CARSON CITY, Nev. — The annual Stewart Father's Day Powwow was held at the Stewart Indian School on Father's Day weekend.

The Native American Culture event included competition dancing and food, in which participants experienced American Indian heritage, history and pride.

Families and friends gathered to enjoy Indian tacos as well as arts and crafts from vendors.

Nevada Governor Brian Sandoval was an an attendee of the event.

The Stewart Father's Day Powwow benefits the establishment of the Stewart Indian Cultural Center. It was named the 2015 Event of the Year by the Carson City Chamber of Commerce.

Gov. Brian Sandoval says the U.S. Treasury has certified Nevada's Opportunity Zones.

He said the designation will encourage private investment in parts of Nevada in the most need and "kick start" construction of affordable housing projects.

"From Southern Nevada to Northern Nevada and areas in between, the certification of Nevada's designated Opportunity Zones will benefit communities big and small," he said.

Opportunity Zones are intended to generate investment in low-income communities by providing tax breaks to private investors.

Nevada voters can take the lead on renewable energy development
Las Vegas Sun editorial
https://lasvegassun.com/news/2018/jun/17/nevada-voters-can-take-the-lead-on-renewable-energ/

In 1997, Nevada became one of the first states in the U.S. to adopt a minimum requirement for green energy production.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Today, however, other states have zoomed past us in setting such standards. In fact, Nevada's requirement for 25 percent of our energy to come from renewable sources no longer ranks us in the top 10. We're trailing New Jersey, of all places. New Jersey!

So it's commendable that a group known as Nevadans for Clean Future Energy has been working on an initiative to boost Nevada's minimum to 50 percent by 2030.

The group is circulating a petition that would put the initiative on a statewide ballot. Tuesday is the last day the group can collect signatures.

Organizers say they're confident the petition drive will be successful, which is good to hear. The initiative deserves a spot on the ballot.

Nevadans have shown time and again they support development of renewable energy, so it's worthwhile to debate whether to bump up the requirement to 50 percent. It's also worth exploring considering the popularity of a similar bill in the 2017 Nevada Legislature, which would have raised the minimum to 40 percent.

Gov. Brian Sandoval vetoed that measure, saying its passage was "premature in the face of evolving energy policy in Nevada." Sandoval said the requirement — technically known as a Renewable Portfolio Standard — could create complications given the likely passage of the Nevada Energy Choice Initiative ballot issue, which would allow Nevadans to choose their energy provider in the same way they select a cable/internet provider. Specifically, Sandoval was concerned that the increased RPS would create added costs that would deter providers from entering the market or be passed along to customers in the form of higher electricity rates.

Sandoval also said the change could result in higher fees for resorts and large corporations to exit the NV Energy grid and obtain their power from third parties.

Those points will no doubt be discussed if the RPS initiative gets on the ballot, but there's one thing that's not up for debate: Setting a higher requirement is the only guarantee for Nevadans that renewable energy production will expand here.

And that's important, because there are clear benefits from growing the state's green energy industry.

Our abundance of sunlight and our above-average potential in geothermal production makes us one of the nation's best-suited places to develop renewables, yet only about 18 percent of our energy is generated by those sources. Meanwhile, we're spending roughly $700 million a year to import natural gas and other fossil fuels to power the state's grid.

Boosting production from renewable sources would not only reduce those costs, but would help free the state from volatility in the fossil fuel market.

It would also generate economic activity, of which the current 25 percent standard has already yielded $7 billion in solar and geothermal operations.

Other benefits would come from reducing carbon emissions, which would help improve air quality and reduce respiratory problems triggered by air pollution. Nevada produced 35 million metric tons of carbon dioxide in 2015, which would be reduced by 3 million tons a year under the initiative.

Whether this is the right time to increase the standard, and whether this is the right level for Nevada, are questions that should be debated.

Getting the question on the ballot is a starting point, though, which is why the petition deserves support.

More Nevada kids have health insurance, but state 9th worst
Jessie Bekker
Las Vegas Review Journal
https://www.reviewjournal.com/life/health/more-nevada-kids-have-health-insurance-but-state-9th-worst/

The number of children in Nevada without health insurance was cut by more than half between 2011 and 2016, but the state's rate of uninsured kids remains the ninth-highest in the U.S., according to a new report.

The gains in insurance coverage occurred after passage of the Affordable Care Act in 2010 and Nevada's subsequent expansion of the federal Medicaid program, said Elizabeth Lukanen, deputy director of the State Health Access Data Assistance Center. The policy research center based at the University of Minnesota released the report Friday.

Denise Tanata, executive director for the Children's Advocacy Alliance, a nonprofit in Nevada, said the state's current rate of uninsured children of 6.3 percent is a big improvement from the beginning of the decade.

"We're absolutely still behind, and we've got a ways to go to catch up, but we're definitely moving in the right direction to do that," Tanata said. "The fact we're not last anymore is good."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The report analyzed U.S. Census Bureau survey data in all 50 states and Washington, D.C., tracking changes in public and private coverage and in the uninsured rate by race and ethnicity and household members' income and educational status.

From worst, to ninth

Lukanen said the drop in the state's uninsured rate quickened after 2013.

That may have been the result of the ACA's individual mandate requiring uninsured Americans to acquire health insurance or pay a penalty, which took effect the next year, Tanata said. Parents typically buy their children insurance when acquiring it for themselves, she said.

The Medicaid expansion, which doubled the number of Nevadans insured under the program to 600,000, also took effect the next year, lowering the uninsured rate for children and adults alike.

"Definitely, Nevada was sort of a standout state in terms of reductions in uninsurance," Lukanen said.

The 8.1 percentage point decline in the state's uninsured rate among children between 2013 and 2016 was the largest percentage point drop in the nation, she noted.

Even so, Nevada remains among the worst states in terms of its uninsured rate among children. That's because it started as worst in the nation in 2013, when 14.4 percent of children in the state lacked health insurance, ahead of No. 2 Texas, which had a rate of 13.2 percent.

"It's kind of an uphill battle," Lukanen said.

Disparities persist

Despite significant improvements across the board, disparities in insurance rates persist in the Silver State. About 10 percent of Hispanic children and children from households where family members achieved a high school education or less still lack health insurance, the report said.

One reason may be that parents whose children are eligible aren't signing them up.

For example, undocumented parents often fear sharing their personal information with the government could lead to deportation or cancellation of a residency application, Tanata said, meaning they are reluctant to apply for their citizen children.

That's despite the 2017 passage of state Senate Bill 325, which eliminated the five-year wait period to become eligible for Medicaid and Children's Health Insurance Plan previously required for children who were granted legal residence.

Lukanen and Tanata fear that questions about the future of the Affordable Care Act and the demise of its individual mandate provision, as well as anti-immigrant rhetoric from some Republican lawmakers, could reverse the progress made in Nevada and across the nation.

"I think every time you infuse uncertainty and question into a policy area, people get confused and, most likely, lose out," she said.

New Clark County schools superintendent faces trust-building challenge
Meghin Delaney
Las Vegas Review Journal
https://www.reviewjournal.com/news/education/new-clark-county-schools-superintendent-faces-trust-building-challenge/

ORLANDO, Fla. — Establishing trust.

That, in two words, is the biggest challenge facing Jesus Jara when he arrives this week to become the Clark County School District superintendent.

There are obvious similarities between Las Vegas and Orlando, but the climates of the two tourist meccas' school systems are not among them.

In Orlando, where Jara, 48, just concluded a six-year run as deputy superintendent, district officials, the school board and parents all seem to pull in the same direction to move the academic needle upward.

That's hardly the case in Clark County, where trust among district officials, legislators, parents and trustees often seems nonexistent and divisions threaten to undermine modest progress in academic achievement.

Jara — who doesn't mind whether you pronounce his last name with a J or an H — is aware of the challenge awaiting him when he clocks in Tuesday.

During a recent visit with the Las Vegas Review-Journal in his last weeks on the job in Florida, he said earning the trust of the entire community is critical to propelling the district forward.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But he also said he views what others see as mistrust a little differently, calling it a “passion” for students and education.

“The passion I can work with,” he said. “What we need to do is just channel it together to … work as one and collaborate together so we can then have a real clear focus on being the No. 1 district for kids.”

Operating transparently and having open dialogues are two ways Jara thinks Clark County can begin to build a culture around education that resembles Orlando’s.

Rebecca Garcia, a 39-year-old with three children attending Clark County schools, said it’s going to take a lot of showing up for Jara to restore her trust. But she acknowledges being impressed by his skills, experience and temperament in his interview with trustees.

“I think CCSD is at a juncture where we need a fresh perspective who is willing to leave the status quo, who isn’t part of the status quo and who can set a new direction for the district,” Garcia said.

Jara says Clark County parents can get a good sense of the approach he will bring by looking at changes that have occurred in Orange County, Florida, in recent years, including voters entrusting the school district with more tax money through ballot initiatives.

Overall, Jara said, Orange County schools have found a good balance between school autonomy and central oversight.

He wants to implement a similar structure in the Clark County district, which is still wrestling with the Legislature-mandated reorganization.

Budget flexibility

To demonstrate the flexibility of the Orange County system and illustrate how it can adjust to different challenges, Jara took a reporter on a tour of five schools.

At Colonial High School, he discussed principal autonomy, using the school’s third-year principal, Jose Martinez, as an example.

The school, which serves up to 3,600 students, is similar to many Clark County high schools. It is 87 percent nonwhite. It’s a Title I school, and 71 percent of students qualify for free or reduced lunch under federal standards, an indicator of poverty.

It’s earns a consistent “C” on Florida’s five-tier rating scale.
But unlike most Clark County schools, every student has their own tablet.

Also, the principal has near-complete control over the budget, as long as the school meets the district’s criteria for academic achievement. That’s similar to what’s being done in Clark County, though at this point Orange County principals appear to have more spending flexibility. That required additional budgeting training for principals, Jara said.

At Colonial, for example, Martinez responded to parent and student feedback by cutting a couple coaching positions and using that money to cover fees for band and orchestra programs. There’s money available for dry-cleaning uniforms, for example.

A better example came from Colonial’s enrollment of roughly 200 Puerto Rican students who fled to Florida after Hurricanes Irma and Maria decimated their homeland.

The solution included getting the school’s Latinos in Action club involved.

A spinoff of student government clubs, Latinos in Action operates in a handful of Orange County schools and focuses heavily on mentorship.

Because the system was already in place, Martinez said, it was easier to absorb the newcomers with only minimal disruption to other students.

School turnaround

While the district lets schools like Colonial make such calls, schools that aren’t cutting it academically have less autonomy.

Washington Shores Elementary School was a dilapidated facility nestled into an old, historically impoverished neighborhood.

Four years ago, the school received an “F” rating and a promise of support from the district. That included a spot in the school transformation office that Jara helped create and replacement of the old building.

Nate Stephens, the principal brought in to lead the transformation, grew up in the neighborhood and serves as the ultimate role model for the children.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

“This is the exit from the neighborhood. This is personal for me,” he said.

Part of the transformation involved training teachers on how to talk to students using higher-level vocabulary to set an example, Stephens said. If you hold high expectations, he said, the students can and will meet them.

In the latest state ratings, the school climbed to a “C.”

During the tour of the school, students impressed Jara with their vocabularies. He sat with a kindergarten student who used the word “bacteria” in an essay on ice cream. A third-grade student talked about how physical activity teaches “collaboration.”

The transformation office is similar to Clark County’s turnaround initiatives but more advanced in some ways. For instance, it has a system to ease schools back to the mainstream once they reach an achievement standard. Over two to three years, the school is weaned off transformation office support, and budgetary control is returned to the principal.

That prevents what some Clark County schools with high-needs students are seeing now when certain state funding measures, like the Zoom and Victory programs, provide extra support only to vanish once student achievement improves.

That’s one reason Jara likes systems that focus on and reprioritize existing funds rather than relying on new money.

‘Master’ principals

Next on Jara’s list is Millennia Elementary School, which shares Principal Anne Lynaugh with nearby Millennia Gardens Elementary School, similar to Clark County’s “franchise principal” program.

The idea of both programs is to leverage experience and talent, but Jara said he worries about burnout. Both districts also have training programs aimed at nurturing up-and-coming administrative talent.

In Lynaugh’s schools, Jara shows a knack for connecting with students, easily slipping into and out of his native Spanish. Jara moved to Miami from Venezuela when he was 10.

“My parents had a vision of the American Dream, and I’m living it,” Jara said over a chicken sandwich and Diet Coke, one of three cans consumed during the daylong visit.

Like their Clark County counterparts, Orange County students speak a multitude of languages, which can sometimes pose a problem, said Lynaugh. But with technology in every classroom and the rise of programs like Google Translate, students who aren’t yet fluent in English are able to work independently.

Hands-on learning

Next up is Orange Technical College.

Don’t let the name deceive you. Students do not earn bachelor’s or associate degrees but can pursue a wide range of career certifications.

Funded by the state and run by districts, Florida’s technical colleges are similar to vocational schools. They are open to adults and high school students. Adults pay tuition and any required fees, while students generally pay only for supplies or instructional materials.

Five campuses in Orange County offer more than 40 programs, including cosmetology, mechanics, animation and welding. Students spend half their days at their zoned high school and half in their career or technical program.

Jara’s son, Alex — second-oldest of his three kids — is an alumnus, collecting a welding certificate two days before his high school graduation.

“This is hands-on learning,” the elder Jara said.

The schools defy the notion that vocational schools are somehow lesser. Through partnerships with high-profile companies and up-to-date programs, including modeling simulation design and production, it’s remarkable what they can accomplish, Jara said.

For example, combining a standard program like brick masonry with virtual reality technology keeps costs down by letting students practice in a simulation before actually laying bricks.

Closing achievement gaps

The last stop is Hunter’s Creek Middle School, which is consistently rated at the highest level by the state. Principal Amy McHale is about to get even more autonomy and flexibility as she tries to narrow the achievement gap between the school’s highest- and lowest-performing students.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But again, the district has a system for her to work within. She's allowed to try innovative approaches, mostly involving technology, but must narrow the gap — a goal the Clark County schools also have been pursuing under outgoing Superintendent Pat Skorkowsky — within three years.

Her plans include moving students to two days of block scheduling next year to devote more time to math and "really focus on the gaps," she said.

On to Clark County

Although Jara will be across the country by then, he promised to keep a close eye on Orlando and maintain a close relationship with Orange County Superintendent Barbara Jenkins, whom he called the greatest school superintendent in the country.

That comment came at his last School Board meeting in late May, where he was showered with praise from trustees. He also had the chance to lay out some of his hopes for Clark County.

"I hope to become sister school districts to replicate the work of the talented administrators and phenomenal teachers in Orange County," he said.

Time will tell if culture change can also be exported.

Federal lands law jeopardizes future of Nevada's Mint 400
Michael Scott Davidson
Las Vegas Review Journal
https://www.reviewjournal.com/news/politics-and-government/clark-county/federal-lands-law-jeopardizes-future-of-nevadas-mint-400/

Since its creation 50 years ago, the Mint 400 off-road race has become local legend.

The 120-mile-long desert loop that runs east of Interstate 15 between Las Vegas and Primm is known for its unforgiving difficulty. About half the trucks and dune buggies that start the race are unable to finish.

The event was immortalized in 1972 in journalist Hunter S. Thompson's novel "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas."

This year's iteration of the event, held in March, drew an estimated 35,000 attendees from around the world and created $40 million in economic impact for the state, according to Josh Martelli, who co-owns the race with his brother, Matt.

"It is our Indy 500," Martelli said.

But the race's future in Southern Nevada is being threatened by federal legislation that would open nearly 39,000 acres of federal land for development, including land south of the Las Vegas Valley. Clark County commissioners are scheduled to vote Tuesday whether to sign a resolution supporting the legislation.

Martelli said the northern half of the Mint 400 course crosses that land. Moving the route would cause the race to lose some of its difficulty and accompanying prestige. And finding a new route would be difficult because of protections for animals such as the desert tortoise.

"This proposal eliminates at least 40 to 50 miles of our racecourse, and we don't really have a lot of good alternatives," he said. "We're essentially being sandwiched between new commercial development and preservation of natural resources."

Martelli said county staffers have assured him they will support preservation of the racecourse through 2023 and help identify an alternative route. But the race organizer said the next best place to hold the race would be near Phoenix.

"That would be a huge economic loss for Clark County and Las Vegas," Martelli said.

The land proposal has also drawn the ire of other off-road organizations.

"Not only will it affect competitive events, (but) it will also affect people that go out and ride on the weekend," said Kenny Thatcher, president of Southern Nevada Off Road Enthusiasts. "There's probably over 300,000 off-highway vehicles in Clark County."

Thatcher said those vehicles are owned by people spending money on gas, car parts and auto repairs. They often stop in Primm for lunch when they go riding.

"Primm Valley stands to lose a lot from it," Thatcher said. "We're blue-collar people. We have disposable income, and this is how we use it. It's a big industry."

At their Tuesday meeting, commissioners also will discuss the formation of a committee focused on preserving local off-road recreation. Additionally, they will decide whether to sign an agreement with Nellis Air Force Base that would give the county ownership of almost one-tenth of the 10,000 acre Nellis Dunes off-road recreation area north of Las Vegas

Martelli said he views the committee idea as an olive branch from the County Commission to the off-road community, but both he and Thatcher remain wary of what effect such a committee could have.

Regardless, Thatcher said he hopes to bring at least 300 people to the commission meeting to oppose the lands bill.

“If they think they’re going to send everyone out to the Nellis Dunes, you can’t put 300,000 people in 10,000 acres. It’s not going to work,” Thatcher said. “We’ll have to go outside of Clark County to do anything.”

Resolution up for approval

Clark County Commission is slated to vote Tuesday on a resolution seeking federal legislation to open almost 39,000 acres of public land for development and set aside more than 370,000 acres of new wilderness and protected areas for the desert tortoise and other threatened species.

The four-page resolution outlines 15 separate transactions, including a 41,000-acre expansion of the Moapa River Indian Reservation, several new or expanded wilderness areas totaling almost 83,000 acres and nine areas of “critical environmental concern” totaling almost 293,000 acres.

The document and related maps are available for review on the county’s website at https://bit.ly/2JHlh1d.

County officials gave the general public its first look at the proposal during a June 5 open house, then accepted written input for a week.

Those wishing to provide further input will have to do so during public comment Tuesday.

The commission meeting is slated to start at 9 a.m. The resolution is item No. 97 on the agenda.

Many Nevada drivers to pay more for minimum liability coverage
Art Marroquin
Las Vegas Review Journal
https://www.reviewjournal.com/news/news-columns/road-warrior/many-nevada-drivers-to-pay-more-for-minimum-liability-coverage/

Nevada drivers might want to double-check their insurance, because changes are coming in about two weeks.

The threshold for minimum liability coverage goes up July 1 under a law approved during last year’s legislative session.

New minimums require motorists to carry $25,000 per person for bodily injury, $50,000 per accident, plus $20,000 for property damage coverage per accident, officials with the Nevada Department of Motor Vehicles said.

That’s a significant jump from the current requirement of $15,000, $30,000 and $10,000, respectively — currently ranked as the second-lowest in the United States, DMV officials said.

“The costs of medical care and automobile repairs have gone up significantly,” Nevada DMV Director Terri Albertson said. “The cost of a crash can easily exceed these older minimums.”

About 32 percent of Nevada’s 2.3 million licensed drivers carried the minimum coverage as of last year, including the Road Warrior.

Most drivers were notified about the need for increased coverage during their most recent policy renewals. And like many of you, the Road Warrior made the required adjustments to his policy last month.

Depending on your driving record and insurance company, the change in rates could range from $10 to $50. Insurance companies will no longer be allowed to write the lower limits; those that do could be sanctioned, DMV spokesman Kevin Malone said.

Scofflaw drivers failing to purchase auto liability insurance at the new minimum limits could be cited and fined and have their vehicle registration canceled until the appropriate coverage is purchased, according to the Nevada Division of Insurance website.

Local leaders meet with Nevada politicians on development goals

A group of 25 business and community leaders from the Las Vegas Global Economic Alliance and local chambers met with congressional delegations and agencies this week in Washington, D.C., to discuss policy issues affecting Southern Nevada.

The Federal Forum, held Tuesday and Wednesday, discussed big-picture issues including the impact of Yucca Mountain on economic development and tourism, I-11’s development and the future of the autonomous vehicle industry in Las Vegas.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The alliance is a private-public partnership that works with the Governor's Office of Economic Development and other state partners to recruit new businesses to the state and to expand existing businesses that export at least half of their goods or services outside of Nevada. It achieves its mission largely by preparing companies to be approved for state tax abatements.

Ray Specht, who chairs the LVGEA's policy committee, said the forum touched on how to keep expanding the local economy when it already is seeing growth in areas such as employment and population.

"One of the things we talked about is how now is not the time to take the foot off the gas pedal," Specht said. "What do we do to make LGVEA the most competitive regional development authority?"

Lisette Partelow, the director of K-12 strategic initiatives at the Center for American Progress, a think tank in Washington, spoke about education policy at one of the forum's sessions. She said the group had an insightful discussion on short- and long-term goals on how to improve teacher recruitment and retainment. Suggestions included improving salaries and requiring higher degrees for certain positions.

The forum was also meant to help strengthen relationships between the LVGEA and delegation.

"Our entire delegation has been very open and willing to work with us," alliance CEO and President Jonas Peterson said.

Peterson said the access to state politicians will help to accomplish the group's priorities.

"There's a clear sense of where we want to go and what we want these policy programs to look like."

Vaping industry credits economy, lower taxes for its migration to Las Vegas
Vegas INC
https://vegasinc.lasvegassun.com/business/2018/jun/18/vaping-industry-credits-economy-lower-taxes-for-it/

When they were first mass produced, e-cigarettes and vaping products formed an industry widely considered to be a dud in the United States. Popularized in China in the early 2000s, they launched with little fanfare in the U.S. past decade as a less harmful alternative to tobacco.

But in recent years, the battery-powered vaporizer industry has taken off. It was worth $10 billion in 2017, and market research estimates it will reach $34 billion by 2021, $46 billion by 2023 and $64 billion by 2025.

As neighboring states have thrown in massive taxes and regulations to combat large vaping corporations from growing too much, many companies are moving to Las Vegas.

"This city gives people a well-rounded life, and from a traffic perspective, everybody's time is being used more efficiently," says Billy Wilson, CEO of online retail and wholesale supplier E-Cig Distributors. "It's great for business because it's easy to convince clients to come to Las Vegas for meetings and conventions. You don't have to twist too many arms."

Wilson's company, which distributes almost 10 million e-cig products around the world each year, is one of more than a dozen vaping mega-companies to move from California and Washington to the Las Vegas Valley as regulations and future proposed laws have hampered the industry in those states, starting in 2016. While each company's reasons for moving here vary, interviewed CEOs cited California's Prop 56—which increased consumer taxes on tobacco and vaping products by almost 230 percent starting in 2017—and Washington's House Bill 2165, which proposes to hike up such taxes by more than 60 percent, as contributing factors for their migration to the Valley.

After moving five times around Orange County from 2012 to 2017, Wilson convinced 28 of E-Cig Distributors' then-40 employees to join him in a full-scale move to Las Vegas last March. Operating here for more than a year, Wilson says his company is thriving more than ever in a state that's "much more open to business." He credited local and state economic departments for helping ECD make a "relatively seamless" move.

"We had 45 days to identify a building, pack everybody up and make the move actually happen," he says. "We finally shut down operations in Orange County on a Thursday, and we were open in Las Vegas the next Monday."

Facts and figures about e-cigarettes and vaping products
• Vaping products produce an aerosol by heating a flavored liquid that's inhaled by users into their lungs. The battery-powered products come in varying shapes and sizes and are known as "e-cigs," "mods" and "vape pens" among other nicknames.

• While vaping products save users from tar and other cancer-causing substances found in tobacco and marijuana cigarettes, vape juices can still include harmful chemicals like nicotine, diacetyl and — for weed vapes — THC.

• The vaping industry was worth $10 billion in 2017, and market research estimates it will reach $34 billion by 2021, $46 billion by 2023 and $64 billion by 2025.

• San Francisco-based Juul has 54 percent market share in the industry, and federal officials expect the brand to continue growing among both adults and underage users.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Jimmy Chen, CEO of Uvaper Wholesale, moved 20 of his 50 employees this year from Kent, Washington, for the chance at a more centrally located distribution headquarters in Las Vegas. Chen, like Wilson, says the move made sense among other reasons because he's able to more easily attract clients to visit Las Vegas than the Pacific Northwest. Chen says he hopes to hire an additional 30 employees at Uvaper's Las Vegas headquarters by the end of the year to keep up with growing business.

Vape industry employees, like Corben Madden, ECD's chief technology officer, says their dollar also goes much further in the Valley, thanks to lower home and rental rates and no state income tax.

"I save a ton of money on each paycheck and my taxes at the end of the year," he says.

Wilson, Chen and Madden say diversification of the Valley's economy also was an attractive draw. Traditionally known as a city for gambling and entertainment, the addition of professional sports teams and modern businesses such as Amazon, Postmates, Soothe and others give Las Vegas the feel of a "well-established West Coast city," Madden says.

But while Nevada has taken a business-friendly approach to the vape industry, federal officials warn a growing number of young users may eventually lead the state to implement tax hikes similar to those in California and Washington. Of the estimated 10 to 12 million vape users in the United States, more than 2 million are underage, according to figures from the U.S. Center of Disease Control.

San Francisco-based brand Juul last month achieved 54 percent of the vape market share, according to statistics from Nielsen, thanks in part to viral videos of its users experimenting with the products on social media. Under heavy pressure, the vape giant declared its support to raise the minimum purchase age for vaping products from 18 to 21 years old and contributed $30 million to research and prevention of underage use of its products.

"Our company's mission is to eliminate cigarettes and help the more than 1 billion smokers worldwide switch to a better alternative," says Juul Labs CEO Kevin Burns. "At the same time, we are committed to deterring young people, as well as adults who do not currently smoke, from using our products."

Brian King, who oversees the CDC's Office on Smoking and Health, called the growing youth e-cigarette usage statistics "concerning," adding that almost 60 percent of Americans who vape are also tobacco users. Despite industry marketing claims that e-cigarette products can help people stop smoking tobacco, King says evidence on vape products as healthy alternatives to traditional cigarettes is "not conclusive." Vaping products have not been proven to help tobacco users quit, either.

"There are some people successfully quitting tobacco with e-cigarettes, but the majority of users are not," King says. "We know e-cigarettes are safer than combustible cigarettes, but that doesn't mean they're safe. The science on the issue is still really mixed."

Group focuses on bringing Super Bowl, Final Four to Las Vegas

In the end, a newly appointed committee charged with attracting major sporting events to Southern Nevada might need seed money most.

The 19-member Southern Nevada Sporting Event Committee gathered for the first time Friday to begin strategizing about the best ways to attract and finance bids for events like the Super Bowl, the NFL draft, and the NCAA's Final Four and Frozen Four.

Rossi Ralenkotter, CEO of the Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority, noted that the goal of putting more "heads in beds" with high-profile sports events may be more challenging than it looks, because schedulers will have to avoid bringing in large crowds when big conventions are already in town. He also noted that preparing a competitive bid takes financial resources, so part of the solution could be determining a funding source.

Chaired by Paul Anderson, the committee includes six Nevada Resorts Association members and representatives of the Vegas Golden Knights and the Oakland Raiders.
Some members with venues already in place are already attracting events, including Boyd Gaming's Orleans Arena and MGM Resorts International's T-Mobile Arena, MGM Grand Garden and Mandalay Bay Events Center. By 2020, the new 65,000-seat Las Vegas stadium will be available.

This year the Las Vegas Motor Speedway joins the list of facilities hosting two annual NASCAR weekends.

The South Point has not only one of the best equestrian arenas in the region, but also one of the top bowling centers.

The committee is expected to meet four or five more times before delivering a report to Gov. Brian Sandoval and the Nevada Legislature by Dec. 31.

Members will likely discuss whether a separate sports commission should be formed and the best way for Southern Nevada's sports venues to coordinate efforts to draw high-profile events to the city.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

One of the reasons the committee plans to deliver a report by the end of the year is so that it could approach the Legislature for seed money to get started.

Committee members agreed that they want to hear background reports from the LVCVA and Las Vegas Events about how they bring events to Southern Nevada.

A familiar organization will handle staffing responsibilities for the new committee. Brian Gordon, a principal with Las Vegas-based Applied Analysis, has been contracted to provide staffing support for the group. Gordon's associate, Jeremy Aguero, has a similar function with the Las Vegas Stadium Authority.

Gordon said Friday that he would soon set up a website for the committee to provide information for its public meetings.

The next committee meeting hasn't been scheduled, but it is expected to be sometime from July 9-16.

Sen. Dean Heller, R-Nev., on Friday announced there will be $12 million in federal funding for fire detection cameras and the battle against invasive species.

Heller said earlier this month he urged the Department of Agriculture and Forest Service to fund and support wildfire prevention and detection efforts. He said Friday there's $6 million in the budget to support innovative wildfire projects including modernizing aviation, radio and evacuation infrastructure. He said the act also contains $2 million specifically to support efforts such as AlertTahoe, a camera system to help detect widlfires in the basin much earlier than other methods.

It also calls on the forest service to work with UNR on wildfire risk mapping.

In addition, he said there's $6 million in the appropriations bill to combat invasive species at the lake.

Nevada DMV makes it easier to change gender on licenses

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A doctor's approval is no longer required to change the listed gender on a driver's license or identification card at Nevada's Department of Motor Vehicles, which is working on adding a new option for those who don't identify as male or female.

The previous policy added further costs and stress for trans and gender-nonconforming people, said Jane Heenan, Gender Justice Nevada's clinical director. Heenan recalls one person who spent money on multiple doctor visits because they could not find a physician who would sign off on the form.

"Driver licenses no longer require any kind of external permission or affirmation from medical professionals of any kind," Heenan said. "It reduces the complexities of this process, which are already very complex for people seeking to make these changes. Lifting that burden is significant."

An updated driver's license costs $9.25 and a new ID card is $8.25, according to the DMV.

The change is similar to a move by the Nevada Department of Health and Human Services, which changed its rules in 2016 to allow people to update the gender on their birth certificate using a self-declaration process, The Las Vegas Sun reported Thursday.

"Requiring medical certification of gender identity is an outdated practice," said Kevin Malone, a DMV spokesman.

The DMV has not said when a third option for people who don't identify as male or female will be added.

"We are planning to add a nonbinary gender marker," Malone said. "However, this requires computer system programming and extensive testing with law enforcement and other stakeholders to ensure they receive the proper information."

Nevada prison officials struggle with doctors who refuse to treat inmates
Michelle Rindels
The Nevada Independent
https://thenevadaindependent.com/article/nevada-prison-officials-struggle-with-doctors-who-refuse-to-treat-inmates

Nevada prison officials say they sometimes have to take inmates through the back door or bring them before or after normal business hours for non-emergency medical care because off-site doctors are reluctant to treat them, if they treat them at all.

The hesitance to offer medical care to incarcerated people is one of the reasons cited by a new audit as to why prisons are sometimes resorting to more expensive out-of-network medical providers. Officials say there’s not much they can do to compel in-network providers to see an inmate.

“There is no statutory requirement that they would be forced to provide services to everyone that subscribes to their network,” said John Borrowman, the deputy director of support services at the Nevada Department of Corrections. “We have no leverage statutory or otherwise to force a provider to see an inmate.”

The audit, presented Thursday at the Executive Branch Audit Committee that includes all Nevada constitutional officers, noted that the prisons resorted to out-of-network providers in 16 cases, or about 8 percent of the sample. One example was that the prisons are favoring a single out-of-network urologist in Southern Nevada because that doctor is willing to serve inmates on-site at the remote Ely prison and in conservation camps, so officials also use that physician for off-site appointments.

Borrowman noted that the networks the state buys into for medical care are also used by the general public and other state health groups, such as the Public Employee Benefits Program, and aren’t exclusively designed for inmate populations. He said in a future request for proposals, there may be an effort to gauge how many providers in a network will take inmate patients.

Lt. Gov. Mark Hutchison said he hoped the state could use its leverage as a large payer of health services to negotiate

“We ought to have as a very basic requirement that these folks are willing to provide services for the inmates who need them so we don’t have to keep going outside the network,” he said.

The out-of-network services discussion is part of a larger conversation about how to manage the rising cost of health care in Nevada prisons. In 2017, the department spent $11.7 million on off-site medical expenses alone.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

“This has been a concern of mine since I’ve gotten here,” said NDOC Director James Dzurenda. “We have noticed a trend over the years of increasing medical costs and overnight hospital stays.”

Auditors’ suggestions for keeping costs under control included:

Finding a third party administrator who can do “targeted case management” and ensure inmates staying at a hospital are getting only necessary treatments at the best rates. Oregon has implemented this system and reported saving 20 percent on hospital costs over two years.
Reviewing prison medical payouts to ensure they match with the treatment that was authorized by the department’s Utilization Review Committee, which reviews requests for off-site medical care and prioritizes them.

The Indy Explains: Everything you need to know about NV Energy's solar proposal
Riley Snyder and Daniel Rothberg
The Nevada Independent
https://thenevadaindependent.com/article/nv-indy-explains-everything-you-need-to-know-about-nv-energys-solar-proposal

What kind of event could bring together Nevada’s governor, lieutenant governor, a congressman, two gubernatorial candidates and dozens of Assembly and state Senate members?

Far down the list of anyone’s guess would likely be the unveiling of NV Energy’s 2018 Integrated Resource Plan (IRP), a lengthy, data-heavy planning document the utility is required to submit to state regulators every three years detailing how it plans to meet future electric supply and demand.

But members of Nevada’s political elite crowded the Springs Preserve last week to hear utility CEO Paul Caudill unveil details of the utility’s 2018 IRP, including six proposed agreements to develop six new photovoltaic solar farms throughout the state and several major battery storage projects, doubling the state’s renewable energy production by 2023.

The star-studded unveiling, which also includes a contract for potentially the cheapest solar production price in the country, was somewhat unusual for the IRP process, which typically resides in the realm of energy policy wonks and other denizens who follow the normally dry regulatory proceedings.

Unmentioned during the event but clearly present throughout the utility’s IRP filing was the specter of Question 3, a proposed constitutional amendment that would end NV Energy’s monopoly control of the state’s electric market and require the state set up and switch to a competitive retail market by 2023.

NV Energy, which has donated millions of dollars to a PAC opposing the ballot question, states in the IRP application that the expansive planned move toward more renewable generation wouldn’t go forward if the ballot measure passes, as the amendment would prohibit the utility from owning generating stations or entering into power purchase contracts with outside firms.

Here’s what the IRP process entails, and what the future landscape of Nevada’s energy policy could look like over the next three years.

What is an IRP?

Under state law, an electric utility is required to file a “plan to increase its supply of electricity or decrease the demands made on its system by its customers” to the state’s Public Utilities Commission every three years, due on June 1.

That broad outline takes the form of a filing consisting of thousands of pages of applications, testimony and appendixes from the utility, a window into how it plans to manage electric demand and procurement of supply over a period stretching out over the next three decades.

From there, the PUC — which consists of three commissioners appointed by the governor — is required to hold hearings and take testimony from any interested parties on the application, and judge it based on several criteria including meeting reliability minimums, the state’s renewable portfolio standard and acquiring fuel sources judged on flexibility, diversity and reliability.

After receiving the application, the PUC has 135 days to approve the utility’s energy supply plan. This year, that’s Oct. 14. The PUC then has 210 days to approve the rest of the plan, which for 2018 falls on Dec. 28, fewer than six weeks before the Legislature convenes.

State lawmakers in 2017 approved a number of changes to the IRP process, including requiring the utility for the first time to file it jointly for its entities serving both Northern and Southern Nevada service territories.

In its 2018 application, NV Energy laid out its broad goals for its future energy supply and demand goals thusly:

“The overarching goal of this 2018 Joint IRP is to meet growth and shrink our exposure to natural gas prices by delivering more low-cost renewable energy to our customers, accelerating our transition to a cleaner energy future with near-term investments by our (power purchase agreements) counterparties to support new Nevada-based renewable energy resources, shoring up our transmission infrastructure, and increasing or investment in energy efficiency programs.”

Clean energy and Question 3

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Clean energy advocates see this latest IRP as a shift for the utility, which had approached solar and energy storage projects more conservatively in the past. They also see it as the utility adjusting to the times, a reflection of the dramatic drop in solar and battery storage prices over the past few years, even with the recent tariffs on solar panels imposed by the Trump administration.

One of NV Energy's proposed solar projects, Copper Mountain 5, would provide the cheapest solar energy in the country, according to Greentech Media, which is part of a research firm that tracks solar contract prices. That price could increase after the first year, but the other proposals are similarly low priced contracts, said Colin Smith, an analyst at Greentech Media Research.

"These projects are on par with some of the lowest [contract] prices to date," he said.

The IRP could put more pressure on clean energy groups, many of which have stayed neutral on the Energy Choice Initiative, to decide whether they support the ballot measure or the utility's continued regulated monopoly over the state's energy portfolio. Robert Johnston, a senior attorney at Western Resource Advocates, said there is some concern that moving to an energy choice market might slow down progress on building out large-scale solar projects.

Johnston noted that there would likely be several transition years before Nevada has an open energy market. There is concern among some environmental groups, he said, that during the transition period, there will be a halt in the construction of new solar projects.

"We think it will be a long and complicated process," he said. "And the question is: Who is going to be building new renewable projects during this interval where you could really have a cloud of legal and regulatory uncertainty hovering over the state? … What we've seen in Nevada is that developers won't break ground on these projects until they have a long-term buyer under contract who is committed to buying energy out of that project for the next 20 to 25 years."

Under the proposed plan, the state's energy supply plan would rise from 14 percent renewable in 2017 to 32 percent renewable in 2023.

Jon Wellinghoff, a policy advisor for the ballot measure and former chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission dismissed these concerns. He argued that companies might invest in clean energy even during the transition period before a restructured market goes into effect.

He laid out a few hypotheticals in which that might be possible. A large company that owns several stores in the state, Wal-Mart for instance, could enter into a contract for a solar facility to serve its stores under energy choice. Or, Wellinghoff said, a casino giant such as MGM Resorts International could invest in solar to aggregate and then offer to its large employee base.

If the market is opened, Wellinghoff said, he expects solar and battery storage to be the predominant types of energy procured because of how competitive their pricing has become.

"There's no question those are the primary things they're going to invest in," he said.

The Question 3 factor

NV Energy says in the filing that it will only move forward with all of the proposed solar projects if Question 3 fails in November. If not, the company would be required to sell off all of their power purchase agreements and power plants as part of the dismantling of the monopoly structure.

If the ballot question passes, the utility proposed going forward with only one of the six proposed renewable energy projects — a 300 solar megawatt power purchase agreement with 8minuteenergy at the Eagle Shadow Mountain Solar Farm. Its IRP filing states that doing so will help the utility's Northern Nevada operations meet the minimum Renewable Portfolio Standard goal.

The utility is also asking for the approval of four major transmission system upgrades to help interconnect the newly planned renewable energy projects, in total worth $22.9 million and that the utility could later recover through an adjustment in rates. If Question 3 is approved by the voters, the utility is asking the PUC to approve only a $550,000 transmission upgrade.

NV Energy executive Shawn Elicegui wrote in testimony filed with the IRP that because the utility would only need to meet the needs of customers through 2023 if the ballot measure passed, it wouldn't make sense to enter into several long-term solar power contracts that it would then need to turn around and sell almost immediately.

"NV Energy's focus will shift from long-term, centralizing planning that focuses on energy supply to short-term planning," Elicegui wrote in the filing. "Adding six long-term obligations, as well as battery storage to a list of assets that needs to be transferred and which add to the obligations backed by the full faith and credit of the State is not necessary to meet customers' needs through 2023."

Does NV Energy really need the proposed solar?

The IRP requires the utility to prepare two analyses, one that addresses supply and another that addresses demand. But the two are interconnected. Growing energy demand has typically been used to justify the need for procuring more supply or building more transmission lines.

For utilities across the country, power sales have flattened or increased at smaller rates, even as economies have grown. Part of this has to do with improvements in energy efficiency.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The same trend is true for NV Energy. In its filing, it forecasts its peak load — the maximum amount of energy required by its customers — to grow at about 0.7 percent in Southern Nevada and dip slightly in Northern Nevada between 2019 and 2029. The forecast is low, the company said, because it factors in the expiration of contracts and an ambitious energy efficiency plan (the IRP proposes cutting sales by more than 1.1 percent through energy efficiency).

Wellinghoff said that even with Valmy plant — the utility's lone remaining coal-fired plant — coming offline in the near future, the utilities commission might punt on NV Energy's plan because the utility could satisfy its customers' needs without new solar farms.

"We'll be well into the transition to energy choice by [the time they need that energy]," he said.

NV Energy argues that even though adding solar will bring more generation to the grid, it will lower costs over time because the utility will be less reliant on purchasing natural gas. Right now, the utility must choose whether to purchase power on the Western wholesale market or purchase natural gas as fuel for those power plants. The six solar energy projects would give the utility more flexibility to avoid those costs, which could fluctuate in the future.

In the filing, NV Energy said the plan would "shrink customers' exposure to natural gas prices."

The utility's plan also called for extending out the planned lifespan for several of its existing power plants until around 2030 largely to provide capacity support during times of peak electric demand, as most of them are in good operating condition.

Valmy retirement

One of the highlights cited by Caudill and others in the presentation of the IRP is moving up the retirement date for one of the units of the Valmy coal-burning generation plants, the utility's lone remaining coal-fired facility in the state.

Long a target for environmental groups, the utility initially planned on operating the rural Humboldt County-based plants through their expected retirement date of 2025, to help meet peak demand during hot summer months and because the utility considered coal to be a more reliable resource than large-scale solar.

The IRP filed by the utility calls for one of the two generating plants (which it co-owns with Idaho Power) to be retired by 2021, with the other staying operational through 2025.

But retirement of the Valmy plant is conditioned on several factors, including:

the PUC approving all three Northern Nevada renewable energy projects and coming into operation before June 2022
no unexpected increases in area electric demand that would create a larger energy load stable conditions in western energy markets
avoiding increases in transmission area load
the commission approving regulatory asset accounts, which would allow the utility to recover the cost of closing the plant early through changes in rates.
NV Energy said the conditions, like the approval of three new solar projects, are necessary to maintain a reliable grid in an area that serves Reno and mining customers near Elko.

Uncertainty over the retirement date is due to various unsolved factors in the utility's electric supply mix over the next three years, Elicegui wrote in a filing submitted as part of the IRP, requiring a series of tests to ensure that retiring the plant early wouldn't disrupt the utility's ability to deliver electricity during peak demand times.

"While our current long-term reliability assessment indicates that we should be able to retire North Valmy Unit 1 in 2021 without compromising our fundamental directive – to safely and reliably deliver low-cost energy to customers – we need to confirm those findings with additional analysis as 2021 approaches," Elicegui wrote in the filing.

'Nobody likes' family separation policy, Trump adviser says
Associated Press
https://www.reviewjournal.com/news/nation-and-world/nobody-likes-family-separation-policy-trump-adviser-says/

WASHINGTON — A top White House adviser on Sunday distanced the Trump administration from responsibility for separating migrant children from their parents at the U.S.-Mexico border, even though the administration put in place and could easily end a policy that has led to a spike in cases of split and distraught families.

President Donald Trump has tried to blame Democrats for a situation that has sparked a national debate over his hard-line approach to immigration enforcement.

"Nobody likes" breaking up families and "seeing babies ripped from their mothers' arms," said Kellyanne Conway, a counselor to the president.

Nearly 2,000 children were separated from their families over a six-week period in April and May after Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced a new "zero-tolerance" policy that refers all cases of illegal entry for criminal prosecution. U.S. protocol prohibits detaining children with their parents because the children are not charged with a crime and the parents are.

The administration wants to send a message, said a Republican critic of the policy, “that if you cross the border with children, your children are going to be ripped away from you. That’s traumatizing to the children who are innocent victims, and it is contrary to our values in this country.”

Maine Sen. Susan Collins added that “we know from years of experience that we need to fix our immigration laws and that using children is not the answer.”

Trump plans to meet with House Republicans on Tuesday to discuss pending immigration legislation amid an election-season debate over an issue that helped vault the New York real estate mogul into the Oval Office in 2016. The House is expected to vote this week on a bill pushed by conservatives that may not have enough support to pass, and a compromise measure that the White House has endorsed.

In other developments surrounding the immigration controversy:

— A Republican congressman from Texas who toured a tent-like shelter for hundreds of minors who entered the country illegally said Saturday the facility is a byproduct of a flawed immigration strategy. U.S. Rep. Will Hurd said the shelter near the Tornillo port of entry in far West Texas will house about 360 boys who are 16 and 17. The teens began arriving Friday, the same day Hurd toured the shelter, he said, noting that they’re being moved from other shelters to make way for younger immigrant children taken into custody at the border.

— The intensifying the divide among Republicans over immigration policy is fueling concerns that a voter backlash could cost the GOP control of the House in November. To many conservatives, the compromise immigration proposal released this past week by House Speaker Paul Ryan, R-Wis., is little more than “amnesty.” One tea party group described the Republican plan as “the final betrayal.” Fox Business host Lou Dobbs, who is close to President Donald Trump, tweeted Friday that Ryan is “trying to open our borders even more and give illegal immigrants the biggest amnesty in American history.”

— Scuttling immigration legislation could turn off independent voters, an especially important bloc for House Republicans competing in dozens of districts that Democrat Hillary Clinton won in the 2016 presidential election. “The GOP’s in a tough spot,” said Republican pollster Frank Luntz. “The hardcore Trump voter has a different point of view than the ever-important independent voter, and there doesn’t seem to be a middle ground.”

Conway rejected the idea that Trump was using the kids as leverage to force Democrats to negotiate on immigration and his long-promised border wall, even after Trump tweeted Saturday: “Democrats can fix their forced family breakup at the Border by working with Republicans on new legislation, for a change!”

To Rep. Adam Schiff, D-Calif., the administration is “using the grief, the tears, the pain of these kids as mortar to build our wall. And it’s an effort to extort a bill to their liking in the Congress.”

Schiff said the practice was “deeply unethical” and that Republicans’ refusal to criticize Trump represented a “sad degeneration” of the GOP, which he said had become “the party of lies.”

Conway, however, put the onus on Democrats, saying if there are serious about overhauling the system, “they’ll come together again and try to close these loopholes and get real immigration reform.”

Asked whether the president was willing to end the policy, she said: “The president is ready to get meaningful immigration reform across the board.”

More directly, Rep. Ben Ray Lujon, D-N.M., said Trump “could pick up the phone and stop it today.”

The House proposals face broad opposition from Democrats, and even if a bill does pass, the closely divided Senate seems unlikely to go along.

Rep. Michael McCaul, who helped write the conservative version with Rep. Bob Goodlatte, said he had spoken to Trump on Saturday and that the president “is fully committed to both of these bills. He’s put the full weight of his office behind it.”

McCaul, R-Texas, said both bills satisfy Trump’s main objectives.

“Without him coming to Capitol Hill on Tuesday, I don’t think we’d have that sort of maximum pressure, if you will, to get us across the goal line, and I anticipate on Tuesday that he’s going to be the leader he is and we’re going to get something passed out of the House,” said McCaul, R-Texas.

Trump’s former chief strategist said Republicans would face steep consequences for pushing the compromise bill because it provides a path to citizenship for young “Dreamer” immigrants brought to the country illegally as children. Steve Bannon argued that effort risked alienating Trump’s political base and contributing to election losses in November, when Republicans hope to preserve their congressional majorities.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

“I strongly recommend that we just wait until 2019, right, to address this,” he said, while defending the administration’s practice of separating parents from children as an example of Trump making good on a key campaign promise.

“We ran on a policy, very simply, stop mass illegal immigration and limit legal immigration, get our sovereignty back, and to help our workers, OK? And so he went to a zero tolerance policy,” Bannon said. “Zero tolerance, it’s a crime to come across illegally, and children get separated,.”

Rep. Beto O’Rourke, D-Texas, said he was working on legislation that would end the practice of family separation.

Speaking from Texas, where he was leading a march to a town where a new tent structure for children recently opened, O’Rourke said “we can do the right thing by this country and for those kids, and not do it at the price of a 2,000-mile, 30-foot-high, $30 billion wall, not doing it at the price of deporting people who are seeking asylum, deporting people in some cases back to certain death, not doing it at the cost of ending family migration, which is the story of this country.”

The situation now is “inhumane” and “un-American,” he said. The blame, he said, rests “on all of us, not just the Trump administration.”

Conway and Schiff appeared on NBC’s “Meet the Press,” Collins was on CBS’ “Face the Nation,” Lujan and Bannon spoke on ABC’s “This Week,” O’Rourke was interviewed on CNN’s “State of the Union” and McCaul was on Fox’s “Sunday Morning Futures.”

In 1997, Nevada became one of the first states in the U.S. to adopt a minimum requirement for green energy production.

Today, however, other states have zoomed past us in setting such standards. In fact, Nevada's requirement for 25 percent of our energy to come from renewable sources no longer ranks us in the top 10. We're trailing New Jersey, of all places. New Jersey!

So it's commendable that a group known as Nevadans for Clean Future Energy has been working on an initiative to boost Nevada's minimum to 50 percent by 2030.

The group is circulating a petition that would put the initiative on a statewide ballot. Tuesday is the last day the group can collect signatures.

Organizers say they're confident the petition drive will be successful, which is good to hear. The initiative deserves a spot on the ballot.

Nevadans have shown time and again they support development of renewable energy, so it's worthwhile to debate whether to bump up the requirement to 50 percent. It's also worth exploring considering the popularity of a similar bill in the 2017 Nevada Legislature, which would have raised the minimum to 40 percent.

Gov. Brian Sandoval vetoed that measure, saying its passage was "premature in the face of evolving energy policy in Nevada." Sandoval said the requirement — technically known as a Renewable Portfolio Standard — could create complications given the likely passage of the Nevada Energy Choice Initiative ballot issue, which would allow Nevadans to choose their energy provider in the same way they select a cable/internet provider. Specifically, Sandoval was concerned that the increased RPS would create added costs that would deter providers from entering the market or be passed along to customers in the form of higher electricity rates.

Sandoval also said the change could result in higher fees for resorts and large corporations to exit the NV Energy grid and obtain their power from third parties.

Those points will no doubt be discussed if the RPS initiative gets on the ballot, but there's one thing that's not up for debate: Setting a higher requirement is the only guarantee for Nevadans that renewable energy production will expand here.

And that's important, because there are clear benefits from growing the state's green energy industry.

Our abundance of sunlight and our above-average potential in geothermal production makes us one of the nation's best-suited places to develop renewables, yet only about 18 percent of our energy is generated by those sources. Meanwhile, we're spending roughly $700 million a year to import natural gas and other fossil fuels to power the state's grid.

Boosting production from renewable sources would not only reduce those costs, but would help free the state from volatility in the fossil fuel market.

It would also generate economic activity, of which the current 25 percent standard has already yielded $7 billion in solar and geothermal operations.

Other benefits would come from reducing carbon emissions, which would help improve air quality and reduce respiratory problems triggered by air pollution. Nevada produced 35 million metric tons of carbon dioxide in 2015, which would be reduced by 3 million tons a year under the initiative.

Whether this is the right time to increase the standard, and whether this is the right level for Nevada, are questions that should be debated.

Getting the question on the ballot is a starting point, though, which is why the petition deserves support.

More Nevada kids have health insurance, but state 9th worst
Jessie Bekker
Las Vegas Review Journal
https://www.reviewjournal.com/life/health/more-nevada-kids-have-health-insurance-but-state-9th-worst/

The number of children in Nevada without health insurance was cut by more than half between 2011 and 2016, but the state's rate of uninsured kids remains the ninth-highest in the U.S., according to a new report.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The gains in insurance coverage occurred after passage of the Affordable Care Act in 2010 and Nevada's subsequent expansion of the federal Medicaid program, said Elizabeth Lukanen, deputy director of the State Health Access Data Assistance Center. The policy research center based at the University of Minnesota released the report Friday.

Denise Tanata, executive director for the Children's Advocacy Alliance, a nonprofit in Nevada, said the state's current rate of uninsured children of 6.3 percent is a big improvement from the beginning of the decade.

"We're absolutely still behind, and we've got a ways to go to catch up, but we're definitely moving in the right direction to do that," Tanata said. "The fact we're not last anymore is good."

The report analyzed U.S. Census Bureau survey data in all 50 states and Washington, D.C., tracking changes in public and private coverage and in the uninsured rate by race and ethnicity and household members' income and educational status.

From worst, to ninth

Lukanen said the drop in the state's uninsured rate quickened after 2013.

That may have been the result of the ACA's individual mandate requiring uninsured Americans to acquire health insurance or pay a penalty, which took effect the next year, Tanata said. Parents typically buy their children insurance when acquiring it for themselves, she said.

The Medicaid expansion, which doubled the number of Nevadans insured under the program to 600,000, also took effect the next year, lowering the uninsured rate for children and adults alike.

"Definitely, Nevada was sort of a standout state in terms of reductions in uninsurance," Lukanen said.

The 8.1 percentage point decline in the state's uninsured rate among children between 2013 and 2016 was the largest percentage point drop in the nation, she noted.

Even so, Nevada remains among the worst states in terms of its uninsured rate among children. That's because it started as worst in the nation in 2013, when 14.4 percent of children in the state lacked health insurance, ahead of No. 2 Texas, which had a rate of 13.2 percent.

"It's kind of an uphill battle," Lukanen said.

Disparities persist

Despite significant improvements across the board, disparities in insurance rates persist in the Silver State. About 10 percent of Hispanic children and children from households where family members achieved a high school education or less still lack health insurance, the report said.

One reason may be that parents whose children are eligible aren't signing them up.

For example, undocumented parents often fear sharing their personal information with the government could lead to deportation or cancellation of a residency application, Tanata said, meaning they are reluctant to apply for their citizen children.

That's despite the 2017 passage of state Senate Bill 325, which eliminated the five-year wait period to become eligible for Medicaid and Children's Health Insurance Plan previously required for children who were granted legal residence.

Lukanen and Tanata fear that questions about the future of the Affordable Care Act and the demise of its individual mandate provision, as well as anti-immigrant rhetoric from some Republican lawmakers, could reverse the progress made in Nevada and across the nation.

"I think every time you infuse uncertainty and question into a policy area, people get confused and, most likely, lose out," she said.

New Clark County schools superintendent faces trust-building challenge
Meghin Delaney

ORLANDO, Fla. — Establishing trust.

That, in two words, is the biggest challenge facing Jesus Jara when he arrives this week to become the Clark County School District superintendent.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

There are obvious similarities between Las Vegas and Orlando, but the climates of the two tourist meccas' school systems are not among them.

In Orlando, where Jara, 48, just concluded a six-year run as deputy superintendent, district officials, the school board and parents all seem to pull in the same direction to move the academic needle upward.

That's hardly the case in Clark County, where trust among district officials, legislators, parents and trustees often seems nonexistent and divisions threaten to undermine modest progress in academic achievement.

Jara — who doesn't mind whether you pronounce his last name with a J or an H — is aware of the challenge awaiting him when he clocks in Tuesday.

During a recent visit with the Las Vegas Review-Journal in his last weeks on the job in Florida, he said earning the trust of the entire community is critical to propelling the district forward.

But he also said he views what others see as mistrust a little differently, calling it a "passion" for students and education.

"The passion I can work with," he said. "What we need to do is just channel it together to … work as one and collaborate together so we can then have a real clear focus on being the No. 1 district for kids."

Operating transparently and having open dialogues are two ways Jara thinks Clark County can begin to build a culture around education that resembles Orlando's.

Rebecca Garcia, a 39-year-old with three children attending Clark County schools, said it's going to take a lot of showing up for Jara to restore her trust. But she acknowledges being impressed by his skills, experience and temperament in his interview with trustees.

"I think CCSD is at a juncture where we need a fresh perspective who is willing to leave the status quo, who isn't part of the status quo and who can set a new direction for the district," Garcia said.

Jara says Clark County parents can get a good sense of the approach he will bring by looking at changes that have occurred in Orange County, Florida, in recent years, including voters entrusting the school district with more tax money through ballot initiatives.

Overall, Jara said, Orange County schools have found a good balance between school autonomy and central oversight.

He wants to implement a similar structure in the Clark County district, which is still wrestling with the Legislature-mandated reorganization.

Budget flexibility

To demonstrate the flexibility of the Orange County system and illustrate how it can adjust to different challenges, Jara took a reporter on a tour of five schools.

At Colonial High School, he discussed principal autonomy, using the school's third-year principal, Jose Martinez, as an example.

The school, which serves up to 3,600 students, is similar to many Clark County high schools. It is 87 percent nonwhite. It's a Title I school, and 71 percent of students qualify for free or reduced lunch under federal standards, an indicator of poverty.

It's earns a consistent "C" on Florida's five-tier rating scale.
But unlike most Clark County schools, every student has their own tablet.

Also, the principal has near-complete control over the budget, as long as the school meets the district's criteria for academic achievement. That's similar to what's being done in Clark County, though at this point Orange County principals appear to have more spending flexibility. That required additional budgeting training for principals, Jara said.

At Colonial, for example, Martinez responded to parent and student feedback by cutting a couple coaching positions and using that money to cover fees for band and orchestra programs. There's money available for dry-cleaning uniforms, for example.

A better example came from Colonial's enrollment of roughly 200 Puerto Rican students who fled to Florida after Hurricanes Irma and Maria decimated their homeland.

"We knew right away we needed a system in place," Jara recalled, sipping from a cup of Dunkin Donuts coffee as he described how Martinez and his team jumped into action to prepare for the influx.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The solution included getting the school's Latinos in Action club involved.

A spinoff of student government clubs, Latinos in Action operates in a handful of Orange County schools and focuses heavily on mentorship.

Because the system was already in place, Martinez said, it was easier to absorb the newcomers with only minimal disruption to other students.

School turnaround

While the district lets schools like Colonial make such calls, schools that aren't cutting it academically have less autonomy.

Washington Shores Elementary School was a dilapidated facility nestled into an old, historically impoverished neighborhood.

Four years ago, the school received an "F" rating and a promise of support from the district. That included a spot in the school transformation office that Jara helped create and replacement of the old building.

Nate Stephens, the principal brought in to lead the transformation, grew up in the neighborhood and serves as the ultimate role model for the children.

"This is the exit from the neighborhood. This is personal for me," he said.

Part of the transformation involved training teachers on how to talk to students using higher-level vocabulary to set an example, Stephens said. If you hold high expectations, he said, the students can and will meet them.

In the latest state ratings, the school climbed to a "C."

During the tour of the school, students impressed Jara with their vocabularies. He sat with a kindergarten student who used the word "bacteria" in an essay on ice cream. A third-grade student talked about how physical activity teaches "collaboration."

"It's the same kids, the same community, learning at a higher level," Jara said.

The transformation office is similar to Clark County's turnaround initiatives but more advanced in some ways. For instance, it has a system to ease schools back to the mainstream once they reach an achievement standard. Over two to three years, the school is weaned off transformation office support, and budgetary control is returned to the principal.

That prevents what some Clark County schools with high-needs students are seeing now when certain state funding measures, like the Zoom and Victory programs, provide extra support only to vanish once student achievement improves.

That's one reason Jara likes systems that focus on and reprioritize existing funds rather than relying on new money.

'Master' principals

Next on Jara's list is Millennia Elementary School, which shares Principal Anne Lynaugh with nearby Millennia Gardens Elementary School, similar to Clark County's "franchise principal" program.

The idea of both programs is to leverage experience and talent, but Jara said he worries about burnout. Both districts also have training programs aimed at nurturing up-and-coming administrative talent.

In Lynaugh's schools, Jara shows a knack for connecting with students, easily slipping into and out of his native Spanish. Jara moved to Miami from Venezuela when he was 10.

"My parents had a vision of the American Dream, and I'm living it," Jara said over a chicken sandwich and Diet Coke, one of three cans consumed during the daylong visit.

Like their Clark County counterparts, Orange County students speak a multitude of languages, which can sometimes pose a problem, said Lynaugh. But with technology in every classroom and the rise of programs like Google Translate, students who aren't yet fluent in English are able to work independently.

Hands-on learning

Next up is Orange Technical College.

Don't let the name deceive you. Students do not earn bachelor's or associate degrees but can pursue a wide range of career certifications.

Funded by the state and run by districts, Florida's technical colleges are similar to vocational schools. They are open to adults and high school students. Adults pay tuition and any required fees, while students generally pay only for supplies or instructional materials.

Five campuses in Orange County offer more than 40 programs, including cosmetology, mechanics, animation and welding. Students spend half their days at their zoned high school and half in their career or technical program.

Jara's son, Alex — second-oldest of his three kids — is an alumnus, collecting a welding certificate two days before his high school graduation.

"This is hands-on learning," the elder Jara said.

The schools defy the notion that vocational schools are somehow lesser. Through partnerships with high-profile companies and up-to-date programs, including modeling simulation design and production, it's remarkable what they can accomplish, Jara said.

For example, combining a standard program like brick masonry with virtual reality technology keeps costs down by letting students practice in a simulation before actually laying bricks.

The last stop is Hunter's Creek Middle School, which is consistently rated at the highest level by the state. Principal Amy McHale is about to get even more autonomy and flexibility as she tries to narrow the achievement gap between the school's highest- and lowest-performing students.

But again, the district has a system for her to work within. She's allowed to try innovative approaches, mostly involving technology, but must narrow the gap — a goal the Clark County schools also have been pursuing under outgoing Superintendent Pat Skorkowsky — within three years.

Her plans include moving students to two days of block scheduling next year to devote more time to math and "really focus on the gaps," she said.

On to Clark County

Although Jara will be across the country by then, he promised to keep a close eye on Orlando and maintain a close relationship with Orange County Superintendent Barbara Jenkins, whom he called the greatest school superintendent in the country.

That comment came at his last School Board meeting in late May, where he was showered with praise from trustees. He also had the chance to lay out some of his hopes for Clark County.

"I hope to become sister school districts to replicate the work of the talented administrators and phenomenal teachers in Orange County," he said.

Time will tell if culture change can also be exported.

Federal lands law jeopardizes future of Nevada's Mint 400
Michael Scott Davidson
Las Vegas Review Journal

Since its creation 50 years ago, the Mint 400 off-road race has become local legend.

The 120-mile-long desert loop that runs east of Interstate 15 between Las Vegas and Primm is known for its unforgiving difficulty. About half the trucks and dune buggies that start the race are unable to finish.

The event was immortalized in 1972 in journalist Hunter S. Thompson's novel "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas."

This year's iteration of the event, held in March, drew an estimated 35,000 attendees from around the world and created $40 million in economic impact for the state, according to Josh Martelli, who co-owns the race with his brother, Matt.

"It is our Indy 500," Martelli said.

But the race's future in Southern Nevada is being threatened by federal legislation that would open nearly 39,000 acres of federal land for development, including land south of the Las Vegas Valley. Clark County commissioners are scheduled to vote Tuesday whether to sign a resolution supporting the legislation.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Martelli said the northern half of the Mint 400 course crosses that land. Moving the route would cause the race to lose some of its difficulty and accompanying prestige. And finding a new route would be difficult because of protections for animals such as the desert tortoise.

“This proposal eliminates at least 40 to 50 miles of our racecourse, and we don’t really have a lot of good alternatives,” he said. “We’re essentially being sandwiched between new commercial development and preservation of natural resources.”

Martelli said county staffers have assured him they will support preservation of the racecourse through 2023 and help identify an alternative route. But the race organizer said the next best place to hold the race would be near Phoenix.

“That would be a huge economic loss for Clark County and Las Vegas,” Martelli said.

The land proposal has also drawn the ire of other off-road organizations.

“Not only will it affect competitive events, (but) it will also affect people that go out and ride on the weekend,” said Kenny Thatcher, president of Southern Nevada Off Road Enthusiasts. “There’s probably over 300,000 off-highway vehicles in Clark County.”

Thatcher said those vehicles are owned by people spending money on gas, car parts and auto repairs. They often stop in Primm for lunch when they go riding.

“Primm Valley stands to lose a lot from it,” Thatcher said. “We’re blue-collar people. We have disposable income, and this is how we use it. It’s a big industry.”

At their Tuesday meeting, commissioners also will discuss the formation of a committee focused on preserving local off-road recreation. Additionally, they will decide whether to sign an agreement with Nellis Air Force Base that would give the county ownership of almost one-tenth of the 10,000 acre Nellis Dunes off-road recreation area north of Las Vegas

Martelli said he views the committee idea as an olive branch from the County Commission to the off-road community, but both he and Thatcher remain wary of what effect such a committee could have.

Regardless, Thatcher said he hopes to bring at least 300 people to the commission meeting to oppose the lands bill.

“If they think they’re going to send everyone out to the Nellis Dunes, you can’t put 300,000 people in 10,000 acres. It’s not going to work,” Thatcher said. “We’ll have to go outside of Clark County to do anything.”

Resolution up for approval

Clark County Commission is slated to vote Tuesday on a resolution seeking federal legislation to open almost 39,000 acres of public land for development and set aside more than 370,000 acres of new wilderness and protected areas for the desert tortoise and other threatened species.

The four-page resolution outlines 15 separate transactions, including a 41,000-acre expansion of the Moapa River Indian Reservation, several new or expanded wilderness areas totaling almost 83,000 acres and nine areas of “critical environmental concern” totaling almost 293,000 acres.

The document and related maps are available for review on the county’s website at https://bit.ly/2JHlh1d.

County officials gave the general public its first look at the proposal during a June 5 open house, then accepted written input for a week.

Those wishing to provide further input will have to do so during public comment Tuesday.

The commission meeting is slated to start at 9 a.m. The resolution is item No. 97 on the agenda.

Many Nevada drivers to pay more for minimum liability coverage
Art Marroquin

Nevada drivers might want to double-check their insurance, because changes are coming in about two weeks.

The threshold for minimum liability coverage goes up July 1 under a law approved during last year’s legislative session.

New minimums require motorists to carry $25,000 per person for bodily injury, $50,000 per accident, plus $20,000 for property damage coverage per accident, officials with the Nevada Department of Motor Vehicles said.

That's a significant jump from the current requirement of $15,000, $30,000 and $10,000, respectively — currently ranked as the second-lowest in the United States, DMV officials said.

"The costs of medical care and automobile repairs have gone up significantly," Nevada DMV Director Terri Albertson said. "The cost of a crash can easily exceed these older minimums."

About 32 percent of Nevada's 2.3 million licensed drivers carried the minimum coverage as of last year, including the Road Warrior.

Most drivers were notified about the need for increased coverage during their most recent policy renewals. And like many of you, the Road Warrior made the required adjustments to his policy last month.

Depending on your driving record and insurance company, the change in rates could range from $10 to $50. Insurance companies will no longer be allowed to write the lower limits; those that do could be sanctioned, DMV spokesman Kevin Malone said.

Scofflaw drivers failing to purchase auto liability insurance at the new minimum limits could be cited and fined and have their vehicle registration canceled until the appropriate coverage is purchased, according to the Nevada Division of Insurance website.

Local leaders meet with Nevada politicians on development goals

A group of 25 business and community leaders from the Las Vegas Global Economic Alliance and local chambers met with congressional delegations and agencies this week in Washington, D.C., to discuss policy issues affecting Southern Nevada.

The Federal Forum, held Tuesday and Wednesday, discussed big-picture issues including the impact of Yucca Mountain on economic development and tourism, I-11's development and the future of the autonomous vehicle industry in Las Vegas.

The alliance is a private-public partnership that works with the Governor's Office of Economic Development and other state partners to recruit new businesses to the state and to expand existing businesses that export at least half of their goods or services outside of Nevada. It achieves its mission largely by preparing companies to be approved for state tax abatements.

Ray Specht, who chairs the LVGEA's policy committee, said the forum touched on how to keep expanding the local economy when it already is seeing growth in areas such as employment and population.

"One of the things we talked about is how now is not the time to take the foot off the gas pedal," Specht said. "What do we do to make LGVEA the most competitive regional development authority?"

Lisette Partelow, the director of K-12 strategic initiatives at the Center for American Progress, a think tank in Washington, spoke about education policy at one of the forum's sessions. She said the group had an insightful discussion on short- and long-term goals on how to improve teacher recruitment and retainment. Suggestions included improving salaries and requiring higher degrees for certain positions.

The forum was also meant to help strengthen relationships between the LVGEA and delegation.

"Our entire delegation has been very open and willing to work with us," alliance CEO and President Jonas Peterson said.

Peterson said the access to state politicians will help to accomplish the group's priorities.

"There's a clear sense of where we want to go and what we want these policy programs to look like."

Vaping industry credits economy, lower taxes for its migration to Las Vegas
https://vegasinc.lasvegassun.com/business/2018/jun/18/vaping-industry-credits-economy-lower-taxes-for-it/

When they were first mass produced, e-cigarettes and vaping products formed an industry widely considered to be a dud in the United States. Popularized in China in the early 2000s, they launched with little fanfare in the U.S. past decade as a less harmful alternative to tobacco.

But in recent years, the battery-powered vaporizer industry has taken off. It was worth $10 billion in 2017, and market research estimates it will reach $34 billion by 2021, $46 billion by 2023 and $64 billion by 2025.

As neighboring states have thrown in massive taxes and regulations to combat large vaping corporations from growing too much, many companies are moving to Las Vegas.

"This city gives people a well-rounded life, and from a traffic perspective, everybody's time is being used more efficiently," says Billy Wilson, CEO of online retail and wholesale supplier E-Cig Distributors. "It's great for business because it's easy to convince clients to come to Las Vegas for meetings and conventions. You don't have to twist too many arms."

Wilson's company, which distributes almost 10 million e-cig products around the world each year, is one of more than a dozen vaping mega-companies to move from California and Washington to the Las Vegas Valley as regulations and future proposed laws have hampered the industry in those states, starting in 2016. While each company's reasons for moving here vary, interviewed CEOs cited California's Prop 56—which increased consumer taxes on tobacco and vaping products by almost 230 percent starting in 2017—and Washington's House Bill 2165, which proposes to hike up such taxes by more than 60 percent, as contributing factors for their migration to the Valley.

After moving five times around Orange County from 2012 to 2017, Wilson convinced 28 of E-Cig Distributors' then-40 employees to join him in a full-scale move to Las Vegas last March. Operating here for more than a year, Wilson says his company is thriving more than ever in a state that's "much more open to business." He credited local and state economic departments for helping ECD make a "relatively seamless" move.

"We had 45 days to identify a building, pack everybody up and make the move actually happen," he says. "We finally shut down operations in Orange County on a Thursday, and we were open in Las Vegas the next Monday."

Facts and figures about e-cigarettes and vaping products
• Vaping products produce an aerosol by heating a flavored liquid that's inhaled by users into their lungs. The battery-powered products come in varying shapes and sizes and are known as "e-cigs," "mods" and "vape pens" among other nicknames.

• While vaping products save users from tar and other cancer-causing substances found in tobacco and marijuana cigarettes, vape juices can still include harmful chemicals like nicotine, diacetyl and — for weed vapes — THC.

• The vaping industry was worth $10 billion in 2017, and market research estimates it will reach $34 billion by 2021, $46 billion by 2023 and $64 billion by 2025.

• San Francisco-based Juul has 54 percent market share in the industry, and federal officials expect the brand to continue growing among both adults and underage users.

• (Sources: U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services, Nielsen)

Jimmy Chen, CEO of Uvaper Wholesale, moved 20 of his 50 employees this year from Kent, Washington, for the chance at a more centrally located distribution headquarters in Las Vegas. Chen, like Wilson, says the move made sense among other reasons because he's able to more easily attract clients to visit Las Vegas than the Pacific Northwest. Chen says he hopes to hire an additional 30 employees at Uvaper's Las Vegas headquarters by the end of the year to keep up with growing business.

Vape industry employees, like Corben Madden, ECD's chief technology officer, says their dollar also goes much further in the Valley, thanks to lower home and rental rates and no state income tax.

"I save a ton of money on each paycheck and my taxes at the end of the year," he says.

Wilson, Chen and Madden say diversification of the Valley's economy also was an attractive draw. Traditionally known as a city for gambling and entertainment, the addition of professional sports teams and modern businesses such as Amazon, Postmates, Soothe and others give Las Vegas the feel of a "well-established West Coast city," Madden says.

But while Nevada has taken a business-friendly approach to the vape industry, federal officials warn a growing number of young users may eventually lead the state to implement tax hikes similar to those in California and Washington. Of the estimated 10 to 12 million vape users in the United States, more than 2 million are underage, according to figures from the U.S. Center of Disease Control.

San Francisco-based brand Juul last month achieved 54 percent of the vape market share, according to statistics from Nielsen, thanks in part to viral videos of its users experimenting with the products on social media. Under heavy pressure, the vape giant declared its support to raise the minimum purchase age for vaping products from 18 to 21 years old and contributed $30 million to research and prevention of underage use of its products.

"Our company's mission is to eliminate cigarettes and help the more than 1 billion smokers worldwide switch to a better alternative," says Juul Labs CEO Kevin Burns. "At the same time, we are committed to deterring young people, as well as adults who do not currently smoke, from using our products."

Brian King, who oversees the CDC's Office on Smoking and Health, called the growing youth e-cigarette usage statistics "concerning," adding that almost 60 percent of Americans who vape are also tobacco users. Despite industry marketing claims that e-cigarette products can help people stop smoking tobacco, King says evidence on vape products as healthy alternatives to traditional cigarettes is “not conclusive.” Vaping products have not been proven to help tobacco users quit, either.

“There are some people successfully quitting tobacco with e-cigarettes, but the majority of users are not,” King says. “We know e-cigarettes are safer than combustible cigarettes, but that doesn’t mean they’re safe. The science on the issue is still really mixed.”

Group focuses on bringing Super Bowl, Final Four to Las Vegas

In the end, a newly appointed committee charged with attracting major sporting events to Southern Nevada might need seed money most.

The 19-member Southern Nevada Sporting Event Committee gathered for the first time Friday to begin strategizing about the best ways to attract and finance bids for events like the Super Bowl, the NFL draft, and the NCAA’s Final Four and Frozen Four.

Rossi Ralenkotter, CEO of the Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority, noted that the goal of putting more “heads in beds” with high-profile sports events may be more challenging than it looks, because schedulers will have to avoid bringing in large crowds when big conventions are already in town. He also noted that preparing a competitive bid takes financial resources, so part of the solution could be determining a funding source.

Chaired by Paul Anderson, the committee includes six Nevada Resorts Association members and representatives of the Vegas Golden Knights and the Oakland Raiders.
Some members with venues already in place are already attracting events, including Boyd Gaming’s Orleans Arena and MGM Resorts International’s T-Mobile Arena, MGM Grand Garden and Mandalay Bay Events Center. By 2020, the new 65,000-seat Las Vegas stadium will be available.

This year the Las Vegas Motor Speedway joins the list of facilities hosting two annual NASCAR weekends.

The South Point has not only one of the best equestrian arenas in the region, but also one of the top bowling centers.

The committee is expected to meet four or five more times before delivering a report to Gov. Brian Sandoval and the Nevada Legislature by Dec. 31.

Members will likely discuss whether a separate sports commission should be formed and the best way for Southern Nevada’s sports venues to coordinate efforts to draw high-profile events to the city.

One of the reasons the committee plans to deliver a report by the end of the year is so that it could approach the Legislature for seed money to get started.

Committee members agreed that they want to hear background reports from the LVCVA and Las Vegas Events about how they bring events to Southern Nevada.

A familiar organization will handle staffing responsibilities for the new committee. Brian Gordon, a principal with Las Vegas-based Applied Analysis, has been contracted to provide staffing support for the group. Gordon’s associate, Jeremy Aguero, has a similar function with the Las Vegas Stadium Authority.

Gordon said Friday that he would soon set up a website for the committee to provide information for its public meetings.

The next committee meeting hasn’t been scheduled, but it is expected to be sometime from July 9-16.

Committee members

-Chairman Paul Anderson, executive director, Governor’s Office of Economic Development.

-Andy Abboud, senior vice president, Las Vegas Sands Corp.

-Marc Badain, president, Oakland Raiders.

Heller announces $12 million for Tahoe Restoration Act
Nevada Appeal
https://www.nevadaappeal.com/news/government/heller-announces-12-million-for-tahoe-restoration-act/

Sen. Dean Heller, R-Nev., on Friday announced there will be $12 million in federal funding for fire detection cameras and the battle against invasive species.

Heller said earlier this month he urged the Department of Agriculture and Forest Service to fund and support wildfire prevention and detection efforts. He said Friday there's $6 million in the budget to support innovative wildfire projects including modernizing aviation, radio and evacuation infrastructure. He said the act also contains $2 million specifically to support efforts such as AlertTahoe, a camera system to help detect widlfires in the basin much earlier than other methods.

It also calls on the forest service to work with UNR on wildfire risk mapping.

In addition, he said there's $6 million in the appropriations bill to combat invasive species at the lake.

Nevada DMV makes it easier to change gender on licenses

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A doctor's approval is no longer required to change the listed gender on a driver's license or identification card at Nevada's Department of Motor Vehicles, which is working on adding a new option for those who don't identify as male or female.

The previous policy added further costs and stress for trans and gender-nonconforming people, said Jane Heenan, Gender Justice Nevada's clinical director. Heenan recalls one person who spent money on multiple doctor visits because they could not find a physician who would sign off on the form.

"Driver licenses no longer require any kind of external permission or affirmation from medical professionals of any kind," Heenan said. "It reduces the complexities of this process, which are already very complex for people seeking to make these changes. Lifting that burden is significant."

An updated driver's license costs $9.25 and a new ID card is $8.25, according to the DMV.

The change is similar to a move by the Nevada Department of Health and Human Services, which changed its rules in 2016 to allow people to update the gender on their birth certificate using a self-declaration process, The Las Vegas Sun reported

Thursday.

"Requiring medical certification of gender identity is an outdated practice," said Kevin Malone, a DMV spokesman.

The DMV has not said when a third option for people who don't identify as male or female will be added.

"We are planning to add a nonbinary gender marker," Malone said. "However, this requires computer system programming and extensive testing with law enforcement and other stakeholders to ensure they receive the proper information."

Nevada prison officials struggle with doctors who refuse to treat inmates
Michelle Rindels
The Nevada Independent

Nevada prison officials say they sometimes have to take inmates through the back door or bring them before or after normal business hours for non-emergency medical care because off-site doctors are reluctant to treat them, if they treat them at all.

The hesitance to offer medical care to incarcerated people is one of the reasons cited by a new audit as to why prisons are sometimes resorting to more expensive out-of-network medical providers. Officials say there's not much they can do to compel in-network providers to see an inmate.

"There is no statutory requirement that they would be forced to provide services to everyone that subscribes to their network," said John Borrowman, the deputy director of support services at the Nevada Department of Corrections. "We have no leverage statutory or otherwise to force a provider to see an inmate."

The audit, presented Thursday at the Executive Branch Audit Committee that includes all Nevada constitutional officers, noted that the prisons resorted to out-of-network providers in 16 cases, or about 8 percent of the sample. One example was that the prisons are favoring a single out-of-network urologist in Southern Nevada because that doctor is willing to serve inmates on-site at the remote Ely prison and in conservation camps, so officials also use that physician for off-site appointments.

Borrowman noted that the networks the state buys into for medical care are also used by the general public and other state health groups, such as the Public Employee Benefits Program, and aren't exclusively designed for inmate populations. He said in a future request for proposals, there may be an effort to gauge how many providers in a network will take inmate patients.

Lt. Gov. Mark Hutchison said he hoped the state could use its leverage as a large payer of health services to negotiate

"We ought to have as a very basic requirement that these folks are willing to provide services for the inmates who need them so we don't have to keep going outside the network," he said.

The out-of-network services discussion is part of a larger conversation about how to manage the rising cost of health care in Nevada prisons. In 2017, the department spent $11.7 million on off-site medical expenses alone.

"This has been a concern of mine since I've gotten here," said NDOC Director James Dzurenda. "We have noticed a trend over the years of increasing medical costs and overnight hospital stays."

Auditors' suggestions for keeping costs under control included:

Finding a third party administrator who can do "targeted case management" and ensure inmates staying at a hospital are getting only necessary treatments at the best rates. Oregon has implemented this system and reported saving 20 percent on hospital costs over two years.
Reviewing prison medical payouts to ensure they match with the treatment that was authorized by the department's Utilization Review Committee, which reviews requests for off-site medical care and prioritizes them.

The Indy Explains: Everything you need to know about NV Energy's solar proposal
Riley Snyder and Daniel Rothberg
The Nevada Independent

What kind of event could bring together Nevada's governor, lieutenant governor, a congressman, two gubernatorial candidates and dozens of Assembly and state Senate members?

Far down the list of anyone's guess would likely be the unveiling of NV Energy's 2018 Integrated Resource Plan (IRP), a lengthy, data-heavy planning document the utility is required to submit to state regulators every three years detailing how it plans to meet future electric supply and demand.

But members of Nevada's political elite crowded the Springs Preserve last week to hear utility CEO Paul Caudill unveil details of the utility's 2018 IRP, including six proposed agreements to develop six new photovoltaic solar farms throughout the state and several major battery storage projects, doubling the state's renewable energy production by 2023.

The star-studded unveiling, which also includes a contract for potentially the cheapest solar production price in the country, was somewhat unusual for the IRP process, which typically resides in the realm of energy policy wonks and other denizens who follow the normally dry regulatory proceedings.

Unmentioned during the event but clearly present throughout the utility's IRP filing was the specter of Question 3, a proposed constitutional amendment that would end NV Energy's monopoly control of the state's electric market and require the state set up and switch to a competitive retail market by 2023.

NV Energy, which has donated millions of dollars to a PAC opposing the ballot question, states in the IRP application that the expansive planned move toward more renewable generation wouldn't go forward if the ballot measure passes, as the amendment would prohibit the utility from owning generating stations or entering into power purchase contracts with outside firms.

Here's what the IRP process entails, and what the future landscape of Nevada's energy policy could look like over the next three years.

What is an IRP?

Under state law, an electric utility is required to file a "plan to increase its supply of electricity or decrease the demands made on its system by its customers" to the state's Public Utilities Commission every three years, due on June 1.

That broad outline takes the form of a filing consisting of thousands of pages of applications, testimony and appendixes from the utility, a window into how it plans to manage electric demand and procurement of supply over a period stretching out over the next three decades.

From there, the PUC — which consists of three commissioners appointed by the governor — is required to hold hearings and take testimony from any interested parties on the application, and judge it based on several criteria including meeting reliability minimums, the state's renewable portfolio standard and acquiring fuel sources judged on flexibility, diversity and reliability.

After receiving the application, the PUC has 135 days to approve the utility's energy supply plan. This year, that's Oct. 14. The PUC then has 210 days to approve the rest of the plan, which for 2018 falls on Dec. 28, fewer than six weeks before the Legislature convenes.

State lawmakers in 2017 approved a number of changes to the IRP process, including requiring the utility for the first time to file it jointly for its entities serving both Northern and Southern Nevada service territories.

In its 2018 application, NV Energy laid out its broad goals for its future energy supply and demand goals thusly:

"The overarching goal of this 2018 Joint IRP is to meet growth and shrink our exposure to natural gas prices by delivering more low-cost renewable energy to our customers, accelerating our transition to a cleaner energy future with near-term investments by our (power purchase agreements) counterparties to support new Nevada-based renewable energy resources, shoring up our transmission infrastructure, and increasing or investment in energy efficiency programs."

Clean energy advocates see this latest IRP as a shift for the utility, which had approached solar and energy storage projects more conservatively in the past. They also see it as the utility adjusting to the times, a reflection of the dramatic drop in solar and battery storage prices over the past few years, even with the recent tariffs on solar panels imposed by the Trump administration.

One of NV Energy's proposed solar projects, Copper Mountain 5, would provide the cheapest solar energy in the country, according to Greentech Media, which is part of a research firm that tracks solar contract prices. That price could increase after the first year, but the other proposals are similarly low priced contracts, said Colin Smith, an analyst at Greentech Media Research.

"These projects are on par with some of the lowest [contract] prices to date," he said.

The IRP could put more pressure on clean energy groups, many of which have stayed neutral on the Energy Choice Initiative, to decide whether they support the ballot measure or the utility's continued regulated monopoly over the state's energy portfolio. Robert Johnston, a senior attorney at Western Resource Advocates, said there is some concern that moving to an energy choice market might slow down progress on building out large-scale solar projects.

Johnston noted that there would likely be several transition years before Nevada has an open energy market. There is concern among some environmental groups, he said, that during the transition period, there will be a halt in the construction of new solar projects.

“We think it will be a long and complicated process,” he said. “And the question is: Who is going to be building new renewable projects during this interval where you could really have a cloud of legal and regulatory uncertainty hovering over the state? … What we’ve seen in Nevada is that developers won’t break ground on these projects until they have a long-term buyer under contract who is committed to buying energy out of that project for the next 20 to 25 years.”

Under the proposed plan, the state’s energy supply plan would rise from 14 percent renewable in 2017 to 32 percent renewable in 2023.

Jon Wellinghoff, a policy advisor for the ballot measure and former chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission dismissed these concerns. He argued that companies might invest in clean energy even during the transition period before a restructured market goes into effect.

He laid out a few hypotheticals in which that might be possible. A large company that owns several stores in the state, Wal-Mart for instance, could enter into a contract for a solar facility to serve its stores under energy choice. Or, Wellinghoff said, a casino giant such as MGM Resorts International could invest in solar to aggregate and then offer to its large employee base.

If the market is opened, Wellinghoff said, he expects solar and battery storage to be the predominant types of energy procured because of how competitive their pricing has become.

The Question 3 factor

NV Energy says in the filing that it will only move forward with all of the proposed solar projects if Question 3 fails in November. If not, the company would be required to sell off all of their power purchase agreements and power plants as part of the dismantling of the monopoly structure.

If the ballot question passes, the utility proposed going forward with only one of the six proposed renewable energy projects — a 300 solar megawatt power purchase agreement with 8minuteenergy at the Eagle Shadow Mountain Solar Farm. Its IRP filing states that doing so will help the utility’s Northern Nevada operations meet the minimum Renewable Portfolio Standard goal.

The utility is also asking for the approval of four major transmission system upgrades to help interconnect the newly planned renewable energy projects, in total worth $22.9 million and that the utility could later recover through an adjustment in rates. If Question 3 is approved by the voters, the utility is asking the PUC to approve only a $550,000 transmission upgrade.

NV Energy executive Shawn Elicegui wrote in testimony filed with the IRP that because the utility would only need to meet the needs of customers through 2023 if the ballot measure passed, it wouldn’t make sense to enter into several long-term solar power contracts that it would then need to turn around and sell almost immediately.

“NV Energy’s focus will shift from long-term, centralizing planning that focuses on energy supply to short-term planning,” Elicegui wrote in the filing. “Adding six long-term obligations, as well as battery storage to a list of assets that needs to be transferred and which add to the obligations backed by the full faith and credit of the State is not necessary to meet customers’ needs through 2023.”

Does NV Energy really need the proposed solar?

The IRP requires the utility to prepare two analyses, one that addresses supply and another that addresses demand. But the two are interconnected. Growing energy demand has typically been used to justify the need for procuring more supply or building more transmission lines.

For utilities across the country, power sales have flattened or increased at smaller rates, even as economies have grown. Part of this has to do with improvements in energy efficiency.

The same trend is true for NV Energy. In its filing, it forecasts its peak load — the maximum amount of energy required by its customers — to grow at about 0.7 percent in Southern Nevada and dip slightly in Northern Nevada between 2019 and 2029. The forecast is low, the company said, because it factors in the expiration of contracts and an ambitious energy efficiency plan (the IRP proposes cutting sales by more than 1.1 percent through energy efficiency).

Wellinghoff said that even with Valmy plant — the utility’s lone remaining coal-fired plant — coming offline in the near future, the utilities commission might punt on NV Energy’s plan because the utility could satisfy its customers’ needs without new solar farms.

“We’ll be well into the transition to energy choice by [the time they need that energy],” he said.

NV Energy argues that even though adding solar will bring more generation to the grid, it will lower costs over time because the utility will be less reliant on purchasing natural gas. Right now, the utility must choose whether to purchase power on the Western wholesale market or purchase natural gas as fuel for those power plants. The six solar energy projects would give the utility more flexibility to avoid those costs, which could fluctuate in the future.

In the filing, NV Energy said the plan would “shrink customers’ exposure to natural gas prices.”

The utility’s plan also called for extending out the planned lifespan for several of its existing power plants until around 2030 largely to provide capacity support during times of peak electric demand, as most of them are in good operating condition.

One of the highlights cited by Caudill and others in the presentation of the IRP is moving up the retirement date for one of the units of the Valmy coal-burning generation plants, the utility’s lone remaining coal-fired facility in the state.

Long a target for environmental groups, the utility initially planned on operating the rural Humboldt County-based plants through their expected retirement date of 2025, to help meet peak demand during hot summer months and because the utility considered coal to be a more reliable resource than large-scale solar.

The IRP filed by the utility calls for one of the two generating plants (which it co-owns with Idaho Power) to be retired by 2021, with the other staying operational through 2025.

But retirement of the Valmy plant is conditioned on several factors, including:

the PUC approving all three Northern Nevada renewable energy projects and coming into operation before June 2022
no unexpected increases in area electric demand that would create a larger energy load
stable conditions in western energy markets
avoiding increases in transmission area load
the commission approving regulatory asset accounts, which would allow the utility to recover the cost of closing the plant early through changes in rates.
NV Energy said the conditions, like the approval of three new solar projects, are necessary to maintain a reliable grid in an area that serves Reno and mining customers near Elko.

Uncertainty over the retirement date is due to various unsolved factors in the utility’s electric supply mix over the next three years, Elicegui wrote in a filing submitted as part of the IRP, requiring a series of tests to ensure that retiring the plant early wouldn’t disrupt the utility’s ability to deliver electricity during peak demand times.

“While our current long-term reliability assessment indicates that we should be able to retire North Valmy Unit 1 in 2021 without compromising our fundamental directive – to safely and reliably deliver low-cost energy to customers – we need to confirm those findings with additional analysis as 2021 approaches,” Elicegui wrote in the filing.

‘Nobody likes’ family separation policy, Trump adviser says
https://www.reviewjournal.com/news/nation-and-world/nobody-likes-family-separation-policy-trump-adviser-says/

WASHINGTON — A top White House adviser on Sunday distanced the Trump administration from responsibility for separating migrant children from their parents at the U.S.-Mexico border, even though the administration put in place and could easily end a policy that has led to a spike in cases of split and distraught families.

President Donald Trump has tried to blame Democrats for a situation that has sparked a national debate over his hard-line approach to immigration enforcement.

“Nobody likes” breaking up families and “seeing babies ripped from their mothers’ arms,” said Kellyanne Conway, a counselor to the president.

Nearly 2,000 children were separated from their families over a six-week period in April and May after Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced a new “zero-tolerance” policy that refers all cases of illegal entry for criminal prosecution. U.S. protocol prohibits detaining children with their parents because the children are not charged with a crime and the parents are.

The administration wants to send a message, said a Republican critic of the policy, “that if you cross the border with children, your children are going to be ripped away from you. That’s traumatizing to the children who are innocent victims, and it is contrary to our values in this country.”

Maine Sen. Susan Collins added that “we know from years of experience that we need to fix our immigration laws and that using children is not the answer.”

Trump plans to meet with House Republicans on Tuesday to discuss pending immigration legislation amid an election-season debate over an issue that helped vault the New York real estate mogul into the Oval Office in 2016. The House is expected to vote this week on a bill pushed by conservatives that may not have enough support to pass, and a compromise measure that the White House has endorsed.

In other developments surrounding the immigration controversy:

— A Republican congressman from Texas who toured a tent-like shelter for hundreds of minors who entered the country illegally said Saturday the facility is a byproduct of a flawed immigration strategy. U.S. Rep. Will Hurd said the shelter near the Tornillo port of entry in far West Texas will house about 360 boys who are 16 and 17. The teens began arriving Friday, the same day Hurd toured the shelter, he said, noting that they're being moved from other shelters to make way for younger immigrant children taken into custody at the border.

— The intensifying the divide among Republicans over immigration policy is fueling concerns that a voter backlash could cost the GOP control of the House in November. To many conservatives, the compromise immigration proposal released this past week by House Speaker Paul Ryan, R-Wis., is little more than "amnesty." One tea party group described the Republican plan as "the final betrayal." Fox Business host Lou Dobbs, who is close to President Donald Trump, tweeted Friday that Ryan is "trying to open our borders even more and give illegal immigrants the biggest amnesty in American history."

— Scuttling immigration legislation could turn off independent voters, an especially important bloc for House Republicans competing in dozens of districts that Democrat Hillary Clinton won in the 2016 presidential election. "The GOP's in a tough spot," said Republican pollster Frank Luntz. "The hardcore Trump voter has a different point of view than the ever-important independent voter, and there doesn't seem to be a middle ground."

Conway rejected the idea that Trump was using the kids as leverage to force Democrats to negotiate on immigration and his long-promised border wall, even after Trump tweeted Saturday: "Democrats can fix their forced family breakup at the Border by working with Republicans on new legislation, for a change!"

To Rep. Adam Schiff, D-Calif., the administration is "using the grief, the tears, the pain of these kids as mortar to build our wall. And it's an effort to extort a bill to their liking in the Congress."

Schiff said the practice was "deeply unethical" and that Republicans' refusal to criticize Trump represented a "sad degeneration" of the GOP, which he said had become "the party of lies."

Conway, however, put the onus on Democrats, saying if there are serious about overhauling the system, "they'll come together again and try to close these loopholes and get real immigration reform."

Asked whether the president was willing to end the policy, she said: "The president is ready to get meaningful immigration reform across the board."

More directly, Rep. Ben Ray Lujon, D-N.M., said Trump "could pick up the phone and stop it today."

The House proposals face broad opposition from Democrats, and even if a bill does pass, the closely divided Senate seems unlikely to go along.

Rep. Michael McCaul, who helped write the conservative version with Rep. Bob Goodlatte, said he had spoken to Trump on Saturday and that the president "is fully committed to both of these bills. He's put the full weight of his office behind it."

McCaul, R-Texas, said both bills satisfy Trump's main objectives.

"Without him coming to Capitol Hill on Tuesday, I don't think we'd have that sort of maximum pressure, if you will, to get us across the goal line, and I anticipate on Tuesday that he's going to be the leader he is and we're going to get something passed out of the House," said McCaul, R-Texas.

Trump's former chief strategist said Republicans would face steep consequences for pushing the compromise bill because it provides a path to citizenship for young "Dreamer" immigrants brought to the country illegally as children. Steve Bannon argued that effort risked alienating Trump's political base and contributing to election losses in November, when Republicans hope to preserve their congressional majorities.

"I strongly recommend that we just wait until 2019, right, to address this," he said, while defending the administration's practice of separating parents from children as an example of Trump making good on a key campaign promise.

"We ran on a policy, very simply, stop mass illegal immigration and limit legal immigration, get our sovereignty back, and to help our workers, OK? And so he went to a zero tolerance policy," Bannon said. "Zero tolerance, it's a crime to come across illegally, and children get separated,."

Rep. Beto O'Rourke, D-Texas, said he was working on legislation that would end the practice of family separation.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Speaking from Texas, where he was leading a march to a town where a new tent structure for children recently opened, O'Rourke said "we can do the right thing by this country and for those kids, and not do it at the price of a 2,000-mile, 30-foot-high, $30 billion wall, not doing it at the price of deporting people who are seeking asylum, deporting people in some cases back to certain death, not doing it at the cost of ending family migration, which is the story of this country."

The situation now is "inhumane" and "un-American," he said. The blame, he said, rests "on all of us, not just the Trump administration."

Conway and Schiff appeared on NBC's "Meet the Press," Collins was on CBS' "Face the Nation," Lujan and Bannon spoke on ABC's "This Week," O'Rourke was interviewed on CNN's "State of the Union" and McCaul was on Fox's "Sunday Morning Futures."

(U) MALAYSIA: A total of 15 people of various nationalities were detained following a police swoop in five Malaysian states, a Malaysian police official announced Friday. The 15 suspects - six Malaysians, two Filipinos with permanent resident status, a married couple from a Northern African country, a Bangladeshi and four Filipinos - were detained in Kuala Lumpur, Selangor, Johor, Kelantan and Sabah between March 27 and May 9. The first arrest was made on a 33-year-old man, who was deported from Turkey on March 27 and was planning to seek safe passage into Syria. The second arrest was of a married couple where both suspects were blacklisted by their country and put on the wanted list for involvement in the Islamic State (ISIS) terror group. The third arrest involved a 41-year-old Bangladeshi man believed to be involved in smuggling weapons for terrorists groups and is listed on the Interpol Red Notice, according to police. (Source:The Straits Times)

(U) CANADA: Two Edmonton brothers who died in 2014 fighting for ISIS in Syria spent years grooming their younger cousins in the United States for violent jihad, according to documents filed in a U.S. court. Months before they left Canada, Hamse and Hersi Kariye and some friends practiced for guerilla warfare by shooting an illegal AK-47 at an undisclosed location in the Alberta woods. Weeks after the brothers flew overseas to fight, their first cousin allegedly robbed a jewelry store in the Edmonton area of Mill Woods to help raise money for their circle of foreign fighters, the documents say. (Source:CBC)

Jong Un, a cybersecurity firm says. An executive with FireEye said Thursday that the firm has continued to observe North Korean-linked hackers targeting financial institutions in order to siphon off money for the regime, which has been increasingly strapped for cash as a result of international sanctions. “We’ve seen a suspected North Korean threat actor continue offensive operations against financial institutions,” said Charles Carmakal, vice president for Mandiant Consulting, a subsidiary of FireEye that provides cyber incident response to organizations across the globe. He indicated hackers are primarily targeting banking institutions in Latin America and Asia. (Source:The Hill)

(U//FOUO) ISIS-Related Attacks in US and Europe Mostly Conducted by Homegrown Extremists; No Syrian Refugee Involvement in US Attacks

(U//FOUO) We assess that there have been 73 at least partially ISIS-related attacks committed by 101 separate attackers in the Homeland and Europe since 2015; most attackers were citizens of the country in which the attack took place, and only two attackers—both in Europe—were Syrian. Of the 23 attackers in the Homeland, approximately 70 percent were US citizens from birth, and the other 30 percent were naturalized US citizens or lawful permanent residents (LPRs); although two of these individuals entered the US as refugees, neither was from Syria. Approximately 70 percent of the naturalized citizens and LPRs resided in the US for at least six years before committing an attack, suggesting that they became radicalized after arriving in the US. Of the 53 attacks in Europe, approximately 70 percent of the attackers held European citizenship or residency status, and 27 percent were migrants.

Outgoing ICE Director Says Separating Parents And Children Is 'sad' But Part Of The Job

PBS NewsHour, May 31, 2018

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Migrants who enter the U.S. illegally shouldn't be surprised by recent reports of children being separated from their parents at the border — they should expect it, a top immigration official said Thursday.

Thomas Homan, the acting director of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, told the PBS NewsHour's Judy Woodruff that migrants crossing the border "don't understand" U.S. immigration laws.

"Apparently these people don't understand what exactly is happening," said Homan, who is retiring next month.

Homan said it's "unfortunate, it's sad" when children in the U.S. are separated from parents charged with crimes, including for entering the country illegally. But he noted there were logistical challenges in keeping families in those situations together. "A child can't go to U.S. Marshals' custody with the parents being charged with the crime of entering the country illegally," he said.

Though federal officials have not provided specific figures on family separations at the border, more than 700 migrant children have been taken from adults claiming to be their parents since last October — including 100 children under age 4, according to a recent New York Times data review.

In the NewsHour interview, Homan urged eligible migrants to seek asylum instead of attempting to entry the country illegally.

"If they really are escaping fear and persecution, looking for relief in this country, why not come to a port of entry" and file for asylum, Homan said. In that scenario, he added, "you're not taking your child across the river, you're not taking them through a canyon, where that child could be hurt."

Other highlights from the conversation:

Homan declined to address speculation that Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen might resign amid a feud with President Donald Trump: "She has a tough job," Homan said of Nielsen. "She's a good secretary, she's doing a good job, and I support her 100 percent."

On recent studies suggesting illegal immigration does not increase violent crime rates:

"I get asked all the time: 'Do illegal aliens commit more crimes than U.S. citizens?'" Homan said. "That's not the question. The question is, 'Every crime committed by an illegal alien is a preventable crime. They should not have happened if they should not have been here.'"

Complaint Targets Separation Of Immigrant Families At Border

By Nomaan Merchant

Philly (PA), May 31, 2018

Immigration advocates accused the U.S. government on Thursday of "effectively disappearing" hundreds of children in a complaint over the widespread separation of families crossing the southern border.

The groups filed a petition with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, which investigates alleged human rights abuses in North and South America.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced May 7 that the Justice Department would begin to prosecute every person accused of illegally crossing the U.S.-Mexico border. Hundreds of families have been separated since then. An official from U.S. Customs and Border Protection recently told Congress that 638 adults had been referred for prosecution between May 6 and May 19, bringing with them 658 children.

By comparison, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, which shelters unaccompanied immigrant children, said in April that it had approximately 700 cases since October in which the parents were believed to be in federal custody.

Immigration lawyers and advocates say parents are being held in jail without knowing where their children are.

Efren Olivares, a lawyer with the Texas Civil Rights Project, which filed the complaint, said the U.S. government's separating of families is "clearly in violation of international law."

"No developed democracy in the world separates children and parents just because they came into the country," he said.

The Women's Refugee Commission and the University of Texas School of Law's immigration clinic also joined the complaint.

In one case outlined in the complaint, Border Patrol agents in South Texas arrested a 40-year-old man from Guatemala with his 12-year-old son. The complaint says the man was placed in a detention cell while his son was kept outside. By the time the man was taken out of the cell, the boy was gone.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A lawyer working on the man's case called the government hotline for locating immigrant children in custody. According to the complaint, the boy's information was not in the system. The lawyer and the father don't know where he is.

Advocates say they hope the complaint will lead the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to ask the government for more information about how it's keeping track of families after separating them. The American Civil Liberties Union has also filed a federal lawsuit challenging family separation.

U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement said in a statement that it is "committed to connecting these family members as quickly as possible after separation," and that it will work with the Department of Health and Human Services to "set up regular communication and removal coordination, if necessary."

Neither Health and Human Services nor Customs and Border Protection responded to requests for comment.

Separated At The Border: A Mother's Story

By Tom Llamas, Lauren Pearle, Kendall Heath James Scholz

ABC News, May 31, 2018

Walking along the U.S.-Mexico border in El Paso, Texas, an undocumented immigrant from Brazil named Jocelyn was uncomfortable even glancing at the border patrol vehicle on the other side of the security fence. She was scared.

"It's a terrible thing, the experience we've had," Jocelyn, who asked that her last name not be used, said in Spanish.

That experience was seeing her son, James, taken from her in August when she was apprehended for crossing illegally into the United States, hoping to seek asylum.

"He didn't know where he was going, so he was looking at me like, 'Mom, help me, because I don't know where they're taking me,' Jocelyn, 31, said Wednesday, beginning to sob uncontrollably. "I didn't know what was going to happen to us. I spent the night crying because I wanted James to be protected, and I didn't know what was going to happen to him."

The native Portuguese speaker, who learned Spanish while in U.S. federal custody for about a month and then a shelter, hasn't seen her son in more than eight months. He's more than 1,000 miles away in Chicago, inside a center that's under the watch of the U.S. Office of Refugee Resettlement. Jocelyn speaks to him only once a week, she said, and recently has grown even more worried because his case officer informed her they are medicating him to help his nerves. She's worried about the trauma this is causing the 14-year-old.

So are the people trying to help her.

"The American Academy of Pediatrics has denounced this," ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt, who is representing Jocelyn to help reunite her with James, said.

"They say these children will never feel safe in their lives. They will always feel vulnerable."

Jocelyn, on behalf of herself and hundreds of others, is suing several federal agencies, claiming it's illegal for the government to keep families separated for no legitimate reason after a fit parent has served a sentence – three days to two weeks – for the misdemeanor of illegally crossing the border. Jocelyn's case, he said, is only the tip of the iceberg.

"Literally 3-, 4-, 5-year-olds screaming, 'Please don't take me away from my mommy,' and being ripped away," Gelernt said.

Gelernt said the separating of undocumented families has hit a fever pitch under the Trump administration's "zero-tolerance policy."

In a motion filed last month to dismiss the case, which is pending, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) argued that such cases "serve the legitimate purpose of allowing the government to carry out its immigration and criminal enforcement role" and that "plaintiffs have not provided any basis to conclude that there is a due process right to family unity that prohibited the separation."

From the government's point of view, "If you don't want your child separated, then don't bring them across the border illegally. It's not our fault someone does that," U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions said earlier this month.

Meanwhile, ABC News cameras were also rolling Wednesday as a group of immigrant families was released from ICE custody into a halfway house in El Paso, Texas. Many still looked shaken by fear, both children and parents. They were greeted by Ruben Garcia, who has been running the shelter for more than 40 years.

"For the past 12 to 18 months, we're seeing something we have never seen before," Garcia said. “As I like to say, it’s like enforcement on steroids with the things that are being done here on the border.”

He has taken in families who have been separated and petitioned the government to let them know he has room for the children who have been taken from parents, Garcia said. But, he added, the process drags along and some parents spend months without seeing their children.

“It’s inhumane, immoral,” Garcia said. “We need to ask ourselves, ‘Who do we want to be?’ Things that we, as a countryman take pride in; I can’t see how we as a country could take pride in separating children.”

Though she’s in a court battle to be reunited with her son, Jocelyn still hopes to be granted asylum after fleeing her native Brazil because of domestic violence.

Asked whether she has second thoughts about crossing that border now that she hasn’t seen her son for so long, she said, “This is a hard question to answer. If you’re on that side, it’s horrible. And if you’re on this side, it’s also horrible.”

She also had this message for President Donald Trump:

“Please help us. We are here looking for protection.”

Advocates File Human Rights Complaint To Stop Family Separations At Border

By Lomi Kriel

Houston Chronicle, May 31, 2018

The Texas Civil Rights Project and other national advocacy groups filed a complaint with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights Thursday, arguing the U.S. government’s practice of separating immigrant parents and children at the southern border violates international protocols.

The situation is critical and requires an emergency intervention, the complaint argued, particularly in the Rio Grande Valley, where about 60 percent of all immigrant families and children crossing the border were apprehended in April.

“No developed democracy in the world systematically separates children from their parents,” said Zenén Jaimes Pérez, a spokesman for the Texas non-profit. “It’s not just cruel. It’s a violation of international agreements and conventions.”

Hundreds of families, many asylum seekers from Central America, have been separated as a result of the White House’s new “zero tolerance” policy of prosecuting every border crosser, even those accompanied by minor children, for illegal entry. Parents serve short prison sentences for what is usually a misdemeanor crime before going to immigrant detention facilities, while their children are placed in federal foster care.

Advocates say they struggle to find each other later.

The complaint comes as concerns about the treatment of immigrant children in government custody has reached a fevered pitch, with national rallies Thursday, fueled in part by a viral, though not entirely accurate, social media campaign.

Senior White House officials doubled down on the separations this week, seeking to push blame for the practice to Democrats who they said they would not support undoing federal “loop holes” that they argue encourage migrant families to come here.

The complaint contends that separating families violates international protocols including the rights of parents, children, families and asylum seekers.

“Since the United States did not and does not inform the parents of their children’s whereabouts, the United States is effectively disappearing hundreds of minor children,” it said. “In practice, the State has taken the children, absconded them, and it is accountable to nobody.”

The U.S. State Department declined to comment on pending litigation.

The commission, based in Costa Rica, is an arm of the Organization of the American States, which includes all 35 states of the Americas except for Cuba. The complaint asked the commission to order the U.S. to immediately reunite the five plaintiffs named in the complaint and cease the “systematic practice” of separating families at the border.

The commission meets Friday and is expected to ask the U.S. government to answer questions about the complaint before making a decision. The body can only make requests, not enforce action, as the U.S. has not ratified the relevant treaty, the Inter-American Convention of Human Rights.

Latin American foreign policy at the Brookings Institution, a Washington think tank.

The U.S. in the past generally cooperated with and supported the commission, but it has no legal obligation to acccept its rulings.

"We have an administration that is very hostile to human rights, international institutions, and international law," Piccone said. "It will be an interesting test case."

The process could, however, reveal more information about a practice that has been largely opaque as the government has provided little information.

Prosecuted parents go quickly from Justice Department custody to Homeland Security detention centers and are often speedily deported. Their children, who are not allowed in federal prison, are deemed "unaccompanied" and placed in shelters run by Health and Human Services, with little cross-agency communications about their whereabouts.

As the government has ramped up prosecutions of parents in recent weeks, those facilities are at 95 percent capacity and the Trump administration has looked into housing children on military bases, including in Texas.

"There is no process in place for the children to communicate with their parents, or for them to know where their parents are," the complaint said. "There is likewise no process in place to guarantee that removed children will be promptly and safely reunited with their parents."

Sometimes they are not. In one case, a Guatemalan father was separated from his 18-month-old toddler last summer and deported without him three months later. They were only reunified in December.

The complaint names four Guatemalan parents and one Salvadoran father but is expected to be expanded in coming weeks. It includes distressing details about what little information is provided to parents on their children.

One 29-year-old Guatemalan mother fled her indigenous village after she said her husband was brutally killed. Though she sought help, she said her government could not protect her. In May she and her 11-year-old son crossed the U.S. border illegally and Border Patrol agents took away the boy. They said she was not allowed to see him, but did not tell her why.

"She was visibly distraught, and extremely nervous about the uncertainty of what might happen to her son," the complaint said. "She broke down crying several times."

Another Guatemalan father was placed in a cell while his 12-year-old son was told to stay outside. When he came out, "his son was gone. He was not even able to say goodbye," the complaint said. Agents did not say why they were separated, where his son was sent, or when they may be reunited.

A Guatemalan mother with three children, aged 7, 8, and 11, was only told she would "see them again at some point."

Lawyers argue the practice violates the rights of asylum seekers, families and minors.

"Children do not know where their parents are, or if and when they will see them again," the complaint said. "This is a form of torture as it punishes the children for an act committed by their parents."

It is the latest legal action taken against Trump's administration for what many see as a hardline policy that in the last week has received mounting pushback as stories of separated families emerged.

The American Civil Liberties Union filed a lawsuit to block such family separations in February and is expecting a federal judge's ruling soon. The public defender's office for the Western District of Texas in a separate suit argued the practice violates parents' rights to due process as they plead guilty to the crime to reunite with their children.

The growing legal reaction suggests the policy could meet the fate of some of the administration's other controversial immigration initiatives. Federal judges blocked the so-called travel ban shortly after it was announced last year and it has been largely tangled up in legal wrangling ever since.

Christian Science Monitor, May 31, 2018

How do you lose 1,475 immigrant children? That's what many have been wondering since a social media firestorm erupted over the weekend. But key details have been conflated. Last fall, the government tried to follow up with 7,635 minors who had arrived in the United States unaccompanied and had been placed with sponsors; of those, it was unable to reach 1,475, possibly because their sponsors are themselves here illegally and afraid to respond. Separately, under President Trump's "zero-tolerance" policy on illegal immigration, this month his administration began criminally prosecuting all adults caught crossing the border unauthorized, including those seeking asylum, which has resulted in effectively separating all parents from their children. Previously, most families were allowed to remain intact pending resolution of their case. While Mr. Trump has not changed the law, his administration is using all the levers available to it – levers that many see as unduly harsh and possibly in contravention of international law. Some see a middle way, however, that embraces both security and humanity. "We can enforce our laws and treat human beings the right way, and those two things don't have to be mutually exclusive," says Kristie De Peña, director of immigration and senior counsel with the libertarian Niskanen Center in Washington.

A social media firestorm about 1,475 children "lost" by the federal government, together with a new policy that results in separating unauthorized immigrant children from their parents, has heightened scrutiny of President Trump's zero-tolerance approach to illegal immigration.

Amid recent reports – some examining Obama-era enforcement – of children being beaten by government agents and in some cases released to human traffickers and forced to work in miserable conditions, ramped-up detention of minors has amplified human rights concerns.

Mr. Trump, who had already pushed for more stringent border enforcement in his first year in office, is cracking down in what many characterize as an unprecedented way. Supporters say that approach is necessary to stem illegal immigration, which compromises US border security and costs taxpayers as much as $116 billion per year. But critics say Trump's policy is counterproductive and unduly harsh, and contravenes international law governing asylum seekers.

"The Trump administration is looking at the immigration law and saying: What are all of the enforcement levers that we're allowed to use under the current law, and let's use all of them," says Theresa Cardinal Brown, who worked with former Secretary of Homeland Security Michael Chertoff under the Bush administration and is now director of immigration and cross-border policy for the Bipartisan Policy Center in Washington. She compares the approach to a get-tough-on-crime mayor who goes after graffiti artists as well as violent criminals, and says Trump's policy may not have the desired effect of deterring would-be migrants.

But she and others see a middle way forward that embraces both security and humanity.

"We can enforce our laws and treat human beings the right way, and those two things don't have to be mutually exclusive," says Kristie De Peña, director of immigration and senior counsel with the libertarian Niskanen Center in Washington.The firestorm, explained

Many have accused the government of separating 1,475 minors from their parents and then losing track of them. But that conflates two separate developments.

Last fall, the government tried to check in on the well-being of 7,635 minors who had arrived in the US unaccompanied and had been placed with sponsors; of those, it was unable to reach 1,475.

"If you call a friend and they don't answer the phone, you don't assume that they've been kidnapped," said Steven Wagner of the Department of Health and Human Services in a telephone briefing with reporters May 29.

He said the lack of response was at least in part because some sponsors are unauthorized immigrants and afraid to answer calls from a federal official, something Obama administration official Cecilia Munoz also acknowledged.

The more recent development is a Trump administration policy enacted May 6. Under this policy, 100 percent of adults caught entering the country in violation of US law – even those seeking asylum – are referred to the Department of Justice for criminal prosecution, rather than allowing for prosecutorial discretion.

These individuals are then put in a facility run by the US Marshals Service or the Bureau of Prisons, which has resulted in effectively separating all parents from their children, since children are generally not criminally prosecuted and thus are not detained in the same facilities. This marks a stark departure from the previous practice of allowing most families, or at least mothers and children, to stay together while their cases were pending.

Critics have accused the government of taking custody of children without adequately ensuring their safety and well-being. A new ACLU report, based on government documents from 2009 to 2014, during which there was a spike in unaccompanied minors crossing illegally, depicts cruel treatment by Customs and Border Patrol officials – including running over a child with a vehicle, threatening sexual abuse, and calling minors "dogs" and other derogatory terms. There are also concerns about the process by which unaccompanied minors are placed with sponsors, after a PBS "Frontline" documentary detailed the plight of Guatemalan minors forced to work in awful conditions at an Ohio chicken farm. On Friday, immigrant advocates are planning events in more than 25 cities to protest the separation policy.

Even before the new policy was implemented, the nonpartisan group Human Rights First issued a report asserting that the Trump administration was violating US and international law in its treatment of asylum seekers. It cited the United Nations 1951 Refugee Convention, which stipulates that, "subject to specific exceptions, refugees should not be penalized for their illegal entry or stay. This recognizes that the seeking of asylum can require refugees to breach immigration rules." The original convention was limited in geographic scope, but the US is a signatory to a 1967 protocol that removed those geographic limitations.Why so many families are crossing illegally

Many of the migrants crossing illegally into the United States are coming from El Salvador and Honduras – ranked second and fourth in the world for violent deaths per capita, above countries at war like Afghanistan and Iraq.

Osman, a carpenter from Honduras, never intended to enter the US illegally. Sometimes his family didn't have much to eat, he says, and he thought about the US. But the dangers and risks associated with an illegal border crossing weren't for him. Instead he tried to gain a more solid economic footing, putting everything he owned into a small carpentry business in his town.

But one day in November 2016, when he was almost ready to open his shop, three men appeared at his business, robbed him, and threatened to kill him and his family.

They asked for 30,000 lempiras ($1,255) and said that he had 24 hours to produce it. "I told them I didn't have that money. They said they didn't care, that they were going to go after me."

He fled to his aunt's house on his motorbike, taking his wife and young son. She helped them organize illegal passage to the US for the following day. The journey took 25 days, and he had to pay $6,000 – for him and his son – with money his extended family pooled together. They didn't have enough for his wife, so she stayed behind.

"I was afraid. I had never done anything like this before. But I was more afraid of what would happen to me if I stayed home," he says.

He made his way to Massachusetts, where his cousins live, and applied for asylum in a drawn-out process that he says he barely understands. His next meeting isn't until December 2019, a reflection of America's backlogged immigration system. There are more than 650,000 pending cases, with an average wait time of nearly two years, according to a database maintained by Syracuse University in New York.

In the meantime, Osman's lawyer has been unable to get him permission to work in the US legally, so he is working under the table as a carpenter. He was able to bring his wife here in November 2017, his son is happy, and he says he feels safe and grateful to the US.

But Osman says the new policy to separate children from their parents could prevent many from the safety he was able to find in the US system. "I left to save my son. If you take my son away from me, you are taking a part of me away. It is the worst thing they can do."The case for legal entry

Kim Veinberg, a mother who lives just outside of New York in the New Jersey suburbs, says it's heartbreaking to hear stories of parents being separated from their children.

But as someone who spent the better part of a decade and considerable funds chugging her way through the US immigration system to help her Russian husband secure US citizenship, she is strongly in favor of requiring would-be immigrants to go through legal channels.

"When it comes down to looking at a family, I don't know how hard-nosed I could be," says Ms. Veinberg, who supports the Trump administration's policy. "But when you ask me in theory what I think – their parents created the situation by not doing it the right way."

"There has to be a limit at which you say – my heart is breaking for you, but this just isn't working for our country," she adds, citing the economic burden on America.Possible solutions

Tom Jawetz, vice president of immigration policy at the progressive Center for American Progress, says taking children into government custody, and prosecuting, detaining, and deporting their parents, is not a cost-savings approach.

There are now more than 10,000 unaccompanied minors in government custody at a cost to taxpayers of $1 billion per year, according to Mr. Wagner from HHS – far more than the system was designed to hold. The Trump administration blames the border crisis on "loopholes" that Democrats refuse to close, but critics say those provisions were made to protect minors and should be kept in place. Mr. Jawetz says the Trump administration is ignoring a genuine refugee crisis and he and others are concerned that the government will make it more difficult for asylum seekers and unaccompanied minors to find protection in the US.

"None of this is solutions-based," says Jawetz. "It's all counterproductive and being driven not by someone who has serious policy solutions in mind but is trying to drive an ideological agenda about what American should look like now and in the future."

A major problem is the backlog in the immigration system, says Ms. Brown of the Bipartisan Policy Center.

"When the process is working efficiently, then we are able to treat people with respect and dignity … but we're still maintaining the integrity of our immigration system," says Brown, who previously worked with US Customs and Border Protection. "What happened is we didn't plan for the numbers that we saw."

Ms. De Peña, who recently visited and interviewed asylum seekers in a detention facility in Texas, says that one solution is educating potential migrants about the asylum process. Most of those she interviewed said the reason they crossed over illegally is because they were intercepted by someone in Mexico who told them they needed to pay for safe passage or else they were going to be shot by a border agent. "They had no idea or understanding what a port of entry is," she says.

Additionally, she says, restoring prosecutorial discretion would help those with the most information make expedient decisions rather than following an order from Washington to refer every individual for criminal prosecution.

"I know the Attorney General [Jeff Sessions] is very well acquainted with these laws. I would bet a lot of money that he knows exactly what he's doing," says De Peña. "As a rule of law proponent, he should be able to figure out a way to do this better."

Trump's 'Forced Separation' Of Migrant Families Is Both Illegal And Immoral

By Jay Michaelson

Daily Beast, May 31, 2018

Details of the Trump administration's new "forced separation" policy of separating migrant children from their parents have horrified observers of all political persuasions. Though the policy is only two weeks old, over 650 children have been torn from their families since it began.

There have been harrowing stories of infants taken from their parents' arms, of refugees who fled gang violence in Central America accused of being gang members themselves and having their children sent thousands of miles away to detention facilities.

But is the policy justified?

Attorney General Jeff Sessions said in announcing the policy that "a crisis has erupted at our Southwest Border that necessitates an escalated effort to prosecute those who choose to illegally cross our border." He continued, "To those who wish to challenge the Trump Administration's commitment to public safety, national security, and the rule of law, I warn you: illegally entering this country will not be rewarded."

There's actually a lot in there, but it boils down to four claims: public safety, national security, the rule of law, and the need for a deterrent against further immigration. The trouble is, none of those claims hold water legally or ethically.

Legally speaking, the Constitution strictly forbids separating parents and children for any reason save one: if the parent is a threat to the child. This right is grounded in Fifth Amendment due process, as courts (and in particular conservative judges) have consistently held. As the Supreme Court held in 2000, "the interest of parents in the care, custody, and control of their children… is perhaps the oldest of the fundamental liberty interests recognized by this Court."

