-"A man's execution date has been set for April 2024, the Missouri Supreme Court announced on Wednesday. It is the only execution scheduled next year in Missouri so far. Brian J. Dorsey, 51, was charged in the 2006 killing of his cousin Sarah Bonnie and her husband Ben Bonnie. Their bodies were found in their home in New Bloomfield, in central Missouri, the Associated Press reported at the time. According to a motion, the couple had taken Dorsey into their home to help him escape drug dealers who were seeking to collect a debt he owed them. In 2008, he was convicted on the two counts of first-degree murder in Boone County. His appeals, including with the U.S. Supreme Court, have been denied. In February, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey requested Dorsey's execution date be set. The warrant of execution goes into effect at 6 p.m. on Tuesday, April 9. Missouri Gov. Mike Parson has not granted clemency in a death penalty case. Missouri was one of five states that carried out executions in 2023, according to a report published earlier this month by the Death Penalty Information Center… Missouri executed four people this year, including two men who were granted temporary stays. No new capital sentences were handed down this year in the state. Twelve people remain on death row in Missouri, including Marcellus "Khaliifah" Williams, who says DNA evidence proves he was wrongfully convicted. The Missouri Attorney General's Office has requested an execution date be set in that case. Williams filed a lawsuit in August contending that going forward with his execution would violate his constitutional rights to due process…"

'Progressive Tyrants': Missouri AG Launches Investigation Into Media Matters

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced this week an investigation into Media Matters for America over accusations that the outlet intentionally misled readers about X to pressure advertisers to pull support from the social media platform. Last month, Bailey indicated that he would be looking at Media Matters after it published an article claiming X was placing ads for major corporations alongside Nazi-related content. Musk responded to the article by filing a lawsuit and saying it was "contrived" and a "fraudulent attack." After the report, several major corporations like Apple and IBM announced they would pull advertising from X. "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America. Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process," Bailey said in a statement. "I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech." In a letter on Monday to Media Matters President Angelo Carusone, Bailey said that he believed the outlet might have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, "including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses." Bailey told Carusone to preserve any communication regarding the outlet's story on X and any communications on their "efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform." Missouri's investigation follows an announcement from Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton that he would be probing the outlet… Media Matters has responded to Paxton's investigation by filing a lawsuit, arguing that he had violated the First Amendment… Musk has claimed Media Matters was trying to undermine free speech on X because "they perceive it as a threat to their ideological narrative and those of their financial supporters.'"

Second tax prep firm settles Missouri case

-"A second tax preparation company sued for allegedly sharing Missourians' financial data has settled its case with the state. Georgia-based Tax Slayer agreed to pay $55,000 to the state and upgrade its personal information notification practices in an order issued Monday by St. Louis Circuit Judge Michael Stelzer. The move follows a similar settlement last month with Iowa-based TaxAct, which agreed to pay $195,000 and tighten its data-sharing capabilities. TaxSlayer was among three companies sued by Republican Attorney General Andrew Bailey in July just a day after a group of Democrats in Congress reported that the companies sent "extraordinarily sensitive" information on tens of millions of taxpayers to Facebook parent company Meta over the course of at least two years… The initial lawsuit alleges that H&R Block, TaxSlayer and TaxAct violated state consumer protection laws by sharing the information. The allegations claimed the tax preparation firms made information available to Meta and other companies "despite explicitly promising not to share such information with third parties in their privacy policies." The lawsuit said the companies gave Meta access to information such as names and financial information such as savings account contributions. Before reaching a settlement, attorneys for TaxSlayer argued that Bailey's case was flawed… Money from the settlement will be used to recoup attorney fees, the settlement noted. Any amount left over will go to help defend the state's Merchandising Practices Act, which prohibits misrepresentation, omission, deception and unfair business practices. H&R Block, which is based in Kansas City, earlier won change of venue in the case from the city court system to Jackson County."

-"The following letter was posted around 6 a.m. on Dec. 11 on Scott John For Maries County Sheriff Facebook page. Maries County Chief Deputy John is responding to individual accusations against his department surrounding the investigation and subsequent civil complaints brought against Belle Police Officer Erican Sugg on Oct. 20. Sugg is named as the respondent in the ongoing case brought by the Department of Public Safety (DPS), prosecuted by the Missouri Attorney General's Office and heard by the Administrative Hearing Commission… On July 14, 2022, I took a complaint of an inappropriate and unwelcomed contact between Erican Sugg (a Sheriff's Corporal at the time) and a female coworker at the Sheriff's Office, who was filing the complaint. While looking into the details of the reported incident, I discovered a second female coworker who reported receiving unsolicited and inappropriate messages from Erican Sugg. I found the first incident had a credible witness who confirmed witnessing the complaint as it was reported, and the second complaint was substantiated by viewing the messages still on the dispatcher's personal phone… Once completed, I reviewed these findings with Sheriff Heitman, and he agreed with my assessment that Erican Sugg should be terminated. He was terminated on July 20, 2022, at the beginning of his shift. He was not suspended during the investigation, which would normally occur, as he was out of the office on vacation during this time. July 20th was his first day back on duty after the complaint was filed. In the State of Missouri, it is required of all law enforcement agencies to report any change in employment status of a police officer associated with their POST roster. Upon termination, a summary of details leading up to the termination is required. This is accomplished by logging onto the Department of Public Safety website and submitting an online form. I included a summary of details in my online report as required. I was later contacted by an investigator from the Peace Officer Standards & Training (POST) requesting to speak with me for further details and to request contact information from the victim and witness. I was contacted again by POST late in 2022 for an audio recording they knew I possessed and informed me they intended to involve the Attorney General. In the spring of 2023, I was contacted by Gabriela M Gonzalez Perez, an Assistant Prosecutor for the Attorney General's Office, and the Attorney who filed the complaint with the Missouri AHC. Ms. Perez reviewed my report with me asking only a few questions, mainly about the timeline of the agency issued laptop being returned by Erican Sugg. She did inform me they anticipated filing a complaint, which they have now done. In July of this year, on the Facebook page of the Belle Police Department, Belle Sgt. Mark Morgan accused Sheriff Heitman of allowing me to "conduct a so-called investigation" into a complaint… After knowing everything, Mayor White stated in last week's paper that since hiring Erican Sugg, "…he has been a model police officer and employee for Belle." Mayor White then proceeded to act as if he has no knowledge of any wrongdoing by Sugg and proceeded to go into politician mode… Mayor White knows there is no way we can influence the timing of a complaint filing by the Missouri Attorney General… Even if I hadn't received confirmation from a witness who was present (and is related to Erican Sugg and not the victim), I know who I would believe and who I think is not fit to wear the badge of a peace officer."

Missouri attorney general seeks to block subpoena in abortion amendment lawsuit

https://www.kttn.com/missouri-attorney-general-seeks-to-block-subpoena-in-abortion-amendment-lawsuit/

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey wants a Cole County judge to block a subpoena seeking records about how he came up with a $21 million cost estimate for a proposed abortion-rights initiative petition. 'Republican' political operative Jamie Corley filed an initiative petition earlier this year that seeks to amend the state constitution… Bailey argued in October that if the amendment were to be approved by voters next year, he would refuse to defend it and would have to hire outside counsel — which he determined would cost $21 million. Corley filed a lawsuit challenging Bailey's estimate, along with the ballot summary written by Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft. As part of that litigation, Corley's attorneys issued a subpoena seeking records from the attorney general's office explaining the cost estimate and the process for hiring outside counsel. In a filing this week with the court, the attorney general moved to quash the subpoena and asked the judge "for a protective order as to this request."… They would be obtainable through the Missouri Sunshine Law, but Bailey's office has such a massive backlog of requests that it is unlikely any records would be produced until late spring… Bailey's office confirmed earlier this month that it has almost finished work on requests filed to the attorney general's office in 2022… The attorney general's office is not a defendant in Corley's lawsuit. Though Bailey's cost estimate is part of the fiscal note, it was the auditor's office that decided to include it in the summary that could appear on the ballot. In arguing for the $21 million cost estimate, Bailey said in October that if Corley's amendment was approved by voters and resulted in any litigation, his office would likely have to hire conflict counsel to represent the state. That's because, Bailey said, he has "staked out a position strongly in favor of protecting the unborn, creating a positional conflict that is untenable for the Attorney General and would necessarily generate greater legal costs." Bailey seemed to back off that argument last month, when he told reporters he is "committed to enforcing the law as written." "I'm not a lawmaker. I'm in the executive branch," he said. "We've (got a) documented history of defending state statute and state constitutional provisions, and we'll continue to do that."

New 'vetting manual' by Missouri GOP activists sparks conflict among state Republicans

-"A "vetting manual" being floated in GOP circles has sparked conflict, in part because it seeks to block certain candidates from running as Republicans. The state party has warned the document would invite litigation. Efforts to institute the vetting plan are still playing out, and only a handful of county parties have adopted the system, according to a state party official… Ties exist between Cyndia Haggard, chair of the Vernon County Republican Central Committee who recently formed a group focused on candidate vetting, and state Sen. Bill Eigel, a contender for governor… In Missouri, while legislative Democrats have largely remained unified in the minority, the super-majority Republicans have fractured along ideological lines. The divisions are especially deep in the state Senate, where hard-line members have antagonized main-line Republicans… Eigel said Wednesday that Republican officials should vet both county and state candidates. He dismissed the notion that Haggard's support for him in the primary presented a conflict of interest… Miles Ross, executive director of the Missouri GOP, said the state party opposes adoption of the vetting process at the state level. County parties may only bar county-level candidates from running as Republicans, but potential rejection of legislative and statewide candidates would require approval by the state Republican Party. The party "at this time has no plans to adopt this — this scheme," Ross said… The debate locally has been laid at the feet of county-level Republican officials, who have been forced to tread cautiously amid tensions. Bob Eno, chairman of the St. Charles County Republican Central Committee, said the county central committee — representing one of Missouri's largest countywide banks of Republican voters — would vote on the vetting manual at its Jan. 11 meeting. Eno emphasized that the county party already conducts vetting of candidates — a process that hasn't involved blocking prospective officeholders from running as Republicans… Eno said he would be open to a new vetting process if enough members of the party's central committee convince one another to go along with the change. Franklin County, also home to a large number of Republicans near St. Louis, is among counties that have so far adopted the new vetting procedures. But Franklin County Clerk Tim Baker, a Republican who is running for lieutenant governor, said that if a candidate declares in paperwork that they are a Republican, state law requires him to list them on the ballot as one. He said he has long acted as a "pass through" for filing fee checks headed to the county central committee… He told an official in Ashcroft's secretary of state's office that his attorney had instructed him to accept a candidate's affidavit "and let the party go to court on the matter" even if the party had not vetted the candidate. He asked if the state agreed. Trish Vincent, executive deputy secretary of state/chief of staff for Ashcroft, told Baker in a Dec. 4 email that "The SOS will not give legal advice."…"

Missouri Activates Database to Monitor Prescription Drug Use

https://www.missourinet.com/2023/12/13/missouri-activates-database-to-monitor-prescription-drug-use/

-"After about two years of work, Missouri's prescription drug monitoring program has officially been activated. The database is designed to crack down on the misuse of addictive painkillers, such as opioids. Pharmacies are now required to submit information to the program when they distribute certain drugs to Missouri patients. It makes dispensation information available to prescribers, pharmacists, and health care providers. Missouri was the last state in the nation to adopt the online database. Sen. Holly Thompson Rehder, R-Sikeston, worked for about ten years to get a bill passed to create the statewide system. After the passage of Senate Bill 63, the Missouri Joint Oversight Task Force for Prescription Drug Monitoring was created to oversee the collection and use of patient dispensation information submitted to Missouri's program. Previously, 75 jurisdictions within Missouri opted to provide controlled substance information to the system operated within the St. Louis County Department of Public Health. With the transition to the state's database, the St. Louis County program will dissolve operations."

Missouri to explore 'better model' for educating students with severe disabilities

https://www.news-leader.com/story/news/education/2023/12/14/missouri-explores-options-educating-students-severe-disabilities/71838545007/

-"Missouri is home to a network of 34 state-operated schools serving students, ages 5-21, with severe developmental and learning disabilities. One of the largest is in Springfield. The state authorized the creation of the Missouri Schools for the Severely Disabled in 1957 — years before a landmark federal law ensuring that students with disabilities have access to a free and appropriate education tailored to their individual needs within the least-restrictive environment — and the result was a set-up in Missouri unlike anywhere else in the U.S. Now, more than six decades later, the state is trying to figure out if that system is working as intended or if changes ought to be made. The Missouri Department of Elementary and Secondary Education, which operates MSSD, has spent the better part of the past year examining the network of schools: How they operate, where they are located, who they serve, and the quality of the education that is delivered… The state contracted with the Public Consulting Group, which delivered its first substantial report Dec. 5 to the state Board of Education. No decisions were made at that meeting. Since Missouri appeared to be an anomaly in how services were provided, several board members asked if the state should be looking at a different way of serving the students… Overarching concerns noted in the report included declining enrollment, limited funding, inequitable facilities, and chronic shortages of teachers and staff. Only 76% of the 500 staff positions needed across the network of schools are filled, leaving nearly one out of every four vacant… The report included a range of recommendations — some with hefty price tags — to address concerns related to the conditions of schools, the safety of students and staff, and the adequacy of the educational environment… Consultants estimate there are $8.5 million in pressing facility needs such as new boilers and roofs and $10 million to add secure vestibules to entrances — an added security measure that many public districts including Springfield have prioritized… The amount of technology, adaptive equipment, Wi-Fi access, designated nursing spaces, and protocol for location of changing tables — for students who cannot use the restroom independently — were inconsistent… The report looked at how such services are provided in other states but did not point to a recommended option. A board member said more details about alternatives are needed… Shields said any big changes would require the state board working closely with the Missouri General Assembly and the solution will likely be complex… He called the report the start of an important discussion. He said any proposed change will have to have strong support and a sustainable funding stream…"

Missouri legislation would allow doctor-assisted suicide for terminal patients

-"A bill that's been pre-filed in the Missouri House of Representatives would open the door to medically-assisted suicide for patients who have been diagnosed with terminal diseases. The legislation nicknamed the 'Marilyn Teitelbaum Death with Dignity' Act, was named after a St. Louis-area woman who traveled with family members to Denver as she suffered from amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or ALS, and was seeking to end her life… The bill's sponsor, Rep. Ian Mackey, D-Clayton, said his legislation is aimed at providing Missourians the freedom to seek the medical care they believe is best for them and their family. "Why should the law force anyone in our state to live in immeasurable and incurable pain?" Mackey said. "Missourians like Marylin and their families should be able to seek the care they need and deserve within the borders of our state, and that includes the right to seek end-of-life care when they and their health care providers feel it's the best and oftentimes only option." Missouri Right To Life, a group that mainly focuses on lobbying against abortion rights, has stated that it does not oppose medically assisted suicide when the patient involved is "already dying." "Every human being is unique and possessed of inherent dignity, regardless of age or condition. Missouri Right to Life upholds this basic right of every innocent human being from inception to natural death," the organization's website states. "Missouri Right to Life does not oppose allowing people to die when they are actually dying. We do, however, oppose causing the death of non-dying people." Missouri lawmakers revisit open enrollment: What it means for parents

-"Open enrollment, a potential game-changer for Missouri students' school choices, is back on the legislative agenda for the coming year. Scott Cook, Superintendent of Mt. Vernon R-5, expressed his thoughts, "So open enrollment, I think will come up again, the idea of being able to move from one public school to another without physically moving." State Representative Cody Smith (R) highlights the concept of open enrollment, emphasizing transfers from one publicly funded school to another. Smith sees it as a valuable tool to provide parents with more options for their children's education… While the proposed open enrollment system aims to offer choices to parents, the debate on this issue has raised concerns among area school superintendents. They stress that a large number of out-of-district transfers could strain district resources, making it challenging to align them with enrollment totals. Smith addresses these concerns by mentioning potential limitations on the number of transfers allowed each year. This could prevent overwhelming shifts between districts and maintain a balanced educational landscape. As the 2024 Missouri legislative session approaches, the debate on open enrollment is poised to continue, with the session kicking off on January 3."

Missouri Senator Introduces Bill Amidst Concerns Over Agricultural Byproduct Disposal

-"Newton County residents say they feel misled after a letter from the Missouri Department of Natural Resources doesn't stop the land application of agricultural byproducts. They say along with that frustration, comes hope as a Missouri senator files a bill for the next legislative session… Newton County resident Taryn Tyler says that was her reaction to a letter sent by the Missouri Department of Natural Resources to Denali Water Solutions late last month. Tyler says that feeling didn't last for long. "It was very upsetting to find out that Denali was still able to gather these waste products and land-apply them because of the loopholes created," said Tyler. Tyler says that loophole amounts to very little in the way of change… Tyler is a member of the "Stop Land Use Damaging Our Ground and Environment," or "SLUDGE" committee, and says the group did get a morale boost with the pre-filing of Senate Bill 908 by Missouri Senator Jill Carter. "The bill clarifies that the waste that can be used as fertilizer would only be agricultural waste, things like manure, and not from the industrial or commercial processing plants," said Tyler… In reference to Senate Bill 908, Carter says, it "is about safeguarding the very essence of what we love about Southwest Mo. This will help encourage the use of new technology in the processing of the sludge and result in safer utilization." With the 2024 Missouri legislative session not slated to begin until next month, Tyler says now they have to do the hardest thing, wait."

US Supreme Court Won't Intervene in Key Voting Rights Act Challenge

-"The U.S. Supreme Court on Dec. 12 declined to intervene in a Voting Rights Act-related ruling issued by a lower court that had invalidated a Republican-drawn commissioners map in a Texas county. However, the high court's order means that the Galveston County Commissioners Court map that was drafted by Republicans can remain intact. It came after a federal judge ruled that the map had violated Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act and ordered Galveston County to draw a new one. The order was left unsigned, although two liberal justices—Sonia Sotomayor and Ketanji Brown Jackson—joined a dissent written by liberal Justice Elena Kagan. Earlier this year, U.S. District Judge Jeffrey Brown, an appointee of former President Donald Trump, ruled that newly drawn county election districts in Galveston illegally weaken the voting power of black and Latino residents and must be redone… The Biden Department of Justice also joined in the lawsuit, which was filed by black Democratic voters in the county, underscoring the opposition to the maps that Galveston County redrew in 2021. The challenge and ruling only applied to the local county precincts and not legislative or congressional districts. The high court's not taking the case means that the county can use the map for the 2024 election because the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals this past week placed a pause on the lower district court's ruling…"

Supreme Court to Hear Challenge to Abortion Pill

Epoch Times l Matthew Vandum

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-to-hear-challenge-to-abortion-pill-5546228

-"The Supreme Court agreed on Dec. 13 to hear the Biden administration's defense of regulatory moves related to mifepristone, a pill used for abortions. The court's decision in the heavily litigated case could affect the availability of the drug. In 2016, prescription rules were loosened, and in 2021, the government allowed prescriptions to be sent by mail. Opponents of the abortion pill argue that these decisions put women at risk. Although a lower court had blocked the sale of mifepristone after finding that the process involved in approving the drug was legally flawed, the Supreme Court countermanded that order in April, allowing sales to continue. A medication abortion generally involves the use of mifepristone, which blocks progesterone, a hormone, and misoprostol, which induces contractions. Misoprostol isn't an issue in the current litigation… The decision came in unsigned orders released by the court. No justices dissented. The court didn't explain its decision. At least four of the nine justices have to vote to grant a petition for it to move forward to the oral argument stage. The court agreed to hear the cases of Food and Drug Administration (FDA) v. Alliance for Hippocratic Medicine (AHM) and Danco Laboratories LLC v. AHM, but turned down another petition in AHM v. FDA… The attorney for the Alliance for Hippocratic Medicine shared her thoughts after the Supreme Court unveiled its new decision. "Every court so far has agreed that the FDA acted unlawfully in removing common-sense safeguards for women and authorizing dangerous mail-order abortions," Erin Hawley, senior counsel at the Alliance Defending Freedom, told The Epoch Times by email. "We urge the Supreme Court to do the same. The FDA has harmed the health of women and undermined the rule of law by illegally removing every meaningful safeguard from the chemical abortion drug regimen. Like any federal agency, the FDA must rationally explain its decisions. Yet its removal of common-sense safeguards—like a doctor's visit before women are prescribed chemical abortion drugs—does not reflect scientific judgment but rather a politically driven decision to push a dangerous drug regimen.'"

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/appeals-court-to-fast-track-trump-immunity-case-5546653?ea_src=frontpage&ea_med=lead-special-judiciary-medium-0

-"A federal appeals court on Wednesday agreed to special prosecutor Jack Smith's request to expedite former President Donald Trump's appeal to dismiss his Washington, D.C., election case based on presidential immunity. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia issued an order outlining a streamlined briefing schedule and calling for oral arguments, with the date to be set later. According to the order, President Trump's opening brief is due by Dec. 23. The order emphasized that issues and arguments should be raised in the opening brief, discouraging new points in the reply brief for consideration… This decision follows statements by the attorneys representing President Trump accusing the special counsel's office of election interference in a recent appeals court filing after Mr. Smith requested to expedite the appeal so that the case can go to trial on March 4, 2024. March 4 is one day before Super Tuesday, the U.S. presidential primary election day… In response, prosecutors swiftly filed a court document asserting that President Trump's legal team failed to present any valid reasons for the appeals court not to proceed on an expedited schedule. They argued that further delays in the case would "entail serious costs to the judicial system."… Earlier, U.S. District Judge Tanya Chutkan paused court proceedings on Wednesday in the case pending President Trump's appeal… Judge Chutkan clarified that this would pause the pretrial deadlines, not vacate them. Attorneys for President Trump have sought to push the trial date back, citing the 13 million pages of discovery material they intend to review… In a major shake-up in the case last week, President Trump appealed Judge Chutkan's denial of his motion to dismiss based on presidential immunity. The same day, defense attorneys filed a notice of appeal and a motion to stay proceedings in the district court because an appeals court decision could throw out the case. Regardless of a favorable appeals court ruling for the defense, this would have thrown off the district court schedule, preventing the prosecution from securing their desired trial date. Prosecutors have also asked the U.S. Supreme Court to review President Trump's presidential immunity defense so that it may inform the appeals court decision in a timely manner and allow for a March 4, 2024, trial date. It is unclear how the pause in the district court pretrial schedule and the appeals court's schedule will impact a potential March 4, 2024, trial date."

Senate Passes $886 Billion Defense Bill

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/13/senate-passes-886-billion-defense-bill/

-"The Senate approved an $886 billion defense bill for fiscal year 2024 by a vote of 87 to 13 Wednesday night. Ahead of the vote on the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA)itself, the chamber waived GOP Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul's attempt to remove a four-month extension to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) from the bill before taking up the conference report. FISA's Section 702 allows U.S. intelligence agencies to gather incidental data on Americans while surveying foreign targets operating within the United States, generating concern over illegal spying on American citizens. Social issues became a flash point in the bill, with the final version capping salaries for Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI) employees and prohibiting the Pentagon from endorsing Critical Race Theory. It omitted two major provisions from the House version, one of which would ban the military's insurance program from covering transgender hormone treatments and sex change surgeries. Earlier on Wednesday the Senate also voted down, 47 to 53, a symbolic vote to integrate a provision from the House version of the bill into the final report overturning the Pentagon's abortion travel policy, teed up by Republican Sen. Joni Ernst, according to the Senate Press Gallery. Overall, the NDAA authorizes a 5.2% pay raise for troops — less that what Republicans had hoped for — and an array of provisions related to service member benefits, health care and quality of life, according to a summary. It also creates an independent inspector general for U.S. military assistance to Ukraine. The bill is an increase of $28 billion for the Department of Defense (DOD) and Department of Energy over the fiscal year 2023 bill, according to CNN… The House is expected to vote on final passage of the NDAA Thursday, Fox News reported. The House Freedom Caucus criticized the bill, saying the Democrat-controlled Senate shoved it through the reconciliation process and stripped a number of "anti-woke" amendments… Separately, Congress is embroiled in tense discussions around a supplemental security assistance package for Ukraine and Israel that were not included in the NDAA. Republicans insist that foreign funding be paired with money to reinforce the U.S. southern border, but Democrats have not accommodated GOP demands."

-"A new Senate report is sounding the alarm about a surge in deaths from synthetic opioids such as fentanyl among older Americans – as the U.S. continues to grapple with the danger of the drug, which is primarily smuggled in across the southern border. The report, "The Silent Epidemic: Fentanyl and Older Americans," is authored by Sen. Mike Braun, R-Ind., the ranking member on the U.S. Senate Committee on Aging, and looks at the increase in overdose deaths among older Americans. "Among Americans 65 and older, overdose deaths quadrupled across the last two decades, and there's increasing evidence that synthetic drugs like fentanyl are adding to these fatalities," the report says. The report cites statistics showing that overdose deaths from synthetic opioids increased by 53% in a single year. Over 79,000 Americans 55 and older died from an opioid overdose between 1999 and 2019, with the rate of overdose deaths increasing from 3 per 100,000 in 2002 to 12 per 100,000 in 2021. Fentanyl deaths have been plaguing the U.S. for years, with tens of thousands of deaths a year. Of the over 107,000 overdose deaths in 2021, 75% involved an opioid, according to the Centers for Disease Control (CDC.)… Overdose deaths come primarily from Americans unknowingly taking pills or drugs laced with fentanyl, which can be fatal in tiny doses and is 50 times stronger than heroin… The report recommends encouraging greater awareness among seniors, including making them aware that synthetics are extremely lethal and increasingly found in drugs like Oxycodone, Xanax and Adderall. It also says there should be more research and data to understand the scale of the impact on older Americans, including greater coordination between state and federal governments."

Shadow of doubt: FBI 'keenly focused' on 'elevated' risk of outside influence in 2024 election

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/policy/defense-national-security/fbi-elevated-risk-outside-influence-2024-election-wray

-"The national security community is "keenly focused" on the threat of possible election interference in the 2024 elections, according to FBI Director Christopher Wray. "It is not seriously disputed that our foreign adversaries have tried and are continuing to try to interfere in our elections," Wray, who has run the FBI since 2017, told Senate lawmakers last week, though he added, "We're keenly focused on the risk that foreign adversaries, whether it's Russia, whether it's China, whether it's Iran or others, would seek to interfere in our elections." The leader of the FBI acknowledged that the threats of external influence on the 2024 presidential election are "elevated." "I think it's fair to say that they are elevated from where they were before," Wray explained. "And to elaborate just slightly on that point, obviously we saw, and it's not disputed, that the Russians tried to interfere in the 2016 election and then continued. But what we've seen since then is other adversaries attempting to take a page out of the Russians' playbook."… The left-leaning group Free Speech for People, a nonprofit advocacy group focused on election and campaign finance reforms, wrote a letter earlier this month expressing concern about previous efforts to access voting system software to Wray, Attorney General Merrick Garland, special counsel Jack Smith, and Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency Director Jen Easterly. The group of roughly two dozen computer scientists, election security experts, and voter advocacy organizations who signed the letter requested a federal investigation into what it alleged was a "multi-state conspiracy to obtain voting machine software, carried out through cooperation of a network of Trump allies."…"

Biden administration announces medications for Medicare rebate program

-"The Biden administration on Thursday announced the list of 48 prescription drugs that will be subject to a mandatory Medicare rebate program, lowering out-of-pocket costs for seniors on some of the most expensive lifesaving pharmaceuticals… The Medicare Prescription Drug Inflation Rebate program, part of the Inflation Reduction Act, requires pharmaceutical companies to pay a rebate to the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services if they raise their prices beyond the rate of inflation. The drugs announced on Thursday fall under Medicare Part B, which covers drugs administered by a healthcare professional in a facility. Many of the drugs include expensive infusion cancer treatments and antivirals. Patients treated with the selected drugs can directly receive a rebate, lowering beneficiary coinsurance by 20% of the inflation-adjusted payment amount… The Congressional Budget Office estimated that by 2031, repealing the Medicare rebate program would cost seniors $5 billion per year and increase the federal deficit by $7 billion per year. Repealing the law would also "give away over $10 billion per year to pharmaceutical companies," according to senior administration officials…"

Republican attorney general exposes DOJ funding to Soros-backed group that trains left-wing prosecutors
https://www.foxnews.com/politics/gop-ag-exposes-doj-funding-soros-backed-group-that-trains-left-wing-prosecutors

-"A Republican state attorney general is asking members of Congress to probe a Justice Department grant that he says benefits a "radically progressive" George Soros-linked group responsible for training prosecutors in ways to implement a soft-on-crime approach to their work. Missouri's Attorney General Andrew Bailey sent letters to congress Wednesday to urge both Republican and Democrat lawmakers "to further investigate and eliminate funding for programs that are counter-productive to public safety" and that "aid or encourage prosecutors to abuse discretion by refusing to bring criminals to justice." Bailey's letters follow what he describes as a "galvanizing moment" in Missouri when disgraced St. Louis circuit attorney Kim Gardner – "a progressive soft-on-crime prosecutor" – let a repeat criminal out on bail who then drove his speeding car into a young girl, leaving her with injures that required the amputation of both of her legs… "As states like Missouri are leading the fight to uphold justice and put criminals behind bars, organizations and their partners in the federal government are doing just the opposite," Bailey wrote. "The fact is, the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), in lock-step with radicals like George Soros, is actively funding organizations like the Vera Institute that are turning our streets into war zones," he said. Bailey names the Vera Institute — a Brooklyn-based advocacy group that says it wants to "transform the criminal and legal justice systems" with ties to Washington, D.C., Democrats — as a "deeply embedded" key partner in Gardner's former office, "turning it into a catastrophic social experiment more concerned with lowering prosecution rates than convicting violent criminals." Soros' Open Society Foundations donated nearly $11 million to the Vera Institute in previous years. Bailey says Gardner "bragged" that her office "partnered with the Vera Institute of Justice's Reshaping Prosecution program to shrink the system and instigate transformational change in St. Louis" as it implemented a "new approach centered on ... racial equity." "Ms. Gardner's partnership with George Soros and the Vera Institute, with the aim of 'actively shrinking the criminal legal system's footprint,' was a disastrous experiment, and it unmoored the office from sound law enforcement practices. The Vera Institute is a far-left advocacy organization dedicated to broad and nebulous goals such as moving away from 'case-by-case' prosecutorial discretion (deemed to be a 'narrow view of justice'), choosing instead to focus on 'systemic impact of case decisions.'" In a statement to Fox News Digital, Vera said the group "entered into a partnership with then-Circuit Attorney for the City (CAC) of St. Louis Kim Gardner on a project to analyze her office data, measure racial disparities and identify areas for reform, and increase transparency with her community. The partnership helped the CAC implement policy reforms such as increased diversion programs that promote safety by addressing underlying drivers of crime and reducing recidivism." "Vera's role was to collect and analyze data and work with CAC staff to conceive policy solutions, which CAC leadership then decided whether to implement," the group described… According to publicly available information provided on the DOJ's Office of Justice Programs (OJP) website, the Vera Institute has been awarded hundreds of millions of dollars since at least 2009. In that same year, then-President Obama's attorney general, Eric Holder, gave the keynote address at Vera's third annual Justice Address in New York City in which he thanked Vera for being an "extraordinary partner to the government in the administration of justice." The OJP each year chooses law enforcement-related groups working to prevent and control crime to which to provide federal funding. The OJP's budget is appropriated by Congress. In 2023, OJP's requested budget was $6.2 billion. According to publicly available documents, Vera was awarded at least $4.5 million in grand money. "As long as state leaders are forced to fight not only progressive prosecutors and radical billionaires, but also our own DOJ using tax dollars to undermine the rule of law in our communities, the battle becomes far more difficult to wage," Bailey wrote in his letter. Bailey sent letters to House and Senate Judiciary Committee leadership and House and Senate Appropriations Committee leadership."

-"…Media Matters sues Texas: Leftmedia propaganda outfit Media Matters filed a lawsuit against Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton after he launched an investigation into the organization over "potential fraudulent activity" following its dubious claims that Elon Musk's X platform was running major corporate advertising alongside anti-Semitic and white supremacist content. Following Media Matters's reporting, several companies including Disney and Apple pulled their adds from X. In its lawsuit against Paxton, Media Matters is ironically alleging that the Texas AG is violating the organization's free speech rights, arguing that the investigation has imposed a "chill" on its "ability to investigate and publish news stories and further chills their ability to participate in a robust public discussion around political extremism on the X platform." Talk about a classic case of "rules for thee but not for me." The folks at Media Matters have no qualms over conducting a disingenuous "investigation" into X, but they object when an investigation is raised against their own questionable "journalistic" methods. Meanwhile, Media Matters was hit with another investigation on Monday, as Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced that he is looking into whether the media organization engaged in fraudulent solicitation for donations from Missourians…"

State asks judge to reverse decision on Missouri highways commission pay raise plan
https://missouriindependent.com/2023/12/14/state-asks-judge-to-reverse-decision-on-missouri-highways-commission-pay-raise-plan/

-"The Missouri Highways and Transportation Commission has authority to add workers, increase pay and ignore appropriation bill limits if no changes are made to a court ruling issued in October, Department of Transportation director Patrick McKenna told lawmakers on Wednesday. Facingpointed questioning during a hearing of a House appropriations subcommittee, McKenna said the commission would listen to lawmakers but not necessarily abide by their directives… The legislature controls pay rates for state government employees, and since it hadn't approved the plan the Office of Administration refused to reflect the increases on transportation employee paychecks, leading the commission to file a lawsuit. On Oct. 31, Cole County Circuit Judge Cotton Walker ruled the Office of Administration must approve the paychecks, citing a provision of the Missouri Constitution that says money in the state road fund shall "stand appropriated without legislative action." On Monday, Walker will hear arguments on a motion to reconsider that decision. No MoDOT employees have received the increased paychecks because the request to amend the judgment, filed on Nov. 30, means the ruling is not final. It also delayed the date when a decision must be made on whether to appeal the judgment. In the motion asking Walker to reconsider, Assistant Attorney General Emily Dodge argued that the judgment did not follow the precedent set in a 1975 Missouri Supreme Court ruling that determined only the legislature can set spending amounts for state agencies. "It also misreads the plain language of the Missouri Constitution," Dodge wrote. The "stands appropriated" language applies to only two things – current payments on bond debt and holding enough cash to make payments due within 12 months, Dodge wrote. She also wrote that "no funds automatically 'stand appropriated' for the purpose of paying workers, so the commission can do so only through an actual appropriation." Any appeal after Walker rules on the motion to amend his judgment will push a final decision in the case well into next year, with the possibility that it won't be resolved before lawmakers must finish work on budget bills in May. McKenna weathered an initial storm of legislative anger, including calls for him to be fired, after the lawsuit was filed. A bill to revise the "stand appropriated" language passed the House last year but stalled in the Senate. Two bills have been filed for the upcoming session to give lawmakers veto power over MoDOT spending plans. During his Wednesday testimony, McKenna said the department has started rebuilding its workforce, hiring more new employees than departed in the past year. There are still 500 full-time slots open in its workforce authorized to employ about 5,600… The department wants to add 350 more full-time slots to its authorized strength, 250 to improve daily road maintenance and 100 to supervise an expanding construction program, McKenna said… After questioning whether MoDOT could fill all those open jobs, state Rep. Don Mayhew, R-Crocker, asked McKenna about the Oct. 31 ruling. He wanted to know if the commission would authorize hiring employees the legislature doesn't include in the budget. "The ruling isn't final at this point," McKenna said. "And so we assume we're running it through the normal process."… "In your opinion, the commission has the ability to do it without legislative approval, anyway, because I think that's what the judge was telling us, right?" Mayhew asked finally. "Potentially, yes," McKenna answered."

Missouri AG Bailey tries to block court order asking him to explain abortion cost estimate

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey wants a Cole County judge to block a subpoena seeking records about how he came up with a $21 million cost estimate for a proposed abortion-rights initiative petition. 'Republican' political operative Jamie Corley filed an initiative petition earlier this year that seeks to amend the state constitution… Bailey argued in October that if the amendment were to be approved by voters next year, he would refuse to defend it and would have to hire outside counsel — which he determined would cost $21 million. Corley filed a lawsuit challenging Bailey's estimate, along with the ballot summary written by Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft. As part of that litigation, Corley's attorneys issued a subpoena seeking records from the attorney general's office explaining the cost estimate and the process for hiring outside counsel. In a filing this week with the court, the attorney general moved to quash the subpoena and asked the judge "for a protective order as to this request."… They would be obtainable through the Missouri Sunshine Law, but Bailey's office has such a massive backlog of requests that it is unlikely any records would be produced until late spring… Bailey's office confirmed earlier this month that it has almost finished work on requests filed to the attorney general's office in 2022… The attorney general's office is not a defendant in Corley's lawsuit. Though Bailey's cost estimate is part of the fiscal note, it was the auditor's office that decided to include it in the summary that could appear on the ballot. In arguing for the $21 million cost estimate, Bailey said in October that if Corley's amendment was approved by voters and resulted in any litigation, his office would likely have to hire conflict counsel to represent the state. That's because, Bailey said, he has "staked out a position strongly in favor of protecting the unborn, creating a positional conflict that is untenable for the Attorney General and would necessarily generate greater legal costs." Bailey seemed to back off that argument last month, when he told reporters he is "committed to enforcing the law as written." "I'm not a lawmaker. I'm in the executive branch," he said. "We've (got a) documented history of defending state statute and state constitutional provisions, and we'll continue to do that."

They said that X, under Elon Musk's leadership, is placing advertising next to anti-Semitic content. Missouri Supreme Court weighs whether crimes against children should sever parental rights

https://missouriindependent.com/2023/12/15/missouri-supreme-court-weighs-whether-crimes-against-children-should-sever-parental-rights/

-"Missouri's highest court this week heard arguments over the constitutionality of a two-year-old state law terminating parental rights following a conviction for certain crimes against children. The case, heard Wednesday by the state Supreme Court, involves a Jefferson County father whose parental rights were terminated after he pled guilty to child molestation and sexual misconduct in 2022. Both the father and the child are unnamed in legal filings… Before the law was amended by the legislature in 2021, there was a requirement the child victim be familially related to the parent in order for the state to have grounds to prove parental unfitness. In this case, the victims were unrelated to the father and the crimes to which he pled guilty occurred before the child was born. The father's attorney, David Crosby, argued Wednesday that not all felony offenses "involving a child under 18 warrant a termination of parental rights," including in his legal brief the hypothetical of an 18-year-old assistant coach having a sexual relationship with a 17-year-old student, which is a class E felony. "The question is, where do you draw the line?" Crosby said. "Well, the legislature needs to draw the line or this court needs to draw the line because the judges need to understand what's required."… Jason Sapp, an attorney representing the juvenile office, which files petitions for courts to terminate parental rights, emphasized on Wednesday that the government has a "duty to protect children." The criminal acts that could lead to termination of parental rights under the law include criminal sexual offenses, prostitution offenses, criminal offenses against the family and criminal pornography and related offenses… To terminate parental rights, the state is required to first prove parental unfitness — designed to be a steep hurdle to protect parents' liberties. Itrequires clear, cogent and convincing evidence. Only then comes an evaluation of what is in the child's best interests, which requires a lower standard of evidence. Crosby argues the law is unconstitutional because it makes felony convictions involving children proof of unfitness — providing automatic grounds for termination of parental rights rather than case-by-case evaluation of fitness and depriving people of the chance to contest the conclusion of unfitness. The state counters that a conviction itself "speaks to the conduct of the parent that goes to parental unfitness," and the parent's chance to rebut that finding came earlier, in the criminal proceeding… The judges' questions Wednesday surrounded the trial court's discretion to choose to enter a judgment terminating rights after the juvenile office filed for it. Crosby said that although the court does have some discretion, that is not a sufficient check guaranteeing a parents' constitutional rights… Crosby argued there should be a specific case-by-case judicial finding that the parent is unfit, which could include factors such as the parent's treatment and rehabilitation, age and frequency of the crime."

Missouri lawmakers prep for annual session amid election-year posturing

-"All signs point to plenty of political posturing by those who want to lead the state, while Gov. Mike Parson, who is in his final year in office, seeks to shape his legacy as Missouri's 57th governor. Senate President Caleb Rowden, R-Columbia, who is running for Secretary of State, is predicting an amped-up Senate, where at least five of the 34 members are seeking statewide posts. Competition for floor time could be hot and it could lead to gridlock… Support for the idea that the Senate could become a legislative logjam can be seen in the early round of bills that have been filed for the upcoming session. Sen. Bill Eigel, R-Weldon Spring, who is running for governor, introduced politically popular legislation to eliminate the state's personal property tax. But, in a sign that it could again bog down in the upper chamber, he has not specified how local governments will make up for hundreds of millions of dollars in lost revenue if the tax is ended… "I don't disagree with what he's trying to do," Rowden said. "But, you just can't rip the Band-Aid off." Rowden said other types of tax cuts implemented by Republicans have been phased in over time or include triggers to avoid creating a funding cliff for governments providing services to taxpayers. "You've got to do it the right way," he said. In an early November appearance on a Columbia talk radio show, Senate Majority Leader Cindy O'Laughlin, R-Shelbina, predicted the 2024 version of the often mercurial Senate would be productive at times, but also chaotic, primarily because of the conservative faction in the chamber typically led by Eigel… Eigel, who faces Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft and Lt. Gov. Mike Kehoe in the GOP gubernatorial primary, is showing no signs of tempering his firebrand approach, which he has used to block action in the Senate during his seven years in the chamber. In November, Eigel pilloried Parson on social media after the governor met with Kansas Gov. Laura Kelly, a Democrat, to discuss civility in politics… Lawmakers currently are filing bills they hope to see cross the finish line in May, showing Missourians what they can expect to hear about from the Legislature this year… Members of both parties have filed legislation aimed at banning the foreign ownership of Missouri farmland as views on China switch from trade partner to alleged threat. Another estimated 8% of the more than 1,000 new bills filed thus far are focused on making it harder for residents to change the state Constitution through the use of the initiative petition process. Abortion opponents, a powerful force in Missouri politics, are worried voters will restore some level of reproductive rights by a vote of the people if the law isn't altered. Legislation changing state crime laws, a perennial campaign issue, also features as a common theme on both sides of the aisle. An estimated 20% of the new bills are focused on crime, including calls for more gun control by Democrats and tougher sentencing laws from Republicans. Legalizing sports betting will again receive an airing, despite numerous false starts on the matter in recent years. Rep. Dan Houx, R-Warrensburg, has been point man on the effort and he's running for a Senate seat. Houx would like to score a win in 2024. Parson wants to boost the availability of child care across the state to help businesses. Add that to the list of items he'll be lobbying for in his State of the State speech on Jan. 24. And, expect fights to erupt over the $50 billion state budget, which must be approved in early May. Revenues are flattening after a post-pandemic surge… Pressure points include the state Board of Education, which is calling for a boost in per pupil spending at a time when Republicans are pushing for school vouchers, additional charter schools and other changes in how public schools operate… O'Laughlin, the No. 2 leader in the Senate, has already raised questions about the added money. In launching his campaign for lieutenant governor, House Speaker Dean Plocher, R-Des Peres, provided a road map of what he will be pushing for in the coming session in his GOP-majority chamber. "We must protect our farmland from China, our classrooms from liberal indoctrination, our families from Biden's failed economy and our communities from the progressive crime wave," Plocher said. Plocher also has pushed for the elimination of the earnings tax, as well as changes to the state's personal property tax system.

New report highlights Missouri's rural healthcare Issues

https://www.kttn.com/new-report-highlights-missouris-rural-healthcare-issues/

-"About one-third of Missouri is considered rural, and residents there often face health challenges. Recent research highlights the significant consequences of neglecting rural areas. The Missouri Rural Health Association's latest report emphasizes the need for ongoing investment in rural Missouri. Katie Reichard, Director of Government Affairs for the Missouri Primary Care Association, noted that several factors lead to poorer health outcomes in rural areas, with access to care being a primary concern. Community health centers bridge this gap by treating patients regardless of their ability to pay and providing care for conditions that might otherwise lead to unnecessary hospital visits… The report revealed that, for the first time, Missouri recorded more deaths than births during the pandemic, leading to a 19% increase in deaths statewide and a reduction in overall life expectancy by more than two years. Heidi Lucas, Executive Director of the Missouri Rural Health Association, emphasized the crucial importance of investing in rural areas for both Missouri and the nation… Missouri boasts over 95,000 farms, ranking second in the U.S. in number. It's also a leading producer of hay and ranks second in beef production, with more than 2 million cattle. Lucas mentioned that while the report identifies challenges, it also presents various solutions. "Enhancing broadband for telehealth services, easing restrictions on providers, supporting nurses and physicians with finding preceptors, and improving transportation are all viable solutions," Lucas explained. The report also notes that the lack of affordable healthcare impacts more than just personal health for farmers; it creates financial burdens and hinders farm investments."

Parson: Flood Control Progress Being Made Along Missouri River

-"The work continues by the governors of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas to ensure that the Missouri River is on track for the future. They met Thursday and have been meeting occasionally since 2019, when Missouri River flooding ravaged some of their communities. Gov. Mike Parson said progress has been made along the river. After Thursday's meeting in Omaha, the governor said they cannot let up on flood control efforts, even though the region is dealing with drought… Parson said the river is not just a "one-disaster item." "We have a tendency to think of the river when we talked about it on floods. But the drought is just as important," says Parson. "And if you look at every one of our states, on the on the rivers, what they do for each of us, you know the economy number one, we haven't even talked about what we do. That's why these meetings to me are so important, too, because we've got to keep the navigations of the river open. When that river level goes down and all of a sudden you've got to start worrying about freeze or you've got to start worrying about power plants." The governors have been working alongside the Army Corps of Engineers to reduce some of the government bureaucracy and speed up the process of rebuilding levees. Iowa Gov. Kim Reynolds said the conversation at their Thursday meeting was much different than their first one in 2019, when they expressed a lot of frustration to the Army Corps of Engineers… At least 1.2 million acres of Missouri farmland fell victim to flooding in 2019, sparking Parson to convene a statewide flood advisory working group."

Supreme Court Declines to Block Illinois 'Assault Weapons' Ban

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-declines-to-block-illinois-assault-weapons-ban-5547295

-"The U.S. Supreme Court on Thursday declined to block a Democrat-backed "assault weapon" ban, leaving the restrictions in place—at least for now. In a Dec. 14 order, the Supreme Court denied an emergency application for a writ of injunction that would have frozen the Illinois prohibition on certain types of semiautomatic rifles and magazines, with no justices dissenting. The decision leaves in place the law—called the Protect Illinois Communities Act—making it illegal for the general public to own weapons like the AR-15 and ammunition magazines with a capacity greater than 10 rounds. The National Association for Gun Rights, along with gun store owner Robert Bevis, filed the emergency petition at the end of November, after a lower court denied their bid for a preliminary injunction against the statewide ban. "We won't stop fighting for our members," the National Association for Gun Rights said in a post on X, reacting to the news… A district court rejected the plaintiffs' request, and a divided three-judge panel on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit also refused to halt the ban. U.S. Circuit Judge Diane Wood, an appointee of former President Bill Clinton, wrote for the 2–1 majority in the ruling that the plaintiffs needed to prove that the weapons banned under the Illinois law "are arms that ordinary people would keep at home for purposes of self-defense, not weapons that are exclusively or predominantly useful in military service, or weapons that are not possessed for lawful purposes."… The appeals court judges then considered whether the firearms that were banned by the Illinois law are covered by the Second Amendment, with Judge Wood pointing to a 2008 U.S. Supreme Court decision that determined the Second Amendment only applies weapons "typically possessed by law-abiding citizens for lawful purposes."

Federal Judge Permanently Blocks Illinois Law Targeting Pro-Life Pregnancy Counseling

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/federal-judge-permanently-blocks-illinois-law-targeting-pro-life-pregnancy-counseling-5545343

-"A federal judge permanently blocked an Illinois law on Dec. 14 that he previously called "stupid" that targets maternal health care centers and sidewalk counselors for expressing their pro-life message. The state of Illinois consented to the injunction and the dismissal of the underlying lawsuit filed against it. Plaintiffs who sued to stop the law objected to it because it declared that the pro-life speech engaged in by pregnancy help ministries was a "deceptive business practice." They litigated to protect the right of pro-life pregnancy help centers and sidewalk counselors across the state to continue their work reaching out to women across the Land of Lincoln facing unplanned pregnancies… The law barred "so-called 'crisis pregnancy centers' from using misinformation, deceptive practices, or misrepresentation in order to interfere with access to abortion services or emergency contraception," according to the governor's office… Judge Iain D. Johnston of the Western Division of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois issued the document titled "agreed permanent injunction order" (pdf) in National Institute of Family and Life Advocates (NILFA) v. Raoul. Judge Johnston was appointed in 2020 by President Trump. The defendant, Mr. Raoul, was sued in his official capacity. Founded in 1993, NILFA "provides pro-life pregnancy centers and medical clinics with legal counsel, education, and training," according to the group's website. The judge dismissed the lawsuit "with prejudice," meaning the case cannot be litigated again. The court "shall retain jurisdiction over this action to enforce the final judgment," the order states. The order also states that NILFA "may file a motion seeking the costs of litigation, including reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses[.]"On Aug. 4, Judge Johnston called SB1909, the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Businesses Practices Act, "both stupid and very likely unconstitutional," when he signed a preliminary injunction halting its enforcement… SB 1909 "is stupid because its own supporter admitted it was unneeded and was unsupported by evidence when challenged." "It is likely unconstitutional because it is a blatant example of government taking the side of whose speech is sanctionable and whose speech is immunized … SB 1909 is likely classic content and viewpoint discrimination prohibited by the First Amendment." The kind of speech regulated by the law "is extremely controversial," and the law itself"is not a constitutional regulation of professional speech." "Plaintiffs have established by undisputed evidence that they will be irreparably harmed absent a preliminary injunction. Their First Amendment rights will more than likely be violated, which is an irreparable harm," the judge wrote at the time… Mr. Breen hailed the victory as a big win for pro-life ministries and free speech in Illinois that would send a message to those who would enact laws that discriminate against pro-life ministries… "The federal court was spot on in holding that SB 1909 is 'both stupid and very likely unconstitutional,'" he said. "SB 1909 exempts abortion facilities and their speech, while exclusively regulating pro-life organizations and their speech, in flagrant violation of the First Amendment…"

Supreme Court Will Consider If Police Can Be Sued for Fabricating Evidence

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-will-consider-if-police-can-be-sued-for-fabricating-evidence-5547151

-"The Supreme Court will consider whether an Ohio jeweler can bring civil rights claims against police for malicious prosecution after criminal charges brought against him were dropped. The case comes after the Supreme Court loosened the legal standard for bringing such lawsuits against police in federal courts in 2022, finding that plaintiffs may proceed if they can demonstrate that their criminal cases ended without a conviction. The court announced in an unsigned order on Dec. 13 that it granted the petition for certiorari, or review in Chiaverini v. City of Napoleon, Ohio. No justices dissented. The court did not explain why it made the decision. At least four of the nine justices must vote for the petition for the case to proceed to the oral argument stage. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit ruled against jewelry store owner Jascha Chiaverini when he sued police after he was charged with, but not convicted of, felony money laundering, as well as a misdemeanor charge of possessing stolen property, and a charge of violating his precious metals dealer's license. Mr. Chiaverini claims in his petition (pdf) that the police "fabricated evidence" to justify the money laundering charge and that their actions were sufficient to justify a claim under the Fourth Amendment, which requires that the legal process began in the absence of probable cause… In the 2nd, 3rd, and 11th Circuits, the misconduct identified would sustain a Fourth Amendment malicious prosecution claim because those circuits use a charge-specific rule under which a plaintiff is allowed to proceed with a malicious prosecution claim as to a baseless charge, regardless of what other charges have been brought, according to the petition. But the 6th Circuit applies the "any-crime" rule, under which probable cause for any single charge "insulates every other charge from a malicious prosecution claim." Because the 6th Circuit found probable cause for the two other charges, it threw out the malicious prosecution claim related to the money laundering charge without even assessing probable cause as to that charge… The jeweler and his company sued the police and the city, seeking more than $3 million in damages, but the police moved to dismiss, arguing they were immune to the lawsuit. The federal district court ruled against the jeweler, finding there was probable cause for the "arrest and continuation of legal proceedings." The 6th Circuit also rejected Mr. Chiaverini's claims, holding that probable cause justified the search of his store, as well as his arrest and prosecution, but did not rule on whether probable cause justified the money-laundering charge, the city's brief said. The case comes a year and a half after the Supreme Court relaxed the legal standard for bringing such lawsuits in federal courts, overturning the tougher prevailing standard…"

Kentucky GOP gets win as state Supreme Court upholds new congressional boundaries

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/policy/courts/kentucky-supreme-court-upholds-congressional-boundaries-gop

-"The Kentucky Supreme Court on Thursday ruled a map of the state House of Representatives and congressional districts, passed by the GOP-led legislature in 2022, was constitutional, delivering a blow to Democrats. "An expectation that apportionment will be free of partisan considerations would thus not only be unrealistic, but also inconsistent with our Constitution's assignment of responsibility for that process to an elected political body," the majority opinion said, written by Justice Angela McCormick Bisig in the 78-page ruling with multiple dissents. Democrats filed a lawsuit to redraw the Kentucky House and the state's six congressional districts enacted by the Republican-led legislature last year, alleging numerous counties were improperly split and constituted constitutional violations. Before the Democratic Party's lawsuit, Gov. Andy Beshear (D-KY) vetoed the redistricting plan, but that was overruled by state Republicans, which prompted Democrats to file a challenge. The judges agreed with a lower court's ruling that both sets of maps are partisan gerrymanders, but neither violates the state's constitution…"

The economic indicator screaming that inflation is not vanquished

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/policy/economy/economic-indicator-screaming-inflation-not-vanquished

-"One economic indicator is signaling inflation is not at all conquered and that the Federal Reserve's monetary policy is still far too loose. The statistic in question is nominal gross domestic product, or NGDP, growth — that is, the growth of economic output before adjusting for inflation. It stands in contrast to a range of other signs inflation is receding: The inflation rate is falling, inflation expectations are dropping, wage growth is moderating, job openings are declining, and investors now expect that the Fed's next move will be to cut its interest rate target. In the third quarter, NGDP surged, growing at nearly a 9% annualized rate — the fastest growth in 20 years, setting aside the massive numbers posted during the reopening from the pandemic. NGDP has been identified as an important signal of how hot the economy is running by many monetary policy experts, including former Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke. It's favored because it is a measure of total spending across the economy. Rapid growth suggests that people are spending freely. In the absence of a sudden massive surge in productivity and/or labor force growth, some of that excess spending is going to show up as inflation. As an example, if inflation were running at the Fed's target of 2% and NGDP were growing at 9%, that would mean that real economic growth was 7%, an explosive number that strains credibility. More likely, all that spending is translating into higher inflation… Carson told the Washington Examiner that the fast growth of NGDP should lead the Fed to pursue more monetary policy tightening, a massive course correction given that investors now expect the Fed to start cutting rates as soon as March…"

Congress Votes To Extend FBI Warrantless Surveillance Tool Without Reforming It

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/14/congress-votes-extend-fbi-warrantless-surveillance-tool-reform/

-"Congress voted Thursday to reauthorize Section 702 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) with no reforms as part of the National Defense Authorization Act, or NDAA. Section 702 of FISA is a tool that intelligence officials have allegedly abused as it enables them to surveil Americans without obtaining a warrant. After the Senate passed FISA through the NDAA on Wednesday and failed to get sufficient support to eliminate the four-month extension, the House of Representatives finalized it in a vote on Thursday… If six more senators had opposed a point of order against the NDAA on Wednesday, then FISA would not have passed, potentially expiring at the end of December. FISA's Section 702 allows intelligence agencies to gather incidental data on Americans while targeting foreign individuals, generating concern over improper spying on U.S. citizens. The provision will now be extended through April. Having cleared Congress, the NDAA's last step will be to President Joe Biden's desk for his signature. "It is imperative that we strengthen our Fourth Amendment and stop the corrupt upper echelon of the federal government from spying on everyday Americans," Republican Texas Rep. Randy Weber said in a statement after voting against the NDAA. "Unfortunately, today, Congress reauthorized the status quo." Two bills to reform FISA had been anticipated to come to the House floor for a competing vote on Tuesday, but Republicans fought over it, causing a cancellation late on Monday, The New York Times reported. As a result, FISA is passing with no reform and the bills probably will not receive a vote until 2024. The House Judiciary Committee introduced one of them — Republican Arizona Rep. Andy Biggs' Protect Liberty and End Warrantless Surveillance Act (PLEWSA) — that would limit the government's power under Section 702 by mandating a warrant for almost all searches of Americans, according to its text. Conversely, the House Intelligence Committee has put forward a bill dubbed the FISA Reform and Reauthorization Act of 2023, that would change the definition of "electronic service communications provider" to contain ''equipment that is being or may be used to transmit or store such communications.'' This would consist of any entity or business that provides an internet connection, thereby massively increasing domestic surveillance authorities under FISA, according to experts."

Red State Legislature Sends Bill Banning Sex Change Procedures For Minors To Governor's Desk

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/14/ohio-bill-banning-sex-change-procedures-minors-governors-desk/

-"The Ohio legislature sent a bill to Republican Gov. Mike DeWine's desk on Wednesday that would bar minors from getting sex change procedures, according to the Ohio Capital Journal. House Bill 68 prohibits doctors from performing sex change medical procedures, including cross-sex hormones and surgeries, on children, as well as bans male athletes from competing in female divisions. The state Senate approved the bill in a 24-8 vote, and the state House approved the bill afterward in a 61-27 vote, according to the Ohio Capital Journal. The bill is now headed to DeWine's desk and he has 10 business days to give his signature or veto the legislation. DeWine's press secretary, Dan Tierney, told the Ohio Capital Journal that they are waiting for "a final bill to review before offering formal comment."… DeWine's office did not immediately respond to the Daily Caller News Foundation's request for comment."

response, Twitter stated that at least some of the examples had been "reviewed and actioned."[295] Crawford understood that she was flagging posts for Twitter for possible censorship.[296]

Twitter additionally offered to enroll CDC officials in its "Partner Support Portal" to provide expedited review of content flagged for censorship.[297] Crawford asked for instructions of how to enroll in the Partnership Support Portal and provided her personal Twitter account to enroll. Crawford was fully enrolled on May 27, 2021.[298] Census Bureau contractor Christopher Lewitzke ("Lewitzke") also requested to enroll in the Partner Support Portal.[299]

Crawford also sent Twitter a BOLO for the alleged misinterpretation of a CDC lab report.[300]

(18) Crawford testified in her deposition that the CDC has a strong interest in tracking what its constituents are saying on social media.[301] Crawford also expressed concern that if content were censored and removed from social-media platforms, government communicators would not know what the citizen's "true concerns" were.[302]

1) Dr. Fauci had been the director of the NIAID for over thirty-eight years and became Chief Medical Advisor to the President in early 2021.[305] Dr. Fauci retired December 31, 2022.

1. Lab-Leak Theory

Plaintiffs set forth arguments that because NIAID had funded "gain-of-function"[306] research at Dr. Fauci's direction at the Wuhan Institute of Virology ("Wuhan lab") in Wuhan, China, Dr. Fauci sought to suppress theories that the SARS-CoV2 virus leaked from the Wuhan lab.[307]

(1) Plaintiffs allege that Dr. Fauci's motive for suppressing the lab-leak theory was a fear that Dr. Fauci and NIAID could be blamed for funding gain-of-function research that created the COVID-19 pandemic. Plaintiffs allege Dr. Fauci participated in a secret call with other scientists on February 1, 2020, and convinced the scientists (who were proponents of the lab-leak theory) to change their minds and advocate for the theory that the COVID-19 virus originated naturally.[308] A few days after the February 1, 2020 call, a paper entitled "The Proximal Origin of COVID-19" was published by Nature Medicine on March 17, 2020. The article concludes that SARS-CoV2 was not created in a lab but rather was naturally occurring.

On February 2, 2020, Dr. Fauci told the other scientists that "given the concerns of so many people and the threat of further distortions on social media it is essential that we move quickly. Hopefully, we can get the WHO to convene."[309] Dr. Fauci emailed Dr. Tedros of the WHO and two senior WHO officials, urging WHO to quickly establish a working group to address the lab-leak theory. Dr. Fauci stated they should "appreciate the urgency and importance of this issue given the gathering internet evident in the science literature and in mainstream and social media to the question of the origin of this virus." Dr. Fauci also stated WHO needed to "get ahead of …the narrative of this and not reacting to reports which could be very damaging."[310] Numerous drafts of "The Proximal Origin of COVID-19" were sent to Dr. Fauci to review prior to the article being published in Nature Medicine.[311]

(2) On February 9, 2020, in a joint podcast with Dr. Peter Daszak of the Eco Health Alliance,[312] both Drs. Fauci and Daszak discredited the lab-leak theory, calling it a "conspiracy theory."[313]

(3) Three authors of "The Proximal Origins of SARS-CoV2," Robert Garry, Kristian Anderson, and Ian Lipkin, received grants from NIH in recent years.[314]

(4) After "The Proximal Origins of SARS-CoV2" was completed and published in Nature Medicine, Dr. Fauci began discrediting the lab-leak theory. "This study leaves little room to refute a natural original for COVID-19." "It's a shining object (lab-leak theory) that will go away in times."[315]

At an April 17, 2020 press conference, when asked about the possibility of a lab-leak, Dr. Fauci stated, "There was a study recently that we can make available to you, where a group of highly qualified evolutionary virologists looked at the sequences there and the sequences in bats as they evolve. And the mutations that it took to get to the point where it is now is totally consistent with jump of a species from animal to a human."[316] "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV2" has since become one of the most widely read papers in the history of science.[317]

(5) Twitter and Facebook censored the lab-leak theory of COVID-19.[318] However, Dr. Fauci claims he is not aware of any suppression of speech about the lab-leak theory on social media, and he claims he does not have a Twitter or Facebook account.[319]

(6) On March 15, 2020, Zuckerberg sent Dr. Fauci an email asking for coordination between Dr. Fauci and Facebook on COVID-19 messaging. Zuckerberg asked Dr. Fauci to create a video to be used on Facebook's Coronavirus Information Hub, with Dr. Fauci answering COVID-19 health questions, and for Dr. Fauci to recommend a "point person" for the United States Government "to get its message out over the platform."[320]

Dr. Fauci responded the next day to Zuckerberg saying, "Mark your idea and proposal sounds terrific," "would be happy to do a video for your hub," and "your idea about PSAs is very exciting." Dr. Fauci did three live stream Facebook Q&A's about COVID-19 with Zuckerberg.[321]

2. Hydroxychloroquine

Plaintiffs further allege the NIAID and Dept. of HHS Defendants suppressed speech on hydroxychloroquine. On May 22, 2020, The Lancet published an online article entitled "Hydroxychloroquine or chloroquine with or without a macrolide for treatment of COVID-19: a multi-national registry analysis."[322] The article purported to analyze 96,032 patients to compare persons who did and did not receive this treatment. The study concluded that hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine were associated with decreased in-hospital survival and an increased frequency of ventricular arrhythmias when used for treatment of COVID-19.[323]

Dr. Fauci publicly cited this study to claim that "hydroxychloroquine is not effective against coronavirus."[324] He then publicly began to discredit COVID-19 treatment with hydroxychloroquine and stated whether the treatment of COVID-19 by hydroxychloroquine was effective could only be judged by rigorous, randomized, double-blind, placebo-based studies. He testified the same on July 31, 2020, before the House Select Subcommittee on Coronavirus Crisis.[325]

(2) When America's Frontline Doctors held a press conference criticizing the Government's response to the COVID-19 pandemic and spouting the benefits of hydroxychloroquine in treating the coronavirus,[326] Dr. Fauci made statements on Good Morning America[327] and on Andrea Mitchell Reports[328] that hydroxychloroquine is not effective in treating the coronavirus. Social-media platforms censored the America's Frontline Doctors videos. Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube removed the video.[329] Dr. Fauci does not deny that he or his staff at NIAID may have communicated with social-media platforms, but he does not specifically recall it.[330]

Oxford. The GBD is a one-page treatise opposing reliance on lockdowns and advocating for an approach to COVID-19 called "focused protection."[331] It criticized the social distancing and lockdown approaches endorsed by government experts. The authors expressed grave concerns about physical and mental health impacts of current government COVID-19 lockdown policies and called for an end to lockdowns.[332]

(2) On October 8, 2020, Dr. Francis Collins emailed Dr. Fauci (and Cliff Lane) stating:

> Hi Tony and Cliff, See https://gbdeclaration.org/. This proposal from the three fringe epidemiologists who met with the Secretary seems to be getting a lot of attention – and even a co-signature from Nobel Prize winner Mike Leavitt at Stanford. There needs to be a quick and devastating published take down of its premises. I don't see anything like that online yet- is it underway? Francis.[333]

The same day, Dr. Fauci wrote back to Dr. Collins stating, "Francis: I am pasting in below a piece from Wired that debunks this theory. Best, Tony."[334]

Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins followed up with a series of public media statements attacking the GBD. In a Washington Post story run on October 14, 2020, Dr. Collins described the GBD and its authors as "fringe" and "dangerous."[335] Dr. Fauci consulted with Dr. Collins before he talked to the Washington Post.[336] Dr. Fauci also endorsed these comments in an email to Dr. Collins, stating "what you said was entirely correct."[337]

On October 15, 2020, Dr. Fauci called the GBD "nonsense" and "dangerous."[338] Dr. Fauci specifically stated, "Quite frankly that is nonsense, and anybody who knows anything about epidemiology will tell you that is nonsense and very dangerous."[339] Dr. Fauci testified "it's possible that" he coordinated with Dr. Collins on his public statements attacking the GBD.[340]

(3) Social-media platforms began censoring the GBD shortly thereafter. In October 2020, Google de-boosted the search results for the GBD so that when Google users googled "Great Barrington Declaration," they would be diverted to articles critical of the GBD, and not to the GBD itself.[341] Reddit removed links to the GBD.[342] YouTube updated its terms of service regarding medical "misinformation," to prohibit content about vaccines that contradicted consensus from health authorities.[343] Because the GBD went against a consensus from health authorities, its content was removed from YouTube. Facebook adopted the same policies on misinformation based upon public health authority recommendations.[344] Dr. Fauci testified that he could not recall anything about his involvement in seeking to squelch the GBD.[345]

(4) NIAID and NIH staff sent several messages to social-media platforms asking them to remove content lampooning or criticizing Dr. Fauci. When a Twitter employee reached out to CDC officials asking if a particular account associated with Dr. Fauci was "real or not,"[346] Scott Prince of NIH responded, "Fake/Imposter handle. PLEASE REMOVE!!!"[347] An HHS official then asked Twitter if it could "block" similar parody accounts: "Is there anything else you can also do to block other variations of his (Dr. Fauci's) name from impersonation so we don't have this

On April 21, 2020, Judith Lavelle of NIAID emailed Facebook, copying Scott Prince of NIH and Jennifer Routh ("Routh"), and stated, "We wanted to flag a few more fake Dr. Fauci accounts on FB and IG for you I have reported them from NIAID and my personal FB account."[350] Both Lavelle and Routh are members of Dr. Fauci's communications staff.[351] Six of the eight accounts listed were removed by Facebook on the same day.[352]

(5) On October 30, 2020, a NIAID staffer wrote an email connecting Google/YouTube with Routh, "so that NIAID and the 'Google team' could connect on vaccine communications-specifically misinformation.'"[353] Courtney Billet ("Billet"), director of the Office of Communications and Government Relations of NIAID, was added by Routh, along with two other NIAID officials, to a communications chain with YouTube.[354] Twitter disclosed that Dina Perry ("Perry"), a Public Affairs Specialist for NIAID, communicates or has communicated with Twitter about misinformation and censorship.[355]

(6) Dr. Fauci testified that he has never contacted a social-media company and asked them to remove misinformation from one of their platforms.[356]

4. Ivermectin

(8) On September 13, 2021, Facebook emailed Carol Crawford of the CDC to ask whether the claim that "Ivermectin is effective in treating COVID is false, and if believed, could

5. Mask Mandates

(9) Plaintiffs maintain that Dr. Fauci initially did not believe masks worked, but he changed his stance. A February 4, 2020 email, in which Dr. Fauci responded to an email from Sylvia Burwell, stated, "the typical mask you buy in a drugstore is not really effective in keeping out the virus, which is small enough to pass through mankind."[360] Dr. Fauci stated that, at that time, there were "no studies" on the efficacy of masking to stop the spread.[361] On March 31, 2020, Dr. Fauci forwarded studies showing that masking is ineffective.[362]

Plaintiffs allege that Dr. Fauci's position on masking changed dramatically on April 3, 2020, when he became an advocate for universal mask mandates.[363] Dr. Fauci testified his position changed in part because "evidence began accumulating that masks actually work in preventing acquisition and transmission,"[364] although Dr. Fauci could not identify those studies.[365]

6. Alex Berenson

Alex Berenson ("Berenson") was a former New York Times Science reporter and critic of government messaging about COVID-19 vaccines. He was de-platformed from Twitter on August 28, 2021.[366]

Dr. Fauci had previously sought to discredit Berenson publicly during an interview with CNN.[367] Dr. Fauci does not deny that he may have discussed Berenson with White House or federal officials, but does not recall specifically whether he did so.[368]

E. FBI Defendants[369]

(1) The deposition of Elvis Chan ("Chan") was taken on November 29, 2021.[370] Chan is the Assistant Special Agent in charge of the Cyber Branch for the San Francisco Division of the FBI.[371] In this role, Chan was one of the primary people communicating with social-media platforms about disinformation on behalf of the FBI. There are also other agents on different cyber squads, along with the FBI's private sector engagement squad, who relay information to social-media platforms.[372]

Chan graduated from the Naval Postgraduate School in 2020 with a M.A. in Homeland Security Studies.[373] His thesis was entitled, "Fighting Bears and Trolls. An Analysis of Social Media Companies and U.S. Government Efforts to Combat Russian Influence Campaigns During the 2020 U.S. Elections."[374] His thesis focuses on information sharing between the FBI, Facebook,

'disinformation' line—even as they admitted they had no evidence. Th[e] result was a blackout of the Hunter news, except in a few places…." Id. Parroting the Biden campaign's false line, both social media platforms and major news organizations treated the story as "disinformation" and aggressively censored it.

137. In early 2022—over a year and a half later—major news organizations finally admitted that the Hunter Biden laptop story was truthful and rested on reliable sourcing and information. Id. The Washington Post and the New York Times quietly acknowledged the truth and reliability of the story "17 months" later, in mid-March 2022. Id.

138. Free-speech advocate Glenn Reynolds aptly described this embarrassing episode as one that permanently damaged the credibility and reputation for fairness of social-media platforms and major media outlets: "Twitter and other tech giants banned The Post's reporting, since admitted to be accurate, on Hunter Biden's laptop and the damaging information it contained. Many social-media giants banned any links to the story, and Twitter even went so far as to stop its users from sharing the story one-on-one through direct messages. (CEO Jack Dorsey later admitted that was a 'total mistake.') Their purpose was to affect the election's outcome in favor of the Democrats, and they probably did." Glenn H. Reynolds, 'Censorship is free speech' is the establishment's Orwellian line on Elon Musk's Twitter crusade, N.Y. POST (Apr. 15, 2022), https://nypost.com/2022/04/14/the-establishments-orwellian-line-on-elon-musks-twitter-crusade/.

2. Speech about the lab-leak theory of COVID-19's origins.

139. Likewise, beginning in February 2020, social-media platforms censored speech advocating for the lab-leak theory of the origins of SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19. The lab-leak theory postulates that the virus did not originate naturally in bats or other animals, but leaked from a biotech laboratory in Wuhan, China, operated by the Wuhan Institute of Virology.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

140. On information and belief, Defendant Dr. Anthony Fauci, a senior federal government official, coordinating with others, orchestrated a campaign to discredit the lab-leak hypothesis in early 2020. As director of NIAID, Dr. Fauci had funded risky "gain-of-function" research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology through intermediaries such as EcoHealth Alliance, headed by Dr. Peter Daszak. Thus, if the lab-leak theory were established, Dr. Fauci and Dr. Daszak could be potentially implicated in funding the research on viruses that caused the COVID-19 pandemic and killed millions of people worldwide.

141. During the same time frame as he was orchestrating a campaign to falsely discredit the lab-leak theory, Dr. Fauci was exchanging emails with Mark Zuckerberg, the CEO of Facebook, regarding public messaging and the dissemination of COVID-19 information on social-media. On information and belief, Dr. Fauci coordinated directly with Facebook and/or other social-media firms to suppress disfavored speakers and content of speech on social media.

142. Not surprisingly, social-media platforms like Facebook promptly accepted Dr. Fauci's initiative to discredit the lab-leak theory, and they engaged in an aggressive campaign to censor speech advocating for the lab-leak theory on social media on the ground that it was supposedly disinformation. Facebook "expand[ed] its content moderation on Covid-19 to include 'false' and 'debunked' claims such as that 'COVID-19 is man-made or manufactured.'" Editorial Board, Facebook's Lab-Leak About-Face, WALL ST. J. (May 27, 2021), https://www.wsj.com/articles/facebooks-lab-leak-about-face-11622154198. This included suppressing speech by highly credentialed and well-respected writers, such as "science journalist

Nicholas Wade," id., and scientist Alina Chan. Other social-media platforms likewise censored speech advocating for the lab-leak hypothesis.

143. By 2021, however, "the circumstantial evidence" favoring the lab-leak theory "finally permeated the insular world of progressive public health," id., and Fauci and other Biden Administration officials were forced to admit the theory's inherent plausibility. After a long period of censorship, in May 2021, Facebook and other platforms announced that they would no longer censor social-media speech advocating for the lab-leak theory.

144. The Wall Street Journal noted the close link between government and social-media platforms in censoring this speech: "Facebook acted in lockstep with the government," indicating that "[w]hile a political or scientific claim is disfavored by government authorities, Facebook will limit its reach. When government reduces its hostility toward an idea, so will Facebook." Id. "Free speech protects the right to challenge government. But instead of acting as private actors with their own speech rights, the companies are mandating conformity with existing government views." Id.

145. There had long been credible—even compelling—evidence of the plausibility of the lab-leak theory, long before social-media companies stopped censoring it. See, e.g., House Foreign Affairs Committee Minority Staff Report, The Origins of COVID-19: An Investigation of the Wuhan Institute of Virology (Aug. 2021), https://gop-foreignaffairs.house.gov/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/ORIGINS-OF-COVID-19-REPORT.pdf (detailing evidence available long before censorship lifted); Nicholas Wade, The origin of COVID: Did people or nature open Pandora's box at Wuhan?, BULL. AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

monikers "misinformation," "disinformation," and/or "malinformation." Their standard tactic is to label speech that contradicts their preferred political narratives "misinformation," "disinformation," and "malinformation" to justify suppressing it. Other common buzzwords include calls for a "healthy information ecosystem," "healthy information environment," or "healthy news environment," among others. This is the Orwellian vocabulary of censorship. It is deployed aggressively to undermine fundamental First Amendment rights.

203. As noted above, these labels have proven extremely unreliable. Defendants' and the political Left's ability to accurately identify "misinformation" and "disinformation" is unreliable because they apply such labels, not based on actual truth or falsity, but based on their current preferred political narrative. This has resulted, again and again, in the suppression of truthful information under the name of "disinformation" and "misinformation."

3. White House and HHS officials collude with social-media firms to suppress speech.

204. Before the Biden Administration took office, on information and belief, coordination and collusion between senior HHS officials and social-media companies to censor viewpoints and speakers was already underway. Once in office, senior officials in the Biden Administration—in the White House, in HHS, and elsewhere—capitalized and greatly expanded on these efforts.

205. On information and belief, beginning on or around January or February 2020, if not before, Defendant Dr. Anthony Fauci, a senior federal government official, coordinated with social-media firms to police and suppress speech regarding COVID-19 on social media.

206. Prior to 2020, as head of NIAID, Dr. Fauci had overseen funding of risky gain-of-function research on viruses, including research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology. This included research funded through intermediaries such as Dr. Peter Daszak and the EcoHealth Alliance, among others.

207. In late January and early February 2020, Dr. Fauci received information from colleagues that suggested that the COVID-19 virus may have originated in a laboratory in Wuhan, China. This revelation threatened to implicate Dr. Fauci in the virus's origins, as he had funded the risky research that, under this theory, led to the virus's origin. Soon thereafter, Dr. Fauci participated in a conference call with scientists and science-funding authorities intended to discredit and suppress this lab-leak theory. After the conference call, influential individuals signed public statements that were placed in science journals in attempt to discredit the lab-leak theory.

208. In the same time frame, Dr. Fauci communicated with Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg directly regarding public messaging and the flow of information on social media about the government's COVID-19 response. For example, in a series of emails produced in response to FOIA requests dated from March 15 to 17, 2020, Zuckerberg invited Fauci to make public statements to be posted for viewing by all Facebook users regarding COVID-19, and also made another proposal that is redacted in FOIA-produced versions but was treated as a high priority by Fauci and NIH staff.

209. In an email on March 15, 2020, Zuckerberg proposed coordinating with Fauci on COVID-19 messaging to "make sure people can get authoritative information from reliable sources," and suggested including a video message from Fauci because "people trust and want to hear from experts." Zuckerberg proposed including this content in a "hub" that "we're going to put at the top of Facebook" to reach "200+ million Americans, 2.5 billion people worldwide."

210. In the same email, Zuckerberg made a three-line proposal to Fauci that was redacted by the federal government before the email was produced in a FOIA request.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

211. The next day, NIH's communications director emailed Fauci and strongly recommended that he do the videos for Facebook. Regarding the redacted proposal from Zuckerberg, she stated: "But an even bigger deal is his offer [REDACTED]. The sooner we get that offer up the food-chain the better." She also stated that her staff was "standing by to discuss this with HHS and WH comms," and requested authority to "determine who the best point of contact would be so the Administration can take advantage of this officer, soonest." Fauci responded that "I will write or call Mark and tell him that I am interested in doing this. I will then tell him that you will get for him the name of the USG [on information and belief, shorthand for "U.S. Government"] point of contact."

212. Fauci responded by email to Zuckerberg on March 17, 2020, agreeing to the collaboration that Zuckerberg proposed and describing his redacted proposal as "very exciting."

213. As alleged above, around the same time frame as the Zuckerberg-Fauci emails, Facebook and other social-media companies censored and suppressed speakers and speech advocating for the lab-leak theory of COVID-19's origins, despite the overwhelming circumstantial evidence favoring that theory. This censorship directly implemented the plan, orchestrated by Fauci and others in early 2020, to discredit and suppress the lab-leak theory.

214. In the same timeframe, Facebook and other social-media companies began an ever-increasing campaign of monitoring, censorship, and suppression of speech and speakers about COVID-19 and issues related to COVID-19. This campaign would dramatically escalate with the advent of the Biden Administration.

215. On information and belief, those firms coordinated directly with Fauci, CDC, and other government officials regarding censorship and suppression of disfavored speech and speakers.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

216. For example, Facebook's "COVID and Vaccine Policy" states that Facebook "does not allow false claims about the vaccines or vaccination programs which public health experts have advised us could lead to COVID-19 vaccine rejection." Facebook, COVID-19 and Vaccine Policy Updates & Protections, https://www.facebook.com/help/230764881494641 (emphasis added). On information and belief, Fauci and CDC officials are included among those "public health experts" who "advise[]" Facebook on what to censor. Facebook also censors COVID-19 information as "false," not based on actual truth or falsity, but based on whether the claim contradicts or challenges the pronouncements of Fauci and the CDC. Id. This includes strongly supported claims such as "[c]laims that wearing a face mask properly does not help prevent the spread of COVID-19," along with an elaborate list of additional disfavored content and viewpoints subject to censorship. Id.

217. On information and belief, other social-media firms have similar policies and similar practices of coordinating with Fauci and the CDC and with each other, directly or indirectly, on the suppression of disfavored speakers and speech.

218. Such collusion between HHS officials and social-media companies on the censorship of disfavored speakers and speech accelerated once the Biden Administration took office.

219. On May 5, 2021, Defendant Psaki gave a White House press conference at which she stated that "[t]he President's view is that the major platforms have a responsibility related to the health and safety of all Americans to stop amplifying untrustworthy content, disinformation, and misinformation, especially related to COVID-19, vaccinations, and elections. And we've seen that over the past several months, broadly speaking…. we've seen it from a number of sources." Attorney General Bailey Obtains 295 Year Sentence for Franklin County Statutory Rape and Sodomy Convictions
https://stlrecord.com/stories/652878641-attorney-general-bailey-obtains-295-year-sentence-for-franklin-county-statutory-rape-and-sodomy-convictions

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced that his office obtained a 295-year sentence for Brett Pendleton of Franklin County, Missouri, in connection with the sexual abuse of his eight-year-old daughter in 2018. In October, the Attorney General's Office obtained convictions against Pendleton for Statutory Rape in the First Degree, five counts of Statutory Sodomy in the First Degree, an Attempted Statutory Sodomy in the First Degree, Child Molestation in the First Degree, Abuse of a Child, and two counts of Delivery of a Controlled Substance to a Minor. "I want Missouri to be the safest state in the nation for children," said Attorney General Bailey. "As Attorney General and a former prosecutor, I will work to obtain justice for victims, especially our most vulnerable. I'm proud of the work my office did in this case to do just that." Pendleton was indicted by a Franklin County grand jury in January of 2018. The charges stemmed from events on January 1, 2018, when he took his eight-year-old daughter to a motel room, forced her to smoke marijuana and ingest methamphetamine, and proceeded to sexually abuse her for hours. The victim was located at the motel by a family member, who took her to the hospital to report the abuse. The Washington Police Department initiated an investigation, and the investigation uncovered evidence that corroborated the victim's account of what had happened to her… The case was tried by assistant attorneys general Tristin M. Estep and Paige K. Wheeler, and the trial team included victim advocate Carrie Boessen and investigator Rob Jauer. At sentencing, the court heard argument from the State on behalf of the minor victim, argument from the defense, as well as a statement from the defendant, Brett Pendleton. The court sentenced Pendleton to seven consecutive life sentences, plus 85 years, the maximum sentence authorized by law. Because life sentences are calculated at 30 years for purposes of parole eligibility, Pendleton's sentence is calculated at 295 years in the Missouri Department of Corrections. When pronouncing the sentence, Judge Hellmann informed the defendant that he had ruined the victim's life and that this sentence ensured that he would not have the opportunity to create any additional victims."

Republican attorney general exposes DOJ funding to Soros-backed group that trains left-wing prosecutors
https://nytimespost.com/republican-attorney-general-exposes-doj-funding-to-soros-backed-group-that-trains-left-wing-prosecutors/

-"A Republican state attorney general is asking members of Congress to probe a Justice Department grant that he says benefits a "radically progressive" George Soros-linked group responsible for training prosecutors in ways to implement a soft-on-crime approach to their work. Missouri's Attorney General Andrew Bailey sent letters to congress Wednesday to urge both Republican and Democrat lawmakers "to further investigate and eliminate funding for programs that are counter-productive to public safety" and that "aid or encourage prosecutors to abuse discretion by refusing to bring criminals to justice." Bailey's letters follow what he describes as a "galvanizing moment" in Missouri when disgraced St. Louis circuit attorney Kim Gardner – "a progressive soft-on-crime prosecutor" – let a repeat criminal out on bail who then drove his speeding car into a young girl, leaving her with injures that required the amputation of both of her legs. Gardner ultimately resigned after mounting evidence of duty dereliction and criticism from both political parties. "As states like Missouri are leading the fight to uphold justice and put criminals behind bars, organizations and their partners in the federal government are doing just the opposite," Bailey wrote. "The fact is, the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), in lock-step with radicals like George Soros, is actively funding organizations like the Vera Institute that are turning our streets into war zones," he said. Bailey names the Vera Institute — a Brooklyn-based advocacy group that says it wants to "transform the criminal and legal justice systems" with ties to Washington, D.C., Democrats — as a "deeply embedded" key partner in Gardner's former office, "turning it into a catastrophic social experiment more concerned with lowering prosecution rates than convicting violent criminals." Soros' Open Society Foundations donated nearly $11 million to the Vera Institute in previous years. Bailey says Gardner "bragged" that her office "partnered with the Vera Institute of Justice's Reshaping Prosecution program to shrink the system and instigate transformational change in St. Louis" as it implemented a "new approach centered on … racial equity." "Ms. Gardner's partnership with George Soros and the Vera Institute, with the aim of 'actively shrinking the criminal legal system's footprint,' was a disastrous experiment, and it unmoored the office from sound law enforcement practices. The Vera Institute is a far-left advocacy organization dedicated to broad and nebulous goals such as moving away from 'case-by-case' prosecutorial discretion (deemed to be a 'narrow view of justice'), choosing instead to focus on 'systemic impact of case decisions.'" In a statement to Fox News Digital, Vera said the group "entered into a partnership with then-Circuit Attorney for the City (CAC) of St. Louis Kim Gardner on a project to analyze her office data, measure racial disparities and identify areas for reform, and increase transparency with her community. The partnership helped the CAC implement policy reforms such as increased diversion programs that promote safety by addressing underlying drivers of crime and reducing recidivism."…"

'Progressive Tyrants': Missouri AG Launches Investigation Into Media Matters

https://www.msn.com/en-us/news/us/progressive-tyrants-missouri-ag-launches-investigation-into-media-matters/ar-AA1lEeWr?ocid=Peregrine

-"issouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey has launched an investigation into Media Matters for America, alleging that the outlet misled readers about X to pressure advertisers to withdraw support from the social media platform. Bailey accused Media Matters of using fraud to solicit donations and violating consumer protection laws… "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America. Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process," Bailey stated. "I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech."… Media Matters has responded to Paxton's investigation by filing a lawsuit, claiming violation of the First Amendment… The controversy arises from allegations that Media Matters sought to undermine free speech on X. Musk said Media Matters was attempting to undermine free speech because "they perceive it as a threat to their ideological narrative and those of their financial supporters.'"

After report of antisemitism, Missouri's AG is defending X, formerly Twitter. Here's why.

https://www.news-leader.com/story/news/politics/2023/12/18/mo-attorney-general-investigates-group-that-found-antisemitism-on-x/71908924007/

-"Arguing that Missourians who donated to a left-leaning media watchdog nonprofit may have been misled, state Attorney General Andrew Bailey has waded into a recent controversy involving the social media platform X, formerly known as Twitter. Bailey… launched an investigation into Media Matters, a liberal advocacy group, on grounds that it improperly solicited donations from Missourians to target X, which has been mired in controversy since Elon Musk purchased the company in 2022. "The concern here and the allegation here is that Media Matters defrauded Missourians in a coordinated scheme to manipulate the marketplace and bully advertisers to pull out of X, formerly known as Twitter, in order to attack Twitter and do away with the last platform dedicated to free speech in America," Bailey said. Media Matters released a report that showed advertisements from prominent brands being featured alongside antisemitic content. Following this, major brands including IBM, NBCUniversal and its parent company Comcast pulled their advertisements from X to avoid any future instances of this occurrence. Musk soon filed a lawsuit against Media Matters, alleging that it manufactured the results of the report by following users known for posting antisemitic content, which then generated similar social posts, all but ensuring that any advertisements would appear next to harmful content… Bailey's own investigation is scrutinizing "potentially unlawful business practices" on grounds that it "may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses." "Media Matters is a 501(c)(3) organization and so they can only raise money for the nonprofit purpose, but their nonprofit was not founded in order to manipulate the marketplace to attack X," Bailey said. Bailey is requesting records from the nonprofit pertaining to strategy to target advertisers on X, communication with third parties about that strategy, conversations with specific advertisers, and internal messages regarding "content intended to 'cancel,' 'deplatform,' 'demonetize,' or otherwise interfere with businesses or organizations located in Missouri, or utilized by Missouri residents." Bailey's investigation hinges on finding sufficient evidence that Media Matters made any effort to skew the results of their initial report, which has not been definitively proven by Bailey or any of the other attorneys general looking into the matter, such as Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton and Louisiana Attorney General Jeff Landry. However, Bailey said that X's own internal review showed that they were only able to replicate occurrences such as those found in the Media Matters report "one out of 500 million times for one of the advertisers and only two out of 500 million times for one of the other advertisers." "This is manipulation of an algorithm designed to emphasize controversial speech that was then used to bully those advertisers into pulling out X," Bailey said. “The advertisers have become pawns in the market manipulation, which creates a whole new set of problems because it runs afoul of antitrust law to have a conspiracy to form a combination in restraint of trade.” Bailey and Landry penned a joint letter to advertisers urging them not to be “swindled by activist deception and dive into a controversial issue that only harms Americans and free speech.” “Sometimes these militant campaigns to punish the free speech of others have short-term success.You may recall how activists were able to get Major League Baseball’s All-Star Game moved out of Atlanta based on trumped-up and false allegations of racism — spread by the President, no less — after the Georgia General Assembly enacted reforms to the state’s voting laws. Yet, now we see that the same All-Star Game is returning to Georgia in 2025 as genuine facts emerged and the false smear fell apart,” Bailey and Landry wrote in a joint letter. They ended by encouraging advertisers, among them Apple, Disney, IBM, Sony and others, to “strongly consider this context and the perverse incentives of activists before quickly jumping to conclusions based on assertions that are likely false.” Jared Schroeder, a professor of media law at the University of Missouri School of Journalism, sees similarities between this investigation and other lawsuits currently underway in Florida and Texas that seek to ensure that private actors aren’t limiting free speech. Although Bailey’s investigation stands on grounds of market manipulation and potential antitrust violations, his intentions are to ensure that X, a platform that purports to encourage free speech, isn’t limited by private actors having an impact on its existence. “What our Attorney General's doing here is about whether or not Media Matters actions led to limitations on free speech,” Schroeder said…”

Elon Musk’s fight against Media Matters gets backup from Missouri attorney general

-“Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced last week he’s initiating an investigation against Media Matters for America, a Washington, D.C.-based group that writes articles critical of conservative media outlets and personalities. Media Matters also showcased some of the alleged deficiencies of Musk’s stewardship of X, the new name for Twitter, including how extremist accounts were thriving on the site. “I believe in the right to free speech. I think that it's central to our republic and who we are as an American people and to our freedom,” Bailey said in an interview with St. Louis Public Radio. “I'm concerned that there may be entities that will lie, cheat and steal to take that freedom away from us.” At issue are articles showing how ads appeared next to accounts that espouse antisemitic and pro-Adolf Hitler content. Musk sued Media Matters, accusing the group of “contriving” and “manufacturing” screenshots showcasing the juxtaposition. Bailey announced last week that he’s looking into whether Media Matters fraudulently tried to solicit contributions from Missourians to persuade advertisers to flee X. In a letter sent to Media Matters, Bailey demanded a slew of documents including “communications and documents related to soliciting charitable funds from residents of Missouri.” Bailey said the investigation could look into whether Media Matters violated the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act or antitrust laws. Even though X is based in San Francisco and Media Matters is based in Washington, D.C., Bailey said: “We need to know how many Missourians were solicited for contributions by Media Matters under what pretense and if Missourians were defrauded in this coordinated attack on X.”… In his letter to Media Matters, Bailey alluded to X’s lawsuit, which accuses the group of “falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true.”… Bailey said in an interview that X’s internal investigation showed that it was “exceedingly remote” that ads were placed next to “controversial speech.” Others note that companies have decided to stop advertising on X not because of Media Matters, but because of Musk’s comments… When asked if it was possible that advertisers decided to leave X because of Musk’s controversial statements, including the one about the Great Replacement Theory, Bailey replied: “I think that's what we're going to have to find out during our investigation.” “I would point out that the allegation here is that Media Matters is who emphasized controversial speech,” Bailey said. “And if they didn't like what was being said on Twitter, they should have offered counterspeech to defeat those ideas with better ideas, instead of manipulating the algorithms to defraud the advertisers.” There could be multiple barriers to Bailey getting the information he wants in his investigation. For one thing, Washington, D.C., has what’s known as a shield law that protects against news outlets having to turnover sources or work product to governmental agencies. While Bailey has said that he doesn’t consider Media Matters to be a news outlet… Bailey said, “We'll see how a court would rule on that issue.” He added, “We're going to continue to pursue the matter because the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act under state statute gives the attorney general's office authority over not-for-profits.”… He also said the fact that the articles in question do not feature an explicit ask for money may complicate efforts for Bailey to prove Media Matters engaged in fraudulent solicitation. The articles do feature a graphic on a sidebar asking for donations to make sure “right-wing lies don’t set the agenda” — but Musk isn’t featured in the illustration… Bailey said the purpose of his investigation is to “see how many Missourians contributed and under what pretense and was there fraud in the solicitation of contributions.”… Bailey’s office is also part of a high-stakes lawsuit seeing if the federal government overstepped its bounds when it tried to get social media platforms to take down content. He’s said that if a governmental agency doesn’t like a tweet or a Facebook post, it should fight that speech with more speech — not try to persuade social media companies to take down the content… When asked if it would be a better course of action for his office to merely speak out against Media Matters’ articles, Bailey replied, “I would say we're doing that in exposing this for what it is and fighting back with the superiority of our moral ideals as expressed through our words." "[That's] a powerful form of weaponry in the battlefield for ideas, and that emphasizes my love of free speech as a foundational principle of our republic," Bailey said. "But if Missourians were harmed, or have the potential to be harmed by fraudulent schemes and market manipulations, we're going to fight to protect Missourians as well.'"

Police investigating threats made to Creve Coeur synagogues

-"Authorities said three synagogues in Creve Coeur received threatening emails that implied there were bombs at the facilities. Canine officers from the Creve Coeur and St. Louis County police departments searched each synagogue and confirmed that there were no immediate safety concerns, according to a release. Creve Coeur police are currently investigating the source of the threats and whether they are related to similar statements recently received by other organizations across the U.S. No other information was disclosed, including which synagogues received the messages. Creve Coeur police said updates would be provided on social media. Antisemitism has been on the rise in the U.S. in recent years, particularly since war broke out on Oct. 7 when Hamas and other militants killed 1,200 people in Israel and captured around 240. More than 100 of them were released during a weeklong cease-fire late last month. Scott Biondo, community security director for the Jewish Federation of St. Louis, told the Post-Dispatch that the emails were similar to those sent to other Jewish organizations in the country in recent months and that federal authorities do not believe they are credible threats. Authorities also do not believe the messages are directly related to the Israel-Hamas conflict as the emails don't contain any language referring to the war… His department, which provides security services for dozens of Jewish organizations from Joplin in southwest Missouri to Paducah, Kentucky, has seen a rise in antisemitism incidents over the past year, including acts of vandalism and remarks made on social media. Biondo said Jewish organizations have prepared for "a worst-case scenario" and that they are more than prepared to deal with threats like those made Sunday."

Missouri State Auditor to unveil 'preliminary results' of audit of Jackson County Assessment Department

The audit aims to scrutinize the procedures employed for property value assessments, which saw an average increase of 30 percent for property owners in Jackson County. "While the audit for the Jackson County Assessment Department is still in progress, Fitzpatrick will share some of the preliminary results for the

If passed, the measure would allow law enforcement officers to confiscate expired vehicle tags, forcing the driver to either stop driving the vehicle or get it registered. In August, the City of St. Charles began encouraging citizens to capture a picture of any expired temporary tags and report them to police. The county later began allowing its officers to confiscate the expired temporary plates."

Capitol Perspectives: Legislative estimates of tax cut losses

https://missouriindependent.com/2023/12/18/capitol-perspectives-legislative-estimates-of-tax-cut-losses/

-""As Missouri lawmakers face state budget proposals in the 2024 legislative session, they might want to consider what their staff had reported about the financial impact of tax cuts passed in prior years. In 2023, the legislature approved tax reductions for government employee pensions and Social Security benefits. A year earlier, the legislature passed a measure providing reductions in the income tax rate when there was a substantial increase in tax collections. Those two tax cuts likely were partially responsible for a subsequent decline in the growth of state tax collections. Although Gov. Mike Parson signed the pension and Social Security tax cut, he later cited the revenue loss from that bill for his veto of 201 items in the budget the legislature had passed... Legislative staff had warned of significant losses to state general revenue from the two tax cuts. Those warnings came from the legislature's Legislative Oversight Division which provides estimates termed "fiscal notes" as to the projected revenue impacts from measures before the legislature. The division's final fiscal note for the 2023 retirement income tax-break estimated a $130 million tax-collection drop from the bill in the current budget year and "up to" $309 million revenue loss in each of the next two budget years. A year earlier, the fiscal note for the 2022 income-tax rate reduction estimated a $370 million drop when fully implemented. The Oversight Division's estimate was confirmed when the governor announced the "consensus revenue estimate" by his administration and legislative budget leaders forcasts a 0.7 percent general revenue loss for the current budget year that ends June 30 and just a 0.2 percent general revenue increase for the subsequent fiscal year. That revenue increase is not much when you consider growing inflation costs… Of course, tax cuts for Missourians, including retirement tax-exemptions is another politically popular issue — particularly with statistics showing a higher voter turnout by the elderly. That emphasis on tax cuts was prominent in the governor's email to the news media on the consensus revenue estimate of how much will be available for the legislature to spend. The governor's email included a quote from Senate Appropriations Chair Lincoln Hough, R-Springfield, that "Our projected growth in revenue is lower due to Missourians keeping more of their hard-earned money in their pocket, which increases individual household income." That reflects the argument of Republican legislators that lowering taxes ultimately will spur economic growth. In fact, while income tax collections are down 8.2% year to date through November, sales tax collections increased by 12.8%. Also, a reduction in the growth of tax collections does not necessarily mean budget increases for state programs will be as limited as the consensus revenue estimate suggested… State government has a $6.2 billion surplus of unspent funds that includes federal funds amassed during the COVID era. So, there is a lot of money that could be used for increased funding for state programs in the next fiscal year. However, years ago legislative fiscal conservatives warned against using one-time money for government programs that would continue after that money was gone. This all raises several fascinating budget issues for the Republican-controlled legislature in the 2024 election-year."

Hawley Will Now Focus on Federal Budget to get Payments for St. Louis-Area Radiation Victims

-"U.S. Senator Josh Hawley, R-Missouri, delayed passage of the bill and voted "no" because his amendment to include payments for radiation victims was cut out. Hawley said he'll now try to get his amendment added onto the federal budget. "That is my number one priority," he told Missourinet. "I can't believe that we would spend trillions of dollars on who knows what and we wouldn't spend a few billion dollars over the next 50 years to compensate the people of Missouri and the people of New Mexico and Colorado and the Navajo Nation and everybody else in this country who has been poisoned by nuclear radiation by their government." Congress has until mid-January to reach another budget deal or again risk a government shutdown. But Hawley is not limiting his efforts to just the federal budget. "I will work to get this measure attached to anything that I think has a reasonable chance to move, to pass," he said. "I want to see this enacted into law. I want to see the people of our state get compensated. I want to see them be able to afford their health care. I want to see them be recognized by their government, and (for) this government (to) admit what it has done." Hawley's amendment would extend the life of the Radiation Compensation Exposure Act (RECA) for 19 years and add several states whose residents would be eligible to take part, including Missouri. RECA is set to expire next May. Meanwhile, the fate of the National Defense Authorization Act is up to President Biden. The bill includes a $5.2% pay increase for U.S. military members – their largest raise in more than two decades."

Franklin County clerk to accept GOP candidate filings regardless of vetting plan

-"The Franklin County Republican Central Committee (FCRCC) plans to begin "vetting" candidates for county office ahead of the 2024 elections, but that may not prevent those who don't meet the committee's desired qualifications from running for office as Republicans. Franklin County Clerk Tim Baker told The Missourian he has received legal guidance from County Counselor Mark Piontek that state law allows any Republican who files a declaration of candidacy and pays the required fee, whether or not they pass the FCRCC's test, to appear on the ballot. "What I've been instructed basically is that I'm supposed to accept their declaration of candidacy, and it's under both Statute 115.347 and the other Statute is 115.357," Baker said. That would appear to circumvent the FCRCC's announcement in mid-November that it would be vetting all Republican candidates for county elected positions before submitting them to the county clerk for inclusion on the ballot. "Unless a candidate is vetted, checks to cover the filing fee will not be submitted to the County Clerk's office by the Central Committee nor will they be accepted by the County Clerk without the approval of the Republican Central Committee," the FCRCC said at the time…Baker and Chaney appear to be in disagreement over whether the process — by default, without a court injunction stating otherwise — would allow any Republican candidate to file, or whether the FCRCC could reject a candidate's filing fee. Both said litigation may be required to clarify the issue of whether a county political committee has the authority of state law to prevent a candidate from appearing on the ballot. "I'm to accept their candidacy, that's what the statute says, and then I'm also the pass-through for the check unless they hand it to the treasurer, so if the treasurer is not present in my office, from either central committee, then it is my job to be the pass-through. I receive the check, I hand them a receipt stating that I received the check, and that check then gets turned over to the central committee," he said…Chaney said he thought that, at least in races for county-level offices, the local party central committee would have the authority to reject a declaration of candidacy if the would-be candidate failed to pass or refused to participate in the committee's vetting process. But he said he doubts Ashcroft's office would have authority to intervene if such rejections were challenged. "In those particular cases, I don't know that the secretary of state's office would have any jurisdiction to manipulate or mandate the party to do one thing or another. Nor would we have any ability to tell the clerk 'Hey, you can or can't accept that individual,'" he said…Despite the conflicting interpretations of whether the FCRCC can reject a candidate, Baker said his position is not adversarial to the FCRCC, and the central committee's vice chairman, Roger Jackson, similarly said the FCRCC's relationship with Baker's office is "not confrontational," despite the difference in interpretation…Jackson said that Rafael Madrigal, a Pacific alderman who is running for the District 119 state representative seat currently held by Brad Banderman, has already taken the FCRCC's multiple-choice vetting test and passed, even though as a candidate for a state-level office, Madrigal would not be subject to FCRCC's vetting process or require its approval. Jackson also noted that just because Madrigal passed the test, that doesn't mean the FCRCC has endorsed him…Jackson said he was disappointed with the state Republican Party's response to the FCRCC's plan. The party has said the vetting process will invite litigation and that it will not indemnify county central committees that are sued…"

Appeals Court Revives Case Challenging Connecticut Rule on Transgender Athletes

-"A federal appeals court on Friday revived a lawsuit filed by four female athletes challenging a Connecticut policy that allows transgender students born male to compete against girls in high school athletic events. The full 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the case should return to the district court for review because the plaintiffs have standing in the litigation and have alleged injuries that may qualify for monetary relief. "We do not consider whether plaintiffs' Title IX claims have any merit or whether they would be entitled to the relief that they seek as a matter of equity, but rather whether the district court has jurisdiction to hear their claims in the first instance," the judges said in a ruling on Dec. 15. The plaintiffs—Selina Soule, Chelsea Mitchell, Alanna Smith, and Ashley Nicoletti—argued they were "deprived of honors and opportunities" to compete at higher levels because of a policy that allowed males who identify as female to compete against girls. According to the court, all four plaintiffs had personally competed in Connecticut high school track and identified instances in which they raced against and finished behind one or both transgender athletes Andraya Yearwood and Terry Miller…The plaintiffs said the Connecticut Interscholastic Athletic Council (CIAC) policy discriminated against them by requiring them to compete against transgender athletes, who have a "physiological athletic advantage." The 2013 CIAC policy allows transgender students to compete in high school competitions designated for the gender they identify with. However, the plaintiffs argued that the CIAC policy violated Title IX, a federal law designed to create equal opportunities for women in education and athletics…It concluded that the plaintiffs pleaded "a concrete, particularized, and actual injury in fact: the alleged denial of equal athletic opportunity and concomitant loss of publicly recognized titles and placements" during track competitions where they finished behind the transgender athletes…Conservative legal group Alliance Defending Freedom (ADF), which represents the plaintiffs, praised the court's decision as an important victory for female athletes across the country. "Selina, Chelsea, Alanna, and Ashley—like all female athletes—deserve access to fair competition," ADF Senior Counsel Roger Brooks said in a press release. "The CIAC's policy degraded each of their accomplishments and scarred their athletic records, irreparably harming each female athlete's interest in accurate recognition of her athletic achievements," he added. A three-judge 2nd Circuit panel last year agreed with a federal judge that the plaintiffs had not shown they were deprived of opportunities because all of them regularly competed in state track championships and won some of them. The full court said it would reconsider the case in February…"

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-to-review-arizona-death-row-inmates-sentence-5548431?ea_src=frontpage&ea_med=lead-special-judiciary-title-0

-"The Supreme Court has agreed to review the death sentence imposed on an Arizona inmate who claims he received ineffective assistance from counsel during the sentencing process. The Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees a criminal defendant the right to effective assistance of counsel. In the case, the state of Arizona is appealing a ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit that the death row inmate was entitled to a new sentencing hearing. The inmate argues that his lawyer failed to secure a mental health expert and conduct appropriate medical tests in a timely manner during sentencing. The case comes after the Supreme Court cracked down on ineffective-assistance-from-counsel claims in May 2022. In Shinn v. Ramirez, the court held 6-3 that federal courts reviewing inmate cases may not conduct evidentiary hearings to fully examine ineffective-counsel claims that should have been raised in state court proceedings. The court granted the petition for certiorari, or review, in Thornell v. Jones, in an unsigned order on Dec. 13. No justices dissented. The court did not explain its decision. At least four of the nine justices must vote for the petition for it to advance to the oral argument stage…The case of the respondent, Danny Lee Jones, now 59, goes back to March 1992 when he was visiting his friend, Robert Weaver…Mr. Jones attacked Mr. Weaver from behind, hitting him in the head with a bat. He also attacked his victim's grandmother but she survived. Mr. Weaver's seven-year-old daughter, Tisha, hid in a bedroom but Mr. Jones found her and struck her twice in the head and either strangled her or suffocated her with a pillow. After the child died, Mr. Jones stole Mr. Weaver's gun collection, grabbed the keys to the grandmother's car, went to the garage, found Mr. Weaver, and hit him fatally five more times on the head. After putting the firearms in the car, Mr. Jones fled. The public defender assigned to Mr. Jones's case had been an attorney for three years but had never been lead attorney in a capital case. Mr. Jones was convicted of killing Mr. Weaver and his daughter, and for the attempted murder of the grandmother. After the convictions, the public defender visited Mr. Jones's mother and second step-father in the search for potentially mitigating evidence for the sentencing hearing. At the sentencing hearing, the attorney presented testimony from an investigator and the step-father. The investigator testified about an accomplice allegedly involved in the crimes. The step-father testified that Mr. Jones's mother gave birth to Mr. Jones when he was 15 years old and had complications during the pregnancy and delivery. He also said Mr. Jones had experienced several head injuries when he was growing up and that his personality began to change drastically when he was 13 or 14 years old. Mr. Jones began lying, skipping classes at school, drinking, and using drugs. His first step-father had introduced him to marijuana when he was around 10 years old and by the time he was 17, he was an alcoholic. But in December 1993, Mr. Jones was sentenced to death. The 9th Circuit previously ordered that Mr. Jones be given a new sentencing hearing but the Supreme Court overturned that decision in 2011. A federal district court denied Mr. Jones's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel during the sentencing process. Then last year, a divided 9th Circuit applied the standards laid down by the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 and reversed that decision, without giving deference to the district court's detailed factual findings. The Supreme Court has agreed to take a look at the most recent appeals court decision. The legal issue is whether the 9th Circuit violated the Supreme Court's 1984 ruling in Strickland v. Washington, which held that to make out a claim for ineffective counsel, it must be shown that the defense attorney was objectively deficient and that there was a reasonable likelihood a different outcome would have followed if a competent attorney had represented the accused person. Specifically, the Supreme Court will look at whether the circuit court erred when it disregarded the district court's findings as to the evidence presented during the sentencing hearing…"

Supreme Court to Take Up Dispute Over Estate Tax Owed by Family Business

-"The Supreme Court will consider a dispute about whether life insurance payouts should be deemed to be corporate assets in calculating federal income taxes payable on a deceased person's estate. The court granted the petition for certiorari (pdf), or review, in Connelly v. Internal Revenue Service, in an unsigned order on Dec. 13. No justices dissented. The court did not explain its decision. At least four of the nine justices have to vote in favor of the petition for it to advance to the oral argument stage. The case concerns two brothers' closely-held corporation. After one of the brothers died, tax authorities and the estate failed to agree on the value of stock. Closely-held corporations often enter into agreements that require the redemption of a shareholder's stock after the shareholder dies to preserve the closely held nature of the business. Corporations that enter into such agreements often purchase life insurance on the shareholder to make sure the transaction is funded. The appeal of Thomas Connelly, executor of the estate of the late Michael Connelly, was rejected by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit in June. The IRS said the estate owed close to $1 million after it found that St. Louis-based Crown C Corp., a building materials business, did not report life insurance proceeds after Michael Connelly died in 2013. Michael Connelly, who was president and CEO of the corporation when he died, owned 77.18 percent of the company's shares, while Thomas Connelly owned 22.82 percent. The Supreme Court will look at whether a life insurance policy obtained to finance the company's repurchase of the deceased co-owner's shares should be factored into the valuation of the stock…"

-"Elon Musk's X, formerly known as Twitter, is being investigated by the European Union over allegations that it breached Europe's highly restrictive laws on online speech while addressing misinformation related to the Israel-Hamas conflict. The European Commission announced on Monday that it was opening an investigation into whether X had broken the Digital Services Act, which holds Big Tech companies accountable for "harmful and illegal" content and requires transparency about content moderation and algorithms. The investigation will look specifically into "the dissemination of illegal content in the context of Hamas's terrorist attacks against Israel" and whether X's efforts to stop "information manipulation" through the Community Notes system were sufficient. This is the first time the EU has launched proceedings under the DSA. "The higher the risk large platforms pose to our society, the more specific the requirements of the Digital Services Act are," Executive Vice President for A Europe Fit for the Digital Age Margrethe Vestager said in a statement. "We take any breach of our rules very seriously. And the evidence we currently have is enough to formally open a proceeding against X." X is one of 16 platforms regulated by the DSA, which went into effect in April 2023, although the company declined to sign an agreement with the EU to regulate its online content…X CEO Linda Yaccarino responded by affirming that X was committed to "serving the public conversation, especially in critical moments like this, and understands the importance of addressing any illegal content that may be disseminated through the platform." This included removing tens of thousands of posts involving false information, suspending hundreds of accounts, and posting thousands of Community Notes, or X's crowd-sourced fact-checking service."

Biden Admin Locks In Skimpiest Offshore Oil And Gas Leasing Schedule In US History As Prices Remain High At The Pump

order for the administration to issue offshore wind leases, according to the DOI. The 2024-2029 schedule only features three lease sales in the Gulf of Mexico, with no sales scheduled for any other area off the country's shores; DOI finalized the plan as the national average per-gallon price at the pump hovers at around $3.10. BOEM's finalized plan is a far cry from the schedule that former President Donald Trump and his administration were crafting, which would have allowed for 47 lease sales in the Gulf of Mexico and beyond, including in the Pacific Ocean and off the Alaskan coast. The three leases—scheduled to take place in 2025, 2027 and 2029— amount to just over 60 million acres in total, which is the threshold that the administration is required to meet in order to continue issuing offshore wind leases to advance its sweeping climate agenda…Offshore oil production in federally-controlled Gulf waters accounted for about 15% of total U.S. crude oil output in 2021, according to the U.S. Energy Information Administration. As the Gulf of Mexico's oil is considered less carbon-intensive to produce than oil from most other regions, diminished production in the affected zone could be replaced by more carbon-intensive barrels from elsewhere in the world, according to the American Petroleum Institute. "This restrictive offshore leasing program is the latest tactic in a coordinated strategy to reduce energy production, ultimately weakening America's energy dominance, limiting consumers' access to affordable reliable energy and compromising our ability to lead on the global stage," American Petroleum Institute President and CEO Mike Sommers said of the schedule in September…"

Education Department reveals 40% of student loan borrowers missed first payment since COVID

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/policy/education/education-department-40-percent-student-loan-borrowers-missed-payment

-"The Department of Education revealed that 40% of student loan borrowers missed their first repayment date in October, including four million borrowers who were required to start paying back their loans for the first time. Undersecretary of Education James Kvaal said 60% of student loan borrowers whose payments were due in October made them by mid-November, but the 40% who did not would not face harsh punishments…The Biden administration has made an on-ramp to restart the payment plans, which had been stalled for three years because of hardships caused by the COVID-19 pandemic, by delaying the harshest punishments for not making a payment through next September. Those punishments include delinquency, default, and mandatory collections. The White House has also rolled out a "SAVE" debt forgiveness plan over the summer. President Joe Biden also forgave just under $5 billion in student loans last week, which affected nearly 80,300 borrowers under the income-driven repayment forgiveness and Public Service Loan Forgiveness programs. The Biden administration has forgiven a total of $132 billion in student loan debt for more than 3.6 million borrowers. The billions in federal student loan relief comes even after the Supreme Court stopped Biden's student loan forgiveness program in August, which would have forgiven up to $20,000 in student loan debt for eligible low- and middle-income borrowers…"

Here's How One State Court Decision Could Cost Republicans Their House Majority

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/17/court-decision-cost-republicans-house/

-"On Tuesday, the court ruled for the plaintiffs in Hoffmann v. New York State Independent Redistricting Commission, a case where several voters challenged the state's current congressional maps that were drawn by a court-appointed special master in 2022, based on which Republicans picked up five seats in the House and accounted for their five-seat majority. The court's decision to order the commission to redraw the state's maps, which the Democratic-controlled legislature must approve, may lead to new district boundaries that include more Democratic-leaning precincts and result in all Republican incumbents losing reelection. "The Democrats, you know, they have a lot more to gain by trying to make it where the legislature redraws the new maps," said Shawn Donahue, an assistant professor of politics at the University of Buffalo and expert on voting rights and representation, to the Daily Caller News Foundation…In the 2022 case, Harkenrider v. Hochul, the court struck down maps that were enacted by the state legislature for partisan gerrymandering, with the bipartisan commission deadlocking on approving the proposed maps before then, with all Democrats voting in favor while all Republicans were against them. The legislature, where Democrats have a two-thirds majority in both houses, will have free choice in determining whether to accept or reject the commission's maps, again, should they not advantage Democratic candidates for the House in 2024's elections…Not everyone believes that Republicans are imperiled by the changes. Vice Casale, a political consultant for New York candidates, thinks that political realignments in New York's districts make the process more complicated. "The Democrats cannot just redistrict New York Republicans into oblivion," Casale wrote to the DCNF. "There are still too many seats where they can only make so many changes before it starts to affect other districts. For example, making Congressman Williams' district bluer to take the seat back and then making Congressman [Pat] Ryan's district bluer to help protect him will only help Congressman Molinaro by giving him a redder district."… The reaction from the potentially affected lawmakers has been negative. "While I disagree with the decision to jettison NY's current congressional map, I urge those drawing the new map to make the new districts compact & competitive. Doing so ensures the 2024 election is about important policies, rather than predetermined partisan outcomes." wrote LaLota in an email to the DCNF, while a spokesperson for Molinaro referred to a tweet by the candidate on the issue. "There's nothing fair about this," he wrote."

Appeals Court Upholds Burrow's Conviction
https://www.kfmo.com/news/appeals-court-upholds-burrows-conviction

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is announcing his office successfully defended the convictions of Cecil Burrow, of Ironton, for four counts of first degree sodomy at the Eastern District Court of Appeals. Bailey says the appeals court affirmed the circuit court's judgment denying Burrow's claim the state had failed to establish sufficient evidence. Burrow had been found guilty of sodomy after he was arrested for allegedly having sexual intercourse with a 19 year old woman while she was passed out at Lake Hannah in St. Francois County in July of 2018. It's also said Burrow admitted to the incident during interviews with law enforcement officials. Burrow was sentenced to 20 years for each conviction. The Court ordered the sentences to run consecutively, resulting in a total of 80 years in the Department of Corrections. The Eastern District Court of Appeals' decision upholds his original convictions and sentences."

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced on Monday that his office successfully defended in the Eastern District Court of Appeals the convictions of Cecil Burrow, 65, of Ironton, for four counts of first-degree sodomy. The appeals court affirmed the circuit court's judgment, denying Burrow's claim that the state had failed to establish sufficient evidence. "As attorney general, I will always work to protect Missourians, which includes defending the convictions of dangerous criminals," said Bailey. "I'm proud of the tireless efforts my Criminal Appeals Unit put into this case. The Attorney General's Office will continue to obtain justice for victims throughout the state." Following a May 2022 jury trial in St. Francois County, Burrow was convicted of four counts of first-degree sodomy related to an incident that occurred in July of 2018. The evidence showed Burrow sexually assaulted the 19-year-old victim, who, the defendant told police, was "too drunk to know what was going on." Burrow was sentenced to 20 years for each conviction. The court ordered the sentences to run consecutively, resulting in a total of 80 years in the Department of Corrections. The Eastern District Court of Appeals' decision upholds his original convictions and sentences."

Free Speech Advocates Fight Back: Counter-Offensives Launched Against Leftist 'Media Watchdogs'
American Greatness | No Author Listed
https://amgreatness.com/2023/12/17/free-speech-advocates-fight-back-counter-offensives-launched-against-leftist-media-watchdogs/

-"A network of Leftist, self-proclaimed "watchdogs," supported by corporations and political interests aligned with the Biden Administration, have been largely unchecked in their efforts to censor, de-platform, and "misinformation-ize" Americans who dare to speak and share information counter to the Leftist agenda. From "COVID" and the 2020 election, to George Floyd and Ukraine, this network — legitimized by the corrupt legacy media — has suppressed the free speech of millions of Americans, and even a sitting U.S. President. Now, free speech advocates are fighting back. Elon Musk kicked off the counter-offensive by filing a lawsuit, on behalf of his social media platform X, against Media Matters for America (MMA). The suit alleges MMA of "intentional deception and a malicious campaign aimed at damaging the company's reputation and revenue stream," reported Legal Newsline… That lawsuit, filed in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas Fort Worth Division, was followed up with an investigation by Attorney General Ken Paxton (R-Texas) for potentially violating the Texas Business Organizations Code and the Deceptive Trade Practices Act as the legal basis for this inquiry… Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey (R) has now followed up with his own investigation into MMA. Bailey said: "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America. Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process. I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech." Last week, conservative news sites The Daily Wire and The Federalist joined with Paxton and the New Civil Liberties Alliance in filing a lawsuit agains the U.S. Department of State… The lawsuit specifically implicates NewsGuard, yet another self-proclaimed "media watchdog" that rates the "trustworthiness" of news sites. Legal Newsline reports that NewsGuard has around 40,000 subscribers. NewsGuard, which has come under fire for receiving funding from Big Pharma, was also sued by Consortium News in October… Free speech video platform Rumble has filed a lawsuit against another Leftist, so-called "watchdog" — Check My Ads. Rumble sued Nandini Jammi and Claire Atkin, co-founders of Check My Ads, in federal court in Florida, alleging "intentional economic harm and false statements by the defendants," reported the Florida Record… So, where do we go from here? The lawsuits will make their way through the courts, and the state investigations will follow their courses. These efforts, however, are likely not to be the last, as the actions of a few free speech advocates are likely to embolden those who have remained silent for too long. As Edmund Burke wrote, "The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing." Good men have stepped forward. Now is the time for others to join the fight."

Bailey Expresses Concern Over Grain Belt

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is concerned about projects like Grain Belt Express. He says landowners have rights. Invenergy says the project will save Missouri consumers 5.8 billion dollars over 15 years, provide 15 hundred jobs during construction, and provide power to 39 municipal utilities in the state. Bailey encourages landowners to do research before selling their land to companies. Bailey supports U.S. Senator Josh Hawley's proposed legislation that would ensure Missourians affected by the Grain Belt Express transmission lines to be fairly compensated.

