rtaken simultaneously. The fact that Iraq has cracked open the door in an attempt to avert visa sanctions on its cians and their wives and children doesn't obviate the fact that — like our nemesis, Cuba — they are parceling out its to repatriate individuals on a slow-motion basis, rather than simply saying, "When the order of removal becomes know and we'll issue the appropriate travel documents to take them back".

e contrary, it seems to me what is incomprehensible is that our government allowed this situation to fester so long, r t out of mistaken notions of foreign and defense policy in a country just one step short of a failed state. But precisely use of our decades-long involvement and the sacrifices our nation has made in their behalf, such a policy by Iraq sh r have been countenanced in the first place. Given that context, it seems to me that seizing the moment to remove a nals from our midst while at the same time keeping the pressure up by putting Iraq on the "recalcitrant nations" list eptible to visa sanctions for its elite is exactly the right thing to do.

't say this lightly. I understand well the dimensions of repatriation of even nominal Christians to a predominantly ervative Muslim country. But no one made any of these individuals pursue a life of crime in the United States. It was, a poor way to thank us for taking them in as refugees.

"Universal" Health Care for Illegal Aliens in NYC and California Hurt the Shrinking Middle Class?

no doubt that both the cities and states would do everything possible to take advantage of available federal funds to costs. How? Easy, because money is fungible. Simply use federal funds in accordance with federal mandates that, y anyway, prohibit use for care of illegal aliens except in emergency facilities. But of course this federal taxpayer mo up at least a portion of the city or state's resources to attend to the new cost burden. This allows the city or state to rvice to federal requirements and avoid the possibility of "clawbacks" while still moving toward its goal of providing h to illegal aliens. Federal money wouldn't be enough to cover full costs, however. So where would the remainder com
? There are only so many zillionaires to tax, which inevitably leaves the middle class of that city or state to carry muc urden.

eads us to the next question: What is the impact of such a plan? It will no doubt act as a beacon to many aliens who no status or health coverage, and want it. Why would it not incentivize a relocation to the city or state, especially in t etically sealed environment of a "sanctuary"? As more aliens arrive and seek services and coverage, costs will rise, ax burdens will have to be levied for the "unexpected" costs. The inevitable result will almost certainly be a shrinking

Sierra Club's Immigration Obsession

ary 16, 2019

inly, there are serious environmental concerns about a border wall's impact on the migratory patterns of endangere es that are worth discussing. One possible solution would be openings in the wall known as "cat holes" that would a animals to pass through. On the other hand, as I've written, illegal border crossings lead to massive amounts of tras deposited on our southern border, something a wall would almost certainly help counter. Further, smugglers often t l border crossers through paths in national monuments and parks, trampling and destroying the flora along the way. , the Border Patrol is prevented from entering these areas (such as Arizona's Sonoran Desert National Monument o ood Forest National Monument), giving smugglers free rein to enter them, degrade the soil, kill the plants, and leave d trash. Physical barriers, including a wall, would certainly mitigate this by pushing foot and vehicle traffic toward the of entry.

rdless, one would imagine the Sierra Club has bigger fish to fry when it comes to the environment than the relatively d impact of a wall.

omparison, the Twitter feed of the Environmental Defense Fund, another conservation group, covers a far wider ran s than simply Trump-bashing. In just its latest 10 tweets (as of January 8), the organization discussed climate chang ylene chloride bans, water resources, Republican support for certain climate bills, corporate environmental policies, very term "transnational" as used to describe transnational gangs, means that these criminals and gang members ha media usually describe illegal aliens in glowing terms. Many are undoubtedly good people, but new data I have obtai that illegal aliens as a group are not very law-abiding.

existing research is fatally flawed. Most studies just examine all immigrants as a monolithic group, rather than separa ing legal and illegal immigrants. There is a good reason to believe that people who come to America legally tend to law-abiding than those who do so illegally.

r studies depend on individuals to self-report their criminal histories and even whether they are here illegally. Illegal s may not want to tell a stranger that they have been in prison, fearing that their criminal record and illegal status will e them prime candidates for deportation.

le should know that babies born on U.S. soil to foreign parents don't anchor their parents to the United States. rently, Maryury's baby has become a U.S. citizen by jus soli, yet Maryury is eligible for deportation. So it's back to uras for mother and child, or it's back to Honduras for mother sans child, who goes into foster care, whether mother not, though she probably likes it – at least her child has a better life.

ury has no right to live in this country. She is eligible for deportation, yet, here she is, making her way through our co m, slowly, due to the excessive demands being made on it. Meanwhile, an American woman, a volunteer, houses h ountry, and she doesn't see herself as a criminal, nor do plenty of others, for what it's worth.

if America were to dismiss its immigration agents in one fell swoop, thus halting the enforcement of its immigration ? Sounds far-fetched? Who would have thought that members of Congress would call for the end of ICE? Imagine th of migrants, the chaos: conditions in cities like Los Angeles and San Francisco would become worse, to the point o ming impossible to live in, because migrants struggling to survive there would contribute as much or more to the ening conditions (e.g., greater crime, more trash, poorer sanitation, etc.) as citizens.

eader should not feel sorry for Maryury. Rather, he should feel anger for her. Look what she put her three-year old gh, trekking north to the border.

U.S. Immigration Situation, Through Statistics

Norman Transcript, January 15, 2019

rder walls: The United States currently already has about 650 miles of the US/Mexico border fenced (the entire borc try needs 1,000 miles of wall, due to natural barriers).

ndia-Bangladesh border barrier, currently under construction, will be more than 2,000 miles. It was built to primarily wo Democratic politicians are trying to extend the safety net to include unauthorized immigrants—a move that may ately backfire on them.

mbracing the further inclusion of unauthorized immigrants in the safety net, Newsom and de Blasio are rejecting the arian mantra of "building a wall around the welfare state," not to mention the Gang of Eight bill's stringent limits on th y of newly legalized immigrants to access benefits. But the conceit that poor unauthorized immigrants aren't in need from the government" has long been considered central to keeping tax-averse voters in the admissionist coalition. A tly as April 2018, a survey sponsored by the Bipartisan Policy Center found that U.S. voters are far more concerned t immigrants who "take benefits that should go to Americans first" than they are about those who "compete for jobs w working Americans."

ing benefits for unauthorized immigrants undoubtedly plays well with Democratic primary voters in California and Ne City. But swing voters might see things rather differently. Once the polarizing Donald Trump leaves the scene, the ng honesty of Newsom and de Blasio could give restrictionism new life.

onsiderably less than the $5.7 billion for the wall and by managing existing resources differently, the administration c his ship toward a different sea. Actions that would have a far greater effect than a wall include:

ter focus on improving capacity and infrastructure at ports of entry, which have not received the same attention as ations between ports of entry. Technology to improve the detection of illicit traffic is essential, especially to interdict th s and contraband that the President wrongly claims would be stopped by a wall. Moreover, by declaring that asylum cations would be accepted only at legal ports of entry, but limiting the number allowed each day to file claims (a prac n as metering), the administration is forcing asylum seekers to choose between waiting for months in Mexico or npting to cross illegally. Inadequate capacity at ports of entry to respond to such edicts has caused a growing anitarian crisis on both sides of the border.

could be added to this list and it should not preclude upgraded barriers, or even new ones, at high-traffic or especia erous areas where barriers and other border technology may well be needed. But it is illustrative of what forward-loo er security should look like.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

e New York Times, Farhad Manjoo briefly makes the case for "opening up America's borders to everyone who wants e here." There is, Manjoo contends, "room for a brave politician to oppose President Trump's racist immigration rheto ust by fighting his wall and calling for the abolishment of I.C.E. but also by making a proactive and affirmative case fo expansion of immigration." How "vast"? In theory, at least, unlimited.

ow, while I imagine that I shan't convince Manjoo that I am correct in my outlook, I do want to raise a couple of pract tions to the vision he outlines. Manjoo writes:

> Imagine that if you passed a minimal background check, you'd be free to live, work, pay taxes and die in the United States. Imagine moving from Nigeria to Nebraska as freely as one might move from Massachusetts to Maine.

s a pipe dream. For a start, if one has to "pass a minimal background check" then one cannot move from elsewhere as one might move from Massachusetts to Maine." If I so wished, I could pick up my stuff now and move from Flori ornia without telling anybody in a position of authority, without undergoing any form of background check, and withou as owning a passport of any kind. That is not true — and even under Manjoo's system would not be true — of a rian hoping to move to Nebraska.

Description: The United States Mission to the European Union, the Mission of Canada to the European Union, the Migration Policy Institute Europe (MPI Europe), and the European Economic and Social Committee are pleased to invite you to a conference on 'Social Innovation for Refugee Inclusion: A Sense of Home'.

The two-day event will explore how innovations in housing, community engagement, and mentoring can build social ties, create supportive communities, establish a robust base for economic opportunities, and foster a sense of belonging and 'home' for refugees and asylum seekers. The first day of the conference will dive into the bold ideas and actions that social initiatives, urban designers, refugee-led organisations and more have developed for inclusion, while the second day will examine tools and strategies supporting innovations to create lasting change.

Sessions will explore topics such as: the potential of co-housing for community building; the role of urban planning for more inclusive cities; building innovative cross-sectoral partnerships; and novel approaches to measuring and communicating success in social innovation.

The perspective of housing experts, refugee and migrant organisations, social enterprises, and urban designers will feature prominently in the conference, alongside other nongovernmental actors and government representatives at the local and national level. This year, more breakout sessions will allow participants to interactively engage with core themes and topics, and thematic breakout dinners will permit discussions to continue into the evening.

Building the Foundations for Inclusion: What Does the Future Hold for Immigrant Integration in Europe?

2:30–5:30 p.m., Friday, January 25, 2019
Residence Palace, 155 Rue de la Loi
Brussels, Belgium
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/building-foundations-inclusion-what-does-future-hold-immigrant-integration-europe

Description: The migration crisis transformed the landscape of immigrant integration in Europe. Large-scale and spontaneous movements placed unprecedented pressures on public services and amplified social divisions, which, in turn, fueled the rise of populist parties. But while the everyday pressures of the migration crisis have absorbed most of the bandwidth of integration policymakers in recent years, larger challenges could lie ahead. Aging populations will place extreme pressure on welfare-state institutions and public spending. Digitization, automation, and artificial intelligence will transform labor markets as we know them. And greater cultural clashes and social unrest—especially if accompanied by another migration crisis—could further splinter the political landscape. How well Europe can weather tomorrow's challenges will depend on the institutions and systems built today.

This meeting will highlight lessons from MPI Europe's flagship Integration Futures initiative, which seeks to develop creative and strategic approaches to addressing today's toughest integration challenges—and to better plan for those around the corner.

The meeting will consider three questions in particular:

* How has the landscape of integration policymaking shifted, and how can policymakers build a sense of common ground in this state of flux?
* What challenges and opportunities could future economic, social, technological, and demographic trends create for integration?
* What are the most promising new innovations to help integration officials solve entrenched integration challenges in an age of populism?

Description: The new year began with America's immigration debate at white-hot intensity. President Trump's demand for a border wall and the House Democratic majority's refusal to give him money for one sparked the longest government shutdown in decades. American troops remain at the border, raising the level of militarization of the border region to dangerous new heights. Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) agents remain in conflict with residents in border communities, and CBP checkpoints throughout the country continue to stop and detain motorists on mere suspicion. Is there a way to end America's "Border War" and restore constitutional norms within the border region? Join us as a group of distinguished experts will address that and related questions.

Washington, DC 20036

Description: Immigration policy has long divided America. It continues to be one of the country's biggest issues, yet substantive discussion often gets sidelined. In "Melting Pot or Civil War? A Song of Immigrants Makes the Case

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Against Open Borders" (Sentinel, 2018), Reihan Salam delivers a rational, considered, and egalitarian argument against open borders.

In his book, Mr. Salam argues that uncontrolled immigration is bad for almost all Americans, including those who belong to immigrant communities. Our current system has intensified the isolation of our native poor, and it risks ghettoizing the children of poor immigrants. It ignores the challenges posed by the declining demand for less-skilled labor, even as it exacerbates ethnic inequality and deepens our political divides. Rejecting both cosmopolitan extremism and white identity politics, Mr. Salam makes the case that limiting total immigration and favoring skilled immigrants will combat rising inequality, balance diversity with assimilation, and foster a new, unifying nationalism.

Certificate program course in International Migration Studies

XCPD-703 - Newcomers to Citizens: Immigrant Integration

9:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Wednesday-Friday, February 25-27, 2019
Georgetown University School of Continuing Studies
640 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Room C227
Washington, DC 20001
https://portal.scs.georgetown.edu/search/publicCourseSearchDetails.do?method=load&courseId=14536

Course Description: With a record 200 million people living outside their country of birth, immigration is a global phenomenon with profound demographic, economic, social, and political implications for both sending and receiving countries. The debate over immigration law and policy has become increasingly volatile and, in some instances, characterized by misinformation, hate, and xenophobia. Beyond the politics of immigration, genuine challenges to immigrant integration abound. Successful integration of immigrants is critical to the long-term prosperity of host countries that rely on immigrants as workers, consumers, taxpayers, innovators, and entrepreneurs in light of their aging native-born populations and lower birth rates. In this course we will explore integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving countries--such as the United States and Canada and new countries of permanent immigration such as France, Germany, the United Kingdom. We will raise questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity. We will also discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism, paradigms that challenge an integrationist reading of migration. Using case studies from North America and Europe we will pay special attention to the different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation on their road from newcomers to citizens.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Course Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Discuss the integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving and source countries.
* Recognize questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity.
* Discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism.
* Compare different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation.

Notes: This course is an open enrollment course. No application is required and registration is available by clicking "Add to Cart." Current students must register with their Georgetown NetID and password. New students will be prompted to create an account prior to registration.

Tuition: $995.00, 24 contract hours

CRS Seminar: Humanitarian Series I

Borders, migration, exclusion: The role of civil society and humanitarian aid in an increasingly polarized political context

1:00-2:30 p.m., Wednesday, February 27, 2019
York University Center for Refugee Studies
626 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-humanitarian-series-i?instance_id=146

Speaker:
Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

Description: The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

The result is a degradation of access to adequate protection and humanitarian assistance, as well as the mechanisms they use to reach target destinations. Speaker:
Maria-Elena De Trinidad Young, PhD, MPH
Project Director, Research on Immigrant Health and State Policy (RIGHTS) Study at the Center for Health Policy Research, University of California, Los Angeles
Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow, UC Merced

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

Speaker:
Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

The Domestic Terror Threat Against ICE

A reminder that agents remain a terrorism target by those who oppose borders and immigration law enforcement

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (January 23, 2019) – New analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies highlights the growing threat that ICE agents face from those who oppose border security and law enforcement.

Last summer, Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security Claire Grady issued a warning to employees that they were under "heightened threat" based on "specific and credible threats that have been leveled against certain DHS employees and a sharp increase in the overall number of general threats against DHS employees."

Todd Bensman, the Center Senior National Security Fellow and author of the analysis, said, "Just as ISIS propagandists use the internet, various open-borders extremists who are upset with President Trump's immigration policies have used their anonymous online platforms to imply threats and encourage the murder of ICE agents. These radicals are motivated by an ideological desire to cause political change through violence--the very definition of terrorism."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"This kind of online speech is not protected. In fact, law enforcement has repeatedly arrested Islamic terrorists for similarly posting online incitement like this."

The only two known arrests related to the threat provide some insight as to what the online-based threat against ICE agents looks like, though these are hardly the only ones out there calling for the deaths of our agents for a political agenda that include abolishing the agency or simply returning its troops to their barracks.

The first involved Sergio "Mapache" Salazar, an 18-year-old DACA recipient who came under FBI national security investigation for allegedly posting anonymous threats to make bombs that would be used to kill ICE agents. Salazar was under investigation for instructional videos on how to make certain unspecified weapons and countering law enforcement, according to local news reports.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elsewhere, the case against Brandon Ziobrowski of Cambridge, Mass., appears to be moving slowly. On August 9, FBI agents arrested the 33-year old anti-ICE activist and had him federally charged with using Twitter to offer at least his 448 followers $500 to "anyone who kills an ICE agent. @me seriously who else can pledge ... get in on this ... let's make this work."

What to Watch out for in Any Immigration Deal

Washington, D.C. (January 23, 2019) [From Mark Krikorian in National

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Review Online]– The immigration proposal the president announced Saturday was a responsible compromise to end the partial government shutdown. The border-security part of the package (which includes more than walls) is one that could easily have been offered by Obama or Clinton, back before Democrats decided that borders are immoral.

View the full article: https://www.nationalreview.com/corner/what-to-watch-out-for-in-any-immigration-deal/

And his offer to trade this for what amounts to an extension of the expiration dates for a total of about 1 million DACA and TPS illegal aliens with ostensibly temporary work permits is not what many immigration hawks had feared — a new, from-scratch amnesty encompassing illegal aliens who had not already been granted work permits under prior administrations. Both programs should be abolished, of course, but enabling already-amnestied illegals to keep their work permits a little longer as a sweetener for Democrats isn't unreasonable, despite the objections of many of my fellow immigration hawks.

But one thing the critics are right about is that with this as the starting point, the bill will likely move to the left. As the editors have noted, "we fear any prospective deal only gets weaker from here." In other words, when the Democrats filibuster the measure, which is expected to come up for a vote in the Senate Thursday, will congressional Republicans and White House start giving even more ground?

It seems likely. Already this morning Axios is reporting that "[a] new immigration idea has been circulating over the past 24 hours at senior levels inside the White House and on Capitol Hill: Give a path to green cards to the 700,000 current DACA recipients."

Another way the bill could get weaker would be to strip out the limited measures it includes to address the asylum crisis (which have already elicited howls of protest from the libertarian/leftist front). The bill would do little to address the larger "catch and release" practice dictated by other legal loopholes (other than some increased funding for detention).

My guess is Republicans could hold together in backing the deal in its current form — though even that's iffy, given that Numbers USA has announced it will score the vote for its grade cards. But if the amnesty component grows, the bill would have little chance.

Immigration Failure: No-Show Rates in U.S. Immigration Courts

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (January 24, 2019) – Ahead of several key Senate votes on border security and illegal immigration policy, a new report from the Center for Immigration Studies highlights the persistent failure of aliens to show up to immigration court--a serious challenge for the country's immigration enforcement efforts.

U.S. immigration courts recently released their numbers to Congress for fiscal year 2017, and hoped-for improvements are largely absent. Rather, problems that have defined the courts since their beginning persist.

Among the highlights:

- 43 percent of all aliens free pending trial failed to appear for court in 2017.
- Since 1996, 37 percent of all aliens free before trial disappeared from court.
- Aliens abscond from court more often today than they did before 9/11.
- Deportation orders for failing to appear in court exceed deportation orders from cases that were tried by 306 percent.
- 46 percent of all unaccompanied children disappeared from U.S. immigration courts from 2013 through 2017.
- 49 percent of unaccompanied children failed to appear in U.S. immigration courts in 2017.

View the full report: https://www.cis.org/Report/Immigration-Courts-Aliens-Disappear-Trial

Mark Metcalf, a former immigration judge in Miami, Fla., and the author of the report, said, "The challenges facing America's immigration courts are significant, as highlighted by the rising number of no-shows. This is an issue which would cause serious redress in any other court system, and which ought to be tackled in any legislative immigration solution. It is not immigration that has failed America, but the American government that has often failed immigration."

Why Immigration Detention Is Necessary

A border wall without detention reform is not enough to deter illegal immigration

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (January 24, 2019) – New analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies highlights the importance of detaining aliens who are in violation of U.S. immigration laws, and demonstrates the need for detention measures in any border security bill pushed by the Trump administration. The present Republican Senate bill being voted on today calls for an increase in detention beds to an average of 52,000 per day.

Key Points:

- Immigration detention is civil and for the purpose of ensuring appearance of aliens at removal proceedings, and for the actual removal itself.
- Congress recognizes both qualitative and quantitative problems associated with illegal immigration in the processes and detention mechanisms it directs.
- Claims of asylum and fear of return are a major loophole that result in release of aliens who then disappear.
- Lack of detention space to hold aliens also contributes to the collapse of immigration and border controls, resulting in a system of "catch-and-release" that encourages more aliens to attempt to enter illegally or to overstay their visas.
- Immigration and border security controls are at a crisis point, due to dismaying case backlogs currently clogging the immigration courts (more than 750,000 cases) and the number of fugitives (900,000) under orders of removal who are loose on the streets of the United States.
- Migrant caravans may force both legislators and the administration to take effective remedial action to close legal loopholes and to declare a mass immigration emergency to ensure continued control of our external border(s).

View the full analysis: https://www.cis.org/Fact-Sheet/Why-Immigration-Detention-Necessary

Dan Cadman, a fellow at the center and the author of the analysis, said, "While walls are important, the administration needs to do a better job of explaining why detention is necessary. 43 percent of all aliens free pending trial failed to appear for court in 2017; detention assures that they will not abscond from court. When aliens are released from detention pending removal, chances are quite high that they will flee. Secure borders, a commitment to workplace enforcement, and an end to illegal-immigration-inducing policies will over time reduce the need, but at present the shortage of beds is at crisis level."

"If appropriations allows you to only hold 35,000 people, when you get person #35,001, you either let them go, or let somebody else go out the door. It's a perpetual problem for ICE."

Summary: Based on selected socio-economic indicators, the Brexit Monitor of the Federal Statistical Office (Destatis) shows the social and economic development in the United Kingdom since the Brexit referendum. It reveals that the number of Britons who obtained the German citizenship rose markedly from 2,865 in 2016 to 7,493 people in 2017 (+162%). There was a similar rise in the number of Germans naturalised in the United Kingdom. Their number was up from 994 in 2016 to 2,636 in 2017 (+165%). A connection with the Brexit decision can be assumed in both cases as an exit from the EU is expected to terminate the freedom of movement.

Cancelled Immigration Court Hearings Grow as Shutdown Continues
January 14, 2019
https://trac.syr.edu/immigration/reports/543/

Excerpt: Since the beginning of the federal government shutdown, most Immigration Court hearings have been cancelled. As of January 11, the estimated number of cancellations reached 42,726. Each week the shutdown continues, cancelled hearings will likely grow by another 20,000. As many as 100,000 individuals awaiting their day in court may be impacted if the shutdown continues through the end of January. See Table 1.

The magnitude of the shutdown's effect - termed "devastating" by Immigration Judge Dana Leigh Marks - is based upon detailed analyses of court records by the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse (TRAC) at Syracuse University[1]. Individuals impacted by these cancellations may have already being waiting two, three, or even four years for their day in court. Judge Marks, former president of the National Association of Immigration Judges, in an interview January 9 on PBS estimated that it could add another three or four years to the wait for immigrants who are on her docket before their hearing can be rescheduled.

Immigration is top issue facing country: poll
By Max Greenwood
The Hill, January 22, 2019
https://thehill.com/homenews/campaign/426500-immigration-is-top-issue-facing-country-poll

Excerpt: Harvard CAPS/Harris poll

Most U.S. voters – 55 percent – oppose the idea of building a wall along the southern border, according to the Harvard CAPS/Harris poll, while 45 percent back the proposal.

But Americans are near-evenly split on whether the U.S. should erect a “security barrier” along the border. Forty-nine percent support such a proposal, while 51 percent opposes it.

Despite that split, an overwhelming majority of respondents said that border security on the U.S. boundary with Mexico is an issue, the poll found.

Nearly half – 49 percent – said that they see border security as a “serious problem,” while another 36 percent said it was a “minor problem.” Only 16 percent said it is “not even a small priority.”

Book Description: Providing nuanced accounts of how the social identities of men and women, the context of displacement and the experience or manifestation of violence interact, this collection offers conceptual analyses and in-depth case studies to illustrate how gender relations are affected by displacement, encampment and return. The essays show how these factors lead to various forms of direct, indirect and structural violence. This ranges from discussions of norms reflected in policy documents and practise, the relationship between relief structures and living conditions in camps, to forced military recruitment and forced return, and covers countries in Africa, Asia and Europe.

Hidden Out in the Open: Spanish Migration to the United States (1875-1930)

Kindle, 4145 KB, ASIN: B07MJWXG53, $36.00

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Book Description: Hidden Out in the Open is the first English-language volume on Spanish migration to the United States in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. This panoramic study covers a period defined by the crucial transformations of the Progressive Era in the United States, and by similarly momentous changes in Spain following the Restoration of the Bourbon monarchy under Alfonso XII.

The chapters in this volume are geographically wide-ranging, reflecting the transnational nature of the Spanish diaspora in the Americas, encompassing networks that connected Spain, Cuba, Latin American countries, the United States, and American-controlled territories in Hawai'i and Panama. The geographic diversity reveals the different jobs immigrants engaged in, from construction gangs in the Panama Canal to mining crews in Arizona and West Virginia. Contributors analyze the Spanish experience in the United States from a variety of perspectives, discussing rural and urban enclaves, the role of the state, and the political mobilization of migrants, using a range of methodological approaches that examine ethnicity, race, gender, and cultural practices through the lenses of sociology, history, and cultural studies.

The mention of the Spanish influence in the United States often conjures up images of conquistadores and padres of old. Forgotten in this account are the Spanish immigrants who reached American shores in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Hidden Out in the Open reveals the role of the modern migration of Spaniards in this "land of immigrants" and rectifies the erasure of Spain in the American narrative. The book will be of interest to scholars and students of US history and the history of modern Spain and Europe, as well as those interested ethnic and migration/diaspora studies, Hispanic/Latino studies, and the study of working class and radicalism.

The Political Economy of Border Drawing: Arranging Legality in European Labor Migration Policies

Hardcover, ISBN: 9781782385417, $51.20

Paperback, Picador; Main Market edition, ISBN: 1789200830, $28.45, 320 pp.
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1789200830/centerforimmigra

Book Description: The conditions for non-EU migrant workers to gain legal entry to Britain, France, and Germany are at the same time similar and quite different. To explain this variation this book compares the fine-grained legal categories for migrant workers in each country, and examines the interaction of economic, social, and cultural rationales in determining migrant legality. Rather than investigating the failure of borders to keep unauthorized migrants out, the author highlights the different policies of each country as "border-drawing" actions. Policymakers draw lines between different migrant groups, and between migrants and citizens, through considerations of both their economic utility and skills, but also their places of origin and prospects for social integration. Overall, migrant worker legality is arranged against the backdrop of the specific vision each country has of itself in an economically competitive, globalized world with rapidly changing welfare and citizenship models.

Switzerland and Migration: Historical and Current Perspectives on a Changing Landscape
By Barbara Lüthi and Damir Skenderovic

Palgrave Macmillan, 223 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1250179823, $20.91
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1250179823/centerforimmigra

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Book Description: This book explores the history of migration in Switzerland from the late nineteenth century to the present day. It brings together recent scholarship on Switzerland in the field of cultural and migration studies, as well as migration history, and combines various research approaches from postcolonial studies, transnational studies, border studies, and history of knowledge. Since the late nineteenth century, Switzerland has gradually transformed into a migration society, becoming one of the countries in Europe with the highest percentage of migrant population. While migration has become one of most contentious issues in Swiss public and political debates, the volume also shows how migrants have developed various strategies to deal with the country's discriminatory policies and distinct institutional settings. The authors of the volume convincingly challenge the view that Switzerland still does not represent a migration (or even post-migrant) society and substantially contributes to the long overdue acknowledgement of Switzerland in migration history and studies at the international level.

The End of the Myth: From the Frontier to the Border Wall in the Mind of America

By Greg Grandin

Metropolitan Books, 384 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 9781782385417, $51.20
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/9781782385417/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 4145 KB, ASIN: B076B2DNJL, $14.99

Book Description: Ever since this nation's inception, the idea of an open and ever-expanding frontier has been central to American identity. Symbolizing a future of endless promise, it was the foundation of the United States' belief in itself as an exceptional nation—democratic, individualistic, forward-looking. Today, though, America hasa new symbol: the border wall.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In The End of the Myth, acclaimed historian Greg Grandin explores the meaning of the frontier throughout the full sweep of U.S. history—from the American Revolution to the War of 1898, the New Deal to the election of 2016. For centuries, he shows, America's constant expansion—fighting wars and opening markets—served as a "gate of escape," helping to deflect domestic political and economic conflicts outward. But this deflection meant that the country's problems, from racism to inequality, were never confronted directly. And now, the combined catastrophe of the 2008 financial meltdown and our unwinnable wars in the Middle East have slammed this gate shut, bringing political passions that had long been directed elsewhere back home.

It is this new reality, Grandin says, that explains the rise of reactionary populism and racist nationalism, the extreme anger and polarization that catapulted Trump to the presidency. The border wall may or may not be built, but it will survive as a rallying point, an allegorical tombstone marking the end of American exceptionalism.

Oxford University Press, 952 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 0190856904, $175.00

Kindle, 4804 KB, ASIN: B07M7PGQ4Y, 948 pp., $166.25

Book Description: The objective of The Oxford Handbook of Migration Crises is to deconstruct, question, and redefine through a critical lens what is commonly understood as "migration crises." The volume covers a wide range of historical, economic, social, political, and environmental conditions that generate migration crises around the globe. At the same time, it illuminates how the media and public officials play a major role in framing migratory flows as crises. The volume brings together an exceptional group of scholars from around the world to critically examine migration crises and to revisit the notion of crisis through the context in which permanent and non-permanent migration flows occur.

The Oxford Handbook of Migration Crises offers an understanding of individuals in societies, socio-economic structures, and group processes. Focusing on migrants' departures and arrivals in all continents, this comprehensive handbook explores the social dynamics of migration crises, with an emphasis on factors that propel these flows as well as the actors that play a role in classifying them and in addressing them. The volume is organized into nine sections. The first section provides a historical overview of the link between migration and crises. The second looks at how migration crises are constructed, while the third section contextualizes the causes and effects of protracted conflicts in producing crises. The fourth focuses on the role of climate and the environment in generating migration crises, while the fifth section examines these migratory flows in migration corridors and transit countries. The sixth section looks at policy responses to migratory flows, The last three sections look at the role media and visual culture, gender, and immigrant incorporation play in migration crises.

What to Watch Out for in Any Immigration Deal

By Mark Krikorian
The Corner at National Review Online, January 23, 2019
https://www.nationalreview.com/corner/what-to-watch-out-for-in-any-immigration-deal/

Who would've thought President Trump would be the adult in the room?

But the immigration proposal he announced Saturday was a responsible compromise to end the partial government shutdown. The border-security part of the package (which includes more than walls) is one that could easily have been offered by Obama or Clinton, back before Democrats decided that borders are immoral. (See the bill here.)

And his offer to trade this for what amounts to an extension of the expiration dates for a total of about 1 million DACA and TPS illegal aliens with ostensibly temporary work permits is not what many immigration hawks had feared — a new, from-scratch amnesty encompassing illegal aliens who had not already been granted work permits under prior administrations. Both programs should be abolished, of course, but enabling already-amnestied illegals to keep their work permits a little longer as a sweetener for Democrats isn't unreasonable, despite the objections of many of my fellow immigration hawks.

(One sweetener for them — us — would be an explicit statement in the bill that Obama acted unlawfully in creating DACA without Congress. Even apart from the immigration issue, such a provision is essential if our legislature has any intention of preserving its constitutional prerogatives.)

But one thing the critics are right about is that with this as the starting point, the bill will likely move to the left. As the editors have noted, "we fear any prospective deal only gets weaker from here." In other words, when the Democrats filibuster the measure, which is expected to come up for a vote in the Senate Thursday, will congressional Republicans and White House start giving even more ground?

This would be a deal-killer. I have no problem with giving green cards to DACA recipients under certain circumstances — yes, Obama illegally created the amnesty without Congress, but it's been in place since 2012 and has created facts on the ground. But upgrading the DACA recipients from their current amnesty-lite to amnesty-premium would require the inclusion of measures to limit the fallout of such a move. They would have to include additional steps to address the illegal immigration a new amnesty like that would attract, such as mandating E-Verify, as well as legal-immigration reductions intended both to offset the amnesty numerically and to limit the immigration benefits that the relatives of the DACA recipients could receive from their new status.

Another way the bill could get weaker would be to strip out the limited measures it includes to address the asylum crisis (which have already elicited howls of protest from the libertarian/leftist front). The majority of arrests at the Mexican border are now Central American minors and families using asylum claims as a strategy for illegally immigrating. The bill would make it somewhat easier to repatriate "unaccompanied" minors (who are almost always brought to the border by smugglers), though it would do little to address the larger "catch and release" practice dictated by other legal loopholes (other than some increased funding for detention).

My guess is Republicans could hold together in backing the deal in its current form — though even that's iffy, given that Numbers USA has announced it will score the vote for its grade cards. But if the amnesty component grows, the bill would have little chance.

Another Facile 'Either-Or' Proposal
Let me be clear, I have great respect for consular officers generally. I have known many who were conscientious and hard-working under difficult circumstances, as are border inspectors. But let's be frank, no amount of "extreme vetting" (which is a function mostly of better technology, systems, and databases to ferret out past conduct and expressions of an individual's intent, not human capital) will always work to tell U.S. officials whether an alien intends to remain and seek employment in perpetuity. Extreme vetting works best — to the extent it works, because there will always be those who have "flown under the radar" of U.S. and allied foreign intelligence agencies — at identifying national security and terrorism risks. It will not be particularly good at picking out people who are simply planning to stay in the United States as long as possible without regard to the legal niceties. And, similarly, no U.S. government official, no matter how well trained, will do better.

I don't argue that more resources cannot and should not be given to the consular corps, or to border inspectors, but Pazan's argument, as I noted earlier, falls into the false either-or category. Such resources should not be at the expense of a border barrier. And, quite honestly, something else that's equally important to improving the quality of consular and inspector decision-making is simply giving them the freedom to say no. That was lacking for the last several years. In fact, the problem of visa overstayers was made substantially worse by promulgation of an Obama-era executive order demanding radical increases in the granting of visas for countries like China and Brazil, even though visa recipients from those countries already had abysmal track records for complying with the terms of their admission and departing on time.

The Ramifications of the President's Offer

Any bargain that legitimizes DACA — especially through legislation — before a Supreme Court decision is rendered, fundamentally undercuts the administration's arguments that creation of the program was unconstitutional and unlawful. This deal would leave the Democrats in a position to claim in perpetuity that Barack Obama and his cabinet didn't violate the law or Constitution in creating this administrative quasi-amnesty because no court will have issued a final ruling to that effect. More importantly, without such a final judgment, it leaves future liberal-progressive administrations to go down the same path should they choose. That's a huge risk to take.

What's more, how will Central Americans who continue flooding north see it? Will they see it as proof positive that if they come and wait long enough, their patience will be rewarded with something equally desirable or even permanent, as the United States repeatedly pushes the "amnesty reset button" as a way of trying to make its immigration dysfunction disappear? Quite probably, and if so, then whether or not this is truly an amnesty is wordsmithing of the worst sort since, in the end, ground truth is the most accurate measure of reality. And, yes, a physical barrier will ultimately substantially curb the untrammeled crossings, but don't fool yourself that it will magically appear overnight. How many tens of thousands will come in the meantime, especially if they see the window closing?

Hand Border Wall Decisions over to Commissions or Governors?

January 20, 2019

Pressed by Baier on how to end the stalemate over border wall funding that has led to a protracted partial government shutdown, Hoyer spoke in vague terms about alternative means of border security. He was then asked whether a fair compromise might be to provide a specific amount of money to the Border Patrol and say to that organization, "spend it on border security the way that you, the experts, think best" (my phrasing, not Baier's, but I think it's a fair representation of what he asked). Hoyer suggested instead that perhaps the decision should be left to some as-yet-unformed commission or perhaps even to the relevant border state governors.

Those suggestions sound superficially attractive, as befits platitudes and bloviation when emanating from a seasoned pol. But are they reasonable? I think not.

The last blue-ribbon commission on immigration, the Jordan Commission (about which we at CIS and other similarly aligned organizations have spoken positively and at length in the past), issued some exemplary reports with a myriad of sound and practical recommendations in 1995. The reports make good reading, but juxtapose them against either legislative or executive action to actually adopt those recommendations and the disconnect is startling even though 23 years have passed — plenty of time, even in the inordinately slow legislative context.

Parsing the President's Words
Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell is promising to introduce a bill favored by the president this week, but it seems to me that an unseemly rush to pass something — anything — in the Senate is an invitation for a whole host of open floor amendments that can potentially turn a bill from simply mediocre to a disaster. If so, will the president use the power of the veto, or pretend that everything's copacetic since it might allow him an escape hatch from an even more protracted shutdown?

Ocasio-Cortez Doubles Down on Abolishing ICE

Putting your money where her mouth is

AOC's action is notable for two reasons. First, it is easy to speak in generalities about the abolition of a government agency that performs a vital national security task. Politicians of all stripes make sweeping statements all the time about proposals that have no chance of ever being enacted. Politics is the art of compromise, however, and at the end of the day when your party is attempting to hang a government shutdown around the neck of the other party (and the president who is the head of that party), you would logically go along to get along, and explain your vote later in nuanced terms that refer to the hardships that are being suffered by government employees forced to work for no pay. Not AOC.

Second, this is a difficult position for AOC to back off of later, without being accused of waffling. How could she ever take make any statement, or take any vote, supporting ICE without being blamed for backsliding? There is no real issue when taking a vote in the House of Representatives, where the Democrats hold 16 more seats than they need to pass legislation. AOC can take protest vote after protest vote all day there, most of the time.

The President Yields on Immigration

Too much, but not enough for congressional Democrats

January 15, 2019

None of the president's proposals are new in this regard — I have written about them so many times that my editor is probably getting tired of reading about it. [Art, I thought we talked about this. - Ed.]

In exchange, the president has made extremely generous concessions, well beyond what would appear to be sufficient to obtain funding that is absolutely crucial to the national security. In making this statement, I will concede the point that Trump is the wall and the wall is Trump, and that if you oppose Trump, you oppose the wall as a matter of faith and politics.

Enough with the 'Either-Or' Wall Arguments

Trump doesn't want just a wall

Now that that is out of the way, no one is proposing a barrier of "bricks and mortar", either. Plainly this is an allusion, but in essence it's the sort of allusion that Gawthorpe criticizes the president for. Presently, the president is proposing a steel barrier, for what it's worth. In any event, $5.7 billion would get you a few hundred miles of steel fence, not "thousands of miles".

The argument: "Hermetically sealing a nation against the outside world is neither possible nor desirable" is a straw man. No one is proposing any such plan, nor would it be possible, unless we beefed up our Coast Guard, closed all of our ports, and erected a wall across the Canadian border, as well.

Immigration Is the Elephant in the Room in L.A. School Strike

January 25, 2019

The recently settled teachers' strike in the Los Angeles Unified School district was a bitter dispute about resources, with class size and lack of staff support taking center stage. The tables below show that immigration's impact on the school system is enormous. Immigration has added large numbers of students to the county, but at the same time a very large share of both legal and illegal immigrants have modest levels of education and almost certainly pay less in taxes than natives who have higher levels of education and incomes. Immigration has also added significantly to the number of public-school students in the county who live in poverty and speak a language other than English at home. Overall enrollment has not increased in the district in recent years, but immigration has reduced the proportion of students whose families pay sufficient taxes to cover education costs, creating the ongoing strains on the district budget.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Although it is not possible to use Census Bureau data to look at only residents of L.A. Unified, it is possible to examine Los Angeles County to gain insight into what's happening. We identify legal and illegal immigrants based on the methodology used in this report. The data comes from the public-use files of the Census Bureau's 2012 to 2016 American Community Survey.

The Domestic Terror Threat Against ICE
A reminder that agents remain a terrorism target by those who oppose borders and immigration law enforcement
January 23, 2019
The only two known arrests related to the threat provide some insight as to what the online-based threat against ICE agents looks like, though these are hardly the only ones out there calling for the deaths of our agents for a political agenda that include abolishing the agency or simply returning its troops to their barracks.