That fundamental right is now the basis of a class action lawsuit filed by the ACLU. "Due process protects family unity," Lee Gelernt, the lead lawyer of the case, told The Daily Beast. "The only reason compelling enough [to tear apart the family] is if there is a danger to the child."

Obviously, no such danger exists, or has even been alleged, in the hundreds of cases of forced separation that have taken place over the last month. That's not the point of the separation. The point, as Sessions said and as the government has said in the ACLU case, is strict enforcement of immigration law.

But that purpose does not justify separating children from their parents.

"Our lawsuit doesn't prevent the government from detaining migrant families—just from separating them," Gelernt noted. "You can hold them in a family detention center."

Indeed, the forced separation policy flouts numerous international legal norms. For example, Article 9 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, requires that "the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration" in all administrative actions. Article 9 specifies that "States… shall ensure that a child shall not be separated from his or her parents against their will, except when competent authorities subject to judicial review determine, in accordance with applicable law and procedures, that such separation is necessary for the best interests of the child."

Now, as it happens, the United States is, literally, the only country in the world that has not joined that convention. It requires Senate ratification, and some conservative senators believe it would trample on U.S. sovereignty and, by granting rights to children, interfere with familial rights. But as a legal norm, the "best interests of the child" generally and opposition to forced separation specifically has long been encoded in American legislation, administrative law, and government policy.

The ethical failings of forced separation, though, are even more pronounced.

First, there is absolutely no evidence that this policy change will affect the calculus of a mother fleeing gang violence in Guatemala. But even if it would, the policy punishes children in order to change parental behavior. That is immoral. You don't punish an innocent person to try to get a guilty person to do something.

And let's be honest: Among Trump's supporters, the real reason isn't deterrence—it's punishment. These illegals are breaking the law, after all. If they didn't want this to happen, they shouldn't have come here in the first place.

"If you're smuggling a child, then we're going to prosecute you, and that child will be separated from you, probably, as required by law. If you don't want your child separated, then don't bring them across the border illegally. It's not our fault that somebody does that." That's Sessions again, this time speaking on May 7, when the forced separation policy was put into place.

If it's not "our fault," is it the child's fault?

That, too, is immoral. It's making the sins of the father the sins of the son, in Biblical language. No 3-year-old is morally responsible for the actions of their mother or father. And yet the child is punished for them.

Children aren't the property of their parents; this isn't like taking away someone's house or car. Children are people, with their own rights—limited, of course, but still there—and status as moral subjects. Punishing them for someone else's misdeeds—setting aside the question of whether fleeing gang rape and murder is a misdeed—is immoral.

And make no mistake: the children are the ones who are punished the most. Numerous studies have shown the negative consequences—increases in anxiety, depression, aggression, and cognitive impairment—of separating young children from their parents, even for as little as two weeks.

The separations we're talking about can last for months—longer, if the parents are deported.

"Children are people, with their own rights—limited, of course, but still there—and status as moral subjects."

And that's not even taking into account the systematic abuse of migrant children, as revealed in an unrelated ACLU investigation of abuse in Customs & Border Protection (CBP) custody from 2008 to 2014. That investigation uncovered abuses including "denial of medical care; verbal threats; physical and sexual abuse; and inhumane detention conditions."

(Incidentally, these abuses do not include the "losing" of 1,475 migrant children who had been placed with sponsors. Many factors may account for the children being lost to the system—some may have gone to live with relatives who are themselves undocumented, some may be with sponsors who simply didn't respond to survey questions—and the last thing immigration advocates want is some government police force hunting down those kids.)

Of course, when a person commits a crime, they may be sent off to jail, even if that means separating them from their children. But that's not like taking a child away from their parents when the child has nowhere else to go. And let's remember, these "forced separations" happen at the beginning, not the end, of a long process.

The ACLU lawsuit tells the stories of several asylees who were deemed to be totally justified (they faced a "credible threat" of violence in their home countries) and who still had their children taken away. In other words, everyone was innocent, including the parents. But the children were separated at the very beginning, and it took months for the legal process to unfold. Many such processes take years.

As a parent myself, I cannot understand how social conservatives interested in "family values" can stomach the moral evil of "forced separation." To be more honest, I find myself filled with rage. To think that there is any good reason of any kind for ripping an 18-month-old out of the arms of her mother—I find that to be pure evil.

I think we will be judged by future generations on the basis of how immigrants—"illegal" as well as legal—are being treated right now. As a nation, we are failing morally, just as we did with Japanese internment camps, or Bull Connor's dogs attacking civil rights workers, or Ronald Reagan ignoring the AIDS crisis. And just as we look back with contempt on those past moral failings, so too our children will look back on "forced separation" and wonder what the hell we were thinking. We will deserve their harshest condemnation.

Trump's 'zero Tolerance' Bluff On The Border Will Hurt Security, Not Help

By Alan Bersin, Nate Bruggeman And Ben Rohrbaugh

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

Alan Bersin, Nate Bruggeman and Ben Rohrbaugh worked together at U.S. Customs and Border Protection, where Bersin served as commissioner. He earlier was the U.S. attorney in San Diego.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions and Secretary of Homeland Security Kirstjen Nielsen recently announced a "zero tolerance" policy on border security. Though its contours have not been described in great detail, at its core, it is a commitment to criminally prosecute every person who illegally crosses the border.

This strategy may provide sound bites, and harsh rhetoric may generate some short-term deterrent effect, but it is impossible for this policy to actually be implemented over any reasonable time period. By announcing a threat that is effectively a bluff, the Trump administration likely will harm border security rather than enhance it.

The federal criminal-justice system is not equipped to handle the flood of cases that would result from referring every single illegal border crosser for prosecution. There is a limited number of federal judges, magistrate judges, federal prosecutors, public defenders and U.S. marshals in the judicial districts along the border. Prosecuting more than 300,000 people (the number apprehended for illegally crossing our southwestern border in fiscal year 2017) would overwhelm their resources. And this is to say nothing of inadequate detention capacity; each of the illegal crossers would have to be processed, housed, guarded, and fed before trial — and after, if convicted.

The core of effective border security is risk management — focusing law-enforcement resources on the greatest threats. This is why the Border Patrol developed the Consequence Delivery System, a program that matches different types of crossers to different categories of processes or penalties. For example, a known human smuggler receives harsher treatment than a first-time crosser. Referring every illegal crosser for prosecution removes the ability of the Border Patrol to manage risk effectively.

The opportunity cost associated with this prosecution strategy will be even more acutely felt by the U.S. Attorney's Offices along the border. Already handling a massive workload, including drug- and human-trafficking cases, these prosecutors focus their time and effort on cases that have the greatest impact on public safety. The administration's new "mission impossible" will force prosecutors to misallocate resources to economic migrants; but even then, there will not be enough resources to get the job done. In the meantime, organized crime, drug smuggling and financial crimes will receive short shrift.

Meanwhile, the new policy is likely to have little deterrent effect. We know this from experience. For example, in San Diego during the 1980s and early 1990s, enormous numbers of illegal crossers were subject to misdemeanor prosecution. That effort consumed huge amounts of resources simply to create a revolving door in area jails. It was only when the enforcement strategy changed to focus on prevention and deterrence at the border — supported with targeted felony prosecutions and strategically situated walls — did the situation change.

The administration is looking for quick fixes to illegal immigration, but action is instead needed on the difficult policy questions and trade-offs that are inherent in this arena.

For example, the administration needs to strengthen its security partnership with Mexico. Demonizing Mexico may score political points, but it is directly contrary to our border-security interests. All irregular southwest border crossers transit Mexico, and since 2015, Mexico has stopped more than 500,000 Central Americans at its southern border with Guatemala. If these efforts are halted, the effect on the southwestern U.S. border is clear.

One area of focus should be entering a "first safe country" agreement — which the United States has with Canada — providing that migrants from third countries claiming asylum here would be returned to Mexico to pursue their claims. This arrangement would be a powerful deterrent to economic migrants making false asylum claims, while leaving open a refuge for those fleeing extreme violence directed against them. The United States could provide assistance to Mexico to help implement the system.

Rather than focusing on criminal prosecutions, the administration should be reforming the overloaded immigration court system, where backlogged cases wait years for final disposition. That means adding resources and streamlining procedures so that asylum and other cases can be adjudicated efficiently. This would yield the dividends the attorney general's recent token offer of 35 prosecutors and 18 immigration judges cannot.

"Zero tolerance" looks like an easy way to increase deterrence, but there are no easy solutions or silver bullets for a broken immigration system. While we wait for comprehensive immigration reform and a strategy for tackling the drivers of Central American migration, the administration needs to devise a deterrence scheme that is effective and sustainable. Criminal prosecution will certainly be a part of such a strategy, but if it is the only part, it will fail.

Homeland Security Secretary Visits Nogales, Cites 'Lawlessness' Of Border

Arizona Daily Star, May 31, 2018

The border is in crisis and being exploited by smugglers, but the administration is taking steps to put an end to the lawlessness, Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen said Thursday.

People continue to cross the border illegally, she said, "because they can and because they do not face any consequences."

Nielsen visited Nogales as part of a Southern Arizona tour that included the ports of entry in Douglas and Nogales and roundtable discussions with border community business leaders, ranchers and law enforcement officials. She was hosted by Rep. Martha McSally and accompanied by Rep. David Schweikert, both Republicans from Arizona.

In a brief news conference after Nielsen toured the ports of entry and met with stakeholders, she spoke about the deployment of the National Guard and the administration's zero-tolerance policy to refer for prosecution everyone apprehended by Border Patrol.

She also said her agency will use funding from fiscal years 2017 and 2018 to build 150 new miles of wall and refurbish other fencing that needs upgrading. Congress needs to support a wall system that will enable agents and officers to keep the community safe, she said.

"It's a very large and dangerous mission we're undertaking here to secure the border on behalf of the American people and we couldn't do it without their support," she said.

The administration often cites recent rises in apprehensions at the Southwest border, mostly of families and unaccompanied minors, as a reason for a wall and to close what they call "legal loopholes" in the asylum system.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Based on this increase, the D.C.-based think-thank Migration Policy Institute said it's possible for apprehensions to return to the 330,000 to 480,000 level of fiscal years 2010 through 2016, but notes they are still far from the peak of 1.6 million seen in 2000.

Nielsen said she wanted to hear about how "the lawlessness and insecurity of the border" affect landowners, ranchers and businessmen directly.

While she recognizes the need to improve infrastructure and facilitate trade and travel at ports of entry — a major concern for the area's business community — she said she was focusing on border security "because for reasons I can't explain, there are those who don't want us to enforce the laws, and I'm here to say we need to and we will."

Jaime Chamberlain, president of J-C Distributing Inc. in Nogales, who was among the group who met with Nielsen at the DeConcini Port of Entry, said he was pleased he was able to give officials a different perspective about the border and the economy.

He talked about trade and the importance of the ports of entry and the value that each additional Customs officer brings to the economy, he said. Just in Nogales, he said, Customs is short anywhere from 200 to 250 officers.

"It's very sexy and grabs headlines to talk about border security," he said. "But when people talk to me about border security, I live in a very safe community in Nogales. I'm always thinking about economic security and the value we bring to each other."

This was Nielsen's second trip to Arizona. McSally said she wanted her to see and hear about the issues those who live and work along the border face and how they differ depending on the community.

"When you see things first hand, what the impact is, what's working and not working ... when you are hearing from agents on the ground," McSally said, "it helps to build her situational awareness."

McSally also talked about her bill, Securing America's Future Act, which she said would address many of the issues they heard about during this trip.

The border tour came a day after a subcommittee hearing in Phoenix to examine the opioid epidemic.

"If you want a holistic solution" to the opioid problem and border security, Schweikert said, "part of the solution is right here because this is not just an Arizona crisis or a border crisis, it's a national crisis."

Marie Bussey, director of advocacy for Catholic Legal Immigration Network Inc., or CLINIC, issued a written statement Thursday saying Nielsen's trips to the border here "have not included faith and community organizations that may offer different perspectives on conditions at the border and what drives people to seek safety."

"We hope the secretary will soon meet with the communities who serve our brothers and sisters, many of whom are very young children."

Nielsen Cites Massive, Dishonest Campaign Against Border Officials

Arizona Republic, May 31, 2018

The secretary for the U.S. Department of Homeland Security defended the men and women under her command who patrol the U.S. border and enforce the nation's immigration laws amid a barrage of negative publicity that has enveloped her department over the past few weeks.

"In the last couple of weeks, there has been a massive, just dishonest, information campaign, and it's being waged against DHS," Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen said Thursday near the border fence in Nogales. "And it's a misinformation campaign being waged by those who either harbor an unfounded distrust of CBP (border) or ICE (immigration) officers, or who just don't want to see us secure our borders."

Nielsen came to Arizona to tour the border at Douglas and Nogales. Her visit came amid heavy scrutiny over her department's new policy on family separations, allegations of abuse by border agents against children, and the fatal shooting of an immigrant woman in Texas.

During her brief visit, Nielsen defiantly warned that border agents would arrest and refer for prosecution any person who crosses the border illegally, regardless of their situation. Under this new "zero-tolerance" approach, parents caught at the border would have their children removed while they are prosecuted.

The new policy has received widespread condemnation from Democrats and migrant-advocacy groups. Reports that parents separated from their children at the border have had trouble reuniting with their children afterward have only fed the outcry.

But Nielsen said the Trump administration won't back down.

"It appears our critics want a two-tier legal system. They think illegal aliens should get different, perhaps better, treatment than U.S. citizens because they happen to be illegal aliens," Nielsen said. "No jail because they have a family. No criminal consequences if they have children. I'm here to tell you differently."

Nielsen dismissed reports about the nearly 1,500 unaccompanied minors whom the federal government has been unable to track down, saying they likely don't want to be found because they are in the care of undocumented relatives.

She also called the shooting death of a Guatemalan immigrant at the Texas border "tragic." A Border Patrol agent shot and killed 19-year-old Claudia Gomez on the border south of Laredo on May 23. Nielsen said a full investigation is underway.

As Nielsen toured the Nogales border, dozens of Central American families continued camping out in Mexico in front of the DeConcini crossing, waiting for their chance to claim asylum in the U.S.

Because they are presenting themselves at a port of entry, instead of crossing the border illegally, they will not be prosecuted, according to Customs and Border Protection.

This new wave of arrivals began more than three weeks ago, with families, including many young children, sometimes spending up to five days waiting in the heat of the day and the cold of night.

"The lines are a reflection of strained resources," Nielsen said. "So we will work through in a prioritized way, based on our mission set what we can, to process as quickly, as expeditiously, professionally and with respect as we can. But we do have limited resources."

Immigration attorneys who were in Tucson for an immigration conference hosted by the Catholic Legal Immigration Network traveled to Nogales on Thursday morning to meet and provide legal counsel to the families waiting on the Mexican side.

"As we entered the area, we saw these two lines. In one line, people stand and move rather quickly to enter the U.S. In the other line, families sleep on the ground," said Lucero Ortiz, director of legal services for CARECEN, a community and advocacy group in Washington, D.C.

"The people standing look down at those who wait, many times for days. We sat down with the families, we heard their stories and offered the best guidance we could under the circumstances," she added.

U.S. Rep. Raúl Grijalva, an Arizona Democrat whose congressional district includes Nogales, also was at the border on Thursday. Instead of joining Nielsen, he decided to spend time with migrants and the advocacy groups.

"Today's visit by Sec. Nielsen to Nogales demonstrates a blatant disregard for how the Trump Administration's policies are impacting immigrant families and border residents," Grijalva said in a statement. "As the Trump Administration inhumanely rips children from their mother's arms and places them in detention, Sec. Nielsen came to Nogales for a distasteful photo opportunity at the border."

Nielsen began her tour in Douglas, joined by U.S. Reps. Martha McSally and David Schweikert, both Arizona Republicans. She met with sheriffs from the Arizona border and around the country, followed by a tour of the aging port of entry in that city.

In Nogales, the secretary met with border ranchers and land and business owners before taking a brief tour of the border fence just east of the city.

McSally, who represents Arizona's other congressional district on the border, said she invited Nielsen to the area so she could familiarize herself with the challenges and successes in the area.

"When you see things firsthand, and when you see the impact of what's working and what's not working ... it helps to build our situational awareness, so she can understand what this sector should look like," McSally said.

Nielsen's visit to Nogales was her 10th trip to the U.S.-Mexico border since taking on the job in late 2017 and her second to Arizona in two months.

She visited the border near San Luis in April, joined by Gov. Doug Ducey, to tout the deployment of National Guard troops to the Arizona border.

School Safety Commission's First Field Visit Focuses On Fostering Community In Schools

By Erin Dooley

As President Donald Trump met with victims of the Santa Fe school shooting in Texas, representatives of the Federal Commission on School Safety, initiated in the wake of the Parkland shooting in Florida, held its first "field visit" at a Maryland elementary school Thursday.

Education Secretary Betsy DeVos, the commission's chair, urged "prompt action" to amp up security and violence prevention programs in order to "foster a safe and supportive culture." In the wake of the deadly shooting at a Texas high school, the Department of Education awarded the Santa Fe Independent School District a "Project School Emergency Response to Violence", or SERV, grant for $1 million in aid for "healing and recovery", the department announced.

The meeting, hosted at Frank Hebron-Harman Elementary School, comes just a day after White House press secretary Sarah Sanders touted the commission's work in an emotional response to a 13-year-old journalist who told her he was worried his friends could get shot up at school.

"As a kid and certainly as a parent, there is nothing that could be more terrifying than for a kid to go to school and not feel safe, so I'm sorry that you feel that way," Sanders said, her voice audibly cracking. "The school safety commission that the president convened is meeting this week again in an official meeting to discuss the best ways forward and how we can do every single thing within our power to protect kids in our schools and to make them feel safe."

During Thursday's event, there was little talk of the more controversial safety techniques that have come to dominate the headlines, like arming teachers or limiting school entrances and exits.

Instead, participants focused on how to use a technique called "positive behavioral interventions and supports," to foster community so kids wouldn't want to hurt their classmates.

"Students who feel connected to their school community are less likely to harm it," Kathy Rockefeller, a school climate specialist in Anne Arundel county, told officials. "Connection breeds safety."

"We create a school climate where everybody matters," said Angela Bernholz, a school psychologist at Old Mill High School who created an elective class that helps at-risk students build relationships with peers.

"These are kids who were not connected, but became connected — but it took us doing something," Bernholz said. "When we intervene successfully, we don't know what might have happened."

Three of the four cabinet secretaries who make up the school safety commission — Attorney General Jeff Sessions, Homeland Security Sec. Kristen Nielsen, and Health & Human Services Sec. Alex Azar — sent surrogates to the meeting.

Beth Williams, Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Legal Policy, represented the Justice Department; Elinore McCance-Katz, Assistant Secretary for Mental Health and Substance Abuse, represented the Department of Health and Human Services; and Christopher Krebs, the nominee for the Undersecretary for the National Protection and Programs Directorate, represented the Department of Homeland Security.

The Department of Education declined to comment on the secretaries' absences. Other departments did not immediately respond to ABC News' request for comment.

Earlier this month, Sessions, Nielsen and Azar all opted out of another planned meeting due to "unforeseen scheduling conflicts" and DeVos met with stakeholders, including officials who have dealt with the fallout from the shootings at Columbine and Virginia Tech, as well as parents of victims from Columbine, Sandy Hook, and Parkland, alone.

The full commission has not met as a group since March, when all four secretaries gathered to discuss logistics, staffing, timeline, and scope, according to an Education Department readout.

Yet DeVos has said she is hopeful the commissions will issue findings by "year's end," with an interim report "hopefully" coming out before then.

On Thursday, she pledged further discussion with states, school districts, and school administrators.

School Safety Panel Hears About Discipline Alternatives

By Maria Danilova

Education Secretary Betsy DeVos bumped fists with first-graders and listened as they shared stories about friendship during a field trip Thursday by a presidential commission seeking ways to stem a steady stream of school violence.

DeVos toured Hebron Harman Elementary School in Hanover, Maryland, which specializes in positive behavior reinforcement, an approach focused on mentoring and counseling as opposed to punitive discipline.

The field trip was held on the same day that President Donald Trump traveled to Texas to meet with families of some of the 10 people killed in a May 18 shooting at Santa Fe High School.

DeVos chairs the Federal Commission on School Safety, which was formed after the Valentine's Day shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, which left 17 people dead. Besides DeVos, the panel consists of the attorney general and the heads of the departments of Human Services and Homeland Security. During Thursday's visit the three agencies were represented by senior officials, not the secretaries.

The Trump administration has faced criticism for not including any Democrats, educators or experts as full-fledged members of the safety commission.

DeVos listened to teachers, principals and experts share various approaches to making their schools welcoming and safe for students. DeVos said she understands the anxiety many parents and teachers feel after the Florida tragedy.

"In the aftermath, students and educators alike understandably fear that this could happen in their own school," she said. "Parents dread getting a phone call that too many other parents have experienced."

DeVos sat down on the carpet with children during a first grade's morning meeting as students shared stories of how their friends helped them overcome difficult situations and feel better. In another classroom, she assisted a girl in reading a book about Ruby Bridges, the first African-American child who attended an all-white school in Louisiana during the segregation era. DeVos then joined another class where children were writing essays about the things they wanted to invent. One girl told DeVos about making a special pencil sharpener.

The school safety commission was formed in March and tasked with outlining strategies for improving school security and students' access to mental health care and curbing gun violence.

But the discussion on Thursday was focused solely on positive behavior interventions, a pedagogical approach that essentially aims to make students kinder and happier at school and prevent disruptive behavior before it starts. The approach is not new and is already being used widely throughout the nation.

Educators talked about making misbehaving students come to school for additional work on Saturdays instead of giving them suspensions, connecting students with psychologists or other adults at the school or letting children correct the harm they made instead of facing punishment.

The topic of gun control was not discussed.

George Sugai, an education professor at the University of Connecticut, who pioneered the positive behavior approach, said it helps avoid or lessen violence, bullying and disruptive behavior and makes schools better equipped to deal with if it does occur.

"The research is pretty clear that if you can create these environments that are more pro-active, you have a greater chance at being able to prepare yourself better as well as respond, Sugai said.

But he added that teaching kindness alone cannot fix the problem of violence.

"It's probably going to be a multiple community response, it's going to be families, communities, schools, government in being able to deal with the whole violence issue," Sugai said after the panel discussion. "I think schools are not going to respond effectively if the larger group doesn't take on that topic of gun violence in particular as well as hate."

Briah Barksdale, a local high school senior, developed a program that promotes kindness at her school and said it helped decrease bullying and increase student's pride in their alma mater.

"I think kindness will make people feel that they are wanted and you never know the impact that it can have on someone else," Barksdale said.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

TIME, May 31, 2018

Last fourth of July, as fireworks burst across the night sky near the Lieber Correctional Institution in Ridgeville, S.C., convicted kidnapper Jimmy Causey tucked a lifelike dummy into his bed, sneaked out of his prison cell and completed a daring escape. It wasn't until three days later, when Texas Rangers found Causey holed up 1,200 miles away, that authorities offered an explanation for how he had obtained the equipment for the breakout, including a pair of wire cutters used to snip through four fences that encircle the maximum security prison. "We believe a drone was used to fly in the tools that allowed him to escape," Bryan Stirling, director of the South Carolina Department of Corrections, told reporters at a news conference.

A lengthy investigation confirmed that an accessory role was played by a small, off-the-shelf drone. And with that, law-enforcement and national security officials added "prison breaks" to the potential ill uses lurking in a technology widely available at retailers including Amazon and Walmart. Unlike military drones that can cost more than $15 million and look like small airplanes, mini quadcopters can be obtained for a few hundred dollars—and their capabilities are exciting the imaginations of bad guys. Criminals have used drones to drop drugs into prisons. Mexican smugglers have flown them above the border to spy on the movement of patrolling federal officers. ISIS used them to drop crude bombs on U.S. and allied forces in Iraq and Syria.

It is the widespread availability of commercial drones that poses the largest threat. Almost everybody who uses a drone in the U.S.—and the Federal Aviation Administration has licensed more than a million operators—flies by the rules. But not everyone, and perhaps the major lesson of 9/11 was to look for threats from unexpected places, especially overhead. Yet on drones, the federal response has been largely haphazard and behind the curve. The Pentagon is working to develop and deploy technologies to defeat drones and intends to spend $401.2 million on counter-drone initiatives this fiscal year, according to a study by the Center for the Study of the Drone at Bard College. "We know that terrorists are using drones overseas to advance plots and attacks, and we've already seen criminals use them along and within our borders for illicit purposes," Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen tells TIME. "We are working with Congress for the authorities needed to ensure we can better protect the American people against emerging drone threats."

Part of the problem is that our laws and regulations aren't designed for this new kind of threat. Current electronic eavesdropping laws preclude government officials from disabling drones midair with electromagnetic signals. A bipartisan group of Senators has introduced a bill that would give the Trump Administration the power to electronically jam drones that get too close to federal facilities; it is expected to pass before the end of the year. Agencies across government are now forbidden to identify and shoot down drones because of decades-old regulations that treat the robotic aircraft as if they were passenger jets.

Officials say they're in a race against time. "It's not if these devices will be weaponized in the homeland but when," an Administration official told TIME. A White House fact sheet put out in support of the new measures says criminals could "drop explosive payloads, deliver harmful substances and conduct reconnaissance" using quadcopters. In November, authorities arrested a 55-year-old Sacramento man who flew a drone that dropped leaflets featuring a rant against television-news outlets inside Levi's Stadium in Santa Clara, Calif., during an NFL game. No one was harmed, but officials with DHS and outside analysts took it as a warning: What if the drone's payload were an explosive or a harmful chemical? He was cited for flying the drone in prohibited airspace, a misdemeanor.

One reason the U.S. government fears drone warfare is that it knows the power of remotely controlled air power. Since 2001, the CIA and Air Force have deployed the multimillion-dollar fixed wing MQ-1 Predator and MQ-9 Reaper drones, which are the size of small fighter jets and can deliver Hellfire missiles and 500-lb. bombs. These drones, mostly operated remotely from Nevada, have killed thousands of militants across the Middle East and the Horn of Africa. They have also been responsible for 751 to 1,555 civilian deaths, according to the London-based Bureau of Investigative Journalism, which tracks drone strike data.

The Obama Administration struggled to balance the strategic advantages of drones with the humanitarian costs. Over years of internal debate and external pressure, it developed a legal and policy framework underlying the controversial practice of targeted killing with drones. Critics, like the American Civil Liberties Union, said the extrajudicial system enabled a sitting President to be "judge, jury and executioner." The Trump Administration has continued operating under the Obama rules. It has loosened constraints on who can be targeted on the basis of the threat they pose.

Most of the danger from the commercial drone boom here at home has been in the category of nuisance offenses. Under current law, hobbyists and commercial users must keep unmanned aircraft below 400 ft. and avoid flying within five miles of an airport to avoid endangering commercial aircraft. Even small drones could disable a passenger jet by getting sucked into and destroying a jet's engine.

Still, recreational drone users often ignore the law. On Sept. 30, 2017, alone, there were eight dangerous drone incidents, according to the FAA: an airline pilot reported spotting a drone at 4,000 ft. as the passenger jet came in for a landing at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago; a pilot leaving Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport spotted a drone about 100 yd. off his left wing, hovering at 6,500 ft.; and others had close calls in Long Beach, Calif.; Burbank, Calif.; Newark, N.J.; McAlester, Okla.; Hollywood, Fla.; and San Antonio. In the first nine months of 2017 there were 1,696 drone sightings, according to the FAA's most recent data, compared with 238 in all of 2014, the first year the data were tracked. The FAA expects the problem will get worse as the number of drones is estimated to triple to 3.5 million by 2021.

The risk of small drones' flying into sensitive facilities first came into public view in 2015 when a hobbyist lost control of a drone that crashed on the southeast side of the 18-acre secure zone around White House grounds at about 3 a.m., triggering a Secret Service lockdown of the compound. Drones are off-limits in the airspace in the 15-mile radius around Washington and also over places like the Hoover Dam, the Statue of Liberty and Mount Rushmore. The drone that crashed near the White House, called a DJI Phantom, caused no damage, but it flew in undetected.

That highlights one of the greatest challenges to tracking and countering drones deployed by bad actors. Existing radar systems are designed to detect much bigger threats. Most commercial drones are constructed of plastic and are difficult to spot electronically because they're small, fly low to the ground and don't carry a transponder to signal their positions. "It's only a matter of time before the threat manifests in a violent way," Defense Secretary James Mattis told a Senate panel in May.

The military has already faced the drone danger abroad. As American Special Operations commandos fought to retake the Iraqi city of Mosul from ISIS in the fall of 2016, they faced a threat that American ground forces hadn't dealt with: attack from the air. Desperate to break the American-led siege of the city, ISIS militants sent fleets of small drones, often several at a time, carrying grenades and miniaturized explosives, scattering troops and driving them to seek cover. "At one point there were 12 killer bees, if you will, right overhead," General Raymond Thomas, head of Special Operations Command, said last year, adding that the fighting nearly came to a "screeching halt." The drones were too small for a fighter pilot or a tank gunner to pursue, which meant the troops' only defense was to try to shoot the aircraft out of the sky with their rifles. Thomas said the small drones were the "most daunting" threat his commandos faced during the house-to-house campaign in Mosul. No U.S. casualties were reported. No American forces have been killed by an air attack since the Korean War.

America's defensive tactics against drone strikes are rudimentary. ISIS has launched drone attacks on ground forces for the past two years. American commanders rushed electronic jammers to the war zone, but there were spotty examples of success. The Pentagon is working to develop two ways to combat terrorist drones: "hard kill" solutions that involve physically disabling drones, and "soft kill" ones that bring them down electronically. Much of the work falls to the military's Joint Improvised Threat Defeat Organization, or JIDO, which was formed to combat roadside bombs during the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. Lieut. General Michael Shields, JIDO's director, says the goal isn't to find a "silver bullet" to take drones down but to have an arsenal of both hard-kill and soft-kill capabilities.

JIDO has tried different approaches. It has developed small drones to patrol the skies and shoot a net to snag enemy drones. The so-called Negation of Improvised Non-State Joint Aerial threats system, or NINJA project, outfits drones with electronics that commandeer enemy drones by sending false GPS signals to trick the aircraft's receivers. The Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency is developing a program that relies on a network of sensors to provide wide-area surveillance of all drones operating below 1,000 ft. in a city. DARPA has chosen defense giants Lockheed Martin and Raytheon, along with the University of Washington, to test their new technologies at various sites this year under contracts totaling $13 million.

There has been a boom market for counter-measures. Guard From Above, a Dutch company, trains eagles to intercept drones in midair. Britain-based OpenWorks Engineering designed the SkyWall bazooka that fires a net-carrying canister to capture drones and bring them to the ground. DroneShield, based in Sydney and Virginia, builds devices that use radar, acoustic and thermal sensors to detect drones in flight and send an alert if they fly near a stadium, prison or other restricted property. The company also makes jamming devices for roofs and porches that erect virtual walls drones can't fly through.

A February study by Bard's Center for the Study of the Drone identified 230 products designed by 155 manufacturers in 33 countries to subvert malicious drones. Back in South Carolina, where Jimmy Causey is back behind bars, law enforcement is already getting into the game. On May 24, corrections officials showed reporters a new tool to prevent contraband from entering the state's 21 prison yards: small drones remotely piloted by two military veterans.

National Guard Sent To Arizona Border Ports To Help Customs Officers

The National Guard has begun putting its members at Arizona's border ports of entry, a move that will provide needed relief to over-extended customs officers dealing with severe staff shortages and increased workloads at the U.S.-Mexico border.

U.S. Customs and Border Protection has struggled to fill nearly 1,100 vacant positions nationwide, even as its customs officers have seen dramatic increases in the amounts of hard drugs smuggled through ports along the Southwestern border.

"In the Tucson field office, I believe we're still a few hundred positions short," Guadalupe Ramirez told U.S. lawmakers on Wednesday. He is CBP's acting director of field operations in Arizona and was speaking at a congressional field hearing on opioids in downtown Phoenix.

The first group of 10 National Guard troops arrived at the Mariposa border crossing in Nogales last week, according to the National Guard, with another group of 10 deploying to the San Luis port of entry next week.

Capt. Macario Mora, a Guard spokesman, said the troops will help with secondary inspections at the commercial border crossings, performing tasks such as operating X-ray machines.

"There will be no direct contact between them and folks going in and out, just supporting," he said.

As with the earlier deployment of Guard members to Border Patrol stations in southern Arizona, the new assignments are intended to free up customs officers so they can perform more direct roles along the border.

Currently, there are about 390 Guard members stationed along the Arizona borderlands as part of Operation Guardian Support. The majority of them are stationed with the Border Patrol.

However, the Department of Defense authorized earlier this month the deployment of a total of 682 troops. Mora said they will be distributed among Border Patrol, the Office of Field Operations — which overseas the ports of entry — and Air and Marine Operations, which patrols land and sea borders.

As part of the congressional field hearing in Phoenix, lawmakers examined the critical role that customs officers play in stemming the flow of narcotics and synthetic drugs into the United States.

"It's well-known that the overwhelming majority of drugs, maybe as high as 90 percent, in the country come through the nation's ports of entry," U.S. Rep. Martha McSally, R-Arizona, said.

McSally presided over the field hearing as the chairwoman of the House Homeland Security subcommittee on Border and Maritime Security.

Lawmakers from both sides of the aisle repeatedly brought up the unfilled vacancies at the ports as a security concern.

To deal with the staffing shortages, CBP has brought in customs officers stationed in the country's interior, including airports, for temporary assignments at the border.

As The Arizona Republic first reported in January, the agency is undertaking a targeted campaign nationwide to fill vacant jobs in Arizona, which it deems as a "mission critical" location.

The results so far have been positive, Ramirez said Wednesday, adding that he saw a "light at the end of the tunnel." But he acknowledged that challenges remain.

"We've had success in hiring," he said. "But with attrition, you take two steps forward but one step back. ... So we're still a few hundred overall short."

It's unclear so far how many of the 682 authorized National Guard troops will be stationed at Arizona's ports of entry to help relieve the customs officers.

However, their deployment addresses concerns from local stakeholders along the border who have long advocated for additional resources for the ports, rather than the Border Patrol.

Mora said their plan all along has been to also help out customs officers, "but Border Patrol was the first and easiest portion for us to go to first."

McSally, whose congressional district covers the southeastern Arizona border, will tour the Nogales and Douglas border areas on Thursday with Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen.

McSally said she supports the Guard deployment to the ports, even if it's temporary. As of now, the Defense Department will cover the costs to keep troops at the border until the end of September.

"You can't replace them (trained personnel) with a well-meaning, part-time gesture. It's just not going to work."

U.S. Rep. Raúl Grijalva, D-Arizona

"We're understaffed in both areas, and if we're really going to be addressing these security issues and the flow of drugs, we've got to be able to have the manning in both places," McSally said, referring to shortages with both customs officers and Border Patrol.

However, U.S. Rep. Raúl Grijalva, D-Arizona, disagreed. His congressional district covers the southwestern Arizona border.

Grijalva said the Guard's help would be beneficial in the short term, but that longer term solutions are needed.

"The fact remains ... that you need trained professional personnel, and that's what the customs officers are," he said. "You can't replace them with a well-meaning, part-time gesture. It's just not going to work."

Border Patrol Agents Disrupt Human Smuggling Stash Houses In Texas

By Bob Price

Breitbart, May 31, 2018

Border Patrol agents along the Rio Grande River border with Mexico continue to disrupt human smuggling operations by shutting down stash houses. The smugglers frequently pack migrants into the houses with inadequate plumbing and kitchen facilities. Border Patrol officials previously called these "deplorable" conditions.

Agents assigned to the McAllen Border Patrol Station worked with Hidalgo County Constable's Office deputies to identify a stash house near Mission, Texas. The agents and deputies carried out a raid on the house on Wednesday, according to information provided to Breitbart Texas by Rio Grande Valley Sector officials.

The raid resulted in the arrest of 17 illegal immigrants. Officials said the 17 migrants came to the U.S. from El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Mexico.

Agents assigned to the Laredo Sector teamed up with FBI agents to crack down on a human smuggling stash house in the border town of Laredo. Agents learned of the stash house after receiving a call from the Iowa State Police. The tip came from family members reporting that the human smugglers were holding the migrants against their will. This is a common practice carried out by the cartel-connected human smugglers. The smugglers will hold people for ransom after smuggling them across the border — demanding money in addition to what they have already been paid. Frequently these demands are accompanied by threats of violence or action violence including rape of the women and beating of the men, Border Patrol officials previously told Breitbart Texas.

Laredo Sector officials said the migrants came to the U.S. from Ecuador and Mexico.

Agents arrested all of the migrants who could face criminal charges for illegally entering the U.S.

"United States Border Patrol continues to work in coordination with our law enforcement partners at the Federal Bureau of Investigation and these collaborative efforts, as this enforcement action illustrates, continue to help disrupt illicit activity and deny criminal organizations the ability to operate," Laredo Sector Assistant Chief Patrol Agent Gabriel Acosta said in a written statement. "We will continue to work with our law enforcement partners to prosecute those responsible and prevent individuals from being subjected to deplorable conditions."

Chinese Migrants Forced To Grow Pot For Passage Into U.S., Says DEA Agent

By Bob Price

Breitbart, May 31, 2018

Chinese transnational criminal organizations are smuggling migrants into the U.S. and forcing them into indentured servitude where they must illegally grow marijuana in exchange for their passage. A special agent with the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) likened it to a new form of human trafficking.

DEA Special Agent Randy Ladd told NBC News Chinese crews cover the illegal immigrants' cost of being smuggled from China into the U.S. by forcing them to work in marijuana grow houses in the Denver area. "It's like indentured servitude," Ladd told NBC's Gabe Gutierrez in an interview. "It is a form of human trafficking."

He said the Chinese migrants are flown from China to Belgium and then on to Mexico, where they make asylum claims at the border. He said the migrants then disappear before their scheduled immigration hearing to determine the validity of their claim of "credible fear." Ladd explained they frequently find immigration fugitives when they raid the marijuana grow houses.

NBC News reported that Chinese, Cuban, and Mexican transnational criminal organizations are using states that legalized the production and sale of marijuana as a cover to illegally grow and traffic pot to points across the U.S. The groups will purchase or rent homes in states like California, Colorado, and Washington where they said enforcement of growing operations is hit-or-miss.

After purchasing or renting the homes, often in upscale neighborhoods, the drug rings will then move migrants into the homes to perform the growing and harvesting operations in exchange for being smuggled into the U.S.

Border Patrol officials told Breitbart Texas in the past that foreign nationals, other than Mexicans and Central American, will often pay between $15,000 and $25,000 to cartel-connected smugglers to get them into the U.S. Often, this money is not paid up front and the migrant is forced into some form of labor to pay off their debt.

Federal, state, and local law enforcement agencies in these states have recently stepped up their effort to crack down on underground grow operations.

In April, local and federal officials executed raids on 74 marijuana grow houses in the Sacramento area. Attorney General Jeff Sessions called it "one of the largest residential forfeiture actions in American history" after the agents seized the home illegally used to grow the drugs.

Operations in California and Washington tend to be run by the Chinese transnational criminal organizations while Colorado is seeing an influx of Cuban and Mexican-led cartels, El Paso, Colorado, County Sheriff Bill Elder told NBC News.

"They have found that it's easier to grow and process marijuana in Colorado, ship it throughout the United States than it is to bring it from Mexico or Cuba," Elder told the reporter.

The criminal organizations not only benefit from being able to hide in plain sight in states with legalized marijuana laws, but they profit from trafficking in the labor to carry out the operations.

CA Border Agents Find Man Hidden In Mexican Wood Shavings Truck, CBP Says

Sacramento (CA) Bee, May 31, 2018

Borders agents were suspicious even before they ripped the tarp off a Mexican truck carrying wood shavings into San Diego County on

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Tuesday — and what they discovered under the tarp confirmed those suspicions.

There was a heap of pulpy wood shavings in the trailer, yes. But there was also a dusty hand hidden among the pulverized wood, according to U.S. Customs and Border Protection. The hand was attached to a Mexican citizen who had stowed himself with the legitimate cargo, KGTV reports.

A 43-year-old truck driver had been hauling the wood shavings from Mexico into the U.S. at the Otay Mesa cargo port of entry in south San Diego County. His 2009 Freightliner truck caught agents' attention when an imaging system scan revealed an anomaly in his truck's trailer, agents said.

That's when agents launched an "intensive examination," according to Customs and Border Protection. SIGN UP

"We just did our inspection, went up there, removed the tarp from the top of the trailer and discovered one man hiding inside," Customs and Border Protection Supervisor Shalene Thomas told FOX 5 San Diego.

Eventually, the man inside was taken into custody, Thomas told the TV station.

But first, he needed medical treatment.

"We actually took him to a hospital to be evaluated," Thomas told FOX. "Who's to say how long he was in there and what kind of damage was done, so in order to make sure that we did our diligence to make sure that this person was adequately checked out and safe, we took him to the hospital, got him evaluated and then he was released" into custody.

As for the truck's driver? He was a Mexican citizen who had a valid visa, border agents said.

"Smugglers utilize all routes possible to move people and narcotics," Pete Flores, director of San Diego Customs and Border Protection field operations, said in a statement. Flores added that the agency "remains focused and alert to combat these attempts."

Fox News, May 31, 2018

Gustavo Tijerina-Sandoval, left, has been found guilty in the 2014 murder of Border Patrol Agent Javier Vega Jr. His accomplice, Ismael Hernandez-Vallejo, center, has yet to go to trial on the same charges. (Fox News)

A man from Mexico who has previously been arrested and deported multiple times for entering the U.S. illegally is now facing the death penalty after being found guilty in the 2014 murder of a Border Patrol agent in Texas.

Gustavo Tijerina-Sandoval, of La Villa, showed no emotion in court Wednesday as he was told by a judge that a jury found him guilty in the killing of Javier Vega Jr. and attempted murder of the agent's father, Javier Vega Sr.

The younger Vega was gunned down in front of his family on August 3, 2014, after Tijerina-Sandoval and his accomplice, Ismael Hernandez-Vallejo, attempted to rob him to pay off a $3,500 debt to a man that was threatening Tijerina-Sandoval, according to court testimony and police statements.

Vega Jr., his wife and two kids had been fishing in Santa Monica with his father, and was struck in the chest with gunfire after pulling out his weapon in response. His father suffered a hip injury but Vega Jr. died in the attack. An immigration checkpoint in Sarita, where Vega Jr. worked, was later renamed in tribute to him.

"Even when not in uniform, Agent Vega exemplified the selflessness and devotion to public safety that makes an extraordinary agent, and this will help honor his service and sacrifice," Sen. John Cornyn (R-Texas), had said about the fallen agent in 2017.

Ismael Hernandez-Vallejo has yet to go to trial for the same charges. Tijerina-Sandoval could receive the death penalty in the sentencing phase for his trial, which is set to begin Thursday afternoon.

The agent's family embraced each other, friends and members of law enforcement working on the case after the guilty verdict was announced Wednesday, the Brownsville Herald reported.

Tijerina-Sandoval's defense attorneys, following the announcement, reportedly said they would need to talk to him first to figure out how to proceed in the case.

Fox News previously reported in 2014, following Tijerina-Sandoval's arrest, that he had been found guilty numerous times of crossing into the U.S. illegally through its southern border with Mexico. Hernandez-Vallejo was deported twice for doing the same, sources said.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In Hernandez-Vallejo's first court appearance, he had expressed surprise at the charges that were facing him.

"I don't understand why I'm being accused of so many things," he said.

Hernandez-Vallejo has entered a not guilty plea in his case.

Texas Jury Convicts Man In Death Of Border Patrol Agent

A jury has convicted a 34-year-old Mexican national of capital murder in the 2014 killing of an off-duty Border Patrol agent.

Gustavo Tijerina-Sandoval could face the death penalty in the killing of Javier Vega Jr., who was fatally shot during a family fishing trip in southeast Texas. Sentencing is set for Thursday afternoon.

According to the Brownsville Herald , Tijerina-Sandoval was also convicted Wednesday of attempted capital murder for shooting and wounding Vega's father.

Prosecutors say the shooting happened as part of an attempted robbery, but Tijerina-Sandoval's attorney argued that his client was acting in self-defense.

A Border Patrol chiefs' panel initially rejected Vega's death as in the line of duty. The decision later was changed after authorities determined Vega pulled his gun trying to protect others.

How evil is MS-13? Last year, two gang members in Texas reportedly murdered a teenage girl as an offering to Satan. According to prosecutors, the gang leader (known as "Diabolico") told the young girl that "the Beast" wanted "a soul" before having his partner shoot her in the head and dump her body on a street corner. As charges were read against the two, the Houston Chronicle reported, they "laughed, smiled and waved for the media cameras." MS-13 gang members, police have said, also stabbed a Maryland man more than 100 times before decapitating him and cutting out his heart ... lured a 34-year-old man to his already dug grave ... and stoned an 18-year-old boy to death and dumped his body under a bridge.

MS-13 is a demonic death cult. And President Donald Trump has Nancy Pelosi defending its members' humanity.

When Trump declared at a White House roundtable "You wouldn't believe how bad these people are. These aren't people. These are animals," he was clearly referring to MS-13. But the media and Democrats took the president's quote out of context and declared that he had referred to all illegal immigrants as animals. The Associated Press tweeted that "Trump referred to those crossing US border illegally as 'animals.'" The New York Times tweeted, "Trump lashed out at undocumented immigrants during a White House meeting, calling those trying to breach the country's borders 'animals.'" Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) declared, "When all of our great-great-grandparents came to America they weren't 'animals,' and these people aren't either." SIGN UP

By the next morning, news organizations were walking back their stories. The Associated Press announced it had "deleted a tweet from late Wednesday on Trump's 'animals' comment about immigrants because it wasn't made clear that he was speaking after a comment about gang members."

But not Pelosi, the House minority leader. Even after it was clear that Trump was referring to gang members, the California Democrat still claimed the president had called "undocumented immigrants" animals, declaring at a news conference that his remarks were "inhumane" and that "we're all God's children ... Does he not believe in the spark of divinity, the dignity and worth of every person?"

Of course, we are all created in the image and likeness of God. That is true of MS-13 members. It was also true of Osama bin Laden, Pol Pot and Adolf Hitler. But can you imagine Pelosi standing up in outrage to defend their humanity? Referring to evil men as "animals" is a common colloquial expression. The Oxford Dictionary's definition of the word "animal" includes "a person without human attributes or civilizing influences, especially someone who is very cruel, violent, or repulsive." It offers, as an example of its proper use: "those men have to be animals – what they did to that boy was savage." Which is exactly how Trump used the word.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

To this day, Pelosi has neither retracted her remarks nor admitted she was wrong. So now Trump is giving as good as he got.

"I noticed recently where Democrats, Nancy Pelosi as an example, are trying to defend MS-13 gang members," Trump declared at a Long Island event last week. "I called them animals the other day and I was met with rebuke. They said, 'they are people.' They are not people. These are animals." At a rally in Nashville this week, he announced to a cheering crowd that Pelosi "loves MS-13," pointing out that "I said they're animals, and she said 'how dare you say that?'" He then asked the crowd, "What was the name?" The crowd responded, "animals!" Expect to hear that refrain at many Trump rallies in the months ahead.

Through their dishonesty, Democrats such as Pelosi have handed the president a winning issue. A Harvard/Harris poll finds that 56 percent of Americans agree with Trump that it is fair to call MS-13 "animals" (including 47 percent of Hispanics, and 41 percent of Democrats). Millions of Americans can't understand why Democrats seem more hostile toward Trump than a vicious gang that carries out savage killings.

Is Trump wrong to say Pelosi "loves MS-13"? Sure. But with her deceitful attack, she gave him the pretext to make that claim. There is a lesson here for Democrats: Trump says enough outrageous things that Democrats shouldn't have to make them up. When the president has you defending the "dignity and worth" of MS-13 members, you're doing something wrong.

IMMIGRATION POLICY

Republicans Pressured To Join Leadership Rebellion And Pass 'Dreamer' Rights

Discharge petition drive led by lawmakers facing competitive re-election races

By Seth McLaughlin

Washington Times, May 31, 2018

House Republicans may be back home on vacation this week, but they are still facing pressure to join the rebellion against their party leaders and sign onto the petition drive to have Congress vote on granting citizenship rights to illegal immigrant "Dreamers."

Some of the party's biggest financial backers are trying to coax more Republicans to buck their leaders and sign the petition, as are editorial boards and immigrant rights groups in home districts.

The dozens of Republicans targeted by the pressure campaign, though, have remained mostly silent. They are hoping to stay out of a fight in which many of them have to pick between President Trump on one side or major Republican Party donors like the Koch brothers on the other.

"You have to show that you are connecting with your base, you are listening with your base, but you also don't want to get into a confrontation with the president," said Alfonso Aguilar, president of the Latino Partnership for Conservative Principles and an opponent of the petition effort.

The petition drive is being led by a group of Republicans determined to force a vote on the fate of Dreamers. The cabal of lawmakers, each facing competitive re-election races, is led by Reps. Will Hurd of Texas, Carlos Curbelo of Florida and Jeff Denham and David G. Valadao, both of California.

Their petition, if successful, would force Republican leaders to bring to the floor an immigration bill and then hold votes on four competing proposals. The bill that gets the most votes would be the winner.

The likely victor would be a plan sponsored by Mr. Hurd that would grant a generous pathway to citizenship to millions of Dreamers in exchange for a future study of border security needs. Other options would include an enforcement-first plan that would fund the president's border wall.

Backers have amassed 213 signatures, leaving them five short of the threshold for success.

Of those 213, 23 are Republicans. The Republican rebels say they should be able to collect many more easily once Congress returns from its 10-day Memorial Day vacation.

"Regardless of political affiliation, everyone should support a transparent debate that puts all our options on the table for consideration," Mr. Hurd said. "I remain committed to securing 218 signatures and debating the issue in front of the American people."

All but three Democrats have signed onto the effort.

The holdouts, Reps. Henry Cuellar, Filemon Vela and Vicente Gonzales, are all from Texas. They say they fear the process could yield a deal that does more harm than good for border communities if it leads to a border wall.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"Representatives Vela, Gonzalez, and I are saying 'no' to signing the petition," Mr. Cuellar said in a statement. "As I've said in the past, I cannot support a border wall which is a 14th-century solution to a 21st-century problem. There are better ways at finding solutions … and I will continue to work in a bipartisan way in Congress to properly address these issues."

Their opposition has helped turn up the heat on about a dozen moderate Republicans holdouts who have supported like-minded efforts in the past.

Business groups have taken the lead in pushing the Republican Party.

"The U.S. Chamber has been actively engaged with members on efforts to start a much-needed debate on immigration issues in the House of Representatives," the chamber said in a statement to The Washington Times. "We have issued statements of support to those members who have signed the discharge petition and have made clear that we will work with interested members on any viable path to advance bipartisan legislation that protects Dreamers from the threat of deportation and institutes much-needed improvements to our nation's border security efforts."

FWD.us, an advocacy group created by Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg to push for an immigration overhaul, is urging voters to call on their House representatives to join the push.

David MacNeil, founder of WeatherTech and a major donor to Mr. Trump's presidential campaign, told Politico last week that he will give no more money to lawmakers who don't back legal status for Dreamers.

Many of the Republicans being targeted have remained mum, with their offices not responding to inquiries this week.

Other targeted Republicans have said they won't sign on because they want to give their party's leaders a chance to find a compromise.

Jacinta Ma, director of policy and advocacy for the National Immigration Forum, which is working to line up more petition signatures, said these Republican lawmakers have various reasons.

"Some people, I think, are more traditional and they want it to go through committee, be decided by committee and then have an opportunity to vote for it on the floor when it goes through the whole process," Ms. Ma said.

"They may need to be in the good graces of Republican leaders," she said. "Maybe they have a close election coming up and they need those leaders to fundraise for them or endorse them. Maybe someone wants to be part of leadership."

Yet Republican leaders have been easy on members who have signed the petition. The party continues to send resources their way, and there has been no hint that they will lose committee posts or other leadership positions.

Mr. Aguilar said he is concerned that Republicans supporting the discharge petition are playing right into the hands of Democrats. He agreed with House Speaker Paul D. Ryan, Wisconsin Republican, who has said any bill that emerges from the discharge petition process is likely to draw a veto from Mr. Trump.

"Without the White House involved, I don't see how you can get anything done," said Mr. Aguilar, adding that Democrats are laying an election trap for Republicans. "At this point, the angle of Democrats is to pass something so they can blame Republicans. So why do we want to be part of that?"

Trying to head off the petition drive, Mr. Ryan and his fellow leaders have said they will bring unspecified legislation to the floor by June 22.

That was good enough for Rep. Joe Barton, Texas Republican, one of the targets for signing the petition.

Still, he said, the petition drive has already worked.

"The fact that a significant number of the majority party were willing to sign the discharge petition has forced the leadership, with strong encouragement from the Freedom Caucus … to address the issue."

If the petition drive succeeds, the earliest it could force a floor debate would be near the end of June.

That gives Republican leaders several weeks to try to write their alternative that can get majority support.

But there are major questions as to whether the leaders can bridge a gap between conservatives who say any legal status for Dreamers is an amnesty and more moderate Republicans who want general citizenship rights for millions of illegal immigrants with only minimal security.

Newsweek, May 31, 2018

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) has pulled offline hundreds of pages of documents providing insight into the country's asylum process and practices since President Donald Trump took office, the Sunlight Foundation, a government transparency watchdog, has said.

According to Sunlight's Web Integrity Project, as many as 26 documents for Training of Asylum Officers were pulled from the USCIS's main website between March and April 2017 and "cannot be found anywhere else on the site."

USCIS spokesman Michael Bars countered the claim, saying: "Assertions that USCIS has removed or taken office training documents off line are factually inaccurate. USCIS makes these training materials available on the Web to ensure public access to lesson plans."

Bars said that the Refugee, Asylum and International Operations (RAIO) Directorate of USCIS took steps to standardize and integrate training programs in fiscal year 2013 across three divisions: Refugee Affairs, Asylum and International Operations.

As a result, he said lesson plans were updated and that nearly all lesson plans referred to by Sunlight were outdated and no longer being used.

After recieving FOIA requests regarding the lesson plans, USCIS said it moved the information from its primary website and uploaded documents to its FOIA "electronic reading room" site.

Sunlight acknowledge that eight of the manuals had been relocated to the agency's Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) "reading room," but said the decision to take down pages that many immigration lawyers rely on and move others without any notice has created confusion for those who rely on the resources.

"Their actions, intentional or not, have made it more difficult for those looking to train asylum officers or who are asylum officers themselves to access this information and that potentially strains the relationship between the agency and those who would like to get this information," Toly Rinberg, the director of the Web Integrity Project, told Newsweek.

The organization said pages stripped from the website included information on international human rights law, a list of U.S. statutes and international agreements establishing the framework for the asylum process and a series on techniques for interviewing asylum seekers, including how to interview torture victims and how to work with interpreters.

Rinberg said Sunlight "felt compelled to tell the public about these removals" after hearing from the immigration attorney community that many had been relying on the pages.

"The asylum process is so important, and particularly important given the Trump administration's focus on stripping immigration policies," he said.

In a statement shared by the Sunlight Foundation, Victoria Neilson, an attorney for the Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc. (CLINIC) said some of the most useful documents removed dealt with the inner workings of the asylum process.

As someone who helps train lawyers who are new to asylum work, the documents had been an invaluable resource, Neilson said.

"They give good insight into how the asylum officers themselves are trained to interpret ambiguous areas of the law and how asylum officers are trained to conduct interviews," Neilson said. "They give us a little sense of what to expect in some situations.

USCIS declined to comment on the record to Newsweek on Wednesday, but pointed out the fact that some documents had been relocated to the website's reading room.

The agency has also taken steps under the Trump administration to make the asylum process more restrictive.

An executive order signed by Trump in January 2017 established tighter evidentiary standards for determining "credible fear" among asylum seekers.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions has been a strong critic of the program, saying in a speech last October that the "system is being gamed, no doubt about it" by immigrants with "fake" claims of persecution in their home countries.

Neilson said that while the Trump administration's changes to the asylum program could mean some of its resources might need to be updated, there is no indication that the changes would have made the majority of the documents pulled from USCIS's website outdated.

The immigration attorney said she believed the decision to pull the pages down without providing any notice showed that "transparency is not a priority for this administration, at least in the field of immigration."

"So it's not really surprising to me that they would not want to share some of their internal thoughts on how to adjudicate these cases," she added.

Sunlight said it contacted USCIS three times, twice in April and once again in May, about the documents removed from its pages, but received no response.

A day before the watchdog group's report was released, USCIS announced that it would be launching an FOIA Immigration Records SysTem (FIRST) which will allow users to submit, manage and receive FOIA requests entirely online.

"Today marks an important step in our effort to transform outdated USCIS systems," USCIS Director L. Francis Cissna said in a statement.

"Modernizing the way we accept and respond to FOIA and Privacy Act requests is a priority. FIRST's efficient process will reduce our FOIA backlog, eliminate errors, and speed up the delivery of documents to requesters," she added.

Despite the effort to improve the agency's FOIA system, Rinberg said Sunlight has seen a pattern of the "quiet removal of documents" under the Trump administration.

"Particularly around climate change, but also now women's health resources, for example, breast cancer information being quietly removed and I think that's what's important here, is that following media attention… they choose not to restore these documents in a lot of cases," Rinberg said.

The Web Integrity Project director said government agencies should do more to inform people when information is being deleted or moved on their websites to provide greater transparency.

"It is very easy for an office to have a small notice on a website saying these resources were previously here. Please contact us for more information… Or to say, here's a reason why they will no longer be presented, but if you have more questions, please contact us," Rinberg said.

Otherwise, he says, agencies risk sending the message of an "adversarial relationship rather than a collaborative, participatory one" with those who rely on government information.

Citizenship Agency Removed Website Pages On Asylum Policy Training

Government Executive, May 31, 2018

In the latest in its ongoing monitoring of Trump administration alterations of agency website content, a transparency group found that U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services removed 26 website documents of training material for its officers dealing with asylum seekers.

Analysts at the Web Integrity Project run by the Sunlight Foundation on Thursday released a report documenting that the agency that is part of the Homeland Security Department deleted 26 documents, which totaled several hundred pages. They were training materials for USCIS asylum officers, "offering detailed instructions on how the agency screens immigrants under U.S. law and international asylum agreements," the group said.

A whole section titled "Asylum Officer Basic Training Course Lesson Modules," which offered links to the training documents, was removed from the agency's "Asylum Division Training Programs" page.

The materials, mounted on the main USCIS website under the Obama administration in 2013, included a primer on international human rights law; a list of U.S. statutes and international agreements that established the framework for the asylum process; and a six-part series on interview techniques describing how to approach conversations with torture victims, working with interpreters and proper note taking, the Web Integrity Project analysts reported.

The documents are available only at an agency online archive not available from the current agency's website.

The removals were executed early in Trump's tenure, from March 2 to April 27, 2017, the group said. As is common, no notice to the public was given.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Trump's immigration policy changes and anti-terrorism steps at a time of massive refugee movements from the Middle East and Central America have included capping refugees at 45,000, though far fewer are being admitted, according to news reports.

The administration's asylum practices were criticized by Democrats last year for turning away too many at the Southern border, and by the Government Accountability Office for lacking coordination and communication with related agencies.

The transparency analysts—who generally avoid weighing in on policy debates--consulted immigration attorneys who said the removed materials on the mechanics of implementing asylum policy were not outdated or obsolete. "They give a good insight into how the asylum officers themselves are trained to interpret ambiguous areas of the law, and how asylum officers are trained to conduct interviews," Victoria Neilson, an attorney for the Catholic Legal Immigration Network Neilson, told the group. "They give us a little sense of what to expect in some situations."

On Thursday, a USCIS spokesman told Government Executive that "assertions that USCIS has removed or taken office training documents off line are factually inaccurate. USCIS makes these training materials available on the Web to ensure public access to lesson plans."

The agency said the asylum materials had become outdated following a restructuring of training programs across three divisions begun under the previous administration. By April 2017, the lesson plans had been updated and, in response to Freedom of Information Act requests, the older ones were moved from the primary website to an electronic reading room site.

A recent USCIS press release announcing an expansion of online services for people applying for naturalization quoted Director L. Francis Cissna saying: "USCIS is making the process of applying for immigration benefits more efficient, secure and convenient. We continue to add new forms that applicants can complete online."

Obama's US Digital Service Survives Trump—Quietly

By Tom Simonite

Wired, May 31, 2018

The Trump administration doesn't hold much regard for asylum seekers or projects started by President Obama. Attorney General Jeff Sessions has moved to keep more asylum seekers in detention. Trump has rolled back Obama-era initiatives wholesale since taking office. Yet in one corner of the White House, a team of idealistic tech workers established by Obama is helping the Department of Homeland Security offer asylum seekers better customer service.

Welcome to the strange second act of the United States Digital Service.

USDS emerged from the technological and political meltdown of the 2013 launch of healthcare.gov. After a squad of Silicon Valley techies descended to fix the site, President Obama created USDS to get tech workers helping other parts of government. Under Obama, the group's missions included speeding immigration processes, and expediting the acceptance of refugees.

Under Trump, the unit's current leader, Matt Cutts, admits that he's less likely to highlight those projects. "We might talk more about how we save money," says Cutts, a former Google executive, who took the helm after USDS's founding director, a political appointee, departed in 2017. On a visit to WIRED, Cutts highlighted wins such as saving the Veterans Administration almost $100 million by convincing the agency to host a new project in Amazon's cloud instead of buying equipment.

Cutts has also had to change his unit's pitch to potential recruits, many of whom take temporary leaves from tech companies to join USDS for short tours of duty. Obama was popular in the left-leaning tech industry, and would sometimes invite people into the Roosevelt Room to persuade them to join the group. Trump's reputation among tech workers is poor, and he doesn't offer USDS such direct support. Cutts says USDS has around 175 people, roughly the level it did at the start of the Trump administration. That's down from the 202 the group had late in the Obama administration. "In this environment it's very important to make arguments about service and that we're working for the American people," says Cutts.

It's a good line, but Cutts' team works for Trump and his policies, too. The Obama-centric idealism under which USDS was founded has met the political reality of civil service.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In 2016, USDS worked on Homeland Security systems to help meet Obama's goal of welcoming in 85,000 refugees, for example. One contributor to that effort, former Google employee Mark Lerner, says his work at USDS was partly motivated by his family's negative experiences with the US immigration system. Last year, the Trump administration admitted roughly 29,000 refugees.

Lerner now helps lead a USDS unit inside Homeland Security working on projects including making it easier for the more than 300,000 asylum seekers waiting for case reviews to track their status. "When we look at projects we look at doing the greatest good for the greatest need," he says. He also works for a government getting tougher on people seeking asylum. Earlier this month, Sessions announced that all people crossing the U.S. border illegally would be prosecuted, including asylum seekers. Critics say that contravenes the United Nations refugee convention of 1951.

Cutts argues that the core of USDS's work is bipartisan: saving money and preventing screwups like the healthcare.gov launch that make it hard for citizens to get services they need. And he claims USDS's way of doing things is catching on, as agencies witness its successes, and through programs like one announced this month that trains government staff in how to buy digital services more effectively.

Other parts of USDS work have been slowing down. Cutt says he gets fewer emergency calls from agencies asking for help with urgent system problems. "I honestly don't know if there are fewer fires or if people are hiding because they don't want to admit problems," he admits. "We don't seem to have so many emergencies."More Great WIRED Stories

Did The Trump Administration Lose Immigrant Children?

The outrage over the dual news stories was unsurprising. Reports spread that migrant children were being separated from their families at the U.S. border and that Donald Trump's Administration had lost track of nearly 1,500 kids. That led many on social media to use hashtags like #WhereAreTheChildren and #MissingChildren to demand action. But amid the viral news, confusion also spread and led many to conflate the stories.

Recent attention to the issue began at a Senate subcommittee hearing in April, when Steven Wagner, an official at the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), testified that his agency had checked up on 7,635 migrant children who crossed the U.S.-Mexico border on their own and were then placed with adult sponsors in the U.S. The agency found that 6,075 children were still living with their sponsor, 28 had run away, five had been deported and 52 were living with someone else. The rest–the 1,475 lost children–were unaccounted for.

The children in that tally arrived in the U.S. without their parents, so they were not separated from their families by federal officials. That doesn't mean there aren't real concerns about their safety; abusive homes and human traffickers are just two of the worries. It's also possible that sponsors may choose not to answer calls from federal officials to avoid deportation–for the children or themselves. Either way, HHS has argued it is not legally responsible for what happens to the children after they leave its custody. But Senators from both parties have called on the agency to improve its monitoring. "These kids, regardless of their immigration status, deserve to be treated properly, not abused or trafficked," Republican Senator Rob Portman told the subcommittee in April.

The issue of children being taken from their parents as they cross the border into the U.S. is also real, but separate. Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced a new "zero tolerance" policy on May 7 that includes attempting to prosecute every single person who enters the country illegally. This means children who cross the border with their parents are separated from their families as the adults are charged with a crime. "If you don't want your child to be separated, then don't bring them across the border illegally," Sessions said when announcing the policy.

This is likely where some of the confusion originated, as hundreds of children have been separated from their parents at the border. President Trump made things more heated when he tweeted May 26 asking supporters to pressure Democrats to "end the horrible law that separates children from there [sic] parents once they cross the Border into the U.S." There is no law requiring separation, and the zero-tolerance policy came from his own Administration. But if HHS can't keep track of children it was already responsible for, some fear the new policy will make things worse.

Feds Say 1,475 Lost Migrant Kids Aren't Lost, But Don't Know Where They Are

By Ej Montini

USA Today, May 31, 2018

The federal government says the 1,475 migrant children who were taken into custody at the border and can no longer be located are not lost. They simply don't know where they are.

Wait …

Isn't not knowing the whereabouts of these children sort of the definition of lost?

Or is the government rewriting the dictionary?

And are their friends in the news media trying to help them.

I received several emails from writers at The National Review asking if I will issue a correction on the "inaccurate information" in a previous column that read, "The federal government has lost — yes, lost — 1,475 migrant children in its custody."

The argument goes that once the government turns the children over to others the kids are not technically in its custody.

Let's concede that is technically true. Does it absolve the government of responsibility for the children?A new definition for 'lost'?

This is based on a statement by Health and Human Services Deputy Secretary Eric Hargan that reads in part:

The assertion that unaccompanied alien children (UAC) are 'lost' is completely false. …The Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR), which is part of the Department of Health and Human Services, began voluntarily making calls in 2016 as a 30-day follow-up on the release of UAC to make sure that UAC and their sponsors did not require additional services. This additional step, which is not required and was not done previously, is now being used to confuse and spread misinformation.

These children are not 'lost'; their sponsors — who are usually parents or family members and in all cases have been vetted for criminality and ability to provide for them — simply did not respond or could not be reached when this voluntary call was made. While there are many possible reasons for this, in many cases sponsors cannot be reached because they themselves are illegal aliens and do not want to be reached by federal authorities ...

Are we really going to turn this into an argument over semantics rather than an argument over the care of children?

The government argues that it is not legally responsible for children after they had been released from its refugee office and turned over to sponsors. Members of Congress have questioned that policy. In fact, they've questioned it for several years. After a congressional subcommittee found that some migrant children wound up with human traffickers the Department Homeland Security and Health and Human Services Departments said they would create new guidelines to protect children. According to The New York Times, that hasn't yet happened.

The sad truth seems to be that the government has a lousy program for dealing with children who cross the border and are taken into custody.

Steven Wagner, acting assistant secretary for Children and Families first admitted to Congress that the whereabouts of 1,475 such children are unknown.

He says now, "ORR is not legally responsiblefor children after they are released from ORR care," adding that the program for dealing with such children "was never intended to be a foster care system with more than 10,000 children in custody."

Not legally responsible? Never intended to be foster care?

These are children we're talking about. How can the adults who take them into custody not be responsible for their care? Or be permitted to say the children are no longer our problem because we turned them over to someone else?

In the PBS program Frontline, which looked at this subject, Republican Sen. Rob Portman described why he believed the government IS responsible for the children.

He said, "We've got these kids. They're here. They're living on our soil. And for us to just, you know, assume someone else is going to take care of them and throw them to the wolves, which is what HHS was doing, is flat-out wrong. I don't care what you think about immigration policy, it's wrong."

President Trump's administration is taking heat because even Americans who go along with much of the president's border security notions don't want anything to happen to children. None of us do. Or should.

And it's really this simple. Once the government takes a child under its wing, it is our responsibility to make sure that child is being cared for properly. And is safe.

The states do this regularly, though not always perfectly.

When a child is taken into custody by a state — any state, every state — there are systems in place to track that child, check-up on the child's welfare and not rely on a "voluntary" response from the adult to whom the child was entrusted.

If the federal government can't do that, it should admit the failure and work really hard to correct it. Instead, the administration seems more worried about getting a little bad press than it is about those 1,475 kids.

Wherever they are.

It's a mess.

And, ultimately, what is "lost" in all this is not just the children, but our sense of responsibility. Our sense of decency. Our sense of humanity. Our common sense.

How Liberals Got Lost On The Story Of Missing Children At The Border

By Amanda Taub

New York Times, May 31, 2018

Over the weekend, you may have seen a horrifying story: Almost 1,500 migrant children were missing, and feared to be in the hands of human traffickers. The Trump administration lost track of the children, the story went, after separating them from their parents at the border.

The news spread across liberal social media — with the hashtag #Wherearethechildren trending on Twitter — as people demanded immediate action.

But it wasn't true, or at least not the way that many thought. The narrative had combined parts of two real events and wound up with a horror story that was at least partly a myth.

The fact that so many Americans readily believed this myth offers a lesson in how partisan polarization colors people's views on a gut emotional level without many even realizing it.

As other articles have explained, the missing children and the Trump administration's separation of families who are apprehended at the border are two different matters.

The Trump administration does in fact have a new policy of prosecuting all undocumented border crossers, which involves separating parents from their children. But the 1,475 children whom the Department of Health and Human Services recently reported it cannot locate are not among those taken from their parents. These "missing" children had actually come to the United States without their parents, been picked up by the Border Patrol and then released to the custody of a parent or guardian.

Many probably are not really missing. The figure represents the number of children whose households didn't answer the phone when the Department of Health and Human Services called to check on them. The unanswered phone calls may warrant further welfare checks, but are not themselves a sign that something nefarious has happened.

The Obama administration also detained immigrant families and children, as did other recent administrations.

This past weekend, some social media users circulated a photo they said showed children detained as a result of President Trump's policies, but the image was actually from 2014.

Some waved off this seeming contradiction, saying Mr. Trump's other harsh immigration policies put his administration's actions in a different context. And it is true that even when using similar tactics, President Trump and President Obama have expressed very different attitudes toward immigration and espoused different goals.

Those arguments underscore the degree to which this controversy is animated as much by attitudes toward the president and the way he has made immigration a focus of partisan conflict as by specific policy preferences.

Deadlock over immigration has meant that, for decades, politicians have turned to the same compromise: greater enforcement of immigration laws in exchange for more liberal policies. The Reagan administration's amnesty for millions of undocumented immigrants, for instance, also increased security along the Mexican border and made it harder for undocumented immigrants to work. The Obama administration sharply increased deportations in his first term in the hope of building a case for comprehensive immigration reform. (That move did not pay off.)

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Detained immigrant children have frequently been caught up in the enforcement side of that bargain. U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement and the Immigration and Naturalization Service before it have argued that immigration detention is an essential part of enforcement and deterrence, and have vigorously pursued detention of families and children throughout multiple presidential administrations.

Immigrants' rights activists have brought a series of lawsuits that challenged and ultimately overturned many detention efforts. But those efforts did not reach the level of national scandal that the Trump administration's policies have now.

So what has changed? Rising partisan polarization.

Long-running social science surveys have found that since the 1980s, Republicans' opinions of Democrats and Democrats' opinions of Republicans have been increasingly negative. At the same time, as Lilliana Mason, a political scientist at the University of Maryland, writes in a new book, partisan identity has become an umbrella for other important identities, including those involving race, religion, geography and even educational background. It has become a tribal identity itself, not merely a matter of policy preferences.

So it's not that liberals didn't care about immigrant children until Mr. Trump became president, or that they're only pretending to care now so as to score political points. Rather, with the Trump administration's making opposition to immigrants a signature issue, the topic has become salient to partisan conflict in a way it wasn't before.

Mr. Trump's treatment of immigrant families and children, when refracted through the lens of partisan bias, affirms liberals' perception of being engaged in a broader moral struggle with the right, making it feel like an urgent threat. Mr. Obama's detaining of immigrant children, by contrast, felt like a matter of abstract moral concern.

Identity polarization means "you want to show that you're a good member of your tribe," Sean Westwood, a political scientist at Dartmouth College who studies partisan polarization, said in an interview early last year. "You want to show others that Republicans are bad or Democrats are bad, and your tribe is good."

Sharing stories on social media "provides a unique opportunity to publicly declare to the world what your beliefs are and how willing you are to denigrate the opposition and reinforce your own political candidates," he said.

Accurate news can serve that purpose. But fake news has an advantage. It can perfectly capture one side's villainous archetypes of the other, without regard for pesky facts that might not fit the story line.

The narrative that President Trump's team lost hundreds of children after tearing them away from their parents combines some of the main liberal critiques of the administration: that it is racist, that it is authoritarian and that it is incompetent. The administration's very real policy of separating families already plays to the first two archetypes. By adding in the missing children, the story manages to incorporate an incompetence angle as well.

The rapid spread of this particular story also hints at the longer-term dangers of partisan polarization.

Mr. Trump's harsh immigration policies build on restrictions already in place. But taken together, they add up to a drastic departure from the norms of American politics under other recent administrations, particularly when viewed alongside his statements on immigrants, such as his assertions that many Mexican immigrants are "rapists" and that members of the MS-13 gang are "animals."

That departure from norms has caused tremendous suffering for immigrants and their communities. On a broader scale, it is revealing that the story of the missing children felt so true to so many people. It shows the ways that shattering norms also damages public trust.

Research shows that the loss of this trust — particularly when combined with extreme polarization — can weaken support for democracy over time. This story's viral spread suggests that the administration's treatment of immigrants could have far-reaching consequences for all Americans.

This article has been updated to clarify that the Trump administration's new policy is to prosecute all undocumented border crossers and that the result is to separate parents from children; the policy's explicit purpose is not to separate undocumented parents and children.

'Lost' Immigrant Children? That's A Different Story

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By Ron Nixon

New York Times, May 31, 2018

In late May, I woke to a growing buzz online about a story I'd written. I scanned Twitter, Facebook and Google alerts as I do most mornings, and saw post after post about the article. After breakfast, I scrolled through again and there were even more.

This, in and of itself, was not that unusual. What was unusual was that the article had been published nearly a month before. Still, I brushed it aside and didn't think about it again until I got to work. An editor there told me it had been seen hundreds of thousands of times.

It was a month-old story! In my New York Times career, I have seen a stray retweet of a story a month later, or an email from a reader thanking me or to heap on belated criticism. But I had never seen a resurrection quite like this. Interest in my article was revived by a misunderstanding: It was read as evidence that children had arrived at the border with their parents, were separated from them by the Department of Homeland Security and then lost in government bureaucracy. It was a case of something I and other reporters often learn the hard way: Articles have a way of taking on a life of their own.

So what happened? The report had been about the federal government's inability to locate nearly 1,500 children who had been placed with sponsors after the kids showed up alone at the border. But somehow, that story had been conflated with another: the Trump administration's new "zero tolerance" policy at the border intended to deter new migrants with the threat of jail sentences. Migrant parents who are referred for criminal prosecution will be separated from their children.

It all began in April, with a tip from a source that government officials were going to testify before a Senate homeland security subcommittee that they were unable to say with any degree of certainty the location of nearly 1,500 migrant children who had been placed with sponsors.

Children who show up at the border alone are apprehended by the Department of Homeland Security and turned over to the Department of Health and Human Services Office of Refugee Resettlement. That had hit home for Senator Rob Portman, Republican of Ohio. His staff had investigated the placement of migrant children with sponsors in 2016 and found that several had been placed with people who forced them to work on an egg farm in his state. Mr. Portman argued that the government has a responsibility to keep track of the children so that they are not abused or trafficked. The government argued that once it releases the children to a sponsor, its responsibility ends. We posted my article hours before a hearing on the matter. Afterward, I updated it to include questions and comments from the senators and testimony from witnesses. Then I moved on. That is, until last weekend.

I've had articles misinterpreted before — like one last year, when some took my reporting on the Department of Homeland Security's overseas expansion to mean the administration was exporting the travel ban.

In this case, I'm not sure what happened. But here's an educated guess: Several days before my story ran, my colleague Caitlin Dickerson discovered that the Trump administration had taken more than 700 children from adults claiming to be their parents since October, including more than 100 children under the age of 4. The Department of Homeland Security initially denied those numbers, but later confirmed them.

It was also National Missing Children's Day, first proclaimed by President Ronald Reagan in 1983. That fact, merged with an inaccurate tale of children being ripped from their parents' arms, created a perfect social-media storm that soon spilled over into television and talk radio. CNN, NBC and CBS all broadcast stories, and network reporters did their best to try to unravel the confusion about the two separate issues. But the story about children taken from parents and "lost" continued to grow online — to the point that prominent political figures such as Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont weighed in, and culminated with President Trump's blaming his administration's policies at the border on Democrats.

Ultimately, thanks to follow-up media reports, fact-checking websites and social media threads by Dara Lind at Vox and by Ms. Dickerson, in addition to explainers like the one from another colleague, Amy Harmon, much of the confusion has largely been cleared up.

The mix-up, however, had an unexpected consequence: The coverage did force the Trump administration to address several issues surrounding its handling of migrant children.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Senior officials held a call with reporters not only to address the separation of children from parents and the government's responsibility for them afterward; they also had to explain, or at least try to, Mr. Trump's tweet putting the blame for the problem on a law that does not exist. When my original article ran, there was little to no comment from officials other than congressional testimony.

In the end, I'm not sure what could have been done to prevent a situation like this. But the ordeal did emphasize one thing: the value of digging as deeply as possible for the facts. I will continue to report on stories like this. For a hot-button topic like immigration, that's all I can do.

In the midst of public outrage over the forcible separation of families at the border, many also demanded the government find 1,475 "missing" unaccompanied immigrant children. These two issues, however, shouldn't be conflated.

The 1,475 "missing" children are generally not those separated from their parents and likely not "missing" at all.

Demands that the government keep closer tabs on immigrant children after release from federal custody, or make it harder for them to be released at all, will likely harm these very children.

Why those 'lost' kids aren't really lost

Let's back up.

Children who enter the United States without a parent or guardian are "unaccompanied," and the Department of Homeland Security transfers custody of them to the Office of Refugee Resettlement. ORR oversees shelters where the minors are held while their cases are pending — i.e. while the government tries to deport them.

Though ORR facilities are more humane than adult detention centers, they are detention facilities from which children cannot freely come and go.

Children, however, can be released to approved "sponsors" after a screening process, including background checks and home visits, to help ensure children are released to safe homes.

The majority of children are released to close family members, and generally, ORR's only follow-up is a cursory "safety and well-being" call after 30 days.

This is where the 1,475 figure comes in.

We don't want kids detained longer

In late 2017, ORR attempted to check in on 7,635 released children and couldn't account for 1,475 of them — i.e. ORR made the call, but got no response. But this doesn't mean they went "missing." Maybe the family moved or changed phone numbers. Or, given recent anti-immigrant hostility, they were afraid to answer those calls.

While safety is crucial, putting pressure on federal agencies to increase monitoring of these children is not the answer. In the current environment, it's fair to question whether the government would do so to ensure their safety or to facilitate their detention and swift deportation.

Nor is making it harder for immigrant children to be released to sponsors in the first place the answer. With safeguards, releasing children from detention is generally good. It saves taxpayer money, and child welfare experts agree children living with families fare better.

Moreover, those still in ORR custody on their 18th birthday get transferred to adult detention centers.

Two better ways to handle these kids

Instead of suggesting ORR and DHS hunt down these 1,475 children or prolong the detention of unaccompanied immigrant children going forward, those of us seeking to protect their rights and welfare should instead advocate for the government to contract with independent, third-party organizations to provide post-release services.

ORR's information sharing with DHS understandably hinders cooperation by sponsors, who may themselves be undocumented. Contracting a third party for this role, and requiring confidentiality, would alleviate concerns over children's well-being without endangering sponsors' safety.

We should also demand all immigrant children get government-appointed counsel — a right they currently don't have. They would be more likely to respond and attend court hearings if they have an attorney, and the likelihood of winning relief from deportation rises exponentially if children are not forced to represent themselves.

As for ripping young children from their parents at the border, it is immoral and inhumane. And by separating families, the government imposes additional costs on taxpayers, burdens already stretched facilities, and further jams the backlogged immigration system.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

This policy is cruelty inflicted for cruelty's sake, with no regard for due process or any sensible administrative considerations. It must end.

The 1,500 'Missing' Kids Are The Lucky Ones

By Donna Lieberman And Paige Austin

New York Times, May 31, 2018

If you've been on the internet in the past few days, it was impossible to avoid the articles and social media posts assailing the Trump administration for failing to keep track of 1,500 immigrant children who arrived at the United States border alone. Many well-intentioned people flooded the web with their outrage: How could the Trump administration release these children so quickly that it's losing track of them?

In fact, the problem is just the opposite. The administration is not releasing them fast enough.

What has happened is that many people have confused the 1,500 children whom the government has not kept track of with children cruelly separated from their families at the border — a definite but different problem. That mistake and the resulting calls for greater control and surveillance of immigrant children could unwittingly fuel the president's true agenda: to repeal crucial legal protections for children in immigration custody, to slow their release and to deport thousands of children who have come seeking refuge from violence and persecution.

A bit of background: The agency responsible for housing immigrant children and reuniting them with sponsors is the Office of Refugee Resettlement. A nationwide consent decree signed in 1997 and a law passed by Congress in 2008 both accord children in O.R.R. custody special legal protections, including the right to be promptly released and to be placed with a safe adult sponsor. The Trump administration has made no secret of its desire to repeal both protections.

Two weeks ago, the secretary of the Department of Homeland Security told the Senate that these protections "place our communities at risk" and should be terminated or amended. And the flurry of news over the weekend has only made the situation worse. Mr. Trump and administration officials are using the misplaced public outrage as a pretext to call again for the repeal of the law protecting children.

So far, these protections remain on the books, but the administration is already actively undermining them. Within his first few hours on the job in March 2017, Scott Lloyd, O.R.R.'s director, imposed a new policy requiring that he personally approve the release of any immigrant child who has needed heightened supervision while in custody. (Heightened supervision can result from genuine behavioral problems or trumped-up gang allegations.) As a result, over 740 children in O.R.R. custody in the past year have been unable to get out unless Mr. Lloyd — a Trump appointee with no background in child welfare — approves it.

In New York, dozens of affected children have now been detained on average for eight months, and some for over a year — even though many seek release to a parent in the United States. Our organization, the New York Civil Liberties Union, sued to stop the practice, and a federal court in Manhattan will hear argument on that case on June 7.

The lead plaintiff in our class action lawsuit, L.V.M. (who is identified publicly only by his initials), is a teenager from El Salvador who was taken from his home in New York at age 16, shipped hundreds of miles away and placed in immigration custody last July. He had never been separated from his mother before, and he cried every time they spoke on the phone. L.V.M.'s mother complied with every request the resettlement agency made of her. Yet the agency refused to release L.V.M. for eight months, until a few days after we filed our lawsuit.

Another teenager in our lawsuit was detained when he arrived at the American border and the agency refused to reunite him with his father in the United States for over a year. His mental health deteriorated so much in custody that he attempted to commit suicide while awaiting Mr. Lloyd's personal decision on his release.

Another step O.R.R. is taking to prolong detention of children is using the process for vetting their adult sponsors as a tool to deport those sponsors and any other adults who live with them. So far this year, 87 percent of children released from immigration custody have gone to live with a parent or another immediate relative. But under a new regulation set to take effect in June and an agreement last month by the agency and the Department of Homeland Security, any adults who come forward to take in a child are now at risk of deportation. That's because O.R.R. will share their information with Immigration and Customs Enforcement, which can use it to detain and deport them. As a result, more children will languish in immigration custody because their relatives in the United States will fear that stepping forward to help will result in their own deportation.

Given these policies, which are part of a wholesale attack on immigrants in this country, is it any wonder that 1,500 families did not answer the phone when O.R.R. called?

The Trump administration claims its new policies are necessary for children's safety and well-being. But the safety concerns that O.R.R. points to have been addressed. These concerns stem largely from an incident in 2014 in which eight children were released to labor traffickers who forced them to work on a poultry farm in Ohio. In the wake of that horrible incident, a Senate investigation recommended several reforms in O.R.R.'s release procedures, which the agency carried out. They included checking how many children have been released to a single sponsor and undertaking more background checks for sponsors who are not related to a child. Since then, there is no evidence that children are being trafficked.

What children need most of all is release to stable and loving homes while they pursue their immigration cases — precisely as the law requires.

Detention is deeply traumatic for children, and the effects worsen the longer it goes on. Most children who seek refuge in the United States in immigration custody have already experienced severe trauma. In detention, that trauma worsens and children suffer anxiety, depression and post-traumatic stress disorder. One teenager in our case frequently broke down crying in custody. He told care providers he had to hide inside the house for weeks in his home country after receiving death threats; confinement by O.R.R. reminded him of that experience.

The tragedy here is not that the government bureaucracy isn't working. It's that it's working precisely according to Mr. Trump's plan.

The Trump Administration Is About To Kill A Rule That Helps Foreign Entrepreneurs In The U.S.

By Gene Marks

Editor's note: This story published without seeking comment from the Department of Homeland Security. In a statement after publication, DHS said it is "proposing to remove the regulations because the rule is not the appropriate vehicle for attracting and retaining international entrepreneurs nor does it protect U.S. investors and workers." The agency added that it "has only received 12 applications for the program." In addition, DHS said, "The Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) already provides for visa classifications that enable certain entrepreneurs to start businesses and work in the United States, such as the E-2 nonimmigrant classification and the EB-5 immigrant classification." Late last week the Trump administration took another step toward rescinding the International Entrepreneur Rule when the Department of Homeland Security formally issued their notice to kill the rule ahead of comments from the public.

The rule, which was proposed under President Barack Obama and did not require congressional approval, was implemented in December after being delayed by the current administration. It aims to encourage foreign entrepreneurship in the United States by allowing qualified entrepreneurs temporary "parole" in the United States — on a case-by-case basis — so that they can build their businesses. It's estimated that 3,000 entrepreneurs could take advantage of this rule annually.

So why end something that helps, albeit temporarily, thousands of potential job creators? In its proposal to change the rule the Trump administration says that the program "is not the appropriate vehicle for attracting and retaining international entrepreneurs and does not adequately protect U.S. investors and U.S. workers employed by or seeking employment with the start-up." In the proposal, which appears in the Federal Register, the Department of Homeland Security explains that existing visa programs are sufficient to support immigrant entrepreneurs.

"Parole is supposed to be reserved for short-term and emergency purposes," Mark Krikorian of the Center for Immigration Studies told TechCrunch. "Previous administrations have pushed the envelope on parole, and the Obama administration kicked right through the envelope and claimed that the existence of the parole authority meant that the president could admit anyone."

The move comes after Congress failed to officially pass "start-up visa" legislation to protect foreigners who launch companies in the United States.

"The start-up and venture community is very disappointed with DHS's shortsighted decision to turn away American jobs that would be created by the International Entrepreneur Rule," Bobby Franklin, president and chief executive of the National Venture Capital Association, said in a statement Friday. "The facts are clear: Our country needs more entrepreneurship, which is exactly what the International Entrepreneur Rule would bring. We will continue to explain to the administration why immigrant entrepreneurship benefits our country and must be supported by policymakers."

NVCA is very disappointed by @DHSgov's shortsighted proposal to rescind the International Entrepreneur Rule. The International Entrepreneur Rule Wasn't Perfect, But The Trump Administration Killing It Sends The Wrong Message, Experts Say

Entrepreneur Magazine, May 31, 2018

Google. eBay. Tesla. Yahoo. AT&T. Procter & Gamble. Pfizer. From online bidding to pharmaceuticals, these companies cover a wide range of industries. As for what they have in common? They were founded – completely or in part – by immigrants.

In 2017, America's top 500 companies brought home $12.1 trillion in revenue, and more than 40 percent of those earnings came from companies founded by immigrants or their children. That same group founded more than half the top 25 firms on the annual Fortune 500 list, headquartering their companies in 33 of the 50 states and employing more than 12.8 million people worldwide.

Despite these successes, it's not easy for foreign-born entrepreneurs to launch businesses in the United States. And one controversial new development in laws regarding immigrant entrepreneurs is decried by some, while others deem it necessary.

Here's the rundown: The Department of Homeland Security has now formally proposed to remove the International Entrepreneur Rule (IER), an executive order by the Obama administration set to go into effect in June 2017. The department stated in a release that the rule "represents an overly broad interpretation of parole authority, lacks sufficient protections for U.S. workers and investors and is not the appropriate vehicle for attracting and retaining international entrepreneurs." (As the rule was never put into place, the entrepreneurs involved in the companies mentioned above came to the U.S. through other avenues.)

The much-debated IER program, due to take effect in June 2017, was enacted to allow more entrepreneurs to immigrate to the U.S. to start their businesses. To qualify, an entrepreneur needed to have an ownership stake of at least 10 percent in their company, as well as garner at least $250,000 from a qualified investor or at least $100,000 via a qualified government award or grant, says Douglas Ligor, a senior behavioral and social scientist at RAND Corporation, a nonprofit global policy think tank (and a former employee at the Department of Homeland Security). The program's pros included the fact that it lowered the financial threshold often required for entrepreneurs immigrating to the U.S.

Experts say the IER also has quite a few cons. Despite being colloquially referred to as the "startup visa," the IER isn't a visa at all – rather, it's a parole period for immigrant entrepreneurs that begins with 2.5 years. If a business meets certain success requirements (creating at least five qualified jobs and reaching at least $500,000 in annual revenue), the parole period can be extended another 2.5 years. But at the end of that time period, the entrepreneur cannot receive an admission status, and unless they're approved for a green card through other avenues, the government will require them to leave the country no matter how well the business is doing. "So what happens to the business?" Ligor asks. He mentions that historically, parole has been used almost solely for humanitarian benefits, so this application of the law is seen by many as an inefficient workaround. He also says the current administration sees the rule as burning up too many agency resources for something temporary – especially when other, less temporary avenues exist for immigrant entrepreneurs to launch businesses in the U.S. (These other avenues, called the the E-2 nonimmigrant classification and the EB-5 immigrant classification, have their own pros and cons.)

The Obama administration estimated 2,490 people would apply to the IER program each year, but just 12 applications have been received to date, according to an estimate from a United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) spokesperson. Some experts attribute this in part to the Trump administration's new rule, published days before the IER's implementation, stating that the program would be delayed and likely rescinded completely in the future.

Despite the IER's shortcomings, some experts believe it's a step in the right direction for the United States to make foreign-born entrepreneurs feel welcome.

"The United States is one of only two or three industrial economies in the world that does not have a designated visa category explicitly designed for foreign-born entrepreneurs who want to come to the United States to launch their businesses," says John Dearie, founder and president of the Center for American Entrepreneurship (CAE). Many other countries have overhauled immigration laws in recent years to "roll out the red carpet" for immigrant entrepreneurs in particular, and the U.S.'s stricter rules could close the country off to potential new businesses. When it comes to an individual with a viable business idea, private investment to back it up and the intent to create jobs, "there's no other immigrant category of greater economic value," Dearie says.

Indeed, more than half of the nation's billion-dollar startups have an immigrant co-founder, according to data from the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation. Immigrants are also nearly twice as likely as native-born Americans to start businesses – a statistic that has held true for the past several years.

"The decision by the current administration to rescind the IER sends the absolute wrong message at the wrong time," says Larry Jacob, vice president of public affairs at the Kauffman Foundation. "When entrepreneurship has been in a decades-long decline, we need more dreamers, doers and makers in our country."

The Department of Homeland Security will allow people to submit their thoughts on the IER's removal in written comments up until June 28, 2018 either online or by mail. For online comments, visit the Federal eRulemaking Portal (here's the shortcut link to comment on this particular issue), and follow instructions to submit.

An alternative to the IER, the "Startup Act," was re-introduced in September 2017 by U.S. Senators Jerry Moran (R-Kan.), Mark Warner (D-Va.), Roy Blunt (R-Mo.) and Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.). The lawmakers claim the number of startups in America has declined by almost half over recent decades. In light of the fact that at least seven other countries – Canada, Chile, the United Kingdom, Singapore, Cyprus, Latvia and Lithuania – have taken action in recent years to support foreign-born entrepreneurs, the legislation includes provisions for a "startup visa" for 75,000 legal immigrants to launch businesses and create jobs in the U.S.

Lawsuit Says Citizenship Question On Census Targets Minorities For Political Gain

By Michael Wines

New York Times, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON — A decision by the Trump administration to add a question on citizenship to the 2020 census discriminates against ethnic minorities for political gain, violating the Constitution, argues a federal lawsuit brought Thursday on behalf of several groups representing minorities.

The lawsuit, filed by 21 organizations and two citizen plaintiffs in United States District Court in Maryland, is the fourth major effort to block a citizenship question from the 2020 tally. The first suit, filed in April by a mostly Democratic coalition of state attorneys general and cities, argued that the citizenship question violated the Constitution's requirement that a census count everyone residing in the United States, as well as laws governing data quality and administrative procedure.

The latest suit repeats those claims, but also argues that the administration added the question to deter Asian-Americans, Latinos and some immigrants from completing census forms for fear that the information would be used against them or members of their household, and thus undercount them in the final census tally. A serious population undercount, the plaintiffs said, would reduce minority representation in the House of Representatives and state and local governments when political districts are reapportioned early next decade.

That violates the Fifth Amendment's equal-protection clause, the lawsuit states — the first time that opponents of the citizenship question have leveled a charge of intentional discrimination against the administration for its census decision.

Both Asian-Americans and Latino voters tend to favor Democratic candidates, and political scientists and strategists universally agree that undercounting their true share of the population likely would increase Republican political control.

By adding a citizenship question to the tally, administration officials "believe reducing the Latino count would hurt in reapportioning states that they have a political interest in hurting," said Thomas A. Saenz, the president and general counsel of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, which represents the plaintiffs. "I'm not sure that's entirely correct, but I think that's what is behind it."

More than that, Mr. Saenz said, the decision to add a citizenship question fits a pattern of attacks on the legitimacy of Latinos and other minorities that dates to the start of Donald J. Trump's presidential campaign.

Mr. Trump began his presidential bid in June 2015 by calling undocumented Mexican immigrants "rapists" who brought drug and crime problems with them. Rhetorical assaults on immigrants have become a staple of his political appearances, and efforts to restrict legal immigration and deport undocumented residents are major policy goals.

The lawsuit devotes almost eight pages to past statements on immigration and immigrants by Mr. Trump, during his candidacy and presidency, and by administration officials as evidence of the administration's intent to single out foreigners as a threat.

Representatives for the United States Census Bureau, the Commerce Department and the White House did not immediately respond to a request to comment.

The Census Bureau does ask a small slice of the population about citizenship in a poll, the American Community Survey, which provides periodic snapshots of demographic changes for civic and business leaders.

But no general census has asked respondents to state their citizenship since 1950. In recent decades, the Census Bureau had fought repeatedly to block the question, and in 2009, eight former directors of the bureau warned Congress that it "would put the accuracy of the enumeration at risk," because noncitizens and their relatives would either refuse to fill out the form or lie about their status.

Inside the bureau, experts warned as recently as last year of "unprecedented" concern among minorities who were asked to respond to test census forms that the Trump administration would seize on legally confidential census information to target them or their household members for harassment or deportation. In meetings with census workers, even some legal immigrants gave false responses on test census forms or refused to provide information on roommates or family members.

Then the Justice Department said that it needed more information on citizenship to enforce the 1965 Voting Rights Act. In late March, Commerce Secretary Wilbur L. Ross Jr. ordered that the citizenship question in the American Community Survey be added to the 2020 census.

Mr. Ross wrote then that the question had been used in that survey without incident, and that there was no "definitive, empirical support" for concerns that it would deter minorities from filling out census forms.

But demographers and other census experts, including the bureau's own Scientific Advisory Committee, dispute that. Civil-rights advocates and some former Justice Department lawyers have said that the Voting Rights Act has been enforced for decades with existing citizenship data, and that the demand for more was but a pretext for adding the question to the decennial census.

Immigrant Rights Groups File Lawsuit Challenging Census Citizenship Question

By Lydia Wheeler

The Hill, May 31, 2018

A group of 21 immigrant rights advocacy organizations on Thursday filed a lawsuit challenging the Trump administration's decision to add a citizenship question to the 2020 census.

The lawsuit, filed in the federal district court in Maryland, marks the fifth legal challenge that the administration is facing over the move.

The Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, the Asian Americans Advancing Justice and the Law Office of Robert P. Newman brought the suit on the groups' behalf, alleging that the question violates the clause of the Constitution that requires an "actual Enumeration" of every person living in the United States to take place every 10 years.

The groups argue the question could scare certain populations from answering honestly and will cause a disproportionate undercount of non-U.S. citizens, the U.S. citizen family members of non-U.S. citizens, Asian-Americans and Latinos.

"Organizational Plaintiffs' members, clients, and constituents live in communities whose residents are less likely to respond to the citizenship question on the Census out of fear that Census responses will not be kept confidential and that there may be adverse immigration enforcement against non-U.S. citizen household members," they argued in the 90-page complaint.

The groups, which include the Mi Familia Vota Education Fund and the California Latino Legislative Caucus, are asking the court to declare a census question about citizenship status unconstitutional and block the Department of Commerce and the Census Bureau from including it on this year's form.

The Department of Justice originally asked for the question to be added to the 2020 census. It has claimed it needs citizenship data to better enforce the Voting Rights Act.

The Department of Commerce created a firestorm by approving the request in March. Democrats and civil rights and immigrant groups are pushing courts across the country to intervene.

The National Redistricting Foundation also has a legal challenge to the census question pending in the federal district court in Maryland on behalf of a group of Maryland and Arizona residents.

California Attorney General Xavier Becerra (D) and the Lawyer's Committee for Civil Rights Under the Law filed separate lawsuits on the questionnaire in the federal district court for the Northern District of California, and New York and 17 other blue-leaning states sued in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York.

US Cities File Legal Brief To Support Philadelphia

Some U.S. cities have filed a legal brief to support Philadelphia in that city's legal battle with the federal government over grant money being threatened because of how Philadelphia deals with immigrants who are in the country illegally.

The group includes New York City, Chicago, Los Angeles, along with some counties. They filed a brief Thursday with the federal court in Pennsylvania hearing the case over Philadelphia's so-called "sanctuary city" status.

Philadelphia's policy is to only turn immigrants over to federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement if they have a warrant signed by a judge.

But the Justice Department has threatened to cut off millions of dollars if cities don't show they're cooperating with immigration officials.

Philadelphia sued the federal government last year over a move toward grant funding restrictions.

Sanctuary Cities May Go To Nevada Voters In Future Election

U.S. News & World Report, May 31, 2018

A Nevada judge has given the green light to supporters of a ballot measure aimed at banning sanctuary cities to try to bring the question before the voters in a future election.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Carson City District Court Judge Todd Russell approved new language Wednesday describing the impact of the proposed constitutional amendment, which would make it illegal for Nevada cities and counties to become "sanctuary communities" that fail to cooperate with federal immigration authorities.

The Nevada Supreme Court had agreed with civil rights lawyers who argued the previous description was intentionally broad and confusing. The high court blocked it from the November ballot earlier this month, but sent the case back to Russell's court for further review.

The initiative's wording, first challenged by the American Civil Liberties Union of Nevada last November, now warns voters that the measure "may significantly limit the power of local government to implement and carry out local priorities, policies and programs."

The Reno Gazette Journal reports the measure's chief sponsor, Republican Senate Leader Michael Roberson, admitted there's not enough time to gather the more than 112,000 signatures necessary to get the initiative on the November ballot. But he says the ruling is an important step toward protecting the state "from dangerous criminals."

"The ACLU has failed to defeat our initiative and we now look forward to obtaining the necessary signatures to place this initiative on the 2020 ballot. In the meantime, politicians of all stripes should be on notice that the people of Nevada will not tolerate sanctuary city policies coming out of Carson City or from our local governments," Roberson said.

Nevada is not currently home to any self-identified sanctuary communities.

Holly Wellborn, ACLU of Nevada's policy director, said the latest courtroom clash produced mixed results.

"Both sides weren't totally happy with it," Wellborn said. "We're happy it'll no longer be misleading to voters and that it makes the impact on local governments clearer to voters."

If backers can gather enough signatures to get the measure on the 2020 ballot, it would have to pass with a majority of voters that year and again in 2022 to become part of the state constitution.

Man Who Allegedly Killed Teen In Houston Crash Had Been Deported 3 Times

By Abc News

ABC News, May 31, 2018

The man accused of killing a teenage girl in a car accident in Houston had previously been deported from the United States three times, federal records show.

Edy Lopez-Hernandez, 27, was arrested after crashing into another vehicle and fleeing the scene Sunday.

He was later determined to be under the influence of unspecified narcotics when he was driving "at a high rate of speed" and crashed into the rear of another car, according to Houston police.

A 17-year-old girl in the back seat of the vehicle that he hit died on impact, police said in a statement about the crash on the evening of May 27.

Lopez-Hernandez, who is from Guatemala, got out of his car with his 2-year-old son and left the scene before being stopped by a witness who told him to go back to the scene, where he was taken into police custody, authorities said.

In addition to the teen who died in the crash, the 65-year-old male driver of that car was critically injured and transported to a hospital. Another passenger was injured but she is expected to recover from her injuries, according to police.

U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) had deported Lopez-Hernandez three times prior to his arrest this week. The first of those deportations took place in 2010 followed by two tin 2011.

He has now been placed in an immigration detainer by ICE.

The Harris County District Attorney's office confirmed to ABC News that it has filed four charges against Lopez-Hernandez in connection to the deadly crash: murder, two counts of intoxication assault, and one count of failure to stop and render aide.

Because Lopez-Hernandez had two prior offenses of illegal entry to the United States, the office said, his bond was set at $100,000.

Man Held For Immigration Officials Following Rape Charge

Palm Beach (FL) Post, May 31, 2018

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A Boynton Beach man arrested Sunday for allegedly raping a woman and threatening her son if she told anyone has been deported twice, according to federal agents.

U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) lodged an immigration detainment request for Andres Gomez-Avellaneda, 35, after his arrest in Boynton Beach. He was removed from the country once in 2002 and again in 2017, said Nestor Yglesias, spokesperson for ICE and its Homeland Security Investigations.

Federal court records show Gomez-Avellaneda, a native of Mexico, was found to be in the U.S. illegally several times dating back to the late 1990s.

In 1998, Gomez-Avellaneda was granted a voluntary departure from America, a legal alternative to deportation that allows the person a window of time to leave the U.S. and "avoid the adverse future consequences under the immigration laws attributable to having been ordered removed," according to the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services website.

It is unclear when Gomez-Avellaneda reentered the U.S., but in April 2002 he was convicted of possession of an unauthorized ID card in Palm Beach County and court records show he was deported by federal agents that July.

Gomez-Avellaneda was found back on U.S. soil more than a decade later, and in 2016 he was convicted in federal court of illegal reentry after removal, a felony for which he was deported a second time after serving a year-long prison sentence, according to court records.

On Sunday night, Gomez-Avellaneda was arrested on a charge of sexual battery by coercion and threat. A woman told Boynton Beach police that he raped her in a car Sunday morning, then threatened her throughout the day, according to the city's arrest reports.

Gomez-Avellaneda is being held in the Palm Beach County Jail on a $1 million bond while awaiting his next hearing, on June 26, according to county clerk records.

"ICE is focused on identifying, arresting and removing public safety threats, such as convicted criminal aliens and gang members, as well as individuals who have violated our nation's immigration laws," Yglesias said in a statement.

Man Suspected In Deadly Street Racing Crash Had Conviction For Smuggling Marijuana Across Border

By Alene Tchekmedyian

Los Angeles Times, May 31, 2018

A man suspected in a deadly street racing crash that killed two young brothers two weeks ago was deported in 2012 after he was caught smuggling 44 packages of marijuana across the U.S. border from Mexico, court records show.

Josue Leyva-Gallegos, 30, was headed to Perris through the Otay Mesa Port of Entry with a valid U.S. permanent resident card in May 2012 when he was sent for further inspection by a computer-generated referral, according to a probable cause statement filed in federal court.

An X-ray of his car showed anomalies in the gas tank. Authorities requested a drug-sniffing dog, which alerted to the gas cap opening. In the gas tank, a Customs and Border Protection officer found roughly 94 pounds of marijuana. Leyva-Gallegos later told authorities he had been hired to smuggle marijuana into the country for $800.

He pleaded guilty two months later to one count of importing marijuana.

After his conviction, his legal status was revoked and he was ordered removed by an immigration judge in October 2012, according to Sarah Rodriguez, spokeswoman for Immigration and Customs Enforcement. He was sent to Mexico the next day.

At some point, Rodriguez said, he returned to the U.S. illegally.

The deadly crash occurred May 15 after Leyva-Gallegos began street racing with his cousin, Ricardo Zuniga.

Zuniga told authorities that he pulled up next to his cousin at an intersection in Perris that evening to tell him to meet up at his home to hang out. But Leyva-Gallegos looked back at him and asked, "You ready?" before counting to three.

He knew this meant his cousin wanted to race.

Moments later, the pair hit the gas. Each took off at a high rate of speed, authorities said, with Zuniga driving on the wrong side of the road.

Soon, Zuniga was facing an oncoming car and was unable to swerve out of the way. His Honda Accord collided head-on with a Nissan Versa carrying three brothers on their way to pick up their sisters from school. The younger two,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Dominick and Antonio "Tony" Gonzalez, 6 and 8, were killed.

Leyva-Gallegos fled the scene. A week ago, the U.S. Marshals Service found him more than a thousand miles away in Kent, Wash, where he was trying to register a vehicle at a local DMV office.

On Thursday, ICE filed a detainer — a request that local authorities detain an individual for an additional 48 hours — with the King County Correctional Facility in Seattle.

Leyva-Gallegos is now awaiting extradition to California on two counts of vehicular manslaughter with gross negligence, charges that carry a sentencing enhancement for fleeing the scene of a crime, according to Riverside County court records. His bail was set at $10 million.

Zuniga was charged with two counts of murder, along with one count each of driving without a license and failing to carry proof of insurance, records show. He is being held on $2-million bail and has pleaded not guilty.

He Came To America 7 Times, And Now He'll Serve Time For It

Jackson (MS) Clarion Ledger, May 31, 2018

An undocumented immigrant who had re-entered the country six previous times was sentenced to five years in federal prison after coming back into the country the seventh time.

A release from the U.S. attorney's office on Thursday stated that Oscar Alfredo Burgon-Urrea, 39, of Honduras, pleaded guilty on March 7 to a charge of unlawful re-entry by a removed alien previously convicted of a felony.

Authorities said the Moss Point Police Department found Burgon-Urrea in a drunken state by the side of I-10 on Dec. 4. An Immigration and Customs Enforcement agent ended up realizing Burgon-Urrea was not in the country legally while he was being held by local officials for public drunkenness.

Further investigation revealed Burgon-Urrea had been lawfully removed from the United States in 2005, and had illegally re-entered the United States on six subsequent occasions. He was convicted in 2011 by the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas, Del Rio Division, on the offense of re-entry by a deported alien, a felony.

Burgon-Urrea had been known through the years by multiple variations of his name including Oscar Alfredo Burgos-Urrea, Oscar Alredo Burgos Ureea, Oscar Alfredo Burgos, Oscar Burgos and Oscar Alfredo.

Burgon-Urrea was additionally sentenced to three years of supervised release upon completion of his prison term, and will face removal proceedings by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. If Burgon-Urrea returns again to the United States, after removal and during the term of his supervised release, he could face a separate term of imprisonment in addition to any other penalty, the release said.

In the release, U.S. Attorney Mike Hurst praised the cooperation exhibited by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security,ICE, the Moss Point Police Department, and the Jackson County Sheriff's Department. Assistant United States Attorney Stan Harris was the prosecutor for the case.

Lawmakers urge release of illegal transgender immigrants after transgender woman dies

Nearly 40 members of Congress signed a letter to Secretary of Homeland Security Kirstjen Nielsen urging the release of transgender illegal immigrants after a transgender woman died while in the custody of ICE, the Associated Press reported.

U.S. Rep. Kathleen Rice (D-N.Y.), along with 38 other members of Congress signed the letter that expressed concern for the safety of those who may be targets of abuse while detained by the Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

"These individuals, particularly transgender women, are extremely vulnerable to abuse, including sexual assault, while in custody," the letter said.

Roxana Hernandez, a 33-year-old transgender woman, who was part of the Central American migrant caravan, died Friday at a New Mexico hospital. The cause of death is yet unknown.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The letter asked the federal agency to act swiftly to ensure the safety of LGBT detainees throughout their immigration proceedings. What did LGBT advocates say?

California-based Transgender Law Center issued a statement demanding Homeland Security to adopt a policy against detaining transgender people and for DHS to parole all LGBTQ illegal immigrants, as well as those with life-threatening medical conditions.

The group also demanded officials "defund and dismantle ICE and Customs and Border Protection."

Other national LGBTQ groups issued statements, as well.

"Immigration and Customs Enforcement clearly cannot detain transgender women safely, and therefore should not detain transgender women at all," Aaron C. Morris, executive director of New York-based Immigration Equality, said in a statement. What happened?

On May 9, Hernandez arrived at San Ysidro port of entry in California and asked for asylum, according to the caravan organizers.

ICE took custody of the Honduran immigrant on May 13.

Hernandez, who was listed as Jeffry Hernandez when taken into custody in San Diego, was transferred to El Paso, Texas, and later moved to a transgender unit in New Mexico.

Officials admitted Hernandez to a hospital in Albuquerque, New Mexico, on May 17 after she showed signs of pneumonia, dehydration, and complications of HIV.

Hernandez died on May 25.

Officials are awaiting an autopsy to determine the cause of death. Why do they believe ICE is at fault?

The Congress members who signed the letter, along with some advocates, have questioned the medical care and treatment of transgender detainees while in federal custody.

All detainees receive dental, medical, and mental health screenings within 12 hours of arrival at a detention center, and emergency care is available around the clock, according to ICE. What else?

Hernadez had entered the U.S. illegally on three other occasions.

Twice between 2005 and 2009, when she was allowed to return to Mexico voluntarily after claiming to be a Mexican national.

In 2006, Hernandez was convicted of theft and prostitution. Three years later, she was convicted on other charges, the AP reported.

Later, in 2014, Hernandez illegally entered again. She was arrested and deported, according to authorities.

Transgender Honduran Woman's Death In US 'Ice Box' Detention Prompts Outcry

Roxana Hernández reportedly died after five days in US custody in facilities notorious for their freezing temperatures

By Carla Green

The Guardian (UK), May 31, 2018

A transgender Honduran woman died in Ice custody last Friday after coming to the US as part of a caravan of Central American migrants, including several dozen other transgender women fleeing persecution in their respective countries.

Roxana Hernández reportedly died from HIV-related complications following an alleged five-day detention in what's known by immigrant rights groups as the "ice box" – Ice detention facilities notorious for their freezing temperatures.

Her death has prompted an outcry, with protests in New Mexico, where Hernández died, and activists speaking out in New York, with some posting social media under the hashtags #JusticeforRoxana and #AbolishICE.

The Transgender Law Center (TLC), a leading transgender advocacy group, called Hernández's treatment in US custody "negligent", and – along with other civil rights groups – has issued a list of demands, including that Ice stop detaining transgender women altogether.

"If you have an incoming immigrant that shows signs of medical distress – including being HIV positive and having pneumonia – it is negligent to place them in the 'ice box' for any amount of time," said Flor Bermudez, the legal director of TLC. "They might have wrongfully caused her death."

A statement from Ice said that Hernández arrived in the US on 9 May at the San Ysidro port of entry, was transferred to the transgender unit of Cibola County Correctional Center in New Mexico, and was hospitalized the next day for dehydration, pneumonia and other HIV-related complications. She died eight days later.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

According to Ice, Hernández was the sixth immigrant to die in its custody since October of last year.

Hernández and other women in the caravan were fleeing countries where it is often dangerous and even deadly to be trans, Bermudez said. Yet despite coming to the US in search of safety, trans women in Ice detention can face "similar risks" to those they face at home, TLC said in its statement. "They are targeted and harassed by police or held in detention where they experience violence, discrimination, and [unable] to access to medical care, all of which may lead to dire consequences."

Concerns about the protection of LGBT migrants were echoed in a letter sent by 19 members of Congress on Wednesday to the US secretary of homeland security, Kirstjen Nielsen.

"These individuals, particularly transgender women, are extremely vulnerable to abuse, including sexual assault, while in custody," said the letter, which was signed by the US representative Kathleen M Rice, a Democrat from New York, and 18 other US lawmakers.

In an interview with BuzzFeed News before she left Mexico, Hernández said that she contracted HIV after being gang-raped while walking home in her neighborhood. "Trans people in my neighborhood are killed and chopped into pieces, then dumped inside potato bags," she told the news organization.

A 2016 report from TLC and Cornell University on the state of human rights abuses for transgender women in Mexico – which Bermudez said holds true for most countries in Central America – found that transgender women "still face pervasive discrimination, hatred, violence, police abuse, rape torture, and vicious murder". The situation has only worsened as transgender women have become more visible and the LGBT community in Mexico have won some battles, like the right to gay marriage in 2010, the report found.

Hernández had previously come to the United States on three separate occasions, according to Ice, and was eventually deported each time. This time, she joined a caravan of migrants organized by the advocacy group Pueblo Sin Fronteras after saving enough money to meet up with the caravan in Guatemala, BuzzFeed News reported.

In its statement about Hernández's death, Ice said that all detainees "receive medical, dental and mental health intake screening within 12 hours of arriving at each detention facility … and access to daily sick call and 24-hour emergency care". But Bermudez said "that's not the experience that migrants have", and particularly so in the case of transgender people.

"They are a vulnerable population with particular needs," Bermudez said. "[Ice is] obviously not equipped to handle the medical needs that many trans folks have."

Transgender Member Of Migrant Caravan Dies In ICE Custody

By Meghan Keneally

ABC News, May 31, 2018

A transgender woman who was a part of a migrant caravan that arrived at the southern border of the U.S. earlier this month has died in custody.

Roxana Hernandez traveled with the group of migrants from Mexico beginning in late March and was later transferred to an immigration detention center in New Mexico.

Her health reportedly deteriorated quickly after being held for days in "the dreaded 'icebox' – holding cells with extremely low temperatures" for five days, according to a joint statement from three caravan groups.

Hernandez, a Honduras national, died in the Immigration and Customs Enforcement facility in Albuquerque on May 25.

Her death was confirmed in a statement from three groups that organized the caravan, as well as from ICE, though the government agency referred to her using what was likely her legal name, Jeffry Hernandez.

Hernandez arrived at the San Ysidro port of entry on May 9 and was held in the so-called "icebox" for five days, "suffering cold, lack of adequate food or medical care, with the lights on 24 hours a day," according to a joint statement from three caravan groups.

"During her first week in the United States, Roxy's body and spirit quickly deteriorated," the statement said.

The so-called "iceboxes" have been a point of contention for years, and the non-profit advocacy group The American Immigration Council released a report in 2015 noting that while the facilities are not designed to hold people overnight they are regularly used to do so.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The group said the facilities, commonly called "hieleras" which is the Spanish word for freezer, are "wholly inadequate forany overnight detention" and have no beds, "are extremely cold, frequently overcrowded, and routinely lacking in adequate food, water, and medical care."

ICE said in its statement that she was admitted to a hospital on May 17 with symptoms of pneumonia, dehydration and complications associated with HIV before being airlifted to Lovelace Medical Center. She remained in intensive care until her death on May 25, ICE said. ICE reported that the preliminary cause of death was identified as cardiac arrest but an autopsy is pending.

The caravan organizers said her death was due to a lack of care from U.S. officials.

"Roxy died due to medical negligence by U.S. immigration authorities," the groups' statement said. "Roxy died in the country she had sought to start a new life in, she died for being a transgender woman, a migrant who was treated neither with respect nor with dignity."

ICE notes in its statement that Hernandez illegally entered the U.S. three times, and had theft, immoral conduct and prostitution convictions from incidents in Dallas in 2006 and 2009.

Calif. Judge Dismisses 32 Illegal Immigrant Cases; Lawyers Blame Zero-tolerance Policy

The Blaze, May 31, 2018

A California federal court dismissed 32 illegal immigrant crossings cases on Wednesday after a nationwide computer crash delayed detainees from receiving a timely arraignment, The San Diego Union-Tribune reported.

Federal Defenders of San Diego filed writs of habeas corpus at the government's request for 37 clients whose arraignments were scheduled for earlier that day but weren't presented by authorities.

"The Bureau of Prisons has experienced a nationwide computer shutdown which began early Tuesday morning and is ongoing," Kelly Thornton, spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's Office in San Diego, told the Union-Tribune. "This has affected the Metropolitan Correctional Center's ability to process new inmates."

"As a result, the United States filed motions to dismiss a number of cases against defendants who were not brought to court in a timely manner," she added. "The MCC's computer system is improving, and we expect this issue to be resolved in the near future."

U.S. District Chief Judge Barry Moskowitz dismissed 32 misdemeanor cases at a hearing on Wednesday morning. He also ordered authorities to produce five felony detainees, who were arraigned later that morning. What did the defense attorneys say?

Defense attorneys claim it's not just a computer problem that caused the recent problems.

Many believe it's the court system inability to handle the influx of cases since the government cracked down on illegal immigration.

"Our court system can't handle it. We don't have the infrastructure and can't provide appropriate due process and representation," Federal Defenders of San Diego executive director Reuben Cahn told the Union-Tribune.

Federal Defenders of San Diego is an agency that handles much of the public criminal defense work in the Southern District of California.

"People are falling through the cracks," Cahn said. "The ability to move that number of cases isn't there." What's the typical wait time for arraignment?

The rule of the thumb is typically one day for arraignment unless authorities detained the person over a weekend.

Ryan Stitt, who represented the 37 detainees, told the newspaper that he believes many of the arraignment delays could have been avoided.

He said authorities transported the entire group to the Metropolitan Correctional Center on Tuesday morning, rather than bringing them over continuously during the Memorial Day weekend. Of the five felony cases that were moved forward, four arrests were made Saturday and one on Sunday.

Border Patrol stations, ill-equipped for long-term confinement, held the detainees until Tuesday, Stitt said.

"They are sitting in really horrible conditions, with inadequate food, inadequate clothing, inadequate bedding," Cahn said. What did the U.S. Department of Justice say?

U.S. Department of Justice spokesman Devin O'Malley told the Union-Tribune that the prison's computer shutdown was responsible for

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Tuesday's problems and that the delay was not caused by the zero-tolerance policy.

"We must promote and enforce the rule of law in order to protect our nation and its citizens," O'Malley said. "The Department of Justice, through multiple avenues, has been in touch with administrators of the federal judiciary in order to find practical solutions to an expected increase in prosecutions along the Southwest border. We look forward to continued coordination with the courts and their Chief Judges in order to properly adjudicate cases and respect due process rights."

Arrests And Deportations Are Up 40% Under Trump, But May Never Rival Rates Of Early Obama Days

Despite ramped up immigration efforts, arrests and deportations under Trump are about half of what they were under during the early years of the Obama administration, according to a new report.

The reason: Pushback from California and other 'sanctuary' states and cities makes it 'quite unlikely' that U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement will ever again rival the record enforcement levels under Obama, according to a year-long study by the Migration Policy Institute, a Washington D.C. think tank.

Arrests and deportations were up about 40 percent during the first eight months of Trump's term compared to the same period the year prior – totaling 110,568 and 61,094, respectively. Despite that, the numbers remain well below 2010-2011 levels, when more than 300,000 arrests were made and more than 200,000 people were deported, according to the study.

Sanctuary cities have made a difference because historically the federal government has relied heavily on state and local law enforcement's cooperation. Nearly 70 percent of the ICE arrests in the first months of Trump's presidency originated from state and local prisons. While that's a significant share, it is down from more than 85 percent from 2008-2011.

'People need to understand that ICE doesn't do most of its arrests on their own,' said Randy Capps, director of research at Migration Policy Institute. 'For most of their arrests they get people through the local criminal justice system.'

An estimated 300 jurisdictions have sanctuary policies in place to limit local cooperation with immigration enforcement, and roughly 200 of those do not honor ICE detainers – written requests for local law enforcement to detain people for an extra 48 hours to give federal agents time to decide whether to make an arrest.