Conservatives move to keep abortion off the 2024 ballot

https://www.politico.com/news/2023/12/18/first-rule-of-the-anti-abortion-playbook-dont-let-the-public-vote-on-abortion-00132049

-"Conservatives are testing new tactics to keep abortion off the ballot following a series of high-profile defeats… Republicans are also appealing to state courts to keep referendums off the ballot, while GOP lawmakers in states including Missouri and Oklahoma are pushing to raise the threshold for an amendment to pass or to make it to the ballot in the first place. The emerging strategy aims to prevent abortion rights groups from notching their third, and largest, set of ballot measure victories since Roe v. Wade was overturned. And while conservatives celebrated the fall of Roe for returning the question of abortion rights to the people, these efforts are seen as an implicit admission that anti-abortion groups don't believe they can win at the ballot box — even in red states — and that the best way to keep restrictions on the procedure is to keep voters from weighing in directly… "I do not want to see abortion put in our constitution," said Rep. Brad Hudson, a Missouri Republican. "I believe the right to life is a fundamental right that all human beings have and certainly should not be taken away because of a vote by a simple majority." Hudson filed legislation for the new session, which begins next month, that would require constitutional amendments to pass with a statewide majority and a majority in more than half of the state's eight congressional districts. It is one of several GOP proposals around the country that would undermine efforts to approve abortion protections at the ballot in 2024 — though changes to the initiative process would need to be approved by voters. Anti-abortion advocates and Republican state attorneys general in states like Florida, Missouri and Nevada, are challenging the initiatives in court as unconstitutionally vague, confusing or misleading. And in multiple states where abortion-rights initiatives have passed, conservative groups and politicians are suing to block their implementation. GOP state officials are also turning once-routine steps around certifying the ballot language and estimating its cost to taxpayers into pitched ideological battles to delay and derail the process… "All options should be on the table," said Steven Aden, the chief legal officer of the anti-abortion group Americans United for Life. "Because we believe that abortion is truly about the right to life of human individuals in the womb, we don't believe those rights should be subjected to majority vote."… To stop more states across the political spectrum from restoring or codifying Roe-like protections, national and local anti-abortion groups have launched "decline to sign" campaigns to thwart groups working to put abortion rights on the 2024 ballot — hoping to prevent the issue from coming before voters. The group Students for Life of America plans to buy ads, hold events, partner with churches, and send staff and volunteers door to door in several states — including Arizona, Florida, Nevada and Missouri — to persuade people not to give organizers the signatures they need… In Missouri, Republican state officials also argued this summer that legalizing the now-banned procedure would cost the state billions of dollars each year because future taxpayers would be aborted. They lost in court but the delays will make it hard for abortion-rights groups to fundraise and collect the signatures they need. "The timeline has absolutely impacted the interest of investors because they see how much more of a challenge it is on a limited timeline," said Mallory Schwarz, executive director of Abortion Action Missouri. "They have lost in court four times in the past month, and they don't care because their goal was to run out the clock."…"

Jackson County broke law by improperly raising home valuations, Missouri auditor claims

https://www.kansascity.com/news/politics-government/article283202998.html

-"Missouri State Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick on Monday alleged Jackson County used a "flawed and inadequate" property assessment process that violated state law, affecting up to 200,000 homeowners. Fitzpatrick, a Republican, said the problems should invalidate any increase in assessed valuation greater than 15%. He urged homeowners whose valuation rose by more to only pay their property taxes under protest – a process that allows owners to file a lawsuit if they don't receive the refund they believe they're owed. The state auditor's comments came as his office released the preliminary findings of an ongoing audit into the Jackson County Assessment Department, led by Director Gail McCann Beatty, a former Democratic leader of the Missouri House. Republican lawmakers are also seeking to make the county assessor an elected office. Many homeowners have been in an uproar for months after assessments jumped significantly this year. Residential property values increased by roughly 40% overall since the last assessment in 2021, according to county data. The City of Lee's Summit sued Jackson County over the assessment process in September; property owners have also filed multiple lawsuits that were argued in front of the Missouri Supreme Court last week. The Missouri State Auditor's Office found that the Jackson County Assessment Department failed to provide property owners with adequate notice of their rights regarding physical inspections. If a home valuation rises by more than 15%, the county has to perform an exterior "physical inspection" and owners can also schedule an interior inspection as part of an appeal. But auditors found letters sent to owners didn't explain the owner's rights on physical inspections beyond a statement regarding the right to an interior inspection… McCann Beatty, in a lengthy statement later on Monday, said that Jackson County believes that there were mistakes in Fitzpatrick's findings, saying that it was her office's position that they fully complied with state law… McCann Beatty said Fitzpatrick's interpretation of physical inspections "should cause concern among assessor's statewide as such a theory would have significant impacts on their assessment process."… Property assessments, which take place every two years, have long been a source of controversy in Jackson County. Many houses were chronically undervalued, McCann Beatty and other officials have said, until she began raising valuations in 2019. The lingering anger over the valuation growth has prompted new interest in the Republican-dominated Missouri General Assembly in making the assessor in Democratic-leaning Jackson County an elected position. The assessor is appointed by the county executive – currently Democrat Frank White, Jr. – and Jackson County is the only charter county in Missouri that doesn't elect the position. Ahead of the start of the legislative session in January, at least four constitutional amendments have been pre-filed in the General Assembly, all by Republicans who represent portions of Jackson County, to require elections for assessor… Cierpiot and other lawmakers have introduced similar amendments in the past. Still, this year's assessment controversy is fueling new calls to make the assessor position elected. Preston Smith, a former Republican candidate for county executive frequently critical of the assessment process, said that without elections, the assessor is "unaccountable to the people."… Cierpiot said he has "no illusion" that a Republican would win a race for assessor in heavily Democratic Jackson County. He added that McCann Beatty, who had past experience as a real estate appraiser, has the background required for the job. "So it's not a stab at her at all," he said."

Ashcroft: No evidence of Missouri lawmaker's claim of foreign election interference

https://www.kctv5.com/2023/12/18/ashcroft-no-evidence-missouri-lawmakers-claim-foreign-election-interference/

-"Missouri Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft said there is no evidence to the claim that unregistered foreign agents are interfering in Missouri's elections… "At this point in our review we have not been provided any evidence that even remotely relates to Missouri election interference," Ashcroft said in a press release. "The information provided thus far does not indicate any violation of Missouri Election Law. Therefore; without additional information and specific allegations regarding the election violation we can take no further action." According to Ashcroft, his staff sent Unsicker a form used to lodge an official complaint of election interference. Unsicker replied to the request by saying, "While this complaint involves a political opponent, I do not believe I can say anything further with regards to this complaint."… Unsicker amplified the allegations against her primary opponent, Elad Gross, a civil rights attorney and former assistant attorney general. Gross' mother served in the Israeli military in the 1970s and then emigrated to the U.S. in the 1980s. The allegations claim – albeit with no evidence – that both Gross and his mother are now operating on behalf of the Israel Defense Forces to interfere with Missouri's elections… Uniscker has recently been criticized by members of her own party for her association with Eric Garland, the person who originally made the accusations against Gross, and Charles Johnson, whom the Anti-Defamation League brands an alt-right activist who has publicly questioned the number of deaths in the holocaust. Unsicker was later stripped of her committee assignments and now faces calls from within the Democratic caucus for her removal."

School performance stagnates across Missouri after pandemic learning loss

-"The 2023 annual performance reports released Monday measure school districts on standardized test scores, graduation and attendance rates along with strategic plans and other factors. Missouri school districts and charters scored an average of 77%, down from 96% in 2018, when scores were last calculated with a different methodology… Local districts that scored in the top 10% statewide include Brentwood, Clayton, Crystal City, Festus, Fort Zumwalt, Francis Howell, Kirkwood, Lindbergh and Lafayette Prep charter school in St. Louis. Ladue, Rockwood and Webster Groves fell out of the top 10% since last year. The bottom 10% statewide includes Grandview (Jefferson County), Normandy, Ritenour, Riverview Gardens and St. Louis Public Schools plus St. Louis charter schools Confluence, Kairos Academies, Lift for Life and North Side Community.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Hawthorn and La Salle charter schools, also among the lowest performers, closed this fall. Republican state legislators such as Sen. Andrew Koenig, of Manchester, have said that school choice policies from open enrollment to expansion of private school vouchers will dominate the next session in Jefferson City… The annual performance report, in its second year with a more rigorous scoring system, is the primary component of school district accreditation. Any changes to accreditation won't be made until three years of data are available in fall 2024. This year's scores indicate that 87 school districts statewide fall in the range of provisionally accredited, 50% to 69%, including Ferguson-Florissant, Hazelwood, Normandy, Ritenour, Riverview Gardens and St. Louis… The state doesn't classify charter schools, but their scores are used by their sponsors for renewal decisions every five years. Half of the charter school systems in St. Louis fall in the provisionally accredited range for 2023: Biome, Confluence, Kairos, Lift for Life, Momentum and North Side Community. Districts with provisional accreditation get extra attention from the state board of education because they are at risk of losing accreditation entirely. No school district in the state is currently unaccredited, which triggers a state law allowing students to transfer to higher-performing districts… Vandeven, who will be replaced by state Sen. Karla Eslinger as education commissioner next summer, mentioned low teacher retention and student absenteeism as main factors that have negatively affected school performance… Chronic absenteeism is a lingering effect of the pandemic. About 1 in 4 Missouri students is chronically absent, defined as missing more than 10% of class days. For Black students, the rate of chronic absenteeism is closer to half. Another hot topic in Jefferson City is expected to involve the increasingly popular four-day school week, used by nearly one-third of Missouri's school districts this year. Legislators have proposed bills that would require a public vote in any districts considering the schedule change. The Show-Me Institute libertarian think tank proposes an "automatic trigger" of open enrollment in any district that switches to a four-day week. The 2023 performance scores do not show a significant difference between school week schedules. School districts with a four-day week averaged 75.9%, while those on full weeks averaged 77%. One of the bright spots in the data is Crystal City School District in Jefferson County, which reached a score of 89.7% this year after switching to a four-day week in fall 2020…"

Missouri school administrators question district scores in second year of new formula

https://missouriindependent.com/2023/12/18/missouri-administrators-question-school-district-scores-in-second-year-of-new-formula/

-"The Missouri Department of Elementary and Secondary Education released its annual performance reports on Monday, which measure districts on standardized tests, attendance rates and other factors. It showed 70% of districts had a lower score for the 2022-23 school year than the previous year. But school administrators are raising red flags about the data, pointing to massive swings in scores in both directions across the state and wondering — with only a year to go before the data will impact school-district accreditation — whether the testing program's formula needs to be adjusted… The Missouri School Improvement Program 6, known as MSIP 6, is being phased in over a period of three years for the department to be able to fully apply its point system. This year, the program included "growth scores," which administrators say can lower the district's overall grade and be misunderstood. "What (the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education) is calling the growth scores really isn't growth at all," Gregg Klinginsmith, superintendent of the Warren County School District, told The Independent. He said the growth scores show if students are beating expectations on standardized tests but don'trepresent how much the student body has learned. A school can receive a low score for growth, but it only shows that students are not meeting the target the growth formula predicted… When The Independent asked for the formula's documentation, the department pointed to resources that summarize the calculations. Reports from 2013 explains the Missouri Growth Model in more detail, though the multi-step formula is blotted out from the technical documentation. Doug Hayter, executive director of the Missouri Association of School Administrators, said educators have a lot of questions about the growth model… It really boils down to "how well DESE predicted your school will do," Klinginsmith said. "They adjust that formula from year to year, and the growth scores really is what is separating districts."… The model relies on predicting standardized test scores based on previous years' performance and comparing the result to the prediction. The Department of Elementary and Secondary Education believes the model reveals a school's instructional effectiveness, according to the summary report. The previous annual performance report scores were the first in the sixth version of the Missouri School Improvement Program, and growth scores were only available for English and math. Monday's release, which gives scores from the 2022-23 school year, includes growth points for social studies and science as well — an additional 12 points of MSIP 6's possible 192 points… Under MSIP6, fewer schools are scoring high marks when compared to the previous scoring system. In 2018 under MSIP 5, 371 school districts and charter schools scored at least 90%. Now, just 26 districts and charters met that target…"

Missouri lawmaker wants to abolish state's K-12 education department, transfer its powers said. Eigel said the "original mission" of DESE was to transfer money from Jefferson City to local school districts. He said it now has 2,000 employees and has lost its way… He alleged the state is requiring districts to embrace diversity, equity and inclusion or DEI or teaching lessons in line with the controversial Critical Race Theory. He did not give specific examples. "It serves as an authoritarian branch over local public school districts and really, after taking a bunch of money from the federal government, is pushing mandates down on those local school districts that I don't think that they agree with whether it's requiring them to teach DEI standards, CRT standards, whatever it is." Should Eigel's bill be approved, DESE would likely cease to exist as a standalone entity. The pre-filed Senate Bill 1005, which is relatively short, would give the governor the discretion to reassign many of the duties of the K-12 education department to other state agencies. Under the proposal, the Commissioner of Education continues to serve as chief administrative officer for the state's Board of Education… The proposal allows the commission to "retain or employ certain staff members who are necessary to assist with the implementation of the provisions of the act," subject to the approval of the governor at the state board… Asked for its number of employees, DESE said there were 1,799 on the payroll for the 2023 fiscal year but a majority — 1,327 or 73% — support the Missouri Schools for the Severely Disabled, the Missouri School for the Deaf, the Missouri School for the Blind, and Missouri Vocational Rehabilitation… This week, the state released the Annual Performance Report showing how schools and districts measure up against academic and other benchmarks, approved by the state board, as part of the sixth iteration of the Missouri School Improvement Program… Compared to the prior year, the state recorded slight increases in reading, except in grades 6 and 7, in the 2022-23 year. The scores for math and science were flat or slightly higher in all grades and courses compared to the prior year. Scores in social studies went down. The report showed in third grade, a pivotal benchmark, 58% of students in reading and 59% of students in math were one or more years behind where they should be at that point. Eigel said one goal of his proposed legislation is to give districts "more independence and flexibility" so they can opt out of certain requirements put in place by DESE."

Missouri Gov. Parson announces approval of $5 million grant for college nursing programs

-"Missouri Gov. Mike Parson announced Monday that $5 million in grant funding was approved to help nursing programs at Missouri colleges and universities. "It is vitally important that we continue to invest in Missouri's health care workforce to stay competitive nationally, especially for our high-demand fields such as nursing," said Parson. "These grant funds will allow nursing programs to increase faculty support, develop future faculty through scholarships and nursing educator programs, and invest in clinical simulation technology." A special appropriation to the Missouri State Board of Nursing led to the recommendation of 20 grants totaling $5 million in support… "We applaud nursing programs for leveraging their research, creativity and commitment to patient safety by proposing solutions to address the nursing program capacity issues," said Lori Scheidt, the executive director of the Missouri State Board of Nursing. Parson previously approved $3 million in funding in September 2022. The Missouri State Board of Nursing also was awarded more than $10 million through the Nursing Education Incentive Program."

Judge Halts Removal of Confederate Memorial at Arlington National Cemetery

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/judge-halts-removal-of-confederate-memorial-at-arlington-national-cemetery-5549024

-"A federal judge on Dec. 18 issued a temporary order halting the planned removal of a Confederate monument at Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia, according to reports. Work had already begun to remove what's known as the Confederate Memorial, which was erected in 1914 in honor of soldiers who died fighting for the Confederacy during the Civil War. The monument hadn't yet been dismantled when the order was issued and remains in place on cemetery grounds. The lawsuit was filed on Dec. 17 by a group calling itself Defend Arlington, The Associated Press reported. The same group sued the U.S. Army and the U.S. Department of Defense in February to halt the memorial's removal, but a district judge last week tossed the case and allowed the work to proceed in accordance with recommendations from a congressionally mandated naming commission. The commission, comprised of civilian authorities and retired and current defense officials, was tasked to review the Defense Department's assets and identify "all names, symbols, displays, monuments, and paraphernalia that honor or commemorate the Confederate States of America." The Army has renamed nine bases across the nation to comply with the commission's final report. In its latest lawsuit, Defend Arlington accused the Army, which maintains the cemetery, of violating federal regulations. "The removal will desecrate, damage, and likely destroy the Memorial longstanding at ANC as a grave marker and impede the Memorial's eligibility for listing on the National Register of Historic Places," the lawsuit states. U.S. District Judge Rossie Alston, who granted Defend Arlington's request for a restraining order, said the parties should be prepared to make their case at a hearing scheduled for Dec. 20. In a footnote, the judge wrote that he "takes very seriously the representations of officers of the Court and should the representations in this case be untrue or exaggerated the Court may take appropriate sanctions."…"

The Campaign against Clarence Thomas Misfires Yet Again

https://www.nationalreview.com/2023/12/the-campaign-against-clarence-thomas-misfires-yet-again/

-"There is an old lawyer's joke: "If the facts are against you, argue the law. If the law is against you, argue the facts. If the law and the facts are against you, pound the table and yell like hell." It looks like ProPublica, a self-styled "independent, nonprofit newsroom that produces investigative journalism with moral force," has now descended to the anonymous humor of the bar. Its writers have waged a yearlong campaign against Justice Clarence Thomas, to the point of accusing him of accepting financial gifts from conservative donors who hoped to influence him. These charges have failed. Not only has the Wall Street Journal editorial page debunked their facts, Justice Thomas has complied with the judicial-ethics rules, and, most important, has always followed the central principle of judicial honor: to have no personal interest in any case that appears before the Court. So now that ProPublica has lost on the facts and the law, it has leveled its most shocking allegation of all — that Justice Thomas believed in 2000 that federal judges were underpaid! The horror. To spin this story of a threat to the Constitution itself, ProPublica interviewed former Florida representative Cliff Stearns, who allegedly sat with Thomas on a plane. Thomas allegedly said that Supreme Court justices were underpaid and that if Congress didn't act, "one or more justices will leave soon." From this stray comment, ProPublica claims that Justice Thomas himself was threatening to leave the bench if Congress did not increase his pay. (Don't let Chuck Schumer find out or the judiciary will never see another penny.) Of course, ProPublica nowhere finds any statement, public or private, where Thomas has ever said anything of the kind. And as someone who first clerked for Thomas in 1993 and has stayed in close touch with him over the past three decades, I have never, ever heard him complain about his salary or talk about resigning. Not once… The sad thing is that ProPublica missed a story of real substance. In 2000, the federal judiciary as a whole was underpaid because Congress had violated the Constitution. Article III of the Constitution provides for judicial independence, one of the core principles of the separation of powers, by providing that "Compensation" for federal judges "shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office." But for more than a decade, Congress had blocked cost-of-living increases — the very same that go out to every recipient of federal benefits or wages — for judges. Congress had imposed an effective pay cut on judges by allowing inflation to erode the real value of their compensation. The real story: Congress had linked its own pay to that of the judiciary and was hoping that pressure to increase the judges' pay would allow it to quietly raise its own. Thomas, if he had spoken to Stearns at all about this, was no doubt making the point that the judiciary, as an independent third branch of government, was inadequately funded. This would have nothing to do with Thomas's own personal finances, which seemed to be fine. (Like most Americans, he had to borrow money for major life expenditures such as buying a house or a car — another sin in ProPublica's book.) Reporting what other judges were saying would be Thomas's right and even, I think, his duty, if matters reached the point of affecting the ability of judges to continue to serve the courts. In fact, no judge would have had to pressure any member of Congress for pay increases secretly, as ProPublica implies. Judges were only too happy to do so in public. At this time and for years before and after, federal judges, including several justices, were testifying publicly before Congress to seek more appropriations for judicial pay. Matters came to such a head that a group of federal judges even sued to force Congress to live up to its constitutional duties. The judges won, as Christopher Landau, their lawyer (and a former ambassador to Mexico and a Thomas clerk) describes. The result was such a slam dunk that the United States government threw in the towel and dropped any appeal to the Supreme Court. ProPublica is helping to support a political attack on a Court that the Left hates, one that has returned abortion to the states, strengthened Second Amendment rights, and ended racial quotas in schools. Accordingly, ProPublica has accused Justice Thomas of accepting fancy trips from Harlan Crow, a wealthy conservative developer, and even accepting large financial gifts without disclosing them on disclosure forms. The Wall Street Journal editorial page has debunked these accusations and found that Justice Thomas followed the rules, aside from an error in filing the right forms. It concluded that the Pro Publica stories constitute "crude propaganda — lousy opinion writing and unreliable information rolled into one and deceptively packaged as straight news." Sadly, ProPublica and the Thomas critics it encourages have now descended to pounding the table and yelling as part of their campaign against a Court whose decisions they simply dislike."

Texas Governor Signs Law Giving Police Power to Arrest Illegal Immigrants

Epoch Times l Savannah Hulsey Pointer

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/texas-governor-signs-law-giving-police-power-to-arrest-illegal-immigrants-5548854?ea_src=ai_recommender&ea_med=desktop_news

-"Texas Gov. Greg Abbott has signed a border security bill into law that will give state law enforcement broad authority to arrest migrants who have entered Texas illegally and will allow local judges to order such migrants out of the country. The Dec. 18 move by the Republican governor puts into place one of the nation's strictest immigration laws and sets up a clash with the federal government, which has authority over immigration policy. Under the new rules, all law enforcement officials in the state of Texas, including those who are hundreds of miles from the border, would have the authority to detain migrants suspected of entering the nation illegally. Because the offense is considered a misdemeanor, the judge has the authority to order the defendant to leave the country… Separately on Dec. 18, U.S. Customs and Border Protection temporarily shut down two railroad border crossings in Texas to shift officers to help process migrants. Rail operators said the closures at Eagle Pass and El Paso would hamper trade ahead of Christmas… The new legislation doesn't apply to residents who have been in the nation for more than two years, according to state Rep. David Spiller, one of the Republicans who sponsored the bill. In its defense, he stated it would be implemented primarily in the vicinity of the border and that it contained adequate safeguards… It's highly probable that it will face challenges in court. Opponents will argue that it is a blatant breach of the law in the United States, as the authority to deport individuals is entirely vested in the federal government. Mr. Abbott, currently serving his third term as governor of Texas, has made the implementation of increasingly aggressive policies at the border between Texas and Mexico a central focus of his administration. In addition to providing law enforcement with broader arrest powers, Republicans in Texas are on pace to approve $1.5 billion to fund continued construction of an addition to federal border wall sections. In recent months, Texas has also filed a lawsuit in an effort to maintain a floating barrier on the Rio Grande and to prohibit agents of the Border Patrol from destroying razor wire. Mr. Abbott also started Operation Lone Star, a program in cooperation with the Texas Department of Public Safety and the Texas National Guard, in March of 2021…"

US border overwhelmed by migrant surges in three states, closing international bridges and causing chaos

https://nypost.com/2023/11/28/news/border-protection-shuts-down-crossings-to-consolidate-resources-at-4-migrant-hotspots/

-"Border Patrol forces in California, Texas and Arizona are so overwhelmed by the thousands of migrants surging into the US, they're having to take drastic measures to deal with them. Crises have emerged in four areas, according to local sources and Customs and Border Protection (CBP), closing one of the two international bridges at Eagle Pass, Texas, border station to all traffic since Monday afternoon. Meanwhile, an international crossing at Lukeville, Arizona, was also closed down. The closures were undertaken "in order to redirect personnel to assist the US Border Patrol with taking migrants into custody," CBP said. Elsewhere along the southern border, similar drastic measures were taken to address surges at other hotspots. The Tuscon Sector, which covers most of the the Arizona-Mexico border, halted its social media accounts Sunday to utilize all its personnel in addressing the "unprecedented flow" of migrants, sector chief John R. Modlin announced… CBP figures showed 52,000 people had presented themselves at border crossings along the Southwest border for entry into the US in October, a figure far eclipsed by the 189,000 who were encountered attempting to illegally cross into the country between points of entry in the same month. Erika Pinheiro, executive director of migrant services at legal aid company Al Otro, told The Post the cartels and people smugglers deliberately change tactics and send migrants to different areas to test for weaknesses in US border patrol coverage… In California, new barriers are being erected along the banks of a canal north of the border in the San Ysidiro district of San Diego, where migrants have increasingly been staging stampedes into the country. The barriers stretch along the banks of the Tijuana River where it crosses into the US through a shallow concrete-laid canal, which masses of migrants have been using to swarm across the border in large groups. Half a mile of fencing is also being erected along the river banks on the Mexican side, according to Border Report… California has become the epicenter of the latest surge of migrants arriving at the border in recent weeks. Since mid-September alone, over 40,000 migrants have been processed through the San Diego sector, coming from countries as far flung as China, India, Turkey and Romania… In the 2023 fiscal year ending on September 30, more than 230,000 migrants crossed along the sector — a 20-year high in the area. Just two months ago, the crisis was so bad in Eagle Pass, Texas, where two bridges cross the Rio Grande into Mexico, that Bridge 1 was again closed to divert CBP resources to address the more than 10,000 migrants who were arriving in the city daily, according to Border Report… At least $500,000 in trade revenue during the closure in September, Eagle Pass Mayor Rolando Salinas Jr. said."

Major Oil and Shipping Companies Suspend Travel Through Key Waterway

the global benchmark, was up about 2 percent at $78.15 a barrel by 1:45 a.m. New York time on Dec. 18. U.S. oil also rose by about 2.4 percent, to about $73.47 a barrel. Norwegian oil and gas firm Equinor on Dec. 18 said it had rerouted some vessels that had been headed toward the Red Sea, and Belgian oil tanker firm Euronav said on Dec. 18 it would avoid that area until further notice. French shipping group CMA CGM announced on Dec. 16 that it was pausing all container shipments through the Red Sea. Most significantly, oil giant BP said on Dec. 18 that it had temporarily paused all transits through the key waterway… Denmark's A.P. Moller-Maersk on Dec. 15 said it would pause all container shipments through the Red Sea until further notice, following a "near-miss incident" involving its vessel Maersk Gibraltar a day earlier. The ship was targeted by a missile while traveling to Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, from Salalah, Oman, the company confirmed. German container shipping line Hapag Lloyd said on Dec. 18 that it would reroute several ships via the Cape of Good Hope until the safety of passage through the Suez Canal and the Red Sea could be guaranteed… The USS Carney, a U.S. Navy destroyer, responded on Dec. 18 to a distress call from a commercial ship that was attacked in the Red Sea. "Multiple projectiles" were fired at the Swan Atlantic merchant vessel, an official said, adding that it isn't clear what kind of projectiles were fired. The Houthis, a group that was designated as a terrorist organization until 2021, when the State Department removed the designation, claimed responsibility for attacks on two MSC vessels last week. Ali al-Qahoum, a member of the Iran-backed Houthi Ansarullah group, told a Lebanese media outlet that Yemen and the Houthis, who control much of Yemen, have their defensive options readied to respond to any moves that the United States, Israel, or other country might make in the near future… The USS Carney on Dec. 16 intercepted 14 drones launched by the Houthis in Yemen over the weekend, according to officials. Those drones were “shot down with no damage to ships in the area or reported injuries,” the U.S. Central Command said in a statement on social media… Earlier in December, the USS Carney shot down at least three Houthi drones that were heading in the ship’s direction. In November, the USS Thomas Hudner shot down drones that were launched from Yemen, a country that was the site of a civil war that began after longtime former leader Ali Abdullah Saleh stepped down in 2012—he was assassinated in 2017. The U.S. military has also carried out strikes targeting ammunition storage facilities and weapons depots that were being used by Iranian or Iran-backed forces in eastern Syria and Iraq. “While the Houthis are pulling the trigger, so to speak, they’re being handed the gun by Iran,” U.S. national security adviser Jake Sullivan told journalists while in Israel on Dec. 14.”

Pentagon Announces Task Force To Combat Houthi Attacks In Red Sea

-“The U.S. and allies on Monday announced a multinational task force aimed at undercutting attacks on commercial vessels in the Red Sea as the Houthi rebels put a vice on shipping through a critical waterway, the Pentagon said early Tuesday in Bahrain. Operation Prosperity Guardian will involve a multitude of nations including the United Kingdom, Bahrain, Canada, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Seychelles and Spain and build on an existing regional task force established to ensure maritime security, Secretary of Defense Lloyd Austin said while on a tour of the Middle East. The Iran-backed Houthis, based in Yemen, have launched barrages of missile and drone attacks on commercial shipping in recent weeks, while U.S. warships scramble to come to their rescue… At least 10 shipping companies have suspended transits through the Red Sea, citing the danger posed by the Houthis, according to a list compiled by Reuters… Some of the participants will conduct joint patrols through the Red Sea and around the Gulf of Aden and the critical Bab el-Mandeb strait, while others will provide intelligence support, The Associated Press reported. Combined Task Force 153, the task force on which Prosperity Guardian is modeled, involves 39 countries, but officials are still working to parse out which would participate, the AP reported. CTF 153 began in 2022 to ensure maritime security in the waters now terrorized by the Houthis. The USS Carney, the USS Stethem and the USS Mason, American Arleigh Burke-class guided-missile destroyers, have been patrolling the waters every day to hold the ropes on a deterioriating security situation. The USS Dwight D. Eisenhower aircraft carrier arrived in the Bab el-Mandeb from the Arabian Gulf on Monday, satellite imagery shows. Attacks on Dec. 3 prompted the move to establish the task force, the AP reported. Three commercial vessels sustained hits by Houthi missiles that day as U.S. destroyers fended off drones.”

Medical activists 'cherry-pick' research to justify racialized healthcare: Study

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/policy/healthcare/medical-activists-cherry-pick-research-racialized-healthcare

-“The data justifying "racial concordance," the idea that patients will receive better care from doctors of their own race, have been "cherry-picked" to advance diversity, equity, and inclusion in medicine, according to a new study. The theory of "racial concordance" has become prominent among America's leading medical schools and organizations, as well as within left-wing political leadership. The theory holds that doctors of certain races are "inherently biased toward members of other races," the study stated. Organizations like the American Medical Association, the Association of American Medical Colleges, which represents all accredited U.S. medical schools, and "Top Doctor" search engine Castle Connolly have all heavily pushed the ideology. However, the supporting data for this idea exist in a relatively small number of studies, with "generally cherry-picked" evidence that is "decisively outweighed by the full body of scientific research," causing the study's authors to conclude that "medical research does not support racial concordance."… Claiming the ideology "promotes racialization of yet another aspect of American life," Goldfarb went on to say that most doctors "want to see elimination of healthcare disparities. We believe the way to accomplish this is to improve access to healthcare by minority communities and better outreach by healthcare systems to those communities." The new study does not claim that racial disparities in healthcare are nonexistent, instead calling them "a persistent and tragic phenomenon." However, it does maintain that racializing healthcare is neither beneficial nor supported by the academic papers often cited in favor of it. In the most recent review of the literature on racial concordance, 12 analyses showed beneficial outcomes, eight showed harm, and 86 found no difference. Researchers in that review concluded that "results reveal little evidence to suggest that patients of color who share racial or ethnic identity with their physicians experience a different quality of physician communication." The Do No Harm study, called "Racial Concordance in Medicine: The Return of Segregation," notes that in the few instances where racial concordance was deemed beneficial, they were the "exception rather than the norm" and should be "contextualized against the backdrop of a much larger body of evidence."… The American medical establishment, however, has continued pushing the racial concordance idea, going so far as to claim that a black baby is twice as likely to survive with a black doctor than a doctor of a different race and that black doctors are more equipped to treat pain in black patients, ideas espoused by Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson in her dissent to Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard and ideas pushed by the AAMC in its amicus brief in support of racialized college admissions for that case. The study used by the AAMC, which was cited as the basis for Jackson's claim in the dissent, actually found that the survival rate of black newborns with black attending physicians is about 99.7%, while the survival rate of black newborns with white attending physicians is about 99.6%, according to study author Jay Greene, a senior research fellow at the Heritage Foundation. Similarly, the allegation about pain assessment is not supported by the studies the AAMC cited, Greene said, which did not look at pain in black patients in reference to doctors of different races. Despite that, the brief was signed by 14 organizations involved with training healthcare professionals, such as the American Association of Colleges of Nursing, and 26 organizations that represent healthcare professionals like the AMA. The authors of the Do No Harm study likened these organizations to the doctors who took part in the Tuskegee syphilis study, in which medical professionals infamously lied to black patients about their illnesses and kept them sick without available treatment. "One of the lessons of the Tuskegee Experiment is that medical professionals are morally and professionally obligated to tell the truth," the study stated. "When it comes to the state of evidence on racial concordance in medicine, it's clear that many influential individuals and organizations are derelict in that responsibility.'"

Parents Sue Blue State School District For 'Intentionally' Transitioning Daughter Without Their Consent

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/18/parents-sue-michigan-school-district-transitioning-daughter/

-"Two parents filed a lawsuit Monday against a Michigan school district after discovering that their daughter's middle school was allegedly socially transitioning her without their knowledge. Dan and Jennifer Mead claim that they discovered that their daughter, G.M., who was attending East Rockford Middle School in the 2022 school year, was going by male pronouns and a different name and that the school tried to cover it up, according to the lawsuit. The Meads, who are being represented by Alliance Defending Freedom (ADF), said that they initially had no reason to suspect anything because the school had previously been upfront with them about any issues involving their daughter. "District employees—employees the Meads had trusted with sensitive information about G.M.'s mental health— deliberately changed G.M.'s school records to conceal the fact that the District was treating their daughter as a boy without their knowledge," the lawsuit reads. "The Meads only discovered it because one employee forgot to remove the masculine name and male pronouns from one section of G.M.'s records, after removing it from other sections of the same document, and inadvertently gave the Meads the document she had only partially altered." The school allegedly continued to refer to the Meads' daughter as a male, despite them communicating that they did not consent to it, according to the lawsuit. The Meads eventually decided to homeschool in late 2022 after their daughter came home with a book titled Heartstopper Volume 1, a graphic novel that depicts "one teenage boy physically assaulting and later forcibly kissing another teenage boy without his consent," that was allegedly provided by the school counselor, Erin Cole. School staff repeatedly cited that their behavior was in line with school policy and, when Mr. Mead asked Principal Adam Burkholder whether the school would promise to notify them about this issue in the future, Burkholder allegedly refused, according to the lawsuit. "District employees didn't even notify Dan and Jennifer—let alone seek their consent—before beginning to call their young daughter by a masculine name and male pronouns," Kate Anderson, senior counsel and director of ADF's Center for Parental Rights, said in a press release. "By intentionally concealing this information from the Meads, the school district violated their constitutionally protected right to make decisions regarding their daughter's education and wellbeing and destroyed the trust the Mead family had placed in the district and its employees.'"

Lawmakers ask DOJ to probe Apple's blocking of Android app allowing blue bubbles

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/policy/technology/lawmakers-ask-doj-probe-apple-blocking-app-allowing-blue-bubbles

-"A bipartisan group of congressional critics of Big Tech is asking the Department of Justice to investigate whether Apple breached antitrust laws by blocking an app that allows Android users access to iMessage. The group sent a letter to DOJ Assistant Attorney General Jonathan Kanter late on Sunday asking him to investigate Apple's decision to prevent the Beeper Mini app from accessing its servers. Beeper Mini found a workaround that allowed Android users to access the iMessage service, meaning that their texts would appear in blue bubbles rather than green. The difficulties texting between Android and iOS have long frustrated people in group texts, although Apple has said it will get rid of the green bubbles next year… The authors are "concerned that Apple's recent actions to disable Beeper Mini harm competition, eliminate choices for consumers and will discourage future innovation and investment in interoperable messaging services." They also said they are worried that Apple's actions against Beeper Mini may "more broadly chill future investment and innovation from those that seek to compete with existing digital gatekeepers." Beeper Mini had initially figured out how to reverse engineer the iMessage protocol and support it on Android through falsified security IDs. The Beeper Mini app began to act up, and Apple released a statement confirming that it had blocked Beeper Mini's exploit for accessing the system. Beeper Mini adapted its method to work on Android, although it required users to have an Apple ID instead. The app's developers confirmed that it was still having technical problems and that it believed Apple was "deliberately blocking iMessages from being delivered" for some users. The company reported on Sunday that the app had been broken for "more than 60 hours." Apple announced in November that it was adding support for RCS, the preferred encryption protocol for Android, in 2024. It previously resisted giving Android users access to blue bubbles on security grounds. When asked what his plans were for amending the gap between iMessage and Android, Apple CEO Tim Cook told conference attendees to "get their mom an iPhone." The decision is believed to have been provoked by the European Union's attempt to crack down on Apple through the antitrust-focused Digital Markets Act."

I hope everyone has an amazing day!

TABLE OF CONTENTS

BACKGROUND 2

I. In 2023, under Musk's ownership, advertisements frequently appeared on X alongside racist, antisemitic, and violent content. 2

II. Media Matters and Hananoki reported on X's pattern of permitting the placement of advertisements alongside extremist content. 5

III. Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton issued a retaliatory civil investigative demand to Media Matters, but this Court enjoined its enforcement. 7

IV. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey issued a copycat demand, moved prematurely to enforce it in Missouri state court, and served abusive discovery. 9

V. Bailey's actions have chilled Plaintiffs' First Amendment–protected activities by subjecting them to a retaliatory investigation in a foreign jurisdiction. 15

ARGUMENT 17

I. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Bailey in his official capacity as Attorney General of Missouri. 17

A. The Court has long-arm jurisdiction over Bailey. 17

B. The Court has constitutional personal jurisdiction over Bailey. 23

II. Media Matters and Hananoki are likely to prevail on the merits of their claims. 25

A. Plaintiffs are likely to establish that Bailey retaliated against their constitutionally protected activities in violation of the First Amendment. 25

B. Plaintiffs are likely to establish that Bailey's Demand violates both the First and Fourth Amendments and the D.C. and Maryland shield laws. 32

C. Plaintiffs are likely to establish that the legal process against them in Missouri violates due process due to a lack of contact with that state. 36

III. Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable harm absent an order restraining Bailey's investigation and efforts to enforce his Demand. 37

IV. The remaining equitable factors strongly favor granting preliminary relief. 38

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTRODUCTION

This motion turns on questions the Court has already answered. On March 25, 2024, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey issued a civil investigative demand (the "Missouri Demand" or "Demand") to Plaintiff Media Matters for America. Less than three weeks later, this Court entered a preliminary injunction against a civil investigative demand (the "Texas Demand") issued by Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton. According to Bailey himself, he is coordinating with Paxton in his "war" against Media Matters and his Missouri Demand is "virtually identical" to Paxton's Texas Demand. Bailey's lawless investigation, like Paxton's before it, is a frontal assault on our "profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open." New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 270 (1964). Plaintiffs come to this Court once again seeking immediate relief to safeguard their constitutionally protected speech and press rights. The Court should take Bailey at his word about the nature of his investigation and grant Plaintiffs an immediate temporary restraining order against Bailey, as well as a preliminary injunction providing the same relief the Court has already granted against Paxton.

The few differences in the circumstances giving rise to the instant motion only make the need for relief against Bailey more apparent. Bailey moved prematurely to enforce his Demand by filing a state-court enforcement petition (the "Petition") before Media Matters was even aware of the Demand. Media Matters must respond in that action just days from now, on April 29. Bailey then doubled down on his abusive tactics by serving Media Matters with "Requests for Production" in the Missouri action that would require Plaintiffs to comply with nearly all the Demand's substance before his enforcement action is even resolved. These bad-faith tactics and Bailey's retaliatory Demand and Petition have caused and are causing Plaintiffs irreparable harm. Only the immediate entry of a temporary restraining order, followed by a preliminary injunction, will stave off further injury pending full and final resolution of the merits.

I. In 2023, under Musk's ownership, advertisements frequently appeared on X alongside racist, antisemitic, and violent content.

Elon Musk completed his purchase of the social media platform now known as X on October 27, 2022. He purchased the platform, purportedly, because of his belief that "it is important to the future of civilization to have a common digital square."[2] After taking control, Musk laid off approximately 80 percent of the platform's staff and downsized or eliminated critical teams responsible for overseeing platform policy, trust and safety, communications, and ethical AI. Compl. ¶ 26, ECF No. 1. He likewise laid off many of the content moderators responsible for keeping the platform free of harassment. Id. Musk's changes raised public alarm and sparked concern amongst lawmakers over the platform's ability to combat misinformation and hate speech.[3]

Under the auspices of promoting "free speech," Musk also suspended products and policies that protected users from misinformation and violent content. Compl. ¶ 27. He reinstated suspended accounts of known white supremacists and conspiracy theorists while suspending the accounts of journalists reporting on his air travel. Id. In the wake of Musk's breakneck changes to the social media platform, extremist, racist, antisemitic, and violent content surged on X. Id. ¶ 28. Within the first 12 hours of Musk's takeover, there was "a nearly 500% increase in the use of the [1] Although the Court is already familiar with much of the relevant background, including Musk's takeover of Twitter/X and Plaintiffs' subsequent reporting about extremism on that platform, Plaintiffs repeat some of that background here to ensure a fulsome record with respect to the claims against Bailey.

N-word." Id. Within the first week, use of the word "Jew" increased fivefold with antisemitic content receiving the most engagement. Id. Within just two months, the New York Times reported the following about the rise in hate speech on the platform:

- "Before Elon Musk bought Twitter, slurs against Black Americans showed up on the social media service an average of 1,282 times a day. After the billionaire became Twitter's owner, they jumped to 3,876 times a day."
- "Slurs against gay men appeared on Twitter 2,506 times a day on average before Mr. Musk took over. Afterward, their use rose to 3,964 times a day."
- "[A]ntisemitic posts referring to Jews or Judaism soared more than 61 percent in the two weeks after Mr. Musk acquired the site."

Id. ¶ 29. The platform likewise saw a renewed explosion of baseless conspiracy theories concerning, among other things, COVID-19 vaccines and QAnon. This spike in violent and extremist content on X, as well as Musk's drastic management changes, were widely reported on by a broad array of media outlets at the time. Id. ¶ 34 (collecting sources).

These developments quickly led to advertisers leaving the platform. Since "the early days of Musk's takeover, many of Twitter's largest advertisers—including the likes of General Mills and the Volkswagen Group—paused their spending over concerns about X's layoffs, content moderation capabilities and general uncertainty about the platform's future."[4] The result was a precipitous drop in X's revenue. In July 2023, Musk reported "a 50% decline in ad revenue and heavy debt load" and, in September, reported that advertising revenue was "still down 60%."[5] Still more advertisers began to flee X when the increasing hateful and violent rhetoric started appearing alongside their advertising, creating a false association between their brands and vile hate speech.

X's inability to control the placement of extremist content alongside advertisements was widely reported in the media, beginning soon after Musk's takeover. Examples include:

1. Reuters, "Advertisers react to Twitter's new ownership" (Nov. 18, 2022) ("Advertisers are grappling with Twitter's new ownership under Tesla boss Elon Musk, who once tweeted 'I hate advertising.'").
2. Washington Post, "Amazon, Uber ads appear on Twitter pages of white nationalists restored by Musk," Faiz Siddiqui (Dec. 6, 2022) ("Ads from dozens of major brands were appearing on white nationalist and extremist accounts.").

Compl. ¶ 34. This coverage occurred independently of Plaintiffs' reporting efforts, reflecting the widespread interest and discussion around hate speech in America's "digital town square."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

II. Media Matters and Hananoki reported on X's pattern of permitting the placement of advertisements alongside extremist content.

Since 2004, Media Matters has reported on misinformation and bias in the media. As part of its mission to educate the public about violent extremism and political rhetoric, Media Matters began researching and reporting on the rise in extremist and fringe content on X after Musk's changes to the platform. Eric Hananoki, a Senior Investigative Reporter at Media Matters whose beat includes political extremism, has for over a decade researched and written about extremist and violent rhetoric on social media platforms, often shining a spotlight on politicians and other public figures in the process. Declaration of Eric Hananoki ("First Hananoki Decl.") ¶¶ 2, 4, 6–9, ECF No. 4-3. His reporting has been widely cited and discussed in America's largest news outlets. Id. ¶ 5. And government agencies and public officials have relied on it in their work, including in a Department of Justice indictment, the Mueller Report on Russian interference in the 2016 election, and a bipartisan U.S. Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report. Id. ¶ 6. Even Paxton has previously relied on Hananoki's reporting. In 2020, Hananoki uncovered "tweets filled with racist rhetoric, violent threats" and conspiracy theories from an Assistant Attorney General in Texas, prompting Paxton's office to fire the employee. Id. ¶ 8.

Hananoki has reported on X—and before that, Twitter—for nearly a decade. Id. ¶ 9. In 2023, he wrote numerous articles about X concerning the marked increase in extremism on the platform after Musk's takeover. Id. ¶¶ 10–12. Hananoki's research and reporting has often focused on what advertisements X's users may encounter on the platform. Id. ¶ 12. Since February 10, 2023, Media Matters has published at least fourteen articles about X's placement of advertisements alongside hateful content, most of which were researched and written by Hananoki. Declaration of Benjamin Dimiero ("First Dimiero Decl.") ¶ 12, ECF No. 4-4. They include:

1. "Under Elon Musk, Twitter is running corporate ads alongside tweets from Holocaust deniers," (Feb. 10, 2023).

2. "Linda Yaccarino just started as Twitter's new CEO, but Elon Musk already destroyed the platform for advertisers," (June 8, 2023).
3. "Dish, Samsung, Wall Street Journal, and others are advertising on the Twitter account of a leading white nationalist group," (June 22, 2023).

Media Matters's reporting is consistent with the findings of other news sources—in the wake of Musk's purchase (and regardless of his intent), the X platform continued to allow the juxtaposition of advertisements alongside extremist content. Id. ¶ 13; see also First Hananoki Decl. ¶ 13. Hananoki employed ordinary and unremarkable investigative journalistic practices to investigate this issue, using an existing X research account controlled by Media Matters to follow white supremacist accounts and gauge how X's automated advertising algorithm would respond. AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Hananoki's November 16, 2023, article reported the results of his investigatory work, providing public examples of X's advertisement placement alongside extreme content and reporting on Musk's apparent endorsement of a widespread antisemitic conspiracy theory that Jewish people are seeking to promote "hatred against whites" and are seeking to "flood[] the[] country" with "hordes of minorities." First Hananoki Decl. ¶ 14. In researching, fact checking, and drafting the November 16 article, Hananoki complied with Media Matters's policies and used ordinary journalistic practices. First Dimiero Decl. ¶¶ 7, 11–12. Hananoki typically works from home in Maryland, but sometimes visits Media Matters's District of Columbia office for work-related purposes. First Hananoki Decl. ¶ 3.

In the months since this action was filed, reporting by other outlets has continued to bolster Hananoki's findings. For instance, just a few weeks ago, on April 16, NBC News released a report finding that at least "150 paid 'Premium' subscriber X accounts and thousands of unpaid accounts have posted or amplified pro-Nazi content on X in recent months, often in apparent violation of X's rules[.]" Ex. 1, Second Supplemental Declaration of Eric Hananoki ("Third Hananoki Decl.") ¶ 13.[6] NBC News found adds running on 74 of those 150 accounts, and cited Hananoki's earlier reporting about the same issue. Id.

III. Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton issued a retaliatory civil investigative demand to Media Matters, but this Court enjoined its enforcement.

Despite a year's worth of reporting by Media Matters and other outlets on X's inability to protect advertisers from extremist content, Musk singled out Hananoki's November 16 article reporting on Musk's apparent endorsement of an antisemitic conspiracy theory, for which Musk also received widespread condemnation by other news outlets. First Hananoki Decl. ¶¶ 14, 16–18. Two days after the article was published, with direct reference to Hananoki's article, Musk posted on X that he would file "a thermonuclear lawsuit against Media Matters." Id. ¶ 16.

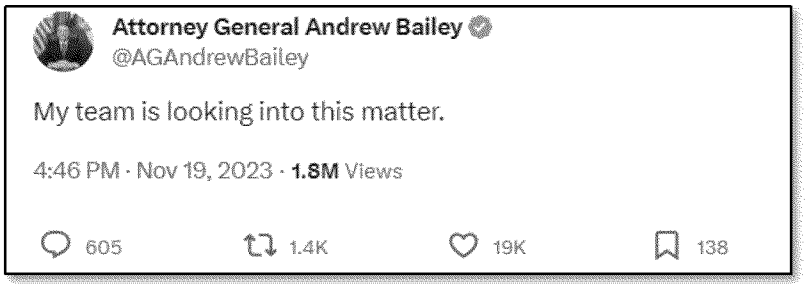
Certain conservative media and political figures—nearly all themselves prior subjects of Media Matters's reporting on political extremism—quickly urged retaliation against Media Matters. In particular, on November 19, 2023, President Trump's former advisor Stephen Miller declared, "There are 2 dozen+ conservative state Attorneys General," implying states should investigate Plaintiffs for their journalism. Compl. ¶ 46. Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton answered the call, announcing in a November 20, 2023, press release that he was launching an "investigation" into Media Matters under Texas's deceptive trade practices act, and issuing a sweeping civil investigative demand for Media Matters's internal and journalistic documents one day later, under the auspices of the same "investigation." ECF No. 4-5 at 5–13.

Plaintiffs filed this action on January 17, 2024, naming Paxton as the sole defendant. One day later, Plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction against Paxton. ECF No. 4. After Paxton confirmed that his office would take no steps to enforce the Texas Demand while the preliminary injunction motion was pending, ECF No. 11, the Court entered a Minute Order on January 23 denying the request for a temporary restraining order as moot. The Court then held a hearing on the preliminary injunction motion on February 15, and thereafter ordered supplemental briefing on whether Paxton, when sued in his official capacity, is a "person" within the meaning of the District of Columbia's personal jurisdiction statute, D.C. Code § 13-421.



On April 12, 2024, this Court granted a preliminary injunction against Paxton preventing him from taking any steps to enforce the Texas Demand or issue further demands. ECF Nos. 37,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

38. In doing so, the Court made various factual determinations, including that Paxton's issuance of the Texas Demand "had the effect of chilling Plaintiffs' expressive activities nationwide" and had "deprived D.C. residents [of] access to Plaintiffs' reporting." Mem. Op. at 22, ECF No. 37 (hereinafter "PI Op.").

IV. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey issued a copycat demand, moved prematurely to enforce it in Missouri state court, and served abusive discovery.

Paxton was not the only state attorney general to respond to Stephen Miller's call for retaliation against Media Matters. On November 19, 2023, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced that his "team [was] looking into" Plaintiffs' coverage of Musk and extremism on X. @AGAndrewBailey, X.com (Nov. 19, 2023, 4:46 PM ET), https://perma.cc/J463-656K.

Bailey subsequently issued a "Notice of Pending Investigation" on December 11, 2023, demanding that Media Matters preserve certain documents. ECF No. 39-3. But Bailey never formally served that Notice, instead electing only to email it to the generic email inbox "action@mediamatters.org." His press release announcing the Notice provided no explanation as to what possible basis he had for investigating or exercising jurisdiction over Media Matters, yet nonetheless lambasted the organization as a group of "progressive tyrants." ECF No. 39-4 at 4.

Although Bailey did not immediately take further retaliatory steps, he continued to attack Media Matters publicly. In one interview, on a YouTube show called "Cancel This!," Bailey claimed that "Media Matters is built on lies . . . It's a radical, progressive, tyrannical advocacy group masquerading as a news outlet." Third Hananoki Decl. ¶ 5.[7] He then described Media Matters as a weapon of "the enemy." Id. In another interview, on Newsmax, Bailey voiced no disagreement when host Rob Schmitt remarked about Media Matters that "these people are evil" and "these people should be deported for this." Id.[8] In a third interview, Bailey indicated that he had "coordinated with Texas," and was "in talks with other states as well" as part of the "new front in the war, in the fight for free speech." Id.[9]

Then, on March 25, 2024, months after this lawsuit was filed but before the preliminary injunction motion against Paxton was resolved, Bailey copied Paxton's playbook by issuing a civil investigative demand of his own. Missouri law grants Bailey the power to issue such demands in several narrow contexts. See, e.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040 (Merchandising Practices Act); id. § 407.472 (Charitable Organizations and Solicitations Act). As in Texas, the Missouri Attorney General is not required by statute to show probable cause or establish jurisdiction before issuing a civil investigative demand. Rather, state law authorizes him to do so, among other reasons, whenever he "believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation should be made." Id.

Bailey's Demand, like Paxton's, seeks to rifle through Media Matters's most sensitive internal documents—donor records, internal correspondence, and journalistic source material—in retaliation for Media Matters's reporting about X. See ECF No. 39-5. Among other things, it seeks names, home addresses, and donation amounts for Missouri-based donors to Media Matters; internal communications about sources and uses of donated funds; internal communications about strategy; and confidential source information related to Mr. Hananoki's reporting. Id. at 4–5. The Missouri Demand is, like the Texas Demand, incredibly broad in scope; for instance, it seeks several categories of documents without imposing any temporal limits on the requested production. See id.

The Missouri Demand is materially very similar to the Texas Demand, and in many respects is a word-for-word copy. Indeed, Bailey has described the Missouri Demand as "virtually identical" to the Texas Demand. ECF No. 39-6 ¶ 20. For instance, the Texas Demand sought "all of Media Matters for America's external communications with Apple Inc., International Business Machine Corporation (IBM), Bravo television network, NBCUniversal, Oracle Corporation, and Comcast Corporation, Lions Gate Entertainment Corporation, Warner Bros Discovery Inc., Paramount Pictures Corporation, and Sony Group Corporation from November 1, 2023 to November 21, 2023." ECF No. 1-4 at 7. The Missouri Demand similarly seeks "[a]ll communications with Apple, International Business Machine Corporation, Bravo Television Network, NBCUniversal, Oracle Corporation, Comcast Corporation, Lions Gate Entertainment Corporation, Warner Bros Discovery Inc., Paramount Pictures Corporation, or Sony Group Corporation from November 1, 2023, to March 25, 2024." ECF No. 39-5 at 5.[10]

Substantial evidence indicates that Bailey issued the Missouri Demand—and then immediately moved to enforce in court—to harass and retaliate against Plaintiffs, rather than for any good-faith investigative reason. For example, although more than three months passed

[10] This Court has previously noted the close relationship between the two investigations. In its decision enjoining Paxton, the Court noted that Bailey had "followed [Paxton's] lead" by "serving a 'virtually identical' CID on Media Matters and filing a petition to enforce it in Missouri state court." PI Op. at 5 n.3.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

between Bailey's Notice of Pending Investigation and his issuance of the Missouri Demand, Bailey apparently expended little investigative effort in that time. Neither the Missouri Demand nor the Petition seeking to enforce it identifies any new facts regarding Media Matters that have come to light in the three months since Bailey first announced that he was "looking into" Media Matters's reporting. Both documents simply regurgitate the vague and groundless accusations leveled at Media Matters in the Notice. Similarly, Bailey's press release announcing the escalation in harassment was short on facts and long on baseless invective directed at Media Matters and Hananoki. Among other things, it characterized Media Matters as a "political activist organization," described its reporting on X as "an "attempt to destroy X, because they [sic] cannot control it," and described its reporters as "radical 'progressives'" and "'progressive' activists masquerading as news outlets [sic]." ECF No. 39-7 at 4. And although Hananoki himself has not previously reported on Bailey, Bailey has, like Paxton, been the subject of critical reporting from Media Matters.[11] Bailey's Demand, much like Paxton's, thus reeks of opportunistic retaliation.

The sequence of events surrounding issuance of the Missouri Demand confirms that it is being used as a tool of harassment (and a failsafe against suspension of the Texas Demand), rather than for any good-faith investigative purpose. The Missouri Demand had a return date of April 15, 2024. ECF No. 39-5 at 3. Media Matters received the Demand by certified mail on April 1, 2024. Ex. 2, Supplemental Declaration of Cynthia Padera ("Second Padera Decl.") ¶ 6. Remarkably, Bailey filed an enforcement petition against Media Matters in Missouri state court on March 25—the same day he issued the Missouri Demand, a full week before Media Matters had even received the Demand in D.C., and several weeks before the return date. See ECF No. 39-6. That Petition, citing this case, claims an immediate enforcement action is appropriate because Media Matters has previously resisted Paxton's Demand. Id. ¶ 20. On Bailey's view, because Media Matters chose to vigorously defend its constitutional rights against Paxton rather than capitulate to his bullying, Bailey is free to disregard the basic dictates of due process—and even Missouri state law, see Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.090—by enforcing a Demand without even serving it. This rush to court further illustrates that Bailey issued the Missouri Demand chiefly to harass and punish Media Matters, rather than for any bona fide investigatory purpose. Indeed, as noted below, Bailey was fully aware of the case pending before this Court, and thus likely engineered the Missouri "investigation" as a backup should Paxton's virtually identical Demand be enjoined.

Bailey served the Petition by dispatching a process server to Media Matters's D.C. office on March 28, 2024. Second Padera Decl. ¶ 8. By that point, Bailey was well aware that such an action would likely subject him to this Court's jurisdiction. Plaintiffs had made Paxton's similar dispatch of a process server to serve his Demand the crux of their jurisdictional arguments to this Court. And Bailey was following this case closely—he relied on Plaintiffs' arguments in this case to rationalize his premature move to enforce his Demand. ECF No. 39-6 ¶ 20.

Although Bailey's Demand purports merely to be investigating Media Matters, the Petition goes much further, affirmatively alleging that Media Matters "has used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians." Id. at 2. But the Petition provides zero factual support for that inflammatory suggestion, asserting only that Bailey "has reason to believe" that Media Matters has somehow violated Missouri law. Id. ¶ 22. The Petition, echoing Bailey's press releases, describes Media Matters and its employees as "radical 'progressives" who are "attempt[ing] to destroy X, because they cannot control it," and as "activists masquerading as [a] news outlet[]."Id. at 2.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Petition indicates that Bailey intends to rely upon his authority under the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act ("MMPA") as the basis for issuing and enforcing the Demand. Id. ¶¶ 13–14, 16, 22–24; see also ECF No. 39-7 (accusing Media Matters of acting in direct violation of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act). Specifically, Bailey's Petition alleges that "Media Matters has engaged in trade or commerce [in Missouri] within the meaning" of the MMPA. ECF No. 39-6 ¶ 11. But Media Matters indisputably engages in no "trade or commerce" in Missouri. See Second Padera Decl. ¶¶17–25. The Missouri Supreme Court has made clear that the relevant portion of the MMPA applies only to "the protection of consumers who are the actual buyers in a sale." Ports Petroleum Co. of Ohio v. Nixon, 37 S.W.3d 237, 241 (Mo. 2001). Media Matters makes no "sales" and has no "actual buyers" in Missouri or elsewhere. See Second Padera Decl. ¶ 23. Bailey's choice to invoke authority under a law that, on its face, has no possible application to Media Matters further demonstrates that his conduct is not for any real investigative purpose, but instead is aimed at harassing and retaliating against Media Matters.

On April 15, 2024, the return date for the Missouri Demand, Media Matters replied to the Demand in a letter objecting to it in full. ECF No. 39-8. In that letter, Media Matters informed Bailey of this Court's granting of a preliminary injunction against Paxton's Texas Demand and requested that Bailey withdraw the Missouri Demand. Id. at 2. Bailey refused to withdraw the Demand in an email sent by one of his deputies on April 17, 2024. ECF No. 39-9. That email failed to explain the basis for Bailey's purported jurisdiction over Media Matters, nor did it acknowledge—let alone distinguish—this Court's preliminary injunction against Paxton's "virtually identical" Demand. Id. The only thing made clear by the email is that Bailey intends to proceed with his investigation and attempts to enforce the Missouri Demand regardless of this Court's preliminary injunction order against Paxton.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Plaintiffs moved for leave to file a supplemental complaint naming Bailey as an additional defendant on April 18, 2024. See ECF No. 39. This Court granted leave to file the supplemental complaint on April 24. See ECF No. 44.

Less than 24 hours after Plaintiffs sought leave to add him to this action, Bailey escalated matters further, serving Media Matters with Requests for Production that sweep as far as the Demand itself. Ex. 3, State's First Requests for Production to Respondent, Missouri ex rel. Bailey v. Media Matters for Am., No. 24AC-CC02291 (Cir. Ct. Cole Cnty Apr. 19, 2024). Bailey has not bothered trying to justify his entitlement to discovery into the substance of the Demand in an action filed to determine whether the Demand is enforceable. Bailey's view appears to be that he may short-circuit procedural norms at will: He may issue a Demand without any plausible allegation that Media Matters has violated Missouri law, file to enforce that Demand within a few minutes of dropping it at the post office, then use discovery in the enforcement action as a stalking horse to get everything sought by the Demand.

V. Bailey's actions have chilled Plaintiffs' First Amendment–protected activities by subjecting them to a retaliatory investigation in a foreign jurisdiction.

In granting the preliminary injunction against Paxton, the Court credited Plaintiffs' undisputed evidence of substantial chill, finding that "Plaintiffs are already suffering First Amendment harm in the form of chilled protected activities." PI Op. at 39 (emphasis in original); see also id. at 31 ("Through sworn affidavits, Plaintiffs have demonstrated the profound chilling impact that the CID has had on its news operations and journalistic mission."). The Missouri Demand and Petition have served their intended purpose, to magnify and compound that chill. See Third Hananoki Decl. ¶¶ 6–14; Second Padera Decl. ¶¶ 10–16; Ex. 4, Supplemental Declaration of Benjamin Dimiero ("Second Dimiero Decl.") ¶¶ 4–9. That effect is no surprise: Bailey himself has admitted that he is coordinating his "war" on Media Matters with Paxton and considers Media

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Matters to be a weapon of "the enemy." Third Hananoki Decl. ¶ 5. And Paxton expressly encouraged other Attorneys General to follow his lead, see Compl. ¶ 51, which Bailey has now done. In fact, Bailey has gone even further: The Missouri Demand, unlike the Texas Demand, is the subject of a pending enforcement action. It therefore represents a significant escalation. Moving to enforce creates an imminent possibility that Plaintiffs will be coerced into granting Bailey access to Plaintiffs' most sensitive papers.

Bailey's enforcement action is also in a foreign venue with which neither Media Matters nor Hananoki has any ties. Media Matters is not registered as a foreign corporation in Missouri because it does not "transact business" in Missouri. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 351.572; see Second Padera Decl. ¶ 19. Nor does it have a registered agent in Missouri. Second Padera Decl. ¶ 21. Further, Media Matters is not engaged in "the sale or advertisement of any merchandise in trade or commerce" in Missouri. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020; see Second Padera Decl. ¶ 23. Nor is it targeting any "solicitation of any funds for any charitable purpose" at Missouri. Mo. Rev. Stat §§ 407.020, .453; see Second Padera Decl. ¶¶ 24–25. Indeed, it is not even registered as a charity in Missouri because nearly two decades ago the Missouri Attorney General's Office itself concluded Media Matters was exempt from registration. ECF No. 39-11; see also Second Padera Decl. ¶ 20. Media Matters has never employed anyone in Missouri and has no physical presence in the state. Second Padera Decl. ¶¶ 18, 22. And Hananoki's reporting involved no contact with Missouri. Third Hananoki Decl. ¶ 8. Despite these readily ascertainable facts, Bailey's Petition seeking to enforce the Missouri Demand flatly asserts without support that "Media Matters transacts business in this county [i.e., Cole County, Bailey's home jurisdiction]." ECF No. 39-6 ¶ 5.

LEGAL STANDARD

To obtain a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, Plaintiffs must show: (1) likelihood of success on the merits; (2) likelihood of "suffer[ing] irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief;" (3) that "the balance of equities tips in [their] favor;" and (4) that "the injunction is in the public interest." Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008). When a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction is sought against the government, the last two requirements merge, "because the government's interest is the public interest." Pursuing Am.'s Greatness v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 831 F.3d 500, 511 (D.C. Cir. 2016); see also Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 435 (2009). The requirements for a preliminary injunction and for a temporary restraining order are the same. Experience Works, Inc. v. Chao, 267 F. Supp. 2d 93, 96 (D.D.C. 2003).

ARGUMENT

I. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Bailey in his official capacity as Attorney General of Missouri.

A. The Court has long-arm jurisdiction over Bailey.

The Court has statutory long-arm jurisdiction over Bailey under the same analysis it has already applied to Paxton. See PI Op. at 12–28. To begin, Bailey is a "person" under D.C. Code § 13-421. As the Court has already recognized, the D.C. civil-jurisdiction law's definition of "person" incorporates "the Ex parte Young legal fiction, which permits suits against a state official when the relief sought is to enjoin a constitutional violation." PI Op. at 12; see also Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 159–60 (1908). When Congress enacted § 13-421 in 1970, it would have understood "that the term 'person' included official-capacity defendants in suits involving injunctive relief." PI Op. at 13 (citing Merck & Co. v. Reynolds, 559 U.S. 633, 648 (2010)). Indeed, following analogous reasoning, the Supreme Court has imported the "longstanding Ex Parte Young fiction into its reading of § 1983." Id. at 14 (citing Will v. Mich Dep't of State Pol., 491 U.S. 58, 71 n.10 (1989)). And if "the post-Civil War Congress that enacted § 1983 would have understood the term 'person' to include state officials sued for injunctive relief, the Congress that enacted the D.C. long-arm provision nearly a century later would have as well." Id. When they are sued for injunctive relief under the Constitution, state attorneys general—including Bailey—are therefore "persons" for purposes of § 13-421.[12]

The Court may exercise long-arm jurisdiction over Bailey under both D.C. Code § 13-423(a)(1) and (a)(3). That statute provides, in relevant part, that "a District of Columbia court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person, who acts directly or by an agent, as to a claim for relief arising from the person's: (1) transacting any business in the District of Columbia; [or] (3) causing tortious injury in the District of Columbia by an act or omission in the District of Columbia[.]"[13]

[12] As the Court recognized, a contrary reading of "person" would "upend years of settled jurisdictional understanding and significantly constrain plaintiffs' ability to sue federal officials for injunctive relief" in D.C. federal court. PI Op. at 14. That's so because the term "person" underpins the D.C. Code's general jurisdiction provision, not just its long-arm statute. Id.; see also D.C. Code § 13-422. Affected categories of cases would include those against "non-resident federal officials who maintain their primary place of business in the District," against "non-resident WMATA official[s]," and against "federal officials acting under color of D.C. law." PI Op. at 14–15 (collecting cases). Reading the term "person" to foreclose such cases would "produce 'absurd results.'" Id. at 15 (quoting Mova Pharm. Corp. v. Shalala, 140 F.3d 1060, 1068 (D.C. Cir. 1998)). The Court properly declined Paxton's invitation to "read District of Columbia law in a way that would cast doubt on decades of federal court practice and jurisdictional reach." Id. at 16.

[13] The Court likely has long-arm jurisdiction over Bailey under subsection (a)(4) as well, as Bailey "regularly . . . engages in [a] persistent course of conduct" in the District in his official capacity as Missouri Attorney General. See, e.g., Ohio v. EPA, No. 22-1081, 2024 WL 1515001 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 9, 2024). But for present purposes, subsections (a)(1) and (a)(3) suffice to establish the Court's jurisdiction. See PI Op. at 19 (declining to reach subsection (a)(4) after finding jurisdiction proper with respect to Paxton under subsections (a)(1) and (a)(3)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Subsection (a)(1) – Transacting business in D.C. Bailey is subject to this Court's jurisdiction, for starters, because he has transacted business in D.C. and that business gave rise to Plaintiffs' claims. The "transacting business" prong extends to the limits of the Due Process Clause, so the statutory and constitutional analyses "merge into a single inquiry." United States v. Ferrara, 54 F.3d 825, 828 (D.C. Cir. 1995). The Due Process Clause is satisfied—and with it, subsection (a)(1)—if the defendant has "minimum contacts" with the forum such that the defendant "should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there." Thompson Hine, LLP v. Taieb, 734 F.3d 1187, 1189 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (quoting World-Wide Volkswagon Corp v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 287, 297 (1980)). "Such minimum contacts must show that 'the defendant purposefully avail[ed] [him]self of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws.'" Id. (quoting Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253 (1958)); see also PI Op. at 19. "It is now well-settled that the 'transacting any business' provision embraces those contractual activities of a nonresident defendant which cause a consequence here." Mouzavires v. Baxter, 434 A.2d 988, 992 (D.C. 1981) (citation omitted).[14]

Bailey has invoked the benefits and protections of the District's laws in at least two discrete ways. First, Bailey caused his abusive enforcement petition to be served upon Media Matters in the District by retaining and directing the activities of a professional process server in the District. As this Court held with respect to Paxton, and as many other courts have concluded, "the hiring of a process server creates an agency relationship between the attorney and process server, and that relationship establishes the attorney's presence in the jurisdiction to satisfy the 'minimum contacts' requirement." PI Op. at 20 (citing Schleit v. Warren, 693 F. Supp. 416, 419–20 (E.D. Va.

[14] As the Court concluded with respect to Paxton, jurisdiction under subsection (a)(1) is not limited to "only strictly commercial activity." PI Op. at 23.

1988); Balsly v. W. Mich. Debt Collections, Inc., No. 11-cv-642, 2012 WL 628490, at *5–7 (E.D. Va. Feb. 27, 2012); and Hamilton, Miller, Hudson & Fayne Travel Corp. v. Hori, 520 F. Supp. 67, 70 (E.D. Mich. 1981)). As these cases recognize, it is "reasonable to conclude that a lawyer who knowingly serves abusive process in a jurisdiction . . . is 'purposely avail[ing] himself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State.'" Schleit, 693 F. Supp. at 422–23 (quoting Luke v. Dalow Indus., Inc., 566 F. Supp. 1470, 1472 (E.D. Va. 1983)). Bailey's "hiring of a process server in the District of Columbia to effect service on Media Matters therefore created the requisite jurisdictional contacts with the District." PI Op. at 20 (citing Smith v. Jenkins, 452 A.2d 333, 335 (D.C. 1982)).

Second, Bailey's Demand, service of the Demand, and premature attempt to enforce the Demand established a "course of dealing with a D.C. resident." PI Op. at 20. Bailey knew that the Demand "would require negotiations with Media Matters' counsel," who are based in the District. Id. at 21. So, too, would bringing a premature enforcement action and serving improper and retaliatory discovery. And although Bailey's Demand purports to require Plaintiffs to comply "in person or via mail" in "Jefferson City, Missouri," ECF No. 39-5 at 4, the statute on which Bailey relies limits productions for inspection to "reasonable time[s] and place[s]," Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040. Bailey cites no authority for the unintuitive proposition that Jefferson City is a "reasonable place" for inspecting the sensitive records of a Washington, D.C.–headquartered media organization with no relevant ties to Missouri at all, never mind to Jefferson City. Bailey therefore knew or should have known that if Media Matters elected to comply with parts of his Demand, his agents would likely need to travel to the District of Columbia to conduct such inspection. Cf. PI. Op. at 21 (citing Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.61(e)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As with the claims against Paxton, "[t]he Fifth Circuit's decision in Grewal provides a close analogy to this case." PI Op. at 21. Grewal concerned the jurisdictional effects of the New Jersey Attorney General's sending a letter threatening action if a Texas business published certain files related to the 3D printing of firearms. Def. Distrib. v. Grewal, 971 F.3d 485, 488–89 (5th Cir. 2020). The Fifth Circuit concluded that the letter created sufficient minimum contacts with the State of Texas because the Attorney General "sought not merely to enforce New Jersey law but 'halt the company's activity nationwide, including activity that had no connection to New Jersey property or residents.'" PI Op. at 21–22 (quoting Bulkley & Assocs., LLC v. Dep't of Indus. Rels. Div. of Occupational Safety & Health of the State of Cal., 1 F.4th 346, 353–54 (5th Cir. 2021)) (alteration accepted). The court in Grewal explained that Texas courts had jurisdiction because the New Jersey Attorney General's actions had created a chilling effect felt in Texas, reducing "Texans' access to materials" the Texas company sought "to publish." Grewal, 971 F.3d at 495. Similarly, here, Bailey's issuance of the Demand, filing and service of the enforcement Petition, and issuance of abusive discovery all have chilled Media Matters in D.C., and have thereby "deprived D.C. residents [of] access to Plaintiffs' reporting." PI Op. at 22. "Thus, like the New Jersey Attorney General in Grewal, [Bailey] 'projected himself across state lines and asserted a pseudo-national executive authority' that makes exercising jurisdiction over him reasonable and does not offend principles of federalism. Id. (quoting Grewal, 971 F.3d at 493). He did so, moreover, after Paxton "call[ed] upon other Attorneys General to investigate Media Matters." Id. Bailey's and Paxton's abuses of authority go hand in hand and are both subject to this Court's jurisdiction under the "transacting business" prong of the D.C. long-arm statute.

Finally, Plaintiffs' claims for relief plainly "aris[e] from," D.C. Code § 13-423(b), Bailey's transacting of business in the District, see PI Op. at 19 n.6 (noting that Paxton did not bother to dispute this point). This requirement is interpreted "flexibly and synonymously with 'relate to' or having a 'substantial connection with.'" Shoppers Food Wearhouse v. Moreno, 746 A.2d 320, 335 (D.C. 2000). Plaintiffs' claims against Bailey plainly have a substantial connection with his hiring of a process server and directing of that agent's activities in the District, a necessary step for Bailey to enforce his Demand. And Plaintiffs' claims similarly arise from the Demand itself and the course of dealing within the District it necessitates.

Subsection (a)(3) – Causing tortious injury by act or omission in D.C. Separately, Bailey is subject to this Court's jurisdiction because he has caused tortious injury to Plaintiffs by acts taken within the District. As with Paxton, application of this provision is "straightforward," because Bailey's "service of process, through an agent, was an act in the District of Columbia that injured Plaintiffs' constitutionally protected interests." PI Op. at 25–26. In the tort context, "minimum contacts exist where a defendant takes 'intentional and allegedly tortious[] actions' 'expressly aimed' at a jurisdiction," Urquhart-Bradley v. Mobley, 964 F.3d 36, 48 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (quoting Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 789 (1984)), and the effects of those actions in the District of Columbia are not "some 'fortuitous' or 'unilateral' choice of the plaintiff's," id. (quoting Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 286 (2014)). That is the case here, as the service of the Petition is the action currently causing most of Plaintiffs' chill—it has created an imminent threat that Plaintiffs will be forced to turn over the materials Bailey seeks in the Demand. Although a process server served the petition on Bailey's behalf, the process server's in-forum acts are imputed to Bailey by virtue of the agency relationship. PI Op. at 26 (citing D.C. Code § 13-423(a)). As many courts have recognized, "if an out-of-state defendant causes abusive process to be served upon an in-state plaintiff, and the plaintiff subsequently sues the defendant in plaintiff's state," then

"personal jurisdiction exists over the out-of-state defendant." Vishay Intertech., Inc. v. Delta Int'l Corp., 696 F.2d 1062, 1067 (4th Cir. 1982); see also PI Op. at 27 (collecting cases). So too here.

B. The Court has constitutional personal jurisdiction over Bailey.

For constitutional purposes, specific personal jurisdiction exists where (i) the defendant has "purposefully directed" activity at residents of the forum and (ii) the plaintiff's claims "arise out of or relate to the defendant's contacts with the forum." Lewis v. Mutond, 568 F. Supp. 3d 47, 52 (D.D.C. 2021) (first quoting Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 472–73 (1985), and then quoting Bristol-Myers Squibb v. Super. Ct. of Cal., 582 U.S. 255, 262 (2017)). Even "a single act, so long as it creates [a] 'substantial connection,' is sufficient." Heller v. Nicholas Appelgate Cap. Mgmt. LLC, 498 F. Supp. 2d 100, 109–10 (D.D.C. 2007) (quoting Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. at 475).

This Court has at least three related bases to exercise jurisdiction over Bailey consistent with the demands of due process. First, Bailey has repeatedly entered the District of Columbia for purposes of his investigation, both by using a common carrier to physically deliver the Demand to Media Matters's headquarters, and then by procuring the service of an agent—a process server—and directing that agent to enter the District of Columbia to serve the Petition upon Media Matters. It is well-settled that "although physical presence in the forum is not a prerequisite to jurisdiction, physical entry into the State—either by the defendant in person or through an agent, goods, mail, or some other means—is certainly a relevant contact" for purposes of personal jurisdiction. Fiore, 571 U.S. at 285 (emphases added) (citation omitted); see also IMAPizza, LLC v. At Pizza Ltd., 334 F. Supp. 3d 95, 113 (D.D.C. 2018). The Court therefore has constitutional personal jurisdiction over Bailey for all the same reasons it has statutory personal jurisdiction under the "transacting business" prong of the D.C. long-arm statute. See supra Section I.A.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, Bailey's Demand seeks numerous categories of documents that he had reason to believe would be located primarily in the District, where Media Matters is headquartered. By demanding reams of documents stored, and in many cases created, in the District, Bailey has unquestionably "directed" activity at the District. Plaintiffs' claims, in turn, "are based on" Bailey's Demand and steps to enforce it. Grewal, 971 F.3d at 492.

Third, Plaintiffs allege unlawful retaliation in violation of the First Amendment, an intentional tort. In intentional-tort cases, specific jurisdiction exists where the defendant has "(1) committed an intentional act, (2) expressly aimed at the forum state, (3) causing harm that the defendant knows is likely to be suffered in the forum state." Menken v. Emm, 503 F.3d 1050, 1058 (9th Cir. 2007); see also Calder, 465 U.S. at 788–89. Here, jurisdiction is proper because Bailey has intentionally served a Demand and enforcement Petition on Media Matters in the District, causing a substantial and predictable chill to Media Matters. See infra Section II.A.

Again, the Fifth Circuit's decision in Grewal is directly on point. The court held there that the Attorney General of New Jersey had purposefully availed himself of Texas by issuing a cease-and-desist letter to a Texas company in Texas, thereby "project[ing] himself across state lines and assert[ing] a pseudo-national executive authority." 971 F.3d at 493. The plaintiffs in Grewal plausibly alleged the "letter had a chilling effect on the exercise of their First Amendment rights," which, "in turn, caused them to cease publication." Id. at 495. As the Fifth Circuit explained, "this alone constitutes purposeful availment" because "[t]he defendant is purposefully availing himself of 'the privilege of causing a consequence' in Texas." Id. at 493–94 (quoting Wien Air Alaska, Inc. v. Brandt, 195 F.3d 208, 213 (5th Cir. 1999)) (emphasis added). That is precisely the case here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

II. Media Matters and Hananoki are likely to prevail on the merits of their claims.

A. Plaintiffs are likely to establish that Bailey retaliated against their constitutionally protected activities in violation of the First Amendment.

"[T]he law is settled that . . . the First Amendment prohibits government officials from subjecting an individual to retaliatory actions . . . for speaking out." Hartman v. Moore, 547 U.S. 250, 256 (2006). "Official reprisal for protected speech 'offends the Constitution [because] it threatens to inhibit exercise of the protected right.'" Id. at 256 (quoting Crawford–El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 588 n.10 (1998)). It is "obvious" that efforts "to punish political speech by members of the press . . . run afoul of the First Amendment." El Dia, Inc. v. Rossello, 165 F.3d 106, 109 (1st Cir. 1999). The D.C. Circuit has long recognized First Amendment retaliation claims as "actionable" because "'retaliatory actions may tend to chill individuals' exercise of constitutional rights.'" Crawford-El v. Britton, 93 F.3d 813, 846 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (Henderson, J., concurring) (quoting ACLU of Md., Inc. v. Wicomico County, 999 F.2d 780, 785 (4th Cir. 1993)); see also Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593, 597 (1972). To prevail on their retaliation claim, Plaintiffs must show that "(1) [they] engaged in conduct protected under the First Amendment; (2) [Bailey] took some retaliatory action sufficient to deter a person of ordinary firmness in [Plaintiffs'] position from speaking again; and (3) a causal link between the exercise of a constitutional right and the adverse action." Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242, 258 (D.C. Cir. 2016). Plaintiffs are likely to prove each of these elements and prevail on the merits of their first claim. A declaratory judgment and injunctive relief are appropriate remedies for First Amendment injury. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201, 2202; Anatol Zukerman & Charles Krause Reporting, LLC, v. U.S. Postal Serv., 64 F.4th 1354, 1366–67 (2023); Hedgepeth ex rel. Hedgepeth v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Auth., 386 F.3d 1148, 1152 n.3 (D.C. Cir. 2004); Anderson v. Reilly, 691 F. Supp. 2d 89, 92 (D.D.C. 2010).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1. Media Matters's and Hananoki's newsgathering and reporting are protected First Amendment activities.

Media Matters is a nonprofit media watchdog group that provides journalistic research and investigative reporting on political extremism. Hananoki is a senior investigative reporter for Media Matters who covers political extremism, including extensive coverage of X's ongoing placement of advertisements on racist, antisemitic, and violent accounts on the X platform. Plaintiffs routinely investigate, publish, report, and comment on political extremism in American media, including on platforms like X. In particular, since Musk purchased X in October 2022, the platform has permitted advertisements to appear next to accounts that promote racist, antisemitic, and violent content. See supra Background, Section I. This development has been covered extensively, and not only by Plaintiffs. See supra Background, Section II. And X and Musk have invited this scrutiny by repeatedly framing X as the "digital town square" for public debate. See supra Background, Section I.

Plaintiffs' journalistic pursuits—about topics of public concern and discussion—are at the core of our First Amendment freedoms. "The protection given speech and press" by the First Amendment "assure[s] [an] unfettered interchange of ideas for the bringing about of political and social changes desired by the people." Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 484 (1957). This protection serves not only the news media itself, but society at large: "A broadly defined freedom of the press assures the maintenance of our political system and an open society," Time, Inc. v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374, 389 (1967). A free press is foundational to our "profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open." New York Times Co., 376 U.S. at 269–70 (explaining such "freedom of expression upon public questions is secured by the First Amendment"). Thus, as the Court has already determined with respect to Paxton, PI Op. at 35, Plaintiffs' reporting about X and Musk is unequivocally protected by the First Amendment. "Speech on matters of public concern is at the heart of the First Amendment's protection." Id. at 35–36 (quoting Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 451–52 (2011)).

2. Bailey's retaliatory conduct has compounded the chill Plaintiffs suffered because of Paxton's similar conduct.

Bailey, through his investigation and Demand, has taken "action sufficient to deter a person of ordinary firmness in [Plaintiffs'] position from speaking again." Aref, 833 F.3d at 258. The "cause of action targets conduct that tends to chill [First Amendment] activity, not just conduct that freezes it completely." Constantine v. Rectors & Visitors of George Mason Univ, 411 F.3d 474, 500 (4th Cir. 2005) (emphasis in original). Though not dispositive, Plaintiffs' "actual response" to the retaliatory conduct "'provides some evidence of the tendency of that conduct to chill First Amendment activity.'" Hartley v. Wilfert, 918 F. Supp. 2d 45, 54 (D.D.C. 2013) (quoting Constantine, 411 F.3d at 500. Plaintiffs are not required to "prove that the allegedly retaliatory conduct caused [them] to cease First Amendment activity altogether." Constantine, 411 F.3d at 500. It is sufficient to show—as Plaintiffs do—that Bailey's retaliatory acts would chill the First Amendment activity of similarly situated individuals and organizations of ordinary firmness.

The Court must "conduct this inquiry on a case-by-case basis, considering the actors involved and their relationship." Snoeyenbos v. Curtis, 60 F.4th 723, 731 (4th Cir. 2023). Here, as the result of their reporting about a company organized under Nevada law with its principal place of business in California, a non-profit news organization headquartered in Washington, D.C.—with most of its employees, including Hananoki, working within the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area—has been made subject to an investigation in Missouri seeking highly sensitive material regarding its funding, expenditures, organizational structure, communications with sources, and internal discussion of news stories. The investigation was initiated by the Missouri Attorney General without any showing that Plaintiffs violated that state's law or are even subject to its jurisdiction. Plaintiffs had no reasonable expectation of ever being subject to investigation by the Missouri Attorney General, never mind under the state's Merchandising Practices Act—Media Matters is a non-profit media organization, does not engage in trade or commerce with consumers, and neither it nor Hananoki has any relevant connection to the state of Missouri. Second Padera Decl. ¶¶ 17–25; Third Hananoki Decl. ¶ 8. Despite the plain lack of jurisdictional nexus, Bailey demands Plaintiffs turn over their most sensitive journalistic and organizational documents.

Bailey's explicit retaliation against Plaintiffs for news coverage and reporting would plainly "deter a person of ordinary firmness in plaintiff's position from speaking again," Aref, 833 F.3d at 258, particularly when paired with Bailey's constant stream of vitriol and solicitation of other state officials to join his retaliatory "war" on Media Matters. Indeed, the mere "threat of invoking legal sanctions and other means of coercion, persuasion, and intimidation" can be sufficient to tend to chill protected speech. Playboy Enters. v. Meese, 639 F. Supp. 581, 585 (D.D.C. 1986) (emphasis added) (quoting Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 67 (1963)); see also Shoen v. Shoen, 48 F.3d 412, 416 (9th Cir. 1995) (recognizing First Amendment harm from the "threat of administrative and judicial intrusion into the newsgathering and editorial process"). Here, Bailey's threats are backed up by the many enforcement powers he enjoys by virtue of his elected office—including, in particular, powers related to the enforcement of civil investigative demands. See, e.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.080; cf. PI Op. at 36–37.

And Bailey's conduct has already moved well beyond threats; after issuing the Demand, he filed an extremely premature action to enforce it and has now served Media Matters with abusive discovery. Courts have, naturally, found that the actual commencement of a threatened investigation constitutes actionable retaliation. Indeed, the Fourth Circuit found a plaintiff's speech chilled when a state board told him that "he and his website were under investigation" and that the board had "statutory authority" to modify what content he could put on his website—actions that pale in comparison with Bailey's conduct here. Cooksey v. Futrell, 721 F.3d 226, 237 (4th Cir. 2013). "A person of ordinary firmness would surely feel a chilling effect" under such circumstances. Id.; see also White v. Lee, 227 F.3d 1214, 1228 (9th Cir. 2000) (concluding government officials "unquestionably chilled the plaintiffs' exercise of their First Amendment rights" through a retaliatory investigation even though the officials "did not ban or seize the plaintiffs' materials, and . . . ultimately decided not to pursue either criminal or civil sanctions against them"). Similarly, courts have recognized the "chilling effect" of haling a party into a jurisdiction with which it has limited contacts. See, e.g., Tech. Patents, LLC v. Deutsche Telekom AG, 573 F. Supp. 2d 903, 917 (D. Md. 2008), aff'd sub nom. Tech. Patents LLC v. T-Mobile (UK) Ltd., 700 F.3d 482 (Fed. Cir. 2012).

Finally, although not dispositive, Plaintiffs' speech has been chilled by Bailey's conduct. See Hartley, 918 F. Supp. 2d at 53; Cooksey, 721 F.3d at 236 (finding plaintiff had "sufficiently shown that he has experienced a non-speculative and objectively reasonable chilling effect of his speech due to the actions of the State Board"); Turner v. U.S. Agency for Global Media, 502 F. Supp. 3d 333, 381 (D.D.C. 2020). Hananoki indicates that "Bailey's Demand, Petition, and his aggressive public statements about Media Matters" all have had "an extremely negative effect" on his journalistic work. Third Hananoki Decl. ¶ 10. Hananoki perceives Bailey's retaliation to be "even more aggressive" than Paxton's, and has continued to curtail his "investigative reporting and to self-censor in researching and drafting new articles" in response. Id. ¶¶ 10, 12. For instance, even though other news outlets, such as NBC News, have published follow-on investigations building on Hananoki's 2023 reporting on X, Hananoki himself has been unable to do so. Id. ¶¶

13–14. Similarly, Media Matters Editor-in-Chief Ben Dimiero attests that Paxton's actions had "stifled" Media Matters's "editorial process," and that Bailey's "are now contributing to and compounding that negative impact and disruption." Second Dimiero Decl. ¶ 5. Dimiero describes "a persisting sense on [Media Matters's] editorial team and in [its] organization that we must proceed extremely cautiously with our journalism or else face further legal retaliation that threatens our ability to operate." Id. ¶ 6. And he indicates that Bailey's investigation has "slowed [Media Matters's] output and hampered [its] ability to promptly publish coverage of emerging stories and topics." Id. ¶ 7; see also id. ¶¶ 8–9.

3. Bailey's retaliatory actions are a direct causal response to Plaintiffs' constitutionally protected activities.

Plaintiffs' commentary and reporting on X, and in particular Hananoki's November 16 article discussing Musk's apparent endorsement of an antisemitic conspiracy theory, caused Bailey's investigation. Bailey, like Paxton, first showed interest in Media Matters when Stephen Miller implied that some of the "2 dozen+ conservative state Attorneys General" should retaliate against Media Matters on Musk's behalf—Bailey's tweet that his "team" was "looking into" Media Matters was a direct response to Miller. Supra Background, Sections IV, V. And as with Paxton, Bailey's "initial press release establishes that [he] opened an investigation of Media Matters in response to its protected media activities." PI Op. at 37–38. In his December press release announcing his investigation, Bailey labeled Media Matters "[r]adicals" and "progressive tyrants" and accused them of "attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it." ECF No. 39-4 at 4. In interviews in the following days, he called Media Matters "a radical, progressive, tyrannical advocacy group masquerading as a news outlet" and a weapon of "the enemy." Third Hananoki Decl. ¶ 5 (collecting interviews). By Bailey's own account, he is "coordinating with Texas," and "other states as well" to fight what he sees as the "new front in the war." Id. Bailey continued to employ similarly charged language in his press release announcing the Demand and even in his enforcement Petition—a formal court filing. See ECF No. 39-7 at 4; ECF No. 39-6 at 3. His Petition, for instance, calls Media Matters a "political activist organization" and calls X "one of the last platforms dedicated to free speech in America." ECF No. 39-6 at 2. This is not the neutral and cautious language of a sincere, impartial investigation. As this Court put it, Bailey "has followed [Paxton's] lead," PI Op. at 5 n.3—including with respect to his motives driving his so-called investigation.

The Demand's substance also confirms that Bailey's retaliatory conduct is motivated by Plaintiffs' coverage of X and Musk. It demands that Plaintiffs turn over "[a]ll communications, internal and external, regarding your strategy to pressure advertisers into pulling advertisements from the social media platform, X"; "[a]ll documents discussing Elon Musk's purchase of X"; "[a]ll documents related to the article, or to the events described in the article, by Eric Hananoki entitled 'As Musk endorses antisemitic conspiracy theory, X has been placing ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle, and Xfinity next to pro-Nazi content'"; and various documents and communications related to Media Matters's and Hananoki's research into X and communications with X advertisers. ECF No. 39-5 at 4–5. These demands reflect Bailey's desire to rifle through Plaintiffs' files concerning their news coverage and reporting.

In short, as with Paxton, there is no serious dispute that but for Plaintiffs' constitutionally protected reporting on X, Bailey would not have launched his retaliatory investigation, issued his Demand, or filed and served his enforcement Petition. On that basis, Plaintiffs will show "a causal link between the exercise of a constitutional right and the adverse action." Aref, 833 F.3d at 258; see also Nieves v. Bartlett, 139 S. Ct. 1715, 1722 (2019).

Plaintiffs are therefore likely to prevail on their claim for unlawful retaliation.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

B. Plaintiffs are likely to establish that Bailey's Demand violates both the First and Fourth Amendments and the D.C. and Maryland shield laws.

Plaintiffs' First Amendment retaliation claim, on its own, is sufficient to warrant a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction. But Plaintiffs also face other imminent harms, captured by their other claims, that separately warrant immediate relief.

1. Constitutional Claims. Attorney General Bailey has demanded that Plaintiffs turn over a trove of their most sensitive documents and has sued them in Missouri in an attempt to force compliance. Bailey's wide-ranging Demand touches upon nearly every part of Media Matters's operations, including its organizational and employee structure; its use of "solicited donations"; its "operational expenses"; its "communications," both "internal and external," about strategy, operations, articles, research, and matters of public concern; its social media accounts on X; and its communications with employees at X and X's advertisers (including potential sources). ECF No. 39-5 at 4. Plaintiffs are likely to show this intrusive Demand violates both the First and Fourth Amendments.

The Fourth Amendment limits the scope of administrative subpoenas. Okla. Press Publ'g Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 208–11 (1946). Likewise, the First Amendment guards Plaintiffs from the compelled disclosure of materials that would chill their constitutional rights. Perry v. Schwarzenegger, 591 F.3d 1147, 1160 (9th Cir. 2010); Pebble Ltd. P'ship v. EPA, 310 F.R.D. 575, 582 (D. Alaska 2015) (subpoenas invalid when they have "the tendency to chill the free exercise of political speech and association which is protected by the First Amendment"). These twin constitutional guarantees often overlap; thus, where "the materials sought to be seized" by an administrative subpoena even "may be protected by the First Amendment," the requirements of the Fourth Amendment are applied with "scrupulous exactitude." Zurcher v. Stanford Daily, 436 U.S. 547, 564 (1978) (citing Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 485 (1965)) (emphasis added). "No less a standard could be faithful to First Amendment freedoms." Stanford, 379 U.S. at 485. That is especially true where, as here, no cause has been shown before demanding documents—such "unrestricted power of search and seizure [can] be an instrument for stifling liberty of expression." Marcus v. Search Warrants, 367 U.S. 717, 729 (1961).

Bailey's Demand seeks to pry into matters protected by the First Amendment and shows no trace of "scrupulous exactitude." Stanford, 379 U.S. at 485. Instead, it broadly seeks information about Plaintiffs' donors, sources of funding, and expenditures in a manner designed to chill Plaintiffs' speech and press activities. ECF No. 39-5 at 3–4. The Supreme Court has "long understood as implicit in the right to engage in activities protected by the First Amendment a . . . right to associate with others." Americans for Prosperity Found. v. Bonta, 141 S. Ct. 2373, 2382 (2021) (quoting Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 622 (1984)). The First Amendment thus "prohibit[s] . . . compelled disclosure" of documents about an organization's associational activities—including the compelled disclosures about members and donors—absent compliance with "exacting scrutiny." Id. at 2382–83, 2386 (holding California violated First Amendment by requiring disclosure of "donors' names and the total contributions" to charitable organization); see also NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 462 (1958) (membership lists); Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 64 (1976) (campaign contributions); Am. Fed'n of Lab. & Cong. of Indus. Orgs. v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 333 F.3d 168, 176 (D.C. Cir. 2003) (identities of employees and volunteers). Bailey has failed to demonstrate the "exacting scrutiny" and "scrupulous exactitude" required to obtain these types of materials. "It is contrary to the first principles of justice to allow a search through all the respondents' r[e]cords, relevant or irrelevant, in the hope that something will turn up." Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Am. Tobacco Co., 264 U.S. 298, 306 (1924) (Holmes, J.). This Court has the power to enjoin enforcement of such a constitutionally infirm subpoena. See

Local 1814, Int'l Longshoremen's Ass'n v. Waterfront Comm'n of N.Y. Harbor, 667 F.2d 267, 274 (2d Cir. 1981).

The Demand is also infirm because it seeks journalistic materials that are afforded significant constitutional protection. Bailey may not "rummage at large in newspaper files or [] intrude into or [] deter normal editorial and publication decisions" through his search. Zurcher, 436 U.S. at 566. In Zurcher, the officers lacked "any occasion or opportunity," id., for such rummaging because a judicially approved search warrant provided the necessary "exactitude" regarding the "First Amendment interests [that] would be endangered by the search," id. at 565. Bailey has not satisfied any such standard here, yet nonetheless seeks categories of notes and files on draft articles and communications with potential sources—clearly protected materials. See Lacey v. Maricopa County, 693 F.3d 896, 917 (9th Cir. 2012) (quashing "broad, invalid subpoenas demanding that the paper reveal its sources [and] disclose its reporters' notes"). The Demand is not "carefully tailored to avoid unnecessary interference with protected activities." Pebble Ltd. P'ship, 310 F.R.D. at 582 (quashing subpoena). Fundamentally, Bailey's investigation is targeted at speech and press activities that are afforded broad constitutional protection. Such "investigations premised solely upon legal activity are the very type of 'fishing expeditions' that were the target of Justice Holmes's assault in American Tobacco." Major League Baseball v. Crist, 331 F.3d 1177, 1187–88 (11th Cir. 2003) (concluding that CID violated Fourth Amendment and "that an investigation predicated solely upon legal activity does not pass muster under any standard"). And there is no question that Bailey means to enforce his Demand, because he has already taken steps to do so.

Plaintiffs are therefore likely to prevail on their claim that the Demand and Petition amount to an unlawful fishing expedition in violation of the First and Fourth Amendments.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

D.C. & Maryland Shield Laws. The Missouri Demand seeks information protected by the District of Columbia's shield law. D.C. Code §§ 16-4702, -4703. The D.C. shield law provides absolute protection against compelled disclosure of sources, id. § 16-4703(b), and qualified protection against compelled disclosure of other information, including "any news or information procured . . . in the course of pursuing [] professional activit[ies]," including notes, to the extent such information is not publicly disclosed, id. § 16-4702. See also Grunseth v. Marriott Corp., 868 F. Supp. 333, 336 (D.D.C. 1994). The shield law protects media organizations and their employees acting within the scope of a contract in any "news gathering or news disseminating capacity." D.C. Code § 16-4702. The Demand also seeks information protected by Maryland's analogous shield law. See Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 9-112(b)(1), (c)(2). The shield laws are grounds to quash or limit a subpoena. Grunseth, 868 F. Supp. at 336–37 (quashing subpoenas under the D.C. shield law); see also Equitable Tr. Co. v. State Comm'n on Human Relations, 411 A.2d 86, 99 (Md. 1980) ("It is well established that an enforcing court may limit through modification or partial enforcement subpoenas it finds to be unduly burdensome." (quoting Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Texaco, Inc., 517 F.2d 137, 149–50 (D.C. Cir. 1975)); Bice v. Bernstein, No. 93-CA-22258, 1994 WL 555379, at *1 (Md. Cir. Ct. Apr. 20, 1994) (quashing subpoena even where qualified disclosure test met).

Permitting attorneys general like Bailey to skirt another state's shield laws by misusing their statutory authority to issue administrative subpoenas violates basic principles of federalism and would make a mockery of state shield laws. The District of Columbia and Maryland both have a profound interest in protecting their residents from being made to answer outside their home jurisdictions—by states that obviously lack personal jurisdiction over such residents—and made to divulge documents protected by D.C. and Maryland law. Missouri may not "enact [] a policy for the entire Nation" by issuing CIDs that trample over another state's shield laws and deprive foreign residents of the benefits of such laws. See BMW of N. Am., Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 571 (1996).

Plaintiffs are therefore likely to prevail on their claim under the D.C. and Maryland shield laws.

C. Plaintiffs are likely to establish that the legal process against them in Missouri violates due process due to a lack of contact with that state.

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment "recognizes and protects an individual liberty interest" against being subjected to legal process in a jurisdiction with which one lacks meaningful contact. Ins. Corp. of Ireland, Ltd. v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702 (1982). Simply put, due process guards against forcing parties like Plaintiffs to "submit[] to the coercive power of a State that may have little legitimate interest in the claims in question." Bristol-Myers, 582 U.S. at 263. Such arbitrary imposition of a "State's coercive power" is "subject to review for compatibility with the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause." Goodyear Dunlop Tires Operations, S.A. v. Brown, 564 U.S. 915, 918 (2011). Plaintiffs are likely to show that they are not within the personal jurisdiction of Missouri, and thus not lawfully subject to Bailey's retaliatory investigation and attempts to coerce compliance with that investigation in Missouri state court.

Two flavors of personal jurisdiction exist: general and specific. See Ford Motor Co. v. Mont. Eighth Jud. Dist. Ct., 592 U.S. 351, 352 (2021) (citing Goodyear, 564 U.S. at 919). Plaintiffs are plainly not subject to general jurisdiction in Missouri—neither is domiciled or "fairly regarded as at home" in Missouri. Goodyear, 564 U.S. at 924; see supra Background, Section V.

Specific jurisdiction is lacking as well. Such jurisdiction requires "an affiliation[n] between the forum and the underlying controversy, principally, [an] activity . . . that takes place in the forum

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

State and is therefore subject to the State's regulation." Goodyear, 564 U.S. at 919 (first alteration in original). Mere "foreseeability of causing injury in another State" is not a "'sufficient benchmark' for exercising personal jurisdiction." Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. at 474 (quoting World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 295 (1980)). "Instead, 'the foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis . . . is that the defendant's conduct and connection with the forum State are such that he should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there.'" Id. (quoting World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S. at 297). The controversy here arises out of Plaintiffs' reporting and publishing on political extremism on X—work that occurred exclusively in D.C. and Maryland. No element of this work occurred in Missouri, required interaction with Missouri, or was purposefully directed towards—or intended to have an effect—in Missouri. See Second Padera Decl. ¶¶ 17–25; Third Hananoki Decl. ¶ 8. Indeed, Media Matters is exempt even from registering in Missouri, as Bailey's own office long ago acknowledged. ECF No. 39-11. Bailey's actions alone are what connects Plaintiffs to Missouri, but Bailey "cannot be the only link between" his chosen forum and Plaintiffs—"[r]ather, it is [Plaintiffs'] conduct that must form the necessary connection with the forum State" for that state to exercise jurisdiction. Fiore, 571 U.S. at 285.

Plaintiffs are likely to prevail on their claim that Bailey's investigation and premature attempt to enforce his Demand in state court violate due process.

III. Plaintiffs will suffer irreparable harm absent an order restraining Bailey's investigation and efforts to enforce his Demand.

"The loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury." PI Op. at 38 (quoting Pursuing Am.'s Greatness, 831 F.3d at 511). In granting Plaintiffs a preliminary injunction against Paxton, this Court credited Plaintiffs evidence that Paxton's CID had cause them "to self-censor when making research and publication decisions, adversely affected the relationships between editors and reporters, and restricted communications with sources and journalists." Id. Bailey's Demand and Petition, which arrived on Media Matters's doorstep shortly before this Court's order (and likely in anticipation of it, as a failsafe for getting at Plaintiffs' sensitive and privileged materials), has perpetuated and will continue to inflict those injuries absent this Court's intervention. See Third Hananoki Decl. ¶¶ 6–14; Second Padera Decl. ¶¶ 10–16; Second Dimiero Decl. ¶¶ 4–9; see also supra Background, Section V. And Bailey's service of abusive discovery in Missouri confirms what was already plain to see from his Demand and Petition: Plaintiffs' option to defend their rights in a foreign forum with which they have no meaningful ties does not cure or even significantly mitigate their injury. The Court should not let Paxton and Bailey—who, according to Bailey, are coordinating with one another—circumvent this Court's orders by means of sequencing tricks.

IV. The remaining equitable factors strongly favor granting preliminary relief.

The remaining equitable factors favor Plaintiffs. Both "factors [are] established when there is a likely First Amendment violation." Centro Tepeyac v. Montgomery County, 722 F.3d 184, 191 (4th Cir. 2013); see also Karem v. Trump, 960 F.3d 656, 668 (D.C. Cir. 2020) ("enforcement of an unconstitutional law is always contrary to the public interest" (quoting Gordon v. Holder, 721 F.3d 638, 653 (D.C. Cir. 2013))). "The public's interest in protecting First Amendment rights" is beyond dispute: "there is always a strong public interest in the exercise of free speech rights otherwise abridged by an unconstitutional" state action. Pursuing Am.'s Greatness, 831 F.3d at 511–12. That interest is heightened where, as here, First Amendment protections serve both Plaintiffs and the general public; "[a]n untrammeled press is a vital source of public information, and an informed public is the essence of working democracy." Minneapolis Star & Tribune Co. v. Minn. Comm'r of Revenue, 460 U.S. 575, 585 (1983) (cleaned up). Granting temporary relief will ensure that Plaintiffs may continue to participate in the "unfettered interchange of ideas for the bringing about of political and social changes desired by the people," Roth, 354 U.S. at 484, and further serves the public interest against government fishing expeditions, Leaders of a Beautiful Struggle v. Baltimore Police Dep't, 2 F.4th 330, 346 (4th Cir. 2021) (en banc); see also Klayman v. Obama, 142 F. Supp. 3d 172, 196 (D.D.C. 2015) ("Given . . . that plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits of their Fourth Amendment claim, the public interest weighs heavily in their favor.").

In contrast, granting preliminary relief will not harm Bailey. Because his investigation lacks any legitimate basis or connection to Missouri, he lacks any legitimate interest in continuing his investigation. Bailey "cannot legitimately claim to be 'harmed' as a result of being restrained from illegal conduct." Prysmian Cables & Sys. USA, LLC v. Szymanski, 573 F. Supp. 3d 1021, 1044 (D.S.C. 2021) (collecting cases). "If anything, the system is improved by such an injunction." Giovani Carandola, Ltd. v. Bason, 303 F.3d 507, 521 (4th Cir. 2002).

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court should grant Plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction. A proposed temporary restraining order is filed herewith.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTRODUCTION

How shocking it would be if the Missouri Attorney General asked a state court to issue an order preventing this Court from hearing this case. Yet Media Matters seeks exactly that extreme remedy, just in reverse. Media Matters does not dispute that it can raise all its claims and defenses in the ongoing proceeding in Missouri state court. It has already begun doing so. It filed a motion to exercise legal rights guaranteed by Missouri law, which the state court granted. Nevertheless, Media Matters now asks a federal court in the District of Columbia to enter an order that would force the courts of the State of Missouri to stop adjudicating an ongoing case. That is not only a transparent attempt to get two bites at the apple; it is also an astonishing attack on federalism.

The Supreme Court has not minced words, saying that the very thing Media Matters tries here imposes "evils" on federal courts. Huffman v. Pursue, Ltd., 420 U.S. 592, 608 (1975). It is thus no wonder that other federal courts regularly reject attempts by parties like Media Matters to challenge state subpoenas in federal court when a state proceeding is already ongoing. E.g., Backpage.com, LLC v. Hawley, No. 4:17-CV-1951, 2017 WL 5726868 (E.D. Mo. Nov. 28, 2017) (citing Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1971)). And rightly so. As the Supreme Court has long made clear, including recently, federal courts lack equity jurisdiction to issue orders that have the effect of shutting down existing state court proceedings. Media Matters can raise every one of its arguments in Missouri state court.

Nor can Media Matters prevail on any of the four traditional factors for equitable relief to obtain a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction.

First, Media Matters' contention that it will be harmed if the civil investigative demand for information and materials is enforced fails because there is no immediate enforcement right now. There is only an enforcement proceeding. The civil investigative demand—with which Media

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Matters has refused to comply—will not be enforced until Media Matters has had a full and fair opportunity to raise all its claims in state court. Unlike Media Matters' attempt to litigate here at breakneck speed, the Missouri Attorney General has not filed any emergency motion. There is no current injury at all, much less one imminently impending.

No better is Media Matters' assertion that it is injured by having to litigate the questions at all. Media Matters is going to litigate these questions in one forum or another. The only question is where. Media Matters asserts that Missouri courts "obviously lack personal jurisdiction" over Media Matters, and so any lawsuit filed in Missouri harms Media Matters. ECF 49-1 at 35. But Media Matters has already consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri state court by seeking (and obtaining) relief under state law. And Media Matters' argument is self defeating. In insists that this Court has jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General simply because he mailed something into the District. Id. at 23. Yet Media Matters does much more than that in Missouri. It writes articles about events in Missouri and circulates those articles in Missouri. Id. at 12 n.11. It distributes newsletters to the email addresses of residents of Missouri. And it solicits donations from residents of Missouri. If this Court has jurisdiction over the Attorney General because he mailed one document, then Missouri courts have jurisdiction over Media Matters ten times over.

Even stranger is Media Matters' retaliation claim. Media Matters bases its lawsuit on its contention that the Attorney General decided to "retaliat[e]" against Media Matters because Media Matters wrote one single article criticizing him. Id. at 12. That allegation is not just wrong; it is not even plausible. Like other statewide officials, the Missouri Attorney General is regularly criticized by other media outlets, and Media Matters cannot identify even a single instance where the Missouri Attorney General has responded with a civil investigative demand for information and materials. The reason is simple: the Attorney General filed the civil investigative demand not because Media Matters criticized him once, but to investigate whether Media Matters committed fraud or deception in soliciting donations from residents of Missouri. There is nothing illegal about investigating business deception or fraud, something the Attorney General does routinely as authorized by law. If Media Matters thinks otherwise, it is free to raise its arguments in the ongoing state court proceeding, rather than asking this Court to enter an extreme order preventing the State of Missouri, statutorily represented by the Attorney General, from litigating in its own courts.

I. Factual background

Although Media Matters presents itself as a charitable news organization, there is reason to believe it has engaged in fraud and deception to solicit donations from Missourians. Ex. A, Declaration of Steven Reed ¶¶ 6–11. Because investigations necessarily require some level of secrecy, the State of Missouri is not required to show its hand. As the Supreme Court has long held, the point of a pre-complaint investigation is to seek "information from those who best can give it and who are most interested in not doing so." United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 642 (1950). So courts routinely stress the need for investigations to "be conducted in secret"; indeed, the "person being investigated may not be aware of the proceedings." State ex rel. Rogers v. Cohen, 262 S.W.3d 648, 652–53 (Mo. 2008). Nevertheless, the State is able to discuss accusations and evidence that have already been made public.

Media Matters is credibly accused of defaming the social media platform X (formerly Twitter) by falsely representing that X routinely populates advertisements for brands like Apple, IBM, and Xfinity next to extremist, fringe content. Reed decl. ¶¶ 6–11. According to a lawsuit filed by X, Media Matters' statements were entirely and maliciously false. "Media Matters knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform." Complaint, X Corp. v. Media Matters for America, No. 4:23-cv-1175, ECF 1 ¶ 1 (N.D. Tex. Nov. 20, 2023). Media Matters did this by "manipulat[ing] the algorithms … to bypass safeguards." Id. ¶¶ 7–8. While Media Matters insisted that paid advertisements regularly "appeared alongside the fringe content," in fact that was true "for only one viewer (out of more than 500 million) on all of X: Media Matters." Id. ¶ 13 (emphasis in original); Reed decl. ¶¶ 8–10. Yet Media Matters' false "reporting" had the desired effect: advertisers withdrew from X in droves.

The brand-safety organization DoubleVerify recently debunked Media Matters' assertion, confirming that the allegation that X was regularly populating advertisements next to fringe content is false. The organization, "which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers," recently stated that X's "Brand Safety Rates" were nearly perfect—99.99%—during the very time when Media Matters accused X of regularly posting brand advertisements next to fringe content. Todd Spangler, DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months, Variety (Apr. 15, 2024);[1] Reed decl. ¶ 10.

Similarly, the federal district court overseeing the X lawsuit against Media Matters recently previewed that the court believes X's lawsuit should proceed toward trial. In rejecting Media Matters' request to stay discovery, the court held that, on a preliminary view, "it appears that Plaintiff [X Corp.] sufficiently pleads facts supporting its claims." X Corp., Order denying motion to stay discovery, ECF 54 at 8.[2] The court further noted that Media Matters' argument on the merits was the "weakest" argument it had presented. Id.

II. The Missouri Attorney General launched an investigation based on well-established statutory authority.

Media Matters has substantial connections with Missouri. As Media Matters acknowledges, it writes articles about events in Missouri. ECF 49-1 at 12 n.11. It distributes a newsletter to thousands of readers in Missouri. Cf. Johnson v. TheHuffingtonPost.com, Inc., 21 F.4th 314, 318 (5th Cir. 2021) (prohibiting exercising jurisdiction when a website is merely available in a venue, but permitting exercising jurisdiction when a media organization does more, such as "interact[ing] with its visitors" in that venue). And though it denies "specifically targeting Missouri" in its nationwide fundraising drives, it implicitly concedes that it solicits donations from Missourians. ECF 49-3 ¶¶ 24–25.

"The Missouri Attorney General's Office discovered that Media Matters not only distributes its newsletter in Missouri, but engages in internet and email solicitations, phone solicitations, and in-person solicitations for fundraising." Reed decl. ¶ 7. In its public financial disclosures, Media Matters identifies Missouri "as a state in which it 'is registered or licensed to solicit contributions or has been notified it is exempt from registration.'" Id. (quoting Form 990, Media Matters (2021)).[3] Because of Media Matters' extensive activities in Missouri, it "specifically communicated with the Missouri Attorney General's Office to seek an exemption from registration for its fundraising in Missouri." Reed decl. ¶ 7. Missouri law permits 501(c)(3) organizations to solicit donations without registering. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.456.2(6).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Missouri Attorney General grew concerned about the representations that Media Matters provides to Missourians as it solicits donations and whether those representations are unlawfully deceptive. For example, if Media Matters misrepresents what it intends to do with donations or misrepresents the nature of the company as it solicits donations, that is a hand-in-glove violation of Missouri's consumer protection statute, which forbids "[t]he act, use or employment by any person of any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise in trade or commerce or the solicitation of any funds for any charitable purpose." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020. This statute is broad. Its words "cover every practice imaginable and every unfairness to whatever degree." Ports Petroleum Co., Inc. of Ohio v. Nixon, 37 S.W.3d 237, 240 (Mo. 2001).

So the State of Missouri, through the Attorney General, launched an investigation into whether Media Matters violated Missouri law when soliciting donations from Missourians. Reed decl. ¶ 11. The Missouri Attorney General "routinely" investigates potential violations of Missouri's consumer protection statutes, and begins those investigations with a civil investigative demand for information and materials "dozens" of times each year. Id. ¶¶ 4, 11. Missouri's statute gives the State authority to investigate (1) whenever "it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in or is engaging in any method, act, use, practice or solicitation declared to be unlawful by this chapter" or (2) whenever "he believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation should be made to ascertain whether a person in fact has engaged in or is engaging in any such method, act, use, practice or solicitation." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040.

Using this authority, the State issued a "civil investigative demand, or "CID" to Media Matters by mail. Id. ¶ 12. A CID is an administrative subpoena. State ex rel. Koster v. Charter

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Communications, Inc., 461 S.W.3d 851, 855–57 (Mo. App. W.D. 2015). Then, because Media Matters had already made its position clear that it would not comply with any CID related to its in-state solicitations and false statements about X unless forced by a court to do so, the State of Missouri filed an enforcement action in state court. Id. ¶ 14. Missouri law permits a party in litigation to avoid waiting to take action when doing so would be futile. E.g., New Eng. Carpenters Pension Fund v. Haffner, 391 S.W.3d 453, 460 (Mo. App. S.D. 2012).

III. Media Matters began exercising its legal rights in Missouri state court.

Media Matters has already begun defending itself in Missouri state court. For example, Missouri law grants any party the legal right to exercise one peremptory strike against a judge. State ex rel. Manion v. Elliott, 305 S.W.3d 462, 464 (Mo. 2010) ("Rule 51.05 grants a party the absolute right to disqualify a judge once without cause or any showing of prejudice."). The very first thing Media Matters chose to do in the litigation in state court was not to contest personal jurisdiction, but instead to exercise this legal right. On the same day an attorney for Media Matters entered its appearance in state court, the company moved to transfer the case to a new judge in state court. Motion, Missouri v. Media Matters, 24AC-CC02291 (Apr. 18, 2024).[4] Then Media Matters scheduled a hearing on the motion.[5] The motion was granted.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I. The Court should abstain under Younger and dismiss. Younger is jurisdictional and, except in extraordinary circumstances, requires federal courts to dismiss federal lawsuits that would have the practical effect of enjoining state court proceedings. Here, there is an ongoing enforcement proceeding in state court. Binding Supreme Court precedent requires this Court to presume that forum is adequate, and Media Matters does not deny that it will receive a full and fair opportunity to present its defenses in state court. Indeed, Media Matters has already consented to personal jurisdiction in state court. Missouri law requires a defendant to object to personal jurisdiction at the "first opportunity." Media Matters declined, instead opting to first exercise other legal rights. It has already filed, and received, legal relief in the ongoing enforcement proceeding.

[5] https://www.courts.mo.gov/fv/c/Notice%20of%20Hearing.PDF?courtCode=19&di=3131778

The Supreme Court has said there are some (exceedingly narrow) exceptions to Younger, but Media Matters does not plead or argue that those apply here. As Media Matters bears the burden, the issue is waived. In any event, the "bad-faith" exception applies only to accusations of bad faith about state court judges, not prosecutors. Similarly, Media Matters does not and cannot contend that Missouri's statute is "patently invalid." It has been in place for 60 years and has repeatedly survived legal challenges under federal law. No exception to Younger applies.

II. Media Matters has not established personal jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General. The D.C. long-arm statute does not extend to merely using a process-server to serve a lawsuit. And personal jurisdiction here would violate the Due Process Clause. Courts regularly conclude that a defendant does not "purposefully avail" themselves of a forum merely by sending mail into that forum. Media Matters' argument is also deeply ironic. It contends that merely sending mail into D.C. subjects the Missouri Attorney General to personal jurisdiction, but then it flatly states that Missouri courts "obviously" lack jurisdiction over Media Matters even though Media Matters' contacts with Missouri are far more substantial. Media Matters admits, for example, that it solicits donations from residents in Missouri.

III. Other jurisdictional issues similarly doom Media Matters' case. Media Matters seeks prospective injunctive relief, but to do that, it must establish that it lacks an adequate remedy other than an injunction by this Court. It cannot do so. The Supreme Court has already held that there exists an adequate remedy when a party is able to challenge a request for documents in state court. Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964). Unlike under Texas law, which this Court determined did not permit Media Matters to challenge the CID, Missouri law expressly authorizes Media Matters to challenge the CID in state court.

Media Matters also has not established ripeness. As the Ninth Circuit concluded, where a CID is not self-executing and a party can raise its defenses in state court, an action in federal court challenging the CID is not ripe. Twitter, Inc. v. Paxton, 56 F.4th 1170 (9th Cir. 2022).

IV. Media Matters is unlikely to succeed on the merits. Under binding Supreme Court precedent, a retaliation claim can proceed only if the government action could not be justified by any legitimate motive. For example, the existence of probable cause necessarily defeats a claim of retaliatory arrest—no matter the arresting officer's motive. Nieves v. Bartlett, 139 S. Ct. 1715 (2019). Here, there is probable cause that Media Matters has been deceptive. Moreover, the Supreme Court has held that adverse actions are not actionable if they are "immaterial." Merely having to litigate in state court instead of federal is not a material injury.

The other claims by Media Matters—which this Court declined to accept with respect to Texas—are similarly meritless. The First Amendment case law cited by Media Matters expressly permits using subpoenas to seek this kind of information; the state shield laws do not apply extraterritorially; and while a court's alleged inability to exercise personal jurisdiction is grounds for a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff does not commit a constitutional tort by suing somebody in that venue. Media Matters has also failed to develop many of these arguments. They are thus waived.

V. Media Matters has no irreparable harm because it has an adequate remedy in state court.

VI. The balance of equities favors Missouri. Media Matters' harms are self-inflicted, and its attempt to enjoin state courts from proceeding would impose grave harms to federalism.

ARGUMENT

"[A] preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion." Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (emphasis in original) (quoting 11 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2948, pp. 129–130 (2d ed. 1995)). The preliminary injunction factors are well established: plaintiffs must show (1) they are "likely to succeed on the merits"; (2) they are "likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief"; (3) "the balance of equities tips in [their] favor"; and (4) "an injunction is in the public interest." Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008) (citations omitted). The first factor—success on the merits—includes demonstrating a likelihood of establishing jurisdiction. See Food & Water Watch, Inc. v. Vilsack, 808 F.3d 905, 913–14 (D.C. Cir. 2015). Here, Media Matters cannot establish jurisdiction or any of the other factors for a preliminary injunction.

I. Younger Abstention Applies and Dismissal is Required.

The claim against the Missouri Attorney General is crucially different from the claim against the Texas Attorney General in a dispositive respect: there is an ongoing proceeding to enforce the CID in state court. When a public official initiates a proceeding in state court, federal courts must, "except in extraordinary circumstances," abstain from suits that would interfere with that ongoing state proceeding. JMM Corp. v. District of Columbia, 378 F.3d 1117, 1120 (D.C. Cir. 2004). This doctrine is "treated as jurisdictional." Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Envt., 523 U.S. 83, 100 n.3 (1998) (citing Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1971)). And "[w]here the Younger requirements are met, the appropriate remedy is dismissal." J. & W. Seligman & Co. Inc. v. Spitzer, No. 05CIV.7781, 2007 WL 2822208, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 27, 2007).