The first involved Sergio "Mapache" Salazar, an 18-year-old DACA recipient who came under FBI national security investigation for allegedly posting anonymous threats to make bombs that would be used to kill ICE agents. Salazar was under investigation for instructional videos on how to make certain unspecified weapons and countering law enforcement, according to local news reports.

Salazar was participating in anti-ICE protests outside a San Antonio facility on August 3 when he was finally arrested on a technical immigration law violation to get him off the streets while the FBI finished up a counterterrorism investigation, which had gone on for at least a month and was so serious it required covert surveillance of his home and social media. Ultimately, 21 pages of Salazar's online postings compiled by the FBI were waived in immigration court for potential public release, the effect being that Salazar and his RAICES attorneys felt compelled to instead take a forced deportation to Mexico (with its 10-year ban on reentry) rather than fight for the kinder voluntary departure, after which he could reenter sooner and more easily. ICE and the FBI fought the latter

Guestworker Programs Remain Open to Countries with High Overstay Rates

We cannot think of a good reason to allow these countries to participate in the program, given their record of non-compliance. Some of the countries with very high overstay rates, like Vanuatu and Madagascar, are quite small and do not send a large number of people, but others, like El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras are larger and, more significantly, already have large numbers of their citizens arriving illegally or overstaying in all of the categories.

In addition, we identified 19 other countries with overstay rates of concern that were between 3 percent and 10 percent. We chose 3 percent as the lowest threshold of concern because it is more than double the worldwide average total overstay rate of 1.33 percent.

Democrats Pitch Massive Farmworker Amnesty

January 25, 2019

A new bill simultaneously introduced by Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) and Rep. Zoe Lofgren (D-Calif.) would amnesty over 253,000 illegal aliens in California alone by putting undocumented farmworkers on a pathway toward citizenship. This farmworker amnesty would extend to their families as well. Through chain migration, the amnesty could extend to a further 872,000 individuals. Nationwide, the total effect of this farmworker amnesty could exceed one million.

This farmworker amnesty is likely dead-on-arrival in the GOP-controlled Senate.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But crazier things have happened. Eleven senators co-sponsored the Senate bill, and as many as 58 co-sponsored Lofgren's House version. Further, many GOP senators come from agricultural states, and lobbyists from the agricultural industry are notorious for getting their way. Monitoring this bill's trajectory is important to ensure that a million-person amnesty is not quietly pushed through Congress.

Report Shows Poor Immigrant Integration Outcomes Worldwide

January 25, 2019

The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), whose mission is to "promote policies that will improve the economic and social well-being of people around the world", released the third edition of its series on immigration integration that started in 2012. The new joint OECD-EU report, "Settling in 2018: Indicators of Immigrant Integration", lays down a comprehensive international comparison of integration outcomes of immigrants and their children across all European Union (EU) countries and OECD countries. (The OECD encompasses the world's developed countries, including most of the EU, plus a few emerging economies.)

Excerpted below are a number of key points from the 300-page report, but policymakers could definitely benefit from a closer assessment of these integration outcomes. As the report shows, the notion that all immigrants (including refugees) can easily integrate into their host countries and live happily ever after is an illusion. Failed integration is real, and resentment is around the corner; hence the need for immigration policies that prioritize integration measures.

Nations Supplying Disproportionate Numbers of Self-Petitioning Spouses

January 23, 2019

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

One of the most troublesome — but small-scale — portions of the annual inflows of legal immigrants consists of 3,000 to 4,000 self-petitioning spouses of citizens.

It is worrisome because every one of these entrants is granted a green card because of an odd reason: a failed marriage between a citizen and an alien. Either the alien spouse was abused by the citizen in the marriage or the citizen was falsely accused. There are no other reasons for these grants of status. They petition for themselves as no one will petition for them.

Seven nations among the top-10 in terms of raw numbers gave us disproportionately larger numbers of these claimants when compared to the overall flow of citizen-related family migration. These were Jamaica, where the proportion was 218 percent; Peru, 208 percent; Honduras, 193 percent; Ghana, 191 percent; Mexico, 146 percent; Nigeria, 139 percent; and Brazil, 130 percent. In these calculations if a nation had the same proportion of self-petitioners as citizen-related family migrants, the proportion would be 100 percent.

Tunnels Move Shows There Is Real Talent on the Other Side of the Border

While I do not condone this activity, it shows a level of tactical brilliance and organizational skills; the person (or people) in charge:

* Knew the border well enough to pinpoint a vulnerable stretch, where there were few agents on duty, and the footings under the barriers were inadequate;

* Were creative enough to come up with the idea of the seven simultaneous intrusions;

* Had close enough ties to the illegal entrants to organize the seven intrusions; and

Were smart enough to conduct the whole operation without reported violence and with most, if not all, of the aliens surrendering to the Border Patrol.

I am both impressed with this operation and wonder about the motivation of the ring-leader or ring-leaders. Was the point to undermine, if you pardon the expression, Trump's border policy?

In 2017, Noonan won the Pulitzer Prize for commentary with a packet of columns that included this elegant passage from the prior year, in which she mildly, if obliquely, rebuked many of those in her stratum of New York society:

> I keep thinking of how Donald Trump got to be the very likely Republican nominee. There are many answers and reasons, but my thoughts keep revolving around the idea of protection. It is a theme that has been something of a preoccupation in this space over the years, but I think I am seeing it now grow into an overall political dynamic throughout the West.
> There are the protected and the unprotected. The protected make public policy. The unprotected live in it. The unprotected are starting to push back, powerfully.
> . . .

> They are figures in government, politics and media. They live in nice neighborhoods, safe ones. Their families function, their kids go to good schools, they've got some money. All of these things tend to isolate them, or provide buffers. Some of them — in Washington it is important officials in the executive branch or on the Hill; in Brussels, significant figures in the European Union — literally have their own security details.

Judges Gone Rogue
Judge embraces "Lawfare" to obstruct immigration law enforcement.
By Michael Cutler
FrontPageMag.com, January 21, 2019
While a growing number of cities and states have decided to adopt "sanctuary" polities, there are some cities that continue to cooperate with ICE (Immigration and Customs Enforcement) through the 287(g) program whereby their law enforcement officers are trained by ICE to assist that division of the DHS with the vital mission of immigration law enforcement from within the interior of the United States.

Apparently a federal district judge, Catherine Blake, decided that the "solution" to local sheriffs and police officers assisting ICE in enforcing our nation's immigration laws, was to order the stay of an illegal alien who had been ordered deported by an Immigration Judge so that the alien could pursue a lawsuit against the Sheriff and his deputies who would dare assist in the enforcement of our immigration laws.

How the Wall Became America's Dividing Line

The wall debate defines what makes us Americans.

By Daniel Greenfield

The border, like the truth of the border, has become a nebulous place. Illegal migrants and drug dealers, terrorists and traffickers, cross it where there is no wall and no definitive way to maintain a barrier between law and lawlessness, between nations, and between civilization and anarchy. And the truth of the border has also become nebulous with opponents of border security claiming to be its defenders, with the profiteers in trafficking children claiming to be their protectors, and with judges declaring that fighting illegal migration is illegal.

When there is no wall, then physical and moral security both become precarious. Walls don't just lock in physical geography, but also moral geography by maintaining definitions, separating fact from fiction, and preventing the slippage of moral and physical territories into states of physical and factual anarchy.

Why Democrats Said No to Trump's Border Compromise
By John Fund
National Review Online, January 20, 2019
So why are Democrats so dug in? GOP congressman Peter King, who is frequently critical of Trump, says it's because the issue of a border wall is secondary to their hatred of Trump. "The fear is, among the Democratic leadership, if they make any agreement with President Trump, it's like compromising with the devil," he told New York radio station AM970.

In other words, when Democrats now hear talk of "border security," they think only of Trump and want to make sure that their base won't see them as surrendering to him in any way. Forget the fact that Democrats have voted for a border barrier in the past and that the $5.7 billion Trump wants is meant only for stretches that U.S. Border Patrol officials have identified as needing barriers to interdict illegal entrants and drugs.

The Democrats seem have to been captured by the thinking of radical community organizer Saul Alinsky. The author of Rules for Radicals, Alinsky inspired both Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama. He used to tell his protégés that "the issue is never the issue." As historian David Horowitz notes

It's Time to End DACA – It's Unconstitutional Unless Approved by Congress

By Hans A. von Spakovsky

Roughly 700,000 immigrants brought to the U.S. illegally as children are protected from deportation by DACA. The argument in favor of the program is that the children didn't choose to break the law and so should not be punished because their parents violated immigration laws by bringing them to the U.S.

But the central issue at stake in the DACA case is not whether the young people now protected by DACA deserve or don't deserve to be allowed to stay in the U.S. The issue at stake is what power the Constitution gives the president to act alone by issuing executive orders, without seeking approval from Congress.

The framers of the Constitution very deliberately set up a system of government where power was divided between the president and Congress, with the courts given the power to rule on disputes. These checks and balances were created to prevent one person from ruling the country as an all-powerful king or dictator. The system has worked brilliantly.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Many conservatives thought this secondary prioritizing of the border wall was a betrayal of his campaign's number one promise. Telenko also cites my view of the potential RIF trap as another MacGuffin that could explode on the Democrats.

Caravan Migrants Turn Up Their Noses at Mexico's Generous Benefit Package
By Monica Showalter

Yet the Mexicans told many in the U.S. press that entry for the new caravan (unlike the last one) would be orderly, legal (with migrants presenting papers or getting turned back), visa-oriented, and carry a big prooffered packages of benefits - from jobs, to free medical care, to freedom from worry about being repatriated - and all they had to do was sign up, take a bracelet, and wait for a mere five days.

And that just wasn't good enough for a lot of them.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Which raises questions about 'first country of refuge' and 'safe country of refuge' in international law, which calls on refugees to accept the first country of refuge. The generous offer from Mexico suggests that Mexico is trying to be a first country of refuge and offer the migrants a safe space. Mexico offered refuge to every one of the migrants, and at least some are turning up their noses at it.

American Democrats and Canadian Liberals Giving Our Countries Away

By Judi McLeod

The Art of the Deal Requires Two Parties Who Actually Want a Deal

By Jazz Shaw

HotAir.com, January 21, 2019

Dealing in the private sector generally doesn't involve people who hate each other or are seeking the destruction of their opponent. The parties involved certainly want to get the "better deal" so they come away as a winner, but there's no final deal without both of them getting something they want unless one of them is a garden variety moron. Everyone approaches the table hoping that a deal will, in fact, be made and that they maximize their profit from it.

That's not the case in Washington. Nancy Pelosi has no personal skin in the game as to whether a wall is constructed, the dreamers get a reprieve or anything else currently under discussion. Her "profit" doesn't come from getting something accomplished. What matters is the political "victory" of denying something to her opponent (in this case, Trump) and revving up her base with her bravado. She can declare every offer from President Trump to be "a non-starter" as she did with this one and head straight for the MSNBC cameras looking like a winner.

Here, the People Govern, But Who Are They?

By Clifford Humphrey

The Epoch Times, January 23, 2019

Who is Included in "The People"?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Many citizens will be surprised to learn that, according to the 2010 census "residence rule," illegal aliens are counted as part of a state's total population. This means states that flout federal immigration laws and attract illegal aliens with "sanctuary cities" are rewarded for their lawlessness with a greater number of representatives and electoral college votes as well as a greater share of federal funding.

The State of Alabama has brought a lawsuit against the Department of Commerce, claiming that enforcing the same residence rule in the 2020 census "will rob the State of Alabama and its legal residents of their rightful share of representation." Of course, liberal activists claim the lawsuit is somehow inspired by "the Trump Administration's hostility towards immigrants." Never mind the constitutional obligation of the president to serve the interests of American citizens and the government of Alabama to serve the interests of Alabamians.

Furthermore, liberals argue that "undocumented individuals" have some sort of constitutional right to be counted as part of the population. For support, they quote the 14th Amendment's directive that representatives shall be apportioned among the several states, "counting the whole number of persons in each state." It is always wonderful to hear that the left cares about the Constitution. Nevertheless, they provide only part of the pertinent quotation, and so they misinterpret its meaning.

Sorry, Trump's Wall Speech Was Brilliant

By Larry Provost

Townhall.com, January 21, 2019

The radicalism of the left underscores perhaps the most important issue behind the debate on illegal aliens. The issue of 2016 and likely 2020 is beyond even illegal immigration. The issue that concerns Americans is lawlessness.

Americans are concerned with lawlessness, and the elitism and political pandering that lies behind such rule breaking. Why does my kid, who entered America legally, have to wait before illegals to get nearly all the benefits of citizenship? Why is Hillary allowed to delete 33,000 emails after getting subpoenaed, yet if we did even a tenth of what she did we would be toast for life? Why is Trump being investigated for a collusion that he is innocent of while Hillary's camp knowingly, and without consequences, put forth a fake dossier to start such an investigation? Why do we have sanctuary cities for illegal aliens while we have American citizens killed by illegals? Why are our tax laws, and indeed many other laws, written in such a way that if someone powerful wants to get you, they will get you?

Democrats Not Interested in Compromise

By Joe Battenfeld

The Democratic Party has been taken over by the far left and the swarm of candidates with their eyes on the White House, like Warren and Kamala Harris and Beto O'Rourke, control the agenda. They are determined to defeat Trump and use the government shutdown as an issue to attack him.

So for them, the shutdown is good politics, and there's no reason for Dems to back down as long as polls show their constituents want them to oppose the wall.

Why We Panic About Immigration

By Dan McLaughlin

I submit that there are three related answers, which need to be taken together because none of them explains the phenomenon alone. First, the facts: America today really does have an unusually large immigrant population, which has grown steadily for decades. Second, the emotional climate: We've lost the cultural self-confidence to keep accepting newcomers and let them make their own way and find their own place in our culture. That dynamic is both reflected in, and fed by, plummeting birthrates for native-born Americans. Third, the nature of the American political divide drives politically active people into ever-greater obsession with demographics, and that drives the tendency of each side to steps that further radicalize the other.

Dems' Cynical Shutdown Snub

Safety for Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals and Temporary Protected Status recipients would last three years and include access to work permits, Social Security numbers and protection from deportation.

The offer was at least deserving of a counteroffer by the Democratic leadership but Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi rejected Trump's proposal, calling it "unacceptable" and a "non-starter."

A negotiation requires sacrifice and flexibility but it is now clear that Democrats are not interested in either concept. Government workers are paying the price for their obstinance and voters should take notice.

Illegal Immigrants Must Be Denied Driver's Licenses

The Boston Herald, January 26, 2019

Distributing licenses to illegal immigrants will open the floodgates for for many kinds of fraud. A driver's license would give full and equal legitimacy to a group of people who've not earned it lawfully. Among other things, it would mean access to rental housing, cars, bank accounts, guns, commercial aircraft flights and security checkpoints.

No to licenses for illegal immigrants.

Trump Has More in the Cards in Border Battle

By Hillary Chabot

Meanwhile, Trump can ratchet up pressure on a newly created bipartisan congressional committee created to study border security and border wall funding. Despite plummeting support for the shutdown, a recent Harvard-Harris poll found that 80 percent of registered voters want a secure border.

That's a large pool of support that Trump could tap — potentially launching a publicity campaign releasing a steady drumbeat of information showing the crime and economic instability that illegal immigration brings to the country.

Trump already tested something similar during his Oval Office address, detailing basic facts that even eager media naysayers couldn't torpedo. Nearly all of the heroin rushing into the country and feeding the ongoing opioid crisis comes from the southern border, for example.

Evil Cuomo Gives College Grants, Scholarships to Illegals, Citizens PAY

By S. Noble

The Independent Sentinel, January 24, 2019

The New York bill will affect an estimated 146,000 young people who were educated in New York public schools but have been ineligible to receive financial aid under federal and state law, according to an analysis by the New York State Youth Leadership Council and N.Y.U. Republicans balked, but there are too few of them to matter. Cuomo doesn't care what they or their constituents think.

"How am I supposed to tell families in my Senate district that adequate state aid to help afford college isn't available for them, but it is available for others who are in this country illegally?" said Republican State Sen. James Seward.

Analysts Find Restrictive Measures in New Trump Immigration Bill
By Stuart Anderson
"The Senate bill that Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell introduced to implement his [Trump's] deal does not extend DACA but rather replaces it with a totally different program that will exclude untold thousands of Dreamers who would have been eligible under DACA," notes David Bier in an analysis. "It is important to remember that all of these requirements are for less than 3 years of relief from deportation and work authorization, not a pathway to citizenship." That means in addition to fewer people covered than the Senate bill from a year ago, the current legislation would not result in permanent residence or citizenship but 3 years of temporary protection (if the individuals qualify under the new bill's more restrictive criteria).

Bier explains why many of the current 700,000 individuals enrolled in DACA are unlikely to receive even the limited relief offered in the new Senate bill. The bill requires all DACA recipients to reapply under a higher evidentiary burden, pay double the application cost, and, in an "unprecedented" requirement in U.S. immigration law, repay any lawfully-obtained tax credits (the same provision applies to TPS recipients). Moreover, the bill utilizes the ideas behind the administration's controversial and yet-to-be approved "public charge rule," which is likely to exclude many individuals who do not earn high salaries, and requires applicants to prove they will maintain an income of at least 125% of the poverty level.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Senate GOP Bill Doesn't Extend TPS. It Guts It

By David Bier

CATO Institute, January 22, 2019

Temporary protective status, or TPS, is granted to nationals of country where the government feels it could not, at one time or another, send people back to due to a crisis in those countries, such as a war or natural disaster. Cribbing a lot from what I've already written about the DACA provisions of this bill, here is a list of the changes to TPS in the bill:

Under President Trump, the government has terminated TPS for Nepal, Sierre Leone, Liberia, Guinea, Sudan, El Salvador, Haiti, Honduras, and Nicaragua. Yet only the last four nationalities will benefit from this bill at all (p. 1256). To treat this bill as if it reverses Trump's decisions is incorrect. It maintains the majority of them—notably for Africans who President Trump denigrated in a White House meeting last year.

Trump's Immigration Proposals Would Make the Border More Deadly

By David Bier

Shorter trips during which the immigrants can immediately seek out help from the Border Patrol translates to fewer deaths. If deaths had continued at the 2012 rate — before the asylum surge — 1,336 more deaths would have occurred along the border from 2013 to 2019. On the other hand, if deaths had continued at the 1998 rate — before most of the border fence — 4,601 fewer deaths would have occurred from 1998 to 2019.

Trump's ideas would make journeys more deadly along the border. He wants to build hundreds of miles of 30-foot fences. This will cause immigrants to cross what Trump refers to as "natural protection such as mountains, wastelands or tough rivers or water" just to turn themselves in. At the same time, Trump wants to end asylum as it exists now and force everyone back to Mexico. This would cause migrants to try to evade detection, leading to more deaths in remote areas of the border.

More People Overstay Their Visas Than Cross the Border Illegally – Our Immigration Laws Need to Address That

By Walter Ewing

At the same time, the number of Central American migrants crossing the border without inspection has increased markedly, as tens of thousands of women and children in particular flee violence in their home countries. Yet visa overstayers still account for most of the new undocumented immigrants that join the U.S.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

population each year. Most visa overstayers come from Mexico, India, China, Venezuela, and the Philippines.

Obviously, these patterns indicate that the Trump administration's high-cost border wall would do little to stop undocumented immigration given that most are now overstays. More than that, however, the prevalence of visa overstayers raises other policy-related questions.

To begin with, evidence indicates that the overwhelming majority of immigrants in general, and undocumented immigrants in particular, are not criminals—and have never even committed a serious crime. And yet the punishment for overstaying their visas is to be barred from reentering the United States for a period of either three or ten years, depending on how long they've been "out of status." Arguably, this is an example of punishment that exceeds the severity of simply overstaying a visa.

The Nonstarter Compromise on DACA

Immigration: What We Saw in Tijuana, and the Solutions It Suggests

Meeting long-term humanitarian needs should be given greater priority than a wall.

By Lynne Fiscus, Miguel Fiol, and Jill Foss

The Star Tribune (MN), January 22, 2019

From our personal experience caring for these patients, we would recommend:

1) Increase capacity to process asylum applications. Surely with all of the emergency funding being poured into physical borders such as our existing walls, we could increase the number of immigration judges and personnel to review asylum claims.

2) Allow temporary work visas for these migrants who can help with jobs that are unfilled in this time of low unemployment.

3) Invest in aid to Central America to combat violence and grow those countries' economies to improve the conditions that are leading these families to flee their homelands.

How Trump Could Use a National Emergency to Get His Border Wall, Explained

"He has broad leeway to declare an emergency, frankly, whether one exists or not."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By Emily Stewart
VOX.com, January 25, 2019
How Trump could get the wall by declaring a national emergency
If Trump were to try to get border wall funding through the National Emergencies Act, the question then becomes which existing laws he could use to get the money. That's where he — and the legal scholars trying to figure out what he's talking about — run into trouble: identifying the laws and statutes he could actually use. The Brennan Center for Justice tracks about 130 laws that contain special powers Trump could access.

"It could be that by putting together a lot of different sources of emergency authority, the president could tap a lot of different funds and at least start," Kim Lane Scheppele, a professor at the Center for Human Values at Princeton University, told me.

She pointed to a handful of preexisting laws the president could potentially use.

Why Trump's 'Big, Beautiful' Border Wall Will Never Work
By Andrew Gawthorpe
The Guardian (U.K.), January 15, 2019
An impassable barrier that funnelled all cross-border traffic to legitimate ports of entry would do little to address the real challenges at the border. Foremost among these is the arrival of hundreds of thousands of Central American refugees in recent years. Many travel as family units who voluntarily surrender themselves to US authorities to apply for asylum. Even if a wall could stop them crossing the border, they are still legally entitled to claim asylum at a port of entry. The wall wouldn't stop them.

Nor would it do anything about what the Trump administration pejoratively calls "catch and release", the practice whereby refugees are released into the interior of the US while they wait for an asylum hearing. The immigration court system has a backlog of over 800,000 cases and desperately needs more staff and resources to give asylum seekers fair and speedy hearings. The wall won't help. Meanwhile, the manufactured crisis over wall funding which has shut down the government has forced immigration courts to close as well, exacerbating the backlog.

Creative Policy Responses in Latin America to the Venezuelan Migration Crisis

4:00 to 5:15 p.m. ET, Wednesday, January 30, 2019
MPI Conference Room
1400 16th Street NW, Suite 300
Washington, DC 20036
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/creative-policy-responses-latin-america-venezuelan-migration-crisis

Description: Fleeing a rapidly collapsing economy, severe food and medical shortages, and political strife, more than 3 million Venezuelans are living outside of their country, making this one of the largest and fastest outflows anywhere in the world. Approximately 80 percent of these migrants and refugees have settled in Latin America. While a few countries in the region have immigration systems built to manage movement on this scale, most have improvised to create legal frameworks in an effort to maintain an open door.

With no end in sight to the crisis that has spurred this movement, and projections that as many as 5.4 million Venezuelans may be living abroad by the end of 2019, governments in Latin America now face the challenge of transitioning from ad hoc responses to long-term planning for this population while also dealing with the continued strain of so many arrivals in such a short period.

Join the Migration Policy Institute for the release discussion of an MPI-OAS Department of Social Inclusion report with researchers presenting findings from their study, Creativity amid Crisis: Legal Pathways for Venezuelan Migrants in Latin America, and on-the-ground fieldwork shedding light on where Venezuelan migrants have settled; the creative responses and legal pathways to residence and integration that countries in the region have provided; what national and international legal frameworks apply to this population; and the challenges and opportunities host countries are facing related to admission, legal status, public services, and planning for the long-term integration of Venezuelans.

Experts will also discuss what lessons other countries around the world might take away from the efforts Latin American governments have taken to ensure that the influx of Venezuelans benefit receiving societies and how this could be

Melting pot or civil war: A son of immigrants makes the case against open borders

5:00-6:15 p.m., Thursday, February 7, 2019
American Enterprise Institute Auditorium

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1789 Massachusetts Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20036
http://www.aei.org/events/melting-pot-or-civil-war-a-son-of-immigrants-makes-the-case-against-open-borders/

Description: Immigration policy has long divided America. It continues to be one of the country's biggest issues, yet substantive discussion often gets sidelined. In "Melting Pot or Civil War? A Song of Immigrants Makes the Case Against Open Borders" (Sentinel, 2018), Reihan Salam delivers a rational, considered, and egalitarian argument against open borders.

In his book, Mr. Salam argues that uncontrolled immigration is bad for almost all Americans, including those who belong to immigrant communities. Our current system has intensified the isolation of our native poor, and it risks ghettoizing the children of poor immigrants. It ignores the challenges posed by the declining demand for less-skilled labor, even as it exacerbates ethnic inequality and deepens our political divides. Rejecting both cosmopolitan extremism and white identity politics, Mr. Salam makes the case that limiting total immigration and favoring skilled immigrants will combat rising inequality, balance diversity with assimilation, and foster a new, unifying nationalism.

Certificate program course in International Migration Studies

XCPD-703 - Newcomers to Citizens: Immigrant Integration

9:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Wednesday-Friday, February 25-27, 2019
Georgetown University School of Continuing Studies
640 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Room C227
Washington, DC 20001
https://portal.scs.georgetown.edu/search/publicCourseSearchDetails.do?method=load&courseId=14536

Course Description: With a record 200 million people living outside their country of birth, immigration is a global phenomenon with profound demographic, economic, social, and political implications for both sending and receiving countries. The debate over immigration law and policy has become increasingly volatile and, in some instances, characterized by misinformation, hate, and xenophobia. Beyond the politics of immigration, genuine challenges to immigrant integration abound. Successful integration of immigrants is critical to the long-term prosperity of host countries that rely on immigrants as workers, consumers, taxpayers, innovators, and entrepreneurs in light of their aging native-born populations and lower birth rates. In this course we will explore integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving countries--such as the United States and Canada and new countries of permanent immigration such as France, Germany, the United Kingdom. We will raise questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity. We will also discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism, paradigms that challenge an integrationist reading of migration. Using case studies from North America and Europe we will pay special attention to the different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation on their road from newcomers to citizens.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Course Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Discuss the integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving and source countries.
* Recognize questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity.
* Discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism.
* Compare different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation.

Notes: This course is an open enrollment course. No application is required and registration is available by clicking "Add to Cart." Current students must register with their Georgetown NetID and password. New students will be prompted to create an account prior to registration.

Tuition: $995.00, 24 contract hours

CRS Seminar: Humanitarian Series I

Borders, migration, exclusion: The role of civil society and humanitarian aid in an increasingly polarized political context

1:00-2:30 p.m., Wednesday, February 27, 2019

626 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada

Speaker:
Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

Description: The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Maria-Elena De Trinidad Young, PhD, MPH
Project Director, Research on Immigrant Health and State Policy (RIGHTS) Study at the Center for Health Policy Research, University of California, Los Angeles
Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow, UC Merced

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

Why Alternative Programs Don't Eliminate the Need for Immigration Detention

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (January 29, 2019) – A publication and video from the Center for Immigration Studies highlights the challenges with "alternatives to detention" (ATD). ATD programs (such as ankle bracelets or GPS tracking) act as substitutes to the detention of aliens who are in violation of immigration laws, and who are awaiting the outcome of removal proceedings. The Center's fact sheet further demonstrates why these programs do not eliminate the need for physical detention spaces.

Dan Cadman, a fellow at the Center and the author of the analysis, said, "The recently defeated GOP Senate bill to re-open the government included an expansion in the number of detention beds. Many Democrats expressed that rather than detain immigrants, they would prefer to use 'alternatives to detention.' While such programs may augment detention, they are certainly no substitute, given that ATD remains very much an experiment-in-the-making, and expectations around these programs are still highly unrealistic."

View the fact sheet and video: https://www.cis.org/Fact-Sheet/Why-Alternative-Programs-Dont-Eliminate-Need-Immigration-Detention

Main Points

- ATD programs have been instituted as a means of maintaining contact with, and track of, aliens who are released for lack of bed space.
- ATD is still very much an experiment-in-the-making, and is available only to a select number of individuals.
- ATD is, on a daily basis, cheaper than detention, but because ATD participants are placed into the "non-detained" docket of the immigration courts (as opposed to the significantly faster hearings that aliens receive on the detained docket), those savings may be wiped out over the course of two, three, or four years on the program while aliens await the docketing and conclusion of their cases.
- ATD programs have evolved in sophistication and success, as a result of various critical government watchdog reports, although the fact that the programs are small and careful in their selection of candidates may lead to unrealistic expectations that they can be used for hundreds of thousands of aliens who are in proceedings, and still maintain program success rates.
- Long-term data do not conclusively establish the value of the programs in actually ensuring removal from the United States of ATD participants once they have been ordered removed.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"[Aliens under ATD] continue showing up until the point that they think they'll have to go home. At that point, they're going to cut off the ankle bracelet. They're not going to report to their supervision officer. They're going to ditch the phone."

A Midterm Assessment on Immigration Actions Taken by the President

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (January 31, 2019) – The Center for Immigration Studies has published a midterm assessment on immigration actions taken by the president referring back to the Center's pre-election report, "A Pen and a Phone: 79 immigration actions the next president can take". The 2016 publication outlined legal executive actions that could be taken without any involvement by Congress, and this follow-up assesses what has and has not been accomplished on each of the 79 recommendations.

View the full analysis at: https://cis.org/Report/Revisiting-Pen-and-Phone-Midterm-Assessment

The policy recommendations and assessment cover the full spectrum of immigration – lawful permanent residents, nonimmigrant entrants, and illegal immigration. From asylum and refugee claims, to worksite enforcement, to benefit fraud, to national security and crime, this new analysis highlights the state of immigration policy today.

Mark Krikorian, the Center's executive director, said, "Prior to the 2016 Presidential election, the Center provided a guide for the next president to aid in bringing immigration policies, both big and small, back in line with the rule of law and American interests. Over the past two years, little of immigration significance occurred in the legislative arena and many of the efforts made by the administration resulted in litigation, and in all too many cases issuance of nationwide injunctions by U.S. District Court judges. Re-instilling integrity and rigor into the system will be years in the making."

The Moral Inconsistency of Progressive Presidential Contender Kamala Harris

February 1, 2019

Many readers will know that Harris wants to be a progressive darling of the party, and has gone on record as being morally opposed to the border wall, comparing Immigration and Customs Enforcement to the KKK, and expressing her dismay at the separation of alien parents from their children when they cross the border illegally.

She went so far as to declare that the Trump administration's actions constitute a "crime against humanity" — a declaration that grates in the ears when one thinks of real crimes against humanity, such as the killing fields of the Khmer Rouge, the Rwandan genocide, the mass murder in Srebrenica, and even the wanton, murderous barbarity of ISIS in every area which it has held.

But having announced her candidacy, Harris now finds she is subject to the same kind of close scrutiny that she is so fond of according others, and her star is perhaps not shining quite so brightly.

Liberal Democrats and Big Ag Join in Proposing an Unworkable Amnesty

I don't much like temporary guestworker programs of any kind; they depress wages and cater to employers' bottom lines rather than to the needs and aspirations of American citizen and resident workers. But agricultural programs tend to be even worse, because often enough the aliens who are employed in them (or who simply work in agriculture without any legal right to be in the United States) work in conditions of near-peonage or are subjected to unhealthy living conditions in which they sometimes even bathe in pesticide-laden runoff water filling the ditches near their encampments. And you sometimes see them sitting in rows on buses on the highway, being transported from site to site like prisoners being moved from one institution to another.

But the ultimate irony of this amnesty is that only a fool would think aliens who become the happy recipients of so-called "blue cards" would continue working in agriculture, knowing the abysmal conditions that so often prevail. They may be uneducated and sometimes of limited skill sets, but they aren't stupid. They will promptly go find gainful employment in some other sector of the economy ... leaving those quarter-million jobs allegedly critically needed by agricultural employers once again vacant and waiting to be filled by more temporary guestworkers. And so the cycle continues.

Mexico Ends Fast-Track Asylum Visas

A new humanitarian disaster in the offing?

February 1, 2019

Once at the border, many of those migrants are placing themselves and their children in even greater danger by skipping orderly processing of their credible fear claims at the ports of entry, opting instead for the much more dangerous path of fording those barriers. Local police told me that parents have dropped their children off of the walls, and sent them underwater and through razor wire to get into the United States. Due to lack of detention space, they are processed and released, after receiving necessary medical treatment. Expensive medical treatment, which again draws on the resources of Border Patrol and local border communities.

The Mexican visa program, at least potentially, could have slowed the process of those individuals toward the United States, and protected them to some degree from the predations of local officials. Third-country migrants with one-year visas could potentially work in Mexico and make asylum claims there. Now, even that orderly process is apparently gone.

To some degree, the Mexican government cannot be blamed, except to the extent that their politicians encourage the irregular migration of third-country nationals through the country. For example, in a January 28 opinion piece in the Washington Post, Roberto Velasco Alvarez, the spokesman of the Mexican Secretariat of Foreign Affairs, explained:

DHS Sets Up Fake Visa Mill as a Sting

And how a failure of mine saved the sting from a premature exposure

Everyone concerned knew that the "university" was a hoax designed to secure immigration documents, but until this week no one outside the government knew that it was a sting run by DHS. It had an attractive website (now closed), but no classrooms, no students, and no faculty. All it did was collect tuition from the "students" and record their names and addresses.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Times wondered what would happen to the "tuition payments", but could get no answer to that question.

Some of the Indian newspapers are now fretting about how these students were "misled" — a totally ridiculous concern since the all knew they were not going to classes.

What is not generally known is that several of my volunteers and I had previously suspected, from its website, that the University of Farmington was not a genuine university for real students, and we came very close to blowing the whistle on the place, which would have been a real disservice to law enforcement.

In a blessing in disguise, due to a failure on my part, nothing was written and the sting continued to operate.

The Flow and the Stock in the H-1B Field — a Disturbing Development
January 29, 2019

There is a deeply disturbing development in the H-1B field, one that has been all but hidden for years. And since this is a U.S. immigration policy story it is, as one might expect, convoluted.

The news relates to the concepts of stocks and flows, previously discussed in connection with the illegal alien population .In this case, a single corporation — without an ounce of participation by the government or any notice by the media — managed to increase the national stock of H-1B workers by 7,000 workers in a single year, and did so without tapping into the substantial inward flows of new H-1B aliens.

That firm is Cognizant Technology Solutions, one of the major Indian outsourcing (or staffing) companies. These firms essentially rent tech professionals to other corporations. Back in FY 2015 Cognizant figured out something that, thankfully, its major rivals so far have not.

The breakthrough or disaster (depending on your point of view) is that

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Cognizant found a way to expand a corporation's H-1B workforce (the stock) that was totally unrelated to the annual issuance (flows) of H-1B approvals.

Demography 101: Flow, Stock, and the Wall

Unfortunately the press recognition of a flow, such as caravans of a thousand or so from Central America, is much more pronounced — and makes a bigger impression on the White House — than the impact of the continuing stock of millions of illegal aliens; hence the current emphasis on a wall, rather than on an integrated policy of seeking to lower the size of the illegal alien population already in this country.

Both the wall and the caravans are symbols and much easier to understand than the concept of a large (and quiet) stock of individuals who are (mostly silently) doing some (often indirect) damage to this country.

President Trump does not have a monopoly on this policy failing; for decades the actual effort to control the size of the stock has almost always morphed into efforts to control the inward flows from the South — let's hire 5,000 more Border Patrol agents! These have been the reactions of the Clinton, Bush II, and Obama administrations as well.

The further trouble of course is that doing something about the inward flows of illegals is to bring pressure on an external population, a high-visibility group without much political influence. On the other hand, to bring the needed pressure on the stock of less-visible illegal residents is much more difficult because they have relatives, countrymen, sympathetic pols, tender-hearted journalists, and, most importantly, employers, on their side and none of those want to change the status quo.

Misunderstanding the Numbers: Aliens Who Disappear Before Trial

January 26, 2019

Reichlin-Melnick makes the same mistakes that EOIR does in figuring failure to appear rates. EOIR includes detained aliens to calculate failure to appear rates. Obviously, aliens detained pending their hearings cannot miss court, but enlarging the denominator by including those in custody pending trial predictably shrinks the numerator of those who skipped court. This is the way EOIR has reported failures to appear and concealed high failures to appear for the last 22 years.

Reichlin-Melnick's analysis uses the same misty math as EOIR. He includes in his statistics those aliens whose cases were in the system, but were not postured for an arraignment or other proceeding requiring their attendance at court. In effect, their cases had not been heard and may not have been assigned to a judge at the time the Yearbook was published. His attempt to include these unheard cases to drive down FTA rates is the same as EOIR using detained aliens to diminish FTA rates. So for all his citing from one column in EOIR's annual report to another, he can only dispute, but not disprove the fact that nearly 40 percent of aliens over the last 22 years dropped out of court. Drilling down on the numbers better explains Mr. Reichlin-Melnick misunderstanding.

World-Wide Threat Assessment Makes Powerful Case For Border Security
Senate hears from leaders of the intelligence community.
By Michael Cutler
FrontPageMag.com, February 1, 2019
The immigration system has never had a meaningful program to enforce the immigration laws from within the interior of the United States. The need to enforce the immigration laws from within the interior of the United States is commonsense and was noted as an important issue by the 9/11 Commission. The dirty secret is that our political leaders understand just how important interior enforcement is but have intentionally never provided the resources to enforce those laws from within the interior. Consider that, in the wake of the terror attacks of 9/11 President George W. Bush created the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and in so doing, broke the former Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) into multiple components that then blended immigration with other agencies such as Customs.

However, while the leadership of neither the Democrats nor the Republicans have been willing to take the necessary measures to finally save the immigration crisis through effective but fair law enforcement, unhinged members of the Democratic Party are now calling for dismantling ICE altogether. They are calling for immigration anarchy even as yet another hearing, involving the leaders of the U.S. intelligence community, are clear about the nexus between threats confronting America and border security and immigration law enforcement.

Even Congress' Research Arm Vouches for Trump's Border Funding Authority

By Daniel Horowitz

To give a sense of how common the use of this power is, the CRS notes that "31 national emergencies declared pursuant to the NEA are in effect, with Presidents having renewed certain emergencies for decades." They also cite an analysis from the Brennan Center for Justice that confirms "136 statutes provide the President with emergency authorities that he can invoke pursuant to the NEA."

One of those authorities in effect today is the president's power of blocking assets and prohibiting transactions with significant narcotics traffickers, which was put into effect in 1995 when the drug problem was a fraction of what it is today. Nobody can deny that the drug crisis is a national emergency, with tens of thousands of people dying every year from the drugs brought in by the cartels at our border.

U.S. Combats Child Marriage Abroad, Grants Thousands of Spousal Visas for Immigrant Kids

Two government agencies—USCIS and the State Department—must approve spouse or fiancé visas. The request is initially made to USCIS, which does not require parental or judicial consent for minors. Once the agency approves the application, the State Department usually issues the visa. “The State Department returns or rejects few spousal or fiancé immigrant visa petitions after they are approved by USCIS,” the report states. Senate investigators spoke with a “child marriage victim” who was forced to marry her older cousin during a family vacation to Pakistan. USCIS approved her spousal immigration benefit when she was just 13 years old and throughout the forced marriage, she suffered physical and sexual abuse. “She is just one of the thousands of U.S. women and girls forced into a child marriage involving the U.S. immigration system,” the report says.