'Places that do fully cooperate … they're back to arresting people on driving violations and other minor crimes and getting taken into custody,' Capps said. 'But that's not happening in California, it's not happening in Chicago, it's not happening in New York City.'

California's role has been significant, with the state's share of national ICE arrests dropping to 14 percent in 2017 – down from 23 percent in 2013.

Meanwhile, Texas – not a sanctuary state – has seen its share of overall ICE arrests rise to 28 percent, up from 25 percent over the same period.

'Sanctuary jurisdictions are strongly committed to assisting illegal aliens in evading federal immigration law and have negatively impacted law enforcement relationships across the country,' an ICE spokeswoman said in a statement.

She added that sanctuaries 'result in the release of dangerous individuals back into the community.'

The 'sanctuary' movement started during the early Obama era of heavy crackdowns, and exploded after Trump was elected, Capps said. The number of arrests and deportations decreased over the course of Obama's terms as his administration sought to narrow the focus of who they were after.

'President Trump and the people that work for him have been much more vocal about immigration than president Obama was,' he said. 'A lot of the enforcement that happened under him (Obama) happened more quietly … we think that kind of heightens the fear (in immigrant communities).'

But to speculate that Trump's numbers will never surpass early Obama days could be 'wishful thinking,' said Mark Krikorian, executive director of Center for Immigration Studies, a Washington D.C.-based anti-immigration think tank.

He noted that the system connecting fingerprinting systems to the FBI and Department of Homeland Security were not fully integrated with every law enforcement jurisdiction in the country until 2013. Krikorian said that resource could eventually prove to offset the decreased cooperation of local law enforcement agencies under Trump.

'Obama inherited 16 years of investment in deportations and frittered it away,' he said. 'Trump in contrast has inherited a weakened infrastructure for deporting illegal aliens and is trying to strengthen it, basically trying to repeat the increase in deportation capacity that Clinton and Bush did when they were president.'

Resistance has come in other forms too – a number of cities have changed their policing tactics to minimize noncitizen arrests. For example, the decriminalization of driving without a license.

Increasingly, local communities and governments are offering 'know your rights' seminars to inform immigrants here illegally that they are not legally required to open their doors for ICE officers who don't have a warrant.

The Trump administration has responded to the decrease in cooperation by increasing 'at-large' arrests, in which ICE agents raid homes and round up people in communities without engaging local law enforcement. During Trump's first 135 days there were 12,601 of these arrests – a 55 percent increase compared to the same period in 2016.

'If they can't pick up someone at the jail because the jail's not cooperating, and if they can't pick people up at homes because people won't open the doors ... then they have to find them somewhere else out in public,' Capps said. 'They might wait by their house until they come out, or they might try to find them at work. They have to find them out in the community.'

The administration has also increased the number of ICE arrests of noncitizens who have no other criminal convictions. Those arrests have gone up 147 percent in 2016 and 2017, while arrests of people with serious convictions rose by only 7 percent.

Lawsuit Alleges Shawnee County Holding Immigrant Too Long

U.S. News & World Report, May 31, 2018

A Topeka attorney has filed a lawsuit alleging Shawnee County is violating the rights of an inmate being kept in custody on an immigration detainer.

David Alegria contends the county has held Elidio Perez-Ramirez longer than allowed by law. He is seeking Perez-Ramirez's immediate release and unspecified compensation.

The Topeka Capital-Journal reports the lawsuit names the county corrections department, the Department of Homeland Security and U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

Shawnee County counselor Jim Crowl said Wednesday the federal government gave the corrections department valid documentation directing it to hold Perez-Ramirez.

The lawsuit says Perez-Ramirez was convicted in May of two misdemeanors involving sexual battery and sentenced to probation. Although he was ordered released May 14, jail official said they will detain him indefinitely until federal officials pick him up or release him.

Exclusive: An ICE Detention Center's Struggle With 'Chronic' Staff Shortages

WABE-FM Atlanta, May 31, 2018

One of the country's largest immigration detention centers had no psychiatrist on staff, "chronic shortages" of almost all medical positions and was described by its own staff as a "ticking bomb" because noncriminal detainees were mixed with high-security offenders.

Federal records obtained by WABE and Reveal from the Center for Investigative Reporting show the U.S. Department of Homeland Security Office of Inspector General found widespread problems at Stewart Detention Center in southwest Georgia, including drug smuggling and staffing shortages that employees said endangered detention officers and detainees.

Illegal drugs were "continuously coming into the facility," federal inspectors wrote after speaking with the facility's internal inspector. The inspector said that the DHS Office of Inspector General recently arrested "multiple employees for smuggling drugs into the facility." The inspector and other officials interviewed as part of the investigation are not named in the records.

Some of those problems were mentioned in a report by the DHS Office of Inspector General released in December 2017. The report came after federal investigators looked into conditions at immigrant detention centers across the country, including Stewart Detention Center. The report concluded there were "problems that undermine the protection of detainees' rights, their humane treatment, and the provision of a safe and healthy environment."

However, striking details not included in the Office of Inspector General's 19-page report are revealed in the inspection's work papers. Those work papers — 88 pages of notes from interviews with Stewart Detention Center staff, detainees, and other documentation that went into the production of the report — were released to WABE and Reveal in response to a Freedom of Information Act request.

Two detainees who were being held at Stewart died within the same 12-month period. Jean Jimenez-Joseph, a 27-year-old from Panama, hanged himself with a bedsheet in May 2017 while in solitary confinement. Yulio Castro-Garrido, a 33-year-old from Cuba, died in January of this year after officials diagnosed him with pneumonia. Staff Shortages 'Pose A Risk' Stewart Detention Center is operated by the private corrections company CoreCivic, formerly known as Corrections Corporation of America. Stewart Detention Center is in Lumpkin, Georgia — about 150 miles south of Atlanta. This U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement facility is operated by the private corrections company CoreCivic, formerly known as Corrections Corporation of America. The detention center can hold nearly 2,000 people and, at the time of the investigation, was near capacity.

Multiple employees at the facility brought up the issue of staffing shortages to inspectors. One CoreCivic manager said his biggest concern at Stewart Detention Center "is staffing shortages which pose a risk to the staff's safety."

Another CoreCivic employee said the facility has a shortage of detention officers "which makes it dangerous for the DO's [detention officers] and the detainees," and that "housing units are understaffed for the number of detainees on the units at the time," the inspectors wrote.

The DHS Office of Inspector General also identified a shortage in the facility's medical staff. According to federal records, ICE is responsible for detainees' medical and mental health care at the facility. According to the inspector, Stewart's health services administrator noted "chronic shortages of almost all medical staff positions." As of February 2017, the facility had no psychiatrists and about one in four registered nurse positions were vacant.

Stewart's health administrator told inspectors the facility covers its shortage of mental health professionals by "leaning heavily" on remaining licensed clinical social workers and on phone or video-conferencing calls with psychiatrists. He also noted the lack of mental health treatment centers in the local area.

An ICE supervisor at the center told inspectors there weren't enough ICE deportation officers and said there was high turnover. Records show there were 13 unfilled ICE officer positions, and for three years, there was no detention service manager on site — the person whose job it is to ensure that detention centers are safe and humane.

Bryan Cox, an ICE spokesman, told WABE that the staffing ratios at Stewart were "compliant with agency policy." However, when asked about the staffing requirements, he said, "The staffing ratio is an internal policy that is not releasable."

"'Shortages' is a somewhat editorial term," Cox said. "Under ICE policy, there are staffing ratios that are required in various aspects, and so the opinion of 'a short staff' is a nontechnical term." Mistakes With Housing Detainees 'A Ticking Bomb'

The facility also misclassified detainees, inspectors found. It categorizes and houses immigrants based on their criminal record. But a CoreCivic classification supervisor told the DHS Inspector General's office that detainees are often misclassified because transfer records don't always arrive at the Stewart Detention Center with the detainee.

Because of these delays, the CoreCivic supervisor said Stewart has housed felons with noncriminal detainees. She said this happened several times a week and called the delays "a ticking bomb." She also said the facility was "often out of compliance" with processing detainees in a timely manner.

In another example of not receiving paperwork on time, an ICE supervisor told the DHS Office of Inspector General that the mailroom at Stewart was so hectic, it caused "delay in receiving some of the consular documents." He said one Mexican detainee who was "easy to remove" stayed at Stewart for 87 days because some paperwork needed for deportation was lost in the CoreCivic mailroom.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Office of Inspector General recommended in its 19-page public report that ICE improve its detention oversight procedures. ICE "concurred" with that recommendation.

CoreCivic spokeswoman Amanda Gilchrist said in an emailed statement, "CoreCivic cares deeply about every person in our care. Our immigration facilities are monitored very closely by the government, and each and every one is required to undergo regular review and audit processes that include ensuring an appropriate standard of living for all detainees."

Gilchrist also said, "the issues identified by the December report were quickly and effectively remedied."

Meanwhile, immigrant-rights advocates say there are ongoing issues at Stewart.

In April, civil rights groups, including the Southern Poverty Law Center, filed a lawsuit against CoreCivic, saying the private corrections company forces immigrant detainees to work at Stewart for less than $4 a day to pay for necessities including toilet paper and toothpaste.

Two Men Facing Deportation Proceedings, No Federal Prison Time

Huntington (WV) Herald-Dispatch, June 1, 2018

Two men who previously pleaded guilty to illegally entering the United States will not receive federal prison time but will face deportation proceedings, according to a ruling made by a federal judge in Huntington on Tuesday.

Roberto Tulul-Ambrocio, 29, of Sonola, Guatemala, and Victor Santa Maria-Cleofas, 47, previously had pleaded guilty to felony re-entry of a removed alien in separate cases. The pair was sentenced Tuesday to the incarceration time already served awaiting the outcome of their cases, and the two were immediately remanded for deportation proceedings, according to U.S. Attorney Mike Stuart.

According to Stuart, Tulul-Ambrocio was located in Hurricane, West Virginia, on Jan. 16 when he was spotted by Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents while they investigated a nearby business.

When he was approached by two agents, Tulul-Ambrocio fled on foot but was captured quickly. The agents confirmed Tulul-Ambrocio was not in the United States legally and he was placed into custody.

Fingerprints taken from the defendant matched him to two removals from the country in 2011.

The first occurred in August when he was caught near Tucson, Arizona. The second occurred in October when he was found in Nogales, Arizona. He was later convicted in federal court of a misdemeanor charge of illegal entry before he was removed from the United States again.

In a separate case, Santa Maria-Cleofas was arrested March 15 by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents who saw him biking to a restaurant in Hurricane, where he worked. The agents already had information that Santa Maria-Cleofas was in the United States illegally and were able to stop him as he rode by.

After confirming his identity, Santa Maria-Cleofas, who admitted he was not in the United States legally, was placed under arrest. ICE agents used his fingerprints to forensically match him to four prior deportations in 2001, 2004, 2008 and 2010.

APNewsBreak: Expelled Venezuela Diplomat Stays In US

By Josh Lederman, Joshua Goodman

Philly (PA), May 31, 2018

A senior Venezuelan diplomat expelled by the Trump administration last week in retaliation for President Nicolas Maduro's kicking out of the top American diplomat in Caracas has remained in the U.S. despite an order to leave the country within 48 hours.

Jarlet Sanchez, a career diplomat who had been serving as Venezuela's deputy consul general in Houston, was declared persona non grata May 23 in retaliation for Maduro's decision to kick out charge d'affaires Todd Robinson in the immediate aftermath of his re-election.

But a U.S. official and another individual familiar with the case said Sanchez has yet to depart. The two people spoke on condition of anonymity because they weren't authorized to discuss it publicly.

Foreign diplomats in the U.S. who don't abide by orders to leave can be forcibly expelled, according to longstanding legal opinion of the U.S. Justice Department.

But The Associated Press has learned that Sanchez is hoping to stay in the United States permanently by applying for a green card under an obscure provision in the Immigration and Nationality Act. That provision, known as Section 13, says that people who enter the U.S. as diplomats can apply for a change in their immigration status and, if it is granted, obtain permanent residency.

The provision was created during the Cold War and was used by some diplomats from Eastern Bloc states who sought to defect.

Sanchez hung up when reached on a Houston cell phone number by an AP reporter.

Further complicating Sanchez's status is the fact that he appears to have been removed from his post. A diplomatic note from the Venezuelan foreign ministry to the U.S. State Department dated May 29 – six days after Sanchez was declared persona non grata – said the diplomat no longer occupied his post. The note, a copy of which was obtained by the AP, said Sanchez no longer formed part of the Venezuelan diplomatic corps and therefore not entitled to diplomatic immunity and other privileges inherent to his posting.

Experts said Sanchez's case appears to be an outlier that falls in a gray area of the law, which may explain the uncertainty around his current status in the U.S. Although the Venezuelan government has renounced his diplomatic status, Section 13 only requires that individuals entered the U.S. as diplomats, even if their diplomatic visas have lapsed.

But the requirements also state that to be eligible, individuals must have "compelling reasons" why they can't return to their home country, don't pose a risk to U.S. welfare and security, and that admitting them advances U.S. interests. The fact that Sanchez has been declared unwelcome in the U.S. and ordered to leave suggests that may be a difficult argument for him to make.

"It's going to be discretionary," said Ur Jaddou, the former chief counsel for the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services who now leads the watchdog project DHS Watch. "You have to prove there's a compelling reason. It's not a right."

Sanchez and another Venezuelan diplomat in Washington were expelled after Maduro accused the charge d'affaires Robinson and his deputy, Brian Naranjo, of conspiring against the socialist government by pressuring Venezuela's opposition to boycott a presidential election he easily won but which the U.S. has condemned as a "sham" because his main opponents weren't allowed to run. The two countries haven't exchanged ambassadors since 2010.

A spokesman for Venezuela's foreign ministry didn't respond to a request for comment. The State Department declined to say whether Sanchez is still in the country or comment on his status.

"We will continue to resolve this situation in accordance with applicable provisions of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations and consistent with U.S. immigration law," the department said.

If Sanchez does manage to stay in the country, one possibility for the U.S. government is to select another Venezuelan official to kick out instead. That would ensure parity in the tit-for-tat expulsion of diplomats that has played out between Washington and Caracas.

Former colleagues of Sanchez described him as one of the last remaining diplomats who entered Venezuela's foreign service before leftist Hugo Chavez came to power in 1999 and packed key diplomatic posts with loyalists.

Earlier this year, he marked 19 years in Venezuela's foreign service, according to his Facebook profile, showing him in exotic locations around the world – from the parliament building in Budapest, Hungary, to the ancient stone carvings in Petra, Jordan. The State Department recognized his status in Houston in February 2015.

"I've had a ton of experiences, challenges and have a lot to tell," he wrote on his Facebook page. "I thank God for everything – my family, colleagues and friends – who've made this amazing adventure possible."

Immigration Agents X-raying Migrants To Determine Age Isn't Just Illegal, It's A Misuse Of Science

WTOP-FM Washington, May 31, 2018

Elizabeth A. DiGangi, Binghamton University, State University of New York

(THE CONVERSATION) A teenager's father is murdered in Somalia, and the boy travels to the United States seeking asylum. Another teen's father and brother are murdered by extremist groups in Afghanistan and he too makes his way to the U.S. to seek asylum. Since both are minors, federal law decrees that they must be held separately from adults under the oversight of the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR).

However, in these two cases, and an unknown number of others, these minors were taken in handcuffs by Immigration and Customs Enforcement and held in adult detention facilities. The reason? In the absence of other information that could corroborate the teens' self-reported ages, analysis of their dental X-rays revealed that both could be adults.

Lawyers for these two teens sued onthe grounds that sole reliance on X-rays for age determination is illegal, and several federal judges agreed.

As a forensic anthropologist, I support these judicial decisions. My work can include estimating the ages of deceased persons using X-rays of bones and teeth, and I'm intimately familiar with the limitations of how specific these techniques can be. In my field, we generate an age range alongside several caveats; it's irresponsible for ICE to rely solely on X-rays to provide a definitive answer in determining if a person is a minor or an adult.

Forensic anthropologists study the hard tissues of the human body, which includes bones and teeth. I'm typically charged with estimating biological characteristics of deceased persons, including how old a person was when they died.

For children and teenagers, such an analysis can be carried out by examining X-rays. Growth and development are predictable processes, and milestones occur in a particular order. This is the reason that a tooth such as the first adult molar is also known as the "six-year molar," because it generally erupts in everyone around age 6, give or take.

The analysis proceeds the same way whether we're examining the X-rays of a living or deceased person. Essentially, we compare the stage of growth shown in the X-ray to existing growth charts from children and teenagers of known ages.

The crucial point is that it's not possible to make a definitive, single age determination from X-rays or examination of bones or teeth. A variety of factors affect how well chronological age corresponds with biological age; that is, the amount of time since birth doesn't necessarily correlate to the exact same stage of growth in every child or teenager.

Lots of things can influence how well biological and chronological age line up, including nutrition, environmental exposure to disease-causing germs and viruses (and their level of virulence), whether the person has been vaccinated against preventable diseases, body weight, hormones and genetics, among many others.

While these factors differ between individuals, they also differ broadly between populations of people – for instance, as a group, Americans likely develop at a different rate than sub-Saharan Africans.

Many of the studies relied upon to make age estimations are based on populations not representative of the individuals to whom they're being applied. Therefore, a certain amount of error can be expected in the final age estimation. What's more, this error is immeasureable. Without scientific studies on growth that are specific to each population, we don't know if on average, Population A ages six months, one year or two years faster or slower than Population B. And while many methods are bolstered by a statistical likelihood, this is not the same thing as being certain. We can never be 100 percent sure.

Of course, the amount of time since birth is the legally important age. But because a disparity exists, forensic anthropologists refer to the results of the scientific methods we use as "age estimation." The estimation will never be a pinpointed exact age, because of the variation that exists between individuals and between populations of people.

Therefore, forensic anthropologists report age estimations as a range. For example, rather than saying someone is 17 years and 8 months old, our estimation may be that she is between 17 and 20 years old.

Sometimes, the estimated age range might include ages below and above 18. Take the development of the wisdom tooth, something we often look at when estimating age of older teenagers and young adults. But the development of this tooth is extremely variable, ranging from never developing at all to erupting anywhere from the mid-teens to early 20s. In such cases, how would a final decision of adult or minor status be made?

Federal law dictates that X-rays in cases where adult age is not obvious be used only in concert with other methods, such as verification of documentation and interviews. This makes sense because X-rays only provide orienting information rather than a definitive answer.

The recent court cases demonstrate that ICE has broken the law by exclusively relying on X-rays for age determination, ruling that the teens be released back into ORR's custody as minors. Are these cases isolated or illustrative of a bigger problem? A 2008 report by the Office of Homeland Security found that it was not only unclear how often ICE needed to resort to X-rays to assist with age determination, but unknown how common it was for them to rely solely on X-ray results. Without accurate numbers, there is no way to know how widespread the practice is or how to improve the process.

The stakes are high. Children – especially unaccompanied ones – are especially vulnerable. For this reason, the 1997 Flores Settlement Agreement, which ICE is bound by, stipulates that migrant minors be kept separate from unrelated adults.

Given recent news that ORR doesn't know the whereabouts of almost 1,500 children it placed, many people have lost confidence in these agencies to do the right or moral thing regarding migrants. If ORR can't keep track of children under its care, can ICE be trusted to lawfully treat people whose ages are uncertain?

In this situation, the law is consistent with the science. And as a scientist, I am obligated to ensure my interpretations are not used irresponsibly in a way that could cause harm. Citizens, scientists and government officials alike should ensure that refugees and migrants are treated fairly, with the dignity and respect they deserve, and in a way consistent with how we would expect to be treated. Making age determinations based on X-rays alone is not in line with that goal and can have serious punitive consequences for young migrants.

CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS

Another Body Found In Long Island In What Looks Like A MS-13 Murder

Daily Mail (UK), May 31, 2018

A cadaver dog has located a murder victim linked to the brutal MS-13 gang – believed to be a missing teenage boy – buried in a nature reserve.

After the body of a male was recovered from the Roosevelt nature reserve on Wednesday, officials visited family members to obtain DNA samples to establish his identity.

One of those visited, a woman, speaking anonymously to NBC New York, said the police told her they believe it is the body of her younger brother, Josue Amaya, a 17-year-old Roosevelt high student, who vanished in 2016.

'I'm completely destroyed. I have an enormous heartache. And all I want is justice,' she said.

The discovery adds to MS-13's growing body count at Long Island, with at least 25 killings now attributed to the El Salvadorian gang in the vicinity over the last two years.

It comes days after Donald Trump called on the Congress to 'finally close deadly loopholes that have allowed MS-13 to break into our country'.

Homeland Security Investigations agents and Nassau County Police swooped on the reserve in Roosevelt, after receiving a tip-off.

At a news conference, Nassar police said a suspect arrested in connection to a different case, the murder of another Long Island teenager last year, told them where to search for the Roosevelt student.

'They told me they spoke with him, and this is where they buried my brother,' his distraught sister told the NBC.

After the cadaver dog indicated the presence of a body, authorities dug at the reserve until they found the remains, believed to be male. But, police are not able to identify the remains until they receive DNA results.

However a police official said: 'It is no doubt an MS-13 murder.'

The violent el-Salvadorian gang has been blamed for at least 25 killings on Long Island over the last two years.

It comes after a suspected MS-13 member was arrested in the death of 15-year-old Angel Soler, who was found dead in a reserve in the town in October.

Nassau Police Commissioner Patrick Ryder said the arrest of a suspected MS-13 member in relation to the death of 15-year-old Angel Soler, who was found dead in a reserve in the town last October, had led to the gravesite in Roosevelt on Wednesday. The New York teenager had been hacked to death with a machete.

Madeline Singas, Nassau's District Attorney, said: 'These are brutal acts. We cannot reveal any other details of this investigation, but suffice it to say it is ongoing, and we will continue to leave no stone unturned as we try to figure out who is responsible for these crimes.'

Police have stepped up patrols in the area, to help residents feel more secure, and have told Roosevelt residents there is no cause for concern.

Combating MS-13 in the United States

President Donald Trump said in May that he 'is committed to protecting communities from the violent animals of MS-13'

MS-13 is a transnational gang that has committed horrendous acts of violence across America

The gang's motto is 'mata, viola, controla' which means 'kill, rape, control'

There are more than 10,000 MS-13 members in the US and more than 30,000 worldwide

MS-13 leaders in the US often communicate and take orders from gang leaders in El Salvador

Long Island communities have been strongly impacted by the violence and suffering spread by MS-13

Police suspect the gang was involved in at least 25 killings on Long Island between 2016 and 2018

President Trump believes loopholes need to be eliminated to combat MS-13: 'Transnational gangs such as MS-13 take advantage of our porous borders and seek to use our current immigration system to their advantage'

MS-13 has sought to use the influx of unaccompanied alien children entering the US for recruitment

Feds Charge 11 In Multi-state 'Operation Highlife'

Jackson (MS) Clarion Ledger, May 31, 2018

Ten people from east central Mississippi and one from Texas are facing federal indictments for drug trafficking after authorities targeted a multi-state drug trafficking operation.

"Illegal drugs are killing our youth, destroying families, and fueling violent crime across our state and our country," said U.S. Attorney Mike Hurst.

The indictments were unsealed Wednesday and resulted from an extensive Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force investigation dubbed "Operation Highlife."

Hurst said the drug network included elements in Texas, California, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi. It involved the distribution of over 40 kilograms of methamphetamine, over 3 kilograms of cocaine and over 100 pounds of marijuana.

"This trafficking organization is not just in Mississippi, but it's encompassed in several states. Instead of just going after the individual purchasers or the individual dealers, we have to hit the whole network in order to dismantle it and stop the supply of it and end it from harming our citizens in our communities," Hurst said.

Eight of the 11 indicted were from Philadelphia.

"This criminal organization is responsible for a significant portion of the illegal narcotics coming into not only Philadelphia but east central Mississippi as well," said Philadelphia Police Chief Grant Myers. "Almost all of the crimes we deal with, from assaults to thefts, and everything in between, can be traced back to illegal narcotics. Taking down an organization of this size will have a significant impact on crime in our area."

The following individuals have been indicted as a result of Operation Highlife:

Brandon Deshanta Miller, 32, of Dallas, is charged with conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine, possession with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine, and being a felon in possession of a firearm. If convicted, Miller faces up to life in prison and a $30.25 million fine.

Shandlette Hudson, 42, of Philadelphia, is charged with conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine and possession with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine. If convicted, Hudson faces up to life in prison and a $20 million fine.

Dijon James Seales, a/k/a "DJ," 28, of Philadelphia, is charged with conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine, possession with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine, possession with intent to distribute five grams or more of methamphetamine, being a felon in possession of a firearm, and possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug trafficking crime. If convicted, Seales faces up to life in prison and a $25.5 million fine.

Lorenzo Dyrell Hickman, 32, of Philadelphia, is charged with conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine, conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 500 grams or more of cocaine, and possession with intent to distribute more than 500 grams or more of cocaine. If convicted, Hickman faces a maximum penalty of life in prison and up to a $20 million fine.

Latrice Cherrrell Boler, 29, of Philadelphia, is charged with conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine. If convicted, Boler faces up to life in prison and to a $10 million fine.

Chaddis Demond McAfee, 36, of Philadelphia, is charged with possession with intent to distribute more than 500 grams of methamphetamine, being a felon in possession of a firearm, and possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug trafficking crime. If convicted, McAfee faces up to life in prison and a $10.5 million fine.

Courtny Orlando Campbell, 27, of Philadelphia, is charged with possession with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine. If convicted, Campbell faces up to life in prison and a $10 million fine.

Danny L. Drake, 43, of Philadelphia, is charged with possession with intent to distribute five grams or more of methamphetamine. If convicted, Drake faces up to 40 years in prison and a $5 million fine.

Kevin Ashley Wells, a/k/a "Big 50," 37, of Philadelphia, is charged with possession with intent to distribute five grams or more of methamphetamine. If convicted, Wells faces up to 40 years in prison and a $5 million fine.

Jimmie Terrell Harrison, 43, of Forest, is charged with being a felon in possession of a firearm. If convicted, Harrison faces up to 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Tray Beamon, 32, of Louisville, is charged with conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine and possession with intent to distribute 50 grams or more of methamphetamine. If convicted, Beamon faces up to life in prison and a $20 million fine.

"As a result of these arrests, Mississippi is a safer place to live, work and raise a family," said MBN Director John Dowdy.

Jere T. Miles, special agent in charge of Homeland Security Investigations, oversees a five-state area of operations that includes Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana and Tennessee.

"Methamphetamine has devastated countless communities due to the dramatic health and public safety consequences that typically accompany its introduction into an area," Miles said.

Since Hurst has been in office, there have been several multi-level busts and operations that have targeted drug trafficking organizations and gangs. Many of those have been tied to Project EJECT, a comprehensive, multi-disciplinary initiative that stands for: Empower Jackson Expel Crime Together.

"The message is clear that we're not going to stop. we're going to work together across county lines, across district lines, and there's no one who can avoid us, who can hide from us, and we're going to make sure we put an end to this type of criminal activity in southern Mississippi," Hurst said.

Arraignments are scheduled for Friday before U.S. Magistrate Judge Keith Ball at 9 a.m. and before U.S. Magistrate Judge Linda R. Anderson at 9:30 a.m.

The Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force is a result of a joint investigation by the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement's Homeland Security Investigations, the Drug Enforcement Administration and the MBN. Assisting agencies include the police departments of Philadelphia, Flowood, Carthage, Louisvill and Union; the Neshoba County, Scott County, Rankin County and Hinds County sheriff's departments, Neshoba County District Attorney's Office; Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives; Mississippi Highway Patrol; U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Mississippi; and the U.S. Marshal Service. Assistant U.S. Attorney Erin Chalk is prosecuting the case.

Grand Rapids Felon Sentenced For False U.S. Citizenship

MLive (MI), May 31, 2018

A 42-year-old man was sentenced to two concurrent terms of two years in prison after he pleaded guilty to possessing a firearm and ammunition as a felon and falsely attesting U.S. citizenship.

Sentenced Thursday, Franklin J. Flores will serve these two concurrent 24-month federal terms concurrent to his current state of Michigan sentence of 18 to 60 months for identity theft.

In January 2017, a search warrant was conducted at Flores' Grand Rapids residence after a New Mexico man reported Flores had stolen his identity.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A search warrant led authorities to discover a Springfield Armory XD-40 .40 caliber pistol and 11 rounds of .40 caliber ammunition, which Flores could not lawfully possess after he was convicted in 2014 for carrying a concealed weapon in Kent County.

Flores also falsely attested U.S. citizenship when he assumed the New Mexico man's identity and filed a Form I-130 Petition for Alien Relative to try to obtain alien relative status for his wife.

He submitted the form to the Department of Homeland Security, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services.

U.S. District Court Judge Janet T. Neff said Flores' actions were some of the most egregious she has seen.

"Franklin Flores flouted both federal gun and immigration laws," said U.S. Attorney Andrew Birge. "The court's sentence is a message that the consequences are severe for convicted felons who violate federal gun laws and for those who try to steal and lie their way to immigration benefits."

Homeland Security Investigations Grand Rapids investigated the offense with assistance from the Wyoming Police Department.

Homeland Security Investigation In Greeley Ends In Arrest Of Presumed Child Sex Offender

Greeley (CO) Tribune, May 31, 2018

A Homeland Security investigation of an internet chat room resulted Thursday in the arrest of a 41-year-old man soliciting sex of a minor.

Robert James Brown was booked into Weld County Jail on suspicion of attempted sex assault on a child and sex assault on a child, both felonies. He was released last Friday on $50,000 bond.

The investigation began about 11:30 a.m. May 24 when Brown, using the username Laidilover76, allegedly struck up a sexual conversation with the undercover agent from Homeland Security. Almost all of the alleged online conversation is too graphic for print.

But as the conversation developed, the agent told Brown she was a mother of a 14-year-old girl and that the two liked to have sex with men together. She asked if Brown would be interested in meeting both of them. When he allegedly said he was interested in a group sexual experience, the agent asked Brown if he knew having sex with a minor was illegal.

Using his Laidilover76 handle, Brown responded, "Yep, LOL. I can keep a secret," according to court records. Brown continued to describe how he was going to perform oral sex and have intercourse with the agent and her fictitious daughter, according to court records.

Brown and the agent then set a meeting place at a motel in Greeley. Brown was arrested upon his arrival. This is his first felony arrest in Colorado, according to state records.

Formal charges by the Weld District Attorney's Office have not yet been filed. The deadline for filing charges is 3:30 p.m. Monday, June 4.

SECRET SERVICE

First On CNN: US Secret Service Overpaid Presidential Campaigns $4 Million For Plane Travel

By Rene Marsh

CNN, May 31, 2018

The US Secret Service overpaid presidential campaigns an estimated $4 million for plane travel during the 2016 election, a government watchdog says in a new report obtained by CNN.

Secret Service officials realized eight months before Election Day that they were using the wrong formula to calculate the costs, "but did not ensure the agency reverted to its longstanding policy," according to the Government Accountability Office report.

The Secret Service, which incurred millions of dollars in travel expenses to provide security during presidential campaigns, said it has asked the campaigns that were overpaid to provide the government refunds.

GAO said the Secret Service spent an estimated $58 million on travel expenses related to the campaigns. Of that total, $17.1 million was paid to the campaigns of Donald Trump, Hillary Clinton, Bernie Sanders and Ben Carson as reimbursements for seats occupied by Secret Service agents onboard campaign charter flights.

The report did not detail how much each campaign was overpaid, nor did it accuse the campaigns of wrongdoing.

The Secret Service did not respond to a request from CNN for more detailed figures. It said in a statement it is "working with all stakeholders in an effort to recover the overpaid amounts."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In a May 14 letter to the GAO, which is attached to the report, the Secret Service said letters were sent to campaign committees requesting repayment by May 31, 2018. The Secret Service also said it instituted a new policy that will help it make more accurate payments.

At least two of the four campaigns said they received the letter.

"Their letter does not explain the legal basis for their believing they made errors. So we have requested more information to better understand what they are claiming," said Jeff Weaver, the campaign manager for Sanders' 2016 bid.

Carson's business manager Armstrong Williams said he met with Secret Service officials for a "respectful" discussion. He said Carson currently has "no campaign," but declined to say whether that means the Secret Service will not be repaid.

According to Federal Election Commission records, the Carson campaign had roughly $460,000 in its account as of the end of March.

Spokespeople for the Trump and Clinton campaigns reached by CNN on Thursday did not immediately have information on the matter.

The report detailed how much the Secret Service reimbursed each campaign for travel expenses:

- Donald Trump: $7.3 million for 965 flights.
- Hillary Clinton: $7.1 million for 1,317 flights.
- Bernie Sanders: $2 million for 159 flights.
- Ben Carson: $615,567 for 107 flights.

In addition to those four candidates, the Secret Service also protected two vice presidential candidates and six of the candidates' family members during the 2016 campaign.

Rep. Bennie Thompson, the top Democrat on the House committee overseeing the Secret Service, called the overpayments "unacceptable," and urged the Secret Service to recoup the funds.

"Worse yet, they did not fix the error when it was discovered months before the election," Thompson told CNN in a statement. "The money that the agency needlessly and erroneously paid the campaigns is sorely needed to help fund critical Secret Service activities that have faced recent budget cuts – including investigations into cyber and financial crimes."

The Secret Service's policy "has been to pay the lower of two fares when reimbursing campaign committees for special agents' travel on chartered aircraft flights," the GAO said. "The lowest commercially available first class airfare or the pro rata fare- the cost of the agent's seat on the charter flight calculated by taking the total cost of the charter flight of the charter flight divided by the number of passengers on board."

But agency policy did not require invoices and receipts from charter companies that would allow it to verify the costs were accurate, GAO found. Only Clinton's campaign provided those records.

The Secret Service said it has changed that policy and said it will now review documents to verify the government is being accurately charged.

The GAO also found the Trump campaign billed the Secret Service twice, "for three flight segments taken on March 1, 2016 resulting in a cumulative overpayment of approximately $21,000."

Secret Service Overpaid Campaigns Nearly $4 Million For Charter Flights, Report Says

By Kevin Johnson

USA Today, May 31, 2018

The Secret Service overpaid presidential committees nearly $4 million for air travel on charter flights during the 2016 campaign, the federal government's watchdog agency found Thursday.

A report by the Government Accountability Office determined that the service did not consistently adhere to a long-standing policy to pay the cheapest rate of two charter options when traveling with candidates and other protectees during the busy campaign season.

According to the policy, the agency pays either the lowest commercially available first-class fare or the cost of a charter flight divided by the passenger number, whichever is cheapest. Eight months before the end of the campaign, the agency determined that it was not abiding by the policy yet did not correct its action.

During that time, according to the GAO report, 66% of the campaign flights with agents aboard were taken. The agency reimburses the campaign committees for agent seats on each flight.

In all, travel expenses for the agency during the 2016 campaign totaled $58 million to support 3,236 stops. Of that, $17.1 million was reimbursed to the four campaign committees for charter flights.

Agency reimbursements to the leading campaigns were nearly identical — with $7.3 million paid to the Trump campaign, and $7.1 million to the Clinton campaign.

In its written response to the GAO, the Department of Homeland Security — which oversees Secret Service operations — said letters already have been drafted to the committees requesting reimbursement for the overpaid amounts.

"The Secret Service is incredibly proud of how we operated during the 2016 campaign, and like any high performance operation we are committed to continual improvement," the agency said in a statement Thursday. "After the issues highlighted in the report were brought to our attention, the Secret Service took immediate action to address them. As of the publishing of this report, the Secret Service has completed required corrective actions to ensure miscalculations are not repeated.

"We are confident the American people understand that protecting our elected officials and those running for the highest offices of our nation is a costly endeavor; and with that responsibility, the Secret Service is steadfastly committed to effective stewardship of American tax dollars."

The report was requested by Mississippi Rep. Bennie Thompson, the ranking Democrat on the House Homeland Security Committee, said the overpayments were "unacceptable."

"Proper stewardship of Secret Service travel expenses is critical as they are paid by the American taxpayer — not the campaigns," Thompson said.

The costs associated with Secret Service operations have been closely scrutinized in the past two years as a crushing workload prompted Congress to take action.

President Trump signed legislation this year effectively raising pay caps that forced more than 1,000 Secret Service agents to forego payment last year for hundreds of hours in overtime necessary to carry out the agency's expanded protective mission.

The action raised the combined annual salary and overtime limits from $164,200 to $187,000, covering unpaid overtime accrued last year. In 2018, the cap increases to $189,000.

Congress intervened last summer when USA TODAY reported that about 1,200 agents and officers had already hit the mandated pay caps that were meant to last the entire year.

Secret Service Overpaid About $4m For 2016 Campaign Flights

By Colleen Long

Philly (PA), May 31, 2018

The Secret Service spent about $4 million too much for seats on campaign planes during the 2016 presidential election after misinterpreting the rules for calculating fares, according to a congressional watchdog report.

The Secret Service spent $17.1 million to include agents on flights chartered by the campaigns of Republicans Donald Trump and Ben Carson, and Democratic candidates Hillary Rodham Clinton and Bernie Sanders.

The Government Accountability Office report, released Wednesday, said the Secret Service was supposed to pay the lower of two options: the lowest commercially available first-class airfare or the proportional cost of the agent's seat based on the total price of the charter. Instead, they paid the campaigns based only on the second option.

The watchdog agency examined 650 of the more than 2,300 flights taken by agents during the 2016 campaign. The $3.9 million was an estimate for all campaigns – the agency did not break the estimated overpayment down by campaigns. Overall, the Secret Service reimbursed Trump's campaign $7.3 million for flights, including for running mate Mike Pence and others. Clinton's campaign received $7.1 million for flights, including for running mate Tim Kaine. Sanders was reimbursed $2 million and Carson $615,567.

The Department of Homeland Security, which oversees the Secret Service, said it would determine the specific overpayment and seek refunds from the campaigns.

A Secret Service spokesman, Shawn Holtzclaw, said it has taken steps to ensure the overpayments do not happen again.

The report said the mistakes began in 2015 after lawyers for the Hillary for America Committee said reimbursements should be based only on the charter flight calculation. Secret Service officials agreed, abandoning their previous comparison policy. After a congressional inquiry in March 2016, the Secret Service admitted it had made a mistake, but didn't fix the issue during the campaign, the report said.

Secret Service agents were detailed once candidates requested protection, met the requirement for major candidate status and received authorization from the Homeland Security secretary and others.

Overall, the Secret Service spent about $58 million in travel expenses, including airfare, vehicle rentals and meals in 3,236 travel stops during the campaign, the GAO report said. Expenses for Trump's campaign were $26.3 million, Clinton $20.2 million, Sanders $7.9 million and Carson $3.4 million.

The report was requested by the top Democrat on the House Homeland Security Committee, Rep. Bennie Thompson of Mississippi.

Thompson said in a statement it was "unacceptable" that millions were overpaid.

"Proper stewardship of Secret Service travel expenses is critical as they are paid by the American taxpayer – not the campaigns," he said.

Watchdog: Secret Service Overpaid 2016 Campaigns $4 Million For Air Travel

By Josh Delk

The Hill, May 31, 2018

The U.S. Secret Service overpaid millions of dollars when reimbursing presidential campaigns for plane travel during the 2016 election, according to a new government watchdog report.

The Government Accountability Office (GAO) said in its report released Thursday that the Secret Service overpaid presidential campaigns in 2016 by an estimated $3.9 million when reimbursing the campaigns for seats used by special agents on chartered flights.

The GAO explained that the agency's longstanding policy is to pay the lower of two fares for flights: the lowest first-class airfare on a commercial flight, or a pro-rated fare for agents flying on chartered planes.

According to the report, the Secret Service discovered eight months before Election Day that it had been using an improper formula for calculating travel costs by only using the pro-rated fares, and failed to correct the billing procedure.

Since the report's publication, the Secret Service says it has "completed required corrective actions to ensure miscalculations are not repeated."

The Secret Service spent a total of $58 million on travel expenses during the 2016 presidential campaign, with $17.1 million of that going to campaigns to reimburse them for agents' seats on flights, according to the GAO report.

The agency paid President Trump's campaign $7.3 million for 965 chartered flights, Hillary Clinton's campaign $7.1 million for 1,317 flights, Bernie Sanders's campaign $2 million for 159 flights and Ben Carson's campaign over $615,000 for 107 flights between early 2015 and Election Day.

While the GAO report gave the dollar amounts it reimbursed each campaign, it remains unclear how much each campaign was overpaid.

The GAO set June 30 as a date by which the Secret Service should seek repayment from the campaigns.

Hillary's Campaign Convinced The Secret Service To Overpay For Chartered Flights

By Thomas Phippen

Daily Caller, May 31, 2018

Hillary Clinton's campaign convinced the U.S. Secret Service to pay extra for agents riding with candidates in chartered flights, and that caused the government pay $4 million to several campaign committees, according to a new report.

According to the Government Accountability Office (GAO), an attorney from the law firm representing the Hillary for America Committee emailed officials at the Secret Service in June 2015 to argue that the government should consistently pay a higher rate for flights on candidates planes.

The Secret Service provides protection to certain presidential candidates on the taxpayer's dime, and pays each campaign committee for seats the agents occupy on the candidate's chartered planes while on duty.

The Secret Service has two ways of calculating how much to pay the campaign: They either pay the campaign based on the lowest priced first-class seat available for the given route, or pay a "pro rata" rate calculated by dividing the cost of the chartered flight by the number of passengers. The agency is supposed to calculate both options and pay the campaign the lower price to save taxpayer money. (RELATED: US

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Secret Service Tackled A Chinese Security Guard Into The Earth In A Scuffle Over The Nuclear Football)

The Clinton campaign's lawyer argued that the government should always pay the pro rata rate, even if the first-class rate would be a cheaper option for the government.

The Secret Service agreed with the unidentified law firm's interpretation of the law, and as a result "the Secret Service ceased to adhere to its longstanding reimbursement policy and agency officials were directed to use the pro rata calculation method for reimbursing all campaigns for agent airfares," the GAO said.

The Clinton camp's error led the Secret Service to pay the higher rate to all four 2016 presidential campaigns, which included the campaigns of Vermont Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders, who was running as a Democrat, and Republicans Ben Carson, now Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and President Donald Trump.

The GAO estimates that the government overpaid for 650 of the 1,671 flights Secret Service agents took with the four campaigns, and believes the total overpayments will add up to $3.9 million.

The GAO did not provide a breakdown of which campaign was overpaid the most, but the Trump campaign received the most reimbursement money in total.

In total, the government reimbursed the four campaigns $17.1 million for chartered flights. It reimbursed Trump's campaign $7.3 million for 965 flights, Clinton's campaign got $7.1 million for 1,317 chartered flights.

To make things worse, the Secret Service discovered their error in March 2016, heading into the busiest travel season for the candidates. Even though they knew the mistake, the Secret Service "did not ensure the agency reverted to its longstanding policy."

"The money that the agency needlessly and erroneously paid the campaigns is sorely needed to help fund critical Secret Service activities that have faced recent budget cuts — including investigations into cyber and financial crimes," Democratic Rep. Bennie Thompson of Mississippi told CNN.

There were other issues with the travel costs associated with the 2016 campaign. Trump's campaign submitted invoices for 210 flights for then-Vice Presidential candidate Mike Pence that didn't have a total number of passengers or the total cost of the chartered flight, making it impossible to calculate the cost per-person.

The Trump campaign also double-billed the government for three flight segments, causing the government to pay $21,000 more to the Trump campaign than it ought.

The Secret Service will review their reimbursements and calculate how much they overpaid. Eventually, the government will seek to collect the overpayments from the various campaigns.

All campaigns except Carson's also made mathematical errors in their invoices. Hillary's campaign had errors in 1 percent of its invoices, and 2 percent of the Trump campaign's invoices had errors. The Bernie 2016 Committee had the greatest percentage of errors, with 29 (18 percent) of its 159 segment invoices containing mathematical mistakes.

2016 Presidential Campaigns Owe Secret Service $3.9M, GAO Says

By Griffin Connolly

CQ Roll Call (DC), May 31, 2018

Four 2016 presidential campaign committees owe a combined $3.9 million to the Secret Service after the agency overpaid the campaigns in reimbursements for travel costs for agents who accompanied candidates and their families.

The Government Accountability Office issued a report Thursday analyzing the debts owed by the campaign committees of President Donald Trump, Housing and Urban Development Secretary Ben Carson, Hillary Clinton, and Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

GAO investigators found the Secret Service committed numerous errors documenting lodging bills and calculating travel reimbursement amounts. When the agency discovered it had been misinterpreting internal policies for reimbursing campaigns, it did not ensure that agents knew to change how they paid back campaigns for travel costs.

"The Secret Service is incredibly proud of how we operated during the 2016 campaign, and like any high performance operation we are committed to continual improvement," the agency said in a statement Thursday. "After the issues highlighted in the report were brought to our attention, the Secret Service took immediate action to address them."

The agency has not yet recovered money from the campaigns for the overpayments.

Federal agencies are usually required to collect debts owed to the U.S. government that have been determined by an appropriate official, according to the GAO report. Those debts include overpayments.

So the Secret Service must now collect the $3.9 million in overpayments.

The problem?

Some candidates, especially Clinton and Carson, have mostly emptied their campaign committee coffers. Clinton's Hillary for America committee has just over $1 million left, per the latest Federal Elections Commission report. Carson's Carson America committee has only $461,000 remaining in cash.

It is up to the Secret Service to determine how it should proceed to collect on the identified debts, the GAO report states.

The Secret Service spent roughly $58 million on its agents' travel expenses during the 2016 presidential campaign. Of that $58 million, $17.1 million was spent reimbursing the Trump, Clinton, Sanders, and Carson campaign committees for chartered aircraft flights.

But they overshot the amount they owed the committees for those flights by $3.9 million — almost a 30 percent overage.

Since 1977, the report said, the Secret Service has paid the lower of two airfare calculations when reimbursing campaign committees for the cost of booking agents tickets: the lowest-priced commercially available first-class ticket to the destination; or the pro rata fare of the cost of a charter — that is, the total cost of the chartered flight divided by the total number of people aboard the plane.

The GAO initiated its investigation at the request of Homeland Security ranking member Bennie Thompson of Mississippi.

It was "unacceptable" that the Secret Service overpaid for its travel expenses by nearly $4 million, Thompson said Thursday.

"Worse yet, they did not fix the error when it was discovered months before the election," Thompson said. "Proper stewardship of Secret Service travel expenses is critical as they are paid by the American taxpayer — not the campaigns."

Thompson called on the agency to quickly collect the debt for its overpayments.

Man Passing Fake $20s At Dragons Game Pleads Guilty

Dayton (OH) Daily News, May 31, 2018

The Indiana man who federal prosecutors said passed dozens of counterfeit $20 bills at a Dayton Dragons game has pleaded guilty and could serve up to 21 months in prison.

Kenneth Stopkotte, 53, entered his plea Thursday afternoon in Dayton's U.S. District Court, according to court records.

Stopkotte pleaded guilty to Count 2 of an indictment, which charged him with uttering counterfeit obligations.

His sentencing is scheduled for Aug. 31, when Stopkotte could be sentenced to up to 21 months in prison, according to the plea agreement.

Stopkotte also would be responsible for restitution as determined by the court and three years' supervised release.

United States Secret Service officials said Stopkotte used dozens of fake $20 bills during an April 18 game at Fifth Third Field and was found with several more.

He used the fake $20 bills for his ticket, food, beverages and other concessions, according to federal prosecutors.

The indictment said Stopkotte, who was on federal probation for stealing $180,000 of donations to Tennessee churches, had 95 fake $20s and $674.72 in genuine U.S. currency along with an iPhone, all of which was seized.

The plea agreement said Stopkotte was found with 231 fake $20 bills he purchased from the dark web.

Stopkotte, who recently got out of prison after serving more than three years, would have faced maximum sentences of 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine on each count if convicted.

Nielsen Visits National Hurricane Center In Miami To View Storm Prep

Homeland Security Today, May 31, 2018

Ahead of the official start of hurricane season, which begins June 1, Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen M. Nielsen visited the National Hurricane Center in Miami for an operational briefing regarding the 2018 hurricane season. Nielsen was joined by National Hurricane Center Director Ken Graham and Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) Administrator Brock Long.

Nielsen urged Americans to use the time before the next disaster hits to understand their risk, prepare, and stay informed. She also reiterated that DHS and FEMA continue to work closely with their private sector, state, local, tribal, and territorial partners to identify, prepare for, respond to, mitigate and recover from the threat of natural disasters.

"Disasters often require a response beyond what any one locality or agency can handle," said Nielsen. "Each of us make up only one part of the overall team. It requires all levels of government, non-profit organizations, private sector businesses, and individual communities to work together to prepare for disasters—and be ready to respond when disaster strikes. I urge every American to take this hurricane season seriously, and make an emergency plan that fits your family based on the risks to your community."

"Now is the time to know your risks and get prepared," said Long. "Disaster response is federally supported, state managed, and locally executed – but it is up to each and every person to take responsibility for their own emergency plan."

Prior to touring the National Hurricane Center, Nielsen met with FEMA employees who are preparing for the 2018 hurricane season and continuing to work with state and local officials in Florida to assist with Hurricane Irma recovery.

FEMA: We Are Not The First Responders

By Brock Long

USA Today, May 31, 2018

Last year's historic hurricane season was a true test of the nation's ability to respond to, and recover from, three near-simultaneous catastrophic hurricanes followed by the California wildfires. The impacts of these storms and the wildfires cannot be overstated. About 47 million people were affected by these events, or roughly 15% of the entire U.S. population.

FEMA will always work tirelessly to support state, local, tribal and territorial partners to respond to and recover from disasters. FEMA is not a first responder; disasters are state managed, locally executed and federally supported. Our role is to support local governments following a disaster only after their capacity to respond has been exceeded. That support most often takes the form of coordinating federal resources into a unified response and handing out massive amounts of grants to fund recovery efforts.

FEMA works in close partnership with state and local jurisdictions before, during and after a disaster to save lives, often including operational support to state and local search and rescue teams. For example, this may also include deploying U.S. Health and Human Services, Department of Defense or other federal resources to assist local jurisdictions.

The actual counting of disaster-related fatalities is the responsibility of local jurisdictions, not FEMA. With respect to Puerto Rico or any disaster, FEMA and its federal partners will continue to support governors with their outcome-driven recovery goals.

All segments of society, from individuals to governments to the private sector, have an important role to play to build resilience and a true culture of preparedness across the nation. My personal request to all Americans is to establish a plan, check their insurance, and be prepared: Citizens are often the true first responders. For more information on how you can be prepared, go to Ready.gov.

It's Been 4 Weeks Since The First Volcanic Eruption In Hawaii And The Lava Is Still Flowing

By Dakin Andone

CNN, May 31, 2018

It's been four weeks since the first eruptions from the Kilauea volcano rocked Hawaii's Big Island, and the lava is as relentless as ever.

Since the first eruption occurred in the Leilani Estates subdivision on the evening of Thursday, May 3, emergency officials believe nearly 2,500 residents have been forced to evacuate as lava, flowing from numerous volcanic fissures, consumes everything in its path.

Whatever residents were left in the neighborhood were ordered out on Thursday by Hawaii County Mayor Harry Kim.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"Persons in violation of this order are subject to arrest and will be liable for any costs associated with rescue operations in the mandatory evacuation area," the county said on its website.

At least 75 structures have been destroyed, according to Hawaii Civil Defense spokesman Talmadge Magno. About 20 of those burned down earlier this week.

And the eruptions are still going strong. Fissure 8 was the most active overnight, according to an update from the US Geological Survey, sending lava fountains as high as 250 feet into the air.

As of 6:15 a.m., the lava flow was about 2 miles west of the Four Corners intersection, said USGS volcanologist Jessica Ball.

"We should also note that cellphone towers and regular landlines have been heavily damaged in the area, and so there may be reduce service," said USGS volcanologist Jessica Ball.

Lava from Fissure 8 managed to advance 50 yards in an hour, according to a tweet from the US Geological Survey.

Ash is still erupting from Kilauea's summit, Ball added, in addition to seismic activity and gas output.

On Wednesday, Fissure 8 fueled a river of lava that traveled almost a half-mile in 80 minutes, according to the Civil Defense Agency. The advancing lava prompted additional evacuations amid fears that residents could become trapped on a corner on the Big Island's eastern side.

The pace eventually slowed to about 3 to 4 yards a minute, but Fissure 8 continued to be very active. That afternoon, it sent fountains of lava as high as 200 feet, according to the USGS.

Lava is nearing Kapoho

Lava continued to advance toward Kapoho, an unincorporated community near the eastern coast, on Thursday morning.

"Rather than shock and surprise it was more of a resolve that, OK, it's come to us now," Steven Neill, a Kapoho evacuee, told CNN affiliate KGMB/KHNL on Wednesday. "I've got close friends in Leilani, which we helped evacuate a couple weeks ago, and now it's our turn."

Earlier in the week, Mayor Kim warned residents that first responders would not go door-to-door after final evacuation orders were issued. Those who choose to ignore the orders will have to fend for themselves, Kim said.

Besides the lava, there's also the danger of "vog," or volcanic smog. Vog is a haze created when sulfur dioxide gas and other volcanic pollutants mix with moisture and dust.

In addition to volcanic particles that can cause eye, skin and respiratory irritation, residents were warned to be on the lookout for sharp, thin strands of volcanic glass fibers known as "Pele's hair," a reference to the Hawaiian goddess of fire. The Civil Defense Agency warned it could cause injury if it got in residents' eyes or was breathed in.

Officials are trying to clear an evacuation route

On Wednesday the National Park Service and the Hawaii Department of Transportation announced they were working to cut through a large section of solidified lava flow from 2016 and 2017, in an effort to open a potential evacuation route in case Highway 130 becomes impassable.

The road they're working to uncover is known as Chain of Craters-Kalapana Road, and has been covered by lava for 41 years out of the 53 years it has existed, the release said.

The reason you can't stop watching the lava

Video and images shared by the agencies showed massive yellow bulldozers breaking up the black rock, which is 20 to 30 feet thick in some spots. Uncovering the 8 mile stretch could take up to two weeks, the news release added.

The ongoing eruptions have also caused power outages, according to Hawaii Electric Light. The energy provider reported earlier this week that lava has damaged more than 400 poles, prompting power outages in areas throughout lower Puna, including Kapoho, Lanipuna Gardens and Leilani Estates.

It could be a while before power returns. Hawaii Electric Light said in a news release that it wouldn't begin working to restore power until it was safe for workers to enter the areas to do a damage assessment. Exact timing depends on the ongoing lava activity.

COAST GUARD

Bill Would Allow Coast Guard To Help Pay For Museum's Design, Engineering

Stars And Stripes, May 31, 2018

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A bill authorizing funding for the Coast Guard includes a provision that would enable the service to pay for design and engineering work for the National Coast Guard Museum planned in downtown New London.

The Coast Guard authorization bill, which covers fiscal years 2018 and 2019, was attached to a larger $716 billion defense policy package for next year that the U.S. House passed a few weeks ago by a 351-66 vote.

Normally, money authorized for the Coast Guard — which falls under the Department of Homeland Security, not the Department of Defense — is not included as part of the defense policy bill, but leadership of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee requested that it be voted on with the defense policy bill to speed up the process.

The Senate Armed Services Committee did not attach the Coast Guard authorization bill to the $716 billion defense policy bill it passed by a vote of 25 to 2.

U.S. Sen. Richard Blumenthal, D-Conn., said he and his colleague U.S. Sen. Dan Sullivan, R-Alaska, are working on an amendment to have the full Senate consider the authorization bill when it takes up the defense policy bill at a yet to be determined date. Blumenthal introduced a provision last year to remove the restriction on the Coast Guard providing funding for the museum, but it didn't pass.

"I'm going to fight for it on the Senate side," he said by phone Wednesday. "I'm very hopeful the Senate will receive our request to provide a museum for the only military service that lacks one now."

There is a museum on the Coast Guard Academy's campus, but no national museum for the service exists.

Even if the provision ultimately is approved, it doesn't mean the Coast Guard will choose to dedicate its resources to design and engineering work for the museum. The Coast Guard, the smallest branch of the military, is faced with an aging fleet of ships, and is about to build its first new Arctic icebreaker in 40 years, among other priorities.

In 2016, Blumenthal, Sen. Chris Murphy, D-Conn., and U.S. Rep. Joe Courtney, D-2nd District, worked to change federal law so that the federal government can now contribute funding to the interior aspects of the museum, such as displays and exhibits.

All three of the men said they supported allowing the Coast Guard to pay for design and engineering work and would be pushing for more federal funding for the museum. Already, $5 million in federal dollars has gone toward the museum. The National Coast Guard Museum association, which is raising money for the estimated $100 million museum, is seeking $30 million from the federal government.

"Passage of this new bill is another step by Congress to allow the Coast Guard to expand their participation in the New London museum," Courtney said in a statement Wednesday. "Two years ago, we breached the prohibition set in 2004 to permit funding to share artifacts and create exhibits. This latest legislation moves the ball even further by giving the Coast Guard authority to (fund) design and engineering of this cutting-edge facility."

"Fundraising privately is always a challenge, which is why the federal commitment is so important," Blumenthal said. "It sets a pace and a goal for private fundraising to match or exceed."

Drew Forster, the museum association's new director of communications and public relations, declined to comment on the possibility of the Coast Guard contributing money toward engineering and design of the museum.

So far, fundraising for the museum stands at about $36 million, including $11 million in private donations and the $5 million from the federal government, The Day has previously reported. The state is giving $20 million for a pedestrian bridge to provide access to the museum.

The planned site of the museum is adjacent to Union Station on one-third of an acre of land that the city donated to the Coast Guard in 2014. The project tentatively is scheduled to break ground in 2021, but that is subject to change.

Coast Guard Blows Whistle On Thieves Of Buoy Bells, Gongs

Brass gongs and bells meant to help boats navigate in poor visibility are being stolen from buoys off Maine's coast.

The Coast Guard says the sounding devices have been stolen over the past six months and it's seeking the public's help in finding them.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Coast Guard says the devices are valuable and most likely are being sold to nautical novelty stores or scrap yards. Coast Guard Lt. Matthew Odom says the thefts put lives at risk, cost taxpayers money and create unnecessary work for crews that tend buoys.

Tampering with an aid to navigation is a federal crime. It's punishable by fines of up to $25,000 per day and as much as a year in jail.

State Election Systems Increasingly At Risk For Cyberattacks, FireEye Says

Bloomberg News, May 31, 2018

U.S. election systems are increasingly at risk for cyberattacks ahead of the November midterms as Russia continues information operations to sow political division, according to cyber firm FireEye Inc.

State and local election infrastructure is becoming a more popular target for hackers, particularly state-sponsored cyber espionage actors, the Milpitas, California-based company said in a report Thursday, outlining risks to voter registration, polling places and ballot submission systems.

Although the U.S. primary season is well underway, FireEye said it hasn't observed attacks against election infrastructure as of March. But following Russian meddling in the 2016 elections, "malicious actors and nation states likely already have an understanding of the flaws in the U.S. elections infrastructure and will seek to exploit opportunities where they can,'' the report said.

As more states place their voter registration processes online, their websites become targets for cyberattackers. "Aggressive campaigns'' to disrupt electoral process could use tools like ransomware and distributed denial-of-service attacks to destabilize state and local computer networks and mimic cyber crime activity, the report said.

The Department of Homeland Security has said Russia targeted 21 states' voter registration systems, but only Illinois has indicated publicly that some of its voter data was stolen. In its report, FireEye says hackers used three penetration testing tools to gain access to 200,000 voter records in Illinois. While the state said no data was altered, "it is possible that the actors had the ability to modify or delete data,'' the report said.

The U.S. uses 57 different types of voting machines that FireEye says have flaws, including machines being particularly vulnerable to malware introduced through removable hardware.

Cyber actors deploying information operation campaigns may "target or mimic state and local officials' social media accounts directly to sow fear and mistrust,'' the report said. In addition, FireEye regularly sees data from state election systems for sale in the "underground" web, according to John Hultquist, FireEye's director of intelligence analysis.

Homeland Security is working with a growing number of state election officials to install "Albert sensors," which detect traffic coming into and out of a computer network. But those sensors have critical limitations. While they funnel suspicious information to a federal-state information-sharing center, they can't actually block attacks, they're not deployed to most of the 9,000 local jurisdictions where votes are actually cast and sophisticated hackers can sneak past the sensors undetected.

With a slew of primary elections scheduled for June, Russian hackers are weighing their next moves, according to FireEye Chief Executive Officer Kevin Mandia. There's probably a group in the country that thinks the 2016 election targeting "was great'' and another group that doesn't agree, Mandia said at the report's release in Washington.

One challenge facing both hackers and the federal government in its efforts to stop them: the midterms are more decentralized, with state and local campaigns versus the one national presidential election in 2016, FireEye analysts say.

"There's a moment of uncertainty of what they're going to do next,'' Mandia said, referring to Russia. "They're probably still sorting what their cyber campaign's goals are.''

Though the company hasn't noted Russian hacking or leaks related to the upcoming elections, it was around this time two years ago that Russian hackers ramped up their activity targeting the 2016 president elections, Lee Foster, manager of information operations analysis at FireEye, said. He noted ongoing "trolling'' efforts to foster discord, an effort that will likely increase in the coming months.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"There's still plenty of time for this to occur," Foster said.

New York, DHS Launch Election Cyber Exercises – GCN

Government Computer News, May 31, 2018

Officials from New York's state and county governments got together with with representatives of the federal Department of Homeland Security in Albany County for the first tabletop exercise focused on protecting New York's electoral systems against cyberattacks.

The May 31 meeting was not a physical test of election infrastructure but rather a discussion of how state and local officials respond to hypothetical cybersecurity incidents, according to John Conklin, the director of public information at New York Board of Elections. Six regional tabletop exercises conducted with state, local and federal stakeholders will help identify risks and develop necessary steps to safeguard the election process against a cyberattack, according to the governor's office.

The exercise was developed to identify weaknesses in cyber incident planning, preparedness and response through scenarios designed to undermine voter confidence, interfere with voting operations and affect the integrity of elections. Simulated cybersecurity incidents could include disruption of voter registration information systems and processes, interference with voting machines or the exploitation of board of elections business networks, state officials said.

The exercise was designed to assess the jurisdictions' "abilities to identify a cyber incident, manage a cyber incident, what they should be sharing in terms of procedures," Conklin said in an interview after the meeting.

The local officials in Albany County were presented with scenarios featuring social media manipulation, a DDOS attack and a website hack.

"Personally, I was pleasantly surprised with a lot of the answers that were given and a lot of the things that countries were doing that we weren't necessarily 100 percent confident they were doing," Conklin said. The also proved to be doing a good job with scanning, monitoring logs and testing backups, he added.

Present at this first exercise were representatives from 13 different counties in the region, board officials, county government and IT officials, as well as staff from the DHS, FBI, state police, the governor's cyber advisory board and the Center for Technology and Government at the University of Albany, Conklin said.

Several counties already work with the Multi-State Information Sharing and Analysis Center, which operates a 24/7 security operations center and provides incident response services to states, localities and tribes. New York plans to have counties join the MS-ISAC's new sibling organization, the Elections Infrastructure Information Sharing and Analysis Center.

The New York Board of Elections received an additional $5 million in the state budget and $19.5 million from the federal government to improve cybersecurity prior to the November elections. That money is going toward upgraded intrusion detection and prevention, enhanced anti-malware software, enhanced monitoring of public-facing applications and the development of regulations and cyber hygiene standards for the county boards, Conklin said.

New York will hold five more tabletop exercises, with the last one scheduled for June 18. DHS will create an after-action report with the findings that will be released 30 days later.

These exercises show just how seriously every level of government is taking the threat, according to Bob Kolasky, the acting deputy under secretary of the National Protection and Programs Directorate at DHS.

"State and local officials in New York have taken a number of steps to improve the security of their elections," Kolasky said in a statement, "and the Department of Homeland Security stands ready to support their efforts through exercises, information sharing, and by providing our technical cyber analysis and expertise."

DOC And DHS Publish Report On Automated Cyberattack Threat Mitigation

ExecutiveGov, May 31, 2018

The Commerce Department and the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Department of Homeland Security recently published a report about measures that can be taken to mitigate the threat posed by automated and distributed cyberattacks to the country's internet and communications network. The report is pursuant to instructions from President Trump, which are detailed in Executive Order 13800, NIST.gov reported.

The report itemizes threat-mitigating actions that align to five complementary and mutually-reinforcing goals, which include identifying a pathway toward a technology marketplace that is adaptable, sustainable and secure; as well as promoting cyber infrastructure innovation that would make dynamic adaptation to evolving threats possible.

The report also recommends that the DOC and DHS design, in consultation with appropriate stakeholders, a road map ensuring that the actions that need to be taken are prioritized in accordance with the agenda of the Trump Administration.

Commenting on the report, Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross said, "Ensuring that our government and economy are safe from cyberattacks remains a top priority, and having clear information about these continuing threats will help us better prepare to keep Americans, and their information, safe from our adversaries."

U.S. Cyber Workforce Shortage Worsening, Agencies Tell President

MeriTalk, May 31, 2018

The current cybersecurity workforce shortage in the United States is daunting and only due to get worse over the next few years, the Departments of Commerce (DoC) and Homeland Security (DHS) reported to President Trump in a document released Wednesday.

Within the larger U.S. cyber workforce shortage, the report also said that the Federal government may have particular problems filling its ranks because government pay scales for cybersecurity professionals don't keep up with compensation offered by the private sector.

The report was commissioned by the President as part of the Cyber Executive Order released in May 2017. The order tasked DoC and DHS to seek ways "to support the growth and sustainment of the Nation's cybersecurity workforce in both the public and private sectors."

The report suggests that a growing cybersecurity workforce shortage–there were 299,000 active openings in August 2017 across the private sector and the government–will balloon to 1.8 million unfilled positions by 2022.

The report cites "an apparent shortage of knowledgeable and skilled cybersecurity teachers at the primary and secondary levels, faculty in higher education, and training instructors," and lengthy hiring and vetting processes as limiting factors that inhibit the expansion of the field of qualified candidates.

Women and minorities are underrepresented in the cybersecurity workforce, the report states, and military "veterans represent an available and underutilized workforce supply."

"The seriousness of the Nation's cybersecurity workforce gaps merits a high-level initiative to raise awareness and create a sense of urgency about the importance of growing and sustaining a world-class cybersecurity workforce," the report continues.

On the Federal government front, the cyber workforce gap should be addressed through new funding priorities, the report says.

"The Administration should focus on, and recommend, long-term authorization and sufficient appropriations for, high-quality, effective cybersecurity education and workforce development programs in its budget proposals in order to grow and sustain the cybersecurity workforce," the report says.

It goes on to suggest a hierarchy of imperatives, recommendations, and subsequent actions that could address the workforce gap–including the promotion of a high-profile, national "Call to Action," exploring the use of direct hire or other authorities and salary incentives at the Office of Personnel Management and other Federal agencies, and building cybersecurity apprenticeships through the Department of Labor, academia, and local, regional, and national business communities.

The report says that many of its recommendations are already being pursued by multiple Federal agencies under existing authorities, but given the report's calls to expand agencies' authority, budgets, and means to attract talent, it appears there's much more to be done.

The cyber workforce report is one of three recent reports to the President called for by the Cyber EO. The other two reports tackled the issues of cybersecurity risk management programs in Federal agencies, and the expansion of botnets and automated, distributed attacks.

Government Report IDs The Need For Speed In Cyber Hiring

NextGov, May 31, 2018

The government's personnel office should ease the hiring path for cyber professionals entering government and the national background checker should staff up to make sure those new cyber pros can get to work quickly, according to a federal report released Wednesday.

The White House should also work with Congress to increase funding for cybersecurity education programs, especially those that boost the federal cyber workforce, according to the report on "Supporting the Growth and Sustainment of the Nation's Cybersecurity Workforce" released by the Homeland Security and Commerce departments.

The report recommends explicit funding boosts for federal cyber programs for young people, including the CyberCorps: Scholarship for Service program administered by the National Science Foundation and GenCyber camp funded by NSF and the National Security Agency.

The government should expand its cyber recruiting efforts and hold more cyber competitions that develop top talent, according to the report.

Federal agencies should also harmonize cyber job descriptions and responsibilities, based on existing federal guidance, so it's easier for cyber workers to move between agencies or in and out of government, the report states.

Those are some of the more concrete action items in the broad-ranging report, which calls for an "ambitious vision and action plan-of-attack to: 'prepare, grow, and sustain a national cybersecurity workforce that safeguards and promotes America's national security and economic prosperity.'"

The report was among more than a dozen called for in President Donald Trump's May 2017 executive order on cybersecurity, several of which were released on Wednesday.

Many of the action items in the workforce report are broad goals without specific implementation plans.

The report calls, for instance, on federal and state governments to "consider providing greater financial assistance and other incentives to reduce student debt or subsidize the cost of cybersecurity education or training" and to "provide additional…tax incentives for cybersecurity-related education and training."

The report also notes that: "the federal government should launch a vigorous effort to recruit cybersecurity workers from large and diverse pools of candidates who are underutilized or underrepresented in the cybersecurity workforce."

In other cases, the action items are aimed at a non-government audience, such as employers, universities and K-12 schools.

For example, the report urges cyber employers to encourage more employees to serve as adjunct teachers, and urges universities and high schools to bring more cyber practitioners into the classroom.

Some main government functions will be largely inspirational, the report states, such as "leading by example to demonstrate how to identify, prioritize, and manage the cybersecurity workforce."

Unlike another Wednesday report from Commerce and Homeland Security focused on countering botnets, the workforce report does not suggest any follow-up reports to the president on progress toward achieving goals.

RAM Laboratories' Firmalytics – $150,000

Sekurity's Principled Security Analysis of the Firmware Binaries via Guaranteed Formal Verification and Scalable Dynamic Monitoring – $149,999

Telegram App Says Apple Is Blocking Updates Over Dispute With Russia

By Adam Satariano

New York Times, May 31, 2018

LONDON — Apple was thrust into the middle of a long-simmering dispute on Thursday between the encrypted messaging app Telegram and the Russian government, which has sought to shut down the service since it declined to help Moscow intercept communications sent through its platform.

Pavel Durov, the founder of Telegram, accused Apple of refusing to allow the messaging service's software to be updated globally after Russian authorities ordered the iPhone maker to remove Telegram from Apple's App Store. The app ran afoul of Russian authorities for refusing to cooperate with the country's security agencies.

The allegation from Mr. Durov is significant because it undercuts the importance that Apple's chief executive, Timothy D. Cook, has placed on privacy and encrypted communication. In 2016, Apple was taken to court for refusing to help the Federal Bureau of Investigation access encrypted messages sent by one of two attackers who killed 14 people in San Bernardino, Calif.

"Russia banned Telegram on its territory in April because we refused to provide decryption keys for all our users' communications to Russia's security agencies," Mr. Durov said in a statement posted to his official Telegram channel. "We believe we did the only possible thing, preserving the right of our users to privacy in a troubled country."

"Unfortunately, Apple didn't side with us," he continued.

Mr. Durov said that while Russia accounted for only about 7 percent of Telegram's user base, Apple's move had effectively barred it from updating software for all of its users worldwide since mid-April. He said that had meant Telegram was also unable to fully comply with new privacy rules put in place in the European Union last week.

Apple has run into similar criticism in China, after the company removed virtual private networks, apps that allowed users to avoid the country's online censorship, from its App Store in China.

An Apple spokesman did not immediately respond to a request for comment on Mr. Durov's statement.

The situation highlights the messy gatekeeper role Apple plays with its App Store acting as the main way people can download apps, along with Google's Play store. Apple finds itself caught between the interests of encrypted messaging apps such as Telegram and Signal, which want to prevent anybody from intercepting communications between users, and governments, who want access to messages to identify security risks and other issues.

Apple Prevents Telegram Messaging App From Updating Over Russia Ban

Independent (UK), May 31, 2018

Apple has prevented Telegram from updating its app ever since Russian authorities ordered its removal from the App Store, the CEO of the popular messaging app has revealed.

Telegram has been banned in Russia since April after the app refused to provide decryption keys to the country's security agencies, which would have allowed them to monitor the communications of Telegram users.

"We believe we did the only possible thing, preserving the right of our users to privacy in a troubled country," Telegram boss Pavel Durov said in a statement on Telegram on Thursday, 31 May.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"Unfortunately, Apple didn't side with us. While Russia makes up only 7 per cent of Telegram's user base, Apple is restricting updates for all Telegram users around the world since mid-April."

Mr Durov added that issues with features like stickers were unable to be fixed, despite an update being available.

The inability to update the iOS app also means that Telegram is unable to properly comply with GDPR for its users in the EU, Mr Durov said.

Apple has previously refused to help the FBI unlock an encrypted iPhone, with CEO Tim Cook saying in 2016 that it would "set a dangerous precedent," though private texts between FBI agents revealed that they considered Mr Cook a hypocrite.

"The US government has asked us for something we simply do not have, and something we consider too dangerous to create," Mr Cook said at the time.

"Opposing this order is not something we take lightly. We feel we must speak up in the face of what we see as an overreach by the US government... Ultimately, we fear that this demand would undermine the very freedom and liberty our government is meant to protect."

Apple has not responded to a request for comment from The Independent about Mr Durov's comments.

The Energy Grid Isn't Insured Enough To Handle A Catastrophic Hack

Bloomberg News, May 31, 2018

Insurers are limiting how much coverage energy companies can buy to protect themselves against a major attack by hackers, potentially leaving investors, customers and taxpayers on the hook for sizable losses.

Brit Insurance, a syndicate that works with Lloyd's of London, limits cybersecurity policies to around $300 million, according to underwriter James Bright. While companies can piece together policies from different insurers to boost that limit, the costs can be prohibitive, often requiring third-party assessments of security that can need upgrading.

The result is an industry largely unprepared for a hacker-triggered catastrophe, according to cybersecurity experts. The Exxon Valdez oil spill cleanup, for instance, cost $7 billion. Those kind of numbers have left insurers anxious over the lack of quantifiable information in an expanding market, and concerned the energy industry's protections may not be adequate.

Energy companies tend to have "a superman fallacy," said Dante Disparte, the head of Risk Cooperative, a Washington-based brokerage. "They don't believe bad things will happen to them, or they believe the government will help them get back on the field."

It's a belief that's drawing concern from the U.S. government, according to Disparte, who said he met with Treasury Department staff in mid-May. The government, along with industry groups and companies, are in the early stages of discussing the need for a cyber version of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., with energy as an initial target, he said. The Treasury Department wouldn't immediately comment.Taxpayer Protection

The goal, according to Disparte: Keep taxpayers from saddling the bill for potential problems. "The energy sector is too big to fail, too big to hide and no single energy company is able to fund the risk on their own," he said.

In the meantime, cyber insurance is one of the fastest growing segments of the more than $5 trillion global insurance market. The market for standalone cyber plans among all industries was about $1.75 billion to $2 billion in 2017, and the U.S. accounted for 90 percent of that, said Nolan Wilson, the Miami-based leader of the energy practice at Aon Plc, an industry consultant.

By the end of 2018, the global market could grow to $5 billion, including tack-ons to property and liability insurance, according to Jürgen Reinhart, chief underwriter for cyber at Munich RE, an insurance group based in Germany. So far, though, the energy industry makes up just a sliver of the market, less than 3 percent, he said.Predicting Weather

"We have very sophisticated insurance products for things like hurricanes, tornadoes, earthquakes and even terrorism," said Brian Walker, a principal at The CAP Group in Dallas, a risk advisory firm. "You can predict those. But you have a very difficult time predicting what is going to happen in cyber."

Insurers are struggling with "how to bind their risk" within the energy world, he said. "The geographic scope and the size of the impact are not estimable."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

How big can the problem be? “Energy companies have enormous supply chain relationships,” said Disparte, so an attack anywhere along the line could have far-reaching implications.

A cyber-specific policy for a major energy provider or pipeline might cover everything from replacing software and equipment in the event of an explosion, to indemnifying companies against lawsuits resulting from environmental damage, or the loss of power to customers. In some cases, generating facilities can service millions of customers across broad communities.Operations Halted

Earlier this year, Schneider Electric SE reported that a hack of its Tricon software resulted in at least one customer halting a plant’s operations. While no cost was given for that shutdown, A.P. Moller-Maersk A/S, the container ship giant, last year reported a loss of roughly $300 million related to a cyberattack on its operation.

In such a scenario, just getting a skilled cybersecurity crew out to a single site can cost $10,000 in the U.S., according to Duncan Greatwood, chief executive officer of Xage Security, which works with industrial operations based in Palo Alto, California. Multiplying that across numerous systems using, or connected through, the same or similar software can quickly add up.

The development of cyber insurance for the energy industry will be critical “because insurers help drive safety code and building codes,” according to Disparte. The same “best practice” thinking is needed for the technology used by energy providers, he said.’All Risks’

But getting coverage is complicated. Many energy companies assume they’re covered by their “All Risks” policies, but there’s either fine print cutting out cyber attacks or they have never been tested for this new, fast-evolving threat, said Brit Insurance’s Bright.

“It’s a gray area,” he said, adding that Lloyd’s has been trying to educate brokers and customers about the need for a plan that specifically includes cyber coverage.

There’s no question the problem is growing. An analysis released in March by the FBI and Homeland Security said that hackers are conducting a broad assault on the U.S. electric grid, water processing plants, air transportation facilities and other targets in rolling attacks on some of the country’s most sensitive infrastructure.

Cyberattacks are “literally happening hundreds of thousands of times a day,” U.S. Energy Secretary Rick Perry told lawmakers during a March hearing.March Attacks

In late March, at least half a dozen pipeline operators shut down their third-party electronic communications due to a cyberattack. Those actions became known because they affected traders and customers. The problem for insurers is that energy companies aren’t required by law to disclose attacks, and often don’t, seeking to avoid becoming bigger targets, and drawing public or investor scrutiny.

Three major oil and gas pipelines, for instance, were hit by so-called ransomware this year that were never publicly reported. These attacks sought payments based on their threats to open pipes or overpressure systems to explode, according to Xage’s Greatwood.Fracking Fluid

In the Permian, an oil driller recently found that a vendor’s employee hacked into a system to take precious fracking fluid out of a tank to resell it on the side. It’s unclear how long the theft was going on, but it’s not unusual for such attacks to be undetected for months, said Maureen Krezmien, director of sales for oil and gas industry solutions at GS Labs LLC in Dallas.

It’s unclear how the two threats were countered. The cybersecurity firms involved wouldn’t disclose more details on the incidents for confidentiality reasons. Raushaunah Muhammad, a spokesperson for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, declined to comment and Homeland Security didn’t respond to requests seeking comment.

While these specific cases appeared to be motivated by profit, and didn’t result in reportable pipeline accidents, they point to an expanding – and potentially costly – assault on infrastructure largely responsible for keeping the U.S. economy running.

With oil prices on the rise this year, producers “are getting a little bit better cash flow and they are opening up their wallets during discussions on protecting themselves, their employees and infrastructure from cyber threats,” according to GS Lab’s Krezmien. But they still remain slower to adopt cyber coverage compared to other industries, she said.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"I don't like to use fear as a sales driver," Krezmien said. "But this is the real Y2K. At this point of my career I'm looking at this and saying it's not my favorite approach but it's at a point where it's necessary. "

The Cybersecurity 202: Only YOU Can Prevent A VPN Filter Malware Attack. That's A Problem For The FBI.

By Derek Hawkins

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

THE KEY

The FBI's move to seize control of a network of half a million wireless routers and other devices infected with malicious software threw a wrench into a massive hacking campaign by a group linked to the Russian military.

But the FBI is limited in how much it can do to disrupt the global botnet on its own. While the bureau got a court order last week to take over a domain at the botnet's core that allows the connected devices to launch attacks, it's now up to owners of the infected equipment to take active steps to prevent hackers from hijacking the devices again.

That's not likely to happen anytime soon. In fact, ridding the infected devices of malware dubbed VPN Filter "is likely to take at least a year, if not multiple years," said Vikram Thakur, technical director of the security response team at the cyberecurity firm Symantec. "To remove the malware, and update the router to be free of known security vulnerabilities, requires a degree of end user interaction with the router that is unlikely to happen in the short term."

It seems staggering that an average person needs to help the FBI disrupt a threat the U.S. government has blamed on the same Russian military-linked hacking group that breached the Democratic National Committee in the 2016 election. The group is sophisticated and usually targets government and military organizations. The malware it deployed could be used for a range of malicious purposes, including spying on the communications in industrial control systems used by power plant operators, water treatment facilities and other critical infrastructure operators. It also has a destructive component, capable of permanently disabling any infected device. And experts say the mass of zombie devices was apparently powerful enough to carry out a sequel to the NotPetya attack by Russian military hackers that wiped data from financial firms, government offices and other institutions around the world.

The fix the FBI is pushing is relatively simple: All people have to do is reboot their router or other devices. That will direct information from the infected routers to the FBI, instead of the hackers. As my colleague Hayley Tsukayama notes: "Simply hitting the power button without updating their router would leave users at risk, software experts warned. As a next step, they should download the latest firmware for their devices and change their password to further guard themselves against infection." The FBI and security researchers are issuing instructions, and they will also pressure Internet service providers to notify users about what they need to do, according to Thakur.

But let's be honest: How likely is it that people will follow through? Or even get the message? Even if you're a security pro reading this, your less tech savvy relative – let's say, your grandmother – may need to heed this warning. So will any one of the hundreds of thousands of users in 54 countries across the globe potentially affected by the malware.

The Trump administration acknowledged how hard it is to motivate consumers when law enforcement seeks their help to bring down botnets, in a long-awaited report on botnet threats released Wednesday. It's tough to get people to care – often, they're simply unaware that their devices have been compromised, the report found.

"From the consumer's perspective, the webcam is still streaming, or the refrigerator is still chilling," the report read. "For this reason, it may be challenging to hold owners responsible if their devices are used in a botnet. This lack of clear consequences of infection creates a challenge in motivating consumers to take steps to improve security — for example, to update those devices that are updateable."

But the threat is everywhere, and average people's buying habits are to blame. The proliferation of Internet-connected devices has paved the way for a surge in increasingly sophisticated and disruptive botnet attacks in recent years, including a 2016 attack that rendered major sites such as Twitter and PayPal inaccessible to users around the world.

The U.S. was concerned enough to commission the report, which was released by the Department of Commerce and the Department of Homeland Security. It was a major component of the executive order on cybersecurity President Trump issued last May, which broadly sought to hold top agency officials more accountable for responding to cyber incidents.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

One way to address the problem, the report found, would be to encourage manufacturers to equip their devices with security features such as automatic updates before they bring them to market and avoid asking users to make upgrades themselves. “It is unrealistic to expect home users and small business proprietors to become security experts,” it read. “Ideally, devices marketed toward consumers should be designed with security built in.”

But for now, things may move slowly. If past botnet attacks are any indication, Thakur said, the devices “remain vulnerable for years, until maybe one day the hardware itself fails and the owner decides to go to the store and buy a new one.”

PINGED, PATCHED, PWNED

PINGED: The Department of Homeland Security told Sen. Ron Wyden (D-Ore.) in a letter that the agency has received reports that “nefarious actors may have exploited” the SS7 messaging system, which allows cellphone users to switch networks while traveling, to spy on Americans’ communications, The Washington Post’s Craig Timberg reports. “I don’t think most Americans realize how insecure U.S. telephone networks are,” Wyden said in a statement. “If more consumers knew how easy it is for bad guys to track or hack their mobile phones, they would demand the FCC and wireless companies do something about it. These aren’t just hypotheticals.”

Wyden also said in a letter on Tuesday that “one of the major wireless carriers” told his office that it reported to law enforcement a breach linked to SS7. Customers’ data was accessed in that incident, Wyden said in his letter to Federal Communications Commission Chairman Ajit Pai. Wyden slammed the FCC, saying it “has done nothing but sit on its hands, leaving every American with a mobile phone at risk.”

“Although the security failures of SS7 have long been known to the FCC, the agency has failed to address this ongoing threat to national security and to the 95% of Americans who have wireless service,” Wyden wrote.

PATCHED: Kaspersky Lab’s troubles in the United States continue. U.S. District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly of Washington on Wednesday dismissed two lawsuits by the Russian firm that challenged a U.S. government ban on the company’s software, CyberScoop’s Patrick Howell O’Neill reports. “Kaspersky filed the lawsuits after its products were banned from U.S. government systems in both a Binding Operational Directive from the Department of Homeland Security and the 2018 National Defense Authorization Act. That ban goes into effect on Oct. 1, 2018,” Howell O’Neill writes. Kaspersky argued that the ban was unconstitutional and unduly harmed the company.

Kollar-Kotelly wrote that the portion of the NDAA banning Kaspersky software from U.S. government systems isn’t a punishment of the Russian firm. “The law does not impose any form of historically recognized legislative punishment,” the judge wrote in her opinion. “It has an obvious and eminently reasonable nonpunitive purpose and, although the law has negative effects on Plaintiffs, those effects are not out of balance with the goal of protecting the Nation’s cybersecurity.”

In a statement, Kaspersky vowed to “vigorously pursue” an appeal of the decision and said the government bans “were the product of unconstitutional agency and legislative processes and unfairly targeted the company without any meaningful fact finding.” DHS said in a September statement that the company could pose a threat to national security due to its ties to Russian intelligence agencies.

PWNED: Add a big name to the list of people who are frustrated by the European Union’s new online privacy rules. “Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross introduced a fresh irritant into strained transatlantic ties Tuesday when he complained that the E.U.’s new General Data Protection Regulation, which took effect last week, will prompt major changes in American companies’ responsibilities to protect consumers’ privacy,” The Washington Post’s David J. Lynch and Damian Paletta report.

Ross wrote in a Financial Times op-ed that the Trump administration supports GDPR’s “goal of protecting personal online data while continuing to enable transatlantic data exchange." Then he proceeded to list the things he found problematic about the law and said European authorities have failed to provide clear guidelines on how the law works: "The guidance on GDPR implementation is too vague," Ross wrote. "EU authorities must provide clearer rules and a more predictable regulatory environment to support investment and innovation. We ask them to act quickly so that GDPR can be properly implemented."

PUBLIC KEY

— Report-o-rama: The Trump administration on Wednesday released several reports as directed by Trump's May 2017 cybersecurity executive order in addition to its report on botnets. The Commerce Department and the Department of Homeland Security released a report calling for "immediate and sustained improvements" in the way that the public and private sectors recruit and train cybersecurity professionals. There were almost 300,000 job openings in the field of cybersecurity as of August 2017, according to the report. Here are other takeaways from the report:

"Employers increasingly are concerned about the relevance of cybersecurity-related education programs in meeting the needs of their organizations."

"Expanding the pool of cybersecurity candidates by retraining those employed in non-cybersecurity fields and by increasing the participation of women, minorities, and veterans as well as students in primary through secondary school is needed and represents significant opportunities."

"Hiring considerations—including lengthy security clearance delays and onboarding processes—severely affect the sufficiency of the cybersecurity workforce."

— The other cybersecurity reports issued on Wednesday explore modernizing federal IT, supporting entities that are considered critical infrastructure, promoting transparency in the marketplace and assessing the impact of an extended power outage following a cyber incident. "DHS has recommended ways to improve our federal risk posture and modernize the federal IT enterprise," Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen said in a statement. "Additionally, the Department has outlined how it will prioritize private sector access to tailored intelligence and capabilities in order to mitigate risk where a cybersecurity incident could result in catastrophic effects. Lastly, DHS worked closely with the Department of Commerce in crafting recommendations to improve the resilience of the Internet of Things ecosystem and dramatically reduce the ever-growing botnet threat."

— Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) and 18 other Democratic senators on Wednesday expressed alarm at national security adviser John Bolton's decision to end the White House cybersecurity coordinator position and asked him to reconsider the move. "Our country's cybersecurity should be a top priority; therefore, it is critically important that the U.S. government present a unified front in defending against cyberattacks," they wrote. "Eliminating the Cybersecurity Coordinator role keeps us from presenting that unified front and does nothing to deter our enemies from attacking us again. Instead, it would represent a step in the wrong direction. Again, we urge you to send a strong signal to the rest of the world that cybersecurity is a top priority by reconsidering the elimination of the Cybersecurity Coordinator."

The other Democratic senators who signed the letter are Christopher A. Coons (Del.), Tammy Baldwin (Wis.), Tina Smith (Minn.), Cory Booker (N.J.), Elizabeth Warren (Mass.), Jeff Merkley (Ore.), Kirsten Gillibrand (N.Y.), Ron Wyden (Ore.), Sherrod Brown (Ohio), Chris Van Hollen (Md.), Bill Nelson (Fla.), Jeanne Shaheen (N.H.), Edward J. Markey (Mass.), Tim Kaine (Va.), Richard J. Durbin (Ill.), Michael F. Bennet (Colo.), Mark R. Warner (Va.) and Jack Reed (R.I.).

— "The annual defense policy measure advancing in the Senate authorizes U.S. military hackers to go on the offensive against Russian attacks on the United States in cyberspace, while also mandating a cyber deterrence doctrine after lawmakers were disappointed in the Trump administration's latest policy," Justin Doubleday writes in Inside Cybersecurity. "The Senate Armed Services Committee's fiscal 2019 defense authorization bill designates clandestine military operations in cyberspace as 'traditional military activities,' affirming the secretary of defense's ability to order cyber operations, according to a summary of the legislation released last week."

Doubleday also writes that the bill incorporates Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John McCain's (R-Ariz.) "cyber doctrine." "The doctrine authorizes the defense secretary 'to develop, prepare, coordinate, and, when appropriately authorized to do so, conduct military cyber operations in response to cyber attacks and malicious cyber activities' by foreign powers," according to Doubleday.

PRIVATE KEY

— Private companies should not engage in "hacking back," not just because it's illegal but because it's a bad idea, the Council on Foreign Relations' Robert K. Knake wrote in a blog post on Wednesday. "Private companies hacking back scares many people in the cybersecurity policy community because, particularly in the current context, it could have companies starting wars that U.S. military will need to finish," Knake writes. "We should all want to avoid an outcome where a company that under-invests in its own cybersecurity starts a conflict that will cost far more in blood and treasure than upgrading its firewalls."

It doesn't mean that companies should just sit back while hackers attack or spy on them, Knake argues. He says one possible solution would be to create a mechanism for federal agencies to share threat intelligence with critical infrastructure companies, adding that the federal government already runs such a system called DIBNet that involves defense contractors.

"Creating a similar program for other critical infrastructure sectors, run by the Department of Homeland Security but connecting to the intelligence community and U.S. Cyber Command, would provide what the private sector wants, intelligence on threats and a counter offensive capability, while maintaining government responsibility for these activities," Knake writes.

Wearables Could Make Children Vulnerable To Cyber Crime

By Anna Tobin

Forbes, May 31, 2018

Wearables could make children an easy target for cybercriminals says Allen Scott, consumer EMEA director at cyber security solutions firm McAfee.

Scott warns: "Families are currently facing one of the most critical issues at the moment, protecting personal information in a hyper-connected world. Every day we connect our lives to external sources without realizing the many ways others can exploit our digital connections.

"Many parents have introduced wearables such as smart watches to their children's lives, as they think it provides them with additional peace of mind about their whereabouts and safety. However, parents need to quickly realize whilst yes, these wearables have great benefits, unfortunately, they also have a number of security flaws leaving children vulnerable to cyber criminals hacking their devices."

Recent research by McAfee has found that less than a quarter of people (23%) realize that wearable devices and connected toys for children need to have security protection. "Anything with an online connection is at risk to cybercriminals, but the issue with wearables is that risks associated with these products is high and children using connected toys can be exposed to malware, viruses and perhaps, most worryingly, strangers online," says Scott.

"One thing that often stands out is that the excitement to use wearables straight away often means children will hand over information without even thinking about it. Despite our children being digital natives, if parents aren't having those honest and open conversations about the use of connected devices risks will be heightened. The impact is not usually immediate and over time the data collected by cybercriminals paints a picture of the children's lives, making them vulnerable to all kinds of cybercrime and potential attacks."

A lot of very cheap wearables aimed at kids are now coming on stream and plugging security gaps is not a priority for manufacturers desperate to get products to market at an attractive price point.

Scott says that manufacturers should have a moral obligation to ensure that their tech is secure and that they should be held to account if they can't guarantee this. "Whilst these devices can bring huge benefits to our lives, the security and, the safety of our children using them should be the absolute priority and if a brand can not guarantee their products are protected then they shouldn't be sold," he says.

Without this assurance, however, parents can take steps to ensure that their children's wearables and other devices are secure. Scott highlights: 'Firstly, do your research. Are you choosing the most secure device you can get your hands on or does it have security capabilities that you can easily set up? When purchasing a new wearable, change the default password straight away before any use and encourage your child to do this every month.

'However, one important approach to protecting child's wearables, and the rest of the connected home, is implementing a solution that keeps the whole smart home secure. There are routers available that are protected with an extra layer of security, ensuring your devices on the network are safe.'

Although this is a fairly new area of development Scott believes that this will become more of a standard over the next two-three years. This will only work when the products are connected via your home router, though. Once those wearables move outside the home network and link up to an external router that extra layer of protection will be gone.

Ticketfly Hacked: Ticketing Service Taken Offline Following 'Cyber Incident'

Billboard Magazine, May 31, 2018

Ticketfly, the indie-focused ticketing service that last year was purchased by Eventbrite, has fallen victim to what it describes as a "cyber incident" and has temporarily shut itself down. The company, which handles ticketing for events like Celebrate Brooklyn, Riot Fest and Music Tastes Good, confirmed the hack to Billboard on Thursday morning.

"Following a series of recent issues with Ticketfly properties, we've determined that Ticketfly.com has been the target of a cyber incident," according to a Ticketfly spokesperson. "Out of an abundance of caution, we have taken all Ticketfly systems temporarily offline as we continue to look into the issue. We realize the gravity of this decision, but the security of client and customer data is our top priority. We are working tirelessly to get our clients back up and running."

Visiting the Ticketfly site now surfaces the message, "All Ticketfly and related systems are temporarily offline. Please check back for updates" and attempting to purchase tickets on the websites for individual concerts or festivals (such as Riot Fest, which just announced its lineup) leads to a "404 Not Found" error.

It's unclear when the hack took place, but users started noticing something was wrong with the Ticketfly site late last night around 9 p.m. PST. Ticketfly's home page was defaced by a hacker calling themselves Ishakdz with a picture of fictional character Guy Fawkes and an ominous warning "Your Security Down im Not Sorry."

On the site, the hacker is claiming to have access to Ticketfly's "backstage" database which one Ticketfly insider is telling Billboard stores client information for the thousands of venues, promoters and festivals that use Ticketfly.

"It's where clients perform all their work building events, setting prices, etc," our source says. When asked if credit card info could be stored in the database, our source said "absolutely but hopefully those would be cordoned off and encrypted."

Engineers with Ticketfly, including founder Andrew Dreskin, were up all night trying to contain the intrusion, which might have started with a hack of Ticketfly's Wordpress blog, which the hacker allegedly downloaded and posted on the Ticketfly site, alongside files allegedly linking to information about Ticketfly "members." It's unclear what "members" means, and the site vandalized site front page was removed after Ticketfly employees took the entire site offline. It's unclear if the potentially stolen and sensitive information will be posted on another site, like Wikileaks.

Once competitors, Eventbrite purchased Ticketfly from Pandora for $200 in a sale that closed in early September 2017. At the time, the combined company projected they will do $4 billion in global ticket sales annually, selling 2 to 3 million tickets per week to consumers in 180 countries.

The functionality of Eventbrite.com appears in tact as of Thursday morning and a tweet from the company stated the "issues impacting our Ticketfly family are not affecting events or ticket sales on the Eventbrite platform in any way."

Why Are We So Bad At Cybersecurity? It's Mostly Neglect

By Michael Trachtenberg

Forbes, May 31, 2018

Today's tech world is primarily infatuated with one thing – security. That is for good reason. With the number of breaches and data privacy violations, it is evident that a focus on security is long overdue in the technology space. The main issue with this, though, is that what most people and organizations think is security isn't security at all. A lot of it boils down to policy, maintenance and scheduling, and it all has very little to do with actual security for most organizations.

An organization selling data to another company or allowing the use of data by a third party is a policy issue, not a security issue. On the other hand, systems like internet of things (IoT) devices, point of sale (POS) devices, Linux systems, desktop open source ecology, Wi-Fi exploits and a whole host of other potential attack vectors typically exist as the result of improper or nonexistent patching or updating. Take, for instance, the WannaCry outbreak. That cyberattack targeted an operating system that had already patched the vulnerability being exploited. For the operating system vendor, this is a security issue. They identified a vulnerability in their code, patched it, released the patch and all should have been prevented. For organizations that experienced disruption, it was based on their inability to patch the operating system.

Let's examine for a minute a common scenario of an organization that purchases a multitier architecture (N-tier) application from a vendor and deploys this line of business (LOB) app in their internal network. Taking into account high availability, let's assume there is a two-node file server cluster with Windows Server operating systems and Windows files services, a two-node Microsoft (an MDS partner) structured query language (SQL) cluster with Windows Server operating systems, a two-node load balanced web front end using Internet Information Services (IIS) or Linux and a two-node load balanced application server set. After just the N-tier hierarchy, that still leaves networking, governance for all of those pieces, internal and external access and access management, as well as communications between all tiers and all support services.

In this case, the organization that purchases and deploys this application doesn't really apply "security" to ensure the safe and secure continual operations of this application, the associated vendors do. The vendors provided all code and provide updates for all code here. The deploying organization needs only to follow appropriate implementation guidelines described by the vendors and to then maintain the systems on all levels, and that could be a daunting task at this point.

It is in that maintenance where we falter most of the time. In this scenario, we have created over 20 items that we have to patch, maintain and monitor for anticipated usage. Because this organization has now created so many chores and typically information technology (IT) is underbudgeted and understaffed, some of these items are not going to be updated, a vulnerability is not going to be addressed and something may eventually become compromised. If and when this happens, it is then perceived as a security incident, but this was a maintenance issue.

FedScoop, May 31, 2018

It might be "very basic and trite," Rod Turk said Thursday, but "you can't protect something you don't know you have."

The acting CIO of the Department of Commerce was talking specifically about high-value IT assets — the present-day federal versions of what nobility in the Middle Ages might move to a castle keep during times of attack.

Those valuables got extra protection, and "we should be doing the same thing with high-value assets," Turk said during a panel discussion about critical infrastructure at the Cyberthreat Intelligence Forum presented by FireEye and produced by FedScoop and CyberScoop. He was joined by John Felker, the director at the national Cybersecurity and Communications Integration Center at the Department of Homeland Security and Paul Morris, CISO at the Transportation Security Administration.

Medieval rulers prized tangible, readily identifiable things, but IT assets can be less obvious. So protecting them also requires agencies to identify exactly what they are, Turk said, and by extension, figuring out how they're vulnerable.

"I'd love to have a silver bullet that could tell me exactly where my next threat is going to come from," Turk went on, "… but that's kind of pie-in-the-sky. It's not fair. It doesn't exist." Instead, he said, cybersecurity is more a game of understanding your own system architecture, both software and hardware, mapping the threat landscape — often from looking at past attacks — and pairing the two to get a sense of where an agency is vulnerable.

But don't wait for an attack to get to work, he cautioned. "Some pre-work is always very, very important," Turk said. Get to know the surrounding security professionals, he suggested, both inside your agency and at intelligence agencies.

Morris echoed this statement. "You gotta build a team that you're going to share with … you have to have that prepared ahead of time," he said. It's too late to make a call "when things go bad."

DHS Slapped With Suit Over Media-Monitoring Tools

By Shayna Posses

Law360, May 31, 2018

Law360 (May 31, 2018, 6:52 PM EDT) – The U.S. Department of Homeland Security was hit with a suit in D.C. federal court Wednesday for allegedly putting out a call for tools to monitor news coverage and a database to track journalists and media influencers without properly assessing the privacy implications, and for withholding related documents from an advocacy group.

The Electronic Privacy Information Center's complaint alleges DHS issued a solicitation for media-monitoring services in early April without conducting and publishing a privacy impact assessment first, which the group said raises concerns because the...

Why Can't Homeland Security Think Straight About Racially Inspired Violence?

Kansas City (MO) Star, May 31, 2018

Who comes to mind if you hear that the government wants to track "violent, terroristic acts that were driven by race-related extremist ideologies"?

The white nationalist thugs who marched through the streets of Charlottesville, Va., perhaps, carrying torches as they chanted vile threats to Jews, African-Americans and Latinos.

Or maybe Dylann Roof, the young white supremacist who slaughtered nine African-Americans in Charleston, S.C., as they gathered in fellowship and prayer. Surely that bloodshed qualified as the actions of a racist extremist.

Nope. You're focusing on the wrong race. You just don't see the racial militancy problem like our government so often does. Remember the FBI's covert ops disgrace, COINTELPRO? It tracked and attempted to undermine black civil rights leaders like Martin Luther King Jr., convinced that what they were up to was dangerous to the nation. SIGN UP

In much the same vein, this generation of federal officials appears to be preoccupied with possible conspiracies among the Black Lives Matter protesters. Never mind that this movement is more a hashtag than a coordinated effort.

The Department of Homeland Security is refusing to release what's known as the "Race Paper," a document with the more formal title of the "Growing Frequency of Race-Related Domestic Terrorist Violence."

In 2016, a Freedom of Information request was filed to obtain it. The request was denied. Pages were provided, but entirely redacted.

But new pressure is mounting. On Wednesday, more than 35 organizations signed a letter sent to Secretary of Homeland Security Kirstjen Nielsen demanding full disclosure.

The effort was led by the American Civil Liberties Union, along with the NAACP, the Brennan Center for Justice, the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers and dozens of other organizations.

The letter was prompted by a Homeland Security official's statement in April to further justify not releasing the document. In it, the official acknowledged at issue was "a proposed intelligence assessment" to address "how violent ideological actors coopt peaceful political activity and mass gatherings."

The statement stressed that surveillance wasn't to be a part of the study and acknowledged constitutionally protected rights, along with the role of protest within politics.

But given past history, those few lines alone don't suffice.

There is also the fact that last fall, an FBI report was leaked with the titled "Black Identity Extremists Likely Motivated to Target Law Enforcement Officers." The highly criticized report took a handful of cases and came out with the wild prediction that what it termed B.I.E.'s — Black Identity Extremists — would continue to target police for violent, assassination-style attacks.

That hasn't happened, despite continued, high-profile cases of questionable uses of lethal force by police. Protests against police brutality have been overwhelmingly peaceful.

And the horrific premeditated attack on police officers in Dallas in July 2016, which killed five, turned out to be the work of a lone, deranged gunman.

When pressed about the FBI report in a congressional hearing, Attorney General Jeff Sessions was unable to name any African-American organizations that have committed violence against police.

Of course, everyone wants the government to stay abreast of threats from those who would use demonstrations for their own ill will. But what's not needed is a set of conflated beliefs based on racial misperceptions that are used to target some citizens to stifle their free speech.

Release the document. Uncover any such conspiracy theories brewing within the federal government.

Much murder and mayhem has been committed of late by disgruntled white men with handguns and assault rifles and bombs, much of it specifically targeting people of color. And neo-Nazi types have raised the threat of violence in many cities.

Yet, continuously, what surfaces from federal agencies are alerts that portray black and brown activists and their loosely affiliated messaging as a dangerous conspiracy.

The rub is that the people who wind up targeted are the ones attempting to hold accountable the very government that is labeling them a threat. That's not a coincidence, and it's not new in America.

Body Of Woman Shot By US Border Agent Returns To Guatemala

U.S. News & World Report, May 31, 2018

The body of a young Guatemalan woman who was shot dead last week by a U.S. border agent near Laredo, Texas, arrived Thursday in her home country and was turned over to her grieving parents.

Lidia and Gilberto Gomez received the white coffin carrying their daughter Claudia Patricia Gomez in the Guatemalan capital. Its cover partway lifted, they kissed and caressed the glass pane in which she was encased.

They were taking the body later to her hometown of San Juan Ostuncalco, outside the western highland city of Quetzaltenango, for a wake and burial.

Gomez, 19, who studied forensic accounting, had sought admission to a state university but failed to pass three admission exams. Living in poverty and unable to find work, she left for the United States about a month ago.

On May 23 she died of a gunshot to the head in an incident that is still under investigation.

The U.S. Border Patrol initially said that the lone agent fired after being attacked "by multiple subjects using blunt objects." It later said the group had ignored his orders to get on the ground and "rushed him."

It also initially described Gomez as "one of the assailants" but later revised that to say she was "one member of the group."

Three other Guatemalans were taken into custody during the incident.

Relatives of Gomez have asked for an investigation of the shooting death and the border agent involved.

Border Patrol Shooting Shakes Town Where Illegal Crossings Are Part Of Daily Life

By Roque Planas

Huffington Post, May 31, 2018

The vague message J.C. Gonzalez received over the radio on May 23 led him to believe that it was the Border Patrol agent who'd been shot.

But when this tiny border town's fire chief arrived on the scene, it was Claudia Gómez, an unarmed, 20-year-old Guatemalan immigrant, who lay dying in an empty lot, her legs tangled upon each other. The bullet from the Border Patrol agent's firearm had pierced the left side of her forehead around her hairline and exited through the rear side of her skull. She was still breathing, so the chief drove back to the fire station, a few blocks away, to retrieve a neck brace and backboard to stabilize her head and spine. Then Gonzalez's partner and a Border Patrol agent — Gonzalez didn't know whether it was the one who had fired the shot — took turns administering chest compressions.

By the time emergency medical services arrived, Gómez was dead. Officers from the Texas Department of Public Safety, the Webb County Sheriff's Office, Texas Rangers and Laredo Police gathered around her body. A medical evacuation helicopter landed nearby. Marta Martinez, a resident who lived next to the empty lot, filmed the aftermath and streamed it live on Facebook, spreading the news to millions of people. When Gonzalez went back to the station, he left behind the medical supplies he'd brought, which became evidence in an investigation into the shooting led by the FBI.

Details remain scarce about the circumstances that prompted the 15-year veteran of Border Patrol, whom the agency has not named while the investigation proceeds, to pull the trigger. The circumstances appear damning.

The agent had responded to a report of illegal activity near a culvert where the town meets the river, according to Customs and Border Protection. The agency initially released a statement saying that the group refused to obey the agent when he confronted them and that some of them attacked him with "blunt objects." CBP walked the story back the next day, saying instead the group had "ignored his verbal commands and rushed him." Neither Gómez nor the group of three other unauthorized immigrants on the scene, who were later apprehended, were armed. The shooting took place midday on one of the town's main streets, but no one has claimed publicly that they witnessed it.

Gómez's family plans to sue Border Patrol over the killing.

Gonzalez, an Army veteran who worked for several years as a deputy sheriff, worried the incident would undermine trust with Border Patrol in a town where that confidence has always been scarce. In Rio Bravo, illegal crossings are so common that parents urge their kids to avoid playing in the river to keep from getting caught up in law enforcement operations and to use caution in the street to avoid Border Patrol trucks whizzing by.

People in Rio Bravo have never trusted Border Patrol, Gonzalez said. And the agency's reputation had already taken a blow earlier this year, when another Border Patrol agent who worked in the same county, Ronald Anthony Burgos Aviles, was arrested on accusations of killing his mistress and her 1-year-old son.

Several residents — most of whom declined to be named for fear of angering Border Patrol or inviting threats, like the ones Marta Martínez received after posting her video to Facebook — viewed the shooting with suspicion.

One longtime resident who lives near the river said it was a common occurrence for people to run through his property and scale the fence to evade Border Patrol, before he put up a gate to keep them out. He also installed security cameras and wished his neighbors had too. "Yeah, I trust them," he said, speaking in Spanish, of Border Patrol. "But then they do these things and you don't. If it would've happened here, it would've been filmed and then we'd have evidence."

Even so, many of them are willing to give the agent the benefit of the doubt, given the lack of details about the first Border Patrol shooting in the city's history.

"No one likes them here," another resident, speaking in Spanish, said of Border Patrol. But having crossed himself illegally in the past, he also knows first-hand the pressure that grinds upon the agents that used to chase him. "It's like any other job," he said. "You get frustrated. That will trick your mind."

Mayor Francisco Peña would rather have been planning his town's first city-sponsored Independence Day celebration when he heard of the shooting last week. He himself had crossed from Mexico at age 4, not knowing that he was an undocumented immigrant. (He adjusted his status decades later, after realizing that his father's birth in Laredo qualified him for U.S. citizenship.) Peña went on to serve in the Army, fight in the Korean War, work as a teacher and become a medical doctor.

He suspected that Gómez, who earned a college degree in accounting but migrated after struggling to find work, might have have made similar contributions if given the chance.

As the leader of a town with an $800,000 budget and no local police force along the banks of an unfenced section of the Rio Grande, he wished he had more Border Patrol agents. People wade through the river almost every day, and he has little faith in the technology the agency uses to catch them. He's seen people walk up from the banks of the river on all fours like dogs or roll like logs, which he thinks allows them to evade the Border Patrol's sensors.

But after the killing, Peña found himself struggling to balance his sympathy for Gómez with his loyalty to the Border Patrol in a town where illegal crossings and drug trafficking are a fact of daily life. He feels certain the shooting was accidental, though he acknowledged it had unsettled the town, where many residents are undocumented. It was clear, he thought, that Gómez was not one of the "animals" the president sometimes spoke about.

He was frustrated, too: Over the last four years, the last two Republican governors have spent more than $2 billion to send state Department of Public Safety troopers and the National Guard to border towns like Rio Bravo. But the state ignored more mundane public safety requests.

Roque Planas Rio Bravo Mayor Francisco Peña displays architectural plans for a park the city will inaugurate on July 4, 2018. The park will sit directly across from the culvert where a migrant woman named Claudia Gómez allegedly crossed into the United States before a Border Patrol agent shot and killed her.

When Tropical Storm Charley hit Rio Bravo in 1998, flooding at the edge of the Rio Grande destroyed several houses that remain abandoned to this day. Local officials insist that human traffickers and drug smugglers use the structures as safe houses. But state lawmakers in Austin ignored Peña's requests since 2015 for funding to buy the properties from the current owners and tear them down. His last ask in January of 2017 totaled $200,000.

Mayor Peña doubts that the cat-and-mouse game between Border Patrol and the immigrants coming to his town to try to make a better life will ever end. But he hopes the killing won't dampen the patriotic fervor he hopes to instill at the city's first official Independence Day celebration in July. The abandoned houses will remain for now, but he's looking forward to unveiling a new park, with an outdoor theater and public gathering space. It sits on Tuliapán Drive, directly in front of the culvert where CBP says that Gómez crossed.

He's recruited young residents for a kite-flying show and goal-scoring contest on the new soccer field. And he's curated a list of songs he hopes will encourage the town to feel the same sense of national pride that he does, including a special rendition of "America the Beautiful." It's by Tejano musician Jay Perez.

"He makes the most beautiful version of 'America, the Beautiful,'" Peña told a visitor Wednesday. "And he's one of us."

Customs Agents Took $58,000 From Ohio Man At Airport. He's Suing To Get It Back.

Chicago Tribune, May 31, 2018

A 64-year-old Cleveland, Ohio, man is suing U.S. Customs and Border Protection after agents strip-searched him at an airport in October and took more than $58,000 in cash from him without charging him with any crime, according to a federal lawsuit filed this week in Ohio.

Customs agents seized the money through a process known as civil asset forfeiture, a law enforcement technique that allows authorities to take cash and property from people who are never convicted or even charged with a crime. The practice is widespread at the federal level. In 2017 federal authorities seized more than $2 billion in assets from people, a net loss similar in size to annual losses from residential burglaries in the United States.

Customs says it suspects that the petitioner in the case, Rustem Kazazi, was involved in smuggling, drug trafficking or money laundering. Kazazi strongly denies those allegations and says that the agency is violating federal law by keeping his money without filing any formal complaint against him.

Kazazi is a retired officer with the Albanian police who relocated with his family to the United States in 2005 after receiving visas through the State Department's lottery program. They became U.S. citizens in 2011. After more than a decade away, Kazazi planned a trip to Albania last fall to visit relatives, make repairs on a family property and potentially purchase a vacation home.

He took $58,100 in U.S. currency with him, the product of 12 years of savings by Kazazi, his wife, Lejla, and his son Erald, who is finishing a chemical engineering degree at Cleveland State University, according to the lawsuit. The family lives in Parma Heights, a suburb of Cleveland.

In an interview translated by his son, Rustem Kazazi said safety concerns prompted him to take cash on his trip, rather than wire the funds to a local bank.

"The crime [in Albania] is much worse than it is here," he said. "Other people that have made large withdrawals [from Albanian banks] have had people intercept them and take their money. The exchange rates and fees are [also] excessive."

Albanian contractors often prefer dollars and euros over the local currency, Kazazi said. For those reasons, he said, many expatriates who return to visit Albania bring large amounts of cash with them.

On Oct. 24, Kazazi arrived at Cleveland Hopkins International Airport to begin the first leg of his journey, which would take him to Newark to connect with an international flight. He carried the cash in three counted and labeled bundles in his carry-on bag, he said, along with receipts from recent bank withdrawals and documentation pertaining to his family's property in Tirana, the Albanian capital.

According to a translated declaration that Kazazi provided to the court as part of the lawsuit, TSA employees discovered the cash in his bag during a routine security check and alerted Customs and Border Protection.

"They asked me some questions, which I could not understand as they spoke too quickly," according to Kazazi's declaration. "I asked them for an interpreter and asked to call my family, but they denied my request."

The CBP agents led Kazazi to a small windowless room and conducted multiple searches of him and his belongings, he said. According to Kazazi's declaration, the agents asked him to remove all of his clothing and gave him a blanket to cover the lower portion of his body. Kazazi said that a man wearing rubber gloves then "started searching different areas of my body."

Kazazi characterized the search as a "strip search" in an interview translated by his son. "I felt my rights violated," he said.

The searches turned up nothing – no drugs, no contraband, no evidence of any illegal activity, according to the lawsuit. But the agents took Kazazi's money. Even more alarming to Kazazi was that the receipt the agents handed to him did not list the dollar value of his cash.

"I began to worry that they were trying to steal the money for themselves," he said in his court declaration.

After being released, Kazazi called his wife and explained what had happened. None of it made sense to either of them, but Lejla Kazazi told her husband that it had to be some sort of misunderstanding and that he should continue on his trip and let her and Erald sort it out at home.

Seven months later, Customs still has the money.

The Kazazis have been caught up in a broader struggle over civil asset forfeiture, a law enforcement practice that allows police to seize and permanently keep cash and other property on the suspicion of wrongdoing. Defenders of the practice, such as Attorney General Jeff Sessions, say it's a valuable tool for fighting drug cartels and other criminal enterprises in cases where a criminal conviction is difficult to obtain. But media outlets such as The Washington Post and civil liberties groups such as the ACLU have found that the process is ripe for abuse.

"The government can just take everything from you," said Wesley Hottot, the Kazazi family's lawyer. Hottot is with the Institute for Justice, a civil liberties law firm working to overturn civil forfeiture. People wishing to challenge a civil forfeiture must essentially demonstrate their innocence in court, Hottot said, turning the dictum of "innocent until proven guilty" on its head.

"You have to affirmatively show you're not a criminal to get your own money back," Hottot said. "You have to effectively prove a negative."

Federal authorities haul in billions in cash and property from forfeiture every year, a tally that doesn't include additional billions seized in state and local forfeiture actions.

The Kazazi family didn't hear anything about their cash or why it was taken until more than a month after it was seized, when Customs finally sent a seizure notice to their home.

"This is to notify you that Homeland Security Investigations (HSI) seized the property described below at Cleveland, OH on October 24, 2017: $57,330 in U.S. Currency," the notice states. "Enforcement activity indicates that the currency was involved in a smuggling/drug trafficking/money laundering operation."

The first thing the Kazazis noticed was that the dollar amount listed was $770 less than the amount that Kazazi said he took with him. The family said that the cash was all in $100 bills, making it impossible for it to add up to $57,330.

Hottot said these types of "errors" are common in forfeiture cases, and that it's "always in the same direction": government receipts coming up a few hundred or a few thousand dollars short of what defendants say they had.

The Kazazis said they were also flabbergasted by the allegation of "smuggling/drug trafficking/money laundering." There was no indication of how the officers arrived at that conclusion. "This was the most offensive thing I've ever seen," Erald Kazazi said. "They provide no evidence. They list three different things without even saying which one it is."

In a statement, a CBP spokesman said that "pursuant to an administrative search of Mr. Kazazi and his bags, TSA agents discovered artfully concealed U.S. currency. Mr. Kazazi provided inconsistent statements regarding the currency, had no verifiable source of income and possessed evidence of structuring activity," that is, making cash withdrawals of less than $10,000 to avoid reporting requirements.

Hottot denies that Rustem Kazazi was trying to conceal the cash – he had wrapped it in paper, labeled it and sent it through the scanner in his carry-on bag. The "inconsistent statements" were a result of Kazazi's poor English language comprehension, Hottot said.

Hottot also noted that the structuring allegation was not included in the seizure notice. "They've never mentioned structuring before," he said. "I think what were really seeing here is some creative Monday morning quarterbacking by CBP, trying to justify the unjustified."

The CBP spokesman also noted that there are disclosure requirements for traveling internationally with sums of cash greater than $10,000. "Failure to declare monetary instruments in amounts more than $10,000 can result in fines or forfeiture and could result in civil and or criminal penalties," he said.

Hottot said Kazazi was well aware of those requirements and planned file his disclosure form during his four-hour layover in Newark. The form instructs travelers to file the paperwork "at the time of departure from the United States with the Customs officer in charge at any Customs port of entry or departure."

"If he's gonna follow the law on this he's gonna have to do it in Newark on the way out of the country," Hottot said.

The CBP seizure notice gave the Kazazis a number of options for proceeding with the case. They could abandon the cash completely, or they could make an "offer in compromise" – letting CBP keep a certain percentage of the seized cash if they returned the rest. There were also options for challenging the seizure administratively through internal CBP channels or letting the case proceed in federal court. The Kazazis opted for federal court.

Erald Kazazi said they are pursuing a court case because they don't trust the internal CBP process. "They were the ones that seized our money," he said. "We wanted another party like the attorney's office to deal with this case. Based on my father's experience it didn't seem like CBP really wanted to help us out."

Under federal forfeiture law, the government was required to initiate a forfeiture case within 90 days after the Kazazis responded to the seizure notice. If they failed to initiate a forfeiture case within that window, they would be required to promptly return the money to the claimants.

That deadline passed over a month ago, on April 17. CBP has not filed a forfeiture complaint; nor has it returned the money. Erald Kazazi said he has called CBP several times was told that the case was now with the U.S. attorney's office in Ohio and that they had no additional information on it. So this week the Kazazis filed their own lawsuit, demanding the immediate return of their property.

The U.S. attorney's office for the Northern District of Ohio declined to comment on the record.

Erald Kazazi said the ordeal has affected his father's health and turned their lives upside-down. But, he said, his father's high opinion of the United States hasn't changed.

"He's not going to let the actions of some employees that made a mistake in their duties change his opinion of the country," he said.

A 64-year-old Put His Life Savings In His Carry-on. U.S. Customs Took It Without Charging Him With A Crime.

ICE Cancels Proposed Contract For Help In Hiring Thousands Of Deportation Officers

Government Executive, May 31, 2018

The Trump administration last week abruptly canceled a solicitation for a private sector partner to help it hire thousands of deportation officers and support personnel, citing delays in obtaining the requisite funding.

Immigration and Customs Enforcement vowed to move forward with awarding the contract in October, at the turn of the new fiscal year. ICE published the solicitation to support an executive order President Trump issued shortly after taking office, which called on the agency to hire 10,000 new law enforcement agents. The contractor would have assisted ICE in hiring 8,500 deportation officers and 1,500 criminal investigators and in the recruiting and onboarding of about 6,600 support staff positions.

"Due to unforeseen delays associated with the FY 2018 budget and hiring timelines, the government has decided to cancel the subject solicitation at this time," ICE wrote in an update to the solicitation last week. "The government anticipates re-soliciting this requirement by the 1st quarter of FY 2019."

While ICE cited only a delay in receiving its fiscal 2018 funding allocation—Congress only approved the governmentwide omnibus spending bill in March, halfway through the fiscal year—the measure Trump signed into law did not provide for any significant hiring boost at the agency. The spending package included a 10 percent increase of $641 million to ICE funding, but it authorized the hiring of just 65 additional criminal investigations agents. Trump's budget had requested funding for 1,000 new agents as part of the president's mandate that ICE bring on 10,000 law enforcement personnel.

The solicitation did not estimate the value of the contract, which would consist of one base year and the government's option for two additional years. Customs and Border Protection recently awarded a similar contract to provide Accenture Federal Services up to $297 million to help it hire as many as 7,500 employees, which will enable the agency to meet another part of Trump's order. If ICE moves forward with the contract next year and spends the same amount per employee, the contract would be worth about $657 million.