The reason for abstention is both practical and compelled by foundational concepts of federalism. On the practical side, when a state proceeding is already ongoing, abstention "avoid[s] a duplication of legal proceedings." Sprint Commun., Inc. v. Jacobs, 571 U.S. 69, 77 (2013). More importantly, abstention ensures "a proper respect for state functions." Id. "[I]nterference with a state judicial proceeding prevents the state not only from effectuating its substantive policies, but also from continuing to perform the separate function of providing a forum competent to vindicate any constitutional objections interposed against those policies." Huffman v. Pursue, Ltd., 420 U.S. 592, 604 (1975). This interference also "can readily be interpreted 'as reflecting negatively upon the state courts' ability to enforce constitutional principles.'" Id. (citation omitted).

Although the doctrine originally was announced in the criminal context, it has been clear for 50 years that a lawsuit in federal court that would interfere with a civil action in state court also poses a "threat to our federal system," so Younger "is thus applicable to a civil proceeding such as this quite as much as it is to a criminal proceeding." Id. at 604; see also id. ("offense to the State's interest"). The most recent Supreme Court case on Younger abstention identified three categories of state proceedings warranting abstention. "First, Younger precluded federal intrusion into ongoing state criminal prosecutions. Second, certain civil enforcement proceedings warranted abstention. Finally, federal courts refrained from interfering with pending civil proceedings involving certain orders uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 78 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Here, the enforcement action in Missouri state court fits within both the second and third categories.

A. The second Younger category applies.

The enforcement proceeding in Missouri is a "civil enforcement proceeding[ ]" within the scope of Younger abstention. Sprint defines the subset of civil enforcement proceedings that satisfy Younger as those civil proceedings that are "'akin to a criminal prosecution' in 'important respects.'" Id. at 79. The "important respects" are that the ongoing proceeding is initiated by the State (rather than a private party) and seeks to enforce state law against a private actor. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Specifically, "[i]n cases of this genre, a state actor is routinely a party to the state proceeding and often initiates the action," "[i]nvestigations are commonly involved," and "[s]uch enforcement actions are characteristically initiated to sanction the federal plaintiff, i.e., the party challenging the state action, for some wrongful act." Id. The ongoing action in Missouri meets these indicia.

First, the enforcement action was "initiated by 'the State in its sovereign capacity.'" Id. at 80 (citation omitted). The caption of that case is State of Missouri, ex rel. Andrew Bailey v. Media Matters. ECF 39-6. The Missouri Attorney General is authorized by state law to "institute, in the name and on the behalf of the state, all civil suits and other proceedings at law or in equity requisite or necessary to protect the rights and interests of the state, and enforce any and all rights, interests or claims against any and all persons, firms or corporations." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 27.060. The Missouri Attorney General has done so on behalf of the State here.

Second, Media Matters acknowledges that the case initiated by the State involves an investigation. Missouri law specifically authorizes "the AG to issue CIDs in its investigation of possible violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act." Charter Communications, 461 S.W.3d at 856 (citing Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040); see also Reed decl. ¶ 4.

And third, the enforcement action was brought to enforce state law against "the party challenging the state action, for some wrongful act." Specifically, Media Matters, as a company that solicits donations from residents of Missouri, is required to "comply with the terms [of the CID] unless otherwise provided by an order of a court" in Missouri. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.080. The enforcement action was undertaken to force Media Matters to abide by its legal duty and reverse its illegal refusal to comply.

Other courts have abstained in similar circumstances. For example, the Supreme Court invoked Younger "to bar a federal court from entertaining a lawyer's challenge to a New Jersey state ethics committee's pending investigation of the lawyer." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 81 (citing Middlesex Cnty. Ethics Comm. v. Garden State B. Ass'n, 457 U.S. 423, 433–35 (1982)). Similarly, the Supreme Court invoked Younger when Ohio opened a proceeding to enforce a state nuisance law. Huffman, 420 U.S. at 595. Lower courts also regularly apply Younger when a party files a federal lawsuit to challenge application of a state's consumer-protection law. E.g., Cedar Rapids Cellular Tel., L.P. v. Miller, 280 F.3d 874, 882 (8th Cir. 2002) (abstaining from a lawsuit seeking to "enjoin the Attorney General from taking any action ... to enforce" Iowa consumer-protection law); cf. PDX N., Inc. v. Commr. New Jersey Dept. of Lab. and Workforce Dev., 978 F.3d 871, 881–82 (3d Cir. 2020) ("The trial court correctly dismissed PDX's case but erred in dismissing SLS's case because, for SLS, there was no ongoing judicial proceeding.").

Even more on point, courts regularly abstain when a state has issued CIDs or other subpoenas and then opened a state court proceeding to enforce the subpoena. The Backpage case, which involved the Missouri Attorney General, is on all fours with this one. There, the Missouri Attorney General served a CID on a company, Backpage, and then filed a state lawsuit to enforce the CID. Just like here, Backpage filed a federal lawsuit several weeks later, "asking the Court to 'enjoin and declare unlawful' AG Hawley's efforts to investigate." Backpage, 2017 WL 5726868, at *3. And just like here, Backpage argued that the investigation violated the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments, as well as Missouri's consumer-protection statute (the MMPA). Id. The court ruled that abstention was required because of the existing proceeding in state court, so the court dismissed the case. Id. at *1, 13.

Many other cases apply the same analysis and abstain. While Texas did not initiate a proceeding to enforce its CID this time, when Texas does so, courts abstain. A court did so just three months ago in a suit brought against the Texas Attorney General, because Texas initiated a proceeding in state court, meaning that "federal action would have the practical effect of enjoining the state proceedings." Yelp Inc. v. Paxton, No. 23-CV-04977-TLT, 2024 WL 413464, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 1, 2024); see also, e.g., Berrada Properties Mgt. Inc. v. Romanski, 608 F. Supp. 3d 746, 750 (E.D. Wis. 2022) (abstaining in action "to quash the CIDs" even though state court action was filed later than the federal action); Seligman, 2007 WL 2822208, at *6 ("Younger's 'ongoing proceeding' requirement was 'clearly satisfied' when a state agency charged with investigating and administratively prosecuting violations of New York's lobbying laws issued subpoenas").

The critical fact is whether a state enforcement proceeding exists. For example, in Google, Inc. v. Hood, the Fifth Circuit determined that Younger abstention was improper largely because Mississippi CIDs are "non-self-executing" and yet the Mississippi Attorney General had "not moved to enforce the administrative subpoena in any state court." 822 F.3d 212, 223 (5th Cir. 2016) (emphasis added). Missouri CIDs also "are not self-enforcing," Backpage, 2017 WL 5726868, at *6, but unlike in Google, the Missouri Attorney General has filed an action in state court to enforce the CID. Younger abstention thus applies. Sprint, 134 S. Ct. at 593.

B. The third Younger category also applies.

The Missouri state court action also falls within the third category identified by Sprint. Citing its prior decision in Juidice v. Vail, 430 U.S. 327 (1977), the Sprint Court explained that Younger abstention applies to state proceedings that "touch on a state court's ability to perform its judicial function." Sprint, 134 S. Ct. at 592. Vail involved a federal action challenging a state-court proceeding to enforce a subpoena. 430 U.S. at 329–30. The Supreme Court held that the federal district court was required to abstain under Younger because the plaintiff, by challenging the ability of a state court to enforce a subpoena, attacked the "process[ ] through which [the state] vindicates the regular operation of its judicial system." Id. at 335. "Moreover," the Court explained, a federal-court lawsuit challenging such proceedings "unduly interferes with the legitimate activities of the State." Id. at 336 (quotation and brackets omitted).

So too here. Like in Vail, Media Matters attacks the ability of Missouri courts to enforce subpoenas. The state-court action here involves an attempt to enforce a subpoena issued under state law. See Charter Communications, 461 S.W.3d at 855–57 (explaining that CIDs constitute administrative subpoenas). Indeed, this case strikes closer to the core concerns of Younger, because while the subpoena in Vail was issued by a private litigant, 430 U.S. at 329, the subpoena here was issued by the State acting in its sovereign law-enforcement capacity.

The federal court in Backpage squarely held that federal actions seeking to block Missouri CIDs fall within the third Younger category. Backpage, 2017 WL 5726868, at *6. As the court there recognized, Missouri "state courts play a significant role in the investigation and prosecution of unlawful merchandising practices." Id. at *7. In Missouri, "CIDs are not self-enforcing." Id. at *6. Instead, the Attorney General must rely on courts to enforce CIDs. Id. at *7 ("If the recipient of a CID fails to comply with its demands, the attorney general may file in state court a petition 'for an order of such court for the enforcement' of the CID,' .... Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.090."). Because a "request that the Court enjoin AG [Bailey]'s efforts to investigate and prosecute potential violations of the MMPA necessarily affects functions performed by the state court ... the third Sprint category also requires this Court to abstain." Id. at *8.

Similarly, Lupin Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Richards, No. 15-1281, 2015 WL 4068818 (D. Md. July 2, 2015), is directly on point. In Lupin, the target of a CID served by the Alaska Attorney General filed a federal-court action challenging the CID. Id. at *2. The Alaska Attorney General, in turn, filed a state-court action to enforce the CID under Alaska Stat. § 45.50.592(g), which is nearly identical to Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.090. Id. Applying the Sprint framework, the district court concluded that the state-court enforcement proceeding "clearly" warranted abstention under Younger. Id. at *3.

C. The ongoing proceeding in Missouri state court implicates important state interests and affords Media Matters an adequate opportunity to raise its federal claims.

Once a court has determined that one of the three Younger categories applies, the Supreme Court has said the court may consider three "additional factors": whether there is "(1) an ongoing state judicial proceeding, which (2) implicates important state interests, and (3) provides an adequate opportunity to raise federal challenges." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 81 (alterations accepted; internal quotation marks and emphasis omitted). All three are met here.

The first factor is obviously met. Media Matters brought this suit to stop the ongoing state-court proceeding. The state-court matter was filed before Media Matters sued the Missouri Attorney General, but even if Media Matters had sued first, the D.C. Circuit has concluded that a state action need not be filed first. JMM, 378 F.3d at 1126 (abstaining under Younger even though the local action was filed "two months after" the federal action); see also Aaron v. Target Corp., 357 F.3d 768, 775 (8th Cir. 2004) ("no fixed requirement in the law that a state judicial proceeding must have been initiated before the federal case was filed for abstention to be appropriate").

The second factor similarly is met. It is well recognized that a state "has an important interest in enforcing its consumer protection statutes." Cedar Rapids Cellular, 280 F.3d at 879–80; Credit One Bank, N.A. v. Hestrin, 60 F.4th 1220, 1232 (9th Cir. 2023) ("Hestrin's state action seeks to enforce the state's consumer protection laws, undoubtedly an important interest."); Yelp, 2024 WL 413464, at *3 ("Texas has an interest in protecting its consumers from 'deceptive trade practices.'"). In addition, "[w]here the state is in an enforcement posture in the state proceedings, the 'important state interest' requirement is easily satisfied, as the state's vital interest in carrying out its executive functions is presumptively at stake." Potrero Hills Landfill, Inc. v. Cnty. of Solano, 657 F.3d 876, 883–84 (9th Cir. 2011). The State is both "in an enforcement posture" and is "enforcing its consumer protection statutes," so the second factor is "easily satisfied." Id. The ongoing proceeding also "implicates important state interests" because enforcing CIDs is part of "a state court's ability to perform its judicial function." Sprint, 134 S. Ct. at 592; see also Vail, 430 U.S. at 335 ("the regular operations of its judicial system … is surely an important interest").

Likewise, the third factor is easily met: Media Matters has "an opportunity to present [its] federal claims in the state proceedings." Vail, 430 U.S. at 337. Media Matters "carries the burden of demonstrating that the Missouri proceedings do not provide 'an adequate o pportunity' for it to raise constitutional claims." Geier v. Missouri Ethics Comm'n, 715 F.3d 674, 678–79 (8th Cir. 2013). But Media Matters has not disputed that it has that opportunity. In fact, it has already successfully moved in state court to exercise its legal rights under Missouri law. And "a federal court should assume that state procedures will afford an adequate remedy, in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary." Pennzoil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 481 U.S. 1, 15 (1987).

The Missouri Merchandising Practices Act specifically provides Media Matters an opportunity to petition "to modify or set aside the civil investigative demand." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.070. The deadline to do so was April 15, 2024. ECF 39-6 at 8. The statute also gives Media Matters the opportunity to seek extension of that deadline. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.070. And of course, Media Matters can assert its claims defensively in response to the State's enforcement action. CID recipients routinely raise challenges under federal law in proceedings involving Missouri's consumer protection statute. E.g., State ex rel. Ashcroft v. Goldberg, 608 S.W.2d 385, 388 (Mo. 1980) (Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments).

Abstention is especially necessary "to avoid unwarranted determination of federal constitutional questions." Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 11. Media Matters disputes the Missouri Attorney General's interpretation of Missouri law. Supp. Compl. ¶¶ 27, 30. If Media Matters prevails, it would render the federal constitutional claims moot. "Younger abstention in situations like this 'offers the opportunity for narrowing constructions that might obviate the constitutional problem and intelligently mediate federal constitutional concerns and state interests.'" Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 12 (citation omitted). In other words, if Media Matters prevails on its statutory arguments, constitutional issues would disappear. Failure to abstain, in contrast, might result in "a reading of the statute that is not binding on state courts and may be discredited at any time—thus essentially rendering the federal-court decision advisory." Moore v. Sims, 442 U.S. 415, 428 (1979); see also Berrada Properties, 608 F. Supp. 3d at 751 (federal intervention is "doubly offensive" because "it requires the Court to make the first pass at several Wisconsin statutory provisions"). Because the controversy between the State of Missouri and Media Matters involves disputed issues of state law, state courts should have the first opportunity to adjudicate the controversy.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

D. Media Matters has waived the issue whether any exception to abstention applies, and in any event, no exception applies.

The Supreme Court has recognized "narrow exceptions to the doctrine that federal courts should not interfere with state" proceedings. Huffman, 420 U.S. at 602. But "[i]t is the plaintiff's 'heavy burden' to overcome the bar of Younger abstention." Weitzel v. Div. of Occupational and Prof. Licensing of Dept. of Com. of State of Utah, 240 F.3d 871, 877 (10th Cir. 2001).[6] Media Matters, however, tellingly has not even mentioned Younger abstention, much less pleaded or argued that an exception applies, even though Texas, in its opposition to Media Matters' motion to supplement the complaint, explained that "adding Attorney General Bailey as a defendant in Indiana*, 502 F.3d 590, 596 (7th Cir. 2007); Plouffe v. Ligon, 606 F.3d 890, 893 (8th Cir. 2010); Leonard v. Alabama State Bd. of Pharm., 61 F.4th 902, 908 (11th Cir. 2023).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

this case would require this Court to consider the relevance of the existing Missouri proceedings. Cf. Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1971)." ECF 40 at 3. Media Matters has thus waived this issue. Power Co. of Am., L.P. v. FERC, 245 F.3d 839, 845 (D.C. Cir. 2001) ("This argument was not raised in PCA's opening brief and is therefore waived.").

In any event, Media Matters could not establish any exception. Younger recognized that there might be narrow exceptions to abstention in criminal cases for "bad faith, harassment, or a patently invalid state statute." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 77. But these are very "narrow exceptions." Huffman, 420 U.S. at 602. And none applies here.

Consider "bad faith" and "harassment." Courts and treatises typically treat these together as one exception, not two. E.g., Perez v. Ledesma, 401 U.S. 82, 97 (1971) (Brennan, J., concurring) ("bad-faith harassment"); Wright & Miller, 17B Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 4255 (3d ed.) (same); id. n.6 ("one cannot readily imagine either good-faith harassment or bad-faith without harassment" (citation omitted)). This exception is incredibly narrow. So narrow, in fact, that "the universe of bad-faith harassment claims that can be established is virtually empty." Id. § 4255 (citation omitted). "There is no case since Younger was decided in which the [Supreme] Court has found that the exception for bad faith or harassment was applicable." Id. It is not even clear the exception applies in civil cases at all. "While the Supreme Court has not ruled out use of the bad faith exception in civil cases, it has never directly applied the exception in such a case and we have only recognized it in the criminal context." Aaron, 357 F.3d at 778 (internal citation omitted).

One reason it is narrow is because it "requires a showing of bad faith on the part of the state court judges," not the state officials who brought the enforcement action. Wright & Miller, § 4255 n.11 (emphasis added). Specifically, the Supreme Court in Vail held that the bad-faith harassment exception did not apply even though "some paragraphs of the complaint could be construed to make such allegations as to the" parties who brought the state action. Vail, 430 U.S. at 338. The reason, the Supreme Court said, is because "there are no comparable allegations with respect to [the state court] justices" in that state court proceeding. Id. The Supreme Court immediately went on to say, "This exception may not be utilized unless it is alleged and proved that they [state judges] are enforcing the contempt procedures in bad faith or are motivated by a desire to harass." Id. (emphasis added).

The requirement that the "bad-faith harassment" exception is triggered only when judges act in bad faith makes sense. Our federalist system presumes that state courts are adequate to the job, Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 15, so even if an executive official could be shown to have brought an action in bad faith, our system presumes that state courts will be able to adjudicate all defenses to that action just as well as if the action were brought in federal court, see id. Media Matters has not, and cannot, establish bad faith by Missouri court judges—who have so far made no rulings in the ongoing state court proceeding other than to grant Media Matters' motion to change judges.

The same is true with the "patently invalid statute" exception. Media Matters has not alleged, and cannot allege, that Missouri's consumer-protection statute is "patently invalid." The statute has been in place for 60 years and has repeatedly survived constitutional challenge. E.g., State ex rel. Nixon v. Telco Directory Pub., 863 S.W.2d 596, 600 (Mo. 1993); State v. Shaw, 847 S.W.2d 768, 776 (Mo. 1993). In any event, even "facial invalidity of a statute is not itself an exceptional circumstance justifying federal interference." Huffman, 420 U.S. at 602. The statute must "be flagrantly and patently violative of express constitutional prohibitions in every clause, sentence and paragraph, and in whatever manner and against whomever an effort might be made to apply it." Id. (citation omitted). Media Matters plainly cannot satisfy this arduous standard.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The closest Media Matters gets to asserting any exception is to assert that the CID was not issued for "any good-faith investigative reason" because the CID and the lawsuit "apparently" do not "identif[y] any new facts" discovered since November. ECF 49-1 at 11–12 (emphasis omitted). But as Media Matters acknowledges right before that, state law does not require a CID to state these things. Id. at 10 ("[T]he Missouri Attorney General is not required by statute to show probable cause or establish jurisdiction before issuing a civil investigative demand.").

Similarly, Media Matters asserts there is no "good-faith investigative purpose" because Missouri moved to enforce the CID on the same day that Missouri issued the CID. Id. at 12–13. But that was permitted by Missouri law because waiting would have been futile; Media Matters had already made clear in its public statements and position in the lawsuit against Texas that it would not comply with any CID served by Missouri. Reed decl. ¶ 14. Media Matters' actions since have proven Missouri correct. In any event, the timing of Missouri's complaint in state court is irrelevant to the validity of the underlying investigation.

Neither of these accusations is against the courts of Missouri, and so even if the Court credited them, they would fail as a matter of law. But even setting aside that issue, other courts have repeatedly stressed that the "burden" of establishing bad faith "is heavy, as these exceptions are narrow." Yelp, 2024 WL 413464, at *4 (quotation omitted). In Yelp, for example, the court abstained even after determining that "Yelp's allegations of bad faith tell a persuasive story": the State had conducted only a "thin investigation," had entirely flipped its position, and was pursuing an enforcement action over a statement "even though it conceded that the [statement] is accurate." Id. at *5–6. The court said it was "not convinced that Paxton acted entirely in good faith," but all the evidence of bad faith was still insufficient to meet the arduous, narrow exception to Younger—so narrow that the Supreme Court has never found the exception satisfied.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

E. Media Matters consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri state court.

Abstention is especially warranted here because Media Matters already consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri courts. Media Matters asserts repeatedly that Missouri courts "obviously lack personal jurisdiction" over it. E.g., ECF 49-1 at 35. That was always wrong, but it is especially wrong following Media Matters' filings in that case.

Missouri law is clear that a defendant waives personal jurisdiction if the defendant does "not immediately raise any objection to personal jurisdiction." Everett v. Vance, 685 S.W.3d 495, 502 (Mo. App. W.D. 2023). "Personal jurisdiction 'is waived if not raised at the first opportunity.'" Id. (citation omitted) (emphasis added). The only exceptions are for entries of appearance and motions for extensions of time. E.g., State ex rel. Antoine v. Sanders, 724 S.W.2d 502, 505 (Mo. 1987).

Media Matters did not challenge personal jurisdiction at its "first opportunity." Instead, it exercised its legal right under Missouri law to exercise a peremptory strike against a state court judge. It filed a motion to do so, which was granted, and it scheduled a court hearing on that motion. Media Matters was of course entitled to avail itself of that legal right under Missouri law, but its decision to do so before challenging personal jurisdiction necessarily waived the issue because it is well settled that a party "waive[s] its right to contest personal jurisdiction by seeking affirmative relief from the trial court." Bland v. IMCO Recycling, Inc., 67 S.W.3d 673, 678 (Mo. App. S.D. 2002). As relevant here, "[t]he filing of a motion for change of judge constitutes seeking affirmative relief from the court," so Media Matters "has voluntarily submitted himself to the court's jurisdiction and is estopped from challenging the lack of personal jurisdiction." Rollins Burdick Hunter of Utah, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees of Ball State U., 665 N.E.2d 914, 919 (Ind. App. 1996).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

F. Fundamental limits on federal equity reinforce the need to abstain.

Failure to abstain would run headlong into foundational limits on federal court equity jurisdiction. As the Supreme Court reiterated recently, equity "does not normally permit federal courts to issue injunctions against state-court judges or clerks." Whole Woman's Health v. Jackson, 595 U.S. 30, 39 (2021). "As Ex parte Young put it, 'an injunction against a state court' or its 'machinery' 'would be a violation of the whole scheme of our Government.'" Id. (quoting Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 163 (1908)). Abstention is required because granting Media Matters relief would have the same effect as an injunction against the state courts of Missouri.

To be sure, Media Matters has not named a state court as a party, but the effect is the same. No abstention case the Supreme Court has decided has involved a suit against a court, and yet the Supreme Court has repeatedly stressed that abstention is necessary to avoid federal interference with a state court's "function of providing a forum competent to vindicate any constitutional objections." Huffman, 420 U.S. at 604. Regardless of who the party is, the effect is the same: Media Matters seeks an order here that would shut down the courts of Missouri.

II. There is No Personal Jurisdiction and, Therefore, the Case Should Be Dismissed.

This Court also lacks personal jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General. For personal jurisdiction, the court "must first examine whether jurisdiction is applicable under the state's long-arm statute and then determine whether a finding of jurisdiction satisfies the constitutional requirements of due process." GTE New Media Servs. Inc. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1347 (D.C. Cir. 2000). "The District of Columbia 'long-arm statute' enumerates the various acts of a nonresident defendant which support the assertion of personal jurisdiction." Mouzavires v. Baxter, 434 A.2d 988, 990 (D.C. Cir. 1981). Personal jurisdiction comports with due process only when the defendant has "minimum contacts with the forum state such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'"

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Int'l Shoe Co. v. State of Wash., Off. of Unemployment Comp. & Placement, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945).

A. Plaintiffs have not satisfied the long-arm statute.

Here, Plaintiffs have not met the personal jurisdiction threshold under the District of Columbia long-arm statute. The applicable long-arm statute, D.C. Code § 13-423, provides in relevant part:

> (a) A District of Columbia court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person, who acts directly or by an agent, as to a claim for relief arising from the person's –
> (1) transacting any business in the District of Columbia;
> . . .
> (3) causing tortious injury in the District of Columbia by an act or omission in the District of Columbia[.]

Id. Plaintiffs assert personal jurisdiction under both (a)(1) and (a)(3).[7]

Subsection (a)(1) does not support jurisdiction. Missouri, acting through its Attorney General, has not transacted business in the District merely by hiring a process server to serve a lawsuit. If that were the case, then parties, including sovereign states, could never sue an out-of-state entity with sufficient minimum contacts but without a registered agent in the state, without subjecting themselves to a corresponding retaliatory lawsuit filed in the state of service. This is not purposefully engaging in "some type of commercial or business-related activity directed at District residents." Holder v. Haarman & Reimer Corp., 779 A.2d 264, 270–71 (D.C. 2001). Nor [7] The State of Missouri, like Texas, asserts that the State does not fall under the D.C. long-arm statute, because it is not a "person," as provided in the statute.

Media Matters briefly suggests that another provision, subsection (a)(4), is also satisfied because the Missouri Attorney General is a party to a proceeding in the D.C. Circuit, but Media does not press that argument "for present purposes." ECF 49-1 at 18 n.13. In any event, it is wrong. The Missouri Attorney General does not subject himself to permanent jurisdiction in D.C. merely by participating in an unrelated lawsuit that is required to be filed in the D.C. Circuit.

is it "any continuing corporate presence in the forum state directed at advancing the corporation's objectives." AMAF Int'l Corp. v. Ralston Purina Co., 428 A.2d 849, 851 (D.C. 1981).

There is also no personal jurisdiction under subsection (a)(3) because Plaintiffs fail to establish that the Missouri Attorney General's alleged tortious conduct occurred in D.C. The CID was prepared in Missouri and relates to conduct of Media Matters in Missouri. Missouri did not hire a process server in D.C. for the CID, but instead mailed it from Missouri. And the Missouri lawsuit served in D.C. is merely the statutorily-authorized process provided for seeking enforcement because of Media Matters' refusal to respond to a request for information. Further, the investigation is occurring in Missouri and is inquiring into potential violations of Missouri consumers' rights. That is not alleged tortious conduct in D.C., but an investigation of unlawful conduct in Missouri.

Media Matters cannot get around these stubborn facts by misrepresenting state law and Supreme Court precedent. Media Matters says that Missouri's law simply authorizes "inspection" of documents and asserts that the Attorney General "would likely need to travel to the District of Columbia for such inspection." ECF 49-1 at 19. But Missouri law says that documents shall be "produce[d]," not inspected, and must be produced at the "place as may be stated in the civil investigative demand," which is Missouri. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040. Media Matters also misstates Supreme Court precedent as holding that any mailing satisfies personal jurisdiction. ECF 49-1 at 23. But the case cited merely states that sending something through the mail is "a relevant contact," not a sufficient contact. Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 285 (2014). A mail-order business may satisfy sufficient contacts, but D.C. courts have repeatedly held that merely "mailing a letter or other material into Washington, DC from outside of the District does not qualify as an 'act . . . in the District of Columbia within the meaning of subsection (a)(3)." Slate v. Kamau, No.

20-CV-3732 (BAH), 2021 WL 3472438, at *6 (D.D.C. Aug. 6, 2021) (internal citations omitted); accord Moncrief v. Lexington Herald-Leader Co., 807 F.2d 217, 219–22 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (holding that "no act occurred within the District of Columbia" when "the libelous article was printed, and the newspapers were mailed, outside of the District of Columbia.").

Media Matters suggests there is a chill caused by receiving a CID in the mail inquiring about conduct in another state. Not so. The D.C. Circuit explicitly rejects the theory that the "injury is part of the tort" for the purpose of the long-arm statute "because such a theory would obliterate subsection (3)'s careful distinction between injury' and act." Forras v. Rauf, 812 F.3d 1102, 1107 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Dyson v. Dutko Ragen Homes & Investments, No. 21- CV-02280 (APM), 2022 WL 1294484, at *4 (D.D.C. Apr. 27, 2022) (noting that "limited communications initiated from outside the District of Columbia to a District resident do not qualify as an act 'in the District' for purposes of § 13-423(a)(3)").

Media Matters' "chilling" argument also proves far too much. Under that argument, Media Matters could sue in D.C. even if the State of Missouri had served the CID and lawsuit on Media Matters outside D.C. Media Matters has not provided any support for its idea that there is personal jurisdiction against the defendant wherever the allegedly injured plaintiff might reside. That would turn personal jurisdiction on its head. "[T]he plaintiff cannot be the only link between the defendant and the forum." Walden, 571 U.S. at 286.

B. Personal jurisdiction here would violate the Due Process Clause.

Personal jurisdiction in this case also does not meet the requirements of Due Process because the Missouri Attorney General, on behalf of the State of Missouri, does not have minimum contacts. Goodyear Dunlop Tires Operations, S.A. v. Brown, 564 U.S. 915, 923 (2011). There is neither general jurisdiction—where a defendant is "essentially at home" in the forum state—nor specific jurisdiction, based on the contacts between the defendant, the forum state, and the controversy. See Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 415–16 (1984); Ford Motor Co. v. Montana Eighth Jud. Dist. Ct., 141 S. Ct. 1017, 1024–25 (2021). Media Matters does not contend that the Court has general jurisdiction.

Nor is there specific jurisdiction. Missouri did not "purposefully direct" conduct at the forum state "such that [it] should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there." Lewis v. Mutond, 62 F.4th 587, 591 (D.C. Cir. 2023) (citation omitted). "[A] plaintiff's claims must "aris[e] out of or relat[e] to the defendant's contacts with the forum." Id. (citation omitted). But Media Matters alleges no such thing.

Indeed, Media Matters alleges even fewer contacts by Missouri than the already minimal contacts alleged of Texas. While this Court found it meaningful that Texas delivered its CID through a process server, ECF 37 at 26, Missouri delivered its CID through the mail. If "email and telephone communications sent into the District of Columbia are not sufficient" for personal jurisdiction, Associated Producers, LTD v. Vanderbilt U., 76 F. Supp. 3d 154, 165 (D.D.C. 2014), then neither is snail mail. E.g., Exponential Biotherapies, Inc. v. Houthoff Buruma N.V., 638 F. Supp. 2d 1, 9 (D.D.C. 2009) ("HB's telephone calls, emails, facsimiles and mailings, including invoices, to EBI's D.C. office are insufficient to subject it to this Court's personal jurisdictio n."). To be sure, Missouri used a process server for its state enforcement action, but Media Matters challenges much more than that. And if using a process server to serve a lawsuit is sufficient (it is not), then Media Matters has subjected itself to personal jurisdiction in Missouri by using a process server to serve its complaint on the Missouri Attorney General. ECF 48.

First Amendment concerns do not change or even enter into the personal jurisdiction analysis. See Moncrief, 807 F.2d at 222–24. To the extent Media Matters believes it experienced a heightened chill because the State of Missouri exercised its sovereign authority, that similarly does not affect the personal jurisdiction analysis. The default rule is that state agencies should not "have to defend [their] attempt to enforce [state] laws"—much less mere investigations under those laws—"in courts throughout the nation." Stroman Realty v. Wercinski, 513 F.3d 476, 487 (5th Cir. 2008); accord Music Makers Holdings v. Sarro, No. RWT-09-cv1836, 2010 WL 2807805, at *5 (D. Md. July 15, 2010) ("[R]ecent out-of-circuit court of appeals decisions have analyzed the issue in a variety of contexts and have uniformly held that cease-and-desist letters alone do not establish personal jurisdiction."). For these reasons, there is no personal jurisdiction.

C. Media Matters' jurisdictional argument is self-defeating.

A critical lynchpin of Media Matters' entire lawsuit is its bold assertion that Missouri courts "obviously lack personal jurisdiction" over Media Matters. ECF 49-1 at 35. Yet Media Matters' arguments for jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General would necessarily subject Media Matters to jurisdiction in Missouri. Media Matters contends, for example, that merely mailing something into D.C. subjects the Missouri Attorney General to jurisdiction. Yet Media Matters regularly emails newsletters to countless residents of Missouri. Jurisdiction is proper when an organization "circulat[es] magazines to deliberately exploit a market in the forum state." Walden, 571 U.S. at 285 (quotation marks omitted; brackets adopted). Media Matters also solicits (and receives) donations from Missourians. E.g., Reed decl. ¶ 7. And Media Matters admits it writes articles about public figures in Missouri.

Media Matters' sole response to all this is to assert that the Missouri Attorney General—nearly 20 years ago—responded to a Media Matters inquiry and opined that the organization was exempt from registering under Missouri law. ECF 49-1 at 37; ECF 39-11. But Media Matters neglects to mention that under Missouri law, all 501(c)(3) organizations are exempt from registration. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.456.2(6). That law states that an organization seeking to solicit donations in Missouri must register with the Secretary of State unless the organization is, for example, religious, educational, or a 501(c)(3). Id. Exemption from registration says nothing about the organization's contacts with Missouri.

In fact, Media Matters' 2007 outreach to the Missouri Attorney General undermines Media Matters' contentions. Media Matters would not have reached out to the Missouri Attorney General in the first place unless it were soliciting donations in the State. (Its most recent public financial disclosure shows that it is still soliciting donations from Missouri. Reed decl. ¶ 7.) And the letter confirms Media Matters was in fact engaging in substantial contacts with Missouri, which is why the Attorney General's Office at the time invited Media Matters "to be included on the Missouri Attorney General's Office charity web page." ECF 39-11.

III. Media Matters Cannot Establish a Justiciable, Ripe Injury, Nor the Absence of an Adequate Remedy at Law.

To establish a justiciable controversy, Media Matters must establish not only the regular three elements of standing, but also that the dispute is "ripe" and—because Media Matters seeks a prospective injunction—that there is no adequate remedy at law. Natl. Park Hosp. Ass'n v. Dept. of Int., 538 U.S. 803, 807 (2003) (ripeness); Natl. Farmers Union Ins. Companies v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 471 U.S. 845, 856 n.22 (1985) (adequate remedy). Media Matters has not done so.

The Supreme Court's decision in Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964), makes clear that Media Matters cannot establish the lack of an adequate remedy at law. There, the Supreme Court held that an agency's non-self-executing request for documents is not reviewable until the agency tries to enforce it. The recipient of an administrative request for documents was not obligated to produce anything until after the agency brought an "enforcement action" where the recipient would be afforded "a judicial determination" of the lawfulness of the request and the viability of any of his defenses. Id. at 446. That "opportunity for judicial review before any coercive sanctions may be imposed" was an adequate "remedy"; and the court would not permit the recipient of the request to short-circuit this process by preemptively seeking an injunction in federal court. Id. at 450. That is exactly the opportunity being afforded Media Matters in Missouri state court, and it is taking advantage of that opportunity.

In granting a preliminary injunction against the Texas Attorney General, this Court concluded that Reisman did not apply because, unlike in Reisman, "[t]he Texas Code contains no equivalent remedies for a non-resident challenging a CID" as Texas law refers only to in-state defendants contesting a CID in state court. ECF 37 at 30. But Missouri law is different. Missouri law does include an equivalent remedy and expressly states that a person may challenge a CID in the "county where the parties reside or in the circuit court of Cole County." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.070 (emphasis added). Cole County contains Missouri's capital city, is an open venue for all out-of-state parties, and is the venue for the existing state proceeding. Id. Similarly, this Court faulted Texas for not citing "any authority holding that an exclusive remedy in foreign state court is an adequate remedy at law." ECF 37 at 30. But Missouri has cited relevant authority. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that federal courts must presume that a state's courts are an adequate forum. E.g., Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 15 ("[A] federal court should assume that state procedures will afford an adequate remedy, in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary.").

This Court also noted that Reisman did not involve the First Amendment, ECF 37 at 30, but that makes no difference because Media Matters seeks prospective relief. This Court noted that where a party asserts a First Amendment chill, an injury may have already occurred, unlike in Reisman. Id. (citing Twitter, Inc. v. Paxton, 56 F.4th 1170, 1178 (9th Cir. 2022)). But Media Matters has not sought any relief to rectify a past injury; Media Matters instead seeks relief to enjoin "further action to enforce" the CID. ECF 39-2 (supplemental complaint) ¶ 74 (emphasis added). It is axiomatic that when a plaintiff "seeks prospective declaratory and injunctive relief, he must establish an ongoing or future injury that is 'certainly impending'; he may not rest on past injury." Arpaio v. Obama, 797 F.3d 11, 19 (D.C. Cir. 2015). Reisman forecloses Media Matters from suing because Media Matters' ability to raise its defenses to future injury in state court means Media Matters has an adequate remedy at law, and "[i]t is a fundamental principle of long standing that a request for an injunction will not be granted as long as an adequate remedy at law is available." Natl. Farmers Union, 471 U.S. at 856 n.22.

Media Matters also cannot establish ripeness. Even if there were no adequate remedy at law, the Twitter case holds that where a recipient of a CID "can raise its First Amendment defense" in state court, then a federal challenge is not ripe. Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1177. "[U]nlike the analysis of Reisman, [the] ripeness analysis does not rely on the lack of an adequate remedy at law," and so it serves as an independent bar to judicial relief. Id. at 1179. Here, there is an enforcement action in Missouri state court and Media Matters is not only participating but will also have a full opportunity to raise its federal claims. As such, this case should be dismissed for ripeness.

These decisions are consistent with the routine conclusion by courts that "pre-enforcement review of investigative subpoenas" is strongly disfavored. See, e.g., Belle Fourche Pipeline Co. v. United States, 751 F.2d 332, 334 (10th Cir. 1984); see also United States v. Kulukundis, 329 F.2d 197, 199 (2d Cir. 1964) (Friendly, J.) (explaining Reisman "seems to destroy the basis underlying decisions of this court which authorized applications to vacate [non-self-executing subpoenas] (and appeals from their denial) in advance of any judicial proceeding by the Government for their enforcement"). This is true even if there is an assertion of First Amendment claims. See, e.g., Google, 822 F.3d at 226 (concluding, in the First Amendment context, that "administrative subpoena is not ripe for review" because it is not "self-executing").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

IV. There Is No Likelihood of Success on the Merits.

In addition to the foregoing reasons, the extraordinary relief Plaintiffs seek against the State of Missouri and its judicial proceedings should be denied because there is no likelihood of success on the merits.

A. Media Matters is unlikely to succeed on its retaliation claim.

To assert a First Amendment retaliation claim, Media Matters "must show, among other things, that the government took an 'adverse action' in response to [its] speech that 'would not have been taken absent the retaliatory motive.'" Houston Community College System v. Wilson, 595 U.S. 468, 477 (2022) (quoting Nieves v. Bartlett, 139 S. Ct. 1715, 1722 (2019)).

This is an exceptionally heavy burden, which requires Media Matters to prove there was no legitimate ground to investigate at all. In Nieves, the Supreme Court concluded that a plaintiff must also establish that "non-retaliatory grounds are in fact insufficient to provoke the adverse consequences." Nieves, 139 S. Ct. at 1722. Specifically, the Supreme Court concluded that a retaliatory-arrest claim automatically fails if there is probable cause for the arrest, regardless of the individual officer's subjective motivation. Id. at 1728 ("Because there was probable cause to arrest Bartlett, his retaliatory arrest claim fails as a matter of law."). That rule is necessary because of the "presumption of regularity underlying the prosecutor's [enforcement] decision—a presumption [courts] 'do not lightly discard.'" Id. at 1723 (citation omitted).

Media Matters cannot establish that there was no probable cause at all to launch an investigation. Here, X Corp.'s lawsuit lays out a fact pattern that shows conduct not only "likely" to deceive consumers, but deliberately designed to do so. DoubleVerify, "which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers," recently debunked the allegations that X was regularly populating advertisements next to fringe content, concluding instead that X's "Brand Safety Rates" were nearly perfect—99.99%—during the very time when

Media Matters accused X of regularly posting brand advertisements next to fringe content. Todd Spangler, DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months, Variety (Apr. 15, 2024). And the district court overseeing that lawsuit has preliminarily concluded that X's allegations are likely sufficient to overcome a motion to dismiss. X Corp., ECF 54 at 8.

A mere investigation is of course much less intrusive and disruptive than an arrest. Just as probable cause defeats a retaliatory arrest claim as a matter of law, so too probable cause for an investigation must defeat Media Matters' claim here. That is especially true because Media Matters' assertion is implausible on its face. It asserts that the Missouri Attorney General chose to retaliate because Media Matters wrote a single article criticizing him. ECF 49-1 at 12 ("Bailey has, like Paxton, been the subject of critical reporting from Media Matters. Bailey's Demand, much like Paxton's, thus reeks of opportunistic retaliation.') (citing a single article). But the Missouri Attorney General is regularly criticized by other media outlets, and Media Matters has not identified a single example of any other outlet receiving a CID at all—much less after writing a critical article. Contrary to Media Matters' distorted reality, the Attorney General filed the civil investigative demand to assess whether Media Matters has been dishonest with Missourians when soliciting donations from Missourians.

Media Matters also cannot establish any chill. Declarations notwithstanding, Media Matters' website reveals no chill at all. Media Matters identifies one article critical of the Missouri Attorney General published last August. Id. But on March 26 of this year—the day after the Missouri Attorney General publicly filed suit—Media Matters wrote a story criticizing the Missouri Attorney General. Vesper Henry & Ari Drennen, Seen But Not Heard: The New York Times Failed to Quote Trans People in Two-Thirds of Stories on Anti-Trans Legislation in a One-

Year Period (March 26, 2024).[8] And a quick search reveals that Media Matters has published at least 20 articles about Elon Musk since its allegedly defamatory November 2023 article.[9]

Media Matters' retaliation claim fails for yet another reason: as a matter of law, "immaterial adverse actions" do not violate the First Amendment. Houston Community College System, 595 U.S. at 477 (courts "distinguish material from immaterial adverse actions"). Media Matters does not dispute that it is going to have to litigate its claims in one forum or another: either this one or Missouri state court. But it repeatedly states that it is "injured" by the prospect of litigating in Missouri. E.g., ECF 49-1 at 36–37. That is not a material adverse action. This Court must presume that the state courts in Missouri are adequate, and Media Matters litigating there is simply the same "injury incidental to every proceeding." Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611, 618 (1968).

B. Media Matters' other claims are likewise unlikely to succeed.

In the lawsuit against Texas, this Court rightly declined to grant Media Matters relief on any of its other counts. The Court should do the same here.

First and Fourth Amendments. At the outset, there is nothing "imminent" about the argument that the CID seeks information beyond what is permitted by the First and Fourth Amendments. Media Matters can litigate that issue under a standard timeline because no documents will be turned over until Media Matters has a full and fair chance to raise its defenses. Courts in Missouri regularly address these claims through ordinary litigation. State ex rel. Ashcroft v. Goldberg, 608 S.W.2d 385, 388 (Mo. 1980) (Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments).

In any event, Media Matters' claims easily fail. On the First Amendment, Media Matters asserts that the CID falls afoul of Americans for Prosperity Found. v. Bonta, 141 S. Ct. 2373

[8] https://www.mediamatters.org/new-york-times/seen-not-heard-new-york-times-failed-quote-trans-people-over-60-2023-stories-anti

(2021), but that case involved a California mandate for every nonprofit organization to disclose donor information automatically each year, without judicial process, rather than in response to a subpoena. Indeed, the Supreme Court expressly rejected California's mandate because there were "alternative means of obtaining [the] information—such as a subpoena." Id. at 2386.

On the Fourth Amendment issue, it is well settled that "the Fourth Amendment generally presents little obstacle to the enforcement of administrative subpoenas." ADR Tr. Corp. v. Thornton, 41 F.3d 1539, 1548 (D.C. Cir. 1994). Media Matters makes no attempt to develop its Fourth Amendment argument, other to say that it "often overlap[s]" with First Amendment concerns. ECF 49-1 at 32. Media Matters' argument is thus both waived and wrong.

State shield laws. No stronger is the contention that the CID violates Maryland and DC law. Those laws do not apply extraterritorially to Media Matters' conduct in Missouri. Media Matters also again fails to develop its argument. It notes, for example, that the statutes provide only "qualified protection against compelled disclosure" but makes no effort to state why that "qualified" protection applies here. Id. at 35. This issue, too, is waived.

Due Process. Finally, Media Matters strangely tries to escalate a jurisdictional issue into its own § 1983 violation. Media Matters asserts that the "legal process against them in Missouri violates due process." ECF 49-1 at 36. If in fact Media Matters were correct, that would be a good argument for the Missouri courts to dismiss the CID enforcement action. But it is not an independent constitutional tort for a party to sue somebody else in a forum that ultimately concludes it lacks personal jurisdiction, and Media Matters fails to cite any authority otherwise. Indeed, it is the state courts of Missouri, not the Missouri Attorney General, that exercise coercive power in the context of Due Process challenges. Media Matters' argument also proves way too much. Under that logic, Media Matters will have committed a tort against the State of Missouri if this Court (or the D.C. Circuit) concludes that Younger abstention is appropriate or the Court lacks personal jurisdiction here.

The Due Process argument is especially unavailing because, as discussed in more depth above, Media Matters has already consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri. Rather than comply with Missouri requirements to object to personal jurisdiction in the first instance, Media Matters has filed a motion (which was granted) availing itself of legal rights in Missouri.

V. Media Matters Will Not Suffer Irreparable Harm.

"The basis of injunctive relief in the federal courts has always been irreparable harm." CityFed Fin. Corp. v. Office of Thrift Supervision, 58 F.3d 738, 747 (D.C. Cir. 1995). Accordingly, the "failure to show any irreparable harm is ... grounds for refusing to issue a preliminary injunction, even if the other three factors entering the calculus merit such relief." Jones v. District of Columbia, 177 F. Supp. 3d 542, 545 (D.D.C. 2016) (quoting Chaplaincy of Full Gospel Churches v. England, 454 F.3d 290, 297 (D.C. Cir. 2006) and citing Save Jobs USA v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 105 F. Supp. 3d 108, 112 (D.D.C. 2015) ("the movant must always show irreparable harm or injury, and if a party makes no showing of irreparable injury, the court may deny the motion for injunctive relief without considering the other factors")). Here, there cannot be irreparable harm because there is an avenue for relief—an avenue Media Matters is engaged in—before any supposed harm is ever experienced.[10]

The D.C. Circuit "'has set a high standard for irreparable injury.'" Id. (quoting Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 297). "[T]he injury 'must be both certain and great; it must be actual and not theoretical.' " Id. (quotations omitted). Indeed, the "injury must also be 'of such imminence that [10] Plaintiffs suggest they are experiencing an irreparable chilling effect. But, as Texas pointed out, Media Matters has continued its same criticisms and coverage. And in any event, it would have no application with respect to the State of Missouri's CID, which came months after the supposed harm was experienced. The chill is at best "theoretical." Jones, 177 F. Supp. 3d at 545.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

there is a 'clear and present' need for equitable relief to prevent irreparable harm." Id. (quoting Wisc. Gas Co. v. FERC, 758 F.2d 669, 674 (D.C. Cir. 1985). Moreover, the injury must be "beyond remediation." Id. (quoting Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 297). As has been said many times, there is a remedy in this case; there is alternative relief before any supposed harm. And it is a remedy or relief that Plaintiffs have already engaged in—the State of Missouri's enforcement action in state court.

Even setting that issue aside, there is no imminent—much less irreparable—injury at all because Media Matters will not have to hand over any documents until it has had a full and fair opportunity to raise its defenses. Missouri's CIDs are not self-executing. Nothing will happen to Media Matters until resolution of judicial proceedings.

VI. The Balance of Equities and Public Interest Decisively Favor Missouri.

Finally, in Winter v. NRDC, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, (2008), the Supreme Court "held that 'proper consideration' of the balance of equities and public interest 'factors alone [would have] require[d] denial of the requested injunctive relief,' 'even if [the] plaintiffs [had] shown irreparable injury' and a likelihood of success on the merits." Kim v. Fin. Indus. Regul. Auth., Inc., No. 1:23-CV-02420 (ACR), 2023 WL 6538544, at *16 (D.D.C. Oct. 6, 2023). "Importantly, this body of case law shows that a court can deny preliminary injunctive relief solely on the balance of equities and public interest factors even in cases, like this, involving constitutional claims." Id.

In this case, the balance of equities and public interest decisively favor the State of Missouri. The importance and need to protect consumers is indisputable. Missouri consumer protections laws have been in force for decades and have provided the legal and regulatory backbone of tens of thousands of actions, enforcements, and investigations to protect consumers. Further, the ability of a sovereign state, through its constitutionally and statutorily authorized Attorney General, to conduct investigations into potential violations of consumer protections laws is paramount—as is the ability of state courts in Missouri to resolve disputes over the exercise of that authority. If, at every turn, a federal court injunction is sought for routine investigations of potential violations of state law, then vital public interests and federalism will be defeated.

Because Media Matters not only has the opportunity, but has invoked the right, to challenge the investigation in Missouri courts, the balance of equities and the public interest unquestionably favor the denial of a TRO or preliminary injunction.

The equities especially disfavor Media Matters (and Media Matters also lacks standing) because it could have avoided any harm. "It is well-settled that a preliminary injunction movant does not satisfy the irreparable harm criterion when the alleged harm is self-inflicted." Safari Club Int'l v. Salazar, 852 F. Supp. 2d 102, 123 (D.D.C. 2012) (quotations omitted). "In analogous circumstances, plaintiffs who decline the opportunity to avail themselves of a regulatory scheme to avoid the very harm for which they seek injunctive relief have been denied the [injunctive] relief." Id. Media Matters here has run to federal court rather than take advantage of the availability of relief in Missouri state court.

For the foregoing reasons, the motion for a TRO and a Preliminary Injunction should be denied.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTRODUCTION

Bailey does not and cannot point to a single piece of evidence even plausibly suggesting that Plaintiffs Media Matters and Eric Hananoki are subject to jurisdiction in Missouri or have violated any Missouri law. His response renders the alleged basis for his civil investigative demand ("CID") an afterthought, focusing instead on a host of meritless procedural arguments in an effort to evade this Court's scrutiny. The reason he does this is obvious—his investigation is baseless, and his conduct toward Plaintiffs is flagrant and unlawful retaliation against their exercise of constitutionally-protected rights. This Court already considered and rejected nearly all of Bailey's arguments when it granted Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction against Texas Attorney General Paxton. The sole exception is Bailey's attempt to invoke abstention under Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1971), but that doctrine does not apply here for a host of reasons.

First, Younger does not apply to Bailey's strategically timed lawsuit to enforce the Missouri CID ("CID Proceeding") because it neither is a "civil enforcement proceeding" nor involves "orders uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions." Sprint Commc'ns, Inc. v. Jacobs, 571 U.S. 69, 78 (2013) (cleaned up). Several recent appellate decisions—all ignored by Bailey—confirm that an action to enforce an administrative subpoena like the Missouri CID does not trigger Younger abstention because it does not charge the recipient with a substantive violation of law. See Smith & Wesson Brands, Inc. v. Att'y Gen. of N.J., 27 F.4th 886, 896 (3d Cir. 2022); TitleMax of Del., Inc. v. Weissman, 24 F.4th 230, 237 (3d Cir. 2022). Here, Bailey has not charged Media Matters with a substantive violation of the Missouri Merchandising Procedures Act ("MMPA"), and the CID Proceeding concerns only Bailey's efforts to perform his executive function, not the "state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions," Smith & Wesson, 27 F.4th at 895–96 (quoting Sprint, 571 U.S. at 78).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, even if the CID Proceeding fell within a Younger category, abstention would be inappropriate because substantial proceedings occurred in this case before Bailey commenced the CID Proceeding in Missouri court. It does not matter that Bailey was not yet a party to these proceedings. He has admitted that he was well aware of this case, Pet. for Order to Enforce Civil Investigative Demand, ECF No. 36-2 ("CID Petition") ¶ 20, that he "coordinated" with Paxton in launching his investigation, Order Granting Pls.' Mot. to Suppl. Compl. 3, ECF No. 44, and that the Missouri CID is "virtually identical" to the Texas CID that is the subject of the Court's existing injunction, id. at 2. Indeed, this case not only pre-dated Bailey's initiation of the CID Proceeding, it is by Bailey's admission the reason why he filed the CID Petition before giving Media Matters the opportunity to respond to the CID in the first place. Extensive authority—and basic notions of judicial efficiency and fairness—make clear that Younger does not require Plaintiffs to proceed in this Court against Paxton, in Missouri court against Bailey, and in some undetermined forum or forums against any other state officials who may answer Defendants' call to punish Plaintiffs for their speech.

Third, there is overwhelming evidence that Bailey has acted in bad faith and brought the Missouri action to harass Plaintiffs in retaliation for their exercise of constitutionally protected rights and specifically in order to invoke Younger abstention. Bailey asks the Court to ignore this evidence, insisting that the bad faith exception to Younger only applies when the state court judges overseeing the parallel state proceeding are acting in bad faith. Half a century of case law proves otherwise. See Lewellen v. Raff, 843 F.2d 1103, 1112 n.10 (8th Cir. 1988) (collecting examples). Bailey severely misreads the Supreme Court's holding in Juidice v. Vail, where the state court judges accused of bad faith were the named federal defendants, just like Bailey is here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Bailey's remaining objections retread arguments already made by Paxton and already rejected by this Court. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Bailey because he hired an agent in D.C. to further his harassment against Media Matters here—just like Paxton. Plaintiffs' claims are ripe and justiciable because Bailey—like Paxton—is chilling their speech now, causing severe, irreparable harm. And prompt injunctive relief is both necessary and appropriate because Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits and lack any other adequate legal remedy.

ARGUMENT

I. The Court should decline to abstain under Younger.

Federal courts have a "virtually unflagging" duty to decide cases within their jurisdiction. Sprint, 571 U.S. at 77 (quotation omitted). Younger is a narrow, judge-made exception that can only apply where a federal case relates to one of three categories of ongoing state proceedings: (1) "state criminal prosecutions," (2) "certain civil enforcement proceedings," and (3) "civil proceedings involving certain orders uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions." Id. at 78 (cleaned up). The CID Proceeding is none of these things. Moreover, Younger does not apply because proceedings of substance on the merits took place in this case before the CID Proceeding commenced. Finally, the Court should decline to apply Younger in any case because the CID Proceeding was brought in bad faith.

A. The state court proceeding is not a "civil enforcement proceeding."

The CID Proceeding is not a "civil enforcement" proceeding under Younger. The Younger doctrine was originally developed to keep federal courts from interfering with ongoing state criminal prosecutions, and has been extended only to those "civil enforcement proceedings" that are "akin to a criminal prosecution in important respects." Id. at 78–79 (cleaned up). Since then, "[t]he Supreme Court has . . . consistently narrowed abstention doctrines, including Younger, because they conflict with federal courts' virtually unflagging obligation to exercise their jurisdiction." Smith & Wesson, 27 F.4th at 890 (cleaned up). To trigger Younger, "the state civil enforcement proceeding must be quasi-criminal in nature." Id. at 891 (cleaned up). Three factors guide this inquiry: whether "(1) the action was commenced by the State in its sovereign capacity, (2) the proceeding was initiated to sanction the plaintiff for some wrongful act, and (3) there are other similarities to criminal actions, such as a preliminary investigation that culminated with the filing of formal charges." Id. (emphasis added) (cleaned up); see also Sprint, 571 U.S. at 79–80. Because the second and third factors are not satisfied, this Younger category does not apply.

1. The CID Proceeding was not initiated to sanction Media Matters for a wrongful act.

Courts have regularly—and recently—held that proceedings to enforce an administrative subpoena are not "civil enforcement proceedings" under Younger. Indeed, just two years ago in a similar case, the Third Circuit held that a "subpoena enforcement action is not a suit initiated to punish wrongdoing," and thus is not a "civil enforcement action" for Younger purposes. Smith & Wesson, 27 F.4th at 892. In that case, the New Jersey Attorney General was "investigating Smith & Wesson for possible violations of the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act." Id. at 889. Acting under statutory language nearly identical to the Missouri law relied upon by Bailey, the Attorney General issued an administrative subpoena to Smith & Wesson seeking certain documents. Id.; compare N.J. Stat. §§ 56:8-3, 56:8-4, with Mo. Stat. § 407.040. Instead of producing the requested documents, Smith & Wesson filed a complaint for declaratory and injunctive relief in federal court, alleging a violation of its federal rights. Smith & Wesson, 27 F.4th at 889. The New Jersey Attorney General then sought enforcement of the subpoena in state court, which ordered Smith & Wesson to show cause and threatened it with contempt and a total ban on sales in New Jersey. Id. at 889–90. The federal district court abstained under Younger, and the Third Circuit reversed, holding that the subpoena enforcement action was neither a "civil enforcement proceeding" nor a "civil proceeding[] involving certain orders uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions." Id. at 891 (quoting Sprint, 571 U.S. at 78). As the Third Circuit explained, "Sprint teaches that a suit is meant to punish wrongdoing where the state court defendant (the federal plaintiff) violated a legal right or duty." Id. at 892 (citing Sprint, 571 U.S. at 79).

As in Smith & Wesson, the sole issue before the state court is whether Plaintiffs must produce documents in response to Bailey's CID. Compare id. at 892 (noting "the complaint alleged only violation of a subpoena"), with CID Petition at ¶¶ 21–26; see also State ex rel. Koster v. Charter Commc'ns, Inc., 461 S.W.3d 851, 857 (Mo. Ct. App. 2015) ("CIDs issued by the AG are administrative subpoenas"); TitleMax, 24 F.4th at 237 ("While enforcement of the subpoena may require [the plaintiff] to produce information, it is not retributive in nature or imposed to punish some wrongful act." (cleaned up)). As in Smith & Wesson, Bailey's state court action "did not allege that [Media Matters] violated any substantive legal duty. To date, he has not accused [Media Matters] of violating the [MMPA]; he is investigating possible violations." 27 F.4th at 892 (emphasis added); see also CID Petition at 2 (noting CID was issued "to investigate possible violations of" the MMPA). And, as in Smith & Wesson, "[Media Matters] did nothing wrong, so the suit cannot be one initiated to sanction it for some wrongful act." 27 F.4th at 892 (cleaned up). "Instead of producing the documents . . . it petitioned a federal court to adjudicate its rights and obligations. Federal law authorizes just such a civil action (i.e., one alleging that the Attorney General violated the company's constitutional rights)." Id. at 892–93.

If anything, the case against abstention here is even stronger. The New Jersey Attorney General at least alleged that Smith & Wesson had violated a procedural obligation to comply with the subpoena. Here, Media Matters did not even have an opportunity to comply because Bailey ran to state court to seek enforcement at the same time he issued the Missouri CID. Thus, even if noncompliance with the CID itself could be considered a "wrongful act," the CID Proceeding could not possibly be an action to "sanction" Media Matters for that conduct.

2. Bailey has not undertaken any investigation of Media Matters culminating in the filing of a formal complaint or charges.

The CID Proceeding is also not a "civil enforcement proceeding" within the meaning of Younger for another reason: there has been no preliminary investigation of Media Matters "culminating in the filing of a formal complaint or charges." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 80. Bailey could not have investigated Media Matters's alleged failure to comply with the CID because the CID Petition was filed the same day the CID was issued. That distinguishes this case from others like Middlesex County "where more robust preliminary investigations led to the filing of administrative complaints." Smith & Wesson, 27 F.4th at 891–92. Moreover, in cases where Younger applies, "the investigation and the charges concerned the same conduct." Id. at 892. By contrast, here "the substantive investigation concern[s] consumer fraud, yet the complaint allege[s] only violation of a [CID]." Id. The only relief sought in the CID Petition is compliance with the CID—it seeks no sanction for violations of the MMPA or any substantive provision of law.

3. Bailey's authorities are inapposite.

None of the authorities Bailey cites for his argument that the CID Proceeding is a "civil enforcement proceeding" offer him any help.

Bailey first points to Backpage.com, LLC v. Hawley, No. 4:17-CV-1951 PLC, 2017 WL 5726868 (E.D. Mo. Nov. 28, 2017), an unpublished district court decision that pre-dated the Third Circuit's analysis in Smith & Wesson and misunderstood the Eighth Circuit's decision in Cedar Rapids Cellular Telephone, L.P. v. Miller, 280 F.3d 874 (8th Cir. 2002), on which it principally relied. 2017 WL 5726868 at *6–7. In fact, Cedar Rapids is entirely consistent with Smith &

Wesson, and its reasoning further demonstrates why the CID Proceeding here is not a "civil enforcement proceeding" under Younger.

In Cedar Rapids, the Eighth Circuit held that the underlying state action against one co-plaintiff (U.S. Cellular) was a "civil enforcement proceeding" because, unlike here, it sought injunctive relief for alleged violations of substantive consumer protection law. See 280 F.3d at 877 (explaining U.S. Cellular was formally alleged to be "violating numerous provisions of the Iowa Consumer Credit Code and the other provisions of Iowa law"). But the Eighth Circuit held that the Attorney General's administrative action against the other co-plaintiff (WWC), unlike its enforcement action against U.S. Cellular, "involve[d] nothing more than an attempt to obtain information about WWC's business practices," and "d[id] not give the Attorney General, or anyone else, the power to declare whether those practices violate state law." Id. at 882. The Backpage court mistakenly reasoned that the CID enforcement proceeding against Backpage was more akin to the enforcement proceedings against U.S. Cellular, simply because both were filed in state court. See 2017 WL 5726868 at *7. But that was wrong. Under Cedar Rapids, like Smith & Wesson, the relevant distinction was whether the action sought to sanction a violation of substantive law or merely sought information—not whether the action was an administrative proceeding or brought in state court. See Cedar Rapids, 280 F.3d at 882 (recognizing that "[a]dministrative proceedings" like the one against WWC "may be judicial for purposes of Younger if they declare and enforce liabilities between the parties" (quotations omitted)); see also New Orleans Pub. Serv., Inc. v. Council of City of New Orleans, 491 U.S. 350, 371 (1989) (explaining that the "proper characterization" of a proceeding "depends not on the character of the body but upon the character of the proceedings" (quotations omitted)). The CID Proceeding here, like the administrative action against WWC in Cedar Rapids, seeks only information, not a declaration of Media Matters's liability under state law. See Cedar Rapids, 280 F.3d at 882 (holding Younger did not apply as to WWC).

The Backpage court also improperly concluded that it was sufficient that the "state-court action clearly involves an investigation with the potential to culminate in the filing of a formal complaint or charges." 2017 WL 5726868 at *6 (emphasis added). But "[t]he possibility that a state proceeding may lead to a future prosecution . . . is not enough to trigger Younger abstention; a federal court need not decline to hear a constitutional case within its jurisdiction merely because a state investigation has begun." Mulholland v. Marion Cnty. Election Bd., 746 F.3d 811, 817 (7th Cir. 2014); see also Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 454 (1974) (Younger does not prevent federal declaratory relief "when a state prosecution has been threatened, but is not pending"); Gullemard-Ginorio v. Contreras-Gomez, 585 F.3d 508, 519 (1st Cir. 2009) ("[R]equiring the commencement of 'formal enforcement proceedings' before abstention is required[] better comports with the Supreme Court's decisions in Younger and its progeny, in which an indictment or other formal charge had already been filed against the parties seeking relief at the time the federal action was brought." (collecting cases)). Indeed, Cedar Rapids itself clearly rejected that proposition as to WWC, which was not then facing any formal charges of violating state law. See Cedar Rapids, 280 F.3d at 882 ("Although the Attorney General's demand for information may ultimately result in a judicial proceeding, there is no indication that a judicial proceeding was imminent at the time this case was filed.").

The other cases relied on by Bailey only reinforce the distinctions between quasi-criminal proceedings and the CID Proceeding here. In Yelp, Inc. v. Paxton, the state proceedings were "quasi-criminal enforcement actions that involve sanctions, including civil penalties of up to $10,000 per violation of the [Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act]." No. 23-cv-4977-TLT, 2024

WL 413464, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 1, 2024).[1] In Berrada Properties Management, Inc. v. Romanski, the court similarly abstained in favor of a state proceeding where "the State s[ought] a judicial determination of fault" as well as "injunctive relief, restitution, and civil forfeitures for violations of [substantive Wisconsin law]." 608 F. Supp. 3d 746, 750, 753 (E.D. Wis. 2022). Finally, J. & W. Seligman & Co. Inc. v. Spitzer relied on a series of cases involving criminal grand jury subpoenas and search warrants to hold that the mere issuance of a civil subpoena (without enforcement) triggers Younger. No. 05 Civ. 7781 (KMW), 2007 WL 2822208, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 27, 2007). As even Bailey acknowledges, see Bailey's Opp'n to TRO & Prelim. Inj. 14, ECF No. 56 ("Opp."), courts have since rejected that principle as to non-self-executing administrative subpoenas like the CID here. Google, Inc. v. Hood, 822 F.3d 212, 223, 224 n.7 (5th Cir. 2016) (rejecting Seligman).

B. The state court proceeding does not involve "orders uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions."

For similar reasons, the CID Proceeding does not involve "orders uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 78 (cleaned up).

Bailey's reliance on Juidice v. Vail, 430 U.S. 327 (1977), demonstrates the flaw in his argument. In that case, a default judgment had been entered in state court against Vail, who was then served with a subpoena to give information relevant to the satisfaction of judgment. Id. at 329. When he failed to comply with the subpoena, the state court ordered him to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. Id. And when he failed to appear for that hearing, the court held him in contempt. Id. Vail and other plaintiffs then filed a federal suit against the state court judges to enjoin the state court's future use of statutory contempt procedures. Id. at 330.

[1] Notably, "Yelp [did] not contest" this element of Younger. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Juidice does not stand for the blanket proposition that an action to enforce a subpoena—particularly an administrative subpoena like the CID at issue here—is "uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 78. As the Third Circuit has pointed out, "[t]he subpoenas in Juidice were 'court-sanctioned,' not administrative subpoenas, like the one at issue here. And both plaintiffs had violated court orders." Smith & Wesson, 27 F.4th at 894 (citation omitted). None of that is true here.

Furthermore, the "key thread" to Juidice and other cases under Younger's third category is "the certainty of the state court's action." Id. In cases falling into this category, "the substantive outcome had occurred [in state court]; only enforcement remained, and the Supreme Court refused to impede that enforcement." Id. Thus, in Juidice the state court had already ordered the plaintiffs to show cause why they should not be held in contempt for ignoring the subpoena, and the plaintiffs had already violated that order. 430 U.S. at 328–29. What they sought to enjoin was the state court's enforcement of its contempt order. Here, by contrast, Plaintiffs seek to enjoin Bailey from enforcing the CID, and the state court proceedings he initiated to do so have not even commenced in substance. A judge was assigned just six days ago, and there is "much more for the state court to do than merely implement a predetermined outcome." Smith & Wesson, 27 F.4th at 894.

Again, Bailey relies on Backpage, but as discussed, that court misconstrued the nature of the underlying proceeding. It reasoned that a CID enforcement proceeding "necessarily affects functions performed by the state court" because Missouri law authorizes the Attorney General to seek a court order enforcing a CID. 2017 WL 5726868 at *7–8. Under that circular reasoning, any state court action would necessarily qualify under Younger's third category, and federal courts "would have to abstain whenever there was a pending civil proceeding." Smith & Wesson, 27 F.4th at 895. "But that approach would run afoul of the Supreme Court's insistence that 'even in the presence of parallel state proceedings, abstention from the exercise of federal jurisdiction is the exception, not the rule.'" Id. (quoting Sprint, 571 U.S. at 81–82).[2]

C. There were proceedings on the merits in this case before the CID Proceeding was filed.

Even if the CID Proceeding fell into the categories of cases to which Younger applies, it would still be inappropriate to abstain because Younger applies only where "the state proceedings were initiated 'before any proceedings of substance on the merits have taken place in the federal court.'" JMM Corp. v. District of Columbia, 378 F.3d 1117, 1126 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (quoting Haw. Hous. Auth. v. Midkiff, 467 U.S. 229, 238 (1984)). Federal courts do not abstain where a case has moved beyond the "embryonic stage" prior to the state court action. Midkiff, 467 U.S. at 238 (citation omitted).

"In assessing whether abstention was proper, courts look to 'the time that the district court has spent considering the case, any motions ruled on, any discovery, the number of conferences [or hearings] held, and any change in the parties' position as a result of the federal litigation.'" Tokyo Gwinnett, LLC v. Gwinnett County, 940 F.3d 1254, 1272 (11th Cir. 2019) (alteration in original) (quoting Nationwide Biweekly Admin., Inc. v. Owen, 873 F.3d 716, 728–29 (9th Cir. 2017)). "Courts also consider the filing of motions, even if the district court did not rule on the motions." Id.

Here, the CID proceeding began well after substantive proceedings on the merits had taken place in this case, and each of the relevant considerations show that abstention would be inappropriate here. The original complaint in this federal action was filed on January 17, 2024. Since then, this Court has spent significant time assessing and even issuing rulings on the merits.

[2] Lupin Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Richards—which also predates Smith & Wesson—committed a similar error. No. RDB-15-1281, 2015 WL 4068818, at *4 (D. Md. July 2, 2015).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Indeed, months before Bailey initiated the CID Proceeding on March 25, this Court took testimony and considered briefing and argument on Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction against Paxton for the same conduct, as well as on Paxton's motion to dismiss. The Court held a hearing on the preliminary injunction motion on February 15, and ordered supplemental briefing. These developments constituted "proceedings of substance on the merits." Nationwide, 873 F.3d at 728 (cleaned up); see also For Your Eyes Alone, Inc. v. City of Columbus, Ga., 281 F.3d 1209, 1218 (11th Cir. 2002) (finding abstention improper after filing of a complaint, motion to dismiss, answer, and summary judgment motion and the court held an evidentiary hearing and denied a motion for a temporary restraining order). There was also a "change in the parties' position" due to this litigation. Tokyo Gwinnett, 940 F.3d at 1272 (quoting Nationwide, 873 F.3d at 728–29). Namely, Paxton agreed not to enforce the Texas CID while the preliminary injunction motion was pending, leading the Court to deny Plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order as moot. Def.'s Resp. to Order of the Ct., ECF No. 11; January 23, 2024 Minute Order. These "significant and substantial procedural steps" have moved this litigation beyond its "embryonic stage." Tokyo Gwinnett, 940 F.3d at 1272 (quotations omitted).

It does not matter that Bailey was added as a defendant after he commenced the CID Proceeding in Missouri. The filing of a supplemental complaint to account for these events does not make this a "new case." Hill v. Snyder, 878 F.3d 193, 206 (6th Cir. 2017). "That very concept is at odds with the idea of amending pleadings, a practice deliberately built in to our civil justice system." Id. That is true even where the amended pleading adds a new defendant. See 2d Am. Compl., Hill v. Snyder, No. 2:10-cv-14568-MAG_RSW (E.D. Mich. June 20, 2016), ECF No. 130 (adding Michigan Attorney General as a party); see also Derma Pen, LLC v. 4EverYoung Ltd., No. 2:13-CV-00729-DN-EJF, 2015 WL 791595, at *7 (D. Utah Feb. 25, 2015) ("Proceedings of substance on the merits occurred in federal court before the State Action was filed, and it is of no consequence that [the defendant invoking Younger] was added as a party to this litigation later in time."). Simply put, "[w]hen federal litigation is beyond its embryonic stage, the addition of new claims is not controlled by Younger abstention[.]" Tokyo Gwinnett, 940 F.3d at 1270 n.6. "Neither the Supreme Court's precedent nor ours tells us that the door to Younger is reopened when a plaintiff—many months after a case has been filed—amends its complaint to bring additional claims related to the same controversy." Id. at 1270.

This rule makes sense, and its reasoning applies to this case. Younger recognizes that "significant expenditure of effort by the federal court counsels against abstaining in deference to subsequently-initiated state cases." Nationwide, 873 F.3d at 729. Those same "considerations of economy, equity, and federalism" still apply when a pleading has been amended or a defendant has been added. Midkiff, 467 U.S. at 238. As the Sixth Circuit explained: "Federalism is not a one-way street; it reflects a 'sensitivity to the legitimate interests of both State and National Governments.' The interests of the federal courts matter, too[.]" Hill, 878 F.3d at 206 (citation omitted) (quoting Younger, 401 U.S. at 44). For that reason, "[l]ater-filed state court proceedings do not require federal courts to wade into a Younger analysis when they and the parties have already expended significant resources to resolve the federal claims." Id.

Here, as in Hill, the Court has already "expended significant resources to resolve the federal claims," so "[t]o jump ship now would be to exhibit a callous disregard for the meaningful litigation that has already occurred in the federal court system." Id. As the Court has already explained, the Missouri and Texas investigations arise out of the "same transaction [or] occurrence." ECF No. 44 at 3. The Missouri CID is "virtually identical" to the Texas CID that is the subject of the injunction already in place. Id. at 2. Bailey has admitted that he "coordinated" with Paxton. Id. at 3. And the claims asserted against both Defendants are the same. Abstaining under Younger as to Bailey while this case moves forward against Paxton would result in parallel state and federal litigation over what is effectively a single investigation—or, at minimum, coordinated and overlapping investigations—led by two state attorneys general working in concert, raising identical federal issues. The considerations of judicial economy undergirding Midkiff and its progeny counsel strongly against such duplicative bifurcation of proceedings where this Court has already invested significant time and effort.

Moreover, abstaining would allow Defendants—and potentially other state actors—to skirt this Court's jurisdiction by acting in concert to file CID proceedings in other states. Both Paxton and now Bailey have encouraged peers to do just that. See Compl. ¶ 51; Suppl. Compl. ¶ 36. Bailey himself admits he commenced the CID Proceeding in response to this case. CID Petition ¶ 20; Suppl. Compl. ¶¶ 20, 24. The Sixth Circuit foresaw such mischief in Hill: "While litigants presumably know if they face state court prosecutions at the time they file related federal complaints, they cannot predict future prosecutions. Yet Defendants' approach would allow subsequent unforeseen prosecutions to cut the legs out from under long-running federal litigation." 878 F.3d at 205. "Younger stands for the proposition that in some instances a federal court should not interfere with a substantive state judicial proceeding. Here, the opposite situation exists." Derma Pen, 2015 WL 791595, at *7.

D. Bailey issued the CID and commenced the CID Proceeding in bad faith.

Abstention is also inappropriate where state officials commenced a state court action "in bad faith without hope of obtaining a valid conviction." Perez v. Ledesma, 401 U.S. 82, 85 (1971). This is because "a state cannot have a legitimate interest in discouraging the exercise of constitutional rights, or, equally, in continuing actions otherwise brought in bad faith, thereby reducing the need for deference to state proceedings." Cullen v. Fliegner, 18 F.3d 96, 104 (2d Cir. 1994) (citation omitted); see also Netflix, Inc. v. Babin, 88 F.4th 1080, 1091 (5th Cir. 2023).[3]

As Plaintiffs have shown, see Exs. 4, 6 & 7 to Pls.' Mot. to Suppl. Compl., ECF Nos. 39-4, 39-6 39-7, Bailey's stated purpose for investigating Media Matters is to "retaliate for or deter the exercise of constitutionally protected rights." Netflix, 88 F.4th at 1091 (quotations omitted). This makes out a textbook case for application of the bad faith exception. Id.; see also Phelps v. Hamilton, 59 F.3d 1058, 1064 n.12 (10th Cir. 1995) ("[I]f prosecutions are brought for the purpose of chilling or preventing a defendant from exercising his or her constitutional rights, this may constitute a harassing and/or bad faith prosecution, even though the charges are predicated on probable cause." (collecting cases)). For instance, the Second Circuit applied the bad faith exception where a teacher was disciplined after distributing leaflets opposing the re-election of school board members. Cullen, 18 F.3d at 104. The Fifth Circuit recently affirmed application of the exception where a prosecutor sought four new indictments to retaliate for the filing of a federal habeas corpus action. Netflix, 88 F.4th at 1091. Courts have also held that the exception applies where a prosecutor pursued charges against a plaintiff to gain publicity for himself, Shaw v. Garrison, 467 F.2d 113 (5th Cir. 1972), where the prosecution was motivated to deter the filing of a civil suit against state officers, Wilson v. Thompson, 593 F.2d 1375 (5th Cir. 1979), and where prosecution was brought as punishment for criticizing public officials, Fitzgerald v. Peek, 636 F.2d 943, 945 (5th Cir. 1981); see also Lewellen, 843 F.2d at 1112 n.10 (collecting examples).

As these cases demonstrate, Bailey is simply wrong that the bad faith exception applies only when the judges overseeing the state action act in bad faith; he invented that rule out of whole cloth. None of these cases applying the bad faith exception made such a finding, and there is no case supporting that rule. Bailey's argument badly distorts the only authority that he relies on for it. Opp. 19–20. Specifically, Juidice discussed the bad faith of judges in the state court proceeding because they were the named defendants in the federal case. 430 U.S. at 329–30. Bailey's carefully excerpted citation to Wright & Miller's description of Juidice is no more helpful to him. The cited footnote explains: "In the light of [Juidice] it would be a truly incredible case in which the 'bad faith' exception could be satisfied in private litigation, since the bad faith of the private plaintiff would be irrelevant and the Younger exception, under Juidice, requires a showing a bad faith on the part of the state court judges." 17B Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 4255 n.11 (3d ed.) (emphasis added). The CID Proceeding is not "private litigation," and Attorney General Bailey is not a "private plaintiff."

Here, evidence of bad faith abounds. At every step, Bailey has made clear that he means to punish Media Matters for its speech and not to pursue any good faith investigation. He launched this investigation at the urging of online activists calling on state officials to retaliate against Media Matters. See Compl. ¶ 47; Suppl. Compl. ¶ 10. For months, Bailey took no meaningful steps to confer with Media Matters, choosing instead to make extreme and nakedly partisan accusations about them in public statements, all while this case was proceeding on the merits. Suppl. Compl. ¶¶ 11, 20, 26; see also Mem. Op. Granting Prelim. Inj. 38, ECF No. 37 ("PI Op.") (finding such remarks to be "evidence of retaliatory intent"); cf. Cullen, 18 F.3d at 104 (applying bad faith exception based on "past history of personal conflict" and "ad hominem" attacks against the federal plaintiff). Bailey echoed Paxton in encouraging other state officials to join his "war" on Media Matters. Supp. Compl. ¶ 36; see also PI Op. 38 (finding such encouragement evidence of retaliation). Bailey has admitted that he has coordinated with Paxton, but notably waited until after the parties here fully briefed and argued a motion regarding the Texas CID before issuing his own CID and simultaneously filing the CID Petition. Cf. Netflix, 88 F.4th at 1092 (affirming application of bad faith exception where, after period of inactivity, there was "a burst of prosecutorial alacrity" shortly after habeas action was filed).

The timing of the CID Petition also smacks of a bad faith attempt to evade this Court's jurisdiction. Under Missouri law, when a CID is served, the recipient of the CID generally has 20 days to either (1) comply or (2) file "a petition to extend the return date for, or to modify or set aside the civil investigative demand, stating good cause." Mo. Stat. § 407.070. Bailey did not wait 20 days to allow Media Matters to comply; instead, he filed the CID Petition the same day he issued the CID, before Media Matters even received it.[4] The reason for this extraordinary behavior is obvious: as even Bailey appears to admit, CIDs are "non-self-executing," and thus their issuance alone does not trigger Younger abstention. Opp. 14 (citing Google, 822 F.3d at 223; Backpage, 2017 WL 5726868, at *6). Bailey pointed to this very litigation as the reason why he was ignoring this ordinary waiting period. See CID Petition ¶ 20; see also Ex. 7 to Pls.' Mot. to Suppl. Compl., [4] Bailey has cited no authority permitting him to simply ignore Missouri statutory law in rushing to preemptively file the CID Petition. The sole case he cites has nothing to do with the MMPA and relies upon a near-century old body of law concerning requirements for derivative shareholder suits under Missouri law. See New England Carpenters Pension Fund v. Haffner, 391 S.W.3d 453, 460 (Mo. Ct. App. 2012) (citing Punch v. Hipolite Co., 100 S.W.2d 878, 885 (Mo. 1936)). He tellingly does not identify any past instances where he preemptively sued a CID recipient. Nor has he explained why such urgency can be justified, given that he sat on his hands for three months before serving a copy-and-paste CID that regurgitates Paxton's CID in nearly every way.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

ECF No. 39-7 at 3. Had Bailey waited 20 days consistent with the statute, he would have no colorable basis to invoke Younger to stave off Plaintiffs' inevitable request for emergency relief from Bailey's copycat CID. The Court should not sanction such procedural gamesmanship.[5]

Although a showing of harassment or retaliation "will justify an injunction regardless of whether valid convictions conceivably could be obtained," Fitzgerald, 636 F.2d at 945, abstention is also inappropriate because Bailey has "[no] hope of obtaining a valid conviction" for violation of Missouri consumer protection law. Perez, 401 U.S. at 85. The CID Petition itself confirms as much. In its scant eight pages, the Petition fails to (1) identify any serious basis for jurisdiction in Missouri; (2) identify any injury, or even any effect, that Media Matters has allegedly caused in Missouri; or (3) meaningfully explain how Media Matters has possibly violated any Missouri laws. But the purpose of Bailey's "investigation" is not to formulate a claim against Media Matters for violation of the MMPA, much less successfully pursue it to judgment. As his stream of partisan accusatory language and conduct towards Media Matters shows, Supp. Compl. ¶¶ 11, 19–20, 26, 36, his real purpose is "to retaliate for [and] to deter constitutionally protected conduct." Cullen, 18 F.3d at 103; see also Phelps, 59 F.3d at 1064 n.12.

E. Media Matters has not consented to jurisdiction in Missouri.

In a gambit to prop up his abstention argument, Bailey suggests Media Matters has waived its objection to personal jurisdiction in Missouri. Opp. 22–23. This Court need not resolve that [5] Since being added as a Defendant, Bailey has continued to attack both Media Matters and this Court's authority to adjudicate this matter. See @AGAndrewBailey, X.com (May 8, 2024, 5:18 PM), https://twitter.com/AGAndrewBailey/status/1788317466986172648 ("Media Matters is attempting to shut down Missouri courts . . . Bailey's publicity-seeking behavior and ad hominem attacks reinforce the bad faith nature of his investigation. E.g., Shaw, 467 F.2d at 115–19; PI Op. 38 (explaining similar attacks are "evidence of retaliatory intent").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

question of Missouri law, but the argument is meritless regardless. Bailey's argument rests entirely on Media Matters's application for a change of judge under Missouri Rule 51.05. See Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 51.05. Contrary to Bailey's erroneous argument, applications for change of judge are not "motions." Opposing parties are not entitled to respond to such applications, and courts lack any discretion to deny them: "When a party files a proper, timely application for change of judge, the trial court has no jurisdiction to do anything in the case other than grant the application." Cover v. Robinson, 224 S.W.3d 36, 38 (Mo. Ct. App. 2007); see also Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 51.05(a) ("A change of judge shall be ordered in any civil action upon the timely filing of a written application therefor by a party." (emphasis added)).

A separate rule—Rule 55.27(a)(2)—provides for an affirmative defense based on lack of personal jurisdiction. See Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 55.27(a)(2). Rule 55.27(g) explains that a "defense of: (A) [l]ack of jurisdiction over the person . . . is waived if it is: (A) [o]mitted from a motion [under Rule 55.27(f)], or (B) [n]either made by a motion under this Rule 55.27 nor included in a responsive pleading." Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 55.27(g); see also Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 55.27(f) (similar). Media Matters has not yet made any Rule 55.27 motion or filed any responsive pleading in Missouri.

Tellingly, Bailey does not cite a single Missouri case holding that a Rule 51.05(a) application waives an affirmative defense under Rule 55.27(a). Instead, he cites a case from Indiana that concerned a "motion" to change judges under Indiana law, Rollins Burdick Hunter of Utah, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees of Ball State Univ., 665 N.E.2d 914, 919 (Ind. Ct. App. 1996), but not an "application" under Missouri law. Bailey's remaining case law only confirms the grasping nature of his argument.[6]

II. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Bailey.

This Court has personal jurisdiction over Bailey for substantially the same reasons it has jurisdiction over Paxton. See PI Op. 18–28.[7]

A. This Court has long-arm jurisdiction over Bailey.

Bailey is subject to subsection (a)(1). Bailey contends that (a)(1) does not apply because hiring a process server does not constitute "transacting any business in the District of Columbia." D.C. Code § 13–423(a)(1). But it is "well-settled that the 'transacting any business' provision embraces those contractual activities of a nonresident defendant which cause a consequence here." Mouzavires v. Baxter, 434 A.2d 988, 992 (D.C. 1981) (citation omitted). Even "a single act may be sufficient to constitute transacting business," so long as the contact is "voluntary and deliberate, rather than fortuitous." Id. at 992, 995. That is what Bailey did here—he contracted with an agent to cause harmful consequences within D.C. Like Paxton, his choice to hire an agent to retaliate against Plaintiffs was plainly voluntary and deliberate. See PI Op. 24.[8]

With no trace of irony, Bailey complains that finding jurisdiction under (a)(1) would mean a party "could never sue an out-of-state entity . . . without subjecting themselves to a corresponding retaliatory lawsuit filed in the state of service." Opp. 24. Under Bailey's view, Media Matters can [7] Bailey does not dispute that he is a "person" under the long-arm statute. See PI Op. 10–18.

[8] Bailey suggests that hiring a process server does not establish a "continuing corporate presence in" in the District of Columbia. Opp. 24–25. He ignores that "an ongoing course of conduct is not necessary to satisfy § 13-423(a)(1)." PI Op. 24 (citation omitted).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

be forced into court in Cole County, Missouri—a jurisdiction with which Media Matters has not the faintest relevant connection—while Bailey may dispatch an agent into the District of Columbia to harass Media Matters without fear of appearing before a D.C. court. This Court has already properly rejected that argument, see PI Op. 19–22, and Bailey's own choice to hire an agent in the District of Columbia to cause an effect here suffices for (a)(1).

Bailey is subject to subsection (a)(3). Bailey puzzlingly suggests that none of his tortious conduct occurred in D.C. because he "mailed [the CID] from Missouri" and "did not hire a process server in D.C. for the CID." Opp. 25. But there is no dispute that Bailey "us[ed] a process server to serve" the petition to enforce the CID on Media Matters in D.C. Id. at 27. The CID Petition—personally served on Media Matters by Bailey's agent—attached the CID as an exhibit and is part and parcel of Bailey's broader retaliatory campaign against Plaintiffs. Media Matters did not even receive the Missouri CID as-issued by Bailey until April 1—five days after it was sued for not complying with it. The copy attached to the CID Petition was the first time Media Matters formally received the CID from Bailey. And, if anything, serving the CID Petition is even more tortious than serving the CID alone, not least of all because Bailey filed the former in a bad faith effort to preempt Media Matters's ability to vindicate its rights in this Court. Supra I.D. Bailey dispatched an agent into D.C. to commit "abusive service of process [that] causes injury within the forum," PI Op. 26, and thus satisfies (a)(3).[9] [9] Bailey relies on Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 285 (2014), a case which concerned due process and not the long-arm statute. Opp. 25. Regardless, Walden recognized that jurisdiction is appropriate where a party "reach[es] out beyond" their State and, through "physical entry into [another state]" causes harm. Walden, 571 U.S. at 285. That is this case. This Court previously distinguished Bailey's remaining authority. See PI Op. 26 (distinguishing Slate v. Kamau, No. 20-cv-3732 (BAH), 2021WL 3472438 (D.D.C. Aug. 6, 2021)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Bailey repeats Paxton's argument that Plaintiffs may not rely upon their injury in D.C. to show that Bailey acted tortiously here. Opp. 26. This Court properly rejected that argument, finding that "principle has no application here" because there "is an identifiable act (physically serving the [Petition] on Media Matters) that is separate from the claimed injury (chilling of First Amendment rights)." PI Op. 27–28.

B. Exercising personal jurisdiction over Bailey is consistent with Due Process.

Bailey admits that he "used a process server for [his] state enforcement action" in D.C., but claims jurisdiction is improper because Media Matters "challenges much more than that." Opp. 27. That bare claim is irrelevant to the specific jurisdiction analysis, which asks whether Bailey has "tak[en] some act by which [he] purposefully avails [himself] of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State." Ford Motor Co. v. Montana Eighth Jud. Dist. Ct., 592 U.S. 351, 359 (2021) (quotations omitted); see also Pls.' Mem. in Supp. of TRO & Prelim. Inj. Against Bailey 23–24, ECF No. 49-1 ("Mem."). Here, Plaintiffs' claims arise out of Bailey's retaliatory campaign directed towards them in D.C., of which Bailey's service of the CID Petition and CID are critical parts. As this Court explained, "it [is] reasonable to conclude that a lawyer who knowingly serves abusive process in a jurisdiction . . . is 'purposely avail[ing] himself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State.'" PI Op. 20 (quoting Schleit v. Warren, 693 F. Supp. 416, 422–23 (E.D. Va. 1988)). It was Bailey's "own choice" to "reach[] out beyond" Missouri to serve abusive process in D.C. Ford Motor Co., 592 U.S. at 359 (quoting Walden, 571 U.S. at 285). Exercising jurisdiction over him thus accords with due process.

Bailey also claims the benefit of a so-called "default rule" that state agencies should not have to defend their enforcement of state laws in courts across the country. Opp. 28 (citing Stroman Realty v. Wercinski, 513 F.3d 476, 487 (5th Cir. 2008)). But Bailey has "projected himself across state lines and asserted a pseudo-national executive authority" to police conduct occurring in D.C.

and Maryland, without any apparent connection to Missouri. Def. Distributed v. Grewal, 971 F.3d 485, 493 (5th Cir. 2020). As this Court has already explained, the "Fifth Circuit's decision in Grewal provides a close analogy to this case." PI Op. 21 (citing Def. Distrib., 971 F.3d 485). Bailey cannot explain why the Court was wrong to conclude that Grewal—which extensively distinguished Wercinski, 971 F.3d at 491–92—applies here.[10]

Finally, Bailey claims without explanation that if he is subject to jurisdiction in D.C., so too must Media Matters be subject to jurisdiction in Missouri. Opp. 27–28. Such a claim reveals a stark misunderstanding of basic personal jurisdiction principles. Plaintiffs' injury "arise[s] out of . . . [Bailey's] contacts" with D.C. Ford Motor Co., 592 U.S. at 359 (cleaned up). Plaintiffs' service of their supplemental complaint, in contrast, is unrelated to any purported injury that Bailey claims Media Matters caused in Missouri. Indeed, Bailey has failed to identify any injury, or even impact, that Media Matters has caused in Missouri. There is thus no reciprocity of jurisdiction.[11]

III. Plaintiffs' injuries are ripe and they lack an adequate remedy elsewhere.

Plaintiffs' claims are ripe and justiciable for substantially the same reasons this Court already found as to Paxton. See PI Op. 28–35. Bailey's argument to the contrary is nonsensical given that he is already seeking to enforce his CID. Accordingly, Bailey primarily argues that Plaintiffs have an adequate remedy available in Missouri state court. For the reasons discussed below, he is incorrect on all scores.

[10] Music Makers Holdings, LLC v. Sarro, No. 09-cv-1836 (RWT), 2010 WL 2807805, at *5 (D. Md. July 15, 2010)—which involved a private party mailing a "cease-and-desist letter," rather than any compulsory process, to another private party—is irrelevant.

[11] Bailey's claim that Media Matters must have "substantial contacts" with Missouri because it obtained a charity exemption ignores that specific jurisdiction requires that claims "arise out of" such contacts. Ford Motor Co., 592 U.S. at 359. Bailey has not even claimed—never mind shown—that Media Matters's alleged contacts with Missouri have anything to do with its reporting on X and Musk.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Lack of adequate remedy. Bailey chooses, like Paxton, to place great reliance on Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964), for the idea that Media Matters has an adequate remedy at law. See Opp. 29–30. But in Reisman there "had not yet been an injury" to the plaintiffs, PI Op. 30 (quoting Twitter, Inc. v. Paxton, 56 F.4th 1170, 1178 (9th Cir. 2022)), and no injury even could have been cognizable until the plaintiffs first availed themselves of an administrative remedy, see Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1178 (explaining "the injury in Reisman would only occur if the document request were satisfied" after the administrative process). In contrast, Plaintiffs' First Amendment injury "is ongoing" and they "cannot 'avoid'" it "by challenging the document request" in Missouri state court. PI Op. 30 (quoting Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1179).

Bailey acknowledges this Court has already set aside Reisman but insists that Missouri law affords Media Matters a remedy that Texas law lacks. Specifically, whereas the Texas statute contemplated a recipient seeking relief in their county of residence, the parallel provision in the Missouri statute identifies Cole County as a catchall venue for petitioners. See Opp. 30 (citing Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.070). That is a distinction without a difference. Seeking affirmative, contested relief in Missouri state court would likely require Plaintiffs to waive personal jurisdiction, including potentially over any subsequent civil suits related to the subject matter of the Missouri CID. E.g., Moore v. Crocker, 674 S.W.3d 146, 150 (Mo. Ct. App. 2023). Consenting to jurisdiction in Missouri is not a meaningful remedy given that the very relief Plaintiffs seek is for the Attorney General of that state to cease overstepping his jurisdiction to retaliate against Media Matters for exercising its constitutional rights here in D.C.

The procedure under the MMPA also suffers from similar deficiencies as its Texas equivalent. Bailey, like Paxton, has taken the view that he has sweeping powers to issue and enforce CIDs. He claimed in a similar proceeding that the MMPA grants him power "akin to that of a grand jury," permitting him to "investigate merely on suspicion that the law is being violated, or even just because [he] wants assurance that it is not."[12] At the same time, he asserts Media Matters has limited substantive and procedural rights in any Missouri proceeding. For example, he contends that the D.C. and Maryland reporter shield laws "do not apply extraterritorially" to Missouri, potentially stripping Plaintiffs of a privilege they enjoy here. Opp. 35. He also asserts that the MMPA does "not require[] [him] to show [his] hand," id. at 3, meaning Media Matters must defend itself in a proceeding where it is kept in the dark as to the claims being made against it. The Missouri statute provides only that CIDs may be set aside for "good cause," but fails to specify the substantive and procedural rights a petitioner enjoys under that provision. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.070. Bailey is plainly retaliating against Media Matters for its speech; the meager protections provided under Missouri law are not sufficient for Media Matters to protect itself.

Most critically, only this Court can grant Plaintiffs complete and speedy relief. Cf. Council of & for the Blind of Delaware Cnty. Valley, Inc. v. Regan, 709 F.2d 1521, 1550 n.76 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (en banc) (Spottswood, C.J., concurring) (explaining an alternative legal remedy must be "speedy and adequate"). After all, "an adequate remedy at law means a remedy which is plain and complete and as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as a remedy in equity by injunction." 11A Wright & Miller Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 2944 (3d ed.) (quotations omitted).

Seeking relief in Missouri will not guarantee Media Matters a complete remedy. By his own admission, Bailey has "coordinated with Texas" and is "in talks with other states as well." Suppl. Compl. ¶ 36. Paxton is a party in this case but not in the Missouri CID Proceeding. It is [12] See Resp't's Mot. for J. on Pleadings & Suggestions in Supp. at 1, 13, Planned Parenthood of the St. Louis Region v. Bailey, No. 2322-CC00637 (St. Louis Cir. Ct. Oct. 31, 2023) (attached as Ex. A).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

doubtful that Media Matters can obtain relief against Paxton—or any additional state officials—in Missouri court. The upshot of Bailey's argument is that Media Matters has an adequate remedy at law because it may race around the country to defend itself in different state courts. The D.C. Circuit has squarely rejected such a theory. See Reed Enters. v. Corcoran, 354 F.2d 519, 520 (D.C. Cir. 1965) (Skelly Wright, J.). The court in Reed explained that being forced to defend themselves in a "multiplicity of legal proceedings" filed "throughout the United States" provided the plaintiffs with "no adequate remedy at law." Id.; accord 11A Wright & Miller Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 2944 (3d ed.) (remedy not adequate where "effective legal relief can be secured only by a multiplicity of actions").

Proceeding in Missouri also fails to guarantee Media Matters a speedy remedy. Planned Parenthood recently filed a petition to set aside another CID issued by Bailey and—after Bailey cross-petitioned to enforce—it took nearly thirteen months for the petitions to be resolved. See Planned Parenthood of St. Louis v. Bailey, Case No. 2322-CC00637 (St. Louis Cir. Ct.). Media Matters cannot afford to wait that long. There is no reason to expect a different timeline here, particularly since any petition filed by Media Matters in state court would likely be consolidated with Bailey's preemptive strike against it in Cole County. Bailey has for all practical purposes already chosen the timing, venue, and terms of any state court contest over the Missouri CID's validity. In no way do such proceedings afford Plaintiffs an adequate remedy at law.[13]

Ripeness. Bailey's undeveloped ripeness claim is based entirely on his contention that "there is [already] an enforcement action in Missouri state court" where Media Matters can litigate. Opp. 31. But Media Matters cannot rely on the Cole County proceedings to vindicate its rights for [13] Seeking any preliminary relief would also only further the claim that Media Matters has consented to jurisdiction in Missouri. See Moore, 674 S.W.3d at 150.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

the same reasons it cannot rely on filing a petition for relief in Missouri. It would also be perverse to hold that Media Matters has no choice but to vindicate its rights in proceedings that have been weaponized against it in a foreign venue for unlawful reasons (and improperly filed to evade this Court's jurisdiction). As this Court has already recognized, such a result would reward state officials for staggering their conduct in a manner intended to frustrate federal review of federal claims. See PI Op. 5 n.3; Pls.' Notice of Mo. Att'y Gen. CID & Pet. 2, ECF No. 36. That is a real concern here, where Bailey is coordinating with other state attorneys general, including Paxton. Suppl. Compl. ¶ 36. Bailey's reliance on Pennzoil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 481 U.S. 1 (1987) is misplaced. There, the parties did not dispute that the Defendant—Texaco—was subject to personal jurisdiction in the Texas state courts. See generally Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 4. Plaintiffs are under no duty here to seek "judicial relief in a foreign forum." PI Op. 30.[14]

IV. Media Matters and Hananoki are likely to prevail on the merits of their claims.

A. Plaintiffs are likely to prevail on their First Amendment retaliation claim.

Bailey's attempts to rebut Plaintiffs' claim of retaliatory chill fall short.

First, Plaintiffs have satisfied the causation standard for a First Amendment claim. There is no doubt that "but-for" Bailey's retaliatory animus, Plaintiffs would not be subject to his harassment and abuse. See Nieves v. Bartlett, 587 U.S. 391, 398–99 (2019). At every step, Bailey has made clear that he means to punish Media Matters's speech, not to pursue a good faith investigation. See Suppl. Compl. ¶¶ 10–11, 16–21, 24–37; ECF No. 36 at 1–3; 2d Suppl. Decl. of Eric Hanonoki ¶¶ 5-11, ECF No. 49-2 ("2d Suppl. Hananoki Decl."); Suppl. Decl. of Cynthia Padera ¶¶ 6–26, ECF No. 49-3 ("Suppl. Padera Decl."); Suppl. Decl. of Benjamin Dimiero ¶¶ 4– [14] Bailey's reference to cases questioning pre-enforcement review of administrative subpoenas, see Opp. 31, is irrelevant both because Bailey is seeking to enforce the CID, and for the First Amendment-related reasons already identified by this Court. See PI Op. 28, 34–35.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

9, ECF No. 49-5; see also supra I.D. Bailey has had months to identify evidence that his investigation has any basis in fact but offers only a single brief declaration that echoes the threadbare and conclusory allegations in the CID Petition. See Decl. of Assistant Atty. Gen. Steven Reed, ECF No. 56-1. Bailey, just like Paxton before him, has boasted publicly about the reasons underlying his investigation of Media Matters making clear it is a textbook exercise in "retaliatory intent." PI Op. 37–38 (finding Paxton's motive was the but-for cause of Plaintiffs' injury where causation evidence included Paxton's public statements about the investigation and attacking Media Matters).

Bailey mischaracterizes Plaintiffs' retaliation claim by arguing that Plaintiffs' only evidence of Bailey's retaliatory motive is that Media Matters once published a single critical article of him. See Opp. 33. In reality, that article is only one small piece of evidence among overwhelming proof of retaliatory motive. E.g., Mem. 9–15, 30–31; see generally ECF No. 36. Bailey also suggests that his office would have investigated Media Matters anyway based on the facts in "X Corp.'s lawsuit" in the Northern District of Texas. Opp. 32. But that assertion raises more questions than answers. Nowhere does Bailey explain what interest the Missouri Attorney General has in a civil suit filed in Texas by a Nevada-incorporated and California-based company against a D.C.-based media organization about reporting that was done from Maryland. Bailey's brazen assertion of near limitless jurisdiction to "investigate" such reporting only highlights the clear evidence of retaliation here.

Next, Bailey argues that Media Matters is not actually suffering any chill, see id. 33–34, but fails to dispute the broad evidence that has been presented on this point, including the facts in Plaintiffs' declarations. Instead, he points to an article that Media Matters wrote criticizing The New York Times, in which Bailey was passingly mentioned as a subject of that paper's coverage.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And he claims, based on a "quick search," that Media Matters has published articles about Musk since November 2023. Id. Actually reviewing that search, however, reveals that the articles at issue either contain statements related to this litigation or only fleeting references to Musk. These passing references do not undermine Plaintiffs' substantial evidence of chill, and Plaintiffs "need not show that the government action led them to stop speaking 'altogether'" anyways. PI Op. 39 (quoting Edgar v. Haines, 2 F.4th 298, 310 (4th Cir. 2021)). Media Matters has not published articles focused on Musk since November.[15] That is consistent with the "uncontested evidence" in its declaration testimony, e.g., 2d Suppl. Hananoki Decl. ¶ 12, upon which this Court relied in finding that Plaintiffs' "self-censorship in response" to Paxton's nearly identical investigation and CID "provides some evidence of the tendency of [Defendant's] conduct to chill First Amendment activity." PI Op. 37 (quoting Hartley v. Wilfert, 918 F. Supp. 2d 45, 54 (D.D.C. 2013)); see also Constantine v. Rectors & Visitors of George Mason Univ., 411 F.3d 474, 500 (4th Cir. 2005).

Bailey's chill argument also ignores the reality of the injuries suffered by Plaintiff Hananoki, Media Matters's Senior Investigative Reporter. While Bailey's response does not once mention or acknowledge Hananoki, the Missouri CID expressly seeks documents directly related to Hananoki's investigative reporting, including confidential source information. See Mo. Civil Investigative Demand to Media Matters 4–5, ECF No. 39-5. As Hananoki has explained now in several declarations, his reporting on Musk's ownership of X has ceased because of the retaliation he is facing. See Decl. of Eric Hananoki ¶¶ 24–39, ECF No. 4-3; Suppl. Decl. of Eric Hananoki ¶¶ 2–6, ECF No. 28-1; 2d Suppl. Hananoki Decl. ¶¶ 10–14. He has described how, even when an article naturally lends itself to discussing Musk, he steers clear of the subject for fear of further retaliation. 2d Suppl. Hananoki Decl. ¶¶ 10–14. The significant drop-off in his publication output confirms the harm that Bailey's lawless behavior is causing. See PI Op. 37.[16] Indeed, in rejecting Paxton's similar argument, this Court found that "potential punitive consequences, as well as possible judicial intervention to enforce the CID, make Plaintiffs' claim of chilled expression objectively reasonable." PI Op. 37.

Third, and finally, Bailey bizarrely claims that the actions he has taken against Plaintiffs are not "material adverse action[s]" because "Media Matters does not dispute that it is going to have to litigate its claims in one forum or another." Opp. 34. That is illogical. If Bailey had never retaliated against Plaintiffs to begin with, the parties would have no need to litigate at all. Bailey's retaliatory service of the Missouri CID and CID Petition are plainly "material adverse action." Such extreme conduct clearly would "chill a person of ordinary firmness" in the plaintiffs' position from engaging in "future First Amendment activity." Houston Cmty. Coll. Sys. v. Wilson, 595 U.S. 468, 477 (2022) (quoting Nieves, 587 U.S. at 397) (explaining standard for material adverse action); see also PI Op. 35–37 (finding Paxton's similar conduct met this standard).

B. Plaintiffs are likely to prevail on their remaining claims.

First and Fourth Amendments. Bailey was required to exercise "scrupulous exactitude" in his CID because "the materials sought to be seized" are "protected by the First Amendment." Zurcher v. Stanford Daily, 436 U.S. 547, 564 (1978) (quoting Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 485 (1965)). He does not dispute that the documents he seeks are protected materials, nor that the Missouri CID is a sweeping and overbroad request for such documents. See Opp. 34–35.

[16] A review of Media Matters's website shows that Hananoki has only published seven articles this year. He published roughly five times as many articles during the same period last year. See generally Eric Hananoki, Media Matters for America https://www.mediamatters.org/author/eric-hananoki (last visited May 20, 2024).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Bailey contends that Media Matters "can litigate [this] issue under a standard timeline." Opp. 34. But he has asserted sweeping powers—those "akin to that of a grand jury"—and is seeking to enforce them now. Absent prompt relief from this Court, Plaintiffs will be left to rely solely upon the limited procedures available to vindicate these rights in the foreign Missouri forum. Supra at 24-26. The Court should grant relief on this claim now. See Major League Baseball v. Crist, 331 F.3d 1177, 1187–88 (11th Cir. 2003) (quashing CID that violated the Fourth Amendment).

D.C. and Maryland Shield Laws. According to Bailey, the D.C. and Maryland shield laws "do not apply extraterritorially to Media Matters' conduct in Missouri." Opp. 35. But all of Plaintiffs' disputed reporting occurred in D.C. or Maryland. To the extent Bailey means these laws do not apply extraterritorially in Missouri, that is another reason why that forum offers no adequate remedy to Plaintiffs. Supra at 25.

Bailey also ignores that it is his burden to "establish[] by clear and convincing evidence that there is an 'overriding public interest in the disclosure'" of the materials he seeks. Grunseth v. Marriott Corp., 868 F. Supp. 333, 336 (D.D.C. 1994). Absent such a showing, which Bailey has not even tried to make, the D.C. shield law provides "an absolute prohibition against compelling" disclosure of either "[t]he source of any news or information" and any "news or information procured . . . that is not itself communicated in the news media." Id. (quoting D.C. Code § 4702).

Due process. Bailey misconstrues this claim as applying solely to the CID Petition. To be sure, the Missouri courts lack personal jurisdiction over Media Matters and no waiver of that defense has occurred. Supra I.E; see also Suppl. Padera Decl. ¶¶ 16–25. But Media Matters's claim sweeps beyond the CID Petition and extends to Bailey's use of compulsory process against Media Matters, including his abuse of the CID provision in the MMPA. See Suppl. Compl. ¶¶ 58–62.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Simply put, Bailey violates Plaintiffs' due process rights by deploying Missouri's investigative machinery against them, including by using the Missouri CID as a cudgel against Plaintiffs' constitutional rights. See Ins. Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702 (1982).[17]

V. The equities weigh strongly in favor of preliminary relief.

Irreparable harm. Bailey suggests Plaintiffs are suffering no injury because they need not turn over any documents prior to a hearing. That fails to address the existing chill from Bailey's retaliation, which is "caus[ing] Plaintiffs to self-censor when making research and publication decisions, [has] adversely affected the relationships between editors and reporters, and restricted communications with sources and journalists." PI Op. 38; see also Mem. 37–38.

Balance of the equities and public interest. Bailey claims the equities cut in his favor because the "importance and need to protect consumers is indisputable." Opp. 37. But Bailey has failed to identify any Missouri consumer harmed—or at risk of harm—from Plaintiffs. Nor has he offered any theory as to how Plaintiffs are violating Missouri consumer protection law. Similarly baseless is his assertion that Plaintiffs' harms are self-inflicted, id. at 38, an argument already rejected by this Court when it was previously raised by Paxton. PI Op. 30–33 (finding given the ample evidence of injury presented by Plaintiffs, including of self-censorship resulting from Paxton's actions, "Defendant is wrong" in arguing that "any such injury is 'self-inflicted'"). The chill Plaintiffs are suffering is directly traceable to Bailey's conduct. See Mem. 27–30.

[17] Bailey disingenuously states that "[t]he other claims by Media Matters—which this Court declined to accept with respect to Texas—are similarly meritless." Opp. 9. The Court did no such thing. In its order granting Plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction against Paxton, this Court only addressed one claim—Plaintiffs' First Amendment retaliation claim—because the Court found Plaintiffs were likely to prevail on that claim. PI Op. 35. Nowhere did this Court "decline to accept" Plaintiffs' arguments on the merits of their remaining claims.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Bailey also claims that "federalism will be defeated" if "a federal court injunction is sought for routine investigations of potential violations of state law." Opp. 38. But there is nothing routine about Bailey's assertion of nationwide jurisdiction to punish journalism that he—or those he seeks to curry favor with—deems "fraudulent." Permitting a state attorney general to so plainly overstep his jurisdiction in pursuit of a baseless and retaliatory investigation is the true threat to federalism here. Cf. Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 714, (1999) (explaining "States form distinct" sovereigns but only "within their respective spheres" (quoting The Federalist No. 39 (James Madison)). The public interest strongly weighs against such a result, and accordingly "[t]he balance of equities and the public interest favor Plaintiffs" once more. PI Op. 40; see also Mem. 38–39.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons above, the Court should grant Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction against Bailey and, for the same reasons, deny Bailey's motion to dismiss.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Sweep away Media Matters' hyper-aggressive rhetoric, and what the brief does not say speaks volumes. Media Matters does not deny that it solicits donations from Missourians; does not deny that it sends newsletters directly to Missourians; does not deny that it has tremendous contacts with Missouri (so much so that it reached out to see whether it had to register in Missouri); and does not—because it cannot—deny that all these activities are governed under the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act ("MMPA"). Instead, Media Matters conjures an unsupported theory that the Missouri Attorney General's motives for instituting an investigation are improper. But that is both factually wrong and foreclosed by binding precedent.

The Supreme Court mandates that federal courts presume that government officials have acted in good faith, so motives are irrelevant if there is probable cause for government action. Nieves v. Bartlett, 139 S. Ct. 1715, 1722–23 (2019). Indeed, two weeks ago, the Supreme Court ruled that a presumption like this "directs district courts to draw the inference that cuts in the [official's] favor when confronted with evidence that could plausibly support multiple conclusions." See Alexander v. S.C. State Conf. of the NAACP, 144 S. Ct. 1221, 1235–36 (2024). Media Matters provides nothing to suggest there is no probable cause to investigate, nor that bad motives are the only plausible inference from the record. Media Matters has failed to state a claim. E.g., Rule 12(b)(6).

More fundamentally, though, Media Matters' attack on federalism must fail. As the Backpage court determined, any federal lawsuit to block a state court proceeding involving a CID issued by the Missouri Attorney General necessarily triggers Younger abstention because of the specifics of Missouri law. Backpage.com, LLC v. Hawley, No. 17-CV-1951, 2017 WL 5726868, at *7 (E.D. Mo. Nov. 28, 2017). Media Matters relies on a Third Circuit case about New Jersey's different statute. But the Third Circuit stressed that failure to respond to a New Jersey CID was not a violation of that consumer protection law: "To date, he has not accused the company of violating the Consumer Fraud Act."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Smith & Wesson Brands, Inc. v. Atty. Gen. of New Jersey, 27 F.4th 886, 892 (3d Cir. 2022). In contrast, failure to timely respond to a Missouri CID is a violation of Missouri's consumer protection act, and Missouri's lawsuit seeks a civil penalty against Media Matters for that violation.

To get around this, Media Matters asserts (for the first time in its reply brief) that the exceedingly narrow exception to Younger for bad faith applies. But it appears no judge in this federal district has ever found the exception to apply, nor has the D.C. Circuit. That makes sense given the very strong presumption of good faith. It is still an open question whether the bad-faith exception applies at all in civil cases. Media Matters is only able to cite one case applying the exception in the civil context—an out-of-circuit decision from 30 years ago.

Media Matters also asserts that Missouri courts are insufficient, but it makes no serious attempt to rebut with "unambiguous authority" the strong presumption that "state procedures will afford an adequate remedy." Pennzoil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 481 U.S. 1, 15 (1987). That is true for every issue that can be litigated, including personal jurisdiction.

ARGUMENT

I. Younger Abstention Applies and Dismissal Is Required.

Media Matters asks the Court to break new ground in the field of Younger and depart from the reasoned decisions of many other courts. They also ask this Court to be the first one ever in this circuit to find that the "bad-faith" exception to abstention applies. The Court should decline.

A. The state court proceeding is a "civil enforcement proceeding."

As the Backpage court determined, an action to enforce a Missouri CID is plainly a "civil enforcement proceeding" under Younger, as it seeks judicial remedy for a violation of the disclosure requirements of the MMPA. Backpage.com, 2017 WL 5726868, at *7.

1. Media Matters' principal response—that the proceeding does not seek legal relief "for a wrongful act"—is easily dispensed with. The operative complaint seeks a $1,000 civil penalty. Ex. A,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Amended Complaint, Missouri v. Media Matters, No. 24AC-CC02291, at 1, 11–12 (May 24, 2024). Even absent the request for a monetary penalty, the proceeding would still seek judicial relief in response to an unlawful act. Under Missouri law, failure to comply with a CID or seek a court order before the due date for production is an independent violation of the consumer protection statute. Mo. Rev. Stat, § 407.080 ("shall comply with the terms [of the CID] unless otherwise provided by an order of a court"). Media Matters was obligated to produce documents or seek judicial relief by April 15. It did neither, so it violated Missouri law, and the State is entitled to a $1,000 penalty unless Media Matters prevails on an affirmative defense. Id. § 407.100. Media Matters is thus flat wrong to assert (at 13) that the ongoing proceeding "seeks no sanction for violations of the MMPA." Both complaints do.

That makes this case starkly different from Smith & Wesson, on which Media Matters principally relies. That court determined that Younger did not apply because the state court proceeding was "not a suit initiated to punish wrongdoing"; the New Jersey Attorney General "did not allege that Smith & Wesson violated any substantive legal duty. To date, he has not accused the company of violating the Consumer Fraud Act . . . ." 27 F.4th at 892. Unlike Missouri law, which treats failure to timely obey a CID as a violation of Missouri law, "failure to obey a subpoena issued by the [New Jersey] Attorney General may be addressed by the court to compel compliance but it is not treated as a violation of the Consumer Fraud Act." Id. at 893 (quoting Grewal v. 22Mods4ALL, Inc., No. ESX-C-244-19, slip op. at *17 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. May 24, 2021)) (brackets adopted) (emphasis added).[1]

Media Matters nonetheless asks the Court to read in a new exception, saying (at 12) it had no opportunity to comply with Missouri law because the Attorney General sued to enforce the CID

[1] Separately, Smith & Wesson applied a heightened standard not required by Supreme Court precedent and not adopted by other circuits. For example, while the Supreme Court in Sprint said that in proceedings triggering Younger, "[i]nvestigations are commonly involved, often culminating in the filing of a formal complaint or charges," Sprint Commun., Inc. v. Jacobs, 571 U.S. 69, 79–80 (2013) (emphasis added), the Third Circuit required "quasi criminal" proceedings and "a preliminary investigation that culminated with the filing of formal charges," 27 F.4th at 891. These are not required by Sprint.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

shortly after sending it. But Missouri law expressly permits the Attorney General to preemptively sue "[w]henever it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in, is engaging in, or is about to engage in any . . . act . . . declared to be unlawful by [the MMPA]." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.100 (emphasis added). The Attorney General properly sought relief at that time for production of documents. And the Attorney General did not amend the complaint to seek the monetary penalty until after Media Matters failed to comply or seek judicial relief before April 15.

2. Media Matters describes (at 13) the authorities cited by the Missouri Attorney General as "inapposite," but must misquote and mischaracterize the opinions to differentiate those rulings.

For example, Media Matters asserts that Younger abstention was held improper with respect to one party in Cedar Rapids Cellular Telephone, L.P. v. Miller, 280 F.3d 874 (8th Cir. 2002), simply because the Attorney General was doing nothing more than trying to obtain documents. But in fact, the crux of the Court's reasoning was that abstention did not apply because there was "not a judicial proceeding." Id. at 882. Indeed, the Court acknowledged that Younger abstention could be appropriate if the Attorney General brought an enforcement proceeding to obtain the documents. Id.

Media Matters next derides the Backpage opinion, saying (at 15) that it "improperly concluded that it was sufficient that the 'state-court action clearly involves an investigation with the potential to culminate in the filing of a formal complaint or charges.'" But Backpage simply noted this was "indicia" of a civil enforcement proceeding triggering Younger. Id. at *6; see also Google, Inc. v. Hood, 822 F.3d 212 (5th Cir. 2016) (abstention improper where the attorney general issued an administrative subpoena but had "not moved to enforce [it] in any state court"). And in any event, Sprint does not require that a state court proceeding seek formal sanctions; it simply notes that enforcement actions are usually "initiated to sanction the federal plaintiff." 571 U.S. at 79.

Media Matters finally attempts (at 8–9) to differentiate Yelp, Inc. v. Paxton, No. 23-cv-4977, 2024 WL 413464, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 1, 2024), arguing it is inapplicable because the Texas Deceptive

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Trade Practices Act "involve[d] sanctions, including civil penalties of up to $10,000 per violation." Yet the ongoing proceeding here seeks a (modest) monetary penalty for violation of the MMPA. If these factors supported the second factor in Yelp, they equally support the Missouri Attorney General.

B. The Missouri court proceeding "touch[es] on a state court's ability to perform its judicial function."

As the Backpage court properly found, an action to enforce a Missouri CID also falls within the third Younger category. 2017 WL 5726868, at *7–8.

In arguing otherwise, Media Matters disregards its burden and misstates the standard. It notes the general requirement that courts exercise their jurisdiction, but disregards that Younger abstention is recognized as a "far-from-novel" exception to this general rule, Sprint, 571 U.S. at 77, and once a federal defendant establishes availability of Younger, the burden flips to a plaintiff to show that an exception applies. E.g., Kirschner v. Klemons, 225 F.3d 227, 236 (2d Cir. 2000) ("a plaintiff seeking to avoid Younger must affirmatively demonstrate the justification for application of an exception.").

Likewise, Media Matters stresses quoted language in Sprint saying that state proceedings must involve orders "uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions," but omits that this quote came from case law before Sprint and that Sprint reformulated the rule: a state proceeding need only "touch on a state court's ability to perform its judicial function." 571 U.S. at 79. The state proceeding does here because, as Backpage properly determined, just like state courts provide a critical role in criminal investigations (through the grand jury), they serve an important function under Missouri law of facilitating civil investigations. Backpage, 2017 WL 5726868, at *7. This federal action touches on Missouri courts' ability to perform their judicial functions. (In any event, enforcing CIDs is "uniquely in furtherance" of those courts' ability to perform their functions.)

To evade this problem, Media Matters (at 16–17) asks this Court to hold that the third Younger category requires courts to have already issued an order. The Sixth Circuit has squarely rejected that argument: "we do not read the third category so narrowly as to preclude Younger abstention when the state court has not yet issued an order." Aaron v. O'Connor, 914 F.3d 1010, 1018 (6th Cir. 2019). Indeed, the Supreme Court held that a district court was required to abstain under the third category in a federal case filed "before the Texas court entered judgment." Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 6 (emphasis added); see also Fieger v. Cox, 524 F.3d 770, 775 (6th Cir. 2008) (finding third category met where plaintiff "could have filed a motion to quash the search warrants").

C. This Court's preliminary injunction against General Paxton is irrelevant to whether Younger applies in the suit against the Missouri Attorney General.

No stronger is Media Matters' assertion (at 11–13) that this federal case is beyond the "embryonic" stage with respect to Paxton, so Younger is no longer appropriate. The parties agree the Missouri Attorney General "was added as a defendant after he commenced the CID Proceeding in Missouri." Resp. Br. 12 (emphasis added). Media Matters nonetheless insists that because Younger would be improper with respect to Paxton (because of the preliminary injunction against him), it is inappropriate with respect to the Missouri Attorney General as well. That is wrong on many levels.

For starters, the Supreme Court has expressly rejected that argument, holding instead that courts generally must analyze Younger separately for each respondent "as if that respondent stood alone." Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 929 (1975). Doran, which Media Matters does not cite, involved a challenge by three companies to an ordinance prohibiting topless dancing. Id. Like Media Matters argues here, the Court of Appeals said all respondents "should automatically be thrown into the same hopper for Younger purposes." Id. at 928. The Supreme Court disagreed: "each of the respondents should be placed in the position required by our [Younger] cases as if that respondent stood alone." Id. at 929. Where "no contested matter had been decided" between two specific parties, the issue was "squarely governed by Younger." Id. (dismissing suit under Younger with respect to one of three parties). It is thus irrelevant how far this case has progressed against Paxton. It is still embryonic against the Missouri Attorney General.