Ironically, the U.S. government launched an aggressive global campaign years ago to slash an epidemic of child marriages, rampant in third-world countries. India tops the list for child marriage (15.5 million), according to a global nonprofit committed to ending it and enabling girls to fulfill their potential. Two Latin American countries—Brazil (3 million) and Mexico (1.4 million)—also appear in the top ten. As part of the U.S. campaign to reduce child marriage abroad,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Congress passed a measure in 2013 requiring the secretary of state to establish and implement a multiyear strategy to "prevent child marriages" and "to promote the empowerment of girls at risk of child marriage in developing countries." A few years later the State Department launched a Global Strategy to Empower Adolescent Girls to, among other things, "reduce the risk of child, early, and forced marriage (CEFM)." In its lengthy strategy handbook, the agency revealed that there are nearly 700 million women alive today who were married as children and 15 million more are married each year. The State Department also writes that "forced marriage is a human rights abuse and, in the case of minors, a form of child abuse." It also creates gender inequality, contributes to economic hardship and leads to "under-investment in girls' educational and healthcare needs." Why would the same agency approve thousands of visas for children—mostly girls—to enter forced marriages in the U.S.?

Trump: "The Wall Is Getting Done One Way or the Other!"

President sends a warning to obstructionist Democrats.

By Matthew Vadum

FrontPageMag.com, February 1, 2019

Republicans on Capitol Hill have generally been supportive of the president in the wall funding fight, without being enthusiastic about the prospect of him acting unilaterally to fund the project.

An exception is Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) who went on Twitter Thursday to urge Trump to move ahead. "Mr. President, use your powers as Commander in Chief to build wall/barriers – apparently your only option."

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) continues to be politely skeptical at the prospect of the president using emergency powers to obtain wall funding but many of the NeverTrumpers of Conservatism Inc. inside the Beltway have been downright hostile.

One of the more outrageous reactions came from Capital Research Center research director Michael Watson who tweeted that Trump should be impeached for trying to build the wall. “Declaring an emergency to override Congress’s spending authority is an impeachable offense and should be treated as such[,]” he wrote on Twitter.

In Defense of Assimilation

By Rich Lowry

It isn’t anymore. The head of the National Association of Hispanic Journalists rejected the very idea of assimilation, which he decried as “denying one culture for the other.” It is astonishing that in that formulation “the other” is American culture. We are perhaps the only nation in world history that has sought to “otherize” its own culture.

It’s also been a trope to accuse Brokaw, as Democratic Congressman Joaquin Castro did, of xenophobia. But saying immigrants should assimilate is the opposite of xenophobia — it is an expression of a belief that they can be and should be fully part of the American mainstream.

The old American ideal of the melting pot is that immigrants become wholly American (learning the language, embracing the folkways and traditions, becoming deeply patriotic), but also make a distinctive contribution to our national culture, which is organic and open to a variety of influences. It is wrong to view this dominant culture as hateful or exclusionary.

Walls Work
Democrats know it, but they want President Trump to fail.
By Deroy Murdock
National Review Online, January 31, 2019
* A fence installed at the border between Yuma, Arizona, and Los Algondones, Mexico brought apprehensions from 138,438 in FY 2005 to 12,847 in FY 2017 — down 90.7 percent.

"Crime has significantly decreased in the Yuma area," then–acting homeland security secretary Elaine Duke wrote in USA Today in August 2017, "and smugglers now look for other less difficult areas of the border to cross — often areas without fencing."

* A 150-mile barrier between Israel and southern Egypt cut the number of illegal-alien entrants from 17,000 in 2011 to 43 in 2013, after the fence's completion, Israel's Ministry of the Interior states — down 99.7 percent.

Who Benefits From Mass Immigration? Not You!
By Ann Coulter
Human Events Online, January 30, 2019
Even if it were true that fewer immigrants were accessing government assistance than American citizens, the number of immigrants who should be on welfare is, wait, checking my notes ... yes: ZERO. Why would any country bring in people who immediately need our monetary support?

In fact, bringing in poverty-stricken immigrants is a disaster for the welfare programs intended to help our fellow Americans. Fully half of all non-citizens in the United States are on at least one welfare program, according to the (very non-MAGA) Migration Policy Institute.

The only purpose of these Cato "studies" are the headlines, which will be endlessly repeated throughout media without a moment's reflection.

Why Trump Will Win the Wall Fight
By David Catron
The American Spectator, January 31, 2019
This kind of detection and monitoring is, of course, needed because large sections of the nation's southern border contain no barriers. And this point is something that President Trump is likely to reiterate in the SOTU. If the Democrats don't want troops on that border, the obvious and less expensive alternative would be some sort of concrete or steel barrier. Yet despite their well-documented support for such physical obstacles before Trump took office, Nancy Pelosi and Chuck Schumer have had a joint epiphany — walls are "immoral." So, it is by no means a given that they will appropriate the $5.7 billion that the President has asked for in order to continue construction on the Wall.

What if they don't? Trump can declare the situation at the border a national emergency. And, the fallacious claims of the Democrats and some partisan legal scholars notwithstanding, he certainly has the power to do so. Indeed, even the new Armed Services Committee Chairman noted above, Democratic Rep. Adam Smith (WA), admits that the President has the power to declare the border crisis a national emergency and order the military to build the wall. When asked that crucial question by George Stephanopoulos on ABC's This Week, Smith answered, "Unfortunately, the short answer is yes." Jonathan Turley of George Washington University agrees. He explains it thus:

Cave vs. Wall

By Cal Thomas

One way to get Democrats to focus might be to steer those entering illegally with criminal backgrounds to the states and districts where members of Congress who oppose the wall reside. Cynical, I know, but in Washington, since the 2016 election, cynicism reigns supreme. There are solutions to almost any problem, but it appears politicians prefer the immigration issue to run on as a means of raising money, garnering votes and harnessing power. It's all about politicians and rarely about the rest of us, their claims about "the American people" notwithstanding.

Voter Fraud: Yes, Noncitizens Are Voting in Elections — Texas Just Proved It

After a yearlong voter-fraud probe, Texas discovered that, lo and behold, 95,000 people identified as noncitizens had voter registrations. What's more, 58,000 of them voted in one or more Texas elections.

But wait. Isn't all this stuff about noncitizens voting a load of bull? When Trump appointed a voter-fraud commission in 2017, Democrats and the press howled in protest.

Sure, Trump almost certainly exaggerated the number of noncitizen voters. But in response, Time magazine declared that we "know that ineligible noncitizens do not vote in American elections." Vox.com, the "explanatory" news site, derided Trump as "indulging the long-standing myth of the noncitizen voter." Harvard researchers said that there is "no evidence" that noncitizens vote.

Now, after claiming this problem didn't exist at all, the left says it doesn't matter because it's not "widespread." But this is a clever dodge. Election fraud doesn't have to be widespread to be effective. In fact, the very purpose of election fraud is to flip extremely close elections. That doesn't take widespread voter fraud, just carefully targeted efforts.

New York's Political Leaders Favor Illegal Aliens Over Legal Residents

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By Matthew Tragesser
Just last week, Gov. Andrew Cuomo publicly supported DREAM Act legislation that grants illegal aliens access to college financial aid and scholarships in the state of New York. New York already grants illegal aliens who attend public colleges and universities heavily subsidized in-state tuition benefits.

The act, which has already passed the New York state Senate, will affect 146,000 New York residents who do not have legal status in the state and are enrolled in state schools. With an illegal alien population of 560,000 in New York City alone, the number of individuals seeking to take advantage of this perk is expected to increase.

Similar to Cuomo, New York City Mayor Bill De Blasio has also recently introduced a new policy directive that intends to favor illegal aliens over legal residents.
Titled NYC Care, the free comprehensive health care plan will provide primary and specialty care to 300,000 uninsured illegal aliens in New York City, costing $100 million annually.

With the city's municipal health system already an expensive item in 2018, critics have come quick to publicly denounce the plan. Concerns surrounding a large influx of people now demanding medical services has put strains on an already deficient pool of primary care doctor, causing even more public disapproval.

No Amnesty for the Wall

By Pedro Gonzalez

American Greatness, January 27, 2019

Yet now, as it was during the Reagan era, Republicans are calling for amnesty in exchange for squaring up the border. Where have we heard this before?

Reagan's amnesty, too, was packaged with the promise of tougher border controls, physical and bureaucratic infrastructure to prevent the unlawful trespass of foreigners into the United States, and sold against the clarion calls of so-called "ultras" who saw amnesty for what it was: a sell out.

California will never see a genuine Republican Party come to power again. Certainly not in my lifetime. That is the legacy of amnesty, although it was, at least implicitly, meant to be reciprocal.

Señor Reagan awards you amnesty, so you and your compañeros should be good to the Republican Party. And yet it had the opposite, and predictable, effect. It indicated weakness. It suggested that amnesty could be leveraged again by mass lawbreaking. Millions of Central Americans watching people slip through our border illegally want to know: Were they wrong?

Do Illegal Immigrants Have High Crime Rates?

The New York Post, January 27, 2019

One of the biggest debates on the immigration issue is whether the crime rates of undocumented migrants are higher than those of the US population generally. Barry Latzer at City Journal maintains that, despite heated claims on both sides, no one can know for sure without "reliable data" on the size of the group — "and we simply don't know how many illegal aliens there are." Moreover, most states don't break down crime data by legal citizenship. Texas, however, does — and from 2012 to 2017, they constituted nearly 10 percent of apprehended murderers. Still, "no amount of crime by those who enter this country unlawfully should be acceptable, because it is 'extra' crime that wouldn't occur if our border security were effective."

Do Illegal Aliens Have High Crime Rates?

High enough, from what we know, to take measures to secure our borders.

By Barry Latzer

City Journal, January 24, 2019

Nationwide data on crime by illegal aliens is unavailable mainly because most states don't keep such records. For instance, California, with Hispanics making up more than 43 percent of its incarcerated population, provides no information on the alienage of its inmates. Texas does, though, and its Department of Public Safety reports that illegal aliens were arrested and charged with more than 298,000 crimes, an average of over 39,000 per year, from June 1, 2011 to the end of 2018. Though some of these arrests were for nonviolent crimes, such as theft, burglary, or drug offenses, they also include many violent crimes: 624 homicides, 1,911 robberies, and 3,955 sexual assaults (which, under Texas law, include rapes).

While these figures sound disturbing, we can't say with certainty if they are high relative to the size of the illegal immigrant population because, as noted above, we really don't know how many there are. A 2014 estimate by the Pew Research Center pegged the Texas figure at 1,650,000, or 6.3 percent of the state's entire population. Homeland Security offered a higher estimate for 2015: 1,940,000, which accounted for 7.3 percent of the state's population.

The Koch Network's High Hopes and Early Push for an Immigration Deal

By Jim Geraghty

National Review Online, January 29, 2019

Brian Hooks, chairman of the Koch Seminar Network, told assembled attendees of the Koch network's winter meeting on Monday that the network's effort to unite a broad coalition to push Congress and the White House had already begun.

“We just got the longest government shutdown in the history of our country, and this issue was at the core,” Hooks said. “When you read the headlines saying this is impossible, it’s understandable. But we see an opportunity to bring the same approach that this network brought to criminal-justice reform, to unite a broad-based policy coalition with groups from the ACLU to people in Silicon Valley, to Fortune 500 companies, to members of the religious community, and a whole lot of people in between. This isn’t wishful thinking; this is already underway.”

“There’s nothing original when I say the key to either a step-by-step reform or a comprehensive reform is yes, we should, where it is practical, have physical barriers,” Pope said. “I think President Trump should be given credit for backing away from his original campaign rhetoric of literally a concrete barrier from the Gulf to the Pacific, to wanting the steel barriers that the border security says we need. It does stop illegal traffic, and it does channel it better to where they can control it better with a choke point.” He says that additional enforcement for those who overstay visas is also a needed part of a deal.

Can the Koch Network and Jared Kushner Come Up with a Big Immigration Reform Deal?

By Jim Geraghty

But two of the open questions as the Koch donors gather at the luxury resort outside Palm Springs are just how much can get done in Washington with divided government and the jockeying for position in 2020 starting already, and just what kind of a deal President Trump is willing to accept. Last year Brian Democrats for Border Security?

By Stephen Moore

One of the Democrats' objections to the wall, and it is a legitimate point, is that about half of those in this country illegally simply overstay their visas. A wall won't stop that. To stop visa overstayers requires internal enforcement of the immigration laws. Democrats say they favor those measures.

Where? When? How?

Most Democrats have long been supportive of the policy of "catch and release." This means tens of thousands of illegal immigrants are basically released back on to the streets after apprehension. That's some deterrence.

If the Democrats Were Really Committed to Workers, They'd Support the Wall

By Herman Cain

The effect illegal immigration has on the U.S. labor market is not a closely guarded secret — numerous economic studies confirm that illegal aliens have an overwhelmingly negative effect on both the employment prospects and the wages of low-skilled American workers.

"Illegal aliens come to the United States to take jobs that offer them greater opportunity, and they are often welcomed by U.S. employers who are able to hire them for wages lower than they would have to pay to hire U.S. workers," the report explains.

In response to this criticism, liberals frequently argue that illegal immigrants do the jobs that "Americans won't do" — but this evasive rebuttal has no basis in fact.

What are these illusive jobs that Americans supposedly refuse to do? Are there no American workers in construction and manufacturing? Are there no American workers in agriculture and landscaping? Are there no American custodians, cleaners and chefs?

How to Stop China, Lift Up Latin America, and Slash Illegal Immigration

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By George Mullen

3. The United States establishes a mutually-beneficial treaty (with massive free trade zones and zero tariffs) with all interested Latin America nations in order to incentivize and spur the mass relocation of manufacturing from China to the Americas over the next decade. A key condition of this treaty will be the firm commitment of each participating Latin American nation to assist in the prevention of illegal immigration into the United States. Likewise, the resultant jobs and wealth going to Latin America will organically help to alleviate pressures incentivizing illegal immigration, addressing causes of large-scale flight at the source.

An Immigrant's View of Immigration
By Juan Macias
SW News Media (MN), January 25, 2019
Our nation has no constitutional mandate to accept foreign citizens to its soil; the 14th Amendment doesn't mention anything about immigration or the concept of refugees and asylum. Furthermore, the UN treaty of 1951, though legally-binding, has no compliance monitoring. The U.S. voluntarily embraces immigration, leveraging its position of leadership in the world because of its principles and values to help people facing global humanitarian challenges.

That being said, the U.S. — or any country, for that matter — should not be responsible for solving the world's hardships or being liable for everyone that experiences misfortune, violence or an abusive partner. We simply don't have the resources to provide housing, nutrition, education and health care to every person or family that knocks on our door even if we want to.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The immigration challenges we face are complex and will not be solved overnight or for free. We need our political leaders to concentrate on being fire-preventers rather than firefighters and on managing the rule rather than every exception. We need to accept the fact that we have a porous border and that a lot more can be done to limit illegal migration and the costly repercussions it creates.

Immigration fosters innovation and enables prosperity for everyone, but it has to be done in a controlled fashion to ensure sustainability and adherence to law and order, vital to this nation's future.

Illegal Alien Stayed Undetected by Voting in Plain Sight

By Bob Dane

"The best way to keep to keep an illegal voter registration is to use it. That avoids the purge of inactive voters," said Logan Churchwell of the Public Interest Legal Foundation (PILF), an election integrity watchdog.

"Voting regularly keeps the county from sending an 'inactive voter' inquiry letter that requires you to engage with them. If you're living with someone else's identity, the last thing you want is someone asking you about it," he explained.

Salazar's illegal status came to light when he applied for a U.S. passport. That triggered questions from the State Department about his identity, and it "cascaded down all the way to the illegal voting level," Churchwell said.

Can President Trump Fund the Wall by Declaring a National Emergency?
By Robert Chesney
Lawfare Blog, January 7, 2019
7. Let's assume someone does have standing. Won't the courts just defer to the Commander-in-Chief on whether military necessity and national defense were sufficiently implicated?

In normal times, that is certainly the safe bet; there is a longstanding, robust "national security fact deference" tradition. Indeed, I wrote all about the underlying justifications for such deference (and their limitations) in this article. But we are not in normal times. The border litigation quickly would join the Travel Ban and Steel Tariffs litigations as instances in which a formal claim of national security justification would run up against serious skepticism about whether that justification was just a litigation smokescreen masking different reasons motivating the president. The outcome in Travel Ban suggests that it remains unwise to bet against the executive branch in such cases, of course, but one never knows these days.

Is a Border Wall Really Grounds for a National Emergency?
By Patrick J. Kiger
HowStuffWorks.com, January 14, 2019
And according to reporting by CNN, the draft proclamation for Trump to declare a national emergency has been underway for several weeks. It includes $7 billion for a border wall, and would also direct the U.S. Department of Defense to be in charge of its construction, circumventing Congressional authority altogether.

At this point, you may be wondering: What exactly, is a national emergency, anyway? And can a president really declare one to get around Congress?

Unfortunately, neither of these questions has a clear answer. The law that allows presidents to declare national emergencies doesn't really define what constitutes such a dire situation, and up to this point, the limits that the law imposes upon presidential authority haven't been tested by a situation of this sort.

Notice that in the 33-day government shutdown, all those players did NOTHING to solve the problem. In fact, they did nothing to solve the problem 30 years ago, 20 years ago, 10 years ago and/or 5 years ago.

None of them push to enforce the laws on the books that would have prevented the shutdown. None of them offer any solutions to stop endless immigration from breaching our borders. None of them support E-Verify. None of them offer a bill to stop anchor babies. None of them do anything to stop the MS-13 drug distribution network now totally dominating our cities. None of them stop the visas overstays with bio-metrics. None of them do anything to reduce the $21 trillion debt. None of them do anything to rebuild our infrastructure.

But they do everything to aid, abet and give immunity to DACA and 22-25 million other illegal aliens. They DO spend our money for two useless 18 wars in Iraq and Afghanistan to kill our kids, all for nothing. Without a doubt, plenty of republicans need to be term limited, too. The Economics of Immigration, Part I

By Kevin Wilson

SeekingAlpha.com, January 25, 2019

* Newer immigrants are better educated than ever; nevertheless, many are poor and cost taxpayers a great deal of money for welfare and healthcare benefits in their early years after arrival.

* The economy has been unable to absorb the increased labor force due to immigration, resulting in higher welfare costs and lower wages for poorly educated natives.

* Crime rates amongst immigrant cohorts are lower than they are in the native population; terrorism has not increased at the hands of illegal immigrants (so far).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Part II

January 29, 2019

Summary

* Economic theory indicates that immigration should have a long-term positive impact on economic growth; theory also suggests there are benefits from immigration in the form of better returns to capital.

* Theory also supports increasing the amount of immigration in order to boost GDP via population growth, improve the efficiency of labor allocation, and support the Social Security system.

* However, lower (short run) returns to labor are politically explosive and are part of the story behind our failure to pass immigration reform laws; the amnesty issue is another factor.

* New ideas on breaking the logjam include the "PILLAR" Act, which might resolve the debate over family-based vs. merit-based immigration; however, amnesty and a border fence remain as serious roadblocks to progress.

* Technology (QQQ) and healthcare (XLV) stocks will benefit from a move to a partially merit-based immigration system. But, for now, prudent investors should bear in mind the budget, immigration, and trade problems haunting the markets, and hold IAU or GLD, OTCRX, WHOSX, and TLT.

Nobody Believes a Wall Will Stop Illegal Immigration

By Stuart Anderson

Forbes.com, January 28, 2019

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

If a border wall would be as successful in preventing illegal entry as Donald Trump has stated, then Border Patrol agents would largely be out of a job. Jason Riley wrote in a recent Wall Street Journal column on labor unions: "Everyone knows union members want better wages, benefits, working conditions and job protections." Since the president of the union for Border Patrol agents (the National Border Patrol Council) has spoken in favor of the wall, it's logical to assume he is not worried that the wall would work so well that lawmakers would start rapidly reducing the ranks of his union's members.

Lawmakers, the Border Patrol union and even Donald Trump do not believe that a wall will prevent nearly all illegal immigration into the United States, the 99.9% effectiveness rate Trump has touted. If they did believe it, then they would tell Border Patrol agents to start looking for other jobs, since their services would no longer be required.

Why Trump Should Ditch Stephen Miller and Strike an Immigration Deal

By Shikha Dalmia

The Week, January 28, 2019

The Miller path would mean making good on this threat to declare a national emergency to raid some other government department to fund his wall. But the problem with that strategy is that it won't accomplish anything, given that courts will step in and stop him, just as they have done with his efforts to kill DACA and defund sanctuary cities. At the same time, it will irritate not just Democrats but also Republicans who fear what a Democratic president might do with the precedent Trump would set. Sen. Roy Blunt (R-Mo.) has already warned Trump against it.

The lesson here is that Miller's immigration ideas simply don't have widespread

Our Know Nothing Heritage on Immigration

Trump's anti-immigration crusade has a historical context

By Edward M Murphy

Commonwealth Magazine, January 25, 2019

President Trump's focus on the southern border "crisis" is a mirage that appeals to voter anxiety, avoids solutions, and blurs the truth. There are real issues to deal with on that border but no one listening to Trump would know that more Asian than Hispanic immigrants have arrived in the US each year since 2010. His focus on the caravan "invasion" consisting of a few thousand asylum seekers from Central America has political utility but distorts reality. More than a million immigrants are admitted to the US every year through normal, non-asylum, processes. The number of asylum seekers is a small portion of the total. Last year, 22,491 people were granted asylum, the lowest number in decades.

Wall supporters, who obscure the difference between immigrants and asylum seekers, may not understand that even eliminating asylum altogether would have no real impact on immigration.

How Immigration Could Help a Shrinking American Labor Force

By Sabri Ben-Achour and Jonaki Mehta

Marketplace.org, January 29, 2019

Goldstone argues that to reach a high enough population to keep up with global economic competition, we need more immigration. In 2008, the U.S. Census Bureau estimated there would be about 450 million Americans in the U.S. by 2050. Its most recent projection from 2017 estimates just 400 million people. Those missing 50 million people can be attributed to lower fertility, especially among immigrants, Goldstone said.

"Someone once said America can't get rich by bringing in other people's children. Well, that's the way America did get to be the richest country in the world," he said. And the way to do that while maintaining a cutting edge over other growing economies in the world, Goldstone said, is to bring young workers to the U.S. from other countries. "We're in a world where young people who can be productive workers are the new scarce resource. More than capital, more than oil, more than rare metals."

What Does Our Treatment of Immigrants Tell Future Generations?

By Savannah Hopkinson

Deseret News, January 25, 2019

What kind of message do such actions send to the rising generation, as well as the rest of the world? One that promotes hostility over compassion. One that focuses on differences rather than commonalities. One that encourages selfishness rather than selflessness. It's a message that adds to the storm of distrust and suspicion that has attacked nearly every part of our society.

Immigration is not an easy issue to solve. If it were, we'd have it figured out by now and not be in a record long government shutdown centered around the issue. Immigration requires a fine balance between ensuring responsible, good people are coming in and doing so in a timely manner. This isn't a call for completely open borders — regulation and a thorough vetting of migrants is necessary — but it is a question of the methods and lack of compassion that seems to override much of our current immigration and refugee process. What kind of a people have we become if we can justify a child being taken from its mother? Perhaps it is too lofty or naive of an ideal to promote, but I believe that prosperity comes with the responsibility to help others and extend those blessings as far as possible, not selfishly put up defenses.

Harmful Immigration Policies and What You Can Do to Help

By Miryam Antúnez De Mayolo

The Witness, January 24, 2019

The 'Migrant Caravan'

The "migrant caravan" originated in Honduras, but many individuals from Guatemala and El Salvador joined the arduous journey as well. Most people traveling in that caravan are fleeing extreme violence and persecution in their home countries and see the caravan as a way to ensure their safety while traveling. These people are trying to reach the United States but not in order to break our laws. Quite the opposite, these people are trying to reach our country in order to avail themselves of a perfectly legal recourse that has been part of our law and jurisprudence for generations: the right to seek asylum. If someone flees her country due to persecution based on ethnicity, nationality, political opinion, religion or membership in a particular social group, then that person can ask for asylum, which is based on the principle of non-refoulement: the practice of not forcing refugees or asylum seekers to return to a country where they would be persecuted.

Setting the Record Straight: Asylum Seekers Show Up for Court

By Aaron Reichlin-Melnick

ImmigrationImpact.com, January 30, 2019

Immigration restrictionists have often repeated a bold and erroneous claim: that there is a serious problem of asylum seekers who come to the U.S. border and disappear once released from detention. But both fact-checkers and independent studies show this is not true. In reality, the vast majority of asylum seekers diligently attend all of their immigration court hearings.

From 2012 to 2017, over 1.25 million new cases were filed in immigration court, but only 151,000 removal orders were issued for failure to appear; 13.5 percent of the total. When looking only at 2017, cases in which an immigrant was ordered removed for failure to appear constituted just five percent of the 802,503 cases pending or completed in immigration court.

Despite the flaws with using the failure to appear rate as a proxy for the rate at which immigrants miss court proceedings, the government continues to use this number to make policy. This is a mistake; good policy can only be made based on good data.

Description: Immigration policy has long divided America. It continues to be one of the country's biggest issues, yet substantive discussion often gets sidelined. In "Melting Pot or Civil War? A Song of Immigrants Makes the Case Against Open Borders" (Sentinel, 2018), Reihan Salam delivers a rational, considered, and egalitarian argument against open borders.

In his book, Mr. Salam argues that uncontrolled immigration is bad for almost all Americans, including those who belong to immigrant communities. Our current system has intensified the isolation of our native poor, and it risks ghettoizing the children of poor immigrants. It ignores the challenges posed by the declining demand for less-skilled labor, even as it exacerbates ethnic inequality and deepens our political divides. Rejecting both cosmopolitan extremism and white identity politics, Mr. Salam makes the case that limiting total immigration and favoring skilled immigrants will combat rising inequality, balance diversity with assimilation, and foster a new, unifying nationalism.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Course Description: With a record 200 million people living outside their country of birth, immigration is a global phenomenon with profound demographic, economic, social, and political implications for both sending and receiving countries. The debate over immigration law and policy has become increasingly volatile and, in some instances, characterized by misinformation, hate, and xenophobia. Beyond the politics of immigration, genuine challenges to immigrant integration abound. Successful integration of immigrants is critical to the long-term prosperity of host countries that rely on immigrants as workers, consumers, taxpayers, innovators, and entrepreneurs in light of their aging native-born populations and lower birth rates. In this course we will explore integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving countries--such as the United States and Canada and new countries of permanent immigration such as France, Germany, the United Kingdom. We will raise questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity. We will also discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism, paradigms that challenge an integrationist reading of migration. Using case studies from North America and Europe we will pay special attention to the different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation on their road from newcomers to citizens.

Course Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Discuss the integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving and source countries.
* Recognize questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity.
* Discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism.
* Compare different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation.

Notes: This course is an open enrollment course. No application is required and registration is available by clicking "Add to Cart." Current students must register with their Georgetown NetID and password. New students will be prompted to create an account prior to registration.

626 Kaneff Tower

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Speaker:
Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

Description: The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Speaker: Linn Biorklund Belliveau, Researcher/analyst Dahdaleh Institute for Global Health Research and Médecins Sans Frontières, CRS Affiliated Scholar

Description: Linn will discuss how migration can be weaponized to serve diverse political agendas, including the growing tendency to frame refugees and migrants as political liabilities. The result is a degradation of access to adequate protection and humanitarian assistance, as well as the mechanisms they use to reach target destinations. Linn will present this perspective using first-hand experience working with Eritrean refugees fleeing towards the shores of Europe between 2013 – 2016 and sharing a critical perspective of State and humanitarian responses to the so-called 'migrant-caravans' from the Northern Triangle of Central America to the United States and Canada.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

Crisis, what (refugee) crisis? The business of 'business-as-usual' in EU migration governance

Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

Immigration to Add 75 Million by 2060

Analysis shows current policy will make U.S. population much larger, but not much younger

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (February 5, 2019) – A new Center for Immigration Studies analysis of the Census Bureau's latest population projections shows that immigration will make the population much larger, but does not have a large impact on the share of the population that is of working age (16 to 64). The Bureau projects future population size, but does not discuss the role that immigration plays. By separately examining the impact of immigration on the Census Bureau projections, this new CIS report provides policymakers and the public with much-needed context.

"There is no question that, barring a change in policy, immigration will add tens of millions of people to the U.S. population over the next four decades," said Steven Camarota, the Center's Director of Research and lead author of the report. "But that increase in population will only modestly impact the ratio of workers to non-workers," he continued. "In contrast to immigration, a small increase in the retirement age can have a larger impact on the working-age share of the population without the consequences that may come from a much larger population, including for the environment and quality of life."

View the full analysis at: https://cis.org/Report/Projecting-Impact-Immigration-US-Population.

Among the findings:

- The Census Bureau projects that future net immigration (the difference between the number coming and number leaving) will total 46 million by 2060 and that total U.S. population will reach 404 million — 79 million larger than in 2017.
- Varying the immigration component shows that net immigration will add 75 million to the population, accounting for 95 percent of the increase by 2060.
- We can gain insight into immigration's impact by comparing the level projected by the Census Bureau to what would happen if immigration was reduced by two-thirds, which would roughly stabilize the U.S. population after 2040.
- Under a stabilization scenario, net immigration would total 16 million by 2060 (370,000 annually), producing a population of 354 million in 2060 — 50 million less than currently projected by the Bureau, but 29 million larger than in 2017.
- Many argue that without immigration there will not be enough workers to support the government or economy. Yet these projections indicate that in 2060, 59 percent of the population will be of working-age (16-64) compared to a quite similar 58 percent under the stabilization scenario.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- Looking at the ratio of potential workers (ages 16 to 64) relative to those of retirement age (65-plus) also shows the modest impact of immigration. Under the stabilization scenario there will be 2.2 workers per retiree compared to 2.5 workers assuming the Census Bureau's level of immigration.
- Immigration only modestly impacts aging, mainly because some immigrants do not arrive young and all immigrants age like everyone else, adding to the population that is outside of the working age.
- It is possible for immigration to maintain the current working-age share or ratio of workers to retirees, but it would require net immigration roughly five times the level projected by the Census Bureau through 2060. This would result in a total U.S. population of 706 million in 2060 — more than double the current population.
- Alternately, raising the retirement age two years, even assuming zero net immigration, has about the same impact on the working-age share or ratio of workers to retirees in 2060 as the level of net immigration projected by the Census Bureau.

House Democrats Outdo Themselves with an Unserious Border Security Proposal

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (February 5, 2019) – New analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies highlights how a new bill drafted by Democrats in the House majority reflects just how unserious they are on the subject of border security and immigration control.

Dan Cadman, a Fellow at the Center and the author of the analysis, said, "This new proposal from the Democrats is full of objectionable features. Clearly, House Democrats have no interest in real border security. It freezes Border Patrol agents' resources, severely limits detention space by cutting from the funding requests, and radically expands 'alternatives to detention' instead, a feel-good measure that would fix nothing."

Part 1 of the analysis: https://cis.org/Cadman/House-Democrats-Outdo-Themselves-Unserious-Border-Security-Proposal-Part-1

Part 2 of the analysis: https://cis.org/Cadman/House-Democrats-Outdo-Themselves-Insincere-Disingenuous-Border-Security-Proposal-Part-2

Among other changes, the proposal would limit ICE to 16,500 beds by October 1, when federal fiscal year (FY) 2019 ends. This is so limiting that ICE agents would be in the invidious position of not even having enough space to lock up the hardened criminals it encounters in the interior.

Further, the House bill would apportion massive amounts of funding to radically expand use of alternative-to-detention (ATD) programs instead of actual confinement for immigration law violators. Alternatives to detention have a range of issues. The "pilot program" that demonstrated ATD's effectiveness had various flaws that make it unreliable. ATD can be costly to the taxpayer because it often lasts years. Finally, unlike actual detention, ATD fails to dissuade additional families from making the incredibly perilous journey to the U.S. In fact, it does the opposite, because it ensures the prompt release of detained aliens into the country, many of whom will fail to show up for their court date years later.

In sum, the House Democrats' version of a “smart” border security and immigration control bill is a fraud.

Excerpt: Because the countries of origin of immigrants have become more diversified, Canada's linguistic landscape has altered considerably. An increasing share of immigrants report a language other than English or French as their mother tongue or language spoken most often at home. In 2016, nearly three quarters (72.5%) of immigrants had a language other than English or French as their mother tongue, compared with 50.7% in 1971. Similarly, an increasing proportion of immigrants speak an "other" language most often at home. Specifically, 47.2% of people born outside Canada spoke an "other" language most often at home in 2016, while 52.8% spoke English or French at home.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In spite of the increased linguistic diversification of the immigrant population, the vast majority (93.2%) of immigrants reported knowing one or both of Canada's official languages in 2016. These languages function as vectors of integration into Canadian society. In 2016, most immigrants were drawn to English: 82.5% had English as their first official language spoken (FOLS), 10.8% had French, and 6.8% had neither of these two languages. In contrast, in Quebec, close to two thirds (62.5%) of immigrants had French as their first official language spoken, while one third (33.1%) had English.

Latin America, Caribbean no longer world's fastest growing source of international migrants

Excerpt: The global population of emigrants (people living outside their country of birth) from Latin American-Caribbean nations grew by 7% between 2010 and 2017, according to the analysis, which uses data from the United Nations and the U.S. Census Bureau. This is slower than the overall worldwide growth rate of 17% during the same period. Other regions, meanwhile, saw faster growth than Latin America during the period, including the Middle East and North Africa (38% increase) and sub-Saharan Africa (32%).

Cities and Immigration: Political and Moral Dilemmas in the New Era of Migration
By Avner de-Shalit

Oxford University Press, 192 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 0198833210, $80.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0198833210/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 1028 KB, ASIN: B07KYSNKMT, 178 pp., $76.00

Book Description: All over the world immigration is one of the most urgent political issues, creating tensions and unrest as well as questions of justice and fairness. Academics as well as politicians have been relating to the question of how states should cope with immigrants; but 96% of immigrants end up in cities, and in Europe and the USA, two thirds of the immigrants settle in seven or eight cities. Indeed, most of us encounter with immigrants as city-zens, in our everyday life, rather than as citizens of states. So how should cities integrate immigrants? Should cities be allowed to design their autonomous integration policies? Could they issue visas and permits to immigrants? Should immigrants be granted voting rights in local elections before naturalization? And how do cities think about these issues? What can we learn from cities which are thought to be successful in integrating and assimilating immigrants? Is there a model of integration within the city which is best?

The book discusses these questions both empirically and normatively. The book is based on hundreds of in depth discussions of these matters with city dwellers in San Francisco, New York, London, Amsterdam, Berlin, Thessaloniki and Jerusalem. It shifts the discourse on immigration from 'thinking like a state' to 'thinking like a city'.

Borders of Belonging: Struggle and Solidarity in Mixed-Status Immigrant

Kindle, 2744 KB, ASIN: B07N473RPQ, 333 pp., $26.60

Book Description: Borders of Belonging investigates a pressing but previously unexplored aspect of immigration in America ?the impact of immigration policies and practices not only on undocumented migrants, but also on their family members, some of whom possess a form of legal status. Heide Castañeda reveals the trauma, distress, and inequalities that occur daily, alongside the stratification of particular family members' access to resources like education, employment, and health care. She also paints a vivid picture of the resilience, resistance, creative responses, and solidarity between parents and children, siblings, and other kin.

Castañeda's innovative ethnography combines fieldwork with individuals and family groups to paint a full picture of the experiences of mixed-status families as they navigate the emotional, social, political, and medical difficulties that inevitably arise when at least one family member lacks legal status. Exposing the extreme conditions in the heavily-regulated U.S./Mexico borderlands, this book presents a portentous vision of how the further encroachment of immigration enforcement would affect millions of mixed-status families throughout the country.

The Age of Walls: How Barriers Between Nations are Changing Our World
By Tim Marshall

Scribner, 288 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1501183907, $17.68
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1501183907/centerforimmigra

Paperback, ISBN: 1501183915, $18.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN1501183915/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 22616 KB, ASIN: B074ZLXLN7, 289 pp., $13.99

Book Description: The globe has always been a world of walls, from the Great Wall of China to Hadrian's Wall to the Berlin Wall. But a new age of isolationism and economic nationalism is upon us, visible not just in Trump's obsession with building a wall on the Mexico border or in Britain's Brexit vote but in many other places as well. China has the great Firewall, holding back Western culture. Europe's countries are walling themselves against immigrants, terrorism, and currency issues. South Africa has heavily gated communities, and massive walls or fences separate people in the Middle East, Korea, Sudan, India, and other places around the world.

In fact, at least sixty-five countries, more than a third of the world's nation-states, have barriers along their borders. There are many reasons why walls go up, because we are divided in many ways: wealth, race, religion, and politics, to name a few. Understanding what is behind these divisions is essential to understanding much of what's going on in the world today.

As with Marshall's first two books, The Age of Walls is a brisk read, divided by geographic region. He provides an engaging context that is often missing from political discussion and draws on his real life experiences as a reporter from hotspots around the globe. He examines how walls (which Marshall calls "monuments to the failure of politics"), borders, and barriers have been shaping our political landscape for hundreds of years, and especially since 2001, and how they figure in the diplomatic relations and geo-political events of today.

Deported Americans: Life after Deportation to Mexico

By Beth C. Caldwell

Duke University Press Books, 248 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 147800360X, $94.95
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/147800360X/centerforimmigra

Paperback, ISBN: 1478003901, $24.95
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1478003901/centerforimmigra

Book Description: When Gina was deported to Tijuana, Mexico, in 2011, she left behind her parents, siblings, and children, all of whom are U.S. citizens. Despite having once had a green card, Gina was removed from the only country she had ever known. In Deported Americans legal scholar and former public defender Beth C. Caldwell tells Gina's story alongside those of dozens of other Dreamers, who are among the hundreds of thousands who have been deported to Mexico in recent years. Many of them had lawful status, held green cards, or served in the U.S. military. Now, they have been banished, many with no hope of lawfully returning. Having interviewed over one hundred deportees and their families, Caldwell traces deportation's long-term consequences—such as depression, drug use, and homelessness—on both sides of the border. Showing how U.S. deportation law systematically fails to protect the rights of immigrants and their families, Caldwell challenges traditional notions of what it means to be an American and recommends legislative and judicial reforms to mitigate the injustices suffered by the millions of U.S. citizens affected by deportation.

Mexico The Good Neighbor: Contracts, Betrayal and Survival in the Cold War

By Soledad Quartucci

Independently published, 264 pp.

Paperback, ISBN: 1794444637, $14.99
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1794444637/centerforimmigra

Book Description: When Mexico joined other Latin American countries in declaring war on the Axis in June 1942, a wave of young Mexican citizens crossed the border to volunteer for service in the United States military. Over 300,000 Mexican Americans volunteered or were drafted into the military. They were recruited in farms and in high schools. They worked on railroads, in mines, in shipyards and airplane factories. These workers were crucial to the country's wartime economy. Mexicans joined the ranks of the National Guard, the Army reserve, enlisted in the United States Military and signed Bracero agricultural agreements to fill the labor gap created by wartime. They relocated north providing a service to the United States and laying community roots in the process. They built barrios, neighborhoods that were underserved by government services and were dependent on strong social and family networks and on their Spanish press. In Los Angeles, the newspaper La Opinion, became an indispensable immigrant support and coping tool that helped Mexicans navigate a complex U.S. society in Cold War America. La Opinion editors and columnists felt a deep sorrow and sympathy for the suffering of Mexicans in the United States at a time when the barrios were surrounded by a hostile society that viewed them as dangerous, suspect to communism and as a public charge. La Opinion embraced braceros and welcomed its veterans fighting alongside them during the racially charged period of immigration exclusion that followed World War II. The Spanish press formed part of the complex network that supported Mexican labor migration in the U.S. Southwest. As an immigrant labor press, the paper recorded the history of the everyday lives of Mexican Americans during the Cold-War period. Mexico The Good Neighbor - treads new ground, seeking to contribute to studies of the Spanish press in the United States by analyzing the daily events that shaped Mexican-American politics, leisure and intimate relations in the World War II and Cold War period through the analysis of the key immigrant press, La Opinion.