CBP awarded its contract despite also facing pushback from congressional appropriators. Congress did not authorize any new hires at Border Patrol—where Trump has called for 5,000 new agents—in the recent omnibus, and instead provided $7 million for 351 customs officers at ports of entry. Lawmakers noted that "despite significant investments in hiring, retention and recruitment strategies," CBP now expects Border Patrol to lose more agents than it will gain in fiscal 2018.

"These reduced payroll costs are reflected in the bill," lawmakers wrote in an explanatory statement accompanying the omnibus.

ICE has struggled to meet its hiring goals, with the number of new deportation officer hires—where the Trump administration has envisioned the overwhelming majority of the new employees working—dropping in half in Trump's first year in office to just 371. In his fiscal 2019 budget, Trump proposed funding for ICE to hire 2,000 new agents.

ICE did not elaborate on the solicitation cancellation, but earlier this year Danielle Bennett, an agency spokeswoman, told Government Executive that the agency is taking a "multi-pronged" approach to fulfilling Trump's hiring mandate and would be ready to ramp up if it received authorization from Congress.

"ICE is building a pipeline of candidates to support the president's executive order . . . pending receipt of appropriations," Bennett said.

How CPR Training Helped This TSA Officer Save A Man's Life At Philly Airport

By Jackie Hatter-Wilson

Philly (PA), May 31, 2018

On Thursday, March 15, I saved a man's life.

The day started out much like any other. I reported to work at the Philadelphia International Airport (PHL) where I've worked as a TSA Transportation Security Officer (TSO) for 15 years.

Becoming a TSO requires a specific type of training. In addition to keeping millions of airline passengers safe from threat or danger, we are also required to know cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) to revive any passengers who might suffer from a sudden cardiac arrest. I went through extensive training three years ago, but never had to use my CPR skills until that day in March.

I was in the International Arrivals Hall at PHL when a colleague, Stephanie Davis, pointed out a man who was slumped over in a chair. Concerned with his appearance, we approached the man and attempted to communicate with him to see if he was alright.

When he did not respond, I immediately checked for a pulse, which I was unable to detect. It quickly became clear to us that this man was in cardiac arrest; he was unresponsive, had no pulse, and was not breathing. I was panicked, but thankfully, my CPR training kicked in. With Stephanie's help, we safely got the man onto the floor to begin performing CPR, and asked another colleague to call the airport Emergency Medical Team (EMT) for assistance. In the meantime, we solicited for help and were fortunate when a U.S. military medic stepped in to help us.

I knew that we had to act fast and make sure blood was still circulating through the man's heart and oxygen was reaching his brain in order to keep him alive.

Stephanie and I retrieved a nearby Automatic External Defibrillator (AED) device to shock the man's heart back into rhythm. We began administering AED shocks and alternately performing CPR by pressing hard and fast on the center of his chest.

During this time, I was able to identify the man's heart medication in his personal belongings, which would be critical information for the EMTs.

When the EMTs arrived, they continued CPR. After the man was transported to safety, I was able to gather the flight information of his wife who was arriving to the airport so that she would be able to reunite with her husband as soon as possible.

Thanks to our fast action and CPR training, we were able to save that man's life. He had a heart attack but would make a full recovery, suffering no permanent damage to his heart or his brain.

Every year, more than 350,000 cardiac arrests occur outside of the hospital, and more than 20 percent occur in public places like the airport, according to the American Heart Association. The survival rate for cardiac arrests outside of the hospital is only 10 percent, as these victims often rely upon friends, family or even strangers who are not trained in CPR to save their lives. CPR, especially when performed immediately, can double or triple a cardiac arrest victim's chance of survival.

In times of crisis when fast action is critical and CPR is required, it's important to remember two steps:

Call 911

Push hard and fast in the center of the chest

That's all it can take to save a life.

Jackie Hatter-Wilson lives in University City with her son.

A message from the America Heart Association: Every year, the American Heart Association recognizes National CPR & AED Awareness Week June 1-7. During this time, we shine a spotlight on how lives can be saved if more Americans know CPR and how to use an AED. Our goal is to double the current bystander CPR rate by the year 2020. On June 1, we will host a free CPR training event on the lawn at the Independence Visitor Center from 11 A.M. to 1 P.M. Learn more at cpr.heart.org.

TERRORISM INVESTIGATIONS

What Is Terrorism? Attacks In Canada And Belgium Reflect Uncertain Definition

By Rick Gladstone

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

New York Times, May 31, 2018

Two masked bombers walked into a crowded restaurant near Toronto and detonated a homemade explosive that wounded at least 15 people. In Belgium, a temporarily freed prisoner went on a deadly rampage, stabbing and shooting people and taking hostages before the police killed him.

In both attacks, each carried out in recent days, civilians were the victims. But it was only the Belgium attack — in which the assailant screamed "Allahu akbar!" (God is great!) — that the police quickly described as a possible act of terrorism.

The comparison cuts to the core of a protracted debate over what constitutes terrorism, who is a terrorist and what such designations actually mean. An attack viewed as terrorism in one part of the world may be seen as a common crime elsewhere. The debate has grown more complex and intense in the years since the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, but it dates back many years.

"You're never going to win on this," said Charles Kurzman, a professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina and a co-director of the Carolina Center for the Study of the Middle East and Muslim Civilizations. "There's a legal definition which differs by country. Common definitions are going to vary."

Here is a look at some of the issues that make the term terrorism so nebulous and tricky.

It is derived from the Latin "terrorem," which translates as "panic," "alarm" and "great fear." The term's use widened with the 1793-94 period of the French Revolution known as the "Reign of Terror," when the revolutionary government conducted mass executions to intimidate suspected opponents.

The Oxford Dictionary calls terrorism "the unlawful use of violence and intimidation, especially against civilians, in the pursuit of political aims." Merriam-Webster calls it the systematic and coercive use of terror, defined as "violent or destructive acts (such as bombing) committed by groups in order to intimidate a population or government into granting their demands."

Such definitions are not universally accepted and can be interpreted in different ways. Under the dictionary criteria, some experts would argue, the revolutionary colonist soldiers who slaughtered Native Americans allied with the British were terrorists, as were John Brown's abolitionists who indiscriminately killed civilians in pro-slavery states before the Civil War. Palestinians regarded as terrorists by Israel are seen by their supporters as resistance fighters opposed to an occupation.

Still, some scholars say the word terrorism can still be used objectively.

"I think it can be defined with a fair degree of precision, which doesn't necessarily entail judging or taking a position," said Todd Gitlin, a professor at the Columbia Journalism School. "My definition of terrorism, which I don't think is unusual, is a violent act in order to strike terror in the hearts of a population toward a political end."

Acts of violence have become so ubiquitous that sometimes the terrorism label is applied — as in the Belgium case — even without an obvious ideological purpose. But sometimes the label is not applied — as in the Canada example — and that is where the confusion comes in.

Part of the reason may lie in simple geography and recent history. Unlike Europe, Canada has not suffered the repeated attacks attributed to extremist groups like the Islamic State, and the police may be less likely to assume such a possibility without more facts.

Although the targeted restaurant was Indian, suggesting a possibly ethnic-based bias attack, experts cautioned that the identities of the assailants and their motives remained unclear.

"Until you know who did it, it's problematic to be categorized as a terrorist attack," said Victor Asal, a political-science professor at the University at Albany-SUNY and a researcher at the National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism.

"If it's going to be terrorism it's got to be politically or ideologically motivated," he said. "If I'm killing you because you sleep with my wife, that's not terrorism."

While few details were immediately available about the masked bombers in the Canada attack, much was known about the assailant in Belgium, a 35-year-old Belgian prisoner with a history of assault, drug and theft offenses who had been granted a 48-hour leave. Officials in Belgium said Wednesday that he might have been converted by Islamist extremist cellmates. And the Islamic State militant group belatedly exalted him as a martyred disciple.

Nonetheless, terrorism experts were not all convinced. Some theorized that the assailant was a career criminal who might have used the guise of adherence to Islamist extremism to justify the attack.

"It looks like an act of terrorism, but here's where things get a bit murky," said Brian M. Jenkins, a senior adviser at the RAND Corporation. "He may or may not have been radicalized in prison. People are complicated — invariably there is a variety of motivations."

Mr. Jenkins pointed to the case of Esteban Santiago, an Iraq war veteran who had been hearing voices and behaving erratically in the year before he killed five people at the Fort Lauderdale airport in January 2017 — an attack that was initially thought to have been terrorism.

"There was a lot of evidence of mental illness," Mr. Jenkins said. "Do I have a terrorist here, or do I have evidence of a mental disorder?"

Against the backdrop of what rights groups have described as rising anti-Muslim bigotry in the West, the answer is almost certainly yes.

"The perception is that terrorism isn't really terrorism unless a Muslim is somehow involved," said Ibrahim Hooper, a spokesman for the Council on Islamic-American Relations, the nation's leading Muslim advocacy organization. "We've seen that time and time again."

He pointed to a study published by the Journal of Communication that showed that American television viewers see far more images of Muslims as domestic terrorists than what is reflected in actual law enforcement statistics. The study found that among those described as domestic terrorists in 146 news reports between 2008 and 2012, 81 percent were identifiable as Muslims, but that F.B.I. reports from those years showed that only 6 percent of domestic terrorism suspects were Muslim.

Many supporters of gun control in the United States argue that they should be. The Las Vegas casino gunman, Stephen Paddock, who killed 58 people and wounded hundreds before taking his own life, had prepared meticulously for the attack last October and appeared to know exactly what he was doing.

But the glaring hole in the police investigation is an understanding of why he did it. Other than what appeared to have been a preoccupation with guns and possible anger over gambling losses, Mr. Paddock's reasons died with him.

"Insofar as we know, there's no political content, no evidence of a political motive — it's not as though he was trying to compel the government to do something," Mr. Jenkins said. "This was a shooter."

The difference between terrorism and other acts of violence matters because terrorism — regardless of how it's defined around the world — is considered far more serious as a threat to national security and will provoke a more aggressive government response.

It is also a term often used to influence public opinion.

"If Americans and others are more afraid of terrorism, they're going to vote in a certain way," Mr. Kurzman said. "There's going to be a sense of insecurity that other acts of violence don't often generate."

Trump Says Meetings With North Koreans Are 'Very Positive'

By Dave Boyer

Washington Times, May 31, 2018

President Trump said Thursday that negotiations to restart a denuclearization summit with North Korea are "going along very well," while a top North Korean official prepares to deliver a letter to Mr. Trump from leader Kim Jong-un.

"To me, it's been very positive," the president told reporters at Joint Base Andrews as he departed for Texas. "Hopefully, we'll have a meeting on the 12th [of June]."

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo met Wednesday night and again Thursday in New York City with North Korean Vice Chairman Kim Yong-chol to discuss preparations for the possible summit in Singapore.

Kim Yong-chol is expected to travel to Washington Friday to deliver a letter to Mr. Trump from Mr. Kim.

"I look forward to seeing what's in the letter," Mr. Trump said. "It's very important to them."

He said the summit negotiations are "in good hands," adding that a summit could become more than one meeting, or it might not happen at all.

"I want it to be meaningful," the president said. "It doesn't mean it gets all done at one meeting, maybe you have to have a second or a third. And maybe we'll have none."

Mr. Trump also tweeted Thursday morning, "Very good meetings with North Korea."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A senior State Department official, speaking on Wednesday night in New York, described the talks between Mr. Pompeo and Kim Yong-chul as "the two top dogs on each side are meeting to see what needs to be done in the two weeks…for the possibility of a summit."

"We've been clear that what we're looking for is CVID — complete, verifiable, irreversible denuclearization," the official said. "And in order for a summit to be successful, the North Koreans have to do things that they have not done before."

North Korean Officials To Deliver Letter From Kim, Trump Says

By John T. Bennett

CQ Roll Call (DC), May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump said Thursday he expects a North Korean delegation to hand deliver a letter to him on from Kim Jong Un — but he stopped short of saying their denuclearization summit is back on.

Trump expects the North Korean officials to be in Washington on Friday to deliver the letter. That delegation has been in New York, where senior North Korean officials met with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo.

Before he boarded Air Force One for a trip to Texas, where he primarily will be focused on raising money for the Republican Party, the president told reporters the New York talks have gone "very well."

But he said he remains unsure that a deal to revive the on-then-off June 12 summit is near.

On Wednesday, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said U.S. officials "expect" the nuclear talks to happen in mid-June after Trump canceled the summit seven days ago.

"Things are headed in that direction," a senior White House official said Wednesday when asked to clarify Sanders' comment that White House officials "expect" the Kim Jong Un summit to go on as initially planned on a June 12.

"It's still too soon" to say the denuclearization summit is officially back on, the official said.

As Air Force One was taxiing toward takeoff, Trump also announced that he would issue a pardon for right-wing commentator Dinesh D'Souza, who was convicted in 2014 of campaign finance violations.

D'Souza "has been treated very unfairly by our government!" Trump tweeted.

D'Souza was convicted of using a "straw donor" for an illegal campaign donation.

U.S. Cites 'Real Progress' Toward A Summit Meeting With Kim Jong-un

By Gardiner Harris And Neil Macfarquhar

New York Times, May 31, 2018

The Trump administration pushed ahead with hopes for a summit soon with Kim Jong-un, the North Korean leader, after talks on Thursday with envoys from Pyongyang and the announcement of a meeting on Friday between the country's top nuclear negotiator and President Trump.

After discussions in New York, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said he was "confident we are moving in the right direction."

Mr. Pompeo maintained that the United States would continue to demand a fully verifiable and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. But he acknowledged that significant challenges remained and predicted more "tough moments and difficult times" as the two sides negotiated.

Still, Mr. Pompeo cited "real progress" in rescheduling a summit meeting between Mr. Kim and Mr. Trump that was set for June 12 in Singapore, before the American president canceled it last week.

It would be "nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity go to waste," Mr. Pompeo told reporters after two and a half hours of discussions with Kim Yong-chol, the former North Korean intelligence chief and top nuclear arms negotiator.

"If these talks are successful, they will truly be historic," he said.

The diplomacy is expected to continue on Friday in Washington, where Mr. Trump is planning to receive a letter from the North Korean leader, hand-delivered by his envoys.

In remarks to reporters on Thursday, Mr. Trump said it was not clear if the show of tenuous détente would be enough to strike a deal to hold the summit meeting but said negotiations between Washington and Pyongyang — which both sides hope will end decades of enmity and suspicion — are "in good hands."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The meeting set for Friday came as a surprise even to some on Mr. Trump's staff, and he offered few details when he announced it. It would be a rare visit similar to one made to Washington in 2000 by Vice Marshal Jo Myong Rok, who was then North Korea's second-most-powerful official. Mr. Jo met President Bill Clinton and delivered a letter from North Korea's leader at the time, Kim Jong-il.

Mr. Trump's decision to personally meet the North Korean envoy displayed his eagerness to be at the center of the action for the high-stakes talks.

A senior State Department official told reporters on Wednesday night that it would be natural for the North Korean delegation to pass communications through Mr. Pompeo, to then deliver to the president. The official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said then that he would be surprised if the envoys delivered a letter to the president personally.

Michael Green, a former senior Asia adviser to President George W. Bush, said the flurry of diplomatic activity had already led South Korea, Russia and China to either propose, consider or undertake a softening of sanctions.

"North Korea's goal is to defuse sanctions, and it's already working," Mr. Green said. "There's nothing that the North Koreans have put on the table that suggests any serious intent to denuclearize."

American and North Korean envoys have also been meeting in Panmunjom, in the Demilitarized Zone between North and South Korea, and another set of officials has held talks in Singapore to hash out the logistics of putting the June 12 summit meeting back on.

The blizzard of meetings represents a breathtaking change from the bellicose language the two sides lobbed at each other for much of last year, with Mr. Trump threatening to unleash "fire and fury" against North Korea if it endangered the United States.

But the two sides still remain far apart. The Trump administration has largely insisted that North Korea commit itself to a rapid and complete unwinding of its nuclear program, although the president recently opened the door to a phased dismantling.

President Moon Jae-in of South Korea, who served as an early mediator between Washington and Pyongyang, is known to favor a step-by-step process that would lift some sanctions against North Korea in exchange for verifiable steps to stop or reverse its weapons programs. North Korea is thought to favor such an approach.

A senior South Korean official warned on Wednesday that differences between the two sides were substantial.

"It won't be easy to narrow the gap and find common ground, but I think it would not be impossible," Cho Myoung-gyon, the South's unification minister, said in a speech in Seoul.

Deep divisions remain within the Trump administration, and have led in part to the sharp reversals in the approach to the reclusive country. In March, Mr. Trump impulsively accepted the invitation to meet with Mr. Kim — the summit meeting that he canceled last week, only to reopen the door a day later.

John R. Bolton, the national security adviser, is known to be skeptical of the utility of the summit meeting, as are many of the administration's senior officials who noted that North Korea used precisely this sort of diplomatic opening during the 1990s and 2000s to undermine sanctions and further advance its nuclear and missile programs.

Mr. Pompeo and Defense Secretary Jim Mattis are reportedly in favor of the summit meeting. Mr. Pompeo in particular has become deeply invested in the outreach to North Korea.

Before becoming secretary of state, and while still serving as C.I.A. director, he made a secret visit to Pyongyang this year to lay the groundwork for a summit meeting. He returned in early May to bring home three American citizens who were detained in North Korea.

Still, Mr. Pompeo sought on Thursday to reassure both Japan and South Korea, whose leaders have been deeply uneasy with Mr. Trump's surprise announcements and unpredictability — as well as reports that the American president had ordered the Pentagon to prepare options for drawing down United States troops in South Korea.

But Mr. Pompeo said there was "no daylight" among the United States, Japan and South Korea on how to resolve the standoff with North Korea. He also said the United States had heard and understood the concerns of its two allies in the region.

Mr. Trump is not the only president of a world power seeking a meeting with the North Korean leader.

In Pyongyang on Thursday, the Russian foreign minister, Sergey V. Lavrov, became the first senior Russian official to meet with Kim Jong-un. Mr. Lavrov also extended an invitation from President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia for Mr. Kim to visit Moscow.

Mr. Lavrov called for the lifting of sanctions on North Korea and endorsed moves toward reconciliation on the Korean Peninsula.

"It's absolutely clear that when starting a discussion about solving the nuclear problem and other problems on the Korean Peninsula, we proceed from the fact that the decision cannot be complete while sanctions are in place," Mr. Lavrov said.

It was the first visit by the Russian foreign minister to North Korea in a decade, and seemed designed to reassert Moscow's longstanding interests in the Koreas on the eve of the possible summit meeting between Mr. Kim and Mr. Trump.

Before leaving Moscow, Mr. Lavrov had said Russia was not involved in talks over the United States-North Korea summit meeting. But Moscow was a party in previous negotiations on the nuclear question, and it has offered itself as a possible mediator between North and South.

In addition, Mr. Putin has made a habit of looking for gaps and weaknesses in American foreign policy that he can exploit. His spokesman, Dmitri S. Peskov, said it was premature to discuss the timing of any such visit by Mr. Kim to the Russian capital.

Russia shares an 11-mile border with North Korea, which earns an estimated $120 million annually by seizing the wages of construction workers employed in Russia, according to the Database Center for North Korean Human Rights, a group in Seoul.

Senior North Korea Official Heads To White House As Summit Pace Picks Up

By Barbara Demick

Los Angeles Times, May 31, 2018

North Korea's longtime spy chief and main negotiator will meet President Trump at the White House on Friday as high-level talks in New York wrapped up with growing signs that the stalled nuclear disarmament summit between Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un will take place in less than two weeks.

Kim Yong Chol, a four-star general who is one of North Korea's most powerful figures, will deliver a letter to Trump from Kim Jong Un, Trump told reporters.

"I look forward to seeing what's in the letter," Trump said. Asked if a deal was coming together, he said: "I think it will be very positive. … The meetings have been very positive."

Wrapping up about 4 ½ hours of meetings with Gen. Kim in New York, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said details for the proposed summit could be finalized in "days." Planning for the summit, originally scheduled for June 12 in Singapore, has intensified this week in a flurry of meetings in New York, Singapore and in the demilitarized zone that separates the two Koreas.

"It would be nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity to go to waste," Pompeo told reporters in New York.

"We can create a future defined by collaboration and friendship," he added.

He conceded that the two sides still have not determined what steps they must take to satisfy the U.S. demand for denuclearization and North Korea's demand for ironclad security guarantees and easing of sanctions.

Pompeo hosted Kim Yong Chol, considered leader Kim Jong Un's right-hand man, at a steak, corn and cheese dinner Wednesday night in New York, followed by morning long talks on Thursday morning. A second meeting scheduled for the afternoon was canceled, possibly a sign that there had been points of agreement.

They met at the residence of the U.S. deputy representative to the United Nations, an apartment with a spectacular view of the East River.

Trump said he still hopes the summit will take place in Singapore on June 12, but he left open the possibility that the advance talks taking place in multiple sites could still fail.

"I want it to be meaningful," Trump said of a possible summit. "It doesn't mean it gets all done at one meeting. Maybe you have to have a second or a third. And maybe we'll have none."

Prospects for the Singapore summit have careened up and down as both sides threatened one another and engaged in diplomatic brinkmanship, with Trump announcing on May 24 that he was pulling out — and then quickly jumping back.

"Between now and if we're going to have a summit," a State Department official told reporters, the North Koreans "are going to have to make clear what they're willing to do."

"And in order for a summit to be successful, the North Koreans have to do things that they have not done before," the official added.

Separate U.S. teams have met with North Korean officials this week in the demilitarized zone between North and South Korea, and in Singapore, in efforts to work out the complex logistics and agenda for the proposed summit.

Going into any talks, the Trump administration officially is demanding what it calls "complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearization."

That would require Pyongyang to give up its entire nuclear arsenal and weapons building infrastructure and development programs, and submit to intrusive international inspections and monitoring to ensure the shift is permanent.

Privately, there is increasing acknowledgment in the administration that any disarmament will not be immediate but could take years, and will require U.S. concessions along the way — a step-by-step process that some senior White House aides have previously rejected, citing North Korea's history of reneging on its promises.

North Korea wants ironclad security guarantees and the easing of punitive economic sanctions that the United States and the U.N. Security Council have imposed to isolate it diplomatically and strangle its economy.

"We have to convince them," the State Department official said, that "their nuclear program has made them less secure, that there's a better path forward, that we can work with them."

Pompeo, who was confirmed as secretary of State last month after 15 months as CIA director, had dangled the possibility of economic aid if North Korea cooperates. In the past, North Korea has also demanded that the Pentagon reduce its military presence in South Korea, where about 30,000 U.S. troops are based.

Kim Yong Chol, the most senior North Korean official to come to the United States since 2000, handles key negotiations for the leader, including talks with the United States and with South Korea.

In 2010, the Obama administration placed Kim Yong Chol on a blacklist as chief of North Korea's premier intelligence agency, the Reconnaissance General Bureau, and its role in the export of arms and military equipment.

In 2015, the Obama administration blamed Gen. Kim for the cyberattack on Sony Pictures. South Korea has sanctioned him as well, accusing Gen. Kim of orchestrating several attacks on South Korean targets, including the torpedoing of a warship in 2010 that killed 46 sailors. The European Union also has sanctioned him.

Because of the sanctions, he needed a waiver from the administration to enter the United States, and will need another one if he is to travel to Washington to deliver the letter.

"I think we are looking for something historic. I think we're looking for something that has never been done before," the State Department official said.

The diplomacy occurred as Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov arrived in Pyongyang to meet with Kim Jong Un on Thursday. During the meeting, Lavrov invited the North Korean leader to visit Russia.

"Come — we will be very happy," Lavrov told Kim, the Russian news agency Interfax reported.

Kim said he "appreciates that [Russian President Vladimir] Putin is opposed to the hegemony of the U.S.," Interfax reported.

"You are very outspoken and we are always ready to negotiate with the Russian side on this matter," Kim told Lavrov, adding that North Korea was interested in developing relations with Russia, the Russian news agency reported.

North Koreans To Meet Trump; 'Good Progress' Toward Summit

By Matthew Lee And Josh Lederman

Associated Press, May 31, 2018

NEW YORK (AP) — A top aide to Kim Jong Un will make a rare visit to Washington Friday to hand a letter from the North Korean leader to President Donald Trump, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said after reporting "good progress" in talks between the two sides to revive an on-again, off-again nuclear summit.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"I am confident we are moving in the right direction," Pompeo told reporters at a news conference in New York after meeting Thursday with former North Korean military intelligence chief Kim Yong Chol. "Our two countries face a pivotal moment in our relationship, and it would be nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity go to waste."

He would not say that the summit is a definite go for Singapore on June 12 and could not say if that decision would be made after Trump reads Kim Jong Un's letter. However, his comments were the most positive from any U.S. official since Trump abruptly canceled the meeting last week after belligerent statements from the North.

The two countries, eying the first summit between the U.S. and the North after six decades of hostility, have also been holding negotiations in Singapore and the demilitarized zone between the two Koreas.

U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said "real progress" was made in talks on Thursday between North Korea and the United States to salvage an on-again, off-again nuclear summit. (May 31)

Early Thursday, Trump told reporters "we are doing very well" with North Korea. He added there may even need to be a second or third summit meeting to reach a deal on North Korean denuclearization but still hedged, saying "maybe we'll have none."

Kim Yong Chol is the highest-ranking North Korean official to visit the U.S. in 18 years, and his trip to the White House will be a highly symbolic sign of easing tensions after fears of war escalated amid North Korean nuclear and missile tests last year.

Pompeo, the former CIA chief who has traveled to North Korea and met with Kim Jong Un twice in the past two months, said he believed the country's leaders are "contemplating a path forward where they can make a strategic shift, one that their country has not been prepared to make before."

He tweeted from New York: "Good progress today during our meetings" with Kim and his team. Yet he also said at his news conference that difficult work remains including hurdles that may appear to be insurmountable as negotiations progress on the U.S. demand for North Korea's complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearization.

"We will push forward to test the proposition that we can achieve that outcome," he said.

Pompeo spoke after meeting with Kim Yong Chol for a little more than two hours at the residence of the deputy U.S. ambassador to the United Nations. The talks had been expected to be held in two sessions, one in the morning and one in the early afternoon, and had not been expected to conclude until 1:30 p.m. Instead, the two men wrapped up at 11:25 a.m.

Pompeo said they finished everything they needed to address in the morning session. Immediately afterward, he tweeted that he had had substantive talks on the priorities for the potential summit. Pompeo was accompanied by Andrew Kim, the head of a CIA unit assigned to work on North Korea, and Mark Lambert, the head of the State Department's Korea desk.

"Our secretary of state is having very good meetings," Trump told reporters at Joint Base Andrews before departing on a trip to Texas. He said of the North Koreans, "I believe they will be coming down to Washington on Friday. A letter being delivered to me from Kim Jong Un. It is very important to them."

"It is all a process," he said of arranging the summit. "Hopefully we will have a meeting on the 12th."

Despite the upbeat messaging in the United States, Kim Jong Un, in a meeting with Russia's foreign minister on Thursday, complained about the U.S. trying to spread its influence in the region, a comment that may complicate the summit plans. "As we move to adjust to the political situation in the face of U.S. hegemonism, I am willing to exchange detailed and in-depth opinions with your leadership and hope to do so moving forward," Kim told Sergey Lavrov.

North Korea's flurry of diplomatic activity following an increase in nuclear weapons and missile tests in 2017 suggests that Kim is eager for sanctions relief to build his economy and for the international legitimacy a summit with Trump would provide. But there are lingering doubts on whether he will ever fully relinquish his nuclear arsenal, which he may see as his only guarantee of survival in a region surrounded by enemies.

Trump views a summit as a legacy-defining opportunity to make a nuclear deal, but he has left the world guessing since canceling the meeting last week in an open letter to Kim that complained of the North's "tremendous anger and open hostility." North Korea's conciliatory response to that letter appears to have put the summit back on track.

Kim Yong Chol is the most senior North Korean visitor to the United States since Vice Marshal Jo Myong Rok visited Washington in 2000 to meet President Bill Clinton and Secretary of State Madeleine Albright. That was the last time the two sides, which are technically at war, attempted to arrange a leadership summit. It was an effort that ultimately failed as Clinton's time in office ran out, and relations turned sour again after George W. Bush took office in early 2001 with a tough policy on the North.

Kim Yong Chol, vice chairman of the North Korean ruling party's central committee, was allowed into the United States despite being on a U.S. sanctions list, and North Korean officials are not normally allowed to travel outside the New York area.

The North Korean mission at the United Nations did not respond to an email seeking comment Thursday, and phone calls were not answered.

No Deal On Trump-Kim Summit, But Pompeo Touts 'Progress' In North Korea Talks

By Joel Gehrke

Washington Examiner, May 31, 2018

President Trump's summit with North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un still isn't guaranteed to take place, but Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said Thursday he sees reason for optimism after two days of talks with his North Korean counterpart.

"I don't know the answer to that," Pompeo said in New York when asked if a North Korean visit to the White House on Friday would produce a final decision about the meeting.

"We've made real progress in the last 72 hours towards setting the conditions" for the summit to take place, he said. "The conditions are, putting President Trump and Chairman Kim Jong Un in a place where we think there can be real progress made by the two of them meeting."

Pompeo hosted North Korean Vice-Chairman Kim Yong Chol in New York City, as the two discussed the prospects for the tentatively scheduled June 12 meeting between Trump and Kim. North Korea, which has all but acquired the ability to deliver a nuclear weapon to the U.S., is hesitant to surrender the systems. Pompeo is trying to convince the regime that it would see greater security and prosperity without those systems.

"We think that, working together, the people of the United States and North Korea can create a future defined by friendship and collaboration, not by mistrust and fear and threats," Pompeo told reporters.

North Korea has expressed a willingness to negotiate over its program, but various public statements from high-ranking officials suggest that the regime is still unwilling to pursue the kind of comprehensive dismantling that the Trump administration wants. Pompeo demurred when asked if they had established a common definition of "denuclearization" during the latest round of meetings.

"There remains a great deal of work to do," Pompeo said. He also noted that the meeting wasn't cut short, as some in the press suggested, and said they were able to get through all of the items on their agenda.

"We had all the time that we needed today to make the progress that was achievable during our time here in New York City," he said.

Pompeo also emphasized that North Korea knows what the United States wants.

"I believe they are contemplating a path forward where they can make a strategic shift, one that their country has not been prepared to make before," Pompeo said. "It should not be to anyone's surprise that there will be moments along the way that this won't be straightforward, that there will be things that look hard, and times it appears there is a roadblock, [one] sometimes perhaps even perceived as insurmountable."

Pompeo Cites Progress Toward Salvaging 'once In A Lifetime' Nuclear Summit

By Carol Morello And Anne Gearan

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

NEW YORK — Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said Thursday that progress had been made toward salvaging a historic summit between President Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, calling it a “once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to change the course for the world.”

After more than two hours of formal talks with Kim’s right-hand aide, Vice Chairman Kim Yong Chol, Pompeo spoke as though the summit Trump canceled last week was likely to be reinstated, though he still framed it as an “expected” first meeting.

“Our two countries face a pivotal moment,” Pompeo told reporters after the unusual sit-down sessions with an official banned from traveling to the United States without a special waiver. It would “be nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity go to waste.”

Kim Yong Chol will travel to Washington on Friday to deliver a “personal letter” from the North Korean leader, Pompeo said, adding that he does not know whether that means a formal announcement is likely that the summit is back on.

“We’ve made real progress in the last 72 hours toward setting the conditions” for a productive summit in Singapore, Pompeo said.

But when asked whether a meeting will happen June 12 as originally planned, Pompeo acknowledged succinctly, “Don’t know.”

Despite the signs of progress in New York, and in separate talks in the demilitarized zone and Singapore, Pompeo struck a note of caution.

“This is going to be a process that will take days and weeks to work our way through,” he said. “This is a difficult, difficult challenge, make no mistake about it. There remains a great deal of work to do.”

The summit would mark an extraordinary turnaround from last year, when Trump vowed to rain “fire and fury” on North Korea if it threatened the United States with nuclear weapons.

The U.S. goal of talks is that North Korea gives up its nuclear weapons in exchange for what Pompeo called the possibility of a prosperous future. He said the North Korean officials he and other U.S. diplomats are engaging this week are well aware of that demand, although analysts and former diplomats say North Korea is unlikely to eradicate its arsenal.

The State Department had said Pompeo and Kim Yong Chol concluded their meeting at 11:25 a.m., two hours earlier than expected. But Pompeo told reporters that the sessions ran as long as needed to make progress and dismissed the suggestion that the men had hit an impasse.

A State Department official said the schedule change was not the result of a deadlock in efforts to set the agenda for a reinstated summit in Singapore next month, but the official provided no details of what had been accomplished.

Trump canceled the planned summit last week, blaming “hostility” from North Korea, and U.S. officials said Pyongyang had been uncooperative in finalizing the details. A flurry of diplomacy has followed to put the meeting back on track, including the extraordinary scene of the American secretary of state welcoming an accused North Korean spy chief to two days of meetings over tea in a luxury Manhattan apartment.

Pompeo gave no indication of trouble with a short tweet after the talks broke up.

“Substantive talks with the team from #NorthKorea. We discussed our priorities for the potential summit between our leaders,” he wrote.

Kim Yong Chol and Pompeo are the most senior officials managing the diplomacy for both countries and the people who would write the agreed agenda for the meeting. Before the cancellation, U.S. officials were concerned by the lack of specific agreements about what would be discussed.

Pompeo was accompanied by two North Korea experts and an interpreter. Kim Yong Chol and his unidentified aides, two men and a woman, sat facing a curved window with a sweeping view of the East River and Lower Manhattan.

As he departed for Texas on Thursday, Trump told reporters that the first day of meetings with the North Korean delegation in New York had gone “very well.”

Asked whether a deal was taking shape, Trump said that he was not sure but that the negotiations “are in good hands.”

“Hopefully we’ll have a meeting on the 12th,” he said

“It doesn’t mean it all gets done at one meeting,” Trump said, adding that a second or third might be necessary.

The letter from the North Korean leader would be the second that the two have exchanged in as many weeks, after Trump made public the letter scuttling the summit. Kim Jong Un’s letter to Trump would be one way to formally invite a reinstatement of the Singapore meeting, but neither Trump nor Pompeo described its purpose.

Kim Yong Chol will need another U.S. travel exemption to visit Washington. The invitation, especially to the White House, is a symbolic diplomatic coup for Kim Jong Un and an indication that the United States thinks the summit can happen and be productive.

Shortly after his plane arrived in New York, Pompeo tweeted that he was looking forward to meeting with Kim Yong Chol and added, "We are committed to the complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula." U.S. officials have repeated the four elements so frequently that they refer to it casually by the initials CVID.

The State Department official said they were seeking a corresponding commitment and "action" from the North Koreans.

"I think we are looking for something historic," said the official, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss the private meetings.

The administration is arguing that if the North Koreans want security, it cannot come from nuclear weapons. Instead, their pitch is that Pyongyang will gain more security by abandoning its nuclear program, allowing it to escape from the yoke of international sanctions and isolation, and concentrate on economic prosperity.

To drive the point home, the State Department released a photo of Pompeo pointing out of the condo's window to the splendor of the New York skyline, as if to say to the North Koreans by his side that the same kind of wealth could be theirs, too.

Pompeo Cites 'Real Progress' After High-level Talks With North Korea

By Dave Boyer

Washington Times, May 31, 2018

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said Thursday the U.S. has made "real progress" in talks with North Korea toward a denuclearization summit, but isn't sure yet the meeting will take place as planned on June 12 in Singapore.

"We've made real progress in the past 72 hours toward setting the conditions" for a summit, Mr. Pompeo told reporters in New York City after emerging from talks with North Korean vice chairman Kim Yong-chul. "I'm confident we're moving in the right direction."

On the central question for the summit, however, Mr. Pompeo stopped short of saying that Pyongyang is committed to giving up its nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programs.

"We've had lots of conversations around that," he said. "I believe they are contemplating a path forward, a strategic shift that their country has not been prepared to make before."

He added, "I've had some difficult conversations with them. They've given it right back to me."

With the meetings in New York concluding, Kim Yong-chul will now travel to Washington to deliver a letter to President Trump Friday from North Korean leader Kim Jong-un.

Mr. Trump last week canceled the summit with Kim Jong-un, citing Pyongyang's "open hostility" toward the U.S. But since then, talks have been accelerating on several fronts, including South Korea's president, Moon Jae-in, meeting with Mr. Kim.

Other U.S. and North Korean teams also have been meeting in various locations, including Singapore.

Mr. Pompeo said the proposed summit "offers a historic opening for President Trump and Chairman Kim to boldly lead the United States and the DPRK [North Korea] into a new era of peace, prosperity and security."

"Our two countries face a pivotal moment in our relationship in which it could be nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity to go to waste," Mr. Pompeo said.

He said he has been very clear in all negotiations that Mr. Trump's position is "the complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean peninsula."

For decades, North Korea's reclusive communist regime has viewed the development of nuclear weapons as the key to its security and its survival.

Mr. Pompeo said the main challenge is still to convince North Korea that Mr. Trump is sincere in his assurances that the U.S. doesn't want regime change in Pyongyang. The U.S. has about 28,000 troops stationed in South Korea.

"This administration completely understands how hard this problem is," Mr. Pompeo said. "There is a long history where North Korea has viewed its nuclear program as providing the security that it needed for the regime. The effort now is to come to a set of understandings which convince the North Koreans of what President Trump has said."

It was Mr. Pompeo's third meeting with Kim Yong-chul; he has also had two lengthy meetings with Kim Jong-un. He said those negotiations have included many conversations around "the denuclearization that the world demands, and the security assurances that would be required for us to allow them to achieve that."

Pompeo: 'Real Progress' Being Made Toward Trump-Kim Summit

By Rebecca Kheel

The Hill, May 31, 2018

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said Thursday that the United States and North Korea have made "real progress" in the last three days toward setting the conditions that would allow President Trump and leader Kim Jong Un's summit to move forward.

"Through these series of meetings, I am confident we're moving in the right direction," Pompeo said.

Still, Pompeo said he did not know if there would be a definitive decision on whether to have the summit Friday, when a North Korean delegation will travel to Washington to deliver Trump a letter from Kim.

Pompeo was speaking to reporters in New York City after meeting with Kim Yong Chol, a close confidant of Kim's and the country's top nuclear weapons negotiator.

Kim Yong Chol is the highest-ranking North Korean official to visit the United States since 2000, when Vice Marshal Jo Myong Rok met with then-President Clinton amid a failed effort to broker a nuclear agreement.

Pompeo's meeting was one of three this week to try to get the summit back on track after Trump canceled the meeting last week. U.S. teams are also in Singapore and the Korean Demilitarized Zone meeting with North Korean delegations.

The summit had been planned for June 12 in Singapore, but last week, Trump personally dictated a letter to Kim canceling it in light of Pyongyang's "tremendous anger and open hostility."

A day later, though, Trump said the summit could still take place as originally scheduled, setting off the flurry of diplomatic activity to revive the summit in less than two weeks.

At issue is a fundamental difference in what denuclearization means. The United States wants North Korea's "complete, verifiable, irreversible" denuclearization, while Pyongyang decries "unilateral" disarmament without concrete security assurances.

Pompeo said he's been "very clear" about the U.S. objective of denuclearization in exchange for a "brighter path" for North Korea.

"We expect both leaders to enter the summit at Singapore, if it proceeds, with their eyes wide open," Pompeo said.

Pompeo's meeting with Kim Yong Chol ended about two hours earlier than originally scheduled, but he said that was enough time to cover that day's agenda.

"This is a difficult, difficult challenge," he said. "Make no mistake about it. There remains a great deal of work to do. And we made progress here, as well as at the same time made progress in the other venues that conversations were taking place. We had all the time we needed today to make the progress that was achievable during our time here in New York City."

Pompeo also said the ups and downs of the summit planning are unsurprising, adding it could take "days and weeks" to resolve all the issues.

"This is going to be a process that will take days and weeks to work our way through," he said. "There will be tough moments. There will be difficult times. I've had some difficult conversations with them, as well. They've given it right back to me, too. We are decades into this challenge. So one not ought to be surprised or frightened or determined by moments where it looks like there are difficulties and challenges, things that can't be bridged. Our mission is to bridge them so that we can achieve this historic outcome."

Mike Pompeo Can't Promise North Korea Summit Is Back On

By Bob Fredericks

New York Post, May 31, 2018

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo on Thursday said that he could not promise that the summit between President Trump and Kim Jong Un was back on — but added that the US and North Korea were making progress in their ongoing discussions.

Pompeo and top North Korean official Kim Yong Chol concluded two days of talks in New York in advance of a possible summit, which originally was scheduled for June 12 in Singapore before President Trump canceled it.

"I'm confident we're moving in the right direction. Vice Chairman Kim and I discussed how our countries could come together and create [new] visions of the future," he said.

"This is going to be a process that will take days and weeks to work our way through."

North Korea, Pompeo added, has always believed that its nuclear weapons program was the only way the regime could guarantee its survival.

But while the Trump administration was still insisting on complete denuclearization, there were other ways that the North's security could be assured, he added.

"Our two countries face a pivotal moment in our relationship in which it would be nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity go to waste," he said. "It opens a front to lead to a new era of peace, prosperity and security. "

The North Korean official was expected to visit to Washington on Friday with a letter from Kim Jong-un.

Asked whether he expected to know whether the summit would be back on by week's end, he said he didn't know, and that talks could continue for the foreseeable future.

"It should not be to anyone's surprise that there will be moments along the way that this won't be straightforward, that there will be things that look hard and times it appears there's a roadblock and sometimes perhaps even perceived at insurmountable," he said.

But, he added, the president and the North Korean dictator could make history if the North agrees to denuclearize in exchange for guaranteed security.

"If these talks are successful, it will truly be historic. It will take bold leadership from Kim Jong Un, if we are to seize this once in a lifetime opportunity to change the course of the world," he said.

"We believe chairman Kim is the kind of leader who can make those decisions and in the upcoming weeks and month, we can test whether this is the case."

Pompeo met with Kim, one of the North Korean leader's closest aides, at the apartment residence of the US deputy ambassador to the United Nations in New York.

Kim is the highest-ranking North Korean official to visit the U.S. in 18 years.

He and Pompeo had discussions over dinner of steak, corn and cheese on Wednesday, Pompeo said in an earlier tweet.

Earlier, Trump also sounded an optimistic note

"We are doing very well with North Korea," Trump told reporters at Joint Base Andrews before departing on a trip to Texas.

"Our secretary of state is having very good meetings. I believe they will be coming down to Washington on Friday. A letter being delivered to me from Kim Jong Un. It is very important to them."

"I think it will be very positive. We will see what happens. It is all a process. Hopefully, we will have a meeting on the (June) 12th," Trump said, adding there may be multiple meetings but "maybe we'll have none."

Trump-Kim Summit Still Uncertain After Meetings With North Korea

'It would be nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity go to waste,' Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said.

By Louis Nelson

Politico, May 31, 2018

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo ended talks with North Korean officials on Thursday with no announcement that a canceled summit between North Korean leader Kim Jong Un and Donald Trump is back on.

However, Pompeo said, he believes Pyongyang may be on the cusp of a "strategic shift" regarding the abandonment of its nuclear weapons.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"It would be nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity go to waste," he told reporters.

Pompeo met Thursday in New York with Kim Yong Chol, the most senior North Korean official to visit the U.S. in 18 years. The secretary of state said Kim would travel next to Washington, where he will deliver a personal letter from Kim Jong Un to President Donald Trump.

It's unclear what the letter will say. But Pompeo insisted that the two sides had "made progress" over the course of a dinner Wednesday and Thursday's meeting.

Still, he cautioned, North Korea will "have to choose a path that is fundamentally different than the one that their country has proceeded on for decades."

Thursday's gathering reportedly ended earlier than expected, but Pompeo disputed that the shortened meeting was a sign of turbulence.

He argued that the meeting simply ended once every item on the agenda had been addressed.

"We made sure that we were clear on in terms of what our expectations were and their expectations, in return, of us," Pompeo said.

Trump also sent positive signals about the meeting, tweeting, "Very good meetings with North Korea," early Thursday.

Separately, U.S. and North Korea officials met this week in Singapore — the potential site of the Trump-Kim summit — to discuss logistics, as well as in North Korea, where the two sides conducted further negotiations.

Pompeo called the ongoing talks a "once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to change the course of the world," but pulled no punches in describing the obstacles to striking a deal with the Kim regime.

The U.S., he said, would accept nothing less than "complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula."

Such a goal, Pompeo warned, requires convincing Pyongyang that maintaining its nuclear program is actually more dangerous than shedding it — a tall task that is bound to be fraught with the type of challenges that led to Trump's surprise decision last week to cancel the summit.

"We're decades into this challenge, and so one not ought to be either surprised or frightened or deterred by moments where it looks like there are challenges and difficulties — things that can't be bridged," he said. "Our mission is to bridge them so that we can achieve this historic outcome."

Pompeo Strikes Positive Tone After North Korea Meeting In NYC

By Cortney O'Brien

Townhall, May 31, 2018

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo struck a positive tone when he addressed reporters after his meeting with North Korean official Kim Yong Chol in New York City Thursday. At the same time, a U.S. delegation is in Singapore meeting with North Korean officials in preparation for a planned summit between North Korean leader Kim Jong Un and President Trump.

The talks offer a real opportunity for the U.S. and North Korea to enter into "a new era of peace, prosperity, and security," Pompeo said.

"Through these series of meetings, I'm confident we're moving in the right direction... It could be nothing short of tragic to let this opportunity go to waste."

The secretary said that in his meetings with Chol, he was very clear that the U.S.'s objective is to assure "the complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula."

"If Kim Jong Un denuclearizes, there is a brighter path for North Korea," he said. "We envision a strong, connected and secure, prosperous North Korea that maintains its cultural heritage, but is integrated into the community of nations."

The future can be one of "friendship," not threats. In his meetings, Pompeo detected that the current leadership is prepared to make that "strategic shift."

Pompeo said Chol is traveling to Washington Friday with a "personal letter" from Kim Jong Un.

In Asia, Mattis To Face Allies Seeking Answers On NKorea

By Lolita C. Baldor

Associated Press, May 31, 2018

SINGAPORE (AP) – As international defense chiefs gather at a conference in Singapore this week, U.S. officials will face a barrage of questions from allies struggling to unravel the chaotic fits and starts of American and North Korean diplomacy.

Will there actually be a summit? Is North Korea really willing to give up its nuclear program? Will America pull troops out of South Korea? What does the on-again, off-again summit confusion say about the stability of broader U.S. policy-making? And, is it all just doomed to fail?

At this point, the visiting Americans may have very few answers as high-level diplomacy plays out back at home.

Speaking to reporters traveling with him to the annual Shangri-La Dialogue, U.S. Defense Secretary Jim Mattis batted away questions about the North Koreans and the summit.

State Department diplomats are handling it, he said, suggesting they would be able to answer questions better than "those of us on the outside of that."

But his message behind the scenes to counterparts from across the Asia-Pacific region may be more expansive.

"I think there's going to be a lot of back-channel diplomacy and conversations going on," said Sue Mi Terry, a senior fellow at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "I think it's really hard to have a message. There are all kinds of mixed signals coming out."

President Donald Trump, who unexpectedly agreed to the planned June 12 meeting then abruptly canceled it last week, has since signaled increasing optimism that the summit will go on. This week, teams from the U.S. and North Korea are meeting in the Korean village of Panmunjom, which straddles the border inside the Demilitarized Zone, or DMZ. Another team is meeting in Singapore to go over logistics for the summit, which would take place there. And Secretary of State Mike Pompeo was meeting Thursday with an aide to leader Kim Jong Un in New York, who could travel to Washington on Friday.

The message to North Korea, said Asia experts and former U.S. defense and diplomatic officials, is that the United States is interested in negotiations, but also is not afraid to walk away.

But to other nations it may appear confusing and cobbled together with no clear plan of engagement. And Terry said Mattis will have to calm South Korean and Japanese allies impacted by Trump's rapid-fire decision-making.

Mattis and others, said Terry, will need to pick up the pieces and do a lot of "alliance management." Allies will need assurances that while the U.S. wants to work for peace on the divided Korean Peninsula, it also remains committed to militarily defending South Korea, Japan and others in the region if needed.

And the U.S. will also need to calm broader worries from allies troubled about uncertainty and mixed messages coming from the administration and what that could mean for their own relations with America down the road.

Mattis told reporters what his message to allies will be: "We're unwavering in our focus out here. We're unapologetic about standing with our allies and our partners and ensuring freedoms — from freedom of navigation and use of airspace to countries making their own sovereign decisions."

The national security conference, sponsored by the International Institute for Strategic Studies think tank, draws defense ministers, security experts and business people. It has often been a platform for U.S. criticism of China — and strong reactions from Chinese representatives in the audience.

American defense chiefs have repeatedly anchored their annual speeches with warnings to China about its development of manmade islands in the disputed South China Sea, and its use of intimidation to assert territorial claims.

Two years in a row then-Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel used the podium to call out Beijing for cyberspying against the U.S. And then-Pentagon Chief Leon Panetta chose that speech in 2012 to provide the first details of America's shift of troops and ships to the Pacific, which was largely aimed at countering China's growing influence in the region.

Last year, Mattis was sharply critical of what he called Beijing's disregard for international law by its "indisputable militarization" of the artificial islands. And his speech on Saturday will likely sound some similar notes.

The U.S. last week publicly disinvited the Chinese navy from a large, multinational military exercise later this summer in retaliation for Beijing's move to put weapons systems on some of the islands.

While many allies applaud the U.S. taking a tough stance on the South China Sea, they also know that Beijing can play a key role influencing North Korea in the nuclear negotiations.

In addition to attending the conference, Mattis expects to meet with counterparts from a number of allied nations including South Korea, Japan, Singapore, Australia and India.

Japan Urges Trump To Take A Hard Line With North Korea

By Josh Rogin

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

As Japan watches its closest ally explore a historic deal with its worst enemy, the Japanese government has little choice but to support the diplomatic opening between the United States and North Korea. But as Japan's security is now largely in President Trump's hands, Tokyo's mission is to keep Trump close and hold him to tough terms as he prepares for a potential sitdown with Kim Jong Un.

Publicly, there's no daylight between the Trump administration and the government of Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. Japanese Foreign Minister Taro Kono told me in an interview he has received assurances from senior Trump administration officials that the United States will stick to a hard line in negotiations with Pyongyang. Kono believes Trump will insist on complete, verifiable and irreversible dismantlement (CVID) of North Korea's nuclear weapons and all ballistic missile programs before giving the Kim regime any sanctions relief or other economic benefits.

"The international community's intention is they need to complete the CVID process before they can expect anything out of it," Kono said. "How can complete, verifiable, irreversible dismantlement be partial?"

If that sounds like what national security adviser John Bolton controversially referred to as "the Libya model" in April, it is. Neither Kono nor Bolton would use that reference now, after both Trump and Kim equated it with the subsequent overthrow of Moammar Gaddafi. But make no mistake: Both Japan and Bolton are advocating that North Korea completely fulfill its side of the bargain first.

North Korea, China and Russia are putting forth different terms, pushing for step-by-step concessions. But Kono expressed confidence that Trump will stick to this hard line if he meets Kim in Singapore on June 12.

"I don't think the Trump administration will allow any deviation. When they talk about CVID they talk about all the nuclear weapons and the nuclear facilities plus missiles of all ranges," he said. "I don't think there are any differences between the United States and Japan at all."

Privately, some Japanese and U.S. officials aren't so sure. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo told the House Foreign Affairs Committee last week that economic relief could come after North Korea takes "credible steps" or "an irreversible set of actions," but he stopped short of demanding total dismantlement up front. On Wednesday, a senior State Department official said only that denuclearization is the goal and Pompeo wants to leave room for negotiation.

Other U.S. officials tell me they could envision a deal that eliminates North Korea's missiles that could reach the United States but leaves Pyongyang with missiles that could threaten Japan and the region.

Regardless, Japan's public position is maximalist. Not only must Pyongyang dismantle all its nuclear and missile programs, but also it must resolve the cases of 12 Japanese abductees who remain unaccounted for in North Korea, an issue Trump promised Abe he would add to the agenda.

If North Korea does all that, Japan will normalize relations and provide economic assistance, Katsunobu Kato, Japan's minister in charge of the abductee issue, told me. But, "without resolution of the abduction matter, North Korea is not in a position to envision any bright future for itself," he said.

The Japanese government's message is directed both to its domestic audience and the Trump administration. But with Trump changing his mind by the day, Tokyo can't be sure what Trump will say or do inside the room. To influence Trump ahead of a summit, Abe's personal relationship with Trump is key.

Abe was first on the scene at Trump Tower after Trump's election. Abe and Trump have spent more than a dozen hours together one-on-one at Mar-a-Lago and elsewhere. Officials close to both men say that they genuinely like each other and that Trump respects Abe's opinion and seeks his counsel.

Trump has a real incentive to keep Abe close. If the summit fails or doesn't happen, the Trump administration will attempt to return to maximum pressure, perhaps without full Chinese and South Korean support. In that environment, if North Korea offered Japan resolution of the abductee issue in exchange for aid, Abe would have a tough political decision to make. Right now there is no public space between Japan and the United States, but that could change.

Is Trump thinking through the regional strategic implications of his meeting with Kim? Is he in command of the details, aware of all the permutations and factoring in allies' interests as he prepares to possibly sit down at that table? For Japan, Trump's personal unpredictability is the biggest and most dangerous unknown in the entire equation. In that respect, we are all in the same boat.

Abe has a chance to pin Trump down when the two meet in Quebec during the Group of Seven summit next week. For everyone's sake, let's hope Abe is able to impress upon Trump's mind what a good deal with North Korea actually would look like.

Kim Jong Un: North Korea Values Russia For Opposing U.S. Dominance, State Media Reports

By Jane Onyanga-Omara

USA Today, May 31, 2018

North Korean leader Kim Jong Un met Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov in Pyongyang on Thursday, where Kim said he values President Vladimir Putin's government for opposing U.S. dominance, Russian state media reported.

The statement came as Kim Yong Chol, a former North Korean intelligence chief, is in the United States for a second day of talks aimed at salvaging a summit between President Trump and Kim scheduled for June 12 in Singapore.

Trump announced last week that he canceled the summit because of critical statements from North Korea, but now wants to revive it.

The talks with Lavrov were the first official face-to-face meeting between a Russian government figure and Kim, according to Tass. Lavrov, who was visiting North Korea for the first time since 2009, also invited Kim to Moscow.

"The situation on the Korean Peninsula is changing in accordance with the requirements of the interests of the two nations," Kim said in the meeting, referring to the rival Koreas, Russia's Tass news agency reported.

"I highly value the fact that Putin's administration strictly opposes the U.S.'s dominance. You strictly oppose, and we are always ready to conduct negotiations and a profound exchange of opinions with the Russian side on this issue," he added.

Lavrov said Moscow supported a declaration last month in which North and South Korea agreed to work to denuclearize the Korean Peninsula.

"This will allow for the realization not only of the denuclearization of the whole Korean Peninsula but also to provide sustainable peace and stability across north-east Asia," Lavrov said, according to the Russian Foreign Ministry.

Kim said the Russian foreign minister's visit coincides with a changing situation on the Korean Peninsula, "rapidly moving towards talks and consultations," according to Tass.

Kim also noted that Lavrov's visit "shows how much attention the Russian leadership and President Putin pay to the further development and strengthening of our relations."

Lavrov also met with officials including North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho.

Despite having a border with North Korea and relatively cordial relations, Russia has so far remained largely on the sidelines in issues relating to denuclearizing the Korean Peninsula.

The meeting between Kim and Lavrov appeared to be an attempt to secure the support of Russia, and previously China, in helping to push the U.S. to make concessions toward Pyongyang, including easing sanctions, said Anthony Rinna, a specialist in Korea-Russia relations at the Sino-NK analysis website, according to Reuters.

He said Russia "cannot afford to be remembered as the country that had no hat in the ring leading up to June 12," Reuters reported.

In the long-term, Russia hopes to foster economic cooperation between both Koreas, Rinna added.

Kim has already met twice with China's President Xi Jinping and South Korean President Moon Jae-in.

Kushner Cos. Loans For $100 Million Scooped Up By Korean Firms

By Caleb Melby

Bloomberg News, May 31, 2018

Two South Korean financial firms have bought $100 million of debt on a New Jersey residential building that's part-owned by the family of Jared Kushner.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Nonghyup Bank and trusts affiliated with IGIS Asset Management purchased junior pieces of a $200 million loan made by Citigroup Inc. on 65 Bay St., an apartment tower in Jersey City, Kroll Bond Rating Agency said in a research report Thursday.

Prior to receiving the Citigroup loan earlier this year, Kushner Cos. and its partner in the building, KABR Group, had trouble finding a firm to refinance more than $180 million of loans, including expensive construction debt and $50 million held by Chinese investors. Kushner Cos. had drawn criticism for pitches to Chinese investors that alluded to its White House ties. Jared Kushner is son-in-law and senior adviser to U.S. President Donald Trump.

A spokeswoman for Kushner Cos. and a representative for Citigroup declined to comment. A representative for Nonghyup in New York referred questions to offices in Seoul, where calls weren't answered outside of normal business hours. A representative for IGIS didn't respond to an email outside of normal business hours.

As of March, Jared Kushner still held a stake in the property through a trust. His lawyers have said he doesn't discuss deals or investments in his family's businesses since starting his White House job.

Nonghyup purchased a $60.4 million piece of the 65 Bay St. loan and IGIS U.S. Private Placement Real Estate Investment Trust No. 169 bought $39.6 million, Kroll said. Nonghyup's deal was on behalf of another IGIS trust, for which it serves as a trustee, according to a filing from Citigroup.

Bloomberg reported the $200 million Citigroup loan in March. The remaining $100 million is being placed into commercial mortgage-backed securities.

The Jersey City tower is part of a complex near the Hudson River waterfront known as Trump Bay Street. The Trump name is used under license and neither the president nor the Trump Organization owns a stake in the complex, according to the property's website.

Lithuania, Romania Breached Human Rights Of Al-Qaeda Suspects By Aiding CIA Torture, EU Court Rules

By Ian P. Johnson

Deutsche Welle (DEU), May 31, 2018

The European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) in Strasbourg, France, found Thursday that secret hosting of CIA "black" detention sites by Lithuania and Romania between 2004 and 2005 breached basic tenets of the 1950 European Convention on Human Rights.

Stateless Palestinian Abu Zabaydah — caught by U.S. authorities in Pakistan in 2002 and initially seen as a key al-Qaeda terror suspect — was held for two months in a secret detention facility in Lithuania in 2005.

Saudi Arabian, Abd Al Rahim Husseyn Muhammad Al Nashiri — suspected by U.S. authorities of attacking a U.S. naval ship in Aden in 2000 and a French ship in the Gulf of Aden in 2002 — was held by the CIA in Romania between 2004 and 2005.

Both have been held for years at Guantanamo Bay.

Lawyers for the pair had lodged complaints in 2011 and 2012, asserting that Lithuania and Romania had secretly let the CIA torture the suspects and hold them incommunicado.

ECHR judges unanimously cited violations of Article 3 prohibiting torture, Article 5 on rights to liberty and security, Article 8 on respect for private life and Article 13 on the right to an effective [legal] remedy.

Both European countries had formal jurisdiction over the CIA sites on their territories and were therefore responsible for convention violations, concluded the seven-judge panel.

Abu Zubaydah and Al Nashiri were regarded as "high-value detainees" by the CIA when President George W. Bush opened his "war on terror" in the wake of the September 2001 attacks by airline hijackers on New York and Washington.

The court included in its documentary evidence a 2014 U.S. Senate report, which found that both Zubaydah and Nashiri were subject to "enhanced interrogation techniques" while in CIA detention.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Issuing its twin judgements, the European court also concluded that Romania had also denied Al Nashiri Europe's Article 6-right to a fair trial and exposed him to a "flagrant denial of justice" on his transfer to the USA.

Romania should still seek assurances from the U.S. that Al Nashiri would not be sentenced to the death penalty, which in Europe is outlawed, the Strasbourg judges insisted.

The court ordered Lithuania and Romania to pay $117,000 to each man.

The existence of secret CIA prisons in Europe was revealed in November 2005 by the Washington Post.

The CIA's so-called system of "extraordinary renditions," including "waterboarding," resurfaced during recent Congressional appointment hearings of the agency's new director Gina Haspel.

During her confirmation hearings, Haspel said the CIA would "not restart such a detention and interrogation program."

She told the Senate Intelligence Committee that it had done "damage to our officers and our standing in the world."

The Strasbourg court had held fact-finding hearings into both cases in June 2016, attended by Amnesty International, the International Commission of Jurists and the Helsinki Foundation for Human Rights.

In Nashiri's case, the Strasbourg court said Thursday no information on a Romania investigation, launched in July 2012, had been made public.

And, in Zubaydah's case, a Lithuanian prosecutor general's probe in 2010 had ended without any prosecutions.

Lithuanian Justice Minister Elvinas Jankevicius told reporters Thursday that "we will take a decision after carefully examining" the ruling.

Parties to Thursday's Strasbourg rulings have three months to request appeals, which, if granted, would go before that court's Grand Chamber.

Assad Threatens To Expel U.S. Troops From Syria By 'Force'

By Liz Sly

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

BEIRUT — Syrian President Bashar al-Assad warned in comments broadcast Thursday that he would wage war to expel U.S. troops from northeastern Syria if dialogue fails to bring the area back under government control.

It was not the first time that Assad has threatened to attack U.S. troops, but it was his most explicit expression yet of his determination to rid Syria of American forces.

In an interview with RT, Russia's state-owned international broadcaster, Assad said the United States should heed the lessons of Iraq and get out of Syria before it is forced to leave.

The Syrian government already is involved in negotiations with local factions to bring the area back under its control, he said. If the dialogue fails, he said, "we are going to resort to liberating the area by force, with the Americans or without the Americans."

"The Americans should leave somehow. They are going to leave," Assad added.

The Syrian leader is in the process of asserting his authority over the last few pockets of opposition-held territory after seven years of warfare during which vast areas of the country slipped out of government control.

Northeastern Syria, where Syrian Kurds have declared a self-governing autonomous region, is the biggest territory still outside the remit of the government. The United States maintains about 2,000 troops there, helping a local Kurdish-led militia battle the Islamic State militant group. In the process, the Kurds have assumed de facto control over a vast area of mostly desert terrain amounting to nearly a third of Syrian territory.

President Trump has said he is keen to pull the troops out as soon as possible, but the U.S. military has persuaded him to allow them to remain at least until a last pocket of Islamic State fighters is vanquished along the Syria-Iraq border.

It remains unclear, however, under what circumstances the troops eventually will leave and what will happen to their Kurdish allies, who say they are determined to maintain control over the area.

The Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces, an umbrella force created and armed by the United States as a vehicle to fight the Islamic State, is already facing a fledgling insurgency from the mostly Arab population. In the city of Raqqa, once the capital of the Islamic State's self-proclaimed caliphate, demonstrations staged in recent days have called for the return of government control and have been suppressed by force, according to local news reports.

In his warning, Assad invoked the U.S. experience in Iraq, where American troops quickly faced a widespread insurgency. According to U.S. military and Iraqi officials, the Syrian government helped fuel the insurgency by aiding the passage of hundreds of foreign fighters across the Syrian border.

"They came to Iraq with no legal basis, and look what happened to them," Assad said of U.S. forces. "They have to learn this lesson. Iraq is no exception, and Syria is no exception. People don't accept foreigners in this region anymore."

Assad was speaking a little over a week after his government declared that it was in full control of the suburbs around Damascus, the Syrian capital, for the first time in seven years.

The Syrian army is now preparing for an offensive to recapture the parts of southwest Syria bordering Israel and Jordan that are still under rebel control, one of three significant areas outside the government's grip. Israel has warned that it will not tolerate having Iranian advisers and the Shiite militias they support move closer to its borders, making southern Syria the likely next flash point of the war.

The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, which monitors developments in the war, said Iranian advisers and allied Hezbollah fighters are preparing to leave the area under the terms of a deal being negotiated by Russia and Israel for Iranian-backed forces to pull back and avert a bigger conflict. There has been no confirmation of such a deal, however, from Russia, Israel or Iran.

Assad declined to say how much longer the war will continue, but he reiterated that he intends to bring all parts of the country back under his authority. "We're going to liberate every area. It is impossible for us to leave any area outside of government control," he said.

Nikki Haley Vows To Veto 'morally Bankrupt' Resolution On Israel, Gaza

By Joel Gehrke
Washington Examiner, May 31, 2018

Ambassador Nikki Haley "will unquestionably veto" a "morally bankrupt" draft resolution on the violence between Israelis and Palestinians in Gaza, she announced late Thursday.

"It is a grossly one-sided approach that is morally bankrupt and would only serve to undermine ongoing efforts toward peace between the Israelis and Palestinians," Haley, the top U.S. diplomat at the United Nations, said in an evening statement.

Kuwait is circulating a draft resolution that demands Israel avoid "excessive, disproportionate and indiscriminate force" and calls on the U.N. to develop a plan to protect Palestinian civilians. It would also call for "ending the closure and the restrictions imposed by Israel on movement and access into and out of the Gaza Strip." But the resolution makes no mention of Hamas, Haley noted, which has launched rockets into Israel in recent days in addition to spurring terrorist attacks against the border fence between Israel and Gaza.

"The resolution calls on Israel to immediately cease its actions in self-defense, but makes no mention of Hamas' aggressive actions against Israeli security forces and civilians," Haley said. "The resolution calls for immediate steps toward ending Israeli restrictions on access into Gaza, while making no mention of Egypt's restrictions and no mention of Hamas' deliberate attacks against Israel's determined efforts to provide humanitarian access into Gaza at the Kerem Shalom crossing."

Kuwait crafted the resolution while blocking a U.N. Security Council statement, introduced by the U.S. on Wednesday, that would have condemned Hamas for launching dozens of rockets into Israel this week. "[T]he mere fact that one of the rockets landed on a kindergarten playground is all the proof we need of the intentions of the terrorists," Haley said Wednesday. "Hamas openly claims responsibility for this attack. They do so proudly."

A vote on Kuwait's draft resolution was expected to take place Thursday evening, but it was delayed after the U.S. reportedly proposed changes.

"We received very late amendments from a member-state, but we have to consider them," said Mansour al-Otaibi, Kuwait's ambassador to the UN, according to the Times of Israel.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The debate over Kuwait's resolution is taking place in the context of a diplomatic fight about who has the standing to broker a peace between the Israelis and the Palestinians, and on what terms that settlement should take place. Palestinian officials argue that President Trump's recent decision to recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel disqualifies his administration from playing mediator. But Haley cited the Kuwaiti draft resolution as an opportunity to push back on other powers that might want to supplant the U.S. role.

"Those who choose to vote in favor of this resolution will clarify their own lack of fitness to take part in any credible negotiations between the two parties," she said.

As Hamas Faces A Crisis, It Tries To Turn Up Pressure On Israel

By Erin Cunningham

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

The Islamist Hamas movement, which rules the Gaza Strip, is facing its worst crisis in years as it confronts a severe cash shortage, a loss of regional allies and no obvious way to ease a blockade that is crippling local living conditions and stoking popular discontent.

As it wrestles with this predicament, Hamas is trying to turn up the pressure on Israel — most notably by encouraging weekly mass protests along the Gaza border fence — without provoking an all-out military response that analysts say the group might be too weak to withstand. The immediate aim, analysts say, is to loosen the years-old blockade imposed on Gaza by Israel, Egypt and the rival Palestinian Authority, which controls the West Bank.

Some Hamas leaders have also seen the protests as a chance for Gazans to vent and direct their anger at Israel. But as the Palestinian death toll in the protests has mounted with each passing week, so has public dismay with the militant group.

Hamas, which the United States considers a terrorist organization, is also trying to strike an awkward balance between its traditional strategy of armed resistance against Israel and the imperative to preserve enough calm in Gaza so the group can govern it.

On Tuesday, another militant Palestinian group, Islamic Jihad, fired scores of mortar shell and rockets from Gaza into southern Israel, a dramatic escalation that analysts say could not have happened without Hamas's knowledge and perhaps support. Israel responded with airstrikes.

Hamas's armed wing asserted joint responsibility for the shelling, and its compounds were struck by Israeli jets overnight. But the group's political leadership swiftly announced a cease-fire after talks with Egyptian mediators — widely seen as a sign that Hamas has no interest in going to war.

At the same time, the group's leadership is considering concessions to Israel and the Palestinian Authority, according to the Israeli media, Arab press reports and analysts. The aim would be to win an easing of restrictions on Gaza that could improve conditions for its 2 million inhabitants.

Unemployment in the territory is running at more than 40 percent, and the infrastructure is collapsing, with residents getting only four hours of electricity a day and hospitals reporting shortages of medicine and other crucial supplies. According to the United Nations, the territory will be "unlivable" by 2020.

"Hamas is really under pressure. They have very limited options. They are ready to commit to any security arrangements," said Ibrahim al-Madhoun, a columnist at the Hamas-affiliated journal al-Risala. To alleviate suffering in Gaza and retain power, he said, Hamas would be willing even to halt attacks on Israel.

Madhoun said the current protests are a "last resort" for Hamas. "They didn't have a choice," he said. "It was the only way for them to try to get out of this deep crisis in Gaza."

Violent confrontation would only deepen Gaza's misery, and Hamas, which could have trouble replenishing its weapons stocks, might not survive another war with Israel, analysts say.

Hamas's leader in Gaza, Yehiya Sinwar, said the group "will continue in the path of popular resistance and will do everything possible to prevent the demonstrations from spilling into armed conflict." Speaking in a May interview with Al Jazeera news channel however, he suggested that Hamas would escalate its actions if more Palestinians were killed. "It will demand a response from us," Sinwar said.

The decision to support the demonstrations was a major shift for an organization otherwise known for deadly suicide bombings and rocket attacks on Israeli towns.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The protests on the border fence started as a grass-roots initiative among students and local activists unaffiliated with Hamas. But the group soon signed on, providing transportation and other logistical support, and Hamas members were among the protesters.

Since late March, mostly unarmed protesters have thronged to the border fence every Friday. More than 100 Palestinians have been fatally shot by Israeli soldiers, Gaza health officials report.

Some Gazans have complained bitterly that the Hamas-backed protests have produced so many deaths and that living conditions ultimately have not improved.

"The situation is already hard enough, and the demonstrations made it harder," said Fares al-Alami, 30, a shop owner in Gaza City's market district. "It wasn't the right time for such protests. But I don't think this government [in Gaza] has any solutions for us."

The decline of Hamas's power has marked a stunning turn of fortunes for a movement once seen as an irresistible force in Gaza, where it fought three wars with Israel and has ruled for more than a decade.

Hamas won an upset victory over the dominant Fatah party in legislative elections in Gaza in 2006. The two sides sparred over forming a unity government and eventually fought street battles in Gaza in 2007, with Hamas emerging as the victor. The militants went on to preside over a lucrative smuggling economy and were bolstered by the rise of like-minded Islamists in places including Egypt after the Arab Spring uprisings.

But as chaos in the region swirled around it, Hamas lost key allies, notably Egypt's Muslim Brotherhood, which was ousted from power five years ago in a coup by the country's current president, Abdel Fatah al-Sissi. Support from Iran and Syria also waned. Foreign funding for Hamas dried up. And Sissi's government in Egypt, openly hostile to Hamas, closed the tunnels through which cash, goods and weapons had reached Gaza, depriving the group of a critical source of revenue and stunting its ability to bypass the blockade.

Hamas became so desperate that last year it sought to mend ties with the Palestinian Authority, giving its rival control of Gaza's border crossings and agreeing to set up a technocratic government.

Those reconciliation efforts, however, have stalled, with each side blaming the other for the impasse. The Palestinian Authority, trying to force Hamas to turn over control of security forces in Gaza, has imposed its own punitive measures, including withholding funds for the territory's only power plant and halting the transfer of salaries to authority employees in Gaza. The Palestinian Authority has also blamed Hamas for the bombing of the motorcade of Palestinian Authority Prime Minister Rami Hamdallah during a visit to Gaza in March. He survived the explosion. Hamas denied responsibility.

In an apparent effort to lower the temperature after weeks of bloody protests, Sissi announced in May that he was opening Egypt's Rafah crossing with Gaza for the Muslim holy month of Ramadan — the longest opening in four years. But border authorities in Gaza say passenger traffic remains restricted and the process of coordinating travel is still cumbersome and unclear.

"No concrete vision or initiative to ease the siege has been presented to us" by the international community, Hamas spokesman Hazem Kassem said in an interview. "We can't even say that there are talks to lift the blockade."

According to Kassem, Hamas is in discussions with Egypt, Qatar and the United Nations regarding small steps to ease restrictions on Palestinians in Gaza, including allowing more residents to leave the territory and paying for fuel for the power plant.

"Hamas is stuck. They are stuck because of the economic situation in Gaza and because of problems with Palestinian reconciliation," said Mukhaimer Abusaada, a political-science professor at Gaza's al-Azhar University. But he said Hamas might be able to reach a deal with Israel that would allow more people and goods to enter and exit Gaza in return for the group's agreeing to halt the manufacture of weapons and stop digging the cross-border tunnels used to ambush Israeli soldiers.

"They realized that military confrontation is very costly to the Palestinians," he said of Hamas. "For that reason, they are not interested at all in another conflict. But they want an end to the siege. They want a solution."

Many Gazans blame Israel and the Palestinian Authority for the dismal economic circumstances, but the despair has also translated into frustration with Hamas.

In mid-May, 22-year-old Fathi Harb cursed the government in Gaza as he set himself alight on a busy street, a video of the incident that circulated online shows. He had been struggling to find work with a new baby on the way, his relatives said.

"We are tired. We cannot change our situation, and everyone is suffering," said Salam Masharawi, a 23-year-old employee at an electronics shop.

As for the demonstrations that Hamas supported, Masharawi said they had "failed."

"They sent people to be killed there. They sold us words — it was just propaganda," he said. "They wanted to make pressure on the Palestinian Authority. Who will care for the injured now?"

Democrats Conflicted Over How Hard To Hit Trump On Iran

By Alexander Bolton

The Hill, May 31, 2018

Democrats are conflicted over how hard to fight back against President Trump's decision to pull out of the Iran nuclear deal, one of the signature accomplishments of President Obama's second term.

Liberals argue that Trump's Iran policy undermines longstanding relationships with the nation's strongest allies, Britain, France and Germany, and raises the likelihood of a military conflict with Iran.

But Democratic pollsters say health care and other domestic issues are voters' top concerns, and Democratic leaders in Congress don't want to stray too far away from these bread-and-butter topics when control of both chambers is at stake in November.

Complicating the strategy for Senate Democrats is Minority Leader Charles Schumer's (N.Y.) past opposition to the Iran deal, which was strongly opposed by pro-Israel groups such as the American Israel Public Affairs Committee.

Schumer was one of four Senate Democrats who voted against the Iran deal; one of the others was Sen. Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.), whose reelection race this fall will help decide the Senate majority in the next Congress.

Raising Trump's withdrawal from the Iran deal brings up the division within the party over entering the agreement in the first place.

Schumer said he was still skeptical of the Iran agreement after Trump won the 2016 election but he nevertheless urged the incoming president in November of that year not to withdraw from it. He has criticized Trump for pulling out of the Iran deal, even blaming the decision for rising gas prices during a press conference at a service station last week.

But Democrats haven't waged a concerted messaging offensive on the issue such as those directed toward the GOP effort to repeal ObamaCare and Trump's $1.5 million tax cut.

And some Democrats want their party to make more noise.

Jen Psaki, the former State Department spokesperson who worked under Secretary of State John Kerry, perhaps the U.S. leader most associated with the Iran deal, told The Hill it could be an effective midterm issue.

"If Democrats can make it about Donald Trump's erratic behavior, inability to lead, poor standing in the world and Republicans following him and not speaking out, then it can be a winning issue," said Psaki, who is now a commentator on CNN.

Psaki conceded that the issue's effectiveness would depend on the state and congressional district, but added that, "with all of the Democratic candidates running who have national security backgrounds, many who are veterans, this could be a very strong issue."

Liberal activists, who were furious with Schumer's decision to oppose the deal in 2015, say Democrats are missing an opportunity to assail Trump's foreign policy vision.

"It is remarkable that Democrats aren't using this as a real opportunity to show just how chaotic and nonsensical Donald Trump's foreign policy is," said Neil Sroka, communications director for Democracy for America, a liberal advocacy group.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Democratic leadership aides on Capitol Hill dismissed the idea that focusing on the Iran deal would be a stronger political issue for the party in the midterms given other Trump controversies. They said the issue isn't grabbing the national political spotlight, which suggests the party would be smarter to focus its message on other issues.

They noted the focus on other topics, such as Trump's controversial moves on trade that have sparked a pushback from GOP senators representing farm states; and special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 election.

Some critics who want the party to speak out more about Iran blame Schumer's past opposition for hamstringing efforts to fight Trump's Iran policy, even though Schumer now says it was a mistake to pull out of the deal.

The critics include Adam Jentleson, a deputy chief of staff to former Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.), who now works as the public affairs director for Democracy Forward, a group that challenges what it views as unlawful actions of the executive branch.

Jentleson said Schumer's opposition to the deal from day one had hurt his party's ability to defend "one of the biggest foreign policy accomplishments of the Obama administration."

Jentleson also said Schumer had called Senate Democrats at the time to advise them to oppose the deal, a statement that prompted a furious pushback from Schumer allies, who said the former Reid spokesman was miscasting history.

"Leader Schumer has repeatedly said the U.S. shouldn't have pulled out of the Iran deal and members of the caucus are free to discuss this as much as they want," said a spokesman for Schumer.

A Politico report at the time said that Schumer had reached out to dozens of his colleagues to assure them he was not whipping colleagues against Obama's deal. Senators quoted in the piece said it would not hurt his chances to succeed Reid to oppose the Iran deal.

"He understands that this a tough call," Sen. Claire McCaskill (D-Mo.) told Politico at the time. "He's gonna respect everyone's decision."

Jentleson stood by his comments, however, that the calls were an effort by Schumer to push back against the deal.

"He was a caucus leader trying to persuade members to be against the deal. Saying that's not whipping is splitting hairs," he said.

The day Trump announced he was withdrawing from the Iran deal, Schumer called the decision unwarranted and warned it would divide Western allies and make it tougher to crack down on Hezbollah, an Iranian backed paramilitary group that is sometimes labeled a terrorist organization.

"There are no reports that Iran has violated the agreement and to me, the greatest worries from Iran are not right now the nuclear side but rather what they're doing in Syria, what they're doing to arm Hezbollah with rockets, what they're doing with ICBMs," Schumer said in response to a question at a press conference.

Schumer criticized Trump again for pulling out of the Iran deal a press conference last week that highlighted rising gas prices.

"According to energy analysts and experts, President Trump's reckless decision to pull out of the Iran deal has led to higher oil prices," Schumer said at an event held at an Exxon filling station on Capitol Hill.

But Democrats haven't waged much of an offensive on the issue ahead of a midterm election in which the party is protecting seats in North Dakota, West Virginia, Missouri and Indiana, states easily won by Trump in 2016.

Some Democrats think that campaign map argues for emphasizing pocketbook issues rather than foreign policy — and particularly Iran.

Sen. Bernie Sanders (Vt.), the liberal independent for Vermont who may run again for the Democratic presidential nomination, has been more outspoken on Iran than many of his colleagues.

Sanders held a town hall event on the consequences of Trump pulling out of the Iran deal earlier this month that attracted about 700,000 viewers.

Sanders also gave a live video response to Trump's Iran decision on the same day the president made his announcement.

"This deal is definitely important and he's been speaking out on the importance of it for a while now," said Josh Miller-Lewis, a spokesman for Sanders.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A Democratic aide pointed to this as evidence of Schumer giving his caucus freedom to speak out as much as they want on the issue.

In Europe, the response to Trump's decision has been withering, said William Drozdiak, a senior adviser at McLarty Associates and an expert on European relationsk.

"The sense of outrage and disappointment is extremely intense in all these capitals. They feel the United States is reneging on its word and therefore it calls into question the credibility of future American commitments," he said on phone call from Brussels.

But the debate on Capitol Hill simply hasn't reflected the international uproar, he noted.

"I'm mystified why the Democrats haven't made more of this. It just shows you how insular our politics has become," Drozdiak said.

A Senate Democratic aide said part of the problem is that the Obama administration did a bad job selling the deal in Capitol Hill three years ago.

"There was an intellectual discomfort from the very beginning. Senate Democrats felt somewhat left out of the process," said the aide.

Sroka said that while the public may have favored the Iran deal, it doesn't necessarily drive voter behavior, which may explain why Democrats remain focused on domestic policy.

"I think a lot of Democrats think its wise to stay focused solely on the economic issues that this administration is flailing on and they aren't using this as a big enough opportunity to talk about the chaos that Donald Trump is wrecking on the international stage," he said.

Roger Hickey, co-director of Campaign for America's Future, another progressive group, observed, "You don't see a whole lot of candidates for office talking about this."

"I think it is true that most Democrats are focused mainly on domestic policy," he added.

Italy Reaches A Deal On A New Government, Ending A Crisis That Rattled Global Markets

By Stefano Pitrelli And Griff Witte

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

ROME — Italy appeared Thursday to step back from the brink of a continent-rattling political crisis , with officials agreeing to a deal that averts the threat of fresh elections and puts two populist parties in charge of the euro zone's third-largest economy.

The agreement was the latest twist in a topsy-turvy week for Italian politics, one that on Tuesday had sent global markets tumbling amid jitters that the country was careening toward a new vote and a possible euro exit. Investors feared an even greater populist surge if a fresh election were held.

But negotiations Wednesday and Thursday yielded an unexpected breakthrough, culminating in a presidential announcement late Thursday night that the country's new government will be sworn in Friday.

The anti-establishment Five Star Movement and the far-right League will govern together, forming the first purely populist coalition to lead a core Western European country since the creation of the European Union. And they will get their preferred prime minister, the little-known law professor Giuseppe Conte.

"We will work resolutely to improve the quality of life of all Italians," Conte announced Thursday night after the president, Sergio Mattarella, formally asked him to lead a new government.

The president had balked at the populist parties' original choice for finance minister, Paolo Savona, an 81-year-old who has been fiercely critical of the E.U. and has suggested Italy should abandon the euro.

In a concession, the parties proposed a new pick for finance minister, Giovanni Tria, a low-profile economics professor at the Tor Vergata University of Rome. Savona, meanwhile, will be shifted to European affairs minister.

Although technocrats will take some of the government's top jobs, most observers believe that the leaders of the two parties — Five Star's Luigi Di Maio and the League's Matteo Salvini — will be the real powers behind the new administration.

Both will officially be vice premiers, with Di Maio also taking the economic development ministry and Salvini running the powerful interior ministry, which oversees Italian law enforcement and border control.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Salvini, whose party ran on a stridently anti-immigration platform, has backed the mass deportation of migrants in a country that has become the top entry point for those crossing the Mediterranean to reach Europe.

Di Maio's party was founded by comedian Beppe Grillo less than a decade ago with the aim of shaking up a sclerotic political establishment and using the Internet to give voters a more direct say in their democracy. The party is considered a political chameleon, with ever-shifting positions and influences from both left and right.

"Thank you everyone! The Government of Change is now real!" Di Maio wrote on Facebook late Thursday.

Although the League and Five Star are sharply at odds on key issues, they share a skepticism toward the euro and the E.U. that has unnerved both the European establishment and investors.

Neither party ran its campaign on a euro exit. But after the president vetoed the parties' finance minister pick, the likelihood of new elections spawned fears that the populists would turn the next vote into a referendum on the country's membership in the currency club.

Thursday's agreement suggests that neither party wanted to go through with that — at least not right now.

"Just to be precise, we've never spoken about 'no euro,' never," Conte said on television. "On the opposite, that was never in the contract and was never an issue in the agenda."

The threat of a euro exit could have been deeply damaging to an economy that suffers from massive public debt and had seen its borrowing costs rise as markets grew anxious.

The new government will be under immediate pressure to improve economic conditions. Italy has struggled with low growth and high unemployment for the past decade.

Those woes have created political turmoil across southern Europe in recent years. Even as it eased in Italy on Thursday night, it was building in Spain, where longtime Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy is expected to be forced out of office in a confidence vote on Friday.

Rajoy's center-right People's Party has been snared in corruption scandals, and on Thursday lost the support of a key ally. Rajoy is expected to be replaced by Pedro Sánchez, leader of the center-left Socialists.

Witte reported from Berlin.

Italy's Populist Parties Win Approval To Form Government

By Jason Horowitz

New York Times, May 31, 2018

ROME — After 88 days of impasses and negotiations, two Italian populist parties with a history of antagonism toward the European Union received approval Thursday night to create a government that has already unsettled the Continent's political order.

Only days ago, President Sergio Mattarella of Italy rejected a populist government over concerns about a proposed finance minister who had helped write a guide for withdrawing Italy from the euro, Europe's single currency. The political chaos and sudden uncertainty about the euro helped send global financial markets reeling.

On Thursday, the populists reshuffled, keeping the same prime minister, Giuseppe Conte, and other top players, but moving the objectionable finance minister to a less critical post.

That was apparently enough to satisfy the president, who preferred an elected government to a caretaker alternative he had in reserve. The populist parties constituting the new government won the most votes in a March 4 election, promising a sweeping crackdown on the illegal immigration that helped fuel their ascent.

But the president's assent was not enough to allay concerns about the actual agenda of the populists once they enter power, even though they now claim a sudden conversion to full faith in the euro.

"The populist and right-wing government has a program that's dangerous for the country and the events of recent days confirm our longstanding concerns," said Maurizio Martina, a leader of the Democratic Party, which will now leave government for the opposition. "Their acts so far have been a mix of extremism, anti-Europism and iniquity."

The new government still needs to win a confidence vote in Parliament, but that was a formality. The government will be sworn in Friday.

The remarkable rise of the populists now leaves Italy's traditional political establishment, left and right, in tatters. It also shocked a European Union that thought it had successfully beaten back an anti-establishment and hard-right insurgency last year.

The populist victory in Italy now could not come at a worse time for the European Union. A corruption scandal in Spain threatens the demise on Friday of a government that had been a model for the central authorities in Brussels. Britain is leaving. Chancellor Angela Merkel of Germany is weakened. President Emmanuel Macron of France is a pro-Europe leader in search of partners. Poland and Hungary are rolling back democracy. The United States president is waging a trade war on European allies, while more and more Europeans look to Russia's strongman, Vladimir V. Putin, as a model.

But amid all the geopolitical and economic threats to the European Union, Italy represented perhaps the gravest. And as is often the case with Italy, it was overlooked.

The birthplace of fascism and for years the home of Western Europe's largest communist party, Italy again proved an incubator for political experiment. The populist parties it produced — the Five Star Movement, a party developed on the internet, and the League, a formerly northern secessionist movement — to varying degrees both blame the euro for depriving Italy of sovereignty.

Like the other countries that have adopted the euro, Italy has lost its power to control interest rates, which are set by the European Union's central bank. The so-called eurozone countries also must adhere to strict fiscal rules, which are especially difficult for Italy because of its heavy debts.

Economists say that if Italy, the fourth-biggest economy in the European Union, were to exit the euro it would do enormous financial damage to the country and hurt the Continent's economic stability.

The political uncertainty in Italy — as well the remote possibility of leaving the euro — spooked the markets when the formation of a government by the two parties appeared likely. The combination created some of the scariest economic days for the country since the 2011 financial crisis that planted the seeds for this week's populist flowering.

After a leaked draft of the alliance's government platform included proposals about leaving the eurozone and a proposed finance minister turned out to have helped write a guide to leaving the euro, the global markets dipped precipitously.

Since then, however, seemingly every Five Star and League leader has disavowed their antagonism to the euro, or rather denied ever harboring any hostility to it whatsoever.

On Wednesday night, League officials literally whitewashed their anti-euro history by painting over the blue "Basta Euro," or no more euro, sign on its headquarters in Milan.

"The euro was never in discussion," Mr. Conte, who will be sworn in Friday as prime minister with the rest of his cabinet, said in Florence on Thursday morning before traveling to Rome and then the Quirinal Palace in a plain taxi cab, the preferred transportation for the anti-establishment Five Star.

But for any global investor with a search engine or European Union leader with a memory, there remained a real question as to whether the sharply negative market reaction had truly chastened the populists, or whether it simply had led them to disguise their hostility as the price of admission into power.

Also unclear was how the parties, which had demanded an Italians-first approach and a dramatic restructuring of their relationship with Europe, would go about it.

"I will read the composition of the government," Mr. Conte said late Thursday night, minutes after receiving approval to form a government from President Mattarella.

The cabinet still included the minister blocked by President Mattarella — Paolo Savona, the euro-skeptic economist. But Mr. Savona has now been moved from the powerful finance ministry to the less consequential European affairs ministry.

He will nevertheless be Italy's representative in Brussels, a key spot for a coalition that wants to change the rules of the European Union.

While some other key posts in the cabinet were filled with politicians experienced in working in the European Union, Mr. Conte said the leaders of Italy's populist alliance, Luigi Di Maio of the Five Star Movement and Matteo Salvini of the League, would be at his side as vice premiers.

Critics have said Mr. Di Maio and Mr. Salvini will most likely be in the driver's seat.

"We will work intensely" to implement the alliance's electoral program and "with determination to improve the quality of life of all Italians," Mr. Conte said.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Populist leaders in Europe and across the Atlantic looked on with delight as they gained a powerful ally in the heart of Western Europe.

Stephen K. Bannon, an architect of President Trump's own populist-themed campaign, was in Italy to celebrate the new government. He explained in an interview how, a few days after the election, he had met for hours with Mr. Salvini and other senior League officials in Milan urging them to form an alliance with Five Star.

Mr. Bannon said he told Mr. Salvini, "You are the first guys who can really break the left and right paradigm. You can show that populism is the new organizing principle."

He expressed confidence others in Europe would follow.

The League and Five Star both want to renegotiate treaties on budgets, migration and a range of other issues with the European Union. They also want to lift sanctions against Russia and for Italy to move closer to its president, Mr. Putin, who once said he did not need to meddle in the Italian election because it was all going his way.

The political breakthrough between Five Star and the League seemed both inevitable and frustratingly out of reach.

An inconclusive election led to months of stalemate. Mr. Mattarella threatened to form a caretaker government, which triggered the formation of an alliance between the Five Star and League parties. After weeks of intense negotiations, they presented a prime minister and a cabinet that Mr. Mattarella rejected.

The president was about to exercise his authority to create a caretaker government but held off, as the populist parties struggled to give it another shot.

Mr. Di Maio, 31, triumphant after his party claimed a third of the March vote, was this week reduced to imploring Mr. Salvini to abandon his calls for another election. With grumbling growing inside his own party, Mr. Di Maio needed help forming a government.

Ultimately, Mr. Salvini, with a performance Machiavelli would be proud of, accepted and gained plenty of influence in the government.

In the hours immediately following the official announcement about the new government, Mr. Salvini returned triumphantly to his northern Italian base.

He said he looked forward to "snipping" the billions of euros in the Italian budget reserved for "maintaining immigrants in the country."

In a retort to the European Commission president, Jean-Claude Juncker, who suggested that Italians must work harder and be less corrupt, Mr. Salvini made clear that the days of Italy going "hat in hand" to Brussels were over.

Italy Edges Toward Populist-led Government On Second Try

By Colleen Barry

Associated Press, May 31, 2018

MILAN (AP) — Italy advanced swiftly toward a populist government on a second try Thursday, after the leaders of the anti-establishment 5-Star Movement and the right-wing League announced a compromise deal aimed at overcoming the president's objections.

With developments moving quickly, the premier-designate tapped at the beginning of the week to head an interim government of technocrats stepped aside, while President Sergio Mattarella called a meeting with the populist's pick: a law professor whose attempt to form a government failed four days ago.

Political neophyte Giuseppe Conte, who skipped teaching a class at the University of Florence to return to Rome, was summoned to meet Mattarella at the presidential palace Thursday night.

After months of stalemate followed an inconclusive parliamentary election in March, the Italian political landscape has shifted into overdrive.

Earlier in the day, the leader of the 5-Star Movement, Luigi Di Maio, and League leader Matteo Salvini canceled other engagements to meet at the parliament. They issued a statement in the afternoon stating they had achieved "the conditions for a political government."

In a Facebook message, Salvini said it took "dedication, coherence, listening, patience, good sense, head and heart" to get a second chance while facing "many obstacles, attacks, threats and lies."

The possibility that the 5-Star government and the League could come up with a government acceptable to Italy's president buoyed financial markets, despite their euroskeptic views.

That's because a political government would avoid an early election that investors worry would be seen as a referendum on the euro. Milan closed down a slight 0.06 percent, better than European peers, and interest rates to refinance Italy's stubbornly high debt relaxed at 2.83 percent, comfortably below recent highs of 3 percent.

The 5-Stars and League together won a narrow majority in the March 4 election. They presented their proposed Cabinet over the weekend, but Mattarella vetoed their choice of a euroskeptic economy minister, saying the candidate's views put Italians' savings at risk.

With Salvini unwilling to consider a different economy minister, the League-5-Star lineup collapsed. Conte, whom the president had tapped as premier-designate before former International Monetary Fund official Carlo Cottarelli, relinquished his mandate.

After market tanked at the prospect of a Cottarelli-led technical government and early election, Di Maio came back with a proposal to replace the contested ministerial candidate, while Salvini said he wasn't closing any doors.

UN Approves Possible Sanctions Against South Sudan

By Edith M. Lederer

Associated Press, May 31, 2018

UNITED NATIONS (AP) – The U.N. Security Council adopted a U.S.-sponsored resolution Thursday that threatens an arms embargo on South Sudan and sanctions against six people including the country's defense chief if fighting doesn't stop and a political agreement reached.

The resolution received just the minimum 9 "yes" votes, with six countries abstaining: Russia, China, Bolivia, Kazakhstan, Equatorial Guinea and Ethiopia.

The resolution asks Secretary-General Antonio Guterres to report by June 30 on whether fighting is taking place and "a viable political agreement" has been reached.

If he reports fighting or lack of an agreement, it says the Security Council will consider imposing an arms embargo or sanctions against the six officials – or both measures within five days.

There were high hopes that South Sudan would have peace and stability after its independence from neighboring Sudan in 2011. But the country plunged into ethnic violence in December 2013 when forces loyal to President Salva Kiir, a Dinka, started battling those loyal to Riek Machar, his former vice president who is a Nuer.

A peace deal signed in August 2015 didn't stop the fighting, and a cessation of hostilities agreement this past Dec. 24 was broken within hours.

The African Union's eight-nation Intergovernmental Authority for Development, which is holding a summit in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, has been trying to revive the failed peace agreement.

U.S. Ambassador Nikki Haley told the council in January that the United States is giving up on South Sudan's president after backing the country's independence and investing over $11 billion since 2011. She called Kiir "an unfit partner" in the pursuit of peace and urged an arms embargo on the conflict-racked nation.

The U.S. condemns "in the strongest terms the ongoing fighting" in violation of the 2015 agreement and reiterate its demand for a permanent cease-fire.

It would renew existing sanctions against South Sudanese officials until July 15 and extend the mandate of the panel of experts monitoring implementation of the measures until Aug. 14

The resolution identifies six officials for a possible asset freeze and travel ban: Defense Minister Kuol Manyang Juuk, former army chief Paul Malong Awan, Minister of Information Michael Makuei Lueth, and army deputy chief of staff for logistics Malek Reuben Riak Rengu, Bieh state Gov. Koang Rambang Chol and cabinet affairs minister Martin Elia Lomuru.

There's A New Battle For Influence In Central Africa, And Russia Appears To Be Winning

By Cassandra Vinograd

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

Trucks pass through the remote rebel-held town of Ndele in the Central African Republic on a regular basis, carrying U.N. peacekeepers or goods for sale. But one convoy last month held a different cargo: Russians.

"We were surprised to see them," said rebel administrator Dhafar Adoum. "We didn't know what it was all about."

What Adoum saw was a sign of Russia's sudden interest in his war-torn nation, part of a wider push by Moscow to confront U.S. influence overseas. What started last year with an unusual arms deal has expanded to include military training and talk of mining exploration. And with this foothold, some observers believe, Russia is in position to expand its influence throughout the continent, unsettling Western countries who have supported the Central African Republic for years.

"They're all worried, but they don't really know what to do," said one U.N. official in the country, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe behind-the-scenes discussions. "France, the U.S. and E.U. … They didn't expect the Russians stepping in."

Conflict has gripped the Central African Republic since 2013, when a predominantly Muslim coalition of rebels called the Seleka overthrew the government and largely Christian militias known as the anti-Balaka rose up and fought back. Thousands died in ensuing sectarian violence. France sent troops to intervene, eventually handing control to a United Nations peacekeeping mission.

The election of President Faustin-Archange Touadera in 2016 was seen as a sign of progress. But violence broke out after a brief post-election calm and has escalated significantly in 2018. Nearly 700,000 civilians have been displaced by fighting, double the number from just over a year ago.

Outside of Bangui, the capital, Touadera's government wields little to no control. Armed groups control about 80 percent of the country, along with access to precious resources like gold and diamonds.

Meanwhile, U.N. peacekeepers are overstretched and under-resourced. Humanitarian appeals fare no better. And Western interest in supporting the Central African Republic has waned. Faced with an ongoing crisis, Touadera was forced to look elsewhere for help — and Russia saw an opportunity.

The first signs of a budding friendship emerged last October, when Touadera met Russia's foreign minister in Sochi. The two discussed politics, trade and "the considerable potential for partnership in mineral-resources exploration," according to Russia's foreign ministry.

Just two months later, Russia won an exemption to a U.N. arms embargo to donate small arms and ammunition to the Central African Republic's military. Moscow sent the shipment in early 2018, along with five military and 170 civilian instructors to train two army battalions.

While the arms-embargo exemption was by the book, what followed has been more opaque. Touadera now has a Russian security adviser and Russians in his presidential guard. Mercenaries from the same Russian company caught up in a recent Syrian clash are believed to be in the country. From the convoy in rebel-held Ndele to Russian emissaries flying around the country, it's unclear who exactly is doing business on behalf of Moscow in the Central African Republic.

Russia and the Central African Republic's government have also signed several bilateral deals, but no one, according to Central African analyst Igo Acko, knows their contents or what issues they cover.

There are also concerns about whether Russia is attempting to play both sides of the conflict. Russian emissaries have met with several armed groups, but "we don't know what they talked about," Acko said.

If Russia wants to improve security, Acko said, it would be helpful, given the challenges facing MINUSCA, the U.N. peacekeeping mission, and the ineffective Central African army. Kenny Gluck, the deputy head of MINUSCA, acknowledged some "nerves" around Russia's efforts but called Moscow's arms donations a "very positive thing," along with their training efforts.

"We all have the same purpose here. We all want Central Africa to be a success," Gluck added.

But Moscow's intentions are still unclear.

"They come to help — and they can really help because there is a gap to fill," Acko said. "But on the other hand they are also coming for their business, and we need to know the nature of this business so we can say if it's really good for C.A.R."

Either way, Touadera continues to cozy up to Russia. The Central African president met his Russian counterpart, Vladimir Putin, last week in St. Petersburg, where Putin said he hoped to forge even closer ties.

It's too soon to say how or if Western nations will respond — much depends on how much value they place on maintaining their influence in Africa. But one senior diplomat based in the Central African Republic said that Russia's quick results have already embarrassed other delegations.

"Russia delivers, we talk," the diplomat said. "That's the impression. And it's not wrong."

For now, no one has publicly raised a fuss, but the diplomat warned that Westerners should pay attention. If Russia succeeds where they failed, the diplomat said, other countries seeking assistance will take notice.

"This could come down to a test of, really, traditional Western resolve, power and influence," the diplomat said. "If we cede C.A.R., we're ceding Africa."

White House To Impose Metal Tariffs On Key U.S. Allies, Risking Retaliation

By Ana Swanson

New York Times, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON — The Trump administration said on Thursday it would impose tariffs on metals imported from its closest allies, a move sure to provoke retaliation against businesses and consumers in the United States and to further strain diplomatic ties tested by President Trump's combative approach.

Tariffs of 25 percent on steel and 10 percent on aluminum from the European Union, Canada and Mexico, which together supply nearly half of America's imported metal, are to take effect at midnight Thursday, said Wilbur Ross, the commerce secretary.

Officials in Europe, Canada and Mexico responded quickly, denouncing the tariffs and warning of retaliation measures, some aimed at goods like pork, steel, bluejeans, bourbon and cheese from the parts of America where Mr. Trump enjoys his strongest political support.

"These tariffs are totally unacceptable," Prime Minister Justin Trudeau of Canada said in a statement.

"That Canada could be considered a national security threat to the United States is inconceivable," he added. "These tariffs will harm industry and workers on both sides of the Canada-U.S. border, disrupting linked supply chains that have made North American steel and aluminum more competitive around the world."

The move follows months of uncertainty during which the Trump administration dangled potential exemptions to the tariffs in return for concessions on other fronts, including voluntary limits on metal shipments to the United States and reduced tariffs on imports from America.

In trying to create leverage in trade negotiations by keeping its trading partners guessing, the administration sowed an atmosphere of chaos among allies as well as manufacturers uncertain about the ultimate impact on their vast supply chains. And on Thursday, the Trump administration said it hoped to continue to negotiate with the affected countries, creating further confusion among business owners and foreign leaders.

After the metal tariffs were first announced in March, the countries targeted on Thursday secured temporary exemptions while the administration continued to negotiate with Canada and Mexico over the North American Free Trade Agreement and with European officials over other trade-related matters.

Mr. Ross said on Thursday that although talks with the Europeans had continued, there had not been enough progress to warrant either another temporary reprieve or a permanent exemption.

The tariffs are meant to fulfill President Trump's promises to defend American industry. But they have prompted a fierce response from United States allies that argue that the measures violate international trading agreements.

European officials are preparing to impose retaliatory levies on an estimated $3 billion of imported American products later in June. In a joint statement, France's foreign affairs and economy ministers and Germany's economy minister said the two countries would coordinate their response.

Mexico announced retaliatory tariffs of its own on Thursday, targeting imports from the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

United States that included flat steel, lamps, pork products and prepared meat products, apples, grapes, cranberries and cheeses — goods chosen for maximum impact in areas of the United States that have supported Mr. Trump.

Combined with similar measures being prepared by China, Russia and Turkey, the impact of the penalties on American goods was expected to be severe.

Jean-Claude Juncker, the president of the European Commission, called the tariffs announced by the White House on Thursday "protectionism, pure and simple." Mr. Juncker added that the United States had left Europe no choice but to proceed with a case at the World Trade Organization and its own tariffs on American products.

Some companies in the United States commended the move.

Century Aluminum, which has supported the tariffs, said the action "protects thousands of American aluminum workers and puts U.S. national security first."

But many other businesses have objected, including the construction companies and manufacturers that rely on steel and aluminum to make other products. The tariffs have raised the price of doing business for such companies, and have added uncertainty about the price and availability of the metals in the future.

The Federal Reserve's latest Beige Book, a collection of anecdotes about the health of regional economies that was released on Wednesday, contains more than two dozen references to business fears that the administration's trade policies, and the steel and aluminum tariffs in particular, would hurt sales and profits.

Heidi Brock, the president of the Aluminum Association, which represents most of the aluminum producers in the United States, said on Thursday that the group was "disappointed" by the announcement. She said the tariffs would do little to address the larger issue of overcapacity in China "while potentially alienating allies and disrupting supply chains that more than 97 percent of U.S. aluminum industry jobs rely upon."

American farm groups also took issue with the move. Brian Kuehl, the executive director of Farmers for Free Trade, said the announcement "opens the floodgates to billions in new tariffs on American agriculture" from Canada, Mexico, China, India and Europe.

Senator Ben Sasse, Republican of Nebraska, called the tariffs "dumb" and said they harkened back to the Great Depression.

"Europe, Canada, and Mexico are not China, and you don't treat allies the same way you treat opponents," Mr. Sasse said.

The tariffs are being imposed under a legal measure related to protecting America's national security. The Trump administration has argued that imports have weakened the country's industrial base, and, by extension, its ability to produce tanks, weapons and armored vehicles.

Mr. Ross defended the principle on Thursday. "We take the view that without a strong economy, you can't have strong national security," he said.

The European Union and Canada have objected strongly to the national security argument, citing their close alliance and defense agreements with the United States, and they have pledged to challenge the rationale at the World Trade Organization.

Last week, the Trump administration cited national security when it said it was starting a similar investigation into imported cars, expanding its campaign to a market many times larger than the steel and aluminum industry. The vast majority of vehicles imported into the United States come from Canada, Mexico, the European Union, South Korea and Japan.

"Our view of this one-sided move by the Americans is that it violates the law," said Heiko Maas, Germany's foreign minister. "We view the argument of protecting U.S. security as grounds for levying tariffs on steel and aluminum — and to consider doing so on automobile imports — to be inapplicable."

Europe and other members of the European Union would respond accordingly, he added.

"We have always made clear to the Americans that we have no interest in a trade war between the E.U. and the U.S.A.," he said.

The tariffs took effect globally in late March, lifting the price on metals imported from countries like Russia, Japan, China and Turkey. The same month, the administration said it had secured a trade deal with South Korea under which the country would restrain its metal shipments. The Trump administration has also reached deals with Brazil, Australia and Argentina under which those countries agreed to restrain their metals shipments.

Leaders in Canada, Mexico and Europe had secured temporary exemptions, and they remained hopeful that their countries' traditional alliances with the United States and continuing trade discussions with the Trump administration would grant them a reprieve.

While Mr. Ross insisted on Thursday that any issues related to Mexico and Canada were purely based on national security concerns, Mr. Trump had previously tied the possibility of tariff exemptions for Canada and Mexico to the progress over talks for the North American Free Trade Agreement. Those talks have stalled in recent weeks amid significant differences over matters like the rules governing automobile manufacturing in North America.

Jean Simard, the president of the Aluminum Association of Canada, said his industry was being hit with tariffs as a pressure tactic in the Nafta negotiations. He urged Canadian to break off those talks.

"We're just a piece in a larger chess game," Mr. Simard said. "The Canadian government has always been very clear that we will not negotiate with a knife to our throat."

European officials had also tried maneuvering to avoid a tit-for-tat trade war with the United States — something they view as unproductive, economically perilous and detrimental to the increasingly fraught relationship between the longtime allies.

Germany in particular had pressed for a negotiated solution, but officials there grew wary after Mr. Trump's announcement last week about the investigation into automotive imports.

France's finance minister, Bruno Le Maire, warned that the United States tariffs on European metals would be dangerous and unjustified.

"It's entirely up to U.S. authorities whether they want to enter into a trade conflict with their biggest partner, Europe," he said on Thursday after meeting with Mr. Ross.

"Global trade is not a gunfight at the O.K. Corral," Mr. Le Maire added. "It's not about who attacks whom, and then wait and see who is still standing at the end."

U.S. Allies Retaliate After Trump Lets Steel Tariffs Take Effect For Europe, Mexico And Canada

By Don Lee

Los Angeles Times, May 31, 2018

In a move that sharply escalates trade tensions with America's closest allies, the Trump administration said Thursday it would allow steep tariffs to take effect on imported steel from the European Union, Canada and Mexico.

That prompted swift retaliatory actions and raised the specter of an expanding global trade war, triggered by the U.S..

Despite last-ditch meetings in Europe and pleas from trading partners, as well as repeated vows of retaliation, the administration said it would not extend for a third time temporary tariff exemptions on steel and aluminum, which expire at midnight Friday.

Canadian leaders reacted angrily to the tariffs, especially because Trump justified them on the grounds of national security, a line of reasoning that Canadian officials called absurd, illogical and illegal. Canada, the largest exporter of steel and aluminum to the United States, said it would apply counter-tariffs on $16.6 billion worth of American metals and other products, to take effect July 1.

"That Canada could be a national security threat to the U.S. is inconceivable," said Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, noting the many Canadians who have died alongside U.S. soldiers in joint military operations over the years. "These tariffs are an affront."

EU leaders have been bracing for the duties — 25% on steel and 10% on aluminum — and already had drawn up a list of American products worth several billions of dollars that would be subject to tariffs. Among the imports that would be targeted are such iconic American products as bluejeans, Kentucky bourbon and Harley-Davidson motorcycles — products aimed at applying maximum political pressure as they are produced in home states of top lawmakers.

European officials on Thursday met with U.S. Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross in Paris in an effort to dissuade the administration from going through with the tariffs, but Ross was unmoved and, in a call with reporters from Paris, he announced that the tariffs would be imposed.

Earlier he had suggested that negotiations could continue even after the tariffs are imposed, but EU officials had insisted that the threat of metal tariffs must be lifted before broader negotiations could take place.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Ross, asked about concerns of retaliation that would target farm goods and other U.S. products, said: "Let's see what evolves as things go forward."

The tariffs also are likely to complicate ongoing negotiations with Canada and Mexico to reform the North American Free Trade Agreement. The Trump administration made it no secret that the threat of steel and aluminum tariffs was intended as a lever to win concessions from Canada and Mexico.

Mexico responded to the news Thursday by announcing retaliatory tariffs on products including pork belly, apples, grapes, blueberries and flat steel.

"Mexico deeply regrets and rejects the decision of the United States to impose these tariffs on imports of steel and aluminum," Mexico's economy ministry said in a statement, describing the tariffs as "protectionist measures." The statement said Mexico's retaliatory measures "will be in force until the U.S. government eliminates the imposed taxes."

Trudeau suggested Thursday that NAFTA negotiations would continue. But the sides remain far apart on some critical issues, and there is little chance of reaching an agreement that could be ratified by U.S. lawmakers this year.

Trudeau said he had spoken with Trump last Friday about visiting the White House to finalize a deal on a revised NAFTA, as the parties appeared to have the makings of an agreement. But Trudeau said that Vice President Pence contacted him Tuesday and said that Canada would have to accept a five-year sunset clause as a precondition to a NAFTA deal. A sunset provision would automatically dissolve NAFTA after five years unless the partners all agreed to extend it. Trudeau said that was unacceptable to Canada.

Republican lawmakers also blasted Trump's move to levy steel and aluminum imports, predicting it would lead to higher prices for American consumers.

"This is dumb," said Nebraska Sen. Ben Sasse, adding that similar protectionist measures contributed to the Great Depression in 1929.

In keeping with his campaign promise, Trump has been demanding lower tariffs and fairer terms from trading partners across the globe in a bid to reduce the U.S. trade deficit and bolster domestic production.

The administration's biggest long-term trade challenge is with China. After sending mixed signals in recent months, earlier this week the White House said it would move forward with plans to apply tariffs on $50 billion of Chinese goods, to take effect as soon as next month.

That announcement threatened to scuttle continuing talks with China, but Ross said Thursday that he planned to go to Beijing this weekend, as scheduled, for another round of negotiations.

Canada is the single largest exporter of steel and aluminum to the United States, and its economy is highly integrated with that of its southern neighbor. Canadian officials have suggested that they too would retaliate in response to U.S. tariffs.

Earlier South Korea won a permanent tariff exemption on steel after it agreed to a quota, and similar deals have been cut with Brazil, Australia and Argentina. Japan, another major steel supplier to the U.S., earlier was slapped with steel duties as it has steadfastly declined the Trump administration's overtures to sit down and negotiate a trade deal.

The EU as a bloc is the United States' largest trading partner, and European officials, led by France and Germany, have balked at Trump's bare-knuckle negotiating strategy, even as some officials have indicated a willingness to negotiate a trade deal with the U.S. to cover industrial goods such as cars.

Trump Tariffs On US Allies Draw Retaliation Threats

By Ken Thomas And Paul Wiseman
Associated Press, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Trump administration delivered a gut punch to America's closest allies Thursday, imposing tariffs on steel and aluminum from Europe, Mexico and Canada in a move that drew immediate vows of retaliation.

Stock prices slumped amid fears of a trade war, with the Dow Jones industrial average falling nearly 252 points, or 1 percent, to 24,415.84.

The import duties threaten to drive up prices for American consumers and companies and are likely to heighten uncertainty for businesses and investors around the globe.

Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross said the tariffs — 25 percent on imported steel, 10 percent on aluminum — would take effect Friday.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT
NV-DA-20-0616-A-033661

President Donald Trump had originally imposed the tariffs in March, saying a reliance on imported metals threatened national security. But he exempted Canada, Mexico and the European Union to buy time for negotiations — a reprieve set to expire at midnight Thursday.

Other countries, including Japan, America's closest ally in Asia, are already paying the tariffs.

The administration's actions drew fire from Europe, Canada and Mexico and promises to quickly retaliate against U.S. exports.

"This is protectionism, pure and simple," said Jean-Claude Juncker, president of the European Commission.

The EU earlier threatened to counterpunch by targeting U.S. products, including Kentucky bourbon, blue jeans and motorcycles. David O'Sullivan, the EU's ambassador in Washington, said the retaliation will probably be announced in late June.

Mexico complained that the tariffs will "distort international trade" and said it will penalize U.S. imports including pork, apples, grapes, cheeses and flat steel.

In Canada, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said: "These tariffs are totally unacceptable." Canada announced plans to slap tariffs on $12.8 billion worth of U.S. products, ranging from steel to yogurt and toilet paper.

"Canada is a secure supplier of aluminum and steel to the U.S. defense industry, putting aluminum in American planes and steel in American tanks," Trudeau said. "That Canada could be considered a national security threat to the United States is inconceivable."

Trump had campaigned for president on a promise to crack down on trading partners that he said exploited poorly negotiated trade agreements to run up big trade surpluses with the U.S.

The U.S. tariffs coincide with — and could complicate — the Trump administration's separate fight over Beijing's strong-arm tactics to overtake U.S. technological supremacy. Ross is leaving Friday for Beijing for talks aimed at preventing a trade war with China.

The world's two biggest economies have threatened to impose tariffs on up to $200 billion worth of each other's products.

The steel and aluminum tariffs could also complicate the administration's efforts to renegotiate the North American Free Trade Agreement with Canada and Mexico, a pact that Trump has condemned as a job-killing "disaster."

Trump offered the two U.S. neighbors a permanent exemption from the steel and aluminum tariffs if they agreed to U.S. demands on NAFTA. But the NAFTA talks stalled.

Ross said that there was "no longer a very precise date when they may be concluded," and that as a result, Canada and Mexico were added to the list of countries hit with tariffs.

Likewise, the Trump trade team sought to use the tariff threat to pressure Europe into reducing barriers to U.S. products. But the two sides could not reach an agreement.

The import duties will give a boost to American makers of steel and aluminum by making foreign metals more expensive. But companies in the U.S. that use imported steel will face higher costs.

And the tariffs will allow domestic steel and aluminum producers to raise prices, squeezing companies — from automakers to can producers — that buy those metals.

Prices started rising even before all the tariffs kicked in. Stripmatic Products, an auto parts supplier in Cleveland, has seen a 40 percent increase in the price of steel. The higher cost meant it lost out this year to a Chinese company on a contract to branch out into a new market: making food-processing equipment.

"We were basically eliminated from contention," said Stripmatic president Bill Adler. He said the company needed four or five years to recover the last time the U.S. imposed tariffs on steel, in 2002.

Measured purely in dollars, the tariffs don't amount to much in America's $20 trillion economy. Speaking on CNBC on Thursday, Ross called the tariffs "blips on the radar screen."

But Oliver Rakau, an economist with Oxford Economics, warned that the tariffs could cause economic damage because "the specter of an escalation is likely to weigh on business sentiment and may derail the investment recovery."

The Trump administration is turning to a little-used weapon in trade policy: Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. It empowers the president to restrict imports and impose unlimited tariffs if the Commerce Department sees a threat to national security.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Europe, Japan and other U.S. trading partners are contesting the U.S. tariffs at the World Trade Organization.

The WTO gives countries broad leeway to determine national security interests. But there was an unwritten agreement that WTO member countries would use the national-security justification sparingly to avoid abuses.

Now that Trump has broken the taboo, critics fear that other countries will impose sanctions.

Critics say the steel and aluminum tariffs would do little to address the real problem plaguing metals producers around the world: massive overproduction by China that has flooded world aluminum and steel markets. Canada, a staunch U.S. ally, is the largest supplier of steel and aluminum to the United States.

"The administration's trade remedies should specifically target structural aluminum overcapacity in China, which is caused by rampant, illegal government subsidies," said Heidi Brock, president of the Aluminum Association, which represents aluminum producers, fabricators, recyclers and suppliers.

Ross said negotiations with Mexico, Canada and the EU can continue even once the tariffs are in place.

But Philip Levy, senior fellow at the Chicago Council on Global Affairs and a former White House trade adviser, said: "I don't think this is prelude to a series of deals. If anything, this kills the possibility of deals."

If the U.S. can impose tariffs any time it declares imports a threat to national security, Levy asked, "Why would anyone want to negotiate with us?"

Trump Imposes Steel, Aluminum Tariffs On U.S. Allies And Europe Plans To Retaliate

By John Fritze
USA Today, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON — President Trump followed through on a threat to impose steep metal tariffs on U.S. allies Thursday, a long-awaited decision that analysts said moved the country closer to a trade war.

Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross said that Canada, Mexico and the European Union would be subject to a 25% tariff on steel and a 10% tariff on aluminum beginning at midnight on Thursday. Brazil, Argentina and Australia agreed to limit steel exports to the U.S. to avoid tariffs, he said.

"The president's overwhelming objective is to reduce our trade deficit," Ross said.

The decision was the latest by the Trump administration to project a more protectionist stance amid ongoing trade negotiations with China and other countries. But it drew a sharp rebuke and promises of retaliation from longstanding allies.

"These tariffs are totally unacceptable," Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said Thursday. "These tariffs are an affront to the long-standing security partnership between Canada and the United States."

European trade officials have previously threatened to respond to Trump's move with duties on U.S.-made motorcycles, orange juice and bourbon, among other things. Jean-Claude Juncker, president of the European Commission, reiterated that position Thursday, saying Europe would impose duties on "a number of imports from the U.S."

"This is protectionism, pure and simple," he said.

The Mexican economic ministry said it would move to place tariffs on U.S.-made pork, flat steel, apples, cheese and other products.

Trump announced the tariff and aluminum tariffs in early March but offered temporary exemptions to the European Union, Canada, Mexico and a number of other allies. He extended those exemptions in late April, noting at the time it would be the "final" delay unless the countries agreed to other concessions.

"We are awaiting their reaction," Ross said of the other countries. "We continue to remain quite willing, indeed eager, to continue discussions."

The move promoted criticism from a number of Republicans on Capitol Hill, especially those with large agricultural industries.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"This is dumb," said Sen. Ben Sasse, R-Neb. "Europe, Canada and Mexico are not China, and you don't treat allies the same way you treat opponents."

The decision comes days after the Trump administration announced $50 billion of new tariffs on Chinese imports, after officials had earlier said it was "putting the trade war on hold" with Beijing. Ross is set to travel to China this weekend to continue trade talks.

The Trump administration has relied on a 1962 law that allows countries to impose trade restrictions for national security purposes. The president has also justified the tariffs by pointing out "shuttered plants and mills" and the decades-long slide of manufacturing.

Several analysts said they are concerned the approach will have the opposite effect.

"The initial blows in the trade wars have finally landed," said Eswar S. Prasad, former head of the International Monetary Fund's China division and a professor at Cornell University. "It is now clear that Trump's threats about trade sanctions are more than just bluster and are to be taken seriously."

Prasad said the hard line approach might net Trump some short-term wins, but said "it could eventually result in the U.S. playing a diminished" role in global trade.

"He doesn't have a strategy that's going to lead to making American manufacturing great again," said Robert Scott, a trade expert at the American Enterprise Institute. "There will continue to be a series of tit-for-tat battles."

The U.S. imported 34.6 million metric tons of steel last year, a 15% increase from 2016, according to the U.S. Department of Commerce.

Canada was the top source of U.S. imported steel, accounting for 77%, according to the International Trade Administration. Mexican steel accounts for about 9% of U.S. imports.

The majority of that metal is used in construction, auto manufacturing and appliances.

The tariffs, as well as export controls agreed to by Brazil and others, will raise the price of steel and aluminum in the U.S., making domestic producers more competitive while adding to the price buyers of the metals must pay.

"We think that's going to put the industry in real peril," said Jerry Howard, president of the National Association of Home Builders. "We were very excited by the tax bill, but it turns out the tax bill giveth, and tariffs taketh away."

Ann Wilson with the Motor & Equipment Manufacturers Association said its members are already paying tariffs on many of the components they import to make auto parts. Imposing additional barriers on the metals used to make those parts, she said, amounts to a "double tariff."

"There is little doubt that the uncertainty and added costs the administration is creating will put U.S. investments and jobs at risk," Wilson said.

Steel trade with Canada and Mexico is covered under the North American Free Trade Agreement, but the president is relying on a provision of U.S. law that allows him to claim the imports represent a threat to national security.

Many observers believe the announcement Thursday is the latest effort to prod stalled negotiations over rewriting NAFTA, which Trump repeatedly promised to do during his campaign for president.