Media Matters tries to evade this holding by arguing for judicial economy, noting that courts in some circumstances say abstention is inappropriate once decisions on the merits have been issued because there has been "significant expenditure of effort" by the federal court. See Haw. Hous. Auth. v. Midkiff, 467 U.S. 229, 238 (1984) ("considerations of [judicial] economy"). But that is true only for parties whose issues have progressed. Doran rejected the idea that if Younger is inappropriate for one respondent, it is inappropriate for all: "efficient judicial administration," the Supreme Court said, "must of necessity be subordinated to the claims of federalism." 422 U.S. at 927.

In any event, Younger abstention would not disrupt any "expenditure of effort" by this Court. While the suit against Paxton might be beyond the embryonic stage, that dispute concerns a different defendant, different facts, a different timeline of investigation, and different state law. That is why Media Matters initially sued only Paxton and did not sue until more than four months later. Between Media Matters and Bailey, "no contested matter ha[s] been decided," so this issue is "squarely governed by Younger." Doran, 422 U.S. at 929. If this Court abstains under Younger with respect to the counts against Bailey, it will not disrupt any proceedings already instituted against Paxton.

Younger can be assessed in the aggregate, rather than on a respondent-by-respondent basis, only when the "parties are so closely related" that they are in privity. See id. at 928–29. That explains the few examples Media Matters cites. For example, Hill v. Snyder involved a challenge to a state statute initially brought against the Michigan Governor, Director of Corrections, and Chair of the Parole Board. 878 F.3d 193, 200 (6th Cir. 2017). Seven years later, plaintiffs added the Michigan Attorney General, who enforced the same challenged laws, as a defendant and the court declined to abstain. Id. at 207. Similarly, in Derma Pen, LLC v. 4EverYoung Ltd., the court refused to abstain in a suit between two companies when a new party was added because that new party was "an insider and until very recently was the chairman" of one of the parties. 2015 WL 791595, at *6 (D. Utah Feb. 25, 2015).[2]

While the newly added parties in both those cases were "so closely related" that they were essentially in privity, Doran, 422 U.S. at 929, the same cannot be said of Paxton and Bailey. Media Matters simply asserts that both launched investigations near in time and vaguely "coordinated" with each other. But the parties in Doran coordinated much more closely. They all joined the same suit on the same day, were "represented by common counsel, and have similar business activities and problems." Doran, 422 U.S. at 928–29. And yet the Court held that Younger must be assessed separately with respect to each respondent because "they are apparently unrelated in terms of ownership, control, and management." Id. Paxton and Bailey are not represented by common counsel, have no common control or management, and do not enforce the same laws. That they may have "coordinated" to some limited degree—a common thing for litigants on the same side of the "v."—cannot create privity. And as explained further below, there are substantial differences between Paxton's and Bailey's investigations and cases.

Media Matters is unable to identify even one case that declined to abstain in circumstances remotely similar to this one. Indeed, under their theory, abstention would be inappropriate even if the Paxton case was final and Bailey were sued separately. That obviously cannot be correct.[3]

[2] Hill also differs from this case because the newly added Michigan Attorney General sought Younger abstention with respect to all defendants, including the original ones. 878 F.3d at 206. Bailey does not argue that Younger applies with respect to Paxton. And Derma's entire analysis on Younger is dicta because the suit involved a proceeding over property, and the court concluded at the outset that, "[i]n rem proceedings are exceptions to the abstention doctrine." Derma, 2015 WL 791595, at *5; see also id. at *7 (no abstention because the state action "threatens to dispose of property" at issue in its substantive proceedings, which would "diminish the court's power to bring this litigation . . . to a natural conclusion").

[3] Media Matters' argument makes clear its decision to move to supplement its complaint was calculated to create this argument against Younger abstention, and it shows why consolidation was improper. Rule 15(d) does not permit "supplemental, unrelated claims against new defendants." See Chandler v. James, 783 F. Supp. 2d 33, 39 (D.D.C. 2011). "When considering such a request, the trial court is required

D. No court in this district has ever applied the exceptionally narrow "bad faith" exception, and it does not apply here.

The "bad faith" exception does not apply here. The Supreme Court has never applied the "bad-faith" exception in the half century since Younger was decided. This exception is considered "exceedingly rare." Tindall v. Wayne Cnty. Friend of Ct., 269 F.3d 533, 539 (6th Cir. 2001); see also Ballard v. Wilson, 856 F.2d 1568, 1571 (5th Cir. 1988) (describing bad faith exception as "very narrow").

1. Media Matters does not dispute that it failed to raise this issue in its opening brief. The issue is thus waived for the preliminary injunction motion. Media Matters had an obligation to establish jurisdiction in that motion, and Younger is "treated as jurisdictional." Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Envt., 523 U.S. 83, 100 n.3 (1998). And Media Matters is wrong to assert (at 22 n.3) that "Bailey injected Younger into this litigation for the first time in his opposition brief." Texas expressly raised the issue in opposition to the Rule 15 motion. ECF 40 at 3. Media Matters cannot save its accusations of Younger bad faith for its reply brief, giving Bailey no opportunity to respond with respect to the preliminary injunction briefing. While the issue is not waived with respect to the motion to dismiss, it is waived with respect to the preliminary injunction motion.

2. As Bailey previously argued, the Supreme Court expressly held that the exception is triggered only when judges act in bad faith. Media Matters (at 23) accuses the Attorney General of "invent[ing] that rule out of whole cloth" but then concedes in the same paragraph that the most well-to take into account any prejudice that the opposing party would suffer as a result. Indeed, the prejudice to the opposing party is among the most important reasons to deny leave to amend." Thorp v. D.C., 325 F.R.D. 510, 513 (D.D.C. 2018) (cleaned up). "Prejudice may arise when the proposed complaint adds new parties or at least entails more than an alternate claim or a change in the allegations of a complaint." Id. (quotations and citation omitted). Here, the Court granted the motion, adding the Missouri Attorney General as a defendant on wholly distinct counts, related to wholly distinct actions, at a wholly distinct period of time. That created severe prejudice, as it has been levied as a shield and a sword by Media Matters to attack the CID and attack the Missouri state court proceedings. The court erred in granted leave to supplement the complaint, where Media Matters was "free to recast the arguments of [its] supplemental complaint as a complaint in a new, perhaps related, action before this court." Id. (quoting Chandler, 783 F. Supp. 2d at 39). This is yet another reason to dismiss.

respect treatise on federal procedure, Wright & Miller, also concluded that the exception requires bad faith by judges. 17B Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 4255 n.11 (3d ed.). There is no accusation of bad faith on the part of Missouri judges, so the claim must fail.

3. Even if this Court considers bad faith beyond judges, as some courts in other circuits have, the exception is extraordinarily narrow. Media Matters (at 22) calls this "a textbook case for application of the bad faith exception," but has been unable to identify a single case in this circuit where a court has found the exception to apply. Indeed, most courts "have only recognized it in the criminal context." See Aaron v. Target Corp., 357 F.3d 768, 778 (8th Cir. 2004). Media Matters cites just one case in the civil context, and it is both out of circuit and 30 years old. Resp. Br. 22 (citing *Cullen v. Fliegne*r, 18 F.3d 96, 104 (2d Cir. 1994)). Media Matters cites no case anywhere in the country involving a CID.

Older cases cited by Media Matters did not apply later-enacted Supreme Court doctrine requiring a presumption of good faith. In recent years, the Supreme Court has required federal courts to adopt a strong "presumption that a prosecutor has legitimate grounds for the action he takes" and to "not lightly discard" that presumption. Hartman v. Moore, 547 U.S. 250, 263 (2006) (quoted in Nieves, 587 U.S. at 400). Just two weeks ago, the Supreme Court placed firmer teeth into this doctrine, holding that the "presumption of legislative good faith directs district courts to draw the inference that cuts in the legislature's favor when confronted with evidence that could plausibly support multiple conclusions." Alexander v. S.C. State Conf. of the NAACP, 144 S. Ct. at 1235–36. Because the same presumption that applies to legislatures likewise applies to executive officials, the bad-faith exception is unavailable anytime an inference of good faith is possible. The single case Media Matters cites in the civil context predates this doctrine and does not apply the presumption of good faith.

The one recent case Media Matters cites—a criminal case—shows just how rare the exception is in light of the presumption of good faith. There, a local district attorney brought child pornography charges against Netflix. The DA withheld probative evidence from the grand jury, brought four superseding indictments immediately after Netflix asserted a First Amendment right, and brought the charges even though Netflix had proof that the only instance of nudity in the film at issue involved an actor older than 18. Netflix, Inc. v. Babin, 88 F.4th 1080, 1091–96 (5th Cir. 2023). So weak was the DA's case that he "d[id] not attempt to defend that indictment on the merits" before the federal court. Id. at 1095. Even with all this, the Fifth Circuit found the bad-faith question to be a close call given the mandate to presume good faith. See id. at 1096 ("Taken one by one, Babin's arguments are well taken."). Indeed, it seems unlikely the case would come out the same way after the Supreme Court's doctrine, announced in Alexander, to draw all inferences in favor of good faith.

This case is so far afield from any case finding bad faith that Media Matters' arguments cannot be taken seriously. Start with timing. Attorney General Bailey did not file a CID until four months after opening an investigation. Media Matters accuses Attorney General Bailey of doing no investigation during that time. But as already stated, his office used that time to look into Media Matters' contacts with Missouri and confirm what Media Matters does not now dispute: "that Media Matters not only distributes its newsletter in Missouri, but engages in internet and email solicitations, phone solicitations, and in-person solicitations for fundraising." ECF 56-1, First Reed decl. ¶ 7.

During that time, his office also acquired internal Media Matters documents that justify further investigation. The office acquired "internal Media Matters documents that are expressly marked not for circulation and which reveal plans by the organization to use solicited funds for activities contrary to those publicly disclosed to its Missouri donors." Ex. B, Second Declaration of Steven Reed ¶ 5.[4]

[4] "To protect the integrity of investigations as they progress, the Missouri Attorney General's Office as a general policy does not disclose or publicly discuss information about investigations under the MMPA—including documents and information that the Office collects. However, in rare instances, protecting the integrity of an investigation requires a very limited disclosure of information. This is one of those rare cases given Media Matters' decision to press incorrect allegations in an attempt to obtain an order to forcefully halt an investigation." Id. ¶ 4.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"These materials explain that high-level officials within Media Matters use the organization and its funds not just to issue reports about perceived misinformation, but to actively interfere with and neutralize the operational infrastructure of certain 'target' companies." Id. ¶ 8. "For example, these documents reveal that Media Matters has entered into partnerships with Facebook and Google—competitors of X—and has developed strategic plans to interfere with the infrastructure systems used by 'target' companies to display advertisements." Id. ¶ 9. These secret documents are in sharp tension with the statements Media Matters makes to Missourians as it solicits donations from them.

Next, consider the subsequent information that has publicly come to light. The brand-safety organization DoubleVerify has confirmed that Media Matters' accusations last November were false (X in fact had a near-perfect record of avoiding populating advertisements next to fringe content), and the federal court in Texas has preliminarily concluded that X's allegations are likely sufficient to overcome a motion to dismiss. ECF 56 at 38–39.

Given the presumption of good faith that this Court must afford to the Attorney General, there is plenty in the record to infer that the Attorney General had a reasonable basis to issue the CID. Indeed, unlike the prosecutor in Netflix, who refused to defend the merits of his decision, the Attorney General is happy to defend the merits. It is Media Matters that has failed to defend the merits of its November statements in light of subsequent evidence that those statements were knowingly false.

Against all this, Media Matters offers nothing. It accuses the Attorney General of issuing a "copy and paste" CID (at 24 n.4), but ignores that the CID follows four months of investigation. See also Trump v. Vance, 977 F.3d 198, 215 (2d Cir. 2020) ("we simply do not see how the District Attorney's statement that he copied the Congressional subpoena for 'efficiency' allows us to infer bad faith."). Nor did the Attorney General "ignore Missouri statutory law" (at 17 n.4) in filing suit when he did. It is Media Matters who "ignores" that Missouri law expressly authorizes the Attorney General to sue "[w]henever it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in, is engaging in, or is about to engage in" a violation of the consumer protection statute, including a failure to timely comply with a CID. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.100 (emphasis added). Finally, Media Matters (at 25) faults the Attorney General for not pleading in the State's complaint that Media Matters has in fact engaged in deceptive behavior with respect to donors in Missouri. Media Matters confuses a CID investigation for a formal assertion of charges for deception. (And the Attorney General has alleged a violation of the duty to timely respond to the CID.) Where collection of additional documents may lead to further evidence that Media Matters has violated the MMPA, the bad faith exception does not apply. See Brooks v. New Hampshire Supreme Ct., 80 F.3d 633, 641 (1st Cir. 1996) ("The NHSC's investigation of Cobbin is not an enforcement proceeding brought without any realistic expectation of finding a violation of a rule; and, therefore, the investigation does not catalyze the bad-faith exception to the Younger doctrine.")

II. Media Matters consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri state court.

Media Matters has made personal jurisdiction in Missouri court critical to its complaint. Media Matters must litigate its claims one way or another. So its claim to harm rests entirely on its assertion that it would be an injury to litigate in Missouri instead of here. For example, it asserts (at 31) that it has no adequate remedy because litigating in state court would require it to waive personal jurisdiction.

The problem is that courts in Missouri plainly have personal jurisdiction. Media Matters never disputes that it solicits donations from Missourians (which creates jurisdiction). And by exercising its legal right to a change of judge, Media Matters also consented to jurisdiction. That is because Media Matters did not object to personal jurisdiction at the "first opportunity." Everett v. Vance, 685 S.W.3d 495, 501 (Mo. App. W.D. 2023). As every court to have squarely considered the issue has concluded, moving for a change of judge before opposing personal jurisdiction waives the issue. E.g., Rollins Burdick Hunter of Utah, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees of Ball State U., 665 N.E.2d 914, 919 (Ind. App. 1996). For example, just last year an Illinois court concluded that if a "motion for substitution of judge" is filed "prior to filing a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction, that party waives all objections to the court's jurisdiction over the party's person prospectively." Roberson v. SSM Health St. Mary's Hosp., 2023 WL 4743859 (Ill. App. 5 Dist., 2023). This is consistent with the longstanding, general rule across the country that "an application for an order of the court can only be made upon the assumption that the court has jurisdiction to make the order, and a party cannot be challenging the jurisdiction and invoking it at one and the same time." Gravelin v. Porier, 250 P. 823, 826 (Mont. 1926).

Media Matters' sole attempt to distinguish cases like these is to assert (at 26) that those cases concerned "motions" for a change of judge, not an "application" for a change of judge, and that under Missouri law "applications for change of judge are not 'motions.'" But even ten seconds of research confirms that is wrong. Missouri courts use "motion" and "application" interchangeably and have referred to "motions" for a change of judge over a hundred times. E.g., State ex rel. Manion v. Elliott, 305 S.W.3d 462, 463 (Mo. 2010) ("Manion filed a motion for change of judge."); In re S.M.H., 160 S.W.3d 355, 361 (Mo. 2005) ("Father's motion for change of judge was not timely and was properly overruled."). Though these motions are granted as of right when the legal prerequisites are met, the non-moving party "is entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard, and he may contest the form, timeliness and sufficiency of the motion." Matter of Buford, 577 S.W.2d 809, 827 (Mo. 1979).

No stronger is Media Matters' assertion (at 26) that parties in Missouri courts have not recently litigated whether moving for a change of judge first means the party has not, at the "first opportunity," opposed jurisdiction. That is unsurprising because litigants almost always follow the "first opportunity" rule by challenging personal jurisdiction before moving for a change of judge. After all, for over a century, courts have repeatedly held that litigants must object to personal jurisdiction before invoking the procedural rule Media Matters invoked here.

Further, Media Matters invoked Missouri Supreme Court Rule 51, titled "Venue Including Change of Venue and Change of Judge," which governs motions/applications of change of venue and change of judge. For 150 years, Missouri courts have held that an application for change of venue waives later challenge to personal jurisdiction. See Feedler v. Schroeder, 59 Mo. 364, 366 (1875) (finding defendant waived personal jurisdiction because "application for a change of venue was an appearance in the cause."); Columbia Brewery Co. v. Forgey, 120 S.W. 625, 628 (Mo. App. 1909) ("The taking of a change of venue by a defendant from the court in which the case is pending operates as an appearance to the merits of the action, and confers jurisdiction over the person."). If changing venue waives personal jurisdiction, there is no reason to believe taking a change of judge, which is governed by the same rule, would not. Media Matters has not cited a single case in the country adopting its rule. At the very least, Media Matters grossly overstates the case when it says Missouri courts "obviously" lack personal jurisdiction. That argument is an uphill climb for Media Matters.

III. The Court Does Not Have Personal Jurisdiction Over the Missouri Attorney General.

This Court lacks personal jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General and thus should dismiss. Media Matters has not satisfied the requirements of the long-arm statute and Due Process.

A. Media Matters has not satisfied the long-arm statute.

As a preliminary matter, Media Matters asserts (at 27 n.7), that the Missouri Attorney General "does not dispute that he is a 'person' under the long-arm statute." This is false. The Missouri Attorney General "assert[ed] that the State does not fall under the D.C. long-arm statute, because it is not a 'person,' as provided in the statute" and referenced Texas' briefing on the issue. Resp. Br. 30 n.7. Media Matters sued Attorney General Bailey in his official capacity, which is recognized not as a suit against him "as an individual, but rather is a suit against the official's office." Will v. Michigan Dep't of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 71 (1989). Because "[a] suit brought against an official in his official capacity is generally considered to be a suit against the state," West v. Holder, 60 F. Supp. 3d 190, 194 (D.D.C. 2014), aff'd sub nom. West v. Lynch, 845 F.3d 1228 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (citing Will, 491 U.S. at 71), and "D.C's long-arm statute does not apply to states," id. (citing United States v. Ferrara, 54 F.3d 825, 828 (D.C. Cir. 1995)), the Missouri Attorney General is not a "person" under the long-arm statute.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Media Matters offers no argument for why use of a process server is commercial or business activity under subsection (a)(1). Yet "the plaintiff must show that the defendant has purposefully engaged in some type of commercial or business-related activity directed at District residents" for subsection (a)(1) to apply. Holder v. Haarmann & Reimer Corp., 779 A.2d 264, 270–71 (D.C. 2001) (emphasis added); see also Forras v. Rauf, 812 F.3d 1102, 1106 (D.C. Cir. 2016) ("The plain text of subsection (a)(1), however, focuses on where the defendant undertook the challenged (business) actions." (emphasis added)).

Media Matters instead offers a conclusory assertion that the Missouri Attorney General "contracted with an agent to cause harmful consequences within D.C." Under this theory, however, any action—by any person, organization, governmental entity, or business—that has "consequences" in D.C. would be sufficient under (a)(1). That would render the remaining subsections entirely redundant and violate the rule of surplusage. Great Lakes Comnet, Inc. v. FCC, 823 F.3d 998, 1003 (D.C. Cir. 2016) ("when construing a statute courts 'give effect, if possible, to every clause and word"').

Media Matters also argues (at 28), that "[t]his Court has already properly rejected" the argument that use of a process server does not fall under subsection (a)(1). In ruling against the Texas Attorney General on this score, this Court relied on a Maryland ruling, Novack v. Nat'l Hot Rod Ass'n, 247 Md. 350 (1967), and a D.C. Circuit concurrence, Steinberg v. Int'l Crim. Police Org., 672 F.2d 927 (D.C. Cir. 1981), but overlooked Holder and Forras. These on-point decisions, which postdate Steinberg, represent current circuit precedent, which has been routinely applied over the last decade. See West v. Holder, 60 F. Supp. at 195; Capel v. Capel, 272 F. Supp. 3d 33, 39 (D.D.C. 2017); IMAPizza, LLC v. At Pizza Ltd., 334 F. Supp. 3d 95, 110 (D.D.C. 2018); Trump v. Comm. on Ways & Means, United States House of Representatives, 415 F. Supp. 3d 98, 106 (D.D.C. 2019); Aljabri v. Saud, No. CV 20-2146, 2022 WL 4598519, at *14 (D.D.C. Sept. 30, 2022). In short, subsection (a)(1) requires a showing that the defendant engaged in commercial or business-related activities. That has not happened here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Separately, citing this Court's ruling against Texas, Media Matters argues (at 28) that subsection (a)(3) applies because the Missouri Attorney General used a process server to serve a complaint. But unlike Texas, Missouri served the CID itself through the mail.

To get around this distinction, Media Matters asserts this this amounted to "abusive service of process," but that claim appears nowhere in the supplemental complaint, and Media Matters could not support that contention even if pleaded. "Under District of Columbia law, abuse of process occurs when process has been used to accomplish some end which is without the regular purview of the process, or which compels the party against whom it is used to do some collateral thing which he could not legally and regularly be required to do." Houlahan v. World Wide Ass'n of Specialty Programs & Sch., 677 F. Supp. 2d 195, 199 (D.D.C. 2010) (citation and quotations omitted). "There are two essential elements to an abuse of process claim: (1) the existence of an ulterior motive; and (2) an act in the use of process other than such as would be proper in the regular prosecution of the charge." Id. (citation and quotations omitted). In other words, beyond an ulterior motive, there must be "some act or threat directed to an immediate objective not legitimate in the use of process" akin to "some form of extortion." See Rockwell Cap. Partners, Inc. v. CD Int'l Enterprises, Inc., 311 F. Supp. 3d 52, 55 (D.D.C. 2018) (bracket adopted). There is no question that the service of a filed court petition to enforce a CID is the regular process by which the Missouri Attorney General must enforce demands under the MMPA. There is no threat or extortion directed at an illegitimate immediate objective. The Missouri Attorney General filed his petition under his statutory authority to collect documentation in service of an investigation into and enforcement against potential violations of the MMPA. There is no support for Media Matters' (unpleaded) assertion that serving a lawsuit by itself amounts to a tort.

B. Personal jurisdiction here would violate the Due Process Clause.

To support its Due Process argument, Media Matter offers a single mailing and single service of a petition from a process server. A single mailing is insufficient. See Exponential Biotherapies, Inc. v.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Houthoff Buruma N.V., 638 F. Supp. 2d 1, 9 (D.D.C. 2009). And as discussed immediately above, Media Matters' late, drive-by assertion of "abusive process" is insufficient and unpleaded. It beggars belief that service of a CID petition is sufficient "conduct and connection with the forum State . . . such that [the Missouri Attorney General] should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there," GTE New Media Servs. Inc. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1347 (D.C. Cir. 2000), when the purpose of the process was to initiate litigation in a separate court and being "hailed into [federal] court" in the District of Columbia in response to such process is retaliatory and barred by Younger abstention.

Media Matters is thus forced to resort (at 29–30) to demonstrably false accusations that the Missouri Attorney General "failed to identify any injury, or even impact that Media Matters has caused in Missouri." (internal quotations omitted). Media Matters does not even deny its solicitation activities that the Attorney General pointed out. Indeed, Media Matters was so concerned about its extensive activities in Missouri that it reached out to determine if it needed to register under Missouri law.

Next, Media Matters relies on Def. Distributed v. Grewal, 971 F.3d 485 (5th Cir. 2020), but there the New Jersey Attorney General expressed "his intent to crush Defense Distributed's operations and not simply limit the dissemination of digital files in New Jersey." Id. at 493. It was clear he had an "intent to force Defense Distributed to close shop." Id. That goes far beyond a mere CID to investigate solicitations in Missouri and a request for a single $1,000 penalty for a violation of Missouri's law that indisputably occurred. Under Media Matters' rule, no State could investigate a company that engages in business in that State—but is headquartered in another—without exposing itself to a retaliatory suit like the one Media Matters brought here.

IV. Media Matters Has an Adequate Remedy at Law.

Media Matters has an adequate remedy at law, as it can raise each of its challenges to the CID in the state court enforcement action. Media Matters offers four main arguments in support of its position that Missouri courts cannot offer an adequate remedy: 1) Media Matters' First Amendment injury is "ongoing;" 2) the MMPA "would likely require Plaintiff to waive personal jurisdiction" and only offers "meager' protections for Media Matters; 3) Media Matters cannot obtain relief against Paxton in Missouri court; and 4) Media Matters cannot obtain "speedy" relief. Each argument fails.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1. No allegation of "ongoing" First Amendment injury is sufficient. Media Matters is seeking only prospective relief, not retrospective. And to the extent the Court even credits any allegation of "chill," the chill comes from the investigation, not having to litigate in Missouri instead of DC. Media Matters is going to have to litigate these issues regardless. It cites nothing for the prospect that the mere location of litigation will cause chill. This Court previously rejected Texas' argument about adequate remedy because "[t]he Texas Code contains no equivalent remedies for a non-resident challenging a CID." ECF 37 at 30. Here, in contrast, as Media Matters admits (at 31), "the parallel provision in the Missouri statute identifies Cole County as a catchall venue for petitioners." Under this Court's analysis, Media Matters can attempt to avoid the alleged First Amendment injury by challenging the document request in Missouri state court, and thus it has an adequate remedy at law.

2. So Media Matters next argues (at 31–32) that the MMPA's statutory prescriptions for challenging a CID are inadequate because they "would likely require Plaintiff to waive personal jurisdiction." But as discussed above, Media Matters does not dispute that it solicits donations from Missourians, which suffices for personal jurisdiction. And its decision to seek a change of judge waived personal jurisdiction had it not already existed. In any event, Media Matters offers no citation for its argument that a remedy is unavailable if it would require waiving personal jurisdiction.

No better is the unsupported assertion that the MMPA offers "meager protections" for those challenging CIDs. That conclusory statement comes nowhere near rebutting the presumption this Court must adopt that "state procedures will afford an adequate remedy, in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary." Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 15.

3. Media Matters strangely argues (at 32–33) that "[i]t is doubtful that Media Matters can obtain relief against Paxton in Missouri Court." This Court of course already granted relief against Paxton. Media Matters can seek full relief against all remaining claims in Missouri court. And of course none of the issues concerning Paxton have anything to do with Missouri law.

To support its strange argument, Media Matters asserts (at 33) that the D.C. Circuit has held that there is no adequate remedy if a party has to "defend itself in different state courts" (emphasis added). But Media Matters completely mischaracterizes the case it cites, which held that "multiplicity of legal proceedings" by the same defendant—the Federal Government—in different federal courts can suggest the lack of an adequate remedy. Reed Enterprises v. Corcoran, 354 F.2d 519, 523 (D.C. Cir. 1965). The State of Missouri has not sought multiple proceedings. To accept Media Matters' argument would mean any company subject to proceedings in multiple States could preemptively sue all those States and force them into DC court.

4. Finally, Media Matters argues (at 33) that Missouri courts cannot "guarantee . . . a speedy remedy." But its only support for this assertion is that one CID case in Missouri courts took 13 months from complaint to final judgment. But that is quick compared to trial courts across the nation, and the trial court entered final judgment just four months after oral argument in a case where no emergency motion was filed. Media Matters is free to file for emergency relief in Missouri.[5]

V. Media Matters Cannot Establish a Justiciable, Ripe Injury.

Media Matters does not deny that the Ninth Circuit squarely held that a federal challenge to a CID was not ripe because the plaintiff had the ability to challenge the CID in state court. ECF 61 at 31; see also Google, Inc. v. Hood, 822 F.3d 212, 224 (5th Cir. 2016) (challenge to "administrative subpoena

[5] Media Matters' sole citation for its "speedy relief" test is a footnote from a separate opinion disagreeing with the majority opinion that plaintiffs had an adequate remedy through separate, individual suits. Council of & for the Blind of Delaware Cnty. Valley, Inc. v. Regan, 709 F.2d 1521 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (en banc). No court appears to have adopted Media Matters' test.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

was not ripe" because subpoena was "non-self-executing"). Nor does it deny that this Court must presume Missouri courts are adequate "in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary." Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 15. Media Matters' sole response is again to argue that Missouri courts lack personal jurisdiction. But Media Matters makes no attempt to rebut with "unambiguous authority" the presumption that Missouri courts can adequately assess the issue of personal jurisdiction. Pennzoil did not carve out personal jurisdiction from its presumption that state courts are presumed adequate for resolving every question. Cf. Robb v. Connolly, 111 U.S. 624, 637 (1884) ("Upon the State courts . . . rests the obligation to guard, enforce, and protect every right granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, whenever those rights are involved in any suit or proceeding before them . . . .").

VI. Media Matters Has Failed to State a Claim With Respect to its Four Counts.

A. The complaint fails to state a First Amendment retaliation claim.

Tellingly, Media Matters fails to even try to meet the standard required by Nieves. As already explained, that case squarely holds that it is not enough to allege bad motive; a plaintiff must establish lack of probable cause. Nieves, 139 S. Ct. at 1728 ("Because there was probable cause to arrest Bartlett, his retaliatory arrest claim fails as a matter of law."). Media Matters cannot reasonably argue that there was no probable cause to move to enforce the CID. The Attorney General has been proven correct that Media Matters would not comply.

Nor has Media Matters asserted a lack of probable cause to investigate in the first place.[6] Notably, Media Matters has made no effort to justify its flawed "reporting" last November. For example, the Attorney General pointed out that the brand-safety organization DoubleVerify recently confirmed that the allegation that X was regularly populating advertisements next to fringe content is [6] Even if Media Matters did dispute that, it has sued not over the investigation generally, but over the CID enforcement, and so its arguments would be irrelevant.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

false. ECF 56 at 10. Like the district attorney in the Netflix case, Media Matters "does not attempt to defend" against that. Netflix, 88 F.4th at 1095. Indeed, if in fact Media Matters defamed X by knowingly posting false information, then its activity was not protected by the First Amendment, Farah v. Esq. Mag., 736 F.3d 528, 534 (D.C. Cir. 2013), and so no "retaliation" is even possible. Media Matters' failure to dispute these facts is telling.

Add to that all the other facts that differentiate this case from the Paxton case—the four months the office spent investigating before filing a CID, the internal Media Matters documents the office acquired revealing plans by Media Matters to collaborate with X's competitors and to interfere with the infrastructure used to deliver advertisements—and it is no wonder Media Matters makes no argument about probable cause. That is fatal to its case.

Instead, Media Matters (at 35) complains that the Missouri Attorney General has not shared findings from his investigation or made formal allegations, but at the pre-complaint stage of the investigation, there is nothing yet to "allege" (other than Media Matters' violation of its duty to timely comply with or challenge the CID). And the Attorney General is not required to tip his hand, as doing so may threaten the integrity of an investigation. See, e.g., United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 642 (1950) (noting that pre-complaint investigations seek "information from those who best can give it and who are most interested in not doing so").

Nor has Media Matters put forth any evidence of "chill." Just the opposite. Media Matters' declarants admit that the chill they experience (if any) is no different after the CID than it was before. Hananoki, for example, states that he "continue[s]" to be chilled. ECF 49-2 ¶¶ 11–12 (emphasis added). Dimiero says that Media Matters reporters "continue to self-censor." ECF 49-5 ¶ 7. No declarant alleges any reduction in output that is tied specifically to the CID, rather than the underlying investigation (which Media Matters is not challenging), the Paxton investigation, or the lawsuit brought by X. And self-serving vague accusations bring nothing to the table. E.g., ECF 49-3 ¶ 11 ("The actions of these two Attorneys General have damaged morale at Media Matters"); ¶ 13 ("ability to collaborate with other groups continues to be impaired"); ECF 49-5 ¶ 5 ("negative impact . . . on morale"). Padera does no better when she says the organization "continue[s] to devote significantly more of our time than usual to dealing with investigations and lawsuits." ECF 49-3 ¶ 15. After all, "the burden of defending an enforcement action is not sufficient to warrant interference by the federal courts" because those burdens are incidental to every proceeding. JMM Corp. v. District of Columbia, 378 F.3d 1117, 1122 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (quotation marks omitted). Otherwise, every lawsuit would violate the First Amendment.

These declarations also say nothing about market forces that have indisputably decreased output. Just two weeks ago, Media Matters laid off "more than a dozen" reporters; and while some former employees sought to use this litigation as a scapegoat, Media Matters' President remarked that the layoffs were due at least in part to "how rapidly the media landscape is shifting."[7] Well before Bailey's investigation, Media Matters faced significant financial distress that would cause the same reductions in collaboration, morale, and research output that Media Matters' declarants now discuss. For the tax year 2022 (the most current version public available), Media Matters' IRS Form 990 reveals a 10% reduction in contributions year-over-year and movement from net positive income of $2.9 million in 2021 to net negative income of $2.2 million in 2022—a $5 million swing in one year, all before Hananoki's statements about X.[8] Like media competitors around it, Media Matters is in a cash crunch. Moreover, Media Matters cannot reasonably link the allegations of "chill" to the Missouri Attorney General, when they are more likely linked to the ongoing defamation litigation with X.

Finally, Media Matters' "chill" argument is self-defeating. In bringing this suit, Media Matters has exposed itself to more legal process, not less. If Media Matters truly believed its personal jurisdiction argument were meritorious, it could have simply and quickly moved to dismiss in Missouri court and ended the whole thing. Instead, the company chose to introduce many new issues, opening the door to extensive discovery, including depositions assessing the accuracy of its (implausible) assertions of chill on its reporting process.

B. Media Matters has failed to state a First or Fourth Amendment claim.

Media Matters wrongly asserts (at 37) that the Missouri Attorney General "does not dispute that the documents he seeks are protected materials" or "that the Missouri CID is a sweeping and overbroad request for such documents." The Missouri Attorney General has not conceded these points, and certainly does not believe that the documents requests are either universally "protected materials" or "sweeping and overbroad." To the extent Media Matters believes requested documents are protected or privileged, its protections are found in challenging the CID in Missouri courts and identifying those privileged materials in a privilege log, a standard practice in litigation.

No better is the assertion (at 38) that, absent a preliminary injunction, Media Matters "will be left to rely solely upon the limited procedures available to vindicate these rights in the foreign Missouri forum." The procedures are not limited, and Media Matters again tellingly makes no attempt to rebut, with "unambiguous authority," the presumption that "state procedures will afford an adequate remedy." Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 15. Media Matters, for example, asserts a need for "prompt relief" but does not dispute that it will not be required to turn over any documents until all its defenses are litigated.

C. Media Matters has failed to state a claim under the DC or Maryland Shield Laws.

Media Matters argues (at 38) that the Missouri Attorney General has a burden to show "clear and convincing evidence" to override the public interest in disclosing materials pursuant to the DC and Maryland Shield Laws. This argument highlights the fundamental error in Count VIII—Media Matters preemptively styles an affirmative defense as a cause of action to try to flip the burden. But

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Media Matters offers no authority providing a private right of action under either the D.C. or Maryland Shield Laws. Count VIII must be dismissed.

Separately, Media Matters argues (at 38) that "all of [the] disputed reporting occurred in D.C. or Maryland." Even if this is true, the "disputed reporting" is not the basis of the Missouri Attorney General's investigation. The basis of the investigation is the statements Media Matters makes to Missourians while soliciting donations from them.

D. Media Matters has failed to state a Due Process claim.

Media Matters does not dispute that a due process violation is a jurisdictional argument and not an independent tort and cause of action. Instead, Media Matters argues (at 39) that the Missouri Attorney General has "violate[d] Plaintiffs' due process rights by deploying Missouri's investigative machinery against them." The case Media Matters cites, Ins. Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, in fact supports the Missouri Attorney General. See 456 U.S. 694, 702 (1982) (the Due Process Clause "represents a restriction on judicial power" (emphasis added)).

But Count VII fails for a more fundamental reason—courts do not recognize "a constitutionally protected interest in being free from investigation." Aponte v. Calderon, 284 F.3d 184, 193 (1st Cir. 2002); see also United States v. Trayer, 898 F.2d 805, 808 (D.C. Cir. 1990) ("But, of course, there is no constitutional right to be free of investigation."); Spreadbury v. Bitterroot Pub. Libr., 862 F. Supp. 2d 1054, 1057 (D. Mont. 2012) ("There is no constitutional right not to be investigated by law enforcement for suspected violations of the law."). Where Media Matters describes the heart of Count VII as "simply" an effort to enjoin alleged due process violations stemming from "Missouri's investigative machinery," this count should be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendant Bailey respectfully requests that the Court grant his motion to dismiss for reasons of jurisdiction and failure to state a claim.

Re: Notice of Pending Investigation

Dear Mr. Carusone,

This letter serves as a formal document hold notice under federal and Missouri law. The Missouri Attorney General's Office has opened an investigation into Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") regarding your firm's potentially unlawful business practices.

As you are no doubt aware, a federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters, raising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X (formerly known as Twitter) through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech. The lawsuit alleges that you lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true. At the same time, you appear to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country.

I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. E.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020.1. I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt

Media Matters for America
Washington, DC 20026

The Attorney General of the State of Missouri believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation be made to ascertain whether Media Matters for America (Subject) has engaged in or is engaging in practices declared unlawful by § 407.020, RSMo.

The investigation will inquire into the activities of Subject in connection with the solicitation of funds for a charitable purpose, or the sale or advertisement of merchandise, §§ 407.020, 407.453, RSMo.

The Attorney General has reason to believe that the Subject has used deception, fraud, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of material fact in connection with the soliciting of funds for a charitable purpose or the sale or advertisement of merchandise in or from the State of Missouri, § 407.020, RSMo. Independently, the Attorney General also believes it to be in the public interest to investigate whether such acts have occurred.

The Attorney General believes you have information, documentary material or physical evidence relevant to the above-mentioned conduct.

DEFINITIONS

As used in this Demand, the following terms have the meanings described below:

"Communication" means any expression, statement, conveyance, or dissemination of any words, thoughts, statements, ideas, or information regardless of form, format, or kind. "Communication" includes but is not limited to oral or written communications of any kind, such as telephone conversations, discussions, meetings, notes, letters, agreements, emails or other electronic communications, facsimiles, and other forms of written or oral exchange that are recorded in any way, including video recordings, audio recordings, written notes, or otherwise. Any "Communication" that also falls within the definition of "Document" shall constitute both a Document and a Communication for purposes of this civil investigative demand.

"Document" means all written, printed, typed, and recorded matter of every kind and description, originals and copies, and all attachments and appendices thereto. Without limiting the foregoing, "documents" include all agreements, contracts, correspondence and other communications including notes, memoranda and marginal notations, records, reports, books, manuals, instructions, statistical data and data compilations, drafts, charts, graphs and tables, bills, statements and invoices, advertising, surveys, transcripts, microfilm and microfiche, electronic records that can be reproduced in paper form, recordings, film, tapes, photographs, electronic mail and Web pages, and all other computer-generated, computer-stored, or electronically-stored matter, however and by whomever produced, prepared, reproduced, disseminated, or made.

"Identify", when used with respect to a person or entity, means information sufficient to allow employees of the Attorney General to ascertain the name, address, telephone number, and if not a natural person, the contact person of the entity or facility to be identified, as well as the relationship of that person or entity to you.

"Identifying", when used with respect to a fact or event, means information sufficient to allow employees of the Attorney General to ascertain the fact or event with reasonable particularity, and to identify each person believed to have knowledge with respect to the fact or event and each document that refers or relates to the fact or event.

"Relating to", "related to", "relate to" means to be relevant in any way to the subject matter in question, including without limitation all information that directly or indirectly contains, records, reflects, summarizes, evaluates, refers to, is pertinent to, indicates, comments upon, or discusses the subject matter; or that states the background of, or was the basis for, or that records, evaluates, comments, was referred to, relied upon, utilized, generated, transmitted, or received in arriving at any conclusion, opinion, estimate, position, decision, belief, policy, practice, course of business, course of conduct, procedure, or assertion concerning the subject matter.

"You", including your, means Media Matters for America, subsidiaries, partnerships, or any other entities related to Media Matters for America.

DEMAND FOR INFORMATION

Demand is hereby made upon you, under the authority granted by Section 407.040, RSMo, to produce in person or via mail to Michelle Starke, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102 by April 15, 2024, the following documentary material and information that may be in your possession, custody or control, and permit the inspection and copying thereof:

1. A list or information identifying any and all donations of funds from donors located in the state of Missouri from January 01, 2023 through March 25, 2024.

   The list of donations should include, but is not limited to:
   - Identity of each individual or organization who donated funds;
   - Address of each individual or organization who donated funds;
   - Total amount spent per donation;
   - Date and time of each donation;
   - Payment method for each donation;
   - Identity of financial institution where funds were sent;
   - Contracts and/or agreements governing or related to each donation;

For each Demand for Information, you shall type the Demand and type your corresponding response. If you do not know the answer to a Demand for Information, you shall identify in your response the individual or business entity that has the answer to the Demand for Information. The document on

Re: Missouri Attorney General's Office Civil Investigative Demand: Media Matters for America

Dear Mr. Morgan:

We write as counsel to Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") in response to the Civil Investigative Demand (the "Demand" or the "Missouri Demand") issued by Attorney General Bailey on March 25, 2024, and received by Media Matters on April 1. For the reasons detailed herein, Media Matters objects to the Demand in its entirety. Nonetheless, without waiving any defenses and to preserve all legal rights, Media Matters provides the following response to the Demand.

Attorney General Bailey's investigation of Media Matters and issuance of the Demand constitute flagrant retaliation for engaging in constitutionally protected speech and press activities. The Demand fails to explain how Media Matters, a Washington, D.C.-based media organization, is subject to Missouri law, let alone in violation of such law. The Demand also infringes on Media Matters's free speech and press rights under the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments; its due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment; and its rights under the Maryland and District of Columbia reporters' shield laws. On top of this, Attorney General Bailey filed a petition to enforce the Demand on March 25, 2024, a full week before Media Matters even received the as-served Demand. See Petition, Missouri ex rel. Bailey v. Media Matters for Am., Case No. 24AC-CC-02291 (Cole Cnty. Cir. Ct. Mar. 25, 2024). Attorney General Bailey's baseless and retaliatory conduct has unlawfully chilled, and will continue to chill, Media Matters from publishing additional reporting on X Corp. ("X") and Mr. Musk out of fear of further retaliation and harassment.

By Attorney General Bailey's own admission, the Demand is nothing more than a copycat effort modeled on Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton's similarly unlawful and retaliatory Demand issued in November 2023 (the "Texas Demand"). As you are likely aware, Media Matters challenged Attorney General Paxton's conduct in federal court in Washington, D.C. See Attachment A, Complaint, Media Matters for Am. v. Paxton, No. 24-cv-147-APM (D.D.C. Jan. 17, 2024), ECF No. 1. On April 12, 2024, the court enjoined Attorney General Paxton from enforcing the Texas Demand. See Attachment B, Prelim. Inj. Order, Media Matters for Am. v. Paxton, No. 24-cv-147-APM (D.D.C. Apr. 12, 2024), ECF No. 38. The court further enjoined Attorney General Paxton from "issuing any additional Demands, or taking steps purporting to mandate any action on behalf of" Media Matters in furtherance of his investigation. Id.

Notably, the court described Attorney General Bailey's actions, in issuing a demand and filing an enforcement petition, as "follow[ing Paxton's] lead." Attachment C, Mem. Op. at 5 n.3, Media Matters for Am. v. Paxton, No. 24-cv-147-APM (D.D.C. Apr. 12, 2024), ECF No. 37. In other words, Attorney General Bailey has embarked on the same unlawful course of action that a federal court has just enjoined with respect to Attorney General Paxton.

Given the preliminary injunction obtained against Attorney General Paxton in the federal litigation in Washington, D.C., Media Matters requests that Attorney General Bailey immediately withdraw the Missouri Demand, dismiss the action filed in Cole County Circuit Court, and provide written notice of same to Media Matters. If Attorney General Bailey fails to provide such notice by 5:00 p.m. EDT on Thursday, April 18, Media Matters intends to pursue relief against Attorney General Bailey in federal court, consistent with that obtained against Attorney General Paxton.

Background. In November 2023, Eric Hananoki, senior investigative reporter at Media Matters, published three investigative reports on Media Matters's website showing the placement of advertisements for major corporations next to extremist content on the social media platform formerly known as Twitter, now called "X."[1] Mr. Hananoki's reporting was consistent with a year's worth of reporting from an array of other media outlets that described the proliferation of pervasive white nationalist, antisemitic, and other extremist content on X. See Attachment A, ¶¶ 28–35. On November 20, 2023, following the publication of these articles, X filed a lawsuit in the Northern District of Texas against Media Matters and Mr. Hananoki, and later amended to add Media Matters President Angelo Carusone. See X Corp. v. Media Matters for Am., No. 4:23-cv-1175 (N.D. Tex.). Defendants have moved to dismiss that action on jurisdictional and venue grounds and because the operative complaint fails to state a claim.

On the same day X filed its lawsuit, Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton issued a press release announcing that he was opening an investigation into Media Matters "for potential fraudulent activity."[2] Rather than providing any basis for investigating Media Matters—or explaining how [1] Those articles were published on mediamatters.org on Monday, November 13, 2023; Thursday, November 16, 2023; and Friday, November 17, 2023 (the "November Articles").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

the Texas Office of the Attorney General could plausibly assert jurisdiction over Media Matters—the press release attacked Media Matters as a "a radical anti-free speech organization" and a "radical left-wing organization[] who would like nothing more than to limit freedom by reducing participation in the public square[.]" A day earlier, Missouri Attorney General Bailey announced on X that his "team" was "looking into this matter."[3] Bailey's announcement was made in response to a post by a right-wing political operative calling for "conservative state Attorneys General" to politicize their offices by launching retaliatory investigations into Media Matters.[4]

On December 1, 2023, a process server retained by Attorney General Paxton served Media Matters with a Civil Investigative Demand. The Texas Demand sought production of documents related to twelve overbroad topics that have little connection to trade practices or consumer protection—the purported bases for Paxton's investigation. The Texas Demand provided a return date of December 12, 2023, less than two weeks after service.

On December 12, 2023, Attorney General Bailey issued a Notice of Pending Investigation to Media Matters. That Notice purported to "open[] an investigation" on the grounds that Media Matters "may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses." But the Notice identified no specific solicitation of funds by Media Matters in Missouri. Nor did it allege any credible basis for assuming that such solicitation, if it occurred, would have been under false pretenses. In a press release announcing the issuance of the Notice, Attorney General Bailey indicated he was "fighting to ensure progressive tyrants" could not "wipe out free speech."[5]

On January 17, 2024, Media Matters filed suit against Attorney General Paxton in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. See Media Matters for Am. v. Paxton, No. 24-cv-147-APM (D.D.C. Jan. 17, 2024). The complaint, which noted that Attorney General Bailey had announced a similar investigation on November 19, stated four claims: (1) retaliation in violation of the First Amendment; (2) violations of the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments stemming from Attorney General Paxton's attempt to rifle through Media Matters's protected documents without valid justification; (3) violations of Media Matters's Fourteenth Amendment right to due process; and (4) violations of the D.C. and Maryland Reporters' Shield Laws. Attachment A, ¶¶ 47, 81–112.

On January 18, 2024, Media Matters moved for a preliminary injunction. The court held a hearing on February 15, 2024. At that hearing, the court questioned Attorney General Paxton's basis to investigate a media entity that "hasn't directed any conduct to Texas." Tr. of Feb. 15, 2024, Prelim. Inj. Hr'g. 34:1–2, Media Matters for Am. v. Paxton, No. 24-cv-147-APM (D.D.C. Feb. 20, 2024).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And the court expressed concern at the prospect of other attorneys general sending CIDs to D.C.-based media companies. Id. 44:7–9.

On March 25, 2024, Media Matters learned that Attorney General Bailey had issued a Civil Investigative Demand and filed a lawsuit to enforce that Demand. To be clear, Media Matters was not served with anything on March 25, or for several days thereafter. Instead, Media Matters learned of the Demand and enforcement action from your office's press release and media requests seeking Media Matters's comment on the Demand. The Petition was not served on Media Matters until three days later, on March 28. And the Demand itself was not delivered to Media Matters until April 1—a full week after your office filed a lawsuit to enforce it. The Petition describes the Demand as "virtually identical" to that issued by Attorney General Paxton.

Of note, the press release announcing the Demand is defamatory. It claims, without qualification, that "Media Matters has used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians," a demonstrably false and damaging statement that Attorney General Bailey has never attempted to substantiate. Indeed, elsewhere Attorney General Bailey purports only to be "investigating" that claim. The Demand identifies no plausible basis for your office's jurisdiction or the unfounded allegations of unlawful conduct. To the contrary, the Demand simply restates the baseless, conclusory allegations first made in your office's December 12, 2023, Notice. Moreover, the Missouri Demand in large part simply copies the text of the Texas Demand, indicating little independent effort on Attorney General Bailey's part to investigate and substantiate his defamatory claims.

On April 12, 2024, the D.C. District Court enjoined Attorney General Paxton from enforcing the Texas Demand against Media Matters. Attachment B; see also Attachment C at 40. In granting Media Matters's motion for a preliminary injunction, the court determined that it has jurisdiction over Attorney General Paxton; that Media Matters had suffered a justiciable injury; and that Media Matters was likely to succeed on its First Amendment retaliation claim. See generally Attachment C.[6] Attorney General Paxton's Demand—which is materially indistinguishable from Attorney Bailey's Demand and was issued under similar retaliatory circumstances—violates Media Matters's and Mr. Hananoki's First Amendment rights to report on matters of public concern without fear of legal sanctions for engaging in such protected activities. Id. at 35–38. The loss of First Amendment rights, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable harm. Id. at 38. And "there is always a strong public interest in the exercise of free speech rights otherwise abridged by an unconstitutional regulation." Id. at 40.

Objections to the Demand. Media Matters objects to the Demand issued by Attorney General Bailey for the reasons set forth below, which are illustrative and are not meant to be exhaustive.

First, your office lacks jurisdiction and authority to investigate Media Matters, a non-profit media watchdog organization with a principal place of business in Washington, D.C. Media Matters is [6] Because the Court found that Plaintiffs were likely to succeed on their First Amendment retaliation claim, it did not reach Plaintiffs' other claims.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

not registered as a foreign corporation in Missouri because it does not "transact business" in in the state. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 351.572. Nor does Media Matters have a registered agent in Missouri. Further, Media Matters is not engaged in "the sale or advertisement of any merchandise in trade or commerce" in Missouri. Id. § 407.020. Nor is Media Matters targeting any "solicitation of any funds for any charitable purpose" at Missouri. Id.; see also id. § 407.453. For those reasons and others, Media Matters is exempt from registering under Missouri's Charitable Organizations and Solicitations Law, the law your office purports to be enforcing. Your office expressly confirmed Media Matters's exempt status nearly two decades ago. See Attachment D, Letter from Jeremiah W. Nixon, Missouri Attorney General, to Megan B. Allen (July 12, 2007); see also Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 407.450 et seq. And the Demand itself illustrates the flimsiness of your office's claim to jurisdiction—rather than alleging jurisdictional facts that might warrant an investigation, demands 1, 4, and 7 seek to compel production of such facts. The Demand is nothing more than a politically motivated fishing expedition.

Further, Mr. Hananoki's research, drafting, preparation, and review of the November news articles referred to in your office's Demand were done at his home in Maryland, where he performs nearly all his work for Media Matters. Mr. Hananoki has never traveled to Missouri to perform his duties for Media Matters, nor did his preparation of the referenced articles involve communication with any residents, consumers, or businesses located in Missouri. Your office thus lacks jurisdiction over Mr. Hananoki and his papers.

Second, the Demand seeks information entirely protected from disclosure by federal and state law. Demands 1, 2, 3, 6, and 7, in particular, seek information related to Media Matters's sources, its uses of donated funds, and its internal decision-making, in violation of Media Matters's and its donors' First Amendment right to associate without state interference. See Ams. for Prosperity Found. v. Bonta, 141 S. Ct. 2373 (2021). And demands 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 seek journalistic source information protected by the Constitution and D.C. and Maryland statutes.

Third, the Demand plainly has been issued in retaliation for Media Matters's First Amendment–protected journalistic and investigative activity. Attorney General Bailey is abusing his powers to score political points—as illustrated by his appearance on numerous media outlets to broadcast his issuance of the Demand before it had even been delivered to Media Matters, as well as the charged and defamatory language he has consistently directed at Media Matters. The entire Demand is therefore an unenforceable effort to chill Media Matters's constitutionally protected speech. Your office has no lawful authority to seek documents when the reason for doing so is retaliatory and political, rather than for a legitimate investigative purpose.

Finally, the Demand seeks unduly burdensome, privileged, and otherwise-objectionable categories of documents and communications. Demands 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, for instance, seek documents without any temporal limit. Several demands seek documents that are, at least in part, attorney-client privileged or protected by the work-product doctrine. And the overall burden of complying with the Demand would be significant and remarkably excessive not only given its extensive breadth, but also because there is no valid basis for the investigation in the first place.

Because the Demand violates Media Matters's rights (as well as those of its journalists, donors, and other affiliates) under the U.S. Constitution and Maryland and D.C. law, and because it is unduly burdensome and otherwise improper, Media Matters objects to it in its entirety. In light of these objections and for the reasons discussed above, Media Matters will not be producing documents in response to the Demand at this time.

Media Matters's objections to the Demand are based on the information it currently has available. It reserves the right to alter, supplement, or otherwise modify these objections based on the discovery of new or additional circumstances. Nothing in this letter constitutes waiver of any additional objections Media Matters may raise in the future to the Demand or to any other investigations or claims brought by your office or any other Missouri official.

MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA, et al., Plaintiffs, v. WARREN KENNETH PAXTON JR., in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Texas, ANDREW BAILEY, in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Missouri, Defendants.	Civil Action No. 24-cv-147

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL DECLARATION OF ERIC HANANOKI IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION AGAINST BAILEY

I, Eric Hananoki, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18, am competent to testify, and have personal knowledge of the facts and information set forth in this declaration.

2. I previously submitted a declaration in this lawsuit on January 18, 2024, as well as a supplemental declaration on February 1, 2024. I incorporate those declarations by reference here and file this new declaration to address the impact that Missouri Attorney General Bailey's recent actions have had on my work and reporting.

3. Since I submitted my two earlier declarations, Attorney General Bailey has acted on his earlier public threats against Media Matters by issuing a civil investigative demand (the "Demand") seeking documents—including those involving my research and reporting—and a lawsuit to enforce that demand (the "Petition") in Missouri.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

4. The fears and concerns I expressed in my previous declarations due to Attorney General Paxton's actions have now been compounded by the actions of Attorney General Bailey, which I also consider to be nothing more than bad faith retaliation against my reporting.

5. Before his most recent actions, Bailey made a number of derogatory and defamatory statements about Media Matters and my reporting. For example, Bailey labeled Media Matters "radicals" and "progressive tyrants" seeking to "wipe out free speech." Bailey then made similarly outrageous claims in a number of media appearances. For example, Bailey appeared on the show "Cancel This!" and stated that "Media Matters is built on lies . . . It's a radical, progressive, tyrannical advocacy group masquerading as a news outlet."[1] He accused Media Matters of "market manipulation and bullying [] the advertisers on X[,]" and described Media Matters as a weapon of "the enemy."[2] Bailey also appeared on the channel Newsmax and claimed without any basis that Media Matters had to "dismantle and deconstruct" the "safeguards" that X had in place in order to conduct a "manipulation of the algorithms[.]"[3] Bailey then did not refute host Rob Schmitt when he responded that "these people are evil" and "these people should be deported for this."[4] Bailey publicly confirmed that his office has "coordinated with Texas," and was "in talks with other states as well" as part of the "new front in the war, in the fight for free

6. Attorney General Bailey's repeated, virulent public attacks on Media Matters and on my reporting—including his statements that he was coordinating with the retaliatory investigation of Attorney General Paxton—gave me serious concerns and contributed to the feelings of fear in my earlier declarations.

7. Attorney General Bailey has now acted upon his earlier disparagement of my reporting. On March 25, 2024, Attorney General Bailey formally issued his Demand, which I have since reviewed. The Demand identifies me by name and asks for all documents "related to" my November 16 article, or "events described in the article," which would encompass communications and documents that I used as I researched and drafted my article—materials that are fundamental to my work as a journalist. So far as I can tell, complying with the Demand would require me to turn over effectively the same set of documents demanded by Paxton's earlier civil investigative demand.

8. On the same day he issued the Demand, Attorney General Bailey also filed his Petition to enforce that Demand in a state court in Jefferson City, Missouri. That suit is highly distressing to me, and I am troubled by the prospect that access to my private research and communications will be decided by a court in a place with which I have absolutely no connection. As I previously explained, my work on the November 16 article occurred exclusively in Maryland. I have never traveled to Missouri for work, and to the best of my knowledge none of my work on the November 16 article, or any related article, involved any interaction with the state of Missouri.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

9. I believe that Attorney General Bailey's demand for my documents—like Attorney General Paxton's earlier demand—is in response to Musk's highly publicized call for retaliation against Media Matters. Attorney General Bailey himself said he and Musk have "been in touch over the past few months on a variety of different topics."[6] Shortly before issuing his Demand, Attorney General Bailey had what he described as a "great discussion with" Musk in a public "X Space."[7] Attorney General Bailey has relentlessly and publicly condemned Media Matters and my reporting, has claimed that he is working with Attorney General Paxton, and has shown no basis for his investigation. In my view, he is harassing and retaliating against Media Matters and myself in an effort to silence Media Matters's reporting (and my reporting specifically) about extremist content on X and to attract attention and praise from his conservative followers on platforms like X.

10. Attorney General Bailey's Demand, Petition, and his aggressive public statements about Media Matters and my reporting, have had an extremely negative effect on my work and on me personally. The fear of harassment, threats, and legal retaliation that I described in my prior declarations continues with, and is now compounded by, the recent actions taken by Attorney General Bailey. While the Court's recent ruling helped resolve some of my concerns about Attorney General Paxton's investigation, Attorney General Bailey appears to now be retaliating against me in an even more aggressive manner.

11. I continue to limit my communications and collaboration with other journalists, and I continue to be impacted in my ability to communicate with my editor, Ben Dimiero, from fear that our discussions will have to be turned over to state law enforcement officials, like Bailey, who are retaliating against my reporting.

12. I also continue to curtail my investigative reporting and to self-censor in researching and drafting new articles. Since my last declaration, I have continued to generate articles and reporting ideas about Musk's ownership of X but have been unable to pursue them due to the various investigations into my work. I continue to produce reporting output far below my usual pace as a result of the retaliation I am facing from officials like Bailey.

13. For example, NBC News released a report on April 16, 2024, which found that at least "150 paid 'Premium' subscriber X accounts and thousands of unpaid accounts have posted or amplified pro-Nazi content on X in recent months, often in apparent violation of X's rules[.]" NBC News found "ads running on 74 of the 150 premium accounts, either on their profile pages or in the replies below their posts." The NBC News report cited my earlier reporting about extremism on X—the very reporting that has led to the retaliation against me by state officials like Bailey.[8]

14. The NBC News report bolstered the findings I presented in my own related articles, and in ordinary circumstances I would have followed up on the NBC News report and its findings in my own writing. However, I did not follow up with any new articles in response to the NBC News report—despite generating story ideas as a result of it—due to my fear of further legal retaliation and public threats from officials like Bailey. This chill on my reporting will continue so long as state officials' investigations and demands for my private documents and communications remain unchecked.

MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA, et al., Plaintiffs, v. WARREN KENNETH PAXTON JR., in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Texas, ANDREW BAILEY, in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Missouri, Defendants.	Civil Action No. 24-cv-147

SUPPLEMENTAL DECLARATION OF CYNTHIA PADERA IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION AGAINST BAILEY

I, Cynthia Padera, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18, am competent to testify, and have personal knowledge of the facts and information set forth in this declaration.

2. I am the Chief Operating Officer of Media Matters for America ("Media Matters").

3. I live in, and work from, the District of Columbia.

4. I previously submitted a declaration in this lawsuit on January 18, 2024. I incorporate that declaration by reference here and file this new declaration to address Missouri Attorney General Bailey's recent actions directed towards Media Matters, and specifically to describe Media Matters's lack of connection to the state of Missouri.

5. On March 25, 2024, Attorney General Bailey issued a civil investigative demand (the "Demand") that is very similar to the civil investigative demand issued by Texas Attorney General Paxton. Attorney General Bailey's Demand commands Media Matters to produce a wide array of documents, including documents and communications about our general operations, Eric Hananoki's November 16 article, and communications with companies which currently or previously advertised on the X platform.

6. That same day, on March 25, without allowing Media Matters time to respond to the Demand, Attorney General Bailey filed a petition (the "Petition") to enforce the Demand against Media Matters in Missouri state court—despite the fact that the organization has no relevant connection to Missouri. This was a full week before Media Matters received the Demand via U.S. mail in Washington, D.C., on April 1.

7. Media Matters first learned about the existence of the Demand, as well as Bailey's lawsuit, from a reporter who reached out to Media Matters for comment about Bailey's Demand and lawsuit early on the morning of March 25. Only hours later did Attorney General Bailey then issue a press release describing the lawsuit he had filed against Media Matters. At no time did Attorney General Bailey or his office reach out to Media Matters, or our outside counsel, to inform us about the Demand or lawsuit.

8. Several days later, on March 28, 2024, I personally accepted service of the Petition from a process server hired by Attorney General Bailey. The Petition was served on me in the lobby at Media Matters's Washington D.C. headquarters. This occurred several days before we received the actual Demand through the postal service.

9. Media Matters's leadership views the investigation and lawsuit of Attorney General Bailey—just like the actions of Attorney General Paxton—as a direct response to Mr. Musk's criticism of Media Matters. Attorney General Bailey's actions appear to be another attempt by a state attorney general to punish Media Matters for its journalism and to support Mr. Musk and his efforts to retaliate against news coverage he does not like. In fact, Attorney General Bailey interviewed Mr. Musk on March 18, during which Musk made thinly veiled references to his dispute with Media Matters by discussing advertisers "freak[ing] out if some activist organizations get some article written about how they're advertising next to content that's bad[.]" Musk claimed that this was a "major suppression of free speech" "that should be dealt with," and suggested that there had been possible legal violations—to which Bailey agreed, calling the situation a "possible antitrust issue" involving "market manipulation."[1]

10. Executive leadership has been concerned about Attorney General Bailey's highly public attacks against Media Matters and Mr. Hananoki's reporting since December 11, 2023, when Bailey sent a "Notice of Pending Investigation" demanding that Media Matters preserve documents related to a forthcoming investigation by his office. Bailey announced this "Notice" through a press release in which he condemned Media Matters, including by calling Media Matters a group of "progressive tyrants."

11. Attorney General Bailey's investigation and lawsuit have compounded the harm already caused by Attorney General Paxton's investigation. The actions of these two Attorneys General have damaged morale at Media Matters, where many of our employees continue to be fearful of being the subject of legal proceedings and exposing themselves to the threats of powerful government officials.

12. Attorney General Bailey's actions have reinforced the culture of fear within Media Matters that I described in my prior declaration, further chilling employees' willingness to speak, research, or report on topics related to the subjects of the investigations and the Petition.

13. Media Matters's ability to collaborate with other groups continues to be impaired, as groups that previously worked with Media Matters continue to carefully consider sharing sensitive documents and communications with us while we are subject to investigation. There is understandable concern that communications with Media Matters could expose other organizations, their members, or their employees to the kinds of legal proceedings we are now facing.

14. The organization's other collaborative efforts continue to be kept at a standstill due to the retaliatory investigations we are facing. Media Matters previously refrained from actively participating in coalitions focused on issues of hate speech on X while Attorney General Paxton's demand was pending—that participation now faces the added roadblock of Attorney General Bailey's Demand and Petition. External affairs will continue to avoid sharing research regarding X and its content moderation policies with longstanding partners for fear of further retaliation.

15. Given this latest round of legal retaliation from Attorney General Bailey, Media Matters's senior leaders and I continue to devote significantly more of our time than usual to dealing with investigations and lawsuits, rather than our ordinary job responsibilities. These acts of retaliation by Attorney General Bailey have further harmed the organization's ability to produce reporting and journalism on political extremism in the United States media and has hindered our work across the board.

16. Media Matters's leadership, officers, and staff are now once more concerned and fearful about having to protect their constitutional rights in yet another place where they do not live or work, against another partisan state attorney general. As I explain below, the organization has no relevant connection to Missouri whatsoever, never mind to Cole County, Missouri, where Attorney General Bailey has sued.

17. As I stated previously, Media Matters is incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia and is registered to conduct business in the District of Columbia. Our sole physical office space is located within the District of Columbia and the majority of employees work from the Washington, DC metropolitan area.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

18. Media Matters does not have an office, workspace, or any other physical presence in Missouri.

19. Media Matters is not registered to conduct business in Missouri.

20. Media Matters is not registered as a charity organization in Missouri. The Missouri Attorney General's office exempted Media Matters from registering as a charitable organization in Missouri in 2007.

21. Media Matters does not have a registered agent in Missouri.

22. No Media Matters employee currently works from Missouri or is presently intending to do so. To the best of my knowledge, Media Matters has never had any staff based in Missouri at any point in its existence.

23. Media Matters does not buy or sell any goods in Missouri; does not offer any goods for sale in Missouri; and does not advertise any goods or merchandise for sale in Missouri. As a non-profit media organization, we do not offer goods for sale anywhere in the United States.

24. Media Matters does not conduct any fundraising campaigns specifically targeting Missouri.

25. Neither do any of Media Matters's email-based fundraising campaigns specifically target Missouri.

26. Given Attorney General Bailey's references to "war" on Media Matters and his encouragement for others to join him, his actions have felt and continue to feel like an existential threat to our organization.[2]

SUPPLEMENTAL DECLARATION OF BENJAMIN DIMIERO IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION AGAINST BAILEY

I, Benjamin Dimiero, declare as follows:

1. I am over the age of 18, am competent to testify, and have personal knowledge of the facts and information set forth in this declaration.

2. I am the Editor-in-Chief of Media Matters for America ("Media Matters"). I live and work in the District of Columbia.

3. I previously submitted a declaration in this lawsuit on January 18, 2024, where I described the chilling effect that Attorney General Ken Paxton's investigation has had on my work as Editor-in-Chief, as well as my collaboration and communication with our Senior Investigative Reporter, Eric Hananoki. I also described the impact that Paxton's conduct had on the operation of our newsroom more broadly. I incorporate that declaration by reference here, and separately address the impact that the recent actions of Missouri Attorney General Bailey have had on my work and Media Matters's newsroom.

4. Since the time of my prior declaration, Missouri Attorney General Bailey issued his own civil investigative demand (the "Demand") against Media Matters, and immediately filed a lawsuit to enforce (the "Petition") the Demand in Missouri state court.

5. My prior declaration described the negative impact that Attorney General Paxton's actions had on the morale of my editorial team, and how it dramatically changed and stifled our editorial process. Attorney General Bailey's actions are now contributing to and compounding that negative impact and disruption, particularly in the wake of this Court's pause on Paxton's investigation.

6. Because of Bailey's actions, [redacted] to be impacted by concern over what we are actually able to research and report on while avoiding exposing ourselves to further retaliation. There is a persisting sense on our editorial team and in our organization that we must proceed extremely cautiously with our journalism or else face further legal retaliation that threatens our ability to operate.

7. This has proved extremely inhibiting to our editorial operations. Routine articles continue to receive greater internal scrutiny from myself, our broader editorial team, and Media Matters's leadership, which has slowed our output and hampered our ability to promptly publish coverage of emerging stories and topics. Our journalists, including Mr. [redacted] censor due to fear and concern about whether covering certain topics will lead to backlash, and perhaps even imperil the organization's future operations.

8. Attorney General Bailey's Demand and Petition—and the very real possibility that officials from other states could join his efforts—have justifiably heightened this sense of uncertainty.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

9. Attorney General Bailey's repeated public attacks against Media Matters have also exacerbated the concerns that Media Matters's reporters have about legal backlash to their reporting. The actions of Attorney General Bailey have worsened the culture of fear at our organization that I described in my earlier declaration. This fear continues to distract us from our work reporting on important issues like political extremism in the media, and will continue to do so if officials like Bailey are allowed to carry on their efforts to punish reporting that they dislike.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

[PROPOSED] TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

On April 25, 2024, Plaintiffs Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") and Eric Hananoki filed a motion for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction. After considering the arguments and papers submitted, the Court GRANTS the motion for a temporary restraining order and enters the following Order:

ORDERED that Andrew Bailey, Attorney General of the State of Missouri, together with his agents, employees, attorneys, and all persons in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of this Order (collectively "Defendant Bailey"), is restrained from taking any further steps to enforce the Civil Investigative Demand issued to Media Matters on March 25, 2024, including by continuing to prosecute the enforcement action Bailey filed in Cole County, Missouri, Circuit Court on March 25, 2024.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

ORDERED that Defendant Bailey is restrained from issuing any additional Demands or taking any other steps purporting to mandate any action on behalf of Plaintiffs (including Media Matters's officers, employees, and agents) in furtherance of any investigation of Media Matters.

This order and all supporting pleadings and opposing papers must be served on the adverse party within ___ days.

Defendant is FURTHERED ORDERED to show cause on _____, at ____ before this Court as to why a preliminary injunction to the same effect should not issue.

This order shall remain in effect until _____.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA, ERIC HANANOKI, Plaintiffs, v. WARREN KENNETH PAXTON JR., in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Texas, ANDREW BAILEY, in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Missouri Defendants.	No. 24-cv-147

DECLARATION OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL STEVEN REED

I, Steven Reed, declare as follow:

1. My name is Steven Reed and I am a lawyer duly licensed and in good standing in the State of Missouri. I am over the age of 21 and fully competent to make this declaration. I make this declaration based on my personal knowledge.

2. I am the Chief Counsel for the Consumer Protection Section of the Missouri Attorney General's Office and am one of the attorneys responsible for the State of Missouri's investigation into consumer protection violations by Media Matters for America (Media Matters).

3. The Consumer Protection Section is responsible for administering and enforcing Chapter 407, the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act, of the Missouri Revised Statutes (RSMo.).

4. The Consumer Protection Section of the Missouri Attorney General's Office issues dozens of Civil Investigative Demands (CID's) under Section 407.040 RSMo. every year in an effort to investigate the "act, use or employment by any person of deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise in trade or commerce or the solicitation of any funds for any charitable purpose…." Section 407.010 RSMo. (emphasis added).

5. Under Section 407.040, RSMo., the Missouri Attorney General, on behalf of the State of Missouri, may issue a CID "when it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in or is engaging in any method, act, use practice or solicitation declared to be unlawful by this chapter or when he believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation should be made to ascertain whether a person in fact has engaged in or is engaging in any such method, act, use, practice or solicitation …."

6. In November 2023, the Missouri Attorney General's Office became aware of potential violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act by Media Matters, an organization that purports to solicit funds for charitable purposes, and began to look into the matter.

7. The Missouri Attorney General's Office discovered that Media Matters not only distributes its newsletter in Missouri, but engages in internet and email solicitations, phone solicitations, and in-person solicitations for fundraising–listing Missouri in its public financial disclosures as a state in which it "is registered or licensed to solicit contributions or has been notified it is exempt from registration." Indeed, Media Matters has specifically communicated with the Missouri Attorney General's Office to seek an exemption from registration for its fundraising in Missouri. See Exhibit 1.

8. The Missouri Attorney General's Office further discovered that Media Matters was credibly accused of defaming the social media platform X (formerly Twitter) by falsely representing that X routinely populates advertisements for brands like Apple, IBM, and Xfinity next to extremist, fringe content.

9. The Missouri Attorney General's Office learned that, according to credible allegations, Media Matters had "knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform." Complaint, X Corp. v. Media Matters for America, No. 4:23-cv-1175, ECF 1 ¶ 1 (N.D. Tex. Nov. 20, 2023). Media Matters did this by "manipulat[ing] the algorithms … to bypass safeguards." Id. ¶¶ 7–8. According to credible allegations, while Media Matters insisted that paid advertisements regularly "appeared alongside the fringe content," in fact that was true "for only one viewer (out of more than 500 million) on all of X: Media Matters." Id. ¶ 13 (emphasis in original). Yet, according to reports and allegations, Media Matters' false "reporting" had the desired effect: advertisers withdrew from X in droves.

10. In confirmation of these allegations involving Media Matters, the Missouri Attorney General's Office has since learned from DoubleVerify, an organization "which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers," that allegations that X was regularly populating advertisements next to fringe content is false. DoubleVerify stated that X's "Brand Safety Rates" were nearly perfect—99.99%—during the very time when Media Matters accused X of regularly posting brand advertisements next to fringe content. See Exhibit 2 (Todd Spangler, DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months, Variety (Apr. 15, 2024)).

11. Having identified potential violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act, the Missouri Attorney General's Office determined to further investigate the matter. The Missouri

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Attorney General's Office did not simply file a complaint against Media Matters for violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act; instead, the Missouri Attorney General's Office determined to gather more information by issuing a CID to Media Matters. This is something routinely done by the Missouri Attorney General's Office.

12. On March 25, 2024, the Office of the Missouri Attorney General, through the Consumer Protection Section that I lead as Chief Counsel, sent by certified mail, Civil Investigative Demand No. 24-10 to Media Matters, a true and accurate copy of which is attached as Exhibit 3 (CID No. 24-10). See Exhibit 4 (Certified mail cards and receipts).

13. Pursuant to section 407.040, the CID identifies the statute of the suspected violation and the general subject matter of the investigation. Specifically, the CID requests information relevant to whether Media Matters has engaged in or is engaging in any merchandising practices declared to be unlawful by section 407.020 with regard to Media Matters' fraudulent manipulation of data on X.com.

14. The Missouri Attorney General's Office had also learned that Media Matters would refuse, and had refused, to comply with any investigative demand, including CID No. 24-10, as it had with similar investigative demands. Accordingly, Missouri determined it would seek enforcement of its CID sent to Media Matters in Missouri state court as authorized by Missouri law. See Section 407.090, RSMo.

15. As anticipated, Media Matters refused, and continues to refuse, to comply with CID No. 24-10, and has provided no information or materials to the State of Missouri for its investigation under the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act.

16. After the CID to Media Matters was served, the State of Missouri filed its Petition for Order to Enforce Civil Investigative Demand. See State of Missouri, ex rel. Andrew Bailey,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Attorney General v. Media Matters for America, Case No. 24AC-CC02291 (Circuit Court of Cole County, Missouri). I am a signatory to that Petition.

17. Media Matters appeared in the Missouri state court proceeding after service of the Petition and filed a motion for change of judge.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/ Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months

Todd Spangler
Mon, Apr 15, 2024 • 4 min read

DoubleVerify, which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers, incorrectly displayed X's Brand Safety Rate — a measure of how frequently ads appeared adjacent to content that met advertiser-approved criteria — on the DoubleVerify dashboard for nearly five months.

From Oct. 24, 2023, to March 14, 2024, DoubleVerify's dashboard provided the wrong data for X to advertisers. In some cases, the measurement firm showed scores as low as 70%, whereas X's Brand Safety Rates were in fact 99.99%. DoubleVerify CEO Mark Mark Zagorski, in a message to customers April 12, apologized for the error and said the company's dashboard now correctly shows X's brand-safety rates.

"We apologize for any confusion this may have caused to X and to our customers in the course of reviewing your campaign performance on X," Zagorski wrote in the message to customers. "DV remains committed to maintaining the highest standards of accuracy and transparency in our data."

It's unclear how the error occurred. Reps for X and DoubleVerify said the companies are continuing to investigate the issue. DoubleVerify is "conducting a thorough review of our processes and systems to ensure this issue does not occur in the future," according to Zagorski.

"X remains dedicated to ensuring a safe and transparent platform for our valued advertisers and users," the X Business account posted on Friday. "We are deeply troubled by this gross misrepresentation of our Brand Safety performance and have taken immediate action to rectify the situation with DoubleVerify."

Elon Musk, the tech billionaire who owns X, wrote in a post April 12, "Thank you DoubleVerify for correcting your mistake regarding brand safety on this platform. When measured accurately, brand safety on 𝕏 is extremely good."

DoubleVerify's reporting error caused dozens of large brands to pull back advertising spending and stop campaigns on X, according to the social-media company. For example, the DoubleVerify dashboard said that a Molson Coors campaign delivered poorly with a brand-suitability rate in the mid-90s — when it was actually 99.99%. Account teams at Publicis Spark, which manages campaigns for such brands as Campbell's and Conagra, became aware of the erroneous DoubleVerify metric and then said they were hesitant to partner with X, according to Joe Benarroch, X's head of business operations. (A spokesman for Campbell's said that its brands have not advertised on X or Twitter since 2020; that decision was tied to consumer behavior and performance and wasn't related at all to any brand-safety issues.)

Monique Pintarelli, head of Americas for X, in remarks delivered Monday to the Mobile Marketing Association's Board of Global Advertisers, noted that the social network's tools for sensitivity settings and keyword adjacencies — and its partnerships with Integral Ad Science (IAS) and DoubleVerify to allow for third-party verification — were not available prior to Musk's acquisition of Twitter.

Pintarelli also noted that the DoubleVerify reporting error affected only X. She asked advertisers to "please connect with your agencies and measurement partners to ensure you have the most accurate information."

"We are proud of the work we are doing, to ensure our customers have the tools needed to ensure brand safety across our platform," Pintarelli said. "We are now at or above industry standards, in all metrics and capabilities."

X/ Twitter and Musk have a[illegible]ressively pushed back against claims that the social network is unsafe for brand advertising. Last November, X sued liberal watchdog group Media Matters, alleging the group "knowingly and maliciously manufactured" research that showed neo-Nazi and white-nationalist posts on X next to ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle and Comcast's Xfinity. Following the Media Matters report and Musk's seeming endorsement of an anti-Semitic conspiracy theory, several large advertisers including Disney said they were halting their spending on X — either because of the Media Matters reports, Musk's post or a combination of both. Last month, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed a lawsuit against Media Matters seeking to force the nonprofit to turn over documents related to the AG's investigation "into its fraudulent business practices," citing X's allegations that Media Matters "deceitfully manipulated X's algorithm to place advertisers' content next to contrived controversial posts." In a statement, Media Matters president Angelo Carusone said: "Far from the free-speech advocate he claims to be, Elon Musk has actually intensified his efforts to undermine free speech by enlisting Republican Attorneys General across the country to initiate meritless, expensive, and harassing investigations against Media Matters in an attempt to punish critics. This [Missouri] investigation is the latest in a transparent endeavor to squelch the First Amendment rights of researchers and reporters; it will have a chilling effect on news reporters."

Read Zagorski's message to DoubleVerify customers about the reporting error for X's Brand Safety Rates:

resulted in displaying an incorrect, lower rate. Specifically, DoubleVerify's dashboard incorrectly mirrored the Brand Suitability Rate for your campaign onto the Brand Safety Rate in the summary graphic in Pinnacle. The underlying data available in DV Pinnacle was accurate; only the graphical visualization was not representative of the Brand Safety Rate. This display error occurred over four and a half months from October 24, 2023 to March 14th, 2024, when it was corrected by DV. All current and retroactive Brand Safety data for X is now correctly represented in Pinnacle. The display error was not present in any other area in the UI, including the Incident Reporting and the Rollover Data Detail.

Based on DoubleVerify's metrics, X's Brand Safety Rate across all campaigns we measured exceeded 99.99% from October 2023 to the present. This means that X's Brand Safety Rate exceeds global benchmarks for brand safety, based on DV's global industry data.

DoubleVerify takes measurement accuracy and reporting seriously. We take full responsibility for the inaccurate visual representation of X's Brand Safety Rate within our dashboard that displayed an inaccurate and lower Brand Safety Rate.

We apologize for any confusion this may have caused to X and to our customers in the course of reviewing your campaign performance on X. DV remains committed to maintaining the highest standards of accuracy and transparency in our data.

DoubleVerify is working closely with X to ensure that all future reports reflect the accurate Brand Safety performance of campaigns run on X's platform. We also are conducting a thorough review of our processes and systems to ensure this issue does not occur in the future.

Should you wish to have a direct conversation with X regarding your reporting, we would be happy to relay your contact information to your X account lead and facilitate a meeting. Our team at DoubleVerify remains committed to maintaining trust and confidence in our platform, and would welcome a direct follow up with you should you wish to discuss further.

INVESTIGATIVE DEMAND

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL TO:

Served: U.S. Postal Service
Certified Mail

Media Matters for America
Washington, DC 20026

The Attorney General of the State of Missouri believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation be made to ascertain whether Media Matters for America (Subject) has engaged in or is engaging in practices declared unlawful by § 407.020, RSMo.

The investigation will inquire into the activities of Subject in connection with the solicitation of funds for a charitable purpose, or the sale or advertisement of merchandise, §§ 407.020, 407.453, RSMo.

The Attorney General has reason to believe that the Subject has used deception, fraud, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of material fact in connection with the soliciting of funds for a charitable purpose or the sale or advertisement of merchandise in or from the State of Missouri, § 407.020, RSMo. Independently, the Attorney General also believes it to be in the public interest to investigate whether such acts have occurred.

The Attorney General believes you have information, documentary material or physical evidence relevant to the above-mentioned conduct.

DEFINITIONS

As used in this Demand, the following terms have the meanings described below:

"Communication" means any expression, statement, conveyance, or dissemination of any words, thoughts, statements, ideas, or information regardless of form, format, or kind. "Communication" includes but is not limited to oral or written communications of any kind, such as telephone conversations, discussions, meetings, notes, letters, agreements, emails or other electronic communications, facsimiles, and other forms of written or oral exchange that are recorded in any way, including video recordings, audio recordings, written notes, or otherwise. Any "Communication" that also falls within the definition of "Document" shall constitute both a Document and a Communication for purposes of this civil investigative demand.

"Document" means all written, printed, typed, and recorded matter of every kind and description, originals and copies, and all attachments and appendices thereto. Without limiting the foregoing, "documents" include all agreements, contracts, correspondence and other communications including notes, memoranda and marginal notations, records, reports, books, manuals, instructions, statistical data and data compilations, drafts, charts, graphs and tables, bills, statements and invoices, advertising, surveys, transcripts, microfilm and microfiche, electronic records that can be reproduced in paper form, recordings, film, tapes, photographs, electronic mail and Web pages, and all other computer-generated, computer-stored, or electronically-stored matter, however and by whomever produced, prepared, reproduced, disseminated, or made.

"Identify", when used with respect to a person or entity, means information sufficient to allow employees of the Attorney General to ascertain the name, address, telephone number, and if not a natural person, the contact person of the entity or facility to be identified, as well as the relationship of that person or entity to you.

"Identifying", when used with respect to a fact or event, means information sufficient to allow employees of the Attorney General to ascertain the fact or event with reasonable particularity, and to identify each person believed to have knowledge with respect to the fact or event and each document that refers or relates to the fact or event.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"Relating to", "related to", "relate to" means to be relevant in any way to the subject matter in question, including without limitation all information that directly or indirectly contains, records, reflects, summarizes, evaluates, refers to, is pertinent to, indicates, comments upon, or discusses the subject matter; or that states the background of, or was the basis for, or that records, evaluates, comments, was referred to, relied upon, utilized, generated, transmitted, or received in arriving at any conclusion, opinion, estimate, position, decision, belief, policy, practice, course of business, course of conduct, procedure, or assertion concerning the subject matter.

"You", including your, means Media Matters for America, subsidiaries, partnerships, or any other entities related to Media Matters for America.

DEMAND FOR INFORMATION

Demand is hereby made upon you, under the authority granted by Section 407.040, RSMo, to produce in person or via mail to Michelle Starke, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102 by April 15, 2024, the following documentary material and information that may be in your possession, custody or control, and permit the inspection and copying thereof:

1. A list or information identifying any and all donations of funds from donors located in the state of Missouri from January 01, 2023 through March 25, 2024.

   The list of donations should include, but is not limited to:
   - Identity of each individual or organization who donated funds;
   - Address of each individual or organization who donated funds;
   - Total amount spent per donation;
   - Date and time of each donation;
   - Payment method for each donation;
   - Identity of financial institution where funds were sent;

which you type each Demand and your corresponding response shall be executed by you before a Notary Public.

DEMAND FOR DOCUMENTS

Demand is hereby made upon you, under the authority granted by Section 407.040, RSMo, to produce in person or via mail to Michelle Starke, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102 by April 15, 2024, the following documentary material that may be in your possession, custody or control, and permit the inspection and copying thereof:

2. All promotional or marketing information provided by you from January 1, 2023 to March 25, 2024 to any individual or organization for the purpose of soliciting donations.

3. All documents or communications showing how solicited donations were used.

4. All communications or materials relating to any policy, strategy or operation related to generating stories or content intended to cancel, deplatform, demonetize, or otherwise interfere with businesses located in Missouri, or utilized by Missouri residents.

5. All communications, internal and external, regarding your strategy to pressure advertisers into pulling advertisements from the social media platform, X (formerly Twitter).

6. Documents sufficient to identify your employee organizational chart.

7. Documents sufficient to identify all your operational expenses in the state of Missouri.

8. All documents discussing Elon Musk's purchase of X (formerly Twitter).

9. All documents related to the article, or to the events described in the article, by Eric Hananoki entitled "As Musk endorses antisemitic conspiracy theory, X has been placing ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM,Oracle, and Xfinity next to pro-Nazi content."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

10. All documents sufficient to identify X accounts owned, controlled, or authorized by you used to obtain the images in the article referenced in paragraph 9.

11. All documents sufficient to identify all X accounts followed by the X accounts identified in response to paragraph 10.

12. All communications with Apple, International Business Machine Corporation, Bravo Television Network, NBCUniversal, Oracle Corporation, Comcast Corporation, Lions Gate Entertainment Corporation, Warner Bros Discovery Inc., Paramount Pictures Corporation, or Sony Group Corporation from November 1, 2023, to March 25, 2024.

NOTICE OF DEMAND FOR RETENTION OF RECORDS

You are hereby notified that all records, including communications, documents and things, relating to the above requests and the matters that are the subject of these requests for information are to be preserved during the pendency of this investigation. This includes, but is not limited to, all related customer records, including recordings made of customers, all related correspondence and other communications with third parties, all related documents and things received from third parties, and all internal documents and things.

COMPLIANCE

You may comply with this Investigative Demand by producing copies of the requested documents and information by regular mail or overnight delivery to Michelle Starke, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102. The requested copies of documents and information should be received by the Office of the Attorney General by 10:00 a.m. (Central) on April 15, 2024 and be accompanied by the attached Business Records Affidavit and Certification of Compliance.

You are advised that the Attorney General will not grant an extension of time or modification of the terms of the Demand except for good cause pursuant to the terms of Section 407.070, RSMo. Your prompt response and provision of the requested information is requested.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Your attention is respectfully called to the provisions of Section 407.080, RSMo, which makes certain acts done with the intent to avoid, evade or prevent compliance in whole or in part with any Investigative Demand served hereunder a Class A misdemeanor, which is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000.00 for individuals and $5,000.00 for corporations, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both a fine and imprisonment.

v.	)
MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA,	)
Respondent.	)

AMENDED PETITION FOR ORDER TO ENFORCE CIVIL INVESTIGATIVE DEMAND

The State of Missouri, by and through Attorney General Andrew Bailey, petitions the Court pursuant to Missouri Revised Statutes section 407.090, to enforce its Civil Investigative Demand directed to Media Matters for America (hereinafter "Media Matters") and to impose a $1,000 civil penalty—and upon information and belief states in support as follows:[1]

INTRODUCTION

Media Matters, a self-styled not-for-profit "progressive research and information center," envisions itself monitoring, analyzing, and correcting "conservative misinformation" in the U.S. media. In fact, this description falls far short of reality for this political activist organization. Instead, rather than passively "monitoring," Media Matters has used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into removing their advertisements from X, formerly Twitter, one of the last platforms dedicated to free speech in America.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Media Matters has pursued an activist agenda in its attempt to destroy X, because they cannot control it. And because they cannot control it, or the free speech platform it provides to Missourians to express their own viewpoints in the public square, the radical "progressives" at Media Matters have resorted to fraud to, as Benjamin Franklin once said, mark X "for the odium of the public, as an enemy to the liberty of the press." Missourians will not be manipulated by "progressive" activists masquerading as news outlets, and they will not be defrauded in the process.

Based on serious allegations of false and deceptive behavior, the Attorney General's Office has issued a Civil Investigative Demand ("CID"), as authorized by Missouri Law, to Media Matters to investigate possible violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act. Because Media Matters has refused such efforts in other states, made clear that it will refuse any such efforts, and has in fact refused such efforts, the Attorney General seeks an order from the Court, pursuant to section 407.090, compelling Media Matters to comply with the CID within 20 days and to impose a $1,000 penalty for violating the MMPA.

PARTIES

1. Andrew Bailey is the Attorney General of the State of Missouri and files this petition in his official capacity pursuant to chapter 407 and section 27.060 of the Missouri Revised Statutes, as well as the authority granted to the Attorney General at common law.

2. Respondent Media Matters is incorporated under the laws of, and has its principal place of business in the District of Columbia, and engages in media activity as well as fundraising throughout the United States, including in Missouri. Specifically, Media Matters engages in internet and email solicitations, phone solicitations, and in-person solicitations for fundraising– listing Missouri in its public financial disclosures as a state in which it "is registered or licensed to solicit contributions or has been notified it is exempt from registration."

JURISDICTION

3. This Court has subject matter and personal jurisdiction over this action under the Missouri Constitution Article. V, § 14 and section 506.500.

VENUE

4. This Court has authority over this action pursuant to section 407.090, which allows the Attorney General to file in the trial court of general jurisdiction of a county or judicial district in which such person resides, is found, or transacts business, and serve upon such person a petition for an order of such court for the enforcement of such CID.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

5. Media Matters transacts business in this county.

MISSOURI MERCHANDISING PRACTICES ACT

6. Section 407.020 of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act ("MMPA") provides in pertinent part:

> The act, use or employment by any person of any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise in trade or commerce or the solicitation of any funds for any charitable purpose, as defined in section 407.453, in or from the state of Missouri, is declared to be an unlawful practice… Any act, use or employment declared unlawful by this subsection violates this subsection whether committed before, during or after the sale, advertisement, or solicitation.

7. The words in the statute are "unrestricted, all-encompassing and exceedingly broad." Ports Petroleum Co., Inc. of Ohio v. Nixon, 37 S.W.3d 237, 240 (Mo. banc 2001). "[T]he literal words cover every practice imaginable and every unfairness to whatever degree." Id.

8. "Person" is defined as "any natural person or his legal representative, partnership, firm, for-profit or not-for-profit corporation, whether domestic or foreign, company, foundation, trust, business entity or association, and any agent, employee, salesman, partner, officer, director, member, stockholder, associate, trustee or cestui que trust thereof."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

§ 407.010(5).

9. "Merchandise" is defined as "any objects, wares, goods, commodities, intangibles, real estate, or services." § 407.010(4)

10. "Trade" or "commerce" is defined as the "advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution, or any combination thereof, of any services and any property, tangible or intangible, real,personal, or mixed, and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situated. The terms 'trade' and 'commerce' include any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this state." § 407.010(7)

11. Respondent Media Matters has engaged in trade or commerce within the meaning ofsection 407.010.

12. Pursuant to section 407.145, the Attorney General has promulgated rules explaining and defining terms in sections 407.010-407.145 of the Merchandising Practices Act. The rules relevant tothe Merchandising Practices Act allegations herein include the provisions of 15 CSR 60.

13. Section 407.040 provides in pertinent part:

> When it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in or is engaging in any method, act, use, practice or solicitation declared to be unlawful by this chapter or when he believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation should be made to ascertain whether a person in fact has engaged in or is engaging in any such method, act, use, practice or solicitation, he may execute in writing and cause to be served upon any person who is believed to have information, documentary material, or > physical evidence relevant to the alleged or suspected violation, a civil investigative demand requiring such person to appear and testify, or to produce relevant documentary material or physical evidence or examination, at such reasonable time and place as may be stated in the civil investigative demand, concerning the advertisement, sale or offering for sale of any goods or services or the conduct of any trade or commerce or the conduct of any solicitation that is the subject matter of the investigation. Service of any civil investigative demand, notice, or subpoena may be made by any person authorized by law to serve process or by any duly authorized employee of the attorney general.

14. Section 407.070 provides in pertinent part:

> At any time before the return date specified in a civil investigative demand issued under section 407.040, or within twenty days after the civil investigative demand has been served, whichever period is shorter, a petition to extend the return date for, or to modify or set aside the civil investigative demand, stating good cause, may be filed in the circuit court of the county where the parties reside or in the circuit court of Cole County.

ALLEGATIONS OF FACT

15. Media Matters is credibly accused of defaming the social media platform X (formerly Twitter) by falsely representing that X routinely populates advertisements for brands like Apple, IBM, and Xfinity next to extremist, fringe content.

16. According to a lawsuit filed by X, Media Matters' statements were entirely and maliciously false. "Media Matters knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform." Complaint, X Corp. v. Media Matters for America, No. 4:23-cv-1175, ECF 1 ¶ 1 (N.D. Tex. Nov. 20, 2023). Media Matters did this by "manipulat[ing] the algorithms … to bypass safeguards." Id. ¶¶ 7–8. While Media Matters insisted that paid advertisements regularly "appeared alongside the fringe content," in fact that was true "for only one viewer (out of more than 500 million) on all of X: Media Matters." Id. ¶ 13 (emphasis in original). Yet Media Matters' false "reporting" had the desired effect: advertisers withdrew from X in droves.

17. The brand-safety organization DoubleVerify recently debunked Media Matters' assertion, confirming that when Media Matters alleged that X was regularly populating advertisements next to fringe content, that allegation was false. The organization, "which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers," recently stated that X's "Brand Safety Rates" were nearly perfect—99.99%—during the very time when Media Matters accused X of regularly posting brand advertisements next to fringe content. Todd Spangler, DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting

X/Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months, Variety (Apr. 15, 2024).[2]

18. Similarly, the federal district court overseeing the X lawsuit against Media Matters recently previewed that the court believes X's lawsuit should proceed toward trial. In rejecting Media Matters' request to stay discovery, the court held that, on a preliminary view, "it appears that Plaintiff [X Corp.] sufficiently pleads facts supporting its claims." X Corp., Order denying motion to stay discovery, ECF 54 at 8.[3] The court further noted that Media Matters' argument on the merits was the "weakest" argument it had presented. Id.

19. Because of this background, plus other information known to the Attorney General's Office, the Attorney General grew concerned about the representations that Media Matters provides to Missourians as it solicits donations and whether those representations are unlawfully deceptive.

20. So the State of Missouri, through the Attorney General, launched an investigation into whether Media Matters violated Missouri law when soliciting donations from Missourians.

21. Pursuant to that investigation, on March 25, 2024, the Office of the Missouri Attorney General served upon Media Matters, through its

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - COLE CIRCUIT - May 24, 2024 - 02:00 PM

Registered Agent, Angelo Carusone, 800 Maine Avenue SW, Suite 500, Washington DC, 20024, Civil Investigative Demand Number ("Investigative Demand") CID No. 24-10. A true and accurate copy of the Investigative Demand is attached hereto as Exhibit 1 and incorporated herein. A true and accurate copy of proof of service is attached hereto as Exhibit 2 and incorporated herein.

22. Pursuant to section 407.040, Investigative Demand No. CID No. 24-10 identified the statute of the suspected violation and the general subject matter of the investigation.

23. Specifically, Investigative Demand CID No. 24-10 requests information relevant to whether Media Matters has engaged in or is engaging in any merchandising practices declared to be unlawful by section 407.020 with regard to Media Matters' fraudulent manipulation of data on X.com (formerly known as Twitter).

24. The return date to produce all requested documentation and information and submit the Certification of Compliance to the Attorney General's Office is no later than 10:00 a.m. April 15, 2024.

25. Even before April 15, Media Matters expressed its intent not to comply with CIDs like this one.

26. For example, the State of Texas served on Media Matters a virtually identical civil investigative demand in December of 2023, which

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - COLE CIRCUIT - May 24, 2024 - 02:00 PM

Media Matters refused to comply with and instead filed a lawsuit to block compliance and disclosure of information and materials. See Exhibit 3 (Texas CID); Exhibit 4 (Media Matters complaint); see generally Media Matters for America, et al. v. Paxton, 1:24-cv-00147-APM (United States District Court for the District of Columbia).

27. As of the filing of this amended petition, more than a month has passed since the due date, and Media Matters has continued to refuse to comply.

28. Defendant did not enter an appearance or request court relief from the CID before April 15.

COUNT I-REQUEST FOR ORDER ENFORCING INVESTIGATIVE DEMAND

29. Petitioner incorporates all of the allegations contained in Paragraphs 1 through 20 above.

30. The Attorney General has reason to believe that Media Matters has engaged in methods, acts, uses, or practices that violate chapter 407, and that it is in the public's interest that an investigation should be made. See § 407.040.1.

31. Investigative Demand CID No. 24-10 meets all of the statutory requirements of section 407.040.2.

32. The CID does not run afoul of the statutory prohibitions of section 407.040.3, RSMo, or of the Missouri or U.S. Constitutions.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

33. Media Matters has failed or will fail to comply with the Investigative Demand CID No. 24-10, as it has expressed that it will not comply with similar investigative demands.

34. Media Matters has in fact failed to comply with the CID, but in any event, this action was timely when originally filed because the MMPA expressly authorizes the Attorney General to bring a lawsuit even before a completed violation of the MMPA has occurred. § 407.100, RSMo (authorizing the Attorney General to sue "[w]henever it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in, is engaging in, or is about to engage in any … act … declared to be unlawful by [the MMPA]") (emphasis added).

35. Accordingly, Petitioner is entitled to an order pursuant to section 407.090 requiring Media Matters to produce responses to Investigative Demand CID No. 24-10.

COUNT II-REQUEST FOR CIVIL PENALTY

36. Failure to comply with a CID is a violation of the MMPA: "A person upon whom a civil investigative demand is served pursuant to the provisions of section 407.040 shall comply with the terms thereof unless otherwise provided by an order of a court." § 407.080, RSMo (emphasis added).

37. The MMPA authorizes a court to "award to the state a civil penalty of not more than one thousand dollars per violation" whenever "a person has engaged in, is engaging in, or is about to engage in any … act… declared to be unlawful by [the MMPA]." § 407.100, RSMo.

38. Media Matters has failed to comply with the CID by failing to "comply with the terms" of the CID, such as the April 15 deadline, while simultaneously failing to seek relief from a court before that deadline. § 407.080, RSMo.

39. This Court is thus authorized to impose a $1,000 penalty for that violation.

WHEREFORE, Petitioner State of Missouri ex rel. Attorney General Andrew Bailey, prays this Court for an Order enforcing the Civil Investigative Demand, ordering Media Matters to produce complete responses to Civil Investigative Demand No. 24-10 within twenty (20) days of the entry of its Order, ordering Media Matters to pay to the State a $1,000 civil penalty, and ordering any other relief that the Court finds is warranted.

Respectfully submitted,

ANDREW BAILEY

MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA, ERIC HANANOKI, Plaintiffs, v. WARREN KENNETH PAXTON JR., in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Texas, ANDREW BAILEY, in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Missouri Defendants.	No. 24-cv-147

SECOND DECLARATION OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL STEVEN REED

I, Steven Reed, declare as follow:

1. My name is Steven Reed and I am a lawyer duly licensed and in good standing in the State of Missouri. I am over the age of 21 and fully competent to make this declaration. I make this declaration based on my personal knowledge.

2. I am the Chief Counsel for the Consumer Protection Section of the Missouri Attorney General's Office and am one of the attorneys responsible for the State of Missouri's investigation into consumer protection violations by Media Matters for America (Media Matters).

3. The Consumer Protection Section is responsible for administering and enforcing Chapter 407, the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act, of the Missouri Revised Statutes (RSMo.).

4. To protect the integrity of investigations as they progress, the Missouri Attorney General's Office as a general policy does not disclose or publicly discuss information about investigations under the MMPA—including documents and information that the Office collects. However, in rare instances, protecting the integrity of an investigation requires a very limited disclosure of information. This is one of those rare cases given Media Matters' decision to press incorrect allegations in an attempt to obtain an order to forcefully halt an investigation.

5. During the investigation into Media Matters, the Attorney General's Office has come into possession of internal Media Matters documents that are expressly marked not for circulation and which reveal plans by the organization to use solicited funds for activities contrary to those publicly disclosed to its Missouri donors.

6. Publicly, Media Matters solicits donations by asserting on its website that it "posts rapid-response items as well as longer research and analytic reports documenting conservative misinformation throughout the media" and "works daily to notify activists, journalists, pundits, and the general public about instances of misinformation."

7. But the confidential, internal descriptions of Media Matters' operations suggest a different picture.

8. These materials explain that high-level officials within Media Matters use the organization and its funds not just to issue reports about perceived misinformation, but to actively interfere with and neutralize the operational infrastructure of certain "target" companies.

9. For example, these documents reveal that Media Matters has entered into partnerships with Facebook and Google—competitors of X—and has developed strategic plans to interfere with the infrastructure systems used by "target" companies to display advertisements.

10. These materials are in tension with the organization's public comments and solicitations to Missourians and suggest that Media Matters is likely using solicited donations for activities in conflict with the explicit purposes disclosed to donors.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

11. These documents are especially noteworthy in light of credible allegations that Media Matters' assertions about advertisements on X—assertions that successfully drove advertisers from the platform—were knowingly false.

12. These materials lend credence to allegations that Media Matters may be violating the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act, and underscore the need for obtaining further documents identified in Civil Investigative Demand No. 24-10.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

Civil Action No. 24-cv-147-APM

[CIVIL RIGHTS ACTION]

[PROPOSED] SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

INTRODUCTION

1. Plaintiffs Media Matters for America and Mr. Eric Hananoki filed the operative Complaint in this action on January 17, 2024. ECF No. 1.

2. The Complaint named Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton, in his official capacity, as the sole defendant, and pleaded four counts against him. Count I alleges that Paxton's issuance of a civil investigative demand (the "Texas Demand") to Media Matters is unlawful retaliation in violation of Plaintiffs' First and Fourteenth Amendments rights. Count II alleges that the Texas Demand seeks sensitive and privileged documents and communications without adequate justification, in violation of Plaintiffs' First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights. Count III alleges that the Texas Demand violates Plaintiffs' Fourteenth Amendment rights to due process by improperly subjecting them to Texas's jurisdiction and laws. Count IV alleges that Paxton's Demand violates Plaintiffs' rights to protect their confidential source information from disclosure under the District of Columbia and Maryland shield laws.

3. Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(d), Plaintiffs file this Supplemental Complaint for the purpose of setting forth occurrences and events "that happened after the date of the pleading to be supplemented." Specifically, the Missouri Attorney General's Office issued a civil investigative demand (the "Missouri Demand") to Media Matters on March 25, 2024. That same day, before Media Matters had even received the Missouri Demand at its office in D.C., the Missouri Attorney General also filed a petition to enforce the Demand in Cole County, Missouri, Circuit Court. The Missouri Attorney General hired a process server to serve Media Matters with that enforcement petition at its office in D.C. on March 28, 2024.

4. In this Supplemental Complaint, Plaintiffs add Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey as a Defendant and plead the same four causes of action against Bailey that Plaintiffs' original Complaint pleaded against Paxton.

SUPPLEMENTAL PARTY

5. Defendant Andrew Bailey is the Attorney General of the State of Missouri and is sued in his official capacity. Missouri law grants Bailey certain limited powers related to the issuance of civil investigative demands. See, e.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040 (Merchandising Practices Act); id. § 407.472 (Charitable Organizations and Solicitations Act). In particular, the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Attorney General may issue a civil investigative demand "[w]hen it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in or is engaging in any method, act, use, practice or solicitation declared to be unlawful" under the Merchandising Practices Act. Id. § 407.040. As in Texas, the Missouri Attorney General is not required by statute to show probable cause or establish jurisdiction before issuing a civil investigative demand. Rather, state law authorizes him to do so, among other reasons, whenever he "believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation should be made." Id.

JURISDICTION OVER SUPPLEMENTAL CLAIMS AND PARTY

6. The grounds for the Court's subject matter jurisdiction over the claims pleaded below are the same as the grounds set forth in the original Complaint. See Compl. ¶¶ 11–12, ECF No. 1.

7. This Court may exercise personal jurisdiction over Bailey in his official capacity as Attorney General of Missouri. Bailey, like Paxton, dispatched a process server into the District of Columbia to serve his enforcement petition at Media Matters's Washington, D.C. headquarters. He also effectuated service of the Missouri Demand in this District by mailing the Demand to Media Matters in the District. By engaging in these activities, Bailey has committed a tort in the District. Bailey has otherwise directed activity in the District by seeking to conduct an ongoing investigation into documents located here. Bailey has thereby availed himself of the District and subjected himself to the jurisdiction of its laws and courts.

8. Bailey is a "person" for purposes of D.C. Code § 13-421 because he is a state officer sued for prospective injunctive relief under Ex parte Young.

9. This Court has statutory long-arm jurisdiction over Bailey under D.C. Code § 13-423(a)(1), (3) and (4). Bailey has transacted business in the District by mailing his Demand into the District, seeking documents here, and employing and directing a process server to serve Media

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Matters in the District with a Petition to enforce the Demand in Missouri state court. Bailey has caused tortious injury to Plaintiffs in the District through those actions taken in the District. Even if Bailey had not taken actions in the District to cause tortious injury to Plaintiffs, he is otherwise engaged in a persistent course of conduct in the District—and its courts—in his capacity as Missouri Attorney General.

SUPPLEMENTAL ALLEGATIONS

10. As alleged in the Complaint, ¶ 47, Bailey announced on November 19, 2023, that his "team [was] looking into" Plaintiffs' coverage of Musk and extremism on X. @AGAndrewBailey, X.com (Nov. 19, 2023, 4:46 PM ET), https://perma.cc/J463-656K.

11. Bailey subsequently issued a "Notice of Pending Investigation" on December 11, 2023, demanding that Media Matters preserve certain documents. Ex. 3, Notice of Pending Investigation, Mo. Att'y Gen. (Dec. 11, 2023). But Bailey never formally served that Notice, instead electing only to email it to the generic email inbox "action@mediamatters.org." His press release announcing the Notice provided no explanation as to what possible basis he had for investigating or exercising jurisdiction over Media Matters, yet nonetheless slandered the organization as a group of "progressive tyrants." Ex. 4, Attorney General Bailey Notifies Media Matters of Pending Investigation, Mo. Att'y Gen. (Dec. 11, 2023).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

12. Plaintiffs filed the Complaint on January 17, 2024. ECF No. 1. Because Bailey had not issued any formal demand or initiated any formal process against Media Matters at that juncture, Plaintiffs did not name Bailey as a Defendant at that time.

13. On January 18, 2024, one day after filing the Complaint, Plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction against Paxton. ECF No. 4. After Paxton confirmed that his office would take no steps to enforce the Texas Demand while the preliminary injunction motion was pending, ECF No. 11, the Court entered a Minute Order on January 23 denying the request for a TRO as moot.

14. The Court held a hearing on the preliminary injunction motion on February 15, and thereafter ordered supplemental briefing on whether Paxton, when sued in his official capacity, is a "person" within the meaning of the District of Columbia's personal jurisdiction statute, D.C. Code § 13-421.

15. On April 12, 2024, this Court granted a preliminary injunction against Paxton preventing him from taking any steps to enforce the Texas Demand or issue further demands. ECF Nos. 37, 38. In doing so, the Court made various factual determinations, including that Paxton's issuance of the Texas Demand "had the effect of chilling Plaintiffs' expressive activities nationwide" and "deprived D.C. residents [of] access to Plaintiffs' reporting." Mem. Op. at 22, ECF No. 37.

16. On March 25, 2024, months after this lawsuit was filed but before the preliminary injunction motion against Paxton was resolved, Attorney General Bailey copied Paxton's playbook by issuing a Civil Investigative Demand of his own.

17. Bailey's Demand, like Paxton's, seeks to rifle through Media Matters's most sensitive internal documents—donor records, internal correspondence, and journalistic source material—in retaliation for Media Matters's reporting about X. Ex. 5, Civil Investigative Demand, Mo. Att'y Gen. (Mar. 25, 2024). Among other things, it seeks names, home addresses, and donation amounts for Missouri-based donors to Media Matters; internal communications about sources and uses of donated funds; internal communications about strategy; and confidential source information related to Mr. Hananoki's reporting. The Missouri Demand is, like the Texas Demand, incredibly broad in scope; for instance, it seeks several categories of documents without imposing any temporal limits on the requested production.

18. The Missouri Demand is materially very similar to the Texas Demand, and in many respects is a word-for-word copy. Indeed, Bailey has described the Missouri Demand as "virtually identical" to the Texas Demand. Ex. 6 ¶ 20, Petition for Order to Enforce Civil Investigative Demand, Missouri ex rel. Bailey v. Media Matters for Am., No. 24AC-CC02291 (Cole Cnty. Cir Ct. Mar. 25, 2024). For instance, the Texas Demand sought "all of Media Matters for America's external communications with Apple Inc., International Business Machine Corporation (IBM), Bravo television network, NBCUniversal, Oracle Corporation, and Comcast Corporation, Lions Gate Entertainment Corporation, Warner Bros Discovery Inc., Paramount Pictures Corporation, and Sony Group Corporation from November 1, 2023 to November 21, 2023." Compl. Ex. B at 7, ECF No. 1-4. The Missouri Demand similarly seeks "[a]ll communications with Apple, International Business Machine Corporation, Bravo Television Network, NBCUniversal, Oracle Corporation, Comcast Corporation, Lions Gate Entertainment Corporation, Warner Bros Discovery Inc., Paramount Pictures Corporation, or Sony Group Corporation from November 1, 2023, to March 25, 2024." Ex. 5 at 5.

19. Substantial evidence indicates that Bailey issued the Missouri Demand to harass and retaliate against Plaintiffs, rather than for any good-faith investigative reason. For example, although more than three months passed between Bailey's Notice of Pending Investigation and his issuance of the Missouri Demand, Bailey apparently expended little investigative effort in that time. Neither the Missouri Demand nor the Petition seeking to enforce it identifies any new facts regarding Media Matters. Both documents simply regurgitate the vague and groundless accusations leveled at Media Matters in the Notice.

20. Similarly, Bailey's press release announcing the escalation in harassment was short on facts and long on invective. Among other things, it characterized Media Matters as a "political activist organization," described its reporting on X as "an "attempt to destroy X, because they [sic] cannot control it," and described its reporters as "radical 'progressives'" and "'progressive' activists masquerading as news outlets [sic]." Ex. 7, Attorney General Bailey Files Suit Against Media Matters for Refusal to Cooperate with Investigation, Mo. Att'y Gen. (Mar. 25, 2024).

21. Although Hananoki himself has not previously reported on Bailey, Bailey has, like Paxton, been subject to critical reporting from Media Matters.[1] Bailey's Demand, much like Paxton's, reeks of opportunistic retaliation.

22. The Missouri Demand has a return date of April 15, 2024. Ex. 5 at 5.

23. Media Matters received the demand by certified mail on April 1, 2024.

24. Remarkably, Bailey filed an enforcement petition against Media Matters in Missouri state court on March 25—the same day he issued the Missouri Demand and a full week before Media Matters had even received the Demand in D.C. See Ex. 6. That Petition, citing this case, claims an immediate enforcement action is appropriate because Media Matters has resisted

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Paxton's Demand. Id. ¶ 20. On Bailey's view, because Media Matters chose to vigorously defend its constitutional rights against Paxton rather than capitulate to his bullying, Bailey is free to disregard the basic dictates of due process—and Missouri state law—by enforcing a Demand without even serving it. This rush to court further illustrates that Bailey issued the Missouri Demand chiefly to harass and punish Media Matters, rather than for any bona fide investigatory purpose.

25. Bailey served the Petition by dispatching a process server to Media Matters's D.C. office on March 28, 2024.

26. Although Bailey's Demand purports merely to be investigating Media Matters, the Petition goes much further, affirmatively alleging that Media Matters "has used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians." Ex. 6 at 2. But the Petition provides zero factual support for that inflammatory suggestion, asserting only that Bailey "has reason to believe" that Media Matters has somehow violated Missouri law. Id. ¶ 22. The Petition also describes Media Matters and its employees as "radical 'progressives" who are "attempt[ing] to destroy X, because they cannot control it," and as "activists masquerading as [a] news outlet[]."Id. at 2.

27. Moreover, the Petition makes clear that Bailey intends to rely solely upon his authority under the Merchandising Practices Act as a basis for issuing and enforcing the Demand. Ex. 6 ¶¶ 13–14, 16, 22–24; see also Ex. 7 (accusing Media Matters of acting in direct violation of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act). But the Missouri Supreme Court has made clear that the Act applies only to "the protection of consumers who are the actual buyers in a sale." Ports Petroleum Co. of Ohio v. Nixon, 37 S.W.3d 237, 241 (Mo. 2001). Media Matters makes no "sales" and has no "actual buyers" in Missouri or elsewhere. Bailey's choice to employ authority under a law that, on its face, has no possible application to Media Matters further demonstrates that his conduct is not for any real investigative purpose, but instead simply to harass and retaliate against Media Matters.

28. On April 15, 2024, the return date for the Missouri Demand, Media Matters replied to the Demand in a letter objecting to it in full. Ex. 8, Letter from Aria C. Branch to Jeremiah J. Morgan (April 15, 2024). In that letter, Media Matters informed Bailey of this Court's grant of a preliminary injunction against Paxton and requested that Bailey withdraw the Missouri Demand. Id. at 2.

29. Bailey refused to withdraw the Missouri Demand in an email sent by one of his deputies on April 17, 2024. Ex. 9, Email from Jeremiah Morgan to Samuel Ward-Packard (Apr. 17, 2024, 5:04 PM). That email failed to explain the basis for Bailey's purported jurisdiction over Media Matters, nor did it acknowledge—let alone distinguish—this Court's preliminary injunction against Paxton's "virtually identical" Demand. Id. The only thing made clear by the email is that Bailey intends to proceed with his investigation and enforcement of the Missouri Demand regardless of this Court's preliminary injunction order against Paxton.

30. Also on April 17, Bailey filed a Notice informing the Cole County, Missouri, Circuit Court of Media Matters's response to the Missouri Demand. Ex. 10, Notice of Filing Response to Civil Investigative Demand, Missouri ex rel. Bailey v. Media Matters for Am., No. 24AC-CC02291 (Cole Cnty. Cir Ct. Apr. 17, 2024). That Notice asserted, improbably, that the Cole County Circuit Court had jurisdiction over Media Matters and was a proper venue because of the Missouri Attorney General's issuance of a letter in 2007 exempting Media Matters from any obligation to register as a charity in Missouri. Id. ¶ 5.

31. The Missouri Demand and Petition have magnified and compounded the acute chill Plaintiffs suffered as a consequence of the Texas Demand. The Missouri Demand, unlike the Texas

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Demand, is the subject of a pending enforcement action. It therefore represents a significant escalation: Moving to enforce creates an imminent possibility that Plaintiffs may be coerced into granting Bailey access to Plaintiffs' most sensitive papers.

32. Bailey's enforcement action is also in a foreign venue with which neither Media Matters nor Hananoki has any ties.

33. Media Matters is not registered as a foreign corporation in Missouri because it does not "transact business" in Missouri. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 351.572. Nor does it have a registered agent in Missouri. Further, Media Matters is not engaged in "the sale or advertisement of any merchandise in trade or commerce" in Missouri. Id. § 407.020. Nor is it targeting any "solicitation of any funds for any charitable purpose" at Missouri. Id.; see also id. § 407.453. Indeed, it is not even registered as a charity in Missouri because nearly two decades ago the Missouri Attorney General's Office itself concluded Media Matters was exempt from registration. Ex. 11, Letter from Rhonda Johnson to Megan B. Allen (July 12, 2007). Media Matters has never employed anyone in Missouri and has no physical presence in the state.

34. Hananoki's reporting occurred entirely within Maryland and involved no contact with Missouri.

35. Despite these readily ascertainable facts, Bailey's Petition seeking to enforce the Missouri Demand flatly asserts without support that "Media Matters transacts business in this county [i.e., Cole County, Bailey's home jurisdiction]." Ex. 6 ¶ 5.

36. Bailey's actions are particularly troubling in light of this Court's recent preliminary injunction ruling, which enjoined Paxton from further enforcing the Texas Demand. See ECF Nos. 37, 38. Bailey and Paxton are coordinating with one another. Bailey himself admitted as much in an interview on a St. Louis radio program: "Yeah, certainly we've coordinated with Texas. Texas has launched a similar investigation and we're in talks with other states as well. This is a new front in the war, in the fight for free speech."[2] And Paxton expressly encouraged other Attorneys General to follow his lead, see Compl. ¶ 51, ECF No. 1, which Bailey has now done. It is thus no surprise that Bailey's Demand is virtually identical to Paxton's, effectively picking up Paxton's baton now that the Texas Demand is enjoined.

37. Whether Bailey obtains access to Plaintiffs' papers or Paxton does makes no practical difference to Plaintiffs—the retaliation will have been accomplished either way.

SUPPLMENTAL CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

COUNT V
(Against Bailey)

First Amendment Retaliation in Violation of Plaintiffs' Rights Under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution (42 U.S.C. § 1983)

38. Plaintiffs incorporate all paragraphs above and in the original Complaint as if fully set forth in this paragraph.

39. Bailey has violated, and continues to violate, Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights by launching an investigation and serving a burdensome Demand in retaliation for Plaintiffs' speech, press, and associational activities. Bailey's use of the power of his office is discouraging and will continue to discourage Plaintiffs from engaging in news coverage. The chill imposed by his retaliatory actions injures Plaintiffs' ability to investigate and publish news stories and further chills their ability to participate in a robust public discussion around political extremism on the X platform. And because Bailey has moved to enforce his lawless Demand, the chill is even more acute, and the retaliatory effect even graver, than that caused by Paxton's Demand. Absent relief from this Court, that chill will continue.

[2] Tim Jones & Chris Arps Show, MO A.G. Andrew Bailey: Missouri Doesn't Have Sanctuary Cities, NewsTalkSTL at 5:32–58 (Dec. 12, 2023), https://omny.fm/shows/newstalk-stl/mo-a-g-andrew-bailey-missouri-doesnt-have-sanctuar.

40. "[T]he law is settled that . . . the First Amendment prohibits government officials from subjecting an individual to retaliatory actions . . . for speaking out." Hartman v. Moore, 547 U.S. 250, 256 (2006). "The First Amendment right to free speech includes not only the affirmative right to speak, but also the right to be free from retaliation by a public official for the exercise of that right." Suarez Corp. Indus. v. McGraw, 202 F.3d 676, 685 (4th Cir. 2000).

41. The D.C. Circuit has long recognized First Amendment retaliation claims as "actionable precisely 'because retaliatory actions may tend to chill individuals' exercise of constitutional rights.'" Crawford-El v. Britton, 93 F.3d 813, 846 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (Henderson, J., concurring) (quoting ACLU of Md., Inc. v. Wicomico County, 999 F.2d 780, 785 (4th Cir. 1993)); see also Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593, 597 (1972). That cause of action for First Amendment retaliation arises under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, which "has long [been] interpreted . . . to permit suits against officials in their individual capacities" for constitutional violations. Tanzin v. Tanvir, 592 U.S. 43, 48 (2020). To prevail on their retaliation claim, Plaintiffs must show: "(1) [they] engaged in conduct protected under the First Amendment; (2) [Bailey] took some retaliatory action sufficient to deter a person of ordinary firmness in [Plaintiffs'] position from speaking again; and (3) a causal link between the exercise of a constitutional right and the adverse action." Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242, 258 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (quotation marks omitted). Plaintiffs satisfy each element.