Islands of Sovereignty: Haitian Migration and the Borders of Empire

By Jeffrey S. Kahn

University of Chicago Press, 352 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 022658738X, $104.70
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/022658738X/centerforimmigra

Paperback, ISBN: 022658741X, 280 pp., $35.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/022658741X/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 2526 KB, ASIN: B07MG9ZY5N, $27.99

Book Description: In Islands of Sovereignty, anthropologist and legal scholar Jeffrey S. Kahn offers a new interpretation of the transformation of US borders during the late twentieth century and its implications for our understanding of the nation-state as a legal and political form. Kahn takes us on a voyage into the immigration tribunals of South Florida, the Coast Guard vessels patrolling the northern Caribbean, and the camps of Guantánamo Bay—once the world's largest US-operated migrant detention facility—to explore how litigation concerning the fate of Haitian asylum seekers gave birth to a novel paradigm of offshore oceanic migration policing. Combining ethnography—in Haiti, at Guantánamo, and alongside US migration patrols in the Caribbean—with in-depth archival research, Kahn expounds a nuanced theory of liberal empire's dynamic tensions and its racialized geographies of securitization. An innovative historical anthropology of the modern legal imagination, Islands of Sovereignty forces us to reconsider the significance of the rise of the current US immigration border and its relation to broader shifts in the legal infrastructure of contemporary nation-states across the globe.

Trump Wants Increased Immigration. Please Clap.

He fell for the legal-good/illegal-bad fallacy.

By Mark Krikorian

National Review Online, February 7, 2019

https://www.nationalreview.com/2019/02/donald-trump-wants-increased-immigration/

Though I agree with the consensus that the president gave a good State of the Union address on Tuesday, as such things go, his comments on immigration seemed so unremarkable I didn’t think they were worth writing about. I dismissed the one notable thing he did say on the subject as just another example of what the reporter Dara Lind calls “superlativizing“: Instead of reading the sentence on the teleprompter that said “I want people to come into our country, but they have to come in legally,” Trump ad-libbed, “I want people to come into our country in the largest numbers ever, but they have to come in legally.” (Emphasis added.)

My impression that this was just a Trumpian verbal tic was strengthened by the fact of his earlier support for the RAISE Act and the Goodlatte bill, both of which would have reduced overall immigration, albeit not as much as critics imagined.

But it turns out that this was more than mere superlativizing.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Trump was asked on Wednesday about the "largest numbers ever" comment, and he doubled down. Here's the exchange:

REPORTER: Last night, you said in your SOTU address, "I want to come into this country in the largest numbers ever." Is that a change in your policy?

TRUMP: Yes, because we need people in our country because our unemployment numbers are so low and we have massive numbers of companies coming back into our country — car companies, we have seven car companies coming back in right now and there's going to be a lot more — we've done really well with this, and we need people.

REPORTER: So, you're changing your policy officially, then? You want more legal immigration?

TRUMP: I need people coming in because we need people to run the factories and plants and companies that are moving back in. We need people.

This is the "legal-good/illegal-bad" immigration fallacy. Unfortunately, I forgot to include that in the list of potential immigration-politics landmines I posted on Tuesday.

Legal-good/illegal-bad is actually the default setting for mousy and irresolute Republican politicians: Demonstrate toughness to voters by demanding better enforcement, while swearing your allegiance to the continued importation of 1 million legal immigrants (and hundreds of thousands of "temporary" workers) every year, thus soothing employers looking for cheap labor and showing the New York Times how non-racist you are.

But it's nonsense. Whether the concern is jobs, welfare, schools, or assimilation, legal and illegal aliens have similar impacts. Not necessarily identical, of course. Take welfare use.

More than 60 percent of households headed by illegal immigrants use at least one federal welfare program, higher than the legal-immigrant rate of nearly 50 percent. But both groups are much more likely to use welfare than the native-born. Even legal immigrants with college degrees are twice as likely to use welfare as comparable natives.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Even the illegality of illegal aliens isn't as important a distinguishing feature as some might think. Obviously, rampant illegal immigration undermines the rule of law; I don't think I need to prove my bona fides in that regard. But legal and illegal immigrants are not different species — they come from the same countries, live in the same communities, often share mixed-status households, and are even the same actual people; the Public Policy Institute of California has estimated that more than 40 percent of new green-card recipients have been illegal aliens at some point. Heck, some people toggle back and forth between legal and illegal. Take Hesham Mohamed Hadayet, the Egyptian terrorist who murdered two people at the El Al counter at Los Angeles International Airport on the Fourth of July, 2002. He arrived on a tourist visa, legally, then failed to return when his permission to stay here expired, thus becoming an illegal alien. Later, he applied for asylum, becoming legal again temporarily, but again failed to leave after he was turned town, thus becoming illegal again. Finally, his wife won the Diversity Visa Lottery and he, as her spouse, also got a green card, thus becoming legal again, at least until he was shot dead by El Al security.

But what of the rationale the president offered? Do the hot economy and the low unemployment rate really justify turning away from his former "Hire American" lodestar? Only if you're a businessman in a bubble.

The labor-force-participation rate — the share of working-age people who either have a job or are actively looking for one — has been declining for years. It is now at the lowest level since the full entry of women into the work force. Even after the past several years of vigorous growth, it is still below what it was in 2007, at the peak of the prior expansion, and even farther below the rate in 2000, the peak of the expansion before that. There are about 50 million working-age people — native-born and foreign-born — who are neither working nor looking for work. The idea that there is a labor shortage requiring the importation of workers is absurd.

But it is true that the easiest workers to hire and train and employ are already working. The 50 million–strong pool of untapped labor has a disproportionate share of people many employers would rather avoid. But the economy has gotten so hot that even the current excessive levels of immigration don't provide enough easily accessible labor; so, until their lobbyists finagle something in Washington, employers have little choice but to expand their recruitment efforts, which means they're having to hire ex-cons, recovering addicts, the disabled, teenagers, et al.

This won't always work out. Some of the convicts released back into the community by the recent criminal-justice-reform law, for instance, will turn out to be dirtbags who reoffend and have to be locked up again. But those ex-cons who aren't dirtbags and want to start over have a much better shot at success if they can get hired. And increasing immigration will only make that more difficult.

As I wrote in May, a tight labor market is the best social policy. But it's also politically important for a candidate posing as the champion of the working man. Non-college voters in Pennsylvania and Michigan will, no doubt, take a variety of factors into consideration when deciding whether to vote in 2020 and for whom. But does anyone think they'll be more likely to come out for the president if he's increased the importation of foreign workers?

Will Another 3,750 Military Members on the Border Do Any Good?

As for the president's move, it's well to put it into context. As things stand, the National Guard members assigned to the border do a variety of support tasks. The theory is that this frees more Border Patrol agents to do actual patrol and apprehension work rather than administrative duties, however necessary they may be. Some of the military's assignments, such as stationing new impediments like concertina wire or establishing new monitoring posts, are undoubtedly of utility. But let's be honest in acknowledging that such wire can be cut and removed pretty quickly by smugglers and that additional monitoring of illicit crossings is perhaps useful as an intelligence exercise, but little else if, even with the newly freed agents, there aren't enough to actually respond to all of the trespasses.

But here's the crux of the matter: What happens with those agents newly freed from administrative duties? Like their compatriots already patrolling the line, as often as not these days they spend huge amounts of time actually being met by minors and partial family units who walk up to turn themselves in because they know that, as things stand, the U.S. government has tied itself up in knots between bewildering court decisions, lack of detention space, controversies over separation of families, and immigration hearing backlogs that have reached a million cases. The adults with children in tow are counting on being released in very short order, and they're not wrong. Border Patrol agents spend huge amounts of time "processing" such aliens — and acting as pseudo guardians for the minors for a short period of time — until they can be moved along to the Office of Refugee Resettlement or one of its contractors for placement at one of many sites established throughout the nation.

In other words, these agents merely act as cogs in the wheel resettling these aliens who, though they have crossed brazenly and illegally into the United States, will be permitted to remain and work for years.

The Strange Case of Rapper 21 Savage Shows the Weakness of the U Visa Petitioning Process

February 6, 2019

According to Law 360 (partially behind a paywall), his lawyers are also claiming that the arrest was abusive because they have a petition pending to accord legal immigration status to Bin Abraham-Joseph as a victim of crime.

Can you fathom that, especially in the context of his GQ interview? A victim of crime?

But there's a method to this madness. Remember that discussion above about the mandatory detention requirement? There is an exception carved out in the law — pay attention here, because it's directly relevant to the man's case. Section (2) of the detention statute says:

House Democrats Outdo Themselves with an Unserious Border Security Proposal, Part 1
February 4, 2019

The summary of a bill cooked up by Democrats in the House majority reflects just how unserious they are on the whole subject of border security and immigration control.
The Democrats' proposal not only freezes Border Patrol agent resources at current levels, it cuts by $10 million from the funding request for relocation and retention programs. But look at how it's packaged in the summary:
https://cis.org/Cadman/House-Democrats-Outdo-Themselves-Unserious-Border-Security-Proposal-Part-1

I know that aliens in the ATD program often work without authorization because I and others at the Center have spoken to the personnel who run the ATD programs: They acknowledge that they are aware from GPS tracking that these aliens often work without benefit of employment authorization; in fact, they know exactly where. But for the sake of keeping the aliens in the program, they turn a blind eye. How ironic, then, that the U.S. government underwrites a program permitting aliens in removal proceedings to work without authority — which is itself a basis for removal — and in the process continues to act as an incentive for more aliens to pay smugglers to aid them in illegally entering the United States.

Mind you, I don't suggest that there is no utility to ATD; there is, but it's foolish to perceive of it as some kind of cure-all or silver bullet to be used as a substitute for detention across the board. It's nothing of the sort.

In sum, the House Democrats' version of a "smart" border security and immigration control bill is a fraud.

Border-Security-Proposal-Part-2

On Real Walls, Smart Walls, and 'Normandy Fences'
February 4, 2019
The media report that the members of Congress who are negotiating want both the president and Speaker Pelosi to back off and let them arrive at the parameters of a deal (see here and here). But the questions are: What would the conference committee come up with? Can the members of this group be trusted? It's doubtful. Democrats want a tremendous amount and are willing to play sleight of hand with verbiage to get it. Would their "gives" really amount to border security? Also doubtful. And Republicans themselves have repeatedly proven themselves willing to play those semantic word games to give everything away in return for vague assurances of border security that's always just a little beyond the horizon.

Undoubtedly one of the games that will be played with vigor is the debate over replacing a real barrier with the notion of a "smart wall", which will, of course, represent the best that technology has to offer. There are several fundamental problems with this scenario.

First is that "authorization of appropriations" isn't the same as appropriating real money, so if that's what the group comes up with in a bill — promises of enforcement in return for amnesty, it's a phony deal. That's what the Gang of Eight bill notoriously did. There wasn't any real money for technology or agents. It was a classic J. Wellington Wimpy deal: "I'd gladly pay you Tuesday for a hamburger today."

House Judiciary Democrats Go After 'Family Separation Policy'
The tunnel vision of the ruling class
February 6, 2019
During my recent trip to the Southwest border, I learned about yet another hazard those migrants face: criminals who will follow the smugglers until the migrants are dropped off, and then accost, rob, and molest those migrants. I have serious doubts that the smugglers who solicit business in the primary sending countries for those family units disclose these dangers, let alone get signed releases. Attractive nuisance.

And for some reason that I can't quite grasp (aside from not wanting to give credence to anything that Donald Trump says), the press largely does not report on these abuses. More shockingly, I recently had someone (again, not a Trump fan) become angry with me for bringing them up to explain the bases behind the president's border-security funding requests. As John Adams once stated, however: "Facts are stubborn things; and whatever may be our wishes, our inclinations, or the dictates of our passions, they cannot alter the state of facts and evidence." Again, that would be a good thought for the House Judiciary Democrats to keep in mind on February 12.

Why? Well, the Democrats are largely to blame for these loopholes. It was the Janet Reno Department of Justice (DOJ) in the Clinton administration that entered into the Flores settlement agreement. In fact, that agreement is captioned JENNY LISETTE FLORES, et al., Plaintiffs v. JANET RENO, Attorney General of the United States, et al., Defendants.

Border Walls Protect Agents

Death in the dunes

According to the locals with whom I spoke, however, before the wall was erected vehicles carrying drugs and migrants would traverse the steep dunes in order to gain access to Interstate 8. Once on I-8, assuming that they weren't detected at entry, those vehicles were then free to move within the United States. That traffic has largely been stopped.

Know Your Fences

An on-the-ground border perspective

February 4, 2019

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I recently returned from a trip to the western Arizona and eastern California portions of the border with Mexico, where I had the opportunity to view the fences and other barriers that have been erected between the two countries. The architect Louis Sullivan famously remarked that "form follows function", and that is applicable in its truest sense in the manner in which the specific style of barrier that is being used at different parts of the border matches the purpose for which it was erected.

In and around urban areas that are separated by walls (Mexicali, Mexico, and Calexico, Calif.; Los Algodones, Mexico, and Andrade, Calif.; and San Luis Rio Colorado, Mexico, and San Luis, Ariz.), the most common kind of wall was constructed from surplus Vietnam-era landing mats (corrugated metal sheets used for temporary airstrips). Here is an example from the Andrade side:

Fact-Checking the Fact-Checker on Migration from Islamic Countries
A call for corrections in the New York Times
February 7, 2019

The New York Times last month published a "Fact Check" column by Linda Qiu titled "Trump's Baseless Claim About Prayer Rugs Found at the Border".

The column contained numerous inaccurate citations and misleading statements. It also is emblematic of other reporting that is at sharp odds with facts regarding Trump administration assertions that migration is occurring from countries of terrorism concern to the U.S. southern border and that professionals regard it as a homeland security threat. Qiu's fact-check column wrongly states that migration from Islamic countries to the border is unproven and inaccurately cites two government reports in asserting that federal agencies don't regard such migration as a homeland security risk.

DHS Files Many Indictments in an Attack on Birth Tourism

Interestingly, only three indictments, all for Californians with Chinese names, led to arrests; the other 16 "fugitive defendants" appear to be back in China. The three were the programs' operators, one of whom, Dongyuan Li, faced the seizure of her "$2.1 million residence in Irving [Calif.], six vehicles including four Mercedes Benz vehicles, more than $1 million from bank accounts and many gold bars and coins" according to the ICE press release. D.C. Gives Advocacy Group $100,000 for Noncitizen Outreach

The Census Bureau estimates that 14 percent of D.C.'s residents are immigrants. Bowser has long advocated for special privileges for immigrants living in the nation's capital. Her office's press release noted the unique makeup of the program. The funds are available on a first-come, first-serve basis. To access that money, non-citizen residents have to attend a "citizenship workshop" run by the National Immigration Forum, supported by the $100,000 grant. NIF lobbies for higher levels of immigration and argues that we must provide a path to citizenship for all 11 million illegal aliens through "earned legalization".

While $100,000 is only a drop in the bucket of the city's $14.5 billion budget, it is still enough to raise questions. Could this grant have gone to a prominent D.C. charity fighting to improve the city for all residents, citizen and non-citizen alike?

ICE Detains Popular Rapper for Overstaying Visa

February 4, 2019

Despite the humorous memes that flooded social media after his arrest, 21 Savage represents how easy it is for someone to live in the United States with an expired visa. He reportedly entered the country more than 13 years ago. Since then, he has accumulated a net worth of over $10 million through album releases, touring, and endorsements. He's one of the most popular rappers in the country and signed to Epic Records, a subsidiary of Sony.

It is remarkable that it took until now for his status to be revealed. In 2014, he was arrested on felony drug charges. No immigration charges were filed then, and his nationality remained a secret. In 2018, he performed overseas in France, Ireland, Sweden, Finland, and Spain. How was he allowed through customs? Also, why did his record label not recruit a lawyer to formalize or resolve his status? It is not particularly difficult to have a successful music career in the United States as a foreigner. O-1 visas allow aliens "who possess extraordinary ability in the sciences, arts, education, business, or athletics" to reside in the country.

Military on the Border: Appropriate Response to a Crisis
How does a house stand without walls?
By Michael Cutler
FrontPageMag.com, February 7, 2019
It is astonishing that anyone would actually believe that protecting America and Americans from the entry of uninspected aliens and cargo is a “political ploy.”

Is the oath of office the President, Vice President or members of Congress take a political ploy?

In point of fact, the political foes of the border wall are playing politics with national security, public safety, public health and the livelihoods of American and lawful immigrant workers.

Even though prior administrations, including those of George W. Bush and Barak Obama, have sent military units to back up the Border Patrol, the fact that President Trump would take this action incites the knee-jerk deprecatory reactions of his foes.

It's Time for Ingrates to Go

By Michelle Malkin

TPS designees won three-year renewable passes to live and work here, travel freely, and enjoy immunity from detention or deportation. Participants were originally required to provide proof that they arrived here on an eligible date, committed no more than two misdemeanors and no felonies, and maintained a continuous presence in the country. But the programs are dangerously rife with unchecked document fraud, including unknown numbers of TPS winners who have used multiple aliases and faked their country of origin to qualify.

And without a fully functioning biometric entry-exit database in place to track temporary foreign visitors, there's no way to track all the TPS enrollees.

As I've reported repeatedly over the past quarter century, these "temporary" amnesties have become endless, interminable residency plans for unlawful border crossers, visa overstayers, and deportation evaders from around the world. They are not, and never were, entitled to be here. Entry into our country is a privilege, not a right. That's not "hateful." It's the stance that every modern, industrialized sovereign nation takes toward non-citizens.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Trump is the first commander in chief to challenge the temporary-in-name-only farce since the creation of the program. At least 3,700 Liberians like Clark have been here since 1991 on TPS because of civil wars that ended 16 years ago. President Bill Clinton first ordered Deferred Enforced Departure (discretionary deportation delays) for this group in 1999, arguing that the country was still unstable. Nineteen years later, after multiple extensions by Presidents Bush and Obama, Trump finally determined that it was safe for these guests to return to their homeland.

But instead of thanks and farewell, the beneficiaries of our country's humanitarian TPS and DED policies like Linda Clark and their Democratic enablers like Representative Omar are clinging bitterly and hurling invectives at leaders who take our laws and borders seriously. The disgruntled "victims" have an army of ACLU lawyers helping them sue to avoid deportation and a phalanx of open-borders journalists to drum up public sympathy for their plights. Next week, they'll be marching on Washington, pounding their drums and shaking their fists as they demand green cards and citizenship.

In Ocasio-Cortez's District, MS-13 Kills While She Calls to Disband ICE

Ocasio-Cortez's deeply unserious call to abolish ICE is an invitation for more murder and crime in her own backyard.

By David Marcus

The Federalist, February 7, 2019

Importantly, many, if not most of the victims of these gangs are themselves immigrants, often people who are too afraid to go to authorities, in part because of over-the-top rhetoric regarding those authorities, offered by progressives like Ocasio-Cortez.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Staten Island City Councilman Joe Borelli, writing in the New York Daily News, points out that, "The NYPD's own data shows that while crime is on the decline citywide, the 110th Precinct, comprising Corona and Elmhurst, still holds some of the most significant pockets of criminal activity in New York." Borelli listed several successful interventions by ICE and told the Federalist, "It's abundantly clear that a 'cooperate with ICE' movement has already noted significant positive results for New York City. Trying to abolish an agency that has already proved its worth is beyond absurd, even for AOC."

Can Moderate Dems Talk Pelosi Out of Extreme Border Position?

By Byron York

Townhall.com, February 6, 2019

Why are the intra-Democratic talks so critical? Because Republicans already agree on the key components of a border security package. They are united behind the need for a border barrier, and they are united behind the other provisions -- drug detection technology for ports of entry, more immigration judges, humanitarian aid for detained migrants -- that many members of both parties support as part of a comprehensive border security policy. Republicans are already there.

The question is whether Pelosi can be talked down from her my-way-or-the-highway position.

At this point, our only hope may be for the border states to secede from the Union and form their own nation, so that we can send troops to build them a wall. They could call their new country "YouMustGoBackistan."

Democrats and the media (and 90 percent of Republicans) believe the president has the authority to use the military to build walls, schools, hospitals and water purification systems — anywhere but here.

They believe the president has the authority to bomb innocent Syrians because Ivanka cried.

The one thing they say the commander in chief cannot do is deploy the military in defense of the United States of America.

Forget About Trump's New Immigration Position. He Will

By Ramesh Ponnuru

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

There's a case for Trump's 2017-18 position that legal immigration levels should be cut. There's a case for his position Tuesday night that the levels should be raised. Obviously, you can't take both views simultaneously. Perhaps the way to make sense of his shift from the first to the second is to assume that Trump has decided to give up on cutting legal immigration in order to achieve his more important goal of sealing the southern border — that he is tacitly admitting that his previous stance was a tactical mistake.

Irrational Dems Stand in Way of Immigration Compromise

By Sen. Rick Scott

The Lowell Sun, February 2, 2019

In a post-election survey of 1,014 Hispanic voters in Florida, my campaign asked this question: Thinking about our nation's immigration laws, do you think we need stricter or looser enforcement of these laws?

Sixty-nine percent of the respondents said we need stricter enforcement of our immigration laws, while only 29 percent preferred looser enforcement. Hispanic Americans want our borders secured.

Securing our borders with a physical barriers is not a partisan issue, it's a common-sense issue. Likewise, once we agree to secure our borders, it is only common sense to deal fairly and justly with the dreamers.

There is only one thing standing in the way of this common-sense solution for America: Irrational and clouded thinking motivated by hate from Democratic leaders in Washington.

How Immigration Harms Native Blacks and Urban Opportunity Act Cautions

EMPLOYMENT: Whether the jobs categories are unskilled or require a high skill-set, this nation has a long history of using immigrants to displace Black labor in the workplace. As examples: the U.S. Depart. Of Commerce reported that when the Civil War ended, of the 120,000 skilled craftsmen and artisans, over 100,000 of them were Black Americans. By the mid-1890s, new immigration policies bought in 26 million immigrants who blocked Black opportunities and totally displaced them in skilled crafts, farming and businesses. Today, nearly 50 percent of the workers who fill highly technical jobs are immigrants recruited and hired under the H-1B visa program for both government and private corporations. Since 2007, when Blacks had a national structural unemployment rate of 35 percent, and Hispanic unemployment was 4.5 percent, approximately 48 percent of all new hires were Hispanics immigrants. Government and private businesses have yet to target Blacks for employment opportunities as they do for immigrants.

Pelosi and Other Democrats Caving to Border Wall Funding?
By Taylor Day
American Thinker, February 8, 2019
Chances are strong that it will. Nancy says that as the negotiations continue, "left to their own devices," an agreement will be reached as early as Friday. Democratic rep from N.Y. Nina Lowey, who leads the conference committee, told reporters negotiations are happening and could be settled in enough time for the House and Senate to vote on new appropriation bills before the February 15 deadline.

In the Washington Post article, Illinois Democrat Dick Durbin, who is also on this committee, said he believes that the "highest funding priority should be technology to intercept drugs at the border — not physical barriers." Durbin also stated that border experts explained in a meeting why a wall is necessary and, technically, itself technology that will stop drugs, but Democrats still want to cling to their idea that it's not.

We're About to Have a HUGE National Emergency on Our Borders: POTUS Trump Should Declare One Now
By Jon Dougherty
The National Sentinel, February 8, 2019
PBS interviewed local reporters in Cancun as well as a former police officer; the public network found that cartels offered payments of $26,000 compared to a soldier's salary of about $600 per month.

Some analysts were hopeful that Mexico's new president, Andrés Manuel López Obrador, would usher in changes and reforms that will curb the influence of the cartels and the violence they produce. But so far, there is little reason for optimism.

"Obrador's amnesty proposal, a way to attack cartel funding and offer a peaceful alternative for certain low ranking and non-violent cartel members, is idealistic but naive," Grinberg writes.

Nancy Pelosi Triples Down on 'No Money' for Border Wall, But Trump Won't Need Her Permission — or National Emergency — to Build It

By Jon Dougherty

Many analysts believe that means he's set to declare a national emergency to secure the funds in order to begin construction on new segments of border wall, a declaration that will likely face a legal challenge.

But there is another way for POTUS to get his funding and it, too, bypasses an obstructionist House Speaker.

In congressional testimony this week that wasn't widely reported, a top Defense Department official told lawmakers that the president can use existing law — and DoD funding — to begin building portions of a border wall without even a declaration of national emergency, The Western Journal reported.

Republican Mayor Allocates $70,000 to Hire City "Immigrant Affairs Manager"

Judicial Watch Corruption Chronicles, February 5, 2019

It is unclear how much taxpayer money California's second largest city, San Diego, will end up spending to accommodate immigrants. Mayor Kevin Faulconer announced the new $70,000 position this week at a press conference on the grounds of a local museum dedicated to celebrating America's cultural diversity. "The preservation and presentation of the immigrant experience in the United States is our central commitment," according to the museum's website. At the press conference Faulconer, who previously served on the city council, said this: "Immigrants from around the globe help define our city. San Diego has long been a destination for people in search of opportunity, refugees looking to rebuild their lives, and new citizens who are proud to call America home. San Diego's economy, workforce and future growth are connected to our ability to welcome new Americans into our community."

Let's take a look at the proposals in the integration blueprint that the city's new immigrant affairs manager is supposed to help implement. They include creating economic opportunity for immigrants, tweaking education to accommodate them, granting them inclusive access to taxpayer-funded services, improving civic engagement, and safe communities. The city is supposed to facilitate the career advancement of immigrants through job placement, rights protection, and inclusive recruitment. This is to include promoting immigrant entrepreneurship, financial literacy among newcomers, and the reduction of barriers toward home ownership. Not sure how that's going to happen since San Diego is one of the nation's most expensive cities to live in with among the highest home prices.

Trump Didn't 'Cave' on the Wall. He's Advancing in Another Direction.

By Star Parker

The Daily Signal, January 30, 2019

Now, rather than "caving," Trump is making a new effort—advancing in another direction—to get the nation's business done. He's signed an order to re-open the government for three weeks to open the door for negotiation.

In his remarks, the president noted, "In the last two years, ICE officers arrested a total of 226,000 criminal aliens inside the United States." In each of the past three months, he said, there were "60,000 apprehensions at our southern border."

As of 2016, there were 10.7 million illegal immigrants in our nation, 7.8 million of which are in our workforce. Of the 10.7 million, two-thirds have been in the U.S. for more than 10 years.

The Times' Absurd Bid to Downplay MS-13's Horrors

The New York Post, February 7, 2019

Times reporters Ali Winston and Ali Watkins admit Trump "could not have choreographed a better talking point" than Sunday's alleged murder by reputed MS-13er Ramiro Gutierrez, an undocumented immigrant with a long arrest record, on a No. 7 subway platform in Queens.

But then they warn that Trump left out “an important nuance,” namely that “despite repeated prosecutions,” MS-13 and the 18th Street gang (the rival outfit the murder victim belonged to) have been active in the city “for two decades.”

Well, thanks, Sherlock. Guess that makes it OK that thugs who routinely hack both innocents and rivals to death with machetes are able to regularly enter this country illegally.

AOC and Pals: Abolish ICE

By R. Cort Kirkwood

The New American, February 8, 2019

Speaking at an event organized by the subversive MoveOn.org, AOC opined that ICE and its enforcement of immigration law “is one of the most urgent moral issues and crises that we have in America right now. This is not a political issue. Children dying in detention centers should not be a partisan concern. It should be a universal concern for every American in the United States.”

She claimed the president was against all immigration, as the video posted at Breitbart.com shows, and that he lied during his State of the Union address in saying he supported legal immigration. She also defamed Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen, declaring she “has no idea when she goes in front of a hearing how many children are dying in her own care, under her own watch.”

Of course, no children have died in Nielsen’s care or “under her own watch” — a leftist lie peddled to hide the truth that reckless parents are at fault. Children who died “in the custody” of ICE did not die because of ICE, but because their parents irresponsibly dragged them across the border, hoping the children would bolster a false asylum claim. One child died of the flu, which he contracted on his journey, because his father refused medical care.

Democrats Have a Free Ride for Human-Traffickers in Their Immigration Proposal
By Monica Showalter
AmericanThinker, February 4, 2019
Now ostensibly, the logic is that moms and kids should never be separated as they await trial over mom's illegal entry into the U.S. (Why such moms are not prosecuted for child endangerment, given the dangers an illegal border crossing involves, is not addressed.)

The problem with it is that it incentivizes not just illegal immigration, but child-trafficking. That, as Breitbart argues, is going to lead not just to more unwed mothers and their kids making illegal entry, but to cartel members ramping up their child kidnapping and human-trafficking operations, given that nobody has to prove that that baby on her hip is actually hers. Every border crossing with a kid would mean instant catch and release. Every child of an illegal border-crosser would amount to a free ticket in.

The Hidden State of Illegalia

By Gary Gindler

Gary Gindler Chronicles, February 4, 2019

Unfortunately, most Americans are not aware of such state. No, it is not the 51st state in the Union; instead, it is a satellite substate within every legitimate state of the Union.

For example, in the state of California alone, there are about 1.2 million children born out of "tourism" of pregnant illegal immigrants. It is official hospital data. For comparison, the population of the legitimate state of Wyoming is about 600 thousand people.

That is, inside the state of California there is another substate – the State of Illegalia – whose population is twice the state of Wyoming.

However, California's State of Illegalia is not alone. All states of the Union contain within them, hidden from prying eyes, substates of Illegalia. In Illinois, there are 174 thousand illegal children. For comparison, in the popular among legal immigrants Chicago North Shore area, contains just half of the Illegalia's population – 86 thousand – lives. In the state of New York, there are 224 thousand such children. For comparison – only 36 thousand people live in the popular among legal immigrants Brighton Beach area of New York City.

Trump Stands by His SOTU Demand for 'Largest Numbers Ever' of Legal Immigration: 'We Need People'
By Chris Menahan
InformationLiberation, February 7, 2019
Currently, the U.S. imports more than a million legal immigrants annually, with the vast majority deriving from chain migration, whereby newly naturalized citizens can bring an unlimited number of foreign relatives to the country. In 2017, the foreign-born population reached a record high of 44.5 million.

The U.S. is on track to import about 15 million new foreign-born voters in the next two decades should current legal immigration levels continue. Those 15 million new foreign-born voters include about eight million who will arrive in the country through chain migration. This booming legal immigrant population has not only rapidly shifted the demographics of the nation, but research indicates it will hand over all electoral dominance to Democrats in a matter of decades.

About That Statistic of "Immigrants" Committing Fewer Crimes Than Citizens
By Jazz Shaw
HotAir.com, February 6, 2019

How many times have you heard the carefully worded claims from media "experts" about how immigrants are less likely to commit crimes than citizens? If you follow the news at all closely I'm guessing it's been fairly often. Of course, the careful wording is required so they don't have to invoke the phrase "illegal immigrants" (i.e. illegal aliens) and ruin their narrative.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A new study may help put that debate to rest. Results produced by the Federation for American Immigration Reform, using statistics from prisons and jails, found that illegal aliens are roughly four times as likely to commit crimes than citizens. (Washington Times)

Despite What You've Heard, Construction on the Wall Is Starting

By Jazz Shaw

HotAir.com, February 5, 2019

There's no magical money tree that suddenly sprouted in the White House Rose Garden and this isn't some sort of end-around run on Congress. Almost a year ago, before everything turned into the Trump vs Pelosi showdown at the O.K. Corral, Congress approved a package of $600 million to build 33 miles of walls and fencing in Texas along the Rio Grande Valley. Since that was already in the bank, Customs and Border Patrol is moving forward with the project.

Since most of this will be taking place on federal land, the White House gets to avoid all the unpleasantness of using eminent domain on recalcitrant landowners. These are also areas that CBP previously identified as priority spots where too many illegal aliens were coming across. In that sense, it's a positive sign of progress, but there's still far too much more to be done.

A History of the Southern Border

The Week, February 2, 2019

When did the fences go up?

The first major physical barriers were constructed in the 1990s under Presidents

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

George H.W. Bush and Bill Clinton. They included a 14-mile-long fence separating San Diego and Tijuana, built using steel helicopter landing pads left over from the Vietnam War. The building spree intensified after the 9/11 attacks sparked fears of terrorists crossing the border: The Secure Fence Act, signed by President George W. Bush in 2006, added 548 miles of fencing at a cost of $2.3 billion. Another 137 additional miles of fencing were erected under President Barack Obama. Today, just over 700 miles of the border is fenced off.

Did the strategy work?

To a large degree. The fences have no doubt made it harder to cross the border, especially in populated areas. They're one reason 310,000 migrants were apprehended at the southern border in 2017, down from a peak of 1.6 million in 2000.

Immigration Makes Texas Richer
By Michael Taylor
The San Antonio Express-News, February 8, 2019

The relationship between economic growth, government finances and immigration is complex and complicated to measure. To add to the complexity, we have both documented and undocumented immigrants entering the state economy.

I've found a number of data points on immigration interesting. Let's start with state government finances and what I'll assume is the more controversial group, undocumented immigrants.

In 2006, the Texas comptroller published a report that estimated the economic effects of immigration on public finances in Texas. One of its key takeaways was that undocumented immigrants provide a net positive impact on the Texas economy.

There Is a Utah Way to Make a Deal on Immigration

By Ali Noorani

The Salt Lake City Tribune, February 8, 2019

So, what would a bipartisan deal look like?

We also need to make sure the 2,600 immigrants with Temporary Protected Status (TPS) in Utah can remain in the country. Without them, the Center for American Progress estimates that the state would lose $130.8 million in annual GDP.

Finally, a deal would increase security at the U.S.-Mexico border. Real challenges demand our attention. Customs and Border Protection data show that in fiscal year 2018 through August, more than seven times as many illegal drugs were seized at ports of entry than between them. We need to incorporate new and improved technology, improve the existing border infrastructure, and add more personnel at ports of entry.

What we don't need is a full-border wall.

America's Shameful History of Border Cruelty

By Shikha Dalmia

The Week, February 1, 2019

President Dwight Eisenhower's notorious Operation Wetback in 1954 took matters to a whole new level. A former general, Eisenhower hired military brass to use military tactics not just at the border but in the interior — inaugurating the wretched policy of interior enforcement — rounding up and mass deporting over 800,000 unauthorized Mexicans in one fell swoop.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But Eisenhower, to his credit, also attempted to address the undocumented problem at its root by expanding the bracero — guest worker — program to allow more Mexicans to legally work in the United States. That helped reduce abuse — until President Lyndon Johnson, the paragon of progressive virtue, scrapped the program in 1965, setting the stage for future crackdowns and renewed abuse that provides an important backdrop to the horrors we are witnessing today.

PANEL: Projecting the Impact of Immigration on the U.S. Population

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

WASHINGTON, D.C. (February 11, 2018) – The Center for Immigration Studies will host a panel discussion on Thursday, February 14, focusing on the impact of immigration on both population growth and the working-age share of America's population. The starting point for conversation will be the recent report by the Center's Director of Research, Dr. Steven Camarota.

Immigration's impact on the future size of a nation's population is obvious. Moreover, because immigrants tend to arrive at relatively young ages and have larger families on average than the native-born, it should have a positive impact on the nation's age structure. But how big is the effect? By varying the level of immigration in the Census Bureau's most recent projection, this analysis explores the impact of immigration on both the size and age structure of the U.S. population.

WHAT: Panel discussion on immigration's impact on population growth, particularly the working-age population
WHEN: Thursday, February 14, 2019 at 9:30 a.m.
WHERE: National Press Club, Murrow Room, 529 14th St. NW, 13th Floor, Washington, D.C.

The History of the Flores Settlement

How the current family separation crisis started and what can be done

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (February 11, 2019) – A new report from the Center for Immigration Studies analyzes how a 1997 legal settlement called the Flores Settlement helped to crack open U.S. detention laws and directly lead to today's "family separation" asylum crisis. By requiring that all alien minors in detention are held no longer than 20 days, Flores leaves DHS with only two options: Either catch-and-release entire families, or "separate" parents from children by holding the parents for detention and prosecution after their children are released.

Matt Sussis, the Center's Assistant Director of Communications and the author of the report, said, "There is a concerted effort to weaken U.S. detention laws, but it's not new. In 1997, the Clinton administration's decision to sign the Flores Settlement was done with the knowledge that such a settlement could be drastically expanded by activist judges--as has been the case. Fortunately, Congress has the power to overturn the settlement and fix this crisis."

View the full report: https://cis.org/Report/History-Flores-Settlement

Key takeaways:

- The consequences of the Flores settlement, a 1997 agreement between immigration activist groups and the government, have been central to the debates over President Trump's "zero-tolerance" policy at the border and accusations of family separations. A full understanding of this agreement requires understanding its history.
- Beginning in 1985, the activist groups began a series of lawsuits against the federal government over its perceived mistreatment of alien minors in detention facilities (notably a 15-year-old Salvadoran girl named Jenny Flores), culminating in a consent decree, the Flores settlement, more than a decade later.
- This 1997 settlement led to the government agreeing to set immigration detention standards for unaccompanied alien children (UACs), particularly regarding facility conditions and the timing and terms of the UACs' release.
- When the government entered into the Flores settlement agreement, its stated intention was to finally resolve years of litigation against the INS, but this is only partially true. Recent comments and actions by Clinton administration officials indicate that they were at least partially motivated by a desire to cooperate with the activist plaintiffs to loosen asylum rules.
- Since 1997, Flores has been significantly expanded upon by federal judges with loose border proclivities, and is now interpreted to mean that all minors in detention — accompanied by their parents or not — cannot be held for more than 20 days.

- Partially driven by Flores, the number of apprehended aliens who claim credible fear (the first step in applying for asylum) has soared — up 67 percent in FY 18 vs. FY 17, and up over 10-fold from a decade ago. Moreover, only 3.5 percent of UACs are ever removed, according to DHS.
- Congress could pass a law superseding Flores, but has yet to do so.

Central American Caravans: Are these a threat to US border security?

1:00–3:00 p.m. EST, Tuesday, February 12, 2019

Washington, DC 20045
https://www.eventbrite.com/e/central-american-caravans-are-these-a-threat-to-us-border-security-tickets-54985108941

Description: Last year news reports concerning an estimated 7,200-person migrant caravan traveling from Central America to the US southwest border made headlines worldwide. This year, more Central American caravans have formed and are en route to the border. The bulk of the media coverage and resulting public debate, however, failed to adequately address the implications to US and regional security. The narratives focused primarily on the humanitarian plights of migrants; this was contrasted by calls for a border wall combined with military deployments to the border. Meanwhile, scant attention has been paid to the migrant caravans themselves. Many questions about the migrant caravans from Central America largely remain unanswered. Who specifically is inspiring, organizing, and financing the caravans? Are they only comprised of Central Americans? Are US and regional governments prepared for this new phenomenon?

Please join SFS for a thoughtful and informative policy discussion to analyze the facts regarding this controversial issue and potential US policy solutions.

Description: The Center for Immigration Studies will host a panel discussion on , focusing on the . The starting point for conversation will be the recent report by the Center's Director of Research, Dr. Steven Camarota.

Immigration's impact on the future size of a nation's population is obvious. Moreover, because immigrants tend to arrive at relatively young ages and have larger families on average than the native-born, it should have a positive impact on the nation's age structure. But how big is the effect? By varying the level of immigration in the Census Bureau's most recent projection, this analysis explores the impact of immigration on both the size and age structure of the U.S. population.

#CatoConnects: Religion and Attitudes about Immigration, Race, and Identities

4:30 p.m. ES, February 20, 2019
Cato Institute
1000 Massachusetts Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20001-5403
https://www.cato.org/events/catoconnects-religion-attitudes-about-immigration-race-identies

Description: Increasing political polarization and rising conflict over identity, race relations, immigration, and LGBT rights have left the American political landscape with two increasingly divided extremes and a seemingly elusive moderate middle. Many Americans have come to view religious institutions as a major contributor to this ever-increasing divide — a catalyst for increased intergroup societal conflict rather than a possible cure.