"This really is an attempt to strengthen the negotiating power of the U.S. when it comes to renegotiating NAFTA," said Ned Hill, who teaches economic development at Ohio State University. "This is just very public, bare-knuckle negotiating."

U.S. Allies Hit Back As Trump Revokes Steel Tariff Reprieve

By Andrew Mayeda, Jenny Leonard, Joe Deaux

Bloomberg News, May 31, 2018

America's closest allies plan to slap billions of dollars in tit-for-tat tariffs on U.S. goods after the Trump administration announced it's imposing steel and aluminum duties on them.

The reaction was swift after Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross announced the U.S. starting Friday will levy duties on the imported metals from the European Union, Mexico and Canada, ending their temporary exemptions.

The EU said it would take immediate steps to retaliate, while Mexico vowed to impose duties on everything from U.S. flat steel to cheese. Canada's government said it will impose tariffs on as much as C$16.6 billion ($12.8 billion) of U.S. steel, aluminum and other products from July 1. The allies said their countermeasures are of proportionate scale to the U.S. actions.

The decision marks the administration's most aggressive trade action yet against major U.S. trading partners, which had been fighting for permanent relief. The EU, Canada and Mexico together account for about 40 percent of U.S. steel imports.

"This is a bad day for world trade," European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker said in Brussels after the announcement. "It's totally unacceptable that a country is imposing unilateral measures when it comes to world trade."

Worries are mounting about the prospect of a trade war as the Trump administration also considers tariffs on U.S. auto imports – which could hit top suppliers from Mexico, Canada, Japan and Germany – and plans to levy duties on $50 billion in Chinese goods.

The rising trade tensions come as Group of Seven finance ministers including U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and central bank governors prepare to meet in the Canadian resort town of Whistler this week. Growing trade tensions have clouded a benign outlook for the global economy, which is on track to grow at its fastest pace since 2011 this year and next, according to the International Monetary Fund.

Secretary Ross said there wasn't enough progress in discussions with the EU over trade concessions and Canada and Mexico on rewriting the North American Free Trade Agreement to give them permanent exemptions from the metals tariffs.

Ross said he's looking forward to "continued negotiations" with Canada, Mexico and the EU to resolve their issues. There's potential "flexibility" in the future because the president has the power to increase or cut tariffs, remove them, or enact quotas, he said.

"We continue to be quite willing and eager to have further discussions with all of those parties," Ross told reporters on Thursday. "We are awaiting their reaction."

Stocks in the U.S. fell as the administration ignored pleas from business lobbying groups including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to forgo tariffs. The shares of major American steel producers, which have supported the tariffs, rose on Thursday's news. Nucor Corp., the biggest U.S. steel producer, were up 0.4 percent at 2:32 p.m. in New York.

The EU has indicated it could target $3.3 billion in American products from Harley-Davidson Inc. motorcycles to Levi Strauss & Co.'s jeans as well as bourbon. Both the EU and Canada said they intend to proceed with a case at the World Trade Organization against the U.S. import restrictions.

Speaking to reporters on Thursday, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau characterized the U.S. measures as "punitive" and "unacceptable."

"These tariffs will harm industry and workers on both sides of the Canada-U.S. border, disrupting linked supply chains that have made North American steel and aluminum more competitive around the world," Trudeau said.Auto Probe

The steel and aluminum levies and auto-import probe could play well with Trump voters in Rust Belt states in the lead-up to congressional midterms in November. But the tariffs aren't popular among pro-trade lawmakers in Trump's own Republican Party.

"Tariffs on steel and aluminum imports are a tax hike on Americans and will have damaging consequences for consumers, manufacturers and workers," said Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah, chairman of the Finance Committee, which oversees trade in the upper chamber.

In imposing the tariffs, President Donald Trump invoked a seldom-used section of a 1960s trade law that allows him to erect trade barriers when imports imperil national security. Trump in March imposed 25 percent duties on imported steel and 10 percent on aluminum, but he gave temporary reprieve to a handful of allies for further talks to take place.

The action was mainly targeted at China over accusations of flooding the global market with cut-rate metals and dragging down prices. The Trump administration has said a global tariff is necessary because China is shipping its steel through other nations.Positive Effects

The White House said in a statement Thursday that those tariffs have already had "major, positive effects" on steel and aluminum workers.

Ross played down the potential negative impact on the U.S. economy from the duties. "For the economy overall, it's just a very small fraction of 1 percent," he said in an interview on CNBC.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Republican Senator Ben Sasse of Nebraska drew a parallel between Trump's tariffs and trade protectionism during the Great Depression.

"This is dumb," Sasse said in an emailed statement. "Europe, Canada, and Mexico are not China, and you don't treat allies the same way you treat opponents. We've been down this road before – blanket protectionism is a big part of why America had a Great Depression. Make America Great Again shouldn't mean Make America 1929 Again."

Kentucky Bourbon Boom Could Be Slowed By Trump Tariffs On Steel And Aluminum

By Lesley Clark

McClatchy, May 31, 2018

The European Union and Canada plan to take trade swipes at bourbons and whiskeys in retaliation for President Donald Trump's decision Thursday to impose tariffs on steel and aluminum imports from their countries and Mexico. The move could put a crimp in Kentucky's bourbon boom, officials say.

The industry, which has enjoyed an uptick in bourbon tourism in recent years, had hoped to avoid the tariffs placed when they export U.S. liquor to Europe and Canada. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, a Kentucky Republican, warned Trump that imposing tariffs on the metal imports could spark a trade war.

But European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker said the administration's decision "leaves us with no choice" but to take its case to the World Trade Organization and impose "additional duties on a number of imports from the US." That would include bourbon, whiskey and other politically targeted goods like Harley-Davidson motorcycles manufactured in House Speaker Paul Ryan's home state of Wisconsin.

McConnell in March warned the White House that there was a "lot of concern among Republican senators that this could metastasize into a larger trade war." A spokeswoman for McConnell said Thursday he had heard from people across the state about the potential rise in the cost of exports and would continue to raise it with the White House.

"The leader has been clear that a trade war is not in the best interest of Kentucky's economy and that there are better ways to address trade imbalances," spokeswoman Stephanie Penn said, adding that McConnell "will continue to raise his concerns directly with the president and his team."

House Ways and Means Chairman Rep. Kevin Brady, R-Texas, called for the administration to come before lawmakers to explain the effects of the tariffs on local businesses.

"It hurts our efforts to create good-paying U.S. jobs by selling more 'Made in America' products to customers in these countries," Brady said.

White House officials said Trump is looking to protect American steel and aluminum.

During a joint press conference with the Prime Minister of Sweden, President Trump reiterated his plan to implement tariffs on steel and aluminum. McClatchyThe White House

"They're critical for national security," Deputy Press Secretary Raj Shah told Fox News. He said Trump had worked to exempt certain countries and certain allies, "but in these instances it wasn't possible and so the president took action."

U.S. producers say bourbon, which has become a tourist attraction in Kentucky, has caught on globally: exports to the European Union totaled $154 million in 2017, up from $128 million in 2016. Total U.S. spirits exports to the EU were $789 million in 2017, with whiskey accounting for approximately 85 percent of that total or $667 million, according to the International Trade Commission and the Distilled Spirits Council.

Producers on Thursday held out hope that the situation could be resolved in trade talks before the tariffs are expected to be imposed in mid-June.

"We remain hopeful that continued negotiations will avoid a costly trade war and protect our allies and partnerships around the world, which will continue to benefit spirits producers and consumers for years to come," Kentucky Distillers' Association president Eric Gregory said in a statement.

The association estimates bourbon is an $8.5 billion industry in the state, generating 17,500 jobs with an annual payroll of $800 million. Spirits production and consumption generates more than $825 million in federal, state, and local tax revenue.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Canada also included whiskeys in a list of retaliatory measures. Several Kentucky distilleries also produce whiskey.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said the moves were not aimed at hurting Americans: "We have to believe that at some point their common sense will prevail," he said. "But we see no sign of that in this action today by the U.S. administration."

US Allies Vow To Retaliate Over Trump's Metal Tariffs

By Mark Moore

New York Post, May 31, 2018

US allies Canada, Mexico and Europe said they would retaliate by imposing their own penalties on American goods after the Trump administration on Thursday placed tariffs on steel and aluminum.

Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross announced the tariffs — 25 percent on imported steel and 10 percent on aluminum — and said they would take effect Friday.

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau called the tariffs "totally unacceptable" and an affront to an ally that has fought alongside American forces for decades.

"Canada buys more American steel than any other country in the world, half of US steel exports," he said. "Canada is a secure supplier of aluminum and steel to the US defense industry, putting aluminum in American planes and steel in American tanks. That Canada could be considered a national security threat to the United States is inconceivable."

Chrystia Freeland, the country's foreign affairs minister, said Canada will levy penalties on US products until President Trump relents.

Trump first announced the fees in March, saying they were a national security issue because unfair competition from foreign producers of steel and aluminum damages the US.

"Without a strong economy, you can't have a strong national security," Ross said.

Canada, Mexico and the European Union were initially granted exemptions, but they end Friday.

"This is protectionism, pure and simple," European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker said in a statement.

The European Union said it would impose taxes on a number of US imports, including Harley-Davidson motorcycles, Levi's jeans and Kentucky bourbon.

Mexico said it would apply penalties to blueberries, pork bellies, grapes and certain types of steel.

Canada will hit the US with tariffs against steel and aluminum.

Some countries — including Argentina, Australia, Brazil and South Korea — agreed to restrict exports of metals and were exempted, but Ross said the EU, Canada and Mexico were not there yet.

Even some members of Trump's own political party criticized how he was treating US allies.

"We've been down this road before — blanket protectionism is a big part of why America had a Great Depression. 'Make America Great Again' shouldn't mean 'Make America 1929 Again,'" said Sen. Ben Sasse (R-Neb.).

Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) said the import duties are a "tax hike on Americans."

Trudeau offered an olive branch.

"Americans remain our partners, our allies and our friends," he said. "This is not about the American people. We have to believe that at some point common sense will prevail, but we see no sign of that with this action today."

U.S. Imposes Steel And Aluminum Tariffs On EU, Canada, And Mexico

By Michelle Moons

Breitbart, May 31, 2018

The United States ended a delay of steel and aluminum tariffs for the European Union, Canada, and Mexico with a proclamation on Thursday.

The proclamation means that steel and aluminum tariffs of 25 and 10 percent, respectively, temporarily delayed for these and various other countries, will now be imposed on the EU, Canada, and Mexico.

Findings of section 232 investigations into the effect of steel and aluminum imports on the national security of the United States were released in January. President Donald Trump concurred in a March proclamation with Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross's findings from the January reports that included "steel mill articles are being imported into the United States in such quantities and under such circumstances as to threaten to impair the national security of the United States."

As a result of these findings, President Trump imposed a 25 percent tariff on steel imports. The president added a caveat that countries could discuss with the U.S. "alternative ways to address the threatened impairment of the national security caused by imports from that country." A similar finding was issued regarding aluminum imports.

Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Mexico, South Korea, and the European Union took advantage of the offer. The U.S. afforded delay in implementation of the tariffs based on the "important security relationship" with each of these countries and pending continued discussions of the issue.

Canada and Mexico were given the delay pending the ongoing NAFTA trade negotiations. Those negotiations have continued, but U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer has expressed at times that the negotiations have not progressed as quickly as had been hoped.

The U.S. came to "satisfactory alternative" agreements with Argentina, Australia, and Brazil to extend exemption while details of those were finalized. The agreements were outlined in Thursday's proclamation.

European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker responded to news of the U.S. tariffs on the EU, calling the decision "protectionism, pure and simple," according to the Associated Press. "It's totally unacceptable that a country is imposing unilateral measures when it comes to world trade," said Junker, who threatened the EU would soon issue "counterbalancing measures."

Trump Slaps Steel, Aluminum Tariffs On EU, Canada And Mexico

By Vicki Needham

The Hill, May 31, 2018

The Trump administration will levy hefty steel and aluminum tariffs on the European Union, Canada and Mexico starting on Friday, a move that brought threats of retaliation from the major trading partners.

Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross said that President Trump had decided on Thursday morning to end the temporary exemptions for the three key trading allies despite their two months of lobbying to avoid the tariffs, raising tensions among the economic partners.

"We look forward to continued negotiations with Canada and Mexico on one hand and with the European Commission on the other hand as there are other issues we need to get resolved," Ross told reporters on a conference call.

Mexico and the EU were swift in saying they would follow through on their promises to impose retaliatory tariffs on U.S. exports.

In a statement, the EU referred to a 10-page list of possible targets they produced in March after Trump first announced the potential tariffs. The EU had vowed to levy tariffs of $3.3 billion on iconic American products such as Kentucky bourbon, jeans and Harley-Davidson motorcycles.

European leaders also said they would proceed with a complaint at the World Trade Organization (WTO).

"We did everything to avoid this outcome," said EU Commissioner for Trade Cecilia Malmström, who called it "a bad day for world trade."

"This is protectionism, pure and simple," said Jean-Claude Juncker, president of the European Commission.

Canada and Mexico have said the tariffs are unacceptable and that imports of steel and aluminum don't affect U.S. national security. They warned the tariffs could put the fate of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) at stake.

Mexico said Thursday that it would impose tariffs on a wide range of U.S. products including steels such as hot and cold foil, lamps, legs and shoulders of pork, sausages, apples, grapes, blueberries and various cheeses in response to the tariffs.

"Mexico deeply regrets and condemns the decision of the United States to impose these tariffs on imports of steel and aluminum from Mexico from June 1, at the discretion of national security," Mexico's government said in a statement.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Nearly 50 percent of U.S. steel and aluminum imports in 2017 came from the EU, Canada and Mexico.

Ross dismissed suggestions that the U.S. is igniting a trade war with key allies while saying the effects on the U.S. economy will be "trivial."

"As you know, this has been under discussion for quite a long time and it's a very small percentage of the respective economy. A fraction of 1 percent," Ross told CNBC's "Squawk on the Street" during an interview from Paris.

But the U.S. Chamber of Commerce said that U.S. steel prices have risen 40 percent since Jan. 1 and are now nearly 50 percent higher than in Europe or China.

A number of Republicans on Capitol Hill blasted the decision.

"Europe, Canada, and Mexico are not China, and you don't treat allies the same way you treat opponents," said Sen. Sen. Ben Sasse (R-Neb.), who called the decision "dumb."

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), whose committee oversees trade, said that "tariffs on steel and aluminum imports are a tax hike on Americans and will have damaging consequences for consumers, manufacturers and workers."

One GOP senator said they had no warning about the tariffs outside of Trump's statements that the exemptions were going to end for the key allies.

"I don't like trade wars," the senator said. "There are no winners in trade wars. There are only losers. And this scares me."

The tariffs on aluminum and steel are just one plank in an aggressive effort by Trump to reshape the nation's trade policies that has rattled allies, markets and U.S. businesses.

Trump has also threatened to impose tariffs on imported automobiles and is battling with China on a range of proposed restrictions,

Ross repeated remarks he made on Wednesday in Paris during a meeting of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) that just because the United States has levied the tariffs doesn't mean that negotiations with the countries are halted even if they retaliate.

"If any of these parties retaliate that does not mean that there can't be continuing negotiations," Ross told reporters.

"Take the example of China: The tariffs that we've imposed went into effect on China on the 23rd of March and, as you're well aware, we have continued to have trade negotiations with China," he said.

"So, the fact that we took the tariff action doesn't mean that there cannot be negotiation," he said.

The U.S. had delayed imposing the tariffs on Canada and Mexico pending talks on NAFTA and related national security issues, Ross said.

"Those talks are taking longer than we'd hoped. There is no longer a precise date when they may be concluded, so they were added into list of those who will bear tariffs," he said.

Discussions with the EU made some progress but didn't get to the point where it was warranted to give the bloc a continued temporary exemption or a permanent exemption, Ross said.

South Korea had previously reached a deal with the Trump administration for an exemption. Argentina, Brazil and Australia have reached agreements that will exempt them from the tariffs for now.

The United States negotiated voluntary export limits with several other friendly nations, including South Korea, Argentina, Australia and Brazil.

Ross said that Trump can "do anything he wishes at any point subsequent from today" on whether to impose tariffs and quotes.

"There is potential flexibility going forward," Ross said.

The Section 232 law, which is rarely used, allows tariffs to be placed on imports in the name of national security. Trump is considering the same law to employ tariffs on automobiles.

Ross said that he still plans to leave for China on Friday to continue trade talks there.

Jordain Carney contributed.

The Economy Can Handle Steel And Aluminum Tariffs. The Real Risk Is Erratic Policy.

By Neil Irwin

New York Times, May 31, 2018

Today, we take pity upon the supply chain managers, the financial planners, the logisticians and procurement chiefs at every American company that uses steel and aluminum in its products.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

They face a difficult few months trying to adapt their businesses to new tariffs on metals imported from Canada, Mexico and the European Union, which start at midnight Thursday. Some prices are likely to rise, and some business operations may even turn out to be noneconomical in this new trade policy landscape, and shutter entirely.

It's worth keeping some perspective on the direct, immediate damage from the tariffs and likely retaliation from trading partners. Prices for inputs like steel move around all the time, and businesses are generally pretty good at adapting. Those supply chain managers and logisticians are good at their jobs.

But there's a longer-term danger for the American economy that's a lot bigger than the 25 percent tax on imported steel and 10 percent on imported aluminum. It is that the administration's trade policy is displaying an erratic, improvised, us-against-the-world quality that is anathema to businesses that must make long-term decisions about how to deploy capital.

In a market economy, businesses can thrive despite bad policies. Go to any rich country, and you'll find certain tax and regulatory policies that seem bonkers to an outsider. Japan taxes imported American beef at high rates — 50 percent until recently. Most stores in Germany have to close on Sunday. Go to Sweden or South Korea or Canada and you can find rules that impede the free market, yet businesses do just fine.

That's because those policies may be inefficient, but they are stable in their inefficiency. German stores build into their business models the expectation that there will be no Sunday sales, and a beef importer in Japan builds the tariff into its prices.

That stability is part of what differentiates rich countries from poor ones. In poor countries, it tends to be harder for businesses to make long-term investments in part because they don't know what tax and regulatory policies might come down upon them in the future.

And the Trump administration's trade policies in 2018 have been nothing if not inconsistent and unpredictable. The sequence of events on steel and aluminum over the last three months is a prime example.

If you're a little confused at seeing headlines about the imposition of tariffs on steel and aluminum on major trading partners, it is understandable. Didn't that already happen?

The administration first announced the tariffs back in early March, portraying them as an aggressive effort to fight the perfidious behavior of China and other countries to subsidize their domestic metals industries, undermining American national security.

Then, soon after they were announced, the administration gave exemptions to most major American allies, including the European Union, Canada and Mexico. It extended them by 30 days at the start of May, though that was a down-to-the-wire moment.

With those 30 days now elapsed, the administration has this time gone the other direction and removed the exemptions. It's now tariffs for everybody, including the United States' closest military allies. And even that is subject to change as the Trump administration continues to dangle relief on steel and aluminum tariffs in exchange for other concessions.

There has been extensive behind-the-scenes jockeying over those exemptions for the last three months, but there has been no real public accounting of what criteria led to those exemptions in the first place, or what led to their removal. And it is not at all clear how taxing imports of Canadian and European steel and aluminum is going to get China to cut subsidies for its producers.

The imposition of the tariffs on Canada and Mexico added another layer of complexity to the sluggish renegotiation of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

American negotiations with China over its trade practices have been even more erratic. One day, tariffs on $150 billion of imports from China appeared imminent, the next they were put on pause amid infighting by the president's trade negotiation team.

Even more remarkable is that the Trump administration is willing to make threats against all the nation's major trading partners at the same time. A trade war with China would be a big deal; a trade war with Europe would be a big deal; a trade war with Canada and Mexico would be a big deal. The United States is flirting with all three at once.

So imagine you're a business trying to decide whether to build a big new manufacturing facility in Ohio or Indiana or Michigan. You make sophisticated industrial equipment that is exported around the world — a sector where the United States has considerable competitive advantages, and where the jobs tend to pay well. You just got a tax cut, and your stock price has been rising, lowering your cost of capital.

But simultaneously you have no idea how much it will cost to buy the steel and aluminum in your products in the years ahead. You have no idea if we'll be in the middle of a trade war with all the countries that are likely to be interested in buying your products.

You may be hoping that the Trump administration's trade brinkmanship will lead to better access for your products abroad. But in the meantime, that's a whole lot of political risk that will weigh on your decisions to hire and invest.

There will be a lot of focus in the weeks ahead on the direct, first-round effects of the steel and aluminum tariffs. No doubt certain products will cost a bit more. Those supply chain managers are facing some late nights.

This bigger cost is harder to measure, but that doesn't make it less real. That is the risk that the United States is not as stable and reliable a place to do business as you once thought.

Trump Ends His Nice-guy Routine On Trade

By Gabby Morrongiello

Washington Examiner, May 31, 2018

President Trump is done playing nice with the European Union and other U.S. trading partners.

Almost two months to the day since Trump granted several key allies temporary exemptions from aluminum and steel tariffs, dodging a trade war that could have hurt the very people who put him in the White House, his administration announced Thursday that trade penalties of 25 and 10 percent would take effect at midnight against Canada, Mexico, and the EU.

[Related: 'This is dumb': Ben Sasse hits Trump over steel tariffs against Canada, Mexico, Europe]

"We did everything to avoid this outcome," EU Trade Commissioner Cecilia Malmström said in a statement responding to Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross, who claimed the U.S. "made some progress" in negotiations with trading partners but not enough to justify continued tariff relief.

Thursday's announcement came less than 48 hours after Trump said his administration was prepping tariffs on $50 billion worth of goods from China, along with other punitive measures that could further rattle financial markets and derail talks with North Korea about denuclearization in the region. That decision frustrated officials in Beijing, who had wrapped up trade talks 10 days prior with a U.S. delegation led by Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin.

"Every flip-flop in international relations simply depletes a country's credibility," China's foreign ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying told reporters on Wednesday, days before a second round of previously scheduled talks between the U.S. and China were set to take place.

Trump's top trade adviser Peter Navarro later defended the move as a "measured" step that advances U.S. economic and national security interests.

"What Trump has done is threaten tariffs against the EU, China, Canada, Mexico and others to try to force those countries to negotiate deals that he believes will be in the United States' interest. But none of those countries he has targeted, with the exception of South Korea, have been willing to negotiate with a gun to their head," explained Ted Alden, a senior fellow on trade at the Council on Foreign Relations.

After moving on China and faced with a Friday deadline on the EU, Canada and Mexico, Trump chose to carry out his threats against those trading partners as well.

And all three responded with threats of retaliation. Mexico said it plans to impose comparable penalties on U.S. goods such as pork, fruits, and flat steel. Europe announced plans to impose equivalent tariffs on American-made motorcycles, denim, bourbon and cigarettes. And Canada was expected to hold a news conference Thursday afternoon to discuss Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's previous pledge to "take responsive measures" to defend the country's trade interests and industries.

According to Alden, the U.S. "in many ways" is now at the beginning of a trade war – something Trump's critics warned would happen when he first announced his plan to impose tariffs on steel and aluminum imports.

"What we've lived through from the start of the Trump administration is kind of a phony war.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Lots of threats, but no real action," Alden said. "But this is starting to get real now."

Trump must now decide whether to suspend the tariffs and resume negotiations with U.S. trade partners – something that could save Americans from sticker shock, calm markets, and ease tensions with key allies – or impose additional penalties and his accelerate his administration's Section 232 investigation into whether automobile imports threaten national security.

"There are sort of three possibilities going forward: One is that these countries give into what Trump is demanding, and I think the likelihood of that is zero. The second choice would be for the president to say, 'Whoops, I changed my mind,' and I think that will only happen if there's a really negative market reaction, which we haven't seen yet, or pressure from U.S. companies," Alden said. "Option No. 3 is he continues to ratchet up the pressure by announcing his withdrawal from NAFTA. I think of the three scenarios, that's the most likely."

Ongoing NAFTA negotiations with Canada and Mexico were one of the reasons Trump initially excused both countries from tariffs. But Thursday's announcement paints a bleak forecast for the trilateral trade agreement, which would need congressional approval if revised.

"The decision to impose tariffs on Canada and Mexico suggests that prospects for a NAFTA agreement in the near-term are fading," Alec Phillips, an economist at Goldman Sachs, told Bloomberg on Thursday. House Speaker Paul Ryan had previously given the administration a deadline of May 17 to submit a notice of intent to sign a new NAFTA deal.

Trump is expected to release additional details on trade penalties in the coming weeks that could roil relations with China at a critical time for nuclear talks with Pyongyang. By the end of June, his administration intends to provide a list of Chinese products that will be subject to tariffs and impose restrictions on Beijing's access to American technology.

Meanwhile, China announced Thursday evening that it plans to reduce tariffs on a mix of imports by July 1, a decision that comes two days before Ross heads to Beijing. The move has been criticized by allies of the administration who believe it does little to reduce the country's $375 billion trade surplus with the U.S.

Trump Slaps Tariffs On U.S. Allies; They Retaliate With Their Own Duties

By Stephen Dinan, S.A. Miller

Washington Times, May 31, 2018

But he delayed their effective date for some of the country's closest allies, who had a chance to make their cases. Thursday's announcement shows those appeals failed, and the tariffs will take effect Friday morning.

President Trump on Thursday slapped tariffs on steel and aluminum imports from the European Union, Canada and Mexico, moving to punish what he saw as unfair competition that's sapped the U.S. economy.

The tariffs — 25 percent on steel and 10 percent on aluminum — drew immediate retaliation from all three entities, in what could be the beginning of a nasty global trade war.

Mexico said it would raise duties on imports ranging from pork to grapes to cheese, while Canada announced its own retaliatory tariffs on U.S. steel and aluminum, and a host of other products it said the U.S. now supplies, but that can easily be switched to others.

Canada and the European Commission also said they will file complaints with international tribunals, and didn't shy away from the notion that a trade war has now broken out.

"We're ready for anything," said Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, who blamed Mr. Trump for igniting the battle.

Speaking earlier, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross downplayed the chances of a trade war.

"These are blips on the radar screen — I don't think they change the fundamentals of the relationship," he told CNBC. "Everybody has spats every now and again. Every family does, every country does with others — there's nothing weird about that. I think everybody will get over this in due course."

He also downplayed the economic impact of the tariffs on American consumers, saying it would raise the price of a beer can by "a fraction of a penny."

Mr. Trump called the tariffs a matter of national security, saying the U.S. needed a steady supply of aluminum and steel to maintain its military strength, and suggesting reliance on foreign imports undercut that.

Political allies and opponents of Mr. Trump ridiculed that notion.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"This is dumb," said Sen. Ben Sasse, Nebraska Republican. "Europe, Canada, and Mexico are not China, and you don't treat allies the same way you treat opponents. We've been down this road before—blanket protectionism is a big part of why America had a Great Depression. 'Make America Great Again' shouldn't mean 'Make America 1929 Again.'"

Mr. Trump had signaled earlier this year that the tariffs were coming, but also invited targeted countries to make the case that they should be exempted. Brazil, Argentina and Australia reached what Mr. Trump called "satisfactory" deals to head off tariffs with quota limits.

But Canada, Mexico and the European Union apparently fell short.

The administration has repeatedly used tariffs as part of get-tough trade policies, with a decision on automobile imports still looming. That could particularly hit China, though other nations were also preparing for a negative decision.

The U.S., Mexico and Canada are also engaged in negotiations to rewrite the 25-year-old North American Free Trade Agreement. Those talks also appear to be going badly.

Support for Mr. Trump's tariffs decision was tough to find on Thursday.

Liberal-leaning labor unions, conservative free trade organizations, business organizations and Democrats and Republicans in Congress all said the president's decision was misguided.

"These tariffs are hitting the wrong target," said Rep. Kevin Brady, Texas Republican and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. "When it comes to unfairly traded steel and aluminum, Mexico, Canada, and Europe are not the problem — China is."

He said he'll hold hearings and make the administration defend its decisions.

The Commerce Department earlier this year determined a need to ensure adequate U.S. steel production capacity to supply the military.Mr. Trump announced global tariffs as the official response to that determination.

But he delayed their effective date for some of the country's closest allies, who had a chance to make their cases. Thursday's announcement shows those appeals failed, and the tariffs will take effect Friday morning.

Mr. Trudeau was outraged by Mr. Trump's claims of security, saying the decision was a betrayal of 150 years of partnerships that saw Canadian troops fight and die alongside American troops against fascism and terrorism.

"That Canada could be considered a national security threat to the United States is inconceivable," he said.

Canada's retaliatory tariffs will take effect in a month, but Mr. Trudeau insisted Americans shouldn't take it personally.

"Americans remain our partners, our allies and our friends. This is not about the American people," he said. "We have to believe that at some point common sense will prevail. But we see no sign of that in this action today by the U.S. administration."

In a statement Wednesday the White House said the duties imposed earlier this year "have already had major, positive effects on steel and aluminum workers and jobs and will continue to do so long into the future."

But the White House also said the administration is still committed to "good-faith negotiations with our allies."

"The administration will continue to monitor steel and aluminum imports and adjust the measures in effect as necessary to protect the national security of the United States," the White House said.

'Today Is A Bad Day For World Trade': Trump Slaps U.S. Allies With Tariffs

Mexico quickly announced it would impose penalties on a list of U.S. goods, and the EU said it would respond with penalties of its own.

By Doug Palmer

Politico, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump's move to slap penalties on imports from U.S. allies and China is moving the country to the brink of a global trade war as the White House tries to wrest concessions from trading partners that are threatening to retaliate.

The Trump administration ratcheted up the brinkmanship Thursday by announcing new duties on steel and aluminum imports from the European Union, Canada and Mexico — after failing to reach deals with them to address national security concerns related to the imports.

The decision, which comes just days after Trump broke a cease-fire in an escalating trade dispute with China, is certain to inflame relations and invite retaliation. Mexico quickly announced it would impose penalties on a list of U.S. goods. European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker also said the EU would respond with penalties of its own on U.S. exports.

"Today is a bad day for world trade," said Cecilia Malmström, the European trade commissioner.

Despite the tensions, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross said the Trump administration wants to continue negotiations. He said he's still planning to make a trip to Beijing this weekend even after the U.S. announced it would slap tariffs on $50 billion in Chinese goods, jeopardizing a fragile agreement to reduce the U.S. trade deficit with China. And Ross also said there's still scope for negotiations with Canada, Mexico and the EU that could reduce or eliminate the tariffs.

"There is potential flexibility going forward," Ross said. "The fact that we took a tariff action does not mean there cannot be a negotiation."

The decision to impose tariffs came as a shock to Canada and Mexico, as both countries thought they would be spared from the levies because of earnest negotiations they have had with administration officials over NAFTA. One U.S. industry official who had been in contact with negotiators from both sides said neither country had been notified by the White House as of Wednesday evening and they were learning of the possibility of tariffs from news reports.

Canadian Foreign Minister Chrystia Freeland had traveled to Washington on Tuesday to discuss the issue, among other matters, with U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer. But she left having made little progress in discussions and having little idea of what the Trump administration's plans were, two sources briefed on the meeting said.

"Canada considers it frankly absurd that we would in any way be considered to be a national security threat to the United States," Freeland told reporters Wednesday. "I would like to absolutely assure Canadian participants, those who work in steel and aluminum industries, that the government is absolutely prepared to and will defend Canadian industries and Canadian jobs."

The three allies were previously given temporary exemptions from the duties — 25 percent on steel imports and 10 percent on aluminum. In the case of Canada and Mexico, the U.S. had hoped to address its national security concerns in the context of ongoing efforts to renegotiate NAFTA, but those talks have taken longer than expected and there is now no precise end date in sight, Ross said. Talks with the European Union made some progress, but not enough to warrant a permanent exemption or another temporary exemption, he said.

The European Union has already notified the World Trade Organization of plans to levy duties on $7.1 billion worth of U.S. exports in response, with the aim of collecting $1.6 billion in tariff revenue. Canada and Mexico have also threatened retaliation, but have not publicly indicated which U.S. products they would hit.

The Trump administration imposed the duties on imports from most other U.S. trading partners earlier this year to stem a flood of cheap steel and aluminum into the country. The administration had determined that imports of the metals threatened national security by undermining domestic production in those sectors. A handful of other U.S. trading partners, including South Korea, Australia, Argentina and Brazil, previously won permanent exemptions by agreeing to quotas on their exports.

Trump Imposes Tariffs On Closest Allies, Mexico And Europe Announce Retaliation

By David J. Lynch, Damian Paletta And James McAuley

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

President Trump Thursday imposed tariffs on imported steel and aluminum from the European Union, Canada and Mexico, triggering immediate retaliation from U.S. allies against American businesses and farmers.

The tariffs — 25 percent on steel and 10 percent on aluminum — take effect at midnight Thursday, marking a major escalation of the trade war between the U.S. and its top trading partners.

"It's more than highly unusual. It's unprecedented to have gone after so many U.S. allies and trading partners, alienating them, and forcing them to retaliate," said economist Douglas Irwin, author of a history of U.S. trade policy since 1763. "It's hard to see how the U.S. is going to come out well from this whole exercise."

In response, the E.U. said it would impose duties "on a number of imports from the United States," referring to a 10-page list of targets for retaliation it published in March, which included Kentucky bourbon and Harley-Davidson motorcycles. European leaders also vowed to proceed with a complaint to the World Trade Organization.

"This is protectionism, pure and simple," said Jean-Claude Juncker, president of the European Commission.

The Mexican government said it would levy import taxes on U.S. exports of pork bellies, apples, cranberries, grapes, certain cheeses, and various types of steel. And Canada levied a surtax on $16.6 billion of American steel, aluminum and other products, as Prime Minister Justin Trudeau pronounced Trump's claim to be protecting national security an "affront" to Canadians who fought alongside American GIs from World War II to Afghanistan.

The root of the current trade mess lies in excess global steel production capacity, which most analysts blame on China. The Commerce Department says that worldwide steelmakers produce 700 million tons of steel beyond annual demand, or seven times total U.S. production.

That flood of steel has depressed prices, making it difficult for many American steelmakers to compete, Commerce says. Last year, Ross negotiated voluntary reductions in capacity. But Trump, who has long expressed enthusiasm for import tariffs, rejected the deal as inadequate.

U.S. officials

President Trump had announced the tariffs in March, but gave several U.S. allies temporary exemptions while they negotiated potential limits on shipments to the United States.

Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross said the president acted on national security grounds, seeing a rising tide of imports as a threat to the domestic metals industry. "Without a strong economy, you can't have a strong national security," Ross said.

Officials from the three trading partners — among Washington's closest allies for decades — have dismissed the idea that their shipments to American customers endanger the United States — and some prominent Republicans attacked the tariffs as wrongheaded.

"This is dumb. Europe, Canada, and Mexico are not China, and you don't treat allies the same way you treat opponents," said Sen. Ben Sasse (R-Neb.). "We've been down this road before—blanket protectionism is a big part of why America had a Great Depression. 'Make America Great Again' shouldn't mean 'Make America 1929 Again."

The United States negotiated voluntary export limits with several other friendly nations, including South Korea, Argentina, Australia and Brazil. Ross said that he intends to continue talks with European diplomats and officials from Canada and Mexico, but those are likely to be contentious.

"We continue to be quite willing, indeed eager, to have further discussions with all of these parties," Ross told reporters, speaking from Paris where he is attending meetings at the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

Thursday's action also is expected to complicate U.S. efforts to confront China over trade practices that the administration regards as unfair. The E.U. shares many of Washington's concerns about China's efforts to acquire advanced technology through compulsory licensing practices, cybertheft and other measures.

But European officials are increasingly irritated by Trump's aggressive use of obscure provisions in U.S. trade laws against U.S. allies.

"We are deeply disappointed that the US has decided to apply tariffs to steel and aluminium imports from the EU on national security grounds. The UK and other European Union countries are close allies of the US and should be permanently and fully exempted from the American measures on steel and aluminium," Britain said in a statement. "We will defend the UK's interests robustly. We continue to work closely with our EU partners and will consider carefully the EU's proposals in response."

President Emmanuel Macron has couched Trump's tariffs as a "nationalist retrenchment" reminiscent of Europe in the 1930s.

Germany has perhaps the most to lose among E.U. nations if the spat escalates into a full-blown trade war.

Although the U.S. market amounts to a low single-digit percentage of German steel industry output,

German politicians and industry groups have said they are concerned that tit-for-tat measures could end in damaging tariffs on foreign automobiles, an outcome that Trump has repeatedly threatened.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The administration earlier in May opened a trade investigation into vehicle imports, with the possibility it will end in tariffs on foreign cars justified by the same "national security" provision used to implement the metals tariffs.

While Thursday's action cheered American steel producers, companies that use imported metals said that it endangered U.S. jobs and investment. Auto parts makers said that they rely upon global supply chains and sometimes can buy their specialty steel and aluminum from only one or two sources worldwide.

"Our members could face having to pay double tariffs on some materials necessary to manufacture parts in the US," said a statement from the Motor & Equipment Manufacturers Association. "Industries like ours, which require long-term investments in facilities and employees, depend on regulatory and market stability. These actions have thrown all of that up in the air."

Trump also drew fire from members of his own party, who generally favor fewer trade restrictions. "Bad news that @POTUS has decided to impose taxes on American consumers buying steel and aluminum from our closest allies --Canada, the EU, and Mexico (with whom we run a trade surplus on steel)," tweeted Sen. Patrick Toomey (R-Pa.). "In addition to higher prices, these tariffs invite retaliation."

Ross, meanwhile, said that he still plans to leave for China on Friday for the resumption of trade talks. Earlier this week, there were reports that the talks might be canceled following Trump's renewed threat to impose import taxes on $50 billion in Chinese products.

James McAuley contributed reporting from Paris and Griff Witte reported from Berlin.

Trump's Tariffs Anger U.S. Manufacturers, Business Groups

By Mark Niquette

Bloomberg News, May 31, 2018

Manufacturers and business groups slammed President Donald Trump's decision to impose tariffs on steel and aluminum imports from the European Union, Canada and Mexico, warning of promised retaliation and calling it a tax on U.S. companies and consumers.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce urged the administration on the eve of Thursday's announcement not to proceed because the tariffs would hit U.S. manufacturers with higher costs, impede construction-sector growth and hurt job creation in both industries. Expected widespread retaliation from abroad would also threaten the economic momentum the administration has achieved through tax and regulatory reform, the chamber said.

U.S. steel prices are already almost 50 percent higher than those in Europe or China, and aluminum prices have been extremely volatile, the chamber added. The new tariffs "would add substantially to these challenges," the group said.

"Months ago, the U.S. Chamber warned that alienating our strongest global allies by launching a tit-for-tat trade war would harm the U.S. economy and undermine American leadership," Myron Brilliant, executive vice president and head of international affairs, said in the statement. "This is even clearer today."

Trade groups weren't the only ones complaining. Trump got pushback from members of his own party in Congress, who traditionally have supported free trade, including the leaders of both the House and Senate.Price Increases

The Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers, the trade association for 12 producers in the U.S. including General Motors Co., Ford Motor Co., Volkswagen AG and Daimler AG, said expanding the tariffs will lead to higher prices for U.S.-produced materials that will be passed on to consumers. The Alliance urged a "careful re-evaluation of these tariffs so they address legitimate concerns" without harming users of the metals.

The administration's actions have already caused higher prices for key products, said Cody Lusk, president of the American International Automobile Dealers Association trade group.

"American consumers will continue to bear the brunt of a trade war with our key economic partners," Lusk said in a statement. "The decision to forge ahead with these steel and aluminum tariffs will adversely impact the price of consumer goods, including the millions of new vehicles Americans buy each year."Multiple Fronts

Auto-parts makers were already facing trade challenges and uncertainties on several fronts, including Nafta re-negotiations, previous tariffs on Chinese imports and possible duties on imported vehicles and parts, said Ann Wilson, senior vice president of government affairs for the Motor & Equipment Manufacturers Association, which represents vehicle suppliers. The industry depends on regulatory and market stability, she said.

"These actions have thrown all of that up in the air," Wilson said in a statement. "There is little doubt that the uncertainty and added costs the administration is creating will put U.S. investments and jobs at risk."

Not everyone is complaining.

The American Iron and Steel Institute praised the move and said it supports the administration's policy that any country granted an exemption from tariffs must be subject to a quota. "We thank the president for his actions to ensure a strong American steel sector that is fundamental to our national and economic security," Thomas J. Gibson, the group's president and chief executive, said in a statement.EU Retaliation

The EU has indicated that it will impose tariffs on American-made blue jeans, t-shirts, and footwear, and the ability to export "Made in USA" products is essential for the health of U.S. manufacturing and its workers, the American Apparel & Footwear Association said.

"To make this move against our closest allies, especially during the renegotiation of Nafta, creates more difficulty and chaos for the business community," Rick Helfenbein, the group's president and chief executive officer, said in a statement. "Let's be clear, Made in USA apparel and footwear will suffer as a direct result of this action by the Trump administration."

The administration's use of a "national security" rationale encourages other nations to do the same to keep U.S. goods and services of of their markets, according to a blog post from the Business Roundtable, a lobbying group for U.S. chief executives.

The Aluminum Association, representing producers including Alcoa, said it was disappointed by the tariff expansion because the real problem is overcapacity in China caused by "rampant, illegal" government subsidies, said Heidi Brock, the group's president and chief executive officer.Tight Supply

"Today's action does little to address the China challenge while potentially alienating allies and disrupting supply chains that more than 97 percent of U.S. aluminum industry jobs rely upon," Brock said in a statement. "During a time of record demand for aluminum in the United States, it is critical that aluminum producers across the value chain have a steady and reliable source of supply."

Can-makers rely on metal imports because there is not enough domestic supply to support demand, according to the Can Manufacturers Institute, a trade organization. Members of the organization have applied for exclusions from the tariffs and are still waiting to hear back, Robert Budway, the institute's president, said in a statement.

"The administration's actions artificially create winners and losers in the very competitive packaging space," Budway said.'Double-Digit Increases'

Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross displayed cans of Campbell soup and Budweiser during a March television appearance, when he argued the tariffs would have not have a major impact on U.S. businesses.

Campbell Soup Co., however said that it expects to face "double-digit increases" on steel and aluminum prices, with the higher costs weighing on profit margins.

Freedom Partners Chamber of Commerce and Americans for Prosperity, part of the political network led by billionaires Charles and David Koch, said in a statement the tariffs and expected retaliation "will harm Americans and are a step back from a pro-growth agenda."

The trade groups' sentiments were echoed by some Republican members of Congress, who complained about targeting allies while raising prices on consumers and hurting the market for U.S.-made products. Speaker of the House Paul Ryan believes there are "better ways to promote the interests of American workers and consumers" and will pursue those options, spokeswoman AshLee Strong said.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, a Utah Republican, said he will continue to push the administration to change course because of the "mounting evidence" that the tariffs will harm U.S. consumers. "Tariffs on steel and aluminum imports are a tax hike on Americans and will have damaging consequences for consumers, manufacturers and workers," Hatch said in a statement.Republican Objections

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky has heard from constituents and also will continue to raise his concerns directly with the president and his team, spokesman Don Stewart said. McConnell says "a trade war is not in the best interest of Kentucky's economy," Stewart said.

Representative Kevin Brady of Texas, the Republican chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said the tariffs announced today hit the wrong target because China – not the EU, Mexico and Canada – is the problem. "It hurts our efforts to create good-paying U.S. jobs by selling more 'Made in America' products to customers in these countries," he said.

U.S. Senator Ben Sasse of Nebraska echoed that sentiment about China and called the tariff expansion "dumb."

"Blanket protectionism is a big part of why America had a Great Depression," said Sasse, who also alluded to Trump's campaign slogan. "'Make America Great Again' shouldn't mean 'Make America 1929 Again.'"

Canada is Vermont's largest trading partner, and the state stands "to lose big under this ham-handed policy," Senator Patrick Leahy, a Democrat from the Vermont, said in a statement. He said Trump's actions are a path to "failed trade," not fair trade.

Poll: Voters Want Trade Deals, Not Tariffs

By Megan Cassella

Politico, May 31, 2018

A huge majority of U.S. voters would prefer that President Donald Trump focus more on negotiating new trade agreements rather than imposing tariffs on foreign imports, according to a new POLITICO/Morning Consult poll released Thursday.

The poll of nearly 2,000 registered voters found that 70 percent of them would prefer the Trump administration focus more on "negotiating trade agreements to open new markets to sell American-made products and goods." Only 14 percent, in contrast, answered that they would prefer the administration focus on "imposing tariffs or taxes on foreign products to slow down their sales in the United States."

When voters were asked which they would prefer Congress focused on, the numbers were similar: 67 percent wanted lawmakers to focus on negotiating new deals, while 16 percent said they would prefer they focus on imposing tariffs.

The poll was conducted when trade tensions with China in particular were running high.

The questions were asked after the administration has imposed steep tariffs on steel and aluminum imports from countries across the globe, but before Trump's actions on Thursday that will impose those duties on Canada, Mexico and the European Union — some of the United States' closest allies.

The U.S. also ratcheted up pressure on China this week, and the administration pledged on Monday to impose a second set of tariffs on $50 billion worth of Chinese goods.

At the same time, the administration is engaged in no new trade talks. Trump officials did engage with South Korea to update the two countries' bilateral free trade agreement and are working on updating NAFTA with Canada and Mexico, but there is no push to enter new markets.

Trump has expressed interest in pursuing two-way trade deals with partners, but no countries have yet agreed to engage in such talks. Nations like Japan are still angry with Trump's decision to withdraw from the 12-nation Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal on his first full day in office; others are watching to see how Canada and Mexico fare in the NAFTA renegotiation before agreeing to start their own discussions.

Respondents to the poll also showed a relative lack of support for the administration's tough trade actions toward Beijing. More than half, or 52 percent, called U.S. trade with China mostly a good thing, with 20 percent calling it mostly a bad thing.

About 4 in 10 respondents said the U.S. economic relationship with China had gotten somewhat or much worse in the past year, while 32 percent said it had gotten somewhat or much better.

The POLITICO/Morning Consult poll was conducted May 23-29, surveying 1,995 registered voters. The margin of error is plus or minus 2 percentage points.

War Inside Trump Trade Team Triggers Global Angst

The president's abrupt announcement of steep tariffs on European, Canadian and Mexican imports capped a week of whipsaw statements.

By Ben White, Andrew Restuccia And Nancy Cook

Politico, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump's abrupt decision Thursday to slap steel and aluminum tariffs on Canada, Mexico and the European Union capped a whipsaw week that reflected not just the deep divisions among his top economic advisers but the changeable attitudes of the irascible and unpredictable president himself.

Senior administration officials profess privately to not know exactly what Trump will ultimately decide to do on trade at any given moment. The uncertainty has led the president's advisers to compete for his attention in a bid to sway him, leading to nasty behind-the-scenes fights that are increasingly bursting into public view.

The week began with a statement that the administration would move ahead with trade levies on China, just days after Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said a trade war with the world's second largest economy was "on hold." Trump's senior trade adviser Peter Navarro publicly rebuked Mnuchin's statement on Wednesday, calling it an "unfortunate sound bite."

One senior administration official said privately this week that Navarro's public scolding of the Treasury Secretary was a "firing-level offense" but held out no hope that Trump would take any action.

The result of the infighting is a trade policy that's nearly impossible for anyone to understand or predict and which risks undermining Trump's economic and stock market gains. Thursday's action sent markets down, compounding losses earlier in the week after the China announcement.

"This begins and ends at the top and the president is behind all of it. He intends to be tactically unpredictable and thinks it's a fantastic negotiating approach," said economist Douglas Holtz-Eakin, president of the conservative American Action Forum. "But they are on a course that has failure written all over it. What you wind up doing is confusing people, doing incalculable damage to relationships with allies and shooting yourself in the foot on the economy when regulatory and tax reform are doing so well."

Trump's nationalist allies inside and outside the administration viewed Thursday's steel and aluminum announcement as a major victory and an indication that the president isn't going soft on trade, despite previous concerns sparked by his decision to delay the tariffs and to engage in high-level talks with the Chinese over separate tariffs related to alleged theft of intellectual property.

"These tariffs are on. They're not bargaining chips. They're not negotiating ploys," said one person familiar with the president's thinking, applauding him for finally deciding to hit the EU, Canada and Mexico with the duties.

Trump, two people close to him said, has lost patience with what he views as the seemingly never-ending negotiations on a range of trade issues, from NAFTA to the steel and aluminum tariffs to intellectual property issues with China.

"He's fed up with feeling like the negotiating partners aren't ever going to give in to his demands," said one former administration official. "He's tired of waiting to do big things on trade."

Trump has been pushing his advisers for months to bring him hardline trade options, including steep tariffs. And there are fewer people in the White House these days capable of slowing down the process and explaining why the options should be mulled over and analyzed. Former National Economic Council director Gary Cohn once played this role but his successor, Larry Kudlow, has a more conciliatory approach and is inclined to find consensus rather than push back aggressively against protectionist policies.

Former staff secretary Rob Porter, who resigned in February amid domestic abuse allegations, put in place a carefully organized trade policy process, complete with weekly meetings that gave advisers a forum to make their case, explain the benefits and pitfalls of each approach and ensure that key agencies weigh in.

Since Porter's departure, there has been significantly less coordination, with Cabinet officials and senior aides each focusing on their piece of the issue sometimes without communicating with each other. Asked who is coordinating the internal trade policy discussions, one administration official pointed to the president himself.

"No one is even trying to coordinate trade policy. There is no process," said the former administration official. "Someone has to organize and sequence the issues, make sure all the voices are heard, put people in their place when they're touting inaccurate information," the former official added. "POTUS can't do that himself. No POTUS could."

The alliances on trade have shifted in complex ways in recent weeks, as the administration has tried to simultaneously re-negotiate NAFTA, strike a trade deal with the Chinese and impose new tariffs on steel and aluminum from countries previously thought of as international allies. The White House is also considering tariffs as high as 25 percent on all imported cars.

The free trade camp now includes Mnuchin, Kudlow, and even Chinese Ambassador Terry Branstad. Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross – in an effort to strike deals that please the president – has also recently begun aligning himself with Mnuchin and the free traders, said a second former administration official and one Republican close to the White House.

Mnuchin has welcomed that alliance, with the hope that Ross will use his connections within the business community to rally support around whatever deal the administration can make with China, said the Republican close to the White House. Mnuchin also wanted Ross to help him lead the effort to nudge the Chinese to purchase more U.S. products, which typically falls under the purview of Commerce, the Republican added.

On the other side, Navarro has positioned himself as one of the last remaining China hardliners in the administration and he has groused privately for weeks that Mnuchin is too willing to make deals with Beijing, according to people familiar with the internal discussions.

Mnuchin's statement on Fox News earlier this month that the U.S. was "putting the trade war on hold" infuriated Navarro, leading to his not-so-subtle jab this week in an NPR interview. But Navarro wasn't the only one surprised by the remark, which raised eyebrows among some of the president's other advisers, including U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer, the people familiar with the discussions said. Lighthizer rushed to put out his own statement just hours later stressing that tariffs were a crucial option to "protect our technology" against the Chinese.

"The president is really after the best deal, and we really have been very soft with the Chinese for decades now to the point where people have gotten used to it," said the second former administration official, who insisted that there is method to the president's seemingly schizophrenic approach to trade. "President Trump has got certain priorities he has laid out. I've always felt his tweets were not just meant for the large audience but even for his staff. 'This is how I feel. Make it happen.' That is what we are seeing now."

As of Thursday afternoon, it was unclear if Ross still intended to head to China for talks slated to start on June 2. The secretary, who is currently in Paris attending an OECD event, needs to leave by Friday to make it to China in time, so the administration is under pressure to make a decision. The Commerce Department press office did not immediately respond to queries about Ross's travel plans.

Trump's allies insist that there's a method to the madness. Unpredictability, they argue, is an asset, not a liability. Keeping other countries – even the United States' long-time allies – on their toes makes them more likely to come to the negotiating table.

The market doesn't see it that way.

The White House move to reimpose steel and aluminum tariffs helped send the Dow down over two hundred points on Thursday. Markets were already on edge following the action against China and threats by the Chinese to retaliate.

Trump has long viewed the stock market as a referendum on his performance and cited gains as validation of his policies. But he has so far largely shrugged off any declines related to his trade moves.

Ross also shrugged off concerns over the steel and aluminum tariffs on Thursday. "This has been under discussion for quite a long time is and it's a very small percentage of the respective economy. A fraction of 1 percent," he told CNBC.

Ross also dismissed a retaliatory threat from the EU to impose billions of dollars in tariffs on U.S. products ranging from peanut butter to bourbon to blue jeans. “Well, you’d obviously have to talk to the EU, but think about how small in number $3 billion of product is relative to our $18 trillion economy,” he said. Canada on Friday said it would retaliate with tariffs on up to $6.6 billion of U.S. exports.

To opponents of tariffs and Trump’s approach to trade, however, the actual numbers and risks to the U.S. economy from all the internal White House fighting are far higher than just these numbers. Those opponents include senior Republicans on Capitol Hill.

House Ways and Means Committee Chair Kevin Brady (R-Tex.) on Thursday said the moves on steel and aluminum “puts American workers and families at risk.” And Senate Finance Committee Chair Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) also issued a sharply worded statement. “Tariffs on steel and aluminum imports are a tax hike on Americans and will have damaging consequences for consumers, manufacturers and workers,” he said.

The American public also seems wary of tariffs. In the latest POLITICO/Morning Consult poll, 70 percent of respondents said Trump should focus on negotiating deals to open new markets while 14 percent said he should focus on tariffs.

The economic risks are significant.

Roughly half of imports into the U.S. are “intermediate goods” bought by American companies to use in production. Raising the costs of imports from Canada, Mexico, the EU and China could lead to higher prices both for American consumers and businesses, potentially slicing into economic growth.

Consistent uncertainty among businesses, investors and consumers about U.S. trade policy could also sharply delay both production and consumption, analysts say.

“In the steel and aluminum case we are talking about taxing users that are much more significant to the economy in terms of jobs and growth than are the producers of steel and aluminum,” said Dan Ikenson of the free-market Cato Institute. “Everything that this administration is doing on trade threatens progress in other areas. Trump is playing with fire here and he doesn’t quite get it. And I think we are about to go over the cliff.”

Donald Trump’s Steel, Aluminum Tariffs Lift Low And Moderate Income Families

By Peter Navarro

USA Today, May 31, 2018

No president has done more to defend the American manufacturing base from unfair trade practices than Donald J. Trump. What may surprise even his critics is that no president — since Lyndon B. Johnson declared a “war on poverty” — has done more to lift the prospects of low- and moderate-income families than President Trump.

A poster child for the success of President Trump’s tax, trade and worker-training policies in lifting the spirits — and incomes! — of American workers will be a new aluminum mill. This new aluminum mill will be built in Ashland, Ky., in the midst and mists of Appalachia’s rugged mountains, in one of our nation’s most poverty-stricken areas.

Ashland is located in Boyd County off Route 60, on the banks of the Ohio River, bordering West Virginia and Ohio. It was once a booming steel, oil and coal town — until the steel mills in the area started closing down, Ashland Oil moved its headquarters to the Cincinnati region, and the coal mines began to shutter.

Today, Boyd County suffers from a declining population and a debilitating opioid epidemic. But help — not just false hope — is on the way.

The new $1.5 billion aluminum rolling mill that will soon be built — with a groundbreaking on Friday — will cover 45 acres. This state-of-the art mill will create up to 1,800 construction jobs and about 500 permanent positions in a county where the unemployment rate is almost 40% higher than the national unemployment rate.

Striking a strong blow on behalf of working men and women, the starting salary at this plant will be $65,000 a year. This compares with a median household income in Boyd County of $44,140 — which is well below the national median of $59,039.

To ensure that the working men and women of Boyd County will be equipped to take advantage of these opportunities, the plant operator has teamed with Ashland Community and Technical College to develop programs to train workers right out of high school. Such programs are consistent with Trump’s longtime advocacy of trade schools, apprenticeships and workforce development as a way for the working middle class to advance professionally.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

For example, in Trump's State of the Union address this year, he called for more investment in workforce development and job training, and last year he signed an executive order to expand "industry-recognized" U.S. apprenticeships. Boyd County is indeed delivering.

The plant's builders credit Trump's aluminum tariffs and tax cuts as essential ingredients to their future growth and prosperity. The Trump aluminum tariffs will provide this mill and the broader U.S. aluminum industry a stout defense against massive government-subsidized and supported overcapacity in the global marketplace and the resulting surges of aluminum imports into the United States from a range of countries — and serve the broader national defense in the process.

The president's tax bill likewise provides two strong incentives to this critical investment in America's manufacturing and defense industrial base. The additional cash flow generated from the president's tax cut helps provide the investment capital. Investors can also take advantage of the Trump tax law's "Opportunity Zone" provision that was designed specifically to encourage investments in economically depressed areas.

This new aluminum plant is not the only example of how Trump's tariffs and tax policies are strengthening our manufacturing and defense industrial base and lifting the fortunes of America's working men and women. Following the imposition of tariffs, U.S. Steel announced it would restart its steel-making facilities and one blast furnace at an Illinois plant. Century Aluminum Co. announced a nearly $120 million investment to expand and modernize a smelter in nearby Hawesville, Ky., that had its production decreased to 40% since 2015. Alcoa will reopen an idle smelter in Indiana. Steelmakers Nucor and Commercial Metals will build new mills in Missouri and Oklahoma, respectively.

Trump has also provided relief to the U.S. washing machine and solar industry by imposing steep tariffs. Critics at the time warned the move would hurt consumers, but the tariffs have been a boon to the U.S. worker. Whirlpool said it would add 200 jobs at its Ohio plant after the announcement, the South Korean manufacturer Samsung opened its first plant in South Carolina, and LG Electronics broke ground on a 310-acre site in Tennessee — their washers will be made with American hands.

There can be no better way to make America — and American manufacturing — great again than to start to rebuild those communities of America most harmed by the forces of globalization. These new facilities will stand as shining testimony to the success of tough trade actions, smart tax policies and targeted worker-training programs.

Trump Coerces America's Friends

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

THERE IS a certain symmetry in the fact that President Trump would target some of the United States' closest allies with high tariffs in this, the 70th-anniversary year of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. GATT, as it was known, was the precursor to today's World Trade Organization and, like the WTO, an institutional product of American postwar foreign policy. For seven decades, a bipartisan consensus has held that the United States has more to gain, both economically and politically, by expanding the circle of partners with which it trades as freely as possible. For most of his adult life, Mr. Trump has rejected that consensus, claiming that it was actually a kind of corrupt bargain among denationalized elites, American, European and Asian. Now, as president, he is acting on that belief.

For the small minority of Americans whose prosperity hinges on the steel and aluminum industries, there will be benefits, at least in the short term; everyone else will pay — especially those who work in industries targeted by the inevitable retaliation from Europe, Mexico and Canada. And they will pay not only in material terms: There is great political risk in what Mr. Trump is doing and in how he is doing it.

Admittedly, it takes some long-range thinking to identify the political stakes. As past generations understood, however, those have to do with the international peace and stability, and human progress, that may come from U.S. orchestration on terms of reciprocity of the global economy. Of course, trading patterns have not always matched that ideal; China's accession to the WTO, in particular, has not tamed that country's mercantilist policies as American advocates once thought it would. After 70 years, it would be surprising if the WTO and related arrangements such as the North American Free Trade Agreement did not need an update, to include renegotiation — and even to include negotiations in which the United States plays more hardball than it has in the past.

By invoking national security as a rationale for tariffs on political and military allies, Mr. Trump goes beyond hardball to bad faith. The national-security exception to tariff-reducing international trade rules is and was meant to be applied narrowly and sparingly, lest the exception swallow the rules. Mr. Trump applies it promiscuously: It is simply not true, for example, that aluminum imports from Canada — officially recognized by the Defense Department as part of the U.S. "defense industrial base" — threaten national security.

During the postwar period, Congress delegated much authority over U.S. trade policy to the president, which means that presidential credibility and good faith are essential to the overall functioning of the international system. Acting precipitously, and on the basis of concepts that are simplistic when they are not false, Mr. Trump diminishes those intangible assets. Perhaps, under duress, U.S. allies will do some or all of Mr. Trump's bidding; there is still time to head off a trade war before it spoils prosperity both in the United States and abroad. Either way, however, the trust in U.S. leadership that took generations to build will have been dangerously eroded.

America Declares War On Its Friends

New York Times, May 31, 2018

To hear the Trump administration tell the tale, it must hit the European Union, Canada and Mexico with steel and aluminum tariffs to stop Chinese manufacturers from flooding markets with these metals and, in turn, protect American workers. That's a fantasy. Chinese steel mills and aluminum smelters will keep chugging away, and more likely, American farmers and products like Kentucky bourbon, Harley-Davidson motorcycles and Iowa beef will bear the brunt of these new tariffs — even as the tariffs invite a trade war.

President Trump had initially exempted these allies from the 25 percent tariff on steel and 10 percent tariff on aluminum he announced in March. But on Thursday, after several weeks of negotiations, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross said the administration decided to go ahead with the tariffs starting on Friday because the talks were taking too long. It's hard to credit impatience as the cause. More likely, the administration is trying to burnish its tough-on-trade image after criticism of several trade concessions to China.

These tariffs aren't aimed directly at Beijing, but the idea is that they would limit overall competition. The administration says the new tariffs will keep China from avoiding existing tariffs by shipping its products through other countries. Yet, it has provided little evidence that China does that. Some Chinese steel is sent to the United States after it has been reprocessed in third countries, but that is a legal practice.

Not only will this do nothing to reduce steel and aluminum capacity in China, it will more than likely prompt the European Union, Canada and Mexico to retaliate by imposing new tariffs on American products, hurting businesses and workers across the country. The president is also effectively isolating the United States from its closest allies — the very countries it needs to work with to put pressure on China to change its economic policies.

Even the Aluminum Association, which represents most American-based producers of the metal, said it was "disappointed" by Mr. Trump's decision. "Today's action does little to address the China challenge while potentially alienating allies" and disrupting supplies of aluminum and raw materials that American producers need, the group's president and chief executive, Heidi Brock, said in a statement.

Indeed, why would Europe, Canada and Mexico, which also suffer from Chinese overproduction of steel and aluminum, have any incentive to work with an administration that seems to care so little about the consequences of its actions on their economies and workers?

Mr. Trump's bullying appears to be pushing voters in at least one country toward more extremist leaders. In Mexico, Mr. Trump's combative attitude appears to be helping the leftist presidential candidate Andrés Manuel López Obrador ahead of a July 1 election. Many experts fear that Mr. López Obrador has authoritarian tendencies and could undermine democracy in Mexico if he becomes president.

The tariffs may be Mr. Trump's way to demonstrate that he will still punish countries for cheating the United States. They arrive on the heels of lawmakers' criticism that the president has gone easy on the Chinese telecommunications company ZTE. Even after the company flagrantly violated American sanctions against the export of advanced technology to Iran and North Korea and was identified as a security risk by American intelligence agencies, the Trump administration said last week that it would let ZTE continue buying American semiconductors and other components. That agreement, which the president said was meant to protect Chinese jobs, appears even more suspicious in light of the fact that it came shortly after China awarded trademarks to Mr. Trump's daughter Ivanka. It also came after a Chinese state-owned company struck a deal to build a theme park with an Indonesian business next to a hotel and golf course that the Indonesian company is building with the Trump Organization.

If the president's intent is to establish a reputation as a champion of industry and workers, he is making a hash of it. His decision to impose tariffs on American allies will only weaken American leadership while doing nothing to address the underlying problems in the steel and aluminum industries.

Trump Tells Trudeau And Canada: U.S. Will 'Agree To A Fair Deal, Or There Will Be No Deal At All'

By Diana Stancy Correll

Washington Examiner, May 31, 2018

President Trump claimed the U.S. would "agree to a fair deal," or else there would be no deal with Canada as the two nations discuss renegotiating the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"The United States has been taken advantage of for many decades on trade," Trump said in a statement. "Those days are over. Earlier today, this message was conveyed to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau of Canada: The United States will agree to a fair deal, or there will be no deal at all."

The statement comes after Trudeau said Thursday afternoon that a meeting with Trump didn't occur earlier this week because Vice President Mike Pence told the prime minister he must allow a five-year sunset clause to be included in the trade agreement in order for the meeting to even happen. Trudeau called the condition "completely unacceptable."

The sunset clause would allow the agreement to end unless the countries involved decided to renew it.

"I had to highlight that there was no possibility of any Canadian prime minister signing a NAFTA deal that included a five-year sunset clause, and obviously the visit didn't happen," Trudeau said Thursday.

"So I answered that if that was a precondition to my visit I was unable to accept," Trudeau said. "And so we did not go to Washington."

Earlier Thursday, U.S. allies including Mexico and Canada were hit with tariffs on steel and aluminum imports. The tariffs will take effect Friday.

Trudeau Says NAFTA Talks Broke Down After Pence Made Ultimatum

By Damian Paletta

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said months of intense negotiations between his country, the United States and Mexico imploded Tuesday when Vice President Pence demanded that any deal expire automatically in five years.

Trudeau said he was prepared to travel to Washington this week to try to finalize a rework of the North American Free Trade Agreement, but Pence, in the phone call, said a meeting would occur only if the "sunset" provision was agreed to in advance.

"I had to highlight that there was no possibility of any Canadian prime minister signing a NAFTA deal that included a five-year sunset clause, and obviously the visit didn't happen," Trudeau said Thursday.

Trudeau's comments came after President Trump enacted the most severe economic penalties he has imposed to date against U.S. allies, establishing tariffs on steel and aluminum imports from Canada, Mexico and the European Union. The trade partners are expected to retaliate in what is becoming a fast-developing global trade war.

A White House official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe the back and forth between the countries, said Trudeau spoke to Trump last Friday, and then Trudeau called Pence on Monday to follow up. Pence called Trudeau back Tuesday "to discuss ongoing negotiations."

Thursday evening, Trump seemed to respond directly to Trudeau's criticism, saying in a statement issued by the White House that "That United States has been taken advantage of for many decades on trade. Those days are over. Earlier today, this message was conveyed to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau of Canada: The United States will agree to a fair deal, or there will be no deal at all."

There were still a number of differences between the United States and Canada as they reached the final stages of negotiation, but both sides seemed dug in on the idea of whether or not the whole agreement should expire after five years. The sunset issue was one of several that the White House wanted "clarity" on before any meeting took place, the White House official said.

These tensions are expected to intensify. Trump, Trudeau and several other world leaders are scheduled to meet next week in Canada at a Group of Seven meeting.

Trump has said the new tariffs on steel and aluminum imports are necessary to protect U.S. national security, but they have been widely criticized by foreign leaders, U.S. business groups and even some labor groups as being ill designed and potentially damaging to the U.S. economy. The tariffs had been delayed against Mexico and Canada while U.S. officials tried to finalize NAFTA talks, but it became clear in recent days that an agreement was out of reach.

The White House has sought to include a sunset provision in the NAFTA renegotiation for months, but Canada and Mexico have been cool to the idea, saying it would remove any economic security and certainty for businesses trying to comply with trade rules.

Trudeau said Thursday that he felt the United States, Mexico and Canada were on the verge of a renegotiated NAFTA that he described as a "win, win, win" before the talks stalled after the Pence phone call.

For more than a year, Trump has threatened to take steps to withdraw from NAFTA, but during his first year in office he was coaxed out of taking dramatic steps by advisers such as National Economic Council President Gary Cohn and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson.

Now, Cohn and Tillerson have left the White House, and Trump has gravitated toward seeking the counsel of trade hard-liners such as Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross, senior adviser Peter Navarro, and U.S. Trade Representative Robert E. Lighthizer.

Trump had taken a slightly less adversarial public approach with Canada and Mexico during the initial stages of the negotiations, but that ended several months ago.

In March, Trump told a group during a St. Louis fundraiser that he didn't have the facts in front of him and simply made up trade information during private discussions with Trudeau.

And on Tuesday, Trump said during a rally that he was going to make Mexico pay for a wall along the U.S. border. That immediately elicited a terse response from Mexico's president.

President @realDonaldTrump: NO. Mexico will NEVER pay for a wall. Not now, not ever.

Sincerely, Mexico (all of us).— Enrique Peña Nieto (@EPN) May 30, 2018

China Cuts Tariffs Ahead Of U.S. Commerce Secretary's Visit To Beijing

By Keith Bradsher

New York Times, May 31, 2018

SHANGHAI — China announced Thursday evening that it would cut tariffs sharply on July 1 for an eclectic array of imported goods, the latest in a series of moves by Beijing to dismantle steep trade barriers at a time of rising frictions with the United States.

The tariff cuts came less than two days before Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross is due in Beijing for wide-ranging talks aimed at addressing American frustrations with China's $375 billion bilateral trade surplus with the United States. But the categories the Chinese Finance Ministry selected for tariff cuts cover few American goods, and appeared to be targeted at China's goal of developing sophisticated industries rather than low-value mass manufacturing.

The moves came as China and the United States, the world's two biggest economies, continued their wide-ranging economic and diplomatic sparring. The countries have alternated between attacking each other over trade issues and working together on efforts to rid North Korea of its nuclear weapons. At times, President Trump has praised his Chinese counterpart, Xi Jinping, at other times he has swiftly criticized Beijing for its trade practices, sometimes in quick succession.

In its latest action, China is making a modest peace offering, without really giving up much.

Some of the 1,449 categories of goods slated for tariff cuts involve food products from other countries, like fish, olives and grilled seaweed. Other categories include low-value manufactured goods like handbags and certain inexpensive garments, typically made in factories that have already been shifting from China to lower-wage competitors like Bangladesh, Ethiopia, India and Vietnam.

Chinese workers' wages have soared over the past 15 years, and Beijing is engaged in a broad effort to steer the economy toward high-wage industries like semiconductors and away from factories making garments and handbags.

"The goods seeing cuts are not relevant to trade with the U.S.," said Derek Scissors, a trade specialist at the American Enterprise Institute, a Washington think tank. "For China, it fits the goal of moving up the value chain — heavy subsidies for semiconductors and now less protection for textiles and consumer appliances."

Christopher Rogers, a trade analyst at Panjiva, an international commerce data firm recently acquired by S.&P. Global Market Intelligence, estimated that the tariff cuts would cover about 1.1 percent of China's $1.95 trillion in annual imports. "The cuts are more to do with keeping a lid on inflation and improving consumer spending power than to do with keeping President Trump happy," he said.

The Chinese move could nonetheless have political benefits for Beijing.

China is energetically trying to rally other governments to its side in its trade showdown with the United States. Beijing's latest move could assuage concerns from many European countries and developing nations about their own trade deficits with China as well as loss of manufacturing jobs. At the same time, trade ministers elsewhere have been deeply troubled by the Trump administration's moves to impose tariffs on steel and aluminum imported from around the world.

The announcement came just before Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross announced in Washington that the United States would begin imposing tariffs on steel and aluminum from Canada, Mexico and the European Union at midnight on Thursday.

President Trump had issued a statement on Tuesday threatening further tariffs on Chinese goods and contending that China's average tariff on imports was more than three times as high as that of in the United States, an assertion supported by World Trade Organization data. And China's tariff average is nearly double that of the European Union.

But by cutting tariffs in more than 1,000 lightly traded categories, China could end up reducing its average tariff considerably without actually running the risk of a big surge in imports.

The announcement in Beijing on Thursday t followed a recent decision by China to cut its tariff on imported cars to 15 percent from 25 percent. President Trump also criticized the Chinese car tariff on Tuesday, noting that the American tariff on imported cars was just 2.5 percent.

Mr. Xi, the Chinese president, had called during a speech in April for reductions in Chinese tariffs on imported cars and some consumer goods, as part of Beijing's long-term policy of gradually opening to international competition.

Samantha Bee Apologizes For Calling Ivanka Trump A Vulgar Word After White House Condemnation

By Sonia Rao

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

Ivanka Trump sparked online outrage earlier this week when she tweeted a photo of herself with her younger son around the same time as reports circulated that the U.S. government had lost track of nearly 1,500 migrant children last year. During a Wednesday night segment criticizing the administration's immigration practices, "Full Frontal" host Samantha Bee directed some choice words at the first daughter.

"You know, Ivanka, that's a beautiful photo of you and your child," Bee said. "Let me just say, one mother to another, do something about your dad's immigration practices, you feckless c—. He listens to you."

The comment attracted quite a bit of attention on social media through Thursday afternoon and elicited a passionate response from the White House.

"The language used by Samantha Bee last night is vile and vicious," White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said in a statement to The Post. "The collective silence by the left and its media allies is appalling. Her disgusting comments and show are not fit for broadcast, and executives at Time Warner and TBS must demonstrate that such explicit profanity about female members of this administration will not be condoned on its network."

Bee apologized in a statement shared with The Post on Thursday afternoon.

"I would like to sincerely apologize to Ivanka Trump and to my viewers for using an expletive on my show to describe her last night," she said. "It was inappropriate and inexcusable. I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it."

TBS commented in an additional statement: "Samantha Bee has taken the right action in apologizing for the vile and inappropriate language she used about Ivanka Trump last night. Those words should not have been aired. It was our mistake too, and we regret it."

The video of the segment appears to have been taken down from Youtube and Facebook.

Autotrader, an online marketplace for cars, stated that they would be suspending their sponsorship of the TBS show: "The comments expressed by Samantha Bee were offensive and unacceptable and do not reflect the views of our company."

Thank you to those who reached out regarding our sponsorship of Full Frontal. The comments expressed by Samantha Bee were offensive and unacceptable and do not reflect the views of our company. As a result, we have suspended our sponsorship of Full Frontal with Samantha Bee.— Autotrader (@AutoTrader_com) May 31, 2018

A number of Twitter users equated Bee's words with Roseanne Barr's racist tweet about former Obama adviser Valerie Jarrett that eventually led to the cancellation of her ABC series.

OANN host Liz Wheeler tweeted that she is "waiting for the liberal outrage and firing of Samantha Bee." NBC's Megyn Kelly called Bee's language "disgusting" and criticized the media coverage of Bee's segment.

"How is this acceptable?" she wrote. "And how are we expected to take any of these publications seriously if they gleefully repost something like this at the same time they (rightfully) condemn @therealroseanne?"

This is disgusting. How is this acceptable? And how are we expected to take any of these publications seriously if they gleefully repost something like this at the same time they (rightfully) condemn @therealroseanne? You know the saying Love is Love? Well Hate is Hate. https://t.co/YTjmZQ4zMV— Megyn Kelly (@megynkelly) May 31, 2018

Even CNN's Brian Stelter, who is not considered to have a conservative bent in his reporting, claimed that there would be "widespread criticism" of a conservative comedian disparaging Chelsea Clinton in a similar manner.

"How about we debate Trump's policies without resorting to profanity?" he added.

Radio host Erick Erickson tweeted that equating Bee's words with Barr's tweet is valid, adding that "most of you who think it is [false equivalence] would agree with me if it was someone other than a Trump being attacked."

The rebuttals have been that this form of vulgar language doesn't compare to Barr's comment perpetuating racism and her history of doing so.

Racial slurs are different than ad hominems. And by different, I mean worse. Roseanne wasn't fired for being vulgar, she was fired for being racist. If Samantha Bee gets fired it's bc ppl can't tell the difference. (And if you can't tell the difference... you might be a racist.)— Brian Santa Maria (@briansantamaria) May 31, 2018

A majority of Bee's segment concerned other officials in the Trump administration. After joking that she had popped an Ambien, a reference to Barr's explanation for the tweet, she made a comparison of her own.

"Tearing children away from their parents is so evil," she said. "It's the inciting incident in almost every movie we've ever cared about."

A few examples? "Taken," "Kidnap" and, of course, "Finding Nemo." Bee then addressed claims that questionable immigration policies predate the Trump presidency: "They're half right. We have had awful immigration practices since, well, always . . . Donald Trump didn't invent this issue. He's just making it so much worse."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A number of recent interviews with conservative politicians serve as proof, according to Bee. Former Republican senator Rick Santorum said Sunday on CNN that "we lose people all the time." Earlier in the month, Chief of Staff John Kelly told NPR correspondent John Burnett that the migrant children would be put into foster care "or whatever." Kirstjen Nielsen, the Homeland Security secretary, argued on C-SPAN that families are separated "because they're breaking the law."

"We know this isn't just about breaking the law because you're also doing this to families who are legally seeking asylum," Bee responded. "After decades of ignoring the issue, Americans are finally paying attention. Well, most of us."

The exception, she argued, being Ivanka Trump.

White House Demands Action From TBS After Bee's 'C--t' Slur; Comedian Issues Apology To Ivanka Trump

By Sally Persons

Washington Times, May 31, 2018

The White House demanded an apology from Samantha Bee Thursday after the television comic referred to President Trump's daughter, Ivanka Trump, as a "feckless c—t."

Ms. Bee opened her show, airing on the cable network TBS, with the barb against Ms. Trump on Wednesday night, criticizing a photo the president's daughter posted of her and her son.

Ms. Bee said it was an insensitive photo at a time when illegal immigrants arrested for jumping the border are being separated from their children in order to be sent to jail.

"You know, Ivanka, that's a beautiful photo of you and your child, but let me just say, one mother to another, do something about your dad's immigration practices you feckless c—!" said Ms. Bee during her show.

"He listens to you! Put on something tight and low cut and tell your father to f–ing stop it. Tell him it was an Obama thing and see how it goes," she added.

She issued an apology Thursday afternoon for the remarks.

"I would like to sincerely apologize to Ivanka Trump and to my viewers for using an expletive on my show to describe her last night. It was inappropriate and inexcusable. I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it," Ms. Bee tweeted.

Prior to that apology, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders demanded action from TBS, which is owned by Time Warner. The company also owns CNN.

"Her disgusting comments and show are not fit for broadcast, and executives at Time Warner and TBS must demonstrate that such explicit profanity about female members of this administration will not be condoned on its network," Mrs. Sanders told the online outlet TheWrap.

Mrs. Sanders' demand for action comes a day after the White accused the media of bias with its swift reaction to another comic, Roseanne Barr, whose show was canceled by ABC after she posted a tweet comparing President Obama's family friend and top adviser Valerie Jarrett to an ape. CNN and other outlets labeled Ms. Barr's tweet "racist."

Comic Samantha Bee Apologizes To Ivanka Trump For Slur

By David Bauder

Associated Press, May 31, 2018

Samantha Bee apologized to Ivanka Trump and viewers on Thursday for using an obscenity to describe her on a segment of her TBS comedy show.

Bee said her language was "inappropriate and inexcusable.

"I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it," she said.

Bee called Ivanka Trump a "feckless c---" toward the end of a segment about President Trump's immigration policies on her show, "Full Frontal," on Wednesday. She used the slur in urging Ivanka Trump to speak to her father about policies that separate children from their parents.

Bee said, "Put on something tight and low-cut and tell your father to f---ing stop it."

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders called Bee's language "vile and vicious" and said executives at TBS and corporate parent Time Warner needed to demonstrate that such explicit profanity about female members of the administration would not be condoned.

TBS issued its own statement saying Bee was right to apologize. "It was our mistake, too, and we regret it," the network said. Nothing was said about whether Bee or the show would face disciplinary action.

Coming two days after ABC canceled "Roseanne" following a racist tweet about former Obama adviser Valerie Jarrett, Bee's remark was immediately seized upon by conservatives who believe that offensive language by liberals is not viewed as harshly.

Ari Fleischer, former White House press secretary under President George W. Bush, tweeted that there's a double standard in action when you compare the mainstream media's reactions between the two events.

"There's no uprising against Bee," Fleischer wrote. "Why? Because she is a liberal. Because the MSM protects Obama and his aides, but not Trump. The hypocrisy is sickening."

Bee, formerly at "The Daily Show" with Jon Stewart, got her own show at TBS and it's one of the network's biggest successes.

Bee's commentary is likely to be a corporate headache. Time Warner, which owns channels including TBS, CNN and HBO, is in the process of being acquired by AT&T for $85 billion. The Justice Department has sued to block the deal, however, due to monopoly concerns, and a decision on whether or not it will proceed is expected June 12.

Samantha Bee Apologizes For Using Vulgar Slur To Describe Ivanka Trump

By Melissa Quinn

Washington Examiner, May 31, 2018

Comedian Samantha Bee apologized to Ivanka Trump on Thursday after facing backlash for a vulgar comment she made about President Trump's eldest daughter.

"I would like to sincerely apologize to Ivanka Trump and to my viewers for using an expletive on my show to describe her last night," Bee said. "It was inappropriate and inexcusable. I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it."

During her TBS show "Full Frontal" on Wednesday night, Bee called Trump, adviser to the president, a "feckless c--t."

She went on to tell Trump to "put on something tight and low-cut and tell your father to fucking stop it."

In a statement, TBS said it regrets that such language was aired on the show.

"Samantha Bee has taken the right action in apologizing for the vile and inappropriate language she used about Ivanka Trump last night. Those words should not have been aired. It was our mistake too, and we regret it," the network said.

Bee's comment came in response to a photo Trump posted of she and her 2-year-old son, which was subject to backlash because it was posted at the same time critics of her father's administration were bringing attention to a policy that separated illegal immigrant parents from their children.

Not long before the apology, the White House condemned Bee's remarks, calling them "vile and vicious."

"The collective silence and its media allies is appalling," White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said in a statement. "Her disgusting comments and show are not fit for broadcast, and executive at Time Warner and TBS must demonstrate that such explicit profanity about female members of this administration will not be condoned on its network."

Comedian Samantha Bee Apologizes To Ivanka Trump

By Rebecca Morin

Politico, May 31, 2018

Samantha Bee, the comedian and political commentator, on Thursday apologized to Ivanka Trump for crossing a line after she used a vulgarity to describe the White House adviser and president's daughter.

"I would like to sincerely apologize to Ivanka Trump and to my viewers for using an expletive on my show to describe her last night," Bee said in a statement on Twitter. "It was inappropriate and inexcusable. I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it."

Bee, on Wednesday evening during her TBS show, "Full Frontal," criticized President Donald Trump's policy of separating undocumented families apprehended at the border.

She went on to condemn a tweet that Ivanka Trump had posted earlier this week with her and her son, dubbing it "the second most oblivious tweet we've seen this week."

"You know, Ivanka, that's a beautiful photo of you and your child, but let me just say, one mother to another, do something about your dad's immigration practices, you feckless c!" Bee said during her monologue.

"He listens to you," she continued. "Put on something tight and low-cut and tell your father to fing stop it. Tell him it was an Obama thing and see how it goes, OK?"

TBS, which is owned by Time Warner, issued an apology on Thursday afternoon, saying it, too, made a mistake for airing the comment.

"Samantha Bee has taken the right action in apologizing for the vile and inappropriate language she used about Ivanka Trump last night," the channel wrote in a statement on Twitter. "Those words should not have been aired. It was our mistake too, and we regret it."

Bee's comments came a day after Roseanne Barr made a racist tweet about Valerie Jarrett, a longtime adviser and close friend of former President Barack Obama. Barr's show, "Roseanne," was subsequently canceled by ABC. Barr apologized for her comment, but later caused more controversy by propagating unsubstantiated conspiracy theories online.

The White House on Thursday was quick to condemn Bee's comments — in contrast to the way the administration handled Barr's racist remarks.

"The language used by Samantha Bee last night is vile and vicious," press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said in a statement. "The collective silence by the left and its media allies is appalling. Her disgusting comments and show are not fit for broadcast, and executives at Time Warner and TBS must demonstrate that such explicit profanity about female members of this administration will not be condoned on its network."

The White House on Wednesday called Barr's comment "inappropriate," but mostly focused on how ABC owes an apology to the White House for airing derogatory statements about the Trump administration.

Samantha Bee, TBS Apologize After Profane Insult Aimed At Ivanka Trump

By Sara M Moniuszko And Jayme Deerwester

USA Today, May 31, 2018

Samantha Bee is apologizing for crossing a line in a Full Frontal immigration segment aimed at Ivanka Trump in Wednesday's episode. "Do something," the TBS host urged, calling the president's daughter and aide a female slur. The offending word was bleeped.

"I would like to sincerely apologize to Ivanka Trump and to my viewers for using an expletive on my show to describe her last night," Bee said in her apology tweet, published Thursday afternoon. "It was inappropriate and inexcusable. I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it."

In a separate statement, TBS said, "Samantha Bee has taken the right action in apologizing for the vile and inappropriate language she used about Ivanka Trump last night. Those words should not have been aired. It was our mistake too, and we regret it."

Her remarks, and the network's response, came hours after the White House registered its disgust and TBS pulled the clip from YouTube.

Stephanie Grisham, a spokeswoman for first lady Melania Trump, accused the media of bias in quickly canceling Roseanne over its star's racist tweet, directed at former President Obama's aide Valerie Jarrett, but merely apologizing for language directed at President Trump's daughter.

"The double standard is truly astounding," Grisham said. "Time and again the Trump family and members of this administration are subjected to false reporting, hateful rhetoric and outrageous lies, all in the name of freedom of speech or comedy, yet the mainstream media stays silent."

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders also weighed in: "The language used by Samantha Bee last night is vile and vicious. The collective silence by the left and its media allies is appalling," she said in a statement. "Her disgusting comments and show are not fit for broadcast, and executives at Time Warner and TBS must demonstrate that such explicit profanity about female members of this administration will not be condoned on its network."

Used-car marketplace AutoTrader.com also announced Thursday that it was pulling its ads from Full Frontal amid the mounting backlash.

"Thank you to those who reached out regarding our sponsorship of Full Frontal," they announced on Twitter. " The comments expressed by Samantha Bee were offensive and unacceptable and do not reflect the views of our company. As a result, we have suspended our sponsorship of Full Frontal with Samantha Bee."

How it began

The TBS host had a short but striking message for the first daughter, whom she urged to "do something" about her father's immigration policy rather than post "the second most oblivious tweet we've seen this week."

"You know, Ivanka, that's a beautiful photo of you and your child but let me just say, one mother to another: Do something about your dad's immigration practices you feckless (expletive)," she said. "He listens to you."

Bee suggested, "Put on something tight and low cut and tell your father to (expletive) stop it," she said. "Tell him it was an Obama thing and see how it goes."

The Trump administration has been stepping up criminal prosecutions of people crossing the border illegally this month, in line with President Trump campaign promises. Earlier this week, debate sparked around the administration's policy of separating immigrant children from their parents at the border.

Bee also suggested a way to get the president to listen."Put on something tight and low cut and tell your father to (expletive) stop it," she said. "Tell him it was an Obama thing and see how it goes."

The reaction

Bee's comment, especially the use of the c-word, didn't go without notice, as many tweeted their disapproval and compared her to Roseanne Barr, whose show ABC canceled following her racist tweets.

Conservative blogger Erick Erickson pointed out inequalities he sees between what liberals and conservatives can get away with saying.

"So ABC just fired Roseanne for her tweet. Will TBS fire Samatha Bee for her actual on-air monologue?," he questioned. "Seems to me that calling Ivanka Trump a 'feckless (expletive)' is just as bad as suggesting Valerie Jarrett is an ape."

He continued, "All the progressives in my timeline telling me the Roseanne situation and Samantha Bee situation are not comparable will, I'm sure, be fine when Trump supporters start calling Clinton, Warren, Pelosi, etc. the same as what Samantha Bee called Ivanka Trump."

NBC's Megyn Kelly also tweeted about Bee's comments.

"This is disgusting. How is this acceptable? And how are we expected to take any of these publications seriously if they gleefully repost something like this at the same time they (rightfully) condemn @therealroseanne? You know the saying Love is Love? Well Hate is Hate," she tweeted, sharing a story about Bee's comments.

Former presidential candidate Herman Cain also commented about canceling Bee's show.

"Hey @TBSNetwork, shall I assume the Samantha Bee cancellation news will come later today? No?" he tweeted. "You don't care that this poor man's Jon Stewart is completely horrible? Ok, then..."

For her part, Barr didn't want her supporters comparing her to Bee. On Thursday, she tweeted, "please don't compare me2 other people who have said horrible things. I only care about apologizing 4 the hurt I have unwittingly & stupidly caused. I humbly confess contrition & remorse. I failed2 correctly express myself, & caused pain2 ppl."

Others agreed with Bee's comments.

"Ivanka Trump is a feckless (expletive). Thank you for your honesty, Samantha Bee," one user tweeted. "(Samantha Bee) is great at triggering conservative snowflakes."

"If you think Samantha Bee's vulgarity is equivalent to racism then you're either ignorant, maliciously dishonest, or a racist yourself," another said, defending Bee.

"Stop comparing it to what @TheRealRoseanne said. Roseanne used a racist term. Samantha did not," another said.

Bee also took aim at Roseanne Barr's tweet that suggested sleep drug Ambien caused her to make racist comments earlier this week.

Barr wrote in a since-deleted tweet Tuesday that "muslim brotherhood & planet of the apes had a baby=vj." The "vj" stood for Valerie Jarrett, an

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Obama White House aide. This led to the cancellation of her hit ABC show Roseanne.

Sanofi, who makes Ambien, tweeted a response to Barr, who claimed she was "Ambien tweeting": "While all pharmaceutical treatments have side effects, racism is not a known side effect of any Sanofi medication."

Full Frontal decided to see what it would be like if racism was a side effect, however, by imagining a commercial for the drug that reassured "a great night sleep and a convenient excuse are just one little pill away."

The fake ad also warned that in addition to helping you fall asleep, the drug may make you "more racist."

"I mean, you were already racist, but maybe Ambien made it worse?" the narrator says. "Until you know how Ambien will effect you, you shouldn't drive in urban areas, operate heavy machinery or visit a Starbucks."

The narrator also read off a list of "extremely not rare side effects" that all had racial undertones including, "clutching your purse as a person of color walks by," "deciding to move 'up state'" and more.

Melania Trump Spokeswoman: Trump Family Subjected To 'Hateful Rhetoric' In The Name Of Free Speech

By Naomi Lim

Washington Examiner, May 31, 2018

First lady Melania Trump's office defended Ivanka Trump on Thursday after comedian Samantha Bee called her a "feckless c--t."

A statement from Stephanie Grisham, the first lady's communications director, accused the mainstream media of remaining "silent" about the vulgar language used to describe President Trump's eldest daughter.

"The double standard is truly astounding," Grisham said. "Time and again the Trump family and members of this Administration are subjected to false reporting, hateful rhetoric and outrageous lies all in the name of freedom of speech or comedy, yet the main stream media stays silent."

Bee apologized to Ivanka Trump after facing backlash for using the vulgar slur on the Wednesday night episode of her TBS show "Full Frontal."

"I would like to sincerely apologize to Ivanka Trump and to my viewers for using an expletive on my show to describe her last night," Bee wrote in a statement. "It was inappropriate and inexcusable. I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it."

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders on Thursday morning shared Grisham's criticisms, calling Bee's remarks about Ivanka Trump as "vile and vicious."

"The collective silence by the Left and its media allies are appalling," Sanders said. "Her disgusting comments and show are not fit for broadcast."

The controversy is the second one this week concerning the comments of a comedy figure. Roseanne Barr saw the reboot of her hit show "Roseanne" canceled by ABC after she tweeted a racist message about former Obama aide Valerie Jarrett.

Samantha Bee Apologizes For Slur Against Ivanka Trump

By John Koblin

New York Times, May 31, 2018

The TBS late night host Samantha Bee has come under intense scrutiny after using a vulgar expletive to describe Ivanka Trump during her show on Wednesday night.

Ms. Bee dedicated nearly seven minutes of "Full Frontal With Samantha Bee" to the issue of migrant children before invoking Ms. Trump's name. As the host segued to the president's daughter, an image of Ms. Trump holding her child that she had posted on social media earlier in the week appeared on a screen in the background.

Ms. Bee referred to Ms. Trump's posting of the photo as "oblivious," adding, "Let me just say, one mother to another, do something about your dad's immigration practices." She then used a crude reference to the female anatomy to describe the first daughter and presidential adviser, modifying it with the word "feckless." The show's studio audience gasped — before breaking into cheers.

On Thursday, amid rumblings of an advertising boycott, and with commentators on the left and right debating the slur, Ms. Bee issued an apology. "I would like to sincerely apologize to Ivanka Trump and to my viewers for using an expletive on my show to describe her last night," the host said in a statement. "It was inappropriate and inexcusable. I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

During part of the segment that was broadcast on Wednesday, Ms. Bee addressed Ms. Trump directly, saying, “He listens to you.” She advised Ms. Trump to “put on something tight and low-cut” and tell her father to “stop it.” She then made use of another obscenity to punctuate her point.

Her remarks, including the epithet, appeared to have been scripted. When the segment was broadcast, the offending word was bleeped out, but was left uncensored on the clip that was posted online. TBS removed the video from its site on Thursday afternoon.

“Full Frontal With Samantha Bee,” which airs on TBS at 10:30 on Wednesday nights, is taped at the CBS Broadcast Center in Midtown Manhattan late in the afternoon on the day of its broadcast — meaning that TBS had time to edit the segment.

In a statement, TBS said Ms. Bee had taken the right action by apologizing for the “vile and inappropriate language” she had used. “Those words should not have been aired,” the network said. “It was our mistake, too, and we regret it.”

Sarah Huckabee Sanders, the White House press secretary, condemned Ms. Bee’s remarks on Thursday, hours before Ms. Bee and TBS offered apologies. “The language used by Samantha Bee last night is vile and vicious,” Ms. Sanders said. “The collective silence by the left and its media allies is appalling. Her disgusting comments and show are not fit for broadcast, and executives at Time Warner and TBS must demonstrate that such explicit profanity about female members of this administration will not be condoned on its network.”

Pending governmental approval, AT&T may soon acquire Time Warner, the corporate parent of TBS. The $85.4 billion deal is now in litigation, with a court decision expected June 12.

Ms. Bee insulted Ms. Trump two days after ABC canceled “Roseanne” because the show’s star, Roseanne Barr, had posted a racist tweet about Valerie Jarrett, a former senior adviser to President Barack Obama. Ms. Barr initially defended herself by saying her comment was a joke.

Ms. Bee, a 48-year-old Canadian-American comic and commentator who spent 12 years as a regular on “The Daily Show,” has made herself into a force of resistance against the Trump administration during the run of her new show, which went on the air in 2016. Last April, she hosted an alternative to the White House Correspondents’ Association dinner, drawing several comedians and celebrities who had publicly shunned the president. This year, Ms. Bee defended the dinner’s headlining comedian, Michelle Wolf, after she encountered backlash for lampooning Ms. Sanders during a monologue.

“Feminism doesn’t mean you can never make jokes about another woman ever,” Ms. Bee said of Ms. Wolf’s routine during an episode of her show earlier this month.

The host’s remarks about Ms. Trump quickly became a flash point on where media companies should draw the line, especially where comedians are concerned, and whether it is fair to assume an equivalency between a racist remark like the one used by Ms. Barr and a vulgar epithet. Several prominent conservatives said that a lack of disciplinary actionon the part of TBS would reveal a double standard in the industry.

Ari Fleischer, the White House press secretary under President George W. Bush, wrote on Twitter, “There’s no uprising against Bee. Why? Because she is liberal.”

NBC’s Megyn Kelly, who has been a target of Ms. Bee’s barbs, also derided the remark on Twitter. “This is disgusting,” she wrote. “How is this acceptable?”

Chelsea Clinton also criticized the late night host, saying on Twitter, “It’s grossly inappropriate and just flat-out wrong to describe or talk about @IvankaTrump or any woman that way.”

Ms. Bee, the only woman who hosts a late night talk show, has been a central component of TBS’s efforts to rebuild its original programming lineup. The cable network has renewed her program through the 2020 season. Last year, it was nominated for an Emmy in the category of best variety talk show.

TBS has been enthusiastic about putting Ms. Bee in front of Emmy voters once again. Last week, the network hosted an event for the host in Beverly Hills, Calif., in an effort to increase her chance of receiving nominations, which will be announced in July.

On Thursday night, Ms. Bee was scheduled to appear at an event in Hollywood where the Television Academy, the organization in charge of the Emmy Awards, was set to honor several shows — including “Full Frontal With Samantha Bee” — for using the “dynamic power of television to inspire social change.”

White House: Samantha Bee 'Not Fit For Broadcast' After Ivanka Trump Slur

By Judy Kurtz

The Hill, May 31, 2018

The Trump administration says Samantha Bee's show is "not fit for broadcast" after the TBS late-night host made a derogatory remark about Ivanka Trump.

"The language used by Samantha Bee last night is vile and vicious," White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said on Thursday.

"The collective silence by the left and its media allies is appalling," Sanders said.

In a segment on Wednesday's "Full Frontal" focused on separating migrant children from their parents at the Mexico-United States border, Bee slammed Trump for a recent tweet showing the White House senior adviser embracing her young son.

"You know, Ivanka, that's a beautiful photo of you and your child, but let me just say, one mother to another: Do something about your dad's immigration practices, you feckless c---."

"[Bee's] disgusting comments and show are not fit for broadcast, and executives at Time Warner and TBS must demonstrate that such explicit profanity about female members of his administration will not be condoned on its network," Sanders said in her statement, first reported by The Washington Post.

Bee apologized in a statement on Thursday afternoon.

"I would like to sincerely apologize to Ivanka Trump and to my viewers for using an expletive on my show to describe her last night. It was inappropriate and inexcusable. I crossed a line, and I deeply regret it," Bee said.

ITK has reached out to the White House for further comment.

Bee's profane insult came a day after ABC announced it was canning its top-rated sitcom, "Roseanne," after its star, Roseanne Barr, penned a racist tweet aimed at former Obama White House adviser Valerie Jarrett.

Several prominent media personalities slammed Bee — a fierce critic of President Trump — for the lewd insult toward Trump's elder daughter.

NBC's Megyn Kelly called the comment "disgusting," while conservative radio host Mark Levin dubbed Bee an "ignorant clown."

Trump Pardons Dinesh D'Souza, Says He May Do Same For Martha Stewart And Cut Sentence Of Ex-Illinois Gov. Blagojevich

By Jackie Calmes

Los Angeles Times, May 31, 2018

President Trump's announcement on Thursday that he is giving a full pardon to conservative provocateur Dinesh D'Souza, and considering clemency actions for Martha Stewart and imprisoned former Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich, has underscored his norm-breaking use of the presidential power.

The D'Souza pardon was Trump's fifth, and another in a pattern of using that near-absolute presidential power for moves based on political whim or convenience, with little or no legal review. Legal observers also have suggested that the pardons could amount to a signal from the president to associates implicated in the Russia probe that he would consider pardoning them.

The day's pardon action began early Thursday, as Trump tweeted: "Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!"

D'Souza pleaded guilty in 2014 to campaign finance fraud, after a prosecution headed by Preet Bharara, then the U.S. attorney for Manhattan. Trump fired Bharara soon after becoming president.

Trump did not explain what he meant by saying that D'Souza had been treated unfairly, but the White House put out a statement saying that "D'Souza was, in the President's opinion, a victim of selective prosecution for violations of campaign finance laws."

D'Souza had claimed selective prosecution before pleading guilty. The judge who presided over his case ruled he had produced "no evidence" to back up that assertion. "legally speaking, is 'all hat, no cattle,'" the judge reiterated later, at D'Souza's sentencing. The judge also admonished D'Souza, according to accounts at the time, saying, "It is still hard for me to discern any personal acceptance of responsibility in this case."

D'Souza's attorney Benjamin Brafman, who is now defending former movie mogul Harvey Weinstein against rape and sexual abuse charges, thanked the judge for "a fair sentence."

D'Souza admitted to having illegally used straw donors, including a woman with whom he was having an affair and who has since become his wife, to contribute to a Republican Senate candidate in New York in 2012. He was sentenced to five years of probation, including eight months at a "community confinement center" in San Diego, and ordered to pay a $30,000 fine.

His case has been a cause for some conservatives, who say D'Souza was targeted for his caustic, sometimes racist, criticism of former President Obama and his wife.

Bharara, in a tweet, denied any political influence took place: "The facts are these: D'Souza intentionally broke the law, voluntarily pled guilty, apologized for his conduct & the judge found no unfairness. The career prosecutors and agents did their job. Period," he wrote.

Later, talking to reporters on Air Force One as he flew to Texas for fundraisers, Trump said he was also considering pardoning Stewart, who was convicted in an insider trade case in 2004. That prosecution was led by one of Bharara's predecessors as U.S. attorney, James B. Comey, who would go on to become FBI director and also get fired by Trump. The president said of Stewart: "She used to be my biggest fan in the world … before I became a politician."

He also said he might move to limit Blagojevich's sentence, indicating that he thought it was excessive.

Blagojevich, a Democrat, was convicted of corruption for seeking to benefit from making a Senate appointment to fill the vacancy left after former Sen. Barack Obama became president.

Trump mentioned on Air Force One that he knew Blagojevich from the president's former reality show. Blagojevich was a contestant on "Celebrity Apprentice" in 2010.

"If you look at what he said he said something to the effect like what do I get," Trump said. "Stupid thing to say ... And it was foolish," Trump said.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But, he said, "18 years is I think really unfair…. What he did does not justify 18 years in a jail. If you read his statement it was a foolish statement there was a lot of bravado … but it does not .. plenty of other politicians have said a lot worse."

Blagojevich was actually sentenced to 14 years.

"I am seriously thinking about — not pardoning — but I am seriously thinking of a curtailment of Blagojevich," he added, apparently referring to a commutation of the sentence.

Blagojevich's wife, Patti, subsequently said on Twitter that she plans an appearance on Fox News this evening.

Trump previously pardoned former Arizona Sheriff Joe Arpaio, a Trump supporter convicted of criminal contempt of court, the late boxer Jack Johnson and a former sailor, Kristian Mark Saucier, who was convicted of unauthorized use of classified information.

Trump To Pardon Dinesh D'Souza

By S.A. Miller

Washington Times, May 31, 2018

President Trump announced Thursday that he was granting a pardon to conservative filmmaker Dinesh D'Souza.

"Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!" the president tweeted.

D'Souza was convicted of making an illegal campaign contribution in 2014.

He pleaded guilty to giving $20,000 to New York politician Wendy Long and was sentenced to five years probation, eight months in a halfway house and paid a $30,000 fine.

Mr. Trump said he did not have a personal relationship with D'Souza, and spoke to him for the first time Wednesday night when he called D'Souza to tell him about the pardon.

"Nobody asked me to do it," Mr. Trump told reporters traveling with him on Air Force One. "I've always felt he was very unfairly treated."

He said that a lot of people make illegal campaign contributions and that D'Souza should have gotten "a quick minor fine like everybody else with the election stuff."

"What they did to him was horrible," Mr. Trump said.

D'Souza has nettled Democrats with films such as "Hillary's America: The Secret History of the Democratic Party" and "2016: Obama's America."

His pardon almost immediately came under fire from the left.

"Donald Trump has sent a message to his friends and cronies that if you break laws to protect him or attack our democracy, he's got your back. That's the same message he's been sending to Vladimir Putin for the last two years," said David Donnelly, president of the liberal advocacy group Every Voice. "Contribution limits are a key bulwark against corruption in politics and pardoning the man who knowingly violated them is in direct conflict with his pledge to drain the swamp in Washington."

The liberal group Public Citizen described the pardon as a "blazing signal" to Mr. Trump's allies that they will be rewarded for loyalty amid special counsel Robert Mueller's Russia probe.

Karen Hobert Flynn, president of left-leaning Common Cause, said Mr. Trump showed his "contempt for the rule of law."

Preet Bharara, the U.S. attorney who prosecuted Mr. D'Souza, said a presidential pardon did not change the fact that Mr. D'Souza broke the law.

"The President has the right to pardon but the facts are these: D'Souza intentionally broke the law, voluntarily pled guilty, apologized for his conduct & the judge found no unfairness. The career prosecutors and agents did their job. Period," tweeted Mr. Bharara, an outspoken critic of the president.

Mr. Trump last year fired Mr. Bharara from his job as U.S. attorney for the Southern District of New York.

The pardon of Mr. D'Souza is the fifth pardon granted by Mr. Trump in 16 months in office.

He pardoned former Arizona Sheriff Joe Arpaio for contempt of court; Kristian Mark Saucier for unauthorized retention of defense information; Lewis "Scooter" Libby for obstruction of justice and perjury; and boxing legend Jack Johnson for violating transporting a white woman across state lines.

Mr. Trump also commuted the sentence of Sholom Rubashkin, the former CEO of what was America's largest kosher slaughterhouse and meat-packing plant. He was sentenced to 27 years in prison for bank fraud, a sentence the White House said was too harsh compared to typical sentences for similar offenses.

President Trump Pardons Dinesh D'Souza

By Jordan Fabian

The Hill, May 31, 2018

President Trump on Thursday pardoned conservative commentator Dinesh D'Souza, who pleaded guilty in 2014 to making illegal campaign contributions.

"Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!" Trump wrote in a morning tweet as he traveled to Texas to attend political fundraisers.

Hours later, the White House issued a statement explaining Trump believed D'Souza was the "victim of selective prosecution for violations of campaign finance laws" and that he "accepted responsibility for his actions."

The president told reporters aboard Air Force One that he did not know D'Souza but learned about his case because "I read the papers, I see him on television."

"I never met him, I called him last night, first time I've ever spoken to him, I said, I'm pardoning you. Nobody asked me to do it," the president said, adding that "a lot of people" felt he should have been pardoned.

"What should have been a quick minor fine, like everybody else with the election stuff," Trump said. "What they did to him was horrible."

D'Souza is serving five years probation for illegally using straw donors to support Republican Senate candidate Wendy Long in 2012. He previously served eight months in a halfway house for the crime, which is a felony, and was ordered to pay a $30,000 fine.

Long and D'Souza were friends from Dartmouth College, and he was a vocal supporter of her campaign against New York Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D).

D'Souza thanked Trump on Twitter for his pardon, writing: "Obama & his stooges tried to extinguish my American dream & destroy my faith in America. Thank you @realDonaldTrump for fully restoring both."

Soon after his guilty plea, D'Souza claimed he was targeted by the Obama administration for political reasons.

"The Obama administration tried to shut me up," he said in his 2016 film, "Hillary's America." "If you make a film criticizing the most powerful man in the world, expect the empire to strike back."

His case became a cause célèbre for some on the right, who cheered Trump's decision.

"Bravo! @realDonaldTrump Dinesh was the subject of a political prosecution, brazenly targeted by the Obama administration bc of his political views. And he's a powerful voice for freedom, systematically dismantling the lies of the Left—which is why they hate him. This is Justice," tweeted Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas).

D'Souza's clemency marks the fifth full pardon issued by Trump during his 17 months in office, with most of them going to well-known people.

Trump has shown virtually no interest in going through the Justice Department's formal process for pardons, prompting criticism he is using the power to protect political allies.

Former Maricopa County, Ariz., Sheriff Joe Arpaio and former Bush administration official I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby are among those who have received a pardon from Trump.

Like Arpaio and Trump, D'Souza promoted the unfounded conspiracy theory that Barack Obama was ineligible to serve as president because he was born outside the U.S. Obama was born in Hawaii, making him natural-born U.S. citizen.

The author and filmmaker's work is characterized by polemic attacks on Obama, Hillary Clinton and other liberal leaders. His most recent book is titled "The Big Lie: Exposing the Nazi Roots of the American Left."

Trump most recently offered a posthumous pardon to the boxer Jack Johnson after a years-long advocacy campaign by pro athletes, civil rights leaders and members of Congress. Johnson was convicted of transporting a woman across state lines "for immoral purposes" under the Mann Act, a prosecution that many considered racially motivated.

Trump's decision to pardon D'Souza comes one day after he met with reality TV star Kim Kardashian West about prison reform.

Kardashian has been advocating for a pardon for Alice Marie Johnson, a 65-year-old woman who is serving a life sentence in prison for a nonviolent drug offense. So far, Johnson has spent more than 20 years in federal prison.

The president has not said whether he will act in Johnson's case.

Trump Pardons Dinesh D'Souza — And Might Do The Same For Rod Blagojevich And Martha Stewart

By Gregory Korte

USA Today, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON — President Trump pardoned conservative commentator Dinesh D'Souza for making illegal campaign contributions Thursday — and said he was considering presidential clemency of former Illinois governor Rod Blagojevich and lifestyle guru Martha Stewart as well.

"Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!" Trump tweeted Thursday as he headed to Texas on Air Force One.

While in flight, he told reporters that Blagojevich's attempt to sell former President Barack Obama's Illinois Senate seat when he became president was "a stupid thing to say" but not worth 18 years in prison. Blagojevich, a Democrat, appeared on Trump's reality television show Celebrity Apprentice in 2010.

And he said a pardon of Stewart had also crossed his mind. Stewart, the head of a publishing and television empire who once hosted a spinoff of The Apprentice, was convicted of insider trading in 2004.

"I think to a certain extent Martha Stewart was harshly and unfairly treated. And she used to be my biggest fan in the world — before I became a politician," he said. "But that's O.K. I don't view it that way."

Trump said he called D'Souza, who is serving five years probation for making illegal campaign contributions, to give him the news Wednesday night.

"I've always felt he was very unfairly treated. And a lot of people did," he said. "What they did to him was horrible."

Trump said he didn't know D'Souza, but "I see him on television."

On Twitter, D'Souza lashed out at Preet Bharara, the former U.S. attorney who prosecuted him and was later fired by Trump.

"KARMA IS A BITCH," D'Souza said. He accused Bharara of destroying him to advance his career.

"Then he got fired & I got pardoned," he said. "Obama & his stooges tried to extinguish my American dream & destroy my faith in America."

D'Souza credited a social media campaign and the intervention of Sen. Ted Cruz — a family friend — in bringing the case to Trump's attention.

D'Souza pleaded guilty of making "straw donations" in the names of others to support the candidacy of Republican New York Senate candidate Wendy Long, who lost to Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand. Those straw donations allowed him to give $20,000 in illegal contributions to the campaign, exceeding the $5,000 legal limit.

And though he once argued that he was being selectively prosecuted because of his attacks on Obama, he later backed off the claim at his sentencing.

"I'm sorry for what I did. I have never said otherwise," he said then. "I have never even said I am being selectively prosecuted. I feared that I was being."

The new round of pardons would continue Trump's use of clemency power to correct what he perceives as unjust, politically motivated prosecutions. But they also come amid investigations into his own campaign and inner circle — including a probe into whether his personal attorney, Michael Cohen, violated the law when he illegally paid off a porn star who said she had a relationship with Trump.

Rick Hasen, a University of California, Irvine law professor who specializes in election law, said the pardon sends "yet another signal to Michael Cohen and others about the possibility of a Trump pardon — and this one, like potentially Cohen's case — involves campaign finance violations."

The pardon marks the fifth full pardon granted by Trump during his presidency — all without going through the formal channels of the Justice Department. And it continues a pattern of politically motivated pardons that include former Arizona Sheriff Joe Arpaio and former Bush White House aide Scooter Libby.

Trump also pardoned Kristian Saucier, a former Navy submariner whose conviction for mishandling classified information became a conservative cause because of its comparisons to Democratic Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And just last week, Trump gave a rare posthumous pardon to Jack Johnson, the former heavyweight boxing champion convicted in 1913 of racially motivated charges related to his relationship with a white woman.

Like all of those cases, D'Souza did not apply for a pardon with the Office of the Pardon Attorney, the Justice Department unit that conducts investigations of pardon cases and sends recommendations to the president. Under Justice Department rules, D'Souza would be ineligible through that process because he's still on probation.

Neither Blagojevich nor Stewart have applied for clemency, either.

But the president's constitutional authority to pardon is not bound by those rules, and so Trump has granted politically charged pardons even as he's denied 180 applications from people who have applied through the Justice Department.

"The pardon power itself is incredibly broad, but what informs the use of that power is where the critical question is," said Andrew Wright, a Savannah Law School professor who handled pardon cases while working in the White House counsel's office under Obama.

"He views it as an extension of his situational politics," he said. "The coin of the realm in the Trump administration is flattery and aggressive defense of him on cable television, and if you're willing to do that, you will get a different set of laws applicable to you."

D'Souza, 57, is an Indian-born author and documentary filmmaker whose work has assailed President Barack Obama, Islam and multiculturalism. His most recent book is The Big Lie: Exposing the Nazi Roots of the American Left.

Previous work includes the book The Roots of Obama's Rage and the film 2016: Obama's America, both of which argue that Obama's politics were formed by the anti-colonial ideology of his Kenyan-born estranged father.

Though he was spared prison time in the campaign finance case, his conviction has put him under court supervision. He's requited to undergo weekly counseling sessions and complete an eight-hour day of community service during every week of his five-year probation. That community service: Teaching English to Spanish-speaking immigrants at Catholic parishes.

He also had to receive permission from a judge to leave the country in January for a research project to Nuremberg, Germany — where Nazis were put on trial for war crimes after World War II.

White press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said Trump had determined that D'Souza was "fully worthy of this pardon."

"Mr. D'Souza was, in the president's opinion, a victim of selective prosecution for violations of campaign finance laws," she said. "Mr. D'Souza accepted responsibility for his actions, and also completed community service by teaching English to citizens and immigrants seeking citizenship."

Trump Offers Pardon To Conservative Pundit Dinesh D'Souza, Suggests Others Could Be Coming

By John Wagner

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

President Trump announced Thursday that he would offer a full pardon to conservative pundit Dinesh D'Souza, who pleaded guilty in 2014 to violating federal campaign finance laws but later said he was targeted for his conservative views.

The president, who has issued several pardons in recent months, said he is also considering clemency in number of other cases, including those of former Illinois governor Rod Blagojevich (D) and Martha Stewart, the author and television personality.

D'Souza, an author and filmmaker, was indicted on charges that he illegally used straw donors to contribute to a Republican Senate candidate in New York in 2012. He was sentenced to five years of probation, including eight months living under supervision in a "community confinement center" in San Diego, and a $30,000 fine.

Prosecutors said D'Souza had other individuals donate money to Republican Wendy Long, a Republican challenging Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.) in 2012, under the agreement that he would reimburse them for the donations.

Trump, who announced his plans for the pardon on Twitter, later told reporters traveling with him on Air Force One that he had long felt D'Souza's sentence was too harsh.

"I've always felt he was very unfairly treated," Trump said. "And a lot of people did, a lot of people did. What should have been a quick, minor fine, like everybody else with the election stuff. . . . What they did to him was horrible."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) May 31, 2018

Trump also relayed that he is considering commuting the remainder of the sentence of Blagojevich, who was convicted in 2010 on charges relating to the selling of President Barack Obama's former Senate seat.

"What he did does not justify 18 years in a jail," Trump said. "If you read his statement, it was a foolish statement, there was a lot of bravado. But . . . plenty of other politicians have said a lot worse. And . . . he shouldn't have been put in jail."

Trump also cited the case of Stewart, who was convicted in 2004 of obstructing justice and lying to investigators about a well-timed stock sale.

"I think to a certain extent Martha Stewart was harshly and unfairly treated," Trump said. "And she used to be my biggest fan in the world . . . before I became a politician. But that's okay, I don't view it that way."

A senior White House official said as many as a dozen other pardons are under consideration by Trump, adding that most are likely to happen.

"There are going to be more," said the official, who requested anonymity to speak candidly about the issue.

Blagojevich, who has been seeking assistance from Trump, wrote an opinion piece for the Wall Street Journal earlier this week in which he echoed some of Trump's concerns about the Justice Department and FBI, saying that "the rule of law is under assault in America."

"I learned the hard way what happens when an investigation comes up empty after the government had invested time, resources and manpower," Blagojevich wrote. "When they can't prove a crime, they create one."

Both Stewart and Blagojevich have ties to "The Apprentice," Trump's long-running reality television series on NBC.

Stewart as the host of a short-lived spinoff, "The Apprentice: Martha Stewart," in 2005.

Blagojevich was a contestant on "Celebrity Apprentice" in 2010, after he was indicted but before his convictions. Trump praised Blagojevich at the time for having "a lot of guts" to appear on the program.

D'Souza claimed he was targeted by the office of then-U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara because he was an outspoken critic of President Barack Obama and a prominent conservative activist. In 2012, D'Souza released a movie titled "2016: Obama's America," which took a highly critical view of Obama's allegedly radical roots.

During an interview with syndicated talk show host Laura Ingraham on Thursday after Trump announced the pardon, D'Souza characterized prosecutors in the case as a "team of goons" who gave him a disproportionate sentence.

In an opinion piece published earlier this month by Fox News, D'Souza said that in the FBI file on his case, he was "red-flagged as a political conservative who made a movie critical of President Obama."

"Why mention this?" D'Souza wrote. "The FBI did it to signal to the Obama Justice Department and its stooges that I was a political enemy they might want to prosecute."

D'Souza also cited a recent news report about the possibility that comedian Rosie O'Donnell had made contributions over the legal limit to Democratic candidates and said the "far-left, Trump-bashing O'Donnell should get the same treatment" he did.

During his plea hearing in 2014, D'Souza acknowledged wrongdoing.

"I knew that causing a campaign contribution to be made in the name of another was wrong and something the law forbids," D'Souza said in court. "I deeply regret my conduct."

Bharara weighed in on Trump's action shortly after it was announced, writing on Twitter that Trump had the right to pardon D'Souza but "the facts are these: D'Souza intentionally broke the law, voluntarily pled guilty, apologized for his conduct & the judge found no unfairness. The career prosecutors and agents did their job. Period."

Some fellow conservatives, however, cheered Trump's move, including Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Tex.), who had lobbied the White House to issue the pardon.

"Bravo!" Cruz wrote in a tweet in which he claimed that D'Souza "was the subject of a political prosecution, brazenly targeted by the Obama administration [because] of his political views."

D'Souza, Cruz added, is "a powerful voice for freedom, systematically dismantling the lies of the Left — which is why they hate him. This is Justice."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The pardon would mark the latest instance of Trump deviating from the normal pardon process.

Generally, those seeking pardons must wait five years from the date they are released from confinement before becoming eligible, and they must apply to the Office of the Pardon Attorney. D'Souza does not have an application on file, a Justice Department spokeswoman said.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions has defended Trump's practices, telling a Senate panel in April that the president "clearly has the constitutional power to execute pardons" and is not obligated to confer with the Justice Department.

The issue took on heightened significance in March, when it was disclosed one of Trump's attorneys had earlier suggested the president could pardon former advisers targeted in the investigation into Russia's election interference.

In the wake of his sentencing, D'Souza continued to strongly criticize Obama, often in provocative ways. In 2015, for example, D'Souza sent out a photo on Twitter of Obama appearing to photograph himself with a selfie stick.

"YOU CAN TAKE THE BOY OUT OF THE GHETTO... Watch this vulgar man show his stuff, while America cowers in embarrassment," D'Souza wrote.

Trump's announcement about D'Souza came a day after reality television star and socialite Kim Kardashian West visited the White House to lobby Trump and his staff to pardon Alice Marie Johnson, 63, a grandmother serving a life sentence for nonviolent drug offenses.

A tweet sent out by Kardashian West about her visit was later retweeted by Trump's eldest son, Donald Trump Jr.

D'Souza will be the latest in a string of high-profile recipients of pardons that Trump has offered since taking office.

Others receiving pardons from Trump: Joe Arpaio, the former Maricopa County, Ariz., sheriff, who was held in criminal contempt for ignoring a court order related to the detention of immigrants suspected of being in the country illegally; Kristian Saucier, a former Navy sailor convicted of unauthorized retention of national defense information; Lewis "Scooter" Libby, a former chief of staff to Vice President Richard B. Cheney who was convicted of perjury and obstruction of justice related to the leak of a CIA officer's identity; and Jack Johnson, boxing's first black heavyweight champion, convicted of breaking a Jim Crow-era law.

Trump has also commuted the sentence of Sholom Rubashkin, the former chief executive of what was once the country's largest kosher meatpacking plant, who was convicted of more than 80 counts of financial fraud.

Trump Pardons Dinesh D'Souza, Weighs Leniency For Rod Blagojevich And Martha Stewart

By Peter Baker And Eileen Sullivan

New York Times, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON — President Trump on Thursday pardoned Dinesh D'Souza, a conservative author, commentator and filmmaker, and said he was strongly considering commuting the sentence of former Gov. Rod R. Blagojevich of Illinois, a Democrat.

Flexing his clemency power as he and his team face multiple criminal investigations of their own, Mr. Trump also said that he was thinking about the case of Martha Stewart, the lifestyle mogul who spent five months in prison for lying to investigators about the timing of a stock sale.

The president was focusing on cases where he argued that the justice system had unfairly treated celebrity figures, all of whom were convicted of crimes that in some ways mirrored charges that have been made or mentioned in connection with allies of Mr. Trump in recent weeks, including campaign finance violations and lying to investigators.

All three have connections, if sometimes distant, to Mr. Trump, either through political allies or his time in the private sector. Senator Ted Cruz, a Texas Republican who greeted Mr. Trump as he arrived for a visit to Houston on Thursday, pushed for the pardon for Mr. D'Souza. Mr. Blagojevich appeared on "Celebrity Apprentice," Mr. Trump's reality show, and Ms. Stewart hosted an "Apprentice" spinoff show.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Moreover, all three of the cases were tied to prosecutors who have become nemeses of the president. Mr. D'Souza was prosecuted by Preet Bharara, the United States attorney in New York who was fired by Mr. Trump last year and has been one of his fiercest critics. Ms. Stewart was prosecuted by James B. Comey, the F.B.I. director who was fired by Mr. Trump last year and has engaged in a running war of words ever since.