42. First, Plaintiffs' investigative, newsgathering, and reporting activities are "legally protected interest[s]" under the First Amendment. Overbey v. Mayor of Baltimore, 930 F.3d 215, 227 (4th Cir. 2019) (recognizing right of local news website operator to "gather news"); see also

Flynt v. Rumsfeld, 180 F. Supp. 2d 174, 175 (D.D.C. 2002) (explaining that "under the First Amendment the press is guaranteed a right to gather and report news"). Media Matters provides journalistic research and investigative reporting on a variety of matters and figures of public importance. Hananoki is a senior investigative reporter who for over a decade has published journalism about political extremism online, including on platforms like X. The "First Amendment applies in full force" to this newsgathering and commentary, and further "protect[s] a news outlet's editorial perspective [and] the way its beat reporters cover a given" public issue. Washington Post v. McManus, 944 F.3d 506, 518 (4th Cir. 2019) (quoting Mia. Herald Publ'g Co. v. Tornillo, 418 U.S. 241, 258 (1974)); cf. Nat'l Org. For Women v. Fed. Commc'n Comm'n, 555 F.2d 1002, 1010 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (explaining that "[t]he exercise of such editorial discretion, especially in connection with news reporting, sharply implicates First Amendment values"). Indeed, "the constitutional protection of the press reaches its apogee" where, as here, Plaintiffs are members of the press who investigate and write about "a public figure" or "on a matter of public concern." Chapin v. Knight-Ridder, Inc., 993 F.2d 1087, 1092 (4th Cir. 1993) (citing New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964)); see also Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 451–52 (2011) ("Speech on matters of public concern is at the heart of the First Amendment's protection.") (cleaned up); Farah v. Esquire Mag., 736 F.3d 528, 539 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (similar).

43. Second, Bailey has taken action adverse to Plaintiffs' protected activity in response to news coverage. His investigation, intrusive Demand, and Petition to enforce that Demand have already chilled Plaintiffs' speech and reporting activities and will continue to do so absent relief. Bailey's retaliatory conduct would "deter a person of ordinary firmness in [Plaintiffs'] position from speaking again." Aref, 833 F.3d at 258. This chill is exacerbated by the fear Plaintiffs will be forced to defend their constitutional rights in a jurisdiction with which they have no meaningful connection.

44. Third, there is no serious dispute that Bailey's investigation and Demand are causally linked to Plaintiffs' coverage of X and Musk. Bailey has publicly admitted as much. He announced his intention to investigate Plaintiffs on November 19, 2023, in direct response to a suggestion that conservative Attorneys General launch investigations into Media Matters based on its reporting on X in the preceding days. The material sought by Bailey's Demand further confirms the causal connection, as it singles out documents and communications related to Hananoki's November 16 article, as well as X and its officers. Indeed, the Missouri Demand is a near–carbon copy of the Texas Demand.

45. Bailey's retaliatory campaign against Media Matters has injured Plaintiffs and will continue to do so absent relief from this Court. This harm will be redressed by an order declaring Bailey's conduct to be unlawful and enjoining him from further investigating Plaintiffs or enforcing his Demand. Such relief is appropriate under Section 1983. Hedgepeth ex rel. Hedgepeth v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Auth., 386 F.3d 1148, 1152 n.3 (D.C. Cir. 2004); Anderson v. Reilly, 691 F. Supp. 2d 89, 92 (D.D.C. 2010).

COUNT VI

Violation of Plaintiffs' Rights Under the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution (42 U.S.C. § 1983)

46. Plaintiffs incorporate all paragraphs above and in the original Complaint as if fully set forth in this paragraph.

47. Bailey's issuance of the overbroad and retaliatory Demand further violates Plaintiffs' First and Fourth Amendment rights by unreasonably requiring them to turn over sensitive and privileged materials, including those that impinge upon their association with other organizations.

48. The Fourth Amendment limits the scope of administrative subpoenas. See Okla. Press Publ'g Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 208–11 (1946). The First Amendment provides Plaintiffs a privilege against disclosure of materials that would chill their constitutional rights. See Perry v. Schwarzenegger, 591 F.3d 1147, 1160 (9th Cir. 2010). Where "the materials sought to be seized" by an administrative subpoena even "may be protected by the First Amendment," the requirements of the Fourth Amendment are applied with "scrupulous exactitude." Zurcher v. Stanford Daily, 436 U.S. 547, 564 (1978) (citing Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 485 (1965)) (emphasis added).

49. Bailey has shown no such "scrupulous exactitude" in his Demand. Without any showing of cause or jurisdiction, Bailey has demanded that Plaintiffs produce a broad set of documents that implicate their core First Amendment rights. Indeed, Bailey seeks even broader information about Media Matters's donors than does Paxton.

50. The Missouri Demand seeks, for example, swathes of documents related to Plaintiffs' donors, funding sources, expenditures, and employees, all of which are protected from compelled disclosure under the First Amendment. E.g., Ams. for Prosperity Found. v. Bonta, 141 S. Ct. 2373, 2382 (2021); NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 462 (1958).

51. Relatedly, the Missouri Demand seeks various kinds of "external communications" that would expose Plaintiffs' associations and collaborations with other groups, including on efforts like ongoing coalitions that include prominent civil rights organizations as well as technology experts and research organizations focused on the challenges of content moderation on X. "It is hardly a novel perception that compelled disclosure of affiliation with groups engaged in advocacy may constitute as effective a restraint on freedom of association as [other] forms of governmental action." NAACP, 357 U.S. at 462. Compelled disclosure of such associational materials must meet "exacting scrutiny." Bonta, 141 S. Ct. at 2383.

52. The Missouri Demand further requires that Plaintiffs surrender internal communications and files regarding news articles, as well as communications with employees at X and its advertisers, again with no showing of cause. Bailey may not "rummage at large in newspaper files or [] intrude into or to deter normal editorial and publication decisions" under the First Amendment. Zurcher, 436 U.S. at 566; see also Lacey v. Maricopa County, 693 F.3d 896, 917 (9th Cir. 2012). Such "[b]road and sweeping state inquiries into these protected areas . . . discourage citizens from exercising rights protected by the Constitution." Baird v. State Bar of Ariz., 401 U.S. 1, 6 (1971) (plurality opinion).

53. It provides no meaningful relief to Plaintiffs that Bailey is authorized to enforce his Demand only through a petition in Missouri state court. See Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.090. Missouri courts plainly lack personal jurisdiction over Plaintiffs, who should not be forced to subject themselves to foreign tribunals to defend their constitutionally protected rights. And Bailey has already exercised his authority to enforce the Missouri Demand in state court.

54. Plaintiff Media Matters is incorporated under the laws of, and has its principal place of business in, the District of Columbia. Plaintiff Eric Hananoki is domiciled in Maryland. Missouri courts lack general jurisdiction over Plaintiffs. See Ford Motor Co. v. Mont. Eighth Jud. Dist. Ct., 592 U.S. 351, 359–60 (2021).

55. Plaintiffs have not purposefully availed themselves of the privilege of conducting activities in Missouri, nor would any cause of action stemming from the Demand arise out of or relate to such purposeful contacts, if they existed. Missouri courts lack specific jurisdiction to enforce the Demands against Plaintiffs. See Johnson v. Arden, 614 F.3d 785, 796 (8th Cir. 2010); Johnson v. TheHuffingtonPost.com, Inc., 21 F.4th 314, 317–18 (5th Cir. 2021), reh'g en banc denied, 32 F.4th 488 (5th Cir. 2022), cert. denied, 143 S. Ct. 485 (2022); Fidrych v. Marriott Int'l, Inc., 952 F.3d 124, 140 (4th Cir. 2020); GTE New Media Servs. Inc. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1349–50 (D.C. Cir. 2000).

56. With an action to enforce the Missouri Demand ongoing, Plaintiffs are faced with the ongoing prospect of either surrendering constitutionally protected materials in violation of their First and Fourth Amendment rights or subjecting themselves to proceedings in a foreign court that plainly lacks jurisdiction over them. That is no true choice at all.

57. This ongoing violation of Plaintiffs' First and Fourth Amendment rights will be remedied by prompt injunctive relief from this Court setting aside the Demand.

COUNT VII
(Against Bailey)

Violation of Plaintiffs' Due Process Rights Under the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution (42 U.S.C. § 1983)

58. Plaintiffs incorporate all paragraphs above and in the original Complaint as if fully set forth in this paragraph.

59. The guarantee of due process in the Fourteenth Amendment "recognizes and protects an individual liberty interest" from being subjected to legal process in a jurisdiction with which a person has no contact, unless they willingly consent to such process. Ins. Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702 (1982).

60. For a state to exercise personal jurisdiction over a party in a manner consistent with due process, the party must have "'minimum contacts' in the forum State." Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 474 (1985) (quoting Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945)). Mere "foreseeability of causing injury in another State" is not a "'sufficient benchmark' for exercising personal jurisdiction." Id. (quoting World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 295 (1980)). "Instead, 'the foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis . . . is that the defendant's conduct and connection with the forum State are such that he should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there.'" Id. (quoting World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S. at 297).

61. Here, Bailey has sought to subject Plaintiffs to legal process under Missouri law—and has already hailed Plaintiff Media Matters into Missouri state court in an attempt to enforce his Demand—despite Plaintiffs' having no minimum contacts with Missouri and not being subject to either general or specific personal jurisdiction in that state. Plaintiffs do not avail themselves of Missouri law and had no reason to ever foresee being subject to Missouri's Charitable Organizations and Solicitations Law. Media Matters's mere "operation of a website accessible in [Missouri] is insufficient to satisfy the minimum-contacts requirement of the personal-jurisdiction inquiry" under the Due Process clause. Fidrych, 952 F.3d at 140.

62. Plaintiffs are injured by the ongoing imposition of Missouri law on them by Bailey despite his clear lack of jurisdiction to do so. Bailey's hailing of them into Cole County court, his home jurisdiction, is a plain violation of fundamental due process principles. And—compounding the due-process injury—Bailey filed his enforcement action before Media Matters had even received the Demand.

COUNT VIII
(Against Bailey)

Violation of Plaintiffs' Rights Under the District of Columbia's and Maryland's Reporters' Shield Laws

63. Plaintiffs incorporate all paragraphs above and in the original Complaint as if fully set forth in this paragraph.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

64. Bailey's Demand violates Plaintiffs' rights under the District of Columbia's and Maryland's shield laws by seeking to compel disclosure of statutorily protected, confidential sources. D.C. Code §§ 16-4702, 4703; Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 9-112(b), (c).

65. The D.C. shield law provides absolute protection against compelled disclosure of sources, D.C. Code § 16-4703(b), and qualified protection against compelled disclosure of other information, including "any news or information procured . . . in the course of pursuing [] professional activit[ies]," including notes, to the extent such information is not publicly disclosed, id. § 16-4702. See also Grunseth v. Marriott Corp., 868 F. Supp. 333, 336 (D.D.C. 1994). The shield law protects media organizations and their employees acting within the scope of a contract in any "news gathering or news disseminating capacity." D.C. Code § 16-4702.

66. Maryland's shield law provides materially equivalent protections. See Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 9-112(b)(1), (c)(2).

67. To overcome even the qualified privilege for non-source information, both statutes provide that parties seeking news or information must establish by clear and convincing evidence that (1) the news or information is relevant to a significant legal issue before a party that has a power to issue a subpoena; (2) the news or information could not, with due diligence, be obtained by any alternative means; and (3) there is an overriding public interest in the disclosure. Still, courts have quashed subpoenas that seek information from news media, even when all three prongs of the qualified privilege apply. See, e.g., Bice v. Bernstein, No. 93-CA-22258, 1994 WL 555379, at *1–*2 (Md. Cir. Ct. Apr. 20, 1994); Grunseth, 868 F. Supp. at 336.

68. Bailey's Demand is consequently infirm because its overbreadth will require that Plaintiffs turn over constitutionally protected sources. The Demand asks for any and all documents related to Plaintiffs' November 16 article—including internal documents—as well as external communications between Plaintiffs and others. What is more, the Demand seeks documents regarding Plaintiffs' organizational structure, as well as the specific X accounts used to obtain the screenshots contained in the November 16 article. In essence, the Demand functions as a boundless inquiry into Plaintiffs' organization and news gathering capacity—precisely the kind of pernicious subpoena that these shield laws were designed to combat.

69. Bailey's Demand not only seeks privileged material in violation of Plaintiff's First Amendment rights, but also chills Plaintiffs' news gathering capacity. An order setting aside the Demand is the only legal mechanism to ensure that Plaintiffs' rights—protected by the Constitution and by state statute—are secure.

SUPPLEMENTAL PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully ask for the following supplemental relief:

70. Declare that Bailey's Demand and Petition constitute a First Amendment retaliatory action in violation of Plaintiffs' rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution.

71. Declare that Bailey's Demand and Petition violate Plaintiffs' rights under the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution.

72. Declare as a matter of law that courts in the State of Missouri cannot exercise personal jurisdiction over Plaintiffs in any imminent action to enforce the Demand, including that prematurely filed by Bailey.

73. Declare that Bailey's Demand seeks disclosure of information protected by the Maryland and D.C. shield laws.

74. Preliminarily enjoin Bailey, his officers, agents, servants, and employees from taking any further action to enforce the Missouri Demand or further investigating Plaintiffs in violation of their constitutional rights.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

75. Permanently enjoin Bailey, his officers, agents, servants, and employees from taking any further to enforce the Missouri Demand or further investigating Plaintiffs in violation of their constitutional rights.

76. Award Plaintiffs their costs, expenses, and reasonable attorneys' fees, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1988, and any other applicable law.

77. Grant Plaintiffs any and all other relief that the Court deems just and proper.

Instructions

1. Read These Instructions/Definitions. Read these instructions and definitions carefully.

2. Duty to Preserve Documents. All documents and/or other data which relate to the subject matter or requests of this Civil Investigative Demand must be preserved. Any ongoing, scheduled or other process of document or data destruction involving such documents or data must cease even if it is your normal or routine course of business for you to delete or destroy such documents or data and even if you believe such documents or data are protected from discovery by privilege or otherwise. Failure to preserve such documents or data may result in legal action and may be regarded as spoliation of evidence under applicable law.

3. Relevant Dates. Unless otherwise noted, the requests in this Civil Investigative Demand require production of documents for each year from January 1, 2022 to the final date of your production of responsive documents, herein called "the relevant time period."

4. Custody and Control. In responding to this Civil Investigative Demand, you are required to produce not only all requested documents in your physical possession, but also all requested documents within your custody and control, including those within the possession of persons reasonably available to you or under your direction or control.

5. Identification of Documents not in Custody or Control. If any responsive document was, but no longer is, in your possession, custody or control, produce a description of each such document. The description shall include the following:

   a. The name of each author, sender, creator, and initiator of such document;

   b. the name of each recipient, addressee, or party for whom such document was intended;

   c. the date the document was created;

   d. the date(s) the document was in use;

   e. a detailed description of the content of the document;

   f. the reason it is no longer in your possession, custody or control; and

   g. the document's present whereabouts.

   If the document is no longer in existence, in addition to providing the information indicated above, state on whose instructions the document was destroyed or otherwise disposed of, and the date and manner of the destruction or disposal.

6. Privileged Documents. If any responsive document is withheld, in whole or in part, under any claim of privilege, provide a detailed privilege log that contains at least the following information for each document or partial document that you have withheld:

   a. the document's control numbers;

   b. all authors of the document;

   c. all addressees of the document;

   d. all recipients of the document or of any copies of the document, to the extent not included among the document's addressees;

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

e. the date of the document;

f. a description of the subject matter of the document sufficient to determine the applicability of the privilege;

g. the nature or type of the privilege that is being asserted for the document (e.g., "attorney-client privilege");

h. the specification(s) of the Demand to which the document is responsive;

i. the document control number(s) of any attachments to the document, regardless of whether any privilege is being asserted for such attachment(s); and

j. whether the document has been produced in redacted form, and if so, the range of the control numbers for the document.

7. Trade Secrets. It is your responsibility to clearly designate which, if any, of the requested documents contain trade secrets, in accordance with Section 17.61(f) of the Texas Business and Commerce Code.

8. Consult Before Producing Documents. Before processing or making copies of hard copy documents or electronically stored information in response to this Civil Investigative Demand, consult with the designated representative(s) of the Office of the Attorney General, ("OAG") identified above and reach agreement on the format and method of production.

   Likewise, before producing any original documents, consult with one of the designated representatives of the OAG identified above to obtain approval. If you produce original documents, the OAG cannot guarantee their return.

9. You May Produce Copies. Subject to the consultation requirement noted above, you may submit photocopies (with color photocopies where necessary to interpret the document) in lieu of original hard-copy documents, provided that such copies are accompanied by an affidavit of an officer of Media Matters for America stating that the copies are true, correct, and complete copies of the original documents, and (if appropriate) were generated and maintained in the ordinary course of your business, and provided that where the original contains colored text or images, a color copy must be provided.

10. Non-identical Copies to be Produced. Identical copies of responsive documents need not be produced. However, any copy of a document that differs in any manner, including but not limited to the presence of handwritten notations, different senders or recipients, etc. must be produced.

11. No Redaction. All materials or documents produced in response to this Civil Investigative Demand shall be produced, except as deemed privileged, in complete unabridged, unedited and unredacted form, even if portions may contain information not explicitly requested, or might include interim or final editions of a document.

12. Documents to be Bates Numbered. Mark each page or electronic medium (e.g., disk, tape, or CD) with individual or corporate identification and eight-digit consecutive document control numbers (e.g., DOE-12345678; CORP-12345678). Hardcopy bound pamphlets or books may be marked with a single identification and control number. Documents as to which privilege is asserted are to also receive identification and control numbers.

    If your production will be more than one box or piece of electronic media, number each box or electronic media, as well as the total number of boxes/media (e.g., box 1 of 13) and mark each with the name(s) of the person(s) whose files are contained therein, the requests(s) to which they are responsive, and the document control numbers contained therein.

13. Document Organization. Each document and other tangible thing produced shall be clearly designated as to which request, and each sub-part of a request, that it satisfies. The documents produced shall be identified and segregated to correspond with the number and subsection of the request.

14. Production of Electronic Documents. Unless otherwise agreed to in writing by the designated OAG representative, electronically stored information shall be produced in electronic form. Before you prepare documents or information for production in electronic form in order to comply with this Civil Investigative Demand (for example, before you attempt to process electronically stored information or image hard copy documents), you must consult with the designated representative(s) of the OAG identified above and reach agreement regarding the format and method of production.

15. Questions. Questions concerning this Civil Investigative Demand should be directed to Assistant Attorney General Levi Fuller at (512) 936-1308.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Definitions

1. "You," "your," "the business," "Media Matters for America," or "Media Matters" means Media Matters for America, their past and present officers, employees, agents and representatives, parents and predecessors, divisions, subsidiaries, affiliates, partnerships and joint ventures, and includes all persons and entities acting or purporting to act under the guidance or on behalf of any of the above. The terms "subsidiary," "affiliate," and "joint venture" refer to any firm in which there is total or partial ownership (25 percent or more) or control between the company and any other person or entity.

2. "X," "X Corp.," "Twitter," or "Twitter, Inc." means X, their past and present officers, employees, agents and representatives, parents and predecessors, divisions, subsidiaries, affiliates, partnerships and joint ventures, and includes all persons and entities acting or purporting to act under the guidance or on behalf of any of the above.

3. "Document" means the original and all non-identical copies (whether different from the original because of notes, underlining, attachments, or otherwise) of all computer files, and all written, printed, graphic or recorded material of every kind, regardless of authorship. It includes communications in words, symbols, pictures, photographs, sounds, films, and tapes, as well as electronically stored information, computer files, together with all codes and/or programming instructions and other materials necessary to understand and use such systems. The term "computer files" includes information stored in or accessible through computers or other information retrieval systems and includes but is not limited to drafts of documents, metadata, embedded, hidden and other bibliographic or historical data describing or relating to documents created, revised, or distributed on computer systems, as well as spreadsheets and their underlying cell formulae and other codes. Thus, you should produce documents that exist in machine-readable form, including documents stored in personal computers, portable computers, workstations, minicomputers, phones, pagers, personal data/digital assistants, archival voice storage systems, group and collaborative tools, electronic messaging devices, mainframes, servers, backup disks and tapes, archive disks and tapes, and other forms of offline storage, whether on or off your premises. This definition covers electronic mail messages ("e-mail"), text messages, voice mail, and all other documents in the possession of you and/or your directors, officers, managers, or employees, whether located at their home or office, whether on work or personal devices. Notice: Unless otherwise specified, the term "document" excludes bills of lading, invoices in non-electronic form, customs declarations, purchase orders, and other similar documents of a purely transactional nature.

4. "Communication" means any exchange or transmission of words or ideas to another person or an entity, including without limitation conversations, discussions, letters, memoranda, meetings, notes, speeches, or other transfer of information, whether written, oral, or by any other means, whether direct or indirect, formal or informal, and includes any document which abstracts, digests, transcribes or records any such communication. This definition extends to and encompasses electronic communications on internal chat platforms such as Slack, Microsoft Teams, Google Chat, and other similar messaging platforms.

5. "Entity" means legal or business entity of any kind and includes, without limitation, corporations, partnerships, joint ventures, associations, governmental bodies, and trusts.

6. "Evidencing" means having any tendency to make the existence of any fact related to the request more probable than it would be without the evidence.

7. "Identify" means

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

a. Regarding an individual, to identify that individual's:

i. name;

ii. current or last known telephone numbers at business and home; and

iii. current or last known business and home addresses.

b. Regarding a person other than an individual, to identify:

i. its full name;

ii. the nature of its organization;

iii. the address and telephone number of its principal offices and, if applicable, the state in which it is incorporated; and

iv. its principal line of business or activity.

c. Regarding any other tangible thing, to identify:

i. what it is, giving a reasonably detailed description thereof;

ii. when, where, and how it was made, if applicable;

iii. who made it, if applicable; and

iv. its current custodian or the person that had last known possession, custody, or control thereof.

8. "Including" means including, but not limited to.

9. "Person" includes you and means any entity or natural person.

10. "Relate," "related," and "relating" mean being in any way legally, logically, or factually connected with the subject matter of the request at issue.

11. The words "and" and "or" shall be construed either conjunctively or disjunctively as required by the context to bring within the scope of the request, any document(s) that might be deemed outside its scope by another construction.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

I. INTRODUCTION

On November 16, 2023, Plaintiff Media Matters for America, Inc. ("Media Matters"), a District of Columbia-based media company, published an online article written by one of its long-time journalists, Plaintiff Eric Hananoki, which reported that advertisements for major corporations were appearing next to extremist content on X.com, the social media platform formerly known as Twitter ("November 16 Article"). The story depicted multiple images of the advertisements and posts at issue. The article showed images of Adolph Hitler alongside advertisements from Apple, Oracle, and IBM, and white nationalist tweets next to advertisements from Xfinity and Bravo. X's new owner, Elon Musk, responded that the November 16 Article was a "fraudulent attack on [the] company," and he promised to file "a thermonuclear lawsuit against Media Matters[.]"

Days later, the Attorney General for the State of Texas, Defendant Warren Kenneth Paxton, announced that he was opening an investigation into whether Media Matters' reporting about X had violated Texas' Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("DTPA"). According to a press release,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Defendant "was extremely troubled" by allegations that Media Matters had "fraudulently manipulated data on X.com" in its reporting. Defendant then issued a Civil Investigative Demand ("CID"), which sought from Media Matters a host of records, including its internal and external communications about Musk's purchase of X; the company's CEO, Linda Yaccarino; and the November 16th Article. It also sought records about the company's sources of income and expenditures in Texas. Defendant hired a process server who successfully served the CID on Media Matters in the District of Columbia.

Plaintiffs are before this court seeking an order that preliminarily enjoins Defendant from enforcing the CID. Their primary claim is that Defendant has retaliated against them for exercising their First Amendment rights, which caused substantial chilling effects such as self-censorship and other disruptions of their journalistic endeavors. For his part, Defendant urges the court to reject the requested relief on various grounds: (1) lack of personal jurisdiction, (2) failure to pursue an adequate legal remedy in Texas state court, (3) improper venue, (4) failure to demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits, and (5) absence of irreparable harm.

As explained below, the court finds that Defendant is subject to personal jurisdiction in this court, and Plaintiffs have satisfied each of the preliminary injunction factors. The court therefore grants Plaintiffs' motion for preliminary relief.

II. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background

1. Media Matters and Eric Hananoki

Plaintiff Media Matters is a non-profit research and information center that monitors and reports on misinformation and political extremism in the U.S. media landscape. Compl., ECF No. 1, ¶ 2 [hereinafter Compl.]. Media Matters is incorporated in Washington, D.C. Pls.'

Mot. for TRO & Prelim. Inj., ECF No. 4 [hereinafter Pls.' Mot.], Decl. of Cynthia Padera in Supp. of Pls.' Mot., Ex. 2, ECF No. 4-2, ¶ 7 [hereinafter Padera Decl.]. Its principal place of business and office space are in the District, as are its hard-copy records. Padera Decl. ¶ 9. Media Matters has no meaningful ties to the State of Texas. Padera Decl. ¶¶ 10–14.

Plaintiff Eric Hananoki is a senior investigative reporter who has worked at Media Matters since 2007. Pls.' Mot., Decl. of Eric Hananoki in Supp. of Pls.' Mot., Ex. 3, ECF No. 4-3, ¶ 2 [hereinafter Hananoki Decl.]. Hananoki resides in Maryland and works remotely from there, although he occasionally visits Media Matters' D.C. office. Id. ¶ 3. For more than a decade, Hananoki's work "has focused on documenting extremism—including white nationalism, antisemitism, and Islamophobia." Id. ¶ 4. As part of his reporting, Hananoki has covered the social media platform X. Id. ¶ 9. None of that work has involved speaking with Texas residents or businesses, and he has never traveled to Texas for business purposes. Id. ¶ 21.

2. Media Matters Publishes the November 16 Article about X

In 2022, Elon Musk acquired X. In the wake of the ownership change, Hananoki observed a "sustained and significant surge" in extremist content on the platform. Id. ¶ 10. He reported, in nearly a dozen articles, that corporate advertisements on X were appearing alongside extremist content. Id. ¶ 12 (listing articles). Other media outlets published similar stories. Id. ¶¶ 10, 13; Pls.' Mem. in Supp. of Pls.' Mot., ECF No. 4-1 [hereinafter Pls.' Mem.], at 6 (listing news stories).

One of Hananoki's articles gave rise to the present controversy. On November 16, 2023, Media Matters published on its website an article written by Hananoki titled, "As Musk endorses antisemitic conspiracy theory, X has been placing ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle, and Xfinity next to pro-Nazi content" ("November 16 Article"). Hananoki Decl. ¶ 12.[1] The story included multiple images of antisemitic tweets, in some cases depicting Hitler, next to advertisements by the companies identified in the article's title. Id. ¶ 15. The story also noted that the night before Musk had "endorsed the pernicious antisemitic conspiracy that Jewish people are supporting 'hordes of minorities' who are 'flooding' into the country to replace white people." Id. ¶ 14.

Musk responded to the article swiftly and aggressively. On November 18, 2023, he posted on his X account that "X will be filing a thermonuclear lawsuit" against Media Matters and others "who colluded in this fraudulent attack on our company." Id. ¶ 16. Then, on November 20, 2023, X filed suit against Media Matters and Hananoki, citing the November 16 Article and one other. Id. ¶ 18.

3. Defendant Launches an Investigation of Media Matters' Reporting on X

Defendant Kenneth Paxton is the Attorney General for the State of Texas. Texas has adopted a modified version of the Uniform Unfair and Deceptive Trade Practices Act, which prohibits "[f]alse, misleading, or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce[.]" Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.46(a). Deceptive trade practices include "disparaging the goods, services, or business of another by false or misleading representation of facts[.]" Id. § 17.46(b)(8). The DTPA authorizes the Consumer Protection Division of the Office of Attorney General to enforce the statute. See id. § 17.61(a).

On November 20, 2023, the same day that X filed suit, Defendant issued a press release announcing that he was opening an investigation of Media Matters "for potential fraudulent activity" in violation of the DTPA. Pls.' Mot., Ex. 5, Decl. of Aria C. Branch in Supp. of Pls.' Mot. [hereinafter Branch Decl.], Ex. B, ECF No. 4-5, at 13.[2] The press release explained that Defendant "was extremely troubled by the allegations that Media Matters, a radical anti-free speech organization, fraudulently manipulated data on X.com (formerly known as Twitter)." Id. The press release quotes Defendant describing Media Matters as a "radical left-wing organization who would like nothing more than to limit freedom by reducing participation in the public square." Id.

Defendant talked to the press about the investigation. He told Newsmax that his office had learned about the controversy from Musk's lawsuit and press accounts. Pls.' Mem. at 10 n.6. Defendant said on CNBC that he had initiated the investigation because of the "information" that Media Matters had reported about X. Branch Decl., Ex. D, at 25. On a podcast called "The Benny Show," Defendant "encouraged" Attorneys General of both political parties to look into Media Matters' reporting, though he observed that Democratic Attorneys General "probably won't but they should because they should care about free speech as much as we do." Id., Ex. C, at 17.[3] And, on another podcast a week later, Defendant described Media Matters as a "left-wing organization" and stated he was "pretty sure that they had put hit pieces out on [him]." Hananoki Decl. ¶ 25 (citing Tudor Dixon Podcast, Dec. 1, 2023).

4. Defendant Serves a Civil Investigative Demand on Media Matters

The DTPA grants the Attorney General various tools to investigate violations of the Act. Among them are issuing a CID "requiring [a] person to produce [] documentary material and permit [its] inspection and copying." Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.61(a). The statue permits service of the CID on out-of-state persons either by "delivering a duly executed copy of the demand to the principal place of business in the state of the person to be served" or, "if the person has no place of business in th[e] state," by "mailing by registered mail or certified mail a duly executed

[3] At least one Attorney General has followed Defendant's lead. On March 25, 2024, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced that he was serving a "virtually identical" CID on Media Matters and filing a petition to enforce it in Missouri state court. Pls.' Notice of Mo. Att'y Gen. CID & Pet., ECF No. 36.

copy of the demand addressed to the person to be served . . . to his principal office or place of business." Id. § 17.61(d)(2), (3). The CID's recipient may petition to "modify or set aside the demand, stating good cause," in "the district court in the county where the parties reside, or a district court of Travis County." Id. § 17.61(g).

The day after announcing his investigation, Defendant issued a CID, seeking a broad array of records from Media Matters. Branch Decl., Ex. A, at 5. The CID directed the company to produce records relating to the following:

- an employee organizational chart;
- sources of income originating in Texas;
- operational expenditures in Texas;
- internal and external communications regarding Musk's purchase of X;
- internal and external communications regarding the CEO of X, Linda Yaccarino;
- current and past X accounts under ownership or control of Media Matters;
- internal and external communications regarding the November 16 Article;
- the X accounts that Media Matters used to obtain the screenshot images used in the November 16 Article;
- the accounts, profiles, and members followed by Media Matters' X accounts referenced in November 16 Article;
- external communications with employees and representatives of X from November 1, 2023, to November 21, 2023;
- external communications with Apple, IBM, Bravo, and the various other companies identified in the November 16 Article; and,

- direct and indirect sources of funding for all Media Matters operations involving X research or publications.

Id. at 11. The CID set a return date of December 12, 2023. Id. at 5. It further instructed that Media Matters could produce responsive records directly to the designated Assistant Attorney General, "[i]n lieu of producing the originals for inspection and copying at your principal place of business[.]" Id. And it directed Media Matters to contact the designated Assistant Attorney General "to discuss the logistics of producing the requested documents to the [Consumer Protection] Division." Id.

Media Matters received the CID on November 22, 2023, via FedEx delivery at its office in the District. Compl. ¶ 52. Defendant also dispatched a process server who, on November 30, 2023, attempted to serve the CID upon Media Matters at its office. Id. The agent ultimately delivered the CID to Media Matters' outside counsel, the Elias Law Group, at their D.C. office on December 1, 2023. Branch Decl. ¶ 4.

Media Matters responded on December 12, 2023, with objections to the CID and put Defendant on notice that it would seek preliminary injunctive relief in federal court in Maryland. Branch Decl., Ex. E, at 33–35. Media Matters asserted that Defendant lacked jurisdiction to issue and enforce the CID, the CID violated the First Amendment, and the CID's scope was overly burdensome and broad. Id. Defendant responded on December 29, 2023. He wrote that he had "broad discretion" in determining the breadth and relevance of materials sought in a pre-litigation investigatory demand. Branch Decl., Ex. F, at 38–39. He said that Media Matters would need "to establish that there were zero permissible justifications for the investigation" in order to "resist the Attorney General's investigation," and that Media Matters could seek relief in Texas state court under the DTPA. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

B. Procedural Background

Plaintiffs initially brought suit for injunctive relief against Defendant, in his official capacity, in the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland on December 12, 2023. Media Matters for Am. v. Paxton, No. 8:23-cv-3363 (PJX) (D. Md.), ECF Nos. 1–2. That court held a hearing on January 8, 2024, which focused primarily on whether it could exercise personal jurisdiction over Defendant. The court's comments suggested that it believed that personal jurisdiction in the District of Columbia might be less controverted, prompting Plaintiffs to voluntarily dismiss that action and refile suit here on January 17, 2024. Pls.' Mem. at 19–20; Compl.

Plaintiffs assert four claims. The first three are under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for (1) retaliation in violation of the First Amendment (Count I); (2) an overbroad CID in violation of the First and Fourth Amendments (Count II); and (3) unlawful service of the CID in violation of the Due Process Clause (Count III). Compl. at 35–42. Plaintiffs' fourth cause of action is for violations of the D.C. and Maryland reporters' shield laws. Id. at 42–44. Plaintiffs also sought both a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction. Pls.' Mot. Defendant agreed that he would not seek to enforce the CID until the court ruled on the preliminary injunction motion, thereby mooting Plaintiffs' request for temporary relief. Resp. to Order of the Ct., ECF No. 11; Minute Order, Jan. 23, 2024.

The parties' dispute centers primarily on whether the court can exercise personal jurisdiction over Defendant and whether Plaintiffs' suit is premature. Pls.' Mem. at 21–23; Def.'s Opp'n to Pls.' Mot., ECF No. 26 [hereinafter Def.'s Opp'n], at 11–19; Pls.' Reply in Supp. of Pls.' Mot., ECF No. 28 [hereinafter Pls.' Reply], at 2–15. As to the first issue, Defendant filed a sur-reply brief at the court's direction. Minute Order, Feb. 7, 2024; Def.'s Sur-Reply to Pls.' Reply, ECF No. 30 [hereinafter Def.'s Sur-Reply]. The court held a hearing on February 15, 2024. Hr'g Tr., ECF No. 33. At the court's request, the parties then submitted supplemental briefing on the discrete question of whether Defendant is a "person" for purposes of the D.C. long-arm statute. Def.'s Suppl. Briefing on Ex Parte Young, ECF No. 34 [hereinafter Def.'s Suppl. Br.]; Pls.' Suppl. Br. in Supp. of Pls.' Mot., ECF No. 35 [hereinafter Pls.' Suppl. Br.].

III. LEGAL STANDARD

Preliminary injunctive relief is an "extraordinary and drastic remedy" that is "never awarded as [a matter] of right." Munaf v. Geren, 553 U.S. 674, 689–90 (2008) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). A court may grant the "extraordinary remedy . . . [only] upon a clear showing that the plaintiff is entitled to such relief." Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008) (citing Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (per curiam)).

The preliminary injunction factors are well established: plaintiffs must show that (1) they are "likely to succeed on the merits"; (2) they are "likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief"; (3) "the balance of equities tips in [their] favor"; and (4) "an injunction is in the public interest." Id. at 20 (citations omitted). Courts in this jurisdiction evaluate these factors on a "sliding scale"—if a "movant makes an unusually strong showing on one of the factors, then it does not necessarily have to make as strong a showing on another factor." Davis v. Pension Benefit Guar. Corp., 571 F.3d 1288, 1291–92 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (citation omitted). Winter, however, sparked disagreement over whether the "sliding scale" framework continues to apply, or whether a movant must make a positive showing on all four factors regardless. See Archdiocese of Wash. v. WMATA, 897 F.3d 314, 334 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (explaining that the D.C. Circuit "has not yet decided whether Winter . . . is properly read to suggest a 'sliding scale' approach to weighing the four factors be abandoned").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Here, application of the sliding scale makes no difference because the court finds that Plaintiffs have met their burden even under a more stringent application of the traditional four-factor test. See infra Part IV.

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Personal Jurisdiction

The first factor—success on the merits—includes demonstrating a likelihood of successfully establishing jurisdiction. See Food & Water Watch, Inc. v. Vilsack, 808 F.3d 905, 913–14 (D.C. Cir. 2015). The court thus begins with Defendant's personal jurisdictional challenge. See Kaplan v. Cent. Bank of the Islamic Republic of Iran, 896 F.3d 501, 510–14 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (holding that the court must determine whether it has personal jurisdiction over the defendant before reaching the merits).

To determine whether the court has personal jurisdiction over a non-resident, it engages in a two-part inquiry: "A court must first examine whether jurisdiction is applicable under the state's long-arm statute and then determine whether a finding of jurisdiction satisfies the constitutional requirements of due process." GTE New Media Servs. Inc. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1347 (D.C. Cir. 2000).

1. Whether Defendant Is a "Person" under the D.C. Long-Arm Statute

The court starts with a threshold question regarding the applicability of the D.C. long-arm statute. In his sur-reply brief, Defendant argued for the first time that, because he is sued in his official capacity, he should be treated as the State of Texas for jurisdictional purposes and that, because the D.C. Circuit has held that a State is not a "person" under the District's long-arm statute, the court cannot exercise specific jurisdiction over him. Def.'s Sur-Reply at 2–3.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

That argument was far from well-developed. Defendant made it in a single sentence with one accompanying citation. See id. (citing United States v. Ferrara, 54 F.3d 825, 831–32 (D.C. Cir. 1995)). Plaintiffs urge the court to treat the argument as forfeited. Pls.' Suppl. Br. at 9–10. The court declines to do so. Given the threshold importance of the issue, and because the parties later fully briefed it at the court's request, the court will address the contention. See Smith v. United States, No. 19-cv-324-BAH, 2022 WL 425059, at *33 (D.D.C. Feb. 11, 2022).

Defendant's argument rests on the D.C. Circuit's decision in United States v. Ferrara, 54 F.3d at 825. In Ferrara, the United States brought suit in this court against the Chief Counsel of the Disciplinary Board of the New Mexico Supreme Court in her official capacity, seeking to enjoin her from taking disciplinary action against an Assistant United States Attorney barred in New Mexico. Id. at 827–28. The D.C. Circuit first held that personal jurisdiction over Ferrara was lacking under the "transacting business" prong of the long-arm statue, D.C. Code § 13-423(a)(1), whose reach is co-extensive with the Due Process Clause, because Ferrara lacked the requisite "minimum contacts" with the forum. Id. at 828–31.

The court also rejected the United States' alternative argument—the one relevant here—that "due process considerations [were] inappropriate in this instance" because (1) a State is not a "person" under the Due Process Clause and (2) because Ferrara was sued in her official capacity, she should be treated as if she were the State of New Mexico for due process purposes, making constitutional considerations "not relevant to the question of jurisdiction[.]" Id. at 831. The D.C. Circuit avoided "determinin[g] whether a State official sued in his official capacity should be treated as if he were a State for jurisdictional purposes because the United States could not have established jurisdiction over the State of New Mexico in the District of Columbia regardless of whether due process considerations are relevant to the inquiry." Id. The court so concluded because it determined that a State is not a "person" within the meaning of the D.C. long-arm statute. Id. at 831–832. That conclusion hinged on the Supreme Court's articulation of the principle in Will v. Michigan Department of State Police that "in common usage, the term 'person' does not include the sovereign, and statutes employing the word are ordinarily construed to exclude it[.]" Id. at 831. (quoting 491 U.S. 58, 64 (1989)). The court in Ferrara also looked to the statutory definition of "person," which did not "clearly indicate" that a "person" included a State. See id. at 832 (quoting and citing D.C. Code § 13-421).

Defendant reads Ferrara to mean that the court lacks jurisdiction over him. He argues that, because he is sued in his official capacity, he should be treated as if he were the State of Texas, and therefore he is not a "person" under the long-arm statute. Def.'s Suppl. Br. at 3. Plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that Ferrara explicitly declined to answer the question presented here. Pls.' Suppl. Br. at 8. They maintain that the definition of "person" encompasses Defendant under the Ex Parte Young legal fiction, which permits suits against a state official when the relief sought is to enjoin a constitutional violation. See Id. at 8–9. That fiction permits litigants to avoid the Eleventh Amendment's sovereign immunity bar. See Vann v. Kempthorne, 534 F.3d 741, 749 (D.C. Cir. 2008). Applied here, Plaintiffs contend, the doctrine renders Defendant a "person" for purposes of the long-arm statute as well. See generally Pls.' Suppl. Br.

The court agrees with Plaintiffs that Ferrara does not squarely address the question presented here, and other courts in this District have recognized the same. See West v. Holder, 60 F. Supp. 3d 190, 196 (D.D.C. 2014), aff'd sub nom. West v. Lynch, 845 F.3d 1228 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (explaining that "[i]t is an open question in this circuit whether, under the D.C. long-arm statute, a court may exercise personal jurisdiction over an official sued under Ex Parte Young" and declining to answer the question); Trump v. Comm. on Ways & Means, U.S. House of Representatives, 415 F. Supp. 3d 98, 106 (D.D.C. 2019) (noting same open question). The court therefore must answer the question whether Defendant should be considered a "person" for purposes of the D.C. long-arm statute.

The court begins, as it must, with the statutory text. As relevant here, a "person" under the long-arm statute includes "an individual . . . whether or not a citizen or domiciliary of the District of Columbia[.]" D.C. Code § 13-421. That text does not resolve whether a state official sued in their official capacity is an "individual," but historical context provides guidance.

The Supreme Court decided Ex Parte Young in 1908. See 209 U.S. 123. The Court in Young held that, "[i]f the act which the state attorney general seeks to enforce be a violation of the Federal Constitution, the officer, in proceeding under such enactment, comes into conflict with the superior authority of the Constitution, and he is in that case stripped of his official or representative character and is subjected in his person to the consequences of his individual conduct." 209 U.S. 123, 159–60 (1908). In other words, when a plaintiff seeks to enjoin an official defendant from acting unconstitutionally, such suit is "brought against the defendant not as a representative of the state but to restrain him individually from, as it is alleged, wrongfully subjecting plaintiff to such unauthorized prosecutions." Ex Parte La Prade, 289 U.S. 444, 455 (1933).

When Congress enacted the D.C. long-arm statute in 1970, it would have understood that the term "person" included official-capacity defendants in suits involving injunctive relief. See Merck & Co. v. Reynolds, 559 U.S. 633, 648 (2010) (stating that courts must "assume that, when Congress enacts statutes, it is aware of relevant judicial precedent"). In Will, the Supreme addressed whether States and state officials acting in their official capacity are "persons" under § 1983. 491 U.S. at 60. In holding that they were not, the Court explained, "in common usage, the term "person" ordinarily does not include the sovereign, and statutes employing the word are ordinarily construed to exclude it." 491 U.S. at 58. The Court, however, recognized an exception for suits brought against "a state official in his or her official capacity, when sued for injunctive relief." 491 U.S. at 71 n.10. Such cases "would be [against] a person under § 1983 because 'official-capacity actions for prospective relief are not treated as actions against the State.'" Id. (quoting Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 167 n.14 (1985)). That distinction "would not have been foreign to the 19th-century Congress that enacted § 1983," the Court wrote, because it was "commonplace in sovereign immunity doctrine." Id. Thus, the Court in Will imported the longstanding Ex Parte Young fiction into its reading of § 1983. See id. If the post-Civil War Congress that enacted § 1983 would have understood the term "person" to include state officials sued for injunctive relief, the Congress that enacted the D.C. long-arm provision nearly a century later would have as well.

And so too would have the D.C. Circuit 25 years later in Ferrara. It relied on the "common usage" of the term "person," as articulated in Will, to interpret the D.C. long-arm statute not to reach States. Ferrara, 54 F.3d at 831 (citing Will, 491 U.S. at 64). It stands to reason that, if confronted with the question today, the D.C. Circuit would read the term "person" to include suits against an official-capacity defendant for injunctive relief, just as the Court did in Will.

As Plaintiffs point out, a contrary reading would upend years of settled jurisdictional understanding and significantly constrain plaintiffs' ability to sue federal officials for injunctive relief in this District Court. For instance, the term "person" also appears in the D.C. Code's general jurisdiction provision. D.C. Code § 13-422. If Defendant were correct, non-resident federal officials who maintain their primary place of business in the District would not be "persons" because they would be treated as the United States, which is not specifically enumerated as a "person" in § 13-421. Yet, it has long been understood that the court can exercise jurisdiction over such federal officials under the District's general jurisdiction statute. See Cameron v. Thornburgh, 983 F.2d 253, 258 n.4 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (recognizing that the court had personal jurisdiction over the Director of the Bureau of Prisons under § 13-422 because his "office was located in the District"); cf. Pollack v. Hogan, 703 F.3d 117, 120–21 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (recognizing that sovereign immunity does not bar suits brought against federal officials for injunctive relief when the official is accused of acting beyond constitutional or statutory authority).

The same is true of a non-resident WMATA official, despite WMATA enjoying the same sovereign immunity as a State. In Hedgepeth ex rel. Hedgepeth v. WMATA, the D.C. Circuit rejected the WMATA general manager's assertion that he was not a "person" for purposes of § 1983 when sued only for injunctive relief because "official-capacity actions for prospective relief are not treated as actions against the State." 386 F.3d 1148, 1152 n.3 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (quoting Will, 491 U.S. at 71 n.10). Likewise, this court has exercised jurisdiction over federal officials acting under color of D.C. law under the same rationale. See Roy v. Fulwood, No. 09-cv-463-HHK, 2010 WL 610275, at *2 (D.D.C. Feb. 22, 2010) (exercising "long-arm personal jurisdiction" over the Chairman of the U.S. Parole Commission "with respect to his duties under the D.C. Revitalization Act") (citing Fletcher v. District of Columbia, 481 F. Supp. 2d 156, 169–71 (D.D.C. 2007).

When construing a statute, the court must read it to "avoid absurd results." Mova Pharm. Corp. v. Shalala, 140 F.3d 1060, 1068 (D.C. Cir. 1998). The court must steer clear of outcomes that are both "contrary to common sense" and "absurd when considered in the particular statutory context." Id. Defendant's reading of the term "person" would produce "absurd results." Congress could not have intended to foreclose this District Court from hearing the types of cases described in the preceding paragraph, when for decades prior to 1970 the Supreme Court had recognized that

"official-capacity actions for prospective relief are not treated as actions against the State." Will, 491 U.S. at 71 n.10. The court will not read District of Columbia law in a way that would cast doubt on decades of federal court practice and jurisdictional reach.

Defendant maintains that Plaintiffs' suit cannot be construed as anything other than one against the State of Texas because of the "effect of the relief sought[.]" Def.'s Suppl. Br. at 2 (quoting Va. Off. for Prot. & Advoc. v. Stewart, 563 U.S. 247, 256 (2011)). He notes that the injunctive relief requested seeks to bind not only him but also "his officers, agents, servants, and employees," thus making this a "suit that is functionally against the State." Id. But the Court in Ex Parte Young said otherwise. It explained that "the use of the name of the state to enforce an unconstitutional act to the injury of complainants is a proceeding without the authority of, and one which does not affect, the state in its sovereign or governmental capacity." 209 U.S. at 159. "It is simply an illegal act upon the part of a state official . . . . The state has no power to impart to him any immunity from responsibility to the supreme authority of the United States." Id. at 159–60 (citation omitted). Put differently, when a federal court restrains a state official from pursuing an unconstitutional act, it is not proscribing state action, but the unlawful conduct of a person stripped of his official protections. Thus, the fact that an injunction here would reach not only Defendant but also his agents and employees does not make this a suit against the State of Texas.

Defendant also resorts to statutory construction, asserting that the expressio unius est exclusio alterius ("the expression of one thing is the exclusion of the other") and noscitur a sociis ("it is known by its associates") canons apply to the definition of "person" to exclude a "statewide official," like the Texas Attorney General. Def.'s Suppl. Br. at 3–4. These canons, however, are of no help here. The former is context-specific and applies only when circumstances support a "sensible inference that the term left out must have been meant to be excluded." See Chevron

U.S.A. Inc. v. Echazabal, 536 U.S. 73, 81 (2002). And the latter "requires some context cues indicating that the statutory text should be limited by its company," and "especially holds that words grouped in a list should be given related meanings." United States v. Fischer, 64 F.4th 329, 346 (D.C. Cir.), cert. granted, 144 S. Ct. 537 (2023) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The definition of "person" does not support a "sensible inference" of exclusion or contain any "context cues" of limitation. See D.C. Code § 13-421.

Finally, Defendant contends that reading "person" to reach him in this case "would at least raise serious federalism problems under the Constitution." Def.'s Suppl. Br. at 4. He notes that there are few cases of State Attorneys General being sued in out-of-state federal courts, and only one found the exercise of jurisdiction to be appropriate. See id. at 5 (citing Def. Distrib. v. Grewal, 971 F.3d 485 (5th Cir. 2020)). The court is sensitive to the federalism matters implicated here and does not take lightly the notion of enjoining a State Attorney General. But Ex Parte Young struck the federalism balance in favor of enforcing constitutional rights in federal court against state officials. As a panel of the Fifth Circuit observed (albeit in dicta):

> If the Ex Parte Young exception applies, sovereign immunity is unavailable—the official is an individual, not the State, so a sister-State court's exercising personal jurisdiction does not offend state sovereignty, even if the challenged conduct was enforcement of a state statute. This anomaly comes from the Ex Parte Young "fiction," not the sister State's personal-jurisdiction statute.

Bulkley & Assocs., L.L.C. v. Dep't of Indus. Rels., Div. of Occupational Safety & Health of the State of Cal., 1 F.4th 346, 355 n.2 (5th Cir. 2021).[4] In other words, treating a foreign state official as a "person" under a long-arm statute poses no federalism problem because under Ex Parte Young

[4] This passage from Bulkley was a direct response to dicta in an earlier Fifth Circuit case, Stroman Realty, Inc. v. Wercinski, 513 F.3d 476 (5th Cir. 2008), suggesting that "the Texas [long-arm] statute offers no obvious rationale for including nonresident individuals sued solely in their official capacity under Ex Parte Young." Id. at 482–83.

a federal court's exercise of jurisdiction over a state official does not infringe upon that state's sovereignty.[5]

2. Grounds for Exercising Personal Jurisdiction

Having determined that Defendant is a "person" in this suit for purposes of the D.C. long-arm statute, the court now turns to the specific jurisdictional grounds asserted by Plaintiffs. The D.C. long-arm statute provides, in relevant part, that "a District of Columbia court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person, who acts directly or by an agent, as to a claim for relief arising from the person's":

> (1) transacting any business in the District of Columbia; . . .
> (3) causing tortious injury in the District of Columbia by causing an act or omission in the District of Columbia;
> (4) causing tortious injury in the District of Columbia by an act or omission outside the District of Columbia if he [i] regularly does or solicits business, [ii] engages in any other persistent course of conduct, or [iii] derives substantial revenue from goods used or consumed, or services rendered, in the District of Columbia.

D.C. Code. § 13-423(a). "Section (a)(1)'s 'transacting any business' clause generally has been interpreted to be coextensive with the Constitution's due process requirements[.]" GTE New Media, 199 F.3d at 1347. Section (a)(3), on the other hand, "is a precise and intentionally restricted tort section which stops short of the outer limits of due process." Forras v. Rauf, 812 F.3d 1102, 1107 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (cleaned up). Section (a)(4) likewise "stop[s] short of the outer limit of the constitutional space." Crane v. Carr, 814 F.2d 758, 762 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

Plaintiffs claim to have established personal jurisdiction under subsections (a)(1), (a)(3), and (a)(4). Pls.' Reply at 2. The court agrees as to subsections (a)(1) and (a)(3) and thus does not reach subsection (a)(4).

a. The "transacting business" prong

1. Minimum contacts analysis

Because the "transacting business" prong has been interpreted to reach the fullest extent permitted by the Due Process Clause, the statutory and constitutional analyses "merge[s] into a single inquiry." Ferrara, 54 F.3d at 828. Due process is satisfied if there are "minimum contacts" between the defendant and the forum such that the defendant "should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there[.]" Thompson Hine, LLP v. Taieb, 734 F.3d 1187, 1189 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (quoting World-Wide Volkswagon Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 287, 297 (1980)). "Such minimum contacts must show that 'the defendant purposefully avail[ed] [him]self of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws.'" Id. (quoting Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253 (1958)). "Once it has been decided that a defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum State, these contacts may be considered in light of other factors to determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with notions of 'fair play and substantial justice.'" Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 476 (1985) (quoting Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 320, (1945)).[6]

First, the court finds that Defendant invoked the benefits and protections of the District's laws when he "caused" service of the CID in the District of Columbia "through a professional

[6] To satisfy subsection (a)(1), the "claim of relief" also must "aris[e] from" the person's transacting of business in the District. D.C. Code § 13-423(b). The D.C. Court of Appeals has interpreted the "arise from" language of § 13-423(b) "flexibly and synonymously with 'relate to' or having a 'substantial connection' with[.]'" Shoppers Food Warehouse process service." Def.'s Opp'n, Decl. of Ass't Att'y Gen. Levi Fuller, Ex. 1, ECF No. 26-1, ¶ 3 [hereinafter Fuller Decl.]. Courts have found that the hiring of a process server creates an agency relationship between the attorney and process server, and that relationship establishes the attorney's presence in the jurisdiction to satisfy the "minimum contacts" requirement. See Schleit v. Warren, 693 F. Supp. 416, 419–20 (E.D. Va. 1988) (so holding under Virginia law); Balsly v. W. Michigan Debt Collections, Inc., No. 11-cv-642-DJN, 2012 WL 628490, at *5–7 (E.D. Va. Feb. 27, 2012) (same); Hamilton, Miller, Hudson & Fayne Travel Corp. v. Hori, 520 F. Supp. 67, 70 (E.D. Mich. 1981) (so holding under Michigan law). Courts also have held that a person who arranges for personal delivery of process in a State "purposely avail[s] themselves of the privilege of serving process in [the State]." Hori, 520 F. Supp. at 70. As one court has put it: "it [is] reasonable to conclude that a lawyer who knowingly serves abusive process in a jurisdiction . . . is 'purposely avail[ing] himself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State .'" Schleit, 693 F. Supp. at 422–23 (quoting Luke v. Dalow Indus., Inc., 566 F. Supp. 1470, 1472 (E.D. Va. 1983)). Defendant's hiring of a process server in the District of Columbia to effect service on Media Matters therefore created the requisite jurisdictional contacts with the District. See Smith v. Jenkins, 452 A.2d 333, 335 (D.C. 1982) ("Generally an agency relationship results when one person authorizes another to act on his behalf subject to his control, and the other consents to do so.") (citations omitted).

Second, Defendant reasonably should have anticipated being haled into court here because the CID established a future course of dealing with a D.C. resident. Cf. Burger King, 471 U.S. at 478 (eschewing "mechanical tests" to determine whether an agreement with a forum resident

v. Moreno, 746 A.2d 320, 335 (D.C. 2000). Defendant does not make any argument about § 13-423(b). But even if he had, Plaintiffs' suit plainly "relates to" or has a "substantial connection" with Defendant's hiring of a process server to personally serve the CID on Media Matters in the District.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

creates the requisite contacts and looking instead at the contract terms and the parties' actual dealings). Defendant knew that the CID would require negotiations with Media Matters' counsel, who is based in the District. Branch Decl., Ex. F, at 38–40. If Media Matters ultimately agreed to produce records, it could have elected to have Defendant's representatives come to the District to inspect and copy those records. See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.61(e). If the investigation continued beyond the CID, Defendant might have sought to interview Media Matters leadership or employees, with such interviews possibly occurring in the District. And perhaps Defendant would have tried to compel sworn testimony. Id. § 17.60(2) (authorizing the Attorney General to "examine under oath any person in connection with this alleged violation"). By targeting a D.C.-based entity for investigation and demanding records from it, Defendant committed himself to a potentially long course of dealing in the District. In such circumstances, Defendant should have reasonably foreseen that he would be called into court here.[7]

Third, asserting jurisdiction here is reasonable "in the context of our federal system of government." World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S. at 293 (quoting Int'l Shoe, 326 U.S. at 317). The Fifth Circuit's decision in Grewal provides a close analogy to this case. There, the Fifth Circuit concluded that Texas state courts had personal jurisdiction over the Attorney General of New Jersey, who had sent a Texas-based business, which published "materials related to the 3D printing of firearms," a letter "threatening action if [it] published its files." Grewal, 971 F.3d at 488–89, 497. The court found that the letter created sufficient minimum contacts with the State of Texas because the Attorney General not only sought not merely to enforce New Jersey law but "halt [the company's] activity nationwide, including activity that had no connection to New Jersey

[7] Defendant's service of the CID is analogous to a subpoena served under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 45, which permits the subpoena's recipient to quash or modify the subpoena in the federal district court where it resides. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(d)(3). Like a party that issues a Rule 45 subpoena to an out-of-state person, Defendant should have reasonably expected to appear in Media Matter's home forum.

property or residents." Bulkley & Assocs., 1 F.4th at 353–54 (citing Grewal, 971 F.3d at 492). The court reasoned that "Grewal's letter had a chilling effect on the exercise of [the plaintiffs'] First Amendment rights . . . . That chilling effect, in turn, caused [the plaintiffs] to cease publication and reduced Texans' access to materials the plaintiffs seek to publish . . . . In this sense, Grewal created contacts with Texas and not just the plaintiffs." Grewal, 971 F.3d at 495 (citing Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 789 (1984)).

That same rationale applies here. Defendant promised to "vigorously enforce" the Texas DTPA against Media Matters for "fraudulent acts" with no apparent connection to Texas. Branch Decl., Ex. B at 13. His issuance of the CID had the effect of chilling Plaintiffs' expressive activities nationwide, which deprived D.C. residents access to Plaintiffs' reporting. The national implications of Defendant's actions were compounded by his calling upon other Attorneys General to investigate Media Matters. See id., Ex. C, at 17. Thus, like the New Jersey Attorney General in Grewal, Defendant "projected himself across state lines and asserted a pseudo-national executive authority" that makes exercising jurisdiction over him reasonable and does not offend principles of federalism. Grewal, 971 F.3d at 493.

2. Defendant's contentions

Defendant offers three main arguments as to why the "transacting business" prong is inapplicable, but none is persuasive. First, he argues that "transacting business" requires some "'commercial or business-related activity' directed towards D.C. persons." Def.'s Sur-Reply at 1 (quoting Capel v. Capel, 272 F. Supp. 3d 33, 39 (D.D.C. 2017)). He concedes that "negotiating or performing contracts" counts, id. (quoting Trump, 415 F. Supp. 3d 107), but declares without citation that "hiring a process server does not qualify." id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"It is now well-settled that the 'transacting any business' provision embraces those contractual activities of a nonresident defendant which cause a consequence here." Mouzavires v. Baxter, 434 A.2d 988, 992 (D.C. 1981) (citation omitted). Defendant's hiring of a process server to hand-deliver the CID did "cause a consequence here": it legally obligated Media Matters to produce records to Defendant absent court intervention. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.61(h). Such effect is not "too remote or too trivial to be regarded as a consequence" of Defendant's contractual activity. Cf. Cockrell v. Cumberland Corp., 458 A.2d 716, 718 (D.C. 1983) (holding that the plaintiff's "writing of a check on a District of Columbia bank" did not suffice to invoke § 13-423(a)(1)).

In any event, Defendant cites no appellate authority from the D.C. Circuit or the D.C. Court of Appeals for the proposition that only strictly commercial activity qualifies as "transacting business." And persuasive authority from Maryland that pre-dates enactment of the D.C. long-arm statute rejects Defendant's narrow reading. See Mouzavires, 434 A.2d at 991 (observing that "Congress intended to vest courts of the District with jurisdictional reach identical to that in effect in Maryland[.]"). In 1967, Maryland's highest court held that a non-profit had sufficient contacts with the state when it regularly employed an agent to inspect a racing track to certify it according to the organization's standards. Novack v. Nat'l Hot Rod Ass'n, 231 A.2d 22, 23 (Md. 1967). In so holding, the court observed that "acts done within a State which will support in personam jurisdiction as transacting 'any business' are not necessarily limited to acts which are a part of commerce or of transactions for profit, but include acts which constitute a purposeful activity within the State." Id. (quoting Van Wagenberg v. Van Wagenberg, 215 A.2d 812, 821 (Md. 1966)). The D.C. Circuit has since cited favorably to Novack. See Steinberg v. Int'l Crim. Police Org., 672 F.2d 927, 931 n.7 (D.C. Cir. 1981); id. at 932–33 (Wright, J., concurring) (citing Novack for the proposition that "identical Maryland provision covers purposeful activity within the state even if the acts are neither part of commerce nor for profit"). Thus, the sole relevant appellate authorities interpreting the "transacting any business" prong have rejected the rigid commercial–non-commercial distinction Defendant proposes. See id. (Wright, J., concurring) (opining that Interpol's activities in the District of Columbia constituted "transacting any business").

Second, Defendant notes that he lacks "a continuing corporate presence" in the District. Def.'s Sur-Reply at 1–2 (citing AMAF Int'l Corp. v. Ralston Purina Co., 428 A.2d 849, 851 (D.C. 1981). But an ongoing course of conduct is not necessary to satisfy § 13-423(a)(1). See Jackson v. Loews Wash. Cinemas, Inc., 944 A.2d 1088, 1093 (D.C. 2008). Even "'a single act may be sufficient to constitute transacting business,' so long as the contact is 'voluntary and deliberate, rather than fortuitous.'" Id. at 1093 (quoting Mouzavires, 434 A.2d at 992, 995). Defendant's single act of hiring a process server to conduct his business in the District was "voluntary and deliberate." Fuller Decl. ¶ 3.

Finally, citing the D.C. Circuit's decision in Thompson Hine LLP v. Taieb, Defendant argues that "simply retaining a process server to serve papers on a D.C. plaintiff is insufficient to establish personal jurisdiction." Def.'s Sur-Reply at 4–5 (citing 734 F.3d 1187, 1194 (D.C. Cir. 2013)).[8] In Thompson Hine, the D.C. Circuit held that a non-resident who hired a law firm with a D.C. office, and whose lawyers in the District worked on the matter, without more, had not done business in the District. 734 F.3d at 1191–95. The court so held because of the "quality and nature" of the non-resident client's activities. That is, he never purposely availed himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the District. Id. at 1193–94. To buttress this conclusion, the [8] Defendant makes this argument in connection with his discussion of subsection (a)(3), but Thompson Hine has nothing to do with that subsection. It is a "transacting business" case. Thompson Hine, 734 F.3d at 1189. So, the court addresses the argument here, where it belongs.

court quoted from the D.C. Court of Appeals' opinion in Environmental Research International, Inc. v. Lockwood: "The mere fact that a nonresident has retained the professional services of a District of Columbia firm, thereby setting into motion the resident party's own activities within the jurisdiction, does not constitute an invocation by the nonresident of the benefits and protections of the District's laws." Id. (quoting 355 A.2d 808, 812 (D.C. 1976)). Defendant bases his argument on his quote. Def.'s Sur-Reply at 5.

Thompson Hine is inapposite, however. In Thompson Hine, the non-resident client signed the retainer agreement outside the District, the engagement related to a matter in Oregon, and nothing in the retainer required the firm to perform work or receive payment in the District. 734 F.3d at 1192. Further, the Oregon matter was supervised by Atlanta-based lawyers and the record contained no communications between the client and D.C.-based counsel. Id. Here, by contrast, Defendant contracted with the process server to carry out a specific task in the District of Columbia directed at a District resident and, presumably, directed the server's fee here. That action was purposefully aimed at the District, and the work contracted for had a direct nexus to this forum, unlike the retainer agreement for legal services in Thompson Hine. Defendant's business here was more than the "mere" retention of professional services.[9]

b. Causing tortious injury by an act in the District

The court also finds that it can exercise jurisdiction over Defendant under subsection (a)(3) of the long-arm statute, which reaches a non-resident who "caus[es] tortious injury in the District of Columbia by an act or omission in the District of Columbia[.]" D.C. Code § 13-423(a)(3). Application of that provision is, in a sense, straightforward: Defendant's service of process, [9] In passing, Defendant cites Crane v. Carr, 814 F.2d 758, 762 (D.C. Cir. 1987), to confusingly argue that claims alleging tortious injury "do not fit [the transacting business] description." Def.'s Sur-Reply at 2. But the "transacting business" prong requires no showing of injury in the District of Columbia, whether tortious or otherwise. And, even if it did, as will be discussed, Media Matters has made such showing.

through an agent, was an act in the District of Columbia that injured Plaintiffs' constitutionally protected interests. And, although subsection (a)(3) falls short of the outer perimeter of the Due Process Clause, in the tort context, "minimum contacts exist where a defendant takes 'intentional and allegedly tortious[] actions' 'expressly aimed' at a jurisdiction," Urquhart-Bradley v. Mobley, 964 F.3d 36, 48 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (quoting Calder, 465 U.S. at 789), and the effects of those actions in the District of Columbia are not "some 'fortuitous' or 'unilateral' choice of the plaintiff's," id. (quoting Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 286 (2014)). That is precisely the circumstance here, as Defendant's intentional service of the CID is the act that caused chilling effects in the District. Cf. Ferrara, 54 F.3d at 829–30 (holding that Calder did not apply where the action arose from the attorney's "preexisting relationship" as a member of the New Mexico Bar).

Still, Defendant contends that he committed no act in the District of Columbia. Def.'s Opp'n at 13–15. That is not correct. The process server's in-forum acts are imputed to him as his "agent." D.C. Code § 13-423(a); see also Walden, 571 U.S. at 285. For that reason, Defendant's reliance on cases involving limited telephonic or electronic communications with a District resident or the mere mailing of matters into the District is misplaced. Def.'s Opp'n at 14 (citing Slate v. Kamau, No. 20-cv-3732 (BAH), 2021 WL 3472438, at * 6 (D.D.C. Aug. 6, 2021) (holding that such mailing is not an "act . . . in the District of Columbia" for purposes of subsection (a)(3)); Dyson v. Dutok Ragen Homes & Invests., No. 21-cv-2280 (APM), 2022 WL 1294484, at *4 (D.D.C. Apr. 27, 2022) (holding that "one text message, a single email, and two phones calls" initiated from outside the District were not acts "in the District")).

The better analogy, as Plaintiffs submit, is to those cases holding that subsection (a)(3) is satisfied when abusive service of process causes injury within the forum. Pls.' Reply at 6–7. The Fourth Circuit, for instance, has held that "if an out-of-state defendant causes abusive process to be served upon an in-state plaintiff, and the plaintiff subsequently sues the defendant in plaintiff's state . . . , personal jurisdiction exists over the out-of-state defendant." Vishay Intertechnology, Inc. v. Delta Int'l Corp., 696 F.2d 1062, 1067 (4th Cir. 1982). Numerous district courts have held the same. See, e.g., Guest v. Provident Funding Assocs., No. 12-cv-224, 2013 WL 1003524 (WHR), at *4 (S.D. Ohio March 13, 2013); MHA Fin. Corp. v. Varenko Invs. Ltd., 583 F. Supp. 2d 173, 178 (D. Mass. 2008); Schleit, 693 F. Supp. at 420–22; Balsly, 2012 WL 628490, at *6; Hori, 520 F. Supp. at 70.

Defendant resists the force of these authorities on the grounds that, in those cases, "the service itself was tortious because the claim in question was service of abusive process," whereas "the CID functioned as an official act of a state law enforcement officer as part of an investigation." Def.'s Sur-Reply at 4 (emphasis in original). The court finds that factual distinction unpersuasive. In both cases, it is the act of service that caused the alleged injury, whether ordinary tortious injury in the abuse-of-process cases or a constitutional one as alleged here. The fact that service here is an official act is not dispositive. It gave rise to Plaintiffs' claims and, under Ex Parte Young, Defendant enjoys no immunity for the act.

Next, Defendant cites Forras v. Rauf, 812 F.3d 1102 (D.C. Cir. 2016), for the proposition that under subsection (a)(3) the injury cannot be part of the tort "because such a theory would obliterate subsection (3)'s careful distinction between 'injury' and 'act.'" Def.'s Opp'n at 14 (quoting 812 F.3d at 1107). That principle has no application here. It arises only in the context of defamation or libel actions in which the alleged tortious act takes place outside the District, and the plaintiff claims that an act took place in the District because of a subsequent publication here. Forras, 812 F.3d at 1107. In such circumstances, subsection (a)(3) is inapplicable because the tortious act and injury are one and the same. See id. That simply is not the case here, where there is an identifiable act (physically serving the CID on Media Matters) that is separate from the claimed injury (chilling of First Amendment rights).

B. No "Justiciable Injury"

Having determined that Plaintiffs are likely to be successful in establishing personal jurisdiction, the court turns to the remaining threshold issues.

Defendant contends that "Media Matters has suffered no judicially cognizable injury." Def.'s Opp'n at 19. Defendant's argument is based on the Supreme Court's opinion in Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964), which, he says, stands for the proposition that "an agency's non-self-executing request for documents is not reviewable until the agency tries to enforce it," Def.'s Opp'n at 19 (arguing that "Reisman is now widely understood as having 'announced a rule strongly disfavoring any pre-enforcement review of investigative subpoenas'") (quoting Belle Fourche Pipeline Co. v. United States, 751 F.2d 332, 334 (10th Cir. 1984)). He thus contends that Reisman forecloses Media Matters from "seek[ing] pre-enforcement review of the CID in federal court." Def.'s Opp'n at 20. In the same section of his brief, Defendant quotes from the Ninth Circuit's decision in Twitter, Inc. v. Paxton, 56 F.4th 1170 (9th Cir. 2022), a similar case in which Twitter moved in federal court in California to oppose a CID that Defendant had served on it. The Ninth Circuit wrote there that "Twitter has not suffered an Article III injury because the CID is not self-enforcing." Def.'s Opp'n at 20 (quoting Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1176). For that same reason, Defendant argues, "Media Matters has suffered [no] cognizable injury." Id.

Defendant's argument conflates two distinct concepts: an adequate remedy at law and Article III standing. The first is an equitable principle, and the latter a constitutional one. Reisman concerns the adequacy of an alternative remedy and has nothing to do with justiciability. Twitter, by contrast, is about standing and has nothing to do with the adequacy of an alternative remedy. In any event, both arguments are wrong.

1. Alternative Adequate Remedy at Law

In Reisman, attorneys for two taxpayers sued the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") Commissioner and an accounting firm that had been working on their client's financial records. See 375 U.S. at 440. The IRS had issued summonses to the accounting firm calling for the accountants to provide testimony and to produce reports, correspondence, and other materials relating to the taxpayers. Id. at 441–42. Their attorneys moved to enjoin the summonses, arguing that "the enforced production of" the requested papers was "an unlawful appropriation of [their] work product and trial preparation as well as an unreasonable seizure[.]" Id. at 442. The Court concluded that the "comprehensive procedure of the [IRS] Code, which provides full opportunity for review," either before an administrative hearing officer or a district court, provided adequate remedies that did not warrant judicial interference where the IRS had done no more than issue the summonses. Id. at 450. The Court would later make clear that Reisman had nothing to do with justiciability requirements. In Donaldson v. United States, the Court said that it had held in Reisman "that the petitioner-attorneys possessed an adequate remedy at law and that the complaint, therefore, was subject to dismissal." 400 U.S. 517, 539 (1971) (emphasis added).

Thus, properly framed, Defendant's argument is as follows: Reisman compels dismissal both because his office has not sought to enforce the subpoena and because the Texas Code provides an adequate remedy, permitting Plaintiffs to file an action to modify or set aside the CID in state court in Travis County, Texas. Def.'s Opp'n at 19–20 (citing Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.61(g)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Reisman is inapplicable for two reasons. First, the sole alternative remedy identified here is judicial relief in a foreign forum. According to Defendant, Media Matters, which is a D.C. resident, would have to go to Texas state court to obtain relief. See id. Defendant has not cited any authority holding that an exclusive remedy in foreign state court is an adequate remedy at law. In Reisman, the remedy that the Court found to be sufficient involved review before an administrative hearing officer and, if the Commissioner moved to enforce the summons, before a district court "for the district within which the person so summoned resides or is found[.]" 375 U.S. at 447 n.7 (emphasis added). The Texas Code contains no equivalent remedies for a non-resident challenging a CID.

Second, "[t]his case is different from Reisman because it involves the First Amendment, under which a chilling effect on speech can itself be the harm." Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1178. "The key to the holding in Reisman," the Ninth Circuit explained in Twitter, "was that there had not yet been an injury: The Court held that the remedy specified by Congress (to challenge the document request) 'suffer[ed] no constitutional invalidity." Id. (quoting Reisman, 375 U.S. at 450). Not so here. As will be discussed below, Plaintiffs' constitutional injury—the chilling effect on their First Amendment rights—has occurred and is ongoing. Plaintiffs cannot "avoid that alleged injury by challenging the document request" in Texas state court. Id. at 1179. Reisman thus does not compel denying injunctive relief.

2. Cognizable Injury

Defendant says this case is identical to Twitter. Def.'s Opp'n at 20. As in that case, Defendant argues, Plaintiffs have suffered no injury because the CID is not self-enforcing and, to the extent they claim a First Amendment injury, any such injury is "self-inflicted[.]" Id. at 21 (quoting Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1176) (internal quotation marks omitted). Defendant is wrong on both counts.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Where, as here, a plaintiff brings a claim of First Amendment retaliation, "the injury-in-fact element is commonly satisfied by a sufficient showing of self-censorship, which occurs when a claimant is chilled from exercising his right to free expression." Edgar v. Haines, 2 F.4th 298, 310 (4th Cir. 2021), cert. denied, 142 S. Ct. 2737 (2022) (quoting Cooksey v. Futrell, 721 F.3d 226, 235 (4th Cir. 2013)) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1174 (citing Edgar, 2 F.4th at 310); Cooksey, 721 F.3d at 236 (finding justiciable injury where a state official informed plaintiff that she had "statutory authority" to seek an injunction against him if he did not edit his diet-advice website and plaintiff alleged "speech-chilling uncertainty about the legality of private conversations and correspondence"). The chill must be "objectively reasonable." Edgar, 2 F.4th at 310 (quoting Benham v. City of Charlotte, 635 F.3d 129, 135 (4th Cir. 2011)).

Through sworn affidavits, Plaintiffs have demonstrated the profound chilling impact that the CID has had on its news operations and journalistic mission. Media Matters' Editor-in-Chief, Benjamin Dimiero, declares that the CID has "dramatically changed [his] team's editorial processes[.]" Pls.' Mot., Decl. of Benjamin Dimiero in Supp. of Pls.' Mot., Ex. 4, ECF No. 4-4, ¶ 16 [hereinafter Dimiero Decl.]. Dimiero describes a "new culture of fear" amongst Media Matters staff about research and reporting. Id. For example, he avers that the editorial team and leadership now engage in "greater internal scrutiny and risk calculation" when approaching stories that they otherwise would have published after their normal vetting process, such as stories about media coverage of the Defendant's anti-abortion actions in Texas. Id. Dimiero further states that other stories, such as one concerning content moderation decisions made by X, "may go unreported on entirely." Id. "There is," he says, "a general sense among our team and organization that we must tread very lightly[] and be careful not to cross lines that would jeopardize our work or our employees' safety . . . because of concern that certain reporting could make us a target for further retaliation." Id.

According to Dimiero, since Defendant announced the investigation, "Media Matters's editorial leaders have pared back reporting and publishing, particularly on any topics that could be perceived as relating to the Paxton investigation." Id. ¶ 17. Absent the CID, Media Matters would have coordinated follow up research and reporting on Hananoki's November 16 Article, as well as the one that appeared the next day. Id. ¶ 18. Media Matters, for instance, "received several tips from people who have seen advertisements for prominent brands placed alongside extremist content," but has limited the scope of its reporting on the subject "for fear of additional retaliation." Id. Furthermore, Media Matters otherwise would have published at least two additional articles on the topics of Hananoki's reporting, but his team withheld them due to concerns of further legal action. Id. ¶ 19. Writers have expressed concerns that their investigations could serve as the basis for retaliatory legal action and that their work product might be subject to investigative demands. Id. ¶ 22; see also Padera Decl. ¶¶ 23–24 (same). Media Matters' leadership and editorial team have since assumed a more significant role in publishing decisions, which "has significantly slowed down [their] editorial and publication process." Dimiero Decl. ¶ 21. Media Matters has been taking these steps out of fear of retaliation, not out of legitimate concerns about fairness or accuracy. Id. ¶ 16.

The CID also has adversely impacted Hananoki. According to Hananoki, the CID has forced him to curtail his investigation and coverage of X out of fear of harassment, threats, and retaliation. Hananoki Decl. ¶ 29. His editors explicitly have told him that, because of the investigation, Media Matters will not publish work that he already has prepared regarding Musk and extremism on X. Id. ¶ 30. That includes two pieces concerning X's placement of advertising alongside antisemitic, pro-Nazi accounts. Id. ¶ 31. And though he has generated story ideas on related topics, he has "self-censored," id. ¶ 34, and "not pursued them due to the fear of further legal retaliation," id. ¶ 32. According to Hananoki, the CID also has impeded his relationship with his editor and others at Media Matters, because of concern that their internal communications regarding story ideas could be subject to the CID. Id. ¶¶ 33, 35. As a result, Hananoki's reporting has appeared less frequently online. Media Matters used to publish Hananoki's work approximately once or twice a week. Dimiero Decl. ¶ 20. Between the CID's issuance on November 22, 2023, and mid-January 2024, Media Matters had published only two of his articles. Id.

Defendant has not challenged these concrete and particularized declarations, and they are what distinguish this case from Twitter. Whereas Twitter's complaint and declarations "[did] not quite show chilled speech," Plaintiffs here have offered ample evidence of the chilling effects of the investigation and CID. Cf. 56 F.4th at 1175. Moreover, the "self-inflicted" injuries the Ninth Circuit said were insufficient to establish standing were not about self-censorship, but about the "financial costs and diverted employee time" that Twitter expended to produce some records "voluntarily[.]" Id. at 1176. And the Ninth Circuit said that Twitter had "not suffered an Article III injury because the CID is not self-enforcing" in order to make the point that in the posture of that case, Twitter's claimed injuries were speculative and "may never occur." Id. Here, however, Plaintiffs have offered ample evidence of injury, so the fact that the CID is not self-enforcing is of no moment.

The other cases to which Defendant cites are similarly inapposite. In Google v. Hood, the Mississippi Attorney General issued an administrative subpoena, seeking information on Google's platforms, advertising practices, and efforts to police illegal content. 822 F.3d 212, 218–19 (5th Cir. 2016). Google filed suit, seeking a preliminary injunction and alleging that the Attorney General's investigation violated Google's immunity under the Communications Decency Act and its Fourth and First Amendment rights. Id. at 219–20. Addressing the First Amendment claim, the Fifth Circuit observed: "A preliminary injunction is not appropriate [] unless the party seeking it can demonstrate that First Amendment interests are either threatened or in fact being impaired at the time relief is sought." Id. at 227–28 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Fifth Circuit did not have before it, as here, self-censorship and other chilling effects experienced by a media organization and journalist. See id. at 228; see also Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1178 n.3 (explaining that the Google v. Hood "court did not recognize that Google could have suffered injury in the form of objectively reasonable chilling of its speech or another legally cognizable harm from the CID").

For this same reason, this case does not present the concern expressed by Judge Wilkey in Reporters Committee for Freedom of Press, and relied on by Defendant, that "[a]ny person can establish the existence of a First Amendment right and of an investigative technique that could possibly be employed in bad faith as to violate that right." Def.'s Opp'n at 1 (quoting 593 F.2d 1030, 1070 (D.C. Cir. 1978)). The "person" here is a press organization and a journalist, and they have presented the "real and imminent prospect" of harm that Judge Wilkey demanded. Reps. Comm. for Freedom of Press, 593 F.2d at 1070.

Finally, Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1 (1972), offers Defendant no help. See Def.'s Opp'n at 21. There, the plaintiffs claimed that an Army data-gathering system chilled their First Amendment rights. Laird, 408 U.S. at 13. The Court rejected this claim because it amounted to a "disagree[ment] with the judgments made by the Executive Branch," and they had presented only an amorphous "subjective 'chill'" and not "a claim of specific present objective harm or a threat of specific future harm." Id. at 13–14. Those are not the facts here.

Accordingly, there is no Article III impediment to the court hearing this case, and Plaintiffs are not required to turn to a state court in Texas for relief.

C. Venue

Defendant makes a half-hearted argument that venue is not proper in the District. Def.'s Opp'n at 21–22. Venue is proper here because a "substantial part of the events . . . giving rise to the claim," 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b)(2), occurred here: physical service of the CID on Media Matters and the chilling effect that ensued, see Twitter, Inc. v. Paxton, No. 21-cv-01644 (MMC), 2021 WL 1893140, at *2 (N.D. Cal. May 11, 2021) (same).

D. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

The court now turns to Plaintiffs' likelihood of success on the merits. Although Plaintiffs argue that they have established a likelihood of success on all of their claims, Pls.' Mem. at 23–40, the court only addresses one: First Amendment retaliation. To prevail on that claim, a plaintiff must show that (1) they engaged in conduct protected under the First Amendment; (2) "the defendant took some retaliatory action sufficient to deter a person of ordinary firmness in plaintiff's position from speaking again; and (3) a causal link between the exercise of a constitutional right and the adverse action taken against him." Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242, 258 (D.C. Cir. 2016). On this record, Plaintiffs have proven each of these elements.

Protected Conduct. Plaintiffs' reporting on matters of public concern are core First Amendment activities. See N.Y. Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 269 (1971) ("The general proposition that freedom of expression upon public questions is secured by the First Amendment has long been settled by our decisions."); Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 451–52 (2011) ("Speech on matters of public concern is at the heart of the First Amendment's protection.") (cleaned up).

Defendant nevertheless contends that, because Hananoki's articles were "deliberately designed" to mislead, they are not "constitutionally protected." Def.'s Opp'n at 23. Oddly, he cites to a Lanham Act case and a Federal Trade Commission Act case for that proposition, which have no application here. Id. (citing Riggs Inv. Mgmt. Corp. v. Columbia Partners, L.L.C., 966 F. Supp. 1250 (D.D.C. 1997); Novartis Corp. v. FTC, 223 F.3d 783 (D.C. Cir. 2000)).

Objective Deterrence. Defendant's investigation of Media Matters is "retaliatory action sufficient to deter a person of ordinary firmness in plaintiff's position from speaking again[.]" Aref, 833 F.3d at 258. Defendant makes no contrary argument, Def.'s Opp'n at 23, so the court treats as conceded the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' proof as to this element, see Day v. D.C. Dep't of Consumer & Regul. Affs., 191 F. Supp. 2d 154, 159 (D.D.C. 2002) ("If a party fails to counter an argument that the opposing party makes in a motion, the court may treat that argument as conceded."); see also Wannall v. Honeywell, Inc., 775 F.3d 425, 428 (D.C. Cir. 2014) ("[I]f a party files an opposition to a motion and therein addresses only some of the movant's arguments, the court may treat the unaddressed arguments as conceded.").

Still, the court explains why Plaintiffs prevail regardless. "[T]he threat of invoking legal sanctions" is sufficient to deter protected speech. Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 67 (1963). So, too, is the "threat of administrative and judicial intrusion into newsgathering and editorial process" that arises from official process and its possible enforcement. United States v. LaRouche Campaign, 841 F.2d 1176, 1182 (1st Cir. 1988) (internal quotation marks omitted). The Texas Code authorizes the Attorney General to seek restraint of future conduct and the imposition of civil penalties of up to $10,000 per violation in a Texas state court if he has "reason to believe" Plaintiffs violated the DTPA. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 17.47(a), (c). He also can seek to have Plaintiffs held in contempt in Texas state court for not complying with the CID. Id. § 17.62(c). These potential punitive consequences, as well as possible judicial intervention to enforce the CID, make Plaintiffs' claim of chilled expression objectively reasonable.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

There is more. "The compelled production of a reporter's resource materials can constitute a significant intrusion . . . [that] may substantially undercut the public policy in favor of the free flow of information to the public[.]" United States v. Cuthbertson, 630 F.2d 139, 147 (3d Cir. 1980). The CID seeks such records. It demands "internal and external communications . . . regarding Elon Musk's purchase of X," X's CEO "Linda Yaccarino," and Hananoki's November 16 Article, as well as external communications with "employees and representatives of X" and the various companies that were the subject of the November 16 Article for a three-week period. Branch Decl., Ex. A, at 11. The compelled disclosure of such "research materials poses a serious threat to the vitality of the newsgathering process." Shoen v. Shoen, 48 F.3d 412, 416 (9th Cir. 1995). And, of course, Plaintiffs' actual self-censorship in response to the announced investigation and the CID "provides some evidence of the tendency of [Defendant's] conduct to chill First Amendment activity." Hartley v. Wilfert, 918 F. Supp. 2d 45, 54 (D.D.C. 2013) (quoting Constantine v. Rectors & Visitors of George Mason Univ., 411 F.3d 474, 500 (4th Cir. 2005)). The court need not repeat that uncontested evidence here.

Causation. To establish causal link, "[i]t is not enough to show that an official acted with a retaliatory motive and that the plaintiff was injured—the motive must cause the injury. Specifically, it must be a 'but-for' cause, meaning that the adverse action against the plaintiff would not have been taken absent the retaliatory motive." Nieves v. Bartlett, 139 S. Ct. 1715, 1722 (2019). Defendant's initial press release establishes that Defendant opened an investigation of Media Matters in response to its protected media activities. Branch Decl., Ex. B, at 13. Also, Defendant's description of Media Matters as a "radical anti-free speech" and "radical left-wing organization" and his encouraging of other Attorneys General to look into Media Matters' reporting is evidence of retaliatory intent. See supra Section II.A.3.

Defendant has not responded to Plaintiffs' causation evidence. See Def.'s Opp'n at 22–23. Notably, he has not submitted a sworn declaration that explains his reasons for opening the investigation. By remaining silent, he has conceded the requisite causal link. See Day, 191 F. Supp. 2d at 159.

E. Irreparable Harm

"The loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury." Pursuing Am.'s Greatness v. FEC, 831 F.3d 500, 511 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (internal quotation marks omitted). "A preliminary injunction is not appropriate, however, unless the party seeking it can demonstrate that First Amendment interests are either threatened or in fact being impaired at the time relief is sought." Nat'l Treasury Emps. Union v. United States, 927 F.2d 1253, 1254 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (cleaned up). In National Employees Treasury Union, the D.C. Circuit rejected a request for injunctive relief where nothing in the record evinced that the plaintiffs would have "cease[d] speaking or writing before the district court resolve[d] their constitutional challenges." Id. at 1255. There is no such absence of evidence here. As discussed above, the investigation and the CID have caused Plaintiffs to self-censor when making research and publication decisions, adversely affected the relationships between editors and reporters, and restricted communications with sources and journalists. Plaintiffs have amply "demonstrate[d] some likelihood of a chilling effect on their rights" to justify preliminary injunctive relief. Chaplaincy of Full Gospel Churches v. England, 454 F.3d 290, 301 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

Defendant asserts that Plaintiffs' claimed harm is not irreparable because it is "self-inflicted," as they have not taken the "opportunity to avail themselves of a regulatory scheme [under the DTPA] to avoid the very harm for which they seek injunctive relief[.]" Def.'s Opp'n at 24 (quoting Safari Club Int'l v. Salazar, 852 F. Supp. 2d 102, 123 (D.D.C. 2012)). But that argument fails to recognize that Plaintiffs are already suffering First Amendment harm in the form of chilled protected activities. Plaintiffs' "constitutional injury has already occurred; there is no way for it to avoid that alleged injury by challenging the document request" in Texas state court. Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1179. Only injunctive relief will "prevent the [ongoing] deprivation of free speech rights." Chaplaincy of Full Gospel Churches, 454 F.3d at 301 (quoting Bronx Household of Faith v. Bd. of Educ., 331 F.3d 342, 349–50 (2d Cir. 2003)).

Defendant also contends that it is "factually untrue" that Media Matters has had its expression chilled, citing television appearances by Media Matters' President, in which he has defended the organization's reporting and "doubled down" on the accuracy of the X images contained the November 16 Article. Def.'s Opp'n at 24; Fuller Decl., Exs. E & F, at 24–39. But this argument asks too much of Plaintiffs. They "need not show that the government action led them to stop speaking 'altogether,'" only that it would be "likely to deter a person of ordinary firmness from the exercise of First Amendment rights." Edgar, 2 F.4th at 310 (quoting Benham 635 F.3d at 135). Therefore, the fact that Media Matters' President has publicly defended its work does not mean that Plaintiffs have not suffered irreparable harm.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

F. Balance of Equities and the Public Interest

The balance of equities and the public interest favor Plaintiffs.[10] Defendant has not identified any resulting harms to his interests if the court imposes an injunction. Def.'s Opp'n at 25. And "there is always a strong public interest in the exercise of free speech rights otherwise abridged by an unconstitutional regulation[.]" Pursuing Am.'s Greatness, 831 F.3d at 511. Defendant does not argue otherwise. Def.'s Opp'n at 25. The court thus finds that the final two Winter factors support awarding injunctive relief.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court grants Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction , ECF No. 4. The Order accompanying this Memorandum Opinion sets forth the terms of the injunction. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(d).

Additionally, because Defendant has moved to dismiss on the very same grounds that he has opposed injunctive relief, Def.'s Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 31, that motion is denied.

Dated: April 12, 2024

Amit P. Mehta
United States District Judge

[10] The court does not presume here that Defendant's interest and the public interest are one and same, cf. Pursuing Am.'s Greatness, 831 F.3d at 511, as federalism considerations may create some daylight between the two factors.

P R O C E E D I N G S

COURTROOM DEPUTY: This court is now in session; the Honorable Judge Amit P. Mehta presiding.

THE COURT: Good morning. Please be seated, everyone.

COURTROOM DEPUTY: Good morning, Your Honor. We're on the record in Civil Case 24-147, Media Matters for America, et al., versus Warren Kenneth Paxton, Jr.

We have Ms. Aria Branch, Christopher Dodge, and Samuel Ward Packard for plaintiffs.

And we have Mr. Gene Schaerr, Kenneth Klukowski, Chris Lavorato, and Reuben Blum for the defense.

THE COURT: All right. Good morning, Counsel. Nice to be with all of you.

Okay. So we're here this morning to discuss the plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction.

So I've read the papers, but I'm happy to hear further argument and have some questions for both sides.

So why don't we begin with the plaintiffs' counsel.

MS. BRANCH: Good morning, Your Honor, and may it please the Court.

THE COURT: Good morning.

MS. BRANCH: Aria Branch for the plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs asked this Court to confirm that members of the press can do their most essential work, investigative journalism about powerful public figures, without being threatened by high-ranking government officials halfway across the country who disagree with their politics and viewpoints.

Elon Musk declared war against my clients because of their unflinching reporting, and he and his allies have been going around publicly recruiting State Attorneys General to help deliver his payback.

Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton answered the call immediately. But as he himself has said in amicus briefing in the ExxonMobil case, which is cited in our papers, State Attorney Generals certainly have power to investigate, however, "this does not include the power to engage in unrestrained investigative excursions to promulgate a social ideology or chill the expressions of points of view."

Yet that is precisely what Paxton has done here. He has weaponized his state authority and issued a wide-ranging demand for Media Matters to hand over its most sensitive documents, internal documents, internal and external communications, donor lists, and the list goes on.

In the press release announcing his investigation, he did not hide his motive for commencing it. He called Media Matters a radical anti-free speech organization, and he has not hidden his personal motive throughout the course of this litigation.

Unsurprisingly, his harassment campaign is working. And the plaintiffs are self-muzzling out of fear of further harassment and retaliation. In legal parlance, they are chilled.

There is no free press in America if high-ranking government officials can invite themselves into a journalist's place of business to open the drawers, to go through computer drives and copy the donor lists of any publisher in the country anytime an article is written that they simply disagree with.

We ask that this Court enjoin Paxton's efforts to do just that, and he has made clear that he will not stop unless and until this Court tells him to.

I understand that the key disputes in this case revolve around the where and the when of this lawsuit: Can plaintiffs sue here? And can they sue now? And the answer to both questions is yes.

THE COURT: Ms. Branch, if I could interrupt you.

Am I correct that you have -- you sued Mr. Paxton in his official capacity, correct?

MS. BRANCH: That is correct, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And so would you also agree then I am supposed to treat Mr. Paxton as if he is not an individual but the State of Texas?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MS. BRANCH: No, Your Honor.

And I would note that this argument that Ken Paxton is not a person under the D.C. long-arm statute is one that was raised in the defendant's surreply. I don't think it was properly raised because I don't think it was responsive to and within the scope of Your Honor's order.

That said, this argument is also wrong. The plaintiffs sued Paxton and not the State of Texas because it is Paxton who has unlawfully and unconstitutionally using his office to retaliate against plaintiffs.

He is indisputably a person within the scope of the long-arm statute. And plaintiffs rely upon his conduct, not any conduct of the State of Texas and not any separate contacts of the State of Texas for personal jurisdiction in this case.

THE COURT: So, I mean, let's sort of get to the heart of it for a moment, which is that -- I mean, it sounds like you are asking me to essentially apply the Ex parte Young fiction to the D.C. long-arm statute.

Is that a fair synopsis of what you're suggesting?

MS. BRANCH: So I don't think that is necessary, but I do think that is a way to resolve this question.

THE COURT: So help me out then because I want to understand how I get to where you want me to go, because, one, I don't -- look, I think there are a couple of things that really can't be disputed.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

One is that he's being sued in his official capacity. And at least for immunity purposes, we treat that as a -- we treat that as a suit against him -- we don't treat -- typically, he is -- somebody who is sued in their official capacity is essentially sued as the State, right? I mean, that is the idea.

There is a carve-out under Ex parte Young for constitutional violations in prospective relief, and that's where we had ourselves, right?

So you haven't sued Texas. You sued Ken Paxton in his official capacity, Ex parte Young. Great. You're in good shape there. No immunity issue.

So there's two issues.

One is, D.C. Circuit clearly said that D.C. long-arm statute does not reach states. So what we're then left with is this question, it seems to me -- or tell me if you agree with this.

Do I then have to treat him as sort of this -- under this Ex parte Young fiction under the long-arm statute in order to ensure that that inquiry is satisfied, separate and apart from the constitutional inquiry?

MS. BRANCH: So I think the plain text of the long-arm statute under that -- I think Paxton is a person under that. And we have sued Paxton and relied on his contacts with D.C., not the State of Texas.

So I think he is a person, not only as a matter of plain language and common sense, but also under the logic of Ex parte Young. Young recognizes --

THE COURT: Sorry to interrupt you.

He can't be a person in the context of just a plain language, because he's being sued in his official capacity. And so he's essentially being sued as the State. I mean, I think that that goes without saying. Judge Bates recognized that in -- I can't remember what case it was -- West? I can't remember.

MS. BRANCH: West v. Holder.

THE COURT: Right.

So I don't think there's any real dispute about that.

I mean, I really do think you are sort of in a place where you do have to rely on the Ex parte Young fiction to apply under the long-arm. And I guess the question is: Why should I read essentially what is a judicial exception into a state statute or a local statute?

MS. BRANCH: Well, Your Honor, as Your Honor has recognized, under Ex parte Young, claims brought against state officials acting in violation of the Constitution strips that official of their official and representative capacity and subjects them to the consequences of their individual conduct, and that is precisely what we allege here, that Paxton has violated the Constitution. We're suing for injunctive and prospective relief.

And, you know, as Your Honor noted, several judges in this District have recognized that the logic of Young also extends to the long-arm statute. And --

THE COURT: Well, I don't know that I'd go that far. I think they've identified the issue. I don't know that they've said that Young actually will go that far.

Look, here's the other question, which is, that by the logic you've put forward, isn't that essentially an end run around the statute -- the fact that the statute doesn't reach states?

In other words, if somebody who's sued in their official capacity is always treated as an individual for purposes of the long-arm, doesn't that then effectively get around the long-arm's -- the fact that the long-arm doesn't reach states?

MS. BRANCH: I don't think it does, Your Honor, because there's a reason why the Ex parte Young doctrine exists, right? It's that when an official-capacity defendant -- yes, they're acting -- they're not acting in their official capacity when they are -- when there are plausible allegations that they have violated the Constitution.

And so in a case like this one where we have alleged that Paxton has violated our client's First Amendment rights, he doesn't get the protection of sovereign immunity; he doesn't get the protection of, you know, acting in the cloak of his official capacity.

We're not suing the State of Texas. We're suing him. And all of the contacts that we've identified in our briefing are based on his contacts with the state, not the state of Texas. And I think --

THE COURT: Is there any case that you're aware of that has gone as far as you want me to go? Because I can tell you I have looked far and wide and have not found a single one.

In fact, there is at least some language in a Fifth Circuit case that suggests that I should not -- that there is not a basis to sort of import the Ex parte Young fiction into a long-arm statute.

This is Stroman versus Wercinski, W-e-r-c-i-n-s-k-i, from the Fifth Circuit. I'm not sure -- you're probably familiar with it.

Now, what the Fifth Circuit there said was entirely in dicta, truth be told. And the Fifth Circuit itself even seemingly recognized that in a more recent case called Bulkley, B-u-l-k-l-e-y, which is at 1 F.4th 346. And in a footnote, the last footnote in the opinion, it says, "Don't believe the dicta that we used earlier."

There have been some District Courts that have followed the Stroman versus Wercinski dicta. But I have not found a single case that applies Ex parte Young to a state long-arm statute.

MS. BRANCH: So, Your Honor, I would point you to Chief Boasberg's language in the Wisconsin Voters Alliance v. Pence case where he said, "It is true that in certain limited cases, a suit against a state official in her capacity may be considered a suit against her in her individual capacity for purposes of the D.C. long-arm statute."

And in that case, admittedly, the Court did not find jurisdiction, but it recognized that this exception applies; the logic of Ex parte Young exists. And we know --

THE COURT: I'm sorry. What's the -- do you have a citation, or can you just restate the --

MS. BRANCH: I do. That is Wisconsin Voters Alliance v. Pence. It's 2021 Westlaw 686359 at page 1. That's a 2021 case, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. BRANCH: And we know that the statute does reach official-capacity defendants in part through the general jurisdiction statute, which also uses the word

"person" and relies on the exact same definition of "person" that applies to the specific jurisdiction statute.

And so, you know, we know that official-capacity defendants can be subject to general jurisdiction in D.C. I think to hold otherwise would lead to very absurd consequences.

It would mean that individual defendants couldn't even be persons under the District's general jurisdiction statute which would, for example, bar Section 1983 suits against D.C. police officers in their official capacity, because such officers would no longer be persons. But as Your Honor knows, those types of suits are extremely common.

So, you know, I don't know that there is a case in D.C. that specifically applies Ex parte Young. But the Wisconsin Alliance -- the Wisconsin Voters Alliance case --

THE COURT: I'm sorry.

So your point is or what you suggested -- and maybe this isn't even really going to come up -- but is that, say, hypothetically, there's a Monell claim against the District of Columbia. You sue -- or you've sued the chief of police in her official capacity, and the personal jurisdictional analysis in that case would be general jurisdiction, you think?

MS. BRANCH: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Because --

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MS. BRANCH: Because that -- the police officer is presumably at home, basically at home in the District of Columbia. And the general jurisdiction statute, 13-422, shares the same statutory definition of "person" as does the specific jurisdiction statute.

And I think --

THE COURT: Is there a case that sort of stands for that proposition that -- you know, we could -- I mean, say, hypothetically, the chief of police doesn't reside in the District, lives in Virginia or Maryland; do you still think that there would be general jurisdiction over the chief of police?

MS. BRANCH: I think so, Your Honor.

And I think we have identified a couple of cases that I can reference.

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. BRANCH: I don't have them at my fingertips.

THE COURT: I sort of say this to both sides, and I don't want to be overly critical here.

This is sort of the key threshold issue. And I find it problematic that the defendants didn't raise it in their opposition.

I mean, you didn't cite the sort of key D.C. Circuit case on this issue until the surreply, which, I mean, raises questions of whether you've even waived the issue altogether. And so I'm really left with a set of briefs that do not really address what is the key issue here.

I mean, you know, the Ferrara case clearly says that states aren't subject to the D.C. long-arm statute. That wasn't cited until I invited you to bring out a brief. And even then, you cited in a single line, in a single sentence. It's really quite sort of astonishing to me that this wasn't vetted more thoroughly. But here we are, in any event.

MS. BRANCH: Yeah, and, Your Honor, I think that the defendants have waived the issue. And I know, you know, it is an important one. And I think, you know, given the case law that's out there, it would be -- you know, the Court would be well within its bounds to reject it as waived. This is obviously a far-reaching and sequential holding.

THE COURT: I mean, I know that.

I think the difficulty I'm having with going that route is that tomorrow I'll get a motion to dismiss from them that raises the very same issue.

So, okay, you win in the short run, but we're still going to need to address that issue tomorrow.

MS. BRANCH: And, Your Honor, you raised the Ferrara case, which I think is important here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In that case, the D.C. Circuit -- the defendant in that case was -- she was sued in her official copy. And in that case, the D.C. Circuit went forward and analyzed her contacts with the District of Columbia without regard to this "person" issue.

It was only when the plaintiffs argued that she was acting in her capacity -- she was acting on behalf of the State that the Court determined and, you know, stated that states don't have -- states are not persons under the long-arm statute.

So I think Your Honor could do the same thing here, which is proceed with analyzing Paxton's contacts with the District of Columbia because we have sued him, yes, in his official capacity; but under Ex parte Young, he is stripped of his official and representative sort of cloak because of the plausible allegations that he has violated the Constitution.

And just to go back to the point about the general jurisdiction statute, it does say that the District of Columbia court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person who maintains its principle place of business in D.C.

So I think with respect to D.C. police officers, that would be a basis to find that the Court has general jurisdiction. And certainly in constitutional 1983 suits, they're subject to jurisdiction -- to suit in D.C. with regularity.

And at bottom, you know, I think this case is a unique case. It is the reason why sort of Ex parte Young exists. It's the reason why, you know, Ken Paxton should be treated as a person under the long-arm statute. And I think to do so otherwise would have -- would lead to absurd consequences.

It would mean that officials like Paxton could never be held accountable in D.C. courts, no matter what type of injury they impose on D.C. residents. If they direct their injury to D.C. residents, as they have done in this lawsuit, he cannot be subject to suit here; and we have to go to Texas or some other foreign jurisdiction to defend our rights.

And I think this is, you know, really important in this type of case where other Attorney Generals heard Ken Paxton's call and may be interested in potentially, you know, investigating Media Matters further. What this would mean is that Media Matters, my clients, would have to go to defend themselves in courts around the country, despite the fact that these demands are retaliatory, clearly retaliatory, and are directed at them in the District of Columbia.

They seek documents that are located in the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

District of Columbia. It is clear that Media Matters is located here. There's been no dispute about that. And, in fact, when we were in Maryland, the way that the defendants defended against personal jurisdiction in Maryland was to say that we should have brought suit -- they essentially said that we should have brought suit in D.C.

THE COURT: Right.

MS. BRANCH: So here we are.

THE COURT: So help me then move past the Ex parte Young long-arm issue, and let's say we get past that and we're now focused on the question of minimum contacts and satisfying due process.

Is it -- help me understand your position. How is it that you would say that Mr. Paxton has availed himself of the protections of D.C. law?

MS. BRANCH: So, I mean, I would first point Your Honor to the statements that were made by defendant's counsel in the Maryland proceedings. When they were asked whether or not they directed their investigation at Media Matters in D.C., Mr. Lavorato, I believe, said, in response to that question, "Absolutely."

In fact, the defendants pushed jurisdiction in D.C. so much that Judge Xinis in Maryland thought that they had conceded the issue, and they had to correct her on that.

So, you know, at the end of the day, personal jurisdiction really is about fairness. It's about whether or not being subject to suit here offends traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.

And I would suggest, Your Honor, that it is absolutely not unfair for Ken Paxton to be subject to suit here.

He serves the demand here in D.C. where Media Matters is located, where its documents are, and where it is suffering the injury. He purposefully targeted his tortious act at the District, and due process is absolutely satisfied, which means --

THE COURT: But, I'm sorry, but help me out again. I want to go back to my question.

I understand what your arguments are with respect to the conducting business here. You're conducting business or transacting business under (a)(1). Your theory is that by sending the subpoena into the District, that essentially constitutes conducting business?

Am I right about that?

MS. BRANCH: Correct, Your Honor.

THE COURT: And then in terms of (a)(3), your tortious interference is what you've just described, by sending the subpoena into D.C., that that was a tort here and has caused injury here. That I got.

MS. BRANCH: Correct.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

THE COURT: But I think the question is the one I'm still grappling with that these Fifth Circuit cases have -- or it seems to be really the only circuit that has addressed this issue in terms of an out-of-state official being brought into court in a different state -- in a federal court and whether there are sufficient contacts. And you all have cited the Grewal decision, which I'll ask defense counsel about in a moment.

But help me out again. Go back and just tell me how you think Mr. Paxton has availed himself of the protections of the District of Columbia by sending subpoena here.

MS. BRANCH: Well, so the process server that he sent directly to Media Matters' office, who had several contacts within the District, including with counsel at my law firm, was governed by state law, right, when she served the demand.

And I think, you know, under each of the long-arm statutes under (a)(1), (a)(3), (a)(4), Ken Paxton has, you know, availed himself of D.C. law by serving the demand in D.C. She was governed by D.C. law when she did so.

THE COURT: Are process servers licensed; do you know?

MS. BRANCH: I don't know if process servers are licensed, but certainly --

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

THE COURT: I'm just curious.

Go ahead.

MS. BRANCH: -- she completed an affidavit of service, which the Attorney General can rely on to, you know, if there's ever a dispute about whether or not service was effective.

And so I think that by hiring the process server and serving the demand on Media Matters in D.C., th Attorney General availed himself of the District of Columbia.

THE COURT: Would it have made a difference in this case if the subpoena was mailed as opposed to personally served?

MS. BRANCH: So the subpoena actually was mailed first.

THE COURT: Right.

MS. BRANCH: It was first mailed.

THE COURT: But if that was the only service -- say there was no personal sufferance; do you think that would make a difference?

MS. BRANCH: I think that would make a difference with respect to the long-arm statute, at least with respect to (a)(3), right, because the case law is clear that there has to be an act that takes place in the District.

And there are cases that the defendants have relied on to say that, you know, mail is the same a in-person service. And they're just inapposite. The Dyson case does not support that, and there's several cases that we cited that indicate that personal service in the District constitutes an act for purposes of (a)(3).

THE COURT: Yeah, I mean, just to -- but to stick with the minimum contacts, due-process issue, I mean, again, there's this trio of Fifth Circuit cases -- I guess there's really four of them.

But it's Stroman, Grewal, the more recent case of Bulkley. And in each of those cases, the out-of-state official mailed a cease and desist order into the State of Texas. And in all of those cases except for in Grewal, the Circuit said the mere mailing of a cease and desist order that is intended to enforce state law isn't enough in terms of minimum contacts.

So is it dispositive, in your view, the fact that there was actually personal service here versus mai service?

MS. BRANCH: I do think that is an important fact, both with respect to due process and the long-arm statute.

And I think that the ways in which the Grewal case distinguished Stroman apply to this case as well.

And we briefed this. But, you know, in the Grewal case -- and I think that was authored by the same judge who authored Stroman, but it came later.

THE COURT: Right.

MS. BRANCH: It was clear that, you know, he found jurisdiction over the New Jersey Attorney General because he projected himself across state lines, and he asserted a pseudo-national executive authority.

And that was a cease and desist, right? It was about stopping specific conduct.

In Stroman, the issue was that the plaintiff had actually availed -- the business, the plaintiff, ha actually availed itself of Arizona law, and the official that was the defendant in Stroman was actually just trying to enforce Arizona law.

Here we have a wide-ranging civil investigative demand that doesn't just say stop doing certain things. It actually asks for all of their donors, their organizational chart, internal and external communications.

It is creating an enormous chill on their business, and we submitted declarations in support of that. And so we think this case is on all fours with Grewal and Defense Distributed. And the fact that the demand was actually served on our clients in the District of Columbia makes it an even stronger case than Grewal.

What this required was Ken Paxton hiring the process server, who went to the Media Matters office, who called our client, who wasn't present, but, you know, even that created chill, right?

It was the process server standing outside of our client's office saying, "I'm here to serve you with something. You've got reams of documents that are going to be due to the State of Texas in a matter of days. And not only that, you don't have the protections of Texas civil procedure. You can't argue that this demand is overbroad or that it's seeking irrelevant documents. And in order to defend yourself against this demand, you're going to have to waive your -- or essentially waive your personal -- your jurisdictional defenses by coming to the state of Texas to defend yourself."

THE COURT: Well, can I ask you a question?

What is your view on -- say Media Matters does nothing and the Attorney General for the state of Texas files suit in Texas state court to compel compliance with the investigative demand -- if I've been saying "subpoena," sorry about that -- but civil investigative demand? What is your position on whether that could be accomplished

MS. BRANCH: So I think that --

THE COURT: Let me just ask the question very precisely: Do you think a Texas state court would have personal jurisdiction over Media Matters?

MS. BRANCH: No. And we've argued as such in the case that Twitter, X, has brought against Media Matters. We filed a motion to dismiss in that case because Media Matters has no contacts with the state of Texas. It doesn't have an office there. It's not registered to do business there. It has no registered agent there. It has no business in Texas, which is why the investigative demand is so retaliatory.

THE COURT: And what's the status of the case in Texas brought by X or Mr. Musk or both?

MS. BRANCH: It is in the briefing of the motion to dismiss phase.

THE COURT: Okay. So it hasn't been ruled on?

MS. BRANCH: Correct, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. BRANCH: And I think the difference between that case and this one is that this is a demand for documents immediately.

And if you look at the January 29th -- sorry, December 29th letter that Ken Paxton sent, he's very clear that he has broad discretion to enforce this demand. He's not interested in negotiating it.

And even if he were, Your Honor, you don't negotiate with extortionists. And that's akin to what's happening here. This is retaliatory conduct that our clients should not be subject to this demand, and they should not have to go to a foreign forum to defend themselves.

THE COURT: I think the Judge in Maryland broached this. But let me just do the same, which is you talked about negotiating. And is that something Media Matters has considered, whether it would be prepared to produce records with a narrower CID?

MS. BRANCH: Media Matters does not believe that it should be subject to this demand at all for the reasons that we've explained in our papers. It is retaliatory. It violates their constitutional rights. It is causing a chill right now.

And we don't believe that we should be required to negotiate with the State of Texas because there is no basis for this investigation. This is akin to, you know, someone coming to your house and searching around --

THE COURT: Right.

MS. BRANCH: -- and then justifying --

THE COURT: Sorry interrupt you.

I understand your position and the lack of authority or the lack of factual foundation for it or the good-faith basis for the investigation.

That's not something I can resolve today. I'm not being asked to resolve that today.

And so, again, where I'm just sort of broaching the question of whether Media Matters would be prepared to produce some documents in response to a narrowed CID and whether that discussion has been had at all.

MS. BRANCH: That discussion has not been had, Your Honor, because, you know, we believe that we're here asking Your Honor to enjoin enforcement of the demand because of its lack of good-faith basis.

And, you know, we don't -- first of all, requiring us to negotiate would not alleviate the present harm of our First Amendment rights.

THE COURT: I'm not requiring anything. I'm just asking.

MS. BRANCH: Sure.

THE COURT: I don't think I can require you to do that, but I can ask at least.

MS. BRANCH: But there is no basis for them to exercise jurisdiction or process over us, and so there isn't a reason to negotiate.

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. BRANCH: We shouldn't have to concede as much by negotiating, which is what I think that would be equivalent to.

THE COURT: Okay.

I don't have any other questions, Ms. Branch, but if there's additional argument you wish to make that we haven't touched upon, I'm happy to hear it.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MS. BRANCH: No. I think if Your Honor doesn't have any further questions, I would, you know, like to have rebuttal if Your Honor would like to hear that.

THE COURT: Of course.

MS. BRANCH: Thank you.

THE COURT: I guess one more question, which is to go back and complete the circle here, to go back to the long-arm issue.

Well, let me ask you: Would you agree with me that your burden at this point is to establish personal jurisdiction -- a substantial likelihood of success on establishing personal jurisdiction?

MS. BRANCH: Yes, Your Honor, I think that's correct.

THE COURT: That's the standard at this point.

And so have you done that on a set of briefs that don't address the question that we talked about earlier and have talked about a fair amount, which is that question of this Ex parte Young exception or fiction being applied to a long-arm statute?

MS. BRANCH: I mean, as Your Honor noted, that argument was raised very late.

And in response to the surreply, it was, I think, a paragraph-and-a-half argument that they made in their brief. So, obviously, we didn't have a chance to respond to it in writing. I've given the response that I have here --

THE COURT: No. I appreciate it.

MS. BRANCH: -- today.

THE COURT: I don't mean to put you on the spot.

MS. BRANCH: If Your Honor would want additional briefing on that, we could certainly do that.

THE COURT: It is, to me at least, obviously, given the time and attention I've devoted to it, an important issue. And the way this all unfolded, it didn't get the airing that it ought to have.

And I'm a little reluctant to go down the road of being the first court that I'm aware of to apply th Ex parte Young exception to a state long-arm statute maybe without some more fulsome explanation of why I should do that.

MS. BRANCH: Understood, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. All right. Well, we can talk about next steps.

MS. BRANCH: Okay.

THE COURT: Thank you, Counsel.

MS. BRANCH: Thank you.

THE COURT: All right. I'll hear from the defense now.

MR. BLUM: May it please the Court. Reuben Blum, Your Honor, for defendant.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

THE COURT: Mr. Blum.

MR. BLUM: I'm just going to briefly respond to counsel. And aside from that, I don't have a tremendous amount more to add that's not currently in our briefing.

But I want to go through a few points counsel mentioned, and I would like to start where you began, Your Honor, on the long-arm statute and Ex parte Young.

And you mentioned several cases. I'd like to raise them again, starting with West v. Holder.

Not only are you correct that we agree we have not been able to find any courts that apply Ex parte Young to a long-arm statute; but in West v. Holder, the Court specifically stated that the application of Ex parte Young to an out-of-state official sued in official capacity is an open question. And that case was in 2014.

THE COURT: Right. That's why I'm being asked to close it, resolve it.

MR. BLUM: Yes.

THE COURT: Tell me why you haven't waived the issue. I mean, you didn't raise it until I invited you to file a surreply. And even then, it wasn't an issue that you flagged.

I mean, you did cite Ferrara, but you didn't then sort of take the next step and discuss this Ex parte Young issue. So why isn't this entire discussion that I've been having with plaintiffs' counsel waived?

MR. BLUM: As an initial matter, we have not waived the issue of personal jurisdiction because we've been clear from the outset that --

THE COURT: Well, fine, for purposes of this motion. I'm not saying that it's waived for all time. But what about for purposes of this motion?

MR. BLUM: Sure. For purposes of this motion, we've been consistent in our position that there is no personal jurisdiction in this Court. And so --

THE COURT: Right.

MR. BLUM: -- we are not waiving the issue.

THE COURT: I get that. But you haven't made the argument that is the one that we've been talking about, which is Mr. Paxton is a state for purposes of this suit; the long-arm statute doesn't apply to a state; and the Ex parte Young fiction should not be applied to the long-arm statute.

So that's the argument. That should have been Roman numeral I, Roman numeral I(a) in your brief, and it wasn't. And it wasn't even in your surreply.

I mean, this is something that has come up because you cited Ferrara, thankfully, finally, and then I sort of looked at the cases that followed on Ferrara and understood that this was an issue.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

So help me again understand why the argument isn't waived.

MR. BLUM: Sure.

Well, from the --

THE COURT: Or why I should reach it today in the context of this preliminary injunction motion and then save resolving it, you know, for another day perhaps on a motion to dismiss or in some other context.

MR. BLUM: Sure.

Your Honor, from the outset of these briefings on the preliminary injunction, we have been clear that Attorney General Paxton was sued in his official capacity.

And then when we raised the issue specifically of that being a suit against the State -- and as you're correct, we did that in the surreply -- we reiterated that that was because Attorney General Paxton was sued in his official capacity. And we did so specifically in reference to the long-arm statute at issue here.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. BLUM: And so as I mentioned, it's an open question in this Circuit as to whether Ex parte Young applies in these circumstances.

THE COURT: It seems to be an open question everywhere.

MR. BLUM: Yes, but -- that's true.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

THE COURT: At least no Circuit has resolved the issue.

MR. BLUM: Correct.

And mentioning other Circuits, you know, I do want to respond to the Grewal case that you mentioned. And I think Defense Distributed v. Grewal is importantly distinguishable from Stroman.

THE COURT: Here's another question I have for you: Why didn't you cite it in your brief?

MR. BLUM: We were focused on --

THE COURT: I mean, you know, you'll have to forgive me, Counsel, and I don't want to be difficult here, but the plaintiffs cited Grewal -- again, it's "Grewal" -- specifically said, Grewal is on all fours with this case. It's squarely applicable. One would have thought your opposition brief would have told me why Grewal is distinguishable. And now I'm -- and you didn't. You didn't even cite the case. So tell me why now you think it's distinguishable.

MR. BLUM: Sure. I will tell you why it's distinguishable.

I also want to mention that we were focused, A, on the long-arm statute; and then, B, the discussion o personal jurisdiction in Grewal is in relation to Calder and the effects test. And our discussion of Calder and the effects test was on discrete and more-isolated issues.

But the reason that Defense Distributed v. Grewal is distinguishable from Stroman is because that court did not find personal jurisdiction because the statements by the Attorney General of New Jersey in and around the case and desist letter went so much further than in Stroman, because the Court said that the Attorney General of New Jersey was trying to "close shop," in quotes, "on Stroman."

And that's not at all analogous to what's going on in this case. The CID was not issued with any intention other than to investigate whether or not there was fraudulent or misleading conduct.

And it was in no way analogous to the attempt in Grewal to close shop on Defense Distributed, which was the reason cited in that case.

THE COURT: Can I ask you a question: What's Texas's interest here in regulating Media Matters?

MR. BLUM: Well --

THE COURT: There are -- Media Matters -- let me say X is not headquartered in Texas. It doesn't have -- it's not incorporated in Texas. I understand there may be some number of employees, although you haven't identified how many.

So help me under why this isn't like Grewal, because this seems a lot more like Grewal than not in the sense that the plaintiff here hasn't directed any conduct to Texas. They're an online platform that publishes nationally and worldwide.

So help me understand why this is not like Grewal in the sense that this is causing a chill, not just in Texas, but everywhere.

And as far as I can tell, Mr. Paxton has not really articulated a reason why folks in Texas, whether it's X or somebody else, have been particularly harmed by this article.

MR. BLUM: Sure.

Well, there are several responses.

First of all, Your Honor, X is a major employer in Texas. It has offices in Texas.

THE COURT: How many employees?

MR. BLUM: And many Texans get --

THE COURT: How many employees?

MR. BLUM: I'd have to respond to that in briefing, Your Honor.

But, nonetheless, many Texans separately get their news from X.

And specifically with regard to this case, the allegations that Media Matters made with regard to anti-Semitic conduct that appeared next to advertisements on X involved some --

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

THE COURT: Can I ask you a question?

MR. BLUM: Yes.

THE COURT: I'll just be direct: How is this anything other than a proxy defamation fight?

MR. BLUM: Because the civil investigative demand is -- was issued from the Texas just to investigate whether or not --

THE COURT: Just, for example, do you think, for example, that a court in Texas or somewhere else would say this is First Amendment-protected activity? And if Texas is going to attempt to use a state statute to regulate First Amendment activity, you are going to be subject to the New York Times v. Sullivan test, right?

MR. BLUM: While not conceding that that is what Attorney General Paxton is trying to do, sure.

THE COURT: No, no, no. Would you agree with me that would be the legal construct?

MR. BLUM: Yes.

THE COURT: And you have reason to believe that they have acted with actual malice?

MR. BLUM: We would like to investigate that, and that's the purpose of issuing the CID.

THE COURT: And that's the purpose of an Attorney General to do that as opposed to the person that's allegedly defamed or the entity that's allegedly defamed?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MR. BLUM: Well, under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act --

THE COURT: Has there ever been a CID issued to a media organization under the Texas State -- the Deceptive Trade Practices Act? Has that ever happened?