However, new research by Cato Institute Director of Polling Emily Ekins finds that religious participation may moderate conservatives' attitudes on other important culture war issues, particularly matters of race, immigration, and identity.

In Religious Trump Voters: How Faith Moderates Attitudes about Immigration, Race, and Identity, Ekins finds that Trump voters who attend church regularly are more likely than nonreligious Trump voters to have warmer feelings toward racial and religious minorities, to be more supportive of immigration and trade, and to be more concerned about poverty. These data are important because they demonstrate that private institutions in civil society can have a positive effect on social conflict and can reduce political polarization.

On Wednesday, February 20, join a LIVE discussion on the moderating influences of religious faith on attitudes about immigration, race, and identity,

Certificate program course in International Migration Studies

XCPD-703 - Newcomers to Citizens: Immigrant Integration

9:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Wednesday-Friday, February 25-27, 2019
Georgetown University School of Continuing Studies
640 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Room C227
Washington, DC 20001
https://portal.scs.georgetown.edu/search/publicCourseSearchDetails.do?method=load&courseId=14536

Course Description: With a record 200 million people living outside their country of birth, immigration is a global phenomenon with profound demographic, economic, social, and political implications for both sending and receiving countries. The debate over immigration law and policy has become increasingly volatile and, in some instances, characterized by misinformation, hate, and xenophobia. Beyond the politics of immigration, genuine challenges to immigrant integration abound. Successful integration of immigrants is critical to the long-term prosperity of host countries that rely on immigrants as workers, consumers, taxpayers, innovators, and entrepreneurs in light of their aging native-born populations and lower birth rates. In this course we will explore integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving countries--such as the United States and Canada and new countries of permanent immigration such as France, Germany, the United Kingdom. We will raise questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity. We will also discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism, paradigms that challenge an integrationist reading of migration. Using case studies from North America and Europe we will pay special attention to the different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation on their road from newcomers to citizens.

Course Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Discuss the integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving and source countries.
* Recognize questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity.
* Discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism.
* Compare different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation.

Notes: This course is an open enrollment course. No application is required and registration is available by clicking "Add to Cart." Current students must register with their Georgetown NetID and password. New students will be prompted to create an account prior to registration.

Tuition: $995.00, 24 contract hours

CRS Seminar: Humanitarian Series I

Borders, migration, exclusion: The role of civil society and humanitarian aid in an increasingly polarized political context

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1:00-2:30 p.m., Wednesday, February 27, 2019
York University Center for Refugee Studies
626 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-humanitarian-series-i?instance_id=146

Speaker:
Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

Description: The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Migration, Identity and Politics in Europe

International Emerging Scholars' Workshop

8:30 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Friday March 1, 2019
Richcraft Hall, Second Floor Conference Rooms
Carleton University, Centre for European Studies

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1104 Dunton Tower
1125 Colonel By Drive
Ottawa, ON, K1S 5B6
https://carleton.ca/ces/cu-events/migration-identity-and-politics-in-europe/

Description: Migration has played a central role in constituting Europe and facilitating European integration and identity. Most Europeans have experiences of migration in their own family histories. Yet, across Europe, we see the term "migrant" employed in public discourse as code for "foreigner" standing in opposition to "European." In recent years, few issues have been more divisive and politicized in European politics than responses to the challenges of migration and refugees.

The Centre for Europe Studies – Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence at Carleton University is organizing a one-day conference that will illuminate the nexus between migration, identity, and politics in Europe. Exploring historical and current cases drawing on disciplinary approaches from history, political science, anthropology, cultural studies, sociology and geography, this event will showcase new perspectives and approaches to European migration studies from international emerging scholars and graduate students.

The result is a degradation of access to adequate protection and humanitarian assistance, as well as the mechanisms they use to reach target destinations. Citizenship health inequalities across the US: State-level immigrant policies and health care access

https://ccis.ucsd.edu/_files/Event%20Flyers-Programs-Agendas/Event%20Flyer%20-%20Young%203-13-19.pdf

Speaker:
Maria-Elena De Trinidad Young, PhD, MPH
Project Director, Research on Immigrant Health and State Policy (RIGHTS) Study at the Center for Health Policy Research, University of California, Los Angeles
Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow, UC Merced

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

Crisis, what (refugee) crisis? The business of 'business-as-usual' in EU migration governance

4700 Keele Street, Toronto

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Speaker:
Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

Description: Australia introduced mandatory immigration detention of all non-citizens, without a visa or other legal right to remain in Australia, in 1992. The policy has led to irreparable harm of thousands of men, women and children

As immigration detention becomes more prevalent globally, including in the US, Australia's recent history with the incarceration of migrants and refugees serves as a warning of the damaging effect of this policy. In their latest analysis of Census Bureau projections, Steven Camarota and Karen Zeigler estimate that net immigration will add 75 million to the population by 2060, accounting for 95 percent of the nation's population increase. Despite such transformative growth, this high level of immigration will do little to increase the size of the working-age population or the ratio of potential workers to those of retirement age.

The Worst Provision in the Funding Bill

Think about the Children

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

WASHINGTON, D.C. (February 16, 2019) – New analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies highlights the worst provision in the government funding bill which was recently signed by President Trump. Section 224 of the bill states that Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) would not be able to detain or remove any alien who it learns is the sponsor or "potential sponsor" of an unaccompanied minor, or who shares a household with a sponsor/potential sponsor, based on information provided to ICE from Health and Human Services (HHS).

Read the full analysis: https://cis.org/Arthur/Worst-Provision-Funding-Bill

Andrew Arthur, the Center's Resident Fellow in Law and Policy and the author of the analysis, said, "This section is essentially a new sanctuary provision to protect otherwise removable aliens. Even worse, this section will encourage parents and adults to pay smugglers to import minors, putting children in the hands of some of the world's most vile criminals."

Many, if not most, UACs are not truly "unaccompanied", because they have parents or legal guardians in the United States and have themselves entered the United States illegally with the assistance, if not at the insistence, of that parent or legal guardian using a smuggler. Section 224 eliminates any danger for those parents and legal guardians to do so. In fact, it makes the United States government a co-conspirator in the criminal scheme between the smuggler and the parent/guardian.

What's Happening at the Center

In his recent commentary, Mark Krikorian explains that the newly signed spending bill contains distasteful immigration provisions that were inserted at the last minute. These include prohibitions on border barriers in a range of public parks and spaces and local government veto power over construction. More troubling, is the impunity from deportation that the bill gives to anyone who facilitates the smuggling of minors. This will increase illegal crossings and tragedies at the border and will create an incentive for illegal aliens already here to use Central American children as human shields against deportation.

Mexico's Dispersal of Latest Caravan Simply Frees Migrants to Cross the U.S. Border Less Visibly

Photos & videos of Piedras Negras detention facility

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

PIEDRAS NEGRAS, Mexico (February 18, 2019) — The Center for Immigration Studies recently visited the improvised migrant shelter in Piedras Negras, Mexico, holding members of latest migrant caravan to approach the U.S. border. The group, mostly Hondurans, had been temporarily halted by the Mexican government in the border town of Piedras Negras, across from Eagle Pass, Texas. But the state of Coahuila has announced that it will close the improvised shelter this week.

Todd Bensman, the Center's Senior National Security Fellow and author of the report, said, "The large caravan was not able to storm the U.S. border earlier this month because was temporarily halted by the Mexican government. But these migrants will soon just head to the border in smaller groups that do not receive media attention. They will breach the border and take advantage of the catch-and-release asylum loophole to join the population of 11 million illegal aliens already in the U.S. This will certainly encourage the next caravan, and the next, and the next."

The Mexican government prevented the 2,000-member caravan from rushing the U.S. border en masse by detaining them in a ceramics factory, surrounding it with federal troops and state and local police forces. The Mexican government decision to release them follows several riots and disturbances by those demanding release to the U.S. border.

View the full report at: https://cis.org/Bensman/Mexicos-Dispersal-Latest-Caravan-Simply-Frees-Migrants-Cross-US-Border-Less-Visibly

According to Bensman, "For public relations purposes, Mexico appears to be doing the Americans a big favor by stopping and detaining the thousands of Central Americans arriving in caravans. But the reality is that Mexico, under the auspices of a special visa program, is simply breaking up the caravans into small amorphous groups of migrants who in all likelihood will, just a little bit later, make their separate ways to other parts of the U.S. border, where they'll all eventually cross without a 'caravan' identity."

Bensman observed the release process that was underway.

During the visit to the shelter last Thursday, CIS observed that Mexican officials had provided food, medical treatment, big screen televisions showing Netflix movies, access to plentiful personal hygiene supplies, internet access, regularly cleaned shower areas and portable toilet facilities, as well as access to doctors and dentists. Young children had soccer balls and space to play the game. Teenagers had areas for music and dancing. A number of entrepreneurs ran small table-top convenience stores selling food items.

VIDEO: Projecting the Impact of Immigration on the U.S. Population

"Immigration will add 75 million people to the U.S. population in four decades"

WASHINGTON, D.C. (February 19, 2019) - Video and transcript are now available of the recent Center for Immigration Studies panel discussion regarding immigration's impact on U.S. population growth and the working-age share of the population.

The panel centered around a recent report by Steven Camarota, the Center's Director of Research, which found that despite adding 75 million people to the U.S. population by 2060, changing immigration levels will do little to stop the country from aging and maintain the working-age share of the population. Camarota noted that "under current census projections, the working-age (16-64) share of the population in 2060 would be 59 percent, but it would still be 58 percent in a population-stabilization scenario where we cut immigration by two-thirds."

View the video: https://cis.org/Video/Panel-Projecting-Impact-Immigration-US-Population
View the transcript: https://cis.org/Transcript/Panel-Projecting-Impact-Immigration-US-Population

Dr. B. Lindsay Lowell, a Visiting Researcher at the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University, argued that in addition to the numbers, policymakers ought to consider the skill sets of the migrants coming in. He said, "Skills matter a lot. If you really want to offset fiscal deficits to the United States, it's not just immigrants. It has to be pretty much skilled immigrants. You know, that's one bottom line that comes out of a lot of research."

Nicholas Eberstadt, the Henry Wendt Chair in Political Economy at the American Enterprise Institute, agreed that immigration alone would not be able to solve the decline in the proportion of the working-age population in the country. "It would have taken more than the population of the world to maintain South Korea's then-youthful population structure for 60 or 70 years in the future. It just doesn't work. So we know that." However, he argued that raising the retirement age would do more to affect the working-age share than slashing immigration would. "Even a zero-immigration future for the United States would end up with a higher proportion of so-called working-age population by raising retirement age by two years than the Census Bureau's autopilot assumption of migration," said Eberstadt.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Camarota concluded the panel by casting doubt on the theory that there is a labor shortage which would necessitate high levels of immigration in certain categories: "Employers are constantly saying we need nannies, maids, busboys, construction labor constantly. Real wages in all those categories haven't grown. Real wages for workers with that level of education hasn't grown."

On Immigration, Trump Needs to Focus on the Numbers

For all the fuss about the border, we're missing the big question.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (February 19, 2019) [From an article appearing in National Review Online] – For all the talk about the border, the biggest issue when it comes to immigration is not welfare or illegal immigration per se; it is the total number of immigrants settling in the country, legally or illegally. While Democrats focus on amnesty, business associations endlessly push for ever more guest workers — and the media happily support both. But the president should always bring the discussion back to the numbers. Both the national interest and his political future depend on it.

View the full article by the Center for Immigration Studies' Director of Research, Steven Camarota: https://www.nationalreview.com/2019/02/immigration-total-amount-must-be-reduced-not-just-illegals/

The reason numbers are by far the most important immigration issue is that all the effects of immigration stem directly from the scale of immigration — cultural, political, social, economic, and fiscal. And the scale of contemporary immigration is truly enormous. The latest data indicate that there are about 45 million legal and illegal immigrants — roughly 34 million of whom are legal. About l.7 million new legal and illegal immigrants settle in the country each year. The total number of immigrants (legal and illegal) in the country has doubled since 1990, tripled since 1980, and quadrupled since 1970. As a share of the population, about one in seven U.S. residents is now a legal or illegal immigrant — the highest percentage in 107 years.

Pew Research has estimated that since 1965 (when the law was liberalized) immigration has added 72 million people to the U.S. population. That's post-1965 immigrants and their progeny. An analysis of the latest Census Bureau projections indicates that future immigration will add another 75 million by 2060. That means that future immigrants and their descendants will add a population the size of France in just four decades. In many parts of America now, there are so many immigrants that the incentive to learn English or adopt American culture is greatly reduced. Americans rightly sense that the numbers are overwhelming the assimilation process.

They also sense also sense that immigration is remaking the political balance by adding millions of new voters who are voting Democratic by about 2 to 1. The long-term political impact of legal immigration is very large. After all, the president won immigrant-heavy Florida by only about 100,000 votes. Every single year we give out 1.1 million new green cards — which allow citizenship in 3 or 5 years.

Lastly, Americans can sense that there is no labor shortage when real wages are no higher now than they were in 1978. Sure, unemployment is historically low, yet most people realize this is not the whole story. Unemployment includes only those who looked for a job in the last four weeks. At the end of 2018, 54.3 million working-age Americans (ages 16 to 64, excluding prisoners) were out of the labor force entirely, meaning they were neither working nor looking for work, and so don't show up in the unemployment numbers. The overall labor-force participation rate, the share who are working or looking for work, has not changed that much in recent years, especially for Trump voters — native-born people without a college degree.

For the sake of the country and his reelection, the people who voted for Trump need to be heard on immigration. There is no one better suited to do this than the president himself.

Reducing Access Disparities in California by Insuring Low-income Undocumented Immigrants

12:00-1:00 p.m., Tuesday, February 19, 2019
UCLA Center for Health Policy Research
10960 Wilshire Blvd., Ste. 1550
Los Angeles, CA 90024
http://healthpolicy.ucla.edu/newsroom/press-releases/pages/details.aspx?NewsID=263

Description: The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act did not extend eligibility for health coverage to undocumented populations, and federal policy prohibits coverage of undocumented individuals under Medicaid using federal funds. However, California has extended Medi-Cal, the state's version of Medicaid, to undocumented children using state funds, and efforts to extend eligibility to undocumented adults are underway.

Using the latest California Health Interview Survey data on the health insurance, demographics, health status, and access to care of undocumented low-income adults ages 19-64, new research led by Associate Center Director Nadereh Pourat reveals the demographics and characteristics of undocumented adults, how their access to health care compares to documented counterparts, and the implications of extending Medi-Cal eligibility to the last remaining uninsured population who have limited options for coverage.

#CatoConnects: Religion and Attitudes about Immigration, Race, and Identities

4:30 p.m. ET, February 20, 2019
Cato Institute
1000 Massachusetts Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20001-5403
https://www.cato.org/events/catoconnects-religion-attitudes-about-immigration-race-identies

Description: Increasing political polarization and rising conflict over identity, race relations, immigration, and LGBT rights have left the American political landscape with two increasingly divided extremes and a seemingly elusive moderate middle. Many Americans have come to view religious institutions as a major contributor to this ever-increasing divide — a catalyst for increased intergroup societal conflict rather than a possible cure.

However, new research by Cato Institute Director of Polling Emily Ekins finds that religious participation may moderate conservatives' attitudes on other important culture war issues, particularly matters of race, immigration, and identity.

In Religious Trump Voters: How Faith Moderates Attitudes about Immigration, Race, and Identity, Ekins finds that Trump voters who attend church regularly are more likely than nonreligious Trump voters to have warmer feelings toward racial and religious minorities, to be more supportive of immigration and trade, and to be more concerned about poverty. These data are important because they demonstrate that private institutions in civil society can have a positive effect on social conflict and can reduce political polarization.

On Wednesday, February 20, join a LIVE discussion on the moderating

Certificate program course in International Migration Studies

XCPD-703 - Newcomers to Citizens: Immigrant Integration

9:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Wednesday-Friday, February 25-27, 2019
Georgetown University School of Continuing Studies
640 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Room C227
Washington, DC 20001
https://portal.scs.georgetown.edu/search/publicCourseSearchDetails.do?method=load&courseId=14536

Course Description: With a record 200 million people living outside their country of birth, immigration is a global phenomenon with profound demographic, economic, social, and political implications for both sending and receiving countries. The debate over immigration law and policy has become increasingly volatile and, in some instances, characterized by misinformation, hate, and xenophobia. Beyond the politics of immigration, genuine challenges to immigrant integration abound. Successful integration of immigrants is critical to the long-term prosperity of host countries that rely on immigrants as workers, consumers, taxpayers, innovators, and entrepreneurs in light of their aging native-born populations and lower birth rates. In this course we will explore integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving countries--such as the United States and Canada and new countries of permanent immigration such as France, Germany, the United Kingdom. We will raise questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity. We will also discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism, paradigms that challenge an integrationist reading of migration. Using case studies from North America and Europe we will pay special attention to the different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation on their road from newcomers to citizens.

Course Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Discuss the integration law, policies, judicial cases and practices in both traditional immigrant-receiving and source countries.
* Recognize questions about traditional understandings of nationality, loyalty, place and identity.
* Discuss citizenship laws, models of multicultural citizenship, as well as transnationalism and post-nationalism.
* Compare different modes of immigrant civic engagement and political participation.

Notes: This course is an open enrollment course. No application is required and registration is available by clicking "Add to Cart." Current students must register with their Georgetown NetID and password. New students will be prompted to create an account prior to registration.

Tuition: $995.00, 24 contract hours

CRS Seminar: Humanitarian Series I

Borders, migration, exclusion: The role of civil society and humanitarian aid in an increasingly polarized political context

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1:00-2:30 p.m., Wednesday, February 27, 2019
York University Center for Refugee Studies
626 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-humanitarian-series-i?instance_id=146

Speaker:
Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

Description: The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Migration, Identity and Politics in Europe

1104 Dunton Tower
1125 Colonel By Drive
Ottawa, ON, K1S 5B6
https://carleton.ca/ces/cu-events/migration-identity-and-politics-in-europe/

Description: Migration has played a central role in constituting Europe and facilitating European integration and identity. Most Europeans have experiences of migration in their own family histories. Yet, across Europe, we see the term "migrant" employed in public discourse as code for "foreigner" standing in opposition to "European." In recent years, few issues have been more divisive and politicized in European politics than responses to the challenges of migration and refugees.

The Centre for Europe Studies – Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence at Carleton University is organizing a one-day conference that will illuminate the nexus between migration, identity, and politics in Europe. Exploring historical and current cases drawing on disciplinary approaches from history, political science, anthropology, cultural studies, sociology and geography, this event will showcase new perspectives and approaches to European migration studies from international emerging scholars and graduate students.

Description: Linn will discuss how migration can be weaponized to serve diverse political agendas, including the growing tendency to frame refugees and migrants as political liabilities. The result is a degradation of access to adequate protection and humanitarian assistance, as well as the mechanisms they use to reach target destinations. Linn will present this perspective using first-hand experience working with Eritrean refugees fleeing towards the shores of Europe between 2013 – 2016 and sharing a critical perspective of State and humanitarian responses to the so-called 'migrant-caravans' from the Northern Triangle of Central America to the United States and Canada.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Project Director, Research on Immigrant Health and State Policy (RIGHTS) Study at the Center for Health Policy Research, University of California, Los Angeles
Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow, UC Merced

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Speaker:
Azadeh Dastyari
Senior Lecturer, Monash University
Deputy Director, Castan Centre for Human Rights Law

Description: Australia introduced mandatory immigration detention of all non-citizens, without a visa or other legal right to remain in Australia, in 1992. The policy has led to irreparable harm of thousands of men, women and children including asylum seekers and refugees. As immigration detention becomes more prevalent globally, including in the US, Australia's recent history with the incarceration of migrants and refugees serves as a warning of the damaging effect of this policy. This talk will give an overview of the history, law, politics and current status of Australia's mandatory immigration detention regime and will provide some thoughts on the future of immigration detention in Australia.

Speaker:
Shahram Khosravi, Professor of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University

Description: We live in a time of wall fetishism. Never as today have human beings been so obsessed with building walls. Walls are, however, old. Empires built walls, from the Great Wall of China, to Hadrian's Wall in Northern England and the Limes Tripolitanus of the Roman Empire in North Africa to keep "barbarians" out. And if we look closer we can see that there are still traces of the old imperial visions in the modern borders and border walls. In this talk I will look at the connections of wars and walls; walls and empires. I will argue that there is a link between the installation of border walls (here) and the unsettling of communities (there). The current border regime is part of a larger and older project of colonial accumulation by dispossession and expulsion; stealing wealth, labor force, and time. I will also argue that border crossing discloses the cracks in the dominant narration of borders and that travelers without papers denaturalize what are otherwise naturalized borders, politicize what are otherwise depoliticized borders. I will illustrate this argument by following travelers without papers along the railways in the Balkans; tracing Afghan deportees in Kabul; and narrating the social life of the materialities used in the wall between Mexico and the US.

Canadian Immigration Summit 2019: Expanding Our Horizons

Wednesday-Thursday, May 8-9, 2019
The Shaw Centre
Ottawa, Ontario, Canada
https://www.conferenceboard.ca/conf/immigration/default.aspx

Summit Overview

Expanding Our Horizons
How can we plan for tomorrow, today?

The purpose of the 2019 Summit is to explore how Canada can respond proactively to emerging immigration issues in a rapidly changing world.

We tend to dwell on the past to tackle today's challenges and anticipate the ones we will experience tomorrow. Moreover, we are often focused on the short-term, with too little of our time and energy devoted to thinking about how we can plan for the future. However, the world is not standing still, and Canada is no exception. Changes at home and abroad will disrupt Canada's future immigration system in ways we cannot currently fathom. For example, how many of us five years ago imagined that a wave of populism would take the world by storm?

The Summit will examine key drivers of economic, social, and technological change that could affect our immigration system. The goal is not to predict the future, but rather to assess various, plausible immigration scenarios and how Canada can benefit from the opportunities while mitigating the threats in support of a stronger, more vibrant country. Expert speakers will challenge us to expand our horizons by testing our underlying assumptions and getting us to think and plan beyond the short-term.
Join over 400 delegates to explore these key issues and more:

* Populism: What does Canada need to do to prevent the rise of anti-immigrant populism?

* Future skills and the changing nature of work: As the economy evolves, how can Canada refine its selection and settlement programs for tomorrow's labour market?

* Settlement and technology: How will technological innovations affect the way Canada delivers settlement services?

* Diversity in the workplace: How can employers become more inclusive as the Canadian labour force becomes more diverse?

* Intergovernmental collaboration: How can our immigration system accommodate the growing role of the provinces, territories, and municipalities?

* Refugee flows: With the global refugee population at an all-time high, what can Canada do to help?

* Pan-Canadian Framework for the Assessment and Recognition of Foreign Qualifications: What progress has been made since 2009 and how can we improve further over the next 10 years?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

* Global supply of talent: How can Canada remain a destination of choice for immigrants and international students as other countries offer improved economic opportunity to their citizens and global talent?

Study: Syrian refugees who resettled in Canada in 2015 and 2016
Statistics Canada, February 12, 2019
https://www150.statcan.gc.ca/n1/en/daily-quotidien/190212/dq190212a-eng.pdf?st=qzAajxRC

Excerpt:
The vast majority of Syrian refugees are families with children

The demographic and family indicators of Syrian refugees reflect their selection process. Families with children were prioritized, while young adults without children were less likely to be selected. Specifically, 85% of Syrian families consisted of a couple with children, and these families had 2.8 children on average. This compared with 63% of refugee families from other countries, who had 2.2 children on average. As a result, the Syrian refugee population had more children than that of other refugees, and a smaller proportion of people aged 15 to 29.

In 2016, 44% of Syrian refugees were under the age of 15, compared with 31% for refugees from other countries.

Book Description: This shattering tale of violence, corruption and justice, is this last novel in Don Winslow's award-winning, internationally bestselling Cartel trilogy. Shocking in its brutality, raw in its humanity, The Border is an unflinching portrait of modern America, a story of?and for?our time.

What do you do when there are no borders? When the lines you thought existed simply vanish? How do you plant your feet to make a stand when you no longer know what side you're on?

The war has come home.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

For over forty years, Art Keller has been on the front lines of America's longest conflict: The War On Drugs. His obsession to defeat the world's most powerful, wealthy, and lethal kingpin?the godfather of the Sinaloa Cartel, Adán Barrera? has left him bloody and scarred, cost him people he loves, even taken a piece of his soul.

Now Keller is elevated to the highest ranks of the DEA, only to find that in destroying one monster he has created thirty more that are wreaking even more chaos and suffering in his beloved Mexico.

But not just there.

Barrera's final legacy is the heroin epidemic scourging America. Throwing himself into the gap to stem the deadly flow, Keller finds himself surrounded by enemies – kingpins that want to kill him, politicians that want to destroy him, and worse, the unimaginable – an incoming administration that's in bed with the very drug traffickers that Keller is trying to bring down.
Art Keller is at war with not only the cartels, but with his own government.

In a story that travels from deserts south of the border to Wall Street, from the slums of Guatemala to the marbled corridors of Washington, D.C., Winslow follows a new generation of narcos, the cops that fight them, the street traffickers, the addicts, the politicians, money-launderers, real-estate moguls and mere children fleeing the violence for the chance of a life in a new country.

Detain and Deport: The Chaotic U.S. Immigration Enforcement Regime

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Paperback, ISBN: 0820354635, $29.95
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0820354635/centerforimmigra

Book Description: Detention and deportation have become keystones of immigration and border enforcement policies around the world. The United States has built a massive immigration enforcement system that detains and deports more people than any other country. This system is grounded in the assumptions that national borders are territorially fixed and controllable, and that detention and deportation bolster security and deter migration. Nancy Hiemstra's multisided ethnographic research pairs investigation of enforcement practices in the United States with an exploration into conditions migrants face in one country of origin: Ecuador. Detain and Deport's transnational approach reveals how the U.S. immigration enforcement system's chaotic organization and operation distracts from the mismatch between these assumptions and actual outcomes. Hiemstra draws on the experiences of detained and deported migrants, as well as their families and communities in Ecuador, to show convincingly that instead of deterring migrants and improving national security, detention and deportation generate insecurities and forge lasting connections across territorial borders. At the same time, the system's chaos works to curtail rights and maintain detained migrants on a narrow path to deportation. Hiemstra argues that in addition to the racialized ideas of national identity and a fluctuating dependence on immigrant labor that have long propelled U.S. immigration policies, the contemporary emphasis on detention and deportation is fueled by the influence of people and entities that profit from them.

The Good Immigrant: 26 Writers Reflect on America
By Nikesh Shukla and Chimene Suleyman

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Hardcover, ISBN: 031652428X, $18.30

Kindle, 1067 KB, ASIN: B07D6MLYH1, 337 pp., $14.99

Book Description: An urgent collection of essays by first and second-generation immigrants, exploring what it's like to be othered in an increasingly divided America.

From Trump's proposed border wall and travel ban to the marching of White Supremacists in Charlottesville, America is consumed by tensions over immigration and the question of which bodies are welcome. In this much-anticipated follow-up to the bestselling UK edition, hailed by Zadie Smith as "lively and vital," editors Nikesh Shukla and Chimene Suleyman hand the microphone to an incredible range of writers whose humanity and right to be here is under attack.

Chigozie Obioma unpacks an Igbo proverb that helped him navigate his journey to America from Nigeria.

Jenny Zhang analyzes cultural appropriation in 90s fashion, recalling her own pain and confusion as a teenager trying to fit in.

Fatimah Asghar describes the flood of memory and emotion triggered by an encounter with an Uber driver from Kashmir.

Alexander Chee writes of a visit to Korea that changed his relationship to his heritage.

These writers, and the many others in this singular collection, share powerful personal stories of living between cultures and languages while struggling to figure out who they are and where they belong. By turns heartbreaking and hilarious, troubling and uplifting, the essays in The Good Immigrant come together to create a provocative, conversation-sparking, multivocal portrait of America now.

Open Borders: In Defense of Free Movement

By Nik Heynen, et al.

University of Georgia Press, 296 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 0820354279, $99.95

http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0820354260/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 1983 KB, ASIN: B07MBH91KL, $19.22

Book Description: Border control continues to be a highly contested and politically charged subject around the world. This collection of essays challenges reactionary nationalism by making the positive case for the benefits of free movement for countries on both ends of the exchange. Open Borders counters the knee-jerk reaction to build walls and close borders by arguing that there is not a moral, legal, philosophical, or economic case for limiting the movement of human beings at borders. The volume brings together essays by theorists in anthropology, geography, international relations, and other fields who argue for open borders with writings by activists who are working to make safe passage a reality on the ground. It puts forward a clear, concise, and convincing case for a world without movement restrictions at borders.

The essays in the first part of the volume make a theoretical case for free movement by analyzing philosophical, legal, and moral arguments for opening borders. In doing so, they articulate a sustained critique of the dominant idea that states should favor the rights of their own citizens over the rights of all human beings. The second part sketches out the current situation in the European Union, in states that have erected border walls, in states that have adopted a policy of inclusion such as Germany and Uganda, and elsewhere in the world to demonstrate the consequences of the current regime of movement restrictions at borders. The third part creates a dialogue between theorists and activists, examining the work of Calais Migrant Solidarity, No Borders Morocco, activists in sanctuary cities, and others who contest border restrictions on the ground.

Europe and the Refugee Crisis: Local Responses to Migrants
By Frances Trix

I.B. Tauris, 288 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 9781784539931, $76.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/ 9781784539931/centerforimmigra

Book Description: Since 2014, more than 60 million people have been displaced from their homes across the Middle East and Africa. The European Refugee Crisis, as it has come to be known, is now the largest such crisis since the aftermath of World War II. How have local communities reacted to the influx of asylum seekers? And what can we learn from their responses?

Frances Trix here offers a wide-ranging ethnographical and anthropological study of local, individual responses to refugees, from Macedonia to Germany. Based on extensive interviews and field work in Europe, Trix focuses for the first time on the ways that refugees have been welcomed – or not, as the case may be – by various individuals and communities. Her work ranges from Macedonians who established an NGO and lobbied to allow the refugees to use the train, to the police charged with border management; from a German organic food store owner who by her actions set the positive tone in her village, a retired IT manager who coordinates refugee volunteers for his entire town, to the district work organisation director who deems refugees unsuitable for multiple reasons. The material is measured throughout against Trix's anthropological experience, as well as reference to the historical and political contexts in which events are unfolding. This book is essential reading for all those working on the refugee crisis and the prospects – both local and global – for the future.

The Everyday Politics of Migration Crisis in Poland: Between Nationalism, Fear and Empathy

By Krzysztof Jaskulowski

Palgrave Pivot, 139 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 3030104567, $59.99
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/3030104567/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 491 KB, ASIN: B07NHBNZ4C, $56.99

Book Description: This book explores attitudes towards migrants and refugees from North Africa and the Middle East during the so-called migration crisis in 2015-2016 in Poland. Beginning with an examination of Polish government policy and the discursive construction of refugees in the media, politics and popular culture, it argues that they identified refugees with Muslims, who were deemed to pose a threat to the Polish nation. This analysis establishes the Islamophobic public discourse which is shown to be variously reproduced, negotiated and contested in the nuanced study of Polish attitudes which follows. Drawing on original qualitative research and constructivist theory, the book examines differing stances towards refugees in the context of the lay understanding of the Polish nation and its boundaries. In doing so it demonstrates the influence of discourses that draw on an exclusionary concept of national identity and the potential for them to be mobilised against immigrants. This timely, theory-based case study will provide a valuable resource for students and scholars of Central and Eastern European politics, nationalism, race, migration and refugee studies.

Foreign College Degrees Are Not Evidence of 'High-Skill' Immigration Immigrants educated abroad are less skilled than those with U.S. degrees

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (February 25, 2019) – A new report published by the Center for Immigration Studies shows that immigrants with foreign college degrees perform substantially worse than those with U.S. degrees on tests of literacy, numeracy, and computer operations. The results, based on tests administered by the Program for International Assessment of Adult Competencies (PIAAC), may help explain why the rising education level of new immigrants has not improved employment, income, poverty, and welfare use as much as expected.

Jason Richwine, an independent public policy analyst and the author of the report, commented, "Policy-makers should be cautious in treating foreign degrees as evidence of 'high-skill' immigration. If legislators are considering a move towards a merit-based system, they should look beyond educational credentials."

A panel discussion on the study is planned for later this week.

View the full report at: https://cis.org/Report/ForeignEducated-Immigrants-Are-Less-Skilled-US-Degree-Holders

Key points:

- Among immigrants in the United States whose highest degree is either a bachelor's ("college") or a master's or Ph.D. ("advanced"), about 40 percent received their highest degree in a foreign country — meaning they are "foreign educated".
- On both literacy and computer operations, foreign-educated immigrants with a college or advanced degree perform so poorly that they score at the level of natives who have only a high school diploma.
- On numeracy, foreign-educated immigrants with a college or advanced degree perform closer to the level of natives who have some college education, but not a bachelor's degree.
- Despite their reputation for specializing in STEM fields, about one in six foreign-degree holders score "below basic" in numeracy.
- The skill gap between foreign and U.S. degree holders persists even among immigrants who have had at least five years in the United States to learn English.
- A skill-selective immigration system could incorporate direct testing of applicants rather than rely on their educational attainment alone.

What's Happening at the Center

In a recent piece, Steven Camarota explains that the biggest immigration issue is not welfare or illegal immigration per se but the total number of immigrants settling in the country. All the effects of immigration — cultural, political, social, economic, and fiscal — stem directly from the scale of immigration. And the scale is truly enormous. There are about 45 million legal and illegal immigrants (roughly 34 million of whom are legal). The total number has quadrupled since 1970 and the latest Census Bureau projections indicate that future immigration will add another 75 million by 2060. That means that future immigrants and their descendants will add a population the size of France in just four decades. The national interest depends on how we address mass immigration going forward.

Section 224 of the funding bill makes the U.S. government a co-conspirator in the criminal scheme between the smuggler and the parent/guardian paying to have an "unaccompanied" minor brought illegally to the U.S.

The good news is that Mexico broke up the latest Central American caravan into smaller groups. The bad news is that these small groups will nearly all still be able to enter our country by exploiting our asylum laws.

Speaker:
Hernan Delvalle, Rita E. Hauser Fellow, Harvard University and Doctors Without Borders/Médecins Sans Frontières (Netherlands)

Description: The increase in border restrictions for asylum seekers and migrants raises pressing moral, legal, and political questions. How to respond to human migration has become one of the most divisive political issues of our time. Through the experience of MSF's operations at sea and on land assisting asylum seekers and migrants crossing the Mediterranean, the panel will explore how the plight of people on the move has been weaponized to serve a variety of political agendas. We will discuss how civil society, state institutions and political leaders struggle to define narratives to influence policy and public debate. This timely discussion should help us shed light on the dilemmas that emerge for societies both in Europe and in the Americas.

Hernan will offer an overview of the rise and fall of civilian-led operations to rescue asylum seekers and migrants in the Mediterranean between the years 2014 and 2018. Drawing on Hernan's experience in MSF throughout this operation, we will explore the complex relationship between NGOs and state authorities at the southern European maritime border. We will see how the humanitarian deployment to 'save lives' came under fire for 'aiding illegal immigration' amidst a polarization of the political debate and growing pressures to 'secure the border' and prevent asylum seekers from reaching Europe.

The case explores the challenges for civil society organizations assisting people marginalized by state border policy, and raises critically urgent questions around solidarity, identity, belonging, nationalism, xenophobia, and exclusion

Migration, Identity and Politics in Europe

International Emerging Scholars' Workshop

8:30 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Friday March 1, 2019
Richcraft Hall, Second Floor Conference Rooms
Carleton University, Centre for European Studies

1125 Colonel By Drive
Ottawa, ON, K1S 5B6

https://carleton.ca/ces/cu-events/migration-identity-and-politics-in-europe/

Description: Migration has played a central role in constituting Europe and facilitating European integration and identity. Most Europeans have experiences of migration in their own family histories. Yet, across Europe, we see the term "migrant" employed in public discourse as code for "foreigner" standing in opposition to "European." In recent years, few issues have been more divisive and politicized in European politics than responses to the challenges of migration and refugees.

The Centre for Europe Studies – Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence at Carleton University is organizing a one-day conference that will illuminate the nexus between migration, identity, and politics in Europe. Exploring historical and current cases drawing on disciplinary approaches from history, political science, anthropology, cultural studies, sociology and geography, this event will showcase new perspectives and approaches to European migration studies from international emerging scholars and graduate students.

Agenda:

Keynote Speaker:
Jennifer Miller, Southern Illinois University Edwardsville

Panel I: Identity and Culture

Keynote Speaker:
William Walters, Carleton University

Panel II: Labour, Integration, and Exploitation

A Conversation with António Vitorino, the Director General of the International Organization for Migration

10:00 to 11:00 a.m. ET, Wednesday, March 6, 2019
MPI First Floor Conference Room
1400 16th Street NW,
Washington, DC 20036
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/conversation-director-general-international-organization-migration

Welcoming Remarks:
Andrew Selee, President, Migration Policy Institute

Speakers:
António Vitorino, Director General, International Organization for Migration

Moderator:
Demetrios G. Papademetriou, Distinguished Transatlantic Fellow and President Emeritus, MPI

Description: The world is home to approximately 258 million international migrants, who represent 3.4 percent of the global population. About 10 percent of them are refugees. As countries seek to come to terms with record forcible displacement and manage other human movement, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) is working with partners in the international community to respond to humanitarian emergencies and meet the operational challenges of migration management, advance a better understanding of migration issues, and promote orderly migration policies that can benefit migrants and Member States alike.

Join the Migration Policy Institute for the first and only public address of the IOM Director General on his inaugural formal visit to Washington, DC. Director General António Vitorino will discuss his vision for IOM; reforms and changes in the UN system designed to address migration matters better; the coordination of efforts between IOM, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and other international partners in addressing humanitarian protection; and the operational steps IOM is taking to respond to forced migration and displacement in hotspots around the world, including Venezuela, Bangladesh, and Libya. Following his conversation with Demetrios Papademetriou, Mr. Vitorino will take

Speaker:
Linn Biorklund Belliveau, Researcher/analyst Dahdaleh Institute for Global Health Research and Médecins Sans Frontières, CRS Affiliated Scholar

Description: Linn will discuss how migration can be weaponized to serve diverse political agendas, including the growing tendency to frame refugees and migrants as political liabilities. The result is a degradation of access to adequate protection and humanitarian assistance, as well as the mechanisms they use to reach target destinations. Linn will present this perspective using first-hand experience working with Eritrean refugees fleeing towards the shores of Europe between 2013–2016 and sharing a critical perspective of State and humanitarian responses to the so-called 'migrant-caravans' from the Northern Triangle of Central America to the United States and Canada.

Border Myths Symposium

San Diego, CA 92101
https://www.cwsl.edu/academics/academic-publications/law-reviews-and-journals/border-myths-symposium

Description: When it comes to immigration policies at the United States borders, many myths permeate the national discourse: myths about who is coming to the United States and how they cross; what makes migration legal or illegal; the impact of migrants on the United States and the communities they join; the rights and responsibilities of migrants and the states receiving them; and the legal responsibilities of the United States to migrants and the larger international community.

The symposium will identify the myths, critically look at the historical context and long-term effects, and propose novel approaches to understanding and addressing these issues at the federal, state, and local levels.

The Symposium will give the authors the opportunity to discuss their research and give the attendees the opportunity to join the discussion and earn MCLE credit.

The Italian Decree on Security and Immigration: how Legitimate and Effective is it?