As for Mr. Blagojevich, he was prosecuted by Patrick J. Fitzgerald, a close friend and colleague of Mr. Comey. Mr. Trump previously pardoned I. Lewis Libby Jr., a top aide to former Vice President Dick Cheney, who was also prosecuted by Mr. Fitzgerald.

Mr. D'Souza made a direct link to Mr. Bharara's conflict with Mr. Trump after the pardon on Thursday. "KARMA IS A BITCH DEPT: @PreetBharara wanted to destroy a fellow Indian American to advance his career," he wrote on Twitter. "Then he got fired & I got pardoned."

The pardon for Mr. D'Souza, who pleaded guilty in 2014 to making illegal campaign contributions, represented a victory for one of the president's most vocal bases of support, the conservative media. Mr. D'Souza has argued that he was singled out for prosecution because of his conservative politics.

Mr. Trump said he did not know Mr. D'Souza but called him Wednesday night to let him know he would be pardoning him. "I've always felt he was very unfairly treated," the president told reporters traveling with him on Air Force One to Houston. "And a lot of people did, a lot of people did."

He added that Mr. D'Souza should have been given "a quick minor fine," like others convicted of campaign finance violations. "What they did to him was horrible," the president said.

The pardon for Mr. D'Souza was the fifth that Mr. Trump has issued. Last year, the president pardoned Joe Arpaio, the former Arizona sheriff, a move that was also popular among Mr. Trump's conservative base, especially the anti-immigrant contingent.

The latest act of clemency came as one of Mr. Trump's personal lawyers, Michael D. Cohen, is under investigation for possibly violating federal campaign finance laws. Mr. Trump's lawyers and aides have become resigned to the possibility that Mr. Cohen could offer information to the authorities about work he did for Mr. Trump, and critics of the president said the latest pardon could be a signal to Mr. Cohen that he would be pardoned, too, if he declined to cooperate with federal officials.

"Donald Trump has sent a message to his friends and cronies that if you break laws to protect him or attack our democracy, he's got your back," said David Donnelly, president of the watchdog group Every Voice. "Contribution limits are a key bulwark against corruption in politics, and pardoning the man who knowingly violated them is in direct conflict with his pledge to drain the swamp in Washington."

Both Mr. D'Souza and Mr. Trump are prolific on Twitter, although Mr. D'Souza has a small fraction of the president's followers. Mr. D'Souza has promoted conspiracy theories and regularly posts about what he calls "fake news." He also supports Mr. Trump's unproven claim that the F.B.I. planted a "spy" inside the Trump campaign.

Mr. Bharara defended the prosecution of Mr. D'Souza after Mr. Trump announced the pardon. "The President has the right to pardon but the facts are these: D'Souza intentionally broke the law, voluntarily pled guilty, apologized for his conduct & the judge found no unfairness," Mr. Bharara wrote on Twitter. "The career prosecutors and agents did their job. Period."

Mr. Blagojevich, who won two terms as governor, was sentenced to 14 years in prison after being convicted of 18 corruption charges, including trying to sell or trade President Barack Obama's Senate seat when he resigned to move to the White House.

"What he did does not justify 18 years in a jail," Mr. Trump said, misstating the sentence. "If you read his statement, it was a foolish statement. There was a lot of bravado" in talking about selling the Senate seat, but "plenty of other politicians have said a lot worse. And it doesn't — he shouldn't have been put in jail."

Mr. Trump noted that Mr. Blagojevich was a Democrat. "I don't know him other than that he was on 'The Apprentice' for a short period of time," he said. A commutation, if Mr. Trump follows through, would free Mr. Blagojevich, who has served six years in prison, without reversing the conviction.

Mr. Blagojevich wrote a column in The Wall Street Journal last week pleading his case in terms that seemed aimed directly at Mr. Trump, who has been at war with the Justice Department and F.B.I. over its handling of the Russia investigation.

"The rule of law is under assault in America," Mr. Blagojevich wrote. "It is being perverted and abused by the people sworn to enforce and uphold it. Some in the Justice Department and Federal Bureau of Investigation are abusing their power to criminalize the routine practices of politics and government."

He argued that he was convicted essentially for the crime of practicing politics and that his case reflected the danger to other politicians. Although he did not name Mr. Trump, the implication seemed clear. "It doesn't matter which side of the political spectrum you come from," Mr. Blagojevich wrote. "Every officeholder who raises money is potentially at risk. Those who value freedom and love our country had better wake up."

In a statement on Thursday, Patti Blagojevich, the former governor's wife, expressed optimism about the chances of clemency on behalf of her and their daughters. "Amy, Annie and I are very encouraged by the president's comments today," she said. "He's given us something that has been hard to come by recently: hope."

In speaking with reporters on Thursday, Mr. Trump mentioned Ms. Stewart as well, but more in passing. "There are others," he said. "I think to a certain extent Martha Stewart was harshly and unfairly treated. And she used to be my biggest fan in the world" back "before I became a politician. But that's O.K., I don't view it that way."

In his recent book, "A Higher Loyalty," Mr. Comey devoted an entire chapter to the case against Ms. Stewart. He says he hesitated to charge her, wondering whether he would be attacked for making a "mountain out of a molehill" and in the process ruin a popular and wealthy female corporate executive.

But Mr. Comey wrote that he became convinced that Ms. Stewart had to be prosecuted for the lies she told because the justice system would work only if people feared what would happen if they lied to federal authorities.

"Charging Martha Stewart was my first experience with getting a lot of hate and heat for a decision that had been carefully and thoughtfully made," Mr. Comey wrote. "Martha Stewart lied, blatantly, in the justice system. To protect the institution of justice, and reinforce a culture of truth-telling, she had to be prosecuted."

Mr. D'Souza turned to Twitter on Thursday to thank the president and his supporters for the pardon. He repeated his contention that the prosecution was politically driven, criticizing Mr. Obama and his administration.

Mr. D'Souza's wife, Debbie D'Souza, thanked Mr. Cruz for pushing Mr. Trump for the pardon.

Mr. Cruz also tweeted his praise and said Mr. D'Souza was "the subject of a political prosecution."

Mr. D'Souza, who once accused Mr. Obama of executing the "anticolonial" agenda of his Kenyan father, entered a guilty plea in 2014 to avoid up to two years of prison time. A judge in Federal District Court in Manhattan sentenced Mr. D'Souza to five years of probation, including eight months in a supervised "community confinement center."

He was accused of using straw donors to contribute to a 2012 Republican Senate candidate in New York, Wendy E. Long. Ms. Long was a classmate from Dartmouth College, where they worked together on the staff of The Dartmouth Review, a conservative campus newspaper.

She was running against Senator Kirsten E. Gillibrand, a Democrat. Prosecutors said that Mr. D'Souza lied to Ms. Long about the donations.

Mr. Trump has praised Mr. D'Souza's political commentary, and in 2012 he encouraged people to see Mr. D'Souza's documentary "2016: Obama's America," calling it an "Amazing film!" Mr. D'Souza said recently on his website that he has a new movie coming out this summer.

Mr. D'Souza was not eligible to apply for a pardon through the Justice Department, which requires a five-year waiting period from the date of conviction to apply. But the president has the power to pardon any person convicted of a federal crime.

Mr. Trump has also issued pardons for the boxing legend Jack Johnson and Kristian Saucier, a former Navy sailor.

How Far Can Trump Go In Issuing Pardons?

By Adam Liptak

New York Times, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON — President Trump's use of his constitutional power to pardon criminals is proving to be as idiosyncratic as other aspects of his presidency. On Thursday, he pardoned Dinesh D'Souza, a conservative author convicted of making illegal campaign contributions, and he said he was considering commuting the sentence of former Gov. Rod R. Blagojevich of Illinois, a Democrat, and pardoning Martha Stewart, the lifestyle guru.

He has also pardoned I. Lewis Libby Jr., a former aide to Vice President Dick Cheney, and Joe Arpaio, the former Arizona sheriff.

The Constitution gives presidents what appears to be unlimited authority to grant pardons. He "shall have the power," Article II says, "to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment."

The pardon power extends only to federal crimes. Otherwise, presidents are free to use it as they see fit. As the Supreme Court put it in an 1866 decision involving a former Confederate senator, Ex Parte Garland, the power "is unlimited."

"It extends," the court said, "to every offense known to the law."

In a tweet last year, Mr. Trump indicated that he had studied the matter. "All agree the U.S. president has the complete power to pardon," he wrote.

No. Other presidents have relied on recommendations from the Justice Department's Office of the Pardon Attorney. The office has an elaborate and lengthy process for considering pardon applications. It generally requires a five-year waiting period, the office's application instructions say, "to afford the petitioner a reasonable period of time in which to demonstrate an ability to lead a responsible, productive and law-abiding life."

Mr. Trump has acted more impulsively, bypassing the office and the care and deliberation followed by other presidents. He has also focused on prominent people, while other presidents often pardoned people not of particular notoriety.

The pardon office usually recommends pardons only after an expression of remorse. Not all of the people Mr. Trump has pardoned met that requirement. Mr. Arpaio, for instance, remained defiant.

"A presidential pardon is ordinarily a sign of forgiveness," the office's instructions say. "A pardon is not a sign of vindication and does not connote or establish innocence. For that reason, when considering the merits of a pardon petition, pardon officials take into account the petitioner's acceptance of responsibility, remorse and atonement for the offense."

Yes. Most presidents wait for the waning days of their administrations to issue high-profile pardons of associates and supporters. President George Bush was about to leave office in 1992 when he pardoned Caspar W. Weinberger, a former defense secretary, for his role in the Iran-contra affair. President Bill Clinton, too, was almost out the door in 2001 when he pardoned Marc Rich, a fugitive financier whose former wife had donated to the Democratic Party and the Clinton library foundation.

Yes, but some legal experts say that such pardons, coupled with other actions, could increase Mr. Trump's risk of prosecution for obstruction of justice. Abuse of the pardon power could also be grounds for impeachment.

The pardon power, the Supreme Court said in 1866, may be exercised at any time after a federal crime is committed, "either before legal proceedings are taken or during their pendency or after conviction and judgment."

In 1974, for instance, President Gerald R. Ford issued "a full, free and absolute pardon" to Richard M. Nixon for all federal crimes he had "committed or may have committed" during his presidency. Mr. Nixon was never prosecuted. Mr. Ford paid a political price for the pardon, which was hotly debated.

The constitutional text does not forbid such a pardon. But some legal scholars say a bedrock legal principle bars self-pardons.

In 1974, shortly before Mr. Nixon resigned, Mary C. Lawton, then the acting head of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel, issued a memorandum stating that "it would seem" that Mr. Nixon could not pardon himself "under the fundamental rule that no one may be a judge in his own case."

No president has ever tried to pardon himself, and such a move could prompt impeachment proceedings. The validity of a self-pardon could also be tested in the courts were Mr. Trump to grant himself one and be indicted for federal crimes.

Trump Pardons Conservative Filmmaker, Weighs Breaks For Blagojevich, Martha Stewart

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The president's pardons are being closely watched as Mueller's probe advances.

By Cristiano Lima And Josh Gerstein

Politico, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump on Thursday suggested he may step up his use of his pardon powers, announcing such a reprieve for controversial conservative filmmaker Dinesh D'Souza, expressing interest in commuting the sentence of disgraced former Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich, and even floating a pardon for TV personality Martha Stewart.

In a string of remarks to reporters and tweets, the president framed his clemency decisions as aiming to right wrongs wrought by the justice system.

Trump took to Twitter on Thursday morning to unveil his intent to pardon D'Souza, who pleaded guilty to a felony in 2014 over his use of straw donors to make illegal contributions in a 2012 Senate race. Trump lamented that the filmmaker "was treated very unfairly by our government!"

On Blagojevich, Trump told reporters aboard Air Force One that the former Illinois governor "shouldn't have been put in jail" and that "what he did does not justify" his sentence. Blagojevich, who served as governor of Illinois from 2003 until 2009, was impeached and removed from office and convicted of corruption charges over allegations he solicited bribes for political appointments.

As for Stewart, who in March 2004 was convicted on felony charges of conspiracy, obstruction of an agency proceeding and making false statements to federal investigators, Trump told members of the press she "was harshly and unfairly treated." The president added "she used to be my biggest fan in the world" before he launched his political career.

Trump's pardons are being closely watched because of special counsel Robert Mueller's ongoing investigation into whether anyone from the Trump campaign aided Russia in its interference in the 2016 presidential election. The president's critics see each grant of clemency as a potential signal to defendants and witnesses that they could be spared jail time, even if Mueller brings charges.

The remarks from Trump came just a day after the president met with reality television star and famed socialite Kim Kardashian West, who has lobbied for the pardon of a 62-year-old great-grandmother serving out a life sentence without parole for a nonviolent drug offense. After her White House visit, Trump tweeted they had a "great meeting" where they discussed "prison reform and sentencing."

Preet Bharara, the then-U.S. attorney who prosecuted D'Souza, reacted to the news of Trump's pardon plans by reaffirming the findings of his office on D'Souza.

"The President has the right to pardon but the facts are these: D'Souza intentionally broke the law, voluntarily pled guilty, apologized for his conduct & the judge found no unfairness," he tweeted. "The career prosecutors and agents did their job. Period."

A longtime critic of the Obama appointee, D'Souza responded by taking aim at Bharara over his political ties and their shared ethnic identity.

"KARMA IS A BITCH DEPT: @PreetBharara wanted to destroy a fellow Indian American to advance his career," D'Souza tweeted Thursday. "Then he got fired & I got pardoned"

Bharara was fired in March 2017 for bucking the Trump administration's call for his resignation.

Trump's discussion of the commutation for Blagojevich, meanwhile, comes just days after the former politician penned an op-ed in The Wall Street Journal titled, "I'm in Prison for Practicing Politics."

Trump appeared to allude to the piece aboard Air Force One, telling reporters that Blagojevich's remarks were a "foolish statement" with "a lot of bravado." But Trump added: "Plenty of other politicians have said a lot worse."

Leonard Goodman, an attorney for Blagojevich, said he is "hopeful" for a commutation.

"Pres. Trump has the power to correct this injustice," Goodman said in a statement. "Rod Blagojevich did not ever improperly enrich himself in office. He did not take gifts or loans from supporters. He followed the rules for campaign fundraising set out by the Supreme Court. He did not take a penny from his campaign fund for his personal benefit."

D'Souza's pardon is Trump's fifth since entering office. And the potential commutation, which Trump told reporters aboard Air Force One he's "seriously thinking about," would mark only the second time he's taken such action as president, according to the Department of Justice.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By contrast, in his eight years in office, President Barack Obama extended 202 pardons and 1,715 commutations, the latter figure far outpacing those by his modern contemporaries, according to a study by the Pew Research Center. And former President George W. Bush, during his two terms, granted 189 pardons and 11 commutations. But in their first two years in office, neither Bush nor Obama carried out any pardons or commutations, though they later dwarfed Trump's current pace.

The legal reprieve for D'Souza immediately renewed speculation about Mueller-related pardons. The special counsel has so far secured four indictments of Trump campaign aides — Paul Manafort, Rick Gates, Michael Flynn and George Papadopoulos — although none of the charges were directly related to the campaign. However, Trump critics have wondered whether the president is signaling that his aides do not need to fully cooperate with investigators because of the possibility of a pardon.

D'Souza initially insisted he was innocent of federal charges that he routed a total of $20,000 through two associates to the campaign of New York GOP Senate candidate and longtime friend Wendy Long.

However, the conservative author and commentator later reversed course and admitted guilt. He was sentenced to eight months in a halfway house, where he stayed overnight while working during the day.

Some Republican politicians argued at the time that D'Souza was the victim of selective prosecution. D'Souza and his allies amplified that argument earlier this month, pressing for a pardon following a New York Post report that actress Rosie O'Donnell made donations beyond the legal limit to at least five Democratic candidates.

There was no indication, however, that O'Donnell had others make donations on her behalf, as D'Souza did. Instead, she apparently contributed from several different addresses and accounts. Campaigns also recorded her name differently, which may have allowed some donations above the $2,700 limit to slip through.

"I was not choosing to overdonate," O'Donnell told the Post. "If 2700 is the cutoff — [candidates] should refund the money," she wrote. "I don't look to see who I can donate most to … I just donate assuming they do not accept what is over the limit."

Criminal prosecutions under federal election law require proof that a defendant willfully broke the law, meaning he or she knew what she was doing was illegal.

Despite the distinctions, D'Souza and his supporters argued in recent weeks that the fact O'Donnell has never been prosecuted is evidence that he was railroaded.

"I notice the leftist weasels who call me 'felon' have gone dead silent about Rosie committing 5–yes five—campaign finance violations," D'Souza wrote on Twitter. "Five times more egregious than my case. Now let's see if Lady Justice is truly blind."

D'Souza's wife, Debbie, also weighed in: "This very thing makes my husband the left's fav felon to bash.... but this woman and other Dems get away with it! – it's a slap on the wrist, if even that! It was the perfect excuse to shut my husband down."

Using a #pardondinesh hashtag, the D'Souzas and other conservative activists pressed the White House to grant clemency in the case.

D'Souza does not have a pardon application on file with the Justice Department, a DOJ spokeswoman said Thursday. Clemency applicants typically go through that process, but the president is free to pardon individuals who don't. D'Souza would not have been eligible to pursue a pardon through the Justice Department because of a five-year waiting period.

Last August, Trump pardoned former Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio as he awaited sentencing on a contempt of court charge for defying court orders related to racial profiling in Arizona.

In March, Trump pardoned Kristian Saucier, a former Navy sailor who was sentenced to a year in prison for taking photos in a secure area of a submarine. Saucier's arguments for clemency included claims that he'd been punished for mishandling classified information in ways similar to former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and her aides, who were not charged.

In April, Trump pardoned a former chief of staff to Vice President Dick Cheney, I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby. Libby was convicted in 2007 of obstruction of justice and false statements in connection with an investigation into the leak of a CIA officer's identity.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And earlier this month, Trump granted a posthumous pardon to Jack Johnson, a professional boxer who was convicted in 1913 of transporting women across state lines for "immoral purposes." The conviction by an all-white jury has long been seen as an example of racial prejudice.

The Arpaio pardon was arguably the most, impactful because it eliminated the possibility that the 85-year-old former sheriff could be sentenced to up to a year in prison.

Trump's Presidential Pardons Serve Himself, Not Justice

By Ruth Marcus

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

If, as is often said, a president's budget proposal presents a glimpse of his heart, a president's use of his pardon power offers a companion, and even more telling, X-ray of his soul.

Writing a budget involves making trade-offs and priorities, but these must be examined and ratified by others, elsewhere. The power to pardon is more uniquely personal, both in that pardons tend to be granted to individuals, based on the circumstances of their particular cases, and in that it is an authority that resides solely within the purview of the president.

What, then, does President Trump's suite of pardons — five over the course of his still-young presidency — tell us? Bill Clinton and Barack Obama each took about two years to dispense their first pardons; George W. Bush took more than three. Trump, by contrast, has embraced his role as what Alexander Hamilton described as the "dispenser of the mercy of government."

Except that Trump's twisted brand of mercy is shaping up as a particularly ugly version of that lofty Hamiltonian vision, variously self-serving in its recipients, tactical in its application and willfully dismissive of the countervailing considerations that a responsible president would take into account before intervening in the ordinary criminal process.

And so Thursday's move to pardon conservative author and admitted felon Dinesh D'Souza was repulsive but not out of character. The quality of Trump's mercy skews in a decidedly partisan direction. See also, former Arizona sheriff Joe Arpaio and, although this pardon is more justifiable, former Dick Cheney aide Lewis "Scooter" Libby.

To secure a Trump pardon, it helps to be a live Republican, a dead black man whose cause has been taken up by a white celebrity (boxer Jack Johnson, courtesy of Sylvester Stallone), or an ordinary schmo whose offense (mishandling of classified information) happened to look a lot like that of a certain political opponent who Trump thinks should have been locked up.

Or, as Trump hinted Thursday in discussing a pardon for Martha Stewart and a sentence commutation for former Illinois governor Rod Blagojevich, a former contestant on his "Apprentice" show.

Certainly, Trump is not the first president to use the pardon power in distasteful ways. Clinton's last-day-in-office pardon of fugitive financier Marc Rich, following extensive political and charitable contributions to Clinton interests by Rich's ex-wife, is a pungent example.

Yet there is something particularly wrong, particularly askew, in Trump's pardoning. Partly it is his sloppy impulsivity, without going through the ordinary process of consideration by the Justice Department or satisfying the usual criteria (a five-year waiting period after serving a sentence; "acceptance of responsibility, remorse, and atonement" for the offense).

But even more it is the disdain in which Trump holds the legal process — a disdain whose public expression in the form of pardons helps reinforce Trump's case of a criminal-justice system that is rigged, unfair and unworthy of respect. Trump's pardon of Arpaio for his criminal contempt for disobeying a court order to halt racial profiling underscored the president's contempt for the judiciary.

The D'Souza pardon makes Trump's point even more explicitly. "He was treated very unfairly by our government," Trump tweeted of D'Souza. Unfairly?

This is a man who pleaded guilty to deliberately violating campaign contribution limits on behalf of a friend running for a Senate seat from New York, using straw donors to give her money, which he then reimbursed. While he claimed to be the target of selective prosecution by a Democratic administration, the judge who oversaw his case dismissed that assertion as "nonsense."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But don't let facts intrude. "What my case shows in miniature is the way Obama and Hillary [Clinton] too have gangster-ized US politics," D'Souza said on Laura Ingraham's radio show Thursday. So much for remorse. But it's easy to see how nicely D'Souza's assertions of victimhood dovetail with Trump's they're-out-to-get-me strategy.

So, too, with the president's clemency-in-waiting for Stewart and Blagojevich. Stewart was convicted of obstructing justice and lying — why take that crime so seriously? Blagojevich was convicted on corruption charges that Trump dismissed as "being stupid and saying things that . . . many other politicians say." How convenient to use a Democratic politician to transform criminal bribery into mere "bravado."

And if Trump's freely flowing pardons have the salutary side effect of suggesting to those caught up in the Russia probe that they might ultimately benefit from presidential clemency, so much the better, from his vantage point. As with everything else in this administration, the act of pardoning is not about serving justice, it is about serving Trump.

Trump Mulls Commuting Blagojevich's Term, Pardoning Stewart

By Darlene Superville
Associated Press, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump said Thursday that he's considering commuting the sentence of former Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich, who was convicted of corruption, and pardoning lifestyle maven Martha Stewart, who did a stint in federal prison after she was convicted of charges related to a stock sale.

Hours earlier, Trump said on Twitter that he will pardon conservative commentator and Obama critic Dinesh D'Souza, who pleaded guilty to campaign finance fraud.

As he left Washington to fly to Texas, Trump tweeted: "Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!" D'Souza, an outspoken critic of former President Barack Obama, had claimed that his prosecution by the Obama Justice Department was politically motivated, but the presiding federal judge said D'Souza had failed to prove it.

Trump later shared with reporters aboard Air Force One his thoughts on Blagojevich and Stewart.

Blagojevich, the Democratic former governor, began serving a 14-year prison sentence on corruption convictions in 2012. His scheduled release date is 2024. Blagojevich was also a contestant on Trump's "Celebrity Apprentice" reality television show in 2010.

Stewart was convicted in 2004 of obstructing justice and lying to the government about why she unloaded stock just before the price plummeted. She served five months in prison.

Trump also told reporters accompanying him to Texas that no one asked him to pardon D'Souza, whose case had become a cause in conservative circles.

Trump said he only knew D'Souza from TV and reading his works. He said he telephoned D'Souza on Wednesday night.

The filmmaker, author and speaker was sentenced in September 2014 in federal court in New York to five years of probation after he admitted making illegal contributions to a U.S. Senate candidate in New York. Eight months of the first year was to be served in a community confinement center.

D'Souza was also sentenced to an eight-hour day of community service every week of the five-year term, weekly counseling, and was ordered to pay a $30,000 fine along with a $100 special assessment.

White House spokesman Raj Shah echoed D'Souza's claim of selective prosecution.

"Dinesh D'Souza is an individual who, you know, has made restitution and accepted responsibility for his actions. But these are infractions and crimes that are rarely prosecuted, and many believe that he was the subject of some selective prosecution from the previous administration," Shah said on Fox News Channel.

"Nonetheless, he's accepted responsibility and the president thinks it's appropriate that he receive a pardon after community service, paying a fine and doing other things that the judge has required," Shah said.

D'Souza acknowledged that he had two close associates each contribute $10,000 to the Senate campaign of Republican Wendy Long with the understanding that he would reimburse them. Individual contributions to any one candidate were limited to $5,000 at the time. Long lost to Democratic Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand.

D'Souza, who made the documentary "2016: Obama's America," entered the plea a week after the federal judge overseeing the case rejected his claim that he was selectively prosecuted. The judge said D'Souza had shown the court no evidence that he was targeted.

The government said in court papers that D'Souza faced overwhelming evidence of guilt and "now seizes upon the fact that he is an outspoken critic of the Obama administration as an excuse to avoid the consequences of his actions."

D'Souza is a former policy analyst under President Ronald Reagan and a prolific author well-known for works critical of Obama.

Pardons by recent presidents.

He retweeted Trump's tweet about the forthcoming pardon but did not immediately respond to an emailed request for comment sent to his media company, D'Souza Media.

In February, D'Souza apologized for sending a tweet that made fun of students from a high school in Parkland, Florida, who were upset after the Florida House voted down a proposed ban on a type of semi-automatic rifles known as assault weapons. The students had lost 17 classmates and teachers in a shooting that month.

D'Souza said in one of the tweets that it was the "worst news since their parents told them to get summer jobs." In another tweet, he wrote "Adults 1, kids 0."

His tweets about the Parkland students have been sharply criticized by some Florida Republicans, including Gov. Rick Scott. Despite the backlash, D'Souza is scheduled to speak at a two-day event being put on next month by the Republican Party of Florida. Scott, who is running for U.S. Senate, has not yet decided whether he will attend

EXCLUSIVE: Dinesh D'Souza Tells Backstory Of His Pardon

By Saagar Enjeti

Daily Caller, May 31, 2018

Republican Sen. Ted Cruz was the major impetus behind the Thursday pardon of Dinesh D'Souza, the conservative activist tells The Daily Caller.

D'Souza noted that he and his wife had dinner with Cruz approximately a month ago. At the dinner, the senator made clear he would push for a pardon during his conversations with President Donald Trump. D'Souza said he then received a call in recent days from Cruz, who told him Trump was very receptive to the pardon and that action could be coming imminently.

D'Souza took care to note that he did not push for a pardon or join any petitions circulating online because he thought it would be "unseemly" and because he was not a "Trumpster" during the Republican presidential primary campaign. He noted that Cruz was not the only person who pushed Trump for pardon and that other members of the president's inner circle had done so.

"I did not feel entitled to a pardon" after Trump's election, he said, adding that "my relief and elation is part of that."

D'Souza plead guilty in 2014 to making illegal campaign donations to Republican candidate Wendy Long. He has long maintained that he was unfairly targeted by the Obama administration for his political activism against the former president.

The president called D'Souza late Thursday night to tell him of his decision and told him, "You're a great voice for freedom, a great voice for America, and you got screwed," D'Souza recounted to TheDC.

"I'm determined to set this right, Trump told D'Souza, "because of your influence and to make you an even greater voice for freedom."

D'Souza said he was struck by Trump's "gut sense of justice" and that any other Republican administration would have had endless "strategy meetings, focus groups, try to see whether it would benefit them politically, and that is not Trump."

D'Souza noted that he does not maintain his innocence but that "I broke the law and should receive the same punishment as any American who does the same thing."

Trump Might Commute Rod Blagojevich's Sentence, Pardon Martha Stewart

By Mark Moore

New York Post, May 31, 2018

President Trump said Thursday that he was considering commuting the sentence of disgraced former Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich and pardoning style maven Martha Stewart.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Trump said he was thinking of commuting Blagojevich's 14-year prison sentence because the "stupid" and "foolish" comments he made shouldn't have put him behind bars.

"Because what he did does not justify 18 years in a jail. If you read his statement, it was a foolish statement, there was a lot of bravado," he told reporters aboard Air Force One on a flight to Texas. "Plenty of other politicians have said a lot worse. And it doesn't, he shouldn't have been put in jail."

In 2010, Trump fired Blagojevich when he appeared on his "Celebrity Apprentice" show on NBC.

Trump said that both Blagojevich, who he pointed out was a Democrat, and Stewart were "unfairly treated."

"I think to a certain extent Martha Stewart was harshly and unfairly treated. And she used to be my biggest fan in the world … before I became a politician," he said. "But that's OK, I don't view it that way."

Stewart was found guilty in 2004 of conspiracy and of making false statements to federal investigators during an insider trading investigation into her sale of ImClone stock just before it plunged in value.

She spent five months in a federal prison in West Virginia.

Blagojevich was convicted in 2011 on public corruption charges for trying to sell a state Senate seat once held by Barack Obama.

He is about halfway through his 14-year prison sentence.

In a commentary piece published Tuesday in the Wall Street Journal, Blagojevich claimed he was the victim of the country's out-of-control law enforcement agencies.

"The rule of law is under assault in America. It is being perverted and abused by the people sworn to enforce and uphold it," he wrote in the newspaper. "Some in the Justice Department and Federal Bureau of Investigation are abusing their power to criminalize the routine practices of politics and government."

Trump has been railing about special counsel Robert Mueller's Russia investigation, saying the FBI used an informant to spy on his campaign during the 2016 election.

He has demanded an investigation into whether the Obama-era FBI placed the informant for "political purposes."

Also on Thursday, Trump granted a full pardon to conservative filmmaker Dinesh D'Souza, who was convicted of making illegal contributions in a Senate race in New York.

"Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!," the president wrote in the Twitter posting.

President Trump On Air Force One: I Might Pardon Or Commute These Other People, Too

By Katie Pavlich

Townhall, May 31, 2018

Fresh off his announcement Thursday morning that he will issue conservative filmmaker Dinesh D'Souza a full pardon, President Trump told reporters on Air Force One he's considering pardons or commutations for a number of other people as well.

"There's another one that I'm thinking about. Rod Blagojevich. Eighteen years in jail for being stupid and saying things that every other politician, you know that many other politicans say, "Trump said, according to the White House pool report. "I don't know him other than that he was on The Apprentice for a short period of time. Eighteen years is I think really unfair. It's a Democrat. You know D'Souaz's a Republican. And I'm seriously thinking about it...not pardoning – but I am seriously thinking of a curtailment [commutation] of Blagojevich."

"What he did does not justify eighteen years in a jail. If you read his statement it was a foolish statement there was a lot of bravado...but it does not...plenty of other politicians have said a lot worse. And it doesn't, he shouldn't have been put in jail," he continued. "And he's a Democrat. He's not my party. But I thought that he was treated unfairly."

Former Illinois Governor Rod Blagojevich is currently serving a prison sentence at a federal prison in Colorado. He was impeached from office in 2011 for wire fraud, extortion and bribery after being caught on tape trying to sell a U.S. Senate seat. His incarceration release date is set for 2024.

"There are others," he continued. "I think to a certain extent Martha Stewart was harshly and unfairly treated. And she used to be my biggest fan in the world...before I became a politician. But that's okay I don't view it that way."

Business mogul Martha Stewart served five months in federal prison after being convicted of insider trading in 2004.

Donald Trump To Pardon Conservative Filmmaker Dinesh D'Souza

By Joshua Caplan

Breitbart, May 31, 2018

President Donald J. Trump announced Thursday he will pardon conservative author and filmmaker Dinesh D'Souza, who was convicted of breaking campaign finance laws in 2014.

"Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!" President Trump tweeted:

Will be giving a Full Pardon to Dinesh D'Souza today. He was treated very unfairly by our government!

— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) May 31, 2018

In 2014, D'Souza pleaded guilty after reimbursing two straw donors who contributed to Wendy Long's 2012 campaign for the U.S. Senate.

Preet Bharara, the U.S. attorney of the Southern District of New York who was fired by President Trump, released a statement of the conviction.

"Dinesh D'Souza attempted to illegally contribute over $10,000 to a Senate campaign, wilfully undermining the integrity of the campaign finance process," Bharara wrote.

"Like many others before him, of all political stripes, he has had to answer for this crime – here with a felony conviction."

Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) welcomed the news, tweeting "Bravo! @realDonaldTrump Dinesh was the subject of a political prosecution, brazenly targeted by the Obama administration bc of his political views. And he's a powerful voice for freedom, systematically dismantling the lies of the Left—which is why they hate him."

"This is Justice," Cruz declared:

Dinesh D'Souza? Really?

New York Times, May 31, 2018

The handful of pardons that President Trump has granted so far may appear to be scattershot, but they're beginning to show a distinct pattern — not just of who he believes is worthy of mercy, but of how he thinks about the justice system as a whole and about his power to bend it to his will.

On Thursday, Mr. Trump pardoned Dinesh D'Souza, the right-wing troll known for, among other things, posting racist tweets about President Barack Obama, spreading the lie that George Soros was a Nazi collaborator and writing that "the American slave was treated like property, which is to say, pretty well."

In 2014, Mr. D'Souza pleaded guilty to making illegal campaign contributions, although he claimed that he had been targeted for political reasons. Last year, President Trump fired Preet Bharara, the federal prosecutor who handled Mr. D'Souza's case. "KARMA IS A BITCH," Mr. D'Souza exulted on Twitter Thursday, with his trademark graciousness. Mr. Bharara, he added, "wanted to destroy a fellow Indian American to advance his career. Then he got fired & I got pardoned."

Mr. Trump, who told reporters that Mr. D'Souza "was very unfairly treated," has the authority to pardon anyone he likes, for almost any reason. But pardons send a message. What message can we take from Mr. Trump's executive clemency?

Maybe the president is sending a signal of loyalty and reassurance to friends and family members who may soon find themselves facing similar criminal charges in connection with the special counsel's Russia inquiry. That could help explain Mr. Trump's interest in Mr. D'Souza (campaign-finance violations), as well as two other big names he hinted on Thursday he might grant clemency to — the lifestyle maven Martha Stewart (lying to federal authorities) and former Gov. Rod Blagojevich of Illinois (corruption and bribery) — and a previous Trump pardon, Scooter Libby, former Vice President Dick Cheney's chief of staff (perjury and obstruction of justice).

Or maybe Mr. Trump is wielding his pardon power against his perceived enemies in federal law enforcement. Besides Mr. Bharara, there's James Comey, who prosecuted Ms. Stewart, and Patrick Fitzgerald, who prosecuted both Mr. Blagojevich and Mr. Libby, and is a friend of Mr. Comey's.

And let's not forget Joe Arpaio, the former Arizona sheriff and hunter of undocumented immigrants, whom Mr. Trump pardoned last summer for contempt of a federal court order — Mr. Trump clearly was thumbing his nose at the federal court that found Mr. Arpaio guilty.

Or perhaps Mr. Trump simply is dealing another hammer blow to the legacy of Mr. Obama, who focused his own clemency efforts on reducing the lengthy sentences of thousands of low-level drug offenders with no personal connection to the White House.

The tendency of presidents of both parties to reward cronies with clemency — from Gerald Ford's pardon of Richard Nixon to Bill Clinton's of the financier Marc Rich — is one Washington tradition that we'd welcome Mr. Trump smashing. Alas, it's one that he shows every sign not only of continuing but of embracing: Mr. D'Souza told The Daily Caller that Senator Ted Cruz of Texas engineered his pardon with a personal plea to the president, even though Mr. Trump told reporters, "Nobody asked me to do it."

One thing is becoming clear: Donald Trump uses whatever power he has to attack the people he feels have wronged him, and he will do what he feels he must to protect himself. For him, pardons are a means of vengeance. Those he's issued to date are only a small hint of what could be coming as the Russia investigation heats up. Last year, John Dowd, Mr. Trump's lawyer at the time, discussed the prospect of pardons for two of the president's former top advisers, Michael Flynn and Paul Manafort, with their lawyers.

As Vox's David Roberts wrote on Twitter, "Pardoning is basically the one presidential power that works the way Trump thought ALL of being president worked. He's gonna use the [expletive] out of it."

That is the real message of these pardons — and that, more than Mr. Trump clearing the record of some noxious clown, is what should really worry us.

Public Confidence In CIA's Haspel Jumped 'Dramatically' After Public Testimony: Poll

By Dan Boylan

Washington Times, May 31, 2018

Public confidence in Gina Haspel, President Trump's pick to head the CIA, jumped dramatically after her charged public nomination hearing addressing torture on Capitol Hill earlier this month, according to a new poll.

The longtime veteran of the CIA's clandestine service became the first woman to run the agency in its 70-year history after navigating a lengthy debate over the harsh Bush-era interrogation programs American operatives used in pursuit of suspected terrorists in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Critics called the interrogation program that Ms. Haspel supervised, which included waterboarding, torture.

A series of polls conducted by Lawfare, a national security blog published by the Lawfare Institute in cooperation with the Brookings Institution, found that Ms. Haspel's at times emotional and contentious testimony before the Senate Intelligence committee on May 9 was a turning point in public opinion regarding her leadership qualifications.

Appearing before the panel, the 61-year-old Ms. Haspel discussed lessons learned from "that tumultuous time" and vowed that under her leadership the agency would not restart the secret detention and interrogation program. The full Senate then confirmed her in a 54-45 vote that saw support from six Democrats who crossed party lines.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Lawfare poll results, published on Thursday, found that those surveyed before the Senate hearing, from April 25 to May 6, were evenly divided between supporting and opposing her nomination, at 38.4 percent and 38.6 percent, respectively.

A follow-up survey between May 15 and May 18 — after the hearing — "found that public awareness of Haspel had increased dramatically, as had support for her confirmation" to 49.6 percent support and 28.2 percent opposition.

The share of the public that reported having heard of Ms. Haspel also more than doubled, to 35.9 percent.

The poll, which used Google Surveys to engage more than 4,000 respondents, asked: "Some worry Haspel was involved in the CIA's use of harsh interrogations while others think she is a qualified leader. Do you think the Senate should confirm her?"

Regarding party affiliation, enthusiasm for her confirmation improved across the board, but her biggest boost came from independents who said they supported her 50.1 percent after the nomination hearing — from 38.5 percent before.

Among Republicans, her support jumped to 79.2 percent from 73.8 percent while Democrats saw a spike to 21.2 percent from 14.2 percent.

The Lawfare article accompanying the poll results — by Mieke Eoyang, Ben Freeman, Ryan Pougiales and Benjamin Wittes — noted that "among just the authors of this piece, one of us supported her confirmation while another opposed it."

They added: "The fight over Gina Haspel's nomination to be director of the CIA was one of the more politically controversial that has emerged in recent months. It raised complex questions of leadership and accountability and reopened discussion over this country's use of harsh interrogation techniques that many have characterized as torture."

After her Senate confirmation, Ms. Haspel officially replaced former CIA chief, Mike Pompeo, who left to become Secretary of State.

Trump Revises Comey Firing, Giuliani Blasts 'Lynching Mob'

By Ashley Thomas

Associated Press, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump declared Thursday that he didn't fire FBI Director James Comey over the Russia investigation, despite previously citing that as the reason. His lawyer, meanwhile, blasted federal investigators as "a lynching mob" the Trump team will "knock the heck out of" in the end.

The president has said at least twice that Comey's firing in May 2017 was related to the FBI's investigation into whether Trump's campaign associates coordinated with Russia in an effort to sway the 2016 election. And his lawyer, Rudy Giuliani, told Fox News earlier this month that Trump fired Comey because the FBI director wouldn't publicly state that he "wasn't a target" of the Russia investigation.

Trump tweeted Thursday: "Not that it matters but I never fired James Comey because of Russia! The Corrupt Mainstream Media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!"

Comey's firing led to the appointment of Robert Mueller as the Justice Department's special counsel investigating Russian meddling in the 2016 election as well as possible ties between Trump's presidential campaign and Russia. The firing is now under investigation by Mueller for possible obstruction of justice.

Not that it matters but I never fired James Comey because of Russia! The Corrupt Mainstream Media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) May 31, 2018

On Wednesday night, Giuliani said on Fox News' "Hannity" that the investigation "never should have taken place in the first place" and claimed there were ethical issues within the Justice Department.

"So, you got a group there, a lynching mob, so let them do their job and, boy, we're ready to knock the heck out of you with our report, which will be authoritative," Giuliani said. "It will be backed up. It will be backed up with law and facts. And we'll let the American people decide this."

It was not immediately clear what report Giuliani was referring to.

Trump's legal team has said that Mueller is working on a report addressing whether the president obstructed justice. The Justice Department inspector general is also preparing a report that is expected to criticize the FBI's handling of the investigation into Democrat Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server while she was secretary of state.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Giuliani's "lynching mob" comment drew criticism from Republican Sen. Mike Lee of Utah, who told CNN, "That's pretty strong language." Lee said that "based on what I know now, those are not words that I would use to describe this. This is an investigation."

In announcing Comey's firing in 2017, the White House initially cited his handling of the Clinton email investigation, seizing on the FBI director's decision to divulge details of the probe to the public during her campaign against Trump.

A few days after Comey was dismissed, Trump told NBC's Lester Holt that he was thinking of "this Russia thing" when he fired Comey.

And The New York Times reported Trump told Russian diplomats in the Oval Office in May 2017 that Comey's dismissal had removed some of the pressure he faced over the Russia investigation.

"I just fired the head of the FBI. He was crazy, a real nut job," Trump said during the May 10 meeting, according to the newspaper. "I faced great pressure because of Russia. That's taken off."

Earlier this month, Giuliani told Fox News that Trump felt he was treated worse by the FBI than Clinton, who was publicly cleared of criminal wrongdoing at an unusual FBI headquarters news conference in July 2016.

"He fired Comey because Comey would not, among other things, say that he wasn't a target of the investigation," Giuliani said. "He's entitled to that. Hillary Clinton got that. Actually, he couldn't get that."

Trump Reverses Himself And Denies Firing Comey Over Russia Probe

By Terrence Dopp, Justin Sink

Bloomberg News, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump contradicted what he said in a televised interview last year on Thursday, denying that he fired former FBI Director James Comey over his role in the investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 election.

"Not that it matters but I never fired James Comey because of Russia! The Corrupt Mainstream Media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!" Trump said Thursday in a Twitter posting.

The statement contradicts what Trump told NBC Nightly News's Lester Holt last year in a televised interview.

"Regardless of recommendation, I was going to fire Comey," Trump told Holt of his decision to fire Comey on May 9, 2017. "And in fact when I decided to just do it, I said to myself, I said 'you know, this Russia thing with Trump and Russia is a made-up story, it's an excuse by the Democrats for having lost an election that they should have won,"' he added.

Comey's ouster eventually led Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein to appoint a special counsel who is independent of both the department and the White House after Attorney General Jeff Sessions recused himself from the investigation of Russian meddling in the 2016 campaign.

The White House initially said Trump fired Comey at the recommendation of Sessions and Rosenstein. Rosenstein had written a three-page letter faulting Comey for his handling of an investigation into Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton's email practices as secretary of State. Trump was interviewed by Holt a few days later.

Trump's comments on Thursday followed a barrage of attacks in recent days targeting Special Counsel Robert Mueller's probe into possible collusion between his campaign and Russia.

On Tuesday, Trump alleged Mueller's investigation "will be MEDDLING with the mid-term elections," without providing an explanation of how he believed the inquiry would impact the coming congressional races. Later in the morning, Trump said he needed to "start focusing my energy" on other policy priorities and "not on the Rigged Russia Witch Hunt" that he argued should instead be examining his political opponents.

Over the holiday weekend, the president repeatedly tweeted commentary from guests appearing on Fox News criticizing the inquiry led by Mueller's team. And on Sunday, the president asked who would "give back the young and beautiful lives (and others) that have been devastated and destroyed by the phony Russia Collusion Witch Hunt?"

Four former Trump advisers have been charged in relation to the probe, with three of those individuals already pleading guilty.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Trump attorney Rudy Giuliani defended the president's attacks against Mueller and labeled the investigation "illegitimate" during an interview with CNN that was broadcast Sunday. Asked if his legal strategy involved an effort to undermine the probe, Giuliani said the Trump legal team "couldn't do it if they didn't have the material."

Trump Again Insists Russia Probe Was Not The Reason He Fired Comey, Despite Previous Comments To The Contrary

By John Wagner

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

President Trump again insisted Thursday that he did not fire former FBI director James B. Comey because of the Russia investigation, blaming the "Corrupt Mainstream Media" for pushing a false storyline.

The president's assertion, in a morning tweet, is at odds with comments he made in a television interview last year in which he said Comey's stewardship of the Russia inquiry was on his mind when he decided to dismiss him.

"When I decided to just do it, I said to myself, I said, 'You know, this Russia thing with Trump and Russia is a made-up story, it's an excuse by the Democrats for having lost an election that they should've won,' " Trump told NBC's Lester Holt in a May 2017 interview.

Before the NBC interview, the White House had said Trump fired Comey at the recommendation of senior Justice Department officials who said that Comey had treated Hillary Clinton, Trump's Democratic presidential rival, unfairly and damaged the credibility of the FBI and the Justice Department.

"Regardless of the recommendation, I was going to fire Comey," Trump told Holt.

In his tweet Thursday, Trump made no mention of another rationale for his decision to fire Comey, but wrote: "Not that it matters but I never fired James Comey because of Russia! The Corrupt Mainstream Media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!"

Trump made a similar assertion last month, writing that Comey "was not fired because of the phony Russia investigation."

The inquiry, now led by special counsel Robert S. Mueller III, is examining both Russian interference in the 2016 election and possible coordination between the Trump campaign and Russia. Trump's firing of Comey has also come under review as Mueller weighs a possible obstruction-of-justice case against the president.

In a separate tweet Thursday, Trump continued to insist that the FBI had spied on his 2016 campaign and claimed that the media "is working overtime" to avoid reporting about it.

An FBI source, former University of Cambridge professor Stefan A. Halper, had contact with at least three advisers to Trump during the campaign. There is no evidence to suggest, however, that Halper was inserted into the Trump campaign, as the president has suggested.

"The corrupt Mainstream Media is working overtime not to mention the infiltration of people, Spies (Informants), into my campaign!" Trump wrote. "Surveillance much?"

Among those who have pushed back against Trump's spying claims are Rep. Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.), who was one of the lawmakers briefed on the FBI actions earlier this week.

Gowdy told Fox News Channel on Tuesday night that the briefing vindicated the FBI.

"I am even more convinced that the FBI did exactly what my fellow citizens would want them to do when they got the information they got, and that it has nothing to do with Donald Trump," he said.

Trump's latest tweets come as he and his lawyers step up attacks on Mueller's investigation in a bid to undermine the credibility of its findings.

On Wednesday night, Trump lawyer Rudolph W. Giuliani referred to Mueller's team as "a lynching mob" during an appearance on the Fox News program "Hannity."

Donald Trump Says He Didn't Fire James Comey Over Russia Despite Video Evidence

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

By David Jackson
USA Today, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON — President Trump insisted Thursday he didn't fire FBI Director James Comey because of the Russia investigation, despite video and documentary evidence to the contrary.

"Not that it matters but I never fired James Comey because of Russia!" Trump tweeted before taking off on a fundraising trip to Texas. "The Corrupt Mainstream Media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!"

Two days after the May 9, 2017, dismissal, Trump told NBC News that, while Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein had endorsed Comey's firing, he would have taken the same action even without the recommendation — and he cited Russia as a a reason.

"And, in fact, when I decided to just do it I said to myself, I said, 'you know, this Russia thing with Trump and Russia is a made-up story,'" Trump told NBC's Lester Holt. "It's an excuse by the Democrats for having lost an election that they should've won."

Trump's critics quickly cited that NBC interview.

"@realDonaldTrump tweets he didn't fire Comey over the Russia investigation," tweeted Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y. "Let's go to the videotape."

Trump's claim came a day after news that former deputy FBI director Andrew McCabe authored a memo quoting Rosenstein as saying that Trump asked him to refer to the Russia investigation as a reason for recommending Comey's dismissal.

In any event, the Rosenstein memo referred only to Comey's overall management of the bureau, including his handling of the Hillary Clinton private email server case.

Yet the day after Comey's firing, Trump reportedly told visiting Russian diplomats that "I just fired the head of the FBI. He was crazy, a real nut job. I faced great pressure because of Russia. That's taken off."

Trump and aides also criticized Comey by saying that the FBI director privately told the president he was not the subject of investigation, but would not say that publicly.

Comey, meanwhile, has said he believes he was fired because he rebuffed Trump's request to go easy on a central figure in the Russia probe, former national security adviser Michael Flynn.

The FBI director's firing is central to an obstruction of justice investigation being conducted by special counsel Robert Mueller, who is also looking into Russian attempts to influence the 2016 election in order to help Trump.

Trump Bends The Truth As He Tries To Beat Back Russia Probe

The president renews his claim that he didn't fire Comey because of the Russia investigation — despite saying last year he did just that.

By Louis Nelson
Politico, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump on Thursday peppered his Twitter feed with falsehoods, claiming the media is ignoring a controversy he's dubbed "spygate" and is maliciously pushing the idea that he fired FBI director James Comey because of the Russia probe — an explanation the president himself offered in the days after the ousting.

It was another example of Trump hammering the media as he tries to beat back damaging stories about special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian efforts to interfere in the 2016 election, the Trump campaign and whether the president tried to obstruct justice.

It also comes as House Oversight Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.) undercut Trump's claim that the FBI corruptly embedded a spy in his campaign for political purposes, suggesting instead that the agency acted appropriately by having an FBI informant contact Trump campaign aides when evidence of Russian election meddling surfaced.

But Gowdy's efforts to knock down the president's accusations of wrongdoing by the FBI did not stop Trump from renewing them Thursday morning, when he wrote online that "the corrupt Mainstream Media is working overtime not to mention the infiltration of people, Spies (Informants), into my campaign! Surveillance much?"

Contrary to the president's claim that the media has ignored allegations that his campaign was the subject of inappropriate Justice Department surveillance, those claims have received significant media attention, as has, more recently, Gowdy's rejection of them.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Perhaps even more truth-stretching was the president's claim online that "I never fired James Comey because of Russia" but that "the Corrupt Mainstream Media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!"

That argument by the president runs directly counter to the explanation he offered NBC News's Lester Holt in the days after he fired Comey, when he said had already made up his mind to fire the then-FBI director before Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein recommended it and that he did so with the bureau's Russia investigation weighing on his mind.

Trump's suggestion Thursday that he did not fire Comey because of the Russia probe also contradicts the explanation that Rudy Giuliani, a member of the president's outside legal team, offered earlier this month. Giuliani told Fox News's Sean Hannity in an interview in early May that Trump had fired Comey because the then-FBI director "would not, among other things, say that he wasn't a target of the investigation."

Nonetheless, Sen. Mike Lee (R-Utah) seemed willing Thursday morning to accept the president's version of events, telling CNN that his understanding was that Trump had fired Comey because "he was concerned about the way that Mr. Comey had handled the Hillary Clinton investigation," an explanation that matches the recommendation offered by Rosenstein. Even after the CNN anchor played for Lee a clip of Trump saying he had fired Comey over the Russia probe, the Utah senator insisted that "it was also about the Hillary investigation."

The president's tweets about Comey and spying allegations followed one earlier on Thursday in which he lashed out at Bob Iger, the chief of ABC's parent company, Disney, alleging that the network operates under a "double standard" that allowed for the firing of pro-Trump comedian Roseanne Barr over a racist remark she made on Twitter but did not similarly punish ABC News correspondent Brian Ross for erroneous reporting about Mueller's investigation last year.

Ross reported last December that former national security adviser Michael Flynn would testify that the president had "directed him to make contact with the Russians," an inaccuracy that prompted ABC to suspend its chief investigative correspondent for four weeks and reassign him to a department where he no longer covers the president.

Despite Trump's complaint that ABC did not apologize for its mistake, the network issued a statement at the time reading, "we deeply regret and apologize for the serious error we made yesterday."

Trump Claims He Did Not Fire Comey Over Russia

By Jordan Fabian

The Hill, May 31, 2018

President Trump claimed Thursday he did not fire former FBI Director James Comey over the Russia investigation, despite his prior statements that the issue contributed to Comey's firing.

"Not that it matters but I never fired James Comey because of Russia! The Corrupt Mainstream Media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!" he tweeted.

Not that it matters but I never fired James Comey because of Russia! The Corrupt Mainstream Media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) May 31, 2018

Trump appeared to be referring to a New York Times report that Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein said the president initially asked him to reference Russia in his memo justifying Comey's firing, which centered on the FBI chief's handling of the probe into former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server.

The conversation was detailed in a separate memo authored by former Deputy FBI Director Andrew McCabe, which was given to special counsel Robert Mueller.

Comey's firing is a focal point of Mueller's probe into whether Trump obstructed the investigation into ties between his campaign and Russia's interference in the 2016 presidential election.

Trump and his allies have offered a series of changing explanations for his decision to fire Comey, which has complicated investigators' effort to determine his intent.

Soon after the White House released Rosenstein's memo, which criticized Comey's handling of the Clinton investigation, Trump undercut it by telling NBC News that he was going to ax the FBI director "regardless of recommendation."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"And in fact when I decided to just do it, I said to myself, I said 'You know, this Russia thing with Trump and Russia is a made-up story, it's an excuse by the Democrats for having lost an election that they should have won,'" the president said during a May 2017 interview with the network.

Trump later told a pair of top Russian diplomats that firing Comey had relieved "great pressure" on him over Russia, according to the Times.

The president has grown increasingly frustrated by the Mueller investigation as it moves closer to his inner circle.

Over the past 24 hours, Trump has repeatedly lashed out at Attorney General Jeff Sessions over his decision to recuse himself from the probe.

And the president has also continued to push his unsubstantiated claim that the Obama administration placed spies in his campaign in order to help Clinton in 2016.

"The corrupt Mainstream Media is working overtime not to mention the infiltration of people, Spies (Informants), into my campaign! Surveillance much?" he tweeted 10 minutes before his message about Comey.

The corrupt Mainstream Media is working overtime not to mention the infiltration of people, Spies (Informants), into my campaign! Surveillance much?— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) May 31, 2018

Trump's claims were rebutted this week by House Oversight and Government Reform Committee Chairman Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.), who met with senior Justice Department and intelligence officials following reports the FBI used a confidential informant in the Russia probe.

"I am even more convinced that the FBI did exactly what my fellow citizens would want them to do when they got the information they got and that it has nothing to do with Donald Trump," Gowdy said Tuesday on Fox News.

The Russia probe has appeared to dominate Trump's attention, distracting from high-stakes negotiations with North Korea and on trade. The president vowed this week he would dedicate more of his time to those key policy issues instead of the investigation.

"Sorry, I've got to start focusing my energy on North Korea Nuclear, bad Trade Deals, VA Choice, the Economy, rebuilding the Military, and so much more, and not on the Rigged Russia Witch Hunt that should be investigating Clinton/Russia/FBI/Justice/Obama/Comey/Lynch etc.," he tweeted Tuesday.

The Fog Of Lies Is Working

By David Ignatius

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

When a prominent Russian journalist fakes news about his own murder to try to expose the Kremlin's misdeeds, you know something has gone dangerously wrong in what we like to call the free marketplace of ideas. These days, it has become a battle space where anything goes.

Russia pioneered the modern use of "weaponized information" to interfere in the 2016 American presidential election and political campaigns in Europe, according to the U.S. intelligence community. But the Kremlin has lots of company in using hacked, leaked, stolen or fabricated information to influence opinion.

The American information marketplace is being corrupted by many other foreign nations, including China, Saudi Arabia, Iran, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates. For the Middle East combatants, the United States is becoming the new Lebanon — the place where other nations go to fight their dirty proxy wars.

This assault on America is abetted by Mr. "Fake News" himself, President Trump. Since his success nearly a decade ago in fostering the canard that Barack Obama was born in Kenya, Trump has been spreading deceptive allegations and outright lies as a political tactic — all while falsely accusing his adversaries of making things up.

The scary thing is that this fog of lies is working — for the Russians, the Arab info-warriors and Trump. And it is encouraging a growing use of covert manipulation by other nations (and private parties) to shape opinion. The public, understandably, is getting dizzy in this information storm, and is not sure what (if anything) can be believed.

We journalists, at times, unintentionally provide platforms for the manipulators — because we are often passive recipients of documents that may be leaked, hacked or stolen. Our usual position is that we don't care where the material comes from, so long as it's true and important to readers and viewers.

This stance — publishing vital information, no matter how we obtain it — still seems correct. But we journalists must do better at telling our audience how information comes to us, and what hidden agendas our sources may have. Otherwise, we risk letting the manipulators use us, and in the process, we damage our credibility.

"The dark side is bleeding much more into everyday life. Things that wouldn't have been done before have become acceptable," warns Leslie Dach, a veteran public-relations executive and Democratic activist. Another top PR executive describes the spread of manipulative tactics as "a race to the bottom." A third executive says bluntly that, in the persuasion business, "the rules of the game have changed. It's more crass, more transactional, more mutual back-scratching."

This degradation of the information marketplace should terrify everyone, but especially journalists who depend on its coherence and credibility. For us, policing the information space starts with understanding how it is abused.

Let's look at the war of leaks and counterleaks that has surrounded the feud pitting Qatar against Saudi Arabia and the UAE. Few can remember precisely what this Persian Gulf quarrel is about, but it certainly has generated some media spitballs.

Here's a quick chronology, thanks to a summary prepared by BuzzFeed: In May 2017, someone hacked Qatar's official Twitter account and posted pro-Iran statements; Qatar denied them, but Saudi Arabia and the UAE promptly severed relations. In June 2017, hackers revealed embarrassing emails from Yousef al-Otaiba, the UAE's ambassador to the United States. (Full disclosure: The leaks included an email in which Otaiba praised a positive piece I had written about Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman. Otaiba wrote: "Our job now is to [do] everything possible to ensure MBS succeeds." Otaiba was evidently referring to himself and his UAE colleagues; I wrote several critical pieces after that about MBS's policies at home and in Lebanon.)

The media war continued: In March, the New York Times revealed UAE payments to lobbyist Elliott Broidy, based on information provided "by someone critical of the Emirati influence in Washington." Later that month, Broidy sued Qatar and others, alleging that the leaks were a "hostile intelligence operation" and later, in an amended complaint, named a New York cyberdefense firm that allegedly organized the attacks. In April, The Post published details of Qatari payments to alleged terrorists in Iraq, based on phone and text messages provided "by a foreign government on the condition that the source not be revealed."

As the allegations zing back and forth in media space, readers must feel as if they're watching a ping-pong match. The public benefits from knowing some of the information, to be sure. But we need to explain better where our stories come from and why. Otherwise, everyone loses — maybe the media most of all.

Prosecutors Interview Comey As They Investigate Whether McCabe Should Be Charged

By Matt Zapotosky

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

Investigators from the D.C. U.S. Attorney's Office recently interviewed former FBI director James B. Comey as part of a probe into whether his deputy, Andrew McCabe, broke the law by lying to federal agents — an indication the office is seriously considering whether McCabe should be charged with a crime, a person familiar with the matter said.

Justice Department Inspector General Michael E. Horowitz accused McCabe in April of misleading investigators and Comey four times — three of them under oath — about authorizing a disclosure to the media. Horowitz referred the findings to the D.C. U.S. Attorney's Office to determine whether criminal charges are warranted.

Lying to federal investigators can carry a five-year prison sentence, though McCabe disputes that he intentionally misled anyone. Comey's interview, while significant, does not indicate prosecutors have reached any conclusions, and people familiar with the process said it is not surprising given the allegations McCabe faces. A referral from the inspector general does not guarantee charges will be filed.

Michael R. Bromwich, McCabe's lawyer, said in a statement: "A little more than a month ago, we confirmed that we had been advised that a criminal referral to the U.S. Attorney's Office had been made regarding Mr. McCabe. We said at that time that we were confident that, unless there is inappropriate pressure from high levels of the Administration, the U.S. Attorney's Office would conclude that it should decline to prosecute. Our view has not changed."

He added that "leaks concerning specific investigative steps the US Attorney's Office has allegedly taken are extremely disturbing."

A Justice Department spokeswoman and a lawyer for Comey declined to comment.

Even before the allegations against him, McCabe had become a lightning rod in the political battles over the FBI and special counsel Robert S. Mueller III's probe of Russian interference in the 2016 election. President Trump has frequently attacked the FBI's former No. 2 official, largely over political donations his wife took from an ally of Hillary Clinton when she ran for a seat in the Virginia legislature. McCabe was fired in March.

The U.S. attorney's investigation into McCabe is likely to intensify partisan squabbling, pitting respected law enforcement leaders against one another and potentially giving Trump ammunition to attack.

McCabe and Comey are at odds over the inspector general's findings. McCabe asserts that Comey knew he authorized the media disclosure, and Comey claims otherwise. Comey has said he "could well be a witness" against McCabe if McCabe were ever charged and tried.

McCabe also is somewhat at odds with Justice Department leaders.

He oversaw an investigation, which now seems to have concluded, into whether Attorney General Jeff Sessions lied to Congress about his contacts with Russians. He also kept notes detailing an interaction with Sessions's top deputy, Rod J. Rosenstein, that raise questions about a memo Rosenstein wrote justifying Comey's firing.

Rosenstein's memo took aim at Comey for his handling of the investigation into Clinton's use of a private email server while secretary of state. McCabe's notes, though, suggest Trump told Rosenstein before he authored the memo to mention Russia — though it was unclear in what respect, according to a person familiar with the matter.

The contents of the memo, which ultimately did not mention Russia, were first reported by the New York Times on Wednesday night. Bromwich suggested in his statement that the Times report might have motivated a disclosure of Comey's interview.

"We think it is no coincidence that these leaks follow within 24 hours of media stories — based on other leaks whose source is unknown to us — about memos written by Mr. McCabe that suggest potential criminal conduct by the President," Bromwich said. "We will be demanding a leaks investigation."

McCabe's interactions with Rosenstein could complicate any potential prosecution of McCabe because Rosenstein would likely be involved in a final decision on filing charges. McCabe has argued that the Justice Department's actions against him, including his firing, are retaliatory for his work on the Russia investigation.

Mueller is investigating Comey's firing as part of his examination into whether Trump obstructed justice, and Rosenstein is supervising Mueller's probe. The president has said publicly that the Russia case was on his mind when he fired Comey, though he tweeted Thursday that he "never fired James Comey because of Russia!"

Sessions fired McCabe from the bureau just 26 hours before he could retire, based on the inspector general's findings and a recommendation from the FBI's Office of Professional Responsibility.

The next morning, Trump took to Twitter to celebrate the move.

"Andrew McCabe FIRED, a great day for the hard working men and women of the FBI – A great day for Democracy," he wrote. "Sanctimonious James Comey was his boss and made McCabe look like a choirboy. He knew all about the lies and corruption going on at the highest levels of the FBI!"

By the inspector general's telling, in seeking to advance his own interests, McCabe authorized two FBI officials to talk to the Wall Street Journal about a story he believed would cast him as standing in the way of a probe of Hillary Clinton's foundation. Then, according to the inspector general, McCabe misled Comey and FBI and inspector general investigators about having done so.

The October 2016 story offered a detailed look at debates inside the Justice Department and FBI over two Clinton-related probes — the examination of her private email server and the separate case involving the foundation. It notably confirmed the existence of the foundation investigation and described an episode in which McCabe pushed back against a Justice Department official whom he perceived to be suggesting the FBI shut it down.

Comey and McCabe offered varying accounts of who authorized the disclosure for the article. They discussed the story the day after it was published, and Comey, according to the inspector general's report, told investigators McCabe "definitely did not tell me that he authorized" the disclosure.

"I have a strong impression he conveyed to me 'it wasn't me boss.' And I don't think that was by saying those words, I think it was most likely by saying 'I don't know how this s--- gets in the media or why would people talk about this kind of thing,' words that I would fairly take as 'I, Andy, didn't do it,' " Comey said, according to the inspector general.

McCabe has countered that emails between the two "clearly show that Mr. McCabe specifically advised Director Comey that he was working with colleagues at the FBI to correct inaccuracies in the story before it was published, and that they remained in contact through the weekend while the work was taking place." Those emails, though, were in reference to a different Wall Street Journal story about donations McCabe's wife had received from a political action committee controlled by Terry McAuliffe, a Clinton ally, McCabe's lawyer has acknowledged. The inspector general ultimately credited Comey's account.

Lying to Comey might not itself be a crime. But the inspector general alleged McCabe misled investigators three other times.

He told agents from the FBI inspection division on May 9, 2017, that he had not authorized the disclosure and did not know who had, the inspector general alleged. McCabe similarly told inspector general investigators on July 28 that he was not aware of one of the FBI officials, lawyer Lisa Page, having been authorized to speak to reporters, and because he was not in Washington on the days she did so, he could not say what she was doing. McCabe later admitted he authorized Page to talk to reporters.

The inspector general also alleged that McCabe lied in a final conversation in November, claiming that he had told Comey he had authorized the disclosure and that he had not claimed otherwise to inspection division agents in May.

Bromwich has said previously that McCabe's statements are "properly understood as the result of misunderstanding, miscommunication, and honest failures of recollection based on the swirl of events around him, statements which he subsequently corrected." He has also blasted McCabe's treatment and asserted that the inspector general did not detail "any understandable motive for his alleged wrongdoing."

Trump Campaign Spying – Obama Administration Investigation Aimed At Trump Campaign

National Review, May 30, 2018

Trey Gowdy and Marco Rubio evidently paid little attention to testimony before their own committees on how Obama officials made the Trump campaign the subject of a counterintelligence investigation.

Well, well, well. The bipartisan Beltway establishment has apparently had its fill of this "Trump colluded with Russia" narrative — the same narrative the same establishment has lustily peddled for nearly two years. The Obama administration recklessly chose to deploy the government's awesome counterintelligence powers to investigate — and, more to the point, to smear — its political opposition as a Kremlin confederate. Now that that this ploy has blown up on the Justice Department and the FBI, these agencies — the ones that went out of their way, and outside their guidelines, to announce to the world that the Trump campaign was under investigation — want you to know the president and his campaign were not investigated at all, no siree.

What could possibly have made you imagine such a thing?

And so, to douse the controversy with cold water, dutifully stepping forward in fine bipartisan fettle are the Obama administration's top intelligence official and two influential Capitol Hill Republicans who evidently pay little attention to major testimony before their own committees.

Former National Intelligence director James Clapper was first to the scene of the blaze. Clapper concedes that, well, yes, the FBI did run an informant — "spy" is such an icky word — at Trump campaign officials; but you must understand that this was merely to investigate Russia. Cross his heart, it had nothing to do with the Trump campaign. No, no, no. Indeed, they only used an informant because — bet you didn't know this — doing so is the most benign, least intrusive mode of conducting an investigation.

Me? I'm thinking the tens of thousands of convicts serving lengthy sentences due to the penetration of their schemes by informants would beg to differ. (Mr. Gambino, I assure you, this was just for you own good . . .) In any event, I'll leave it to the reader to imagine the Democrats' response if, say, the Bush administration had run a covert intelligence operative against Obama 2008 campaign officials, including the campaign's co-chairman. I'm sure David Axelrod, Chuck Schumer, the New York Times, and Rachel Maddow would chirp that "all is forgiven" once they heard Republicans punctiliously parse the nuances between investigating campaign officials versus the campaign proper; between "spies," "informants," and other government-directed covert operatives.

Sure!

Then there are Senator Marco Rubio (R., Fla.) and Representative Trey Gowdy (R., S.C.), General Clapper's fellow fire extinguishers.

Rubio is a member in good standing of that Washington pillar, the Senate Intelligence Committee, which has had about as much interest in scrutinizing the highly irregular actions of intelligence and law-enforcement officials in the Clinton and Russia probes as Gowdy's Benghazi committee had in revisiting Republican ardor for Obama's unprovoked war on Moammar Qaddafi. (That would be: roughly zero interest.)

Rubio told ABC News that he has seen "no evidence" that the FBI was gathering information about the Trump campaign. Rather, agents "were investigating individuals with a history of links to Russia that were concerning." The senator elaborated that "when individuals like that are in the orbit of a major political campaign in America, the FBI, who is in charge of counterintelligence investigations, should look at people like that."

Gee, senator, when you were carefully perusing the evidence of what the FBI was doing, did you ever sneak a peek at what the FBI said it was doing?

May I suggest, for example, the stunning public testimony by then-director James Comey on March 20, 2017, before the House Intelligence Committee — perhaps Representative Gowdy, who sits on that committee, could lend you the transcript, since he appears not to be using it. Just so we're clear, this is not an obscure scrap of evidence buried within volumes of testimony. It is the testimony that launched the Mueller probe, and that sets (or, better, fails to set) the parameters of that probe — a flaw the nation has been discussing for a year.

Comey's House testimony was breathtaking, not just because it confirmed the existence of a classified counterintelligence investigation, but because of what the bureau's then-director said about the Trump campaign (my italics):

I have been authorized by the Department of Justice to confirm that the FBI, as part of our counterintelligence mission, is investigating the Russian government's efforts to interfere in the 2016 presidential election and that includes investigating the nature of any links between individuals associated with the Trump campaign and the Russian government and whether there was any coordination between the campaign and Russia's efforts. . . .

That is an unambiguous declaration that the FBI was investigating the Trump campaign. That is why, for nearly two years, Washington has been entranced by the specter of "Trump collusion with Russia," not "Papadopoulos collusion with Russia." A campaign, of course, is an entity that acts through the individuals associated with it. But Comey went to extraordinary lengths to announce that the FBI was not merely zeroing in on individuals of varying ranks in the campaign; the main question was whether the Trump campaign itself — the entity — had "coordinated" in Russia's espionage operation.

Gowdy's fire truck pulled into Fox News Tuesday night for an interview by Martha MacCallum. An able lawyer, the congressman is suddenly on a mission to protect the Justice Department and the FBI from further criticism. So, when Ms. MacCallum posed the question about the FBI spying on the Trump campaign, Gowdy deftly changed the subject: Rather than address the campaign, he repeatedly insisted that Donald Trump personally was never the "target" of the FBI's investigation. The only "target," Gowdy maintains, was Russia.

This is a dodge on at least two levels.

First, to repeat, the question raised by the FBI's use of an informant is whether the bureau was investigating the Trump campaign. We'll come momentarily to the closely connected question of whether Trump can be airbrushed out of his own campaign — I suspect the impossibility of this feat is why Gowdy is resistant to discussing the Trump campaign at all.

It is a diversion for Gowdy to prattle on about how Trump himself was not a "target" of the Russia investigation. As we've repeatedly observed (and as Gowdy acknowledged in the interview), the Trump-Russia probe is a counterintelligence investigation. An accomplished prosecutor, Gowdy well knows that "target" is a term of art in criminal investigations, denoting a suspect who is likely to be indicted. The term is inapposite to counterintelligence investigations, which are not about building criminal cases but about divining and thwarting the provocative schemes of hostile foreign powers. In that sense, and in no other, the foreign power at issue — here, Russia — is always the "target" of a counterintelligence probe; but it is never a "target" in the technical criminal-investigation sense in which Gowdy used the term . . . unless you think we are going to indict a country.

Apart from the fact that Gowdy is dodging the question about whether the Trump campaign was being investigated, his digression about 'targets' is gibberish.

Moreover, even if we stick to the criminal-investigation sense of "target," Gowdy knows it is misleading to emphasize that Trump is not one. Just a few short weeks ago, Gowdy was heard pooh-poohing as "meaningless" media reporting that Trump had been advised he was not a "target" of Special Counsel Robert Mueller's probe (which is the current iteration of the Russia investigation). As the congressman quite correctly pointed out, if Trump is a subject of the investigation — another criminal-law term of art, denoting a person whose conduct is under scrutiny, but who may or may not be indicted — it should be of little comfort that he is not a "target"; depending on how the evidence shakes out, a subject can become a target in the blink of an eye.

So, apart from the fact that Gowdy is dodging the question about whether the Trump campaign was being investigated, his digression about "targets" is gibberish. Since the Obama administration was using its counterintelligence powers (FISA surveillance, national-security letters, unmasking identities in intelligence reporting, all bolstered by the use of at least one covert informant), the political-spying issue boils down to whether the Trump campaign was being monitored. Whether Trump himself was apt to be indicted, and whether threats posed by Russia were the FBI's focus, are beside the point; in a counterintelligence case, an indictment is never the objective, and a foreign power is always the focus.

Second, if Gowdy has been paying attention, he must know that, precisely because the Trump campaign was under investigation, top FBI officials had qualms of conscience over Comey's plan to give Trump a misleading assurance that he personally was not under investigation. If this has slipped Gowdy mind, perhaps Rubio could lend him the transcript of Comey's testimony before the Senate Intelligence Committee — in particular, a section Rubio seems not to remember, either.

A little background. On January 6, 2017, Comey, Clapper, CIA director John Brennan, and NSA chief Michael Rogers visited President-elect Trump in New York to brief him on the Russia investigation. Just one day earlier, at the White House, Comey and then–acting attorney general Sally Yates had met with the political leadership of the Obama administration — President Obama, Vice President Biden, and national-security adviser Susan Rice — to discuss withholding information about the Russia investigation from the incoming Trump administration.

Ms. Rice put this sleight-of-hand a bit more delicately in her CYA memo-to-file about the Oval Office meeting (written two weeks after the fact, as Rice was leaving her office minutes after Trump's inauguration):

President Obama said he wants to be sure that, as we engage with the incoming team, we are mindful to ascertain if there is any reason that we cannot share information fully as it relates to Russia. [Emphasis added.]

It is easy to understand why Obama officials needed to discuss withholding information from Trump. They knew that the Trump campaign — not just some individuals tangentially connected to the campaign — was the subject of an ongoing FBI counterintelligence probe. Indeed, we now know that Obama's Justice Department had already commenced FISA surveillance on Trump campaign figures, and that it was preparing to return to the FISA court to seek renewal of the surveillance warrants. We also know that at least one informant was still deployed. And we know that the FBI withheld information about the investigation from the congressional "Gang of Eight" during quarterly briefings from July 2106 through early March 2017. (See Comey testimony March 20, 2017, questioning by Representative Elise Stefanik (R., N.Y.).) Director Comey said Congress's most trusted leaders were not apprised of the investigation because "it was a matter of such sensitivity." Putting aside that the need to alert Congress to sensitive matters is exactly why there is a Gang of Eight, the palpable reason why the matter was deemed too "sensitive" for disclosure was that it involved the incumbent administration's investigation of the opposition campaign.

Clearly, the Obama officials did not want Trump to know the full scope of their investigation of his campaign. But just as important, they wanted the investigation — an "insurance policy" that promised to hamstring Trump's presidency — to continue.

Clearly, the Obama officials did not want Trump to know the full scope of their investigation of his campaign.

So, how to accomplish these objectives? Plainly, the plan called for Comey to put the new president at ease by telling him he was not a suspect. This would not have been a credible assurance if Comey had informed Trump that his campaign had been under investigation for months, suspected of coordinating in Russia's cyber-espionage operation. So, information would be withheld. The intelligence chiefs would tell Trump only about Russia's espionage, not about the Trump campaign's suspected "coordination" with the Kremlin. Then, Comey would apprise Trump about only a sliver of the Steele dossier — just the lurid story about peeing prostitutes, not the dossier's principal allegations of a traitorous Trump-Russia conspiracy.

As I've previously recounted, this did not sit well with everyone at the FBI. Shortly before he met with Trump, Comey consulted his top FBI advisers about the plan to tell Trump he was not a suspect. There was an objection from one of Comey's top advisers — we don't know which one. Comey recounted this disagreement for the Senate Intelligence Committee (my italics):

One of the members of the leadership team had a view that, although it was technically true [that] we did not have a counterintelligence file case open on then-President-elect Trump[,] . . . because we're looking at the potential . . . coordination between the campaign and Russia, because it was . . . President-elect Trump's campaign, this person's view was, inevitably, [Trump's] behavior, [Trump's] conduct will fall within the scope of that work.

Representative Gowdy and Senator Rubio might want to read that testimony over a few times.

They might note that Comey did not talk about "potential coordination between Carter Page or Paul Manafort and Russia." The director was unambiguous: The FBI was investigating "potential coordination between the Trump campaign and Russia." With due respect to Gowdy, the FBI did not regard Russia as the "target"; to the contrary, Comey said the focus of the investigation was whether Donald Trump's campaign had coordinated in Russia's election interference. And perspicaciously, Comey's unidentified adviser connected the dots: Because (a) the FBI's investigation was about the campaign, and (b) the campaign was Trump's campaign, it was necessarily true that (c) Trump's own conduct was under FBI scrutiny.

Director Comey's reliance on the trivial administrative fact that the FBI had not written Trump's name on the investigative file did not change the reality that Trump, manifestly, was a subject of the "Crossfire Hurricane" investigation. If Trump were not a subject of the investigation, there would be no conceivable justification for Special Counsel Mueller to be pushing to interview the president of the United States. If Trump were not a subject of the investigation, Trump's political opponents would not have spent the last 18 months accusing him of obstruction and demanding that Mueller be permitted to finish his work.

In the interview with Ms. MacCallum, Representative Gowdy further confused matters by stressing Trump's observation, in a phone conversation with Comey on March 30, 2017, that it would be good to find out if underlings in his campaign had done anything wrong. This, according to Gowdy, means Trump should be pleased, rather than outraged, by what the FBI did: By steering an informant at three campaign officials, we're to believe that the bureau was doing exactly what Trump suggested.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Gowdy's argument assumes something that is simply not true: namely, that the Trump campaign was not under investigation.

Such a specious argument. So disappointing to hear it from someone who clearly knows better.

First, the informant reportedly began approaching campaign officials in July 2016. It was nine months later, well after the election, when President Trump told Comey that if would be good if the FBI uncovered any wrongdoing by his "satellites." Trump was not endorsing spying during the campaign; the campaign was long over. The president was saying that it would be worth continuing the FBI's Russia investigation in order to root out any thus-far-undiscovered wrongdoing — but only if the FBI informed the public that Trump was not a suspect (an announcement Comey declined to make).

Second, Gowdy's argument assumes something that is simply not true: namely, that the Trump campaign was not under investigation. As we've seen, Comey testified multiple times that the FBI was investigating the Trump campaign for possible coordination with Russia. The bureau was not, as Gowdy suggests, merely investigating a few campaign officials for suspicious contacts with Russia unrelated to the campaign.

That brings us to a final point. In support of the neon-flashing fact that the Trump campaign was under investigation when the Obama administration ran an informant at it, there is much more than former Director Comey's testimony.

Probes conducted by both the House Intelligence Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee have established that the Obama Justice Department and the FBI used the Steele dossier to obtain FISA-court warrants against Carter Page. The dossier, a Clinton-campaign opposition-research project (a fact withheld from the FISA court), was essential to the required probable-cause showing; the FBI's former deputy director, Andrew McCabe, testified that without the dossier there would have been no warrant.

So . . . what did the dossier say? The lion's share of it — the part Director Comey omitted from his briefing of Trump — alleged that the Trump campaign was conspiring with the Kremlin to corrupt the election, including by hacking and publicizing Democratic-party emails.

We also know, thanks to more testimony by Director Comey, that dossier information was presented to the FISA court because the Justice Department and the FBI found former British spy Christopher Steele to be reliable (even if they could not corroborate Steele's unidentified Russian sources). That is, the FBI and Justice Department believed Steele's claim that the Trump campaign was willfully complicit in Russia's treachery.

It is a major investigative step to seek surveillance warrants from the FISA court. Unlike using an informant, for which no court authorization is necessary, applications for FISA surveillance require approvals at the highest levels of the Justice Department and the FBI. After going through that elaborate process, the Obama Justice Department and the FBI presented to the court the dossier's allegations that the Trump campaign was coordinating with Russia to undermine the 2016 election.

If that was their position under oath before a secret United States court, why would anyone conceivably believe that it was not their position when they ran an informant at members of the campaign they were investigating?

To be sure, no sensible person argues that the FBI should refrain from investigating individuals suspected of acting as clandestine agents of a hostile foreign power. The question is: How should such an investigation proceed in a democratic republic whose norms forbid an incumbent administration, in the absence of strong evidence of egregious misconduct, from directing its counterintelligence and law-enforcement powers against its political opposition?

That norm was flouted by the Justice Department and the FBI, under the direction of the Obama administration's senior political leadership. Representative Gowdy, Senator Rubio, and General Clapper maintain that the Justice Department and the FBI were just doing what we should expect them to do, and that we should applaud them. But this claim is based on the easily refuted fiction that the Justice Department and FBI were not investigating the Trump campaign. The claim also ignores the stubborn fact that, if all the Obama administration had been trying to do was check out a few bad apples with suspicious Russia ties, this could easily have been done by alerting the Trump campaign and asking for its help.

Instead, Obama officials made the Trump campaign the subject of a counterintelligence investigation.

FBI Spy Stefan Halper's Media Contacts Could Pose A Problem, Retired FBI Officials Say

By Chuck Ross

Daily Caller, May 31, 2018

FBI spy Stefan Halper interacted with the media multiple times, according to a Cambridge researcher

Former senior FBI officials said the interactions could be a cause for concern for the FBI, one calling them "highly irregular"

Halper was reportedly an anonymous source on reports surrounding allegations about Michael Flynn's relations with a Russian national

While working as a spy for the FBI, Stefan Halper interacted on multiple occasions with the media, both on the record and, according to a University of Cambridge researcher, as an anonymous background source.

Those media interactions, which occurred between December 2016 and March 2017, could be cause for concern for the FBI, according to two retired senior bureau officials who worked closely with confidential informants during their careers.

"This is something that is highly irregular and not something that I would have ever tolerated with any of the folks working for me," retired FBI investigator and CNN analyst James Gagliano told The Daily Caller News Foundation. "The road is fraught with peril when somebody is speaking off the cuff or speaking to the media and putting themselves in a position where that can then be used as discovery material when we do bring a case."

Law Enforcement Legal Defense Fund President Ron Hosko, a former assistant director of the FBI's criminal investigative division, added that an informant's interactions with the press could create circular reporting that would serve to make their information "appear more valuable or more true" than it actually is.

Halper, a former professor at Cambridge with extensive ties to the CIA and MI6, was quoted on the record for a Dec.16, 2016 article at the Financial Times about alleged Russian infiltration of the Cambridge Intelligence Seminar, a forum that convenes academics and current and former spies to discuss intelligence issues.

Halper, 73, told the Financial Times that he resigned from the organization due to "unacceptable Russian influence on the group." But the evidence of Russian penetration was thin, and another Cambridge professor, Christopher Andrew, dismissed Halper's complaints as "absurd."

Halper was also an unnamed source for allegations about former national security adviser Michael Flynn, according to a Russian-British researcher at Cambridge, Svetlana Lokhova.

Lokhova, who studies the history of Russian intelligence, said multiple reporters have told her Halper was behind allegations that she and Flynn had an improper relationship when he visited Cambridge in February 2014. Flynn served at the time as director of the Defense Intelligence Agency.

"'FBI confidential informant' Halper invented a false story which he passed on to official channels & Press, in full knowledge [sic] his personal attack was going to cause me, an innocent party, enormous harm," Lokhova wrote on Twitter.

She also told The (London) Times that "Halper told reporters he had seen me leaving the dinner with Flynn."

Reporters from three newspapers, The Washington Post, The New York Times and The Wall Street Journal, approached Lokhova at around the same time in February and March 2016 with allegations related to her interaction with Flynn.

According to The Journal, which was the only newspaper to publish a story on the matter, Lokhova sat next to Flynn at the dinner and showed him an erotic postcard that Joseph Stalin sent in 1912. The Journal reported that American authorities had been alerted to Flynn's interactions with Lokhova and that Flynn had failed to disclose his contact with the researcher to the Defense Intelligence Agency.

DIA official Dan O'Brien, who accompanied Flynn to and from the event, said he saw nothing at the dinner that warranted Flynn's disclosure of the interaction with Lokhova.

DIA spokesman James Kudla told TheDCNF this week that officials are required to disclose contact with a foreign national that is of a "close and continuing nature," but "casual contact" does not need to be reported to the agency.

It has since been revealed that Halper, a veteran of three Republican administrations, first raised concerns about Flynn and Lokhova's interactions at the Cambridge event.

The New York Times reported on May 18 that the FBI spy — which the newspaper did not identify but who is now known to be Halper — "was alarmed" by Flynn's "apparent closeness with a Russian woman who was also in attendance" at the Cambridge seminar.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"The concern was strong enough that it prompted another person to pass on a warning to the American authorities that Mr. Flynn could be compromised by Russian intelligence, according to two people familiar with the matter," reads the report.

Lokhova denies any impropriety between her and Flynn.

"They were throwing all sorts of things at me — love, sex, money. Obviously, I reject them all," Lokhova told The (London) Times about her interactions with reporters chasing the Flynn story. "I just want to add that I've never been interviewed by any authorities and clearly if there were any doubts about who I am and what I do, I would have been [interrogated]."

Lokhova said that reporters with The New York Times and The Washington Post declined to run stories about her and Flynn for lack of evidence.

The University of Cambridge has not responded to numerous requests for comment about Halper, Flynn or Lokhova. But it appears that the university is not overly concerned that Lokhova is a Russian agent, as Halper initially feared.

On May 18, Lokhova gave a presentation for her forthcoming book, "The Spy Who Changed History," at the Cambridge Intelligence Seminar. Former MI6 head Sir Richard Dearlove, a close associate of Halper's, convened the event, though he did not personally attend.

At the same time he was in contact with the media, Halper was also working as a spy for the FBI as part of its investigation of possible Russian infiltration of the Trump campaign.

As part of that operation, Halper was in contact with three Trump campaign associates: Carter Page, Sam Clovis and George Papadopoulos. The relationship with Page began in July 2016 and lasted through September 2017.

Halper met Clovis once on Sept. 1, 2016. The next day, Halper reached out to Papadopoulos and offered to fly the young Trump campaign aide to London to discuss work on an academic paper dealing with energy issues. Halper paid Papadopoulos $3,000 for the report.

Papadopoulos has told associates that during one dinner they had in London, Halper randomly asked whether he was involved in Russia's efforts to steal Democrats' emails.

Halper also attempted to join the Trump administration. Axios reported on May 21 that Halper convinced White House trade czar Peter Navarro to submit his name for consideration for an ambassadorship to an unidentified Asian country.

Navarro said Wednesday he felt "duped" by Halper, who is considered an expert on China.

Halper's contacts with the press while working as an FBI spy could be problematic for the bureau for several reasons, according to Hosko, a 30-year FBI veteran.

"The handling agents should be alert to actions by a source that indicate they are trying to influence FBI credibility [and] veracity assessments by engaging in acts that multiply their reporting," Hosko told TheDCNF.

Hosko said that in some cases, confidential sources could meet with the press if the topic is unrelated to their work for the FBI.

"But, if the [confidential human source] is meeting with the media in a manner that raises questions about their motivation or about their credibility (they fail to disclose same to the handling agent) then the FBI should be reassessing the relationship."

It is not known whether the FBI was aware of Halper's media contacts. The bureau declined to comment, and Halper could not be reached for comment.

Gagliano, the CNN analyst and 25-year FBI veteran, told TheDCNF that he would not "in a million years … agree to allow a source, an asset, cooperating witness to speak in the media."

Halper is not the only FBI source who worked on the Russia investigation to have contact with the press. Former British spy Christopher Steele had multiple meetings and conversations with reporters about the infamous anti-Trump dossier he wrote during the campaign.

At the direction of opposition research firm Fusion GPS, Steele met with reporters from The Washington Post, The New York Times, The New Yorker, Yahoo! News and Mother Jones.

According to the Senate Judiciary Committee, the FBI severed its relationship with Steele just before the election after finding out about his unauthorized contacts with the media.

Clapper: No 'Smoking Gun' Evidence Of Collusion

By Chuck Ross

Daily Caller, May 31, 2018

James Clapper, the former director of National Intelligence, said he has not seen "smoking gun" or "direct" evidence of collusion between the Trump campaign and Russian government.

"I saw no smoking-gun evidence of collusion before I left the government, and I still haven't," Clapper told Vox in an interview Thursday to promote his new book, "Facts and Fears: Hard Truths From a Life in Intelligence." "There is a lot of circumstantial evidence and reasons to be suspicious, but no smoking gun as of yet."

Clapper did say he was interested in the number of contacts between members of the Trump campaign and people linked to the Russian government. He wrote in "Facts and Fears" that "the dashboard warning lights were all lit."

"I certainly wondered about [collusion] when I saw the frequency of meetings between people in the Trump campaign and people with ties to the Russian government," said Clapper, who now works as a CNN analyst.

Clapper went on to say he hopes that Special Counsel Robert Mueller will be able to get to the bottom of whether the campaign colluded with the Kremlin. The allegation is laid out most directly in the infamous dossier written by former British spy Christopher Steele, funded by Democrats.

"The country badly needs a resolution on this issue because it hangs over us like a cloud right now," Clapper told Vox. "I'm certainly not saying there was no collusion; I just haven't seen any direct evidence of it yet."

Scoop: Donald Trump Repeatedly Pressured Jeff Sessions On Robert Mueller Investigation

By Jonathan Swan

Axios, May 31, 2018

Scoop: Trump repeatedly pressured Sessions on Mueller investigation

President Trump pressured Attorney General Jeff Sessions to reclaim control of the Russia investigation on at least four separate occasions, three times in person and once over the phone, according to sources familiar with the conversations.

Why it matters: The fact that there were multiple conversations shows that Trump's pressure on Sessions to stop recusing himself was heavier than previously known. The sustained pressure made several officials uncomfortable, because they viewed it as improper and worry that it could be politically and legally problematic.

What we're hearing: The New York Times this week reported on one of these conversations— which occurred at Mar-a-Lago in March 2017 — and said Robert Mueller is investigating it. But Trump's other direct conversations with Sessions about the subject have not been previously reported.

A source with knowledge of the conversations said they occurred throughout last year, until fairly late in the year — not just in the short period after Sessions recused himself last March.

The details: Two sources familiar with the conversations told me the president never, to their knowledge, ordered Sessions to cancel his recusal from the Russia investigation. Instead, he asked Sessions whether he'd "thought about" un-recusing himself.

Trump told Sessions he'd be a "hero" to conservatives if he did the "right thing" and took back control over the Russia investigation, according to two sources with knowledge of their conversations.

Trump also told Sessions he'd be a hero if he investigated Hillary Clinton, according to one of the sources.

Trump also repeated the "hero" line separately to aides and privately mused about whether it would be possible to limit the scope of the Mueller investigation to avoid his business affairs.

The White House declined to comment, as did a spokeswoman for Sessions.

"It's not just payback; it's punishment. It's never enough to win. There's never too much blood. There's never too many guts on the floor. That's his mentality. If you give him a paper cut he'll never forget that paper cut."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

— Source who talks frequently to Trump

Behind the scenes: Four sources with direct knowledge told me Trump has been obsessed by the Mueller investigation over the past year. That's been clear from his tweets. But privately he's been brooding about it so persistently, people close to him worry he can't help but make the situation worse for himself.

He views the phrase "witch hunt" as his PR branding of the investigation, but he also truly believes he has been wronged. Much of his desire for investigating Clinton and Barack Obama comes from a desire for retribution, sources who have discussed the matter with Trump told me.

Trump takes out much of his anger on the White House Counsel Don McGahn, according to sources who've watched them interact. McGahn made it clear to White House staff from the outset that he was the person who should be communicating with the Justice Department.

The New York Times first reported that McGahn, following Trump's orders, lobbied Sessions to remain in charge of the Russia investigation. A source with knowledge of their conversations shared more details with Axios:

McGahn spoke to Sessions about the recusal before Sessions decided to recuse himself. According to a source with knowledge of the situation, Sessions told McGahn he was considering recusal and McGahn asked the Attorney General whether he'd exhausted all his options, and whether he'd looked at the Department of Justice guidelines carefully.

Sessions told McGahn he'd already asked Justice Department ethics officials for their opinion. "At that point Don said, 'well I'm out of it'," the source said.

Saving Sessions: Inside The GOP Effort To Protect The AG

By Jonathan Lemire, Eric Tucker And Lisa Mascaro

Associated Press, May 31, 2018

WASHINGTON (AP) — Days after President Donald Trump deemed Jeff Sessions "beleaguered" and threatened to fire him last July, members of the president's inner circle made a desperate case to save the attorney general's job.

The White House chief of staff, Reince Priebus, and the president's chief strategist, Steve Bannon, pleaded with Trump during a heated Oval Office meeting to keep Sessions, warning that his dismissal would only pour gasoline on the Russia investigation. And, they said, it could alienate those in Trump's conservative base, supporters enamored with the attorney general's tough stances on law enforcement and immigration.

Priebus and Bannon both were out of their jobs within the month. But Sessions survived, his reprieve delivered by John Kelly as one of his first acts as chief of staff.

Ten months later, the Republican campaign to save Sessions has continued and — at least for now — succeeded. In private meetings, public appearances on television and late-night phone calls, Trump's advisers and allies have done all they can to persuade the president not to fire a Cabinet official he dismisses as disloyal. The effort is one of the few effective Republican attempts to install guardrails around a president who delights in defying advice and breaking the rules.

Trump attorney Rudy Giuliani says special counsel Robert Mueller must turn in a report on his investigation by September or risk meddling with the midterm elections. Giuliani spoke to reporters outside the White House on Wednesday. (May 31)

It's an ongoing effort, though not everyone is convinced the relationship is sustainable for the long term.

As recently as this month, Trump lawyer Rudy Giuliani said the president had raised the issue again, wondering aloud if he'd made a mistake in not firing Sessions. And both Giuliani and influential Republican lawmakers have hinted that, once special counsel Robert Mueller's probe wraps up, Sessions could be in danger again.

"There's no doubt he's complained about him, there's no doubt he has some grievances. I don't know they've aired them out yet. He's not going to fire him before this is over," Giuliani told reporters Wednesday. "Nor do I think he should."

The campaign to save Sessions hasn't tempered Trump's anger at the attorney general's decision to recuse himself from the Russia probe, an act the president believed birthed the Mueller investigation, which is imperiling his presidency. In a Wednesday tweet, Trump again declared he regretted appointing the former Alabama senator to the job in a familiar, but no less stunning, public rebuke of a sitting Cabinet official.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Despite the withering complaints, Trump appears to comprehend the potential consequences of firing Sessions and seems resigned to the idea that he's stuck with him for the time being, according to nearly a dozen people close to the decision, who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss private conversations.

The case that Sessions' protectors have outlined to Trump time and again largely consists of three components: Firing Sessions, a witness in Mueller's investigation of obstruction of justice, would add legal peril to his standing in the Russia probe; doing so would anger the president's political base, which Trump cares deeply about, especially with midterm election looming this fall; and a number of Republican senators would rebel against the treatment of a longtime colleague who was following Justice Department guidelines in his recusal.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, has said that he will not schedule a confirmation hearing for another attorney general nominee if Sessions is fired.

Giuliani told The Associated Press on Wednesday that Trump has asked him multiple times, before and after the former New York mayor joined the president's legal team last month, about whether Sessions should have been fired.

More recently, Giuliani said Trump has not actively considered firing Sessions but has wondered if he made the right decision in not doing so previously.

"And when he asks, 'Should I have done that?' I say, 'No, the way it is now has worked out,'" Giuliani said.

Influential conservatives have also heard Trump lash out about Sessions and, though some have sympathy for the concerns, have repeatedly talked him out of doing anything drastic, said one person in touch with both men who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss private conversations. The person recalled a venting session after a meeting at the White House last fall, when the president aired his frustrations with the attorney general about his recusal. The person expressed sympathy, but argued against firing Sessions.

While the recusal remains Sessions' original sin in Trump's eyes, the president has also fumed that he sees Sessions as failing to get a handle on immigration and not placing enough emphasis on combating transnational criminal organizations.

After being berated by Trump over the recusal decision last spring, Sessions offered his resignation, but the overture was rejected. He is widely viewed as determined to stay in the job because he believes in the president's agenda, which largely mirrors his own interests, and is reluctant to leave a job for which he gave up a Senate seat. Hours after the president's attack on Wednesday, Sessions visited the White House for a routine litigation issue, a Justice Department official said.

There may be a limit to how long the campaign to save Sessions can hold on. Giuliani on Wednesday only offered assurances Trump would not fire Sessions during the Mueller investigation, because of the "distraction" it would cause.

And a number of Republican senators who have supported Sessions have indicated in recent days that they are warming to Trump's complaints.

Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, who in March said firing Sessions would "blow up" the Judiciary Committee, struck a different tone Wednesday, noting that Cabinet positions are "not lifetime appointments." Looking ahead to fall elections, he has reinforced to Trump that the best approach now "is to keep focused on good governance in the midterms."

At some point, Graham said, Sessions will "have to make a decision" that if "you don't have the confidence" of the president, "that will affect your ability to be effective."

Trump Is Tightening His Grip Around The Neck Of The Justice Department

By Quinta Jurecic

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

Quinta Jurecic is managing editor of the Lawfare blog.

Is the president succeeding in his war against the Russia investigation? At least twice, Donald Trump has made up his mind to fire special counsel Robert S. Mueller III — and at least twice he has backed down. Deputy Attorney General Rod J. Rosenstein, who oversees Mueller, still has his job. The special counsel's office continues its work. And yet, more and more, Trump is tightening his grip around the neck of the Justice Department.

The latest skirmish between the president and Justice Department leadership involved a tweeted presidential "demand" for a probe into whether "the FBI/DOJ infiltrated" his campaign and a departmental briefing for congressional leaders that, alarmingly, also included the chief White House lawyer handling the Russia investigation for Trump. The president's actions crossed many of the lines drawn after Watergate to prevent White House meddling in law enforcement and ensure the role of Congress as a purveyor of good-faith oversight, not an ally in the president's abuses. But the country avoided the constitutional showdown that could have resulted if Trump had insisted on forcing the FBI to open a criminal investigation.

The episode followed a familiar pattern. The president, seizing on a conspiracy theory percolating among his political allies, lashed out at his battered Justice Department. The Justice Department dodged the blow. We've seen this dynamic play out again and again over the course of the past year. In other words, it was nothing out of the ordinary for a week in the Trump presidency: a spasm that ultimately resolved into nothing more than a resigned, "Well, there he goes again."

There's a good argument — perhaps even a correct one — that the initial panic about a brewing constitutional crisis was overblown. What Rosenstein surrendered was relatively minor compared with what he could have been forced to give up, another instance of the pattern in which Trump and his allies demand a mile and the deputy attorney general gives an inch.

But inches add up. Another way of understanding recent events is this: The president won a major victory in his effort to seize control of the Russia investigation — and everyone breathed a sigh of relief.

Make no mistake, the president is growing bolder. Again and again over the past year, Trump has sidled right up to the line of demanding control over the Justice Department; indeed, he has told us, repeatedly, that this is his plan. This time, instead of wheedling or hinting at his desire that the department shutter the Mueller investigation and prosecute his political enemies, the president issued a direct order for the department to "look into" alleged spying on his campaign.

And he did so in the most public way possible: on Twitter. Compare this with James B. Comey's description of Trump's effort to coax him into dropping the FBI investigation into Michael Flynn. In that case, the president hinted that he hoped Comey could "see [his] way clear to letting this go" and waited for a private conversation to do so — a sign, Comey wrote in his memoir, that Trump understood the sweet-talking to be "inappropriate." More than a year later, the president has dropped any pretense of shame or delicacy. He no longer bothers to soften his requests with "I hope" or wait until the Oval Office door is closed to make demands.

Trump is not a brave man. He complains endlessly about Attorney General Jeff Sessions and the Mueller investigation on Twitter, but he has never brought himself to the point of actually dismissing Sessions or shutting down the investigation. What he has done instead is gradually chip away at the independence of the Justice Department, so that each new incursion appears not particularly radical or troubling. And when he really does draw blood, as he did last week, the country responds with relief that the damage was only a scratch instead of a killing blow.

For Trump, this may be a conscious strategy, or it may be the result of instinct and cowardice. For Justice Department leadership, it's a losing game, a choice of death by a thousand cuts or all at once. For the public, the result is confusion. If Washington had seen a real standoff between Trump and Justice Department leadership, the urgency of the moment would have been easy to comprehend. Americans have a template with which to understand such a crisis; the comparison to the Saturday Night Massacre draws itself.

Yet the danger presented by the gradual erosion of rule-of-law norms is much harder to communicate with that same intensity — partially because the danger is more gradual but also because the harm is more complex. Most people have no reason to know about the network of post-Watergate laws and standards designed to prevent abuses of power, through which Trump's actions this past week tore a hole.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

We might blame this on apathy. We might blame this on a failure of civic education. And we might ask what it means that the threat posed by the president to the rule of law may be too abstract and complex to be felt deeply — perhaps until Trump drags us into truly uncharted territory.

Trump Escalates Fight With ABC After 'Roseanne' Cancellation

By Catherine Lucey
Associated Press, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump escalated a grudge against ABC on Thursday in the wake of the cancellation of "Roseanne," tweeting at the chief executive of ABC's parent company.

Trump targeted Robert Iger on Twitter, saying: "Iger, where is my call of apology? You and ABC have offended millions of people, and they demand a response."

Trump specifically complained about an erroneous report last year by an ABC investigative reporter Brian Ross, saying: "He tanked the market with an ABC lie, yet no apology. Double Standard!"

ABC did not immediately respond to a request for comment on Trump's tweets. The network previously apologized for the report about Michael Flynn and suspended Ross and told him he could no longer report on Trump. ABC confirmed that Ross is back at work following his suspension.

Iger, where is my call of apology? You and ABC have offended millions of people, and they demand a response. How is Brian Ross doing? He tanked the market with an ABC lie, yet no apology. Double Standard!— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) May 31, 2018

The president also complained to Iger a day earlier. The White House said Trump, who had celebrated the success of Roseanne Barr's show earlier in the year, was not defending her racist tweet about a former Obama adviser, but wanted to point out media bias against him.

Last year, Ross, citing an unidentified confidant of Flynn, the former national security adviser, reported that then-candidate Donald Trump had directed Flynn to make contact with the Russians.

That would have been an explosive development in the ongoing investigation into whether the Trump campaign colluded with Russia to interfere in the election. But hours later, Ross clarified his report, saying that his source now said Trump had done so not as a candidate, but as president-elect. At that point, he said, Trump had asked Flynn to contact the Russians about issues including working together to fight ISIS.

ABC was widely criticized for initially clarifying and not correcting the report. It later issued a correction, saying they "deeply regret and apologize."

At the time, Trump tweeted: "Congratulations to @ABC News for suspending Brian Ross for his horrendously inaccurate and dishonest report on the Russia, Russia, Russia Witch Hunt. More Networks and "papers" should do the same with their Fake News!"

President Trump Keeps Up Attack On Disney's Bob Iger: 'Where Is My Call Of Apology?'

By Jessica Estepa
USA Today, May 31, 2018

President Trump again called on Bob Iger to apologize for its coverage of him, saying that he and ABC had "offended millions of people."

"Iger, where is my call of apology?" Trump tweeted Thursday morning. "You and ABC have offended millions of people, and they demand a response. How is Brian Ross doing? He tanked the market with an ABC lie, yet no apology. Double Standard!"

The president was referring to ABC News reporter Brian Ross, who erroneously reported late last year that Trump had asked Michael Flynn to make contact with the Russians during the 2016 presidential campaign.

Ross corrected the report afterward, saying that Trump made the request when he was president-elect, not a candidate.

ABC suspended Ross and also apologized for the report: "We deeply regret and apologize for the serious error we made yesterday. The reporting conveyed by Brian Ross during the special report had not been fully vetted through our editorial standards process."

The president's latest missive came a day after he first criticized Iger — the CEO of Disney, ABC's parent company — for apologizing to

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Valerie Jarrett over a racist tweet from Roseanne Barr, but not apologizing to him.

Iger and Trump has previously been at odds. Iger left Trump's business advisory council after Trump pulled out of the Paris climate agreement. He also criticized Trump for ending the Obama-era Deferred Action on Childhood Arrivals program (DACA).

The White House has said that the president was merely calling out media bias, not defending Barr.

"No one is defending what she said," Press Secretary Sarah Sanders said Wednesday. "The president is the president of all the country."

President Trump Again Asks For Apology From Disney Chief After 'Roseanne' Cancellation

By Emily Heil

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

President Trump is continuing to react to the controversy over the cancellation of "Roseanne," which was taken off the air Tuesday after lead actress Roseanne Barr posted offensive and racist tweets.

Trump on Thursday repeated his complaint that Disney chief Bob Iger has not apologized to him for anti-Trump comments made by ABC personalities, something he believes is a double standard since Iger got in touch with Valerie Jarrett, the former top aide to President Barack Obama who was the target of Barr's racist comments. Jarrett said Iger called her on Tuesday before announcing that ABC, which is owned by Disney, was pulling the plug on "Roseanne."

"Iger, where is my call of apology?" Trump tweeted. "You and ABC have offended millions of people, and they demand a response. How is Brian Ross doing? He tanked the market with an ABC lie, yet no apology. Double Standard!"

Iger, where is my call of apology? You and ABC have offended millions of people, and they demand a response. How is Brian Ross doing? He tanked the market with an ABC lie, yet no apology. Double Standard!— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) May 31, 2018

Trump is referring to ABC News reporter Brian Ross, who was suspended after making an error in a report last year when he said Trump had directed his national security adviser, Michael Flynn, to make contact with the Russians during the 2016 presidential campaign.

Ross later corrected the report, noting that Trump made the request after the election when he was the president-elect, not a candidate. Ross and ABC News apologized for the mistake.

It was the second day that Trump aired his grievances against Iger and ABC. He tweeted Wednesday morning that Iger "never called President Donald J. Trump to apologize for the HORRIBLE statements made and said about me on ABC. Maybe I just didn't get the call?"

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders, during a briefing later that day, offered a list of network personalities who had made anti-Trump comments. "The president is pointing to the hypocrisy in the media saying the most horrible things about this president and nobody addresses it," she said.

Iger has yet to respond publicly, and an ABC representative did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Meanwhile, ABC found another critic in Tom Arnold, the comedian and ex-husband of Barr, who said in an interview with CNN on Wednesday night that he couldn't believe the network hadn't done more after bringing back "Roseanne" to curb Barr's long-standing habit of sharing conspiracy theories on Twitter. "I was surprised they didn't do anything about it," Arnold told Anderson Cooper. "I figured someone would take her phone away or monitor, because it's dangerous."

He said he had predicted Barr's Twitter feed would land her in trouble. "When I read her social media in the very beginning, and I saw how she was so into the conspiracy stuff with Donald Trump and so how far gone she was, and the 'Pizzagate' and 'Hillary is a pedophile' and 'Obama wasn't born here,' she was, you know, a 'birther,' and how crazy that was — I just knew that this would not end well," Arnold said.

Barr, though, continued to tweet following her firing, and she spent hours Wednesday retweeting supporters and continuing to defend herself on the platform. She even said that the support she has received from like-minded people had made her consider "fighting back."

you guys make me feel like fighting back. I will examine all of my options carefully and get back to U.— Roseanne Barr (@therealroseanne) May 30, 2018

And it seems that John Goodman, the actor who played Barr's TV husband, is the only one who isn't weighing in on the matter. Unlike his fellow castmates, many of whom distanced themselves from Barr and her words, Goodman says he prefers to stay mum on the matter.

"I would rather say nothing than to cause more trouble," he told an interviewer for Entertainment Tonight, who caught up with the actor at an auto-repair shop in Goodman's hometown of New Orleans. Asked what he thought of the "fallout," he demurred. "I don't know anything about it," he said. "I don't read it."

Trump, Media In Endless Battle Over Who Should Apologize

By Pete Kasperowicz

Washington Examiner, May 31, 2018

The Trump administration and media elites on Thursday found themselves in a seemingly never-ending series of political fights involving name-calling, demands for apologies and claims that the other side is incapable of apologizing.

The frenzy reached crisis levels Thursday afternoon, but it began Tuesday, when TV star Roseanne Barr compared a former Obama staffer to an ape, which led her show to be canceled.

Roseanne apologized, as did Disney CEO Bob Iger.

But that prompted President Trump to ask why Iger never apologized to him for airing "horrible" statements that were made about him on ABC News.

"Gee, he never called President Donald J. Trump to apologize for the HORRIBLE statements made and said about me on ABC," Trump tweeted.

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said several other apologies were never given to Trump.

"Where was Bob Iger's apology to the White House staff for Jemele Hill calling the president and anyone associated with him a white supremacist?" Sanders asked Wednesday. "To Christians around the world for Joy Behar calling Christianity a mental illness? Where was the apology for Kathy Griffin going on a profane rant against the president on 'The View' after a photo showed her holding President Trump's decapitated head?"

That turned it into a media fight. Soon afterwards, CNN's White House reporter Jim Acosta said it's the White House that owes people an apology, not the media.

Acosta criticized Sanders for "coming out here and shaming the media and blaming us for making all sorts of comments that need apologies when they themselves owe the American people plenty of apologies for things that the president has said over the years."

Wednesday night, another apology storm was brewing. After Ivanka Trump posed with a picture of her son on Monday, many criticized her for ignoring the plight of illegal immigrant families.

That crisis came to a head Wednesday night, when TBS's Samantha Bee called Ivanka Trump a "feckless c--t."

The White House demanded her show be taken off the air, just as Roseanne Barr's was. Bee apologized Thursday, but that led others to say the White House is hypocritical to ask for apologies when it wasn't apologizing for all the bad things it does.

[Related: Sally Field says Samantha Bee wasn't harsh enough on Ivanka : 'C--ts are powerful, beautiful, nurturing and honest']

CNN's Jake Tapper said if the White House wants an apology, it should see if Trump wants to apologize for being mean to Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.

If folks are in an apology-kind-of-mood, now might be a decent time for @POTUS and the @WhiteHouse to publicly apologize for all the hateful and cruel things they've said about @SenJohnMcCain.— Jake Tapper (@jaketapper) May 31, 2018

Hours before Tapper's demand, however, The View host Meghan McCain said she didn't think the White House was capable of apologizing for anything, including Trump's criticism of her ailing father.

"Obviously I was promised an apology, Kelly Sadler, publicly to my family. I did not receive that," McCain said. "This is not an administration that's capable of apologizing."

The Trump family was feeling the brunt of the several battles by late Thursday, when first lady Melania Trump's spokeswoman said her and her family continue to face harsh criticisms, while the media only seems to want the apologies to flow from the White House, not to it.

"The double standard is truly astounding," spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham said. "Time and again the Trump family and members of this administration are subjected to false reporting, hateful rhetoric and outrageous lies all in the name of freedom of speech or comedy, yet the main stream media stays silent."

Roseanne Barr Should Blame Trump Most Of All

By Eugene Robinson

Washington Post, May 31, 2018

President Trump wants to create a safe public space for ugly, unvarnished, unambiguous racism, which he knows he can exploit for political advantage. This cynical and destructive ploy must not be allowed to succeed.

Witness Trump's reaction to Roseanne Barr's self-immolation. The president frequently airs his opinions via Twitter within minutes of seeing something he likes on Fox News or something he hates on CNN. But since Tuesday, there has been not a word of censure for Barr's vile "joke" portraying Valerie Jarrett, a top adviser to President Obama, as the result if "muslim brotherhood & planet of the apes had a baby."

Trump has had nothing to say, pro or con, about ABC's decision to cancel Barr's revived sitcom. Rather, he has twice complained that while Robert Iger, chairman of ABC's corporate parent, Disney, promptly called Jarrett to apologize, Iger has never called Trump with an apology for things said about him by others associated with ABC. "You and ABC have offended millions of people, and they demand a response. . . . Double Standard!" Trump said Thursday in a tweet to Iger.

You can see Trump's narcissism at work there, but also his calculation. He portrays himself as a victim and encourages his supporters to do likewise. He apparently realizes that defending Barr — a Trump supporter whose show the president has praised in the past — would be going too far. But he is careful not to offer even the mildest criticism of what she said.

Why would Barr, out of the blue, attack Jarrett, who hasn't been in the news since President Barack Obama left office a year and a half ago? Because many on the paranoid, hard-right fringe remain obsessed with Obama and those who served in his administration. They find it impossible to accept the fact that an African American man, surrounded by other African Americans, was elected president twice and served honorably and successfully for eight years.

Jarrett, whom Obama met when he lived and worked in Chicago, was born in Iran to African American parents. This happenstance fuels the fevered delusions of anti-Muslim bigots who paint her and Obama himself — yes, I know this is beyond ridiculous — as Islamic sleeper agents or moles or something, bent on destroying America. Apparently they did this by rescuing the nation from its gravest financial crisis since the Great Depression, killing Osama bin Laden and greatly expanding access to health care.

There is a direct line between birtherism — a racist movement that Trump effectively led — and the outburst that got Barr fired. To accept the legitimacy of the Obama presidency would be to acknowledge that white supremacy is nothing but a vicious lie, used by the powerful to divide and weaken the powerless.

Out there on the fringe, Barr and others seem to have a special hatred for black women. In a similar vein, Barr once compared Susan Rice, Obama's national security adviser, to an ape. And some of the vilest, most disgusting attacks of all are leveled at Michelle Obama.

Among those who have tried to ridicule the former first lady in this manner is Dinesh D'Souza, a right-wing provocateur and convicted felon who was sentenced to eight months in a halfway house and paid a $30,000 fine for breaking campaign finance laws. On Thursday, Trump pardoned D'Souza, because, Trump said, "I've always felt he was very unfairly treated."

See, there it is again: victimhood. We are being wronged. By them .

The complaint cannot be that racists should be free to spew whatever bigoted nonsense they want, because the First Amendment already guarantees their right to do so. It is that they should be free from the consequences of their words — a promise the Constitution assuredly does not make.

Barr first blamed herself for her outburst, then reverted to form and blamed anyone else she could think of. She said she was taking the sleeping aid Ambien, prompting the maker of the drug to state, for the record, that racism is not a known side effect. She said that ABC executives got nervous when comedian Wanda Sykes, who is black, promptly quit her job as a consultant on Barr's show. She blamed all of her "liberal" critics.

She ought to blame Trump, if his election and his big mouth lulled her into believing it was safe and funny to be racist. ABC knew that its audience and advertisers would not accept such racist filth.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Perhaps the president will invite her to the Oval Office for some laughs. Just the two of them.

A Key Architect Of The Anti-Trump Dossier Accused Of Lying To Congress By Sen. Grassley

By Rowan Scarborough
Washington Times, May 31, 2018

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Charles Grassley is suggesting Fusion GPS co-founder Glenn Simpson uttered an "outright lie" when he testified to panel staffers.

Mr. Grassley, Iowa Republican, made the charge in a letter to a Democratic senator who wanted Donald Trump Jr. recalled as a witness.

Fusion is one of the key players in the FBI's nearly two-year Russia investigation. It was Mr. Simpson, a private investigator, who tapped Democratic Party money to hire ex-British spy Christopher Steele, who produced the discredited anti-Trump dossier.

In August 2017, Mr. Simpson testified in private to committee staff. Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, ranking Democrat, later unilaterally released the transcript.

Mr. Simpson was asked directly if he continued to conduct anti-Trump opposition research after the Nov. 8 election. He answered, "I had no client after the election."

That answer seems at odds with an FBI interview report, or 302, obtained by the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

The 302 recounted an interview agents' conducted with Daniel Jones, a former senior Feinstein staffer who founded his own investigative firm, Penn Quarter Group. Mr. Jones told the agents he had received $50 million from seven to 10 wealthy donors and that he had hired Fusion GPS and Mr. Steele to continue investigating President Trump.

If Mr. Jones' interview is accurate, it would mean that Fusion did in fact have a post-election client—Penn Quarter Group.

This discrepancy was pointed out by Mr. Grassley in a letter to Sen. Christopher A. Coons, Delaware Democrat.

Mr. Coons wrote to Mr. Grassley asking that Mr. Trump Jr., the president's son, be recalled as a witness. Mr. Coons said his previous testimony seemed to conflict with a May 19 New York Times article.

As precedent, Mr. Coons cited Mr. Grassley's criminal referral letter to the Justice Department on Mr. Steele.

That referral, Mr. Grassley said in a letter to Mr. Coons on Tuesday, was based on a discrepancy in official sworn documents, not a newspaper story.

According to an October 2016 affidavit filed by the FBI to obtain a surveillance warrant, Mr. Steele told the bureau that he had not spoken to reporters about his dossier. But in fact, Mr. Steele had briefed a number of reporters in Washington the previous month at Mr. Simpson's urging, according to a declaration he filed in a London court where he faces a libel charge.

"Where we do have actual evidence of misleading testimony in Committee interviews, we should treat it seriously," Mr. Grassley said in his letter. "For example, when the Committee staff interviewed Glenn Simpson in August of 2017, Majority staff asked him: 'So you didn't do any work on the Trump matter after the election date, that was the end of your work?' Mr. Simpson answered: 'I had no client after the election.' As we now know, that was extremely misleading, if not an outright lie."

"Contrary to Mr. Simpson's denial in the staff interview, according to the FBI and others, Fusion actually did continue Trump dossier work for a new client after the election," the senator wrote. "As with the circumstances surrounding the Steele referral, we once again have two seemingly contradictory statements in contexts where material lies are criminal."

Mr. Simpson was not under oath. But Mr. Grassley's staff explained to him that lying to Congress violates federal law.

Mr. Grassley also took a shot at the New York Times.

"To clarify, the Steele referral was based on contradictory information provided in two sworn statements to courts," Mr. Grassley said "In contrast, your concern is based on perceived inconsistencies between a Committee interview and a news article. Unfortunately, as we have seen all too frequently, reporting related to the Russia investigation and the Trump campaign has often been inaccurate."

This is the second hiccup in Mr. Simpson's testimony.

When Mrs. Feinstein released the transcript in January, it showed that Mr. Simpson testified that Mr. Steele was told by the FBI it had a source inside the Trump campaign.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Shortly after the revelation, sources identified in the news media as close to Fusion GPS said Mr. Steele was actually talking about George Papadopoulos and a conversation he had with an Australian diplomat in London. There was no spy.

But later, Joshua A. Levy, Fusion's attorney, attested to Mr. Grassley that, in fact, Mr. Simpson's committee testimony was accurate.

"I am writing in response to your letter, dated January 11, 2018, in which you have asked about the August 22, 2017 testimony from our client Glenn Simpson that Christopher Steele in the fall of 2016 said he believed the FBI had another source within the Trump organization/campaign. Mr. Simpson stands by his testimony," Mr. Levy said.

Mr. Levy did not return a message seeking comment.

News reports in recent weeks said the FBI procured the services of academic Stefan Halper to spy on Trump associates. He made contact with at least two, Mr. Papadopoulos and volunteer Carter Page.

Friends Of Paul Manafort Launch Legal Defense Fund, Citing Expense Of Fighting Mueller Prosecution

By Spencer S. Hsu

Washington Post, May 30, 2018

Friends of former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort have launched a legal-defense fund to defray his attorney fees as he fights tax fraud, conspiracy and money-laundering charges filed by special counsel Robert S. Mueller III.

In a statement released Wednesday, unnamed friends of the longtime lobbyist said the Paul Manafort Defense Fund was created because Manafort and his family are "struggling to pay legal bills" arising from his prosecution in the special counsel's investigation of Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election.

Manafort, 69, faces two upcoming trials — one in Virginia in July and another in Washington in September — on felony counts related to his decade-long work for a pro-Russian politician and entities in Ukraine. He has pleaded not guilty.

His longtime aide and co-defendant, Rick Gates, pleaded guilty in February in a cooperation deal with prosecutors with Mueller's office.

"The Paul Manafort Defense Fund was established to support the Manafort family as they battle false allegations, government leaks and smear campaigns related to the proceedings brought against him by the Office of Special Counsel," the fund announced in a statement. "The Defense Fund is urging anyone who values civil liberties and wishes to show the 'Deep State' that they cannot exert their will on ordinary citizens."

A person familiar with Manafort's situation confirmed that the fund is legitimate.

However, it is unclear who organized the effort. The fund's website — which promises to maintain the "strict confidentiality" of those who donate — does not list its trustees. The site was registered Dec. 27 and updated Feb. 25, days after Manafort was hit with new indictments in Virginia and the District, Internet registration records show.

A spokesman for Manafort declined to comment.

Manafort and his attorneys are under a gag order in his criminal case pending in the District but have noted in court that "millions of dollars" of his assets have been made unavailable to him pending a criminal forfeiture charge. He remains under conditional home detention pending agreement on a $10 million bail package.

The website for the new Manafort defense fund includes links to news and opinion articles critical of the Justice Department, the FBI and Mueller.

The site directs donations to a post office box in Clifton, N.J. It states that trustees may reject any donations they deem inappropriate and that "donations from foreign individuals, corporations and entities are subject to public reporting."

Funds remaining after legal expenses are satisfied will be donated to the American Civil Liberties Union or the Brain Trauma Foundation, the website said.

In February, a separate legal defense fund was launched to help defray the costs faced by aides to President Trump drawn into the various Russia investigations as witnesses, but it is not available to those facing criminal indictments.