MR. BLUM: It has happened, Your Honor, yes.

THE COURT: To a media organization?

MR. BLUM: In fact, to Twitter. And my colleague, Mr. Lavorato, could speak in greater detail to the Twitter case.

THE COURT: Right.

MR. BLUM: And it is in some ways analogous but in other ways importantly distinguishable from the case at bar today.

THE COURT: Okay.

Right. Go ahead. I'm sorry. I interrupted you.

MR. BLUM: Yeah. I just wanted to respond briefly to a few more points that counsel made.

First, on this Wisconsin Voters Alliance case, the District Court in D.C. actually stated in that case that it must pause at personal jurisdiction. It ended up resolving the case on not finding likelihood to succeed on the merits. So it didn't resolve the case on personal jurisdiction, but it strongly suggested that there would not be personal jurisdiction.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And it said that, nonetheless, D.C. courts must find personal jurisdiction over each defendant. So it's just not applicable to the facts at issue today with regard to personal jurisdiction and the long-arm statute under personal jurisdiction.

And, finally, I wanted to speak to plaintiffs' raising of the hearing in Maryland, and we have a hearing transcript for Your Honor if you would like to take a look.

THE COURT: I've read it. Don't worry about it.

MR. BLUM: Sure.

THE COURT: I'm not worried about the characterizations of whether you conceded or didn't concede. That's not for me to determine right now.

MR. BLUM: Okay.

THE COURT: Let me ask you a different question: What is, in your sense, the fundamental violation of due process?

Or let me put it differently: What would be unreasonable about hailing Attorney General Paxton into court here?

Let me give you an example. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if a subpoena under Rule 45 issues to a non-party in a different state from where the litigation is happening, that non-party is going to be subject to the jurisdiction of the state where the federal court is located if the third party moves to quash the subpoena, right?

MR. BLUM: Correct.

THE COURT: So if the Federal Rules contemplate that scenario, why isn't it -- why is it unreasonable to hail Attorney General Paxton into court here when he effectively is sending a subpoena to an out-of-state party -- Counsel, this is to both sides.

If those of you who are doing the whispering and posting want to argue, come on up. I'll invite you to do it. But you've offered a lawyer to make the arguments, and presumably they know what they're doing. So let's go.

MR. BLUM: I would be happy to hand it over to Mr. Lavorato after I speak, but I'm going to answer that.

You know, first, plaintiff did have a statutory remedy to move to quash the CID within two weeks, and plaintiff did not take advantage of that statutory remedy. Instead, we find ourselves here in court today.

Now, more specifically to the question in your hypo, you know, presumably the potential witness being brought into the Court in another state has some connection with that lawsuit in a way that's separate from what's going on here with the CID. Attorney General Paxton issued the CID from Texas to investigate whether or not there was misrepresentation or fraudulent conduct.

THE COURT: I don't understand your point; I don't understand the distinction you're making.

I mean, say, hypothetically, there's a suit in the Southern District in New York. The plaintiff in th Southern District of New York issues a document subpoena to a company that's in the District of Columbia, okay? That company moves to quash the subpoena, right?

MR. BLUM: Yes.

THE COURT: Would you agree with me that the plaintiff would be subject to the jurisdiction of this Court?

MR. BLUM: I would have to agree, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

So if that's the case in that scenario, why isn't the case any different here? It seems to me to be perfectly reasonable if Attorney General Paxton wants to drop a subpoena on a D.C. resident, that he ought to expect that that D.C. resident would come to a court in his foreign state to defend itself against the subpoena. I don't see why that's a problem from a due process standpoint.

MR. BLUM: Well, an important difference between your hypothetical and the statutory scheme of the CID here is that the parties here, I don't believe, even dispute that the CID is not self-executing and it follows on from that that the alleged chill that plaintiff claims it is experiencing is self-inflicted.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

THE COURT: It's not alleged.

I've got sworn declarations under penalty of perjury that they are chilled. They have said that there are articles that have been written but not published. There are articles they would like to write that they have not pursued.

It's not alleged. There's evidence to support the chill, and you haven't presented any evidence to contradict it.

MR. BLUM: So even assuming --

THE COURT: I should correct that. I take that back. You have identified some statements from the President to suggest that there hasn't been a chill.

MR. BLUM: Sure.

And, again, I can hand it over to my colleague, Mr. Lavorato, to speak further on that issue as it relates to their chilled speech, at least their claims to that effect.

But, you know, nonetheless, when we discuss due process, the due process analysis of personal jurisdiction, plaintiffs have cited both Walden and Calder and taken them wildly out of context, you know.

In fact, there is no purposeful direction here or purposeful availment --

THE COURT: Let me ask you this:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Say Media Matters said we want to play ball. We'll produce some documents. We recognize you've sent us this CID.

Hasn't the Attorney General, by issuing the CID here, committed himself to a course of conduct in the District of Columbia with respect to the CID?

In other words, his lawyers from his office are going to be in regular communication with Media Matters and its counsel. They are going to be receiving documents from the District of Columbia. They are going to be negotiating about the scope of the CID with the target which is in the District of Columbia. That's very different than simply sending a cease and desist letter in and not contemplating anything more than that.

I mean, I assume the Attorney General would like the documents and so, therefore, is contemplating some ongoing activity involving a District of Columbia resident.

MR. BLUM: The Attorney General is absolutely anticipating some ongoing activity and, in fact, has offered to discuss and work with Media Matters around the contours of the CID to agree on contours that might be more favorable to what they would be willing to work with.

But as to the activity of the investigation once that agreement is made, the brunt of the activity would actually be in Texas and conducted in the offices of the Attorney General in Texas.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

THE COURT: So there would be no activity in the District of Columbia? Or at least equal amount of activity in the District of Columbia?

MR. BLUM: I wouldn't concede that it would be equal.

THE COURT: Do you think -- is it your position that a Texas federal or state court would have personal jurisdiction over Media Matters?

MR. BLUM: Well, assuming it's the same case, Media Matters has sued my client, the Attorney General --

THE COURT: No, no, no, no, no, no.

You're not happy. They don't do anything. The Attorney General wants to enforce the CID. Can you do it in a Texas state court or a Texas federal court?

MR. BLUM: In all likelihood, yes, our position would be in that case were we acting as plaintiff suing in Texas, there would be personal jurisdiction over th defendant but we haven't briefed that.

THE COURT: Based on what?

I know you haven't, but based on what?

MR. BLUM: Based on, first of all, the Texas long-arm statute is different than the D.C. long-ar statute. So the analysis would be wholly different as to the degree of which under the circumstances Media Matters would be engaging in Texas by sending the documents to

Texas, by making phone calls to Texas.

Under the D.C. long-arm statute, such activities from out of the District into the District, just like phone calls and emails, have been routinely held not to constitute either transacting business or --

THE COURT: What phone calls has Media Matters made into Texas?

MR. BLUM: Well, assuming we reach the point where the two parties are collaborating on the CID or at least seeking to collaborate, that may --

THE COURT: I don't think you can count those contacts even under Texas law. I would be surprised if those contacts would count. But maybe I'm --

MR. BLUM: I would have to brief this issue further on the facts as they developed in that situation.

THE COURT: Fair enough.

Here's a further question: Isn't the consequences of your position that a media company could be subject to 50 CIDs and would have to go to each state in order to challenge them?

MR. BLUM: I can't definitively say that, Your Honor, because our position has been based on the DTPA which is Texas law. And so it would have to be an analysis based on the analogous statutes under each of the 50 states.

THE COURT: No, but you're looking at it wrong.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

You've now said that you can't be brought into court here, right? So, presumably, the only place you could be brought into court is Texas, right?

MR. BLUM: Absolutely, there would be general jurisdiction.

THE COURT: Okay.

So why wouldn't that be the case for every other Attorney General in the land if they were to send a CID to a D.C.-based media company?

I mean, why couldn't they come in and make the same arguments you're making, which is the long-arm statute doesn't reach us; we don't have enough contacts with the District of Columbia; you've got to come to our home state? I mean, that is the upshot of your argument.

MR. BLUM: Under the facts at bar in this case, absolutely, that's our argument.

So if you were to present to me a case with a nearly identical Deceptive Trade Practices Act in another state and a nearly identical isolated and really non-contact by the process server and with no more, then it would be hard for me to argue that another Attorney General under those facts would be subject to personal jurisdiction here in the District.

THE COURT: I'll ask you another question, which is: Why isn't the act of sending a process server to serve the subpoena enough to satisfy minimum contacts for the reasons that plaintiff counsel has said?

I mean, you hired somebody here. Presumably, you paid that person. That person acted on the Attorney General's behalf. And if that person failed to act, presumably, you could have sued under the laws of District of Columbia to get money back.

Why isn't that enough?

MR. BLUM: Well, first, I'll address that with regard to the D.C. long-arm statute.

And plaintiffs cited a case out of Virginia Schleit v. Warren, where they allege personal jurisdiction was found with regard to a service of process.

But in that case, it was actually the tort of abusive service of process based on service that was made with false affidavits. And then in the Schleit case, the defendant only accepted reservice under duress.

So that's highly, highly distinguishable from what's going on here. That's on the long-arm statute, right?

Then under due process, plaintiff has cited Walden, as I mentioned a few moments ago. But Walden actually contemplates contacts that are far more sustained, such as the facts in Burger King mentioned in Walden where there was a contract with the foreign -- forum state and ongoing interaction based on that contact.

THE COURT: Right. That's why I asked you about the ongoing interaction you're going to have to get documents.

MR. BLUM: Again, we'd have to see what the facts of such ongoing contact would be. If it were to be raised to the level of Walden or Burger King, that would be a different analysis.

THE COURT: Look, would you agree with me that a tort doesn't arise in this case until service is executed?

MR. BLUM: Assuming, arguendo, that there even is a tort?

THE COURT: Right.

MR. BLUM: A tort was the issue that -- hypothetical tort was the issuance of the CID, whic happened in Texas. And then the process server merely delivered the CID.

THE COURT: Does the CID have any effect unless it's served?

MR. BLUM: No, but the nature of a legal document is that it's delivered by service of process. If this were not such a legal document, it would be delivered by U.S. Mail or another postal method, and there wouldn't even be a physical entrance by a person into the District to make such delivery.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

THE COURT: Okay.

All right. Anything else, Counsel?

MR. BLUM: Not unless you have any further questions, Your Honor. Thank you.

THE COURT: I don't. Thank you very much.

Ms. Branch?

MS. BRANCH: Thank you, Your Honor. Just a couple points.

On the person issue that we've spent some time on here, I just wanted to note for Your Honor that we have an opposition to the motion to dismiss due next week, and we can fully brief the "person" issue there since we didn't get an opportunity to do so within the confines of the PI briefing.

That said, it is our position that they have waived that argument for purposes of this motion; and, therefore, it should not prevent Your Honor from granting preliminary injunctive relief, especially given the extraordinary nature of this case and the chill that our clients are under.

They also didn't separately brief the motion to dismiss. They filed a motion that appears to adopt the arguments that they made in their PI briefing. And so they have waived this issue there as well. And a reply brief, I think, would be too late to raise it.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Your Honor, you asked a question earlier about a case regarding a police officer sued under 1983 that I raise, and I would point Your Honor to Anderson versus Reilly. The cite for that is 691 F.Supp.2d 89.

And in that case, the Court found specific jurisdiction over the U.S. Parole Commissioner, who was sued in his official capacity under 1983. That can only be right if that defendant, who's acting in his official capacity, is a person under the long-arm statute and not the D.C government.

Your Honor asked -- and I think on the person issue, there is a lack of precedent on this, because this is extraordinary. What's happened here for an out-of-state Attorney General to so flagrantly exceed his jurisdiction by coming into another state issuing these CIDs, I just -- that doesn't happen frequently.

And so, you know, you have the Grewal case. And there are some that address this, but the long-arm statutes are different.

THE COURT: Can I ask you just to think through this with me.

Say the defendant is right and that an individual sued in their official capacity cannot -- is not a person for purposes of the long-arm statute. Does that mean no federal defendant could be sued in a D.C. District Court?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MS. BRANCH: I think it might, Your Honor, unless there is some other statute that would provide jurisdiction over them, and that's something we can look into.

THE COURT: I mean, because you'd have to -- I mean, I'm just sort of thinking.

I suppose federal statutes that do grant the authority to sue, I suppose they are -- anyway, I'm sorry to sit here and pontificate, but go ahead.

MS. BRANCH: Sure. It is a complicated issue.

Your Honor asked a couple of questions earlier about due process. And the one thing I wanted to point out that I don't think I did before, but we certainly point it out in our briefing, is that the (a)(1) section of the long-arm statute is co-extensive with the limits of due process. And so the Mouzavires v. Baxter case says that that, given that under (a)(1), the long-arm statute and the due process analysis come -- collapse into a single inquiry.

And so we think that Your Honor could also resolve this issue on due process under (a)(1), given that they have clearly transacted business in the District by hiring the process server who served our clients. And defendant's counsel just admitted that, absent service, the demand has no effect.

THE COURT: Can I just offer the following for your consideration on that argument. I mean, if I understand, what you're saying is I can kind of ignore the long-arm question. There's a Circuit case, albeit unpublished. It's called Collingsworth versus Drummond Company, 839 F.App'x 567 from 2021. I'll just read you what the Circuit wrote.

It's unpublished, but they said, "The plaintiffs maintain the Court need not consider the text of th long-arm statute at all because subsection (a)(1) i coextensive with the due process clauses of the Constitution of the United States, meaning the Court should skip straight to the Constitutional inquiry. As the D.C. Court of Appeals has said, this interpretation cannot be correct. While it is true the 'transacting any business' provision reaches to the constitutional limit in cases where it applies, this means only that the provision covers any transaction of business in the District of Columbia that can be reached jurisdictionally without offending the Due Process Clause."

And that's citing the Mouzavires case that we were just talking about.

MS. BRANCH: Okay.

So we didn't find that case.

THE COURT: That's okay. I just wanted to make sure you're aware of it.

MS. BRANCH: Okay. Thank you, Your Honor.

So the argument has been made that, you know, the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Attorney General didn't transact business in the District because his activity wasn't commercial.

And the definition of "commercial" that the defendants provide is consistent with the case law, which is contractual activities that cause an effect in the District. That's from the Baxter case as well. That's precisely what happened here. They engaged a process server who served our clients and caused a tort to occur in the District.

Your Honor, the defendants have also tried to distinguish the Schleit case based on the claim at issue in that case. But we really cited that for the language in that case that makes clear that where an act -- where an agent of the defendant is physically present in the state, that nullifies the argument that the act requirement was not fulfilled. The Schleit case says that. The Balsly case that we also cite in our papers say that.

So it really didn't turn on the type of claim in those cases. We really were looking at the fact that service of process constitutes an act under (a)(3). And, of course, that was the Virginia long-arm statute. But that has been interpreted -- the D.C. long-arm statute is based off of that one.

THE COURT: I mean, is the analysis, in your view, essentially one and the same under (a)(1) and (a)(3) here? In other words, your claim arises out of the hiring of and the service of the CID? By the same token, your contention is that a tort was committed by virtue of the service of the CID in the District of Columbia?

MS. BRANCH: That's correct, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. BRANCH: They're essentially the same.

And we did point to some other cases in our briefing that involve service constituting in act that causes injury outside of the Schleit and abuse of process types of claims.

I also wanted to discuss this idea that, you know, we could go to Texas court to seek relief. And, you know, I discussed this a little bit earlier, but affirmatively seeking relief there, I think, would potentially waive our jurisdictional defenses. And Paxton's own communications to our clients have limited -- have indicated that the limits of, you know, civil procedure don't apply there. He has said that we can't actually oppose the CID unless we have no basis at all. And so we basically have no --

THE COURT: That's a public statement or just something that's been said.

MS. BRANCH: It is a letter that he sent to our clients. It's a December 29th letter. I think it's in the record.

THE COURT: Okay.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MS. BRANCH: But -- so, you know, basically he holds all the cards, and we are subject to the demand without the protections of civil procedure and other things that would ordinarily apply.

And with respect to the chill and the Twitter case, I think we have briefed this, unless Your Honor wants to hear more on that.

But I will just emphasize the harm and the threat that our clients are under. This is affecting, as the declarations state, every editorial decision that they make, every document they create, every story they decide to publish, every article that may implicate acts.

And so this is a real issue. They are being chilled now, and I don't think there's actually any dispute about that.

With respect to the statements that Angelo Carusone, who is the president of Media Matters, has made, I mean, I think those are just completely distinguishable. He's made limited statements on cable news really defending the organization against the attacks by X and by Ken Paxton. They are backward-looking.

They have no bearing on what the editorial department is doing, no effect on the ability of the editors and the reporters and the writers to actually do their jobs. They are just unable, frankly, to do their jobs while this

CID is hanging in the air.

And it's remarkable, frankly, that Ken Paxton argues that the plaintiffs are not chilled when he has taken the exact opposite position in the Exxon case where he said, you know, in quasi-criminal matters like this when a CID is issued, it effectively hangs in the air and it chills speech. That is the position he took. He takes the exact opposite position here. It is not consistent with the case law or, frankly, the facts.

And just to quote, the letter -- the December 29th letter that I referenced is on the docket as Document 4-5 filed on January 18th.

THE COURT: I'm sorry. Document 4?

MS. BRANCH: 4-5.

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. BRANCH: It was an exhibit to, I think, our motion.

And in it, Attorney General Paxton says, "Indeed, to resist the Attorney General's investigation, Media Matters would have needed to establish that there were zero permissible justifications for the investigation." And he cites two cases. So I think this idea that he's willing to negotiate and all of that is really sort of false.

I think that I have covered everything. You know, I can't sort of underscore enough the threat that our clients feel. And that's the reason why we moved for a TRO. That's the reason why we moved for a preliminary injunction.

I think that, you know, as Your Honor recognized earlier, this is akin to, you know, a Rule 45 subpoena where, you know, Rule 45(d)(3)(A) would allow us to file a motion to quash here in D.C. had this been a subpoena served pursuant to the Federal Rules.

So, Your Honor, we would ask that you grant our motion, enjoin enforcement of the demand, and declare it unconstitutional. Thank you.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you, Counsel.

MR. LAVORATO: Your Honor, may I be heard briefly just to respond to some of those comments?

THE COURT: Umm ...

MR. LAVORATO: I promise I won't take more than five minutes.

THE COURT: Okay. Go ahead.

MS. BRANCH: Your Honor --

THE COURT: I'll give you a chance to rebut.

MR. LAVORATO: She made some statements that I think I just need to respond to.

Thank you, Your Honor.

Your Honor, if I may, if you would look at that December 29th letter and read the last paragraph of it -- it's in the record -- and it specifically goes into invitations to the plaintiffs that we will work with them, tell us what the problem is with the CID that you have. If it's too broad, let us know. We'll work with you.

That part they didn't mention to you. They didn't put that piece into their brief. That's the first thing that I wanted to mention.

The second thing is, with regard to the waiver issue, Your Honor, they have the burden to show you and to use a clear showing here in this District that the relief they're seeking is necessary. They have the burden

THE COURT: That's true, but -- that's true, but personal jurisdiction can be waived.

MR. LAVORATO: Understood.

THE COURT: And I don't know you haven't waived it for all purposes or as a general matter, but it's also not an argument that you've put forward.

MR. LAVORATO: Understood, Your Honor. And I appreciate that.

On the other hand, if their pleadings in and of themselves, if you go back to the complaint and you go back to their motion, are deficient, then there's not a clear showing in order to get to personal jurisdiction or to make a finding of personal jurisdiction. That's my only comment with regard to that issue. And I don't think that that has happened here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The only other thing I want to talk about is this Exxon amicus brief, because, to some degree, I think the think they have a gold nugget there. But the Exxon amicus brief had to do with the Attorney General of Texas making a statement in connection with a global issue known as global warming.

Exxon had made a statement that global warming wasn't able to be proven scientifically at the time the statement was made. From that statement, which is political position statement, an Attorney General issued a CID. That's largely different than publicizing a particular article about X where you say and you allege that X is purposefully putting major advertisers like Oracle -- Oracle, by the way, is headquartered in Texas, in Austin -- next to anti-Semitic articles.

And that's exactly what they did. That's a specific target, an allegation against X, who, by the way, it's no secret Elon Musk has a lot of business interests in Texas, not to mention the fact that Tesla is there.

THE COURT: Right, but --

MR. LAVORATO: So it's hugely different.

THE COURT: That may be, but that's not what we're talking about.

MR. LAVORATO: The last thing I'll say is the Twitter case does lay out a framework for this particular case. The Twitter case is the closest case you're going to find to this one.

The only difference between Twitter and their case is that they have cited some particular chilled speech. And I don't dispute that. They have.

But if you look at the retaliation framework in Twitter, which they don't dispute would apply in this case, it lays out:

No. 1, an injury-in-fact. They've alleged it. I'll give them that.

2, sufficient causal connection between injury and the conduct complained of.

The conduct complained of is this CID issuance, right? Well, there has to be causation. If the CID is issued for a proper purpose under statutory law, which it was in Texas, and the Texas AG has a reasonable belief that unlawful conduct has occurred, then guess what. Their injury is self-inflicted. There's no causation there. And so, therefore, you wouldn't be able to find for a preliminary injunction in this particular matter.

The last thing I'll say is --

THE COURT: But that assumes that they lose on the merits.

MR. LAVORATO: I'm sorry?

THE COURT: That assumes they lose on the merits.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In other words, your argument is based upon the premise that they haven't made a First Amendmen retaliation claim.

MR. LAVORATO: Yes, but at this point in time, Your Honor, I don't think they've had --

THE COURT: In other words, that the CID was not motivated by their First Amendment expression, whic seemingly it was. I mean, that's what the Attorney General said when he issued a public statement about launching the investigation.

MR. LAVORATO: Understood, Your Honor. I see where you're going.

But that assumes that the First Amendment expression is protected in the first place, because if it's not protected, if it's a fraudulent statement or if it's a misrepresentation --

THE COURT: Right. So now we're back to what I said to your counsel, which is that this is a defamation or a libel case by proxy -- during investigation, I should say, but in any event.

MR. LAVORATO: Well, it's not -- it's the Texas Attorney General who is looking into the issue of whether or not this public statement that affects not only Texas, by the way, everybody that receives this kind of information, and affects the folks like X and people who read the news in Texas and other advertisers that are in Texas -- it affects all those folks.

So it is squarely in the realm of what the Texas AG would be concerned with. Texas is concerned about protecting business interests in its -- within its sovereign borders. And that's what this is all about.

So to the extent that that CID was for a proper purpose -- and they don't have a clear showing that it wasn't, other than conclusory allegations and maybe a temporal issue where the CID was issued a day or so after Elon Musk made this statement about suing them.

But, Your Honor when was he supposed to issue the CID? Two weeks later? I mean, it seems reasonable that he would have issued the CID and launched the investigation at or near the time of the article. That's exactly what he did.

And I don't think they've made a clear showing that the purpose of that CID under statutory law within the state of Texas was violated in any way. And that's why they didn't sue him in his individual capacity. That would have certainly been improper.

But, clearly, they can't get around the fact that they've sued him in his official capacity, which, by and large, does away with (a)(1) right away. That's where you stop at (a)(1).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In any event, with regard to the Exxon, it's completely different issue there. And I just wanted to make mention of that.

Pending your questions --

THE COURT: Thank you, Your Honor.

MR. LAVORATO: -- I'll submit. Thank you.

THE COURT: Ms. Branch, I'll give you an opportunity if you'd like.

MS. BRANCH: No. Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right, everyone. I want to just think through how I want to manage this. When is your opposition due to the motion to dismiss?

MS. BRANCH: I think it's due in, what, eight days?

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. BRANCH: 23rd, I believe.

THE COURT: Okay.

MS. BRANCH: A week from tomorrow.

THE COURT: All right.

Let me give some thought about how I want to handle this long-arm issue. It's not an issue that's going to go away. So that in some sense may be a reason to try and resolve it sooner rather than later, but I also understand that it's not one that I think has been properly put forward, at least in the context of this motion and maybe even the motion to dismiss. But let me think about it, and I'll let you all know in short order, okay?

MR. LAVORATO: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Thank you, everyone. Appreciate your time, and I appreciate the briefing and presentations.

COURTROOM DEPUTY: All rise.

This Court is adjourned.

(Proceedings concluded at 11:21 a.m.)

Karen, can you make me these two binders before noon? As usual, smallest binders possible. For the exhibits, please also include an index list like the one you made for me in the student loans case last week.

speech that was censored, as well as speech that was left up, on social-media platforms so CDC could get "a full picture" and "adjust communication materials" to address people's actual concerns. Id.

595. The CDC "did searches in CrowdTangle, the same way we do searches in other social media and listening tools that we have to create, to understand what's being discussed in the environment, to update our communication material." Id. 148:11-15.

V. Dr. Fauci's Campaigns to Censor Disfavored Viewpoints on Social Media.

596. Dr. Fauci, cooperating frequently with NIH Director Dr. Francis Collins, engaged in a series of campaigns to discredit and procure the censorship of viewpoints he disfavored on social media, beginning at least in early 2020. Once he became Chief Medical Advisor in the Biden Administration in early 2021, his censorship efforts coordinated with and reinforced those of federal officials in the White House, the Office of the Surgeon General, the CDC, and elsewhere.

597. Until his recent retirement, Dr. Anthony S. Fauci was the director of the National Institute for Allergy and Infectious Diseases at the National Institutes of Health and the Chief Medical Advisor to President Biden. Fauci Dep. 10:8-16. At the time of his deposition, Dr. Fauci had been the director of NIAID for over 38 years. Id. at 10:25-11:1.

A. Dr. Fauci's Conspiracy and Campaign to Suppress the Lab-Leak Theory.

598. First, in early months of 2020, Dr. Fauci worked closely with Dr. Francis Collins and Jeremy Farrar to orchestrate a campaign to discredit and suppress the opinion that SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19, leaked from a laboratory at the Wuhan Institute of Virology—an opinion that has recently been confirmed as likely true. Early in the pandemic, Dr. Fauci was aware that NIAID, under his direction, had funded dangerous gain-of-function research on coronaviruses at that laboratory, and he sought to discredit and suppress the lab-leak theory to deflect the scandal and blame associated with potential responsibility for the deaths of millions in the ensuing pandemic. He engaged in a campaign of deception to discredit the theory, and as a result of his efforts, the lab-leak theory was heavily censored on social media.

599. On December 30, 2011, Dr. Fauci co-authored an op-ed with Dr. Francis S. Collins in the Washington Post entitled A Flu Virus Risk Worth Taking. Fauci Ex. 1, Fauci Dep. 13:13-20.

600. In this op-ed, Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins advocated for creating potentially dangerous viruses in laboratories, writing that "important information and insights can come from generating a potentially dangerous virus in a laboratory." Fauci Ex. 1, at 1. According to Fauci and Collins, "[u]nderstanding the biology of … virus transmission has implications for outbreak prediction, prevention and treatment," and "[i]dentifying threatening viruses can also facilitate the early stages of manufacturing vaccines that protect against such a virus in advance of an outbreak." Id. at 2. They further argued that "identifying the molecular Achilles heel of these viruses can allow scientists to identify novel antiviral drug targets that could be used to prevent infection … or better treat those who become infected." Id.

601. Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins acknowledged the significant risks associated with such research, writing that "[s]afeguarding against the potential accidental release or deliberate misuse of laboratory pathogens is imperative." Id. But they believed that those risks were contained, writing that "engineered viruses … are maintained in high-security laboratories." They further state that "scientists, journal editors, and funding agencies involved are working together to ensure that access to specific information that could be used to create dangerous pathogens is limited to those with an established and legitimate need to know." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

602. Thus, long before the COVID-19 pandemic, Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins were highly visible, public advocates for laboratory experiments that involve "generating a potentially dangerous virus in a laboratory." Id. at 1.

603. Such research of "generating a potentially dangerous virus in a laboratory" is commonly called "gain-of-function" research. Dr. Fauci testified that "[g]ain of function is a very potentially misleading terminology, and that was one of the reasons why several years ago outside groups, not the NIH … did away with the terminology 'gain of function' because it can often be very confusing and misleading." Fauci Dep. 16:3-10. But Dr. Fauci confirms that "the NIH" did not "d[o] away" with that terminology, id., and Dr. Fauci's own internal email uses the phrase "SARS Gain of Function" to describe the research on bat coronaviruses that was conducted by Dr. Shi Zhengli and others at the Wuhan Institute of Virology, partly funded by Dr. Fauci's NIAID through the subgrants from the EcoHealth Alliance, discussed below, see Fauci Ex. 6, at 8.

604. On June 1, 2014, Dr. Fauci's NIAID funded a grant to the EcoHealth Alliance for the five-year period June 1, 2014, to May 31, 2019. Fauci Ex. 2, at 2. The title of the project was "Understanding the Risk of Bat Coronavirus Emergence." Id. at 1. The project's Abstract stated, "This project will examine the risk of future coronavirus (CoV) emergence from wildlife using in-depth field investigations across the human-wildlife interface in China, molecular characterization of novel CoVs and host receptor binding domain genes, mathematical models of transmission and evolution, and in vitro and in vivo laboratory studies of host range." Id.

605. The Abstract noted that one of the project's "three specific aims" would be to "[t]est predictions of CoV inter-species transmission" by engaging in two forms of research to enhance the bat coronaviruses' transmissibility to humans: "reverse genetics," i.e., genetic manipulation of the viruses to render them more transmissible; and "virus infection experiments" using "humanized mice," i.e., repeatedly infecting humanized mice with bat coronaviruses to provoke mutations that render them more infectious to human cells (a process known as "serial passage," see https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Serial_passage). Id. at 1. Specifically, the Abstract stated: "Predictive models of host range (i.e.[,] emergence potential) will be tested experimentally using reverse genetics, pseudovirus and receptor binding assays, and virus infection experiments across a range of cell cultures from different species and humanized mice." Id. (emphases added).

606. Dr. Fauci attempted to argue that "reverse genetics" is so vague that it might not refer to gain-of-function research. See Fauci Dep. 23:18-20 ("I'm not really quite sure what they're referring to. Reverse genetics can mean many things."). But Dr. Fauci admits that "reverse genetics" means "[m]anipulation of a virus, recombination, things like that." Id. at 23:19-21. In 2015, in an article reporting on research performed pursuant to this grant, Dr. Ralph Baric and Dr. Shi Zhengli wrote that they used "reverse genetics" to "generate[] and characterize[] a chimeric virus" that was more infectious and more virulent in humans. Fauci Ex. 4, at 1. Dr. Fauci's own internal email describes that article as addressing "SARS Gain of Function." Fauci Ex. 6, at 8.

607. Dr. Fauci admits that "EcoHealth has a subaward from their original grant that goes to Shi Zhengli at the Wuhan Institute of Virology." Fauci Dep. 36:4-6. He agrees that EcoHealth and Shi Zhengli of the Wuhan Institute of Virology "work together on research that's directly funded by NIAID." Fauci Dep. 36:7-13.

608. Dr. Fauci also attests that Dr. Peter Daszak likely has access to the genetic sequences of chimeric viruses that Shi Zhengli created during her research funded by EcoHealth using NIAID funds: "I don't know absolutely for sure, but I would imagine that if Peter Daszak is collaborating scientifically with Shi Zhengli, that it is likely, given the norms of scientific collaboration, that he would have access to data," and "they are collaborators, since he has a subaward to the Wuhan Institute that I believe goes to Dr. Shi." Fauci Dep. 37:1-13. Daszak, therefore, is likely in possession of genetic evidence demonstrating whether SARS-CoV-2 originated from NIAID-funded research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology.

609. Dr. Fauci claimed that he had never seen this grant award before his deposition, and that he was only "vaguely" aware of NIAID's funding of EcoHealth Alliance. Id. at 18:10-12 ("I'm vaguely familiar with the fact that EcoHealth Alliance has been doing research on trying to understand the bat coronavirus emergence."); id. at 19:7-8 ("I have no recollection of the initiation of this grant."). Dr. Fauci admits that "NIAID has funded EcoHealth Alliance," 20:5-6, but he contends that he is completely unfamiliar with this project. Id. at 20:8-9 ("[T]his is the first time that I have seen this piece of paper."). But this very grant project was flagged for Dr. Fauci in an email from his subordinate on January 27, 2020, at the beginning of the pandemic. Fauci Ex. 5. Given the public and Congressional scrutiny of this particular project and its relation to the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic, Dr. Fauci's testimony on these points is not credible.

610. Peter Daszak is listed as the "Contact PI/Project Leader" for the grant award "Understanding the Risk of Bat Coronavirus Emergence." Fauci Ex. 2, at 1. The "Awardee Organization" is the EcoHealth Alliance. Id.

611. Dr. Fauci claims that he is not acquainted with Peter Daszak and does not know how to pronounce Daszak's name, Fauci Dep. 20:13 ("I'm not sure"), and that he "do[es]n't even remember meeting him," id. at 21:1-2, but that he has seen a photo of himself with Daszak at a public event as the only evidence that they have met. Id. at 21:2-8.

612. In fact, Dr. Fauci has exchanged cordial emails with Daszak on a first-name basis, and he participated in a podcast with him on February 9, 2020, in which they both sought to discredit the lab-leak theory of COVID's origins. Fauci Ex. 15, 16, 30. Dr. Fauci's attempt to deny or downplay his acquaintance and familiarity with Daszak is not credible.

613. On October 17, 2014, the U.S. Government entered a "research funding pause" on gain-of-function research on coronaviruses, in a document entitled "U.S. Government Gain-of-Function Deliberative Process and Research Funding Pause on Selected Gain-of-Function Research Involving Influenza, MERS, and SARS Viruses." Fauci Ex. 3, at 1 (the "GoF Pause" or "Pause").

614. Contrary to Dr. Fauci's testimony that the "pause" was an occasion to jettison the term "gain-of-function," the Pause provided a simple and clear definition of "gain of function" research, defining "Gain-of-function studies" as "research that improves the ability of a pathogen to cause disease." Fauci Ex. 3, at 2. The research on bat coronaviruses described in Fauci Ex. 2 meets this simple definition.

615. The Pause applied to funding for all "research such as this until a new U.S. Government research policy could be adopted." Fauci Dep. 27:17-19; Fauci Ex. 3, at 2-3.

616. The Pause provided an exception in Footnote 1, which stated: "An exception from the research pause may be obtained if the head of the USG funding agency determines that the research is urgently necessary to protect the public health or national security." Fauci Ex. 3, at 2 n.1.

617. Dr. Fauci testified that he does not recall whether NIAID ever invoked that exception during the years that the Pause was in place (2014-2017). Fauci Dep. 28:22-29:3. He testified that authorization for funding under the exception would "not usually rise up to the office of the director, but is handled at the level of staff and deputy." Id. at 29:1-2. He testified that such approval for projects "urgently necessary to protect the public health or national security" could have come from "any of a number of people. It could have been people at the program level. It could have been my deputy. It could have been program managers and division directors." Id. at 30:16-19.

618. This testimony contradicts the plain language of the exception, which states that "the head of the USG funding agency" must "determine[] that the research is urgently necessary to protect the public health and national security" to allow continued funding for gain-of-function research on coronaviruses. Fauci Ex. 3, at 2 n.1. At all relevant times, Dr. Fauci was the "head of the USG funding agency," i.e., the Director of NIAID, and he was responsible for authorizing funding for gain-of-function research on the ground that it was "urgently necessary to protect the public health or national security."

619. Dr. Fauci states that he does not recall whether NIAID ever authorized continued funding for Peter Daszak or EcoHealth Alliance pursuant to the exception to the Pause in footnote 1. Fauci Dep. 30:3-12.

620. In fact, Dr. Fauci testified that "I don't recall" or "I do not recall" 174 times in his deposition, and testified that he could not recall or remember using variations on that phrase 212 times. See Fauci Dep. 22:21-352:17-18. This contrasts sharply with his public statements about the very same issues that, during his deposition, he professed near-complete loss of memory. See, e.g., Jones Decl., Ex. X, at 1 ("I remember it very well"). It also contrasts sharply with his clear, specific recollection of unrelated events from the same time frame. See, e.g., Fauci Dep. 353:20-354:16. Dr. Fauci's repeated claims to not remember or not recall key events and people are not credible.

621. Dr. Fauci's chief deputy is Dr. Hugh Auchincloss, who is the Principal Deputy Director of NIAID. Id. at 30:20-25.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

622. In December 2015, during the research "Pause" on gain-of-function funding, Nature Medicine published an article entitled, "A SARS-like cluster of circulating bat coronaviruses shows potential for human emergence." Fauci Ex. 4, at 1. Dr. Ralph Baric of the University of North Carolina was listed as the corresponding author, and Dr. Shi Zhengli of the Wuhan Institute of Virology was listed as a co-author. Id. at 1 & n.8.

623. The 2015 Nature Medicine article clearly described gain-of-function research on bat coronaviruses. The Abstract states: "Here we examine the disease potential of a SARS-like virus, SHC014-CoV, which is currently circulating in Chinese horseshoe bat populations. Using the SARS-CoV reverse genetics system, we generated and characterized a chimeric virus expressing the spike of bat coronavirus SHC014 in a mouse-adapted SARS-CoV backbone." Fauci Ex. 4, at 1. Notably, the article uses the same phrase as the EcoHealth grant, "reverse genetics," to describe creating "a chimeric virus." Id.

624. The article reports that the "chimeric virus" created from a "SARS-like" bat coronavirus had become highly transmissible in human tissue: it could "replicate efficiently in primary human airway cells and achieve in vitro titers equivalent to epidemic strains of SARS-CoV." Id. It had also become more virulent: "Additionally, in vivo experiments demonstrate replication of the chimeric virus in mouse lung with notable pathogenesis." Id. There were no available treatments for this lab-created "chimeric" virus: "Evaluation of available SARS-based immune-therapeutic and prophylactic modalities revealed poor efficacy; both monoclonal antibody and vaccine approaches failed to neutralize and protect from infection with CoVs using the novel spike protein." Id.

625. The article noted that the authors had then "synthetically re-derived an infectious full-length SHC014 recombinant virus and demonstrate robust viral replication both in vitro and in vivo." Id. The article concluded that "[o]ur work suggests a potential risk of SARS-CoV re-emergence from viruses currently circulating in bat populations" – and this conclusion was based on creating a more transmissible (to humans) and more virulent (to humans) SARS-like coronavirus in a lab. Id.

626. The article acknowledged that NIAID was the principal funder of this research, and that it had received funding from the EcoHealth Alliance, Daszak's group: "Research in this manuscript was supported by grants from the National Institute of Allergy & Infectious Disease and the National Institute of Aging of the US National Institutes of Health (NIH) … and by USAID-EPT-PREDICT funding from EcoHealth Alliance." Id. at 5.

627. The article also noted that the NIH had reviewed and approved the research under the GoF Pause: "Experiments with the full-length and chimeric SHC014 recombinant viruses were initiated and performed before the GOF research funding pause and have since been reviewed and approved for continued study by the NIH." Id. "GOF" is short for "gain-of-function."

628. Dr. Fauci testified that he first became aware of this Nature Medicine article "likely … several months" after the outbreak of the COVID-19 pandemic, and that "it was brought to my attention in the context of questions that were raised by members of Congress about experiments that were funded by the NIAID." Fauci Dep. 31:17-20, 32:7-9. In fact, Dr. Fauci attached this article to a confidential midnight email to his principal deputy, Hugh Auchincloss, on January 31, 2020, and directed Auchincloss to read it immediately and take unspecified actions on it on a Saturday morning. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

629. Dr. Fauci testified that he does not believe he has ever met Dr. Ralph Baric, the corresponding author of the 2015 Nature Medicine article. Fauci Dep. 32:16-19 ("I know who he is, I doubt I've ever met him. I may have met him at one of the meetings where there are thousands of scientists saying hi to each other…"); see also id. at 33:25-34:1. In fact, Dr. Fauci's official calendar shows a one-on-one meeting with Dr. Ralph Baric on February 11, 2020, during the events described herein. Fauci Ex. 17, at 1. A contemporaneous Slack message on February 18, 2020 reports that Dr. Baric "sat in Fauci's office talking about the outbreak and chimeras," i.e., lab-created chimeric viruses. Jones Decl., Ex. Y, at 1. And Dr. Fauci testified that Dr. Baric may be the source of the phrase "SARS Gain of Function" in the attachment to his midnight email to Hugh Auchincloss. Fauci Dep. 57:11-12. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

630. Dr. Fauci professed to be ignorant of the identity of Dr. Shi Zhengli, the notorious "Bat Woman" of the Wuhan Institute of Virology. When asked if he knows who she is, he stated, "I'm not a hundred percent certain. I get sometimes confused with Asian names." Id. at 33:9-10, 18-19. Yet Dr. Shi Zhengli, the so-called "bat woman," is world-renowned as the researcher who may have caused the COVID-19 pandemic, and has been so since the beginning of the pandemic, see, e.g., Jones Decl., Ex. Z, at 1, and the name "Shi" is included in the title of the article that Dr. Fauci forwarded to Dr. Hugh Auchincloss after midnight on February 1, 2020. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8. Dr. Fauci's testimony is not credible on this point.

631. Dr. Fauci testified that he first became aware of the outbreak of COVID-19 either December 31, 2019 or "the first couple days of 2022." Fauci Dep. 34:8-11.

632. Dr. Fauci recounts that he first became aware of concerns that the SARS-CoV-2 virus that causes COVID-19 "might have been genetically engineered or originated in a laboratory" when "[t]here was a phone call in late January of 2020, I believe, from Jeremy Farrar. There was one other person on the phone. I believe it was [K]ristian [Andersen], who piped me in on a three-way call, saying that they looked at the virus and there was some concern about the molecular configuration or makeup of the virus that made them think there was a possibility that there could have been a manipulation of the virus." Id. at 34:12-35:1.

633. Dr. Fauci states that he does not believe that anyone ever raised the concern to him before that late January call, and he specifically attests that he does not recall Dr. Robert Redfield, then-Director of the CDC, raising the concern to him in mid-January 2020. Id. at 35:2-15. Dr. Fauci's recollection conflicts with that of Dr. Redfield, who specifically recalls raising this issue to Dr. Fauci earlier in January 2020, and having his concerns fall on deaf ears: "Dr. Robert Redfield, a virologist and the director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), had urged Fauci privately to vigorously investigate both the lab and natural hypotheses. He was then excluded from the ensuing discussions—learning only later that they'd even occurred. 'Their goal was to have a single narrative,' Redfield [said]." Jones Decl., Ex. AA, at 7.

634. "In mid-January of 2020, … Redfield expressed his concerns in separate phone conversations with three scientific leaders: Fauci; Jeremy Farrar, the director of the U.K.'s Wellcome Trust; and Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, director general of the World Health Organization (WHO). Redfield's message, he says, was simple: 'We had to take the lab-leak hypothesis with extreme seriousness.'" Id. at 23. Dr. Fauci disputes this account and states that this conversation did not happen: "To my recollection, no." Fauci Dep. 35:9-12.

635. On January 27, 2020, Dr. Fauci and several other senior NIAID officials received an email from Greg Folkers, who is his "immediate chief of staff in my office group," id. at 38:2-4; the email provided "Talking Points for NIAID Director Dr. Fauci." Fauci Ex. 5. The email stated that "when talking about CoV … we have on our team (Vincent and folks we fund, Peter Daszak, Ralph Baric, Ian Lipkin, etc.) probably the world's experts on non-human coronaviruses. … EcoHealth group (Peter Daszak et al) has for years been among the biggest players in coronavirus work, also in collaboration Ralph Baric, Ian Lipkin, and others." Id. at 1. It also flagged the ongoing NIAID grant to Daszak and its work with Wuhan Institute of Virology: "NIAID has funded Peter's group for coronavirus work in China for the past five years through R01 1R01AI110964: 'Understanding the Risk of Bat Coronavirus Emergence.' That's now been renewed." Id. It noted that "[t]he results of the work to date include … Found SARS-related CoVs that can bind to human cells (published in Nature) and that cause SARS-like disease in humanized mouse models"—a clear reference to the 2015 Nature Medicine article. Id. Three days later, Dr. Fauci would attach that Nature Medicine article to a midnight email to Hugh Auchincloss. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8.

636. Like so many other things, Dr. Fauci testifies that he does not recall receiving this email. Fauci Dep. 40:5-6.

637. Dr. Fauci states that he first became aware of the concern that the virus might be bioengineered and lab-created in a call with Dr. Kristian Andersen of Scripps and Jeremy Farrar of the Wellcome Trust on January 31, 2020. Fauci Dep. 43:17-25. In that call, according to Dr. Fauci, "Jeremy and [K]ristian said they had looked at -- or at least [K]ristian did, possibly Jeremy -- and maybe one other scientist -- and said that it is possible that there may have been a manipulation because it was an unusual virus." Fauci Dep. 44:3-9. A phone call was arranged for the next day, Saturday, February 1, 2020, to discuss the possibility. Id. at 44:15-17.

638. According to contemporaneous emails, Eddie Holmes and Bob Garry were involved in this call with Dr. Fauci and Kristian Andersen as well. Fauci Ex. 7, at 2. Eddie Holmes, who was then raising serious concerns that the virus had leaked from a lab, would go on to be the lead drafter of a key article discrediting the lab-leak theory.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

639. After the January 31 call with Farrar and Andersen, in the evening of the same day, Dr. Fauci forwarded them an article that was skeptical of the lab-leak theory, stating that "it is of interest to the current discussion." Ex. 6, at 1. Andersen responded, stating that he was not convinced by the article because "one has to look really closely at all the sequences to see that some of the features look (potentially) engineered," and that "after discussion earlier today, Eddie [Holmes], Bob [Garry], Mike [Laribee], and myself all find the genome inconsistent with expectations from evolutionary theory." Id. (emphasis added); see also Fauci Dep. 51:3-8.

640. A few hours later, shortly after midnight, at 12:29 a.m. on February 1, 2020, Dr. Fauci sent an email to his principal deputy, Hugh Auchincloss. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8. The subject line of the email said "IMPORTANT." Id. The email stated: "Hugh: It is essential that we speak this AM. Keep your cell phone on. … Read this paper as well as the e-mail that I will forward to you now. You will have tasks today that must be done. Thanks, Tony." Id.

641. The "this paper" that was attached to the email was the 2015 Nature Medicine article entitled "A SARS-like cluster of circulating bat coronaviruses shows potential for human emergence," Fauci Ex. 4, co-authored by Dr. Ralph Baric and Dr. Shi Zhengli and funded by NIAID and the EcoHealth Alliance. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8; Fauci Dep. 55:23-56:25. As an attachment to Dr. Fauci's email, this article was called "Baric, Shi et al – Nature Medicine – SARS Gain of Function.pdf." Fauci Ex. 6, at 8.

642. Dr. Fauci claims that he can recall virtually nothing about sending this urgent, confidential email to his principal deputy in the middle of the night of the day when he found out that highly qualified researchers were concerned that SARS-CoV-2 might have leaked from a laboratory. See Fauci Dep. 55:15-63:21 ("I don't recall … I don't know for sure … I can't say that I recall that in particular … I don't recall. I'm not sure exactly why those words got in there

… I don't recall … I don't recall … I don't precisely recall … I don't recall if I did … I might have, but I don't recall. … I don't recall. … I don't recall … I don't recall. … I don't recall … I really don't recall … I actually don't recall why I forwarded it to him … I don't recall why I did that … I don't remember … I don't recall speaking to him."). This contrasts starkly with Dr. Fauci's public claim to "remember … very well" key events of the same day. Jones Decl., Ex. X, at 1. Dr. Fauci's claim to an amazing loss of memory about this urgent clandestine email to his confidential deputy is not credible.

643. Dr. Fauci admits, however, that he wanted Auchincloss to find out what coronavirus research NIAID was funding in China before his call later that afternoon with scientists about the lab-leak concerns raised by Andersen and Farrar: "And at my recollection, I brought to Hugh's attention, saying, 'We have to speak in the morning, because I want to find out what the scope of what it is that we are funding so I'll know what we're talking about.'" Fauci Dep. 58:1-5. In particular, Dr. Fauci wanted to find out what EcoHealth Alliance was doing: "this was the first that I had heard about specifics of what EcoHealth and what other people were doing, and I wanted my staff to say get me up to date. So that's what I meant by you have work to do." Id. at 58:6-12.

644. Regarding the "tasks that must be done," Dr. Fauci admits that "I wanted to be briefed on the scope of what our collaborations were and the kind of work that we were funding in China. I wanted to know what the nature of that work was." Id. at 59:12-15.

645. The tone of the email and Dr. Fauci's own testimony strongly support the inference that Dr. Fauci sent the email to Auchincloss because he was concerned that NIAID, under his leadership, was funding research in China that might have led to the creation and leak of SARS-CoV-2, and he wanted to know the full extent of NIAID's exposure before his call later that day with scientists and funding authorities. See also Fauci Dep. 58:18-25. If it became public that

NIAID had funded the creation of SARS-CoV-2, Dr. Fauci and his agency potentially faced an enormous crisis of public credibility and accountability.

646. Immediately after sending Auchincloss the 2015 Nature Medicine article, Dr. Fauci also forwarded Auchincloss another article about the possibility that SARS-CoV-2 had leaked from a lab—the Jon Cohen article that he had sent to Kristian Andersen and Jeremy Farrar earlier that evening. Fauci Ex. 6, at 9. This email confirms that Dr. Fauci was deeply concerned about the prospect that NIAID, under his watch, might have funded the creation of the virus causing the global pandemic.

647. Dr. Fauci denies that, when he sent this email to Auchincloss, he was then concerned that NIAID might have funded the creation of the virus that caused the COVID-19 pandemic. When asked, "Were you concerned at that time that the work that you had funded in China might have led to the creation of the coronavirus?" Dr. Fauci responded: "I wasn't concerned that it might have." Fauci Dep. 59:16-19. In light of the tone and content of his emails at the time, and Dr. Fauci's other testimony, this statement is plainly not credible.

648. According to Dr. Fauci, when he participated in the secret call with the scientists and funding authorities later that afternoon on Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, he did not share with them that NIAID had been funding "SARS Gain of Function" research in China leading to the outbreak of COVID-19. Fauci Dep. 63:22 ("I don't believe I did.").

649. In fact, once again, Dr. Fauci claims that he does not recall what he said on the clandestine February 1, 2020 phone call. Id. at 64:17 ("I don't recall").

650. At 1:19 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 1 – about forty minutes before the secret conference call to discuss the lab-leak concern – Dr. Fauci also forwarded the "Baric, Shi et al – Nature Medicine – SARS Gain of Function" article to Lawrence Tabak of the NIH, saying only "Here it is." Fauci Ex. 6, at 15. Lawrence Tabak was then "the deputy director of the National Institutes of Health," the principal deputy to then-NIH Director Dr. Francis Collins. Fauci Dep. 65:8-11.

651. Dr. Fauci testified that "I don't recall why" he sent the 2015 Nature Medicine article to Lawrence Tabak, but he admits that it was likely to get it into the hands of Dr. Francis Collins, who was about to participate in the 2:00 p.m. secret conference call with Dr. Fauci and the other scientists. Id. at 66:15-17. Dr. Fauci claims that this was "to make sure everyone was aware of what the discussions were," id. at 66:13-15, but that is not credible in light of his testimony that he did not alert any of the other scientists on the call to the concern that NIAID was funding "SARS Gain of Function" research in China. Id. at 63:22.

652. The more compelling inference is that Dr. Fauci wanted Dr. Collins to know that NIAID and NIH faced enormous exposure if the lab-leak theory turned out to be true or publicly accepted. Dr. Collins, along with Dr. Fauci, had publicly championed gain-of-function research since at least 2011, and NIH had jointly funded Dr. Shi Zhengli's work at the Wuhan Institute of Virology through NIAID and the National Institute of Aging. Fauci Ex. 4, at 5 (referring to "grants from the National Institute of Allergy & Infectious Disease and the National Institute of Aging of the US National Institutes of Health (NIH)").

653. On Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, at 11:47 a.m., Hugh Auchincloss emailed Dr. Fauci in response to his 12:29 a.m. email. The subject line stated only "Continued." Auchincloss stated: "The paper you sent me [i.e., the 2015 Nature Medicine article on 'SARS Gain of Function'] says the experiments were performed before the gain of function pause but have since been reviewed and approved by NIH. Not sure what this means since Emily is sure that no Coronavirus work has gone through the P3 framework. She will try to determine if we have any distant ties to this work abroad." Fauci Ex. 6, at 16. At 5:51 p.m., Dr. Fauci responded: "OK. Stay tuned." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

654. "Emily" in Auchincloss's email "is Emily Erbelding, the Director of the Division of Microbiology and Infectious Diseases at NIAID," who "would have been the one who was closest to the ground in understanding what we were doing in funding China." Fauci Dep. 70:14-18. The "P3 framework" refers to the special approval process required for funding of gain-of-function research on coronaviruses that may cause pandemics, as "P3" stands for "potential pandemic pathogens." See National Institutes of Health, Office of Science Policy, Gain of Function Research, at https://osp.od.nih.gov/policies/national-science-advisory-board-for-biosecurity-nsabb/gain-of-function-research/ ("Certain gain-of-function studies with the potential to enhance the pathogenicity or transmissibility of potential pandemic pathogens (PPPs) have raised biosafety and biosecurity concerns…"). Thus, Auchincloss and Dr. Fauci had evidently discussed the concern that NIAID had funded the creation of "potential pandemic pathogens" at the Wuhan Institute of Virology, and Dr. Fauci was concerned about NIAID's "ties to this work abroad." Fauci Ex. 6, at 16.

655. Dr. Fauci admits that this email confirms that he "wanted to be briefed as to the extent of our involvement with funding in China," Fauci Dep. 71:2-4—in particular, NIAID's funding of the Wuhan Institute of Virology, as a global SARS-like pandemic emerged from Wuhan.

656. Dr. Fauci also admits that he may have raised the concern with Auchincloss that Dr. Baric's and Dr. Shi Zhengli's research reflected in the 2015 Nature Medicine article may have been illegally funded in violation of the GoF Pause in effect from 2014 to 2017. Fauci Dep. 71:14-20 ("Q: Did you raise a specific concern with Hugh that the research reflected in the Baric, Shi Nature Medicine paper may have been inconsistent with the pause on -- gain-of-function funding research? A. That is possible.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

657. On Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, Jeremy Farrar sent an email organizing a secret conference call at 2:00 pm EST to a group of scientists and science-funding authorities. Fauci Ex. 6, at 17-18. The first thing that Farrar noted in the email, in bold, was "Information and discussion is shared in total confidence and not to be shared until agreement on next steps." Id. at 17 (bold in original).

658. Separately, Farrar sent just Dr. Fauci an email on the morning of Feb. 1 to ensure that he could join the call, stating "Could you join?" Fauci Ex. 7, at 12. In that email, Farrar listed the participants and stated, "My preference is to keep this a really tight group. … Obviously ask everyone to treat in total confidence." Id. He also stated that the purpose of the call was "To listen to the work of Eddie, Bob and Kristian have done. Question it. And think through next steps." Id.

659. Dr. Fauci described the call as an open debate about the lab-leak theory among "a larger group of evolutionary virologists," Fauci Dep. 58:19-20, but in fact the call included a heavy representation of international government and science-funding authorities—including Dr. Fauci, Director of NIAID; Dr. Francis Collins, Director of NIH; Jeremy Farrar, head of the Wellcome Trust, the United Kingdom's "predominant" science-funding authority; Paul Schreier, the Chief Operating Officer of the Wellcome Trust who is responsible for "research funding" there; and Sir Patrick Vallance, the chief medical advisor to the U.K. government. Fauci Ex. 6, at 18; see also Fauci Dep. 75:11-76:15. All these people had a strong vested interest in avoiding a major scandal about international science-funding practices—such as the concern that Western governments may have funded the creation of a deadly virus that escaped from a lab and infected millions of people. As funding authorities who control the distribution of massive amounts of research funding, they also had powerful influence over the research scientists on the call.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

660. Dr. Fauci took steps to ensure that Dr. Francis Collins would be included on the call "since he's the director of NIH." Fauci Dep. 75:4-6. Dr. Fauci evidently spoke with Dr. Collins before the call, as he emailed Farrar before the call stating, "Jeremy: Francis will be on the call. He is trying to phone you." Fauci Ex. 7, at 17. Farrar then emailed Dr. Collins stating, "Francis Call me on [redacted]." Fauci Ex. 7, at 19.

661. Like the 12:29 a.m. email to Auchincloss, Dr. Fauci repeatedly claimed that he could not recall virtually any details about the 2:00 p.m. secret conference call with scientists and funding authorities about the lab-leak theory. Fauci Dep. 63:19-67:11 ("I don't recall bringing this up … I don't recall … I don't recall … I don't recall when it was … I don't recall … I don't believe that Larry was, but he could have been … I don't recall"); Fauci Dep. 73:20-74:14 ("I don't recall a discussion about confidentiality or not … I may have. I don't recall."); Fauci Dep. 77:13-15 ("Do you remember anything that anybody said on the call? A: No."); Fauci Dep. 78:10-83:10 ("I don't recall whether that was discussed … I don't recall anything from that phone call that said that … I'm not sure if I discussed it … I have a vague recollection that there was a concern … It is certainly possible, but I don't specifically remember … I don't specifically recall.").

662. This testimony to near-complete lack of memory about the call stands in stark contrast to Dr. Fauci's public statements a year and a half after the call occurred, when FOIA releases of Dr. Fauci's emails finally revealed to the public that this secret call had occurred. Then, Dr. Fauci stated, "I remember it very well." Jones Decl., Ex. X, at 1. Dr. Fauci's testimony about lack of recall is not credible.

663. Notwithstanding his repeated testimony that he cannot recall specifically what was said on the call, Dr. Fauci provided a self-justifying and innocent account of the call, describing it as a good-faith discussion among scientists trying to get to the truth without any preconceived biases. See, e.g., Fauci Dep. 77:16-18 ("[T]here was what appeared to me to be good faith discussion back and forth between people who knew each other"); Fauci Dep. 79:23-80:1 ("I think the general feeling among the participants on the call is that they wanted to get down to the truth and not wild speculation about things."); Fauci Dep. 80:9-10 ("I don't think there was any other concern than sticking with the truth and sticking with data").

664. Dr. Fauci thus seeks to have his cake and eat it too—he claims both to remember little or nothing of what was said on the call, and to clearly remember that the entire discussion was done in good faith and without any bias. In any event, subsequent communications and events make clear that Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible, as discussed in detail below, as an aggressive plot to discredit the lab-leak theory commenced immediately after the call.

665. Almost an hour into the 2:00 pm call, at 2:56 p.m., Jeremy Farrar sent a cryptic email to Fauci, Collins, Vallance (all science funders) and Mike Ferguson, stating, "Can I suggest we shut down the call and then redial in? Just for 5-10 mins?" Dr. Fauci responded, "Yes." Fauci Ex. 7, at 26. Dr. Fauci claims he cannot recall whether this occurred. Fauci Dep. 92:1-93:6.

666. Dr. Fauci testified that the call participants concluded that they needed more time to take a much closer look at the biology of the virus and genetic sequences before coming to a conclusion about the virus's origins, and they planned to take more time to continue their inquiry afterward. See Fauci Dep. 78:3-9 ("The ten[or] of it ended that we need more time … they said we need some time to more carefully look at this to see if we can come to a sound conclusion based on further examination of the sequences."); Fauci Dep. 80:24-25 ("The plan was to go and spend more time carefully looking at it."). In fact, Eddie Holmes and Kristian Andersen began drafting an article concluding that the lab-leak hypothesis was baseless and rooted in animus immediately after the call ended, and Dr. Fauci received an initial draft of this article by the next Tuesday morning. See infra. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

667. Dr. Fauci testified that his next interaction with the call's participants was when Kristian Andersen sent him a preprint of that article attacking the lab-leak theory. Fauci Dep. 82:19-83:1. In fact, before the preprint, Holmes and Farrar had sent Dr. Fauci at least four drafts of the article to review. See infra. Dr. Fauci's testimony is not credible on this point.

668. Dr. Fauci states that he cannot remember if he had further discussions with Jeremy Farrar, Francis Collins, and Patrick Vallance surrounding this call on Feb. 1, 2020. Fauci Dep. 83:2-10; 85:8-23, 90:25-91:15, 92:1-21. In fact, Dr. Fauci sent Jeremy Farrar a lengthy email that is entirely redacted at 12:38 a.m. on Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, Fauci Ex. 7, at 1; Farrar emailed Fauci on Jan. 30 stating "Tony Perfect timing – thank you. Great to catch up," and provided Sir Patrick Vallance's phone number, Fauci Ex. 7, at 4; Fauci emailed Farrar and Vallance on Jan. 30, stating "Thanks, Jeremy. Great chatting with you and Patrick. Will stay in close touch," Fauci Ex. 7, at 4; Jeremy Farrar sent Dr. Fauci an email on Friday, Jan. 31, stating "Tony Really would like to speak with you this evening It is 10pm now UK Can you phone me on [redacted]," Fauci Ex. 7, at 3; Farrar and Sir Patrick Vallance had a three-way call with Dr. Fauci on Jan. 30, 2020, Fauci Ex. 7, at 4; Farrar emailed Fauci and Collins after the call referring to "Conversations with you and Tony, and Patrick and others," Fauci Ex. 7, at 34; among others. Dr. Fauci had extensive discussions with Jeremy Farrar, Francis Collins, and Patrick Vallance surrounding the 2:00 p.m. February 1, 2020 secret conference call, and his testimony to the contrary is not credible.

669. After the call, Francis Collins emailed Farrar and stated, "Hi Jeremy, I can make myself available at any time 24/7 for the call with Tedros. Just let me know. Thanks for your leadership on this critical and sensitive issue." Fauci Ex. 7, at 34. Farrar responded, "We are altogether as you know!" Fauci then chimed it: "Thanks, Jeremy. We really appreciate what you are doing here." Fauci Ex. 7, at 34. "Tedros" refers to the director of the World Health Organization. Fauci Dep. 95:6-7.

670. After the call, Dr. Fauci described the scientists as engaging in a careful investigation of the virus: "[K]ristian and a few of the others carefully got together and looked at it and examined the pros and the cons and the ups and downs, and came to the conclusion that their initial concern about the molecular basis of the concern was unwarranted and that what they saw was quite compatible and, in fact, suggestive of a natural evolution." Fauci Dep. 81:8-15. In fact, Eddie Holmes and Kristian Andersen immediately began drafting an article attacking the lab-leak theory with no further investigation, which was sent to Dr. Fauci in less than three days. See infra. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

671. Farrar emailed Dr. Tedros of the World Health Organization and two senior WHO officials, along with Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins, indicating that he had just spoken to the senior WHO officials and "[f]ully agree with your summary." Fauci Ex. 8, at 1. Farrar emphasized the "urgency and importance" of the lab-leak question because of the "[g]athering interest evident in the scientific literature and in mainstream and social media to the question of the origin of this virus," and thus it was "[c]ritical" to "get ahead of the science and the narrative of this" instead of "reacting to reports which could be very damaging." Fauci Ex. 8, at 1. He also wrote, "I am sure I speak for Francis [Collins] and Tony [Fauci] when I say we are here and ready to play any constructive role in this," as they "[d]o think this is an urgent matter to address." Id.

672. Thus, Farrar, joined by Fauci and Collins, sent a message to the WHO that they wanted to "get ahead" of potentially damaging "narrative[s]" that might emerge "in mainstream and social media" about the origins of the virus. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

673. Later that day, on Feb. 2, Farrar separately emailed Fauci and Collins, stating "Tedros and Bernhard have apparently gone into conclave…they need to decide today in my view. If they do prevaricate, I would appreciate a call with you later tonight or tomorrow to think how we might take forward." Fauci. Ex. 8, at 2. He also stated, "Meanwhile…." and linked to an online article speculating about the lab-leak origins of the virus—again indicating that Fauci, Farrar, and Collins were concerned about controlling online discourse about the lab-leak theory. Id.

674. The day after the conference all, Sunday, Feb. 2, Dr. Fauci, Jeremy Farrar, and Dr. Collins shared a series of emails (1) acknowledging that there were very serious arguments in favor of the lab-leak theory, and (2) repeatedly expressing concern about the lab-leak theory's involvement on "social media." The group, including Dr. Fauci, repeatedly expressed concern about postings about the lab-leak theory on social media. See Fauci Ex. 8.

675. First, after the Feb. 1 call, still on Feb. 1, Farrar sent an email to the group expressing concern that "[t]here will be media interest and there is already chat on Twitter/WeChat" about the lab-leak theory, and stating: "In order to stay ahead of the conspiracy theories and social media I do think there is an urgency for a body to convene" to address the lab-leak question. Fauci Ex. 8, at 9.

676. The next day, Feb. 2, Farrar then expressed concern that "these questions are being asked by politicians, starting in the scientific literature, [and] certainly on social and main stream media. If, and I stress if, this does spread further, pressure and tensions will rise. [I] fear these questions will get louder and more polarised and people will start to look to who to blame. … I am concerned if this is not done quite quickly it will be reacting to what may be lurid claims." Fauci Ex. 8, at 7.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

677. Another call participant then agreed that "this needs to be discussed urgently," in part "because of the lurid claims on Twitter." Fauci Ex. 8, at 6. He also noted that "if the evolutionary origins of the epidemic were to be discussed, I think the only people with sufficient information or access to samples to address it would be the teams working in Wuhan." Id.

678. The same day, Farrar acknowledged "this is a very complex issue," and again expressed concern about "social and main stream media": "As discussed on the phone this discussion is not limited to those on this email, it is happening wider in the scientific, social and main stream media." Fauci Ex. 8, at 5.

679. Dr. Collins then responded to Farrar and Dr. Fauci only, stating that "a confidence-inspiring framework … is needed, or the voices of conspiracy will quickly dominate, doing great potential harm to science and international harmony." Fauci Ex. 8, at 5.

680. Farrar then shared notes with Fauci, Collins and Tabak (Collins' deputy) from "Mike Farzan (discoverer of SARS receptor)," which stated that Farzan "is bothered by the furin cleavage site [a virus feature that looks bioengineered] and has a hard time explaining that as an event outside the lab," and that "acquisition of the furin site would be highly compatible with the idea of continued passage of virus in tissue culture," i.e., serial passage. Fauci Ex. 8, at 4. Farzan suggested that "a likely explanation" of the virus was serial passage of SARS-like coronaviruses in human cell lines, and he stated that "I am 70:30 or 60:40" in favor of laboratory origins. Fauci Ex. 8, at 3-4.

681. Farrar also shared notes from "Bob" [Garry] that he had "aligned" the new virus "with the 96% bat CoV sequenced at WIV [Wuhan Institute of Virology]," and viewed the lab-origin theory as highly likely: "I really can't think of a plausible natural scenario … I just can't figure out how this gets accomplished in nature. Do the alignment of the spikes at the amino acid level – it's stunning." Fauci Ex. 8, at 4.

682. Having shared these notes, Farrar noted, "On a spectrum if 0 is nature and 100 is release – I am honestly at 50! My guess is that this will remain grey, unless there is access to the Wuhan lab – and I suspect that is unlikely!" Fauci Ex. 8, at 3. Both Farrar and Collins expressed concerns that the WHO might move too slowly for their liking. Id.

683. Then, still on February 2, 2020, Dr. Fauci wrote to Farrar, Collins, and Lawrence Tabak (Dr. Collins' principal deputy), stating: "Like all of us, I do not know how this evolved, but given the concerns of so many people and the threat of further distortions on social media, it is essential that we move quickly. Hopefully, we can get the WHO to convene." Fauci Ex. 8, at 2 (emphasis added).

684. Dr. Fauci claimed that he is completely dissociated from social media, stating: "I don't do social media so I'm not familiar with them," Fauci Dep. 98:15-16; and "You know, I'm so dissociated from social media. I don't have a Twitter account. I don't do Facebook. I don't do any of that, so I'm not familiar with that," Fauci Dep. 99:5-8; see also, e.g., Fauci Dep. 103:12-14; 210:3-8; 213:10-16; 241:6-9; 241:21-242:1; 301:10-11 ("I don't pay attention to things related to social media accounts."); id. at 312:7-9 ("I can repeat it for the hundredth time, I really don't get involved in social media issues."); id. at 356:15-16 ("I'm not a social media person.").

685. In fact, Dr. Fauci's daughter was then a software engineer at Twitter, Fauci Dep. 99:23-100:15; Dr. Fauci has done numerous podcasts and interviews on social media, including with Mark Zuckerberg, Fauci Dep. 99:16-19, 101:1-6; Dr. Fauci had specifically expressed concern about "the threat of further distortions on social media" about the lab-leak theory in his contemporaneous email, Fauci Ex. 8, at 2; and Dr. Fauci's communications staff had repeatedly emailed Twitter to try to remove postings critical of Dr. Fauci, see infra. Dr. Fauci's professed ignorance of social media is not credible. His communications and conduct make clear that he is keenly aware and deeply concerned about what he believes are "distortions on social media." Fauci Ex. 8, at 2.

686. Dr. Fauci also testified that "I don't recall anything about social media" in his discussions with Farrar about the origins of the virus. Fauci Dep. 102:17-18. In light of the contemporaneous emails repeatedly raising concerns about discussions of the lab-leak theory on social media, this claim is not credible.

687. Dr. Fauci admits that he was "concerned about … there being misinformation or disinformation that would interfere with our trying to save the lives of people throughout the world, which happens when people spread false claims." Fauci Dep. 103:18-22. He states that "misinformation and/or disinformation can lead to loss of life … and that troubles me." Fauci Dep. 104:15-17. This includes the spread of misinformation and disinformation on social media, because "that's part of the way information is disseminated." Fauci Dep. 104:22-23.

688. After Dr. Fauci's email about "the threat of further distortions on social media," Farrar emailed back indicating that the WHO might not move quickly to address the lab-leak theory, and stating to Fauci and Collins: "they need to decide today in my view. If they do prevaricate, I would appreciate a call with you later tonight or tomorrow to think how we might take forward." Fauci Ex. 8, at 2. He also stated: "Meanwhile…." and linked to an online posting expressing concerns about the lab-leak theory – indicating his dominant concern about online speech discussing the lab-leak theory. Id.

689. Soon thereafter, Farrar emailed Dr. Tedros of the WHO and two senior WHO officials, copying Fauci and Collins. Fauci Ex. 8, at 1. Farrar urged the WHO to quickly establish a working group to address the lab-leak theory, and reiterated that they should "[a]ppreciate the urgency and importance of this issue," given the "[g]athering interest evident in the science literature and in mainstream and social media to the question of the origin of this virus," and pressing them to "get ahead of … the narrative of this and not reacting to reports which could be very damaging." Fauci Ex. 8, at 1.

690. Fauci claims that he does not believe there was any further communication between him and Farrar about this issue, despite Farrar's urgent request for a follow-up call if the WHO did not act immediately. Fauci Ex. 8, at 2; Fauci Dep. 109:22-110:7. In light of their subsequent communications, this testimony is not credible.

691. By the early morning of February 4, 2020, Eddie Holmes had already sent a draft research paper attacking the lab-leak theory to Jeremy Farrar. Fauci Ex. 9, at 1. Holmes noted to Farrar that, in the draft, he "[d]id not mention [the virus's] other anomalies as this will make us look like loons." Fauci Ex. 9, at 1. To complete the draft between the afternoon of Saturday, Feb. 1, and the early morning of Tuesday, Feb. 4, Holmes must have started working on it almost immediately after the Feb. 1 conference call.

692. Farrar forwarded this draft to Fauci and Collins at 2:01 a.m. on Tuesday morning, February 4, 2020, in an attachment called "Summary." Fauci Ex. 10, at 3. He noted, "Please treat in confidence – a very rough first draft from Eddie and team – they will send on the edited, cleaner version later." Id.; see also Fauci Ex. 12, at 1.

693. Dr. Collins responded: "I note that Eddie is now arguing against the idea that this is the product of intentional human engineering," Fauci Ex. 10, at 3, a dramatic reversal of Holmes's position a few days earlier that Holmes and Andersen "find the genome inconsistent with expectations from evolutionary theory." Fauci Ex. 6, at 1. The paper's conclusion was also profoundly at odds with Holmes's statement, in the email sending the draft paper itself, that they would "look like loons" if the paper discussed the virus's other "anomalies" that strongly suggested a lab origin. Fauci Ex. 9, at 1.

694. Collins also noted that Holmes had not ruled out the possibility of a lab-created virus through serial passage. Fauci Ex. 10, at 3. Farrar responded, stating "Eddie would be 60:40 lab side. I remain 50:50." Id. Eddie, however, had already drafted a paper that refuted the lab-leak theory, even though he evidently still believed was the better explanation. See id.

695. Regarding the possibility of serial passage, Dr. Fauci noted that "Serial passage in ACE2-transgenic mice" was a possibility for the virus's origin, Fauci Ex. 10, at 2— notably, serial passage in humanized mice as was used in the 2015 Nature Medicine study. (Like so many other things, Dr. Fauci claims he does not recall this statement that he wrote. Fauci Dep. 115:22-116:12.) Collins responded, "Surely that wouldn't be done in a BSL-2 lab?" and Farrar answered, "Wild West…." Fauci Ex. 10, at 2. This exchange indicates that that Fauci, Farrar, and Collins were concerned that the coronavirus had been created in Wuhan by serial passage through humanized mice in a low-security [BSL-2] lab and then escaped from that low-security lab—i.e., the precise concerns surrounding the NIAID-funded research at WIV. Id.; see also, e.g., Jones Decl., Ex. BB< at 14 ("In the above exchange, the health officials [Fauci, Farrar, and Collins] seem to be contemplating the possibility that the repeated passage of a coronavirus through genetically modified mice in an insufficiently secure lab could have resulted in the accidental emergence and release of SARS-CoV-2.").

696. Later in the evening of the same day, Tuesday, Feb. 4, Farrar sent Fauci and Collins a second version of draft, entitled "Summary," with the note "Tidied up." Fauci Ex. 12, at 7. Dr. Fauci claims he does not remember receiving these drafts. Fauci Dep. 127:4-10.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

697. The next day, February 5, 2020, Farrar sent Fauci and Collins a third version of the draft, still entitled "Summary," with a note: "Tony and Francis The revised draft from Eddie, copied here." Fauci Ex. 12, at 8.

698. Two days later, on February 7, 2020, Farrar sent Fauci and Collins a fourth version of the same draft, entitled "Summary.Feb7.pdf," with the note in the subject line, "Revised draft." Fauci Ex. 11, at 2. This draft made clear that Holmes and his co-authors planned to aggressively discredit the lab-leak theory. It stated in bold in the beginning "Overview" section: "Analysis of the virus genome sequences clearly demonstrates that the virus is not a laboratory construct or experimentally manipulated virus." Fauci Ex. 11, at 3 (bold in original).

699. This was the fourth updated draft that Farrar sent to Fauci and Collins of the paper discrediting the lab-leak theory in the first week since the Feb. 1 secret conference call. The draft advocated that genetic evidence "clearly demonstrates" that the lab-leak theory is false. Id.

700. Dr. Fauci claims that he did not have any involvement in Farrar's efforts to push the WHO to assemble a working group to address the lab-leak theory. Fauci Dep. 110:4-7 ("So I really would doubt that there was any further communication between me and the WHO about this. This was fundamentally Jeremy's lane, if you want to call it that."); id. at 125:17-19 ("I didn't have any direct involvement with the WHO, not to my recollection."); id. at 131:14-15 ("This was mostly a Jeremy-led thing"). But in fact, Dr. Fauci sent multiple emails to Farrar urging for the inclusion of a long list of specific scientists in the WHO's working group. Fauci Ex. 13, at 1-2, 6.

701. On Feb. 5, 2020, Farrar emailed Fauci and Collins, stating that he believed that the WHO would assemble a working group to address the lab-leak theory, and urging Fauci and Collins to provide names of scientists to participate in the group. Fauci Ex. 13, at 7. Farrar stated that the WHO "have asked for names to sit on that Group – please do send any names." Id. He then stated, "We can have a call this week with a core group of that to frame the work of the Group including – if you could join?" Id. (emphasis added). And then he stated, "With names to be put forward into the Group from us and pressure on this group from your and our teams next week." Id. (emphasis added). Plainly, Farrar intended, with Fauci and Collins' assistance, to stack the WHO's group with their hand-picked scientists, have an advance call "to frame the work of the Group," and to put "pressure on this group from [Fauci's and Collins'] and our teams next week," id.—to influence and control the outcome of the WHO Group's deliberations.

702. Fauci and Collins did not dispute this plan. On the contrary, Fauci responded by providing Farrar with a detailed list of eight scientists to include in the WHO's group "in addition to the individuals who were on the call with us last Saturday." Fauci Ex. 13, at 2, 6. Fauci then followed up to his own email with an additional scientist, stating she is "an important name for the coronavirus evolution working group. Please include her." Id. at 1. Fauci's attempts to downplay his involvement with the plan to create and control a WHO working group on COVID-19's origins to discredit the lab-leak theory, therefore, are not credible.

703. Dr. Fauci testified that he, Farrar, and Collins "wanted to get them [the WHO] involved because we wanted to make sure that this was an open and transparent discussion," Fauci Dep. 126:9-12, is not credible in light of the contemporaneous email from Farrar to Fauci and Collins plotting to "frame the work of the Group" and put "pressure on this group from your and our teams next week." Fauci Ex. 13, at 3.

704. Dr. Fauci claims he does not recall any discussions about framing the work of the Group, or putting pressure on the Group. Fauci Dep. 137:1-21.

705. On February 9, 2020, Dr. Fauci participated in a joint podcast with Dr. Peter Daszak of the EcoHealth Alliance to discuss the outbreak of COVID-19. Fauci Ex. 15, at 1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

706. Peter Daszak was then involved in organizing a statement for the Lancet seeking to discredit the lab-leak theory, similar to the article then being drafted by Eddie Holmes, of which Dr. Fauci had received four drafts the previous week. See Jones Decl., Ex. CC, at 1. Just a few days later, The Lancet would publish a statement of scientists organized and co-signed by Daszak and Jeremy Farrar, which stated: "We stand together to strongly condemn conspiracy theories suggesting that COVID-19 does not have a natural origin." Id. Thus, at that time, Daszak was working in parallel with Dr. Fauci, and together with Jeremy Farrar, to produce a published article discrediting the lab-leak theory. Id.

707. During the podcast, both Dr. Fauci and Daszak made comments seeking to discredit the lab-leak theory. Fauci Ex. 16, at 1. Fauci, when asked "Do you have any sense of where [the virus] probably came from?" answered, "Well I think ultimately we know that these things come from an animal reservoir. I heard these conspiracy theories and like all conspiracy theories … they [are] just conspiracy theories…. I think the things you are hearing are still in the realm of conspiracy theories without any scientific basis for it." Id. Daszak was asked, "Is it your sense that it's almost certain it came from an animal-to-human transmission?" and he responded: "All the evidence says that is what happened. … It looks to me and to most scientists like it's a bat virus that got into people either in the market or in rural China and just unfortunately has the capacity to spread." Id.

708. On February 11, 2020, Dr. Fauci had a meeting at NIAID with Dr. Ralph Baric, the corresponding author of the 2015 Nature Medicine article about NIAID-funded gain-of-function research in Wuhan that Dr. Fauci sent to Hugh Auchincloss after midnight on Feb. 1. Fauci Ex. 17, at 1 (Dr. Fauci's official calendar, Feb. 11, 2020, at 2:30 p.m. – "Meeting with Dr. Ralph Baric"). Dr. Fauci does not dispute that he met with Dr. Ralph Baric that day, but (like so many other things) he claims that he does not recall the meeting or what they discussed. Fauci Dep. 149:9-10, 149:21-23. As noted above, given that Dr. Fauci was deeply concerned about Baric's research at the time, Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

709. On Feb. 11, 2020, Ian Lipkin wrote an email referring to the draft paper about the origins of COVID-19 stating that, while the paper was "well-reasoned and provides a plausible argument against genetic engineering," it "does not eliminate the possibility of an inadvertent release following adaptation through selection in culture at the institute in Wuhan. Given the scale of the bat CoV research pursued there and the site emergence of the first human cases we have a nightmare of circumstantial evidence to assess." Fauci Ex. 18, at 1. Dr. Fauci states that he does not recall this email but that "it's entirely possible that Ian wrote this to me," because "Ian communicates with me." Fauci Dep. 153:15-17.

710. Dr. Fauci testified that it is "molecularly" impossible that SARS-CoV-2 originated from NIAID-funded research: "molecularly, that could not have happened." Id. at 157:21-22. But separately, he repeatedly testified that molecular virology is not his field, so his certainty on this one key point is not credible. Id. at 64:8-9 ("that's not my field, evolutionary virology"); id. at 117:19-20 ("I'm hesitant to go there because that's not my area of expertise"); id. at 127:12-13 ("it was an area that was not my area of expertise"); id. at 160:7-9 ("Did I fully understand the molecular virology of it? Unlikely, because I'm not an evolutionary virologist.").

711. On February 17, 2020, the preprint version of the paper drafted by Eddie Holmes attacking the lab-leak theory was released. Fauci Ex. 19. The paper was entitled, "The Proximal Origins of SARS-CoV-2." Id. at 12. Its listed authors were Kristian Andersen, Andrew Rambaut, Ian Lipkin, Edward Holmes, and Robert Garry. Id. All these authors, except possibly Ian Lipkin, had been participants in the secret phone conference at 2:00 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020. Fauci Dep. 161:7-10.

712. These authors had a financial interest in supporting NIH's preferred narrative. "Garry and Andersen have both been recipients of large grants from NIH in recent years, as has another 'Proximal Origin' author, W. Ian Lipkin of Columbia University." Jones Decl., Ex. BB.

713. These authors were stunningly recent converts to the theory of natural origin. On February 11, Ian Lipkin had sent an email about the same paper stating that "we have a nightmare of circumstantial evidence to assess." Fauci Ex. 18, at 1. On February 4, Holmes had written to Farrar that he avoided discussing the virus's "other anomalies as this will make us look like loons." Fauci Ex. 9, at 1.

714. On February 2, Bob Garry had written to Farrar, "I really can't think of a plausible natural scenario … I just can't figure out how this gets accomplished in nature. Do the alignment of the spikes at the amino acid level – it's stunning." Fauci Ex. 8, at 4. On January 31, Andersen had written to Dr. Fauci that the virus's "features (potentially) look engineered," and that "after discussion earlier today, Eddie [Holmes], Bob [Garry], … and myself all find the genome inconsistent with expectations from evolutionary theory." Fauci Ex. 6, at 1.

715. The preprint version of "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" asserted a very different conclusion. It stated that "this analysis provides evidence that SARS-CoV-2 is not a laboratory construct nor a purposefully manipulated virus." Fauci Ex. 19, at 2. It stated that "genomic evidence does not support the idea that SARS-CoV-2 is a laboratory construct." Id. at 6.

716. Dr. Fauci does not dispute that this preprint was sent to him. Fauci Dep. 160:3-4 ("It is likely that this was sent to me"). Dr. Fauci admits that he reviewed the preprint when it was sent to him. Id. at 160:7 ("Did I look through it? Yes."). And Dr. Fauci admits that he was aware of what their conclusion was about the lab-leak theory. Id. at 162:13-15 ("I am certain that having looked at it, I was aware of what their conclusion was.").

717. This was the fifth version of the paper that was sent to Dr. Fauci to review, after four drafts sent to him on Feb. 4, 5, and 7. Id. at 160:13-16.

718. On March 6, 2020, Kristian Andersen emailed Dr. Fauci, Dr. Collins, and Jeremy Farrar, stating, "Dear Jeremy, Tony, and Francis, Thanks again for your advice and leadership as we have been working through the SARS-CoV-2 'origins' paper. We are happy to say that the paper was just accepted by Nature Medicine and should be published shortly …. To keep you in the loop, I just wanted to share the accepted version with you, as well as a draft press release. We're still waiting for proofs, so please let me know if you have any comments, suggestions, or questions about the paper or the press release." Fauci Ex. 22, at 1. He also wrote: "Tony, thank you for your straight talk on CNN last night – it's being noticed." Id.

719. Thus, Andersen thanked Dr. Fauci, Collins, and Farrar for their "advice and leadership" about the paper, sent them the final draft, and asked for their input both on the draft and on their public messaging about the draft. Id.

720. This was the sixth version of the paper that was forwarded to Dr. Fauci for review and input. Id.

721. Dr. Fauci responded: "Kristian: Thanks for your note. Nice job on the paper. Tony." Id.

722. Dr. Fauci denies that he provided "advice and leadership" in the preparation of the paper. Fauci Dep. 171:11-13. In light of the extensive meetings and correspondence detailed above, that testimony is not credible.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

723. On March 17, 2020, Nature Medicine published the online version of The Proximal Origin of COVID-19. Fauci Ex. 24, at 3. The print version appeared in the April 2020 volume of the journal. Id.

724. The final, published version of the article makes even stronger claims attacking the lab-leak theory than the preprint version. In its opening, the article states: "Our analyses clearly show that SARS-CoV-2 is not a laboratory construct or a purposefully manipulated virus." Fauci Ex 24, at 1 (emphasis added). Similarly strong language, leaving no room for doubt, occurs throughout the article: "the genetic data irrefutably show that SARS-CoV-2 is not derived from any previously used viral backbone," id. at 1 (emphasis added). "This clearly shows that the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein optimized for binding to human-like ACE2 is the result of natural selection," id. at 2 (emphasis added). "[T]he evidence shows that SARS-CoV-2 is not a purposefully manipulated virus," id. at 3. "[W]e do not believe that any type of laboratory-based scenario is plausible." Id. at 3. "SARS-CoV-2 originated via natural selection." Id. at 3.

725. Thus, between the preprint version and final version of the article, the article substantially beefed up its conclusion that the lab-leak theory is implausible and should be discredited. Dr. Fauci claims he does not "recall specific conversations" about that conclusion with the authors, but he admits that he is "sure" that he discussed that conclusion with them: "we read the preprint and, therefore, we knew what the conclusion was, and I'm sure that that conclusion was discussed. So I would not be surprised at all following the initial preprint that I discussed the conclusion of these authors that this is not a laboratory construct or a purposely manipulated virus." Fauci Dep. 181:3-10; see also id. at 181:18-22. Based on all these circumstances, it is likely that Dr. Fauci encouraged the authors to express a stronger and more unequivocal conclusion against the lab-leak theory than reflected in the preprint.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

726. Once the article "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" was released, both Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins took steps to push it into prominence. First, on March 26, 2020, Dr. Collins published a blog post on the article on the "NIH Director's Blog" entitled "Genomic Study Points to Natural Origin of COVID-19." Fauci Ex. 25, at 1.

727. Dr. Collins used strong language relying on the study to attack and discredit the lab-leak theory as "outrageous" and "debunk[ed]": "Some folks are even making outrageous claims that the new coronavirus causing the pandemic was engineered in a lab and deliberately released to make people sick. A new study debunks such claims by providing scientific evidence that this novel coronavirus arose naturally." Fauci Ex. 25, at 2. Dr. Collins stated that the study shows that "the coronavirus that causes COVID-19 almost certainly originated in nature," and that "this study leaves little room to refute a natural origin for COVID-19." Fauci Ex. 25, at 3.

728. In his blog post, Dr. Collins did not disclose that he and Dr. Fauci had been part of the group that organized the study, nor that he and Dr. Fauci had reviewed six versions of the study before it was published. Fauci Ex. 25.

729. As was evidently intended, Dr. Collins's blog post immediately fueled media coverage attacking the lab-leak theory as a "conspiracy theory." For example, the next day, March 27, 2020, ABC News ran a story entitled, "Sorry, conspiracy theorists. Study concludes COVID-19 'is not a laboratory construct.'" Fauci Ex. 26. The article quoted Bob Garry—who on January 31 had found "the genome inconsistent with the expectations of evolutionary theory," Fauci Ex. 6, at 1, and on February 1 had told Farrar that "I just can't figure out how this gets accomplished in nature … it's stunning," Fauci Ex. 8, at 4—as stating that "[t]his study leaves little room to refute a natural origin for COVID-19." Fauci Ex. 26, at 3-4.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

730. Dr. Fauci testified that he could not remember any contact from Dr. Collins about "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" after Dr. Collins' blog post on March 26, 2020. Fauci Dep. 186:19-187:6. In light of their subsequent communications and Dr. Fauci's actions, this testimony is not credible.

731. In fact, Dr. Collins emailed Dr. Fauci about the article on Thursday, April 16, 2020. Fauci Ex. 27. The email linked to a Fox News piece by Bret Baier alleging that sources were "increasingly confident" that SARS-CoV-2 originated in a lab, and it stated: "Wondering if there is something NIH can do to help put down this very destructive conspiracy, with what seems to be growing momentum." Fauci Ex. 27, at 1. Dr. Collins stated, "I hoped the Nature Medicine article on the genomic sequence of SARS-CoV-2 [i.e., "The Proximal Origin of COVID-19] would settle this. … Anything more we can do?" Fauci Ex. 27, at 1.

732. Dr. Fauci responded to Dr. Collins at 2:45 a.m. the next day, Friday, April 17, stating only: "Francis: I would not do anything about this right now. It is a shiny object that will go away in times. Best, Tony." Fauci Ex. 27, at 2.

733. Dr. Fauci testified that he did not take "any steps to increase the visibility of the article after this" email exchange with Dr. Collins. 191:21-22; see also 195:10-17. That testimony is incorrect and not credible.

734. In fact, that same day, Dr. Fauci took matters into his own hands to make the lab-leak theory "go away." At the joint press conference on April 17, 2020, with President Trump, Vice President Pence, and Dr. Fauci, a reporter asked, "Mr. President, I wanted to ask Dr. Fauci: Could you address the suggestions or concerns that this virus was somehow manmade, possibly came out of a laboratory in China?" Fauci Ex. 28, at 2. Dr. Fauci responded: "There was a study recently that we can make available to you, where a group of highly qualified evolutionary virologists looked at the sequences there and the sequences in bats as they evolve. And the mutations that it took to get to the point where it is now is [pause for emphasis] totally consistent with a jump of a species from an animal to a human." Id.; see also id. 199:18-25 (Dr. Fauci conceding that, "when you said that sentence about totally consistent, you pause and use that phrase, 'totally consistent' with emphasis" – "Right."); see also Video of April 17, 2020 White House Coronavirus Task Force Briefing, at https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=brbArpX8t6I (exchange starting at 1:38:32 of video).

735. Dr. Fauci then feigned ignorance and unfamiliarity with the authors of the study: "the paper will be available – I don't have the authors right now, but we can make that available to you." Fauci Ex. 28, at 2. Presenting himself as unconnected with the paper, Dr. Fauci did not reveal (1) that he was part of a group that had launched the paper in a clandestine phone call on Saturday, Feb. 1; (2) that he had extensively corresponded with Jeremy Farrar about the paper and its conclusions; (3) that the authors of the paper had sent six versions to him, Jeremy Farrar, and Dr. Collins to review; (4) that he had likely urged the authors to beef up their conclusion attacking the lab-leak theory between the preprint and published versions of the paper; (5) that the authors had personally thanked him for his "advice and leadership" in drafting the paper; or (6) that Dr. Collins had emailed him the day before to ask him to push the paper publicly or take other steps to discredit the lab-leak theory.

736. Dr. Fauci does not dispute that he was referring to "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" in his public remarks at the April 17, 2020, White House press briefing. Fauci Dep. 201:2-6 ("I assume it was the Nature Medicine paper…. I think it was.").

737. Dr. Fauci testified that he did not make that paper available to any reporters after the press conference. Id. at 201:7-9 ("Not to my knowledge."). That testimony is not credible.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

738. In fact, over the weekend following the press conference, Dr. Fauci personally responded to an inquiry from a reporter specifically asking for the study he had referred to at the April 17, 2020 press conference, and provided a link to "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2." Fauci Ex. 29, at 1. On Sunday, April 19, a reporter emailed the White House press office asking, "Dr. Fauci said on Friday he would share a scientific paper with the press on the origin of the coronavirus. Can you please help me get a copy of that paper?" Id.

739. Dr. Fauci personally responded to this reporter, stating, "Bill: Here are the links to the scientific papers and a commentary about the scientific basis of the origins of SARS-CoV-2." Fauci Ex. 29, at 1. He then provided three links. The first was a link to the online version of "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2." The second and third were links to a paper and an online statement by Eddie Holmes, whom Dr. Fauci knew had begun secretly drafting the paper that became "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" immediately after the clandestine Feb. 1 conference call with Dr. Fauci, Jeremy Farrar, and others. Fauci Ex. 29, at 1. The second link to a paper authored by Holmes was "a commentary on [The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2] in the journal Cell." Fauci Dep. 202:25-203:1; see also id. at 203:2-16.

740. On April 18 and 19, 2020, Dr. Fauci exchange cordial emails with Peter Daszak of the EcoHealth Alliance, who steers NIAID funds to finance bat coronavirus research with Dr. Shi Zhengli at the Wuhan Institute of Virology. On Saturday, April 18, Daszak emailed Dr. Fauci, calling him "Tony," and stating: "As the PI of the R01 grant publicly targeted by Fox News reporters at the Presidential press briefing last night, I just wanted to say a personal thank you … for standing up and stating that the scientific evidence supports a natural origin for COVID-19 … not a lab release from the Wuhan Institute of Virology." Fauci Ex. 30, at 1. Daszak also wrote: "Once this pandemic's over I look forward to thanking you in person and let you know how important your comments are to us all." Id. Dr. Fauci responded on April 19: "Peter: Many thanks for your kind note." Id.

741. Dr. Fauci's and Dr. Collins's efforts to orchestrate and publicize "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" as a method of discrediting the lab-leak theory were highly effective. "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" became one of the most widely read and most publicized scientific papers in history, with pervasive media coverage using it to discredit the lab-leak theory. "The paper has been accessed online more than 5.7 million times and has been cited by more than 2,000 media outlets. … It became one of the best-read papers in the history of science." Jones Decl., Ex. BB, at 3.

742. As a direct result of these efforts, speech and speakers advocating for the lab-leak theory of COVID-19's origins were extensively censored on social media platforms.

743. Twitter took aggressive censorship action against such speech and speakers. For example, on September 16, 2020, Twitter suspended the account of a Chinese virologist who claimed coronavirus was made in a lab. Fauci Ex. 31, at 1. "Twitter has suspended the account of a Chinese scientist who suggested that the novel coronavirus was created in a lab … despite inconclusive evidence." Fauci Ex. 31 at 2.

744. Facebook, likewise, took aggressive steps to censor the lab-leak theory on social media, even going so far as to formalize this policy as part of its official content-moderation policy. Fauci Ex. 32, at 3 (Facebook announcing that "we are expanding the list of false claims we will remove to include additional debunked claims about the coronavirus and vaccines," including "COVID-19 is man-made or manufactured"). Facebook noted that "we already prohibit these claims in ads," and promised "to take aggressive action against misinformation about COVID-19 and vaccines." Id. Facebook promised to "begin enforcing this policy immediately, with a particular focus on Pages, groups or accounts that violate these rules …. Groups, Pages, and accounts on Facebook that repeatedly share these debunked claims may be removed altogether." Id.

745. Like Twitter, Facebook censored even high-profile speakers who raised questions about the origins of COVID-19 or advanced the lab-leak hypothesis. For example, Facebook censored an article by award-winning British journalist Ian Birrell who raised "the question of the origins of the Covid-19 virus within Wuhan" and criticized the natural-origin theory of the virus. Fauci Ex. 33, at 1.

746. Dr. Fauci claims that he is not aware of any suppression of speech about the lab-leak theory on social media: "I'm not aware of suppression of speech on social media to my knowledge…. I don't recall being aware of suppression of anything." Fauci Dep. 208:10-14. He claims that this ignorance is because he does not pay any attention to anything said on social media: "This is not something that would be catching my attention because, you know, the social media and Twitter, I told you, I don't have a Twitter account. I don't tweet. I don't do Facebook. I don't do anything. So social media stuff, I don't really pay that much attention to." Id. at 210:3-8. As noted above, Dr. Fauci's emails and actions reflect extensive concern about what is said on social media, and his attempt to cast himself as someone with no knowledge of social media is not credible.

747. Further, Dr. Fauci's emails and interrogatory responses show a close relationship with the CEO and founder of Meta (Facebook/Instagram), Mark Zuckerberg.

748. On February 27, 2020, Mark Zuckerberg emailed Dr. Fauci directly to inquire about the development of the COVID-19 vaccine and offer the assistance of the Chan-Zuckerberg foundation. Fauci Ex. 23, 1. Zuckerberg already had Dr. Fauci's email, called Dr. Fauci by his first name "Tony," and wrote as if he had a preexisting acquaintance with Dr. Fauci. Id. Dr. Fauci, likewise, responded to Zuckerberg on a first-name basis and with the familiar tone of an acquaintance. Fauci Ex. 23, at 2.

749. Dr. Fauci claims that he does not recall whether he had already met Mark Zuckerberg. Fauci Dep. 173:17-174:5 ("I meet thousands of people. I'm not sure I ever met him in person."). But in fact, Dr. Fauci still refers to Mark Zuckerberg by his first name. Id. at 289:9-16.

750. On March 15, 2020, Mark Zuckerberg sent Dr. Fauci a lengthy email to offer close coordination between Dr. Fauci and Facebook on COVID-19 messaging. In the email, Zuckerberg thanked Dr. Fauci for his leadership, and "share[d] a few ideas of ways to help you get your message out." Fauci Ex. 23, at 3. Zuckerberg made three proposals: (1) Facebook was about to launch a "Coronavirus Information Hub" visible at the top of the page to all Facebook users to "get authoritative information from reliable sources," and Zuckerberg offered to include "a video from you" as a "central part of the hub," id.; (2) Zuckerberg was "doing a series of livestreamed Q&As from health experts" for his 100 million followers and wanted Dr. Fauci to do one of these videos, id.; and (3) Zuckerberg advised Dr. Fauci that Facebook had "allocated technical resources and millions of dollars of ad credits for the US government to use for PSAs to get its message out over the platform," and he wanted Dr. Fauci to recommend "a point person for the government response," id.

751. Dr. Fauci responded the next day, telling "Mark" that "[y]our idea and proposal sound terrific," that he "would be happy to do a video for your hub," and that "your idea about PSAs is very exciting." Fauci Ex. 23, at 4. He copied his Special Assistant to put Zuckerberg in touch with the right point person for the government to arrange specially subsidized government messaging about COVID-19 on Facebook. Id.

752. Zuckerberg replied the same day, stating "[w]e'd love to move quickly to help the effort and support getting these messages out." Fauci Ex. 23, at 6.

753. Dr. Fauci claims that the U.S. Government did not accept Facebook's offer of free ad credits to support the Government's COVID-19 messaging. Fauci Dep. 177:22-178:4 ("I don't believe that there was any money that was given from the Zuckerberg to the United States government to do PSAs. It's possible, but it certainly didn't happen to my knowledge. I don't recall money being given for PSAs."). But at the time, Dr. Fauci described the proposal as "very exciting" and immediately followed up on Zuckerberg's offer. Fauci Ex. 23, at 4. Separate emails from Facebook to the White House corroborate these ad credits. See, e.g., Doc. 174-1, at 46. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

754. Dr. Fauci and Zuckerberg have "interacted on Facebook Zoom-type podcasts." Fauci Dep. 175:17-18. Dr. Fauci did "[t]hree live stream Facebook-type Q and As" about COVID-19 with Zuckerberg. Fauci Dep. 177:2-4.

755. Dr. Fauci's interrogatory responses reveal extensive direct communications between Dr. Fauci and Zuckerberg. See Scully Ex. 12, at 33, 53-54 (identifying 13 communications between Dr. Fauci and Zuckerberg, including emails, phone calls, virtual meetings, and live broadcasts, over a nine-month period in 2020).

756. Reviewing the foregoing facts about Dr. Fauci's communications with Farrar, Eddie Holmes, and others, former Director of the CDC Robert Redfield "had a dawning realization. He concluded there'd been a concerted effort not just to suppress the lab-leak theory but to manufacture the appearance of a scientific consensus in favor of a natural origin. 'They made a decision, almost a P.R. decision, that they were going to push one point of view only' and suppress rigorous debate, said Redfield. 'They argued they did it in defense of science, but it was antithetical to science.'" Jones Decl., Ex. AA.

B. Dr. Fauci's Efforts to Suppress Speech on Hydroxychloroquine.

757. On May 22, 2020, The Lancet published an online article entitled "Hydroxychloroquine or chloroquine with or without a macrolide for treatment of COVID-19: a multinational registry analysis." Fauci Ex. 35, at 1. The article purported to analyze 96,032 patients to compare cohorts who did and did not receive hydroxychloroquine or chloroquine to treat COVID-19. Id. The study concluded that hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine were "associated with decreased in-hospital survival and an increased frequency of ventricular arrhythmias when used for COVID-19." Id.

758. On May 27, 2020, Dr. Fauci publicly cited this study to claim that hydroxychloroquine is "not effective against coronavirus." Fauci Ex. 34, at 1. Dr. Fauci "became the first Trump administration official to say definitively that hydroxychloroquine is not an effective treatment for the coronavirus." Id. at 2. "'The scientific data is really quite evident now about the lack of efficacy,' Fauci … said on CNN." Id.

759. Dr. Fauci's comments were based on the May 22 Lancet study. Id. at 3 ("Fauci's comments come days after the Lancet published a 96,000-patient observational study that concluded that hydroxychloroquine had no effect on Covid-19 and may even have caused some harm.").

760. The Lancet article was an observational study, not a randomized trial. At the time, "[t]here [wa]s no data yet from randomized, controlled clinical trials of hydroxychloroquine – the gold standard for evaluating potential treatments." Fauci Ex. 34, at 4. "But Fauci was unequivocal on [May 27, 2022], saying that 'the data are clear right now.'" Id.

761. Just a few days later, The Lancet retracted the May 22, 2022 study. Fauci Ex. 35, at 1. An article reporting on the retraction noted that the study's authors "were unable to confirm that the data set was accurate," that "several concerns were raised with respect to the veracity of the data," the study may have "include[ed] more cases than possible," and that "[a] first-year statistics major could tell you about major flaws in the design of the analysis." Jones Decl., Ex. DD, at 2-3.

762. Thus, Dr. Fauci's initial dismissal of hydroxychloroquine was based on a purely observational study – not a randomized, controlled trial – and one that was retracted for glaring errors just days later.

763. Dr. Fauci testified that he did not recall that The Lancet study he cited to discredit the efficacy of hydroxychloroquine had been retracted. Fauci Dep. 223:7 ("I don't recall it being retracted.").

764. Dr. Fauci stepped up his public campaign to discredit hydroxychloroquine by insisting that its effectiveness could only be judged by undergoing rigorous, randomized, double-blind, placebo-based studies, notwithstanding his previous reliance on the less-than-rigorous observational study in The Lancet that was subsequently retracted. On July 31, 2020, Dr. Fauci testified before the House Select Subcommittee on Coronavirus Crisis, during which he stated: "The point that I think is important, because we all want to keep an open mind, any and all of the randomized placebo-controlled trials, which is the gold standard of determining if something is effective, none of them had shown any efficacy by hydroxychloroquine. Having said that, I will state, when I do see a randomized placebo-controlled trial that looks at any aspect of hydroxychloroquine, either early study, middle study, or late, if that randomized placebo-controlled trial shows efficacy, I would be the first one to admit it and to promote it. But I have not seen yet a randomized placebo-controlled trial that's done that. And in fact, every randomized placebo-controlled trial that has looked at it, has shown no efficacy. So, I just have to go with the data. I don't have any horse in the game one way or the other, I just look at the data." See https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RkNC5OQD2UE.

765. Despite his insistence before a congressional committee that randomized, placebo-controlled trials were the determining factor for his opinion regarding the effectiveness of hydroxychloroquine in the treatment of COVID-19, Dr. Fauci quietly admitted that such rigorous studies are not actually required to determine the efficacy of a therapeutic drug. Dr. Fauci was asked, "Do you recall saying in connection with the discussion of hydroxychloroquine that a randomized double blind placebo based study is the gold standard?" Fauci Dep. 244:8-11. He replied, "That is the gold standard for everything. It isn't always needed, but for the most part, it's the gold standard." Id. at 244:12-14 (emphasis added).

766. Dr. Fauci's sudden reversal concerning the critical standards for scientific studies to determine the effectiveness of hydroxychloroquine demonstrated a lack of candor to the House Select Subcommittee on Coronavirus Crisis. Indeed, Dr. Fauci misled the Committee when he failed to disclose that randomized, double-blind, placebo-based studies are not always needed and that he previously relied on the observational, i.e., non-randomized, non-double-blind, non-placebo-based study in The Lancet to form an opinion about that drug's efficacy in the first place. Dr. Fauci lacks credibility on this point.

767. Despite mounting evidence against his position, Dr. Fauci testified that his opinion against hydroxychloroquine was based on other studies as well as the retracted article in The Lancet, but he could not identify any of those studies. Fauci Dep. 223:12-18 ("I don't recall specifically what those studies are now.").

768. Dr. Fauci did not retreat from his hard public stance against hydroxychloroquine. On July 26, 2020, a group called "America's Frontline Doctors" held a press conference at the U.S. Capitol criticizing the government's response to the COVID-19 pandemic and touting the benefits of hydroxychloroquine in treating the coronavirus. Fauci Ex. 38, at 5.

769. Dr. Fauci responded to this event with highly visible public statements condemning the use of hydroxychloroquine. For example, he stated on "Good Morning America," that "[t]he overwhelming prevailing clinical trials that have looked at the efficacy of hydroxychloroquine have indicated that it is not effective in coronavirus disease." Fauci Ex. 36, at 5. Dr. Fauci made these comments in direct response to the public claims of America's Frontline Doctors. Fauci Dep. 227:7-228:13. He also stated on MSNBC's "Andrea Mitchell Reports" that the video of the press conference by America's Frontline Doctors constituted "a video out there from a bunch of people spouting something that isn't true." Fauci Ex. 37, at 3.

770. Dr. Fauci also stated that "the cumulative data on trials, clinical trials that were valid, namely clinical trials that were randomized and controlled in a proper way, … showed consistently that Hydroxychloroquine is not effective in the treatment of coronavirus disease or COVID-19." Fauci Ex. 37, at 3. But two months earlier, he had said "the data are clear right now" when no such studies existed. Fauci Ex. 34, at 4.

771. Social-media platforms reacted by aggressively censoring the video of America's Frontline Doctors. Facebook removed the video when it was "the top-performing Facebook post in the world," and "had accumulated over 17 million views by the time of its censorship by Facebook." Fauci Ex. 38, at 3, 4. Further, "Facebook's decision to censor the livestream was quickly followed by YouTube, the Google-owned video-sharing platform." Id. at 6. "The video had 80,000 views on YouTube prior to its removal." Id. "Following Facebook and YouTube's removal of the video, Twitter followed suit…." Id.; see also Fauci Ex. 36, at 3 (noting that "Twitter … removed the video, saying it was 'in violation of our COVID-19 misinformation policy'").

772. Dr. Fauci professed to be unaware of whether 17 million views of a video on Facebook are a large number of views: "I don't know what 17 million views means. What's the denominator? Is 17 million a large amount? Is it a small amount? I don't go on social media, so I don't know what 17 million views means." Fauci Dep. 236:7-11. It is common sense that 17 million views are a large number of views. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

773. Dr. Fauci does not deny that he or his staff at NIAID may have communicated with Facebook regarding the censorship of the America's Frontline Doctors video. Instead, he claims that he does not recall whether they communicated with Facebook about it, and that it is possible that they did so. Fauci Dep. 238:2-5 ("I don't recall anybody communicating with them about that. Could have been, but I don't recall anybody -- I don't recall anybody communicating with the social media people."); see also id. at 238:6-10. He also does not deny that other federal officials may do so, but he claims that "I don't recall any of that" and "it just doesn't ring a bell to me right now." Id. at 238:21-239:7. He claims he doesn't "pay attention" to whether his staff or other federal officials communicate with social-media platforms about censorship because "I have a really important day job that I work at." Id. at 238:19-20.

774. Nevertheless, regarding the decision by YouTube and Twitter to follow Facebook in censoring the video, Dr. Fauci admits that "Yes, I knew of that." Id. at 239:8-13.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

775. A few days later, on August 1, 2020, the web host provider for America's Frontline Doctors shut down their website. Id. at 242:14-243:8; Fauci Ex. 39. Dr. Fauci testifies that he does not recall this occurrence. Fauci Dep. 243:13-18.

776. On November 18, 2022, a meta-analysis of 449 studies on the efficacy of hydroxychloroquine considered "449 HCQ COVID-19 studies, 351 peer reviewed, 371 comparing treatment and control groups." Fauci Ex. 40, at 1. The meta-analysis concluded that "[l]ate treatment and high dosages may be harmful, while early treatment consistently shows positive results." Id. It also noted that "[n]egative evaluations" of hydroxychloroquine "typically ignore treatment delay." Id. And it noted that "HCQ/CQ was adopted for early treatment in all or part of 41 countries." Id.

C. Dr. Fauci's "Devastating Takedown" of the Great Barrington Declaration.

777. Dr. Fauci recommended Dr. Clifford Lane of NIAID to participate in a WHO mission to China in February 2020. Fauci Dep. 139:15.

778. On April 3, 2020, the NIH Record wrote a report on Lane's trip entitled "NIAID's Lane Discusses WHO COVID-19 Mission to China. Fauci Ex. 20, at 1. Lane praised China's response to the pandemic, especially their reliance on lockdowns and "extreme … social distancing": "The Chinese were managing this in a very structured, organized way,' he explained. 'When we got there, the outbreak was already coming under control in China. The measures they put in place appeared to be working…. It demonstrated their successful response…. From what I saw in China, we may have to go to as extreme a degree of social distancing to help bring our outbreak under control." Id. at 5-6.

779. Dr. Fauci discussed this conclusion with Lane when he returned from China: "Dr. Lane was very impressed about how from a clinical public health standpoint, the Chinese were handling the isolation, the contact tracing, the building of facilities to take care of people, and that's what I believed he meant when he said were managing this in a very structured, organized way." Fauci Dep. 165:4-11.

780. Dr. Fauci admits that Lane "did discuss with me that the Chinese had a very organized way of trying to contain the spread in Wuhan and elsewhere. … he mentioned that they had a very organized, well-regimented way of handling the outbreak." Id. at 166:1-7.

781. Dr. Fauci came to agree with Dr. Lane's rosy assessment of China's draconian response to the outbreak: "Dr. Lane is a very astute clinician, and I have every reason to believe that his evaluation of the situation was accurate and correct." Id. at 166:24-167:1.

782. On Feb. 22, 2020, Dr. Lane sent an email stating, "China has demonstrated that this infection can be controlled, albeit at great cost." Fauci Ex. 21, at 1.

783. On October 4, 2020, Plaintiffs Dr. Jay Bhattacharya of Stanford and Dr. Martin Kulldorff of Harvard, along with Dr. Sunetra Gupta of Oxford, published online the "Great Barrington Declaration," which was one-page treatise opposing reliance on lockdowns and advocating for an approach to COVID-19 called "focused protection." Fauci Ex. 41.

784. The Great Barrington Declaration criticized the social-distancing and lockdown approaches to the pandemic endorsed by government experts such as Dr. Fauci and Cliff Lane: "As infectious disease epidemiologists and public health scientists we have grave concerns about the damaging physical and mental health impacts of the prevailing COVID-19 policies, and recommend an approach we call Focused Protection." Id. It was very critical of such government policies: "Current lockdown policies are producing devastating effects on short and long-term public health. The results (to name a few) include lower childhood vaccination rates, worsening cardiovascular disease outcomes, fewer cancer screenings and deteriorating mental health – leading to greater excess mortality in years to come, with the working class and younger members of society carrying the heaviest burden. Keeping students out of school is a grave injustice. Keeping these measures in place until a vaccine is available will cause irreparable damage, with the underprivileged disproportionately harmed." Id. It called for an end to lockdowns: "The most compassionate approach that balances the risks and benefits of reaching herd immunity, is to allow those who are at minimal risk of death to live their lives normally to build up immunity to the virus through natural infection, while better protecting those who are at highest risk. We call this Focused Protection." Id.

785. The Declaration called for an end of government-imposed lockdowns and an immediate return to normal life for those who are low-risk: "Those who are not vulnerable should immediately be allowed to resume life as normal. Simple hygiene measures, such as hand washing and staying home when sick should be practiced by everyone to reduce the herd immunity threshold. Schools and universities should be open for in-person teaching. Extracurricular activities, such as sports, should be resumed. Young low-risk adults should work normally, rather than from home. Restaurants and other businesses should open. Arts, music, sport and other cultural activities should resume. People who are more at risk may participate if they wish, while society as a whole enjoys the protection conferred upon the vulnerable by those who have built up herd immunity." Id.

786. The Declaration was thus highly critical of the lockdown policies defended by Dr. Fauci and Dr. Cliff Lane of NIAID since Dr. Lane's trip to China at the beginning of the pandemic. The Declaration was "going against the global political consensus, which holds that lockdowns are key to minimising mortality to Covid-19." Fauci Ex. 48, at 3. After it was posted online, it rapidly gathered signatures from doctors and scientists, as well as members of the public.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

787. Four days later, on October 4, 2020, Dr. Francis Collins emailed Dr. Fauci and Cliff Lane, citing the Great Barrington Declaration. Fauci Ex. 42, at 1. Dr. Collins stated: "Hi Tony and Cliff, See https://gbdeclaration.org. This proposal from the three fringe epidemiologists who met with the Secretary seems to be getting a lot of attention – and even a co-signature from Nobel Prize winner Mike Leavitt at Stanford. There needs to be a quick and devastating published take down of its premises. I don't see anything like that on line yet – is it underway? Francis." Id.

788. This email seeking Dr. Fauci's assistance in a "quick and devastating … take down" of the Great Barrington Declaration" is strikingly similar to Dr. Collins' email to Dr. Fauci on April 16, 2020, asking Dr. Fauci's "help [to] put down this very destructive conspiracy," i.e., the lab-leak hypothesis. Fauci Ex. 27, at 1. In both cases, Dr. Collins sought Dr. Fauci's aid in discrediting and silencing an online narrative that federal officials disfavored, and in both cases, Dr. Fauci promptly and effectively complied.

789. Dr. Collins' question to Dr. Fauci in the email, "Is it underway?" implies that Dr. Collins expected Dr. Fauci to be already working on a "quick and devastating … take down" of the Declaration, or to be aware of others working on one. Fauci Ex. 42, at 1. Dr. Fauci denies that Dr. Collins had any reason to think that Dr. Fauci might be working on a refutation of the Great Barrington Declaration, because "[t]his is not something I would be involved in," because "I have a very important day job that is running a $6.4 billion institute." Fauci Dep. 260:11-20. Given Dr. Fauci's immediately subsequent attempts to refute and discredit the Great Barrington Declaration, this testimony is not credible.

790. The same day as Dr. Collins' email, October 8, 2020, Dr. Fauci wrote back to Dr. Collins, stating "Francis: I am pasting in below a piece from Wired that debunks this theory. Best, Tony." Fauci Ex. 43, at 1. Dr. Fauci followed up the same day with an email to Dr. Collins linking to an article by Gregg Gonsalves which Dr. Fauci called "[a]nother refutation of the herd immunity approach." Fauci Ex. 44, at 1.

791. Dr. Fauci has known Gregg Gonsalves for decades, since the 1980s. Fauci Dep. 265:16-19. Dr. Fauci does not deny that he may have contacted Gregg Gonsalves before Gonsalves wrote this piece attacking the Great Barrington Declaration, but claims he does not recall. Id. at 268:8-19 ("I don't recall. I might have.").

792. Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins followed up with a series of public media statements attacking the Great Barrington Declaration. On October 14, 2020, the Washington Post ran a story entitled, "Proposal to hasten herd immunity to the coronavirus grabs White House attention but appalls top scientists." Fauci Ex. 45, at 1. In the article, Dr. Collins described the Great Barrington Declaration and its authors as "fringe" and "dangerous": "This is a fringe component of epidemiology. This is not mainstream science. It's dangerous." Id. at 3.

793. Dr. Fauci consulted with Dr. Collins before he told the Washington Post that the Great Barrington Declaration represented a "fringe" and "dangerous" idea. Fauci Dep. 272:4-7.

794. Dr. Fauci endorsed these comments in an email to Dr. Collins on October 13, 2020, stating, "[w]hat you said was entirely correct." Fauci Ex. 46, at 1.

795. Dr. Fauci admits that Dr. Collins could have been concerned about the spread of the ideas in the Declaration on social media when he called it "fringe" and "dangerous." Fauci Dep. 274:19-20.

796. The next day, October 15, 2020, Dr. Fauci echoed Dr. Collins' comments, calling the Declaration "nonsense" and "dangerous." Fauci Ex. 47, at 1. Describing the proposal as "letting infections rip as it were," Dr. Fauci stated: "Quite frankly that is nonsense, and anybody who knows anything about epidemiology will tell that that is nonsense and very dangerous." Id. at 3.

797. Dr. Fauci testified that "it's possible that" he coordinated with Dr. Collins on their public statements attacking the Great Barrington Declaration. Fauci Dep. 279:23-24.

798. Dr. Fauci also testified of himself and Dr. Collins that "that's not our style to be coordinating things." Id. at 279:22-23. In light of the extensive coordination with Dr. Collins about the lab-leak theory, and the coordination about the Great Barrington Declaration, that testimony is not credible.

799. Shortly after Dr. Collins' email to Dr. Fauci seeking a "quick and devastating … take down" of the Great Barrington Declaration, the Declaration and its authors, Drs. Bhattacharya and Kulldorff, experienced extensive censorship on social media. See infra. In October 2020, Google deboosted the search results for the Declaration, so that "most users in English-speaking countries, when they google 'Great Barrington Declaration,' will not be directed to the declaration itself but to articles that are critical of the declaration." Fauci Ex. 48, at 4.

800. In the same time, "[c]ensorship of the declaration … also spread to Reddit. The two most popular subreddits for discussion of the coronavirus – r/COVID-19 and r/coronavirus – have both removed links to the Great Barrington Declaration. The moderators of r/coronavirus, a forum with 2.3million members, have declared it to be 'spam'." Fauci Ex. 48, at 4-5.

801. In October 2020, YouTube updated its terms of service regarding medical "misinformation," reporting "COVID-19 medical misinformation policy updated to prohibit content about vaccines contradicting consensus from health authorities." Fauci Ex. 49, at 3. "Health authorities" include federal officials like Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins. See id. This October 2020 update specifically stated that claims which are "not allowed on YouTube" include "[c]laims that achieving herd immunity through natural infection is safer than vaccinating the population," which is listed on the same footing as "[c]laims that COVID-19 vaccines contain a microchip or tracking device." Fauci Ex. 50, at 3-4.

802. Pursuant to this censorship policy of YouTube, the authors of the Great Barrington Declaration had content removed from YouTube, including a video of a roundtable discussion with Governor Ron DeSantis of Florida. See infra.

803. Facebook, likewise, adopted censorship policies against the Great Barrington Declaration. Meta's policy on "Misinformation about vaccines" states that: "We remove misinformation primarily about vaccines when public health authorities conclude that the information is false and likely to directly contribute to imminent vaccine refusals." Fauci Ex. 51, at 4 (emphasis added).

804. Facebook/Meta views Dr. Fauci as a "public health authority" who may dictate what people may post about COVID-19 on its platforms (Facebook and Instagram, among others), because Mark Zuckerberg and Dr. Fauci were collaborating on multiple public appearances and videos for Facebook. See supra; Scully Ex. 12, at 33, 53-54 (identifying 13 communications between Dr. Fauci and Zuckerberg, including emails, phone calls, virtual meetings, and live broadcasts, over a nine-month period in 2020). Indeed, in his March 15, 2020 email to Dr. Fauci, Mark Zuckerberg described Dr. Fauci as an "expert[]," a "health expert[]" and "reliable source[]" for "authoritative information" about fighting COVID-19. Fauci Ex. 23, at 3.