Migration Policy Centre
Via Boccaccio 151
Florence, Italy
http://www.migrationpolicycentre.eu/event/the-italian-decree-on-security-and-immigration-how-legitimate-and-effective-is-it/

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Abstract: The so-called decreto Salvini (Decree-law no. 113 of 4 October, converted, with amendments, into Law no. 132 of 1 December 2018) represents one of the acts qualifying the policy of the current Italian Government. Strongly desired by the Minister of the Interior, it aims, according to the report accompanying the conversion bill, at reorganizing 'the system of recognition of international protection and the forms of complementary tutelage' for 'a more efficient and effective management of the migratory phenomenon.'

In reality, it profoundly affects the guarantees safeguarding the right of asylum. This Seminar discusses the legitimacy and the effectivity of the changes introduced by the Decree.

Speaker:
Maria-Elena De Trinidad Young, PhD, MPH
Project Director, Research on Immigrant Health and State Policy (RIGHTS) Study at the Center for Health Policy Research, University of California, Los Angeles
Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow, UC Merced

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

4700 Keele Street, Toronto

Speaker:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

Description: Australia introduced mandatory immigration detention of all non-citizens, without a visa or other legal right to remain in Australia, in 1992. The policy has led to irreparable harm of thousands of men, women and children including asylum seekers and refugees. As immigration detention becomes more prevalent globally, including in the US, Australia's recent history with the incarceration of migrants and refugees serves as a warning of the damaging effect of this policy. York University, 519 Kaneff Tower

4700 Keele Street, Toronto
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/walling-unsettling-stealing?instance_id=153

Speaker:
Shahram Khosravi, Professor of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University

Description: We live in a time of wall fetishism. Never as today have human beings been so obsessed with building walls. Walls are, however, old. Empires built walls, from the Great Wall of China, to Hadrian's Wall in Northern England and the Limes Tripolitanus of the Roman Empire in North Africa to keep "barbarians" out. And if we look closer we can see that there are still traces of the old imperial visions in the modern borders and border walls. In this talk I will look at the connections of wars and walls; walls and empires. I will argue that there is a link between the installation of border walls (here) and the unsettling of communities (there). The current border regime is part of a larger and older project of colonial accumulation by dispossession and expulsion; stealing wealth, labor force, and time. I will also argue that border crossing discloses the cracks in the dominant narration of borders and that travelers without papers denaturalize what are otherwise naturalized borders, politicize what are otherwise depoliticized borders. I will illustrate this argument by following travelers without papers along the railways in the Balkans; tracing Afghan deportees in Kabul; and narrating the social life of the materialities used in the wall between Mexico and the US.

Canadian Immigration Summit 2019: Expanding Our Horizons

Wednesday-Thursday, May 8-9, 2019
The Shaw Centre
Ottawa, Ontario, Canada
https://www.conferenceboard.ca/conf/immigration/default.aspx

Summit Overview
Expanding Our Horizons
How can we plan for tomorrow, today?
The purpose of the 2019 Summit is to explore how Canada can respond proactively to emerging immigration issues in a rapidly changing world.

We tend to dwell on the past to tackle today's challenges and anticipate the ones we will experience tomorrow. Moreover, we are often focused on the short-term, with too little of our time and energy devoted to thinking about how we can plan for the future. However, the world is not standing still, and Canada is no exception. Changes at home and abroad will disrupt Canada's future immigration system in ways we cannot currently fathom. For example, how many of us five years ago imagined that a wave of populism would take the world by storm?

The Summit will examine key drivers of economic, social, and technological change that could affect our immigration system. The goal is not to predict the future, but rather to assess various, plausible immigration scenarios and how Canada can benefit from the opportunities while mitigating the threats in support of a stronger, more vibrant country. Expert speakers will challenge us to expand our horizons by testing our underlying assumptions and getting us to think and plan beyond the short-term.

Join over 400 delegates to explore these key issues and more:

* Populism: What does Canada need to do to prevent the rise of anti-immigrant populism?

* Future skills and the changing nature of work: As the economy evolves, how can Canada refine its selection and settlement programs for tomorrow's labour market?

* Settlement and technology: How will technological innovations affect the way Canada delivers settlement services?

* Diversity in the workplace: How can employers become more inclusive as the Canadian labour force becomes more diverse?

* Intergovernmental collaboration: How can our immigration system accommodate the growing role of the provinces, territories, and municipalities?

* Refugee flows: With the global refugee population at an all-time high, what can Canada do to help?

PANEL FRIDAY: The Value of Foreign Diplomas

Michelle Malkin will discuss a recent report highlighting that foreign college degrees are not evidence of "high-skill" immigration

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

WASHINGTON, D.C. (February 26, 2019) – The Center for Immigration Studies will host a panel discussion and reception Friday, March 1 focusing on the impact of immigration on skilled workers and the value of a foreign vs. domestic diploma. The starting point for conversation will be the recent report by independent policy analyst Jason Richwine which compared the skill levels of foreign-educated immigrants and native-born Americans.

WHAT: Panel discussion on the value of foreign college degrees and the reality behind "high-skill" immigration
WHEN: Friday, March 1, 2019 at 4:00 p.m.
WHERE: National Press Club, Murrow Room, 529 14th St NW, Washington, D.C.

MICHELLE MALKIN
Michelle Malkin is a nationally syndicated commentator and co-author of the 2015 book "Sold Out", which explores the effects of current immigration policies on American skilled workers. In the book, which she co-authored with CIS Fellow John Miano, she writes, "There is nothing special about the hundreds of thousands of H-1B visa holders flooding our workforce. Most are sponsored by companies that specialize in outsourcing of U.S. jobs."

JASON RICHWINE
Jason Richwine is an independent public policy analyst based in Washington D.C. and the author of the recent report, "Foreign-Educated Immigrants Are Less Skilled Than U.S. Degree Holders." In it, Richwine demonstrates that supposedly "high-skill" foreign-educated immigrants drastically under-perform native-born Americans with comparable degrees in various standardized exams.

Reviewing the Administration's Unaccompanied Children Program

CIS's Andrew Arthur testifies on the changing flow of alien

Washington, D.C. (February 27, 2019) – The issue of the Trump administration's handling of unaccompanied minors was the subject of a recent Capitol Hill hearing. A Center for Immigration Studies researcher was among the witnesses before the U.S. House Appropriations Committee's Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies.

Andrew Arthur, the Center's Resident Fellow in Law and Policy, testified that the demographic makeup of the aliens crossing our southern border has changed dramatically in recent years. He pointed out that prior to FY 2011, over 90 percent of aliens arriving were single adult males and over 90 percent were Mexican nationals. In FY 2019, nearly 60 percent of arrivals were family units and unaccompanied minors, the majority of whom came from Central America.

"Thanks to our loopholes — thanks to Flores, thanks to TVPRA, thanks to the credible fear standard — human smugglers don't even need to sneak these migrants into the US. They can simply let them off at the border," Arthur said during Q&A. "If you're a parent who came here, why wouldn't you pay a smuggler to bring your kid into the United States? They know that because of our loopholes that their kid will get into the country and they'll be reunited."

Arthur also noted the additional logistical issues presented by the changing migrant flow, as processing family units and UACs is far more time-consuming, complex, and expensive than processing single adult Mexican males.

The danger posed to migrants — particularly women and children — being smuggled into the country by human traffickers is significant, and sexual assault and violence are commonplace. Arthur pointed out how certain loopholes and openings in our asylum laws such as the Flores settlement agreement and the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008 (TVPRA) have facilitated this dangerous flow of unaccompanied minors across our southern border.

Finally, Arthur discussed the suitability of potential sponsors of unaccompanied minors, many of whom are in the country illegally. He noted that section 224 of the recently signed Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2019 would shield many of those sponsors and potential sponsors from detention and removal proceedings.

What's Happening at the Center

A new report by independent policy analyst Jason Richwine finds that immigrants with a foreign college degree do much less well on standardized tests than immigrants with U.S. degrees. This holds true not only in the test for literacy, but also for numeracy and computer skills, where English-language ability is less important. This holds important policy implications for the design of any merit-based immigration scheme, namely that a foreign degree is not necessarily evidence of "high-skill" immigration. The findings were explored by Richwine and author Michelle Malkin at a recent panel discussion at the National Press Club.

Panel: The Truth Behind "Merit-Based Immigration" and Foreign Diplomas

Video and transcript of event with Michelle Malkin now available

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (March 4, 2019) – Transcript and video are now available from the Center for Immigration Studies panel with Michelle Malkin last week about the value of foreign diplomas and "high-skill" immigration. The National Press Club panel centered around a recent report by Jason Richwine which found that immigrants with foreign diplomas drastically under-perform those with U.S. diplomas (whether immigrants or the native-born) in standardized tests.

Malkin, a nationally syndicated columnist, was co-author with CIS Fellow John Miano of the 2015 book "Sold Out", which exposed the flaws in the many visa programs that purport to bring in the "best and brightest".

"The data is the data," Malkin said at last week's panel. "And the data show that, by and large, the vast majority of people with H-1B visas are journeymen and they are of average skill. They are not the best and brightest. They're not starting world-shaking companies. They are not earning hundreds and thousands of patents that no American can secure and innovations that no American can come up with. And so the equation at the beginning that ... highly educated does not equate to highly skilled perfectly complements the work that John and I did in 'Sold Out.'"

"There's this platitude from many defensive virtue-signalers that 'I'm against illegal immigration but for legal immigration.' What does that mean? What numbers? How much, and who? The kind of work that Jason has done with this study is incredibly important because the donor class doesn't want these questions asked."

Hospitality Now!

MIT Building 14E, Room 304
160 Memorial Drive
Cambridge, MA, 02139
https://calendar.mit.edu/event/hospitality_now

Description: Benjamin Boudou examines anti-migration discourse and policies in France and the US. and makes a case for why we should make hospitality a principle of our democracies. He will present his new books Le dilemme des frontières: Ethique et politique de l'immigration [The Boundary Dilemma] and Politique de l'hospitalité [Politics of Hospitality]. His talk will examine anti-migration discourses and practives in France and in the US, and advocate for making hospitality a core principle of our democracies. Boudou is a Senior Research Fellow, Max Planck Institute, Germany

Benjamin Boudou holds a PhD in political science from the Institute of Political Studies (Sciences Po) in Paris. His first book, Hospitality Politics: A Conceptual Genealogy, explores different historical mobilizations of hospitality to show how it has been defined for political purposes, and why public discourse is still oscillating between moral and political concepts when it comes to border politics. He worked as a lecturer in political theory at Sciences Po and as a postdoctoral researcher at the Center for International Studies (CERI). He spent a year as a Fox Fellow at Yale University, and earned a postdoctoral visiting fellowship at KU-Leuven (RIPPLE Centre). He is the editor-in-chief of Raisons Politiques, a French peer-reviewed journal of political theory. His current research focuses on contemporary political theories of immigration and methodological nationalism, especially how the principle of affected interests (or all-affected principle) can be a normative and practical resource to democratize the access to political communities.

Description: The world is home to approximately 258 million international migrants, who represent 3.4 percent of the global population. About 10 percent of them are refugees. Description: Linn will discuss how migration can be weaponized to serve diverse political agendas, including the growing tendency to frame refugees and migrants as political liabilities. The result is a degradation of access to adequate protection and humanitarian assistance, as well as the mechanisms they use to reach target destinations. Linn will present this perspective using first-hand experience working with Eritrean refugees fleeing towards the shores of Europe between 2013–2016 and sharing a critical perspective of State and humanitarian responses to the so-called 'migrant-caravans' from the Northern Triangle of Central America to the United States and Canada.

San Diego, CA 92101
https://www.cwsl.edu/academics/academic-publications/law-reviews-and-journals/border-myths-symposium

Description: When it comes to immigration policies at the United States borders, many myths permeate the national discourse: myths about who is coming to the United States and how they cross; what makes migration legal or illegal; the impact of migrants on the United States and the communities they join; the rights and responsibilities of migrants and the states receiving them; and the legal responsibilities of the United States to migrants and the larger international community.

The symposium will identify the myths, critically look at the historical context and long-term effects, and propose novel approaches to understanding and addressing these issues at the federal, state, and local levels.

The Italian Decree on Security and Immigration: how Legitimate and Effective is it?

11:00 a.m.-1:00 p.m., Tuesday, March 12, 2019
Seminar Room, Villa Malafrasca
Migration Policy Centre
Via Boccaccio 151
Florence, Italy
http://www.migrationpolicycentre.eu/event/the-italian-decree-on-security-and-immigration-how-legitimate-and-effective-is-it/

Abstract: The so-called decreto Salvini (Decree-law no. 113 of 4 October, converted, with amendments, into Law no. 132 of 1 December 2018) represents one of the acts qualifying the policy of the current Italian Government. Strongly desired by the Minister of the Interior, it aims, according to the report accompanying the conversion bill, at reorganizing 'the system of recognition of international protection and the forms of complementary tutelage' for 'a more efficient and effective management of the migratory phenomenon.'

In reality, it profoundly affects the guarantees safeguarding the right of asylum. This Seminar discusses the legitimacy and the effectivity of the changes introduced by the Decree.

Citizenship health inequalities across the US: State-level immigrant policies and health care access

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

La Jolla, CA 92093
https://ccis.ucsd.edu/_files/Event%20Flyers-Programs-Agendas/Event%20Flyer%20-%20Young%203-13-19.pdf

Speaker:
Maria-Elena De Trinidad Young, PhD, MPH
Project Director, Research on Immigrant Health and State Policy (RIGHTS) Study at the Center for Health Policy Research, University of California, Los Angeles
Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow, UC Merced

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

Crisis, what (refugee) crisis? The business of 'business-as-usual' in EU migration governance

Speaker:
Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

Walling, Unsettling, Stealing

York University, 519 Kaneff Tower

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

4700 Keele Street, Toronto
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/walling-unsettling-stealing?instance_id=153

Speaker:
Shahram Khosravi, Professor of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University

Description: We live in a time of wall fetishism. Never as today have human beings been so obsessed with building walls. Walls are, however, old. Empires built walls, from the Great Wall of China, to Hadrian's Wall in Northern England and the Limes Tripolitanus of the Roman Empire in North Africa to keep "barbarians" out. And if we look closer we can see that there are still traces of the old imperial visions in the modern borders and border walls. In this talk I will look at the connections of wars and walls; walls and empires. I will argue that there is a link between the installation of border walls (here) and the unsettling of communities (there). The current border regime is part of a larger and older project of colonial accumulation by dispossession and expulsion; stealing wealth, labor force, and time. I will also argue that border crossing discloses the cracks in the dominant narration of borders and that travelers without papers denaturalize what are otherwise naturalized borders, politicize what are otherwise depoliticized borders. I will illustrate this argument by following travelers without papers along the railways in the Balkans; tracing Afghan deportees in Kabul; and narrating the social life of the materialities used in the wall between Mexico and the US.

Canadian Immigration Summit 2019: Expanding Our Horizons

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Wednesday-Thursday, May 8-9, 2019
The Shaw Centre
Ottawa, Ontario, Canada
https://www.conferenceboard.ca/conf/immigration/default.aspx

Summit Overview
Expanding Our Horizons
How can we plan for tomorrow, today?
The purpose of the 2019 Summit is to explore how Canada can respond proactively to emerging immigration issues in a rapidly changing world.

We tend to dwell on the past to tackle today's challenges and anticipate the ones we will experience tomorrow. Moreover, we are often focused on the short-term, with too little of our time and energy devoted to thinking about how we can plan for the future. However, the world is not standing still, and Canada is no exception. Changes at home and abroad will disrupt Canada's future immigration system in ways we cannot currently fathom. For example, how many of us five years ago imagined that a wave of populism would take the world by storm?

The Summit will examine key drivers of economic, social, and technological change that could affect our immigration system. The goal is not to predict the future, but rather to assess various, plausible immigration scenarios and how Canada can benefit from the opportunities while mitigating the threats in support of a stronger, more vibrant country. Expert speakers will challenge us to expand our horizons by testing our underlying assumptions and getting us to think and plan beyond the short-term.
Join over 400 delegates to explore these key issues and more:

* Populism: What does Canada need to do to prevent the rise of anti-immigrant populism?

* Future skills and the changing nature of work: As the economy evolves, how can Canada refine its selection and settlement programs for tomorrow's labour market?

* Settlement and technology: How will technological innovations affect the way Canada delivers settlement services?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

* Diversity in the workplace: How can employers become more inclusive as the Canadian labour force becomes more diverse?

* Intergovernmental collaboration: How can our immigration system accommodate the growing role of the provinces, territories, and municipalities?

* Refugee flows: With the global refugee population at an all-time high, what can Canada do to help?

* Pan-Canadian Framework for the Assessment and Recognition of Foreign Qualifications: What progress has been made since 2009 and how can we improve further over the next 10 years?

* Global supply of talent: How can Canada remain a destination of choice for immigrants and international students as other countries offer improved economic opportunity to their citizens and global talent?

The Center for Immigration Studies Sues for Information on Criminal Aliens

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (March 5, 2019) - The Center for Immigration Studies announced today that it filed a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) lawsuit against U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE") in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia (Center for Immigration Studies v. U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (No. 19-cv-605). The Center was compelled to file after ICE failed to comply with the time limit set forth in federal statute with respect to the CIS December FOIA request for specific information pertaining to individuals removed from the United States from 2014-2018.

The lawsuit seeks information such as immigration status and charges, location of arrest, country of citizenship, criminal convictions, place of entry, and departure date. This information will update the Center's database of removals since ICE's creation in 2003, and will permit ongoing detailed analysis of immigration enforcement activities over time.

Jessica Vaughan, the Center's director of policy studies, said, "The Center has brought this action against ICE in an effort to ensure that we have timely access to government data that will enable us to produce fact-based reports on immigration enforcement that are useful to policymakers and the public. This endeavor is especially critical now, when too much misinformation and too many biased studies are contributing to a false narrative about immigration enforcement."

House Panel Discusses Protections for DACA and TPS Recipients

CIS's Andrew Arthur testifies on the potential ramifications of

sweeping amnesty

Washington, D.C. (March 7, 2019) – The issue of potential legislative protections for Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) and Temporary Protected Status (TPS) recipients was the subject of a recent Capitol Hill hearing. A Center for Immigration Studies analyst was among the witnesses before the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary.

Andrew Arthur, the Center's Resident Fellow in Law and Policy, began by testifying that "temporary" protected status, which is intended to allow nationals from countries affected by armed conflict or national disaster to live in the United States for a limited time, is in practice not temporary at all:

"Despite the nomenclature 'Temporary Protected Status,' many of those designations have been in place for years. For example, Haiti was designated for TPS on Jan. 21, 2010. El Salvador was designated for TPS on March 9, 2001.Honduras was designated on January 5, 1999, Nepal on June 24, 2015, Nicaragua on January 5, 1999, Somalia on September 16, 1991, South Sudan on November 3, 2011,Sudan on November 4, 1997, Syria on March 29, 2012, and Yemen on September 3, 2015."

Arthur further noted that the conditions in many of those countries have changed drastically since the designation .For example, he pointed out that then-Attorney General (AG) Janet Reno originally designated Honduras and Nicaragua for TPS more than 19 years ago "due to extraordinary displacement and damage from Hurricane Mitch."

With regard to DACA, Arthur argued that it created perverse incentives and increased illegal immigration in the years following its announcement by President Obama in 2012.

"The DACA amnesty itself was the primary driver behind alien children subsequently entering the US by the tens of thousands. They understood that we'd be having another hearing like this one, discussing legalization," he said.

Arthur further warned about the consequences of any legislation that would include amnesty for illegal immigrants.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"There are two direct downstream effects of any amnesty: They encourage other aliens to enter the United States illegally to take advantage of a future amnesty, and they result in greater immigration to the United States as a result of chain migration," he said.

Any legislation which includes amnesty would therefore need to have provisions to limit chain migration, such as making certain categories of relatives of amnesty beneficiaries ineligible for permanent residence based on their familial relationship, as well as provisions which would reduce future illegal immigration.

Our 50-State Border Crisis: How the Mexican Border Fuels the Drug Epidemic Across America
By Howard G. Buffett

Hachette Books, 384 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 0316476617, $14.24
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0316476617/centerforimmigra

Paperback, ISBN: 0316476595, $12.18
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0316476595/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 58777 KB, ASIN: B074M6FT8F, 385 pp., $14.99

Book Description: Howard G. Buffett has seen first-hand the devastating impact of cheap Mexican heroin and other opiate cocktails across America. Fueled by failing border policies and lawlessness in Mexico and Central America, drugs are pouring over the nation's southern border in record quantities, turning Americans into addicts and migrants into drug mules--and killing us in record numbers.

Politicians talk about a border crisis and an opioid crisis as separate issues. To Buffett, a landowner on the U.S. border with Mexico and now a sheriff in Illinois, these are intimately connected. Ineffective border policies not only put residents in border states like Texas and Arizona in harm's way, they put American lives in states like Oregon, Pennsylvania, and Vermont at risk.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Mexican cartels have grown astonishingly powerful by exploiting both the gaps in our border security strategy and the desperation of migrants--all while profiting enormously off America's growing addiction to drugs. The solution isn't a wall. In this groundbreaking book, Buffett outlines a realistic, effective, and bi-partisan approach to fighting cartels, strengthening our national security, and tackling the roots of the chaos below the border.

The End of the Myth: From the Frontier to the Border Wall in the Mind of America

By Greg Grandin

Metropolitan Books, 384 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1250179823, $19.49
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1250179823/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 7525 KB, ASIN: B07NSWJYMP, 375 pp., $14.99

Book Description: Ever since this nation's inception, the idea of an open and ever-expanding frontier has been central to American identity. Symbolizing a future of endless promise, it was the foundation of the United States' belief in itself as an exceptional nation—democratic, individualistic, forward-looking. Today, though, America hasa new symbol: the border wall.

In The End of the Myth, acclaimed historian Greg Grandin explores the meaning of the frontier throughout the full sweep of U.S. history—from the American Revolution to the War of 1898, the New Deal to the election of 2016. For centuries, he shows, America's constant expansion—fighting wars and opening markets—served as a "gate of escape," helping to deflect domestic political and economic conflicts outward. But this deflection meant that the country's problems, from racism to inequality, were never confronted directly. And now, the combined catastrophe of the 2008 financial meltdown and our unwinnable wars in the Middle East have slammed this gate shut, bringing political passions that had long been directed elsewhere back home.

It is this new reality, Grandin says, that explains the rise of reactionary populism and racist nationalism, the extreme anger and polarization that catapulted Trump to the presidency. The border wall may or may not be built, but it will survive as a rallying point, an allegorical tombstone marking the end of American exceptionalism.

Border Brokers: Children of Mexican Immigrants Navigating U.S. Society, Laws, and Politics
By Christina Getrich

University of Arizona Press, 272 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 0816538999, $19.49
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0816538999/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 3266 KB, ASIN: B076B2DNJL, $47.50

Book Description: Some 16.6 million people nationwide live in mixed-status families, containing a combination of U.S. citizens, residents, and undocumented immigrants. U.S. immigration governance has become an almost daily news headline. Yet even in the absence of federal immigration reform over the last twenty years, existing policies and practices have already been profoundly impacting these family units.

Based on ethnographic fieldwork in San Diego over more than a decade, Border Brokers documents the continuing deleterious effects of U.S. immigration policies and enforcement practices on a group of now young adults and their families. In the first book-length longitudinal study of mixed-status families, Christina M. Getrich provides an on-the-ground portrayal of these young adults' lives from their own perspectives and in their own words.

More importantly, Getrich identifies how these individuals have developed resiliency and agency beginning in their teens to improve circumstances for immigrant communities. Despite the significant constraints their families face, these children have emerged into adulthood as grounded and skilled brokers who effectively use their local knowledge bases, life skills honed in their families, and transborder competencies. Refuting the notion of their failure to assimilate, she highlights the mature, engaged citizenship they model as they transition to adulthood to be perhaps their most enduring contribution to creating a better U.S. society.

An accessible ethnography rooted in the everyday, this book portrays the complexity of life in the U.S.-Mexico borderlands. It offers important insights for anthropologists, educators, policy-makers, and activists working on immigration and social justice issues.

Europe and the Refugee Crisis: Local Responses to Migrants

By Frances Trix

I.B. Tauris, 288 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 9781784539931, $76.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/9781784539931/centerforimmigra

Book Description: Since 2014, more than 60 million people have been displaced from their homes across the Middle East and Africa. The European Refugee Crisis, as it has come to be known, is now the largest such crisis since the aftermath of World War II. How have local communities reacted to the influx of asylum seekers? And what can we learn from their responses?

Frances Trix here offers a wide-ranging ethnographical and anthropological study of local, individual responses to refugees, from Macedonia to Germany. Based on extensive interviews and field work in Europe, Trix focuses for the first time on the ways that refugees have been welcomed – or not, as the case may be – by various individuals and communities. Her work ranges from Macedonians who established an NGO and lobbied to allow the refugees to use the train, to the police charged with border management; from a German organic food store owner who by her actions set the positive tone in her village, a retired IT manager who coordinates refugee volunteers for his entire town, to the district work organisation director who deems refugees unsuitable for multiple reasons. The material is measured throughout against Trix's anthropological experience, as well as reference to the historical and political contexts in which events are unfolding. This book is essential reading for all those working on the refugee crisis and the prospects – both local and global – for the future.

Time, Migration and Forced Immobility: Sub-Saharan African Migrants in Morocco

By Inka Stock

Bristol University Press, 224 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1529201977, $115.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1529201977/centerforimmigra

Book Description: This book is concerned with the effects current European migration policy have on migrants in the Global South and considers alternative ways of looking at the modern migratory phenomenon. Based on in-depth ethnographic research with migrants from Sub-Saharan Africa, Stock considers current migration dynamics from the perspectives of migrants themselves. He examines the long-term social effects of immobility as experienced by migrants who find themselves stuck in transit countries, between their home and anticipated destination. This book will be an invaluable learning resource for those wishing to understand the social and political processes that result from current migration policies, particularly in countries in the Global South.

What's Happening at the Center

Andrew Arthur testified before the House Judiciary Committee on Temporary Protected Status (TPS) and Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA), providing the history and characteristics of the programs. Mr. Arthur noted the questionable legality of DACA and cautioned Congress about issuing a new amnesty, which would increase illegal immigration, create significant fiscal costs, and be accompanied by widespread fraud.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

TPS for Venezuela?

Is the Homestead UAC Shelter Actually a Prison?

By Preston Huennekens

After visiting the Homestead HHS shelter in Florida, Preston finds one activist's claim that the shelter is "worse than a jail" to be completely inaccurate. Until Congress plugs the loopholes that lead to the catch-and-release policies, illegal immigration of "unaccompanied" minors will continue.

Humanitarian and National Security Disaster at the Border

By Andrew Arthur

The influx of parents and children along the Southwest border, which DHS Secretary Nielsen rightly calls a humanitarian crisis, is better understood in rural Guatemala than it is on Independence Avenue in Washington, D.C. It's a matter of closing asylum loopholes, which Democrats don't seem interested in talking about at all.

No Relationship Between Homicide Rates in Central America and Illegal Border Crossings

By Matthew Sussis

In Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador, there is no relationship between the murder rate and the number of border crossers. Cracks in our asylum laws create far stronger incentives for Central Americans to travel to our southern border than fear of violence.

Citizenship health inequalities across the US: State-level immigrant policies and health care access

La Jolla, CA 92093
https://ccis.ucsd.edu/_files/Event%20Flyers-Programs-Agendas/Event%20Flyer%20-%20Young%203-13-19.pdf

Speaker:
Maria-Elena De Trinidad Young
Project Director, Research on Immigrant Health and State Policy (RIGHTS) Study at the Center for Health Policy Research, University of California, Los Angeles
Chancellor's Postdoctoral Fellow, UC Merced

Description: In this talk, I present findings from two studies that examine how citizenship status and immigrant policies influence inequities in access to health care. Immigrants who lack citizenship are less likely to have health insurance and access to health care compared to citizens. Citizenship status is a form of inequality that is shaped by the policies that determine immigrants' rights and opportunities and the social environments in which they live. Using a novel, state-level policy data set and individual-level population survey data, I assess the extent to which the differences in insurance and access to care between noncitizens and citizens vary based states' inclusion or criminalization policies. Results suggest that there may be smaller health care inequities by citizenship in states with a greater number of policies that extend health, social welfare, educational and other rights to noncitizens and greater inequities in states that have more immigration enforcement and surveillance policies.

Description: Brookings will host François Héran for the 14th annual Raymond Aron Lecture. Our Hidden Borders: Guantánamo, Interdiction, and the Rise of Offshore Migration Policing

Myron Weiner Seminar Series on International Migration

4:30-6:00 p.m., Monday, March 18, 2019
MIT Center for International Studies
Building E40, 496
1 Amherst Street, Cambridge, MA 02142
http://calendar.mit.edu/event/myron_weiner_seminar_series_on_international_migration#.XFsER1xKi9I

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Description: Where exactly are the United States' immigration borders? Are they simply at the edge of US sovereign territory as the fixation on walls, fences, and domestic enforcement programs would suggest? In this talk, I offer a different perspective by tracing the rise of a mobile US border regime and its extension out into ocean spaces hundreds and thousands of miles beyond US soil. Along the way, we'll examine the reimagining of Guantánamo as a model for flexible, extraterritorial migration control and the intensive litigation battles over the treatment of Haitian asylum seekers that both gave birth to the US asylum system and partially drove it into a space of oceanic exceptionalism. As we'll see, the emergence of offshore interdiction and detention reveals not only hidden features of our contemporary borderscape but the roots of a respatialization of the nation-state itself.

Speaker:
Jeffrey Kahn, Assistant Professor, University of California, Davis

Professor Kahn is a sociocultural anthropologist and legal scholar with an interest in issues of migration, mobility, border policing, sovereignty, law, and ritual economies. His research on these topics has focused geographically on Haiti, the Guantánamo Naval Base, the United States, and the Republic of Bénin.

Crisis, what (refugee) crisis? The business of 'business-as-usual' in EU migration governance

2:30-4:00 p.m., Tuesday, April 2, 2019
York University, 519 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street, Toronto
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-crisis-what-refugee-crisis-the-business-of-business-as-usual-in-eu-migration-governance

Speaker:
Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

How We Think About Migration

3:30 p.m., Wednesday, April 3, 2019

A staff writer at the New Yorker and the recipient of numerous awards, including a Guggenheim Fellowship and a Carnegie Fellowship, Gessen teaches at Amherst College.

Description: Our current ways of thinking, telling stories, and creating policy are inadequate for the task of addressing the current worldwide crisis of human displacement. What assumptions need to be questioned, and what questions need to be reframed to make possible a meaningful and productive conversation about migration

Speaker:
Shahram Khosravi, Professor of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University

Description: We live in a time of wall fetishism. Never as today have human beings been so obsessed with building walls. Walls are, however, old. Empires built walls, from the Great Wall of China, to Hadrian's Wall in Northern England and the Limes Tripolitanus of the Roman Empire in North Africa to keep "barbarians" out. And if we look closer we can see that there are still traces of the old imperial visions in the modern borders and border walls. In this talk I will look at the connections of wars and walls; walls and empires. I will argue that there is a link between the installation of border walls (here) and the unsettling of communities (there). The current border regime is part of a larger and older project of colonial accumulation by dispossession and expulsion; stealing wealth, labor force, and time. I will also argue that border crossing discloses the cracks in the dominant narration of borders and that travelers without papers denaturalize what are otherwise naturalized borders, politicize what are otherwise depoliticized borders. I will illustrate this argument by following travelers without papers along the railways in the Balkans; tracing Afghan deportees in Kabul; and narrating the social life of the materialities used in the wall between Mexico and the US.

Description: We investigate whether American citizens can be persuaded to adopt more inclusionary behavior toward refugees by using a minimally invasive online perspective-taking exercise frequently used by refugee advocates in the real world. Through the use of a randomized survey experiment on a representative sample of American citizens, we find that this short and interactive perspective-taking exercise can promote, in the short term, Americans' willingness to act on behalf of Syrian refugees, by writing anonymous letters of support to the White House. This effect, while driven primarily by self-identified Democrats, is also apparent among self-identified Republicans.

Canadian Immigration Summit 2019: Expanding Our Horizons

Wednesday-Thursday, May 8-9, 2019
The Shaw Centre
Ottawa, Ontario, Canada
https://www.conferenceboard.ca/conf/immigration/default.aspx

Summit Overview
Expanding Our Horizons
How can we plan for tomorrow, today?
The purpose of the 2019 Summit is to explore how Canada can respond proactively to emerging immigration issues in a rapidly changing world.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

We tend to dwell on the past to tackle today's challenges and anticipate the ones we will experience tomorrow. Moreover, we are often focused on the short-term, with too little of our time and energy devoted to thinking about how we can plan for the future. However, the world is not standing still, and Canada is no exception. Changes at home and abroad will disrupt Canada's future immigration system in ways we cannot currently fathom. For example, how many of us five years ago imagined that a wave of populism would take the world by storm?

The Summit will examine key drivers of economic, social, and technological change that could affect our immigration system. The goal is not to predict the future, but rather to assess various, plausible immigration scenarios and how Canada can benefit from the opportunities while mitigating the threats in support of a stronger, more vibrant country. Expert speakers will challenge us to expand our horizons by testing our underlying assumptions and getting us to think and plan beyond the short-term.
Join over 400 delegates to explore these key issues and more:

* Populism: What does Canada need to do to prevent the rise of anti-immigrant populism?

* Future skills and the changing nature of work: As the economy evolves, how can Canada refine its selection and settlement programs for tomorrow's labour market?

* Settlement and technology: How will technological innovations affect the way Canada delivers settlement services?

* Diversity in the workplace: How can employers become more inclusive as the Canadian labour force becomes more diverse?

* Intergovernmental collaboration: How can our immigration system accommodate the growing role of the provinces, territories, and municipalities?

* Refugee flows: With the global refugee population at an all-time high, what can Canada do to help?

* Pan-Canadian Framework for the Assessment and Recognition of

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Foreign Qualifications: What progress has been made since 2009 and how can we improve further over the next 10 years?

* Global supply of talent: How can Canada remain a destination of choice for immigrants and international students as other countries offer improved economic opportunity to their citizens and global talent?

Immigrant and Native Fertility 2008 to 2017

Declining immigrant fertility highlights immigration's limited ability to slow America's aging

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (March 14, 2019) – A new report from the Center for Immigration Studies shows that immigrant fertility has declined significantly since 2008, and has fallen even more steeply than the fertility of the native-born – challenging the commonly held assumption that large-scale immigration is the solution to America's aging demographic pyramid.

Steven Camarota, the Center's Director of Research and co-author of the report, said, "It is tempting to believe that immigrants, with their somewhat higher birth rates, can stop America from aging and provide a quick fix to issues like funding Social Security. The reality, however, is that immigrants' higher fertility has a very modest impact on the nation's overall fertility rate – and immigrant fertility has declined more steeply in recent years than natives'. Immigration simply will not solve our aging problem."

View the full report: https://cis.org/Report/Immigrant-and-Native-Fertility-2008-2017

Key findings:

- The birth rate for women in their reproductive years (ages 15-50) declined more than twice as much for immigrants as for natives between 2008 and 2017.
- The birth rate for immigrant women of reproductive age declined from 76 to 62 births per thousand from 2008 to 2017 — a decline of 14 births per thousand. In contrast, native fertility declined from 55 to 50 births per thousand — a decline of five births per thousand.
- Although still higher than that of natives, immigrant fertility has only a small impact on the nation's overall birth rate. The presence of immigrants raises the birth rate for all women in their reproductive years by just two births per thousand (3.9 percent).
- Immigration has a minor impact because the difference between immigrant and native fertility is too small to significantly change the nation's overall birth rate.
- Even if the number of immigrant women 15 to 50 doubled along with births to this population, it would still only raise the overall national birth rate for women in their reproductive years by 2.6 percent.
- In addition to births per thousand, fertility is often measured using the total fertility rate (TFR). The TFR reports the number of children a woman can be expected to have in her lifetime based on current patterns.
- Like the birth rate, the TFR of immigrants has declined more rapidly than the TFR for natives since 2008. In 2008, immigrant women had a TFR of 2.75 children; by 2017 it had fallen to 2.18 — a 0.6-child decline. For natives it declined from 2.07 to 1.76 — a 0.3-child decline.

- Like births per thousand, the presence of immigrants in the country has only a small impact on the nation's overall TFR. In 2017, immigrants only increased the nation's overall TFR by 0.08 children (4.4 percent).
- If present trends continue, the TFR of immigrants may drop below 2.1 in the next few years, the level necessary to replace the existing population. An immigrant TFR of less than 2.1 would mean that, in the long run, immigration would add to the aging of American society.
- Another reason that immigration may in the long term add to population aging is that for every major racial/ethnic group sending large numbers of immigrants, fertility is below the replacement level among the native-born generation.
- In 2017, three-fourths of immigrant women in their reproductive years were either Hispanic or Asian. The TFR of native-born Hispanic women was 1.85 children and it was only 1.44 children for native-born Asians — both well below replacement level.
- Although immigration has only a small impact on overall fertility and aging, it has a significant impact on population size. For example, new immigrants and births to immigrants between 2000 and 2017 added 33.9 million people to the country — equal to more than three-fourths of U.S. population growth over this time period.

IQ2 Debate: Curb Immigration

Will more immigration cause too much tension?

6:30-8:00 p.m., Tuesday, March 26, 2019

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Sydney Town Hall
483 George Street
Sydney NSW 2000
Australia
https://ethics.org.au/experience/iq2-debate-curb-immigration/

Description: When Germany opened its borders to refugees during the Syrian war, Angela Merkel was saluted by progressives for her humane policy. “We can do this,” she infamously declared. But she was mistaken. The European migrant crisis ensued.

Thousands drowned crossing the Mediterranean from Turkey to Greece, including three year old Alan Kurdi whose body was found washed ashore. Poor countries with populations as small as two million didn’t know how to handle the influx of people travelling through.

Reports of mass New Year’s Eve sexual assaults and a German girl killed seemed unbelievable. Compassion shifted to distrust and pro-Brexit campaigners exploited this. Anti-immigrant nationalist leaders were elected across the continent.

Australia has not been immune to this rise in populist politics but we overwhelmingly support immigration and reject monolithic values. 82 percent of us agree “immigrants improve Australian society by bringing new ideas and cultures”. Another 80 percent feel immigrants are good for the economy.

But even higher numbers of us are concerned about the impact of unfettered population growth on our cities, housing prices, public transport, hospitals and schools. These perceptions may be justified with 61 percent net growth from immigration last year and 83 percent of the overseas-born population living in capital cities.

Regional Australia is feeling the pressure too. We’ve been taking so much water from the Murray Darling river system its indigenous fish died on mass. An Australian National University study says, “As the world’s driest inhabited continent with unique flora and fauna, Australia’s environment may not be able to cope with rapid population growth”.

Should Australia curb immigration?

Crisis, what (refugee) crisis? The business of 'business-as-usual' in EU migration governance

4700 Keele Street, Toronto
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-crisis-what-refugee-crisis-the-business-of-business-as-usual-in-eu-migration-governance

Speaker:
Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

XCPD - 715 Environmental Displacement and Migration

Certificate in International Migration Studies

Course Details: Since the earliest history of humankind, people have migrated in response to environmental change. Today there is growing concern that human-induced climate change, coupled with human settlement patterns, will lead to far greater movements of people; some movement is likely to be voluntary as people look for better opportunities elsewhere in response to changing livelihoods. Some is likely to be involuntary – either anticipatory as people see the handwriting on the wall or reactive as people have no alternative but to move. Some will be spontaneous – in the case of Puerto Rico where hundreds of thousands of people left Puerto Rico following Hurricane Maria in 2017. Some will be planned as in the case of Staten Island where people decided to move elsewhere, with government support, after Hurricane Sandy in 2012. Environmental displacement and migration are not just concerns for future generations; people are already moving. This course will begin with an examination of environmental risk due to physical processes and then review the state of theoretical knowledge about patterns of migration. The course will then look at the socio-economic, political, security, and demographic factors that affect environmental displacement and migration as well as the consequences for those who move, for the destination communities, for those left behind and for national and international politics.

Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Understand the relationship between environmental phenomena and socio-economic factors as drivers of displacement and migration

* Analyze the relationship between environmental risk and mobility

* Understand the normative frameworks applicable to different types of internal and cross-border migration and displacement

* Explain basic concepts, such as vulnerability, risk, disaster risk reduction, climate change mitigation and adaptation

* Identify different disciplinary approaches to environmental migration and displacement

* Recognize the different international institutional actors

Why Foreign Born Caregivers Earn More: Selective Attributes or Geographic Concentration?

Research finds that foreign-born nurses and caregivers, particularly in long-term care, earn more than the nativeborn. This implies favorable integration that does not undercut natives; however, the reasons for the foreignborn advantage are not well understood. Fieldwork highlights immigrants affinity for the elderly. At the same time, immigrants tend to work longer hours with greater workplace tenure. Individual selectivity into caregiving may condition outcomes. Another possibility is the concentration of foreign-born caregivers in metropolitan areas which may confer institutional ...

York University, 519 Kaneff Tower

http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/walling-unsettling-stealing?instance_id=153

Speaker:
Shahram Khosravi, Professor of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University

Description: We live in a time of wall fetishism. Never as today have human beings been so obsessed with building walls. Walls are, however, old. Empires built walls, from the Great Wall of China, to Hadrian's Wall in Northern England and the Limes Tripolitanus of the Roman Empire in North Africa to keep "barbarians" out. And if we look closer we can see that there are still traces of the old imperial visions in the modern borders and border walls. In this talk I will look at the connections of wars and walls; walls and empires. I will argue that there is a link between the installation of border walls (here) and the unsettling of communities (there). The current border regime is part of a larger and older project of colonial accumulation by dispossession and expulsion; stealing wealth, labor force, and time. I will also argue that border crossing discloses the cracks in the dominant narration of borders and that travelers without papers denaturalize what are otherwise naturalized borders, politicize what are otherwise depoliticized borders. I will illustrate this argument by following travelers without papers along the railways in the Balkans; tracing Afghan deportees in Kabul; and narrating the social life of the materialities used in the wall between Mexico and the US.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Speaker:
Claire Adida, Co-Driector, Center for Comparative Immigration Studies
Associate Professor of Political Science, UC San Diego

Description: We investigate whether American citizens can be persuaded to adopt more inclusionary behavior toward refugees by using a minimally invasive online perspective-taking exercise frequently used by refugee advocates in the real world. Through the use of a randomized survey experiment on a representative sample of American citizens, we find that this short and interactive perspective-taking exercise can promote, in the short term, Americans' willingness to act on behalf of Syrian refugees, by writing anonymous letters of support to the White House. This effect, while driven primarily by self-identified Democrats, is also apparent among self-identified Republicans.

XCPD-700-01 - Global Trends in International Migration

Certificate in International Migration Studies

Course Details: Worldwide international migration is a large and growing phenomenon, with more than 230 million people now living outside of their home countries for extended periods. Understanding the complex dynamics behind international migration is essential to improved policies and programs to address the multiple causes and consequences of these movements of people. This course provides an overview of international migration numbers and trends, causes of population movements, the impact of international migration on source and receiving countries, and policy responses to population movements.

The course provides an introduction to the major theories underpinning the study of international migration, including the new economics of labor migration, dual labor market theory, world systems theory, cumulative causation, and migration networks theory. The course focuses attention on domestic and international legal regimes regarding migration, examining laws, major legal cases and regulatory frameworks. It also examines issues pertaining to the integration of immigrants in destination countries. The connections between migration and such other issues as security, development and environmental change are discussed.

Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Assess the positive and negative impacts of international migration on source, transit, and destination countries;

* Describe the international legal frameworks that set out the rights of migrants and the responsibilities of states;

* Discuss and articulate the strengths and weaknesses of the principal policy frameworks governing the admission of migrants, control of irregular migration, and protection of refugees and other forced migrants;

* Explain the importance of gender in understanding the causes and consequences of international migration; and

* Describe models for integration of immigrants in destination countries and articulate the strengths and weaknesses of these approaches.

Canadian Immigration Summit 2019: Expanding Our Horizons

Wednesday-Thursday, May 8-9, 2019
The Shaw Centre
Ottawa, Ontario, Canada

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Summit Overview
Expanding Our Horizons
How can we plan for tomorrow, today?
The purpose of the 2019 Summit is to explore how Canada can respond proactively to emerging immigration issues in a rapidly changing world.

We tend to dwell on the past to tackle today's challenges and anticipate the ones we will experience tomorrow. Moreover, we are often focused on the short-term, with too little of our time and energy devoted to thinking about how we can plan for the future. However, the world is not standing still, and Canada is no exception. Changes at home and abroad will disrupt Canada's future immigration system in ways we cannot currently fathom. For example, how many of us five years ago imagined that a wave of populism would take the world by storm?

The Summit will examine key drivers of economic, social, and technological change that could affect our immigration system. The goal is not to predict the future, but rather to assess various, plausible immigration scenarios and how Canada can benefit from the opportunities while mitigating the threats in support of a stronger, more vibrant country. Expert speakers will challenge us to expand our horizons by testing our underlying assumptions and getting us to think and plan beyond the short-term.
Join over 400 delegates to explore these key issues and more:

* Populism: What does Canada need to do to prevent the rise of anti-immigrant populism?

* Future skills and the changing nature of work: As the economy evolves, how can Canada refine its selection and settlement programs for tomorrow's labour market?

* Settlement and technology: How will technological innovations affect the way Canada delivers settlement services?

* Diversity in the workplace: How can employers become more inclusive as the Canadian labour force becomes more diverse?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

* Intergovernmental collaboration: How can our immigration system accommodate the growing role of the provinces, territories, and municipalities?

* Refugee flows: With the global refugee population at an all-time high, what can Canada do to help?

* Pan-Canadian Framework for the Assessment and Recognition of Foreign Qualifications: What progress has been made since 2009 and how can we improve further over the next 10 years?

* Global supply of talent: How can Canada remain a destination of choice for immigrants and international students as other countries offer improved economic opportunity to their citizens and global talent?

Struggles to be able to stay in place: Salvadoran migration and collective action in times of violence

Speaker:
Joseph Wiltberger, Visiting Scholar, Center for Comparative Immigration Studies, UC San Diego
Assistant Professor of Central American Studies, California State University, Northridge

Description: From the 1980-1992 civil war to the present, Salvadorans have endured and navigated various situations of violence and displacement in El Salvador and elsewhere as migrants. In this talk, I discuss how, in spite of such circumstances, Salvadorans work toward building possibilities to be able to stay in place. Based on my long-range ethnographic fieldwork in El Salvador and with Salvadoran migrants, I examine how mobility and collective action operate jointly as a key resource in these struggles.

What's Happening at the Center

In their latest report, Steven Camarota and Karen Zeigler explain that while immigration significantly increases the overall size of the nation's population, its impact on slowing the aging of American society is very limited. Immigrant fertility has declined significantly since 2008 and the presence of immigrants raises the birth rate for all women in their reproductive years by just two births per thousand. If present trends continue, the total fertility rate (TFR) of immigrants may drop below 2.1 in the next few years, the level necessary to replace the existing population. An immigrant TFR of less than 2.1 would mean that, in the long run, immigration would add to the aging of American society.

Response to the American Immigration Council on the Value of Foreign Degrees

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Democrats have come out in opposition to an amendment that would alert the government when illegal aliens try to buy guns. This seems like exactly the kind of amendment that both sides of the gun control debate could get behind -- but apparently not.

The Center recently published Jason's report showing that immigrants with foreign degrees are less skilled than U.S. degree holders. The report was critiqued by an analyst at the American Immigration Council--but these critiques show a serious misunderstanding of the report.

Every month, 90 Britons on average apply for Belgian nationality
Belgium Statistical Office, March 13, 2019
https://statbel.fgov.be/en/news/every-month-90-britons-average-apply-belgian-nationality

Summary: The number of Britons acquiring the Belgian nationality has dramatically increased after the Brexit referendum on 23rd June 2016. Statbel, the Belgian statistical office, has analysed various socio-demographic characteristics of the 22,949 persons of British nationality living in Belgium on 1st January 2017. This analysis highlights the differences between the Britons who have changed their nationality in 2017 and those who have not. During the year 2017, 6 % of Britons living in Belgium (1,375 persons[1]) have changed their nationality.

As far as gender is concerned, there is almost no impact. In general, 6 % of Britons in our country have changed their nationality: 6.21 % of women (626 out of 10,073) and 5.82 % of men (749 out of 12,876). The difference is therefore not very significant

Technologies of Suspicion and the Ethics of Obligation in Political Asylum

By Bridget M. Haas and Amy Shuman

Ohio University Press, 294 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 0821423789, $80.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0821423789/centerforimmigra

Book Description: Across the globe, migration has been met with intensifying modes of criminalization and securitization, and claims for political asylum are increasingly met with suspicion. Asylum seekers have become the focus of global debates surrounding humanitarian obligations, on the one hand, and concerns surrounding national security and border control, on the other. In Technologies of Suspicion and the Ethics of Obligation in Political Asylum, contributors provide fine-tuned analyses of political asylum systems and the adjudication of asylum claims across a range of sociocultural and geopolitical contexts.

The contributors to this timely volume, drawing on a variety of theoretical perspectives, offer critical insights into the processes by which tensions between humanitarianism and security are negotiated at the local level, often with negative consequences for asylum seekers. By investigating how a politics of suspicion within asylum systems is enacted in everyday practices and interactions, the authors illustrate how asylum seekers are often produced as suspicious subjects by the very systems to which they appeal for protection.

Temporary Migration, Transformation and Development: Evidence from Europe and Asia

Hardcover, ISBN: 1138561282, $140.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1138561282/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 2317 KB, ASIN: B07NPR2L9R, 297 pp., $57.95

Book Description: In a world grappling with refugee crisis, political unrest and economies on the verge of collapse, temporary migration has become an increasingly common phenomenon.

This volume presents a comprehensive picture of the transformative and development potential of temporary transnational migration in political, legal, economic, social and cultural aspects.

This book:
* analyses how temporary migration is distinct from more permanent and circular forms of migration;
* brings together case studies from five Asian countries (China, India, the Philippines, Thailand and Turkey) and six European countries (Finland, Germany, Greece, Hungary, the Netherlands and Ukraine);
* is based on exhaustive interviews of over 800 migrants, returnees and migrants' family members, along with about 300 field experts, politicians, authorities and actors in civil society;
* illustrates the diverse nature of temporary migration, the continuing globalisation of the labour market and the interrelated changes to immigration, integration and emigration policies on local, national and international scales.

This volume will be indispensable to scholars and researchers of development studies, international politics, international relations, migration and diaspora studies, public policy, sociology and social anthropology. It will also be of importance to government think tanks and non-governmental organisations working in these areas.

River and the Wall

By Ben Masters and Andrew Sansom

Texas A&M University Press, 200 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1623497809, $35.00
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1623497809/centerforimmigra

Book Description: When a team of five explorers embarked on a 1,200-mile journey down the Rio Grande, the river that marks the southern boundary of Texas and the US-Mexico border, their goal was to experience and capture on film the rugged landscapes of this vast frontier before the controversial construction of a border wall changed this part of the river forever.

The crew—Texas filmmaker Ben Masters, Brazilian immigrant Filipe DeAndrade, Texas conservationist Jay Kleberg, wildlife biologist Heather Mackey, and Guatemalan-American river guide Austin Alvarado—began the trip in El Paso, pedaling mountain bikes through the city's dry river bed. Their path took them on horseback through the Big Bend, down the Wild and Scenic stretch of the river in canoes, and back to bikes from Laredo to Brownsville. They paddled the last ten miles through a forest of river cane to the Gulf of Mexico.

As they made their way to the Gulf, they met and talked with the people who know and live on the river—border patrol, wildlife biologists, ranchers, politicians, farmers, social workers, locals, and travelers. They climbed the wall (in twenty seconds). They encountered rare black bears, bighorn sheep, and birds of all kinds. And they sought to understand the complexities of immigration, the efficacy of a wall, and the impact of its construction on water access, wildlife, and the culture of the borderlands.

The River and the Wall is both a wild adventure on a spectacular river and a sobering commentary on the realities of walling it off.

How Safe Are We?: Homeland Security Since 9/11

By Janet Napolitano and Karen Breslau

PublicAffairs, 240 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 1541762223, $17.10

Kindle, 2150 KB, ASIN: B07F67VZTH, $13.99

2150 KB, ASIN: B07F67VZTH, $13.99

Book Description: Created in the wake of the greatest tragedy to occur on U.S. soil, the Department of Homeland Security was handed a sweeping mandate: make America safer. It would encompass intelligence and law enforcement agencies, oversee natural disasters, commercial aviation, border security and ICE, cybersecurity, and terrorism, among others. From 2009-2013, Janet Napolitano ran DHS and oversaw 22 federal agencies with 230,000 employees.

In How Safe Are We?, Napolitano pulls no punches, reckoning with the critics who call it Frankenstein's Monster of government run amok, and taking a hard look at the challenges we'll be facing in the future. But ultimately, she argues that the huge, multifaceted department is vital to our nation's security. An agency that's part terrorism prevention, part intelligence agency, part law enforcement, public safety, disaster recovery make for an odd combination the protocol-driven, tradition-bound Washington D.C. culture. But, she says, it has made us more safe, secure, and resilient.

Napolitano not only answers the titular question, but grapples with how these security efforts have changed our country and society. Where are the failures that leave us vulnerable and what has our 1 trillion dollar investment yielded over the last 15 years? And why haven't we had another massive terrorist attack in the U.S. since September 11th, 2001? In our current political climate, where Donald Trump has politicized nearly every aspect of the department, Napolitano's clarifying, bold vision is needed now more than ever.

Human Security and Migration in Europe's Southern Borders
By Susana de Sousa Ferreira

Palgrave Macmillan, 211 pp.

Hardcover, ISBN: 331977946X, $42.50
http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/331977946X/centerforimmigra

Kindle, 10965 KB, ASIN: B07LC3PFLR, $40.37

Book Description: This book examines the management of migratory flows in the Mediterranean within an international security perspective. The intense migratory flows registered during the year 2015 and the tragedies in the Mediterranean Sea have tested the mechanisms of the Union's immigration and asylum policies and its ability to respond to humanitarian crises. Moreover, these flows of varying intensities and geographies represent a threat to the internal security of the EU and its member states. By using Spain and Italy as case studies, the author theorizes that the EU, given its inability to adopt and implement a common policy to effectively manage migratory flows on its Southern border, uses a deterrence strategy based on minimum common denominators.

Supreme Court Overturns 9th Circuit Ruling on Mandatory Detention of Alien Criminals

Adolphus Busch Hall, Goldman Room

Cambridge, MA 02138
https://ces.fas.harvard.edu/events/2019/03/johannes-vogel-seminar-on-migration

Speaker:
Johannes Vogel, Member, German Bundestag; Secretary-General, Free Democratic Party in North-Rhine Westphalia

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Description: Debates on migration in Germany are older than the Federal Republic itself. Recent debates evolve around whether a new immigration law is needed and what it should look like to meet the country's needs for skilled migrants.

The so-called “refugee crisis” of 2015 led to the omnipresence of the topic of migration in the political debate, not least because the newly elected right-wing party as well as other politicians have taken controversial positions in the discussion.

Seeing itself under increased external pressure, the German government presented a draft for a new law on labor migration in 2018. Johannes Vogel, a member of the German Bundestag for the Free Democratic Party, will address whether these efforts are sufficient to provide Germany with a transparent and functioning immigration legislation.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

https://ethics.org.au/experience/iq2-debate-curb-immigration/

Description: When Germany opened its borders to refugees during the Syrian war, Angela Merkel was saluted by progressives for her humane policy. “We can do this,” she infamously declared. But she was mistaken. The European migrant crisis ensued.

Thousands drowned crossing the Mediterranean from Turkey to Greece, including three year old Alan Kurdi whose body was found washed ashore. Poor countries with populations as small as two million didn’t know how to handle the influx of people travelling through.

Reports of mass New Year’s Eve sexual assaults and a German girl killed seemed unbelievable. Compassion shifted to distrust and pro-Brexit campaigners exploited this. Anti-immigrant nationalist leaders were elected across the continent.

Australia has not been immune to this rise in populist politics but we overwhelmingly support immigration and reject monolithic values. 82 percent of us agree “immigrants improve Australian society by bringing new ideas and cultures”. Another 80 percent feel immigrants are good for the economy.

But even higher numbers of us are concerned about the impact of unfettered population growth on our cities, housing prices, public transport, hospitals and schools. These perceptions may be justified with 61 percent net growth from immigration last year and 83 percent of the overseas-born population living in capital cities.

Regional Australia is feeling the pressure too. We’ve been taking so much water from the Murray Darling river system its indigenous fish died on mass. An Australian National University study says, “As the world’s driest inhabited continent with unique flora and fauna, Australia’s environment may not be able to cope with rapid population growth”.

Should Australia curb immigration?

Migrants Strengthen Their Host Countries

Description: According to a new Pew Research Center Report with data from 18 nations, majorities in some of the world's top destinations for international migrants say immigrants strengthen their countries. In 10 of the countries surveyed, majorities view immigrants as a strength rather than a burden. By contrast, majorities in five countries surveyed see immigrants as a burden to their countries. With the exception of Russia, these countries each have fewer than 5 million immigrants. In the U.S., the nation with the world's largest number of immigrants, six-in-ten adults (59%) say immigrants make the country stronger because of their work and talents, while one-third (34%) say immigrants are a burden because they take jobs and social benefits. Views about immigrants have shifted in many of these countries. In Greece, Germany and Italy, three countries that experienced high volumes of arrivals during the 2015 refugee surge, the share saying immigrants make their countries stronger dropped significantly in 2018. By contrast, public opinion shifted in the opposite direction in France, the UK and Spain, countries that received fewer asylum seekers in 2015.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

U.S.-Mexican security cooperation: The opportunities and challenges ahead

2:00-3:30 p.m. EDT, Wednesday, March 27, 2019
Brookings Institution, Falk Auditorium
1775 Massachusetts Avenue N.W.
Washington, DC, 20036
https://www.brookings.edu/events/u-s-mexican-security-cooperation-the-opportunities-and-challenges-ahead/

Description: Over the past two decades, the United States and Mexico have developed unprecedented levels of security cooperation. Yet during that time, Mexico has experienced intense and rising levels of criminal violence. Despite important reforms and assistance from the United States, many aspects of rule of law in Mexico remain troubled. At the same time, the United States has been facing a deadly opioid epidemic. Although instigated by the over-prescription of legal opioids, the epidemic has recently become partially fueled by opioid supply from and through Mexico. The election of U.S. President Donald Trump and the election of Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador pose new challenges and opportunities for U.S.-Mexican security, drug, border, and migration policy cooperation. The two leaders have divergent views on security policy priorities, with President López Obrador, for example, declaring an end to the war on drugs in Mexico. Meanwhile, President Trump seeks to construct a wall along the U.S.-Mexican border.

The Brookings Institution will host a discussion of the possibilities for enhancing security cooperation between the two countries. First, Mexican Ambassador to the United States Martha Bárcena Coqui will present the security policy of the López Obrador administration and its vision of the U.S.-Mexican cooperation. The ambassador will then take audience questions.

Next, Rafael Fernández de Castro, the chair of a U.S.-Mexican task force on security cooperation and director of the Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies at the University of California, San Diego, and task force member Earl Anthony Wayne, former U.S. ambassador to Mexico and public policy fellow at the Woodrow Wilson Center, will present key findings and recommendations of the task force white paper. Brookings senior fellow and member of the task force Vanda Felbab-Brown will moderate the session. After the introductory comments, the panelists will take questions from the audience.

Crisis, what (refugee) crisis? The business of 'business-as-usual' in EU migration governance

2:30-4:00 p.m., Tuesday, April 2, 2019
York University, 519 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street, Toronto
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-crisis-what-refugee-crisis-the-business-of-business-as-usual-in-eu-migration-governance

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Speaker:
Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

Addressing Trauma in Young Children in Immigrant and Refugee Families through Early Childhood Programs

2:00 p.m. ET, Wednesday, April 3, 2019
MPI Webinar
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/addressing-trauma-young-children-immigrant-and-refugee-families

Speakers:
Jessica Dym Bartlett, Co-Director, Early Childhood Research, Child Trends

Aimee Hilado, Wellness Program Senior Manager, RefugeeOne

Caitlin Katsiaficas, Associate Policy Analyst, Migration Policy Institute (MPI)

Maki Park, Senior Policy Analyst for Early Education and Care, MPI

Description: Many young children of immigrants and refugees are affected by trauma, whether directly or through their parents or other family members. Early childhood programs have the potential to play an important role in identifying and addressing infant and early childhood mental-health challenges for immigrant families that may result from exposure to trauma and other stressors. However, their capacity to take a trauma-informed approach in their services and provide appropriate support and referrals—especially with regard to immigrant, refugee, and other culturally and linguistically diverse families—is limited.

During this webinar, speakers will discuss the intersection of trauma and early childhood development, exploring how migration-related trauma and stressors can influence the wellbeing of young children of immigrants. Researchers from MPI's National Center on Immigrant Integration Policy will provide an overview of a new policy brief that seeks to raise awareness of this issue and points to key opportunities for states to support, through early childhood and other programs, the healthy socioemotional development of young children of immigrants and refugees who have experienced trauma. Jessica Dym Bartlett will discuss efforts to integrate trauma-informed approaches into early childhood systems, with a focus on opportunities to expand access and quality of these services specifically for immigrant and refugee families with young children. Aimee Hilado, with the largest refugee resettlement agency in Illinois, will discuss how home visiting services can effectively address trauma and mental health through a two-generation approach.

XCPD - 715 Environmental Displacement and Migration

Certificate in International Migration Studies

Course Details: Since the earliest history of humankind, people have migrated in response to environmental change. Today there is growing concern that human-induced climate change, coupled with human settlement patterns, will lead to far greater movements of people; some movement is likely to be voluntary as people look for better opportunities elsewhere in response to changing livelihoods. Some is likely to be involuntary – either anticipatory as people see the handwriting on the wall or reactive as people have no alternative but to move. Some will be spontaneous – in the case of Puerto Rico where hundreds of thousands of people left Puerto Rico following Hurricane Maria in 2017. Some will be planned as in the case of Staten Island where people decided to move elsewhere, with government support, after Hurricane Sandy in 2012. Environmental displacement and migration are not just concerns for future generations; people are already moving. This course will begin with an examination of environmental risk due to physical processes and then review the state of theoretical knowledge about patterns of migration. The course will then look at the socio-economic, political, security, and demographic factors that affect environmental displacement and migration as well as the consequences for those who move, for the destination communities, for those left behind and for national and international politics.

Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Understand the relationship between environmental phenomena and socio-economic factors as drivers of displacement and migration

* Analyze the relationship between environmental risk and mobility

* Understand the normative frameworks applicable to different types of internal and cross-border migration and displacement

* Explain basic concepts, such as vulnerability, risk, disaster risk reduction, climate change mitigation and adaptation

* Identify different disciplinary approaches to environmental migration and displacement

* Recognize the different international institutional actors

Why Foreign Born Caregivers Earn More: Selective Attributes or Geographic Concentration?

Research finds that foreign-born nurses and caregivers, particularly in long-term care, earn more than the nativeborn. This implies favorable integration that does not undercut natives; however, the reasons for the foreignborn advantage are not well understood. Fieldwork highlights immigrantâ€™s affinity for the elderly. At the same time, immigrantsâ€™ tend to work longer hours with greater workplace tenure. Individual selectivity into caregiving may condition outcomes. Another possibility is the concentration of foreign-born caregivers in metropolitan areas which may confer institutional

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

York University, 519 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street, Toronto
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/walling-unsettling-stealing?instance_id=153

Speaker:
Shahram Khosravi, Professor of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University

Description: We live in a time of wall fetishism. Never as today have human beings been so obsessed with building walls. Walls are, however, old. Empires built walls, from the Great Wall of China, to Hadrian's Wall in Northern England and the Limes Tripolitanus of the Roman Empire in North Africa to keep "barbarians" out. And if we look closer we can see that there are still traces of the old imperial visions in the modern borders and border walls. In this talk I will look at the connections of wars and walls; walls and empires. I will argue that there is a link between the installation of border walls (here) and the unsettling of communities (there). The current border regime is part of a larger and older project of colonial accumulation by dispossession and expulsion; stealing wealth, labor force, and time. I will also argue that border crossing discloses the cracks in the dominant narration of borders and that travelers without papers denaturalize what are otherwise naturalized borders, politicize what are otherwise depoliticized borders. I will illustrate this argument by following travelers without papers along the railways in the Balkans; tracing Afghan deportees in Kabul; and narrating the social life of the materialities used in the wall between Mexico and the US.

Description: We investigate whether American citizens can be persuaded to adopt more inclusionary behavior toward refugees by using a minimally invasive online perspective-taking exercise frequently used by refugee advocates in the real world. Through the use of a randomized survey experiment on a representative sample of American citizens, we find that this short and interactive perspective-taking exercise can promote, in the short term, Americans' willingness to act on behalf of Syrian refugees, by writing anonymous letters of support to the White House. This effect, while driven primarily by self-identified Democrats, is also apparent among self-identified Republicans.

XCPD-700-01 - Global Trends in International Migration

Certificate in International Migration Studies

Course Details: Worldwide international migration is a large and growing phenomenon, with more than 230 million people now living outside of their home countries for extended periods. Understanding the complex dynamics behind international migration is essential to improved policies and programs to address the multiple causes and consequences of these movements of people. This course provides an overview of international migration numbers and trends, causes of population movements, the impact of international migration on source and receiving countries, and policy responses to population movements.

The course provides an introduction to the major theories underpinning the study of international migration, including the new economics of labor migration, dual labor market theory, world systems theory, cumulative causation, and migration networks theory. The course focuses attention on domestic and international legal regimes regarding migration, examining laws, major legal cases and regulatory frameworks. It also examines issues pertaining to the integration of immigrants in destination countries. The connections between migration and such other issues as security, development and environmental change are discussed.

Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Assess the positive and negative impacts of international migration on source, transit, and destination countries;

* Describe the international legal frameworks that set out the rights of migrants and the responsibilities of states;

* Discuss and articulate the strengths and weaknesses of the principal policy frameworks governing the admission of migrants, control of irregular migration, and protection of refugees and other forced migrants;

* Explain the importance of gender in understanding the causes and consequences of international migration; and

* Describe models for integration of immigrants in destination countries and articulate the strengths and weaknesses of these approaches.

Canadian Immigration Summit 2019: Expanding Our Horizons

Wednesday-Thursday, May 8-9, 2019
The Shaw Centre
Ottawa, Ontario, Canada
https://www.conferenceboard.ca/conf/immigration/default.aspx

Summit Overview
Expanding Our Horizons

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

How can we plan for tomorrow, today?
The purpose of the 2019 Summit is to explore how Canada can respond proactively to emerging immigration issues in a rapidly changing world.

We tend to dwell on the past to tackle today's challenges and anticipate the ones we will experience tomorrow. Moreover, we are often focused on the short-term, with too little of our time and energy devoted to thinking about how we can plan for the future. However, the world is not standing still, and Canada is no exception. Changes at home and abroad will disrupt Canada's future immigration system in ways we cannot currently fathom. For example, how many of us five years ago imagined that a wave of populism would take the world by storm?

The Summit will examine key drivers of economic, social, and technological change that could affect our immigration system. The goal is not to predict the future, but rather to assess various, plausible immigration scenarios and how Canada can benefit from the opportunities while mitigating the threats in support of a stronger, more vibrant country. Expert speakers will challenge us to expand our horizons by testing our underlying assumptions and getting us to think and plan beyond the short-term.

Join over 400 delegates to explore these key issues and more:

* Populism: What does Canada need to do to prevent the rise of anti-immigrant populism?

* Future skills and the changing nature of work: As the economy evolves, how can Canada refine its selection and settlement programs for tomorrow's labour market?

* Settlement and technology: How will technological innovations affect the way Canada delivers settlement services?

* Diversity in the workplace: How can employers become more inclusive as the Canadian labour force becomes more diverse?

* Intergovernmental collaboration: How can our immigration system accommodate the growing role of the provinces, territories, and municipalities?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

* Refugee flows: With the global refugee population at an all-time high, what can Canada do to help?

* Pan-Canadian Framework for the Assessment and Recognition of Foreign Qualifications: What progress has been made since 2009 and how can we improve further over the next 10 years?

* Global supply of talent: How can Canada remain a destination of choice for immigrants and international students as other countries offer improved economic opportunity to their citizens and global talent?

Trump Administration Betrays American Workers, Again

Today's announcement raises the H-2B visa cap to an all-time high

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (March 29, 2019) – An analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies finds that today's announcement by the Trump administration to increase guestworker visas is yet another betrayal of less-skilled American workers.

DHS revealed today that it would increase the number of H-2B visas for 2019 by 30,000, bringing the cap to a record 96,000. These visas are for less-skilled, non-agricultural jobs, like landscaping, cleaning, etc.

View the full analysis: https://cis.org/Huennekens/Latest-Trump-H2B-Increase-Again-Betrays-American-Workers

Preston Huennekens, a Research Associate at the Center and the author of the analysis, said, "The H-2B program is a raw deal for Americans, because H-2B visa holders get paid less than their American counterparts. In fact, H-2B visas prevent many of the neediest Americans from securing meaningful employment. For President Trump to allow this program to flourish is a betrayal of his promise to protect the American worker."

The Trump administration has repeatedly allowed the H-2B program to grow beyond its annual statutory cap of 66,000. In 2017 and 2018, the DHS secretary permitted “temporary” one-time increases of 15,000 more guestworkers. (Congress authorized the increases, but left the decision up to DHS so as to avoid political accountability.). The president could have prevented this simply by ordering the secretary to do nothing. In February 2019, Trump signed a spending bill that allows the DHS secretary to raise the H-2B cap to as high as 135,000. Not even under President Obama did H-2B rise to these levels.

Unaccompanied Alien Children and the Crisis at the Border

UAC apprehensions have surged 685 percent since 2017 due to loopholes

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (April 1, 2019) – A new report from the Center for Immigration Studies highlights the soaring number of unaccompanied alien children (UACs) being apprehended at the border due to loopholes in our immigration laws. The report also highlights how the surge in UACs, along with the ongoing arrival of family units, will continue to overwhelm the Border Patrol, Immigration and Customs Enforcement, and the immigration courts until lawmakers step in.

Andrew Arthur, the Center's Resident Fellow in Law and Policy and the author of the report, said, "Foreign nationals living in the United States know that if they pay to have their children brought here here, they will be quickly reunited and likely remain here indefinitely due to our asylum loopholes. As such, it is no wonder that they're paying criminals to do so. This flow, which is perilous for the minors themselves and overwhelming for our immigration system, will not stop rising until Congress plugs the loopholes driving it."

View the full report: https://cis.org/Report/Unaccompanied-Alien-Children-and-Crisis-Border

The number of UACs apprehended entering illegally along the Southwest border, which had bottomed out in April 2017 following the inauguration of Donald Trump, surged almost 685 percent by February 2019. Similarly, the number of UACs deemed inadmissible at the ports of entry along that border surged 385 percent between March 2017 and February 2019.

In May 2017, Doctors Without Borders (commonly known by its French acronym "MSF") reported that more than two-thirds of the migrant and refugee populations entering Mexico reported being victims of violence during their transit toward the United States and that almost one-third of women surveyed had been sexually abused during that trip.

Description: Transnational criminal organizations and cartels use corridors connecting Central and South America to the United States as an illicit sales route, dealing in anything that can turn a profit. Drug trafficking, human smuggling, illicit weapons, money laundering, and public corruption are the tools of their poisonous trade, and countries throughout the region suffer the devastating effects.

U.S. Senator John Cornyn (R-TX) will discuss his plan to address this crisis on multiple fronts – to stop the influx of drugs, fight human trafficking, reduce public corruption, strengthen border security, improve trade relations, and provide greater economic security in the Americas.

Crisis, what (refugee) crisis? The business of 'business-as-usual' in EU migration governance

2:30-4:00 p.m., Tuesday, April 2, 2019
York University, 519 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street, Toronto
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/crs-seminar-crisis-what-refugee-crisis-the-business-of-business-as-usual-in-eu-migration-governance

Speaker:
Emma Carmel, Senior Lecturer, Department of Social & Policy Sciences, University of Bath

Description: This presentation examines how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' emerged at a specific historical moment in the European Union, what happened to this idea and why it matters. Using tools of policy anthropology I show how the idea of 'the refugee crisis' has given meaning and impetus to specific governing practices that disguise the political and moral economies of 'business-as-usual' migration governance in the EU. The idea of 'the refugee crisis' was adopted as a political strategy that calcifies structural inequalities between states, and between private market actors and 'the Union'; and patterns of exclusion, detention, exploitation and expulsion for migrants.

Addressing Trauma in Young Children in Immigrant and Refugee Families through Early Childhood Programs

2:00 p.m. ET, Wednesday, April 3, 2019
MPI Webinar
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/addressing-trauma-young-children-immigrant-and-refugee-families

Speakers:
Jessica Dym Bartlett, Co-Director, Early Childhood Research, Child Trends

Aimee Hilado, Wellness Program Senior Manager, RefugeeOne

Caitlin Katsiaficas, Associate Policy Analyst, Migration Policy Institute (MPI)

Maki Park, Senior Policy Analyst for Early Education and Care, MPI

Description: Many young children of immigrants and refugees are affected by trauma, whether directly or through their parents or other family members. Early childhood programs have the potential to play an important role in identifying and addressing infant and early childhood mental-health challenges for immigrant families that may result from exposure to trauma and other stressors. However, their capacity to take a trauma-informed approach in their services and provide appropriate support and referrals—especially with regard to immigrant, refugee, and other culturally and linguistically diverse families—is limited.

During this webinar, speakers will discuss the intersection of trauma and early childhood development, exploring how migration-related trauma and stressors can influence the wellbeing of young children of immigrants. Researchers from MPI's National Center on Immigrant Integration Policy will provide an overview of a new policy brief that seeks to raise awareness of this issue and points to key opportunities for states to support, through early childhood and other programs, the healthy socioemotional development of young children of immigrants and refugees who have experienced trauma. Jessica Dym Bartlett will discuss efforts to integrate trauma-informed approaches into early childhood systems, with a focus on opportunities to expand access and quality of these services specifically for immigrant and refugee families with young children. Aimee Hilado, with the largest refugee resettlement agency in Illinois, will discuss how home visiting services can effectively address trauma and mental health through a two-generation approach.

XCPD - 715 Environmental Displacement and Migration

Certificate in International Migration Studies

Course Details: Since the earliest history of humankind, people have migrated in response to environmental change. Today there is growing concern that human-induced climate change, coupled with human settlement patterns, will lead to far greater movements of people; some movement is likely to be voluntary as people look for better opportunities elsewhere in response to changing livelihoods. Some is likely to be involuntary – either anticipatory as people see the handwriting on the wall or reactive as people have no alternative but to move. Some will be spontaneous – in the case of Puerto Rico where hundreds of thousands of people left Puerto Rico following Hurricane Maria in 2017. Some will be planned as in the case of Staten Island where people decided to move elsewhere, with government support, after Hurricane Sandy in 2012. Environmental displacement and migration are not just concerns for future generations; people are already moving. This course will begin with an examination of environmental risk due to physical processes and then review the state of theoretical knowledge about patterns of migration. The course will then look at the socio-economic, political, security, and demographic factors that affect environmental displacement and migration as well as the consequences for those who move, for the destination communities, for those left behind and for national and international politics.

Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Understand the relationship between environmental phenomena and socio-economic factors as drivers of displacement and migration

* Analyze the relationship between environmental risk and mobility

* Understand the normative frameworks applicable to different types of internal and cross-border migration and displacement

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

* Explain basic concepts, such as vulnerability, risk, disaster risk reduction, climate change mitigation and adaptation

* Identify different disciplinary approaches to environmental migration and displacement

* Recognize the different international institutional actors

Remittances to Latin America and the Caribbean in 2018

12:00-2:00 a.m., Thursday, April 4, 2019
Inter-American Dialogue
1155 15th St NW Suite 800
Washington, DC 20005
https://www.thedialogue.org/events/remittances-to-latin-america-and-the-caribbean-in-2018/

Description: According to new research by the Inter-American Dialogue, in 2018 family remittances to Latin America and the Caribbean grew by over ten percent, reaching US$85 billion. The growth in remittances stands in stark contrast to the region's sluggish economic growth rate, less than two percent.

Haiti, Colombia, Guatemala and Mexico are among the countries with the highest levels of remittance growth for 2018. Factors driving growth vary by country and include increases in the size of the average remittance, new migration flows to the United States, and rising intra-regional migration mostly related to political instability. At the same time, the ways that people are sending money are evolving as the marketplace for money transfers becomes increasingly competitive and digitalized.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The discussion will focus on 2018 remittance flows, the outlook for 2019, and specific country case studies.

This event is part of the Inter-American Dialogue's Remittance Industry Observatory, an initiative that seeks to share information and analysis about the remittance market.

Why Foreign Born Caregivers Earn More: Selective Attributes or Geographic Concentration?

Research finds that foreign-born nurses and caregivers, particularly in long-term care, earn more than the nativeborn. This implies favorable integration that does not undercut natives; however, the reasons for the foreignborn advantage are not well understood. Fieldwork highlights immigrantânts affinity for the elderly. At the same time, immigrants tend to work longer hours with greater workplace tenure. Individual selectivity into caregiving may condition outcomes. Another possibility is the concentration of foreign-born caregivers in metropolitan areas which may confer institutional

York University, 519 Kaneff Tower

http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/walling-unsettling-stealing?instance_id=153

Speaker:
Shahram Khosravi, Professor of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University

Description: We live in a time of wall fetishism. Never as today have human beings been so obsessed with building walls. Walls are, however, old. Empires built walls, from the Great Wall of China, to Hadrian's Wall in Northern England and the Limes Tripolitanus of the Roman Empire in North Africa to keep "barbarians" out. And if we look closer we can see that there are still traces of the old imperial visions in the modern borders and border walls. In this talk I will look at the connections of wars and walls; walls and empires. I will argue that there is a link between the installation of border walls (here) and the unsettling of communities (there). The current border regime is part of a larger and older project of colonial accumulation by dispossession and expulsion; stealing wealth, labor force, and time. I will also argue that border crossing discloses the cracks in the dominant narration of borders and that travelers without papers denaturalize what are otherwise naturalized borders, politicize what are otherwise depoliticized borders. I will illustrate this argument by following travelers without papers along the railways in the Balkans; tracing Afghan deportees in Kabul; and narrating the social life of the materialities used in the wall between Mexico and the US.

International vs. National Protection for Refugees: Diverging Trends?

10:30 a.m.-12:00 p.m. ET, Wednesday, April 10, 2019
MPI Conference Room
1400 16th Street NW, Suite 300
Washington, DC 20036
https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/international-national-protection-refugees-diverging-trends

Description: The global response to the rising challenge of refugee displacement has been marked by two contradictory trends. First, at the international level there has been a recognition of the gravity of the problem and a move toward responsibility sharing and global governance of refugee situations—most notably through the adoption of the Global Compact on Refugees in December 2018. At the same time, a very different trend is emerging among countries in the Global North as a number of governments have actively narrowed their protection frameworks, tightened asylum policies, and limited the rights of refugees through laws and policies, effectively strengthening barriers to movement for those who are seeking refuge or asylum.