Meanwhile, the family of former Trump national security adviser Michael Flynn established the Michael T. Flynn Legal Defense Fund last year, before he pleaded guilty Dec. 1 to lying to the FBI about his conversations with Russia's then-ambassador, Sergey Kislyak, during the transition. Flynn's fund accepts donations only from U.S. citizens and permanent residents.

Trump Meets Quietly With Families Of Victims From Santa Fe High School Shooting In Texas

By Dave Boyer

Washington Times, May 31, 2018

President Trump met privately Thursday with families of the victims of the May 18 Santa Fe High School shooting in Texas to offer his condolences and support.

With no media present at the request of the families, Mr. Trump spoke for about an hour with relatives of the eight students and two teachers killed in the shooting, as well as first responders. He did not speak to reporters as he left the meeting.

The president was accompanied at the meeting in a Coast Guard airport hangar near Houston by Gov. Greg Abbott, Sen. Ted Cruz and state Attorney General Ken Paxton.

The meeting came a day after Mr. Abbott laid out a wide-school safety plan, including mental health screenings, expanded school protections and even a call for consideration of a "red-flag" law that would allow judges to temporarily seize an individual's firearms if the person is considered an imminent threat.

Many of the governor's proposals would require legislative approval. Mr. Abbott said he would consider calling a special session of the Texas Legislature to implement his plan before the next school year starts in August.

The president's one-day trip to Texas also includes Republican fundraising events in Houston and Dallas.

Trump Meets With Families Affected By Texas Shooting

By Jonathan Lemire

Associated Press, May 31, 2018

Seeking to comfort grieving families and shaken survivors, President Donald Trump spent more than an hour privately Thursday with some of those impacted by a Texas mass school shooting that killed 10 and wounded more than a dozen on May 18.

The latest spasm of violence in a year marred by assaults on the nation's schools, the shooting at Santa Fe High School was the latest to test the president's role as national comforter-in-chief. Trump met with more than two dozen people affected by the shooting, and did not publicly share his message for the grieving families and local leaders during a meeting at a Coast Guard base outside Houston.

Pamela Stanich — whose 17-year-old son, Jared Black, was among the eight students killed — was one of the parents who met with Trump, presenting him with a family statement and a copy of her son's eulogy.

Trump "met with us privately and showed sincerity, compassion, and concern on making our schools safer across the nation," she wrote in a Facebook post after the meeting. "He spent time talking to the survivors and asking on what happened and what would have made a difference. Changes are coming for the good. Thank you Mr. Trump."

Rhonda Hart, whose 14-year-old daughter, Kimberly Vaughan, was killed at the school, told The Associated Press that Trump repeatedly used the word 'wacky' to describe the shooter and the trench coat he wore. She said she told Trump, "Maybe if everyone had access to mental health care, we wouldn't be in the situation."

Hart, an Army veteran, said she also suggested employing veterans as sentinels in schools. She said Trump responded, "And arm them?" She replied, "No," but said Trump "kept mentioning" arming classroom teachers. "It was like talking to a toddler," Hart said.

Reporters were not permitted to witness the meeting.

While in Texas, Trump's school safety commission met outside Washington, part of the president's chosen solution to combat the rising tide of bloodshed after his brief flirtation with tougher gun laws after February's mass killing at a high school in Parkland, Florida went nowhere.

A White House spokesman said Trump was "moved" by the shooting at Santa Fe High School, which left eight students and two substitute teachers dead. A student faces capital murder charges in the attack.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"These events are very tragic, whenever they happen. And you know, the president wants to extend his condolences and talk about the issue of school safety," spokesman Raj Shah told Fox News Channel.

Also Thursday, Education Secretary Betsy DeVos, whom Trump put in charge of the school safety commission, announced a $1 million grant to the Santa Fe school district to help with post-shooting recovery efforts.

Texas Gov. Greg Abbott and Sen. Ted Cruz, both Republicans, greeted Trump after Air Force One landed at a Houston military base. Abbott joined Trump for the short ride in the presidential limousine to a Coast Guard hangar where the meeting took place.

Trump then headed to a fundraiser at a luxury hotel in downtown Houston, the first of his two big-dollar events in Texas on Thursday. A White House official did not immediately respond to requests for details about how much money was to be raised, and who was benefiting, from the fundraising events.

After 17 teachers and students were killed during a February shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Trump said he would work to improve school safety, but has not called for new gun control legislation. He created the commission to review ways to make schools safer.

Trump briefly strayed from gun-rights dogma after the Parkland shooting, but quickly backpedaled. Abbott, a Republican and a staunch gun-rights supporter, has called for schools to have more armed personnel and said they should put greater focus on spotting student mental health problems. He's proposed a few small restrictions on guns since the shooting.

Investigators say student Dimitrios Pagourtzis, 17, carried out the attack with a shotgun and pistol that belonged to his father. Classes at Santa Fe High School resumed Tuesday for the first time since the shooting.

As the Parkland students became vocal advocates for gun control, embracing their public positions as few school survivors had before, Trump quickly became a focal point for their anger. In Trump's visit to Florida after the shooting, aides kept him clear of the school, which could have been the site of protests, and he instead met with a few victims at a local hospital and paid tribute to first responders at the nearby sheriff's office.

There has yet to be a similar outcry for restrictions on firearms from the students and survivors in deep-red Texas.

Displaying empathy does not come naturally to Trump, who has been criticized for appearing unfeeling in times of tragedy, including when he sharply criticized a mayor in Puerto Rico in the aftermath of a deadly hurricane and fought with a Gold Star military family.

But Trump has at times displayed a softer side. On Wednesday, he returned a hug from an 8-year-old boy with muscular dystrophy who attended a White House event where he signed legislation to give patients the right to try experimental treatments.

Before Thursday, Trump was most recently in the Lone Star State on May 4 to attend the annual National Rifle Association convention. He pledged in his address that NRA members' Second Amendment rights "will never, ever be under siege as long as I am your president."

He also touted the administration's "aggressive strategy on community safety" and mentioned armed guards, armed teachers, mental health and metal detectors, but did not mention assault rifles like the one used in Florida.

Trump Lands In Dallas To Raise Cash, After Consoling Santa Fe School Massacre Kin In Houston

By Todd J. Gillman, Washington Bureau Chief

Dallas Morning News, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump met Thursday with relatives of students killed at Santa Fe High School two weeks ago, before rubbing elbows with high dollar donors in Houston and Dallas.

The trip was scheduled before the May 18 school rampage that left 10 people dead.

Air Force One arrived at Love Field just before 4 p.m. from Houston, where the president raised campaign funds for Senate Republicans after a private meeting with Santa Fe families and first responders. In Dallas, he is headlining a dinner to benefit the national party and his own 2020 reelection effort.

"We're going to Dallas. We're going to Houston. And we're going to have a little fun today," he told reporters at Joint Base Andrews before flying to Texas.

Education Secretary Betsy DeVos announced a $1 million federal grant to help the Santa Fe school district cope with the aftermath of the shooting. Classes resumed Tuesday at Santa Fe High School for the first time since the May 18 rampage.

This was Trump's fifth visit to Texas since taking office.

News media were kept out of his meeting with Santa Fe survivors, and were also barred from the fund-raisers.

Deputy White House press secretary Hogan Gidley said the meeting with victims' relatives and others affected by the Santa Fe shooting was very emotional for the president.

How President Trump's visit to Dallas will affect your evening commute

Donors in Dallas paid at least a $2,700-per-person for a reception at the Adolphus Hotel downtown. VIP tickets for dinner cost $50,000 and include a photo with the president.

Proceeds from a lunch at Houston's St. Regis Hotel benefit the National Republican Senatorial Committee, with tickets priced from $5,000 to $100,000.

Sen. Ted Cruz is among the Republicans on the ballot this fall as the party seeks to protect its razor thin 51-49 majority. The latest Quinnipiac University Poll shows Cruz widening his lead over U.S. Rep. Beto O'Rourke of El Paso.

Cruz and Gov. Greg Abbott greeted Air Force One on the tarmac at Ellington Field Joint Reserve Base, along with Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick, who chaired Trump's Texas campaign. They then headed to the nearby Coast Guard Air Station Houston to meet with people impacted directly by the Santa Fe attack.

Flying to Texas, Trump touted his pardon for conservative pundit Dinesh D'Souza, who pleaded guilty in 2014 to violating campaign finance laws.

D'Souza told the conservative Daily Caller that Cruz personally lobbied Trump for the pardon in recent weeks.

That contradicted Trump's version of events. As he recounted aboard Air Force One: "I don't know him, I never met him.... First time I've ever spoken to him I said I'm pardoning you. Nobody asked me to do it."

Dinesh D'Souza credits Ted Cruz for lobbying Trump for his pardon

Trump also said he's considering commuting the 18-year sentence for former Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich, a Democrat who tried to sell a U.S. Senate appointment, and for author and Martha Stewart, who spent time in prison for insider trading.

"I've always felt he was very unfairly treated," Trump said of D'Souza. "What should have been a quick minor fine, like everybody else with the election stuff....what they did to him was horrible."

As for Blagojevich, he said, "18 years now. I don't know him other than that he was on The Apprentice for a short period of time....18 years is I think really unfair."

And Stewart, he said, also may receive clemency. "I think to a certain extent Martha Stewart was harshly and unfairly treated. And she used to be my biggest fan in the world... before I became a politician," he said.

In Dallas, Trump collects $4 million amid taunts of 'liar liar' and 'Go home Cheeto'

In October, Trump collected $4 million from donors in Dallas, where hecklers also greeted him with chants of "liar, liar" and "Go home Cheeto."

Eleven days later, on Nov. 5, a gunman killed 26 people at a church in Sutherland Springs. Vice President Mike Pence arrived a few days later to convey the nation's prayers and condolences to relatives and neighbors still reeling from the carnage.

When Trump arrived in Dallas on Thursday afternoon, it was his second visit this month.

On May 4, he spoke at the National Rifle Association's annual convention at the Kay Bailey Hutchison Convention Center downtown.

Texas Democrats drew a connection between his support for the NRA and its agenda, and the need to console yet more victims of gun violence.

"Weeks ago President Trump embraced the NRA," said state Democratic chairman Gilberto Hinojosa in a statement. "Now he has to face the victims of failed leadership who refuse to enact common-sense policies to prevent gun violence."

Abbott released recommendations Wednesday to address school shootings, a list that steered clear of most restrictions pushed by gun control advocates.

"Trump Republicans like Greg Abbott, Dan Patrick, and Ken Paxton and the entire Republican Party are in lockstep with the NRA [and] they continue to regurgitate gun-lobby talking points and refuse to address gun violence directly," Hinojosa said. "Republicans would rather spend their time blaming everything but guns for the shooting."

Donald Trump's Dallas fundraiser rescheduled for May 31

Thursday's fundraising dinner was originally set for May 14 but it was delayed without explanation on May 5, as he juggled diplomacy with North Korea and other crises.

A summit with Kim Jong Un was set for June 12 in Singapore. Trump canceled it. But top aides have been meeting with Kim's advisers in New York and Singapore, and the White House has said it still expects the summit to take place.

Trump Meets With Texas School Shooting Families Before Dallas Stop « CBS Dallas / Fort Worth

KTVT-TV Dallas, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump began a trip to Texas today by meeting privately with families of some of the 10 people killed in a school shooting earlier this month.

A White House spokesman said Trump was "moved" by the May 18 shooting at Santa Fe High School, which left eight students and two substitute teachers dead. A student faces capital murder charges in the attack.

"These events are very tragic, whenever they happen. And you know, the president wants to extend his condolences and talk about the issue of school safety," spokesman Raj Shah told Fox News Channel.

Trump, who at times has awkwardly embraced his role as the national comforter-in-chief, spent more than an hour with families and local leaders at a Coast Guard station just outside Houston. The White House did not immediately identify the people with whom Trump met or what they discussed. Reporters were not permitted to witness the meeting.

"He's the president of the United States, but he's also a father. He's also a husband, and he obviously understands what it's like, you know, to love someone and then lose someone," Shah said in the interview, adding that Trump approaches situations like these as a human being and a parent, not necessarily as a politician.

"I think he just, you know, he talks to families, he listens and he wants to learn," Shah said.

Texas Gov. Greg Abbott and U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz, both Republicans, greeted Trump on the tarmac after he stepped off of Air Force One at a Houston military base. Abbott joined Trump for the short ride in the presidential limousine to a Coast Guard hangar where the meeting was taking place. Trump was then scheduled to attend several political events in Houston and then fly to Dallas for a private RNC fundraiser. A White House official did not immediately respond to requests for details about how much money was to be raised, and who was benefiting, from the fundraising events.

After 17 teachers and students were killed during a February shooting at a Parkland, Florida high school, Trump said he would work to improve school safety but has not called for new gun control legislation. He created a commission to review ways to make schools safer and named Education Secretary Betsy DeVos to chair it. The panel on Thursday was making its first field trip to a Baltimore-area elementary school.

Trump briefly strayed from gun rights dogma after the Parkland shooting, but quickly backpedaled. Abbott, a Republican and a staunch gun-rights supporter, has called for schools to have more armed personnel and said they should put greater focus on spotting student mental health problems. He's proposed a few small restrictions on guns since the shooting.

Classes at Santa Fe High School resumed Tuesday for the first time since the shooting. Investigators say student Dimitrios Pagourtzis, 17, carried out the attack with a shotgun and pistol that belonged to his father. Pagourtzis has been charged with capital murder.

As the Parkland students became vocal advocates for gun control, embracing their public positions as few school survivors had before, Trump quickly became a rallying cry for their anger. In Trump's visit to Florida in the wake of the shooting, aides kept him clear of the school, which could have been the site of protests, and he instead met with a few victims at a local hospital and paid tribute to first responders at the nearby sheriff's office.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

To this point, there has not been a similar outcry for restrictions on firearms from the students and survivors in deep-red Texas.

Displaying empathy does not often come naturally to Trump, who has been criticized for appearing unfeeling in times of tragedy, including when he attacked a mayor in Puerto Rico in the aftermath of a deadly hurricane and fought with a Gold Star military family.

But there have been moments when Trump has displayed a softer side. On Wednesday, he reciprocated a hug from a 8-year-old boy with muscular dystrophy and attended a White House event marking legislation to give patients the right to try experimental treatments

That same day, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders grew emotional when, during the daily press briefing, she was asked by a young student journalist about what steps the administration was taking to safeguard schools.

Before Thursday, Trump was most recently in the Lone Star State on May 4, when he attended the annual NRA convention and pledged that the attendees' Second Amendment rights "will never ever be under siege as long as I am your president."

He also touted the administration's "aggressive strategy on community safety" and mentioned armed guards, armed teachers, mental health and metal detectors but did not mention assault rifles likes the one used in Parkland.

Donald Trump Makes First Trip To Houston Since Harvey

By Jeremy Wallace, Houston Chronicle

Houston Chronicle, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump met with dozens of community leaders from Sante Fe on Thursday on his first visit to the region since the mass shooting that took the lives of 10 people and injured another 13.

After Trump arrived in Houston just before 11 a.m., the President was whisked away to a closed door session where he was to listen to community leaders and victims who survived the tragedy on May 18. The White House did not give reporters access to the event or give immediate reports on what specifically was talked about.

White House officials would only say he spoke to first responders and "impacted families." Trump waved to the media as he left the meeting but did not make any comments.

After the meeting at Ellington Joint Reserve Base in Houston, Trump was planning to travel to the St. Regis Hotel for a fundraiser to help raise money for U.S. Senate candidates around the nation. That event was also closed to the media.

It marks Trump's 2nd visit to Houston and his 5th to Texas since he became President.

As he arrived, Trump was greeted as he stepped off Air Force One by Gov. Greg Abbott, Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick and U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz, among others.

Trump Arrives In Houston To Meet With Santa Fe Families Before Fundraiser Luncheon

KHOU-TV Houston, May 31, 2018

President Donald Trump will be meeting with the families of the victims of the Santa Fe High School shooting during a visit to the Houston area on Thursday.

Air Force One touched down at Ellington Field shortly before 11 a.m., and the president was greeted by state and federal officials, including Governor Greg Abbott and Senator Ted Cruz.

The trip to Texas was originally tied to a fundraiser, but the White House confirmed Wednesday the president added to the itinerary time to meet with families from Santa Fe.

The president will have about 30 to 40 minutes to meet with those families of the victims.

Eight students and two substitute teachers were killed during the shooting at Santa Fe High School on May 18.

Victims of Santa Fe High School shooting.

After meeting with the families, Trump will attend a fundraiser luncheon at the St. Regis in River Oaks hosted by the National Republican Senate Committee.

It's a private event that sold tickets for $5,000 a person for the luncheon or $25,000 if you want to take a photo with the president.

After Houston, Trump is scheduled to head to Dallas for more events.

Trump Ahead Of Visit With Texas Shooting Survivors: 'We Are Going To Have A Little Fun'

The Hill, May 31, 2018

President Trump on Thursday told reporters that he and his team would be having "fun" on a trip to Texas where the president is expected to meet with survivors from last week's deadly school shooting in Santa Fe.

Trump made the comment to reporters as he was boarding Air Force One to leave for the Lone Star state, where he is also scheduled for several meetings with supporters.

"We are going to Dallas, we are going to Houston. We are going to have a little fun today. Thank you very much," Trump told reporters in his brief remarks before boarding.

The remark was noticed by gun violence activists, who questioned Trump's use of the word to describe a trip to meet with shooting survivors and first responders.

"Fun?" tweeted Shannon Watts, founder of Moms Demand Action, a gun control advocacy group.

Trump is scheduled to meet with survivors of last week's deadly shooting at a Santa Fe, Texas, high school where 10 people were killed when a gunman attacked the school.

The president after the shooting promised the families of the shooting victims that his administration would be with them "forever."

"We grieve for the terrible loss of life, and send our support and love to everyone affected by this horrible attack in Texas. To the students, families, teachers and personnel at Santa Fe High School: we are with you in this tragic hour, and we will be with you forever," he said last week at the White House.

Trump Blasted For Saying Houston Visit Will Be 'Fun'

By Fernando Ramirez

Houston Chronicle, May 31, 2018

Social media users are criticizing Donald Trump for comments he made this morning before traveling to Houston to meet with families impacted by the Santa Fe shooting and attend a fundraising event.

"... the economy is good. Stock market is up. Lot of jobs. Best unemployment we've had in many, many decades, actually," Trump told reporters before departing on Air Force One. "And we're going to Dallas. We're going to Houston. And we're going to have a little fun today."

Congressional Candidate Ron Wright Meets Trump In Dallas

By Anna M. Tinsley

Fort Worth (TX) Star-Telegram, May 31, 2018

Never let them see you sweat.

That's what was running through Ron Wright's mind Thursday as he stood on the tarmac at Love Field waiting to meet President Donald Trump, who traveled to Texas for Republican fundraisers and to pay condolences to the families of victims of the recent Santa Fe school shooting.

"He picked one of the hottest days of the year to visit," Wright said with a chuckle. "We were hot, but I tried not to let it show."

After waiting at least 15 minutes in the scorching Texas heat, Air Force One arrived and Trump greeted Wright — Tarrant County's tax assessor collector and the Republican nominee for the 6th Congressional District — and Lance Gooden, the GOP nominee for the 5th Congressional District. SIGN UP

"I said, 'Welcome back to North Texas, Mr. President,' " Wright recalls saying. "It was typical chit chat with the president of the United States."

He said they spoke with the president for maybe one or two minutes before Trump headed to a private fundraiser in Dallas.

During that time, Trump asked how the campaigns of Wright and Gooden were going and both men replied that they thought they were doing well.

"Obviously the president is going to be a big issue in the election," Wright said. "It's a national election and Democrats will go after him.

"But the 6th District of Texas is Trump country," Wright said, adding that he told the president "he would have an ally" in him in Washington.

Wright, who got a call from the White House earlier this week asking if he'd like to meet Trump on the tarmac, faces Democrat Jana Lynne Sanchez in the Nov. 6 general election to determine who will replace U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, in Congress next year.

Attorney General Sessions Defends Religious Speech As Integral Right

By Christine MacDonald

Detroit News, May 31, 2018

Attorney General Jeff Sessions on Thursday praised the Trump administration's policy of protecting the free expression of religion, especially in public places, calling him an "unwavering defender" of religious liberty.

"Our Constitution doesn't just protect freedom of thought or the freedom to worship in secret," Sessions told the crowd here at an annual awards dinner of the Michigan chapter of the Federalist Society, a conservative legal group. "It protects the open expression and exercise of religious belief in public."

He praised Trump for nominating U.S. Supreme Court Judge Neil Gorsuch and said the Department of Justice would defend free speech aggressively under Trump's leadership. The department is taking action to protect the First Amendment rights of college students and settled lawsuits filed against former President Barack Obama's "wrongful" contraception mandate, the former Alabama U.S. senator told the crowd.

"We don't waive our constitutional rights when we participate fully in public life and civic society," Sessions said. "At the Department of Justice, we are taking these fundamental principles seriously, and we are putting them into action.

The attorney general's praise of his boss came a day after Trump suggested on Twitter again Wednesday that he wishes he had never offered the job to Sessions. Trump has repeatedly criticized Session for his decision to recuse himself from the Russia election probe, calling him "beleaguered," and threatened to fire him last July.

Trump's message resonated with voters in 2016, "that he respected people of faith and he promised to protect them in the free exercise of their faith," Trump said.

"It is no secret that, in recent years, the cultural climate in American has become less hospitable to people of faith and to religious belief," he said. "Many Americans in recent years have felt — understandably — that their freedom to practice their faith has been under attack."

"Since his election, President Trump has been an unwavering defender of religious liberty. He has promised that under a Trump Administration, "the federal government will never, ever penalize any person for their protected religious beliefs.

The Associated Press reported that Trump's advisers and allies have an ongoing campaign to persuade the president not to fire Sessions but there may be a limit to how long the efforts will hold.

Trump lawyer Rudy Giuliani on Wednesday only offered assurances Trump would not fire Sessions during the investigation of Special Counsel Robert Mueller, due to the "distraction" it would cause.

"There's no doubt he's complained about him, there's no doubt he has some grievances. I don't know they've aired them out yet. He's not going to fire him before this is over," Giuliani told reporters Wednesday, according to the Associated Press. "Nor do I think he should."

Detroit U.S. Attorney Matthew Schneider introduced Sessions, saying Sessions is a defender of law enforcement and is a working hard to combat terrorism, quell the opioid epidemic and fight illegal immigration.

"We promise to give you a better reception than you've received in the news media," said Schneider, who was officially appointed less than a month ago.

We have a pretty good list for Nevada and are comfortable we could draw numerous attendees to the event. However, we are reluctant to do an emailing until you can get our name on the site. We noticed that we aren't on the agenda<https://www.frbsf.org/community-development/files/understanding-opportunity-zones-in-nevada-agenda.pdf> yet. How long until you have that updated?

I do believe there is a strong case to make for designating the Moulin Rouge census tract as an Opportunity Zone. However, Nevada was only able to nominate 61 of over 240 low-income census tracts across the state.

I've attached what the City of Las Vegas sent to us as their priority list. The Bonanza Corridor/ Moulin Rouge was their #10th priority area. We used a combination of local priorities, known investment, and national social need and investment indexes to formulate a model for choosing 61 tracts. Unfortunately, using that model that census tract did not make the top 61. There was absolutely no intention to purposefully leave the census tract from our list.

If there is a chance to re-examine the Opportunity Zone designations in the future I will make sure to incorporate your input.

Subject: Re: Opportunity Zone - Moulin Rouge Site

Derek:

Now that you have nominated the sites, is there another comment period?

The state appears to have purposely left off one of the most important tracts for the historic African-American community, the Moulin Rouge site. The short but vibrant life of the Moulin Rouge helped the Civil Rights Movement in Las Vegas. The hotel was also the spark needed to bring an end to segregation on the Strip.

In all my discussions, the Moulin Rouge site was a high priority for inclusion by the City of Las Vegas. They are even surprised by the selection.

Why would the governor not include this site which is historic and in much need of redevelopment?

The property just fell out of escrow again on April 1. This is the most recent of many failed redevelopment tries on this property. That would be a disaster. This current owner of the property have been trying to sell it for ten years. They have had many deposits returned and or lost in that time period. Seems to me that site is a perfect candidate for redevelopment and inclusion in an opportunity zone to finally make something happen.

Consider that Bonanza Village was included and there is no need for that, it is all single family housing on large lots. Bonanza Village is the most expensive/valuable single family housing in the West-Las Vegas area. That would be very difficult for redevelopment.

Or why is the NLV Airport included? The airport is owned by the County so why give the airport this tax benefit, which pays no taxes.

It doesn't make sense. I think some folks may soon raise a stink if this isn't corrected soon.

I believe the Governor would like to include this site if he knew more of the historic background and its meaning to the African-American community. Hopefully you and he agree.

Best regards,

Mike

Hi Pam,

First, let me thank you for your help in getting a new Welcome to Nevada sign here on Interstate 80 at the Utah/Nevada border. The new sign which went up roughly 6 months or so ago, was overdue and, looks great. Thank you!

Second, have attached a copy for Governor Sandoval a letter that has been sent to GOED concerning the process of selecting Opportunity Zone areas. West Wendover would like due consideration of that designation believing that it could definitely help us in attracting business and other investments.

I appreciate if you could pass the letter on to Governor Sandoval.

And yes... Amtrak is still on our dream board. With the loss of Greyhound service recently, we now have no public transportation access to the national transportation system. Solutions are never easy, especially in our case... :)

Hope all is well with you, please make sure to stop in and say hello if you are in the area, would be nice to see you again.

Chris

Subject: Opportunity Zone Eligibility - West Wendover, Nevada Census Tract 9515.00

Dear GOED Administration/Staff:

The City of West Wendover would like to respond to Governor Sandoval's request for Opportunity Zone eligibility comments by submitting the City of West Wendover, located with Census Tract 9515.00, for your consideration.

Though a vibrant community in its own right, the City of West Wendover does rely heavily on Nevada Tourism and the Nevada Gaming industry for its existence given other larger diversification businesses that are common to Elko County, including agriculture and mining, are largely located well outside the community. As a result of this unique reliance on tourism, West Wendover's development in the past has been subject to boom/bust cycles often associated with a reliance on such a single large industry.

Additionally, with Nevada Gaming comes a reliance on a population demographic that includes a significantly large low-moderate income population given its service basis in the economy. This results in overall lower wages and lower wage growth over time especially when such a demographic is as large as West Wendover's being well over 60% of the population. This exacerbates the ability of West Wendover to effectively promote and create business investments at various levels given this type of demographic results in lower household and median incomes adversely affecting the decisions of those considering making investments in the community; whether that is industrial development, general commercial enterprises and/or housing developments. In all the consequence is generally a negative one.

Though this condition is a certain challenge, West Wendover has been earnest in its efforts through the past several decades to progress above that challenge. With our current business and community partners including NNRDA we have the following projects in the works will would have an expected multi-million dollar investment impact on the community:

- Bomarc Development Residential Projects
  - Apartment Complex Construction, 8 Acres, 40 units, $15-20 million; 1-2 year completion.
  - Residential Housing, 3 in progress, 6-10 planned, $270,000/ unit; 1-2 year completion.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- Bomarc Development Commercial Projects
    - Retail multi-business complex, $7 million total, partially complete $2 million to finish; final completion by end of 2018.
    - Potential purchase and remodel of 4,000 to 5,000 square feet. Facility for commercial retail complex; 1-2 years.

- The Cannon Group and Richard Burella Group Residential Project
    - Single Family homes
    - Town-home projects

- Rusty Palm Renovation and Convenience Store / Truck Stop at Exit 410; $5-6 million; 5 year completion.

- Peppermill Resort & Casino: Interior & exterior renovation, $7.5 million recently completed, $2 million projected within next year, $15 million in further renovations over next 5 years.

- Rainbow Casino and Hotel: Lighting and resurfacing of lot, $1.5 million to be completed by the end of 2018, exterior renovation includes $6.5 million to be completed by the end of 2018. Further interior and exterior renovation, $10-13 million to be completed within next 5 years.

- Montego Bay: Lighting and resurfacing of lot, $1 million to be completed by the end of 2018, further interior and exterior renovation, $1-3 million to be completed within next 5 years.

Finally, though the City has been pro-active with its own public investments in infrastructure in a long term effort to create a solid foundation from which private investments can build upon, the possibility of our community being given an Opportunity Zone designation would potentially enhance the ability to attract desirable business investments for the community. In all honesty, the City of West Wendover could greatly use any assistance that GOED at any level can help provide.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Chris J. Melville, C.P.O.

Attached is a letter informing your governor or chief executive officer as to how they can nominate eligible census tracts for designation as Opportunity Zones. Titles II and V of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2018, signed into law on December 22, 2017, added Subchapter Z—Opportunity Zones to the Internal Revenue Code and provides certain tax benefits for private investment in distressed areas. The authority to implement these sections of the new tax law has been delegated to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). The Community Development Financial Institutions Fund (CDFI Fund) is supporting the IRS with the Opportunity Zone nomination and designation process.

In order for investors to take advantage of the tax benefits, the law requires governors or chief executive officers of States and possessions to nominate census tracts in their jurisdictions as Opportunity Zones.

To assist in the nomination process, the CDFI Fund has developed a Nomination Tool, which can be used to identify and select eligible census tracts to nominate for designation as Opportunity Zones. The Nomination Tool as well as Nomination Instructions on completing and submitting a nomination, can be found at https://www.cdfifund.gov/Pages/ozonestateresource.aspx.

The Honorable Brian Sandoval
Governor
State of Nevada
Capitol Building
101 North Carson Street
Carson City, NV 89701

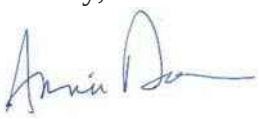
Dear Governor Sandoval:

I am writing to inform you as to how you can nominate eligible census tracts for designation as Opportunity Zones. As noted in a letter sent to you from Assistant Secretary for Tax Policy David J. Kautter dated February 8, 2018, P.L. 115-97, an Act to provide for reconciliation pursuant to titles II and V of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2018 (the "Act"), signed into law on December 22, 2017, added Subchapter Z—Opportunity Zones to the Internal Revenue Code ("Code") and provides certain tax benefits for private investment in distressed areas of Nevada. The authority to implement these sections of the new tax law has been delegated to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). The Community Development Financial Institutions Fund (CDFI Fund) is supporting the IRS with the Opportunity Zone nomination and designation process.

In order for investors to take advantage of the tax benefits, the law requires governors or chief executive officers (CEOs) of States and possessions to nominate census tracts in their jurisdictions as Opportunity Zones.

To assist you with your nomination, the CDFI Fund has developed a Nomination Tool through which you can identify and select the eligible census tracts in Nevada you wish to nominate for designation as Opportunity Zones. The Nomination Tool as well as Nomination Instructions on completing and submitting your nomination, can be found at https://www.cdfifund.gov/Pages/ozonestateresource.aspx.

To ensure that the information submitted reflects the official nomination of Nevada as authorized by the governor or CEO of Nevada, the CDFI Fund is providing each State with a State Unique Opportunity Zone Code that must be entered in the Information section of the Nomination Tool, per the Nomination Instructions. The State Unique Opportunity Zone Code for Nevada is kffp10283f.



The statute imposes a deadline for the nominations of 90 days from its enactment. Thus governors and chief executive officers have until March 21, 2018, to submit nominations. A 30-day extension can be requested, as described in Revenue Procedure 2018–16, 2018-9 I.R.B. 383. Instructions on how to request an extension are included in the Nomination Instructions. The statute requires that failure to submit timely nominations results in loss of the ability to designate any Opportunity Zones*.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The census tracts eligible for designation as Opportunity Zones include some of the most distressed areas in the country. If such a community becomes an Opportunity Zone, the resulting tax benefits may attract new investment into the community to create jobs, stimulate growth, and provide hope to the individuals and families living there. I encourage you to consider this opportunity and to make timely nominations.

If you or your staff have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact Jeff Merkowitz at merkowitzj@cdfi.treas.gov or (202) 653-0300.

Sincerely,

Annie Donovan

Dear Commissioner Mack:

Thank you for your letter of January 19, 2018, regarding the request from the State of Alaska to consider a petition for rulemaking on the applicability of the 2001 Roadless Rule to the Tongass National Forest. I apologize for the delayed response.

Thank you for including the petition and the exhibits illustrating the history of the exemption and ensuing legal challenges. We share your interest in exploring options to help create jobs and prosperity for rural communities in Southeast Alaska, and the forest-products sector has long been part of this economy. We want to ensure that we continue to contribute to the health of the rural economy in Alaska by investing in the sustainability, health, and productivity of our National Forest.

We look forward to working with you in the future to explore and discuss the petition and the options to address application of the 2001 Roadless Rule on the Tongass National Forest. Additionally, Interim Chief Victoria Christiansen is reviewing your concerns regarding the 2016 Tongass Forest Plan and is working to address them.

FS may – or may not – exempt Tongass from roadless rule

The Department of Agriculture April 25 did not outright promise to act on a State of Alaska's request to write a new regulation exempting the Tongass National Forest from a 2001 roadless area rule.

But Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue did agree to examine the petition. "We look forward to working with you in the future to explore and discuss the petition and the options to address application of the 2001 Roadless Rule on the Tongass National Forest," he wrote the state in a letter obtained by PLN.

Alaska Gov. Bill Walker (I-Alaska) on January 19 petitioned Perdue to exempt the state from the roadless rule to give Alaskans access to the Tongass for a host of reasons. "We see this as one of many significant opportunities to work with you to support a diverse and robust forest products sector in Southeast Alaska," Walker wrote in a 235-page petition.

The State of Alaska Congressional delegation has been campaigning for 15 years to exempt the Tongass from the roadless rule. The Clinton administration's Jan. 12, 2001, roadless regulation limits road building and other activities on 58.5 million acres of national forest.

Under President George W. Bush the Forest Service in 2003 posted a separate rule exempting the 17 million-acre Tongass National Forest (not all of it roadless) from the Clinton rule. But in 2005 the U.S. Supreme Court left in place an appeals court decision that denied the exemption for the Tongass.

Senate Energy Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) this winter came within a whisker of persuading Congress to exempt the Tongass from the roadless area rule. She included in a draft fiscal year 2018 pubic lands appropriations bill on Nov. 20, 2017, a provision that would exempt the Tongass and the 5.4 million-acre Chugach National Forest from the Clinton rule. A House-Senate conference committee killed the provision in March.

Murkowski's amendment was one sentence long: "The Roadless Area Conservation Rule established under part 294 of title 36, Code of Federal Regulations (or successor regulations), shall not apply with respect to any National Forest System land in the State of Alaska."

At an April 24 Senate Energy Committee hearing on the Forest Service's fiscal year 2019 budget Murkowski again made her case for exempting the Tongass from the roadless rule.

She told Forest Service Acting Chief Vicki Christiansen, "As I have said many times before, the Roadless Rule has never made sense in the Tongass, a forest made up of 32 island communities. In my mind, more access starts with restoring the Roadless exemption in the Tongass, and you have a state petition that asks you to do just that. We hear a lot of talk about keeping public lands accessible to the public, but in Alaska, that's often very different from the public's experience."

Christiansen responded, "We are working very closely with the State of Alaska to look at all of the options to address the Roadless issues. A response is being submitted in the matter of a day from Secretary Perdue back to the State of Alaska. We want to look for success in how we can assure southeast Alaska citizens have the needs met as you identified, and we will support the state in numerous ways on those various options."

The response Christiansen mentioned is contained in Perdue's April 25 letter.

Although Christiansen and Perdue said they would cooperate with the state, neither said outright the Forest Service would attempt to provide a total exemption to the Tongass from the roadless rule.

In its petition to Perdue the State of Alaska argued that, for the purposes of a Tongass exemption rule, it is immaterial that the courts have rejected such an exemption in the past. The state said it is just good policy to approve the exemption.

"Rationales for exempting the Tongass from the Roadless Rule in a new USDA rulemaking are not entirely equivalent to Alaska's legal claims and arguments challenging the Roadless Rule in federal court," the state said. "The most important difference is that USDA can enact or change policy via a rulemaking whether such action is legally mandated or just good policy as determined by the agency."

Perdue in a brief four-paragraph letter told Alaska Department of Natural Resources Commissioner Andrew Mack, "We share your interest in exploring options to help create jobs and prosperity for rural communities in Southeast Alaska, and the forest-products sector has long been part of this economy."

Environmentalists who have contested the Tongass exemption from the beginning did not let the Alaska petition go uncontested. They wrote Perdue April 10 and argued that the Clinton rule does allow access to the Tongass, except for a couple of uses.

A letter signed by dozens of national and state environmental groups said, "The petition ignores the fact that USDA narrowly tailored the Roadless Rule to limit only two activities in roadless areas, road construction/reconstruction and logging, because those activities pose the greatest likelihood of irretrievably altering and fragmenting roadless landscapes. The petition also ignores the Rule's series of established exceptions that 'honor existing law or address social or economic concerns.'"

Tongass land management plan: At the April 24 Senate committee hearing Murkowski paired the roadless rule dispute with a complaint that an Obama administration Tongass land management plan deprives timber companies of wood.

On Dec. 9, 2016, the Forest Service approved a plan to transfer Tongass National Forest timber sales to younger trees. Murkowski argued then and argues now that the service should complete an ongoing inventory of young growth before implementing the plan.

Indeed in the fiscal 2018 appropriations law (PL 115-141 of March 23) Murkowski successfully persuaded Congress to stay implementation of the Obama plan until the inventory was completed. "Until the Service has determined, based on a completed stand-level inventory, the timing and supply of economic young growth needed for a successful final transition and whether the 2016 Forest Plan should be amended or revised, the Service is directed not to implement a final transition away from its Tongass old growth timber program to a program based primarily on young growth," the law says.

At the April 24 Senate committee hearing Murkowski also pressed Christiansen to revise the management plan. "So we are working now top to put together the most effective method to get those fixes in an amendment while we look at other options for potentially addressing the transition period when the inventory is completed at the end of the summer," she said.

Christiansen said the Forest Service was working on the fixes and hoped to complete the inventory of young growth by the end of the summer.

BLM begins ANWR scoping despite fierce green attacks

In the face of a barrage of criticism from Democrats and environmentalists, BLM April 20 officially took the first step toward an initial oil and gas lease sale in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR).

BLM announced it will accept public advice through June 20 on environmental documentation of the lease sale of at least 400,000 acres. Although the law authorizing leasing (PL 115-97 of Dec. 22, 2017) calls for an initial sale within four years, Democratic critics anticipate BLM will hold the sale next year.

Exactly what sort of leasing EIS BLM prepares is an open and important issue. That's because PL 115-97 sort of fudged the question. The law implies that the environmental review should follow standards put down by the National Petroleum Reserve Act.

It says, "Except as otherwise provided in this section, the Secretary shall manage the oil and gas program on the Coastal Plain in a manner similar to the administration of lease sales under the Naval Petroleum Reserves Production Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. 6501 et seq.) (including regulations)." Our emphasis.

Thus, in its Federal Register scoping notice BLM says, "In accordance with Section 20001 of the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act of 2017 (PL 115-97), and the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, as amended, and in a manner similar to the administration of lease sales under the Naval Petroleum Reserves Production Act of 1976, as amended, (BLM) intends to prepare a Leasing (EIS)." Again, our emphasis.

That appears to give BLM some leeway in what it puts into an EIS.

Environmentalists strongly hinted at a lawsuit. "The Trump Administration's frantic scramble to sell oil leases in the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge is a direct threat to the traditional lifestyle of the Gwich'in people and an assault on the wildlife and habitat of America's greatest intact natural heritage," said Dr. David Raskin, president of the Friends of Alaska National Wildlife Refuges. "It is a violation of the laws and requirements for management of this iconic refuge that belongs to every American, not just the oil industry and their political supporters."

Eight House Democrats led by Raúl M. Grijalva (D-Ariz.), the ranking member of the House Natural Resources Committee, objected to the speed with which BLM is preparing the sale.

"We remain staunchly opposed to oil and gas activities on the Coastal Plain, and believe that inclusion of the Arctic Refuge leasing provision in H.R. 1 behind closed doors was improper and contrary to the majority sentiment in Congress and among the American people regarding leasing and drilling in the Refuge," they wrote Secretary of Interior Ryan Zinke April 19. "Attempting to rush the leasing process, as DoI is doing, is unnecessary, inappropriate, and likely to result in serious harm to one of our nation's last remaining truly wild areas."

By "behind closed doors" the Democrats were referring to a House-Senate conference committee in December on the big tax law to which ANWR leasing was attached.

For all the complaints of the critics the Alaska Congressional delegation and Gov. Bill Walker (I-Alaska) are solidly behind the leasing plan.

The delegation – Senate Energy Committee Chairman Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), Sen. Dan Sullivan (R-Alaska) and Rep. Don Young (R-Alaska) - put out a joint statement endorsing BLM's action. "We welcome this scoping announcement and the Department's continued work to implement our legislation opening the Coastal Plain to responsible energy development," the delegation said.

Walker put out his own statement, saying the state was on board. "This is an important priority for my administration given the potential for significant new revenues from lease sales and production," he said. "The State of Alaska will work with the U.S. Department of Interior to support their efforts to prepare for these lease sales and ensure that local input is taken into consideration."

The law anticipates raising just over $900 million from two lease sales – one within four years of at least 400,000 acres from the 1.5 million-acre coastal plain and the other within seven years. An Interior Department Royalty Advisory Committee has recommended an accelerated schedule for the initial sale.

Advocates for leasing in the coastal plain - the State of Alaska, the Trump administration and the Alaska Congressional delegation – may have suffered a setback in January when the International Energy Agency ran up a caution flag. The agency told the Senate Energy Committee that Murkowski chairs that, given existing markets, production probably wouldn't be likely until the year 2030. Again, the legislation authorizes two lease sales, one within four years (by 2022) and one within seven years (by 2025).

In its analysis of the legislation authorizing leasing the Congressional Budget Office estimated receipts of $900 million over the 2018-2027 period, well short of the period when the International Energy Agency projects production will begin in earnest.

The liberal/progressive group Center for American Progress has done its own analysis, and anticipates minimal returns from a sale. The group said it estimates "that offering oil and gas leases in the Arctic Refuge is likely to yield no more than $37.5 million in revenue for the U.S. Treasury over the next 10 years — far short of the $1 billion to $1.8 billion that drilling proponents claim could be raised."

Pro-development forces received a boost on Dec. 23, 2017, when the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) increased its estimate of onshore oil reserves on the North Slope of Alaska from 1.5 billion barrels in 2010 to 8.7 billion barrels. In the report USGS based the increase on new oil discoveries in and near the National Petroleum Reserve Alaska that is close to the coastal plain of ANWR. The USGS report is available here: https://pubs.er.usgs.gov/publication/fs20173088.

BLM said that it would hold environmental scoping hearings in Alaska in Anchorage, Arctic Village, Fairbanks, Kaktovik and Utqiagvik. Public comments may be submitted by e-mail to blm_ak_coastalplain_EIS@blm.gov, at the BLM website www.blm.gov/alaska/coastal-plain-eis or by mail to BLM, Alaska State Office, Attention—Coastal Plain EIS, 222 West 7th Avenue, #13, Anchorage, AK 99513–7599.

Investors receive modest reductions in their eventual tax bill if they maintain their Opportunity Fund investments for at least five and then seven years. GOVERNOR SANDOVAL NOMINATES 61 OPPORTUNITY ZONES

CARSON CITY, NV – Governor Brian Sandoval todaynominated 61 opportunity zones,pursuant to the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act of 2017, which established an Opportunity Zone tax incentive, designed to encourage long-term private investment in low-income communities.

"During my time as Governor, we have invested significant resources in Nevada," Governor Brian Sandoval said. "While we have seen substantial returns, there are still parts of our state that need additional assistance. It is my hope that by nominating these 61 low-income opportunity zones, private investors will choose to fund projects in these areas that benefit the Nevadans who need it most. What's more, we believe that communities surrounding the 61 opportunity zones will also benefit from investment in the zones."

The 61 opportunity zone nominations directly impact more than 230,000 Nevadans in some of Nevada's most disadvantaged communities.

In the 61 tracts:

- Average family income is approximately $37,000
  - (Just 60% of median statewide family income of approximately $62,500)
- Average unemployment rate from 2011-2015 is16%
  - Nearly 2x greater than the national unemployment rate

The Opportunity Zone program runs on essentially two tracks – first, Governors in each state nominate opportunity zones, which are low-income community census tracts that could benefit from significant private investment. Second, once the zones are certified by the U.S. Treasury Department, interested private investors must invest in opportunity funds, specialized vehicles that can then be utilized to invest in the certified opportunity zones.

First, Census tract 32029970200 is contiguous with Census Tract 32019960201, a low-income community that is being submitted for designation as an Opportunity Zone. Second, the attached 2012-2016 American Community Survey demonstrates that the median family income of tract 32029970200 does not exceed 125 percent of the median family income of low-income community tract 32019960201. I nominate census tract 32029970200 as a qualified opportunity zone; my office stands ready to answer any questions or provide additional supporting information upon request. 2. PUBLIC COMMENT

Mr. Brian Wilcox, Chief Information Security Officer (CISO), BlackRidge Technology (BlackRidge), provided public comment in Carson City. Mr. Wilcox advised he was the former CISO for the State of Nevada prior to joining Blackridge, a military grade cyber defense security company headquartered in Reno, Nevada. Mr. Wilcox noted his previous role had awarded him a unique vantage point to understanding the strengths, weaknesses, threats, and opportunities of the state's cyber defenses. Mr. Wilcox advised he'd come in front of the Board as an extension of his public trust obligation fostered while in official capacity with the state. Mr. Wilcox noted BlackRidge was unique in providing a solution that forever changed safe internet communications. Transport Access Control (TAC), the primary of seven patents held by BlackRidge, acts as the liaison between the chaos of the internet and organizational networks, preventing unapproved traffic from being initiated. The solution authenticates every connection on the first packet of data, resulting in an immediate reduction in malicious, unwanted traffic that poses the bulk of cyber threats. Mr. Wilcox would continue informing Nevada's state entities that the next generation of cyber defenses had arrived and BlackRidge would be managing efforts through the Nevada Office of Cyber Defense Coordination.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The company is also committed to leveraging local universities to increase high-paying positions in the pharmaceutical sector, which in turn would drive industry growth. Mr. Klein noted the opportunity for partnerships and collaborations with UNLV, the College of Southern Nevada (CSN), and other southern Nevada institutions.

Governor Sandoval requested additional information on the role of a prescription management service. Mr. Klein advised the center would be staffed with employees versed in handling high-touch patient counseling, coaching, and therapy management. Ms. Nancy McCormick, Senior Vice President of Retention and Expansion, EDAWN, presented Fulcrum Sierra Biofuels, LLC and provided a brief overview of the company and abatements sought. Fulcrum Sierra BioFuels, LLC (Fulcrum) is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Fulcrum BioEnergy, Inc (FBE). FBE was formed to develop a reliable and efficient process for converting municipal solid waste (MSW) into renewable transportation fuels. Fulcrum Sierra BioFuels, LLC's existing Feedstock Processing Facility in Storey County processes MSW-derived feedstock to be shredded and compacted for transport to the company's Biorefinery, where it would be converted into renewable transportation fuels, including jet fuel and diesel. The Biorefinery, also in Storey County, would produce transportation fuel that competed directly with high-priced fossil fuels, and was expected to have a lower cost, lower carbon, and lower emissions than traditional fossil fuel alternatives. Collectively the Feedstock Processing Facility and Biorefinery would convert approximately 175,000 tons per year of MSW, or household garbage, into approximately 10.5 million gallons per year (800 barrels per day) of renewable Syncrude that would be upgraded and processed into low-carbon transportation fuel products. The project would include an equipment investment of approximately $13.25m, and building costs exceeding $12.9m. The company would add 13 positions at an average hourly rate of $22.04. Ms. McCormick was joined by Ms. Jeanne Benedetti, Senior Director Project Development, Fulcrum Sierra Biofuels, LLC.

Ms. Benedetti advised Fulcrum planned to commence the Stage 2 expansion of its Feedstock Processing Facility located in Storey County, Nevada. This will include an additional 29,000 square-feet of building to accommodate the installation of additional processing equipment.

Governor Sandoval inquired whether the waste streams came directly to the company, or through a waste management organization. Ms. Benedetti advised, the trash went through the local waste management transfer station. When Fulcrum was ready to receive a trash shipment it turned on a green light at the front of its facility. The route trucks going past would turn into Fulcrum’s facility rather than continuing a quarter mile to the scale house.

Governor Sandoval asked whether the company’s process could make landfills obsolete. Ms. Benedetti noted the company could not accept trash such as tires and mattresses, however the process contributed to a significant landfill reduction.

Mr. Klaich asked about the economics of this process. Ms. Benedetti advised Fulcrum’s product costs approximately one dollar a gallon to produce. As the feedstock was free the production costs were significantly less than those of fossil fuel.

7. WORKFORCE INNOVATION FOR THE NEW NEVADA (WINN) FUND PROGRAM APPLICATIONS - FOR BOARD APPROVAL

A. RENO AREA DATA ANALYTICS - REQUEST FOR APPROVAL TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $300,000

Ms. Stacey Bostwick, Workforce Development Program Coordinator, GOED, introduced Agenda Item 7A and noted GOED has been working with its partners Truckee Meadows Community College (TMCC), NCLab, and Desert Research Institute's AIC to develop a first building block of the Machine Learning option within the Advanced Automation and Robotics track of LEAP Advanced ICT (Information Communications Technology). This building block would address the growing workforce requirements for skills in Data Analytics and would be a decisive contribution to add to and considerably strengthen the talent pool in this field benefitting effectively every industry in Nevada as well as attracting 21st century technology heavy companies to locate in the state. This project was now seeking funding to develop a completely online, hands-on and self-paced learning program (non-credit) and make it available to 500 workers and job seekers, in the Reno area, to provide the skills and knowledge necessary for employment and growth in analytical professions. Ms. Bostwick was joined by Ms. Barbara Walden, Director of Applied Technologies, TMCC, Mr. Vasily Kamyshanov, the Chief Operating Officer, NCLab, and Mr. Russ Riggs, the Chief Operating Officer, Lift 361.

Ms. Walden noted, as Nevada's economy became more diverse, it brought the challenge of upskilling the workforce. The Panasonic Preferred Pathway (P3) training program was an example of meeting those workforce challenges via innovative programs and delivery methods. This had enabled Panasonic to hire the trained employees it required at the Tesla Gigafactory and allowed for Nevadans with no advanced manufacturing experience to receive the training necessary to work in one of Nevada's most promising and emerging industries. Another identified challenge was building Nevada's technology sector pipeline. Coding, cyber security, and data analytics were greatly in-demand skill sets. Additionally, these skills were not unique to technology, and crossed every industry sector including marketing, health care, business, and government.

Mr. Kamyshanov advised NCLab had developed online courses for STEM disciplines and was currently part of a Nevada Ready 21 Program for middle schools. NCLab is also working with Clark County, Washoe County, and rural areas of Nevada. This project would enable NCLab to qualify students to become workforce ready for technology based careers.

Mr. Riggs advised his company focused exclusively on analytics. The company offered custom analytics based on client's specific needs. The company's services were highly specialized and attracting talent had been difficult in the past. Mr. Riggs stated the project would introduce more data analytics into schools and equip more students with skills in this area.

Governor Sandoval inquired about the process of signing up for the program. Ms. Walden advised, for the purposes of the WINN funds, there would be an intake process including an application for the funding and assessment of an applicant's overall objective in participating and completing the program.

Director Anderson inquired about the program development and maintenance costs. Mr. Kamyshanov advised online education has a solid propriety platform to deliver complex knowledge to people, and this course would be developed together with participating companies to really match the job demand. Once the set was developed the costs to support it would be low. Once developed, it could easily scale to an unlimited number of students.

Director Anderson about the program timeframes. Ms. Waldon noted promotion and intake would commence within two months with a targeted course commencing by October 2018. Each course would take 80-120 hours for completion and it was estimated funding will be fully utilized by June 30, 2019. Program outcomes would be reported and evaluated using self-reported data gathered from participants and employer partners to understand the placement and wage gains experienced as a result of program completion.

A MOTION WAS MADE BY DR. DANA BENNETT TO APPROVE THE REQUEST OF RENO AREA DATA ANALYTICS TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $300,000 AS DESCRIBED IN AGENDA ITEM 7A. THIS MOTION WAS SECONDED BY MR. KLAICH. THE MOTION PASSED UNANIMOUSLY.

B. CLARK COUNTY HEALTH AND TECHNOLOGY - REQUEST FOR APPROVAL TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $700,000

Ms. Bostwick introduced Agenda Item 7B. Ms. Bostwick advised this program proposed to develop both a workforce increase in nursing and home health and infuse new technology training and the necessary skills to become effective bridges between clinical and community settings. This would help improve transitions from clinical to community settings, with strong potential to improve population health outcomes, reduce health disparities, and to control health care costs. Partners of the program include BrightStar Home Health, Hallmark Home Care, Homewatch Caregivers, Home Care Assistance, and the Nevada State Board of Nursing. The proposed strategy established increased capacity to on-ramp into healthcare through Home Healthcare or Nursing Assistant programs with new infusions of technology certifications. Beyond the strong economic value of creating new health jobs in southern Nevada, this approach would support efforts to mitigate the current economic burden incurred by the state due to chronic diseases and hospital readmissions. Students completing the program would represent the future of health care with skills and competencies in the use of technology to improve patient and community health outcomes. Ms. Bostwick was joined by Ms. Luz Castro, Health Care Specialist, College of Southern Nevada (CSN), Ms. Catherine Prato-Lefkowitz, Director of Nursing Education, Nevada State Board of Nursing, and Ms. Cynthia Knight, Director of Client and Caregiver Services, Homewatch Caregivers.

Ms. Castro explained the CSN Division of Workforce and Economic Development program strived to deliver a high-standard curriculum that taught and promoted all competencies and principles required for qualified home health aides and Certified Nursing Assistants (CNA). CNA programs are highly recognized by industry leaders and home health aides were among the fastest growing jobs in the industry. There were several barriers to the required education, the the primary being tuition. CSN also needed to innovate its programs with technology competencies to upskill and deliver a high-quality service to employers and the community. As the program certificates would be offered both online and in-person, students would have flexibility regarding different modes of matriculation. Several employers had already expressed interest in partnering with CSN and hiring its students upon completion of this program.

Ms. Knight advised there was currently a severe shortage of qualified candidates and this had inhibited growth of the business. Homewatch Caregivers had a contract with the Veterans Administration to provide care for veterans in their own home and the company was looking to CSN to develop qualified candidates as quickly as possible.

Ms. Catherine Prato-Lefkowitz advised a CNA certification was a valuable entry point into any health care occupation or profession. Many CNA students, particularly in high schools, had goals of becoming nurses, physicians, or dentists. Increasing the technological literacy for CNAs and nurses would be an effective path to increase competencies. Technology is commonplace in health care. However, it is not as commonplace in the training that CNAs and nurses receive.

Dr. Havins inquired about the tuition costs for a CNA program and the portion of this to be covered under the WINN program. Ms. Bostwick advised tuition for the CNA program was approximately $2,400. The program was structured to cover 100% of this fee.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison asked how many tuitions would be covered by the program application. Ms. Bostwick advised the current application would cover 250 individuals. However, the objective would be to consistently seek opportunities for integration. In conjunction with WINN there may be scope to leverage additional funding sources for tuitions and increases in technology infusion and certification.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A MOTION WAS MADE BY MR. BARRETT TO APPROVE THE REQUEST BY THE CLARK COUNTY HEALTH AND TECHNOLOGY TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $700,000 AS DESCRIBED IN AGENDA ITEM 7B. THIS MOTION WAS SECONDED BY DR. HAVINS. THE MOTION PASSED UNANIMOUSLY.

8. WORKFORCE INNOVATION FOR THE NEW NEVADA (WINN) FUND PROGRAM APPLICATIONS - FOR DIRECTOR APPROVAL

A. RENO AREA LOGISTICS AND MANUFACTURING RE-ENTRY INITIATIVE-REQUEST FOR APPROVAL TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $75,000

Ms. Bostwick introduced Agenda Item 8A and advised the objective of this program was to provide career development opportunities to individuals involved in the justice system, in northern Nevada, with a direct pathway to higher wage employment. This proposal would create trained, professional individuals, who otherwise may not have the opportunity to work in these industries, and who would meet the needs of local employers to expand their businesses. Quality Plastics, High Mountain Door and Trim, Reno Custom Crating, Sierra Meat and Seafood and Iron had all expressed a need for trained and skilled employees to sustain and expand their Manufacturing and Logistics businesses. Phase One would be launched in May 2018 and include a cohort of 30 participants. Ms. Bostwick was joined by Ms. Camille Vega, Re-Entry Coordinator, TMCC, Mr. Jonathan Wilson, Facility Manager, Northern Nevada Transitional Housing, and Mr. Bill Owensby, IT Director, Quality Plastics.

Ms. Vega stated current data showed one in three Americans had some sort of criminal record. These individuals had minimal support in re-entering society post incarceration. One-half of those released were incarcerated within their first year. Two-thirds were re-incarcerated within three years, and over five years, three-quarters were re-incarcerated. One of the greatest factors in reducing re-incarceration was meaningful employment.

Mr. Wilson advised he joined northern Nevada Transitional Housing in August 2017. Prior to this he'd been with the Department of Corrections for almost 15 years and had noted the lack of transitional support for inmates. Mr. Wilson and Ms. Vega had discussed the potential for certificate programs. Additionally, Mr. Wilson noted he had identified employers interested in participating in the program. Sought after skills pertained to manufacturing, logistics, food preparation, and food safety.

Mr. Bill Owensby advised Quality Plastics advocated for inmate re-entry with 40% of its currently staff being previously incarcerated. The typical new hires from these re-entry programs were reliable and consistent. Additionally, being gainfully employed could contribute to elevated self-worth and lower risks of reoffending. Mr. Owensby advised the company hired him from a restitution center two-years earlier. He now held the position of IT Director.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Governor Sandoval highlighted his position as Chairman of the Board of Prison Commissioners and noted at times parole eligible inmates would select not to parole as they had no job or place to go. Governor Sandoval thanked the employers involved in the application and noted the importance of providing resources, tools and skills for a productive life.

Mr. Don Soderberg commended the program and noted the Nevada Department of Employment, Training and Rehabilitation (DETR) had also been involved in re-entry initiatives. Feedback often highlight how dependable and enthusiastic these employees were with some of the best employees being participants of re-entry programs.

Governor Sandoval asked if the program would also be available to women. Ms. Vega stated the first cohort would solely include 30 males. Best practices in re-entry program development and implementation had identified that men and women were best supported in separate training programs. Ms. Vegas advised the intention was to have a cohort of women in the second semester, pending additional funding.

Governor Sandoval thanked Ms. Vega and encouraged the group to come back to present a second application. Ms. Vega noted the objective was to do so in four months.

DIRECTOR ANDERSON APPROVED THE REQUST FOR RENO AREA LOGISTICS AND MANUFACTURING RE-ENTRY INITIATIVE TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $75,000.

9. DIRECTOR'S REPORT - REVIEW AND DISCUSSION

Director Anderson advised GOED's International Trade Division recently completed an advanced planning trip to Ghana, Botswana, and South Africa to prepare for a Governor-led trade mission that would take place in summer 2018. The trip was a success as partnership opportunities were identified in several sectors including trade, water technology, higher education, smart city technology, technology transfer, and good governance.

At the National Governors Association North America Summit in May 2018, Governor Sandoval and Premier Rachel Notley of Alberta, Canada signed an MOU focused on collaboration in the development, testing, and commercialization of drone technology. This followed a successful trade mission to Nevada of over fifty Alberta businesses in February 2018.

Mr. Randy Walden, GOED's Advanced Manufacturing Industry Specialist and Chair of State Apprenticeship Council; oversaw the approval of over 600 apprenticeships which included a recently announced 425 Panasonic employees. The apprentices would be attending classes at TMCC utilizing the flexible delivery manufacturing courses developed for the P3 program last year. This would be the first group of apprentices and would followed in the upcoming months by participants from Tesla as well as other manufacturers in Northern Nevada. Apprenticeships played a vital role in providing a highly qualified workforce for new and existing companies in Nevada.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

On April 20, 2018 GOED submitted a list of recommended census tracts, Governor Sandoval, to be designated as Opportunity Zones. Nevada's identification process has been held up as a 'best practice' by Policy Map who was involved in the creation of opportunity zone policy.

The Nevada Film Office (NFO) was working on revamping its online locations directory. The new online locations directory had been designed to better connect potential film locations around Nevada with production companies, giving local businesses more control and more opportunity. The directory was in the final stages and should launch in late May 2018 with an associated marketing campaign commercial promoted on Facebook, Twitter, and potentially local television.

Dr. Barclay was working with the Touro Center for Disaster Life Support, UNLV, the College of Southern Nevada, health industry corporate employers and other stakeholders to develop a series of certificates in Technology for Emergency Preparedness and Disaster Response. These certificates will be offered from high school to graduate level and will contribute to building and strengthening a technology-ready workforce.

Director Anderson welcomed Ms. Bostwick, as GOED's new WINN Coordinator. Ms. Bostwick is based in GOED's Las Vegas office.

10. STATE OF NEVADA UNEMPLOYMENT RATE UPDATE - as established by the Research and Analysis Division of the Nevada Department of Employment, Training and Rehabilitation.

Agenda item 10. was for information only. GOED is committed to providing this information for each Board meeting. There were no questions or comments regarding this item.

11. PUBLIC COMMENT

Mr. Cory Hunt, Deputy Director, GOED provided public comment from Carson City. Mr. Hunt stated May 18, 2018 would be his last day at GOED. Mr. Hunt thanked Governor Sandoval for the great privilege of serving the State of Nevada during his roles with the Governor's Office and GOED. Mr. Hunt also thanked Mr. Steve Hill, Mr. Paul Anderson, Mr. Bob Potts, the GOED Board, Nevada's RDA's, and GOED's staff. Mr. Hunt noted he looked forward to continuing opportunities and projects that would support Nevada's growth.

Governor Sandoval wished Mr. Hunt the best in his future endeavors and commended his contribution to the State of Nevada and dedication to the multiple projects he'd been involved in.

Assemblywoman Irene Bustamante-Adams, Chief Strategy Officer, Workforce Connections, provided comment from Las Vegas and thanked the GOED Board for supporting the Clark County Health and Technology WINN Fund application. Assemblywoman Bustamante-Adams also thanked Dr. Gillian Barclay, Healthcare Industry Specialist, GOED for bringing a global vision to Nevada and competitively positioning the state in terms of serving the employer.

Sandoval's legacy: the 'New Nevada'
Op-Ed by Mark Hutchison
Reno Gazette Journal
https://www.rgj.com/story/opinion/voices/2018/11/01/sandovals-legacy-new-nevada-hutchison/1847337002/

Nevadans soon will cast their final ballots for a host of candidates and issues, but none will be more meaningful or important to the health and welfare of Nevada than our next governor. Tuesday, we look to the future with hope. Today, let's recall how far we've come and appreciate who championed our cause along the way.

Historian Jon Meacham once observed, "One of the mysteries of history is why is it that certain moments produce exactly the right human beings?" I believe that history will record that Brian Sandoval was exactly the right Nevadan to serve at exactly the right time as our state's 29th governor.

In September 2009, he left a lifetime appointment as a federal district court judge, the pinnacle of any legal career and a job he loved, and announced he would run for governor of Nevada. In 2010, he took on and defeated an incumbent Republican governor in the primary election and then prevailed in the general election against the most prominent and powerful Democratic family in the state.

When Brian Sandoval was inaugurated, Nevada's economy was dismal at best. Our unemployment rate was ranked the highest in the nation at 14 percent. One out of every 11 housing units fell into foreclosure. Our residents filed for bankruptcy at twice the rate of the national average. Governor Sandoval and his administration went to work over the next eight years to implement policies and champion legislation that created what he called the "New Nevada."

This New Nevada is stronger than ever. Nevada's unemployment rate currently stands at 4.5 percent, the lowest since 2007. We lead the country in private sector job growth, and as of last month, we've added more than 276,000 jobs since the Great Recession by producing opportunities in advanced manufacturing, logistics and operations, information technology, health and medical, and aerospace and defense. This kind of economic diversification is something we Nevadans only dreamed about before Governor Sandoval assumed the reins of government. And we did this while strengthening our traditional core industries of gaming, hospitality, conventions, mining, construction and agriculture.

Economic diversification and job growth have been an important part of the New Nevada, but no more so than education funding and reforms, environmental improvements, transportation innovations, social services transformations, health care accessibility and advancements, public safety enhancements, and so much more that the Sandoval administration has accomplished.

As someone with a front-row seat to the building of the New Nevada, I firmly believe that Governor Sandoval gets out of bed every morning with one objective in mind: What's in the best interest of the people of the state of Nevada? One of my first significant events with Governor Sandoval was in October 2013 when I served as the master of ceremonies for the Boy Scouts' annual luncheon where Governor Sandoval was being awarded the Good Scout of the Year award. I was honored to introduce the governor and recognize him as a more-than-worthy recipient of the award. Brian Sandoval truly embodies the Scout Law: trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent.

We left the hotel ballroom together, and I accompanied the governor as he walked through the hotel and to the parking area. As we walked, the governor greeted with his trademark graciousness the many hotel employees who wanted to meet him. We talked about the events of the day, the most prominent being the shutdown of the federal government that morning. The governor said he hoped that Congress could reach an agreement to restore the government's operations. Then he revealed what I consider his governing philosophy. He said that as governor, his job was to ensure that government works for the benefit of all Nevadans.

It has been the privilege of a lifetime to serve my fellow Nevadans as lieutenant governor at the side of Governor Brian Sandoval. To me, he is and will always be exactly the right Nevadan who served at exactly the right time. As we cast our votes on Tuesday, may we all consider applying the Sandoval philosophy of government and vote for candidates who we believe will get up on Wednesday morning and subsequent mornings with one objective in mind: what's in the best interest of the people of the state of Nevada? If we do, the New Nevada will continue to thrive and will remain the place we are so proud to call home.

Mark Hutchison is Nevada's lieutenant governor.

Nevada jury: $250K per mental patient dumped to other states
Ken Ritter
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A Nevada jury put the state and a former mental hospital administrator on the hook Thursday for class-action damages that could range from about $9 million to more than $22 million for putting patients on buses in Las Vegas for one-way trips to cities around the country.

An eight-woman jury deliberated less than three hours after a two-week trial before deciding unanimously that every Rawson-Neal Psychiatric Hospital patient who was given a Greyhound bus ticket to another city and no other arrangements for care after June 2011 should receive $250,000.

State law could cap damages at $100,000 per plaintiff, or $8.9 million.

State Department of Health and Human Services spokeswoman Martha Framsted said the jury decision will be appealed.

The judgment could top $22.5 million if the cap is waived, said attorney Mark Merin, a Sacramento, California, lawyer who represented plaintiff James Flavy Coy Brown.

Brown was the subject of an award-winning investigation in 2013 by the Sacramento Bee that brought to light what the lawsuit derides as "Greyhound therapy."

"There are at least 371 people in the class. We have been personally in touch with 89 of them," said Merin, who took the case to Clark County District Court after a federal judge dismissed an American Civil Liberties Union lawsuit in 2014.

Brown, then 48, and diagnosed with psychosis, told reporters in Las Vegas in 2013 that he arrived "homeless, confused and anxious" in Sacramento after a 15-hour bus ride from Las Vegas. After a day on the streets, hospital emergency room officials found him space at a psychiatric hospital. Brown was later reunited with his daughter in North Carolina.

Merin said he heard similar stories of indigent patients arriving in strange cities in every U.S. state and sleeping in bus stations, under benches and on the street if they were not arrested or hospitalized.

"Maybe now the state will talk about a settlement," the attorney said. "If they don't win on appeal, they're going to have to face this verdict."

State Attorney General Adam Laxalt's office issued a statement noting the issue came to light before Laxalt took office in 2015, and that his "client" defendants included Southern Nevada Mental Health Services and the state Health and Human Services Department.

The jury found negligence on the part of officials including the now-retired mental health services administrator Chelsea Szklany.

Laxalt, a Republican, is running for governor to replace term-limited GOP Gov. Brian Sandoval, who reached a $400,000 settlement of a lawsuit that San Francisco officials filed in 2013 over similar patient dumping allegations involving 24 people.

Rawson-Neal opened in 2006 as the only state psychiatric facility in Las Vegas following years of complaints that mentally ill people were clogging emergency rooms at for-profit hospitals in southern Nevada.

The region now has 2.2 million of Nevada's nearly 3 million residents.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

State officials reported in 2014 that Rawson-Neal treated an average of more than 6,000 people per year during a five-year span, and that nearly 1,500 patients had been provided bus transportation out of the state.

Clark County students who refuse searches face discipline
Amelia Pak-Harvey
Las Vegas Review Journal
https://www.reviewjournal.com/news/education/clark-county-students-who-refuse-searches-face-discipline-1516523/

Students who refuse to submit to a random search for weapons will face disciplinary action and may be removed from school property, the Clark County School District announced Thursday.

The announcement to randomly search middle- and high-school students with handheld metal detectors follows the fatal shooting of a student outside Canyon Springs High School in September and the confiscation of 11 guns found on students this year.

Searches, which will start in the coming weeks, will be conducted as students arrive to school and while in class. A computer program will decide which school, classroom and students to search, the district said.

When a school is randomly selected, the program will generate a random number, such as 3 or 5, according to the district. That will determine which students to search as they arrive at school — every third student, for example, or every fifth student.

Students entering school will be directed to a search area, advised of the purpose of the search and told to place their belongings on a table.

Students who don't consent to the search will be disciplined "as they would for breaking any other school rule," according to district spokeswoman Melinda Malone.

"We will ask them and their parents to come in to meet with the school administrator," she said in an email.

Staff will search the belongings "only to the degree necessary to affirm that no weapons are concealed therein," according to procedures.

After removing metal objects from their pockets, students will be scanned with a metal detector.

"Staff conducting the search must use an identical scanning technique/pattern for each student," the procedures state. "The handheld device should not touch the student's body during the search."

If the detector activates, the student will be asked if they have any metal objects. They will either remove the object or the staff member will confirm the object is not a weapon either visually or by "lightly touching" the activated area.

If a search requires physical contact, it will be conducted by someone of the same gender as the student. Students who indicate that they identify with another gender will have a choice on who will search them at that point.

Students who have any prohibited items — not just weapons, but drugs or alcohol, for example — may face disciplinary action.

Students who are searched in randomly selected classrooms will be directed to stand, carry their belongings and form a line near the door. Students will wait to be directed to a search area in the hallway, and teachers will remain in the classroom to monitor behavior of students waiting in line.

The district will document every student searched, as well as the date, time, location and staff member who conducted the search.

"Our goal as educators is always to discover concerns before they become problems by developing strong relationships," Superintendent Jesus Jara wrote in a letter to parents on Thursday. "I encourage students to report any rumors of weapons, potential fights, and other safety concerns to school police or to the SafeVoice app."

Jury rules against Nevada in patient dumping case
David Ferrara
Las Vegas Review Journal
https://www.reviewjournal.com/crime/courts/jury-rules-against-nevada-in-patient-dumping-case-1516619/

A Las Vegas jury on Thursday handed down what could amount to a multimillion-dollar penalty against Nevada for busing mental patients out of state without support services awaiting them.

Rawson-Neal Psychiatric Hospital came under scrutiny in early 2013 after media reports about patients receiving one-way tickets to unfamiliar parts of the country.

A jury of eight women awarded $250,000 to James Flavy Coy Brown in a class-action lawsuit against Southern Nevada Adult Mental Health Services, the hospital, its administrator and others after a trial over the practice. That same dollar amount should be given to each of the patients, their lawyers said.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A deputy attorney general, representing the defendants, declined to comment on the verdict, but a spokeswoman for the state Department of Health and Human Services said in an email to the Review-Journal that the department will ask the attorney general's office to appeal the decision.

"Rawson Neal hospital continues to be committed to providing safe and appropriate discharges," spokeswoman Martha Framsted also said in the email.

The plaintiffs' lawyers had contacted 89 people who were bused out of state, including 11 who testified during the trial, according to Sacramento attorney Mark Merin. At least 371 had been identified in the class, he said.

Upward of 1,500 people treated at the facility had been sent to states across the country and to Washington, D.C., Merin said after the verdict was reached.

State law caps lawsuits against government agencies at $100,000, but another lawyer for the patients, Allen Lichtenstein, said that cap may not be in play against the hospital's administrator, Chelsea Szklany, who was sued individually.

Through the trial that started last month, witnesses, including Brown, described their troubles after being dropped off in unfamiliar towns in testimony that Merin called "just mind-blowing."

Some of the patients immediately became homeless, sleeping under benches, in bus stations and on curbs, the lawyer said. Others told of arrests, hospitalization, "everything you can imagine."

The Sacramento Bee first reported that Brown spent 72 hours at Rawson-Neal before he was picked up by a taxi, driven to a bus station and placed on a bus traveling to Northern California without any form of identification or ability to obtain medication for his mental illness.

In their verdict, jurors found that Southern Nevada Adult Mental Health Services violated state law regarding indigent residents who had recovered from mental illnesses by failing to return them to their families, previous residences or to the counties where they had been involuntarily committed.

The jury decided that those patients were harmed because of the violation and that state agents, including Szklany, breached their duties to psychiatric patients who were discharged and sent by taxi to a Greyhound Bus station, before being carried out of state. The hospital staff also failed to arrange for follow-up care and housing, and provide medical documentation, the jury found.

"I think the jury listened very carefully," Merin said.

"Maybe now the state will actually talk about settling," he said. "They have to recognize that if they don't win on appeal, they're going to have to face this verdict."

Las Vegas stadium to have Caesars-branded entrance
Richard N. Velotta
Las Vegas Review Journal

Caesars Entertainment Corp., the operator of Caesars Palace and eight other Las Vegas casino properties, has signed a 15-year agreement to be a founding partner of the $1.8 billion Las Vegas stadium.

Financial terms of the deal announced Thursday weren't disclosed.

As a founding partner, Caesars will host a branded stadium entrance and drop-off zone, digital signage, media, radio and print assets in addition to alumni, player and cheerleader appearances.

"We are honored to align with a company that shares the Raiders' values of improving the local community and delivering exceptional customer service in creating this transformative project," Raiders President Marc Badain said.

The partnership is the first Raiders deal with a gaming and hospitality company and will give Caesars customers and members of their Total Rewards loyalty club access to exclusive experiences.

High-rollers will have access to the customized Caesars-branded owners suite at the 50-yard line of the Las Vegas stadium, VIP dinners on the field, training facility events, fantasy camp participation, stadium tours and tickets to home games and most stadium events.

The Las Vegas stadium will have five entrances that could potentially have branded sponsorships, similar to the design of U.S. Bank Stadium in Minneapolis.

At that stadium, the home of the Minnesota Vikings, entrances are referred to as "gates" and are sponsored by suburban Minneapolis corporations Ecolab, Pentair and Polaris as well as Verizon and Legacy.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Caesars partnership deal is different from a stadium naming rights sponsorship the Raiders are pursuing. The team is quietly discussing naming rights to the stadium with a number of companies the team has not named. In September, team officials indicated talks are with the types of companies that have typically sponsored stadiums in the past — airlines, telecommunications companies, financial institutions and other large corporations. A team official had no comment on the status of those negotiations Thursday.

“With this deep partnership, Caesars will become an essential part of the game time ritual for Raiders fans everywhere,” said Chris Holdren, chief marketing officer for Caesars. “From activations to exclusive experiences, fans of the silver and black will see Caesars as their home on game day.”

Caesars may elaborate further later Thursday when the company has a conference call to announce its third-quarter earnings.

Casino and sports betting operators including MGM, Caesars and William Hill US, have been pursuing partnerships with leagues and teams since the U.S. Supreme Court overturned a law in May that banned wagering in most states.

Partnership announcements have been trickling since May, and it’s just the beginning, said Irwin Raij, co-chair of the sports group at New York-based O’Melveny & Myers, whose clients include professional teams.

“We are going to see a lot more deals at the team level,” Raij said in response to the recent MGM-Jets partnership.

Becky Harris, chairwoman of the state Gaming Control Board, had not seen details of the Caesars deal, but said she was doubtful that regulators would have any concerns since the deal doesn’t involve gambling.

Las Vegas substance-use treatment center to open this month
Jessie Bekker
Las Vegas Review Journal
https://www.reviewjournal.com/life/health/las-vegas-substance-use-treatment-center-to-open-this-month-1516554/

A substance-use treatment facility will open in mid-November with the promise of providing a continuum of care, from detoxification to transitional living.

CrossRoads of Southern Nevada founder Jeff Iverson, who’s in recovery himself, made the announcement Thursday at a ribbon-cutting ceremony at the Las Vegas facility, 2121 W. Charleston Blvd.

“I’m really honored to be a part of a project that is so needed in the community,” said Iverson, joined by the center’s staff and board of directors, along with health care industry members and public officials.

The opening comes four months after Iverson planned to admit patients. At the time, he had staff members, but contracts with insurers weren’t established, and he was waiting on a license from the state for a detoxification facility.

He was working on securing designation from the Southern Nevada Health District as a drop-off site for first responders, too.

He may have contracts with Medicaid-managed care organizations and private insurers, but the state hasn’t granted the facility a license as a detox center. Iverson said he’s hopeful that piece will come through next week.

Julie Kotchevar, administrator for the state Department of Health and Human Services Division of Public and Behavioral Health, said the department would issue the license after the facility has passed an inspection.

“We can provide all of the services here that are proposed, except for the medical detox,” Iverson said. He said he was in talks with fire and police officials about the facility being designated as a drop-off location.

Iverson raised “several million dollars just to get to the point where I am now” in private donations, he told reporters Thursday. He said he would turn to city and county officials to address options for public and grant funding should the need arise.

‘I love my community’

Public officials lauded Iverson and his staff Thursday for creating a 172-bed facility to detox substance users and treat them through their transition away from life on drugs. The facility’s bed space will be split between patients needing detoxification and those seeking short-term housing.

The facility will also provide on-site medical care and an outpatient clinic.

Without the bed space, those needing mental health and substance use treatment end up in county jails and in hospital emergency rooms instead of in specialized care, said Clark County Commissioner Steve Sisolak, who’s running for governor.

“What you’re doing here is giving hope to individuals that otherwise didn’t have hope,” he said to a crowd of about 80 people Thursday. He was joined by Las Vegas Mayor Carolyn Goodman, Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department Sheriff Joe Lombardo and First Assistant Attorney General J. Brin Gibson.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Iverson said he is in discussion with county officials to determine how to best serve uninsured clients but promised the center would not turn anyone away.

“I love my community, and I want to do things to help,” he said. “Hundreds will be going through our continuum.”

Open enrollment for Nevada Health Link begins Nov. 1
Nevada Appeal
https://www.nevadaappeal.com/news/local/open-enrollment-for-nevada-health-link-begins-nov-1/

Nevada Health Link, the state's online health insurance marketplace, began open enrollment for 2019 health insurance plans on Thursday. For the next 45 days, Nevada residents can shop for and enroll in a qualified health plan that best fits their budgetary and health circumstances. Nevada Health Link reminds consumers statewide they have access to free in-person assistance from a licensed enrollment professional who can help them navigate the insurance process and determine their eligibility for federal tax credits and cost sharing reduction subsidies. This year's open enrollment ends on Dec. 15.

Last year, Nevada Health Link enrolled a record 91,003 Nevadans. With approximately 9 percent of Nevadans currently uninsured, Nevada Health Link is working to reach all eligible residents throughout the state, especially underserved populations.

"We know how confusing and intimidating it can be to navigate the world of health insurance and find the right plan. That's why we want to remind consumers of the resources available to assist them," said Heather Korbulic, executive director for the Nevada Exchange. "With ongoing changes that continue to affect the healthcare industry, including new rules, federal requirements and various health insurance options saturating the marketplace, now more than ever, Nevadans need to understand what they are purchasing before they buy.

"Qualified health plans sold on the exchange provide comprehensive coverage and you won't be denied because of a pre-existing condition. Nevada Health Link is here to help you navigate the enrollment process. While we have achieved milestone enrollment numbers year-over-year, we remain focused on both uninsured and underinsured Nevadans, particularly those from underserved areas and populations, because no one, regardless of their income, can afford to be without health insurance."

More than 80 percent of Nevadans who enroll in a health plan purchased through Nevada Health Link are eligible for financial assistance from the federal government to help offset monthly health insurance payments.

"This is yet another important example of why in-person assistance can be especially valuable to consumers. We want to ensure Nevadans are taking full advantage of all the assistance programs for which they qualify," Korbulic said.

To find an enrollment assister near you, use the in-person assistance search tool on NevadaHealthLink.com. Residents who are currently insured with exchange-based health plans are also encouraged to shop for new plans, as plans and premiums have changed. Consumers can call 1-855-768-5465 or email customerservicenvhl@exchange.nv.gov for more information.

Blockchains company makes big promises, including e-sports arena and master-planned community, at unveiling in Prague

Eleven months after purchasing a chunk of land nearly the size of Reno, Blockchains LLC is finally going public with its ambitious plans to build a public-focused blockchain-centered tech oasis in the Nevada desert.

At an event in Prague on Thursday, company CEO Jeffrey Berns made a long-awaited announcement about the plans of the enigmatic company, which purchased 67,000 acres of land at the Tahoe-Reno Industrial Park in January but has been mostly tight-lipped about its planned use in the subsequent 11 months.

Berns, who made the presentation alongside a hologram of the young girl who appears in the company’s promotional videos, outlined additional details of the company’s proposed “Innovation Park” at the conference, which he said would “highlight the power of the public blockchain” through various projects including a blockchain-based master-planned community, a promised e-sports arena and a blockchain-servicing bank.

Berns, a multimillionaire consumer protection attorney, acknowledged that little in his background is related to blockchain development, but said he was enough of a believer in the technology’s potential to put up $250 million to get the company off the ground.

“I’m not a developer,” he said. “I have no idea how to code. I’m older than most of you in the audience, and I come from a profession that many of you think causes more problems than solutions. But I will tell you this: In all my life, in all of my career as a lawyer, I never saw a technology that I believed in more or one that I thought really could change the balance of power back to us instead of corporations, instead of Wall Street.”

In the abstract, blockchain technology is essentially a public digital ledger open to users and distributed across the internet. Bitcoin, the digital cryptocurrency, is probably the best known example of the technology, but Blockchains relies on another platform called Ethereum that allows users to develop and build applications for various purposes, from executing contracts to tracking a supply chain.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

“No government, no bank, no corporation,” Berns said Thursday. “Just trusting in math.”

Berns said that one of his biggest fears would be seeing established financial and banking players decide to use their own private blockchain technology and requiring their customers use it as well, which he said went against the point of the technology. To that end, he said 90 percent of the company’s ownership and 100 percent of its voting rights would be shared between five or six “stakeholder groups,” one of which would include developers, which will allow them to create their own governance structures and corporate models.

“It’s not really even a company,” he said. “I think, really, this is me trying to create a movement to use the public blockchain to empower the individual. To change the way we do things. And all I’ve done is wrapped a company inside it in order to monetize and perpetuate this movement that I hope we’ll all share in.”

Several details of the company’s plans have trickled out over the past year, including an initiative to develop a high-speed fiber network in rural Storey County and to hire between 10,000 and 20,000 people within the next decade to build the “blockchain center of the universe.”

Additional plans include creation of a residential living space on company land that would use blockchain technology to develop houses, apartments, banks, markets, stores and schools. The New York Times reported Thursday that the company is working with Storey County on a master-planned community with thousands of homes and a school, but that construction isn’t scheduled to begin until late 2019.

Berns also announced a lightly-detailed plan to create an “immersive content creation studio” that he described as a cross between a movie studio, recording studio and game developer, highlighting his own experience as the publisher of a blockchain-based news website.

As part of the company’s commitment to custody of digital records, Berns said it had put up the funds to purchase nuclear bomb-resistant storage bunkers in Georgia and Wyoming and planned to construct another one in Nevada. He said the company had also purchased space at similar high-security facilities in Switzerland and Sweden.

“What we will be able to do is provide security that is unmatched, that no bank, no single government will be able to offer to the people that want to put their digital assets in storage here,” he said. Berns said that he had purchased an unnamed bank, and planned to make it the most “consumer-friendly, transparent” banking institution that would cater to blockchain users and companies.

He also highlighted a somewhat controversial designation of Storey County as an “Opportunity Zone,” a creation of the tax overhaul legislation designed to spur development and investment in zip codes with low prosperity by providing capital gains tax breaks to investors who place their money in qualified funds in that area.

Berns also referenced the company’s Wednesday announcement of a memorandum of understanding with NV Energy to develop blockchain-based energy products, and said to expect similar announcements coming out in the next six months.

On a more local level, the company appears to be contracting with prominent advertising firm R&R Partners, and two company executives — Pete Ernaut and Michon Martin — could be seen greeting Berns after the event.

Federal health care website up and running after slow start
Associated Press
https://www.reviewjournal.com/life/health/federal-health-care-website-up-and-running-after-slow-start-1516451/

WASHINGTON — The federal website where consumers can get health insurance under the Affordable Care Act was up and running Thursday after a slow start as sign-up season for 2019 opened days before the midterm elections.

During early morning hours, people accessing the site were directed to a screen that said work was underway. A recording at the HealthCare.gov call center conveyed a similar message. Things seemed to be running normally by about 9 a.m. EDT.

With health care a major issue in Tuesday’s elections, this sign-up season under the Trump administration is getting close scrutiny.

In earlier years, technical problems with the site created major headaches for the Obama administration. Some Democrats cited HealthCare.gov’s meltdown after its 2013 debut as one of the reasons they lost control of the Senate the following year.

Since those initial problems were fixed, the website serving people in 39 states has worked fairly smoothly, first under President Barack Obama and now under Donald Trump. The rest of the states and the District of Columbia run their own sign-ups.

A spokesperson for the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services said Thursday morning that HealthCare.gov was open for business.

Before the site went live for sign-ups at the start of a new coverage year, technicians had to load up details on thousands of changes in plans and premiums.

“Prior to every open enrollment, final preparations must take place ahead of the start of the open enrollment period to ensure the website runs smoothly for consumers,” said a statement from the agency. The statement said the agency’s commitment had been that the site would be ready “in the morning.”

The health law’s sixth sign-up season began with stabilizing premiums and more choices for consumers.

Nationally, average premiums are going up only by low single-digit percentages for 2019. In some states, and for some types of plans, premiums will decline. Fewer areas will see increases. Insurers also are expanding their participation.

But Republicans have not backed off their pledge to fully repeal the health law, despite failing to do so in Trump’s first year. Still, other changes by the GOP-run Congress and the administration for next year may result in fewer people signing up.

Congress did get rid of the unpopular requirement that most people carry health insurance or risk fines, starting Jan. 1. The administration has opened the way for insurers to offer alternatives to the law’s comprehensive coverage, including plans that don’t have to cover pre-existing conditions.

Democrats have made maintaining protections for pre-existing conditions a major issue in the elections, forcing Republicans on the defensive. They also accuse Trump of trying to “sabotage” the health law, and a core group of former Obama administration officials has kept close tabs on sign-up season.

Despite all the political drama, enrollment has remained remarkably stable.

About 10 million people have private policies through HealthCare.gov and state-run insurance markets, with roughly 9 in 10 getting taxpayer-financed help to pay their premiums. An estimated 12 million more are covered through the law’s Medicaid expansion, aimed at low-income adults.

Income-based subsidies that protect consumers from high premiums remain available for next year, as has been the case since the overhaul went into effect. Open enrollment ends Dec. 15 for coverage starting Jan. 1.

STATE OF NEVADA

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

BOARD MEETING

Tuesday, August 14, 2018

SANDOVAL: All right, good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. I will call the Nevada Governor's Office of Economic Development Board Meeting to order. Will Mariah please call the roll?

HERIMAN: Governor Brian Sandoval?

SANDOVAL: Here.

HERIMAN: Lieutenant Governor Hutchison?

HUTCHISON: I'm here.

HERIMAN: Secretary of State Cegavske? Dr. Havins?

HAVINS: Here.

HERIMAN: Mr. Adam Kramer? Mr. Barrett?

BARRETT: Here.

HERIMAN: Dr. Bennett?

BENNETT: Present.

HERIMAN: Thank you. Mr. Klaich?

KLAICH: Here.

HERIMAN: Mr. Specht?

SPECHT: Here.

HERIMAN: Dr. Thom Reilly? And, Mr. Soderberg?

SODERBERG: Here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

HERIMAN: We do have a quorum.

SANDOVAL: All right, thank you very much. We'll proceed with Agenda Item Number 2, Public Comment. Is there any member of the public present in Las Vegas that would like to provide public comment to the Board? I hear and see no one. Is there anyone present in Carson City that would like to provide public comment to the Board? Dr. Bennett, anyone coming forward?

BENNETT: Governor, no one has come forward, thank you.

SANDOVAL: All right, thank you. Agenda Item Number 3, the Governor's Comments. I'm sure—we'll leave it for another day but we had a very successful trade mission to Africa, to Ghana and South Africa and I want to thank all the individuals that participated in the trip.

As I said, on the water front, education front, business front, it really was a successful mission. It was an honor and privilege to represent the State. I wanted to compliment Director Anderson and his staff for the hard work that they put in, in terms of making it such a successful trip. Thank you for that. I'm sure in a full meeting we'll talk about that in more detail.

We'll move to the Main Event which is Agenda Item Number 4 which is Review and Approval of Economic Development Financing Proposal for the Tahoe Reno Industrial Center Effluent Water Pipeline. Director Anderson, I turn it over to you.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

ANDERSON: Thank you Governor and Board Members, thank you for coming on a good important meeting, but also not our normal schedule. So, I appreciate you making yourselves available and Governor, and thank you for having this—or, making this available to us.

Today, we're here to talk about the Effluent Pipeline. That is a development that we're looking to—we're seeking bonding authority of $35 million in order to facilitate the construction of this pipeline. I'll just give you some brief background and introductory remarks and then we'll turn it over to some folks that can get as deep in the weeds as you'd like to get into.

The authority from the Governor's Office of Economic Development came out of SB 1 in the, what is often referred to as the Faraday Special Session that referenced a development out at Apex Industrial Park. At the time, there was not the infrastructure to support such a project of the magnitude that we were discussing. And so, bonding authority in order to facilitate the construction of that infrastructure was—was afforded to this office.

One of the qualifiers is having a qualified project; which means an entity that is willing to do a capital investment of over $1 billion. Currently, the area that we're talking about, the Tahoe Regional Industrial Complex, or TRIC, has a single qualifying entity as we speak, which is the Tesla Gigafactory. They qualify under those rules to be able to access the, or in conjunction with other partners, to access the bonding authority in this office. And, there's some qualifiers of course, and we'll go through those qualifiers as they're presented to you.

Most of them though are, what is the public good that we need to discuss, the environmental impacts, as well as, the economic development benefits. As we look at TRIC and the economic catalyst it's been, not just for Northern Nevada, but for the entire State of Nevada. We see its continued development is important to our State and we recognize the benefits and we'll talk more about those benefits as we move forward in today's meeting.

The benefits are such that we felt so inclined to utilize some of the bonding authority that this office has with the Governor's Counsel and discussion, in order to help facilitate the building of an effluent pipeline that will utilize water that's non-potable, that's been treated and sent via this 13-mile pipeline up to TRIC, to be used according to the needs of the development there.

I think as we go through this and it's been through a lot of hurdles already and we still have a few more to go. I think as—if I could add some advice is to, let's vet this project as appropriately as needed. It's important that we understand the benefits both to the public and to the residents of northern Nevada, as well as, Nevada as a whole, to keep that project running smoothly.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But I think also, keep in mind the future of that project. There is opportunities that, pending approval and development that can't take place without water. We know that's important for advanced manufacturing, for data centers. Not just for logistics and everything else that may take place up there.

So, we need to keep in mind both the short-term and long-term impact that this pipeline will have for the development— future development up there. With that, Governor, if it's okay, I'll turn it over to Pat Whitten, who I'm not sure if he's up North, is he up North? Pat will do an introductory statement about Storey County's submittal, which was an important piece of the process. They applied to us for this bonding authority and then, from there, we'll turn it over to Marty Johnson from there.

WHITTEN: Good afternoon, Governor Sandoval, distinguished GOED Board Members, Mr. Anderson. For the record, Pat Whitten, Storey County Manager. A little over a year ago, Storey County appeared before this esteemed Board and asked you to consider our Economic Development Financing Proposal, structured to bring 4,000 acre-feet of partially treated effluent water from the Truckee Meadows Water Reclamation Facility to the Tahoe Reno Industrial Center, as a means to further stimulate economic growth and build out.

Both then and now, we saw this as a win-win-win situation for the cities of Sparks and Reno, Storey County and the corporate citizens now owning land in TRIC.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Subsequent to our submittal, we found it necessary to withdraw and regroup in order to find the best way to structure financing in accordance with provisions of SB 1 of the 2015 Special Session.

I'm pleased to say we're back and back with what we think is an even better approach to finance the offsite portion of the project, which entails building approximately 13-miles of pipeline from Sparks to the Industrial Park.

The structure has changed somewhat and the parties, excepting the State and Storey County, have changed substantially, instead of one developer involved, we now have six. Including corporate giants such as Google, Tesla and Switch. The new developers bring a desire and a willingness to pay upfront through the special assessment district process. Having low cost water available to these companies, coupled with the Governor's recent actions to include all of TRIC as eligible for the Federal Government Opportunity Zone Program should provide the catalyst these companies need to fully develop the properties they own in Nevada.

In summary, the Storey County Board of Commissioners voted unanimously last Tuesday to forward this proposal to you for your consideration. We appreciate your time and ideally your support. I'd like to now pass this over to our financial advisor, Marty Johnson, who along with I believe, Brian Gordon and Kendra

Follett here with me, we'll brief you on the details of our proposal. And again, I think you all very much.

JOHNSON: Good afternoon. For the record, Marty Johnson with J&A Consulting Group. We're the financial advisors to Storey County and have been asked to assist them with this project. If it is okay with you, what we would like to do is run through a presentation that was given to the Storey County Commission last week that lays out the specific details of this proposal and the project. As part of that, Brian Gordon, who I'm hoping is there in Las Vegas, will run through some of the project details that Mr. Anderson referred to in the environmental/economic aspects of it. Then, Kendra Follett will discuss some of the legal aspects. So, if that is okay with you folks, I would like to start going through that presentation.

So, hopefully all of you have a copy of it. The first page has got the Storey County seal on it. Going to the first slide, is the proposed project. In this presentation, we will use the term "developer", and that term is generically meant to apply to the companies that Pat identified: Google, Tesla, Switch, Block Chains, Empire and Reno Land.

They have proposed to fund offsite improvements through an effluent pipeline with bonds issued by Storey County that are paid from a special assessment district on the property that these companies own. The onsite distribution and treatment of those additional facilities, treatment facilities, the distribution lines that will take it from the pipeline to the various parcels where the water is used, all of those would be financed and paid for by the private companies. They are not asking for the State or the County to help participate in those.

In conjunction with this process but outside of what is used to repay the bonds, they are asking the County to form a tax increment area. Those revenues would be used solely to reimburse the parcel owners, the property owners, for the assessments that they pay. Again, unlike the proposal that happened a year ago where those were the revenues that secured the bonds, here it is solely a reimbursement mechanism that would be used.

At this point, I'd like to have Brian talk a little bit more in detail about what the project entails and what some of the benefits are to it. Both to Reno, Sparks, Storey County, as well as some of the environmental aspects.

GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Johnson. For the record, Brian Gordon with Applied Analysis. We've been working with the private sector development team, as well as all of the folks up North in Storey County and the consultants for Storey County as part of this process. You've been provided a general overview of how this project is intended to work.

The idea being, this offsite pipeline carries a development cost of about $35 million. That's what is being contemplated as part of a special assessment district. A fully 100% consent of those property owners that are committing to make those payments under that special assessment district.

In addition to that, there's a portion of the project which we have been calling the onsite portion of the project which, the first phase of that would be another $30 million, which would bring that effluent water into—that would include storage as well as, transmission for that water.

Then there's a second phase of that onsite portion of the project, which would be the advanced treatment facilities, to bring that water up to a standard that would be suitable for the users within the TRI Center itself, companies like, Tesla, Google, Switch.

What we're talking about is the financing of the $35 million through a special assessment district. The balance of the project, fairly significant, would be fully financed by private development, private financing through the developers and property owners within that district.

Some of the benefits, really, we looked at three different areas as part of the benefits. The benefits, both to Washoe County as well as Storey County, as well as TRI Center itself. I'll just hit some of the highlights with respect to some of those benefits overall.

I'll talk a minute about environmental benefits. I feel a little silly doing that when I have somebody sitting here to my left that knows more about this topic than I could ever learn, but I'll hit the high points and then Ms. Mulroy will fill in the holes if we need to or provide additional clarity if there are questions.

Generally speaking, the Truckee Meadows water shed has been somewhat of a fragile and one of the most litigated water sources in the Western United States. That includes the Truckee River. This project would divert 4,000 acre-feet of water that would typically go into the Truckee River. That would tend to be high nitrate type of water. That requires additional environmental fixes, if you will, as it relates to the quality of that water.

So, what this project would do is divert that water through this pipeline, up to Storey County, in the Tahoe Reno Industrial Center which would then be used for some of these other uses by some of those major companies that we've been talking about.

This would be—resolve one of those environmental issues, certainly, TMWRF, the Truckee Meadows Water Reclamation Facility would not be giving up this 4,000 acre-feet necessary. There would be reimbursements for the same amount of water. So, on a net/net basis, it would be a wash, if you will, for them.

In addition, I talked through the cost of the project, if the project didn't move forward, TMWRF at some point, would be required to invest in its infrastructure to treat the water there, that would entail an estimated capital cost of about $30-40 million down at TMWRF, as well as annual recurring maintenance costs of about $1.5 million.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Certainly, if there are questions for Ms. Mulroy, we can talk about those now. Otherwise, I'll move forward and talk about some of the other benefits of the project, at this time.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. Why don't we break it up, so that if you're going to move on to a different issue, then perhaps, Pat, if you could answer, you've spoken with TMWRF, you've spoken with Washoe County, Sparks and I would assume the Tribe as well.

MULROY: Yes.

SANDOVAL: So, could you provide some detail in that regard?

MULROY: Thank you, Governor. And, Paul Taggert is up in the audience, up in Carson City. He and I have been working on this project together.

Obviously, since this is one of the most litigated rivers in the west, this was not an easy jigsaw puzzle to put together from a water resource standpoint. Even though there are significant water quality improvements to the end of the system, if you will, for the Cui-Ui fish and for the Tribe. We sit at the end of this system because you are removing these nitrates that are on any number of occasions during the course of the year, causing the Reno Sparks—or, the Truckee Meadows Water Reclamation Facility to be out of compliance with EPA Clean Water Standards. They knew they had to invest a significant amount in order to get up there. It removes those and allows this facility to discharge without causing those nitrate issues that are problematic for the fish at the other end.

There was a need to replace that source of water because the Truckee is completely subscribed for. What leaves the Reno area, goes down to the Fallon area where the Fallon farmers are reliant on this water source. Then at the end of the system, you have the Indian Tribe and you have an endangered fish, also dependent on this water source.

So what Paul and I have negotiated were two agreements. One was the actual effluent agreement with the Cities of Sparks and Reno who control the TMWRF facility. And in it, their reimbursements are identified. It's a 50-year lease, a lease that can go up to 50-60 years.

We do not own the water. We never own the water. No one—neither TRIC nor any of the companies will hold title to the water. The water stays, in terms of ownership, with the Reno Sparks area. The TRIC is simply leasing that water supply for the term of 50-60 years.

Then, they will reimburse the City of Sparks and the TMWRF facilities for all extraneous expenses, any capital improvements that need to be made to that facility, in order to facilitate this endeavor and make essentially, the Reno Sparks area whole.

The trickier agreement was the one that was just recently approved by TMWA, which is the return flow management agreement. In it, the companies, TRIC has committed that they will turn over for use by TMWA during the course of this agreement their Truckee River Rights of 1,500 acre-feet, to manage the river for instream flows. The companies will also pay for an adjudication process on ground water rights that are available through State right-of-ways with the Department of Transportation. Those will be adjudicated. The cost of that adjudication will be borne by the companies. And that water as well will be turned over to TMWA for management purposes to make the river whole.

The objective was that no one loses in this proposition. During the course of this, I know that I've participated in one meeting with the Tribe, but I know that Mr. Taggert has participated in a number of meetings with the Tribe. We stay committed to continue our conversation with the Tribe, as we go through the water rights process on the ground water portion of this.

So, from a water resource perspective in the west, this is one of the most creative and forward thinking projects anywhere in the Western United States today. For an industrial complex to take effluent water, be willing to pay for the infrastructure, $35 million offsite, $30 million plus, it could go quite high in terms of treatment costs for the onsite, so you could easily break the $100 million mark on the cost of this and be willing to make that kind of an investment in order to be environmentally sustainable and to be responsible in terms of their water use really has no equals in the west today.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

So, Nevada is standing proud in being able to deliver this kind of a project to the western water resource dialogue and development.

SANDOVAL: Ms. Mulroy, thank you and congratulations because that is quite the knot and tie in terms of balancing all those interests. Could it be said that the TMWA, rate payers, likely will save money because they won't have to pay for the treatment of all that water in the years to come?

MULROY: The TMWA rate payers, they benefit in two ways. TMWA rate payers, also TMWRF rate payers in many ways. That avoided cost of $40 million is going to prevent the wastewater rates from having to go up. And, to the extent that the companies will be reimbursing TMWA for their management, water management, of the River, there will be a benefit to the TMWA rate payers as well.

The bigger benefit for TMWA and for the larger Reno Sparks area is that it provides maximum flexibility to TMWA, to be able to manage the flows in that river, no matter what the hydrology looks like in the system. The companies have stepped forward as full and equal partners in that endeavor and are going to take their seat at the table.

SANDOVAL: And, for the Tribe, it will receive, and Pyramid Lake will receive, the same amount of water, but higher quality of water.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MULROY: Much improved quality of water, which will significantly help the fish, help the Cui-Ui fish, up there. And, we are committed to making sure that the Tribe is not negatively affected by this agreement.

SANDOVAL: And, is there any discharge—so, that water goes to TRIC. TRIC, the companies there use it. Is there any type of discharge that comes from that back to the river?

MULROY: NDEP has been quite clear, there can be no discharge from TRIC, back into the river. What the intent is, is to have a second pass-thru for reuse. So, water that is not put to full consumptive use will once again enter the recycle process and be used once again. So, it will all stay contained in the TRIC area.

SANDOVAL: Which saves that much more water.

MULROY: Yes, it does.

SANDOVAL: So, that's all I have, questions I have on the environmental side. Board Members, any other questions on the environmental issues?

HUTCHISON: Governor.

SANDOVAL: Mr. Lieutenant Governor.

HUTCHISON: Thank you. Ms. Mulroy, thank you very much for your presentation. All of us have great respect for you and appreciate what you've done for so many years in Southern Nevada and throughout the State. Thank you.

MULROY: Thank you.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

HUTCHISON: Just a question on the lease. You said we've got a lease now for, what did you say, 50 or 60 years, can you explain that a little bit?

MULROY: Yeah, it has—I think an original term of 40 years and then it can be extended.

HUTCHISON: Gotcha.

MULROY: Yes, there are extension options to it.

HUTCHISON: Okay. And, how does the—are you—50 or 60 years is a long time, but you're also making a major investment. How does that—how does the lease term coincide with the infrastructure life expectation and are you satisfied that those match up?

MULROY: Actually, the bonds should be paid off before the lease expires. We've got what, a 20 to 25 year—

GORDON: Twenty to 25 year window, we're looking at for the bonding.

MULROY: Yes, for the repayment of the bonds.

HUTCHISON: And then as far as the life of the infrastructure, so it's even after the bonds are paid off. It's—

MULROY: It's 80-90 years.

HUTCHISON: Okay. Okay.

MULROY: With proper maintenance and to the extent that TMWA is a full partner and the companies are committed to bringing in professional management for the system. I don't have a concern in the world that that system won't be managed appropriately.

HUTCHISON: Just based on your experience and having acknowledged that this is a highly litigious area and a place that is often challenged. You've met with lots of different interest groups. Do you foresee any challenge to this project, beyond the parties that you've spoken to, other interested parties that you anticipate? Any environmental groups, that sort of thing that could come in and try to challenge this?

MULROY: There have been several public forums in which those would've emerged and to date, no one has raised their head and said anything. I think the proof is going to be in moving through the groundwater adjudication process and through the TMWA water resource management process, in managing the river. It will be iterative, it will be year to year. I think the big partner that has—whose needs have to be addressed is the Tribe.

HUTCHISON: And, to the extent that you've worked with the Tribe, do you expect any further issues or challenges from the Tribe?

MULROY: Well, I'm never going to say never. [laughter] I think they are—I think they appreciate that we're being sincere. That they're not going to get rolled in this process. That we know what our obligations are to the river and that we have to keep them whole. So, they really stand to benefit.

HUTCHISON: Well, again, thank you for all your hard work. [inaudible] comments in the governance of major accomplishments, so thank you for your work, for all your work.

MULROY: Thank you.

HUTCHISON: Thank you. Mr. Barrett, please.

BARRETT: Thank you very much, both of you. I don't know if this is at your desk in this regard, but environmentally building the project, 13-miles is quite a way and there's terrain. Are you aware, is the permitting process yet to be obtained and what—did you have a view on that?

MULROY: There is a permitting process that is still ahead of us. Brent Farr from Farr Engineering, who is overseeing the construction of this project is up north and can answer those questions in greater detail. Some of the land is owned by the City of Sparks, so obviously that permitting has to happen. Some of it's owned by the State of Nevada, so that permitting, it has to happen. There is a small section where we have to cross Core of Engineer Land, so you're going to have to get a 404 Permit.

So, those pieces—but that is standard. You can't do anything in the State of Nevada without getting those permits. And obviously, we're fully committed to being compliant with all the conditions around those permits.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

BARRETT: And I appreciate, we can't say "never", but you've seen a lot of large scale projects.

MULROY: Yes.

BARRETT: Do you view this as being doable?

MULROY: Oh, absolutely. I view this as being doable.

BARRETT: Okay, thank you.

MULROY: Yes.

BARRETT: Thank you.

SANDOVAL: If I may follow-up on Mr. Barrett's question that 13 miles is going to be crisscrossing some of the most sensitive land in Northern Nevada, given it's—being adjacent to the Truckee River. Are there any environmental concerns associated with the construction portion of the project?

MULROY: I'm going to—I think Mr. Farr is up in Carson City, is he not? Is he up there?

SPEAKER: Brent is not here today.

MULROY: Okay.

SPEAKER: Bob Sader is here and can address those.

MULROY: Great. Is Mr. Sader up there?

SADER: For the record, Bob Sader. I'm an Officer in TRI general improvement district, which will be the entity that builds and operates this pipeline. In that capacity, to address the question, I've been very involved in the right-of-way process for the path of the pipeline which generally speaking, goes down the east Truckee Canyon, until it goes over a mountain and into TRI Center.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

We've been working on the right-of-way for a couple of years. We have gone through three or four different alignments and we have consciously chosen the alignment that has the least environmental impacts. We, so far, in the process of actually physically inspecting each of these parcels, each—all of the alignment, we do not believe that we have any significant environmental issues.

We have no wetlands. We do not cross the Truckee River. We do not enter into Federal Lands. There are two state parcels, owned by the State of Nevada. We've had discussions with the Public Lands about the application for that. We've had a lot of engineering, a high-degree of engineering on this right-of-way. We do not believe we have any significant environmental problems.

SANDOVAL: That's what I needed to know. Thank you, Mr. Sader. Good to see you.

SADER: Nice to see you, Governor.

SANDOVAL: All right, do we have any questions from Dr. Bennett or Mr. Klaich?

KLAICH: I have a couple of questions, Governor.

SANDOVAL: Please proceed.

KLAICH: When I look at this project in the big picture and Pat, your presentation helped a whole lot, thank you very much. One of the key aspects that we looked at the last time it was here, admittedly in a different form, was the participation of the Cities of Reno and Sparks and the benefits they and TMWA or the treatment center would get out of it. Did I hear that those agreements with Reno and Sparks have been finalized?

MULROY: Yes, they have been finalized. They were approved by both the Sparks City Council and the Reno City Council, in terms of the lease agreement and then for the agreement on the return flow management agreement. That has gone through TMWA and is awaiting final approval from Reno and Sparks.

KLAICH: Okay. One of the—excuse me, there's a little echo in there. Well, I'm just going to go ahead unless you tell me you can't hear. One of the things that was important to me was to be able to understand the entire project and the benefits to Reno Sparks were very important in that regard. Not having those agreements in front of us, I have to rely on the representations that you're making in this hearing.

That gives me a little bit of discomfort. That's more of a comment than a question. So, I'll just leave that there, unless you'd like to make any comment on that.

MULROY: Taggert is, should be sitting right there in the audience and can speak to those agreements in more detail. They are public records, if you would like a copy of them, we'll be happy to provide them to you.

KLAICH: I appreciate that.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

TAGGERT: Thank you. For the record, my name is Paul Taggert. Good afternoon, Mr. Governor and Board Members. The return flow management agreement has been approved by both Reno Sparks and TMWA. We can provide you with a copy of that, but that was a very detailed agreement on how we'll manage the return flows to the river, to accommodate changes made by this treated effluent pipeline.

So, we went through the effort of first getting the initial agreement approved by those entities, those two cities, and then also getting the subsequent agreement approved by them and the water manager in the Truckee Meadows.

KLAICH: And, are you familiar with the general content of those agreements?

TAGGERT: Yes.

KLAICH: And, is it your representation to us that those agreements provide substantial economic benefits to the Cities of Reno and Sparks?

TAGGERT: Yes, that's—it's certainly true. And the main idea is that there is a voided cost in upgrading the TMWRF facility for treating effluent, because simply, capacity is being created in those facilities by taking this water out of the river. It changes the timeline for when they would otherwise need to do more improvements to their facilities.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

KLAICH: When those agreements were being negotiated, was there an attempt to monetize that savings? Do you have any idea what those savings might be?

TAGGERT: I apologize for not recalling that off the top of my head, but I recall it being in the tens of millions of dollars.

KLAICH: Governor, could I ask one more question of Mr. Sader while he's still here?

SANDOVAL: Of course.

KLAICH: Included in the $35 million that I understand is the size of the bond issue that is being requested for approval today, is that correct, Kendra?

SADER: That is correct.

KLAICH: Would be the acquisition of the easement that you were just talking about Bob?

SADER: It would include easements for the alignment of the right-of-way through a number of parcels. There are quite a few parcels, but much fewer—a lessor number of land owners.

KLAICH: Okay, that sounded like a yes, to me.

SADER: I'm sorry, that's a yes.

KLAICH: But that easement, that easement or right-of-way has not yet been acquired?

SADER: That's correct. We have not wanted to go forward with the right-of-way until we had these agreements completed and approved. Otherwise, there's a question, in our minds and in the landowners' minds of whether this pipeline is for real.

KLAICH: Okay. And, is it your belief that the easement can be acquired and the property or the project can be completed, this offsite project can be completed within the $35 million of the bond proceeds?

SADER: The $35 million is our best estimate at this point. It's an engineer's estimate. We'll refine the costs as we get all of the engineering completed. We believe it is in the $35 million range and if there is a surplus, the assessment payors are going to have to pay the surplus.

KLAICH: Okay. Governor, I have other questions, but not related to this area. Thank you very much.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. Dr. Bennett, any questions?

BENNETT: Not at this time, thank you Governor.

SANDOVAL: All right, thank you. So, before we leave the environmental piece, one more opportunity for any of the Board Members to ask questions. All right, then let's move on with the presentation. Thank you.

GORDON: Thank you. So, continuing on with some of the benefits related to the TRI Center, I'll just hit the high points on these as well and then we can certainly talk through any of the details. The idea here is that there's 12,700 developable acres in the Center itself. This water would essentially free up future development activity, as well as the intensity of that development activity.

We've talked about some of the companies, Tesla, you're very familiar with. We have some representatives in the room here today, in the Gigafactory and all of the investment being made there. Switch, as it relates to their 1.5 million square feet that's in the ground today, in their Citadel Campus within the Center and potential plans for an excess of 7 million square feet of data center facilities up in the TRI Center. Google has acquired a significant amount of land, as you're aware, within the TRI Center. They are also evaluating their development plans for the future up in TRI Center. Then you have these other developers, unknown developers, Reno Land, as well as Emerald City, that intend to develop a Town Square, if you will, up in the TRI Center. So, a solid group in terms of the participants in this project.

Essentially, the water infrastructure at TRI will increase the intensity, as well as the timeline for future development activity. So, you're talking about data centers, advanced manufacturing and other future development activity there. These are the types of facilities that require more water than typical distribution or warehouse facilities, which is why there's a need for this particular type of water and this project overall.

These types of developments generally lead to higher yields, higher levels of investment, these are capital intensive types of businesses. I think you've seen some of what's already taken place, in terms of the development activity by Tesla, as well as Switch and then you have other players looking to develop as well.

These project also generate employment with higher wages than the average. That's also a benefit overall. Just greater overall economic activity are generated by these hi-tech advanced manufacturing types of companies, as opposed to more traditional real estate development.

In terms of the private investment. We talked about the $35 million of this particular project. The storage, transmission and treatment facilities could add another $65-$105 million. So, a total project cost of about $100-$150 million. The private sector is going to be funding the balance of that, in addition to the payments under the special assessment district that the private sector is committing to.

In terms of the financing, I think you may hear more about that as part of this presentation, but essentially, the underlying real estate value will be required to have a 3.5 times value, relative to the amount that's being considered for bonding. So, it would be 3.5 times $35 million we're talking about under the special assessment district.

At present, the current appraisal is suggesting a 7 times value, when this project is completed. So, nearly twice the requirement. That provides a lot of security as it relates to the financing side of the equation.

At the same time, the group is also requesting a tax increment area, through Storey County be developed. Essentially, the idea being that as future development is created and investments are made, there's incremental value that is created with these same property owners that we're talking about under the special assessment district.

So, as increment is generated, they make more investments. Those—a portion of those incremental tax dollars would inure back to those private sector developers, to reimburse them for up to the amount of the offsite improvements, or the $35 million that we're talking about. That would be the maximum amount that would ever be reimbursed under a potential tax increment area, would be the $35 million that's being financed under a special assessment district.

That aligns with State statutes, specifically, if helpful for the record, NRS 278C.150, Developer Reimbursements for Construction of Wastewater Infrastructure Projects. Storey County would create that. Again, these would be the same companies and portions of those incremental revenues, would inure back to the private sector developers.

If there was no future development activity and no additional investments made, there would simply be no additional tax dollars going back to the private sector development. The more they invest, potentially the quicker they get reimbursed on that first $35 million. To the extent they don't, there is no reimbursement and they are fully committing to make the payments on that $35 million special assessment district, regardless if future tax revenues ultimately are generated.

The final leg in the stool, if you will, in terms of the benefits would be Storey County. We'll talk a little bit more here about what that means for the County itself. Obviously, the existence of the pipeline itself would add additional value in Storey County, open up properties for future development and higher intense uses that I've mentioned. All of that would provide increased economic opportunity within Storey County.

With respect to the tax increment area that I mentioned, that would be a reimbursement of a portion of the pipeline and overall infrastructure costs. It would exclude any taxes that are scheduled to go to special districts such as the school districts. Both their operations and capital portions of the property tax rate, those will continue to go there, as currently scheduled. Those are excluded from any increment or reimbursement back as part of this project.

Only 50% of the sales and use taxes are eligible for reimbursement back for this project. 50% would stay with the original taxing entities as they are currently scheduled and only half of the modified business tax or payroll tax would be eligible for reimbursement back towards these infrastructure costs.

Taxes, overall, over the next 20 years that are likely to be generated, assuming a relatively conservative schedule of development for the types of companies that we're talking about. It could be in excess of $1 billion. This $35 million would represent less than 5% of the total taxes being generated so that would mean more than 95% of the taxes being generated would still go back to all of the original taxing entities over the course of the next 20 years.

Once the $35 million reimbursement was made, as it relates to the offsite portion of the pipeline project, 100% of all incremental taxes would go back to the original taxing entities and no more would go to the private sector for reimbursement under the project.

The water will also provide a stable source of water and provide increased stability in terms of the overall economic activity for Storey County as a whole. Again, this infrastructure will be dedicated to the TRI/GID, once completed. So, pretty significant transfer to the GID or public entity.

At the end of the day, overall, there are significant economic and fiscal benefits to the parties involved. We've talked through what it means within Storey County in the local jurisdictions there. Also, as well as what happens in TRI Center and the additional opportunities that are there; the fiscal and economic benefits to Storey County as a whole.

This aligns exactly with the legislation that was designed that Director Anderson mentioned at the outset, as it relates to economic development, bonding capacity and makes a lot of sense for the reasons I've outlined here.

I'm happy to answer any questions. I know the balance of the team that works and represents Storey County is up north and can respond to any questions but we're here to answer questions and help as best we can.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. And, I suppose, you've said it and Pat said it, but I just want to make it in its simplest terms. So, the—if I'm a resident of Storey County, I have no risk, correct? If I'm a property owner, homeowner, in Storey County, do I have any risk at all associated with this project and this bonding, in a worse-case scenario?

GORDON: At its essence, all property owners are going to continue to pay the normal taxes and operate as usual. The only sort of exposure, I guess is where you're trying to get to, relates to the special assessment district and that is 100% consent of all the property owners within that district. I think Mr. Johnson and Ms. Follett had intended to walk through what would happen in a "meltdown" scenario or a worse-case scenario and what that looks like. So, if now is the time to have them sort of walk through that, that might be the best approach here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

SANDOVAL: I apologize. I didn't realize you were going to make that portion of the presentation. So, why don't we hold the answer to that question and then, make the presentation and perhaps it will answer itself. Thank you.

JOHNSON: Thank you, Governor. For the record, Marty Johnson again. We will specifically answer that question here in just a moment. As Mr. Gordon went through his presentation, he hit some of these points, so I'll go through some of this a little quickly.

If you'll go back to the presentation that we did for the Storey County Commission and again, recognize the audience for that presentation was indeed the County Commission and the residents of Storey County. On the second slide, titled Assessment Districts, we do talk a little bit about how those work.

They are allowed under NRS 271. An assessment is indeed a lien on the property. It is co-equal to property taxes. So, if you do not pay an assessment, we can foreclose on your property. Part of the whole deal with an assessment district and bonds is that, if they are delinquencies, there will be foreclosures. It's not a might be, it's a will be.

The assessments are billed and collected semi-annually. They are not done with the tax bill. So, there is a need to have someone, whether that's a company, the County, whoever it might be, actually manage the billing and collection of the assessments in this process.

The assessments, under statute, can go for a term of up to 30 years. We aren't intending to go that long, which we'll talk about here on the next slide. So, if you'll turn to the next page, titled Proposed Bonds, and Governor, this is where we'll get to the answer about the citizens' risk.

Under the current proposal, the County would issue assessment district bonds and those bonds would then be purchased by the State through the Bond Bank Program. That allows the interest rate on the state bonds to be passed through to the County bonds, which provides pretty much the lowest cost to capital we're able to get for a Nevada local government.

Here is the key to how this works and the answer to your question, Governor. The bonds are paid first and foremost from the assessment payments. So, again, every six months there is a bill that needs to be paid for those assessments. Then typically, two months later and it can be a little bit longer than that depending on how things line up, the bond payments are made. So, the assessments' payments come in. We've got generally at least two months before we need to use those funds to make the bond payments.

To the extent the assessment payments are insufficient, we have other resources within the special assessment district and I'll talk about those cash flows on another slide.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In addition to these other resources and cash available, we will have a reserve fund that is funded out of bond proceeds, the day of closing of the bond transaction, equal to one year's debt service. So, theoretically, if all of the property owners were delinquent, we have enough money in the bank to make the payment for at least a year.

If those three resources are insufficient, then the County is on the hook to the amount of its uncommitted General Fund balance or the amount of the annual payment. So, there is risk, but what we have worked with, the project sponsors to develop, is a plan where that risk is mitigated.

And again, under this proposal, if that uncommitted portion of the County's General Fund, which again our estimate for the end of this current fiscal year will be $2.8 million, if that money was gone, then the State's General Fund would be kicked in, in order to pay the state bonds.

Our goal is for that not to happen. The maximum term allowed for the bonds is 30 years, which is well within the terms of that lease that Ms. Mulroy was describing. The County's guidelines for these types of financing states 20 years but the developer has requested 25 and that is something that we are working with them on.

I'm going to skip over the next slide for a moment and go to the slide titled, Foreclosure. Because this is an important component in the security for this transaction in trying to make sure that the county's and eventually the State's General Fund would never be hit. As I mentioned, if there are delinquencies, we will foreclose. Foreclosure proceedings will initiated on those parcels and I'd like to ask Kendra Follett to run through this foreclosure process with you.