805. Dr. Fauci claims that he would not have paid any attention to the Great Barrington Declaration because he is too busy and important to pay attention to such matters: "this is not something that I would have been paying a lot of attention to. I was knee deep in trying to do things like develop a vaccine that wound up saving the lives of millions of people. That's what I was doing at the time." Fauci Dep. 256:13-17. Given Dr. Fauci's direct involvement in publicly attacking the Great Barrington Declaration and collecting sources for Dr. Collins to "take [it] down," this statement is not credible. In fact, on November 1, 2020, Greg Folkers, Dr. Fauci's staffer at NIAID, sent Dr. Fauci a list of articles attacking the Great Barrington Declaration—including one co-authored by Gregg Gonsalves—with the statement "As discussed. I have highlighted the three I found the most useful." Fauci Ex. 52, at 1. The list of articles were all harshly critical of the Declaration—using phrases like "dangerous," "false promise," "ethical nightmare," and "could kill millions." Id. Thus, four weeks after the Declaration was published, Dr. Fauci and his staffers were still "discuss[ing]" and looking up articles on ways to attack it. Id.

806. Dr. Kulldorff points out that, regardless of disagreements over the policy, describing the Declaration as "fringe" and "nonsense" is fundamentally dishonest, as the Declaration reflects principles of pandemic preparedness that were widely accepted before COVID-19: "the Great Barrington Declaration is merely a restatement of the principles of public health. Lockdown … is a 'terrible experiment' that throws those principles 'out of the window' by focusing solely on one disease at the expense of all other health problems. 'Most countries in Europe had a pandemic-preparedness plan that did not recommend lockdowns, but instead proposed a risk-based strategy to protect those at high risk, which is actually the same as the focused protection we put forward in the Great Barrington Declaration. What we are proposing is, therefore, nothing revolutionary', [Kulldorff] said." Fauci Ex. 48, at 6.

807. Regarding the censorship of the Great Barrington Declaration on social media, Dr. Fauci repeatedly testified that he was oblivious to it: "I don't pay much attention to what goes on in social media … it is highly unlikely that … I paid any attention to this thing of Google censoring the Great Barrington Declaration … I would not have paid much attention to it." Fauci Dep.

281:15-282:2, 283:7-10. In light of his contemporaneous statements and emails, this statement is not credible.

808. Like so many other topics, Dr. Fauci repeatedly testified that he could not recall virtually anything about his involvement in seeking to squelch the Great Barrington Declaration. He testified at least 33 times that he could not recall his involvement in this matter. See Fauci Dep. 251:11, 252:20, 255:6, 255:9, 256:3, 257:5, 258:12, 263:1, 263:15, 263:21, 264:17, 264:20, 264:22, 265:2, 265:6, 268:10, 268:18, 270:24, 282:19-20, 284:22-23, 290:13, 290:21, 291:13, 291:16, 292:15, 292:24, 293:15, 293:24, 295:9, 295:25, 296:21, 297:2-3, 297:14. For the reasons discussed above, these claims to almost total loss of memory are not credible.

D. NIAID Flags Social-Media Accounts for Censorship Under Dr. Fauci.

809. As noted above, Dr. Fauci testified that he is not aware of any NIAID or NIH staff contacting social media platforms to ask them to remove content. In fact, NIAID and NIH staff—including staffers in Dr. Fauci's senior circle—sent several messages to social-media platforms asking them to remove content lampooning or criticizing Dr. Fauci. Dr. Fauci's testimony to the contrary is not credible.

810. On March 14, 2020, a Twitter employee reached out to CDC officials, including Carol Crawford, and asked if a particular account associated with Dr. Fauci is "real or not." Fauci Ex. 53, at 2. Scott Prince of NIH responded, "Fake/Impostor handle. PLEASE REMOVE!!!" Id. Twitter responded that it would take action promptly and "circle back ASAP." Id. An HHS official then asked if Twitter could pre-block similar parody accounts: "Is there anything else that you can also do to block other variations of [Dr. Fauci's] name from impersonation so we don't have this happen again?" Id. at 1. Twitter replied: "We'll freeze this @handle and some other variations so no one can hop on them." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

811. Likewise, on April 21, 2020, Judith Lavelle of NIAID emailed Facebook, copying Scott Prince of NIH and Jennifer Routh of Dr. Fauci's communications team, and stated: "We wanted to flag a few more fake Dr. Fauci accounts on FB and IG for you. I have also reported them from @niaid and my personal FB account." Fauci Ex. 55, at 3. She listed eight accounts that she considered fake. One of these was called "Dr.FauciTheHero," and she stated, "I think this one may be fine as a fan page but could use a reminder to be a bit more clear," id. at 4—thus noting that she was seeking the censorship only of speech about Dr. Fauci that the government disfavors, while "a fan page" was fine.

812. Both Jennifer Routh and Judith Lavelle are members of Dr. Fauci's communications staff. Fauci Dep. 308:14-21.

813. The fact that Lavelle stated they were flagging "a few more" accounts indicates that NIAID's flagging social-media accounts for censorship was not an isolated incident but an ongoing practice. Fauci Ex. 55, at 3.

814. Lavell then followed up flagging yet another account, saying "Apologies one more," and adding Greg Folkers of Dr. Fauci's personal staff to the email chain reporting these accounts to Facebook for censorship. Fauci Ex. 55, at 3.

815. The same day, Facebook responded, "Flagged this for the fake accounts team and they have confirmed that all but two accounts were removed for impersonation of Dr. Fauci. I guess two of the accounts are fan accounts." Fauci Ex. 55, at 3.

816. The Facebook employee then added, "Also want to intro you all to [two more Facebook employees] who have been working hard to manage any fake accounts for NIH across the board. She can work with you directly if anything like this comes up." Fauci Ex. 55, at 2. Lavelle responded that "our team will be sure to reach out if we identify any more impersonations," id., and Facebook answered that Lavelle of NIAID should "feel [free] to flag to us the various imposter accounts," Fauci Ex. 55, at 1. Again, this response indicates an ongoing and widespread practice of NIH reporting supposedly "fake" accounts for censorship. Id.

817. Dr. Fauci testifies that he does not remember for certain, but he "likely" asked his communications staff to do something about these impersonation or parody accounts. Fauci Dep. 302:6-10 ("I vaguely remember somebody mentioning something about an imposter account. … And I likely would have said, 'Well, how can they do that?'"). He also agrees that his communications staff would do so on their own. Id. at 301:1-4 ("I have a communication staff that I'm sure, if they found out it was a false and misleading account, that they would want it to be removed."); see also id. at 301:23-25; 304:19-21.

818. Dr. Fauci believes it is "totally appropriate" for his communications staff to contact social-media platforms and seek the removal of such accounts. Id. at 312:19-21; see also id. at 310:14-16.

819. He thinks so because "impersonating me is a bad thing." Id. at 303:20; see also id. at 304:11-13; 309:23-310:1 ("fake accounts are bad things, I believe"); 311:20-21. Dr. Fauci specifically believes that removing accounts associated with him is "a good thing" because "those accounts are bad." Id. at 329:12-16.

820. Dr. Fauci does not know whether some of the so-called "fake accounts," which he calls "bad things," that his staff flagged for censorship may actually be parody accounts. Id. at 311:7-9.

821. Moreover, it was not just NIAID staff, but also White House staff, who flagged content about Dr. Fauci for removal from social-media platforms. As noted above on Tuesday, July 20, 2021, Clarke Humphrey of the White House communications office emailed Facebook asking for the removal of an Instagram account associated with Dr. Fauci, saying it "is not actually one of ours." Fauci Ex. 57, at 1-2. Facebook responded one minute later, stating, "Yep, on it!" Fauci Ex. 57, at 1. Courtney Billet, Dr. Fauci's communications director at NIAID, then weighed in, asking Facebook to disclose whether "there's a federal email address attached to whomever set this account up," so that she could ascertain whether the account was set up by "some federal employee outside our official comms offices." Fauci Ex. 57, at 1. The next day, Facebook responded, stating, "This account has been removed. Thank you for flagging!" Fauci Ex. 57, at 1.

822. NIAID's communications with social-media platforms were not limited to flagging impostor or parody accounts. On October 30, 2020, for example, a NIAID staffer wrote an email connecting Google/YouTube with Jennifer Routh of NIAID's "Office of Communications and Government Relations," so that NIAID and the "Google team" could "connect on vaccine communications – specifically misinformation…." Fauci Ex. 56, at 2. Routh then added Courtney Billet ("director of the Office of Communications and Government Relations at NIAID") and two other senior NIAID officials to the communications chain with YouTube. Fauci Ex. 56, at 1.

823. Likewise, in response to a third-party subpoena, Twitter has disclosed that Dina Perry, a Public Affairs Specialist for NIAID, communicates or has communicated with Twitter about misinformation and censorship. Jones Decl., Ex. F, at 1.

824. NIAID did not disclose Dina Perry in response to interrogatories seeking the identities of NIAID officials who communicate with social-media platforms about misinformation, disinformation, and censorship. Scully Ex. 12, at 17-18.

825. Dr. Fauci testified that he has never "contacted a social media company and asked them to remove misinformation from one of their platforms." Fauci Dep. 151:21-24 ("No, I have not."). He also testified that no one on his staff at NIAID has "ever reached out to a social media platform to ask them to take content down or to block content in any way. Id. at 152:7-15 ("To my knowledge, no."). In light of the repeated attempts of Dr. Fauci's staff to have content related to Dr. Fauci removed from social media, Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

E. CDC and NIH Procure the Censorship of Speech on Ivermectin.

826. On September 13, 2021, Facebook emailed Carol Crawford of the CDC to ask the CDC to identify whether the claim that "Ivermectin is effective in treating COVID" is "false, and if believed, could contribute to people refusing the vaccine or self-medicating," which were the qualifications for censoring that claim on Facebook's platforms. Fauci Ex. 58, at 2. Facebook noted that it was currently rating this claim as "not false," i.e., Facebook was not censoring the claim that Ivermectin is effective in treating COVID-19, because there was "no consensus" of its efficacy for treatment. Id. at 3.

827. The next day, the CDC responded, advising Facebook that the claim that "Ivermectin is effective in treating COVID" is "NOT ACCURATE" (bold and italics in original) and thus should be censored on Facebook's platforms. Fauci Ex. 58, at 1. To support this claim, the CDC cited NIH's "Ivermectin | COVID-19 Treatment Guidelines." Id. Thus, the CDC cited the NIH's treatment guidelines for Ivermectin as authority to urge Facebook to censor claims about using Ivermectin to treat COVID-19. Id. CDC also cited NIH to call for the censorship of two related claims about Ivermectin, and noted that "[t]hese responses are based on the independent advice of … NIH," which had "opined that there are not data that indicate ivermectin is effective in the ways described above." Id.

F. Dr. Fauci's Double Standard on Acceptable Speech: Mask Mandates.

828. "Sylvia Burwell is the former Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services [under President Obama] and the current president of American University." Fauci Dep. 313:9-11. "Sylvia has, over the past couple of years, asked [Dr. Fauci] advice about personal safety during the COVID-19 pandemic." Id. at 313:17-19.

829. On February 4, 2020, Sylvia Burwell wrote Dr. Fauci an email stating that she was traveling and wondering if she should wear a mask in the airport. Fauci Dep. 313:21-314:5; see also Jones Decl., Ex. EE, at 1. Dr. Fauci responded, stating: "Masks are really for infected people to prevent them from spreading infection to people who are not infected, rather than protecting uninfected people from acquiring infection. The typical mask you buy in the drugstore is not really effective in keeping out virus, which is small enough to pass through material. … I do not recommend that you wear a mask…." Fauci Dep. 314:9-19; see also Jones Decl., Ex. EE, at 1.

830. Dr. Fauci agrees that he "made several statements that are similar to that at that time frame." Fauci Dep. 315:12-14.

831. He states that, at that time, there were "no studies" on the efficacy of masking to stop the spread of COVID-19. Id. at 316:8-13.

832. In fact, on March 31, 2020, Dr. Fauci forwarded studies showing that masking is ineffective. Fauci Dep. 318:24-319:7.

833. Dr. Fauci's position on masking dramatically changed by April 3, 2020, when he became an advocate for universal mask mandates. Id. at 317:14-20.

834. Dr. Fauci states that his position on masking changed in part because "[e]vidence began accumulating that masks actually work in preventing acquisition and transmission." Fauci Dep. 317:5-6.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

835. Dr. Fauci was asked to identify any studies that were done between February 2020 and April 3, 2020, that supported his change of position on the efficacy of masking, and he could not identify any. Id. at 318:8-10.

836. Dr. Fauci was asked if there were any "placebo-based, double-blind, randomized studies of the efficacy of masking that were done between February and April 2020," and he could not identify any. Id. at 322:1-5. In fact, it is obvious that there were none.

837. Dr. Fauci's position on masking, therefore, directly contradicts his insistence on randomized, double-blind, placebo-based clinical trials for alternative COVID-19 treatments like hydroxychloroquine and ivermectin. At best, Dr. Fauci's dramatic change in position on masking was based on observational studies—the same kind of studies that he dismissed, in the very same time frame, as inadequate to support the use of hydroxychloroquine to treat COVID-19. At worst, it was based on no evidence at all—and Dr. Fauci identified none.

838. Dr. Fauci believes it can be dangerous to give ordinary people access to scientific information: "If information is clearly inadequate and statistically not sound, there can be a danger in people who don't have the ability or the experience of being able to understand that it's a flawed study." Id. at 323:5-9.

839. Dr. Fauci believes that it is "disturbing" when "unwitting" people believe what he thinks is misinformation: "I think honest debate is important, but when it goes beyond debate and leads people who are unwitting about these things to do things that are clearly detrimental to their life and their safety, I find that disturbing." Id. at 358:13-17.

G. Dr. Fauci and the White House Cause the Censorship of Alex Berenson.

840. Alex Berenson is a former New York Times science reporter and prominent critic of government messaging about COVID-19 vaccines who was deplatformed from Twitter on

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

August 28, 2021, after months of pressure from White House and federal officials. Fauci Ex. 59, at 4.

841. As Berenson notes: "On July 16, 2021, President Biden complained publicly that social media companies were 'killing people' by encouraging vaccine hesitancy. A few hours after Biden's comment, Twitter suspended by account for the first time." Fauci Ex. 59, at 4.

842. Dr. Fauci, who was then Chief Medical Advisor to President Biden, played a key role in procuring the censorship of Alex Berenson. Shortly before President Biden's comments, Dr. Fauci engaged in public attacks on Alex Berenson in attempt to discredit him and silence his government-skeptical opinions.

843. On July 11, 2021, appearing on CNN's "State of the Union," Dr. Fauci described Alex Berenson's comments on vaccine skepticism as "horrifying." Fauci Ex. 60, at 1. Responding to applause for a speech given by Berenson at a conference, Dr. Fauci stated: "It's horrifying. I mean, they are cheering about someone saying that it's a good thing for people not to try and save their lives." Id. In response to Berenson's views, Dr. Fauci stated, "it's almost frightening to say, … we don't want you to do something to save your life." Id. Dr. Fauci also stated, "I don't think that anybody who is thinking clearly can get that." Id.

844. Dr. Fauci's public comments as the President's Chief Medical Advisor specifically criticizing Alex Berenson were made at a time when other White House officials like Andrew Slavitt were privately pressuring Twitter to deplatform Berenson since April 21, 2020. See, e.g., Fauci Ex, 58, at 7 (internal Twitter communications on April 22, 2020, indicating that White House officials "had one really tough question about why Alex Berenson hasn't been kicked off from the platform," and "yes, they really wanted to know about Alex Berenson. Andy Slavitt suggested they had seen data vis that had showed he was the epicenter of disinfo that radiated outwards to the persuadable public.").

845. Dr. Fauci does not deny that he may have discussed Alex Berenson with other White House or federal officials, but claims he does not recall whether he did so. Fauci Dep. 343:16-23.

846. Dr. Fauci believes that misinformation and disinformation "contribute to the deaths" of people: "misinformation and disinformation, particularly that encourages people to avoid lifesaving interventions, can certainly result in the unnecessary death of people whose lives would have been saved. So when misinformation and disinformation leads people to avoid a lifesaving intervention, that is equivalent to contributing to the death of that person." Id. at 345:8-15. "I do feel strongly that misinformation and disinformation, when it leads to people avoiding lifesaving interventions, can be deadly. Id. at 346:1-3.

847. Dr. Fauci also believes that misinformation and disinformation on social media are "contrary to public health" and "the enemy of public health": "If social media is propagating disinformation that leads to the death of people by encouraging them to avoid lifesaving interventions, I believe that's contrary to public health." Id. at 346:5-7, 346:10-13.

848. Dr. Fauci admits that it is "certainly possible" that he discussed the view that "disinformation or misinformation on social media platforms are killing people" with others in the federal government, but claims he cannot remember whether he did so. Id. at 345:3-25.

849. Dr. Fauci testified that the first time he heard of Alex Berenson was when Berenson publicly claimed that the White House demanded that Twitter deplatform him in 2022: "it's the person who says that the White House demanded Twitter ban me months before the company did so. I had never heard of who Alex Berenson was before this … I don't even know who he is." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

at 335:1-7. In light of Dr. Fauci's public attacks on Alex Berenson in 2021, this testimony is not credible.

850. Former FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb also emailed Twitter to pressure them to remove Alex Berenson's content, invoking Dr. Fauci in his email. Sending Twitter a link to a post by Berenson entitled "The Arrogance of Dr. Fauci," Gottlieb wrote: "This is why Tony needs a security detail," Fauci Ex. 62, at 1—thus implying that Berenson's criticism of Dr. Fauci was endangering Dr. Fauci's life.

851. Dr. Fauci does not deny that he may have discussed this issue with Gottlieb before Gottlieb sent this email to Twitter, but he claims he does not recall whether he did so. Fauci Dep. 349:7-19, 352:12-18.

852. After testifying over 200 times during his deposition that he could not remember or could not recall events related to the case, Dr. Fauci was shown an email chain between him and Dr. Ezekial Emanuel from May 2, 2020 that had no direct connection to issues in the case. Fauci Ex 63. Unlike his convenient lack of memory as to case-related communications, Dr. Fauci was immediately able to provide a detailed, specific account of the context and communications with Dr. Emanuel relating to that email chain. Fauci Dep. 353:20-354:16.

VI. The FBI's Censorship Campaign of Pressure and Deception.

853. In parallel with the censorship of health "misinformation" and related issues achieved by the White House, the CDC, Surgeon General Murthy, Dr. Fauci, and others, see supra Parts I-V, federal national-security and law-enforcement agencies flex their considerable muscle to pressure and induce social-media platforms to censor disfavored speech and viewpoints about elections and other topics. The FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force (FITF) and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency's (CISA) "Mis, Dis, and Malinformation Team" play key roles

'disinformation' line—even as they admitted they had no evidence. Th[e] result was a blackout of the Hunter news, except in a few places…." Id. Parroting the Biden campaign's false line, both social media platforms and major news organizations treated the story as "disinformation" and aggressively censored it.

137. In early 2022—over a year and a half later—major news organizations finally admitted that the Hunter Biden laptop story was truthful and rested on reliable sourcing and information. Id. The Washington Post and the New York Times quietly acknowledged the truth and reliability of the story "17 months" later, in mid-March 2022. Id.

138. Free-speech advocate Glenn Reynolds aptly described this embarrassing episode as one that permanently damaged the credibility and reputation for fairness of social-media platforms and major media outlets: "Twitter and other tech giants banned The Post's reporting, since admitted to be accurate, on Hunter Biden's laptop and the damaging information it contained. Many social-media giants banned any links to the story, and Twitter even went so far as to stop its users from sharing the story one-on-one through direct messages. (CEO Jack Dorsey later admitted that was a 'total mistake.') Their purpose was to affect the election's outcome in favor of the Democrats, and they probably did." Glenn H. Reynolds, 'Censorship is free speech' is the establishment's Orwellian line on Elon Musk's Twitter crusade, N.Y. 2. Speech about the lab-leak theory of COVID-19's origins.

139. Likewise, beginning in February 2020, social-media platforms censored speech advocating for the lab-leak theory of the origins of SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19. The lab-leak theory postulates that the virus did not originate naturally in bats or other animals, but leaked from a biotech laboratory in Wuhan, China, operated by the Wuhan Institute of Virology.

140. On information and belief, Defendant Dr. Anthony Fauci, a senior federal government official, coordinating with others, orchestrated a campaign to discredit the lab-leak hypothesis in early 2020. As director of NIAID, Dr. Fauci had funded risky "gain-of-function" research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology through intermediaries such as EcoHealth Alliance, headed by Dr. Peter Daszak. Thus, if the lab-leak theory were established, Dr. Fauci and Dr. Daszak could be potentially implicated in funding the research on viruses that caused the COVID-19 pandemic and killed millions of people worldwide.

141. During the same time frame as he was orchestrating a campaign to falsely discredit the lab-leak theory, Dr. Fauci was exchanging emails with Mark Zuckerberg, the CEO of Facebook, regarding public messaging and the dissemination of COVID-19 information on social-media. On information and belief, Dr. Fauci coordinated directly with Facebook and/or other social-media firms to suppress disfavored speakers and content of speech on social media.

142. Not surprisingly, social-media platforms like Facebook promptly accepted Dr. Fauci's initiative to discredit the lab-leak theory, and they engaged in an aggressive campaign to censor speech advocating for the lab-leak theory on social media on the ground that it was supposedly disinformation. Facebook "expand[ed] its content moderation on Covid-19 to include 'false' and 'debunked' claims such as that 'COVID-19 is man-made or manufactured.'" Editorial Board, Facebook's Lab-Leak About-Face, WALL ST. J. (May 27, 2021), https://www.wsj.com/articles/facebooks-lab-leak-about-face-11622154198. This included suppressing speech by highly credentialed and well-respected writers, such as "science journalist

Nicholas Wade," id., and scientist Alina Chan. Other social-media platforms likewise censored speech advocating for the lab-leak hypothesis.

143. By 2021, however, "the circumstantial evidence" favoring the lab-leak theory "finally permeated the insular world of progressive public health," id., and Fauci and other Biden Administration officials were forced to admit the theory's inherent plausibility. After a long period of censorship, in May 2021, Facebook and other platforms announced that they would no longer censor social-media speech advocating for the lab-leak theory.

144. The Wall Street Journal noted the close link between government and social-media platforms in censoring this speech: "Facebook acted in lockstep with the government," indicating that "[w]hile a political or scientific claim is disfavored by government authorities, Facebook will limit its reach. When government reduces its hostility toward an idea, so will Facebook." Id. "Free speech protects the right to challenge government. But instead of acting as private actors with their own speech rights, the companies are mandating conformity with existing government views." Id.

145. There had long been credible—even compelling—evidence of the plausibility of the lab-leak theory, long before social-media companies stopped censoring it. See, e.g., House Foreign Affairs Committee Minority Staff Report, The Origins of COVID-19: An Investigation of the Wuhan Institute of Virology (Aug. 2021), https://gop-foreignaffairs.house.gov/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/ORIGINS-OF-COVID-19-REPORT.pdf (detailing evidence available long before censorship lifted); Nicholas Wade, The origin of COVID: Did people or nature open Pandora's box at Wuhan?, BULL. monikers "misinformation," "disinformation," and/or "malinformation." Their standard tactic is to label speech that contradicts their preferred political narratives "misinformation," "disinformation," and "malinformation" to justify suppressing it. Other common buzzwords include calls for a "healthy information ecosystem," "healthy information environment," or "healthy news environment," among others. This is the Orwellian vocabulary of censorship. It is deployed aggressively to undermine fundamental First Amendment rights.

203. As noted above, these labels have proven extremely unreliable. Defendants' and the political Left's ability to accurately identify "misinformation" and "disinformation" is unreliable because they apply such labels, not based on actual truth or falsity, but based on their current preferred political narrative. This has resulted, again and again, in the suppression of truthful information under the name of "disinformation" and "misinformation."

3. White House and HHS officials collude with social-media firms to suppress speech.

204. Before the Biden Administration took office, on information and belief, coordination and collusion between senior HHS officials and social-media companies to censor viewpoints and speakers was already underway. Once in office, senior officials in the Biden Administration—in the White House, in HHS, and elsewhere—capitalized and greatly expanded on these efforts.

205. On information and belief, beginning on or around January or February 2020, if not before, Defendant Dr. Anthony Fauci, a senior federal government official, coordinated with social-media firms to police and suppress speech regarding COVID-19 on social media.

206. Prior to 2020, as head of NIAID, Dr. Fauci had overseen funding of risky gain-of-function research on viruses, including research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology. This included research funded through intermediaries such as Dr. Peter Daszak and the EcoHealth Alliance, among others.

207. In late January and early February 2020, Dr. Fauci received information from colleagues that suggested that the COVID-19 virus may have originated in a laboratory in Wuhan, China. This revelation threatened to implicate Dr. Fauci in the virus's origins, as he had funded the risky research that, under this theory, led to the virus's origin. Soon thereafter, Dr. Fauci participated in a conference call with scientists and science-funding authorities intended to discredit and suppress this lab-leak theory. After the conference call, influential individuals signed public statements that were placed in science journals in attempt to discredit the lab-leak theory.

208. In the same time frame, Dr. Fauci communicated with Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg directly regarding public messaging and the flow of information on social media about the government's COVID-19 response. For example, in a series of emails produced in response to FOIA requests dated from March 15 to 17, 2020, Zuckerberg invited Fauci to make public statements to be posted for viewing by all Facebook users regarding COVID-19, and also made another proposal that is redacted in FOIA-produced versions but was treated as a high priority by Fauci and NIH staff.

209. In an email on March 15, 2020, Zuckerberg proposed coordinating with Fauci on COVID-19 messaging to "make sure people can get authoritative information from reliable sources," and suggested including a video message from Fauci because "people trust and want to hear from experts." Zuckerberg proposed including this content in a "hub" that "we're going to put at the top of Facebook" to reach "200+ million Americans, 2.5 billion people worldwide."

210. In the same email, Zuckerberg made a three-line proposal to Fauci that was redacted by the federal government before the email was produced in a FOIA request.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

211. The next day, NIH's communications director emailed Fauci and strongly recommended that he do the videos for Facebook. Regarding the redacted proposal from Zuckerberg, she stated: "But an even bigger deal is his offer [REDACTED]. The sooner we get that offer up the food-chain the better." She also stated that her staff was "standing by to discuss this with HHS and WH comms," and requested authority to "determine who the best point of contact would be so the Administration can take advantage of this officer, soonest." Fauci responded that "I will write or call Mark and tell him that I am interested in doing this. I will then tell him that you will get for him the name of the USG [on information and belief, shorthand for "U.S. Government"] point of contact."

212. Fauci responded by email to Zuckerberg on March 17, 2020, agreeing to the collaboration that Zuckerberg proposed and describing his redacted proposal as "very exciting."

213. As alleged above, around the same time frame as the Zuckerberg-Fauci emails, Facebook and other social-media companies censored and suppressed speakers and speech advocating for the lab-leak theory of COVID-19's origins, despite the overwhelming circumstantial evidence favoring that theory. This censorship directly implemented the plan, orchestrated by Fauci and others in early 2020, to discredit and suppress the lab-leak theory.

214. In the same timeframe, Facebook and other social-media companies began an ever-increasing campaign of monitoring, censorship, and suppression of speech and speakers about COVID-19 and issues related to COVID-19. This campaign would dramatically escalate with the advent of the Biden Administration.

215. On information and belief, those firms coordinated directly with Fauci, CDC, and other government officials regarding censorship and suppression of disfavored speech and speakers.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

216. For example, Facebook's "COVID and Vaccine Policy" states that Facebook "does not allow false claims about the vaccines or vaccination programs which public health experts have advised us could lead to COVID-19 vaccine rejection." Facebook, COVID-19 and Vaccine Policy Updates & Protections, https://www.facebook.com/help/230764881494641 (emphasis added). On information and belief, Fauci and CDC officials are included among those "public health experts" who "advise[]" Facebook on what to censor. Facebook also censors COVID-19 information as "false," not based on actual truth or falsity, but based on whether the claim contradicts or challenges the pronouncements of Fauci and the CDC. Id. This includes strongly supported claims such as "[c]laims that wearing a face mask properly does not help prevent the spread of COVID-19," along with an elaborate list of additional disfavored content and viewpoints subject to censorship. Id.

217. On information and belief, other social-media firms have similar policies and similar practices of coordinating with Fauci and the CDC and with each other, directly or indirectly, on the suppression of disfavored speakers and speech.

218. Such collusion between HHS officials and social-media companies on the censorship of disfavored speakers and speech accelerated once the Biden Administration took office.

219. On May 5, 2021, Defendant Psaki gave a White House press conference at which she stated that "[t]he President's view is that the major platforms have a responsibility related to the health and safety of all Americans to stop amplifying untrustworthy content, disinformation, and misinformation, especially related to COVID-19, vaccinations, and elections. And we've seen that over the past several months, broadly speaking…. we've seen it from a number of sources." response, Twitter stated that at least some of the examples had been "reviewed and actioned."[295] Crawford understood that she was flagging posts for Twitter for possible censorship.[296]

Twitter additionally offered to enroll CDC officials in its "Partner Support Portal" to provide expedited review of content flagged for censorship.[297] Crawford asked for instructions of how to enroll in the Partnership Support Portal and provided her personal Twitter account to enroll. Crawford was fully enrolled on May 27, 2021.[298] Census Bureau contractor Christopher Lewitzke ("Lewitzke") also requested to enroll in the Partner Support Portal.[299]

Crawford also sent Twitter a BOLO for the alleged misinterpretation of a CDC lab report.[300]

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1) Dr. Fauci had been the director of the NIAID for over thirty-eight years and became Chief Medical Advisor to the President in early 2021.[305] Dr. Fauci retired December 31, 2022.

1. Lab-Leak Theory

Plaintiffs set forth arguments that because NIAID had funded "gain-of-function"[306] research at Dr. Fauci's direction at the Wuhan Institute of Virology ("Wuhan lab") in Wuhan, China, Dr. Fauci sought to suppress theories that the SARS-CoV2 virus leaked from the Wuhan lab.[307]

(1) Plaintiffs allege that Dr. Fauci's motive for suppressing the lab-leak theory was a fear that Dr. Fauci and NIAID could be blamed for funding gain-of-function research that created the COVID-19 pandemic. Plaintiffs allege Dr. Fauci participated in a secret call with other scientists on February 1, 2020, and convinced the scientists (who were proponents of the lab-leak theory) to change their minds and advocate for the theory that the COVID-19 virus originated naturally.[308] A few days after the February 1, 2020 call, a paper entitled "The Proximal Origin of COVID-19" was published by Nature Medicine on March 17, 2020. The article concludes that SARS-CoV2 was not created in a lab but rather was naturally occurring.

On February 2, 2020, Dr. Fauci told the other scientists that "given the concerns of so many people and the threat of further distortions on social media it is essential that we move quickly. Hopefully, we can get the WHO to convene."[309] Dr. Fauci emailed Dr. Tedros of the WHO and two senior WHO officials, urging WHO to quickly establish a working group to address the lab-leak theory. Dr. Fauci stated they should "appreciate the urgency and importance of this issue given the gathering internet evident in the science literature and in mainstream and social media to the question of the origin of this virus." Dr. Fauci also stated WHO needed to "get ahead of …the narrative of this and not reacting to reports which could be very damaging."[310] Numerous drafts of "The Proximal Origin of COVID-19" were sent to Dr. Fauci to review prior to the article being published in Nature Medicine.[311]

(2) On February 9, 2020, in a joint podcast with Dr. Peter Daszak of the Eco Health Alliance,[312] both Drs. Fauci and Daszak discredited the lab-leak theory, calling it a "conspiracy theory."[313]

(3) Three authors of "The Proximal Origins of SARS-CoV2," Robert Garry, Kristian Anderson, and Ian Lipkin, received grants from NIH in recent years.[314]

(4) After "The Proximal Origins of SARS-CoV2" was completed and published in Nature Medicine, Dr. Fauci began discrediting the lab-leak theory. "This study leaves little room to refute a natural original for COVID-19." "It's a shining object (lab-leak theory) that will go away in times."[315]

At an April 17, 2020 press conference, when asked about the possibility of a lab-leak, Dr. Fauci stated, "There was a study recently that we can make available to you, where a group of highly qualified evolutionary virologists looked at the sequences there and the sequences in bats as they evolve. And the mutations that it took to get to the point where it is now is totally consistent with jump of a species from animal to a human."[316] "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV2" has since become one of the most widely read papers in the history of science.[317]

(5) Twitter and Facebook censored the lab-leak theory of COVID-19.[318] However, Dr. Fauci claims he is not aware of any suppression of speech about the lab-leak theory on social media, and he claims he does not have a Twitter or Facebook account.[319]

(6) On March 15, 2020, Zuckerberg sent Dr. Fauci an email asking for coordination between Dr. Fauci and Facebook on COVID-19 messaging. Zuckerberg asked Dr. Fauci to create a video to be used on Facebook's Coronavirus Information Hub, with Dr. Fauci answering COVID-19 health questions, and for Dr. Fauci to recommend a "point person" for the United States Government "to get its message out over the platform."[320]

Dr. Fauci responded the next day to Zuckerberg saying, "Mark your idea and proposal sounds terrific," "would be happy to do a video for your hub," and "your idea about PSAs is very exciting." Dr. Fauci did three live stream Facebook Q&A's about COVID-19 with Zuckerberg.[321]

2. Hydroxychloroquine

Plaintiffs further allege the NIAID and Dept. of HHS Defendants suppressed speech on hydroxychloroquine. On May 22, 2020, The Lancet published an online article entitled "Hydroxychloroquine or chloroquine with or without a macrolide for treatment of COVID-19: a multi-national registry analysis."[322] The article purported to analyze 96,032 patients to compare persons who did and did not receive this treatment. The study concluded that hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine were associated with decreased in-hospital survival and an increased frequency of ventricular arrhythmias when used for treatment of COVID-19.[323]

Dr. Fauci publicly cited this study to claim that "hydroxychloroquine is not effective against coronavirus."[324] He then publicly began to discredit COVID-19 treatment with hydroxychloroquine and stated whether the treatment of COVID-19 by hydroxychloroquine was effective could only be judged by rigorous, randomized, double-blind, placebo-based studies. He testified the same on July 31, 2020, before the House Select Subcommittee on Coronavirus Crisis.[325]

(2) When America's Frontline Doctors held a press conference criticizing the Government's response to the COVID-19 pandemic and spouting the benefits of hydroxychloroquine in treating the coronavirus,[326] Dr. Fauci made statements on Good Morning America[327] and on Andrea Mitchell Reports[328] that hydroxychloroquine is not effective in treating the coronavirus. Social-media platforms censored the America's Frontline Doctors videos. Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube removed the video.[329] Dr. Fauci does not deny that he or his staff at NIAID may have communicated with social-media platforms, but he does not specifically recall it.[330]

Oxford. The GBD is a one-page treatise opposing reliance on lockdowns and advocating for an approach to COVID-19 called "focused protection."[331] It criticized the social distancing and lockdown approaches endorsed by government experts. The authors expressed grave concerns about physical and mental health impacts of current government COVID-19 lockdown policies and called for an end to lockdowns.[332]

(2) On October 8, 2020, Dr. Francis Collins emailed Dr. Fauci (and Cliff Lane) stating:

> Hi Tony and Cliff, See https://gbdeclaration.org/. This proposal from the three fringe epidemiologists who met with the Secretary seems to be getting a lot of attention – and even a co-signature from Nobel Prize winner Mike Leavitt at Stanford. There needs to be a quick and devastating published take down of its premises. I don't see anything like that online yet- is it underway? Francis.[333]

The same day, Dr. Fauci wrote back to Dr. Collins stating, "Francis: I am pasting in below a piece from Wired that debunks this theory. Best, Tony."[334]

Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins followed up with a series of public media statements attacking the GBD. In a Washington Post story run on October 14, 2020, Dr. Collins described the GBD and its authors as "fringe" and "dangerous."[335] Dr. Fauci consulted with Dr. Collins before he talked to the Washington Post.[336] Dr. Fauci also endorsed these comments in an email to Dr. Collins, stating "what you said was entirely correct."[337]

On October 15, 2020, Dr. Fauci called the GBD "nonsense" and "dangerous."[338] Dr. Fauci specifically stated, "Quite frankly that is nonsense, and anybody who knows anything about epidemiology will tell you that is nonsense and very dangerous."[339] Dr. Fauci testified "it's possible that" he coordinated with Dr. Collins on his public statements attacking the GBD.[340]

(3) Social-media platforms began censoring the GBD shortly thereafter. In October 2020, Google de-boosted the search results for the GBD so that when Google users googled "Great Barrington Declaration," they would be diverted to articles critical of the GBD, and not to the GBD itself.[341] Reddit removed links to the GBD.[342] YouTube updated its terms of service regarding medical "misinformation," to prohibit content about vaccines that contradicted consensus from health authorities.[343] Because the GBD went against a consensus from health authorities, its content was removed from YouTube. Facebook adopted the same policies on misinformation based upon public health authority recommendations.[344] Dr. Fauci testified that he could not recall anything about his involvement in seeking to squelch the GBD.[345]

(4) NIAID and NIH staff sent several messages to social-media platforms asking them to remove content lampooning or criticizing Dr. Fauci. When a Twitter employee reached out to CDC officials asking if a particular account associated with Dr. Fauci was "real or not,"[346] Scott Prince of NIH responded, "Fake/Imposter handle. PLEASE REMOVE!!!"[347] An HHS official then asked Twitter if it could "block" similar parody accounts: "Is there anything else you can also do to block other variations of his (Dr. Fauci's) name from impersonation so we don't have this

On April 21, 2020, Judith Lavelle of NIAID emailed Facebook, copying Scott Prince of NIH and Jennifer Routh ("Routh"), and stated, "We wanted to flag a few more fake Dr. Fauci accounts on FB and IG for you I have reported them from NIAID and my personal FB account."[350] Both Lavelle and Routh are members of Dr. Fauci's communications staff.[351] Six of the eight accounts listed were removed by Facebook on the same day.[352]

(5) On October 30, 2020, a NIAID staffer wrote an email connecting Google/YouTube with Routh, "so that NIAID and the 'Google team' could connect on vaccine communications-specifically misinformation.'"[353] Courtney Billet ("Billet"), director of the Office of Communications and Government Relations of NIAID, was added by Routh, along with two other NIAID officials, to a communications chain with YouTube.[354] Twitter disclosed that Dina Perry ("Perry"), a Public Affairs Specialist for NIAID, communicates or has communicated with Twitter about misinformation and censorship.[355]

(6) Dr. Fauci testified that he has never contacted a social-media company and asked them to remove misinformation from one of their platforms.[356]

4. Ivermectin

(8) On September 13, 2021, Facebook emailed Carol Crawford of the CDC to ask whether the claim that "Ivermectin is effective in treating COVID is false, and if believed, could

5. Mask Mandates

(9) Plaintiffs maintain that Dr. Fauci initially did not believe masks worked, but he changed his stance. A February 4, 2020 email, in which Dr. Fauci responded to an email from Sylvia Burwell, stated, "the typical mask you buy in a drugstore is not really effective in keeping out the virus, which is small enough to pass through mankind."[360] Dr. Fauci stated that, at that time, there were "no studies" on the efficacy of masking to stop the spread.[361] On March 31, 2020, Dr. Fauci forwarded studies showing that masking is ineffective.[362]

Plaintiffs allege that Dr. Fauci's position on masking changed dramatically on April 3, 2020, when he became an advocate for universal mask mandates.[363] Dr. Fauci testified his position changed in part because "evidence began accumulating that masks actually work in preventing acquisition and transmission,"[364] although Dr. Fauci could not identify those studies.[365]

6. Alex Berenson

Alex Berenson ("Berenson") was a former New York Times Science reporter and critic of government messaging about COVID-19 vaccines. He was de-platformed from Twitter on August 28, 2021.[366]

Dr. Fauci had previously sought to discredit Berenson publicly during an interview with CNN.[367] Dr. Fauci does not deny that he may have discussed Berenson with White House or federal officials, but does not recall specifically whether he did so.[368]

E. FBI Defendants[369]

(1) The deposition of Elvis Chan ("Chan") was taken on November 29, 2021.[370] Chan is the Assistant Special Agent in charge of the Cyber Branch for the San Francisco Division of the FBI.[371] In this role, Chan was one of the primary people communicating with social-media platforms about disinformation on behalf of the FBI. There are also other agents on different cyber squads, along with the FBI's private sector engagement squad, who relay information to social-media platforms.[372]

Chan graduated from the Naval Postgraduate School in 2020 with a M.A. in Homeland Security Studies.[373] His thesis was entitled, "Fighting Bears and Trolls. An Analysis of Social Media Companies and U.S. Government Efforts to Combat Russian Influence Campaigns During the 2020 U.S. Elections."[374] His thesis focuses on information sharing between the FBI, Facebook,

STATE OF LOUISIANA, STATE OF MISSOURI, et al., Plaintiffs, v. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, JR., in his official capacity as President of the United States, et al., Defendants.	Case No. 3:22-cv-01213

PLAINTIFFS' PROPOSED FINDINGS OF FACT IN SUPPORT OF THEIR MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

PLAINTIFFS' PROPOSED FINDINGS OF FACT

Plaintiffs respectfully submit the following Proposed Findings of Fact as Exhibit 1 to their supplemental brief in support of a preliminary injunction. Plaintiffs incorporate by reference the evidence, documents, and exhibits previously filed in this case; where cited herein, they are cited by docket number (e.g. "Doc. 174-1, at 31" is page 31 of ECF No. 174-1). The deposition transcripts and exhibits to depositions are filed separately; they are cited herein as "[Witness Last Name] Dep. Page:Line," e.g., "Fauci Dep. 1:3-5" is lines 3-5 of page 1 of Dr. Fauci's deposition, and "Scully Dep. 10:22-11:5" is page 10, line 22 through page 11, line 5 of Brian Scully's deposition. Plaintiffs are also filing the video recordings of the depositions with the Court so that the Court may view the testimony of the Government's witnesses and assess the witnesses' credibility for itself. The Declaration of Jasimiel Jones, submitting supplemental exhibits in addition to the deposition and transcript and attached as Exhibit 2, is cited herein as "Jones Decl. Ex. __, at __" e.g., pages 1-3 of Exhibit A to the Jones Declaration is "Jones Decl. Ex. A, at 1-3." Plaintiffs' previously filed exhibits attached to the Declaration of Tammy Glenn, Doc. 10-1, are cited as "Glenn Decl. Ex. __, at __; Doc. 10-1, at __." In addition, these Findings regularly refer to the company formerly known as Facebook, now known as Meta, which owns Facebook, Instagram, WhatsApp, and other platforms, as "Facebook," consistent with common usage in documents.

I. The Campaign Of Public Threats Against Social-Media Platforms To Pressure Them To Censor More Speech on Social Media.

1. Federal officials, including Defendants, have made a long series of public statements since at least 2018 demanding that social-media platforms increase their censorship of speech and speakers disfavored by these officials, and threatening adverse consequences – such as repeal or reform of Section 230 immunity under the Communications Decency Act, antitrust scrutiny or enforcement, increased regulation, and other measures – if the platforms do not increase censorship. The private communications between government officials and social-media platforms addressing disinformation, misinformation, and censorship set forth herein were made against the backdrop of these public threats.

2. The immunity provided by Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act is extremely valuable for social-media platforms, so threatening to amend or repeal that immunity is highly motivating to them. One commentator has aptly described Section 230 immunity as "a hidden subsidy worth billions of dollars," stating: "Digital platforms enjoy a hidden subsidy worth billions of dollars by being exempted from any liability for most of the speech on their platforms (Section 230)." Glenn Decl. Ex. 11, Doc. 10-1 at 140. Another commentator has observed, "imperiling Section 230 is a fearsome cudgel against ever untouchable companies." Glenn Decl. Ex. 13, Doc. 10-1 at 206.

3. The threat of antitrust scrutiny or enforcement is also a major motivator to social-media platforms. For example, Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg has stated that the threat of antitrust enforcement is "an 'existential' threat" to his platform. Glenn Decl. Ex. 12, Doc. 10-1 at 202.

A. Threats From Federal Elected Officials Pressuring Platforms to Censor Speech.

4. Then-Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi stated on April 12, 2019: "I do think that for the privilege of 230, there has to be a bigger sense of responsibility on it. And it is not out of the question that that could be removed." Glenn Decl. Ex. 13, Doc. 10-1, at 205 ("When asked about Section 230, Pelosi referred to the law as a 'gift' to tech companies that have leaned heavily on the law to grow their business…. 'It is a gift to them and I don't think that they are treating it with the respect that they should, and so I think that that could be a question mark and in jeopardy… I do think that for the privilege of 230, there has to be a bigger sense of responsibility on it. And it is not out of the question that that could be removed.'").

5. Senator Richard Blumenthal stated on Nov. 17, 2020: "I have urged, in fact, a breakup of tech giants. Because they've misused their bigness and power. … And indeed Section 230 reform, meaningful reform, including even possible repeal in large part because their immunity is way too broad and victims of their harms deserve a day in court." Glenn Decl. Ex. 16, at 1; Doc. 10-1, at 225.

6. Senator Mazie Hirono tweeted on Feb. 5, 2021: "Sec 230 was supposed to incentivize internet platforms to police harmful content by users. Instead, the law acts as a shield allowing them to turn a blind eye. The SAFE TECH ACT brings 230 into the modern age and makes platforms accountable for the harm they cause." Glenn Decl. Ex. 55, at 1; Doc. 10-1, at 723.

7. Defendants' political allies have repeatedly used congressional hearings as forums to advance these threats of adverse legislation if social-media platforms do not increase censorship of speakers, speech, content, and viewpoints they disfavor. They have repeatedly used such hearings to berate social-media firm leaders, such as Mark Zuckerberg of Facebook, Jack Dorsey of Twitter, and Sundar Pichai of Google and YouTube, and to make threats of adverse legal consequences if censorship is not increased. Such hearings include, but are not limited to, an antitrust hearing before the House Judiciary Committee on July 29, 2020; a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on November 17, 2020; and a House Energy and Commerce Hearing on March 25, 2021.

8. The March 25, 2021 Joint Hearing of the Communications and Technology Subcommittee with the Subcommittee on Consumer Protection and Commerce, the Joint Statement of Democratic Committee Chairs stated: "This hearing will continue the Committee's work of holding online platforms accountable for the growing rise of misinformation and disinformation. ... For far too long, big tech has failed to acknowledge the role they've played in fomenting and elevating blatantly false information to its online audiences. Industry self-regulation has failed. We must begin the work of changing incentives driving social media companies to allow and even promote misinformation and disinformation." Glenn Decl. Ex. 17, at 1-2; Doc. 10-1, at 228-29.

9. At the same hearing, entitled "Disinformation Nation: Social Media's Role in Promoting Extremism and Misinformation," Representative Schakowsky stated: "[S]elf-regulation has come to the end of its road…. [Congress] is preparing to move forward with regulation and legislation. The regulation we seek … must hold platforms accountable when they are used to … spread misinformation…. All three of the companies that are here today run platforms that are hotbeds of misinformation and disinformation." Jones Decl., Ex. A, at 1, 5. She also stated: "Self-regulation has not worked. They must be held accountable for allowing misinformation and disinformation to spread." Id. at 7.

10. At the same hearing, Representative Doyle stated: "despite repeated promises to tackle this crisis, Facebook, Google, and Twitter instead routinely make minor changes in response to the public relations crisis of the day. … It is now painfully clear that neither the market nor public pressure will force these social media companies to take the aggressive action they need to take to eliminate disinformation and extremism from their platforms. And therefore, it is time for Congress and this committee to legislate and realign these companies' incentives. … I question whether existing liability protections [i.e., Section 230] should apply … That is why you are here today, Mr. Zuckerberg, Mr. Pichai, and Mr. Dorsey…. Your business model itself has become the problem." Id. at 10-11.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

11. At the same hearing, Representative Rush accused the platforms of allowing "[m]isinformation, outlandish conspiracy theories, and incendiary content" to spread, and stated to the three CEOs of Google, Facebook, and Twitter: "There is only one comparison that remotely approaches the avarice and moral discrepancy of your companies, and that is the slavetocracy burden of our Nation's shameful and inhumane and most difficult dark days in the past." Id. at 13. He also stated to Jack Dorsey, "I can't wait until we come up with legislation that will deal with you and your cohorts in a very, very effective way." Id. at 14.

12. At the same hearing, Representative Upton stated: "we are going to see some changes in Section 230." Id. at 15.

13. At the same hearing, Representative Eshoo demanded of Jack Dorsey, "why haven't you banned the 12 accounts that are spewing its deadly COVID misinformation?" Id. at 17.

14. At a hearing of the Antitrust subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee on July 29, 2020, Representative Cicilline said to Mark Zuckerberg: "Mr. Zuckerberg. When a television station runs a false political advertisement, they're held liable for that. Why should Facebook or any other platform be different? … It's hard to understand why Facebook shouldn't be responsible for those business decisions. … Facebook gets away with it because you're the only game in town. There's no competition forcing you to police your own platform. Allowing this misinformation to spread can lead to violence. And frankly, I believe it strikes at the very heart of American democracy. … American democracy has always been at war against monopoly power. … These companies, as exist today, have monopoly power. Some need to be broken up, all need to be properly regulated and held accountable. … The names have changed, but the story is the same. Today, the men are named Zuckerberg, Pichai, Cook, and Bezos." Jones Decl., Ex. B, at 9-11.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

15. On November 17, 2020, at a hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator Blumenthal stated: "Now, Mr. Zuckerberg and Mr. Dorsey, you have built terrifying tools of persuasion and manipulation with power far exceeding the robber barons of the last Gilded Age. You have profited hugely by … promoting hate speech and voter suppression. … The destructive incendiary misinformation is still a scourge on both your platforms and on others. … [W]hat appears on your platform … is voter suppression and incendiary malicious misinformation. … [A] series of hearings on big tech is long overdue on antitrust issues … and Section 230. I have urged, in fact, a breakup of the tech giants because they've misused their bigness and power. Breaking off, for example, WhatsApp and Instagram [both Meta platforms]…. And indeed Section 230 reform, meaningful reform, including even possible repeal in large part because their immunity is way too broad…. [F]oreign disinformation campaigns intended to interfere in our democracy…. What we've seen here are fighting words and hate speech that certainly deserve no free expression protection. … Change is going to come, no question. Change is on the way and I intend to bring aggressive and targeted reform to Section 230." Jones Decl., Ex. C, at 2-3. Soon thereafter, he demanded that Mark Zuckerberg (who was testifying before the committee) "commit to … robust contend modification playbook in this coming election, including fact-checking, labelling, reducting the spread of misinformation" to "tak[e] action against dangerous disinformation" and "malign tactics." Id. at 4; see also, e.g., id. at 9 (Senator Coons demanding that Jack Dorsey explain why "you don't have a standalone climate change misinformation policy")

16. On March 11, 2022, Representative Ro Khanna, the Chairman of the House Oversight and Reform Committee who is leading "an investigation of oil industry 'misinformation' and held two days of hearings on the oil industry, tweeted: "Facebook is preventing us from taking action on climate change by allowing climate misinformation to spread. Congress must step up and hold them accountable." Jones Decl., Ex. D. He also tweeted: "Misinformation being spread on social media is undermining our efforts to tackle climate change. As chair of the House Oversight Environment Subcommittee, I will be holding a hearing to hold social media companies accountable." Id.

17. On April 20, 2022, twenty-two Democratic members of Congress sent a letter to Mark Zuckerberg of Facebook (n/k/a "Meta Platforms, Inc."), demanding that Facebook increase censorship of "Spanish-language disinformation across its platforms" and threatening Congressional action if Facebook did not do so. The letter claimed that "disinformation" was a threat to democracy, and it made explicit threats of adverse legislative action if Facebook/Meta did not increase censorship: "The spread of these narratives demonstrate that Meta does not see the problem of Spanish-language disinformation in the United States as a critical priority for the health of our democracy. The lack of Meta's action to swiftly address Spanish-language misinformation globally demonstrates the need for Congress to act to ensure Spanish-speaking communities have fair access to trustworthy information." Glenn Decl. Ex. 18; Doc. 10-1, at 244-46.

18. Comments from two Members of the House of Representatives summarize this campaign of pressure and threats: "In April 2019, Louisiana Rep. Cedric Richmond warned Facebook and Google that they had 'better' restrict what he and his colleagues saw as harmful content or face regulation: 'We're going to make it swift, we're going to make it strong, and we're going to hold them very accountable.' New York Rep. Jerrold Nadler added: 'Let's see what happens by just pressuring them.'" Glenn Decl. Ex. 14, at 2-3; Doc. 10-1, at 218-19.

B. Public Threats from President Biden and His Aides Pressuring Platforms to Censor.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

19. Then-candidate and now-President Biden has led this charge. He has tripled down on these threats of adverse official action from his colleagues and allies in senior federal-government positions. His threats of adverse government action have been among the most vociferous, and among the most clearly linked to calls for more aggressive censorship of disfavored speakers and speech by social-media companies.

20. For example, on January 17, 2020, then-candidate Biden stated, in an interview with the New York Times editorial board, that Section 230 of the CDA should be "revoked" because social-media companies like Facebook did not do enough to censor supposedly false information in the form of political ads criticizing him—i.e., core political speech. He stated: "The idea that it's a tech company is that Section 230 should be revoked, immediately should be revoked, number one. For Zuckerberg and other platforms." He also stated, "And it should be revoked. It should be revoked because it is not merely an internet company. It is propagating falsehoods they know to be false.... There is no editorial impact at all on Facebook. None. None whatsoever. It's irresponsible. It's totally irresponsible." Glenn Decl. Ex. 19, at 27; Doc. 10-1, at 275.

21. Candidate Biden also threatened that Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg should be subject to civil liability and even criminal prosecution for not censoring such core political speech: "He should be submitted to civil liability and his company to civil liability…. Whether he engaged in something and amounted to collusion that in fact caused harm that would in fact be equal to a criminal offense, that's a different issue. That's possible. That's possible it could happen." Id. In other words, Biden's message—not long before he became President of the United States—was that if Facebook did not censor political ads against him, Zuckerberg should go to prison. These two threats echoed the same threats made by numerous political allies of the President since 2019, cited above.

22. During the presidential campaign, now-Vice President Harris made similar threats against social-media firms to pressure them to engage in more aggressive censorship of speakers, content, and viewpoints she disfavors. For example, in addition to the statements cited above, she stated in 2019: "We will hold social media platforms responsible for the hate infiltrating their platforms, because they have a responsibility to help fight against this threat to our democracy. And if you profit off of hate—if you act as a megaphone for misinformation or cyberwarfare, if you don't police your platforms—we are going to hold you accountable as a community." Glenn Decl. Ex. 20, at 1; Doc. 10-1, at 284.

23. In or around June 2020, the Biden campaign published an open letter and online petition (ironically, on Facebook) calling for Facebook to engage in more aggressive censorship of core political speech and viewpoints that then-Candidate Biden disfavored. The open letter complained that Facebook "continues to allow Donald Trump to say anything — and to pay to ensure that his wild claims reach millions of voters. Super PACs and other dark money groups are following his example. Trump and his allies have used Facebook to spread fear and misleading information about voting…. We call for Facebook to proactively stem the tide of false information by no longer amplifying untrustworthy content and promptly fact-checking election-related material that goes viral. We call for Facebook to stop allowing politicians to hide behind paid misinformation in the hope that the truth will catch up only after Election Day. There should be a two-week pre-election period during which all political advertisements must be fact-checked before they are permitted to run on Facebook. … Anything less will render Facebook a tool of misinformation that corrodes our democracy." Glenn Decl. Ex. 23, at 1; Doc. 10-1, at 299.

24. The online petition demanded that Facebook "[p]romote real news, not fake news," "[q]uickly remove viral misinformation," and "[e]nforce voter suppression rules against everyone—even the President [Trump]." Glenn Decl. Ex. 24, at 2; Doc. 10-1, at 304. The petition complained that Facebook "continues to amplify misinformation and lets candidates pay to target and confuse voters with lies." Id. at 304. It demanded that Facebook "promote authoritative and trustworthy sources of election information, rather than rants of bad actors and conspiracy theorists," "promptly remove false, viral information," and "prevent political candidates and PACs from using paid advertising to spread lies and misinformation – especially within two weeks of election day." Id. at 305.

25. On September 28, 2020, the Biden-Harris campaign sent a letter to Facebook accusing it of propagating a "storm of disinformation" by failing to censor the Trump campaign's political speech, including social-media political ads. Glenn Decl. Ex. 25, at 3; Doc. 10-1, at 312. The letter accused Facebook of allowing "hyper-partisan" and "fantastical" speech to reach millions of people, and it demanded "more aggressive" censorship of Trump. Id.

26. On December 2, 2020—during the presidential transition—Biden's former chief of staff and top technical advisor, Bruce Reed, publicly stated that "it's long past time to hold the social media companies accountable for what's published on their platforms." Glenn Decl. Ex. 26, at 1; Doc. 10-1, at 314-15. This comment specifically referred to the amendment or repeal of Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act. See id. He also wrote: "Washington would be better off throwing out Section 230 and starting over." Id.

27. On July 16, 2021, President Biden stated that social-media companies are "killing people" by not censoring enough misinformation. Waldo Ex. 14, at 1.

28. On January 3, 2022, an audio clip of President Biden played on Alyssa Milano's podcast stated: "The unvaccinated are responsible for their own choices, but those choices had been shulled [sic] by dangerous misinformation on cable TV and social media. You know, these companies …

are making money by ped[dling] lies and allowing misinformation that can kill their own customers and their own supporters. It's wrong. It's immoral. I call on the purveyors of these lies and misinformation to stop it. Stop it now." Waldo Ex. 39, at 5 (Audio Tr. 4).

29. In September of 2022, the White House convened the "United We Stand" summit at which the President put social media companies on notice that Section 230 protections were at risk. "Tech platforms currently have special legal protections under Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act that broadly shield them from liability. This immunity extends beyond what the First Amendment requires and what newspapers and other media receive. It also effectively permits hate-fueled content mobilizing users to violence to be amplified on large tech platforms. President Biden has long urged fundamental reforms to Section 230, and …he reiterates his call for Congress to fundamentally reform Section 230." Jones Decl., Ex. E, at 9.

30. President Biden also stated in the same document: "Americans deserve to know how the algorithms that drive large tech platforms may amplify divisions and contribute to hate-fueled violence, among other critical harms. Consistent with those same principles for accountability, President Biden supports requiring platform transparency sufficient to allow the public and researchers to understand how and why such decisions are made, their potential effects on users, and the very real dangers these decisions may pose." Id. (emphasis added).

II. The White House's Public and Private Pressure Campaign on Platforms.

31. Many White House officials are involved in communicating with social-media platforms about misinformation, disinformation, and censorship. In response to a third-party subpoena, Facebook/Meta identified at least the following White House officials as engaged in such communications: Special Assistant to the President Laura Rosenberger, White House Partnerships Manager Aisha Shah, White House Counsel Dana Remus, and White House officials

Andy Slavitt, Rob Flaherty, and Clarke Humphrey. Doc. 84, ¶ 379. Defendants' discovery reveals many others. See infra.

32. In response to a third-party subpoena, YouTube identified White House officials Benjamin Wakana and Rob Flaherty as engaged in such communications, and Defendants' discovery reveals others. Doc. 84, ¶ 380. Defendants' discovery reveals others. See infra.

33. In response to a third-party subpoena, Twitter has disclosed the following White House officials as engaged in such communications: Deputy Assistant to the President and Director of Digital Strategy Rob Flaherty, White House Senior Advisor Andrew Slavitt, NSC staffer Katy E. Colas, Deputy Assistant to the President Joshua Geltzer, White House Digital Director Clarke Humphrey, Deputy Director of the Office of Digital Strategy Tericka Lambert, Press Secretary for the First Lady Michael LaRosa, NSC Director of Counterterrorism John Picarelli, Chief of Staff for the Office of Digital Strategy Hoor Qureshi, Director of Strategic Communications and Engagement Courtney Rowe, White House Associate Counsel Michael Posada, Associate Director for Communications Marissa Sanchez-Velasco, Deputy Director of Digital Strategy Christian Tom, and Strategic Director of Digital Communications Benjamin Wakana. Jones Decl., Ex. F, at 1. Defendants' discovery has revealed others. See infra.

A. Pressure in Private from Rob Flaherty, Andy Slavitt, and White House Officials.

34. The Biden White House's demands for censorship began almost immediately upon taking office. On January 23, 2021, three days after Inauguration Day, at 1:04 a.m., Clarke Humphrey of the White House emailed Twitter, copying Rob Flaherty, with the subject line: "Flagging Hank Aaron misinfo." Doc. 174-1, at 1. The email stated: "Hey folks – Wanted to flag the below tweet and am wondering if we can get moving on the process for having it removed ASAP." Id. Humphrey then linked to a Tweet by anti-vaccine activist Robert F. Kennedy Jr., who is also a principal target of the Virality Project and a member of the so-called "Disinformation Dozen." Id. Humphrey added: "And then if we can keep an eye out for tweets that fall in this same ~genre that would be great." Id.

35. "Flagging Hank Aaron misinfo" refers to the claim by anti-vaccine speakers that COVID-19 vaccines may have contributed to baseball legend Hank Aaron's death. See, e.g., https://www.usatoday.com/story/news/factcheck/2021/01/26/fact-check-hank-aaron-death-unlikely-result-covid-19-vaccine/6699577002/.

36. Twitter responded to Humphrey within 4 minutes, at 1:08 a.m. on January 23, 2021, stating: "Thanks. We recently escalated this." Doc. 174-1, at 2.

37. The White House's demands for censorship continued relentlessly, and their tone was arrogant, demanding, and peremptory. On Saturday night, February 6, 2021, at 9:45 p.m., Rob Flaherty emailed Twitter to demand the immediate removal of a parody or impostor account linked to Finnegan Biden, Hunter Biden's adult daughter. Doc. 174-1, at 4. He stated: "Please remove this account immediately." Id. He also stated: "I have tried using your form three times and it won't work—it is also ridiculous that I need to upload my id to a form [to] prove that I am an authorized representative of Finnegan Biden." Id.

38. Two minutes later, at 9:47 p.m., Twitter responded, "Thanks for sending this over. We'll escalate for further review from here." Id. Flaherty shot back, the same minute, "Cannot stress the degree to which this needs to be resolved immediately." Id. Forty-five minutes later, at 10:32 p.m., Twitter responded, "Update for you – account is now suspended." Id. at 3-4.

39. The next day, Sunday, Feb. 7, 2021, Twitter emailed Flaherty and described steps he could take to "streamline the process" for the White House's demands for Twitter censorship. Id. at 3. Twitter offered to enroll White House officials in Twitter's Partner Support Portal for expedited review of flagging content for censorship, recommending that Flaherty "Designate a list of authorized White House staff for Twitter's Partner Support Portal." Id. (bold in original). Twitter stated: "We sent over instructions about this on January 28th and also discussed this with Christian [Tom] during our call on February 4th. This is the same system we had in place for the previous two administrations for their support issues, as well as the transition and campaign teams. Once you assign and we enroll these authorized reporters, whenever they submit a ticket through the Help Center it will be prioritized automatically, without having to contact our team, and you won't need to add your personal information. To enroll your designated reporters to the Partner Support Portal, we simply need the list of @usernames (up to 10) that are registered with a White House email address." Id. at 3 (italics added; underlines omitted).

40. Twitter noted that it had been recently bombarded with such requests for censorship from the White House: "we would prefer to have a streamlined process strictly with your team as the internal liaison. That is the most efficient and effective way to ensure we are prioritizing requests. In a given day last week for example, we had more than four different people within the White House reaching out for issues." Id. at 3.

41. The next day, Monday, February 8, 2021, Facebook emailed Rob Flaherty, Courtney Rowe, and Clarke Humphrey of the White House to explain how it had recently expanded its COVID-19 censorship policies. Doc. 174-1, at 7-8. Facebook stated: "We wanted to make sure you saw our announcements today about running the largest worldwide campaign to promote authoritative COVID-19 vaccine information and expanding our efforts to remove false claims on Facebook and Instagram about COVID-19, COVID-19 vaccines and vaccines in general during the pandemic." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

42. Under the heading "Combating Vaccine Misinformation," Facebook provided a detailed list of expanded censorship policies: "We are expanding our efforts to remove false claims on Facebook and Instagram about COVID-19, COVID-19 vaccines and vaccines in general during the pandemic. Since December [i.e. during the Biden transition], we've removed false claims about COVID-19 vaccines that have been debunked by public health experts. … [W]e are expanding the list of false claims we will remove to include additional debunked claims about the coronavirus and vaccines. … Groups, Pages and accounts on Facebook and Instagram that repeatedly share these debunked claims may be removed altogether. We are also requiring some admins for groups with admins or members who have violated our COVID-19 policies to temporarily approve all posts within their group. …. On Instagram, in addition to surfacing authoritative results in Search, in the coming weeks we're making it harder to find accounts in search that discourage people from getting vaccinated…." Id. at 7-8 (bold in original).

43. This was not nearly enough for the White House. Within 19 minutes of receiving this email, Flaherty responded, pressing Facebook for more information about how strict the new policies are. Id. at 7. Quoting Facebook's email in italics, he wrote: "This line, of course, stands out: that repeatedly share these debunked claims may be removed altogether. Can you share more about your framework here? May, of course, is very different than 'will.' Is there a strike policy, ala Youtube? Does the severity of the claims matter?" Id. at 7. He also asked for specific data on the application of the censorship policies: "And as far as your removal of claims, do you have data on the actual number of claims - related posts you've removed? Do you have a sense of how many are being flagged versus how many are being removed? Are there actions (downranking, etc) that sit before removal? How are you handling things that are dubious, but not provably false?" Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

44. The next day, February 9, 2021, Flaherty followed up with Facebook with a demand for more information and an accusation (to be repeated) that Facebook's failure to censor speech on its platforms causes "political violence": "All, especially given the Journal's reporting on your internal work on political violence spurred by Facebook groups, I am also curious about the new rules as part of the 'overhaul.' I am seeing that you will no longer promote civic and health related groups, but I am wondering if the reforms here extend further? Are there other growth vectors you are controlling for?" Id. at 6. Flaherty suggested an oral meeting to discuss: "Happy to put time on the calendar to discuss further." Id.

45. Facebook responded on February 9, 2021, with a detailed answer to each of Flaherty's questions about the enforcement of its new policies. Id. at 5-6. Facebook also noted that "We are happy to discuss these and additional questions as per your recent note." Id. at 5. Among other things, Facebook reported that it would "suspend the entire Page, Group, or account" in case of repeat violations; that it "will begin enforcing this policy immediately," id. at 5; that for vaccine-skeptical content that does not violate Facebook's policies, Facebook will "reduce its distribution and add strong warning labels with more context, so fewer people see the post," id. at 6; and that Facebook was working to censor content that does not violate its policies in other ways by "prevent[ing] posts discouraging vaccines from going viral on our platforms; address[ing] content that experts believe dissuades people from getting the vaccine, but does not violate our misinformation policies, through the use of information labels; and prevent[ing] recommendations for Groups, Pages, and Instagram accounts that repeatedly push content discouraging vaccines," id. at 6.

46. Facebook advised Flaherty that it was relying on advice of "public health authorities" to determine its censorship policies: "In consultation with leading health organizations, we continuously expand the list of false claims that we remove about COVID-19 and vaccines during the pandemic. We remove claims public health authorities tell us have been debunked or are unsupported by evidence." Id. at 6 (emphasis added).

47. Facebook also promised Flaherty that it would aggressively enforce the new censorship policies: "We will begin enforcing this policy immediately, with a particular focus on Pages, Groups and accounts that violate these rules, and we'll continue to expand our enforcement over the coming weeks." Id. at 5.

48. Facebook then followed up to "see when you would like to have a meeting arranged to speak to our misinformation team reps about the latest updates. They also have a more detailed misinformation analysis prepared based on the discussions/questions from the previous meetings during the transition time period." Id. at 5.

49. This email makes clear that Flaherty, as part of the Biden transition team, had already engaged in "previous meetings" and "discussions/questions" with Facebook about censorship of COVID-19 misinformation on its platforms during the Presidential transition period from November 2020 to January 2021. Id.

50. On February 24, 2021, Facebook emailed Rob Flaherty with the subject "Misinfo Themes," stating: "Following up on your request for COVID-19 misinfo themes we are seeing. All the below claims violate our updated Covid and vaccine misinformation policies that we announced earlier this month, and we are removing these claims from our platforms," and she identified "Vaccine Toxicity," "False Claims About Side Effects of Vaccines," "Comparing the Covid Vaccine to the Flu Vaccine," and "Downplaying Severity of COVID-19." Jones Decl. Ex. G, at 1-2. Flaherty responded by inquiring for details about Facebook's actual enforcement practices and for a report on misinformation that was not censored: "Can you give us a sense of volume on these, and some metrics around the scale of removal for each? Can you also give us a sense of misinformation that might be falling outside your removal policies? Goes without saying, just because it's on your list for removal hasn't historically meant that it was removed, so I want to get a sense of the state of play here!" Id. at 1. Facebook promised to discuss this at an upcoming oral meeting: "Hope to cover a lot of that on Monday … Can definitely go into detail on content that doesn't violate like below but could contribute to vaccine hesitancy." Id.

51. On March 1, 2021, White House officials Rob Flaherty and Clarke Humphrey, along with Joshua Peck of HHS, participated in a meeting with Twitter about misinformation. Jones Decl., Ex. H, at 1. The same day, after the meeting, Twitter emailed these officials and assured the White House that it would increase censorship of "misleading information" on Twitter: "Thanks again for meeting with us today. As we discussed, we are building on our continued efforts to remove the most harmful COVID-19 misleading information from the service …. We have also introduced a strike system that determines when further enforcement is necessary. … As we said, we are committed to working with stakeholders in the public, private and non-profit sectors to address the reliability of covid information online and look forward to continued dialogue about joint efforts." Id. at 1.

52. From at least May 28, 2021 to July 10, 2021, a senior Meta executive repeatedly copied Slavitt on his emails to Surgeon General Murthy in which he assured the Surgeon General and the White House that Meta was engaging in censorship of COVID-19 misinformation according to the White House's demands. Doc. 71-4. Among other things, the Meta executive insisted that "We've expanded penalties for individual Facebook accounts that share misinformation." Id. at 9.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

53. On March 12, 2021, referring to previous oral communications with the White House and HHS, Facebook emailed Flaherty "[f]ollowing up on our commitment to share our survey data on vaccine uptake." Doc. 174-1, at 9. Facebook provided the White House with a detailed report and summary on the topic, and noted that the information had evidently been requested by or on behalf of "White House / HHS" officials: "Hopefully, this format works for the various teams and audiences within the White House / HHS that may find this data valuable." Id.

54. On March 15, 2021, at 3:20 a.m., Flaherty sent an email to Facebook acknowledging, "[g]ood insights here," but then immediately pivoted to demand more and different data, linking a recent Washington Post article accusing Facebook of allowing the spread of information about vaccine hesitancy and QAnon, stating: "I'm more interested in the data that was outlined in the Washington Post (https//www.washingtonpost.com/technology/2021/03/14/facebook-vaccine-hesistancy-qanon) And what interventions you are testing/their effectiveness." Id. at 9. This would become a standard tactic of the White House – linking to articles critical of Facebook in the press, and then demanding more information or actions based on those articles.

55. The day before, Sunday, March 14, 2021, at 11:13 p.m., Flaherty had emailed a link to the same article to Facebook ("https://www.washingtonpost.com/technology/2021/03/14/facebook-vaccine-hesistancy-qanon"), copying White House COVID-19 official Andrew Slavitt, with no more text in the email and the subject line: "You are hiding the ball." Id. at 12.

56. The next morning, Facebook responded by stating, "there is a misunderstanding on what this story is covering with respect to research that's happening – I will call to clear up. Certainly not hiding the ball." Id. at 11-12.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

57. Flaherty responded in accusatory fashion, referring to a series of at least three previous oral conversations in which the White House had demanded more information from Facebook about its censorship policies. Id. at 11. Flaherty made clear that the White House was seeking more aggressive action on "borderline" content—i.e., content that does not clearly violate Facebook's own censorship policies but the White House demands action against anyway. Flaherty wrote: "I don't think this is a misunderstanding … I've been asking you guys pretty directly, over a series of conversations, for a clear accounting of the biggest issues you are seeing on your platform when it comes to vaccine hesitancy, and the degree to which borderline content--as you define it-- is playing a role." Id. at 11. Flaherty also referred to a series of meetings, including one-on-one meetings with Facebook ("1:1"): "I've also been asking for what actions you have been taking to mitigate it as part of your 'lockdown' - which in our first conversation, was said to be in response to concerns over borderline content, in our 1:1 convo you said was not out of any kind of concern over borderline content, and in our third conversation never even came up." Id.

58. Flaherty followed with a series of accusations that Facebook was deceiving and prevaricating with the White House about its "borderline" (i.e. not violative) content: "You said you would commit to us that you'd level with us. I am seeing in the press that you have data on the impact of borderline content, and its overlap with various communities. I have asked for this point blank, and got, instead, an overview of how the algorithm works, with a pivot to a conversation about profile frames, and a 45-minute meeting that seemed to provide you with more insights than it provided us." Id. He accused Facebook of being the "top driver[] of vaccine hesitancy," demanded action against "borderline" content, and stated that the White House wanted to be directly involved in those efforts: "I am not trying to play 'gotcha' with you. We are gravely concerned that your service is one of the top drivers of vaccine hesitancy- period. I will also be the first to acknowledge that borderline content offers no easy solutions. But we want to know that you're trying, we want to know how we can help, and we want to know that you're not playing a shell game with us when we ask you what is going on. This would all be a lot easier if you would just be straight with us." Id.

59. Facebook responded on March 15, respectfully disputing the Washington Post's reporting, but then saying to Flaherty: "We obviously have work to do to gain your trust. You mention that you are not trying to play 'gotcha' with us—I appreciate the approach you are taking to continued discussions. We are also working to get you useful information that's on the level. That's my job and I take it seriously--I'll continue to do it to the best of my ability, and I'll expect you to hold me accountable." Id. at 10-11.

60. The same day, March 15, 2021, Andrew Slavitt (who was copied on these exchanges between Facebook and Flaherty) weighed in, once again accusing Facebook of dishonesty in a series of oral meetings: "It would [be] nice to establish trust. I do feel like relative to others, interactions with Facebook are not straightforward and the problems are worse – like you are trying to meet a minimum hurdle instead of trying to solve the problem and we have to ask you precise questions and even then we get highly scrubbed party line answers. We have urgency and don't sense it from you all. 100% of the questions I asked have never been answered and weeks have gone by." Id. at 10.

61. Slavitt then made an ominous statement threatening unspecified Executive action against Facebook in retaliation for Facebook's perceived lack of cooperation with the White House's demands on censorship of "borderline" (non-violative) content: "Internally we have been considering our options on what to do about it." Id. at 10 (emphasis added).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

62. On March 16, 2021, Facebook responded to Slavitt, again disputing the Washington Post's reporting and respectfully explaining its position, but also promising to share information about vaccine hesitancy in "real time": "We are absolutely invested in getting you the specific information needed to successfully manage the vaccine roll out." Id. Facebook promised to increase information-sharing and proposed a detailed oral meeting on the topic: "But I understand your point regarding how we communicate, and that we need to share information with you in a way that prioritizes what we are seeing in as close to real time as possible. I'd like to set up a conversation with our research leads to walk your team through ongoing research we are currently conducting and our approach; and then we can prioritize sharing results as quickly as possible." Id. Facebook also offered to speak to Slavitt by phone at any time. Id.

63. On March 19, 2021, Facebook had an oral meeting with White House officials, including Flaherty and Slavitt. Doc. 174-1, at 15. On Sunday, Facebook sent a follow-up summary of the meeting to Andrew Slavitt ("Thanks for taking the time to connect on Friday"), which noted that the White House (1) demanded a "Consistent Product Team [Point of Contact]" at Facebook, (2) demanded "Sharing Additional Data" from Facebook, (3) had asked about "Levers for Tackling Vaccine Hesitancy Content," and (4) asked about censorship policies for the Meta platform WhatsApp. Id..

64. In the follow-up email, Facebook noted that, in direct response to White House demands, it was censoring, removing, and reducing the spread of content that did not violate its policies: "You also asked us about our levers for reducing virality of vaccine hesitancy content. In addition to policies previously discussed, these include the additional changes that were approved late last week and that we'll be implementing over the coming weeks. As you know, in addition to removing vaccine misinformation, we have been focused on reducing the virality of content discouraging vaccines that does not contain actionable misinformation. This is often-true content … but it can be framed as sensation, alarmist, or shocking. We'll remove these Groups, Pages, and Accounts when they are disproportionately promoting this sensationalized content." Id. at 15 (emphases added).

65. Facebook also provided the White House with a detailed report on its censorship policies on WhatsApp: "WhatsApp's approach to misinformation focuses on limiting the virality of messages, preventing coordinated abuse, and empowering users to seek out reliable sources of information both in and out of the product. Our product includes features to limit the spread of viral content, such as forward limits and labels, privacy settings to help users decide who can add them to groups, and simple ways for users to block accounts and make reports to WhatsApp if they encounter problematic messages. Additional limitations we placed in April 2020 on forwarding of messages that have been forwarded many times reduced these kinds of messages by over 70%." Id.

66. On March 22, 2021, Flaherty responded to Facebook, demanding much more detailed information and action about "sensationalized" content on its platforms. Id. at 14. Flaherty noted that White House officials were demanding a plan from Facebook to censor non-violative content, i.e., "looking out for your game plan on tackling vaccine hesitancy spread on your platform." Id.

67. In this email, Flaherty badgered Facebook with a series of detailed requests for information about this issue of censoring vaccine-skeptical content that does not violate Facebook's content-moderation policies, such as truthful but "sensational" content: "Again, as I've said, what we are looking for is the universe and scale of the problem. You noted that there is a level below sensational stories that get down-ranked, which took the form of general skepticism.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

… [T]he problem does not sit in 'microchips'-land, and … it seems plausible that the things that drive the most actual hesitancy sit in 'sensational' and 'skeptical.'" Id.. Flaherty demanded more information and greater censorship of such non-violative "sensational" and "skeptical" content: "If you're down ranking sensational stuff—great—but I want to know how effective you've seen that be from a market research perspective. And then, what interventions are being taken on 'skepticism?' … [W]hat are you trying here, and again, how effective have you seen it be. And critically, what amount of content is falling into all of these buckets? Is there wider scale of skepticism than sensationalism? I assume given the Carnegie data and the studies I've seen in the press that you have this. … As I've said: this is not to play gotcha. It is to get a sense of what you are doing to manage this." Id. (italics in original).

68. Flaherty also badgered Facebook for more information on Meta's censorship policies on the WhatsApp platform, pushing for greater censorship there: "On whatsapp, which I may seem like I'm playing gotcha, but I guess I'm confused about how you're measuring reduction of harm. If you can't see the message, I'm genuinely curious—how do you know what kinds of messages you've cut down on? Assuming you've got a good mousetrap here, that's the kind of info we're looking for above: what interventions you've taken, and what you've found to work and not work? And how effective are you seeing the good information on Whatapp be? Are you doing cross platform campaign work to try to reduce people's exposure on whatsapp?" Id. at 14.

69. Flaherty concluded with an accusation of past dishonesty against Facebook and proposed frequent oral meetings to address the White House's issues: "You've given us a commitment to honest, transparent conversations about this. We're looking for that, and hoping we can be partners here, even if it hasn't worked so far. I know Andy [Slavitt] is willing to get on the phone with [a Facebook official] a couple of times per week if its necessary to get all of this." Id.

70. Flaherty's statement that the White House is "hoping we can be partners here, even if it hasn't worked so far," reinforced Slavitt's previous implied threat that the White House would take some unspecified action against Facebook if it did not cooperate with the White House's demands on censorship of vaccine-hesitant content, especially non-violative content, on Facebook's platforms. Id.

71. Facebook then agreed with Flaherty and Slavitt to schedule a meeting that Wednesday at 4:00 pm to discuss these issues. Id. at 13.

72. On April 9, 2021, Facebook sent Flaherty an email to respond to a long series of detailed questions from Flaherty about how the Meta platform WhatsApp was censoring COVID-19 misinformation. Doc. 174-1, at 17-21. All Flaherty's questions were designed to probe and pressure Facebook toward more aggressive censorship. See id. Facebook began by "noting some of the key differences between a private messaging app like WhatsApp, and social media like Facebook and Instagram. Approximately 90 percent of the messages sent on WhatsApp are one-to-one, and the majority of group chats include fewer than ten people. WhatsApp does not promote content, and users do not build audiences or discover new people as they would on social media." Id. at 18. Flaherty responded to this: "Very aware. [Smiley face]." In other words, the White House was demanding information about speech on a private messaging app used for one-to-one private communication, and demanding greater censorship of speech on that app—and it was "very aware" that it was doing so. Id.

73. Facebook noted that "WhatsApp seeks to control the spread of misinformation and inform users through deliberate, content-agnostic product interventions -- things like labeling and limiting message forwards." Id. at 18. Facebook noted that the message-forwarding limits are "intended" to censor COVID misinformation, and that they actually reduced such speech by 70 percent, and Facebook admitted that these are "somewhat blunt tools" that prevent its users from sending many other forms of speech as well: "The forward limits … are intended to reduce their spread. As mentioned in my earlier note, when WhatsApp rolled out the limitation for highly forwarded messages to one chat at a time in April 2020, this resulted in a 70% reduction of those messages globally. Of course, not all forwards are misinformation, so these are by nature somewhat blunt tools, but they are important ones -- and ones that many other messaging services don't provide." Id.

74. After presenting Facebook with a series of questions (presented in bold and in red type in the email, see id. at 18-20), Flaherty summed up by demanding insight into Facebook's internal information: "I guess I have the same question here as I do on Facebook on Instagram. Do you guys think you have this under control? You're obviously going to say yes to that, so I guess the real question is, as ever: how are you measuring success? Reduction in forwarding? Measured impact across Facebook properties?" Id. at 20.

75. Facebook responded by emphasizing that it was "reducing viral activity on our platform" through message-forward limits and other speech-blocking techniques as well: "On WhatsApp, reduction in forwards is just one of the signals that we use to measure how well we are doing in reducing viral activity on our platform. We also ban accounts that engage in mass marketing or scam behaviors - including those that seek to exploit COVID-19 misinformation. Our efforts in this space are more comprehensive than anything that our peers in private messaging or SMS do, and we are constantly innovating to stay ahead of future challenges." Id. at 20.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

76. Facebook also offered to meet with the White House "Monday or anytime next week" to discuss its censorship efforts, to which Flaherty responded, "Hoor should be trying to land a time." Id. at 17.

77. Flaherty responded to Facebook's long, detailed account of its censorship efforts on WhatsApp by expressing dissatisfaction with the response and demanding ever-more detailed information, stating that he "couldn't care less" about Facebook's "product safari": "Will say I'm really mostly interested in what effects the interventions and products you've tested have had on increasing vaccine interest within hesitant communities, and which ones have shown promise. Really couldn't care less about products unless they're having measurable impact. And while the product safari has been interesting, at the end of the day, I care mostly about what actions and changes you're making to ensure sure you're not making our country's vaccine hesitancy problem worse. I definitely have what I believe to be a non-comprehensive list of products you're building but I still don't have a good, empirical answer on how effective you've been at reducing the spread of vaccine-skeptical content and misinformation to vaccine fence sitters in the now-folded 'lockdown.'" Id. at 17 (emphasis added).

78. Flaherty then accused Facebook of being responsible for the riot at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, by not censoring enough speech online, and suggested that Facebook would be similarly responsible for COVID-related deaths if it did not engage in more online censorship here: "In the electoral context, you tested and deployed an algorithmic shift that promoted quality news and information about the election. This was reported in the New York Times and also readily apparent to anyone with cursory social listening tools. You only did this, however, after an election that you helped increase skepticism in, and an insurrection which was plotted, in large part, on your platform. And then you turned it back off. I want some assurances, based in data, that you are not doing the same thing again here." Id. (emphases added).

79. Facebook responded by promising ever-more-detailed information to the White House's demands: "Understood. I thought we were doing a better job [of] responding to this – and we are working to get the data that will more clearly show the universe of the Covid content that's highest in distribution with a clear picture of what percentage of that content is vax hesitancy content, and how we are addressing it. I know [a Facebook official] told Andy [Slavitt] that would take a bit of time to nail down and we are working on that universe of data. I will make sure we're more clearly responding to your questions below." Id. at 17.

80. The meeting that Facebook offered with the White House on Monday, April 12 or thereafter occurred on Wednesday, April 14, because Flaherty emailed Facebook that day stating: "Since we've been on the phone…" Id. at 22.

81. In this Wednesday, April 14, 2021 email, with the subject line "tucker," Flaherty noted that the White House was tracking COVID-related content in real time, and he demanded the censorship of currently-trending posts of content from two prominent Fox News hosts, Tucker Carlson and Tomi Lahren: "Since we've been on the phone – the top post about vaccines today is tucker Carlson saying they don't work. Yesterday was Tomi Lehren [sic] saying she won't take one. This is exactly why I want to know what 'Reduction' actually looks like – if 'reduction' means 'pumping our most vaccine hesitant audience with tucker Carlson saying it doesn't work' then ... I'm not sure it's reduction!" Id. at 22. Facebook responded: "Thanks—I saw the same thing when we hung up. Running this down now." Id. In a separate email chain to Flaherty and Courtney Rowe the same day, Facebook also assured the White House, "running down the question on Tucker and working on getting you report by end of week." Id. at 23.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

82. Tucker Carlson has 1.2 million followers on his personal Facebook account and 3.8 million followers on his show's account, Jones Decl., Ex. I, at 1-2, so censoring Carlson's content would affect the free-speech rights of millions of people in a single stroke.

83. In the meantime, Facebook was offering to cooperate closely with the White House to "amplify" its preferred messages. On April 13, 2021, Facebook emailed Andy Slavitt about the temporary halt of the Johnson & Johnson vaccine, stating: "Re the J+J [i.e., Johnson & Johnson] news, we're keen to amplify any messaging you want us to project about what this means for people – it obviously has the risk of exacerbating vaccine hesitancy, so we're keen to get ahead of the knock-on effect. Don't hesitate to tell me – or via your teams – how we can help to provide clarity/reassurance via Facebook." Doc. 174-1, at 31-32. Facebook then forwarded the same offer to Courtney Rowe and Rob Flaherty of the White House digital communications team. Id. at 31.

84. Flaherty responded the same day, April 13, with a series of detailed requests about how Facebook could amplify the White House's preferred messages, including: "Some kind of thing that puts the news in context if folks have seen it (like your current 'COVID news' panel) that has 3-4 pieces of info (eg: Adverse events are very rare – 6 cases out of nearly 7 million, the FDA and CDC are reviewing so it health care providers know how to treat any of the rare events, this does not affect pfzier or moderna, which vaccinate via a different mechanism)"; "CDC is working through an FAQ that we'd love to have amplified in whatever way possible – maybe through the COVID info panel"; and "[a] commitment from you guys to make sure that a favorable review reaches as many people as the pause, either through hard product interventions or algorithmic amplification." Id. at 30-31. Flaherty also block-quoted a White-House-approved message on the vaccine pause for Facebook to amplify. Id. at 31.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

85. Flaherty then concluded by demanding that Facebook monitor any "misinformation" relating to the Johnson & Johnson vaccine pause, and asking Facebook to provide a detailed report to the White House within 24 hours of how it was doing so: "More broadly: we share [Facebook's] concern about knock-on effects and are curious to get a read from your CMU data about what you're seeing and with whom. Moreover, I want to make sure you have eyes on what might be spinning off the back end of this – that the news about J&J doesn't spin off misinformation. Would be great to get a 24 hour report-back on what behavior you're seeing." Id. at 31 (emphasis added).

86. The same day, April 13, 2021, Facebook responded with a detailed report on misinformation on its platforms about this issue. Doc. 174-1, at 24-30. Facebook noted that there was an oral meeting about misinformation with the White House scheduled the next day: "I'm looking forward to the meeting tomorrow [i.e., Wednesday, April 14] and hoping we can spend some time responding to Rob's feedback from last week as well as further discussing the J&J news and how we can hopefully partner together." Id. at 24.

87. Facebook also noted that it had recently had a telephone call with Courtney Rowe about how it was censoring misinformation, and had agreed to provide a detailed report on its relevant censorship enforcement policies: "Courtney – as we discussed, we also wanted to send over some examples of content we see on our platform that we remove (misinformation & harm) as well as content we take other actions on, but do not remove (vaccine hesitancy). I have included some examples at the bottom of this email and happy to setup time to talk through this more with you as well, if helpful." Id. at 24. Facebook then provided a six-page report on censorship with explanations and screen shots of sample posts of content that it censors and does not censor. Id. at 24-30.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

88. First, Facebook responded to Flaherty's request for government-message-amplification by agreeing to cooperate with the White House on those demands. Id. at 24. Regarding Flaherty's demand that Facebook monitor and report on "misinformation" related to the Johnson & Johnson vaccine pause, Facebook agreed to both monitor and report to the White House: "We will look to get you insights as soon as we have them. We are going to be watching to see how this plays out over the next couple of days. [A Facebook official] is joining [the call] tomorrow and plans to share a couple things we are seeing emerge from the CMU survey and what we are going to be watching over the next few days. Also, we are proactively monitoring and seeing what themes emerge from content on-platform and happy to share out when we have stuff collected." Id. at 24-25.

89. Facebook then provided a detailed report to Courtney Rowe's request for specific examples of posts that are censored on its platforms. First, as to "VACCINE HESITANCY" content, Facebook explained that this content does not violate Facebook's content-moderation policies, but Facebook assured the White House that Facebook still censors such non-violative content by suppressing it in news feeds and algorithms. Id. at 25. Facebook admitted that such content is often "true" and sometimes involves core political speech or advocacy (e.g., "discussing choice to vaccinate in terms of personal and civil liberties"): "The following examples of content are those that do not violate our Misinformation and Harm policy, but may contribute to vaccine hesitancy or present a barrier to vaccination. This includes, for example, content that contains sensational or alarmist vaccine misrepresentation, disparaging others based on the choice to or to not vaccinate, true but shocking claims or personal anecdotes, or discussing the choice to vaccinate in terms of personal and civil liberties or concerns related to mistrust in institutions or individuals." Id. at 25 (emphases added).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

90. Facebook assured the White House that it censors such true, political, non-violative content through "a spectrum of levers" that includes concealing the content from other users, deboosting the content, and preventing sharing through "friction": "We utilize a spectrum of levers for this kind of content…. Actions may include reducing the posts' distribution, not suggesting the posts to users, limiting their discoverability in Search, and applying Inform Labels and/or reshare friction to the posts." Id. Facebook then provided the White House with a series of sample posts, all of which content originated from Children's Health Defense, the anti-vaccine organization headed by Robert F. Kennedy Jr. (who would soon be identified as one of the so-called "Disinformation Dozen"). Id. at 25-27.

91. Next, under the heading "Examples of Content Removed for Violating our Misinformation & Harm Policy," Facebook provided the White House with "examples of posts we have removed for violation of our Misinformation & Harm Policy." Id. at 27. Facebook then provided a list of screen shots of posts it had removed from the platform entirely, again all of which originated from Children's Health Defense, Robert F. Kennedy Jr.'s group. Id. at 28-30.

92. As noted below, Facebook's explanation that it was removing violative posts by Children's Health Defense and censoring even its posts that did not violate Facebook's policies turned out to be not nearly enough to satisfy the White House.

93. Separately from Flaherty's demands about Tucker Carlson, on April 14, 2021, Andy Slavitt also emailed a high-level Facebook executive—Facebook's President of Global Affairs, former Deputy Prime Minister of the United Kingdom Nick Clegg—with a sarcastic message expressing the White House's displeasure both with Facebook's failure to censor Tucker Carlson and with Facebook's perceived failure to allow the White House to micromanage its censorship policies: "Number one of Facebook. Sigh. Big reveal call with FB and WH today. No progress since we spoke. Sigh." Doc. 174-1, at 35. Clegg promptly responded to Slavitt with an apology and promise to immediately address the censorship of Tucker Carlson: "OK – sorry to hear about call today, will dig in now." Id. The subject line of Slavitt's email, reproduced in the "Re:" line of later messages, was "Tucker Carlson anti-vax message." Id. at 34.

94. Late evening of the same day, April 14, 2021, at 10:51 p.m., Nick Clegg provided Slavitt with a detailed report about the Tucker Carlson post, explaining that Tucker Carlson's content did not violate Facebook policies (due to the federal government's own information about its accuracy) but assuring the White House that Facebook would censor it anyway. Id. at 34. Clegg denied that Carlson's content was the top post on Facebook, but then stated, "Regardless of popularity, the Tucker Carlson video does not qualify for removal under our policies. Following the government's decision yesterday, we are allowing claims that the Johnson and Johnson vaccine causes blood clots…. That said, the video is being labeled with a pointer to authoritative COVID information, it's not being recommended to people, and it is being demoted." Id. at 34.

95. Clegg also stated that Facebook was "v[ery] keen" to provide a more detailed report on its censorship practices in response to White House demands: "I'm v keen that we follow up as we'd agreed, and I can assure you the teams here are on it." Id.

96. Brian Rice of Facebook then forwarded the same report on the Tucker Carlson post to Rob Flaherty. Id. ("Making sure you receive--").

97. Less than twenty minutes later, at 11:29 p.m. on April 14, 2021, Flaherty responded to Rice with a sarcastic response badgering Facebook for a more detailed explanation of why it had not removed Tucker Carlson's content outright, demanding greater censorship, and accusing Facebook of causing an "insurrection" by not censoring enough speech on its platforms: "I guess this is a good example of your rules in practice then – and a chance to dive in on questions as they're applied. How was this [i.e. Tucker Carlson' post] not violative? The second half of the segment is raising conspiracy theories about the government hiding that all vaccines aren't effective. It's not about just J&J. What exactly is the rule for removal vs demoting? Moreover: you say reduced and demoted. What does that mean? There's 40,000 shares on the video. Who is seeing it now? How many? How effective is that? And we've gone a million rounds on this in other contexts so pardon what may seem like deja vu – but on what basis is 'visit the covid-19 information center for vaccine resources' the best thing to tag to a video that says the vaccine doesn't work?" Doc. 174-1, at 33. Flaherty concluded ominously by reiterating his accusation that Facebook had caused the January 6 riot by not censoring enough speech on its platforms: "Not for nothing but last time we did this dance, it ended in an insurrection." Id. at 34.

98. Six minutes later, at 11:35 p.m. on April 14, Flaherty followed up with another email accusing Facebook of providing incorrect information through CrowdTangle and demanding an explanation: "And sorry – if this was not one of the most popular posts about the vaccine on Facebook today, then what good is crowdtangle? [A Facebook official] said that Tomis [i.e., Tomi Lahren's] video was the most popular yesterday based on your data, which reflected what CT [i.e., CrowdTangle] was showing. Tuckers video was top on CT today. What is different about this video, then?" Id. at 33.

99. On Friday, April 16, Flaherty then sent an email expressing his displeasure with the timing of Facebook's response and demanding immediate answers, snapping at Rice: "These questions weren't rhetorical." Id. at 33. Facebook apologized and promised an immediate response: "Hey Rob – understood and sorry for the delay. The team has been heads-down since our conversation to produce the report we discussed on Wednesday afternoon. We are aiming to get you something tonight ahead of the weekend." Id. Facebook then proposed another oral meeting: "schedule a call to discuss. Would that work?" Id.

100. On Tuesday, April 21, 2021, Facebook sent an additional response to the same email chain, indicating that there had been a phone call with Flaherty ("thanks for catching up earlier") and providing another, more detailed report on its censorship of Tucker Carlson in response to each of Flaherty's queries question-by-question. Id. at 36. Facebook again reported that Tucker Carlson's content had not violated its policies, stating that "we reviewed this content in detail and it does not violate those policies," but reported that Facebook had been censoring it anyway and would continue to censor it even though no fact-check had reported it false: "The video received 50% demotion for seven days while in the queue to be fact checked, and will continue to be demoted even though it was not ultimately fact checked." Id. (emphasis added). These circumstances raise a compelling inference that Facebook continued to demote Tucker Carlson' content, in violation of its own policies and practices, due to the White House's pressure.

101. In the same time frame, the White House was exerting similar pressure on other major social-media platforms. It had meetings with YouTube and Twitter about misinformation on April 21, 2021 as well.

102. On April 21, Rob Flaherty, Andy Slavitt, and Kelsey Fitzpatrick of the White House, along with an official at HHS, participated in a meeting with several Twitter officials. Doc. 71-7, at 86. The meeting's subject was "Twitter Vaccine Misinfo Briefing." Id. The meeting invite noted: "White House Staff will be briefed by Twitter on vaccine misinfo. Twitter to cover trends seen generally around vaccine misinformation, the tangible effects seen from recent policy changes, what interventions are currently being implemented in addition to previous policy changes, and ways the White House (and our COVID experts) can partner in product work." Id. (emphases added).

103. The next day, April 22, Twitter employees noted in internal communications that the White House officials, during this meeting, had posed "one really tough question about why Alex Berenson hasn't been kicked off the platform." Jones Decl., Ex. J, at 2-3. The Twitter employee noted that the White House's questions were "pointed" and "mercifully we had answers." Id. Another internal Twitter communication noted that the White House "really wanted to know about Alex Berenson. Andy Slavitt suggested they had seen data viz that had showed he was the epicenter of disinfo that radiated outwards to the persuadable public." Id.

104. Later, on July 16, 2021, Twitter suspended Alex Berenson for the first time. Id. On August 28, 2021, Twitter permanently deplatformed Berenson. Id.

105. On April 21, 2021, Flaherty, Andy Slavitt, Kelsey Fitzpatrick of the White House, and Jessica Scruggs of HHS had a similar meeting with YouTube, to which at least six YouTube officials were invited. Jones Decl., Ex. K, at 1. The calendar invite stated that the purpose of the meeting was: "White House staff to get briefed by YouTube on general trends seen around vaccine misinformation. As well as, the empirical effects of YouTube's efforts to combat misinfo, what interventions YouTube is currently trying, and ways the White House (and or COVID experts) can partner in product work." Id.

106. Just after midnight on April 22, 2021, Rob Flaherty emailed a list of Google officials about YouTube, copying Andy Slavitt, Clarke Humphrey, and Kelsey Fitzpatrick of the White House. Doc. 174-1, at 39. He began by referring to the oral meeting with Google/YouTube officials on April 21: "Thanks again for the conversation today." Id. Flaherty also referred to an earlier, "first conversation," indicating that there had been multiple meetings with YouTube. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

107. Flaherty then noted that the White House had asked YouTube (like Facebook) to monitor and report on the speech on its platforms, stating that the White House expected a report from them: "We'll look out for the top trends that you've seen in terms of misinformation around the vaccine." Id.

108. Flaherty then provided a "recap" of their oral conversation, stating that concern about misinformation on YouTube was "shared at the highest (and I mean highest) levels of the [White House]": "To recap: … we remain concerned that Youtube is 'funneling' people into hesitance and intensifying people's hesitancy…. we want to be sure that you have a handle on vaccine hesitancy generally and are working toward making the problem better. This is a concern that is shared at the highest (and I mean highest) levels of the WH, so we'd like to continue a good-faith dialogue about what is going on under the hood here. I'm the on the hook for reporting out." Id. (emphasis added).

109. Citing an article "highlighting the Youtube misinformation that is spreading through the Vietnamese community," Flaherty stated: "Clearly, more work to be done here. Would love to get some insights from you on how you are tackling this problem across all languages." Id.

110. Flaherty then stated, "A couple of other things it would be good to have from you all," and provided a five-bullet list of detailed demands for YouTube's internal data about the spread of misinformation on its platform, including: "the top trends that you're seeing in terms of misinformation/hesitance inducing content," and "[a] deeper dive on reduction and its effectiveness," among others. Id.

111. Flaherty indicated that the White House was coordinating with the Stanford Internet Observatory, which was then operating the Virality Project, discussed in detail below, noting in the first bullet point: "Stanford has mentioned that it's recently Vaccine Passports and J&J pause-related stuff, but I'm not sure if that reflects what you' re seeing." Id. This reference raises the inference that the White House's "COVID experts" ("our COVID experts") mentioned in the calendar invite for the meeting, Jones Decl., Ex. K, at 1, are, in fact, "Stanford" personnel associated with the Virality Project, and that the White House was working with "Stanford" to "partner with" platforms "on product work."

112. As with Facebook, many of Flaherty's demands related to so-called "borderline" content, i.e., often-truthful content that does not violate platform policies but that the White House disfavors. See Doc. 174-1, at 39. Among other things, he praised YouTube for reducing distribution of such content: "I believe you said you reduced watch time by 70% on 'borderline' content, which is impressive." Id. But then, again, he followed up with a long series of demands for more information: "How does that track with vaccine-related content specifically…? What has the comparative reduction in watch time on 'borderline' vaccine topics been after your interventions? And what has the increase in watch time been on authoritative information?... Related to the second bullet: to what extent have your ranking interventions been effective there? And, perhaps more critically, to what degree is content from people who have been given a 'strike' still being recommended and shown in prominent search positions? … [H]ow did you arrive on info-panels as the best intervention? And to what extent are people clicking through after exposure to vaccine-hesitant content? … What are the general vectors by which people see the 'borderline' content – or really just vaccine-skeptical content? Is it largely through recommendations? Search?" Id. Notably, Flaherty's "most critical[]" question implied that YouTube should be censoring more content from disfavored speakers, i.e., those who have been given a "strike" for previous anti-vaccine content. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

113. Flaherty emphasized that the White House wanted to make sure YouTube's "work extends to the broader problem" of people viewing vaccine-hesitant content. Id. at 39-40. And he proposed regular meetings to push YouTube to disclose its "internal data" to the White House: "We've worked with a number of platform partners to track down similar information based on internal data, including partners of similar scale. I am feeling a bit like I don't have a full sense of the picture here. We speak with other platforms on a semi-regular basis. We'd love to get in this habit with you. Perhaps bi-weekly? Looking forward to more conversation." Id. at 40.

114. On April 23, 2021, Flaherty sent Facebook an email that included a document entitled "Facebook COVID-19 Vaccine Misinformation Brief" prepared by an unidentified third party. Jones Decl., Ex. L, at 1. The "Brief" had two major headings with several bullet points under each: "Facebook plays a major role in the spread of COVID vaccine misinformation," and "Facebook's policy and enforcement gaps enable misinformation's spread." Id. The "Brief" recommended much more aggressive censorship of Facebook's platforms, calling for "progressively severe penalties … and comprehensive enforcement for pages, accounts, and groups that repeatedly post COVID vaccine misinformation," and stating that "[b]ans for COVID-19 misinformation should be cross-platform and enforced at the entity-level, not the account level." Id. It called for Facebook to stop distributing even non-violative anti-vaccine content "in News Feed or in group recommendations" to "significantly reduce the reach of low-quality domains," and it stated that "[v]accine misinformation monitoring and enforcement must adjust as disinformers evade enforcement…." Id. at 1-2. And it called for specific censorship of disfavored speakers: "Warning screens before linking to domains known to promote vaccine misinformation would dissuade users from following links to of-platform misinformation and hurt the vaccine-misinformation business model Facebook enables." Id. at 2.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

115. Reproducing this pro-censorship "Brief" in the text of his email to Facebook, Flaherty wrote: "Here's the crux of their recs. Don't read this as White House endorsement of these suggestions (or, also, as the upper bound of what our thoughts may be). But – spirit of transparency – this is circulating around the building and informing thinking." Id. at 1.

116. On May 1, 2021, Nick Clegg of Facebook sent an email to Andy Slavitt indicating that the White House had recently met with Facebook to "share research work" and make more demands, stating: "Thanks to your team for sharing the research work with us…." Id. at 41. At the beginning of the email, Clegg apologized to the White House for not catching and censoring three pieces of vaccine content that went viral, even though the content did not violate Facebook's policies, and promising to censor such non-violative content more aggressively in the future: "I wanted to send you a quick note on the three pieces of vaccine content that were seen by a high number of people before we demoted them. Although they don't violate our community standards, we should have demoted them before they went viral and this has exposed gaps in our operational and technical process." Id. at 42.

117. Clegg then promised to be more vigilant and censor such non-violative content to prevent it from going viral in the future, and offered to report back to the White House in detail about its efforts to do so: "The teams have spent the last 24 hrs analysing these gaps and are making a number of changes starting next week, including setting up more dedicated monitoring for Covid vaccine content on the cusp of going viral, applying stronger demotions to a broader set of content, and setting up daily review and analysis so that we have a better real-time view of what is being seen by lots of people. I will be checking on this closely to make sure that these additional steps show results - the stronger demotions in particular should deliver real impact. Please let me know if you'd like to discuss any of this in more detail." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

118. Clegg then listed in bold the demands that the White House had made in its recent meeting, with a detailed response to each. Id. at 42. First, the White House had demanded that Facebook address "Non-English mis/disinformation circulating without moderation," and Facebook promised to take steps to do so. Id. (bold in original).

119. Second, the White House had commanded Facebook: "Do not distribute or amplify vaccine hesitancy, and Facebook should end group recommendations for groups with a history of COVID-19 or vaccine misinformation." Id. (bold in original). Facebook assured the White House that it was taking strong steps to censor such content, and promised to increase its efforts to do so in the future: "Much of the research you shared called on us to ensure that our systems don't amplify vaccine hesitancy content and this is top of mind for us. In addition to the changes I mentioned above, we have already removed all health groups from our recommendation feature on Facebook, and on Instagram we filter vaccine-related accounts from our 'accounts you may follow feature'. We also remove accounts that may discourage vaccination from search features. We currently enforce on hash tags we know are shared to promote vaccine hesitancy content and are working to improve our automated systems here." Id.

120. Third, the White House had demanded that Facebook "Monitor[] events that host anti-vaccine and COVID disinformation." Id. (bold in original). Facebook promised to monitor social-media "events" on its platforms more closely and take more aggressive action to censor them: "we are working to improve automatic detection for events hosting anti-vaccine and COVID content. Our viral monitoring efforts will also help us detect events that are gaining views on Facebook, and we do remove events coordinating in-person gatherings that involve or encourage people who have COVID-19 to join." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

121. Fourth, the White House had demanded censorship of the so-called "Disinformation Dozen" in the private meeting with Facebook, raising the concern that "12 accounts are responsible for 73% of vaccine misinformation." Id. (bold in original). Facebook responded that it was scrutinizing those speakers and censoring them whenever it could, but that most if their content did not violate Facebook's policies: "we continue to review accounts associated with the 12 individuals identified in the CCDH 'Disinformation Dozen' report, but many of those either do not violate our policies or have ceased posting violating content. Our 'Dedicated Vaccine Discouraging Entity' policy is designed to remove groups and pages that are dedicated to sharing vaccine discouraging content and we continue to review and enforce on these where we become aware of them." Id.

122. Clegg then noted that he realized the White House would not be satisfied with these answers and was demanding greater censorship: "I realise that our position on this continues to be a particular concern for you." Id. Clegg then suggested that too much censorship might be counterproductive and might drive vaccine hesitancy: "Among experts we have consulted, there is a general sense that deleting more expressions of vaccine hesitancy might be more counterproductive to the goal of vaccine uptake because it could prevent hesitant people from talking through their concerns and potentially reinforce the notion that there's a cover-up." Id. Brian Rice also forwarded Nick Clegg's email to Rob Flaherty. Id. at 41.

B. Public Pressure and Threats From Press Secretary Jennifer Psaki.

123. The White House was evidently quite unhappy with this response and the results of its pressure campaign behind closed doors. A few days later, the White House took its pressure campaign public. On May 5, 2021, Jen Psaki publicly reminded Facebook and the other platforms of the threat of legal consequences hanging over its head if it did not censor misinformation more aggressively. At the May 5, 2021 White House Press Briefing, Jen Psaki stated about social-media censorship: "The President's view is that the major platforms have a responsibility related to the health and safety of all Americans to stop amplifying untrustworthy content, disinformation, and misinformation, especially related to COVID-19, vaccinations, and elections. And we've seen that over the past several months, broadly speaking." Glenn Decl. Ex. 29, at 15, Doc. 10-1, at 353.

124. Psaki also stated that President Biden "also supports better privacy protections and a robust anti-trust program. So his view is that there's more that needs to be done to ensure that this type of misinformation; disinformation; damaging, sometimes life-threatening information is not going out to the American public." Id. She thus linked the threat of a "robust anti-trust program" to the White House's demand that "more … needs to be done" by "the major platforms" to prevent "misinformation" and "disinformation" from "going out to the American public," i.e., its demand for censorship. Id.

125. The next day, May 6, 2021, Flaherty privately responded to Facebook's most recent email, badgering Facebook again for more explanations about why it was not censoring more aggressively. Regarding Nick Clegg's apology for not catching and censoring three viral posts earlier, Flaherty linked to one and noted: "For one, it's still up and seems to have gotten pretty far. And it's got 365k shares with four comments. We've talked about this in a different context, but how does something like that happen? The top post, the one from the Wisconsin news station, has 2.1 million comments." Doc. 174-1, at 41.

126. Flaherty also demanded more information about Facebook's efforts to demote "borderline" content: "Won't come as a shock to you that we're particularly interested in your demotion efforts, which I don't think we have a good handle on (and, based on the below, it doesn't seem like you do either). Not to sound like a broken record, but how much content is being demoted, and how effective are you at mitigating reach, and how quickly?" Id.

127. Flaherty then criticized Facebook's censorship efforts for vaccine-related posts in Facebook groups related to other topics: "Also, health groups: sure. But it seems more likely that anti-vax stuff is moving in groups that are not about health but are ... mom centric, or other spaces. Strikes me as the issue here is less from single-use anti-vaccine accounts and more about people who ... do other things and are also vaccine hesitant." Id. (ellipses in original).

128. Flaherty tied this criticism to his criticism of Facebook's failure to censor the "Disinformation Dozen": "Seems like your 'dedicated vaccine hesitancy' policy isn't stopping the disinfo dozen - they're being deemed as not dedicated – so it feels like that problem likely carries over to groups." Id.

129. On May 10, 2021, Facebook sent an email to Rob Flaherty and Courtney Rowe of the White House digital team, touting its efforts to promote vaccination on its platforms. Doc. 174-1, at 46. Among other things, Facebook reported that "Since January, we've provided more than $30 million in ad credits to help governments, NGOs and other organizations reach people with COVID-19 vaccine information and other important messages." Id.

130. The next day, May 11, 2021, Flaherty responded with a one-line, snarky email stating: "Hard to take any of this seriously when you're actively promoting anti-vaccine pages in search." Id. He included a link to a news report about this topic on Twitter. Id.

131. The next day, May 12, 2021, Facebook responded, assuring Flaherty that it had censored the accounts mentioned in the news reports: "Thanks Rob - both of the accounts featured in the tweet have been removed from Instagram entirely…. We're looking into what happened." Id. at 45.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

132. Facebook then assured Flaherty it was working on processes to suppress disfavored speech from search results on its platforms and remove anti-vaccine accounts: "We are continuing to develop technology to improve the quality of search results at scale across Instagram - this is a continual process built on new technology to address adversarial accounts…. We also remove accounts that may discourage vaccination from search by developing and using this new technology to find accounts on Instagram that discourage vaccines, and remove these accounts from search altogether. We've also removed accounts that primarily discourage vaccination from appearing where we recommend new accounts to follow, such as accounts you may like, and suggested accounts." Id.

133. Facebook acknowledged that its censorship efforts were not enough and promised the White House they would increase them: "We clearly still have work to do to [sic], but wanted to ensure you were aware of the authoritative resources we're pointing people to first as we continue investing in removing accounts from search that may discourage vaccination." Id.

134. The same day, May 12, 2021, Flaherty responded sarcastically, indicating that promoting pro-vaccine speech was not enough for the White House, which demanded the removal or deboosting of anti-vaccine speech: "Sure. They're first connected to authoritative information, but then you, as of last night, were presenting an anti-vaccine account with less than 1000 followers alongside, at level, with those pinned accounts!" Id. at 45.

135. Flaherty then accused Facebook of not doing enough to censor anti-vaccine content in search results and dissembling to deceive the White House: "'[R]emoving bad information from search' is one of the easy, low-bar things you guys do to make people like me think you're taking action. If you're not getting that right, it raises even more questions about the higher bar stuff." Id. at 45. Flaherty continued, accusing Facebook of dishonesty: "You say in your note that you remove accounts that discourage vaccination from appearing in recommendations (even though you're using 'primarily' to give yourself wiggle room). You also said you don't promote those accounts in search. Not sure what else there is to say." Id.

136. Flaherty then compared Facebook unfavorably to other platforms to pressure them to suppress anti-vaccine content in search results: "Youtube, for their warts, has done pretty well at promoting authoritative info in search results while keeping the bad stuff off of those surfaces. Pinterest doesn't even show you any results other than official information when you search for 'vaccines.' I don't know why you guys can't figure this out." Id.

137. On May 28, 2021, a senior executive of Meta sent an email to Slavitt and Murthy reporting that Facebook had expanded its censorship policies, evidently to satisfy federal officials' demands made at a recent oral meeting. The email stated that a "key point" was that "We're expanding penalties for individual Facebook accounts that share misinformation." Doc. 71-4, at 9.

C. Flaherty's Profane Attack: "Are You Guys Fking Serious?"

138. At some time prior to July 15, 2021, the White House's Facebook account experienced an issue that slowed its growth in followers. Doc. 174-1, at 56. On July 15, 2021, Facebook emailed a White House staffer and reported that "the technical issues that had been affecting follower growth on @potus have been resolved…. you should start to see your numbers trend back upwards…. Thanks for your patience as we investigated this." Id. The White House staffer asked Facebook, "Could you tell me more about the technical issues affecting audience growth?" Id. at 55. Facebook responded, "from what we understand it was an internal technical issue that we can't get into, but it's now resolved and should not happen again." Id. The White House staffer then simply added Rob Flaherty to the email chain without further comment. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

139. The same minute he was added to the email chain, 3:29 p.m. on July 15, 2021, Flaherty exploded at Facebook: "Are you guys fucking serious? I want an answer on what happened here and I want it today." Id. at 55.

140. Facebook immediately raced to placate Flaherty, assuring him that the problem was from a "bug in our recommendation surface" that had been resolved two months earlier. Id. at 55. Facebook followed up with a longer explanation stating that the President's account had been affected because Facebook "take[s] aggressive steps to reduce the spread of vaccine hesitancy and vaccine misinformation on our platforms and we deploy technology to do so. As part of our efforts on Instagram, we have measures to help ensure we don't recommend people follow accounts that promote vaccine hesitancy at scale. For two weeks in April (April 14-28) this measure was impacted by over-enforcement on a signal we used …." Id. at 54. In other words, the White House's Instagram account had been inadvertently swept into the net of censorship that it had insisted that Facebook impose on private speakers' accounts. Evidently the White House is not amused when its own accounts are subject to the same treatment that it demands the platforms impose on thousands of ordinary Americans whose viewpoint the White House disfavors.

D. President Biden on Social-Media Platforms: "They're Killing People."

141. That same day, July 15, 2021, the White House held a joint press conference with Jen Psaki and Surgeon General Murthy. Dr. Murthy participated in the White House press conference with White House Press Secretary Jennifer Psaki to announce the Surgeon General's Health Advisory on Misinformation. Waldo Ex. 10. Psaki announced of Dr. Murthy that "[t]oday, he published an advisory on health misinformation as an urgent public health crisis." Id. at 1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

142. Among other things, Dr. Murthy stated that "Modern technology companies have enabled misinformation to poison our information environment with little accountability to their users." Id. at 2.

143. Dr. Murthy announced: "we expect more from our technology companies. We're asking them to operate with greater transparency and accountability. We're asking them to monitor misinformation more closely. We're asking them to consistently take action against misinformation super-spreaders on their platforms." Id. at 3.

144. At the July 15 press conference, Dr. Murthy also demanded that the platforms do "much, much more" and "take aggressive action" against misinformation. Waldo Ex. 10, at 5.

145. Dr. Murthy also stated that platforms "have to do more to reduce the misinformation that's out there …." Id. at 6.

146. At the same press conference on July 15, 2021, Jennifer Psaki stated: "we are in regular touch with these social media platforms, and those engagements typically happen through members of our senior staff, but also members of our COVID-19 team." Waldo Ex. 10, at 10.

147. Psaki stated: "We've increased disinformation research and tracking within the Surgeon General's office. We're flagging problematic posts for Facebook that spread disinformation." Id. at 10.

148. Regarding the Administration's "asks" to social-media platforms, Psaki stated: "There are also proposed changes that we have made to social media platforms, including Facebook, and those specifically are four key steps: One, that they measure and publicly share the impact of misinformation on their platform. Facebook should provide, publicly and transparently, data on the reach of COVID-19 — COVID vaccine misinformation. Not just engagement, but the reach of the misinformation and the audience that it's reaching." Id. at 11.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

149. Psaki also stated: "Second, that we have recommended — proposed that they create a robust enforcement strategy that bridges their properties and provides transparency about the rules. So, about — I think this was a question asked before — there's about 12 people who are producing 65 percent of anti-vaccine misinformation on social media platforms. All of them remain active on Facebook, despite some even being banned on other platforms, including Facebook — ones that Facebook owns." Waldo Ex. 10, at 11.

150. Psaki stated: "Third, it's important to take faster action against harmful posts. As you all know, information travels quite quickly on social media platforms; sometimes it's not accurate. And Facebook needs to move more quickly to remove harmful, violative posts — posts that will be within their policies for removal often remain up for days. That's too long. The information spreads too quickly." Id. at 11.

151. And Psaki stated, publicly criticizing Facebook: "Finally, we have proposed they promote quality information sources in their feed algorithm. Facebook has repeatedly shown that they have the levers to promote quality information. We've seen them effectively do this in their algorithm over low-quality information and they've chosen not to use it in this case. And that's certainly an area that would have an impact." Waldo Ex. 10, at 11.

152. Psaki concluded: "So, these are certainly the proposals. We engage with them regularly and they certainly understand what our asks are." Id. at 11.

153. The next day, July 16, 2021, President Biden stated of Facebook and other platforms that "they're killing people" by failing to censor enough misinformation: "Mr. Biden was asked what his message was to social media platforms when it came to Covid-19 disinformation. 'They're killing people,' he said. 'Look, the only pandemic we have is among the unvaccinated, and that — and they're killing people.'" Glenn Decl. Ex. 33, at 1; Doc. 10-1, at 436.

154. President Biden's statement came after "weeks" of pressuring Facebook to give federal officials access to Facebook's internal data: "White House officials … singled out social media companies for allowing false information to proliferate. That came after weeks of failed attempts to get Facebook to turn over information detailing what mechanisms were in place to combat misinformation about the vaccine, according to a person familiar with the matter." Id.

155. Surgeon General Murthy had been directly involved in those meetings with Facebook, including "tense" meetings and a meeting where he "angrily" demanded that Facebook do more to censor misinformation. Id. at 437.

156. When the President stated, "They're killing people," Psaki reinforced the same message: "'Our point is that there is information that is leading to people not taking the vaccine, and people are dying as a result,' Jen Psaki, the White House press secretary, said before Mr. Biden made his comments. 'And we have responsibility as a public health matter to raise that issue.'" Id. at 436.

157. That same day, July 16, 2021, at a White House press conference, Psaki stated that "we're in regular touch with social media platforms … about areas where we have concern. … [W]e are … regularly making sure social media platforms are aware of the latest narratives dangerous to public health that we and many other Americans seeing — are seeing across all of social and traditional media. And we work to engage with them to better understand the enforcement of social media platform policies." Glenn Decl. Ex. 34, at 6; Doc. 10-1, at 444.

158. Psaki then described a "false narrative that remains active … flowing on the internet quite a bit, in other places as well," and stated, "we want to know that the social media platforms are taking steps to address it. That is inaccurate, false information… And that is an example of the kind of information that we are flagging or raising." Glenn Decl. Ex. 34, at 7; Doc. 10-1, at 445.