Join MPI for a conversation exploring the factors behind this divergence between the international community and national policies and what it means for cooperation at the international level. MPI's Kathleen Newland will discuss what has been accomplished through the Global Compact on Refugees and what its implementation is likely to accomplish. Mary Giovagnoli, of Refugee Council USA, will examine how protection policy has shifted in the United States and the implications this has for the ability of the international community to respond to global refugee needs. David Scott FitzGerald will share insights from his new book, Refuge beyond Reach, regarding how asylum policies in high-income democracies have been adapted to shut down most legal paths to safety for refugees through a range of deterrence methods that, while complying with the letter of their international commitments to refugees, do not adhere to them in spirit.

Speakers:
Kathleen Newland, Co-founder and Senior Fellow, Migration Policy Institute

Mary Giovagnoli, Director, Refugee Council USA (RCUSA)

David Scott FitzGerald, Theodore E. Gildred Chair in U.S.-Mexican Relations, Professor of Sociology, and Co-Director of the Center for Comparative Immigration Studies, University of California, San Diego; and Author, Refuge beyond Reach

Andrew Selee, President, Migration Policy Institute

What makes Americans act on behalf of refugees?

12:00-1:30 p.m. PDT, Tuesday, May 1, 2019
ERC Conference Room 115
The Center for Comparative Immigration Studies, UC San Diego
9500 Gilman Drive
La Jolla, CA 92093

Speaker:
Claire Adida, Co-Driector, Center for Comparative Immigration Studies
Associate Professor of Political Science, UC San Diego

Description: We investigate whether American citizens can be persuaded to adopt more inclusionary behavior toward refugees by using a minimally invasive online perspective-taking exercise frequently used by refugee advocates in the real world. Through the use of a randomized survey experiment on a representative sample of American citizens, we find that this short and interactive perspective-taking exercise can promote, in the short term, Americans' willingness to act on behalf of Syrian refugees, by writing anonymous letters of support to the White House. This effect, while driven primarily by self-identified Democrats, is also apparent among self-identified Republicans.

XCPD-700-01 - Global Trends in International Migration

Certificate in International Migration Studies

Course Details: Worldwide international migration is a large and growing phenomenon, with more than 230 million people now living outside of their home countries for extended periods. Understanding the complex dynamics behind international migration is essential to improved policies and programs to address the multiple causes and consequences of these movements of people. This course provides an overview of international migration numbers and trends, causes of population movements, the impact of international migration on source and receiving countries, and policy responses to population movements.

The course provides an introduction to the major theories underpinning the study of international migration, including the new economics of labor migration, dual labor market theory, world systems theory, cumulative causation, and migration networks theory. The course focuses attention on domestic and international legal regimes regarding migration, examining laws, major legal cases and regulatory frameworks. It also examines issues pertaining to the integration of immigrants in destination countries. The connections between migration and such other issues as security, development and environmental change are discussed.

Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Assess the positive and negative impacts of international migration on source, transit, and destination countries;

* Describe the international legal frameworks that set out the rights of migrants and the responsibilities of states;

* Discuss and articulate the strengths and weaknesses of the principal policy frameworks governing the admission of migrants, control of irregular migration, and protection of refugees and other forced migrants;

* Explain the importance of gender in understanding the causes and consequences of international migration; and

* Describe models for integration of immigrants in destination countries and articulate the strengths and weaknesses of these approaches.

Canadian Immigration Summit 2019: Expanding Our Horizons

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Wednesday-Thursday, May 8-9, 2019
The Shaw Centre
Ottawa, Ontario, Canada
https://www.conferenceboard.ca/conf/immigration/default.aspx

Summit Overview
Expanding Our Horizons
How can we plan for tomorrow, today?
The purpose of the 2019 Summit is to explore how Canada can respond proactively to emerging immigration issues in a rapidly changing world.

We tend to dwell on the past to tackle today's challenges and anticipate the ones we will experience tomorrow. Moreover, we are often focused on the short-term, with too little of our time and energy devoted to thinking about how we can plan for the future. However, the world is not standing still, and Canada is no exception. Changes at home and abroad will disrupt Canada's future immigration system in ways we cannot currently fathom. For example, how many of us five years ago imagined that a wave of populism would take the world by storm?

The Summit will examine key drivers of economic, social, and technological change that could affect our immigration system. The goal is not to predict the future, but rather to assess various, plausible immigration scenarios and how Canada can benefit from the opportunities while mitigating the threats in support of a stronger, more vibrant country. Expert speakers will challenge us to expand our horizons by testing our underlying assumptions and getting us to think and plan beyond the short-term.
Join over 400 delegates to explore these key issues and more:

* Populism: What does Canada need to do to prevent the rise of anti-immigrant populism?

* Future skills and the changing nature of work: As the economy evolves, how can Canada refine its selection and settlement programs for tomorrow's labour market?

* Settlement and technology: How will technological innovations affect the way Canada delivers settlement services?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

* Diversity in the workplace: How can employers become more inclusive as the Canadian labour force becomes more diverse?

* Intergovernmental collaboration: How can our immigration system accommodate the growing role of the provinces, territories, and municipalities?

* Refugee flows: With the global refugee population at an all-time high, what can Canada do to help?

* Pan-Canadian Framework for the Assessment and Recognition of Foreign Qualifications: What progress has been made since 2009 and how can we improve further over the next 10 years?

* Global supply of talent: How can Canada remain a destination of choice for immigrants and international students as other countries offer improved economic opportunity to their citizens and global talent?

Struggles to be able to stay in place: Salvadoran migration and collective action in times of violence

12:00-1:30 p.m. PDT, Monday, May 13, 2019

The Center for Comparative Immigration Studies, UC San Diego
9500 Gilman Drive
La Jolla, CA 92093

Speaker:
Joseph Wiltberger, Visiting Scholar, Center for Comparative Immigration Studies, UC San Diego

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Assistant Professor of Central American Studies, California State University, Northridge

Description: From the 1980-1992 civil war to the present, Salvadorans have endured and navigated various situations of violence and displacement in El Salvador and elsewhere as migrants. In this talk, I discuss how, in spite of such circumstances, Salvadorans work toward building possibilities to be able to stay in place. Based on my long-range ethnographic fieldwork in El Salvador and with Salvadoran migrants, I examine how mobility and collective action operate jointly as a key resource in these struggles.

Questions about Family Units Raised by TRAC

Numbers don't add up, and a possible disaster is brewing

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (March 27, 2019) – New analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies of a report on immigration courts' growing asylum backlog raises significant questions about the capability of the U.S. immigrant system to process the flood of so-called "family" units entering illegally with children at the Southwest border, which could lead to a humanitarian disaster and an immigration enforcement breakdown.

The report, by the Transactional Records Clearinghouse (TRAC), warned that "arrivals greatly outnumber the families in court proceedings" and that "the number of family units apprehended by Border Patrol or detained at ports of entry dwarfs the actual number of cases that have thus far made their way to immigration court."

View the full report: https://cis.org/Arthur/Questions-about-Family-Units-Raised-TRAC

Andrew Arthur, the Center's Resident Fellow in Law and Policy and author of the analysis, said, "Far more family units are being apprehended than are actually appearing on the immigration court dockets, likely because families are being released to appear for later credible fear determinations, giving many the opportunity to remain here indefinitely. News travels fast, and if we lack the resources to adjudicate credible fear claims in a timely manner, more aliens will come here, knowing they'll likely be able to remain at-large in the U.S."

Another explanation for the lag time could be a failure by asylum officers to place family units who have been found to have a credible fear into removal proceedings in a timely manner. Under section 235(b)(1)(B)(ii) of the INA, aliens who are found to have a credible fear are subject to mandatory detention "for further consideration of the application for asylum." Again, however, it is doubtful that ICE is detaining tens of thousands of family units until immigration judges can make determinations on their asylum applications. This, again, would mean that those aliens are being released indefinitely.

If any alien's purpose in coming to the United States illegally is to live and work in the United States (the reason for the vast majority of illegal entrants), the release of that alien gives other foreign nationals a strong incentive to enter the United States illegally. If there is significant lag time between apprehension and either credible-fear determinations, or the placement of aliens found to have a credible fear into removal proceedings, or the docketing of cases of aliens found to have a credible fear with the immigration courts, and those aliens are at large in the United States during such lag times, those incentives increase.

Canada's population estimates, fourth quarter 2018
Population continues to grow rapidly, driven by international migration Statistics Canada, March 21, 2019
https://www150.statcan.gc.ca/n1/en/daily-quotidien/190321/dq190321d-eng.pdf

Excerpt: On January 1, 2019, Canada's population reached 37,314,442, up 71,871 from October 1, 2018, according to preliminary population estimates.

As has been the case over the last several years, population growth continued to be driven by international migration. Gains from international migration were due to 71,131 new immigrants having arrived in Canada in the fourth quarter.

Rapid population growth is not typical for a fourth quarter. In fact, this is when population growth is generally slowest because of seasonal patterns associated with births and the arrival of immigrants and non-permanent residents.

Nearly 180 thousand jobs filled by Polish workers

Statistics Netherlands, April 4, 2019

https://www.cbs.nl/en-gb/news/2019/14/nearly-180-thousand-jobs-filled-by-polish-workers

Excerpt: In 2017, over 838 thousand jobs in the Netherlands were filled by foreign workers. Polish workers constitute the largest group, occupying nearly 180 thousand jobs. They are among the lowest paid. In addition, Germans and Belgians - who are in better paid jobs - are well represented in the Dutch labour market. Statistics Netherlands (CBS) reports this based on a regular survey on foreign workers.

Out of the 838 thousand jobs taken by foreign workers, nearly half were filled by EU citizens. Almost 424 thousand jobs, slightly more than half were occupied by workers from a non-EU country. Over 125 thousand of these jobs were filled by workers from the Americas, while nearly 121 thousand jobs were taken by workers from European countries outside the EU, including Russia. Relatively few jobs - just under 3.5 thousand - were occupied by workers from Oceania. The rest of the news release focuses on workers from EU countries.

https://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2019/04/03/immigrants-sent-a-record-amount-of-money-home-to-sub-saharan-african-countries-in-2017/

Excerpt: Worldwide, immigrants sent a record $625 billion (in 2018 U.S. dollars) back to their home countries in 2017, a 7% increase from the previous year. Strong economic growth in many major destination regions, stabilizing oil prices and the appreciation of currencies against the U.S. dollar helped fuel the first worldwide increase in remittances since 2014, according to the World Bank. Remittances had declined in 2015 and 2016, the first back-to-back decline in remittances in over three decades.

Deported Americans: Life after Deportation to Mexico

Kindle, 1735 KB, ASIN: B07P37JMQH, $24.95

Book Description: When Gina was deported to Tijuana, Mexico, in 2011, she left behind her parents, siblings, and children, all of whom are U.S. citizens. Despite having once had a green card, Gina was removed from the only country she had ever known. In Deported Americans legal scholar and former public defender Beth C. Caldwell tells Gina's story alongside those of dozens of other Dreamers, who are among the hundreds of thousands who have been deported to Mexico in recent years. Many of them had lawful status, held green cards, or served in the U.S. military. Now, they have been banished, many with no hope of lawfully returning. Having interviewed over one hundred deportees and their families, Caldwell traces deportation's long-term consequences—such as depression, drug use, and homelessness—on both sides of the border. Showing how U.S. deportation law systematically fails to protect the rights of immigrants and their families, Caldwell challenges traditional notions of what it means to be an American and recommends legislative and judicial reforms to mitigate the injustices suffered by the millions of U.S. citizens affected by deportation.

Kindle, 1168 KB, ASIN: B07LBK3QYN, 245 pp., $57.95

Book Description: Examining how migrants appropriate mobility in the context of biometric border controls, this volume mobilises new analytics and empirics in the debates about the politics of migration and provides an analytically effective and politically significant tool for the study of contemporary migration.

Drawing from the tension between the EU's attempt to achieve watertight border controls by means of biometric technologies, and migrants' persistence to move to and live in the EU, the volume pursues two interrelated objectives: first, it studies the encounters between migrants and the Visa Information System (VIS), one of the largest biometric databases in the world, from the perspective of mobility in order to investigate how migrants appropriate mobility via Schengen visa within and against this biometric border regime. Second, it addresses criticisms of autonomy of migration in order to develop it as a viable approach for border, migration and critical security studies. Hence, the book is driven by two interrelated research questions: what does the assertion of moments of autonomy of migration refer to in the context of border regimes that use biometrics to turn migrants' bodies into a means of mobility control? And how do migrants appropriate mobility via Schengen visa within and against biometric border regimes?

This book will be of great interest to scholars in border, migration and critical security studies, as well as researchers engaged in citizenship studies, surveillance studies, political theory, critical IR theory and international political sociology.

Border Policing and Security Technologies: Mobility and Proliferation of Borders in the Western Balkans
By Sanja Milivojevic

Kindle, 1279 KB, ASIN: B079M31858, 190 pp., $140.00

Book Description: This book is a unique and original examination of borders and bordering practices in the Western Balkans prior to, during, and after the migrant "crisis" of the 2010s. Based on extensive, mixed-method, exploratory research in Serbia, Croatia, FYR Macedonia, and Kosovo, the book charts technological and human interventions deployed in this region that simultaneously enable and hinder the mobility projects of border crossers.

Within the rich historical context of the Balkan Wars and subsequent displacement of many people from the region and beyond, this book discusses the types and locations of borders as well as their development, transformation, and impact on people on the move. These border crossers fall into three distinct categories: people from the Middle East, Africa, and Asia transiting the region; citizens of the Western Balkans seeking asylum and access to labour markets in the EU; and women border crossers. This book also maps border struggles that follow these processes, analyses the creation of labour "reserves" in the region, and examines the role that technology – in particular smartphones and social media - play in regulating mobility and creating social change. This volume also explores the role of the EU in, and the impact of the aforementioned processes on nation-states of the Western Balkans, their European future, and mobility in the region.

Whilst the book focusses on a particular region in Southeast Europe, its findings can be easily applied to other social contexts and settings. It will be particularly useful to academics and postgraduate students studying social sciences such as criminology, sociology, legal studies, law, international relations, political science, and gender studies. It will also be useful for legal practitioners, NGO activists, and government officials.

Book Description: How has the Brexit vote affected the lives of European migrants coming to the United Kingdom? This book deploys findings from research carried out with migrants interviewed before and after the Brexit vote—real people who make their home in the UK. Duda-Mikulin looks at how migrants view Brexit and what it means for them, how their experiences have changed from before and after the historic vote, their future plans, and the wider implications of the migrant experience in relation to the more precarious aspects of the British labor market.

Home States and Homeland Politics: Interactions between the Turkish State and its Emigrants in France and the United States

Kindle, 943 KB, ASIN: B07Q4FT4Y9, $54.95

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Book Description: This book draws on the literatures of transnationalism and diaspora studies to explore the ways in which the policies of emigrant-sending countries have an influence on how emigrants politically engage on issues related to their homelands. Drawing on over one hundred interviews with policy makers, diplomats, bureaucrats, members of civil society and academics in Turkey, France and the United States, it offers a comparison of the engagement of Turkish migrants with political issues in Turkey in periods both before and after home state policies have been constructed with a view to engaging emigrants. As such, it will appeal to scholars of sociology and politics with interests in diaspora and the engagement of migrants with political issues in their countries of origin.

Walling, Unsettling, Stealing

1:30-3:00 p.m., Tuesday, April 9, 2019
York University, 519 Kaneff Tower
4700 Keele Street, Toronto
http://crs.info.yorku.ca/archives/event/walling-unsettling-stealing?instance_id=153

Speaker:
Shahram Khosravi, Professor of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University

Description: We live in a time of wall fetishism. Never as today have human beings been so obsessed with building walls. Walls are, however, old. Empires built walls, from the Great Wall of China, to Hadrian's Wall in Northern England and the Limes Tripolitanus of the Roman Empire in North Africa to keep "barbarians" out. And if we look closer we can see that there are still traces of the old imperial visions in the modern borders and border walls. In this talk I will look at the connections of wars and walls; walls and empires. I will argue that there is a link between the installation of border walls (here) and the unsettling of communities (there). The current border regime is part of a larger and older project of colonial accumulation by dispossession and expulsion; stealing wealth, labor force, and time. I will also argue that border crossing discloses the cracks in the dominant narration of borders and that travelers without papers denaturalize what are otherwise naturalized borders, politicize what are otherwise depoliticized borders. I will illustrate this argument by following travelers without papers along the railways in the Balkans; tracing Afghan deportees in Kabul; and narrating the social life of the materialities used in the wall between Mexico and the US.

https://www.migrationpolicy.org/events/international-national-protection-refugees-diverging-trends

Description: The global response to the rising challenge of refugee displacement has been marked by two contradictory trends. First, at the international level there has been a recognition of the gravity of the problem and a move toward responsibility sharing and global governance of refugee situations—most notably through the adoption of the Global Compact on Refugees in December 2018. At the same time, a very different trend is emerging among countries in the Global North as a number of governments have actively narrowed their protection frameworks, tightened asylum policies, and limited the rights of refugees through laws and policies, effectively strengthening barriers to movement for those who are seeking refuge or asylum.

Join MPI for a conversation exploring the factors behind this divergence between the international community and national policies and what it means for cooperation at the international level. MPI's Kathleen Newland will discuss what has been accomplished through the Global Compact on Refugees and what its implementation is likely to accomplish. Mary Giovagnoli, of Refugee Council USA, will examine how protection policy has shifted in the United States and the implications this has for the ability of the international community to respond to global refugee needs. David Scott FitzGerald will share insights from his new book, Refuge beyond Reach, regarding how asylum policies in high-income democracies have been adapted to shut down most legal paths to safety for refugees through a range of deterrence methods that, while complying with the letter of their international commitments to refugees, do not adhere to them in spirit.

Kathleen Newland, Co-founder and Senior Fellow, Migration Policy Institute

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Moderator:
Claudia Masferrer León, Professor, Center for Demographic, Urban, and Environmental Studies, El Colegio de México

Introduction:
Andrew Selee, President, Migration Policy Institute

Description: Over recent months, the number of Central American migrants apprehended at the U.S.-Mexico border has surged, presenting a critical challenge in the relationship between the two neighboring countries. President Trump has accused Mexico of doing nothing to stop illegal migration, while the Mexican government is emphasizing the need to address root causes in Central America driving human movement. After President Trump's threat to "close the border" if the Mexican government did not do more, tensions between the two countries appeared to subside. However, these tensions—and the rising number of unauthorized crossings at the border and of asylum seekers in both countries—has put the issue of migration front and center in the relationship between the two countries again.

In fact, migration patterns between the two countries have changed dramatically over the past decade. While there is still considerable legal migration from Mexico to the United States, illegal immigration has dropped to a fraction of what it was only 15 years ago, and the overall number of Mexicans living in the United States is actually dropping. Meanwhile, the number of Americans living in Mexico continues to rise and may well be over 1 million, making it by far the largest U.S.-citizen community anywhere in the world. The two countries face shared migration flows from Central America, Venezuela, and other parts of the world, which they increasingly need to find ways of managing in collaborative ways, and both face important challenges for integrating immigrants into the labor market, schools, and society at large.

Can Mexico and the United States find common cause around migration or are the perspectives and interests of the two countries too different to make cooperation possible? How will the two governments respond to the current change in migration flows from Central America? And what creative thinking is possible in the future?

Join us for a discussion of the current trends and future possibilities with experts from a Study Group on U.S.-Mexico Migration convened by El Colegio de México and the Migration Policy Institute (MPI). The conversation will examine migration from the Northern Triangle of Central America and other regions, as well as ways to improve U.S. and Mexican asylum systems, create new approaches to labor migration, address smuggling networks, and modernize border management.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Workshop on Security, Borders and International Development: Intersections, Convergence and Challenges

Thursday-Friday, April 25-26, 2019
University of Warwick School of Law

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Coventry CV4 7AL, United Kingdom
https://www.law.ox.ac.uk/news/2018-05-22-cfp-workshop-security-borders-and-international-development-intersections

Description: As an unprecedented number of people are on the move, international mobility has become one of the most important global challenges of our times. Mounting economic inequality, climate change, natural disasters, civil conflict and political instability, have triggered mass migration on a regional and global scale. This mobility has been increasingly framed as a security problem, linked to terrorism and organized crime, and managed through increasingly punitive and coercive measures, including through criminal justice practices and institutions, to identify, eject and repel irregular migrants and foreign convicts. The containment of migration is also taking place outside the territorial borders of the receiving state with increased border controls, processes and institutions established in migrant transit or home countries aimed at controlling emigration and enabling the repatriation and rehabilitation of foreigners.

This strategic shift towards externalizing border controls is blurring the boundaries between international development, humanitarian aid, and national migration and criminal justice policies. Global mobility has been framed as a development and humanitarian challenge and addressing the purported drivers of transnational migration – poverty, political conflict and instability, and human insecurity – has become a priority for humanitarian aid and international development cooperation. Measures to externalize border controls are increasingly being funded by official development assistance (ODA) and, in the process, reframing the tenets that underpin international development cooperation. Domestic security concerns have been progressively interwoven into the discourse, policy and practice Migrant Boat by Matt Brown 2 of international development to justify the growing proportion of ODA that is being routed towards border control and repatriation programmes.

This workshop aims to bring together scholars, non-governmental organisations, policy and lawmakers to map the novel interconnections between international development cooperation and the securitization of border controls, and to critically assess the legal, social, economic and political implications of this policy trend. The workshop will also facilitate a broader platform to chart emerging frontiers in criminal justice, migration and international development policy.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

We welcome papers from socio-legal scholars and policymakers and practitioners, and invite contributors to address the linkages between the securitization of borders, humanitarianism and international development cooperation, with particular emphasis on the following, non-exhaustive, thematic areas:

* historical and contemporary perspectives of global security, aid and humanitarianism;

* comparative studies, including empirical studies, on the relationship between humanitarian aid, development cooperation and security sector reforms, in different geographical and political and economic constituencies;

* intersections between development cooperation, development finance and migration controls and criminal justice, including emerging policy trends from donor countries, multilateral institutions and recipient countries;

* the role of aid and international development in international relations, foreign policy and international law, including international economic law, international human rights law, international humanitarian law and international criminal law;

* linkages between security and justice programmes in developing countries and domestic security and migration policies of donor states;

* relationships between international economic law, migration and security policies;

* extraterritorial border controls, sovereignty and humanitarianism.

What makes Americans act on behalf of refugees?

12:00-1:30 p.m. PDT, Tuesday, May 1, 2019
ERC Conference Room 115
The Center for Comparative Immigration Studies, UC San Diego
9500 Gilman Drive
La Jolla, CA 92093
https://ccis.ucsd.edu/events/Seminars.html

Speaker:
Claire Adida, Co-Driector, Center for Comparative Immigration Studies
Associate Professor of Political Science, UC San Diego

Description: We investigate whether American citizens can be persuaded to adopt more inclusionary behavior toward refugees by using a minimally invasive online perspective-taking exercise frequently used by refugee advocates in the real world. Through the use of a randomized survey experiment on a representative sample of American citizens, we find that this short and interactive perspective-taking exercise can promote, in the short term, Americans' willingness to act on behalf of Syrian refugees, by writing anonymous letters of support to the White House. This effect, while driven primarily by self-identified Democrats, is also apparent among self-identified Republicans.

XCPD-700-01 - Global Trends in International Migration

Certificate in International Migration Studies

Course Details: Worldwide international migration is a large and growing phenomenon, with more than 230 million people now living outside of their home countries for extended periods. Understanding the complex dynamics behind international migration is essential to improved policies and programs to address the multiple causes and consequences of these movements of people. This course provides an overview of international migration numbers and trends, causes of population movements, the impact of international migration on source and receiving countries, and policy responses to population movements.

The course provides an introduction to the major theories underpinning the study of international migration, including the new economics of labor migration, dual labor market theory, world systems theory, cumulative causation, and migration networks theory. The course focuses attention on domestic and international legal regimes regarding migration, examining laws, major legal cases and regulatory frameworks. It also examines issues pertaining to the integration of immigrants in destination countries. The connections between migration and such other issues as security, development and environmental change are discussed.

Objectives:

At the completion of the course, a successful student will be able to:

* Assess the positive and negative impacts of international migration on source, transit, and destination countries;

* Describe the international legal frameworks that set out the rights of migrants and the responsibilities of states;

* Discuss and articulate the strengths and weaknesses of the principal policy frameworks governing the admission of migrants, control of irregular migration, and protection of refugees and other forced migrants;

* Explain the importance of gender in understanding the causes and consequences of international migration; and

* Describe models for integration of immigrants in destination countries and articulate the strengths and weaknesses of these approaches.

Canadian Immigration Summit 2019: Expanding Our Horizons

Wednesday-Thursday, May 8-9, 2019
The Shaw Centre
Ottawa, Ontario, Canada
https://www.conferenceboard.ca/conf/immigration/default.aspx

Summit Overview
Expanding Our Horizons
How can we plan for tomorrow, today?

The purpose of the 2019 Summit is to explore how Canada can respond proactively to emerging immigration issues in a rapidly changing world.

We tend to dwell on the past to tackle today's challenges and anticipate the ones we will experience tomorrow. Moreover, we are often focused on the short-term, with too little of our time and energy devoted to thinking about how we can plan for the future. However, the world is not standing still, and Canada is no exception. Changes at home and abroad will disrupt Canada's future immigration system in ways we cannot currently fathom. For example, how many of us five years ago imagined that a wave of populism would take the world by storm?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Summit will examine key drivers of economic, social, and technological change that could affect our immigration system. The goal is not to predict the future, but rather to assess various, plausible immigration scenarios and how Canada can benefit from the opportunities while mitigating the threats in support of a stronger, more vibrant country. Expert speakers will challenge us to expand our horizons by testing our underlying assumptions and getting us to think and plan beyond the short-term.

Join over 400 delegates to explore these key issues and more:

* Populism: What does Canada need to do to prevent the rise of anti-immigrant populism?

* Future skills and the changing nature of work: As the economy evolves, how can Canada refine its selection and settlement programs for tomorrow's labour market?

* Settlement and technology: How will technological innovations affect the way Canada delivers settlement services?

* Diversity in the workplace: How can employers become more inclusive as the Canadian labour force becomes more diverse?

* Intergovernmental collaboration: How can our immigration system accommodate the growing role of the provinces, territories, and municipalities?

* Refugee flows: With the global refugee population at an all-time high, what can Canada do to help?

* Pan-Canadian Framework for the Assessment and Recognition of Foreign Qualifications: What progress has been made since 2009 and how can we improve further over the next 10 years?

* Global supply of talent: How can Canada remain a destination of choice for immigrants and international students as other countries offer improved economic opportunity to their citizens and global talent?

Speaker:
Joseph Wiltberger, Visiting Scholar, Center for Comparative Immigration Studies, UC San Diego
Assistant Professor of Central American Studies, California State University, Northridge

Description: From the 1980-1992 civil war to the present, Salvadorans have endured and navigated various situations of violence and displacement in El Salvador and elsewhere as migrants. In this talk, I discuss how, in spite of such circumstances, Salvadorans work toward building possibilities to be able to stay in place. Based on my long-range ethnographic fieldwork in El Salvador and with Salvadoran migrants, I examine how mobility and collective action operate jointly as a key resource in these struggles.

What's Happening at the Center

In his recent report, Andrew Arthur explains that the number of unaccompanied alien children apprehended along the southwest border has surged almost 685 percent in the last two years and the number deemed inadmissible at the port of entry has risen by 385 percent in that same time period. Flawed U.S. laws and policies encourage unaccompanied children to make the dangerous journey to the United States, and encourage their parents and other relatives to pay criminal organizations to get them here. Until these laws and policies are changed, this surge will continue.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

One Chart that Adds Context to the Border Meltdown

Many show up, but few are chosen

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (April 9, 2019) - New analysis of a chart from the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR), the Department of Justice (DOJ) component with jurisdiction over the immigration courts, provides a useful snapshot to help explain the border crisis and the number of valid claims among the hundreds of thousands of migrants who have sought asylum through the credible-fear process.

View the full analysis: https://cis.org/Arthur/One-Chart-Adds-Context-Border-Meltdown

Andrew Arthur, the Center's Resident Fellow in Law and Policy and author of the analysis, said, "As the chart shows, only 48 migrants out of 100 who claim to have a credible fear of persecution actually bother to file for asylum. Of those 48 migrants, on average only 13 are found to actually have credible fear and are granted asylum. Clearly, Congress needs to act--but first, it needs to acknowledge there is a problem."

Why Isn't DHS Expanding the 287(g) Program?

Trump ordered expanded cooperation with local law enforcement in 2017

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (April 10, 2019) - New analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies finds that the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) have been slow to comply with a directive from the president calling for the expansion of cooperation between ICE and local law enforcement, called the 287(g) program.

View the full analysis: https://cis.org/Cadman/Florida-Sheriffs-Encouraged-Cooperate-ICE

Dan Cadman, a Fellow at the Center and the author of the analysis, said, "Under the 287(g) program, everyone wins: ICE gets a force multiplier, and local law enforcement gets criminals off the street. And yet in Florida, we're hearing that sheriffs lack the bandwidth to comply with President Trump's directive to expand the 287(g) program. Why isn't DHS making that bandwidth?"

The agency has been depressingly slow in reconstituting the 287(g) program since its functional dismantling by the Obama administration, and it's hard to fathom why.

The "jail model" of the 287(g) program is administered by the Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) side of ICE, which is primarily responsible for apprehending and deporting alien criminals. Having cross-trained and designated sheriff's deputies or police officers in the booking stations and county jails helps ensure that these criminals are detected promptly, detained, and put into removal proceedings, instead of being returned to the streets to re-offend. Yet very few of these programs have been initiated since the agency was freed from Obama-era constraints.

Worse, on the other side of the ICE house, at Homeland Security Investigations (HSI), absolutely no 287(g) programs have been re-instituted, for instance with various state police organizations or local police specializing in busting human trafficking operations. These agencies are HSI's best eyes and ears in detecting alien smuggling and human trafficking organizations.

For example, Pinellas County Sheriff Bob Gualtieri, a Florida sheriff who's emerged as a national law-enforcement leader on immigration, has been encouraging other sheriffs to at least participate in an abbreviated version of cooperation his office has developed, since ICE lacks the capacity for the full program. While Gualtieri's efforts are admirable, why isn't ICE working to make that full capacity available?

Trump's Frustration with the Border Grows

Nielsen, Vitiello out, but keep Cissna

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (April 10, 2019) - A new analysis from the Center for Immigration Studies highlights how President Trump's frustrations at the border led to the ouster of DHS Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen and Ron Vitiello as ICE Director, but warns that reported efforts to oust USCIS Director Francis Cissna would only exacerbate existing problems.

View full analysis: https://cis.org/Arthur/Trumps-Frustration-Border-Grows

Andrew Arthur, the Center's Resident Fellow in Law and Policy and author of the analysis, said, "Under Cissna's leadership, USCIS has made the most of its limited resources in a bad situation, increasing the resources dedicated to processing asylum cases. While President Trump is rightly frustrated with the border situation, removing Cissna would only make matters worse. Instead, DHS needs to devote its energy to fixing asylum loopholes such as the Flores settlement."

Until January 2019, the White House was in a stronger position to fix that border crisis while both houses were controlled by Republicans. Unfortunately, the bills which would have made the necessary changes then failed to earn enough votes, and by the time that Secretary Nielsen wrote a letter to Congress calling the situation "dire", it was too late.

Now, Customs and Border Protection Commissioner Kevin McAleenan is serving as Acting Secretary of Homeland Security. McAleenan's CBP has borne the brunt of the unfolding disaster at the border, and that it has done so well is the reason that problems elsewhere are now evident.

Meanwhile, USCIS Director Cissna has made positive changes, such as his decision to reinstitute the "last in, first out" (LIFO) system of processing asylum claims, freeing up asylum officers to hear credible fear claims more quickly and address the lingering backlog. As CIS Director Mark Krikorian has warned, firing Cissna would be "even more damaging than firing [former Attorney General] Sessions" with regard to immigration enforcement.

Economy Recovers, But Less-Educated Natives Left Out

Labor Force Participation Well Below 2007 in Nearly Every State

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington, D.C. (April 11, 2019) - A new Center for Immigration Studies analysis of government data shows that nationally the labor force participation rate — those working or looking for work — has not returned to pre-2007 recession levels. Data from the fourth quarter of 2018 are particularly bad for native-born people without a bachelor's degree. In nearly every state the labor force participation of non-college natives (ages 18 to 64) has not returned to 2007 levels, which in most cases was already lower than at the last peak in 2000.

View the full report: https://cis.org/Report/Employment-Situation-Immigrants-and-Natives-Fourth-Quarter-2018

Dr. Steven Camarota, the Center's director of research, said, "Business groups may point to the low unemployment rate as they lobby for more foreign workers, but unemployment statistics obscure the enormous number of people who are out of the labor market entirely and therefore do not show up as 'unemployed'. There is a large pool of potential workers in the country who could fill jobs that require modest education."

Among Native-Born Americans:

- The low national unemployment rate (3.7 percent) for natives in the fourth quarter of 2018 obscures the low labor force participation rate, especially for those without a bachelor's degree.
- There has been a long-term downward decline in the labor force participation rate of working-age (18 to 64) natives without a bachelor's degree. Only 70.7 were in the labor force — working or looking for work — in the fourth quarter of 2018; in 2007, before the recession, it was 74.3 percent, and in the fourth quarter of 2000 it was 76.4 percent.
- The decline in the labor force participation rate of natives without a college degree shows little meaningful improvement in the last six years. There was no improvement between 2017 and 2018 and rate in 2012 was actually slightly higher than it was in 2018.
- The decline in labor force participation of less-educated natives is even more profound relative to the more educated. In the fourth quarter of 2018, 70.7 percent of natives without a bachelor's degree were in the labor force, compared to 86.6 percent of those with a bachelor's degree — a 15.8 percentage-point difference. In the fourth quarter of 2007, the gap was 12.3 percentage points, and in the fourth quarter of 2000 the gap was 10.9 percentage points.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- In only 3 states has the labor force participation of non-college natives (ages 18 to 64) returned to 2007 levels; and, there is not one state where the rate in 2018 was as high as it had been in 2000.

Among Immigrants:

- Working-age immigrants without a college education also have struggled since the recession. However, unlike natives, immigrants without a college education did improve their situation between 2000 and 2007. Also unlike natives the labor force participation of immigrants improved in the last year, but it has still not returned to 2007 levels. In the fourth quarter of 2018, the labor force participation rate of immigrants (18 to 64) without a bachelor's degree was 73.5 percent, somewhat better than that of natives, but still below their rate of 74.5 percent in the fourth quarter of 2007.

Immigrants and Natives Not in the Labor Force:

- In the fourth quarter of 2018, there were a total 47.6 million immigrants and natives ages 18 to 64 not in the labor force (all education levels), up from 42.1 million in 2007 and 36.6 million in 2000.
- Of the 47.6 million currently not in the labor force, 37.7 million (79.4 percent) did not have a bachelor's degree.
- The above figures do not include the unemployed, who are considered to be part of the labor force because, although they are not working, they are looking for work. There were 5.8 million unemployed immigrants and natives in the fourth quarter of this year; more than three-fourths of the unemployed do not have a bachelor's degree.

What's Happening at the Center

In his latest analysis, Steven Camarota finds that the labor force participation rate (those working or looking for work) has not returned to pre-2007 recession levels. There has been a long-term downward trend in the labor force participation rate of working-age natives without a bachelor's degree. Only 70.7 percent of these natives were in the labor force in the fourth quarter of 2018. In that same quarter, there were a total 47.5 million working-age immigrants and natives not in the labor force across all education levels, up from 42.1 million in 2007 and 36.6 million in 2000. These numbers challenge the wisdom of a continuing a policy of record levels of legal immigration.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Introduction:
Andrew Selee, President, Migration Policy Institute

Description: Over recent months, the number of Central American migrants apprehended at the U.S.-Mexico border has surged, presenting a critical challenge in the relationship between the two neighboring countries. President Trump has accused Mexico of doing nothing to stop illegal migration, while the Mexican government is emphasizing the need to address root causes in Central America driving human movement. After President Trump's threat to "close the border" if the Mexican government did not do more, tensions between the two countries appeared to subside. However, these tensions—and the rising number of unauthorized crossings at the border and of asylum seekers in both countries—has put the issue of migration front and center in the relationship between the two countries again.

In fact, migration patterns between the two countries have changed dramatically over the past decade. While there is still considerable legal migration from Mexico to the United States, illegal immigration has dropped to a fraction of what it was only 15 years ago, and the overall number of Mexicans living in the

United States is actually dropping. Meanwhile, the number of Americans living in Mexico continues to rise and may well be over 1 million, making it by far the largest U.S.-citizen community anywhere in the world. The two countries face shared migration flows from Central America, Venezuela, and other parts of the world, which they increasingly need to find ways of managing in collaborative ways, and both face important challenges for integrating immigrants into the labor market, schools, and society at large.

Can Mexico and the United States find common cause around migration or are the perspectives and interests of the two countries too different to make cooperation possible? How will the two governments respond to the current change in migration flows from Central America? And what creative thinking is possible in the future?

Join us for a discussion of the current trends and future possibilities with experts from a Study Group on U.S.-Mexico Migration convened by El Colegio de México and the Migration Policy Institute (MPI). The conversation will examine migration from the Northern Triangle of Central America and other regions, as well as ways to improve U.S. and Mexican asylum systems, create new approaches to labor migration, address smuggling networks, and modernize border management.

Description: As an unprecedented number of people are on the move, international mobility has become one of the most important global challenges of our times. Mounting economic inequality, climate change, natural disasters, civil conflict and political instability, have triggered mass migration on a regional and global scale. This mobility has been increasingly framed as a security problem, linked to terrorism and organized crime, and managed through increasingly punitive and coercive measures, including through criminal justice practices and institutions, to identify, eject and repel irregular migrants and foreign convicts. The containment of migration is also taking place outside the territorial borders of the receiving state with increased border controls, processes and institutions established in migrant transit or home countries aimed at controlling emigration and enabling the repatriation and rehabilitation of foreigners.

This strategic shift towards externalizing border controls is blurring the boundaries between international development, humanitarian aid, and national migration and criminal justice policies. Global mobility has been framed as a development and humanitarian challenge and addressing the purported drivers of transnational migration – poverty, political conflict and instability, and human insecurity – has become a priority for humanitarian aid and international development cooperation. Measures to externalize border controls are increasingly being funded by official development assistance (ODA) and, in the process, reframing the tenets that underpin international development cooperation. Domestic security concerns have been progressively interwoven into the discourse, policy and practice Migrant Boat by Matt Brown 2 of international development to justify the growing proportion of ODA that is being routed towards border control and repatriation programmes.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

This workshop aims to bring together scholars, non-governmental organisations, policy and lawmakers to map the novel interconnections between international development cooperation and the securitization of border controls, and to critically assess the legal, social, economic and political implications of this policy trend. The workshop will also facilitate a broader platform to chart emerging frontiers in criminal justice, migration and international development policy.

We welcome papers from socio-legal scholars and policymakers and practitioners, and invite contributors to address the linkages between the securitization of borders, humanitarianism and international development cooperation, with particular emphasis on the following, non-exhaustive, thematic areas:

* historical and contemporary perspectives of global security, aid and humanitarianism;

* comparative studies, including empirical studies, on the relationship between humanitarian aid, development cooperation and security sector reforms, in different geographical and political and economic constituencies;

* intersections between development cooperation, development finance and migration controls and criminal justice, including emerging policy trends from donor countries, multilateral institutions and recipient countries;

* the role of aid and international development in international relations, foreign policy and international law, including international economic law, international human rights law, international humanitarian law and international criminal law;

* linkages between security and justice programmes in developing countries and domestic security and migration policies of donor states;

* relationships between international economic law, migration and security policies;

* extraterritorial border controls, sovereignty and humanitarianism.