FOLLETT: Good afternoon, Governor and Board Members. This slide, the Foreclosure slide, it assumes a June 1 payment date, just for discussion purposes here. We'll have to determine what the actual payment dates will be. Let's assume a June 1 payment date. Sixty-days (60) days prior that June 1 date, a bill is sent to the property owner, notifying them that the payment is due on June 1st.

It will be then—if it continues on in delinquency, three consecutive notices are sent: one on the 5th day of the month, following the payment date and then the next 30 days later, the next 60 days later. With the third delinquent bill being mailed. Thereafter, at the time the third delinquent bill is mailed, a lot book is prepared where all of the liens on the parcel are identified.

As Marty mentioned before, by statute, assessment liens and property taxes have a co-equal lien in foreclosure. The Notice of Sale on the Foreclosure is sent the first of week of September and the foreclosure sale would occur sometime in September.

So, all in, it's about a three-month process and this is particular to assessment districts under Chapter 271. The foreclosure procedure happens fairly quickly compared to regular property tax foreclosures.

JOHNSON: Maybe just to add a couple of additional points on that, the foreclosure is initiated on the entire amount of the assessment. So, it's not just the amount that's delinquent. Once that property is sold and that money is received, a corresponding amount of bonds are paid off and so, that parcel is done. We don't care who owns it, if they're delinquent with their property taxes, at least as far as the assessment district is concerned because a portion of those bonds get paid off. But that is the mechanism under which that foreclosure happens.

So, again, if you think about the timing between the assessment payment and then approximately two months later, the bond payment, having a one year reserve, having this foreclosure process take three to four months, we will be able to move very quickly to make sure that there are resources there to make payments before we would ever have to get to that uncommitted portion of the County's General Fund.

So, I see a light on.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. Let me, if I may, Mr. Klaich, let me make a comment or a question and then I'll go to you. I suppose, the best representation is the local government and the fact that it has approved this. They're the ones that are closest to this and so, Mr. Whitten, I would imagine that this presentation was made to the County Commission and you are the government closest to the people that would affected by some type of a default. So, do you have any comment in that regard? And, were there residents from Storey County who appeared and spoke in support or opposition to this project?

WHITTEN: Thank you Governor. For the record, Pat Whitten. Your statement is fully accurate, relative to the support at this point in the process expressed by the County Commission. I would probably sum it up—first off, to answer your question about residents, yes. Even in Storey County, we have a handful that take a look at this and don't see it for the opportunities it presents and instead of labeling it a—a corporate partnership between the State, Storey County, and the excellent companies that are here, they call it "corporate welfare." So, we do have a handful of those that expressed concern.

I'd be lying if I didn't say, you know, my job as the County Manager, Mr. Gallagher's job, our Comptroller, who is in the audience with me today; our job is to try to reduce that risk as much as we can. I see this—currently what you see is where we are to date with this. It won't materially change in terms of the number of properties, but I will also state for the record that, on behalf of the County, we continue to find ways to layer in other safety nets that hitting the County's, the unreserved portions of the County's General Fund and also the State's would be the very last recourse that hopefully we never meltdown to.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. Mr. Klaich.

KLAICH: Thank you Governor. So, I understand Marty, that probably your answer to the Governor's question about, is there any risk, is there in fact a risk. Rather modest from your presentation. You've got a year's debt service on the bond's proceeds. If you have to get to the Storey County General Fund, looking at your defeasing [sic] schedule, you've probably got another year of money there.

I do have a question about the foreclosure, you know, I'm just a guy who has written a few Deeds of Trust and so nothing nearly this complex as you're proposing today. And, a three-month foreclosure seems interesting. What are you foreclosing on? The property of the defaulting partner within the special assessment district?

FOLLETT: Governor, if I may?

SANDOVAL: Yes, please proceed.

FOLLETT: Kendra Follett, Bond Counsel. You're foreclosing on the property that has the assessment lien on it. So, when the assessment ordinance is adopted, it will levy assessments which are liens against each of the parcels in the amount of the assessment allocated to each parcel. If they don't—if they're delinquent and you know, they're delinquent for this period of time, then you process the foreclosure.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Now the foreclosure process is, you hold the foreclosure—the County will hold the foreclosure sale. It will sell the parcel for at least the amount of the assessment and any unpaid property taxes. Then a certificate will be issued to the person who buys it at auction in the foreclosure sale.

Now, thereafter, the County is out of it because the County has been paid the full amount of the assessment and any unpaid property taxes. All the rest of the liens are wiped out, mortgages, second mortgages, you know, whatever other liens are on there that are below property taxes and assessments. And, then that certificate holder who buys it at auction has a certificate and the property owner has a statutory period of time to redeem that certificate from the certificate holder after paying them penalties and fees. But at that point, the County is out.

KLAICH: So, if I buy it at a foreclosure sale, I've purchased some certificate that, okay. Let me ask you this absurd question. But, Tesla doesn't pay its assessment. The foreclosure is going to occur on the Gigafactory? Or, if Switch doesn't pay, the foreclosure is going to occur on the Citadel Campus?

FOLLETT: Well, as I understand it, the Tesla Gigafactory is not one of the parcels, but other parcels that they own are in the assessment district. So, whatever—yes, whoever the property owner is, it's foreclosed on the delinquent property owner.

JOHNSON: And, if I might, again, for the record, Marty Johnson, J&A Consulting Group. This might help answer this question. If you remember as Mr. Gordon was talking, we talked about having a value to lien of at least 3.5:1. So, part of what we do is get an appraisal as to what these various parcels will be worth when the project is complete and compare that to what the amount that is going to be assessed is and we want that ratio to be at least 3.5:1.

With the idea being that in the event we hit an economic downturn and someone does not pay their assessments, that we're not trying to get the dollar that the property was worth when we did it, we're looking for some cents on the dollar, in order to make everything whole.

So, we're not doing this at a 1:1 ratio, we're looking at 3.5:1. So, the equivalent of a, you know, million dollar home would need to go for $350,000 in order to make this all work. So, that helps create some of the—the security that we'll be able to get the money out of it that we need.

KLAICH: So, is Switch's campus in the assessment district?

JOHNSON: I'd have to ask Mr. Gordon, which parcels are which.

[crosstalk, echo]

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

GORDON: Yes, it is.

KLAICH: Okay. Thank you very much, Governor.

SANDOVAL: Then, if I may follow-up and I think you provided this in your testimony. Whatever lien that is, is that superior to existing liens, on the properties? So, in other words, you're going to have a lien, but what if they already—

HUTCHISON: Yeah, what's the priority?

SANDOVAL: --where's the priority of this lien as opposed to any that may exist already?

FOLLETT: Kendra Follett, property taxes and special assessments by statute have a [inaudible] and everything is below it.

SANDOVAL: Okay, that's good to know.

FOLLETT: Except for federal taxes.

HUTCHISON: Thank you Kendra, can I—I just want to make sure I understand the relationship between the special assessment district and the tax increment area. Are those the same parcels or is the special assessment district larger and if so, what's the geographic area of the special assessment district?

JOHNSON: My understanding—for the record, Marty Johnson and I'll have Brian clarify this if I get it wrong. My understanding is that the special assessment district in the tax increment area will be the same parcel, except for two, I believe, is that correct Brian?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

GORDON: That is correct. So, there are two parcels that are within the special assessment district, but not within the tax increment area. They just happened to be two parcels that have improvements on them today. The idea being that, all of the properties in the tax increment area are sitting vacant today.

HUTCHISON: And, are those within TRIC, those two parcels, are they still within TRIC?

GORDON: Yes, they are all located within TRIC.

HUTCHISON: And those two parcel owners have consented to this arrangement?

GORDON: They have.

HUTCHISON: And they would benefit from the effluent project.

GORDON: They would. Those two property owners—

HUTCHISON: Right, because they're within TRIC and that would all be—so, the idea would be—the six developers are part of the tax incremental area, then you've got two additional parcel owners who have consented to this SAD approach, because they're going to benefit from the effluent pipeline, right?

GORDON: I'm sorry, let me just clarify so we're on the same page. The participants in the special assessment district and the TIA, they're the same six companies.

HUTCHISON: Okay.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

GORDON: Two of the parcels, one happens to be owned by Switch, one happens to be owned by Tesla, are in the special assessment district, but not in the tax increment area. So it's the same companies within both.

HUTCHISON: Okay. All right. And, so really what the—well, Governor, I was going to go into the tax increment area, if I can talk about that?

SANDOVAL: Yeah, please.

HUTCHISON: Okay. So, within the tax increment area, really what's happening then is these companies, the developers, are fronting the money and then they're getting paid on the back-end, through various taxes that are going to be used to pay the $35 million, correct?

GORDON: That's correct.

HUTCHISON: And then, once that—once those taxes have satisfied that $35 million, it goes back to the government entities that would otherwise receive those taxes, right?

GORDON: That's correct.

HUTCHISON: Okay. And then, the only way that Storey County is on the hook is if the special assessment district does not provide sufficient funding for the repayment of the bonds. That's when Storey County's General Fund would kick in, right?

GORDON: I'll defer to Mr. Johnson, but generally the—the—if the payment is under the special assessments district were not made for some reasons, then they would go through the procedures that he outlined.

HUTCHISON: And you consume the reserve fund.

GORDON: And any excess cash that's included in that.

HUTCHISON: Right. That's my understanding. That's when the County General Fund kicks in. When, if ever, does the State General Fund kick in?

JOHNSON: This is Marty Johnson for the record. So, Mr. Gordon is correct, it's only if the assessments aren't sufficient. We can't foreclose on the property for whatever reason and sell it, the reserve fund is gone. Then the uncommitted portion of the County's General Fund and when that is no longer sufficient or at zero, then the State General Fund kicks in.

HUTCHISON: Okay.

JOHNSON: But again, as Mr. Whitten said, our goal is to put as many layers in front of the County's General Fund, which by definition means, they're in front of the State's General Fund.

HUTCHISON: And, just a follow-up question again on the tax increment area. The taxes that are going to be coming into this tax increment area are based on future development. Currently, all the property is vacant, right?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

JOHNSON: That's correct. Again, for the record, Marty Johnson. The property taxes that are currently paid will continue to go to the local governments as they currently are. It is only the revenues generated by future increases in value for future business activities that are subject to being swept up in the tax increment area.

HUTCHISON: And, assuming the high unlikely, which is those vacant land is not ever developed, then the developers assume all that risk. In other words, if they—they don't develop that land in the future, there's no tax revenue that could be generated to reimburse them the $35 million, they eat that themselves, they assume that risk.

JOHNSON: That would be correct.

HUTCHISON: Okay.

SANDOVAL: Aren't you glad there's a bunch of litigators or former litigators?

KLAICH: Could I ask one more question, Governor?

SANDOVAL: Mr. Klaich, please.

KLAICH: I'd like to follow-up on the Lieutenant Governor's question. Way, way down after all these layers of mitigation you talked about, you indicate that the General Fund could kick in, is that correct?

JOHNSON: Yes, if you look at Slide 3 of this—

KLAICH: I've got it.

JOHNSON: Yeah.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

KLAICH: So, my question is, does that highly unlikely but possible incumbrance on the General Fund limit—limit the State's bonding capacity in any fashion? I don't know if there's somebody from the Treasurer's Office here, but if we approve this transaction, is the State otherwise limited in its ability to fund other projects that it might wish to?

CHATWOOD: Thank you, Mr. Klaich. Lori Chatwood, Deputy Treasurer of Debt Management for the State Treasurer's Office. I think the question would fall under what is material to the State. So, in the proposal that I've seen so far, the maximum annual debt service, the reserve fund, we're looking at a little bit more than $2 million a year.

So, to the extent that $2 million is going to inhibit the General Fund from providing those projects, I think that I could defer to Governor Sandoval, but I would say that's immaterial to the extent that year after year after year, the General Fund had to make that payment, then there would be a decision that could be a $20 million project for a CIP down the road.

KLAICH: You all have to provide the Governor with estimates on a biennial basis of bonding capacity that he has available to recommend projects for funding to the legislature, correct?

CHATWOOD: That is correct, Lori Chatwood. The affordability that we provide to the Governor's Office for the building of other bonding programs in the CIP is based upon the property tax, the $0.17 that we collect for those projects.

To the extent that this would be General Fund dollars, prior to it being that $0.17 general obligation pledge, it wouldn't affect our affordability.

To the extent that the General Fund would not be able to make that $2 million payment, then it would share in that $0.17 and projects would be reduced because this debt service would have to go under the affordability.

KLAICH: Let me try it again. So long as the assessments are being paid, in accordance with the—the project plan as set forth and everything is in good shape going forward, do you anticipate that anything that we're seeing today would limit the bonding capacity that you would report to the Governor as being available for other CIP Projects?

CHATWOOD: Correct. Again, Lori Chatwood, Deputy Treasurer. To the extent that all of the revenues are sufficient, there would be no impact. First of all, on capacity, being that this is a natural resource, it does not fall under the 2% constitutional debt limit. Therefore, the amount of capacity of bonding under the constitution is not affected.

Then, on a monetary basis, for the affordability of future bonds, because we would consider this self-supporting, not having to be—it is backed by the property tax, but not having to levy a property tax to pay for it because there's other available revenues, it would not impact our affordability.

KLAICH: I appreciate it. Thank you, Governor. I know I'm trying to get yes/no answers to questions on these incredibly complex transactions, but I believe that answers the question to my satisfaction, thank you.

SANDOVAL: Thank you, Mr. Klaich. These are really important questions that I think really—is also important to establish in the record that's necessary for this Board to move forward.

Ms. Chatwood, before you go and a question from me. Have you had the opportunity to review this transaction and have you reached any conclusions or have any opinions?

CHATWOOD: Governor, again, Members of the Board, [inaudible]. I cannot speak for the Treasurer's Office in whole, as we were just received last week the notification that Storey County approved this.

With the information before this Board now and in my position, I think this has belt and suspenders to date. I'm not saying we are through and wouldn't ask GOED for maybe some additional security, but at first blush, this looks very solid from my opinion.

SANDOVAL: Okay, Ms. Chatwood. Thank you, that's all I needed to know. All right, Mr. Specht, yes.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CHATWOOD: Also, if I may add, [inaudible] Counsel also wanted me to also put on record that we're issuing this bond if this were to be approved, through the authority of SB 1, which has a blanket limit of $200 million.

So, this $35 million would go under that capacity, reducing that $200 million authority in the future. Is that correct? So, just to have that on the record.

SANDOVAL: There is another question, Mr. Specht.

SPECHT: Just one question please. One thing that I haven't heard—when I hear the foreclosures and you can foreclose in a few months, that always sounds wonderful but never happens. Whoever owns the property is going to do everything they can to prolong it and keep it as long as they can. So, you get many situations, if we get to the unfortunate situation where they make minimum payments, partial payments. They pay, get current, they go delinquent again.

So, that's a typical situation you see whenever you go through foreclosure. So, my question is, if we ever get to that point, is there ability to be able to assess the delinquent company fees? So, the County/State is made whole in this whole process, if someone goes to delinquency?

FOLLETT: If I may, Kendra Follett. Sherman and Howard, Bond Counsel to the County. Chapter 271 of NRS permits both daily penalty rates and daily interest rates during the delinquent process. So, you know, beginning on the day after the payment is due.

There are those fees and they—they increase quite rapidly, the amount of daily interest and daily penalties that are due on delinquent payments.

In the 271 process for foreclosure, there is a long history in the State of Nevada, of foreclosure under 271. As I mentioned before, it—local governments in Nevada have pursued this. They typically hire a consultant to both bill and commence the foreclosure proceedings on their behalf and this is done quite expeditiously and has been for years.

With—you know, no—no bond defaults in the State of Nevada for assessment districts that I'm aware of.

SANDOVAL: That's an important one and maybe Ms. Chatwood could—could confirm that. Again, we're talking about worse-case scenarios here, which we should. At least in your experience and Ms. Chatwood, in your experience if she's still there, are you aware of any foreclosure proceedings that resulted from a default in a situation like the one that we're discussing today?

CHATWOOD: Thank you. Again, Lori Chatwood, Deputy Treasurer. Governor, I'm afraid I can't answer that from the State's level because this would be the first assessment district bond that the State would be involved in. Under the current law, most assessment districts and TIAs happen at the local municipality level, not at the State level. So, I would have to defer to Marty Johnson and Kendra for their experience in local government finance.

SANDOVAL: Yeah. Okay, I appreciate that, Ms. Chatwood. As I said, I think this is an important exercise, in terms of being incredibly thorough. This is obviously an important project, but at the same time, we all—we being the members of this Board—have a duty to ask these kind of questions to make the record that I think is being made to provide us with the comfort, more importantly, an assurance to the constituencies that would be affected by this, that we ask the tough questions and made the record in terms of what the consequences could be.

Again, this—I half joked about litigators on here, but I think it's really important to make the record that we have, associated with the financial piece to this transaction. So, thank you.

All right. Mr. Barrett.

BARRETT: Yes, a question on the timing and the matching between the SAD and the tax increment fund. I think I understand when the SAD starts and the money is pulled down and the payments are due. They're due in, let's just call it 20 years. When does the TIF start and when do payments start coming in from the TIF, that would go back to the property owners?

JOHNSON: This is Marty Johnson. Let me take a first stab at that and then have Kendra follow-up with it. If you'll actually look at the last page of the presentation; and again, recognize this as just the Commission—the County Commission steps. These have changed a little bit since we're not on the agenda for IFC on Thursday.

The special assessment district, we anticipate will be created by the County Commission, by the September 18th meeting. So, the assessment district will be in place shortly after that, the assessments can be levied and that would be effective and we'd be able to issue bonds once a bond ordinance is adopted. Now, that takes two readings from the Storey County Commission and then the State Board of Finance, of course, would have to approve the issuance of the State bonds, which my guess would be somewhere in the November timeframe. So that's the assessment district part of this.

The tax increment area, we—meaning the County—cannot start forming that until after IFC approval. Assuming that were to happen in time for us to meet on September 18th as a County Commission and start that process, the tax increment area would be formed. And again, recognize I'm using the terms "formed" and "created", probably by November 2nd. Perhaps we could even get it done by October 16th, but more than likely, it's going to be early November.

At that point in time, it is effective. There will not be any money within that tax increment area until development is made. There are increases in property values that drive the revenues over what the baseline revenues are today.

So that will be up to the companies in when they start construction on those various parcels. It could be a year from now, it could be five years from now, it could be 25 years from now. But the tax increment area will start and the clock will start ticking on the—maximum life of that is 30 years, isn't it Kendra, on the tax increment area?

FOLLETT: Yes.

JOHNSON: It's at least as long as the bond repayment term is. It would mirror the 25 years for the bond repayment. If there are no incremental revenues during that time, then the property owners would not be able to be reimbursed.

Did that answer your question?

SPECHT: It did and it answered the next question which was the life of the TIF. So, thank you.

SANDOVAL: Does that complete that portion of the presentation?

JOHNSON: Yes, it does Governor.

SANDOVAL: Okay. Board Members, any further questions associated with the finance piece to this transaction?

HAVINS: I just have one, Governor.

SANDOVAL: Dr. Havins.

HAVINS: What is the alternative to this? What if this doesn't go forward? What is the effect on Storey County and what is the effect on this area of—where the businesses are located that are requiring additional water?

JOHNSON: For the record, Marty Johnson. I think I will have to ask Brian to address what the impact on the companies might be. In terms of the impact on Storey County itself, its finances theoretically will go along the way they currently do because there won't be any additional revenue, because without the water, there really can't be a whole lot more development out at the Industrial Park.

So, Brian, maybe you could fill in what the impact might be on the companies.

GORDON: Thank you. Brian Gordon for the record. The reality is, and I'll defer to Ms. Mulroy if she has additional insight, but there is currently about 6,000 acre-feet of water. The effluent water pipeline would supply another 4,000 acre-feet of water, bringing the total to 10,000 acre-feet.

If the pipeline project does not move forward, then 4,000 acre-feet of water is not transferred and moved toward TRI Center. That would limit the amount of development activity that would be available or could potentially be done up in the center itself.

SANDOVAL: And, if I could add to that, the avoided costs for what we discussed associated with Truckee Meadows, the $40 million or whatever tens of millions that it would cost, that I think Ms. Mulroy talked about and the added benefit of better water that goes into Pyramid Lake, which I don't know if you can put a price on that. So, I just think it's important to have those other pieces as part of the record.

HUTCHISON: Can I ask a follow-up question sir?

SANDOVAL: Yes, Mr. Lieutenant Governor.

HUTCHISON: Is the current 6,000 acre-feet of water available at TRIC being consumed, all of it? Or, is there any excess?

MULROY: It's all subscribed for, yes. In fact, the whole 10,000 is subscribed for. So—

HUTCHISON: So, the effect would be no more development then.

MULROY: No, you would have whatever 4,000 acre-feet within the total of 10,000 is supporting and Mr. Sader, who entered into the various agreements could speak to that in more detail, Pat Mulroy, by the way. That would be the limitation.

So, there would, by definition be some portions of the plan development that would not be able to move forward. Because the water simply isn't there.

HUTCHISON: And the existing facilities that are at TRIC have—have all subscribed to the 6,000 acre-feet.

MULROY: Absolutely.

HUTCHISON: Yeah. Okay.

SANDOVAL: Mr. Specht?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

SPECHT: Yes. One question I wanted to ask and I think it fits in well now, maybe I didn't hear it right earlier, but I'm trying to understand. Once this pipeline is built, what capacity is it at?

MULROY: 4,000 acre-feet annually.

SPECHT: Okay. So, someone who doesn't quite understand that, does that mean that the pipeline is 100% maximized at that point? Does that mean that there's future growth beyond what is planned today, with these companies that we're talking to? I'm trying to understand the growth.

MULROY: Right. Pat Mulroy. Mr. Sader can speak to it in greater detail. I think there is an oversizing component on this pipeline. If the Reno Sparks area should in the future, or Washoe County, as part of the larger package in the future would want to lease additional effluent TRIC, I think the pipeline would afford that opportunity. As the water agreements currently stand, now the water will not come as a steady flow. Because of the variability of the river and the necessity to manage the overall water system, TMWA is making some pretty stiff requirements in terms of what the reservoir capacity, the carryover capacity needs to be on the TRIC site in order to give themselves maximum flexibility to meet all the demands on the river.

So, it's going to be managed by TMWA. The objective is, it will be on a ramp up schedule, as the companies build up, there will be an up to 4,000 acre-feet a year of water available to TRIC.

SPECHT: Okay, follow-up. So, I understand that it's up to the management. I guess what I'm trying to get an understanding of is the fixed asset itself. If I buy the whole infrastructure, is that infrastructure going to be at full capacity once completed under the current plan, or is there an opportunity for additional growth, down the road with the fixed asset, however you want to manage it?

MULROY: Mr. Sader is handling the construction portion of this, but it is my understanding that there is a slide oversizing component, so the pipeline will have additional capacity, beyond the 4,000 acre-feet.

SPECHT: Thank you.

SPEAKER: Round two.

SADER: Bob Sader, representing TRI General Improvement District. Ms. Mulroy is exactly correct in what she's told you. We have looked at the size of this pipeline, initially we estimated our needs at 18-inches. This is a force main, water will be under substantial pressure. We then went up to 24. When we found out that flows from TMWRF, the Reno Sparks Sewer Plant would be variable during the year. Now, we have recently made a decision to go up to 30-inches in diameter, just for the question you're asking, in order to be able to accommodate additional flows in the future.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

We're hoping that that occurs. It is not part of our agreement now with the cities, but it seems to us, a fair possibility that there will be additional flows that we can agree on to accept the TRI Center.

SPECHT: Thank you.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. Any other questions on this component of the presentation?

SPEAKER: Governor, I have one more question for Mr. Sader while he's here.

SANDOVAL: All right, please proceed.

SPEAKER: Thank you very much, Governor. Bob, how did you arrive at $35 million? You don't have a contractor yet. You haven't acquired the right-of-way. Whose—can you tell me a little bit about how you arrived at this construction budget?

SADER: The District Engineers—this is Bob Sader again, for TRIGID. The District Engineers are Farr West Engineering. They have substantial experience building infrastructure and providing similar services to water and sewer systems all over Northern Nevada.

We attempted to acquire the best experts we could find, locally. They made the engineering estimates that currently come to $35 million, and that's the level we're projecting at this point. We will refine those as we get further into the engineering, but we're pretty confident that the current estimates are right on the mark.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

SPEAKER: And, Governor, if I could, if for example, it's more than $35 million, where does that money come from? If the bonds are going to be sold for $35 million, that's all there is, so where's the rest of the money?

SADER: We have always taken the position, I'm representing the GID, there are the six assessment entities involved. It's always been under discussion that if there is an overrun in costs that the private parties are going to have to pick that up. It's not borne by the County or by the State, that will be part of the—I assume, part of the financing agreement, or other agreements that will eventually be negotiated and signed before these bonds are used.

SPEAKER: You've been working with Farr West directly?

SADER: Yes, daily.

SPEAKER: And, have you seen the assumptions that they have been using and arriving at this construction budget and is it your belief that those are reasonable and can be met within the $35 million that is being discussed today?

SADER: Yes.

SPEAKER: Thank you. Thank you, Governor.

SANDOVAL: Any other questions on this financial component of the presentation? Let's move forward. Brian, did you have anything else?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

GORDON: I think we're all set on our end, unless the team up in Northern Nevada has any additional information to present.

JOHNSON: This is Marty Johnson, for the record. I didn't hear exactly what was said, but I think it was asked if we had any additional comments, at this time, I don't believe we do. We're happy to answer any further questions.

SANDOVAL: Were we going to hear from some of the private entities that are going to be participating in the project?

GORDON: We can certainly do that. Some of them are available, some of them were unable to attend here today. If there are specific questions or you want to hear from them, we can certainly do that.

SANDOVAL: I'd like to hear from them.

GORDON: Okay, in that case—

SPEAKER: May I ask one more question, before we move to that?

SANDOVAL: Yes.

SPEAKER: Not on the financial, but somewhat. Who is going to be the owner of the pipeline?

GORDON: So, ownership of the pipeline would transfer to TRIGID.

SPEAKER: When?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

GORDON: I'll let Mr. Sader answer that. I believe it would be at the conclusion of the construction of the project.

SADER: For the record, Bob Sader, TRI General Improvement District. We're going to require that the project be built before it's dedicated to the GID. It will be thoroughly inspected before we take ownership.

SPEAKER: Thank you, thank you.

GORDON: So, in terms of the private sector folks that are participating in this project, we have representatives from Tesla that are here, in Las Vegas, that can speak to the project and the benefits of the project.

Governor, Director Anderson, Members of the Board. Chris Riley, for the record. And, accompanied by my colleague here, Brian Scelfo, Senior Director of Corporate Development. For the record, I focus on workforce development and external education partnerships for Tesla. We're both here today in full support of the project. This has been, to the team's points here, a multiyear effort by experts on the engineering side, on you know, the water reclamation side. This has been a project that we see as very exciting for long-term growth at Gigafactory.

To your point, we thought it may also be helpful just to share a quick snapshot of where we are today, as Gigafactory. Talk about construction, production and I think something relative on the infrastructure side would also be a little bit about transportation.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Construction of the facility. We're currently at 5.4 million square feet of operational space at Gigafactory. The current footprint today is about 1.9 million. That's 30%, approximately, of the full buildout that we're seeing.

We are producing both—well, in addition to cell production, we're up to 20 gigawatt hours of annual production which is an incredible feat for us and a big milestone. We're also producing all Model 3 Electric Motors, as well as our energy products there. And, continuing to build on that. We're seeing our capital spend and our employee head counts are continuing to grow. We have thousands of team members onsite across Tesla, Panasonic and our other partners there.

On the transportation side, we've also been seeing options for our employees continue to grow and we now have a dedicated shuttle network for around 1,600 plus employees who are utilizing daily shuttles to Gigafactory. We're continuing to work on that transportation infrastructure because we see the growth out here at this park. We see the growth in partnership with our other companies and being able to build this infrastructure is really key for that long-term growth to continue and those jobs and this partnership. Thank you.

SANDOVAL: Thank you, that's what I needed to know. Board Members, any questions for the Tesla representatives? Mr. Lieutenant Governor.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

HUTCHISON: Thank you. Mr. Riley, thank you for being here and for Tesla's contribution to Nevada. We're all, as you know, very excited about Tesla and many of us, I think, if not all of us, very supportive of Tesla and what they're doing in Nevada.

My question for you is, you've heard the testimony—I guess not the testimony, the presentation today about the vacant properties that Tesla owns will be used for the tax incremental area. What are the future plans for those parcels that are part of the TIA?

RILEY: I wouldn't be able to say yet.

SCELFO: Do you want me to speak to that a little bit?

[crosstalk]

SCELFO: So, our current Gigafactory, if you're familiar, a pretty—pretty large area. It's separated into different parcels. Right now, we're built on the largest parcel. As Chris mentioned, Mr. Riley mentioned, we're only a third built out today, so we'll be expanding into those parcels, hopefully as fast as we can.

HUTCHISON: So, is the current parcel, the largest parcel upon which the Gigafactory is currently located, that's not subject to the TIA, as far as you know, it's future development on other parcels.

SCELFO: That's right, yeah.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

HUTCHISON: Can you address that future development on the other parcels?

SCELFO: Yeah, so those other parcels are adjacent to where we're built today. We'll be expanding into those as fast as we can.

HUTCHISON: I see. So, as the Gigafactory expands, then it necessarily expands on to those parcels.

SCELFO: Yes, that's right.

HUTCHISON: The Gigafactory isn't on just one big parcel, and then we've got to wait for future development. It's all part of the Gigafactory expansion.

SCELFO: Yeah. When we talk about Gigafactory, legally, it's separated into a bunch of different—about 15 different legal parcels.

HUTCHISON: Okay.

SCELFO: And right now, we're on one large one. And then yes, as we build out, we'll expand it to those vacant parcels.

HUTCHISON: And, what's the rough timeframe for the full expansion, that you think in terms of the Gigafactory?

SCELFO: As fast as we can. [laugher] Yesterday if you ask my boss. Yeah, so—no, it will take several years, but the goal is to get to full capacity as quick as we can get the funding, manpower and water.

[crosstalk]

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

RILEY: --just over four years ago, for us as a company, that was—you know, we didn't have that, nearly the facility we have now.

HUTCHISON: So, as a quick follow-up, do you have enough water that you've secured and, what's the word, committed to, allocated—

RILEY: Subscribed.

HUTCHISON: --subscribed to, to build out the Gigafactory or do you need this project in order to build it up fully?

SCELFO: No, we need this project. Yeah.

HUTCHISON: So, without this project going forward, the full Tesla Gigafactory could not be built?

SCELFO: That's absolutely right.

HUTCHISON: Okay, thank you.

SANDOVAL: Any other questions from Board Members? Any questions from northern Nevada? All right, thank you gentlemen.

SPEAKER: Thank you.

GORDON: The second participant I just have on my list here would be Switch, if you wanted to hear from them. Obviously, one of your Board Members is also an Employee of Switch, so my sense was he wasn't present for this particular meeting. When I heard the roll call, I'm not sure if anybody is present up in northern Nevada and wishes to speak on behalf of Switch. I'll leave it at that if they are. I'm seeing nothing.

The other participant that I have next on the list would be Google, who has acquired a significant amount of land in the TRI Center. I—my understanding is they've communicated with staff of GOED regarding their inability to be here at the meeting today. I don't know if they've shared any comments with staff, but my understanding is that they are in full support of this project and have indicated they are considering their development plans for the future and without this water, their development plans would be significantly reduced or may not happen at all, is my understanding.

SANDOVAL: Okay.

GORDON: And then we have Blockchains, who I believe is not present and then two of the other private sector developers, Reno Land, as well as Emerald City Empire. I don't know if they have anything in particular to share or contribute to the conversation, but they've also indicated to us that the water would be a necessary component of their ultimate development plans.

SANDOVAL: Okay. Anything else that you wanted to present?

GORDON: That's all we have for you today, but again, we're happy to answer more questions or provide additional insight to either you or your staff.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

SANDOVAL: Okay. Board Members, any further questions or comments? Director Anderson, do you have any concluding—

KLAICH: Governor?

SANDOVAL: Oh, yes, Mr. Klaich?

KLAICH: [inaudible] Okay. I would just like to say, I've asked a lot of questions and I don't want my questions to be misconstrued. I think anyone who lives in northern Nevada understands that the TRI Center has fundamentally changed the economy in northern Nevada and there may be those who don't think that change is for the better. I am not one of those.

I think that the development of the Center and the corporate citizens that have come to Nevada have benefited the region enormously and benefited the entire State.

The Storey County Manager indicated some of the folks that had come before the County Commission meeting last week and used a phrase of "corporate welfare". I think if you try to oversimplify this project and look merely at the aspect of it, of the issuance of these bonds, it's possible that a person could come to that conclusion.

Again, I'm not a person who would come to that conclusion. I think that Ms. Mulroy described early on in her testimony a very complicated jigsaw puzzle, which this certainly is. But ultimately, it seems to me that what we're asking, what we're being asked to do today is to facilitate the development of a very complex project that has very tangible benefits for the governmental entities involved and the economy of the region as a whole.

I haven't heard anything in the presentation or the responses to the questions at this point that would lead me to believe that we should do anything other than support it. If you entertain a motion to that affect, later in this meeting Governor, I'd be happy to support it.

SANDOVAL: Thank you, Mr. Klaich. We're reaching that point. Do—I've got some concluding remarks that I'd like to make. Director Anderson, did you have anything else that you wanted to say?

ANDERSON: Governor, I think I would just add a thank you to Brian Gordon and his team at Applied Analysis, great job at putting this together. I think Ms. Mulroy put really some fine capping pieces of why this is important both from the environmental piece, as well as keeping Nevada on the forefront of really innovative ways to get things done. Here we are with a great opportunity to look at both the private and public partnerships, seeing good policy in action once again.

I think both this Board and your Office, Governor, has done a tremendous job of making that case, thank you.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. Board Members, do any of the rest of us have any questions or comments?

BENNETT: Governor?

SANDOVAL: Yes, Dr. Bennett?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

BENNETT: Thank you very much. I want to concur with my colleague here in the North. Mr. Klaich was much more articulate than I think I could be, talking about what's before us today. I do have one quick question which either, probably Mr. Sader or Ms. Mulroy could answer. Assuming best case scenario, the permits are acquired, the pipeline is constructed relatively smoothly, when will water start flowing through that pipeline?

SADER: Dr. Bennett, Bob Sader, TIR General Improvement District. Our current schedule is to commence construction of the pipeline and other facilities necessary in the first quarter of 2019 and to be completed by the end of 2020.

BENNETT: Great, thank you very much. Thank you, Governor.

SANDOVAL: Thank you, Dr. Bennett. Any other questions or comments? Just a few brief comments by me.

I suppose I'll follow the order of the presentation somewhat. With regard to the financing, I'm comfortable. I think there's been a significant record that has been made that provides comfort to me, that there is not just sufficient, but extraordinary protection for the people of Storey County, for the people of the State of Nevada associated with the General Fund. Given the layers of protection that are part of this record, again, I think that from every direction, that we have the protections that we need.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I think the record has been made to show that the tough questions have been asked. In terms of providing that record, that there is sufficient financial protection for everybody involved and that ultimately the responsibility is going to fall upon the entities that are within that special improvement district.

With regard to environmental issues. I also believe that there's been a substantial record that has been made that with regard to the avoided costs of the people of Washoe County. That they can avoid the construction of tens of millions of dollars for facilities that will be necessary to clean this water that would otherwise be redirected to the Tahoe Regional Industrial Center.

The water that actually is going to come into the river is going to be better for the benefit of the Tribe. The Tribe was something that was an important issue to me, to provide that record that the Tribe will be protected and the quality of water that ultimately makes its way to Pyramid Lake will be high-quality water.

The other component that was mentioned but I think needs to be repeated is the fact that the facilities will recycle water, there at the Tahoe Reno Industrial Center which will actually save water. Which will be another ultimate benefit to the people of Washoe County, of Storey County and that region.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I'm glad that Mr. Whitten was there with regard to Storey County. As I said, the best evidence is those that are going to be affected directly and this matter was presented to the Storey County Commission and was considered and allowed for public input and public comment. I appreciate Mr. Whitten being candid that yes, there were a few negative voices to that, but overall there was great support for that. Those Commissioners are elected for a reason, to represent their constituencies and they voted in support of this project.

With regard to economic development, this is the difference between a lot of quality jobs in the region and to continue this New Nevada story of bringing literally some of the best, if not the best jobs in the country to Nevada, to allow for the completion of the Gigafactory. Tesla has exceeded everything that it has promised. I'm someone who was here and listened to that testimony and representation. They're far ahead of where they said they were going to be.

I was just at a press conference yesterday at Cimarron Memorial High School where they—initially they said they were going to donate $37.5 million to education in Nevada. The first tranche of that contribution, $1.5 million came yesterday at this announcement at Cimarron Memorial, which is going to be the first of hopefully the development of robotics teams in every high school or every school in the State and the investment into STEM education throughout Nevada.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I know it was a sensitive situation given that Mr. Kramer is a member of this Board and he's an employee of Switch, but Switch is another significant company in this State that has built the world's largest data center here and will build—here in Las Vegas, but will build another one, and is building another one in northern Nevada. They're a significant and generous corporate citizen. They stand or it stands behind this. Google, hopefully they'll make the decision to go here, but that is a company that has been providing training—if you've been looking in the Reno newspaper, they've already been providing training, free of cost, to the citizens of Washoe County. I'm not sure if they've done it in Clark County as well, but they're not even here and they're doing philanthropic things, with regards to certification and training of people who need it.

Finally, I'll close with this, that we have some of the most trusted and experienced individuals who testified on behalf of this project.

Ms. Mulroy, I believe your knowledge and experience is unimpeachable when it comes to your testimony with regard to the water situation there and the water quality which is very important to me.

Mr. Taggert is one of the most preeminent water lawyers in the State and he's involved in this and has worked with Washoe County and Storey County, City of Sparks, City of Reno.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Mr. Sader, who is a very well respected member of our Legislature and a former Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and somebody who's had a long public service career, is involved with this project.

Applied Analysis. Mr. Aguero couldn't be here today, but it is an entity that I personally know and trust and have taken advantage of associated with some of the most complex tax issues and other issues associated with economic development in this State and without exception, all of the testimony and the projections that you've provided have always been right on the money and honest and to the point. So, same thing.

So, as I look at this global presentation and yes, this has been a long meeting, but this is a transformational project. It is going to allow for the State of Nevada to lead. We've had nothing but good economic news. We're the most improved state in the country when it comes to employment. We're adding 3,000 jobs a month in this state. Clark County is the fastest growing metropolitan area in the United States of America. Our average wage and Mr. Potts, maybe he's there, correct me if I'm wrong, but our average wage is the highest that it has ever been. We've increased the number—we're at a record level with regard to the number of employers in this State. We've replaced 175,000 lost jobs with 260,000 jobs. I believe that we're at a place where we're resilient, with regard to another recession because we have diversified in the economy in a way that is unlike any other state in the country.

I will tell you, you know, this is just me talking, but the other states would be begging to be in the position that we are in now, to be able to build a $35 million project that will help enhance companies like Tesla, and Google, and Switch and Blockchains. They would trade places with us in a heartbeat.

This is incredibly important to the future of this State. Everyone on this Board has, you know, the right to vote any way that you like. I've put a lot of thought into this and I've lived this from like, 2011 until now and we never conceived that we would be in the position that we are in now, to be able to make a decision to continue unprecedented growth, so that the State of Nevada is at the foundation of the Fourth Industrial Revolution, when it comes to the type of companies that are coming here, that have come here and will come here and will expand here.

So, I know I'm kind of preaching here, but you know, I'm really passionate about this. We are lucky—we are lucky that we have the ability to make a decision on a project like this.

So, I've really appreciated the questions that have been asked during the course of this meeting because it is important that we provide a record as to what's happened. I have full faith and the companies that are going to be participating in this, that they're going to do what they say they're going to do and make those payments, so that we never even have to have the conversation that we've had, with regard to foreclosures and—and those types of things. I'm absolutely confident that we'll never have to go there, but again, the record needed to be made.

So, that's my speech. That's my comments with regard to this. Sometimes those issues or those thoughts and facts—I shouldn't say thoughts, they're facts, sometimes get lost in these conversations. So, again, I don't need to have the last word. If anybody else has any comments, that sits on this Board, I'm happy to take them before I accept a motion.

I'm looking at you Mr. Lieutenant Governor, because I know you always have something to say. [laughter]

HUTCHISON: There's no one left to cross-examine, you're the Judge. [laughter] Well, Governor, I just appreciate the opportunity to be on this Board and to see this kind of progress and development. I was just thinking to myself, you don't want to hear this, but Heaven help the next Governor. I don't know what you do to beat the record that this Governor has and the leadership that we've seen come out of Governor Sandoval. We only have a few more months left with you, Governor, and we're going to miss you. I think this project and this meeting underscores how fortunate we've all been serve with you. As we've seen the New Nevada, this is, I think, a nice little encapsulation, this meeting of what we've seen over the last, almost eight years now.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

So, I don't have to have the last word either, but I would certainly be happy to make a motion, whenever you're ready for that, Governor. Again, this is just, I think a proud moment for us here in Nevada and for all Nevadans. Thank you, Governor.

SANDOVAL: Thank you, Mr. Lieutenant Governor. So, if there are no—we still have a bunch of things to go on the agenda. If there are no further questions, this is—I don't think it's as simple as approving the financial—finance proposal, Mr. Klaich, you had asked to make the motion. If I could lay down the form of the motion and if you would be wiling to make it, I'll proceed.

KLAICH: I would yield to the Lieutenant Governor.

HUTCHISON: No, no. You—Mr. Klaich, you've got the motion on this one. You'd spoken on it early. I was just saying, I'll support it 100%.

SANDOVAL: So, if I may, Mr. Klaich, what I would be looking the form of the motion to be would be first to approve the Tahoe Reno Industrial Effluent Water Pipeline Economic Development Financing Proposal, submitted by Storey County, Nevada. That we approve the submission of the proposal to the Interim Finance Committee of the Nevada Legislature. That we approve to enter into one or more agreements with Storey County or another local government to administer any districts and carry out the projects identified in the proposal as deemed necessary by the Executive Director. That we approve the provision of notice of the approval of the proposal to the Board of County Commissioners of Storey County and the State Board of Finance and that we—the motion include to take all action necessary or appropriate to effectuate the approval of the proposal and provisions of NRS 360.981 to 360.992.

KLAICH: Governor, I request that the five-part motion that you read, be made part of the record. I would motion for approval.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. Mr. Klaich has moved for approval of the motion as I just stated it. I'm not going to read it all again. Is there a second?

HUTCHISON: I'll second.

SANDOVAL: Lieutenant Governor seconded the motion. Are there any questions or discussion on the motion? I hear none. All those in favor, please say aye. [ayes around] Those opposed, say no. That motion passes unanimously. Congratulations.

All right, we have the Agenda Item Number 5 which is the review and approval of Storey County Resolutions 501 and 502. Director Anderson, are you going to cover that agenda item?

ANDERSON: Mr. Gordon, would you like to cover those or do we have someone that would like to speak to the resolutions?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

GORDON: I didn't have anything prepared for those particular items but I'm happy to read them into the record, if that's what you're looking for.

SANDOVAL: We don't need them—excuse me. I don't know if we need them read into the record. We have before us Resolution 18-501 and 18-502. If there's anyone present that could explain the contents of those resolutions and what they mean, that would be beneficial for our record.

GORDON: I would suggest that Ms. Follett introduce those two items.

FOLLETT: Kendra Follett, Bond Counsel to Storey County. Resolution 501 is a resolution approving the financing proposal. This is adopted by the Board of County Commissioners of Storey County and it directed notification to this—the Governor's Office of Economic Development and the IFC pursuant to the provisions of NRS 278C and NRS 360.

Resolution #502, it also concerns the same project and it directs notice to the IFC under a different provision of 278C which specifically relates to the tax increment area.

WHITTEN: And, if I may, Governor, Board Members. Pat Whitten, Storey County Manager, I can attest that the Storey County Board of Commissioners, a week ago from today, so last Tuesday, unanimously approved both Resolutions 501 and 502.

SANDOVAL: Thank you. And, I will incorporate all of our questions and answers from our prior discussion on Agenda

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Item Number 4 into this agenda item. I don't think we need to go over those, but those are obviously relevant to the approval of these resolutions.

So, Board Members, any questions associated with this agenda item? If there are none, the Chair will accept a motion to approve Storey County Resolutions 501 and 502, as presented in Agenda Item Number 5.

SPECHT: Motion—[crosstalk]

KLAICH: I would move for approval Governor.

SANDOVAL: Mr. Specht moved for approval. May I take your comment as a second, Mr. Klaich?

KLAICH: Yes, please, Governor.

SANDOVAL: Okay. Mr. Klaich has seconded the motion. Any questions or discussion on the motion? I hear none. All those in favor, please say aye. [ayes around] Those opposed, say no. That motion passes unanimously.

We'll move to Agenda Item Number 6, Public Comment. Is there any member of the public present in Las Vegas that would like to provide public comment to the Board? I hear and see no one. Is there anyone present in Carson City that would like to provide public comment to the Board?

KLAICH: No one coming to the table, Governor.

SANDOVAL: Thank you, Mr. Klaich. Is there a motion to adjourn, Agenda Item Number 7?

HAVINS: So moved.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

SANDOVAL: Dr. Havins has moved to adjourn. Mr. Barrett has seconded the motion. All in favor say aye. [ayes around] the motion passes unanimously. Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, this meeting is adjourned.

2. PUBLIC COMMENT

Governor Sandoval asked if there were any members of the public present or on the telephone who wanted to provide public comment to the Board. There were none.

3. GOVERNOR SANDOVAL'S COMMENTS

Governor Sandoval said they had a very fruitful trade mission to Ghana and South Africa, in no small part due to Director Anderson and his staff's hard work and preparation. It was a successful trip on the water front, the education front, and the business front. More details will be provided at the next full meeting.

4. REVIEW AND APPROVAL OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FINANCING PROPOSAL (EPFP) TAHOE RENO INDUSTRIAL CENTER EFFLUENT WATER PIPELINE

Director Anderson gave an overview of the Effluent Pipeline Project and the request for bonding authority of $35 million in order to facilitate the construction of this pipeline.

The authority from the Governor's Office of Economic Development came out of SB 1, what is often referred to as the Faraday Special Session that referenced a development out at Apex Industrial Park. At the time, there was not the infrastructure to support such a project so bonding authority was needed in order to facilitate the construction of that infrastructure. Authority was afforded to this office.

One of the qualifiers is having a qualified project; which means an entity that is willing to do a capital investment of over $1 billion. Currently, the area that we're talking about, the Tahoe Regional Industrial Complex, or TRIC, has a single qualifying entity, which is the Tesla Gigafactory. They qualify under those rules to be to, in conjunction with other partners, to access the bonding authority in this office.

The qualifiers that come into play have to do with what is the public good, what are the environmental impacts, and what are the economic development benefits. As we look at TRIC and the economic catalyst it's been, we see its continued development is important to our State and we recognize the benefits as well.

The benefits are such that we felt so inclined to utilize some of the bonding authority that this office has with the Governor's Counsel and discussion, in order to help facilitate the building of an effluent pipeline that will utilize water that's non-potable, that's been treated and sent via this 13-mile pipeline up to TRIC, to be used according to the needs of the development there. It's important that we understand the benefits both to the public and to the residents of northern Nevada, as well as Nevada as a whole, to keep that project running smoothly. There are opportunities that, pending approval and development, that can't take place without water. It's important to keep in mind both the short-term and long-term impact that this pipeline will have for the future development up there.

Director Anderson then turned the floor over to Pat Whitten, Storey County Manager.

Pat Whitten introduced himself and reminded Members that Storey County appeared before the Board a year ago, asking the Board to consider their Economic Development Financing Proposal, structured to bring 4,000 acre-feet of partially treated effluent water from the Truckee Meadows Water Reclamation Facility to the Tahoe Reno Industrial Center as a means to further stimulate economic growth and build out. Subsequent to their submittal, they found it necessary to withdraw and regroup in order to find the best way to structure financing in accordance with provisions of SB 1 of the 2015 Special Session. Today, Storey County was back with an "even better" approach to finance the offsite portion of the project, which entails building approximately 13-miles of pipeline from Sparks to the Industrial Park.

The structure has changed somewhat and the parties, except the State and Storey County, have changed substantially. Instead of one developer involved, there now are six, including corporate giants such as Google, Tesla and Switch. The new developers bring a desire and a willingness to pay upfront through the special assessment district process. Having low cost water available to these companies, coupled with the Governor's recent actions to include all of TRIC as eligible for the Federal Government Opportunity Zone Program should provide the catalyst these companies need to fully develop the properties they own in Nevada. The Storey

County Board of Commissioners voted unanimously last Tuesday to forward this proposal to you for your consideration.

Mr. Whitten introduced Mr. Marty Johnson, who gave more details of the proposal.

Mr. Marty Johnson with J&A Consulting Group explained that J&A are the financial advisors to Storey County; they were asked to assist the county with this project. Mr. Johnson ran through a presentation that was given to the Storey County Commission last week that lays out the specific details of this proposal and the project.

Storey County has proposed to fund offsite improvements through an effluent pipeline with bonds issued by Storey County that are paid from a special assessment district on the property that these companies own. The onsite distribution and treatment of those additional facilities, treatment facilities, the distribution lines that will take it from the pipeline to the various parcels where the water is used, all of those would be financed and paid for by the private companies. They are not asking for the State or the County to help participate in those. In conjunction with this process but outside of what is used to repay the bonds, they are asking the County to form a tax increment area. Those revenues would be used solely to reimburse the parcel owners, the property owners, for the assessments that they pay. Unlike the proposal that happened a year ago where those were the revenues that secured the bonds, here it is solely a reimbursement mechanism that would be used.

Mr. Brian Gordon with Applied Analysis went into further detail and had the following to say. "We've been working with the private sector development team, as well as all of the folks up North in Storey County and the consultants for Storey County as part of this process. This offsite pipeline carries a development cost of about $35 million. That's what is being contemplated as part of a special assessment district. A fully 100% consent of those property owners that are committing to make those payments under that special assessment district. In addition to that, there's a portion of the project which we have been calling the onsite portion of the project which, the first phase of that would be another $30 million, which would bring that effluent water into—that would include storage as well as, transmission for that water. Then there's a second phase of that onsite portion of the project, which would be the advanced treatment facilities, to bring that water up to a standard that would be suitable for the users within the TRI Center itself, companies like, Tesla, Google, Switch.

What we're talking about is the financing of the $35 million through a special assessment district. The balance of the project, fairly significant, would be fully financed by private development, private financing through the developers and property owners within that district.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Some of the benefits, really, we looked at three different areas as part of the benefits. The benefits, both to Washoe County as well as Storey County, as well as TRI Center itself. As far as environmental benefits, the Truckee Meadows water shed has been somewhat of a fragile and one of the most litigated water sources in the Western United States. That includes the Truckee River. This project would divert 4,000 acre-feet of water that would typically go into the Truckee River. That would tend to be high nitrate type of water. That requires additional environmental fixes, if you will, as it relates to the quality of that water. So, what this project would do is divert that water through this pipeline, up to Storey County, in the Tahoe Reno Industrial Center which would then be used for some of these other uses by some of those major companies that we've been talking about.

This would resolve one of those environmental issues, certainly, TMWRF, the Truckee Meadows Water Reclamation Facility would not be giving up this 4,000 acre-feet necessary. There would be reimbursements for the same amount of water. So, on a net/net basis, it would be a wash, if you will, for them. If the project didn't move forward, TMWRF at some point, would be required to invest in its infrastructure to treat the water there, that would entail an estimated capital cost of about $30-40 million down at TMWRF, as well as annual recurring maintenance costs of about $1.5 million."

Pat Mulroy from Switch gave further details about the project:
"Obviously, since this is one of the most litigated rivers in the west, this was not an easy jigsaw puzzle to put together from a water resource standpoint. Even though there are significant water quality improvements to the end of the system, if you will, for the Cui-Ui fish and for the Tribe. We sit at the end of this system because you are removing these nitrates that are on any number of occasions during the course of the year, causing the Truckee Meadows Water Reclamation Facility to be out of compliance with EPA Clean Water Standards. They knew they had to invest a significant amount in order to get up there. It removes those and allows this facility to discharge without causing those nitrate issues that are problematic for the fish at the other end. There was a need to replace that source of water because the Truckee is completely subscribed for. What leaves the Reno area, goes down to the Fallon area where the Fallon farmers are reliant on this water source. Then at the end of the system, you have the Indian Tribe and you have an endangered fish, also dependent on this water source.

Two agreements were negotiated. The first was the actual effluent agreement with the Cities of Sparks and Reno who control the TMWRF facility. And in it, their reimbursements are identified. It's a 50-year lease, a lease that can go up to 50-60 years. We do not own the water. We never own the water. No one—neither TRIC nor any of the companies will hold title to the water. The water stays, in terms of ownership, with the Reno Sparks area. The TRIC is simply leasing that water supply for the term of 50-60 years. Then, they will reimburse the City of Sparks and the TMWRF facilities for all extraneous expenses, any capital improvements that need to be made to that facility, in order to facilitate this endeavor and make essentially, the Reno Sparks area whole.

The second agreement was a little trickier, but it was just recently approved by TMWA, which is the return flow management agreement. In it, the companies, TRIC has committed that they will turn over for use by TMWA during the course of this agreement their Truckee River Rights of 1,500 acre-feet, to manage the river for instream flows. The companies will also pay for an adjudication process on ground water rights that are available through State right-of-ways with the Department of Transportation. Those will be adjudicated. The cost of that adjudication will be borne by the companies. And that water as well will be turned over to TMWA for management purposes to make the river whole.

The objective was that no one loses in this proposition. During the course of this, I know that I've participated in one meeting with the Tribe, but I know that Mr. Taggert has participated in a number of meetings with the Tribe. We stay committed to continue our conversation with the Tribe, as we go through the water rights process on the ground water portion of this.

So, from a water resource perspective in the west, this is one of the most creative and forward thinking projects anywhere in the Western United States today. For an industrial complex to take effluent water, be willing to pay for the infrastructure, $35 million offsite, $30 million plus, it could go quite high in terms of treatment costs for the onsite, so you could easily break the $100 million mark on the cost of this and be willing to make that kind of an investment in order to be environmentally sustainable and to be responsible in terms of their water use really has no equals in the west today. So, Nevada is standing proud in being able to deliver this kind of a project to the western water resource dialogue and development."

Governor Sandoval asked if the TMWA rate payers, likely will save money because they won't have to pay for the treatment of all that water in the years to come? Ms. Mulroy responded by saying that they would benefit in two ways.

"TMWA rate payers, also TMWRF rate payers in many ways. That avoided cost of $40 million is going to prevent the wastewater rates from having to go up. And, to the extent that the companies will be reimbursing TMWA for their management, water management, of the River, there will be a benefit to the TMWA rate payers as well. The bigger benefit for TMWA and for the larger Reno Sparks area is that it provides maximum flexibility to TMWA, to be able to manage the flows in that river, no matter what the hydrology looks like in the system. The companies have stepped forward as full and equal partners in that endeavor and are going to take their seat at the table."

Governor Sandoval asked if Pyramid Lake and the Tribe would receive the same amount of water, but a higher quality of water? Ms. Mulroy responded, "They will have a much improved quality of water, which will significantly help the fish, help the Cui-Ui fish, up there. And, we are committed to making sure that the Tribe is not negatively affected by this agreement."

Then Governor Sandoval asked is there was any type of discharge that comes from TRIC back to the river? Ms. Mulroy responded, "NDEP has been quite clear, there can be no discharge from TRIC, back into the river. What the intent is, is to have a second pass-thru for reuse. So, water that is not put to full consumptive use will once again enter the recycle process and be used once again. So, it will all stay contained in the TRIC area which saves that much more water."

Governor Sandoval asked if there were any other questions or comments, and Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson had some. First the Lieutenant Governor asked for clarification on the term of the lease. Ms. Mulroy stated the original term was 40 years and it can be extended. The Lieutenant Governor then asked how does the lease term coincide with the infrastructure life expectation and were they satisfied that those match up? Ms. Mulroy stated the bonds should be paid off before the lease expires, so it's a 20-25 year window for the bonding. And then as far as the life of the infrastructure, so it's even after the bonds are paid off. It's 80-90 years.

Ms. Mulroy assured the Members, "With proper maintenance and to the extent that TMWA is a full partner and the companies are committed to bringing in professional management for the system. I don't have a concern in the world that that system won't be managed appropriately."

Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson asked Ms. Mulroy, "Just based on your experience and having acknowledged that this is a highly litigious area and a place that is often challenged. You've met with lots of different interest groups. Do you foresee any challenge to this project, beyond the parties that you've spoken to, other interested parties that you anticipate? Any environmental groups, that sort of thing that could come in and try to challenge this?"

Ms. Mulroy responded, "There have been several public forums in which those would've emerged and to date, no one has raised their head and said anything. I think the proof is going to be in moving through the groundwater adjudication process and through the TMWA water resource management process, in managing the river. It will be iterative, it will be year to year. I think the big partner whose needs have to be addressed is the Tribe. I think they appreciate that we're being sincere. That they're not going to get rolled in this process. That we know what our obligations are to the river and that we have to keep them whole. So, they really stand to benefit."

Mr. Barrett posed a question about the permitting process for such a challenging undertaking; what was the status? Ms. Mulroy's answer was, "There is a permitting process that is still ahead of us. Brent Farr from Farr Engineering, who is overseeing the construction of this project is up north and can answer those questions in greater detail. Some of the land is owned by the City of Sparks, so obviously that permitting has to happen. Some of it's owned by the State of Nevada, so that permitting, it has to happen. There is a small section where we have to cross Core of Engineer Land, so you're going to have to get a 404 Permit. But that is standard. You can't do anything in the State of Nevada without getting those permits. And obviously, we're fully committed to being compliant with all the conditions around those permits."

Governor Sandoval asked a follow-up environmental question, "That 13 miles is going to be crisscrossing some of the most sensitive land in northern Nevada, given it's adjacent to the Truckee River. Are there any environmental concerns associated with the construction portion of the project?"

Mr. Bob Sader, an Officer in TRI general improvement district, which will be the entity that builds and operates this pipeline answered, "In that capacity, to address the question, I've been very involved in the right-of-way process for the path of the pipeline which generally speaking, goes down the east Truckee Canyon, until it goes over a mountain and into TRI Center.

We've been working on the right-of-way for a couple of years. We have gone through three or four different alignments and we have consciously chosen the alignment that has the least environmental impacts. We, so far, in the process of actually physically inspecting each of these parcels, each—all of the alignment, we do not believe that we have any significant environmental issues.

We have no wetlands. We do not cross the Truckee River. We do not enter into Federal Lands. There are two state parcels, owned by the State of Nevada. We've had discussions with the Public Lands about the application for that. We've had a lot of engineering, a high-degree of engineering on this right-of-way. We do not believe we have any significant environmental problems."

Mr. Klaich asked if the agreements with Reno and Sparks had been finalized? Ms. Mulroy affirmed they had been finalized. They were approved by both the Sparks City Council and the Reno City Council, in terms of the lease agreement and then for the agreement on the return flow management agreement. That has gone through TMWA and is awaiting final approval from Reno and Sparks.

Mr. Klaich went on to say that not having the agreements in hand gave him a little discomfort. Mr. Paul Taggert responded to Mr. Klaich by saying, "The return flow management agreement has been approved by both Reno Sparks and TMWA. We can provide you with a copy of that, but that was a very detailed agreement on how we'll manage the return flows to the river, to accommodate changes made by this treated effluent pipeline. So, we went through the effort of first getting the initial agreement approved by those entities, those two cities, and then also getting the subsequent agreement approved by them and the water manager in the Truckee Meadows."

Mr. Klaich asked if it was Mr. Taggert's representation that those agreements provide substantial economic benefits to the Cities of Reno and Sparks? Mr. Taggert responded, "Yes, that's—it's certainly true. And the main idea is that there is a voided cost in upgrading the TMWRF facility for treating effluent, because simply, capacity is being created in those facilities by taking this water out of the river. It changes the timeline for when they would otherwise need to do more improvements to their facilities."

Mr. Klaich asked, "Is it your belief that the easement can be acquired and the property or the project can be completed, this offsite project can be completed within the $35 million of the bond proceeds? Has that easement or right-of-way been acquired?" Mr. Sader confirmed the easement had not yet been acquired; they didn't want to go forward with the right-of-way until all the agreements were completed and approved. As to the $35 million figure, it is the best estimate at this point. It's an engineer's estimate. Costs will be refined as all of the engineering is completed. They believe it is in the $35 million range and if there is a surplus, the assessment payors are going to have to pay the surplus.

Governor Sandoval asked if there were other questions or comments, and there were none. The presentation continued.

Mr. Gordon gave an overview of the benefits related to the TRI Center:
The idea here is that there's 12,700 developable acres in the Center itself. This water would essentially free up future development activity, as well as the intensity of that development activity. We've talked about some of the companies,
Tesla, you're very familiar with. We have some representatives in the room here today, in the Gigafactory and all of the investment being made there. Switch, as it relates to their 1.5 million square feet that's in the ground today, in their Citadel Campus within the Center and potential plans for an excess of 7 million square feet of data center facilities up in the TRI Center. Google has acquired a significant amount of land, as you're aware, within the TRI Center. They are also evaluating their development plans for the future up in TRI Center. Then you have these other developers, unknown developers, Reno Land, as well as Emerald City, that intend to develop a Town Square, if you will, up in the TRI Center. So, a solid group in terms of the participants in this project.

Essentially, the water infrastructure at TRI will increase the intensity, as well as the timeline for future development activity. So, you're talking about data centers, advanced manufacturing and other future development activity there. These are the types of facilities that require more water than typical distribution or warehouse facilities, which is why there's a need for this particular type of water and this project overall.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

These types of developments generally lead to higher yields, higher levels of investment, these are capital intensive types of businesses. I think you've seen some of what's already taken place, in terms of the development activity by Tesla, as well as Switch and then you have other players looking to develop as well.

These projects also generate employment with higher wages than the average. That's also a benefit overall. Just greater overall economic activity is generated by these hi-tech advanced manufacturing types of companies, as opposed to more traditional real estate development.

In terms of the private investment. We talked about the $35 million of this particular project. The storage, transmission and treatment facilities could add another $65-$105 million. So, a total project cost of about $100-$150 million. The private sector is going to be funding the balance of that, in addition to the payments under the special assessment district that the private sector is committing to.

In terms of the financing, I think you may hear more about that as part of this presentation, but essentially, the underlying real estate value will be required to have a 3.5 times value, relative to the amount that's being considered for bonding. So, it would be 3.5 times $35 million we're talking about under the special assessment district.

At present, the current appraisal is suggesting a 7 times value, when this project is completed. So, nearly twice the requirement. That provides a lot of security as it relates to the financing side of the equation.

At the same time, the group is also requesting a tax increment area, through Storey County be developed. Essentially, the idea being that as future development is created and investments are made, there's incremental value that is created with these same property owners that we're talking about under the special assessment district.

So, as increment is generated, they make more investments. Those—a portion of those incremental tax dollars would inure back to those private sector developers, to reimburse them for up to the amount of the offsite improvements, or the $35 million that we're talking about. That would be the maximum amount that would ever be reimbursed under a potential tax increment area, would be the $35 million that's being financed under a special assessment district.

That aligns with State statutes, specifically, if helpful for the record, NRS 278C.150, Developer Reimbursements for Construction of Wastewater Infrastructure Projects. Storey County would create that. Again, these would be the same companies and portions of those incremental revenues, would inure back to the private sector developers.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

If there was no future development activity and no additional investments made, there would simply be no additional tax dollars going back to the private sector development. The more they invest, potentially the quicker they get reimbursed on that first $35 million. To the extent they don't, there is no reimbursement and they are fully committing to make the payments on that $35 million special assessment district, regardless if future tax revenues ultimately are generated.

The final leg in the stool, if you will, in terms of the benefits would be Storey County. We'll talk a little bit more here about what that means for the County itself. Obviously, the existence of the pipeline itself would add additional value in Storey County, open up properties for future development and higher intense uses that I've mentioned. All of that would provide increased economic opportunity within Storey County.

With respect to the tax increment area that I mentioned, that would be a reimbursement of a portion of the pipeline and overall infrastructure costs. It would exclude any taxes that are scheduled to go to special districts such as the school districts. Both their operations and capital portions of the property tax rate, those will continue to go there, as currently scheduled. Those are excluded from any increment or reimbursement back as part of this project.

Only 50% of the sales and use taxes are eligible for reimbursement back for this project. 50% would stay with the original taxing entities as they are currently scheduled and only half of the modified business tax or payroll tax would be eligible for reimbursement back towards these infrastructure costs.

Taxes, overall, over the next 20 years that are likely to be generated, assuming a relatively conservative schedule of development for the types of companies that we're talking about. It could be in excess of $1 billion. This $35 million would represent less than 5% of the total taxes being generated so that would mean more than 95% of the taxes being generated would still go back to all of the original taxing entities over the course of the next 20 years.

Once the $35 million reimbursement was made, as it relates to the offsite portion of the pipeline project, 100% of all incremental taxes would go back to the original taxing entities and no more would go to the private sector for reimbursement under the project.

The water will also provide a stable source of water and provide increased stability in terms of the overall economic activity for Storey County as a whole. Again, this infrastructure will be dedicated to the TRI/GID, once completed. So, pretty significant transfer to the GID or public entity.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

At the end of the day, overall, there are significant economic and fiscal benefits to the parties involved. We've talked through what it means within Storey County in the local jurisdictions there. Also, as well as what happens in TRI Center and the additional opportunities that are there; the fiscal and economic benefits to Storey County as a whole.

This aligns exactly with the legislation that was designed that Director Anderson mentioned at the outset, as it relates to economic development, bonding capacity and makes a lot of sense for the reasons I've outlined here.

Governor Sandoval asked if property owners, homeowners of Storey County have any risk at all associated with this project and this bonding, in a worse-case scenario?

Mr. Gordon gave this explanation: All property owners are going to continue to pay the normal taxes and operate as usual. The only sort of exposure relates to the special assessment district and that is 100% consent of all the property owners within that district. He went on with the overview.

Assessment Districts are allowed under NRS 271. An assessment is indeed a lien on the property. It is co-equal to property taxes. So, if you do not pay an assessment, we can foreclose on your property. Part of the whole deal with an assessment district and bonds is that, if they are delinquencies, there will be foreclosures. It's not a might be, it's a will be.

The assessments are billed and collected semi-annually. They are not done with the tax bill. So, there is a need to have someone, whether that's a company, the County, whoever it might be, actually manage the billing and collection of the assessments in this process. The assessments, under statute, can go for a term of up to 30 years

Under the current proposal, the County would issue assessment district bonds and those bonds would then be purchased by the State through the Bond Bank Program. That allows the interest rate on the state bonds to be passed through to the County bonds, which provides pretty much the lowest cost to capital we're able to get for a Nevada local government.

Here is the key to how this works. The bonds are paid first and foremost from the assessment payments. So, again, every six months there is a bill that needs to be paid for those assessments. Then typically, two months later and it can be a little bit longer than that depending on how things line up, the bond payments are made. So, the assessments' payments come in. We've got generally at least two months before we need to use those funds to make the bond payments.

To the extent the assessment payments are insufficient, we have other resources within the special assessment district. In addition to these other resources and cash available, we will have a reserve fund that is funded out of bond proceeds, the day of closing of the bond transaction, equal to one year's debt service. So, theoretically, if all of the property owners were delinquent, we have enough money in the bank to make the payment for at least a year

If those three resources are insufficient, then the County is on the hook to the amount of its uncommitted General Fund balance or the amount of the annual payment. So, there is risk, but what we have worked with, the project sponsors to develop, is a plan where that risk is mitigated.

If that uncommitted portion of the County's General Fund, which again our estimate for the end of this current fiscal year will be $2.8 million, if that money was gone, then the State's General Fund would be kicked in, in order to pay the state bonds.

The maximum term allowed for the bonds is 30 years, which is well within the terms of the lease that Ms. Mulroy was describing. The County's guidelines for these types of financing states 20 years but the developer has requested 25 and that is something that we are working with them on.

Foreclosures are an important component in the security for this transaction in trying to make sure that the county's and eventually the State's General Fund would never be hit. If there are delinquencies, we will foreclose.

Kendra Follett detailed foreclosure proceedings using a hypothetical example: Assume there is a June 1 payment date, just for discussion purposes. Sixty-days (60) days prior that June 1 date, a bill is sent to the property owner, notifying them that the payment is due on June 1st. If it continues on in delinquency, three consecutive notices are sent: one on the 5th day of the month, following the payment date and then the next 30 days later, the next 60 days later with the third delinquent bill being mailed. Thereafter, at the time the third delinquent bill is mailed, a lot book is prepared where all of the liens on the parcel are identified. By statute, assessment liens and property taxes have a co-equal lien in foreclosure. The Notice of Sale on the Foreclosure is sent the first of week of September and the foreclosure sale would occur sometime in September. So, all in, it's about a three-month process and this is particular to assessment districts under Chapter 271. The foreclosure procedure happens fairly quickly compared to regular property tax foreclosures.

Mr. Johnson added a few more points:
The foreclosure is initiated on the entire amount of the assessment. So, it's not just the amount that's delinquent. Once that property is sold and that money is received, a corresponding amount of bonds are paid off and so, that parcel is done. We don't care who owns it, if they're delinquent with their property taxes, at least as far as the assessment district is concerned because a portion of those bonds get paid off. But that is the mechanism under which that foreclosure happens.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

If you think about the timing between the assessment payment and then approximately two months later, the bond payment, having a one year reserve, having this foreclosure process take three to four months, we will be able to move very quickly to make sure that there are resources there to make payments before we would ever have to get to that uncommitted portion of the County's General Fund.

Governor Sandoval commented that the fact that the local government approved this is important to note. He asked Mr. Whitten how the residents from Storey County felt? Was there any opposition? Mr. Whitten responded that the vast majority were in favor of the pipeline, but some call it "corporate welfare."

Mr. Klaich had a question about the foreclosures. What are you foreclosing on? The property of the defaulting partner within the special assessment district? Kendra Follett explained that you're foreclosing on the property that has the assessment lien on it. When the assessment ordinance is adopted, it will levy assessments which are liens against each of the parcels in the amount of the assessment allocated to each parcel. If they're delinquent, then you process the foreclosure.

The County will hold the foreclosure sale. It will sell the parcel for at least the amount of the assessment and any unpaid property taxes. Then a certificate will be issued to the person who buys it at auction in the foreclosure sale.

Now, thereafter, the County is out of it because the County has been paid the full amount of the assessment and any unpaid property taxes. All the rest of the liens are wiped out, mortgages, second mortgages, you know, whatever other liens are on there that are below property taxes and assessments. And, then that certificate holder who buys it at auction has a certificate and the property owner has a statutory period of time to redeem that certificate from the certificate holder after paying them penalties and fees. But at that point, the County is out.

Mr. Klaich asked for more clarification. Mr. Johnson offered this explanation to help clear things up:
We talked about having a value to lien of at least 3.5:1. So, part of what we do is get an appraisal as to what these various parcels will be worth when the project is complete and compare that to what the amount that is going to be assessed is and we want that ratio to be at least 3.5:1.

With the idea being that in the event we hit an economic downturn and someone does not pay their assessments, that we're not trying to get the dollar that the property was worth when we did it, we're looking for some cents on the dollar, in order to make everything whole.

So, we're not doing this at a 1:1 ratio, we're looking at 3.5:1. So, the equivalent of a, you know, million dollar home would need to go for $350,000 in order to make this all work. So, that helps create some of the—the security that we'll be able to get the money out of it that we need.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison wanted to make sure he understands the relationship between the special assessment district and the tax increment area. He asked if those are the same parcels or is the special assessment district larger and if so, what's the geographic area of the special assessment district?

Mr. Gordon responded: There are two parcels located within the TRIC that are within the special assessment district, but not within the tax increment area. They just happened to be two parcels that have improvements on them today. The idea being that, all of the properties in the tax increment area are sitting vacant today.

The participants in the special assessment district and the TIA, they're the same six companies. Two of the parcels, one happens to be owned by Switch, one happens to be owned by Tesla, are in the special assessment district, but not in the tax increment area. So it's the same companies within both.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison had some questions about the tax increment area. "Within the tax increment area, really what's happening is the developers are fronting the money and then they're getting paid on the back-end, through various taxes that are going to be used to pay the $35 million, correct?" Mr. Gordon concurred.

The Lieutenant Governor then asked, "And then, once those taxes have satisfied that $35 million, it goes back to the government entities that would otherwise receive those taxes, right?" Again Mr. Gordon concurred.

The Lieutenant Governor went on, "And then, the only way that Storey County is on the hook is if the special assessment district does not provide sufficient funding for the repayment of the bonds. That's when Storey County's General Fund would kick in, right?" Mr. Gordon said his understanding was if the payment is under the special assessments district were not made for some reasons, then they would go through the procedures that he outlined.

Mr. Johnson said it's only if the assessments aren't sufficient. We can't foreclose on the property for whatever reason and sell it, the reserve fund is gone. Then the uncommitted portion of the County's General Fund and when that is no longer sufficient or at zero, then the State General Fund kicks in. our goal is to put as many layers in front of the County's General Fund, which by definition means, they're in front of the State's General Fund.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison had one final question on the tax increment area. The taxes that are going to be coming into this tax increment area are based on future development. Currently, all the property is vacant, right? Mr. Johnson said the property taxes that are currently paid will continue to go to the local governments as they currently are. It is only the revenues generated by future increases in value for future business activities that are subject to being swept up in the tax increment area. The Lieutenant Governor surmised that if the vacant land is never developed, the developers assume all the risk. If they don't develop that land in the future, there's no tax revenue that could be generated to reimburse them the $35 million. Mr. Johnson said this was correct.

Mr. Klaich asked if this transaction was approved, is the State otherwise limited in its ability to fund other projects that it might wish to?

Lori Chatwood, Deputy Treasurer of Debt Management for the State Treasurer's Office stated that in the proposal that she saw, the maximum annual debt service was a little bit more than $2 million a year so this should not limit funding other projects.

Mr. Klaich asked if it was correct that they have to provide the Governor with estimates on a biennial basis of bonding capacity that he has available to recommend projects for funding to the legislature?

Ms. Chatwood said the affordability provided to the Governor's Office for the building of other bonding programs in the CIP is based upon the property tax, the $0.17 that we collect for those projects. To the extent that this would be General Fund dollars, prior to it being that $0.17 general obligation pledge, it wouldn't affect affordability. To the extent that the General Fund would not be able to make that $2 million payment, then it would share in that $0.17 and projects would be reduced because this debt service would have to go under the affordability.

Mr. Klaich asked Ms. Chatwood if she anticipated that anything would limit the bonding capacity reported to the Governor as being available for other CIP Projects? Ms. Chatwood answered that to the extent that all of the revenues are sufficient, there would be no impact. First of all, on capacity, being that this is a natural resource, it does not fall under the 2% constitutional debt limit. Therefore, the amount of capacity of bonding under the constitution is not affected.

The Governor asked Ms. Chatwood if she had reached any conclusions or opinions about this transaction. She said, "With the information before this Board now and in my position, I think this has belt and suspenders to date. I'm not saying we are through and wouldn't ask GOED for maybe some additional security, but at first blush, this looks very solid from my opinion."

Ms. Chatwood said that Counsel wanted her to state for the record that that they're issuing this bond if this were to be approved, through the authority of SB 1, which has a blanket limit of $200 million. So, this $35 million would go under that capacity, reducing that $200 million authority in the future.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Mr. Specht had some other question about foreclosures: could they really be processed in a matter of weeks and is there ability to be able to assess the delinquent company fees? So, is the county or state made whole? Kendra Follett stated that Chapter 271 of NRS permits both daily penalty rates and daily interest rates during the delinquent process beginning on the day after the payment is due. There are those fees and they increase quite rapidly, the amount of daily interest and daily penalties that are due on delinquent payments.

There is a long history in the State of Nevada, of foreclosure under 271. Local governments in Nevada have pursued this. They typically hire a consultant to both bill and commence the foreclosure proceedings on their behalf and this is done quite expeditiously and has been for years. There are no bond defaults in the State of Nevada for assessment districts.

Mr. Barrett asked a question on the timing and the matching between the SAD and the tax increment fund. When does the TIF start and when do payments start coming in from the TIF that would go back to the property owners?

Mr. Johnson replied that the special assessment district will be created by the County Commission by the September 18th meeting. The assessment district will be in place shortly after that, the assessments can be levied and that would be effective and we'd be able to issue bonds once a bond ordinance is adopted. Now, that takes two readings from the Storey County Commission and then the State Board of Finance would have to approve the issuance of the State bonds, which would be somewhere in the November timeframe. So that's the assessment district part of this.

The tax increment area, the County cannot start forming that until after IFC approval. Assuming that were to happen in time for us to meet on September 18th as a County Commission and start that process, the tax increment area would be formed. At that point in time, it is effective. There will not be any money within that tax increment area until development is made. There are increases in property values that drive the revenues over what the baseline revenues are today.

So that will be up to the companies in when they start construction on those various parcels. It could be a year from now, it could be five years from now, it could be 25 years from now. But the tax increment area will start and the clock will start ticking. It's at least as long as the bond repayment term is. It would mirror the 25 years for the bond repayment. If there are no incremental revenues during that time, then the property owners would not be able to be reimbursed.

Dr. Havins asked what is the alternative to this project? What if this doesn't go forward? What is the effect on Storey County and what is the effect on this area where the businesses are located that are requiring additional water? Mr. Johnson answered that in terms of the impact on Storey County itself, its finances theoretically will go along the way they currently do because there won't be any additional revenue, because without the water, there really can't be a whole lot more development out at the Industrial Park.

Mr. Gordon said now there is about 6,000 acre-feet of water. The effluent water pipeline would supply another 4,000 acre-feet of water, bringing the total to 10,000 acre-feet. If the pipeline project does not move forward, then 4,000 acre-feet of water is not transferred and moved toward TRI Center. That would limit the amount of development activity that would be available or could potentially be done up in the center itself.

Governor Sandoval added that the avoided costs associated with Truckee Meadows and the added benefit of better water that goes into Pyramid Lake are priceless, and it's important to have that on the record.

Mr. Specht asked once the pipeline is built, what will be its capacity? Ms. Mulroy said it would be 4,000 acre-feet annually. Mr. Specht asked if that meant that the pipeline is 100% maximized at that point? Does that mean that there's future growth beyond what is planned today?

Ms. Mulroy stated she thought there was an oversizing component on this pipeline. If the Reno Sparks or Washoe County want to lease additional effluent TRIC in the future, the pipeline would afford that opportunity. As the water agreements currently stand, now the water will not come as a steady flow. Because of the variability of the river and the necessity to manage the overall water system, TMWA is making some pretty stiff requirements in terms of what the reservoir capacity, the carryover capacity needs to be on the TRIC site in order to give themselves maximum flexibility to meet all the demands on the river. So, it's going to be managed by TMWA. The objective is, it will be on a ramp up schedule, as the companies build up, there will be an up to 4,000 acre-feet a year of water available to TRIC.

Mr. Specht queried if the infrastructure was going to be at full capacity once completed under the current plan, or would there be an opportunity for additional growth down the road? Ms. Mulroy said it was her understanding that there is a slide oversizing component, so the pipeline will have additional capacity, beyond the 4,000 acre-feet.

Mr. Bob Sader, representing TRI General Improvement District, said that Ms. Mulroy was correct and went on to add these specifics: initially they estimated there pipe needs were going to be 18-inches. This is a force main, water will be under substantial pressure. They then went up to 24 when they found out that flows from TMWRF, the Reno Sparks Sewer Plant would be variable during the year. Now, they have recently made a decision to go up to 30-inches in diameter, in order to be able to accommodate additional flows in the future. They're hoping that that occurs. It is not part of the agreement now with the cities, but it seems a fair possibility that there will be additional flows that we can agree on to accept the TRI Center.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

An unidentified speaker asked how they arrived at a $35 million construction budget? Mr. Sader stated that the District Engineers are Farr West Engineering. They have substantial experience building infrastructure and providing similar services to water and sewer systems all over Northern Nevada. They made the engineering estimates that currently come to $35 million, and that's the level projected at this point.

The same unidentified speaker asked if the project costs more than $35 million where does that money come from? If the bonds are going to be sold for $35 million, that's all there is, so where's the rest of the money? Mr. Sader said if there is an overrun in costs that the private parties are going to have to pick that up. It's not borne by the County or by the State, that will be part of the financing agreement, or other agreements that will eventually be negotiated and signed before these bonds are used. The speaker asked who is going to be the owner of the pipeline? Mr. Sader said ownership of the pipeline would transfer to TRIGID upon completion.

Governor Sandoval asked if they were going to hear from some of the private entities that are going to be participating in the project?

Two representatives from Tesla, Chris Riley and Brian Scelfo, stated they were in attendance in full support of the project. They see this project as very exciting for long-term growth at Gigafactory, and Mr. Riley shared a quick snapshot of Gigafactory:

We're currently at 5.4 million square feet of operational space at Gigafactory. The current footprint today is about 1.9 million. That's 30%, approximately, of the full buildout that we're seeing.

In addition to cell production, we're up to 20 gigawatt hours of annual production which is an incredible feat for us and a big milestone. We're also producing all Model 3 Electric Motors, as well as our energy products there. And, continuing to build on that. We're seeing our capital spend and our employee head counts are continuing to grow. We have thousands of team members onsite across Tesla, Panasonic and our other partners there.

On the transportation side, we've also been seeing options for our employees continue to grow and we now have a dedicated shuttle network for around 1,600 plus employees who are utilizing daily shuttles to Gigafactory. We're continuing to work on that transportation infrastructure because we see the growth out here at this park. We see the growth in partnership with our other companies and being able to build this infrastructure is really key for that long-term growth to continue and those jobs and this partnership.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison asked what were the future plans for those parcels that are part of the TIA? Mr. Scelfo said the Gigafactory is separated into different parcels. Right now, they are only built on the largest parcel, but will be expanding into the other parcels ASAP. The Lieutenant Governor asked if the largest parcel upon which the Gigafactory is currently located, that's not subject to the TIA, it's future development on other parcels. And what is the plan for future development on the other parcels? Mr. Scelfo said they would be expanding into parcels as fast as possible. Legally, the Gigafactory is separated into about 15 legal parcels.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison asked if they had enough water that they've subscribed to, to build out the Gigafactory or did they need this project in order to build it up fully? Mr. Scelfo said they definitely needed the project to go forward or the full Tesla Gigafactory could not be built.

Mr. Gordon asked if anyone needed to hear from Switch, and no one came forth. The other participant, Google, was unable to attend the meeting, but relayed they are in full support of this project and have indicated they are considering their development plans for the future. Without this water, their development plans would be significantly reduced or may not happen at all.

Mr. Gordon went on to say that Blockchains, Reno Land, and Emerald City Empire have also indicated that the water would be a necessary component of their ultimate development plans.

When Governor Sandoval asked if there were any comments, Mr. Klaich gave this address:
"I think anyone who lives in northern Nevada understands that the TRI Center has fundamentally changed the economy in northern Nevada and there may be those who don't think that change is for the better. I am not one of those.

I think that the development of the Center and the corporate citizens that have come to Nevada have benefited the region enormously and benefited the entire State. The Storey County Manager indicated some of the folks that had come before the County Commission meeting last week and used a phrase of 'corporate welfare'. I think if you try to oversimplify this project and look merely at the aspect of it, of the issuance of these bonds, it's possible that a person could come to that conclusion. Again, I'm not a person who would come to that conclusion. I think that Ms. Mulroy described early on in her testimony a very complicated jigsaw puzzle, which this certainly is. But ultimately, it seems to me that what we're asking, what we're being asked to do today is to facilitate the development of a very complex project that has very tangible benefits for the governmental entities involved and the economy of the region as a whole. I haven't heard anything in the presentation or the responses to the questions at this point that would lead me to believe that we should do anything other than support it."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Director Anderson had nothing but praise for the hard work and effort by Mr. Gordon and Ms. Mulroy. He stated this project is important both from the environmental piece, as well as keeping Nevada on the forefront of really innovative ways to get things done.

Dr. Bennett asked when will water start flowing through that pipeline? Mr. Sader said the current schedule is to commence construction of the pipeline and other facilities necessary in the first quarter of 2019 and to be completed by the end of 2020.

Governor Sandoval closed out the discussion giving this speech:
With regard to the financing, I'm comfortable. I think there's been a significant record that has been made that provides comfort to me, that there is not just sufficient, but extraordinary protection for the people of Storey County, for the people of the State of Nevada associated with the General Fund. Given the layers of protection that are part of this record, again, I think that from every direction, that we have the protections that we need.

I think the record has been made to show that the tough questions have been asked. In terms of providing that record, that there is sufficient financial protection for everybody involved and that ultimately the responsibility is going to fall upon the entities that are within that special improvement district.

With regard to environmental issues. I also believe that there's been a substantial record that has been made that with regard to the avoided costs of the people of Washoe County. That they can avoid the construction of tens of millions of dollars for facilities that will be necessary to clean this water that would otherwise be redirected to the Tahoe Regional Industrial Center.

The water that actually is going to come into the river is going to be better for the benefit of the Tribe. The Tribe was something that was an important issue to me, to provide that record that the Tribe will be protected and the quality of water that ultimately makes its way to Pyramid Lake will be high-quality water.

The other component that was mentioned but I think needs to be repeated is the fact that the facilities will recycle water, there at the Tahoe Reno Industrial Center which will actually save water. Which will be another ultimate benefit to the people of Washoe County, of Storey County and that region.

I'm glad that Mr. Whitten was there with regard to Storey County. As I said, the best evidence is those that are going to be affected directly and this matter was presented to the Storey County Commission and was considered and allowed for public input and public comment. I appreciate Mr. Whitten being candid that yes, there were a few negative voices to that, but overall there was great support for that.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Those Commissioners are elected for a reason, to represent their constituencies and they voted in support of this project.

With regard to economic development, this is the difference between a lot of quality jobs in the region and to continue this New Nevada story of bringing literally some of the best, if not the best jobs in the country to Nevada, to allow for the completion of the Gigafactory. Tesla has exceeded everything that it has promised. I'm someone who was here and listened to that testimony and representation. They're far ahead of where they said they were going to be.

I was just at a press conference yesterday at Cimarron Memorial High School where they—initially they said they were going to donate $37.5 million to education in Nevada. The first tranche of that contribution, $1.5 million came yesterday at this announcement at Cimarron Memorial, which is going to be the first of hopefully the development of robotics teams in every high school or every school in the State and the investment into STEM education throughout Nevada.

I know it was a sensitive situation given that Mr. Kramer is a member of this Board and he's an employee of Switch, but Switch is another significant company in this State that has built the world's largest data center here and will build—here in Las Vegas, but will build another one, and is building another one in northern Nevada. They're a significant and generous corporate citizen. They stand or it stands behind this. Google has already been providing training, free of cost, to the citizens of Washoe County. I'm not sure if they've done it in Clark County as well, but they're not even here and they're doing philanthropic things, with regards to certification and training of people who need it.

Finally, I'll close with this, that we have some of the most trusted and experienced individuals who testified on behalf of this project.

Ms. Mulroy, I believe your knowledge and experience is unimpeachable when it comes to your testimony with regard to the water situation there and the water quality which is very important to me.

Mr. Taggert is one of the most preeminent water lawyers in the State and he's involved in this and has worked with Washoe County and Storey County, City of Sparks, City of Reno.

Mr. Sader, who is a very well respected member of our Legislature and a former Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and somebody who's had a long public service career, is involved with this project.

Applied Analysis is an entity that I personally know and trust and have taken advantage of associated with some of the most complex tax issues and other issues associated with economic development in this State and without exception, all of the testimony and the projections that they've provided have always been right on the money and honest and to the point.

So, as I look at this global presentation and yes, this has been a long meeting, but this is a transformational project. It is going to allow for the State of Nevada to lead. We've had nothing but good economic news. We're the most improved state in the country when it comes to employment. We're adding 3,000 jobs a month in this state. Clark County is the fastest growing metropolitan area in the United States of America. Our average wage and Mr. Potts, maybe he's there, correct me if I'm wrong, but our average wage is the highest that it has ever been. We've increased the number—we're at a record level with regard to the number of employers in this State. We've replaced 175,000 lost jobs with 260,000 jobs. I believe that we're at a place where we're resilient, with regard to another recession because we have diversified in the economy in a way that is unlike any other state in the country.

I will tell you, you know, this is just me talking, but the other states would be begging to be in the position that we are in now, to be able to build a $35 million project that will help enhance companies like Tesla, and Google, and Switch and Blockchains. They would trade places with us in a heartbeat.

This is incredibly important to the future of this State. Everyone on this Board has, you know, the right to vote any way that you like. I've put a lot of thought into this and I've lived this from 2011 until now and we never conceived that we would be in the position that we are in now, to be able to make a decision to continue unprecedented growth, so that the State of Nevada is at the foundation of the Fourth Industrial Revolution, when it comes to the type of companies that are coming here, that have come here and will come here and will expand here.

So, I've really appreciated the questions that have been asked during the course of this meeting because it is important that we provide a record as to what's happened. I have full faith and the companies that are going to be participating in this, that they're going to do what they say they're going to do and make those payments, so that we never even have to have the conversation that we've had, with regard to foreclosures and—and those types of things. I'm absolutely confident that we'll never have to go there, but again, the record needed to be made.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison said "Heaven help the next Governor" having to follow in Governor Sandoval's leadership shadow. He thanked the Governor for his direction and dedication to the New Nevada and closed by saying this was a proud moment for the state and its citizens.

Governor Sandoval said the form of the motion for Agenda Item 4 would be: The form of the motion would be first to approve the Tahoe Reno Industrial Effluent Water Pipeline Economic Development Financing Proposal, submitted by Storey County, Nevada. That we approve the submission of the proposal to the Interim

Finance Committee of the Nevada Legislature. That we approve to enter into one or more agreements with Storey County or another local government to administer any districts and carry out the projects identified in the proposal as deemed necessary by the Executive Director. That we approve the provision of notice of the approval of the proposal to the Board of County Commissioners of Storey County and the State Board of Finance and that we—the motion include to take all action necessary or appropriate to effectuate the approval of the proposal and provisions of NRS 360.981 to 360.992.

A MOTION WAS MADE BY MR. KLAICH TO APPROVE THE FIVE-PART MOTION FORMULATED BY GOVERNOR SANDOVAL. THIS MOTION WAS SECONDED BY LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR HUTCHISON. THE MOTION PASSED UNANIMOUSLY.

5. REVIEW AND APPROVAL OF STOREY COUNTY RESOLUTIONS 501 & 502

Kendra Follett, Bond Counsel to Storey County, provided the following information: Resolution 501 is a resolution approving the financing proposal. This is adopted by the Board of County Commissioners of Storey County and it directed notification to the Governor's Office of Economic Development and the IFC pursuant to the provisions of NRS 278C and NRS 360. Resolution #502, also concerns the same project and it directs notice to the IFC under a different provision of 278C which specifically relates to the tax increment area.

Mr. Whitten informed everyone that the Storey County Board of Commissioners unanimously approved both Resolutions 501 and 502 a week ago.

Governor Sandoval said he thought all the necessary discussion on 501 and 502 had already taken place during the discussion for Agenda Item Number 4, and asked if anyone had any questions or comments. There were none. The Governor said he would accept a motion to approve Storey County Resolutions 501 and 502, as presented in Agenda Item Number 5.

A MOTION WAS MADE BY MR. SPECHT TO APPROVE STOREY COUNTY RESOLUTIONS 501 & 502 AS PRESENTED IN AGENDA ITEM NUMBER 5. THIS MOTION WAS SECONDED BY MR. KLAICH. THE MOTION PASSED UNANIMOUSLY.

Opportunity Zones Background
Opportunity Zones, created by the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, were designed to spur investment in distressed communities throughout the country through tax benefits. Under a nomination process completed in June, 8,761 communities in all 50 states, the District of Columbia and five U.S. territories were designated as qualified Opportunity Zones. Opportunity Zones retain their designation for 10 years. Investors may defer tax on almost any capital gain up to Dec. 31, 2026 by making an appropriate investment in a zone, making an election after December 21, 2017, and meeting other requirements.

In November, the U.S. Department of the Treasury and the IRS released proposed regulations on Opportunity Zones designed to incentivize investment in American communities. The Treasury Department plans on issuing additional guidance before the end of the year after notice and comment.

2. PUBLIC COMMENT

Mr. Brian Wilcox, Chief Information Security Officer (CISO), BlackRidge Technology (BlackRidge), provided public comment in Carson City. Mr. Wilcox advised he was the former CISO for the State of Nevada prior to joining Blackridge, a military grade cyber defense security company headquartered in Reno, Nevada. Mr. Wilcox noted his previous role had awarded him a unique vantage point to understanding the strengths, weaknesses, threats, and opportunities of the state's cyber defenses. Mr. Wilcox advised he'd come in front of the Board as an extension of his public trust obligation fostered while in official capacity with the state. Mr. Wilcox noted BlackRidge was unique in providing a solution that forever changed safe internet communications. Transport Access Control (TAC), the primary of seven patents held by BlackRidge, acts as the liaison between the chaos of the internet and organizational networks, preventing unapproved traffic from being initiated. The solution authenticates every connection on the first packet of data, resulting in an immediate reduction in malicious, unwanted traffic that poses the bulk of cyber threats. Mr. Wilcox would continue informing Nevada's state entities that the next generation of cyber defenses had arrived and BlackRidge would be managing efforts through the Nevada Office of Cyber Defense Coordination.

F. FULCRUM SIERRA BIOFUELS, LLC

- SALES TAX ABATEMENT
- MODIFIED BUSINESS TAX ABATEMENT
- PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX ABATEMENT
- REAL PROPERTY TAX ABATEMENT

Ms. Nancy McCormick, Senior Vice President of Retention and Expansion, EDAWN, presented Fulcrum Sierra Biofuels, LLC and provided a brief overview of the company and abatements sought. Fulcrum Sierra BioFuels, LLC (Fulcrum) is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Fulcrum BioEnergy, Inc (FBE). FBE was formed to develop a reliable and efficient process for converting municipal solid waste (MSW) into renewable transportation fuels. Fulcrum Sierra BioFuels, LLC's existing Feedstock Processing Facility in Storey County processes MSW-derived feedstock to be shredded and compacted for transport to the company's Biorefinery, where it would be converted into renewable transportation fuels, including jet fuel and diesel. The Biorefinery, also in Storey County, would produce transportation fuel that competed directly with high-priced fossil fuels, and was expected to have a lower cost, lower carbon, and lower emissions than traditional fossil fuel alternatives. Collectively the Feedstock Processing Facility and Biorefinery would convert approximately 175,000 tons per year of MSW, or household garbage, into approximately 10.5 million gallons per year (800 barrels per day) of renewable Syncrude that would be upgraded and processed into low-carbon transportation fuel products. The project would include an equipment investment of approximately $13.25m, and building costs exceeding $12.9m. The company would add 13 positions at an average hourly rate of $22.04. Ms. McCormick was joined by Ms. Jeanne Benedetti, Senior Director Project Development, Fulcrum Sierra Biofuels, LLC.

Ms. Benedetti advised Fulcrum planned to commence the Stage 2 expansion of its Feedstock Processing Facility located in Storey County, Nevada. This will include an additional 29,000 square-feet of building to accommodate the installation of additional processing equipment.

Governor Sandoval inquired whether the waste streams came directly to the company, or through a waste management organization. Ms. Benedetti advised, the trash went through the local waste management transfer station. When Fulcrum was ready to receive a trash shipment it turned on a green light at the front of its facility. The route trucks going past would turn into Fulcrum’s facility rather than continuing a quarter mile to the scale house.

Governor Sandoval asked whether the company’s process could make landfills obsolete. Ms. Benedetti noted the company could not accept trash such as tires and mattresses, however the process contributed to a significant landfill reduction.

Mr. Klaich asked about the economics of this process. Ms. Benedetti advised Fulcrum’s product costs approximately one dollar a gallon to produce. As the feedstock was free the production costs were significantly less than those of fossil fuel.

A MOTION WAS MADE BY MR. KRAMER TO APPROVE THE APPLICATION FOR A SALES TAX ABATEMENT, A MODIFIED BUSINESS TAX ABATEMENT, A PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX ABATEMENT, AND A REAL PROPERTY

ABATEMENT AS DESCRIBED IN AGENDA ITEM 5F. THIS MOTION WAS SECONDED BY MR. KLAICH. THE MOTION PASSED UNANIMOUSLY.

Mr. Roscetti advised, as a result of the increased demand for the company's products and services, KRS Global Biotechnology, Inc. would be expanding capacity to provide additional manufacturing, research and development, and warehousing operations. The company is currently evaluating the construction of a licensed pharmaceutical manufacturing facility. The new facility would be 150,000 square foot of newly constructed space housing clean rooms, production lines, and warehousing.

Governor Sandoval asked about the roles to be filled at the company’s new facility. Mr. Roscetti advised there were various skill sets sought, one of these being technicians. The company had previously set up a technician training school, in Florida, for pharmacy tech certifications. Mr. Roscetti noted the company would seek opportunities to work with local colleges and universities to train the workforce for its new facility.

Governor Sandoval asked, assuming favorable consideration of its application, would the company be likely to select Nevada. Mr. Roscetti confirmed the company was committed to a Nevada location and noted the company had been attracted to Nevada for its well-trained workforce, attractive economic environment, and commitment to the biotechnology pharmaceutical space via the UNLV Medical School.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison asked if UNLV's Medical School has been an integral factor in the company's decision to consider Nevada. Mr. Roscetti confirmed and advised generally, strong medical schools had the talent, production capabilities, and products sought by the company.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison asked if the company had been in contact with the UNLV Medical School thus far. Mr. Roscetti advised the company planned to make contact regarding collaboration opportunities

Governor Sandoval where the company new facility would be located. Mr. Humphrey confirmed the new facility would be located in NLV, close enough to leverage the company's existing auction site for certain asset types not requiring significant indoor storage and handling.

- SALES TAX ABATEMENT
- MODIFIED BUSINESS TAX ABATEMENT
- PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX ABATEMENT

Mr. Walsh, LVGEA, presented Cannae Holdings, Inc., and provided a brief overview of the company and abatements sought. Cannae Holdings, Inc. is a diversified investment company headquartered in Las Vegas. The firm primarily invests in restaurants, technology enabled healthcare services, financial services and more. Cannae's strategic acquisitions contain a mix of majority and minority owned businesses with significant underlying value. These holdings include majority and minority equity investment stakes in a number of entities, including American Blue-Ribbon Holdings, LLC (ABRH), and Ceridian Holding, LLC (Ceridian). In October 2017, the company purchased the shares of T-System Holding, LLC. T-System is a provider of clinical documentation and coding solutions to hospital-based and free-standing emergency departments and urgent care facilities. The project would hire 50 new employees at $36.90. The company planned to make a capital investment of approximately $1.1m. Mr Walsh was joined by Mr. Richard Cox, Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer, Cannae Holdings, Inc. and Mr. Gary Amico, Amico and Associates, Inc.

Mr. Cox advised Cannae Holdings, Inc. was considering building headquarter operations adjacent to its existing Las Vegas facility. The project would involve hiring of financial, information technology, and accounting personnel.

Mr. Cox highlighted the company's commitment to Las Vegas and the local community and noted the company was involved in various corporate citizenship and community engagement activities. The Vegas Golden Knights were associated with the Golden Knights Foundation, an organization that serves as the primary charitable link between the Vegas Golden Knights and the Las Vegas community.

The Folded Flag Foundation was also an organization with an executive board that included Mr. Bill Foley and Mr. Richard Cox, the CFO of Cannae Holdings, Inc. So far, most of the company's workforce had been sourced from Las Vegas, and the company anticipated this continuing to the extent the required talent was available.

Director Anderson inquired whether the company worked with any of the universities for recruiting purposes. Mr. Cox advised the company offered entry level roles and was currently looking at partnerships with UNLV and other local learning institutions. The company also planned to explore collaborations with UNLV to develop internship programs.

DIRECTOR ANDERSON APPROVED THE APPLICATION FOR A SALES TAX ABATEMENT, A MODIFIED BUSINESS TAX ABATEMENT, AND A PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX ABATEMENT AS DESCRIBED IN AGENDA ITEM 6C.

7. WORKFORCE INNOVATION FOR THE NEW NEVADA (WINN) FUND PROGRAM APPLICATIONS - FOR BOARD APPROVAL

A. RENO AREA DATA ANALYTICS - REQUEST FOR APPROVAL TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $300,000

Ms. Stacey Bostwick, Workforce Development Program Coordinator, GOED, introduced Agenda Item 7A and noted GOED has been working with its partners Truckee Meadows Community College (TMCC), NCLab, and Desert Research Institute's AIC to develop a first building block of the Machine Learning option within the Advanced Automation and Robotics track of LEAP Advanced ICT (Information Communications Technology). This building block would address the growing workforce requirements for skills in Data Analytics and would be a decisive contribution to add to and considerably strengthen the talent pool in this field benefitting effectively every industry in Nevada as well as attracting 21st century technology heavy companies to locate in the state. This project was now seeking funding to develop a completely online, hands-on and self-paced learning program (non-credit) and make it available to 500 workers and job seekers, in the Reno area, to provide the skills and knowledge necessary for employment and growth in analytical professions. Ms. Bostwick was joined by Ms. Barbara Walden, Director of Applied Technologies, TMCC, Mr. Vasily Kamyshanov, the Chief Operating Officer, NCLab, and Mr. Russ Riggs, the Chief Operating Officer, Lift 361.

Ms. Walden noted, as Nevada's economy became more diverse, it brought the challenge of upskilling the workforce. The Panasonic Preferred Pathway (P3) training program was an example of meeting those workforce challenges via innovative programs and delivery methods. This had enabled Panasonic to hire the trained employees it required at the Tesla Gigafactory and allowed for Nevadans with no advanced manufacturing experience to receive the training necessary to work in one of Nevada's most promising and emerging industries. Another identified challenge was building Nevada's technology sector pipeline. Coding, cyber security, and data analytics were greatly in-demand skill sets. Additionally, these skills were not unique to technology, and crossed every industry sector including marketing, health care, business, and government.

Mr. Kamyshanov advised NCLab had developed online courses for STEM disciplines and was currently part of a Nevada Ready 21 Program for middle schools. NCLab is also working with Clark County, Washoe County, and rural areas of Nevada. This project would enable NCLab to qualify students to become workforce ready for technology based careers.

Mr. Riggs advised his company focused exclusively on analytics. The company offered custom analytics based on client's specific needs. The company's services were highly specialized and attracting talent had been difficult in the past. Mr. Riggs stated the project would introduce more data analytics into schools and equip more students with skills in this area.

Governor Sandoval inquired about the process of signing up for the program. Ms. Walden advised, for the purposes of the WINN funds, there would be an intake process including an application for the funding and assessment of an applicant's overall objective in participating and completing the program.

Director Anderson inquired about the program development and maintenance costs. Mr. Kamyshanov advised online education has a solid propriety platform to deliver complex knowledge to people, and this course would be developed together with participating companies to really match the job demand. Once the set was developed the costs to support it would be low. Once developed, it could easily scale to an unlimited number of students.

Director Anderson about the program timeframes. Ms. Waldon noted promotion and intake would commence within two months with a targeted course commencing by October 2018. Each course would take 80-120 hours for completion and it was estimated funding will be fully utilized by June 30, 2019. Program outcomes would be reported and evaluated using self-reported data gathered from participants and employer partners to understand the placement and wage gains experienced as a result of program completion.

A MOTION WAS MADE BY DR. DANA BENNETT TO APPROVE THE REQUEST OF RENO AREA DATA ANALYTICS TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $300,000 AS DESCRIBED IN AGENDA ITEM 7A. THIS MOTION WAS SECONDED BY MR. KLAICH. THE MOTION PASSED UNANIMOUSLY.

B. CLARK COUNTY HEALTH AND TECHNOLOGY - REQUEST FOR APPROVAL TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $700,000

Ms. Bostwick introduced Agenda Item 7B. Ms. Bostwick advised this program proposed to develop both a workforce increase in nursing and home health and infuse new technology training and the necessary skills to become effective bridges between clinical and community settings. This would help improve transitions from clinical to community settings, with strong potential to improve population health outcomes, reduce health disparities, and to control health care costs. Partners of the program include BrightStar Home Health, Hallmark Home Care, Homewatch Caregivers, Home Care Assistance, and the Nevada State Board of Nursing. The proposed strategy established increased capacity to on-ramp into healthcare through Home Healthcare or Nursing Assistant programs with new infusions of technology certifications. Beyond the strong economic value of creating new health jobs in southern Nevada, this approach would support efforts to mitigate the current economic burden incurred by the state due to chronic diseases and hospital readmissions. Students completing the program would represent the future of health care with skills and competencies in the use of technology to improve patient and community health outcomes. Ms. Bostwick was joined by Ms. Luz Castro, Health Care Specialist, College of Southern Nevada (CSN), Ms. Catherine Prato-Lefkowitz, Director of Nursing Education, Nevada State Board of Nursing, and Ms. Cynthia Knight, Director of Client and Caregiver Services, Homewatch Caregivers.

Ms. Castro explained the CSN Division of Workforce and Economic Development program strived to deliver a high-standard curriculum that taught and promoted all competencies and principles required for qualified home health aides and Certified Nursing Assistants (CNA). CNA programs are highly recognized by industry leaders and home health aides were among the fastest growing jobs in the industry. There were several barriers to the required education, the the primary being tuition. CSN also needed to innovate its programs with technology competencies to upskill and deliver a high-quality service to employers and the community. As the program certificates would be offered both online and in-person, students would have flexibility regarding different modes of matriculation. Several employers had already expressed interest in partnering with CSN and hiring its students upon completion of this program.

Ms. Knight advised there was currently a severe shortage of qualified candidates and this had inhibited growth of the business. Homewatch Caregivers had a contract with the Veterans Administration to provide care for veterans in their own home and the company was looking to CSN to develop qualified candidates as quickly as possible.

Ms. Catherine Prato-Lefkowitz advised a CNA certification was a valuable entry point into any health care occupation or profession. Many CNA students, particularly in high schools, had goals of becoming nurses, physicians, or dentists. Increasing the technological literacy for CNAs and nurses would be an effective path to increase competencies. Technology is commonplace in health care. However, it is not as commonplace in the training that CNAs and nurses receive.

Dr. Havins inquired about the tuition costs for a CNA program and the portion of this to be covered under the WINN program. Ms. Bostwick advised tuition for the CNA program was approximately $2,400. The program was structured to cover 100% of this fee.

Lieutenant Governor Hutchison asked how many tuitions would be covered by the program application. Ms. Bostwick advised the current application would cover 250 individuals. However, the objective would be to consistently seek opportunities for integration. In conjunction with WINN there may be scope to leverage additional funding sources for tuitions and increases in technology infusion and certification.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A MOTION WAS MADE BY MR. BARRETT TO APPROVE THE REQUEST BY THE CLARK COUNTY HEALTH AND TECHNOLOGY TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $700,000 AS DESCRIBED IN AGENDA ITEM 7B. THIS MOTION WAS SECONDED BY DR. HAVINS. THE MOTION PASSED UNANIMOUSLY.

8. WORKFORCE INNOVATION FOR THE NEW NEVADA (WINN) FUND PROGRAM APPLICATIONS - FOR DIRECTOR APPROVAL

A. RENO AREA LOGISTICS AND MANUFACTURING RE-ENTRY INITIATIVE-REQUEST FOR APPROVAL TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $75,000

Ms. Bostwick introduced Agenda Item 8A and advised the objective of this program was to provide career development opportunities to individuals involved in the justice system, in northern Nevada, with a direct pathway to higher wage employment. This proposal would create trained, professional individuals, who otherwise may not have the opportunity to work in these industries, and who would meet the needs of local employers to expand their businesses. Quality Plastics, High Mountain Door and Trim, Reno Custom Crating, Sierra Meat and Seafood and Iron had all expressed a need for trained and skilled employees to sustain and expand their Manufacturing and Logistics businesses. Phase One would be launched in May 2018 and include a cohort of 30 participants. Ms. Bostwick was joined by Ms. Camille Vega, Re-Entry Coordinator, TMCC, Mr. Jonathan Wilson, Facility Manager, Northern Nevada Transitional Housing, and Mr. Bill Owensby, IT Director, Quality Plastics.

Ms. Vega stated current data showed one in three Americans had some sort of criminal record. These individuals had minimal support in re-entering society post incarceration. One-half of those released were incarcerated within their first year. Two-thirds were re-incarcerated within three years, and over five years, three-quarters were re-incarcerated. One of the greatest factors in reducing re-incarceration was meaningful employment.

Mr. Wilson advised he joined northern Nevada Transitional Housing in August 2017. Prior to this he'd been with the Department of Corrections for almost 15 years and had noted the lack of transitional support for inmates. Mr. Wilson and Ms. Vega had discussed the potential for certificate programs. Additionally, Mr. Wilson noted he had identified employers interested in participating in the program. Sought after skills pertained to manufacturing, logistics, food preparation, and food safety.

Mr. Bill Owensby advised Quality Plastics advocated for inmate re-entry with 40% of its currently staff being previously incarcerated. The typical new hires from these re-entry programs were reliable and consistent. Additionally, being gainfully employed could contribute to elevated self-worth and lower risks of reoffending. Mr. Owensby advised the company hired him from a restitution center two-years earlier. He now held the position of IT Director.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Governor Sandoval highlighted his position as Chairman of the Board of Prison Commissioners and noted at times parole eligible inmates would select not to parole as they had no job or place to go. Governor Sandoval thanked the employers involved in the application and noted the importance of providing resources, tools and skills for a productive life.

Mr. Don Soderberg commended the program and noted the Nevada Department of Employment, Training and Rehabilitation (DETR) had also been involved in re-entry initiatives. Feedback often highlight how dependable and enthusiastic these employees were with some of the best employees being participants of re-entry programs.

Governor Sandoval asked if the program would also be available to women. Ms. Vega stated the first cohort would solely include 30 males. Best practices in re-entry program development and implementation had identified that men and women were best supported in separate training programs. Ms. Vegas advised the intention was to have a cohort of women in the second semester, pending additional funding.

Governor Sandoval thanked Ms. Vega and encouraged the group to come back to present a second application. Ms. Vega noted the objective was to do so in four months.

DIRECTOR ANDERSON APPROVED THE REQUST FOR RENO AREA LOGISTICS AND MANUFACTURING RE-ENTRY INITIATIVE TO ENTER INTO A WINN GRANT AGREEMENT NOT TO EXCEED $75,000.

9. DIRECTOR'S REPORT - REVIEW AND DISCUSSION

Director Anderson advised GOED's International Trade Division recently completed an advanced planning trip to Ghana, Botswana, and South Africa to prepare for a Governor-led trade mission that would take place in summer 2018. The trip was a success as partnership opportunities were identified in several sectors including trade, water technology, higher education, smart city technology, technology transfer, and good governance.

At the National Governors Association North America Summit in May 2018, Governor Sandoval and Premier Rachel Notley of Alberta, Canada signed an MOU focused on collaboration in the development, testing, and commercialization of drone technology. This followed a successful trade mission to Nevada of over fifty Alberta businesses in February 2018.

Mr. Randy Walden, GOED's Advanced Manufacturing Industry Specialist and Chair of State Apprenticeship Council; oversaw the approval of over 600 apprenticeships which included a recently announced 425 Panasonic employees. The apprentices would be attending classes at TMCC utilizing the flexible delivery manufacturing courses developed for the P3 program last year. This would be the first group of apprentices and would followed in the upcoming months by participants from Tesla as well as other manufacturers in Northern Nevada. Apprenticeships played a vital role in providing a highly qualified workforce for new and existing companies in Nevada.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

On April 20, 2018 GOED submitted a list of recommended census tracts, Governor Sandoval, to be designated as Opportunity Zones. Nevada's identification process has been held up as a 'best practice' by Policy Map who was involved in the creation of opportunity zone policy.

The Nevada Film Office (NFO) was working on revamping its online locations directory. The new online locations directory had been designed to better connect potential film locations around Nevada with production companies, giving local businesses more control and more opportunity. The directory was in the final stages and should launch in late May 2018 with an associated marketing campaign commercial promoted on Facebook, Twitter, and potentially local television.

Dr. Barclay was working with the Touro Center for Disaster Life Support, UNLV, the College of Southern Nevada, health industry corporate employers and other stakeholders to develop a series of certificates in Technology for Emergency Preparedness and Disaster Response. These certificates will be offered from high school to graduate level and will contribute to building and strengthening a technology-ready workforce.

Director Anderson welcomed Ms. Bostwick, as GOED's new WINN Coordinator. Ms. Bostwick is based in GOED's Las Vegas office.

10. STATE OF NEVADA UNEMPLOYMENT RATE UPDATE - as established by the Research and Analysis Division of the Nevada Department of Employment, Training and Rehabilitation.

Agenda item 10. was for information only. GOED is committed to providing this information for each Board meeting. There were no questions or comments regarding this item.

11. PUBLIC COMMENT

Mr. Cory Hunt, Deputy Director, GOED provided public comment from Carson City. Mr. Hunt stated May 18, 2018 would be his last day at GOED. Mr. Hunt thanked Governor Sandoval for the great privilege of serving the State of Nevada during his roles with the Governor's Office and GOED. Mr. Hunt also thanked Mr. Steve Hill, Mr. Paul Anderson, Mr. Bob Potts, the GOED Board, Nevada's RDA's, and GOED's staff. Mr. Hunt noted he looked forward to continuing opportunities and projects that would support Nevada's growth.

Governor Sandoval wished Mr. Hunt the best in his future endeavors and commended his contribution to the State of Nevada and dedication to the multiple projects he'd been involved in.

Assemblywoman Irene Bustamante-Adams, Chief Strategy Officer, Workforce Connections, provided comment from Las Vegas and thanked the GOED Board for supporting the Clark County Health and Technology WINN Fund application. Assemblywoman Bustamante-Adams also thanked Dr. Gillian Barclay, Healthcare Industry Specialist, GOED for bringing a global vision to Nevada and competitively positioning the state in terms of serving the employer.

Hi Brian,

I have attached the newsletter PDF for you to review. As a reminder, we are still waiting on the story for page 3 – right now, the page is being filled with generic filler text. Also, for the story on the last spread, even with the graphic, it's not quite large enough to fill the space, so we're thinking we'd throw a generic Nevada stock photo in there unless you have something that works that you can send over.

Driverless ride share launches in Las Vegas

This May, a global technology leader in mobility, incentivized by GOED, launched of a fleet of 30 autonomous vehicles in Las Vegas on the Lyft network. Aptiv PLC operates the vehicles on its fully-integrated autonomous driving platform, which are made available to the public in partnership with Lyft. On an opt-in basis, passengers have the ability to hail self-driving vehicles equipped with Aptiv technology to and from high-demand locations.

> "With Aptiv's autonomous driving technology deployed throughout Las Vegas and broadly accessible through the Lyft app, a wide range of consumers will be able to share the experience of autonomous vehicles in a complex urban environment," said Kevin Clark, Aptiv president and chief executive officer. "More importantly, the resulting knowledge and data will allow us to further refine our autonomous driving capabilities and strengthen our portfolio of industry-leading active safety solutions."

The combination of Aptiv's autonomous driving technology and Lyft's ride-hailing app is the expansion of a successful partnership that launched in Las Vegas during CES 2018. That initial pilot provided more than 400 self-driving rides to the public and earned an average customer rating of 4.99 out of five stars. Like the CES program, vehicles will be operated by highly-trained safety drivers.

In March, the GOED board voted to approve Aptiv's application for tax abatements and two months later the company has already surpassed it projected number of jobs created and currently lists openings in Las Vegas for IT, engineering, and office administration positions.

GOED Executive Director Paul Anderson said Aptiv is exactly the sort of operation Nevada hoped to attract when last year the state legislature passed and Governor Brian Sandoval signed into law some of the most forward-looking autonomous vehicle regulations in the country.

"The holy grail for economic development is research and development," said Anderson. "And because of what it does — attract some of the smartest people in the world and bring in talent — it becomes an entrepreneurial model to economic development."

GOED listening tour covers 1,000 miles

In April, GOED's Executive Director Paul Anderson, Director of Rural Economic and Community Matthew Moore and Communications Director Brian Baluta undertook a three-day, 1,000-mile listening tour to connect with the Regional Development Authority partners and stakeholders across the vast Silver State.

All told, the trip featured stops in Pahrump, Fallon, Carson City, Eureka, Ely, Panaca and Caliente, for sessions with Nye County Regional Economic Development Authority (NCREDA), HWY 95 Rural Development Authority (HWY95), Northern Nevada Development Authority (NNDA), Northeastern Nevada Regional Development Authority (NNRDA), and Lincoln County Regional Development Authority (LCRDA).

The tour underscored:

1. Nevada's rural communities share many assets and challenges, including issues with federal land management, affordable housing, workforce development, and infrastructure.
2. There are many engaged and motivated individuals on the ground working diligently to face these challenges and build on opportunities.
3. GOED and the rural RDAs will continue to work closely to help ensure all of Nevada shares in growth and prosperity.

Governor Sandoval nominates 61 Opportunity Zones

In April, Governor Brian Sandoval today nominated 61 opportunity zones, pursuant to the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act of 2017, which established an Opportunity Zone tax incentive, designed to encourage long-term private investment in low-income communities.

The nominated census tracts from across Nevada can be found here: http://www.diversifynevada.com/programs-resources/opportunity-zones

> "During my time as Governor, we have invested significant resources in Nevada," Governor Sandoval said. "While we have seen substantial returns, there are still parts of our state that need additional assistance. It is my hope that by nominating these 61 low-income opportunity zones, private investors will choose to fund projects in these areas that benefit the Nevadans who need it most. What's more, we believe that communities surrounding the 61 opportunity zones will also benefit from investment in the zones."

61 opportunity zone nominations directly impact more than 230,000 Nevadans in some of Nevada's most disadvantaged communities.

Average family income is approximately $37,000 — just 60% of median statewide family income of approximately $62,500.

Average unemployment rate from 2011-2015 was 16% — nearly 2x greater than the national unemployment rate.

PolicyMap's Jeremy Nowak praised Nevada's approach to the nominations. "The Governor's office did a great job of taking a data driven approach…Hats off to Nevada."

Good Nevada news, by the numbers

For the first quarter of 2018, State Policy Reports' Index of State Economic Momentum – which ranks states based on personal income growth, employment growth, and population growth – ranked Nevada No. 1

Between the fourth quarter of 2016 and the same period in 2017, Nevada had the strongest year-over-year growth in personal income, and held the distinction of being the only state to record growth greater than 6%.

Federal data released in May showed in 2017 Nevada's gross domestic product (GDP) grew 3.5% after increasing 2.1% in 2016, good for No. 3 in the nation.

The Bureau of Economic Analysis data depict expansion across the state's economy, with real GDP increasing for nearly every major industry. Real estate served as the largest contributor to overall GDP, followed by durable goods manufacturing.

Nevada's GDP numbers also reflect steady in-migration to the state. According to Census estimates, its population climbed 2 percent last year, the largest increase nationally behind only Idaho.

According to the Nevada Department of Employment, Training & Rehabilitation (DETR) March 2018 economic report, Nevada added 3,500 jobs bringing employment in the state of Nevada to a record high of 1,373,700 jobs. Unemployment in March remained constant at 4.9%.

DETR's report also notes that in the fourth quarter of 2017, personal income in Nevada reached $136 billion, up 6.4% from a year ago. This increase has been ongoing in 30 of the past 31 quarters.

Additionally, Nevada's average personal income growth has exceeded that for the U.S. over 14 of the past 16 quarters, with income gains in the state averaging 5.1%, compared to 3.5% in the U.S.

"Although we are seeing some slight changes in employment and unemployment measures in March, state employment remains strong," David Schmidt, Chief Economist for DETR said. "Estimates show Nevada's labor force has averaged 1.49 million in the first quarter of 2018, up from 1.45 million during the same period in 2017. This translates into an increase of 40,160 more Nevadans in the labor force, either working or actively seeking employment."

No. 1	in economic momentum, Q1 2018.
No. 1	in personal income growth, 2017.
No. 3	in GDP growth, 2017.
No. 2	in population growth, 2017.

Record high 1,373,700 Nevadans employed, March 2018.

*PolicyMap's Jeremy Nowak praised Nevada's approach to the nominations. "The Governor's office did a great job of taking a data driven approach…Hats off to Nevada."

"Clark County expects the new NFL stadium will be a notable new draw for consumers and visitors," Moody's Patrick Liberatore wrote, adding that the stadium and upcoming expansion of the Las Vegas Convention Center should allow the city to host larger events and diversify visitor draws.