159. Psaki also demanded additional "steps" "for Facebook or other platforms," including "to measure and publicly share the impact of misinformation on their platform and the audience it's reaching, also with the public." Id.

160. She called on the platforms "to create robust enforcement strategies that bridge their properties and provide transparency about rules." Id. She stated that platforms should coordinate on censoring disfavored speakers: "You shouldn't be banned from one platform and not others if you — for providing misinformation out there." Id.

161. Psaki also stated that the platforms should be "[t]aking faster action against harmful posts. As you all know, information travels quite quickly. If it's up there for days and days and days when people see it, you know, there's — it's hard to put that back in a box." Glenn Decl. Ex. 34, at 8; Doc. 10-1, at 446.

162. Psaki was asked whether the censorship Facebook was already doing, which included "remov[ing] 18 million pieces of COVID misinformation" and "connect[ing] more than 2 billion people to reliable information," was "sufficient," and she responded, "Clearly not, because we're talking about additional steps that should be taken." Id.

163. "[A] few hours after Biden's comment" that social-media platforms are "killing people" by not censoring misinformation, "Twitter suspended [Alex Berenson's] account for the first time." Jones Decl., Ex. J, at 3. Later, on August 28, 2021, Twitter permanently deplatformed Berenson. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

164. Four days later, July 20, 2021, the White House explicitly threatened to amend or repeal the liability protections of § 230 of the Communications Decency Act if social-media companies did not increase censorship of disfavored speakers and viewpoints. Glenn Decl. Ex. 35; Doc. 10-1, at 474-75 - 'They Should Be Held Accountable': White House Reviews Platforms' Misinformation Liability, USA TODAY (July 20, 2021), at https://www.usatoday.com/story/news/politics/2021/07/20/white-house-reviews-section-230-protections-covid-misinformation/8024210002/. The White House communications director, Kate Bedingfield, announced that "[t]he White House is assessing whether social media platforms are legally liable for misinformation spread on their platforms." Id. "We're reviewing that, and certainly, they should be held accountable," she said. Id.

165. The White House communications director "specified the White House is examining how misinformation fits into the liability protections granted by Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act, which shields online platforms from being responsible for what is posted by third parties on their sites." Id.

166. Media reported that, in connection with this threat, "Relations are tense between the Biden administration and social media platforms, specifically Facebook, over the spread of misinformation online." Id.; see also, e.g., Glenn Decl. Ex. 36; Doc. 10-1, at 477-81: White House says social media networks should be held accountable for spreading misinformation, CNBC.com (July 20, 2021), at https://www.cnbc.com/2021/07/20/white-house-social-networks-should-be-held-accountable-for-spreading-misinfo.html.

167. When "asked … whether these companies should be held liable for publishing false information that causes people harm, Kate Bedingfield said the administration is reviewing policies. That could include amending the Communications Decency Act, or Section 230 of the act. 'We're reviewing that and certainly they should be held accountable,' Bedingfield said. 'And I think you heard the president speak very aggressively about this. He understands that this is an important piece of the ecosystem.'" Id. at 478.

168. The same day, Tuesday, July 20, 2021, Clarke Humphrey of the White House communications office emailed Facebook asking for the removal of an Instagram account associated with Dr. Fauci, saying it "is not actually one of ours." Fauci Ex. 57, at 1-2. Facebook responded one minute later, stating, "Yep, on it!" Fauci Ex. 57, at 1. The next day, Facebook responded again, stating, "This account has been removed. Thank you for flagging!" Id.

E. The Social-Media Platforms Are Cowed into Collusion on Censorship.

169. The threats and public pressure on July 15 and 16—including the President's comment, "they're killing people"—got immediate results, as Facebook scrambled to assuage the White House's wrath and accede to all its censorship demands.

170. After this series of public statements, responding to "White House pressure," Facebook censored the accounts of the 12 specific disfavored speakers whom Psaki accused of spreading health misinformation. Glenn Decl. Ex. 37; Doc. 10-1, at 483-85: Facebook takes action against 'disinformation dozen' after White House pressure, CNN.com (Aug. 18, 2021), at https://www.cnn.com/2021/08/18/tech/facebook-disinformation-dozen/index.html. Psaki had "hammered the platform in July for allowing the people identified in the report to remain on its platform." Id. at 483. After they were singled out for censorship by the White House, Facebook "removed over three dozen Pages, groups and Facebook or Instagram accounts linked to these 12 people, including at least one linked to each of the 12 people, for violating our policies." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

171. Other platforms responded to the pressure as well, as Twitter suspended Alex Berenson within a few hours of President Biden's July 16 comments and deplatformed him Berenson on August 28, 2021. Jones Decl., Ex. J, at 3.

172. On July 17, 2021, another Facebook official sent an email to Anita B. Dunn, the political strategist and Senior Advisor to the President in the White House, begging for assistance in getting back into the White House's good graces. Doc. 174-1, at 49. The Facebook official, who evidently had a prior relationship with Dunn, wrote: "Would love to connect with you on the President's comments on Covid misinfo and our work there. Really could use your advice and counsel on how we get back to a good place here. … As I hope you know, we've been doing a significant amount of work to … fight the misinfo … Obviously, yesterday things were pretty heated, and I'd love to find a way to get back to pushing together on this - we are 100% on the same team here in fighting this and I could really use your advice." Id. Dunn looped in Rob Flaherty to schedule a call. Id. at 48. Facebook then wrote: "Thanks Anita, and thanks Rob. I appreciate the willingness to discuss. We'd love to find a way to get things back to a productive conversation." Id. Facebook also noted, with a similarly conciliatory tone: "We had a conversation with the Surgeon General's office yesterday to discuss the advisory in more detail and hope to continue to work to address concerns." Id.

173. The next Monday, July 19, 2021, YouTube emailed Flaherty to announce "a few new ways in which we are making it easier for people to find authoritative information on health topics on YouTube." Id. at 51-2. On July 20, 2021, Flaherty responded, linking to a Tweet of "borderline" content and stating, "I'm curious: Saw this tweet. [Linking the Tweet]. I think we had a pretty extensive back and forth about the degree to which you all are recommending anti-vaccination content. You were pretty emphatic that you are not. This seems to indicate that you are. What is going on here?" Id. at 51.

174. YouTube responded by assuring Flaherty that it "reduce[s]" the recommendation of anti-vaccine speech even when it does not violate YouTube's policies: "it is important to keep in mind that borderline content accounts for a fraction of 1% of what is watched on YouTube in the United States. We use machine learning to reduce the recommendations of this type of content, including potentially harmful misinformation. In January 2019, we announced changes to our recommendations systems to limit the spread of this type of content which resulted in a 70% drop in watchtime on non-subscribed recommended content in the U.S. and our goal is to have views of nonsubscribed, recommended borderline content below 0.5%." Id. at 51.

175. This was not enough for Flaherty, who demanded more information: "I see that's your goal - what is the actual number right now?" Id. at 50. YouTube responded that it would check for more information, and stated: "Per our COVID-19 medical misinformation policy, we will remove any content that contradicts local health authorities' or the World Health Organization's (WHO) medical information about COVID-19. To date, approximately 89% of videos removed for violations of this policy were removed with 100 views or less. With regards to the specific videos you referenced, the content was not in violation of our community guidelines." Id. at 50.

176. Flaherty responded, expressing surprise that YouTube was not censoring the disfavored content: "So this actually gets at a good question - the content [that the Tweet] points out isn't defined as 'borderline' and therefore isn't subject to recommendation limitations?" Id.

177. YouTube, like Facebook before it, assured Flaherty that it would "limit the visibility" and "reduce the spread" such content, even though it does not violate YouTube's policies: "the content was not in violation of our policies and therefore not subject to removal. But for all content on YouTube, we apply our 4R framework we have previously described to raise authoritative voices while reducing visibility on borderline content. External evaluators use these guidelines which are then used to inform our machine learning systems that limits the spread of borderline content." Id. at 50.

178. On October 28, 2021, the same day as a Washington Post article about Facebook employee Frances Haugen's allegations about misinformation on Facebook, Rob Flaherty emailed Brian Rice of Facebook a hyperlink to the article. The only text in the email was the subject line, which stated: "not even sure what to say at this point." Waldo Ex. 35, at 1-2; see also infra.

179. On November 4, 2021, Meta reported to Rowe, Flaherty, and other White House officials that "we updated our misinformation policies for COVID-19 vaccines to make clear that they apply to claims about children…." Doc. 71-3, at 15.

180. On November 30, 2021, Christian Tom of the White House emailed Twitter stating, "Would you mind looking at this video and helping us with next steps to put a label or remove it?" Doc. 174-1, at 65. He included a link to a Tweet of an unflattering, comedic video of First Lady Jill Biden reading to children, which had been clearly edited to make it sound as if she was profanely heckled while reading to them. Id. The subject line of the message was "Doctored video on Twitter of the First Lady." Id. Twitter responded within six minutes: "Happy to escalate with the team for further review from here." Id.

181. That evening, Twitter emailed back, stating, "Update for you - The team was able to create this event page for more context and details." Id. at 64. The "event page" explained the context of the parody video but did not censor it; it alerted users that the video had been edited for "comedic" effect. See A video of first lady Jill Biden reading to children was manipulated to include profanity, according to fact-checkers, TWITTER (Nov. 30, 2021), https://twitter.com/i/events/1465769009073123330.

182. Christian Tom promptly emailed back, asking that Twitter actually censor the comedic video, not just provide an event page explaining that it was comedic: "Will you apply the 'Manipulated Media' disclaimer to the video asset itself?" Doc. 174-1, at 64.

183. The next morning, December 1, 2021, Tom emailed Twitter again, arguing that Twitter should apply a label to the video under its content-moderation policies: "Just wanted to follow-up here. It looks like from the rubric that this fits the first two criteria, which means it is 'likely' to be labeled:" and linking Twitter's "manipulated media" policy. Id. at 63-4.

184. Twitter wrote back the same morning, explaining that the comic, parody video of Jill Biden was not subject to labeling under its policy because it was not likely to cause harm, but noting again that Twitter had created a special page to explain that the video was edited: "After escalating this to our team, the Tweet and video referenced will not be labeled under our synthetic and manipulated media policy. Although it has been significantly altered, the team has not found it to cause harm or impact public safety. The team was able to create this Twitter Moment (here) and event page for more context and details." Id. at 63.

185. The same day, Christian Tom emailed back, disputing Twitter's interpretation of its own content-moderation policy and looping in Michael DeRosa, the First Lady's press secretary. Id. Michael DeRosa then emailed as well, disputing and demanding information about Twitter's application of its own policy. Id. at 62. Tom and DeRosa continued to press Twitter for further explanation and action on December 9, 13, and 17. Id. at 60-61. Twitter provided another, more detailed explanation of its decision on December 17. Id. at 59-60. Tom emailed back the same day, again disputing Twitter's application of its own policy and pressing Twitter again on the issue. Id. at 58-59. He added Rob Flaherty to the email chain for the first time. Id. at 58.

186. Nine minutes later, on December 17, 2021, Flaherty wrote to Twitter, angrily accusing Twitter of dishonestly misapplying its own policies: "New to the thread here, but this all reads to me like you all are bending over backwards to say that this isn't causing confusion on public issues. If the AP deems it confusing enough to write a fact check, and you deem it confusing enough to create an event for it, how on earth is it not confusing enough for it to at least have a label? Total Calvinball." Id. at 58. ("Calvinball" refers to a game in the cartoon "Calvin and Hobbes" where the participants make up the rules of the game as they go along.)

187. A senior-level Twitter executive then emailed Flaherty proposing to resolve the matter by phone. Id. After that phone conversation, it appears that the Tweet that prompted the exchange is no longer available. See id. at 65 (linking to https://twitter.com/ArtValley818_/status/1465442266810486787?s=20, which is no longer available).

F. White House Pressure and Collusion Continue Throughout 2022.

188. During January 2022, Facebook reported to Rowe, Manning, Flaherty, and Slavitt that it has "labeled and demoted" "vaccine humor posts whose content could discourage vaccination." It also reported to the White House that it "labeled and demoted" posts "suggesting natural immunity to COVID-19 infection is superior to immunity by the COVID-19 vaccine." Doc. 71-3, at 10-11.

189. Twitter emailed back within an hour and offered to discuss, to which Flaherty responded: "Happy to talk through it but if your product is appending misinformation to our tweets that seems like a pretty fundamental issue." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

190. Separately, Jesse Lee of the White House emailed Twitter in response to the same report, accusing Twitter of "calling the President a liar" and offering to talk by phone to resolve the complaint: "this note is factually inaccurate. This is a very technical question but you don't have it right, and you are in effect calling the President a liar when his tweet is actually accurate. I'm happy to discuss this with whoever is the right person," and providing his cell phone number. Id. at 69. Twitter then reached out by phone to resolve it. Id.

191. On September 18, 2021, regarding a story in the Wall Street Journal about COVID-19 "misinformation" circulating on Facebook, Flaherty demanded that Meta provide an explanation "as we have long asked for, [of] how big the problem is, what solutions you're implementing, and how effective they've been." Doc. 71-3, at 24.

192. On February 1, 2022, Psaki was asked at a White House press conference whether the Administration was satisfied with Spotify's decision to affix advisory warnings to Joe Rogan's immensely popular podcast, which featured speakers that contradicted the Administration's messaging about COVID-19 and vaccines, or whether the government "think[s] that companies like Spotify should go further than just, you know, putting a label on" disfavored viewpoints and speakers. Psaki responded by demanding that Spotify and other platforms "do[] more" to block disfavored speech: "[O]ur hope is that all major tech platforms … be vigilant to ensure the American people have access to accurate information on something as significant as COVID-19…. So, this disclaimer – it's a positive step. But we want every platform to continue doing more to call out … mis- and disinformation while also uplifting accurate information." Glenn Decl. Ex. 38, at 15-16; Doc. 10-1, at 501-2 (emphasis added). She stated that Spotify's advisory warnings are "a good step, it's a positive step, but there's more that can be done." Id. at 502 (emphasis added).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

193. On April 25, 2022, Psaki was asked at a White House press briefing to respond to the news that Elon Musk would acquire Twitter, and asked "does the White House have any concern that this new agreement might have President Trump back on the platform?" Glenn Decl. Ex. 40; Doc. 10-1, at 528.

194. Psaki responded by reiterating the threats of adverse legal consequences to Twitter and other social media platforms, specifically referencing antitrust enforcement and Section 230 repeal: "No matter who owns or runs Twitter, the President has long been concerned about the power of large social media platforms … [and] has long argued that tech platforms must be held accountable for the harms they cause. He has been a strong supporter of fundamental reforms to achieve that goal, including reforms to Section 230, enacting antitrust reforms, requiring more transparency, and more. And he's encouraged that there's bipartisan interest in Congress." Id. at 528-29.

195. At the same press briefing, Psaki was asked: "Are you concerned about the kind of purveyors of election misinformation, disinformation, health falsehoods, sort of, having more of an opportunity to speak there on Twitter?" She responded by specifically linking the legal threats to the social-media platforms' failure to more aggressively censor free speech: "I would say our concerns are not new. We've long talked about and the President has long talked about his concerns about the power of social media platforms, including Twitter and others, to spread misinformation, disinformation; the need for these platforms to be held accountable." Id. at 534.

196. Psaki was then asked a question that noted that "the Surgeon General has said that misinformation about COVID amounts to a public health crisis," and then queried, "would the White House be interested in working with Twitter like it has in the past to continue to combat this kind of misinformation? Or are we in a different part of the pandemic where that kind of partnership is no longer necessary?" Id. at 549.

197. Psaki responded by reaffirming that senior officials within the White House and/or the Administration are continuing to coordinate directly with social-media platforms to censor disfavored speakers and content on social media, and directly linking these efforts to the repeated threat of adverse legal action: "we engage regularly with all social media platforms about steps that can be taken that has continued, and I'm sure it will continue. But there are also reforms that we think Congress could take and we would support taking, including reforming Section 230, enacting antitrust reforms, requiring more transparency. And the President is encouraged by the bipartisan support for — or engagement in those efforts." Id.

198. On June 13, 2022, Flaherty demanded that Meta continue to produce periodic "COVID-19 insights reports" to track so-called "misinformation" regarding COVID-19 on Meta's social-media platforms, expressing the specific concern that COVID vaccines for children under 5 would soon be authorized. Doc. 71-3, at 6.

199. Meta got the message. It agreed to continue sending its censorship-tracking reports, and on June 22, 2022, Meta assured Flaherty that it was expanding its censorship of COVID-19 "misinformation" to ensure that speech critical or skeptical of COVID-19 vaccines for children under 5 years old—a highly controversial topic—would be censored. Doc. 71-3, at 5.

G. Pressure to Expand the Topics of Social-Media Censorship.

200. Since this lawsuit was filed, Defendants have expanded their social-media censorship activities and pressured social-media platforms for censorship in new areas of online discourse, including areas such as climate change, gender, abortion, and economic policy.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

201. For example, on June 14, 2022, White House National Climate Advisor Gina McCarthy spoke at an Axios event titled "A conversation on battling misinformation." Jones Decl. Ex. M, at 1.

202. During the event, "McCarthy skewered Big Tech companies for 'allowing' disinformation and cheered Congress for 'taking action' to enact more censorship last Thursday." Id. at 2. "Axios political reporter Alexi McCammond asked McCarthy how so-called 'rampant mis-and-disinformation around climate change online and in other platforms' has 'made your job harder?'" Id. "McCarthy responded by slamming social media companies: 'We have to get tighter, we have to get better at communicating, and frankly, the tech companies have to stop allowing specific individuals over and over again to spread disinformation.'" Id. (emphasis added). "She suggested further that 'we have to be smarter than that and we need the tech companies to really jump in.'" Id. at 3 (emphasis added). "McCammond responded by asking: 'Isn't misinformation and disinfo around climate a threat to public health itself?' McCarthy asserted that it 'absolutely' is: 'Oh, absolutely.'" Id.

203. Like Psaki and others, McCarthy explicitly tied these demands for censorship of climate-change-related speech to threats of adverse legislation: "McCarthy also praised Congress directly for pushing social media companies to censor Americans: 'We do see Congress taking action on these issues, we do see them trying to tackle the misinformation that's out there, trying to hold companies accountable.'" Id. at 4.

204. On June 16, 2022, the White House announced a new task force to address, among other things, "gendered disinformation" and "disinformation campaigns targeting women and LGBTQI+ individuals who are public and political figures, government and civic leaders, activists, and journalists." Jones Decl., Ex. N, at 1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

205. The June 16 Memorandum decries "online harassment and abuse"—vague terms that, on information and belief, are deliberately adopted to sweep in constitutionally protected speech. Id. In particular, the Memorandum defines "online harassment and abuse" to include "gendered disinformation," a deliberately broad and open-ended term. Id. § 1. The Memorandum announces plans to target such "gendered disinformation" directed at public officials and public figures, including "women and LGBTQI+ political leaders, public figures, activists, and journalists." Id. The Memorandum creates a Task Force co-chaired by the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, which includes the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Homeland Security, among others. Id.

206. The Task Force is charged with "developing programs and policies to address … disinformation campaigns targeting women and LGBTQI+ individuals who are public and political figures, government and civic leaders, activists, and journalists in the United States and globally." Id. § 4(a)(iv) (emphasis added). The Memorandum calls for the Task Force to consult and coordinate with "technology experts" and "industry stakeholders," i.e., social-media firms, to achieve "the objectives of this memorandum," id. § 4(b). Those "objectives," of course, include suppressing so-called "disinformation campaigns" against "public and political figures." Id. § 4(a)(iv).

207. The Memorandum again threatens social-media platforms with adverse legal consequences if they do not censor aggressively enough to suit federal officials: "the Task Force shall … submit periodic recommendations to the President on policies, regulatory actions, and legislation on technology sector accountability to address systemic harms to people affected by online harassment and abuse." Id. § 5(c) (emphasis added).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

208. Relatedly, on May 27, 2022, HHS Assistant Secretary Rachel Levine demanded that social-media platforms censor "misinformation" about "gender-affirming care." Jones Decl., Ex. O, at 1. In a public address to health officials, Levine "spoke about the need for government to 'address health information directly' and specified that includes encouraging Big Tech to combat health misinformation 'beyond COVID-19.'" Id. Levine stated: "So I'd like to just talk briefly about another area of substantial misinformation that is directly impacting health equity in our nation, and that is the health equity of sexual and gender minorities. There is substantial misinformation about gender-affirming care for transgender and gender diverse individuals… The positive value of gender-affirming care for youth and adults is not in scientific or medical dispute … And we need to use our clinicians' voice to collectively advocate for our tech companies to create a healthier, cleaner information environment." Id. at 1-2.

209. On July 8, 2022, the President signed an Executive Order on protecting access to abortion. Jones Decl., Ex. P, at 1.

210. Section 4(b)(iv) of the order states: "The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, in consultation with the Attorney General and the Chair of the FTC, consider options to address deceptive or fraudulent practices related to reproductive healthcare services, including online, and to protect access to accurate information." Id. This is a plain reference to the online advertising practices of pro-life pregnancy resources centers, which the President's political allies were then attacking. Jones Decl., Ex. Q, at 1-2.

211. On August 11, 2022, Flaherty emailed Twitter to dispute a note added by Twitter to one of President Biden's tweets. Doc. 174-1, at 68. The subject line of Flaherty's email was a link to a Tweet criticizing Twitter's note: "Joe Weisenthal on Twitter: 'Wow, this note that twitter added to Biden's tweet is pure gibberish. Imagine adding this, and thinking this is helpful to the public's understanding in any way.'" Id. Linking to a tweet about gas prices, Flaherty wrote: "Happy to connect you with some economists who can explain the basics to you guys." Id. Flaherty copied Jesse Lee, Senior Advisor to the National Economic Council at the White House, on the email. Id.

III. The Pressure Campaign from Surgeon General Murthy and His Office.

212. Throughout 2021 and 2022, Surgeon General Vivek Murthy and his Office engaged in a pressure campaign in parallel with, and often overlapping with, the White House's pressure campaign on social-media platforms. Surgeon General Murthy and his staff were often included in the same meetings and communications with White House officials and social-media platforms, and joined White House officials pressuring them to increase censorship in public and in private.

A. The Surgeon General: Using the "Bully Pulpit" to Pressure Platforms.

213. Eric Waldo is the Senior Advisor to the Surgeon General of the United States, Vivek Murthy, and was formerly a Chief Engagement Officer in the Office of the Surgeon General ("OSG"). Waldo Dep. 11:15-12:2.

214. As "the engagement team leader" for OSG, Waldo was "the one in charge of maintaining the contacts and the relationships with representatives of social media platforms." Id. at 51:11-17.

215. Dr. Murthy was directly involved in editing and approving the final work product of the Surgeon General's Office, including the Surgeon General's July 15, 2021 health advisory on misinformation and the Surgeon General's March 3, 2022 RFI to social-media platforms. Id. at 14:20-22, 15:16-19, 16:9-10, 17:1-6, 187:24-188:3.

216. Calling for an "all-of-society approach" to misinformation was a pervasive theme of the Surgeon General's communications, including the health advisory and the RFI. Id. at 19:25,

26:8, 88:9, 89:13, 101:2, 117:13, 122:15, 211:22, 246:25, 251:9, 332:22. This theme echoes the repeated call for an "all-of-society approach" in the Virality Project's public report. See infra.

217. Before the Surgeon General's health advisory on misinformation was published on July 15, 2021, OSG and Waldo "did pre-rollout calls with Twitter, Facebook, [and] Google/YouTube." Id. at 20:7-11.

218. The Surgeon General uses his "bully pulpit" to call for censorship of health misinformation: "Dr. Murthy continued from a communications perspective to talk about health misinformation using his bully pulpit." Id. at 25:23-25.

219. Waldo admits that the Surgeon General is directly advocating to social-media platforms to take stronger actions against health "misinformation": "[T]he Surgeon General has the ability … to talk to the relevant stakeholders and say we want you to be aware of this issue and that we think you have a role to play to improve the health outcomes, yes." Id. 28:10-14. As part of this role, the Surgeon General "call[s] out social media platforms in the [health] advisory." Id. at 28:18-19.

220. The Surgeon General's "bully pulpit," Waldo agrees, involves putting public pressure on social-media platforms: "I think the bully pulpit … is really the fact that he commands attention, including being able to … speak with the press, speak with the public, and … we think of the Surgeon General as the nation's doctor." Id. at 29:9-15.

221. A goal of the Surgeon General's use of the "bully pulpit" includes to "reduce the dissemination of health misinformation." Id. at 30:5-10. This includes making "recommendations of specific steps the social media platforms are … called out to take to reduce the spread of misinformation on the platforms." Id. at 31:3-8.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

222. OSG reinforces its public "message of calling out the social media platforms to take steps to reduce the spread of misinformation on their platforms" through private communications with platforms: "[W]hat we're saying publicly, we're also … said that privately to them as well." Id. at 32:5-8, 12-14. This includes during "rollout calls." Id. at 32:19-20.

B. Surgeon General Works in Tandem with the White House and Virality Project.

223. On the day of the health misinformation advisory rollout, July 15, 2021, "Press Secretary … Jen Psaki had already made remarks specifically about Facebook, and then," the next day, "President Biden made his remarks that social media and Facebook were killing people." Id. at 33:19-25. "Facebook … was upset about how the rollout had gone." Id. at 33:6-8. Waldo's initial rollout call with Facebook, as a result, was affected by the Administration's public attacks on Facebook: "I wouldn't call it the most productive call." Id. at 34:4-6.

224. After this public pressure, Facebook's senior executive, Nick Clegg, reached out to request "deescalat[ion]" and "work[ing] together" as a direct result of that public pressure on Facebook: "Then later, with our call, we had a call with Nick Clegg from Facebook, and at his request, and … his intentions were to sort of I think deescalate and just find ways that we could work together, given how Facebook … was treated in that rollout day." Id. at 34:7-13.

225. In the call with Nick Clegg, Surgeon General Murthy reiterated his demand for Facebook to do more to censor "misinformation" on its platforms: "[O] n the call with Nick Clegg, the Surgeon General did … reiterate the idea that, you know, as we described in the advisory, that we think there's more … that Facebook and other social media companies can do, and … we reiterated that." Id. at 35:7-12.

226. Murthy also asked Clegg and Facebook specific questions about requiring Facebook to share data with outside researchers about the scope and reach of misinformation on its platforms, again echoing the key recommendation of the Virality Project: "[T]he most specific questions were about understanding the data around the spread of misinformation and how we were measuring that, and … how we could have external researchers validate the spread of misinformation and -- and helping us as a field understand the depth of the problem." Id. at 35:20-36:2.

227. One such "external researcher" that OSG had in mind was "Renee DiResta, from the Stanford Internet Observatory," a leading organization of the Virality Project, which hosted a "rollout event" for the advisory featuring Dr. Murthy on the day the advisory was announced. Id. at 36:19-23.

228. Waldo admits that there was "coordination" between OSG and Renee DiResta of the Virality Project on the launch of the Surgeon General's health advisory: "I know there was coordination with [DiResta] with respect to the launch … there was a panel, a public sort of virtual town hall that we hosted -- with the Sanford [sic] Internet Observatory that Dr. Murthy spoke at, and that was part of the launch day. So certainly there would have been coordination … with her." Id. at 38:1-7.

229. Kyla Fullenwider is the OSG's key "subject matter expert" who "worked on the advisory" and had significant substantive input on both the Surgeon General's July 15, 2021 health advisory on misinformation, and the Surgeon General's March 3, 2022 RFI to social-media platforms on the spread of misinformation. Id. at 39:1-4, 59:16-23. Kyla Fullenwider is not a direct employee of the OSG, but works for a non-profit contractor named "US Digital Response," Waldo Dep. 85:13-15.

230. Kyla Fullenwider "did a follow-up call with Renee DiResta" about the health advisory. Id. at 38:25-39:4.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

231. After the launch of the health advisory, Waldo and Fullenwider "did a call" with Renee DiResta "that was more of a brainstorm around … public-facing events that we could do to talk about this issue" of stopping health misinformation. Id. at 40:13-17.

232. Fullenwider and DiResta "most likely" discussed misinformation in these calls. Id. at 41:4-6.

233. Waldo and OSG also received a briefing from the Center for Countering Digital Hate about the so-called "Disinformation Dozen." Id. at 43:1-48:1. CCDH gave "a presentation about the Disinformation Dozen and sort of how they were measuring … that those were the folks primarily responsible for a lot of misinformation online." Id. at 47:2-5.

234. Rafael Campos of OSG "helped create the event with … the Stanford Internet Observatory for the launch," and likely had communications with Stanford and Professor DiResta in the lead-up to the event. Id. at 48:12-14, 49:1-2.

235. The OSG anticipated that the social-media platforms would feel pressured by the advisory: "we didn't think they would be happy about this -- you know, the content of the advisory." Id. at 54:24-55:1.

236. Waldo is aware of "at least one call … that the Surgeon General [Murthy] had with Facebook during the transition," i.e., between President Biden's election and his assuming office. Id. at 55:8-10. The call involved a "Facebook individual": "Dr. Murthy had mentioned that he had been on a call with that person [from Facebook] during the transition." Id. at 79:11-18, 56:5-6. Waldo identified the individual as "a data person from the Facebook team." Id. at 56:10. The purpose of that call was "again, about that issue of trying to understand the reach of the mis- and disinformation and understanding … how far it was spreading." Id. at 56:15-19.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

237. "Data about misinformation" was "a topic of conversation" in that call, and the participants discussed "Facebook" being "un[]clear" or "unable to present … the depth or reach of the misinformation, that they didn't have that data." Id. at 80:1-15.

238. DJ Patil may have participated in that transitional call. Patil was the "chief data scientist in the Obama administration, and he was a special government employee at the White House for part of the first year" of the Biden Administration. Id. at 81:6-13. Patil was also "on the call with Dr. Murthy and [Waldo] and Nick Clegg … in his capacity as a White House official." Id. at 81:24-82:3.

239. Waldo "connected [Patil] to another research data person … a Facebook data person." Id. at 82:13-16.

240. The purpose of this follow-up was to demand more information from Facebook about monitoring the spread of misinformation on its platforms: "[T]he problem was we were still in this piece of not understanding the reach and depth … of the misinformation … on Facebook. And … this person was going to try to explain to [Patil] the data challenges in doing so." Id. at 83:4-9.

241. Kyla Fullenwider is the "main" or key staffer for the OSG on misinformation and disinformation. Id. at 58:21-24. Ann Kim is listed on the OSG's org chart, Waldo Ex. 2, as the person who "[d]irects mis- and dis-information engagement," Waldo Ex. 2, but that is solely "because Kyla Fullenwider reported up to Ann Kim. And since Kyla, I think, was our main subject matter expert or continued to do work on mis- and disinformation, maybe that was why that was put under Anne's list of duties." Waldo Dep. 58:20-24. Fullenwider, therefore, is the OSG's "main subject matter expert" on "mis- and disinformation," who "directs mis- and dis-information engagement" for the OSG. Id. at 58:13-59:7.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

242. Fullenwider works for the nonprofit U.S. Digital Response, and is not directly employed by the OSG, though she was acting in an official capacity on behalf of OSG. Waldo Ex. 3, at 32; Waldo Dep. 85:10-86:8.

243. U.S. Digital Response is not a government agency but a non-profit organization: "U.S. Digital Response (USDR) is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization that helps governments, nonprofits, and public entities respond quickly to critical public needs." About U.S. Digital Response, U.S. Digital Response (last visited Feb. 17, 2023), https://www.usdigitalresponse.org/about.

244. Ann Kim has no direct involvement in mis- and disinformation. Waldo Dep. 58:25-59:3. But Kyla Fullenwider "was definitely working on mis- and disinformation." Id. at 59:6-7. Fullenwider "was working with Daniel [Tartakovsky] on the design of … the advisory. And then … Kyla was continuing to help us think about were there additional ways we might engage." Id. at 59:12-15. Further, "Kyla … was the principal designer of options around follow-up with respect to data." Id. at 59:16-18. And when "the Surgeon General's office put out an RFI around misinformation data" on March 3, 2022, "Kyla worked on that." Id. at 59:18-22. Kyla "was the subject matter expert who was chiefly creating options for the Surgeon General … to consider how we would continue to … talk about mis- and disinformation with respect to data." Id. at 60:6-10.

245. Kyla Fullenwider also participated in the "rollout calls" to the social-media platforms announcing the Surgeon General's health advisory on misinformation. Id. at 62:24-63:4.

246. Waldo was also "on some e-mails and at least one call with Rob Flaherty" when he "would communicate with Facebook." Id. at 64:9-11. This included a call with Rob Flaherty and the OSG: "[B]efore our call with Nick Clegg, … I had a call with Rob." Id. at 65:1-2. By then, Flaherty had been "separately communicating with Facebook," and he was "giving us a heads-up on his experiences … in communicating with … Facebook." Id. at 65:4-9.

247. In August 2021, Waldo joined a call with Rob Flaherty and Brian Rice of Facebook, who was in charge of Facebook's relationship with federal officials. Id. at 66:10-14, 124:24-125:2.

248. In that August 2021 call, "Brian Rice from Facebook had requested a call to give us an update on some sort of internal action they were doing. … Facebook had either found something or removed something and was letting us know about it." Id. at 66:16-23.

249. Andy Slavitt of the White House also communicated with Nick Clegg. Id. at 67:14-21. When Andy Slavitt left the White House, he offered Surgeon General Murthy as a direct contact for Nick Clegg. Id. at 68:4-7.

250. In addition, "Dr. Murthy has certainly had conversations with Dr. Fauci." Id. at 69:21-22. Waldo claims that he does not know the nature of those conversations. Id. at 69:23-25. "Dr. Murthy would have directly communicated with Dr. Fauci, to my knowledge." Id. at 70:13-15.

251. Waldo is "certain that Dr. Murthy has connected" with Dr. Francis Collins. Id. at 71:2-9.

252. Waldo was involved in collecting information to respond to Plaintiffs' interrogatories on behalf of OSG. Id. at 73:19-74:11.

C. The Surgeon General Pressures Social-Media Platforms in Private.

253. The first meeting with social-media platforms relating to misinformation that OSG identified in response to interrogatories was a brief introductory call with Nick Clegg on May 25, 2021: "On May 25, 2021, from 4:30 to 5:00 pm ET, Dr. Vivek Murthy from OSG and Andy Slavitt from the White House met remotely with Nick Clegg from Facebook. The purpose of the call was to introduce Dr. Murthy to Mr. Clegg." Waldo Ex. 3, at 32; see also Waldo Dep. 78:24-79:10. The next meeting disclosed was the first "rollout call" relating to the advisory on July 12, 2021. Waldo Ex. 3, at 32. As noted below, this interrogatory response failed to disclose several previous meetings between Dr. Murthy and Facebook.

254. OSG had pre-rollout calls with Twitter and YouTube on July 12 and July 14, 2021, and a rollout call with Facebook the day after the rollout on July 16, 2021. Id. at 32; Waldo Dep. 85:10-90:5.

255. Kyla Fullenwider handled the substantive communications with the social-media platforms in the rollout calls; Waldo's role was to "connect them to our subject matter expert." Waldo Dep. 86:24-25.

256. The July 16 call with Facebook was "the same day" that President Biden stated of Facebook that "They're killing people" by not censoring enough misinformation. Id. at 90:24, 93:3-5.

257. At that July 16 call, Kyla Fullenwider "was able, at a high level, to walk over the … recommendations section for … technology companies," which demand greater censorship of misinformation. Id. at 91:14-16.

258. The Facebook call "was definitely a slightly awkward call" because "President Biden made his comment about social media companies and Facebook killing people … right before, or even potentially during the call," and Waldo observed that "the Facebook team looked a little sad." Id. at 92:24-93:6.

259. On July 23, 2021, Waldo, Dr. Murthy, and DJ Patil of the White House had a call with Nick Clegg and Brian Rice of Facebook. Waldo Ex. 3, at 32-33. Nick Clegg requested the meeting "to deescalate" and "reset the tone" because the "Facebook team were feeling … that they had been uniquely called out." Waldo Dep. 95:4-13.

260. After the meeting, Nick Clegg "did share definitely over e-mail more information about what they were doing to reduce mis- and disinformation, COVID mis- and disinformation on the platform." Id. at 96:13-17.

261. There was also "a follow-up e-mail sometime the next couple of weeks where … Nick or Brian shared … here's additional work we're doing, here's how we're responding to the advisory." Id. at 97:7-11.

262. This follow-up email provided "a catalog of … both removal of misinformation and other steps to tamp down mis- and disinformation." Id. at 97:16-22.

263. Waldo believes that these were "new steps that they had taken in the week or so since … they felt uniquely called out on July 15th and 16th." Id. at 97:23-98:3. The email was in response to a request from OSG "asking for, can you let us know, like, what you're doing in addition" to combat misinformation, "and so this was responding to that." Id. at 98:5-7.

264. On the July 23 call with Facebook, "Dr. Murthy raised the issue of wanting to have a better understanding of the reach of the mis- and disinformation on … the social media platform." Id. at 98:19-22.

265. Waldo likens the problem of mis- and disinformation on social media to "eating, like, a piece of uranium," and compares misinformation to "cancer." Id. at 99:1-101:8.

266. The OSG's health advisory advances the view that the spread of misinformation is "very harmful." Id. at 101:24-102:7.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

267. Waldo agrees that the health advisory "provides specific examples to technology companies what they could do more of to reduce the spread of health mis- and disinformation." Id. at 104:16-18.

268. Waldo uses the word "poison" to describe health misinformation, as did Dr. Murthy in announcing the Health Advisory. Id. at 105:4; Waldo Ex. 10, at 2.

269. In the July 23, 2021 call with Nick Clegg, Dr. Murthy "didn't retreat … from the message of the advisory, which explicitly calls for social media platforms to do more to control the reach of misinformation on their platforms," and "continued … to discuss that message." Waldo Dep. 107:21-108:5.

270. In addition, in that call, the OSG asked Facebook to report back on "what they were doing in response to the advisory, if they were taking any actions." Id. at 109:2-4.

271. In addition, Patil was "also asking the data impact questions." Id. at 109:24.

272. OSG perceived that OSG's and the White House's public statements criticizing Facebook put economic pressure on Facebook, and that Facebook was engaging with Dr. Murthy to "keep Dr. Murthy from saying … any other things that might be viewed as bad for their business." Id. at 113:13-15.

273. Waldo agrees that the events of July 15 and July 16 put unique pressure on Facebook: "when you add the press conference remarks plus President Biden's remarks, it made it seem as though … there was more attention on Facebook." Id. at 116:2-5.

274. The OSG's "subject matter experts" – Kyla Fullenwider, Daniel Tartakovsky, and DJ Patil of the White House – believed that misinformation "was a problem across multiple platforms." Id. at 116:15-16.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

275. On July 30, 2022, Waldo had a meeting with Google and YouTube representatives, in which the representatives reported to OSG on what actions they were taking that were consistent with or in response to the health advisory: "The topics discussed included YouTube/Google following up on the announcement of the OSG Advisory to share more of the work it was doing around health mis- and disinformation." Waldo Ex. 3, at 33.

276. When the OSG's health advisory issued, Twitter's policy handle publicly endorsed the OSG's call for greater censorship of health misinformation: "[T]he Twitter policy handle … either retweeted or quote tweeted and said something like, we agree. … [W]e do need an all-society approach, and here's what we're doing." Waldo Dep. 122:11-16.

277. On August 10, 2021, Waldo and Rob Flaherty had a call with Facebook in which Facebook reported back to federal officials on its actions to remove misinformation, including the details of "an operation [Facebook] uncovered that is related to vaccine misinformation." Waldo Ex. 3, at 33 (alteration in original). According to Waldo, "Brian Rice had requested a call with me and Rob [Flaherty] and, during the call, flagged that Facebook … had done some sort of internal operation where … they discovered some misinformation pieces happening and had taken some corrective action." Waldo Dep. 124:13-21.

278. Brian Rice was Facebook's "main … staff level liaison" with the federal officials. Id. at 125:2-3.

279. Facebook emailed Waldo and Flaherty "a COVID report list that had … some sort of report from Facebook on a biweekly basis." Id. at 126:11-16.

280. On September 14, 2021, Waldo had another meeting with Google/YouTube representatives, "to discuss a new policy we [YouTube] are working on as well as provide an update on our overall efforts to combat harmful COVID-19 misinformation on the platform."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Waldo Ex. 3, at 33. This was the "second update by [Google/Youtube] to [OSG] following the health advisory of stuff they're doing to combat harmful COVID-19 misinformation through YouTube." Waldo Dep. 129:7-12.

281. On May 28, 2021, a few days after meeting with Andy Slavitt and Dr. Murthy for the first time (and almost two months before OSG issued the Health Advisory and had the related meetings with Waldo and others), Nick Clegg emailed Dr. Murthy and stated that, "[a]s promised," he was sending a report of misinformation on Facebook. Waldo Ex. 4, at 1. Clegg also "highlighted a few policy updates we announced yesterday regarding repeat misinformation," including "expand[ing] penalties for individual Facebook accounts that share misinformation," "add[ing] more context about pages that repeatedly share false claims," and "redesign[ing] notifications when they share content that a fact-checker later rates." Id.

282. These "policy updates" about increasing censorship were announced on May 27, 2021, two days after Nick Clegg's meeting with Dr. Murthy and Andy Slavitt on May 25, 2021. Waldo Dep. 138:2-7.

283. Clegg plainly indicated that there had been prior conversations in which Slavitt and Dr. Murthy had demanded "defensive work" to remove misinformation: "We're . . . committed to addressing the defensive work around misinformation that you've called on us to address." Waldo Ex. 4, at 2. These prior conversations were not disclosed in OSG's responses to interrogatories, which noted the first meeting with Dr. Murthy was a mere introductory meeting with Clegg on May 25, 2021. Waldo Ex. 3, at 32.

284. On June 14, 2021, Nick Clegg emailed Dr. Murthy another ("the latest") "Facebook bi-weekly covid content report," which he indicated was "as promised/discussed," and offered

"[a]s always" to "jump on a call at any point … to delve into any further details as needed." Waldo Ex. 5, at 1.

285. The "Facebook bi-weekly covid content report," id., contained a report of "the most engaged posts … with respect to both accurate and inaccurate information." Waldo Dep. 140:8-10. Rob Flaherty of the White House also received these reports. Id. at 140:21-24.

286. Waldo admits that Facebook sending these biweekly reports to Dr. Murthy and Flaherty "had preexisted" and "predates the meeting" on May 25, 2021 – further indicating that OSG failed to disclose key meetings between Dr. Murthy and social media platforms in its interrogatory responses. Id. at 142:10-11.

287. On July 6, 2021, Waldo emailed contacts at Twitter to set up the "rollout call" before the health advisory and stated: "As you know, one of the issues Dr. Murthy has been thinking about is how to help stop the spread of health misinformation as we continue to tackle COVID19 and beyond. I know you and your teams are working hard and thinking deeply about this issue. We'd love to chat over zoom to connect and discuss what's on the horizon for our teams." Waldo Ex. 6, at 2; Waldo Dep. 145:15-146:22.

288. On July 6, 2021, Waldo sent an identical email to Facebook. Waldo Ex. 7, at 3-4. The purpose of these emails was to set up calls to announce the Surgeon General's forthcoming health advisory on misinformation. Waldo Dep. 149:11-16. Because of scheduling conflicts, the "rollout call" with Facebook was not scheduled until July 16, the day after the advisory was announced and the same day President Biden stated of Facebook that "they're killing people." Id. at 149:11-17.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

289. On July 6, 2021, Waldo also sent an email to YouTube with a similar statement to set up a rollout call with YouTube. Waldo Ex. 8, at 3. Waldo's emails make clear that OSG's message and purpose was to "stop the spread of misinformation" on social-media platforms. Id.

290. In these calls, "we had Kyla [Fullenwider] on the call and giving them a high-level update that we're going to have this advisory come out and that we want them to take a look at it." Waldo Dep. 153:23-154:1.

291. On July 10, 2021, Nick Clegg emailed Dr. Murthy, attaching another bi-weekly Covid content report, and stated, "I understand ... that my team is meeting with yours next week to delve deeper into our [C]ovid misinformation efforts." Waldo Ex. 9, at 1. Waldo understands that this refers to the July 16 rollout meeting. Waldo Dep. 155:12-18.

292. In the July 16, 2021 meeting with Facebook, Kyla Fullenwider went over the advisory, and then "asked additional questions … related to Facebook's efforts to combat health misinformation," including "some questions about, again, the research side.… [S]ome questions came up about CrowdTangle, if I recall correctly which was a … data port for … some ways to understand the Facebook, again, impact and research of the misinformation." Id. at 157:21-159:9.

D. The Surgeon General's Public Pressure Campaign.

293. On July 15, 2021, Dr. Murthy participated in a White House press conference with White House Press Secretary Jennifer Psaki to announce the Surgeon General's Health Advisory on Misinformation. Waldo Ex. 10. Psaki announced of Dr. Murthy that "[t]oday, he published an advisory on health misinformation as an urgent public health crisis." Id. at 1.

294. At the press conference, Dr. Murthy described misinformation as "one of the biggest obstacles that's preventing us from ending this pandemic," and stated: "Today, I issued a Surgeon General's Advisory on the dangers of health misinformation. Surgeon General Advisories are reserved for urgent public health threats…. [T]oday we live in a world where misinformation poses an imminent and insidious threat to our nation's health." Id. at 2. He stated that "misinformation takes away our freedom to make informed decisions about our health and the health of our loved ones." Id. at 2.

295. Dr. Murthy's definition of "misinformation" incorporates the notion that the definition changes over time: "Health misinformation is false, inaccurate, or misleading information about health, according to the best evidence at the time." Id. at 2. Waldo agrees that this definition "contemplate[s] that what constitutes misinformation might change over time," and that "something that we now think is misinformation may later turn out to be accurate information … [a]nd vice versa." Waldo Dep. 164:17-165:7.

296. Dr. Murthy stated that those who question mask mandates and decline vaccination are following misinformation: "During the COVID 19 pandemic, health misinformation has led people to resist wearing masks in high-risk settings. It's led them to turn down proven treatments and to choose not to get vaccinated. This has led to avoidable illnesses and death. Simply put, health [mis]information has cost us lives." Waldo Ex. 10, at 2.

297. Dr. Murthy placed specific blame on social-media platforms for the spread of misinformation: "Now, health misinformation didn't start with COVID-19. What's different now, though, is the speed and scale at which health misinformation is spreading. Modern technology companies have enabled misinformation to poison our information environment with little accountability to their users. They've allowed people who intentionally spread misinformation — what we call 'disinformation' — to have extraordinary reach." Id. at 2. Dr. Murthy described social-media companies as enabling the spread of "poison" in our "information environment." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

298. He blamed the platforms' algorithms and features for the spread as well: "They've designed product features, such as 'Like' buttons, that reward us for sharing emotionally charged content, not accurate content. And their algorithms tend to give us more of what we click on, pulling us deeper and deeper into a well of misinformation." Id.

299. Echoing the language of the Virality Project, Dr. Murthy stated, "we need an all-of-society approach to fight misinformation." Id. at 2.

300. Dr. Murthy announced: "we're saying we expect more from our technology companies. We're asking them to operate with greater transparency and accountability. We're asking them to monitor misinformation more closely. We're asking them to consistently take action against misinformation super-spreaders on their platforms." Id. at 3. Both the call for "transparency and accountability" and the request for increased monitoring and greater censorship of "super-spreaders" mirror the Virality Project report. See infra.

301. Both Dr. Murthy's public statements and his health advisory repeatedly use the word "accountable" and "accountability" to refer to the social-media platforms—again, echoing the Virality Project report. See id. at 2, 3, 5; Waldo Ex. 11, at 14, 16.

302. Waldo agrees that the word "accountable" carries with it the threat of consequences; he concedes that "accountability includes accepting the consequences for when you do something wrong … or inappropriate." Waldo Dep. 171:4-8. Thus, the OSG's repeated reference to holding social-media platforms "accountable" entails an implied threat of adverse consequences if the platforms do not censor more health misinformation. See id.

303. The Surgeon General's use of the word "accountable" also echoes the repeated use of the word "accountable" by elected federal officials, including President Biden and his political allies, to threaten adverse legal consequences against social-media platforms if they do not increase censorship of disfavored speakers, speech, and viewpoints. See, e.g., Jones Decl., Ex. R (quoting White House Communications Director Kate Bedingfield: "We're reviewing [amending Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act], and certainly [the social media companies] should be held accountable. I think you've heard the president speak very aggressively about this.").

304. Waldo agrees that Murthy's comments entail that "there's an obligation … or certainly an imperative to do more. So … not only stop but reduce or take some sort of mitigating efforts so that the misinformation and disinformation is not leading to poor health results for people." Waldo Dep. 172:21-173:1.

305. Dr. Murthy's call for greater "transparency" is a call for platforms to engage in the kind of data-sharing that Dr. Murthy, Rob Flaherty, DJ Patil, and Kyla Fullenwider, among others, demanded in private meetings with Facebook. Id. at 174:15-23. Again, this echoes the key recommendation of the Virality Project.

306. Waldo agrees that Dr. Murthy's call for greater "accountability" includes a demand to "take more proactive steps to stop the spread of misinformation." Id. at 176:1-4.

307. Dr. Murthy also demanded that the platforms do "much, much more" and "take aggressive action" against misinformation: "We know that the dramatic increase in the speed — speed and scale of spreading misinformation has, in part, been enabled by these platforms. So that's why in this advisory today, we are asking them to step up. We know they have taken some steps to address misinformation, but much, much more has to be done. And we can't wait longer for them to take aggressive action because it's costing people their lives." Waldo Ex. 10, at 5.

308. Dr. Murthy also stated that platforms "have to do more to reduce the misinformation that's out there so that the true voices of experts can shine through." Id. at 6.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

309. After the advisory, OSG asked Facebook, Google/YouTube, and Twitter "as a follow-up what actions they might have taken in response to the advisory." Waldo Dep. 181:15-21.

310. At the same press conference on July 15, 2021, Jennifer Psaki stated: "we are in regular touch with these social media platforms, and those engagements typically happen through members of our senior staff, but also members of our COVID-19 team." Waldo Ex. 10, at 10.

311. Psaki stated: "We've increased disinformation research and tracking within the Surgeon General's office. We're flagging problematic posts for Facebook that spread disinformation." Id.

312. "Regarding the Administration's "asks" to social-media platforms, Psaki stated: "There are also proposed changes that we have made to social media platforms, including Facebook, and those specifically are four key steps: One, that they measure and publicly share the impact of misinformation on their platform. Facebook should provide, publicly and transparently, data on the reach of COVID-19 — COVID vaccine misinformation. Not just engagement, but the reach of the misinformation and the audience that it's reaching." Id. at 11. Again, this echoes the key recommendation of the Virality Project report. It also echoes Dr. Murthy's call for "transparency" and the repeated private demands that Facebook give external researchers like Renee DiResta of the Virality Project access to its internal data. Waldo Dep. 191:17-21.

313. Psaki also stated: "Second, that we have recommended — proposed that they create a robust enforcement strategy that bridges their properties and provides transparency about the rules. So, about — I think this was a question asked before — there's about 12 people who are producing 65 percent of anti-vaccine misinformation on social media platforms All of them remain active on Facebook, despite some even being banned on other platforms, including Facebook — ones that Facebook owns." Waldo Ex. 10, at 11.

314. Psaki stated: "Third, it's important to take faster action against harmful posts. As you all know, information travels quite quickly on social media platforms; sometimes it's not accurate. And Facebook needs to move more quickly to remove harmful, violative posts — posts that will be within their policies for removal often remain up for days. That's too long. The information spreads too quickly." Id.

315. Waldo agrees that the Surgeon General's advisory calls for platforms to "move faster" and take "more aggressive" action against supposed misinformation. Waldo Dep. 194:20-21.

316. And Psaki stated, publicly criticizing Facebook: "Finally, we have proposed they promote quality information sources in their feed algorithm. Facebook has repeatedly shown that they have the levers to promote quality information. We've seen them effectively do this in their algorithm over low-quality information and they've chosen not to use it in this case. And that's certainly an area that would have an impact." Waldo Ex. 10, at 11.

317. Psaki concluded: "So, these are certainly the proposals. We engage with them regularly and they certainly understand what our asks are." Id.

318. On the same day, July 15, 2021, Surgeon General Murthy issued his advisory, "Confronting Health Misinformation: The U.S. Surgeon General's Advisory on Building a Healthy Information Environment." Waldo Ex. 11, at 1 (the "Health Advisory"); Waldo Dep. 196:21-197:1.

319. The Health Advisory describes censorship of health misinformation as a "moral and civic imperative": "Health misinformation is a serious threat to public health. … Limiting the spread of health misinformation is a moral and civic imperative that will require a whole-of-society effort." Waldo Ex. 11, at 2. The "whole-of-society effort" echoes the language of the Virality Project.

320. The Health Advisory states: "Misinformation has caused confusion and led people to decline COVID-19 vaccines, reject public health measures such as masking and physical distancing, and use unproven treatments." Id. at 4.

321. The Health Advisory specifically blames social-media platforms for the spread of misinformation: "In recent years, the rapidly changing information environment has made it easier for misinformation to spread at unprecedented speed and scale, especially on social media and online retail sites, as well as via search engines." Id. at 5. According to the Advisory, "misinformation is often framed in a sensational and emotional manner that can connect viscerally, distort memory, align with cognitive biases, and heighten psychological responses such as anxiety. People can feel a sense of urgency to react to and share emotionally charged misinformation with others, enabling it to spread quickly and go 'viral.'" Id.

322. In addition, the Advisory blames "product features" of platforms: "[P]roduct features built into technology platforms have contributed to the spread of misinformation. For example, social media platforms incentivize people to share content to get likes, comments, and other positive signals of engagement. These features help connect and inform people but reward engagement rather than accuracy, allowing emotionally charged misinformation to spread more easily than emotionally neutral content." Id.

323. The Advisory also faults platforms' "algorithms": "algorithms that determine what users see online often prioritize content based on its popularity or similarity to previously seen content. As a result, a user exposed to misinformation once could see more and more of it over time, further reinforcing one's misunderstanding." Id.

324. The Health Advisory specifically called for platforms to enact "policy changes" to reduce the spread of misinformation: "Implement product design and policy changes on technology platforms to slow the spread of misinformation." Id. at 7 (bold in original).

325. The Health Advisory also explicitly threatened future "legal and regulatory measures" to combat misinformation: "Convene federal, state, local, territorial, tribal, private, nonprofit, and research partners to explore the impact of health misinformation, identify best practices to prevent and address it, issue recommendations, and find common ground on difficult questions, including appropriate legal and regulatory measures that address health misinformation …." Id. at 7 (bold in original, italics added).

326. Under the heading "What Technology Platforms Can Do," the Health Advisory called for platforms to take a series of steps to increase and enable greater social-media censorship of "misinformation," including the following: "[M]ake meaningful long-term investments to address misinformation, including product changes. Redesign recommendation algorithms to avoid amplifying misinformation, build in "frictions" … to reduce the sharing of misinformation, and make it easier for users to report misinformation. Give researchers access to useful data to properly analyze the spread and impact of misinformation. Strengthen the monitoring of misinformation. … [A]ddress misinformation in live streams, which are more difficult to moderate due to their temporary nature and use of audio and video. Prioritize early detection of misinformation 'super-spreaders' and repeat offenders. Impose clear consequences for accounts that repeatedly violate platform policies. Evaluate the effectiveness of internal policies and practices in addressing misinformation and be transparent with findings. Publish standardized measures of how often users are exposed to misinformation and through what channels, what kinds of misinformation are most prevalent, and what share of misinformation is addressed in a timely manner. Communicate why certain content is flagged, removed, downranked, or left alone." Id. at 12.

327. Waldo agrees that the Advisory calls for platforms to provide "a method for users to flag problematic posts so that they could be reviewed for content modulation, policy violations." Waldo Dep. 200:25-201:5.

328. Waldo agrees that "clear consequences" for repeat violators include "things like issuing strikes against them, suspensions … and sometimes permanent deplatforming." Id. at 205:6-13.

329. In its conclusion, the Health Advisory states: "We need institutions to recognize that this issue is their moral and civic responsibility, too, and that they are accountable." Waldo Ex. 11, at 16. Waldo agrees that the word "accountable" is repeated in the Surgeon General's remarks and the Advisory itself. Waldo Dep. 206:3-11.

F. The Surgeon General's Collaboration with the Virality Project.

330. Also on January 15, 2021, Surgeon General Murthy participated in a separate launch event hosted by Stanford Internet Observatory, which was then operating the Virality Project. Waldo Ex. 12, at 1; Waldo Dep. 206:12-207:9.

331. In his public comments with Stanford Internet Observatory, Dr. Murthy stated: "We're asking technology companies to operate with greater transparency and accountability so that misinformation doesn't continue to poison our sharing platforms, and we know the government can play an important role, too." Waldo Ex. 12, at 8 (Audio Tr. 6). This reiterates the key words "poison" and "accountability."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

332. Waldo describes government's "important role" as including "bringing stakeholders … together with urgency around a common vision for a healthy information environment … the government can help bring together stakeholders … what I would call the convening power of a bully pulpit." Waldo Dep. 209:15-22. This would include bringing social-media platforms around to the government's "common vision" for censorship. Id. at 209:24-210:8.

333. Dr. Murthy was asked, "do you believe a rapid response initiative like the Virality Project could be implemented at the federal level to combat health misinformation on a national scale from the top down?" and he answered that "having a federal organized effort to combat misinformation" is "a really, really interesting idea." Waldo Ex. 12, at 10 (Audio Tr. 8).

334. Dr. Murthy stated: "[T]echnology companies have a really important role. They must step up and play to slow the spread of misinformation on their sites wh[ether] that's by either sharing data with people and researchers about what interventions they're making and the impact that's having or whether it's by changing their algorithms and making other alterations to their platform to identify misinformation early and slow its spread and avoid sending more information of misinformation to people who are consuming it." Id. at 11 (Audio Tr. 9).

335. Waldo agrees that "the purpose of the data sharing is so that outside people come in and … assess how well they're doing with their own internal policies to combat the spread of misinformation." Waldo Dep. 211:6-11.

336. Dr. Murthy expressly stated that he had been coordinating with Renee DiResta and the Virality Project and planned to continue to do so: "Well, thank you, Renee, for those kind words. … I do want to say thank you to you personally because you have been a leader in this effort long before many people recognize[d] what was happening with COVID misinformation. You were there looking at the data, looking at the numbers, speaking out, raising the flags, saying there's something here we've got to address and do so urgently. I have personally learned a lot from your work and from our conversations together, and so I just want to say thank you to you for everything you've done for being such a great partner for moderating our event today, and just for being a partner in the future, because I know we have lots and lots more that we've got to do together." Waldo Ex. 12, at 12 (Audio Tr. 10).

337. Dr. Murthy also stated that his team had been "partnered with" the Stanford Internet Observatory over "many months": "myself, my team, we're committed to working with you, Renee, with others … who we've been … partnered with over the last many months…." Id. at 13 (Audio Tr. 11).

G. The Surgeon General's "Angry" and "Tense" Meetings With Platforms.

338. On July 16, 2021, the New York Times reported that President Biden publicly stated about Facebook, "They're killing people" by allowing misinformation to spread on its platforms. Waldo Ex. 14, at 1.

339. The article reported that "this week, White House officials went further and singled out social media companies for allowing false information to proliferate. That came after weeks of failed attempts to get Facebook to turn over information detailing what mechanisms were in place to combat misinformation about the vaccine, according to a person familiar with the matter." Id.

340. The same article reported that Jennifer Psaki stated, "We raised for them in our direct channels, of which every administration has always had with every social media platform, that we're seeing this trend." Id. at 2.

341. The article reported that there had been a series of "talks" between Surgeon General Murthy and Facebook "since January" of 2021—none of which were disclosed in OSG's interrogatory responses: "Since January, senior White House officials, including the surgeon general, Dr. Vivek Murthy, have been in talks with the social media company to stop the spread of false stories about vaccination side effects and other harms." Id. at 2. In these "talks," federal officials demanded Facebook's internal data on misinformation on its platforms: "Despite repeated requests by the White House, Facebook has not shared even basic data on how much vaccine misinformation exists and if the company's efforts to stop its spread are working, according to the person familiar with the talks." Id. at 2.

342. "When administration officials presented data from CrowdTangle, a content tracking tool owned by Facebook, that showed vaccine misinformation was soaring, company officials dismissed its accuracy." Id. at 2.

343. In one meeting, Dr. Murthy "angrily" demanded that Facebook censor misinformation instead of just promoting reliable information: "In another meeting with Dr. Murthy, … Dr. Murthy angrily said that while the company [Facebook] promoted its efforts to encourage vaccination, it did not do enough to defend against bad information." Id. at 2.

344. In another "tense" meeting in "late spring," Dr. Murthy repeated similar demands: "In one tense meeting in the late spring, according to the person familiar with the matter, a Facebook official responded defensively, 'How do you know if your efforts are working?'" Id. at 2.

345. Waldo agrees that this news report "does not accurately describe … that introductory call between Nick Clegg, Andy Slavitt, and Dr. Murthy on May 25th of 2021," which is the only meeting involving Dr. Murthy disclosed in OSG's interrogatory responses. Waldo Dep. 219:17-21; 222:14-23. In those responses, OSG did not disclose Dr. Murthy's "tense" and "angry" meetings with Facebook during the spring of 2021.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

H. The Surgeon General Leverages Public Pressure to Increase Censorship.

346. On July 21, 2021, five days after the July 16 meeting where "the Facebook folks … had sad faces," id. at 226:15-16, Facebook emailed Waldo and Kyla Fullenwider, stating: "We wanted to follow up with you on a few questions you asked in the meeting focused on CrowdTangle, data on the online interventions, and Facebook's borderline content policies," Waldo Ex. 16, at 1. This referred to the July 16 meeting with Waldo and Fullenwider. Waldo Dep. 227:3-8.

347. In the email, Facebook reported back to OSG on "interventions that the team mentioned, some of which specifically create frictions in how people consume information." Waldo Ex. 16, at 1. These include limiting forwarded WhatsApp messages, placing "warning labels on fact checked content," and creating "friction when someone goes to share these posts on Facebook." Id.

348. Facebook also reported to OSG a series of censorship policies and actions, including the following: "We remove COVID-19 content that contributes to the risk of imminent physical harms, including numerous false claims about the COVID-19 vaccine. We permanently ban pages, groups, and accounts that repeatedly break our rules on COVID-19 misinformation. We also reduce the reach of posts, pages, groups, and accounts that share other false claims that do not violate our policies but may present misleading or sensationalized information about COVID-19 and vaccines." Id. at 1. Evidently, OSG's inquiry at the July 16 meeting about "borderline content" related to the censorship of such content. See id. Waldo agrees that Fullenwider asked Facebook to report back about censorship at the July 16 meeting: "The response indicates that it's about COVID policies including removal, banning and reducing the reach." Waldo Dep. 232:9-11, 233:12-234:1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

349. On July 16, 2021, Nick Clegg emailed Dr. Murthy and stated, "Dear Vivek, Reaching out after what has transpired over the past few days following the publication of the misinformation advisory and culminating today in the President's remarks about us." Waldo Ex. 17, at 1-2. He then stated, "I know our teams met today to better understand the scope of what the White House expects of us on misinformation going forward." Id. at 2 (emphasis added). Facebook understood the purpose of the meetings was to understand the White House's expectations on misinformation. See id.

350. Clegg indicated that there had been a history of prior discussions with Dr. Murthy and the White House in which federal officials demanded greater censorship—both more stringent policies and greater enforcement—which were not disclosed in OSG's interrogatory responses: "Certainly we understand (and have understood for some time) that there is disagreement on some of the policies governing our approach and how they are being enforced." Id. at 2. Clegg asked for a meeting with Dr. Murthy, who did not immediately respond. Id. at 1-2.

351. On July 18, 2021, having received no response to his email requesting a meeting, Clegg texted Dr. Murthy stating, "I imagine you and your team are feeling a little aggrieved – as is the FB team, it's not great to be accused of killing people – but as I said by email I'm keen to find a way to deescalate and work together collaboratively. I am available to meet/speak whenever suits." Waldo Ex. 18, at 1.

352. On July 19, Dr. Murthy responded by email and agreed to a meeting, which was scheduled for July 23, 2021. Waldo Ex. 17, at 1; Waldo Dep. 241:1-14.

353. At the July 23, 2021 meeting, "Dr. Murthy asked Mr. Clegg about … the research questions about understanding the reach of the data in terms the impact of the … health misinformation. And … DJ [Patil] had some questions about also on the data side and Nick [Clegg] offered to connect DJ with a data person from Facebook." Waldo Dep. 242:8-16.

354. Later on June 23, 2021, after the meeting between Dr. Murthy and Nick Clegg, Clegg sent a follow-up email to Dr. Murthy stating: "Dear Vivek, if I may, thanks again for taking the time to meet earlier today….. I wanted to make sure you saw the steps we took just this past week to adjust policies on what we are removing with respect to misinformation as well as steps taken to further address the 'disinfo dozen'…." Waldo Ex. 19, at 1.

355. Clegg's reference to "just this past week" refers to the one-week period between this July 23 email and rollout of the Advisory on July 15 and the President's comment "They're killing people" on July 16. Id.; Waldo Dep. 244:14-19.

356. It is evident that Dr. Murthy and federal officials pressured Facebook for specific censorship actions in the July 23 meeting, because the same day as the meeting, Clegg reported back to them a series of new censorship actions and policies. First, Clegg reported enforcement actions against the "Disinfo Dozen" whom Jennifer Psaki had publicly demanded censorship: "We removed 17 additional Pages, Groups, and Instagram accounts tied to the disinfo dozen (so a total of 39 Profiles, Pages, Groups, and IG accounts deleted thus far, resulting in every member of the disinfo dozen having had at least one such entity removed)." Waldo Ex. 19, at 1. Clegg reported that Facebook was secretly censoring accounts associated with the Disinfo Dozen even if they had not violated Facebook's policies: "We are also continuing to make 4 other Pages and Profiles, which have not yet met their removal thresholds, more difficult to find on our platform." Id.

357. Clegg also reported that Facebook had amended its censorship policies to make them more restrictive: "We also expanded the group of false claims that we remove, to keep up with recent trends of misinformation that we are seeing." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

358. Clegg also committed to "do more" to censor misinformation in response to federal officials' demands: "We hear your call for us to do more and, as I said on the call, we're committed to working toward our shared goal of helping America get on top of this pandemic." Id. Dr. Murthy, evidently, demanded that Facebook "do more" against misinformation on it platforms in the July 23 phone call. See id.

359. Clegg further agreed to accede to federal officials' demands that Facebook make its internal data on misinformation available to federal officials and researchers like Renee DiResta of the Virality Project: "We will reach out directly to DJ to schedule a deeper dive on how to best measure Covid related content and how to proceed with respect to the question around data." Id. at 1-2.

360. Clegg also pledged to report back to Dr. Murthy repeatedly so that federal officials could monitor Facebook's "progress" on censoring misinformation: "We'd also like to begin a regular cadence of meetings with your team so that we can continue to update you on our progress. You have identified 4 specific recommendations for improvement and we want to make sure to keep you informed of our work on each." Id. at 2. Clegg also promised to continue sending federal officials regular updated reports on the spread of misinformation on Facebook's platforms. Id.

361. Clegg concluded by promising that Facebook would "strive" to meet federal officials' expectations on censorship: "we will strive to do all we can to meet our shared goals." Id.; see also Waldo Dep. 245:6-247:4.

362. Waldo agrees that Clegg's statement "We hear your call for us to do more" in the July 23 email is an accurate understanding of the Surgeon General's message from the July 15 press conference, the Health Advisory, and the July 15 rollout at Stanford Internet Observatory: "Yes. I think, as we've established, the advisory and … the remarks, and the event with the Stanford

Internet Observatory, Dr. Murthy is calling on … social media companies to do more to address the problem of health mis- and disinformation." Waldo Dep. 251:6-12.

363. After the July 23 email, Waldo connected Brian Rice of Facebook with DJ Patil to discuss data-sharing to monitor social-media misinformation between Facebook and federal officials. Id. at 252:9-19.

364. Additionally, on the July 23 call with Nick Clegg, the OSG specifically asked Facebook to report back on any additional steps they were taking in response to the Health Advisory to increase censorship of misinformation on their platforms. Waldo Ex. 21, at 1. On August 6, 2021, Waldo emailed Brian Rice and Nick Clegg of Facebook and stated, "I know on the call with Dr. Murthy he'd mentioned seeing if you were able to send an update of any new/additional steps you are taking with respect to health misinformation in light of the advisory." Id. Waldo noted that "we are asking all platforms for this type of update." Id. Waldo asked for a report from Facebook within two weeks: "Would you be able to send something over within two weeks?" Id.

365. In the same email, Waldo connected Facebook with DJ Patil of the White House "on next steps for connecting on data." Id.

366. Facebook responded that it was planning "additional steps" to increase censorship of misinformation, and promised to report back to the Surgeon General in 2 weeks: "Our teams have been working on additional steps—we will have something back to you within two weeks outlining our approach." Id. Facebook also followed up with Patil to schedule the meeting about using Facebook's internal data to monitor speech on its platforms. Id.

367. Waldo admits that, during the July 23 call, "we asked for an update," and that it was probably Dr. Murthy who asked for it. Waldo Dep. 256:20-23.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

368. Waldo does not dispute that he asked "all platforms" to provide a similar "update" on new or additional steps to censor misinformation in light of the Advisory, and that "all platforms" means "Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, and YouTube, and Google." Id. at 257:10-258:9.

369. On July 19, 2021, a few days after the President's "They're killing people" comments, Rob Flaherty of the White House emailed Dr. Murthy to put him in touch with an operative for the Democratic National Committee who works on misinformation and disinformation issues. Waldo Ex. 22, at 3. Flaherty wrote: "Vivek – wanted to link you with Jiore Craig, who's been a critical leader of the DNC's misinfo work for a long time, but also has been helping us think through mis/dis on the COVID side. I thought it would be great for you both to connect as OSG charts out next steps." Id. Eric Waldo followed up to schedule a Zoom meeting on July 22 between Ms. Craig of the DNC and key members of the OSG's staff. Id. at 1.

370. On August 18, 2021, Facebook again reported back to OSG about additional censorship actions against misinformation "superspreaders." Waldo Ex. 24, at 1. Facebook stated, "Eric and DJ – flagging this post for you and for Surgeon General Murthy. This details how we are approaching content from the disinfo dozen." Id. Facebook sent the same update to Rob Flaherty of the White House on the same day. Id. at 2.

371. The post was entitled, "How We're Taking Action Against Vaccine Misinformation Superspreaders." Id. at 1. The post detailed a long list of censorship actions taken against the "Disinfo Dozen," including removing over three dozen pages, groups and accounts linked with them; imposing additional penalties on another two dozen pages, groups, and accounts linked with them; applying penalties to some of their website domains so that third parties posting their content will be deamplified; and removing the remaining violating content. Id. at 1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

372. As Waldo acknowledges, this was the "second report that Facebook has sent [OSG] after that July 23rd meeting where they're reporting back about actions taken against the Disinfo Dozen." Waldo Dep. 268:12-16.

373. On August 20, 2021—two weeks after the August 6 email in which Waldo had requested a report within two weeks on Facebook's new or additional steps to remove misinformation in light of the Health Advisory—Nick Clegg sent a long, detailed email to Dr. Murthy, Waldo, and DJ Patil, detailing Facebook's additional censorship actions taken as a result of the Advisory. Waldo Ex. 25, at 1-3.

374. In the August 20 email, Clegg noted that Dr. Murthy had "asked for an update on existing and new steps that Facebook is taking." Id. at 1. Clegg noted that Facebook was taking new steps in response to the pressure from the White House and Surgeon General since July 15 and 16: "In this update, we describe … further policy work to enable stronger action against persistent distributors of vaccine misinformation." Id.

375. In a lengthy section headed "Limiting Potentially Harmful Misinformation," Clegg provided five bullet points and four sub-bullet points detailing expanded efforts of censorship by Facebook taken in response to the Advisory. Id. at 2. These included, among others, " expanding our COVID policies to further reduce the spread of potentially harmful content"; "increasing the strength of our demotions for COVID and vaccine-related content that third-party fact-checkers rate as 'Partly False' or 'Missing Context'"; "making it easier to have Pages/Groups/Accounts demoted for sharing COVID and vaccine-related misinformation"; and "strengthening our existing demotion penalties for websites that are repeatedly fact-checked for COVID or vaccine misinformation content shared on our platform." Id. at 2. Clegg also included a report of additional actions taken against the Disinfo Dozen. Id. Clegg also reporteded that Facebook

"continue[s] to experiment with signals that we can use … to demote content that we predict will contain low quality information." Id.

376. In another long section entitled "Increasing Transparency," Clegg detailed a list of actions taken by Facebook to share data about the reach of misinformation on its platforms, per federal demands. Id. at 2-3; see also Waldo Dep. 269:20-277:8 (reviewing the content of the August 20 email in detail).

377. Waldo agrees that this email is "a report back to [OSG's] request for report in two weeks related to actions they took in respect to the advisory." Waldo Dep. 270:19-23.

378. Waldo responded to Clegg by stating that "we look forward to continuing to move forward together with urgency and solutions during these extraordinary times." Waldo Ex. 25, at 1. The phrase "urgency and solutions" was intended to push Facebook to increase its anti-misinformation efforts: "I was hoping that Facebook would continue to move. Urgency means, you know, that they would take this seriously, and solutions means that they would also come with real solutions to the problems and not just pretend to solve problems." Waldo Dep. 277:23-278:3.

379. Three days later, on August 23, 2021, Rob Flaherty of the White House emailed Facebook, asking for a report on how they intended "to promote" the FDA's approval of the Pfizer vaccine and noting that the White House "[would] appreciate a push" of the vaccine information using specific "suggested language from [the White House]." Waldo Ex. 27, at 2. Facebook responded the same day with an additional report on new steps to remove vaccine misinformation: "We're … updating our misinformation policies to remove the specific claims that 'there are no FDA-approved vaccines' and 'the Pfizer vaccine is not FDA-approved.' We'll also continue to look for claims that are no longer accurate given the approval today." Id. at 1. Facebook forwarded this report on increasing censorship to Waldo at OSG as well. Id.; see also Waldo Dep. 280:1-281:24.

380. On September 18, 2021, Facebook sent Eric Waldo and Rob Flaherty another bi-weekly report, and also noted that "I'm sure you also saw yesterday's story in the WSJ about the spread of COVID-19 misinformation in comments on Facebook," which Facebook disagreed with and offered to discuss. Waldo Ex. 30, at 1. Flaherty responded, "Happy to talk about it, Brian. Would be interested to see, as we have long asked for, how big the problem is, what solutions you're implementing, and how effective they've been." Id. Facebook promised, "we will circle back over the next few days to brief." Id.

381. On September 29, 2021, Google emailed Eric Waldo to "share an update we recently made to YouTube's policies pertaining to vaccine-related misinformation." Google reported: "We just announced that we will be introducing a new policy that prohibits content that includes harmful misinformation about the safety, efficacy, or ingredients for currently administered vaccines…" Waldo Ex. 31, at 1.

382. On October 19, 2021, Rob Flaherty emailed Facebook, copying several White House officials and Eric Waldo, and asked Facebook to "connect on what the admin's plans are for the 5-11 vaccine rollout." Waldo Ex. 32, at 1. The "5-11 vaccine rollout" refers to the approval of vaccines for children ages 5 to 11 years old. Waldo Dep. 298:20-23.

383. Flaherty requested that Facebook report on its censorship plans for claims on social media about the authorization of vaccines for children ages 5 to 11: "We'd like to talk about what we're seeing as the biggest headwinds we're going to face, and discuss what you all are planning as we move into this next phase. We remain concerned about mis- and disinformation on feed and groups, and the wide reach of hesitancy-inducing content across your platform." Waldo Ex. 32, at 1.

384. Facebook responded, agreeing to the meeting: "we'd welcome the opportunity. Adding Felicia on our end to help coordinate." Waldo Ex. 32, at 1.

385. Waldo states that he does not recall whether this meeting occurred or if he participated, but he agrees that the meeting probably occurred: "Probably. If they added schedulers, usually those meetings happen." Waldo Dep. 300:14-23.

I. The Surgeon General and White House Hammer Facebook.

386. On October 28, 2021, the Washington Post ran a story based on information from Frances Haugen reporting that "Facebook researchers had deep knowledge of how coronavirus and vaccine misinformation moved through the company's apps, according to documents disclosed by Facebook whistleblower Frances Haugen." Waldo Ex. 33, at 1.

387. In response to the article, on October 29, Surgeon General Murthy issued a series of Tweets from his official Twitter account demanding that Facebook increase censorship and give outside researchers access to its data. Waldo Ex. 33, at 1. In the Tweet thread, Dr. Murthy stated: "I was deeply disappointed to read this story. Health misinformation has harmed people's health and cost lives. In the Surgeon General's Advisory on Health Misinformation, I stated clearly that tech platforms have a responsibility to improve our health information ecosystem. What continues to be lacking from Facebook and other tech companies is transparency and accountability. Only the companies understand the full extent of misinformation's spread and impact – yet they have not yet shared this data with independent researchers and the public. Without this critical data, it is much harder to design the right interventions or hold the platforms accountable. … We must demand Facebook and the rest of the social media ecosystem take responsibility for stopping health misinformation on their platforms. The time for excuses and half measures is long past. We need transparency and accountability now. The health of our country is at stake." Id. Dr. Murthy repeated the mantras "transparency" and "accountability," threatening that the federal government would "hold the platforms accountable" for misinformation. Id.

388. This Tweet thread reflects Dr. Murthy's own words, as he "made the final and substantial edits" to the Tweets. Waldo Dep. 303:25-304:17.

389. Waldo agrees that the Twitter thread demands "transparency and accountability around health misinformation, especially vis-à-vis the social media organizations," and "demands that Facebook and the other platforms do more" to "stop[] health misinformation." Id. at 305:6-22. "Lots of work went into" crafting that message, according to Waldo. Id. at 306:7-8.

390. On October 28, 2021, the same day as the Washington Post article, Rob Flaherty emailed Brian Rice of Facebook a hyperlink to the article. The only text in the email was the subject line, which stated: "not even sure what to say at this point." Waldo Ex. 35, at 1-2.

391. Facebook responded to Flaherty by stating, "nothing in the story is inconsistent with what we briefed on," and providing its account of the facts underlying the story. Id. at 1. Facebook then forwarded this response to Waldo and the OSG, noting that "I saw the Surgeon General's reaction on Twitter," and asking for "a longer conversation next week" about the issue. Id.

392. Waldo describes both the Surgeon General's public Tweet threat, and Rob Flaherty's private email to Facebook, as different ways of "hitting up Facebook" about the Frances Haugen article: "this was one of the most popular articles in all of news that week, so I'm not surprised that people who care a lot about this issue were certainly hitting up Facebook about it." Waldo Dep. 307:13-22.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

393. On October 28, 2021, Nick Clegg also emailed Dr. Murthy and asked for a meeting to discuss the "intense debate that's been prompted by the documents disclosed by a former employee." Waldo Ex. 36, at 2. Waldo responded on behalf of the OSG, stating that "we have seen the recent public reports around Facebook and misinformation. We are certainly concerned about what we are seeing, given our emphasis on health misinformation in our advisory and the ongoing conversations our teams have been having. As has been the case, you'll continue to see us raising the issue of health misinformation in public and in private as a critical public health issue." Id. at 1.

394. Regarding his reference to "in private," Waldo admits that this refers to "closed-door meetings" with platforms like Facebook: "in the government, you're not always just doing a panel that's open press, you're meeting with stakeholders … in closed-door meetings…." Waldo Dep. 312:13-16. The Surgeon General's Office was continuously pushing for action against health misinformation "in public and private" meetings with stakeholders: "talking about health mis- and disinformation was in our talking points of when we talked to stakeholders in public and private." Id. at 313:8-11.

395. The next day, October 29, 2021, Facebook sent a long email to Rob Flaherty, Eric Waldo, and several other White House officials referring back to an October 25 meeting about vaccines for children ages 5-11. Waldo Ex. 37, at 3-4; Waldo Dep. 315:8-316:15. The email reported to the White House and OSG a "detailed description of [Facebook's] plans" for the approval of vaccines for children. Id. at 4. The plans included immediately updating policies to censor claims relating to vaccination of children: "As discussed, soon as the EUA is issued, we will also be able to apply claims from our current misinfo policies for COVID-19 vaccines to include claims about child vaccinations." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

396. Facebook also noted that it was relying directly on the CDC to decide what to censor: "We were able to make this change based on the conversation we had last week with the CDC…. There are several claims we will be able to remove as soon as the CDC debunks them." Id.

397. Facebook then asked federal officials to provide a federal health authority to dictate what content would be censored on Facebook's platforms: "We expect the approval of COVID vaccines for kids aged 5-11 will be another significant peak of new misinformation claims. Our policy allows us to take action against this content once those claims have been debunked and confirmed harmful by a public health authority. We're committing to addressing these quickly; to do so effectively, we will need a channel to a health expert with whom we can discuss these claims in real time. Is this something we could partner on, and if so, would your team be able to connect us with a point person?" Id.

398. On November 4, 2021, Facebook followed up again to OSG and the White House with additional reports of censoring misinformation: "Last Friday, we updated our misinformation policies for COVID-19 vaccines to make clear they apply to claim about children," identifying a list of specific claims. Id. at 1.

399. Facebook made clear that the CDC was serving as the "health expert" who was dictating what could be said on Facebook's platforms "in real time": "We're grateful to our partners at the CDC for helping get these debunked in advance of the announcement, and we look forward to staying connected on emerging COVID misinformation trends." Id. at 1, 3.

J. The Surgeon General Threatens Regulation to Increase Censorship.

400. On December 21, 2021, Dr. Murthy gave a podcast on the Omicron variant in which he again publicly threatened to hold the social-media platforms "accountable" for not censoring misinformation: "number one, we have to track down where this misinformation is coming from and understand how to hold platforms accountable, new technology platforms that are driving so much of the misinformation spread…. [B]y allowing this misinformation to proliferate on their sites, they're subjecting people in the United States and around the world to extraordinary harm, and they're doing so with little accountability at this moment and really with very little transparency. That can't be allowed to continue because it's putting everyone's health at risk." Waldo Ex. 38, at 4 (Audio Tr. 7).

401. Dr. Murthy demanded "aggressive action" from the platforms to censor speech: "I do think that part of what they have to do, the platforms is take aggressive action against people who are intentionally spreading misinformation." Id.

402. Waldo agrees that this message is "consistent with his previous statements as well as the content within the advisory itself." Waldo Dep. 321:22-24.

403. As Waldo concedes, Dr. Murthy's threat to hold platforms "accountable" and his demand for "aggressive action" to censor misinformation "is consistent with the messaging we've reviewed all day today of the advisory, the rollout, the public statements" by OSG. Id. at 322:22-24.

404. On January 3, 2022, Dr. Murthy participated in Alyssa Milano's podcast. Waldo Ex. 39, at 1. In the podcast, Dr. Murthy stated that the "sophistication with which this misinformation is spreading is truly unprecedented, and a lot of has been enabled by technology platforms in the social media which enable the spread, and … the platforms need to do a lot more is step up, to be accountable for making their spaces safer." Id. at 3 (Audio Tr. 2). He also stated, "finally, I just want to come back to the technology companies for a moment here, because unless those platforms step up and make their spaces safer and reduce the amount of misinformation on their site, it's going to be pretty tough to get a full handle on this spread of misinformation." Id. at 5 (Audio Tr. 4).

405. Immediately after these comments, the podcast broadcast public comments by President Biden, stating: "Joe Biden: The unvaccinated are responsible for their own choices, but those choices had been shulled [sic] by dangerous misinformation on cable TV and social media. You know, these companies … are making money by ped[dling] lies and allowing misinformation that can kill their own customers and their own supporters. It's wrong. It's immoral. I call on the purveyors of these lies and misinformation to stop it. Stop it now." Id.

406. Waldo agrees that this podcast is "aligned with … the advisory and the other public statements we've seen so far." Waldo Dep. 327:8-10.

407. Dr. Murthy also called for the platforms to "go after people who are superspreaders of misinformation on these sites," which Waldo agrees is "entirely consistent … with the messages that Dr. Murthy was sharing about health mis- and disinformation." Id. at 329:23-330:18.

408. On February 14, 2021, Dr. Murthy participated in a panel discussion hosted by the Rockefeller Foundation. Waldo Ex. 41. Dr. Murthy stated, "what feels different in this moment compared to ten years ago or [twenty] years ago is this speed, scale, and sophistication with which this misinformation is spreading and much of it has been enabled, in fact, by technology platforms, and we talk to people about where they're encountering misinformation. It's off and on social media channels and other tech platforms. … We need certainly technology companies to step up and do more, to help reduce this spread of misinformation, and to be transparent with the public about how much misinformation is being transacted on their sites and whether their methods of addressing it are working or not. We do not have enough transparency on that front and that is hindering us in our response of misinformation." Id. a 6-7 (Audio Tr. 9-10).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

409. Waldo agrees that this is "a consistent message with what we've seen in previous public statements, interviews, as well as the advisory itself." Waldo Dep. 331:23-25.

410. In the same panel, Dr. Murthy stated that there is a role for government to set "safety standards" when it comes to misinformation, which directly suggests government regulation and foreshadowed the OSG's forthcoming Request for Information (RFI): "And, of course, there's a role for government here as well to set safety standards, to push for transparency and accountability, particularly from platforms." Waldo Ex. 41, at 8 (Audio Tr. 11). Dr. Murthy then immediately foreshadowed the OSG's forthcoming Request for Information (RFI) as a step toward government "setting safety standards": "There are steps we are working now that we will be -- you know, have more to say about it in the … coming weeks and months ahead, to try to, in fact, gather even more information about the impact of health misinformation on health professionals of the public and also in the role that technology companies may be playing on that on that front." Id. Less than a month later, the OSG issued a formal RFI for information about misinformation on social media platforms.

411. On March 3, 2021, the OSG issued a formal RFI in the Federal Register, seeking information from social-media platforms and others about the spread of misinformation on social media. Waldo Ex. 42 (87 Fed. Reg. 12712). The RFI is entitled, "Impact of Health Misinformation in the Digital Information Environment in the United States Throughout the COVID–19 Pandemic Request for Information (RFI)." Id. at 1.

412. "Kyla [Fullenwider] was the primary driver on the RFI from a content expert perspective." Waldo Dep. 338:22-23. Though she was employed at U.S. Digital Response, "she was doing work on behalf of the Surgeon General." Id. at 340:8-9. Kyla Fullenwider is also responsible for receiving and reviewing the responses to the RFI. Id. at 362:6-10. "Kyla was the subject matter expert who was guiding this RFI process." Id. at 362:15-17.

413. The RFI defines "technology platforms" very broadly, indicating that the Surgeon General is expanding its attempts to control the spread of so-called "misinformation": "Technology platforms include the following: General search engines, content sharing platforms, social media platforms, e-commerce platforms, crowd sourced platforms, and instant messaging systems." Waldo Ex. 42, at 2; see also Waldo Dep. 341:14-342:7.

414. Under the heading "Information About Technology Platforms," the RFI seeks a long series of detailed information about misinformation on such platforms, including "Information about how widespread COVID–19 misinformation is on individual technology platforms," Waldo Ex. 42, at 2; "any aggregate data and analysis on the prevalence of COVID–19 misinformation on individual platforms including exactly how many users saw or may have been exposed to instances of COVID–19 misinformation," id. at 2-3; and "[a]ny aggregate data and analysis on how many users were exposed, were potentially exposed, or otherwise engaged with COVID–19 misinformation," id. at 3.

415. The RFI also seeks detailed information about censorship policies and how they are enforced: "Information about COVID–19 misinformation policies on individual technology platforms," and "[a]ny aggregate data and analysis of technology platform COVID–19 misinformation policies including implementation of those policies and evaluations of their effectiveness." Id. at 3.

416. The RFI also seeks detailed information about disfavored speakers on social-media platforms, requesting "[i]nformation about sources of COVID–19 misinformation," including "[i]nformation about the major sources of COVID–19 misinformation associated with exposure."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Id. at 3. The RFI makes clear that "source" refers to speakers on platforms: "By source we mean both specific, public actors that are providing misinformation, as well as components of specific platforms that are driving exposure to information." Id. at 3.

417. Especially in light of Dr. Murthy's prior public statements about the government "setting safety standards" for misinformation, Waldo Ex. 41, at 8 (Audio Tr. 11), the RFI carries a clear implied threat of future regulation against the social-media and other technology platforms.

418. Contemporaneous media coverage portrayed the RFI as a "demand" for information from platforms. See, e.g., Waldo Ex. 44, at 1 (Brad Dress, Surgeon General Demands Data on COVID-19 Misinformation from Major Tech Firms, The Hill (Mar. 3, 2022, 11:24 am)).

419. Max Lesko, the Surgeon General's Chief of Staff, also sent the RFI to several major tech platforms with a formal letter requesting that they respond. Waldo Dep. 348:20-22. He sent nearly identical letters to Facebook, Google, LinkedIn, Twitter, YouTube, and Microsoft. Waldo Exs. 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51. Each letter was directed to the CEO of the platform over General Murthy's signature. Id.

420. Each letter stated, "The proliferation of health misinformation during the pandemic has been both extensive and dangerous. … It is clear that we must do everything we can to address this threat." Id. Each letter referred to the July 15, 2021 Health Advisory, noting that "a large proportion of health misinformation is spread through technology platforms," and "my Advisory includes a call for technology companies to join this broader effort to create a safer, healthier information environment." Id. Each letter advised the social-media platforms of the RFI, and formally "request[ed] that your company contribute to the RFI…. Specifically, I am requesting responses from companies about the extent and spread of COVID-19 misinformation on their technology platforms, policies to address COVID-19 misinformation and their effectiveness, [and] sources of COVID-19 misinformation…." Id.

421. On May 3, 2022, Facebook notified the White House and OSG that it had "filed a response to the Surgeon General's rfi on Covid misinformation and would be happy to discuss at the appropriate time." Waldo Ex. 54, at 2. To date, the OSG has never made this or any other the responses to its RFI public.

422. Shortly after the RFI was issued, on March 11, 2022, GQ magazine published an interview with Dr. Murthy. Waldo Ex. 52. In this interview, Dr. Murthy stated, "we all have a responsibility to do everything we can to reduce the spread of misinformation… Whether you have one million followers on social media, or you've got 10 followers, we all have platforms and people in our lives who trust us." Id. at 6. He called on platforms like Spotify (which was then being criticized for hosting Joe Rogan's podcast) to censor health misinformation: "If you're running a platform, whether it's a Spotify or another social media platform, you've got to think about, how do I create a healthy information environment here? How do I create rules and a culture that promotes accurate information?" Id. He emphasized that "a platform has the ability, the opportunity, and the responsibility to create rules and a culture that supports the dissemination of accurate information and that reduces the spread of misinformation." Id. at 7.

423. Echoing his prior comments about "setting safety standards" by government, Dr. Murthy compared censorship "rules" for misinformation to speed limits: "We have speed limits on the road because we know that sometimes if you drive too fast, that can have an impact on somebody else's health and wellbeing. If we're going to live together in a society, we've got to take steps and observe certain rules to help protect other people. That's true here as well. Platforms have an opportunity to help shape that environment in their own way. We all do. That's our responsibility at a time like this." Id.

K. The White House and Surgeon General Continue Oversight of Censorship.

424. On June 22, 2022, Facebook again emailed Waldo, Rob Flaherty, and other White House officials with an update on Facebook's increased censorship. Waldo Ex. 53, at 1. In the email, Facebook stated that it "[w]anted to ensure that you were aware of our policy updates following the early childhood vaccine approvals. As of today, all COVID-19 vaccine related misinformation and harm policies on Facebook and Instagram apply to people 6 months or older…." Id. Facebook indicated that it had again relied on the CDC to dictate what claims people can post on Facebook: "We expanded these policies in coordination with the CDC and ensured that we also included false claims that might be connected to children…." Id.

425. Throughout this period, at the federal officials' request, Facebook continued to send bi-weekly "Covid Insights Reports" reporting on COVID-19 related misinformation on its platforms to the White House and OSG. See, e.g., Waldo Ex. 54, at 2-4. In the spring of 2022, Facebook repeatedly asked the federal officials if it could discontinue or reduce the frequency of these reports, which it had been sending for over a year. Id. at 2. Finally, on June 13, 2022, Facebook notified the White House and OSG that "we will plan to discontinue these unless we hear from you that this information continues to be valuable." Id. at 1. Rob Flaherty responded the same day, requesting that Facebook continue to send the reports and further asking Facebook to report on how it would handle misinformation for early-childhood (under age 5) vaccines: "It would be helpful to continue to get these as we start to ramp up under 5 vaccines. Obviously, that has a potential to be just as charged. Would love to get a sense of what you all are planning here."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Id. Facebook continued to send the reports as requested, including two reports on July 17, 2022, and promised to continue sending them. Id.

IV. The CDC and the Census Bureau: BOLO and Authoritative Fact-Checking.

426. In addition to the public and private pressure campaigns from the White House and the Surgeon General's Office, the CDC and the Census Bureau have engaged in a long censorship campaign together, enabled by the White House's pressure on platforms to cooperate with the federal government. Working closely with Census, the CDC flags supposed "misinformation" for censorship on platforms (sometimes using the acronym "BOLO," "Be On the Lookout"), and exercises full authority to dictate what health claims will be censored on social media platforms.

A. The CDC's Regular Communication with Social Media Platforms.

427. Carol Crawford is the division director for the division of Digital Media within the CDC Office of the Associate Director for Communication. Crawford Depo. 11:7-9.

428. According to Crawford, her "division provides leadership for CDC's web presence. We provide leadership for CDC's social media presence." Id. 11:14-16. Crawford is "the director of that work. I determine strategy, objectives, oversee work." Id. 11:21-22.

429. Before April 2022, Crawford was "the branch chief of the Digital Media Branch within the Division of Public Affairs, and most of the roles that our division currently performs, web and social media, were in that branch." Id. 15:3-6.

430. Crawford is "the main person that was the CDC point of contact to talk to Facebook, Twitter and the platforms since our job was to lead digital media." Id. 249:1-4.

431. Crawford has regular contact with social-media platforms, especially about COVID-19 issues: "We started regular contact with the [platforms] at the beginning of the COVID outbreak to exchange information about COVID, and most of the contact since then has been around COVID or other high-priority things, but mostly COVID." Id. 16:13-17.

432. Crawford had only "very occasional" contacts with the platforms before COVID-19, id. 17:8-9; but then she and the CDC "started talking to some of them in February and March of 2020," at the beginning of the pandemic. Id. 18:5-6.

433. At this time, CDC leaders were asking Crawford's group if they were in contact with the platforms: "there were a lot of people asking staff, or other staff, are we -- were we in contact with the groups, and do we have any arrangements." Id. 18:19-23.

434. Crawford communicated with platforms by email, phone, and in meetings and calls. Id. 20:1-19. She "had points of contact at several of them, and we would have meetings when we needed to talk. So we arranged calls." Id. 20:17-19.

B. CDC's and Census's Pressure and Collusion With Facebook/Meta.

435. On February 6, 2020, Facebook emailed State Department officials, noting that "Facebook has taken proactive as well as reactive steps to control information and misinformation related to Corona virus which includes … removal of misinformation." Crawford Ex. 2, at 4. The email was forwarded to Crawford, who reforwarded to her contacts at Facebook. Id. at 3. Facebook proposed to Crawford that "Facebook team would create a Coronavirus Page serving up content that exists on other organizations' FB pages including the CDC," and would direct users to "curated content from trusted sources." Id. at 3.

436. On February 7, 2020, Crawford agreed to the proposals, and she also proposed that "There could be times we might want to address widespread myths like mask use or new issues." Id. at 2. She discussed with Facebook the same day. Id. at 1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

437. On March 3, 2020, Facebook emailed Crawford and noted that Facebook intended to "support governments … with their response efforts on COVID-19," including the "goal" to "remove misinformation." Crawford Ex. 3, at 1.

438. Crawford "talked pretty regularly" with Facebook "around this time," i.e., March 2020. 37:7-9.

439. Crawford recalls having discussions of misinformation with Facebook "in the fall of 2020." Crawford Dep. 38:7-8. These included discussions of how to combat "growing" misinformation about COVID-19: "I can recall us generally saying things to the effect of … misinformation is really growing, or … what do you think we could be doing to address it? That kind of conversation." Id. 38:11-15.

440. On January 25, 2021, Facebook emailed Crawford the first of an ongoing, biweekly series of CrowdTangle reports, which report on "top engaged COVID and vaccine-related content overall across Pages and Groups." Crawford Ex. 6, at 2. The email emphasized in bold the anti-vaccine content listed in the report, including "Reports of healthcare workers refusing the vaccine," "Posts about alleged vaccine-related deaths," and "News and reports of severe vaccine side effects." Id. Facebook indicated that it was sending this report in response to a prior conversation with Crawford in which such data was requested: "I am following up on our conversation several weeks ago about providing more detailed reporting from our CrowdTangle team." Id.

441. Crawford responded that the report "looks wonderful and much appreciated." Id. at 1. She said that she "will be extending our distribution list" for the report. Id. at 1. She also noted, "One group we'll be adding" to the distribution list for the CrowdTangle reports "is the Census group who hopefully will soon start their project with us." Id. And she stated, "the wide group of those looking at misinfo will want this." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

442. CrowdTangle is "a social media listening tool for Meta properties … [l]ike Instagram and Facebook." Crawford Dep. 50:3-6. "[S]ocial media listening reports show themes … of discussion on social media channels." Id. 52:10-12. The CrowdTangle report is "a search of content on social media, and a summary of the higher volume conversations." Id. 53:8-10. It is "a report of the most talked about topics on social media during this time period." Id. 54:13-15.

443. The CrowdTangle reports that Facebook regularly emailed to CDC were only one of two forms of access to CrowdTangle. Since "March or April 2020," Facebook had also allowed CDC to "directly log into CrowdTangle and run our own reports or searches." Id. 77:9-13.

444. According to Crawford, the CrowdTangle reports "would help us understand what was being discussed on social media about COVID, which helps us look for gaps in information, confusion about facts, things that we might need to adjust our communication materials for." Id. 57:24-58:3.

445. Crawford confirms that the CDC had privileged access to CrowdTangle from early 2020, and government officials used the non-public "social media listening tool" to monitor and track private speech about COVID-19 on social media: "we had access to go in directly to CrowdTangle and run in reports … from early 2020. … And I mentioned that our research team … searched in it and looked in it to create their reports, and I believe other teams did too." Id. 147:12-18.

446. The CDC also used other "social media and listening tools" to monitor Americans' speech on social media: "we did searches in CrowdTangle, the same way we do searches in other social media and listening tools that we have to create, to understand what's being discussed in the environment, to update our communication material." Id. 148:11-15.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

447. The CDC's "listening tools" included "Meltwater reports," where "Meltwater is sort of like CrowdTangle but for all the platforms." Id. 154:13-16. But CrowdTangle is superior to Meltwater for monitoring Facebook and Instagram because it provides privileged access to some online speech: "CrowdTangle can see more on the Meta properties. So it's nicer if you're just looking at Meta properties. Meltwater gives you social media at large." Id. 154:24-155:2.

448. Related to the bolded categories of supposed misinformation in Facebook's CrowdTangle report, Crawford claims that she does not have specific recollection about the issues, but she admits that "I do recall generally discussing misinformation with Facebook around this time." Id. 58:11-13.

449. Crawford added Census Bureau officials to the distribution list for the CrowdTangle reports because "[t]hey were going to start working with the CDC regarding misinformation." Id. 58:19-20; see also id. 61:11-12 ("At some point I recall adding Census to the distr[ibution]").

450. From then on, Facebook regularly sent Crawford biweekly "CrowdTangle content insights report[s]." Crawford Ex. 7, at 1-4. With each report, Facebook would highlight in bold the high-engagement misinformation-related issues for the CDC from the two-week period. Id. In each email, Facebook would introduce these misinformation-related posts by noting something like, "However, posts falling into the following themes also garnered high engagement." Id.

451. The CrowdTangle reports survey content that is not publicly available, such as "personal Group posts." Id. at 2.

452. Crawford is "sure that general discussions" with Facebook addressed "that there was a lot of information on vaccines, which is one of the bolded words [in the CrowdTangle Reports], for example. I am sure that did occur." Crawford Dep. 64:19-22.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

453. On January 27, 2021, Facebook sent Crawford a recurring invite to a "Facebook weekly sync with CDC (CDC to invite other agencies as needed)." Crawford Ex. 36, at 1. A large number of Facebook and CDC officials were included on the invite, including Liz Lagone, Facebook's content-moderation officer who communicated with the CDC. See Id. The agenda for the recurring meeting included "Misinfo collab status." Id. It also included "CDC needs/questions." Id.

454. Crawford confirms that CDC frequently had weekly meetings with Facebook: "There were definitely times that we were talking weekly." Crawford Dep. 226:20-21; see also, e.g., Crawford Ex. 39, at 1 (recurring calendar invite for a meeting with the same agenda and participants on May 6, 2021).

455. On March 10, 2021, Crawford sent Facebook an email seeking information about "Themes that have been removed for misinfo." Crawford Ex. 44, at 3. She stated, "We mentioned this on the call last week and you said you'd be sending something as other had asked – is that available yet by chance?" Id. She clarified: "You mentioned that WH and HHS had asked so you'd get it to us," and responded "Yes" to Facebook's question, "Are you looking for types of COVID-19 misinfo we remove?" Id.

456. Facebook noted, that "[w]e are setting up a meeting with WH/HHS to discuss more likely later this week or early next. Perhaps a CDC rep could participate…." Crawford Ex. 44, at 2. Crawford noted, "They want to see what you guys proactively have removed that might not be in those [CrowdTangle] reports…. My guess is a short meeting with Lis Wilhelm['s] vaccine confidence team is what is needed if FB is willing to do it." Crawford Ex. 44, at 2.

457. In this exchange, CDC was "wondering if [Facebook] had info on the types of posts that were removed and the themes because they were worried that we could only see the live posts and so we wouldn't know if there was also confusion about other areas that had been removed." Crawford Dep. 258:6-11. CDC had "asked on the meeting if they had this data, like, because we wanted it. And I think she said, Oh, we did something like this for the White House or HHS." Id. 260:6-9.

458. From this, Crawford understood that HHS and the White House were having similar meetings with Facebook: "I do think that they did have meetings with the agencies." Id. 261:10-11.

459. On March 25, 2021, Crawford and other CDC officials met with Facebook. Ex. S, at 1. The day before the meeting, March 24, 2021, Facebook emailed Crawford and noted, "[a]s we discussed last week, we will present on COVID-19 misinformation on this session/meeting and have some of our team that is focused on that workstream provide a briefing on the current policies and approach as well as the current trends we are identifying." Id. at 2. The official also noted that Facebook would have a "Misinformation Manager" and Liz Lagone, a content-moderation official for Facebook who "will be leading from our side on misinformation briefing for your team. They all work on our COVID-19 policies." Id. at 1. Crawford responded, attaching a Powerpoint slide deck and stating, "This is a deck Census would like to discuss and we'd also like to fit in a discussion of topic types removed from Facebook." Id. She also noted that two Census Bureau officials (Zack Schwartz and Jennifer Shopkorn) and two Census Bureau contractors (Sam Huxley and Christopher Lewitzke) would attend the meeting. Id.

460. The "deck Census would like to discuss" was attached to the email, id. at 3-16, and it contained an overview of "Misinformation Topics" including "concerns about infertility, misinformation about side effects, and claims about vaccines leading to deaths." Id. at 4. "These topics were selected due to high volume, continued public discussion, and high-profile coverage," according to the slide deck. Id. For each topic, the deck included sample slides and a statement from the CDC debunking the supposedly erroneous claim. Id. at 6-14. The slides were clearly designed to convince Facebook that such content should be censored. For example, with respect to claims of infertility, the deck provided screen shots of six specific posts on Facebook and Instagram, summarized similar claims, and stated: "According to CDC there is no evidence that fertility problems are a side effect of any vaccine, including COVID-19 vaccines." Id. at 6-8. It also noted that "Several of Facebook's fact check partners have covered this claim." Id. at 6. The deck provided a similar debunking treatment for claims about other side effects from COVID vaccines, id. at 9-11, and claims about vaccines leading to deaths, id. at 12-14—in each case, providing six sample posts from real Facebook users as examples of the type of claim, and providing information designed to ensure that the claim would be censored. Id.

461. On March 30, 2021, Facebook sent Crawford an email with the subject line, "This week's meeting." Crawford Ex. 8, at 3. Crawford confirms that she was engaging in weekly meetings with Facebook during this time period, as well as other time periods during the COVID-19 pandemic: "we were meeting weekly during parts, so I imagine we were." Crawford Dep. 68:9-10.

462. The email indicates that CDC and Facebook were repeatedly discussing misinformation during these weekly meetings, as Facebook stated to Crawford: "I wanted to surface any misinfo questions your team may have for the team that I had briefing last time. They are available to attend again, but also want to make sure we are answering any of your team's questions." Crawford Ex. 8, at 3.

463. Crawford admits that these weekly meetings involved CDC meeting with Facebook's content-moderation teams: "I do recall [Facebook] bringing in people from their Trust and Safety or Misinformation teams … to talk to us about misinformation at some weekly meetings." Crawford Dep. 68:24-69:3.

464. Crawford admits that, in these meetings with Facebook content-moderation team, CDC inquired about how Facebook was censoring COVID-19 misinformation: "we had asked questions about what they were seeing in terms of misinformation and inquired about any activities they were undertaking. And I believe this was an offer to sort of get back to us on any of those questions." Id. 69:9-13.

465. In response, Crawford noted that she was also communicating with Facebook through an alternative channel. Crawford Ex. 8, at 2 ("I added this part in yellow to our chain on turn.io"). She asked Facebook if they "have thoughts on how we can meet regularly with Census? … am I correct that your team is going to consider how you might want to engage with the CDC/Census team routinely and get back to us?" Id. at 2-3. She noted to Facebook: "I know you all have experience with Census already." Id. at 3.

466. At this time, CDC had recently executed an Interagency Agreement with the Census Bureau to assist the CDC in addressing misinformation: "We had entered an IAA with Census to help advise on misinformation." Crawford Dep. 71:3-4. Pursuant to this agreement, the Census Bureau provided reports to the CDC on misinformation that the Census Bureau tracked on social media: "they provided reports on misinformation that they were seeing to us." Id. 71:15-17. "Census did provide [CDC] with the key themes they were seeing around misinformation during the times that they were looking at it." Id. 72:16-19.

467. An IAA is "an agreement between two agencies to conduct some kind of work between them." Id. 109:23-24. Under this IAA, CDC was "only engaging" with Census "on COVID misinformation." Id. 110:12-13. CDC was "learning about how [Census] operated a general misinformation team." Id. 110:13-14. The IAA "let [CDC] partner with Census to learn how they handled misinformation and help us with the COVID misinformation. … They seemed to have more knowledge than we did." Id. 111:3-6.

468. Facebook replied that "it would be great to have questions that may not have been answered from your team on misinfo. That team is very busy so it's a good opportunity to di[g] deeper on that topic and especially if there are areas that are still unclear or the teams have concerns about." Crawford Ex. 8, at 2.

469. Crawford responded that CDC "would like to have more info … about what is being done on the amplification-side," and that CDC "is still interested in more info on how you analyze the data on removals, etc." Id. at 2. She also noted that Census Bureau was "hoping to go over the deck they had and discuss how to engage on a more regular basis." Id.

470. Following up, Crawford noted that Census would like to discuss the following topics: "It looks like the posts from last week's deck about infertility and side effects have all been removed. Were those re-evaluated by the moderation team or taken down for another reason?" Id. at 1. This remark plainly indicates that, in the last week of March 2021, the Census Bureau was sharing "decks" of posts about COVID-19 misinformation with Facebook, which Facebook then "removed," and CDC was following up to inquire whether the censorship occurred because those posts were "re-evaluated by [Facebook's] moderation team" because of Census's flagging, or for another reason. Crawford testified that she "cut and pasted" the Census Bureau's inquiries on these points. Crawford Dep. 76:10.

471. Crawford also asked Facebook to give the Census Bureau direct access to log in to Facebook's CrowdTangle tool: "Can we add the Census Team to CrowdTangle?" Crawford Ex. 8, at 1. As Crawford noted, Facebook had "allowed [CDC] to directly log into CrowdTangle and run our own reports or searches," and she was asking Facebook to let Census "log in to CrowdTangle" as well. Crawford Dep. 77:4-14.

472. In the same email, Crawford inquired of Facebook, "One of the main themes we're seeing and from the CrowdTangle report is local news coverage of deaths after receiving the vaccine. What's the approach for adding labels to those stories?" Crawford Ex. 8, at 1. Thus, the CDC inquired of Facebook what its "approach" was to censoring local news stories about vaccine-related deaths. Id.

473. Crawford asked Facebook "[h]ow should we best engage regularly going forward on the Census/CDC reports." Crawford Ex. 8, at 1. Crawford notes that Census had already been working with Facebook to address census-related misinformation: "we generally discussed, you know, how we should talk about misinformation because they had already been working with Census, on their own Census misinformation, and I wanted to know what was best for them for engaging on any topics that we might want to discuss." Crawford Dep. 77:19-24.

474. Facebook answered that "[w]e are working on a proposal of how to set up a sharing partnership on the misinform[ation] items." Crawford Ex. 8, at 1.

475. Crawford also had three-way meetings with Facebook, CDC, and Census about misinformation: "there were meetings where Census, myself and Facebook were on calls," in which they "had general conversations about what were opportunities to address misinformation." Crawford Dep. 83:6-12. In those conversations, specific topics like the removal of specific posts discussed in Exhibit 8 "were probably discussed," but Crawford claims she does not "have specific memory of it." Id. 83:12-14.

476. On April 13, 2021, Facebook followed up by emailing Crawford and proposing to enroll CDC and Census Bureau officials in a special misinformation reporting channel to

Facebook. Crawford Ex. 10, at 2. With a subject line "CV19 misinfo reporting channel," Facebook wrote, "We're working to get our COVID-19 misinfo channel up for CDC and Census colleagues," and asked Crawford to confirm "if the below emails are correct for onboarding to the reporting channel and if there are others you'd like to include." Id. Facebook provided nine emails, including five CDC officials and four Census officials or contractors, to "onboard" into the COVID-19 "misinfo reporting channel." Id.

477. The officials who work for Reingold, including Christopher Lewitzke, "were contractors working with Census." Crawford Dep. 101:10.

478. Crawford states that this email refers to the fact that Facebook "has a portal or reporting channel where you can report misinformation or threats or things from a specific log-in that I believe they only provide to … federal agencies." Id. 91:23-92:2. The portal allows federal officials to "log onto Facebook as an administrator, and it's something that they make available to you as a federal agency." Id. 95:17-19. Crawford understands that this "wasn't something that was generally available" to the public but was only provided to federal officials. Id. 96:15-16.

479. Crawford recalls that a CDC official logged into this portal and used it to report "two or three posts." Id. 92:17.

480. On April 23, 2021, Crawford emailed Facebook and stated that the Wyoming Department of Health had "mentioned … that the algorithms that Facebook and other social media networks are apparently using to screen out postings by sources of vaccine misinformation are also apparently screening out valid public health messaging, including WY Health communications." Crawford Ex. 38, at 2. When she did not hear back, on April 28, she emailed Facebook again, "Anything you all can do to help on this?" Id. Facebook then responded and addressed the problem. Id. at 1-2. The government is not amused when government-induced censorship sweeps in the government's own speech.

481. On May 6, 2021, Crawford emailed Facebook a table containing a list of 16 specific postings on Facebook and Instagram, with a link and the text of each post. Crawford Ex. 9, at 1-3. Crawford wrote, "As mentioned, here are two issues that we are seeing a great deal of misinfo on that we wanted to flag for you all … These are just some example posts. … Our census team is copied here, has much more info on it if needed." Crawford Ex. 9, at 1. Crawford copied Jennifer Shopkorn of the Census Bureau and Christopher Lewitzke, a Census Bureau contractor, on the email. Id.

482. Crawford "flag[ged]" these posts for Facebook "[b]ecause we had had conversations with Facebook about ways that we could address misinformation, and … one suggestion … that came up in that conversation was to let them know if we were seeing major themes that CDC had scientific information on, or had web content that would address." Crawford Dep. 87:15-21.

483. When Crawford would "flag" such content for Facebook and other platforms, she knew that they would evaluate and possibly censor the content under the content-moderation policies: "I do know that the platforms have a variety of ways to address misinformation. They might tag it as something that people should look more into. I think … that they have the ability to control how often some of these things show up in peoples' feeds. And I do know that removing them is an option that they could consider." Id. 88:7-14.

484. CDC's "goal" in flagging misinformation for possible removal from Facebook "is to be sure that people have credible health information so that they can make the correct health decisions…. There were a lot of things circulating that were not accurate information about COVID. And so we were trying to point out and make the credible information more available to users." Id. 88:25-89:6.

485. CDC and Census used "the social [media] listening tools," such as CrowdTangle, to identify misinformation that was "flagged" to Facebook for possible censorship. Id. 90:18-23. Regarding the table of 16 posts she "flagged" in her May 6, 2021 email, she stated, "these probably came from the social listening tools … that can consolidate examples. And we provided some examples of what we meant." Id. 90:18-23.

486. On May 10, 2021, Crawford emailed Facebook with the subject line, "COVID BOLO Misinformation meetings." Crawford Ex. 40, at 3. She wrote: "We would like to establish COVID BOLO meetings on misinformation and invite all platforms to join the meetings. We are aiming for our first one on Friday at noon. … Are there direct POCs on your end I should include on the invite? Happy to chat if better. THANKS!" Id.

487. On May 18, 2021, Facebook emailed Crawford noting that a Facebook official "has an agenda item" for the "CDC call this week." Crawford Ex. 11, at 2. This official, according to Crawford, is a member of Facebook's "Trust and Safety team, or the Misinformation team." Crawford Dep. 103:9.

488. The Facebook official noted that Facebook's "Content Policies … determine what we may remove or reduce and inform." Crawford Ex. 11, at 2. She noted that "we currently remove false claims about face masks," and wanted to discuss "whether there is still a high risk of harm from mask misinformation," as well as "false claims about the efficacy of social distancing or the existence of COVID-19." Id.

489. Crawford admits that the CDC provided "scientific information" that Facebook would use to decide whether to "remove" or "reduce and inform," id., content under its policies:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"What we did provide was scientific information that I did assume that they might use to do those things," i.e., "remove or reduce and inform." Crawford Dep. 105:17-19.

490. The next day, May 19, 2021, Facebook emailed Crawford and noted that, for the weekly call that week, "here are some of the COVID content items that [Facebook's content-moderation official] will be flagging for you/CDC team." Crawford Ex. 11, at 1. She then provided a list of twelve specific claims, including such claims as "COVID-19 has a 99.96% survival rate," "COVID-19 vaccines cause bell's palsy," and "[p]eople who are receiving COVID-19 vaccines are subject to medical experiments." Crawford Ex. 11, at 1-2.

491. Facebook raised these twelve claims to get CDC's guidance on whether they violated Facebook's policies: "They were wanting our feedback on whether these things were true or false statements that they were seeing. Did the CDC have science around this, did we have content on our website." Crawford Dep. 106:10-13. CDC would respond to debunk such claims if it had information: "[I]f we knew, if we had something or we had science on these items, we would point to it or provide them an answer." Id. 106:19-21.

492. In response, Crawford indicated that "Census team members" would join the call, and that she might not be able to address or debunk all 12 claims on the call, because "[t]here may be some facts we have to get back to the group on after the meeting." Crawford Ex. 11, at 1.

493. On the call referred to in the email, CDC discussed with Facebook these twelve claims and who at CDC might be able to address their veracity. Crawford Dep. 106:23-107-3.

494. According to Crawford, "Sometimes in these meetings they would ask do we know if this is true or false, which is what they were doing [in Exhibit 11]. And then if we knew, the communicators knew the answer, we would provide it. If not, I would say, we would say, I'll have to get back to you later, we'll talk to our SMEs," i.e. subject-matter experts. Id. 116:7-12.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

495. Census Bureau officials would follow up to monitor whether Facebook was actually removing the content that federal officials had flagged as misinformation: "Census was at least periodically checking on things that they had flagged, or they had seen come up." Id. 117:19-21.

496. After the meeting, on May 24, Facebook's content-moderation official emailed Crawford, stating, "Thanks so much again for you and team's help in debunking a few COVID-19 and vaccine misinformation claims for us." Crawford Ex. 15, at 2. She then provided a list of the twelve claims with CDC's input on each, noting "Debunked" for each claim that the CDC had debunked in the meeting. Id. at 2-3. Among other things, she noted that CDC "[d]ebunked" claims like "Face masks contain … harmful particles," and even plainly evaluative statements like "People who are receiving COVID-19 vaccines are subject to medical experiments." Id. at 2-3.

497. On June 2, 2021, Crawford emailed the Facebook content-moderation official back with further input on the claims from CDC's subject-matter experts. Crawford Ex. 16, at 2. She noted several times that CDC's "web content to debunk is in clearance," meaning that CDC was preparing web content that would debunk those claims. Id.

498. The next day, on June 3, 2021, the Facebook content-moderation official emailed Crawford to clarify that "web content to debunk is in clearance" means that "we should consider these debunked by the CDC now," and Crawford answered that "Yes they are debunked and we will also have content on it soon." Crawford Ex. 16, at 1. As Crawford stated, "We reported to Facebook that they were debunked at this time." Crawford Dep. 135:2-3.

499. Crawford knew that Facebook would apply its content-moderation policies to claims that the CDC debunked: "I knew that they had options … which is to inform people, to maybe reduce it in the algorithm, or to remove it…. [T]hey probably had other options, but I knew of at least those." Id. 138:18-22.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

500. On July 26, 2021, the same Facebook content-moderation official emailed Crawford, asking for CDC to debunk three more COVID-related claims. The subject line of the email was, "FB Misinformation Claims Help Debuning." Crawford Ex. 17, at 1. Crawford understood that "Debuning" was "Debunking" misspelled. Crawford Dep. 139:1-2.

501. In this email, Facebook's content moderator wrote to Crawford: "Our Misinformation Policy Team has identified some claims that we were hoping your team could help us understand if they are false and can lead to harm?" Crawford Ex. 17, at 1 (bold in original).

502. Facebook's content-moderation policy called for it to remove claims that are false and can lead to harm. See, e.g., Crawford Ex. 26, at 4 (Facebook's content-moderation official, Liz Lagone, noting that "We remove … posts on the grounds that the claim is false and that it is harmful," where "harmful" includes cases where "if people believed it, it might make them less likely to get vaccinated."). So it was clear that Facebook's "Misinformation Policy Team" was asking CDC to advise whether these claims should be removed under Facebook's content-moderation policy. Crawford admits that she understood that CDC's guidance would "benefit" Facebook's expansion and application of its censorship "policy" to these claims, acknowledging that Facebook was asking her about these claims "[b]ecause CDC would have credible health information about the claims or scientific information that would benefit their policy making." Crawford Dep. 140:1-3.

503. The three claims included: "Spike protein in COVID-19 vaccines is dangerous/cytotoxic," "Guillain-Barre Syndrome (GBS) is a possible side effect of the COVID vaccine," and "Heart inflammation is a possible side effect of all COVID-19 vaccines." Crawford Ex. 17, at 1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

504. Facebook also asked Crawford if "your team was aware of any global source of truth/database for vaccine adverse effects including possibly vaccine-related deaths." Crawford Ex. 17, at 1.

505. Crawford responded, "Got it, let me get back to you shortly and thank you much for asking!" Crawford Ex. 17, at 1.

506. Crawford does not recall her specific response to this inquiry, but she admits that "generally" she referred them to the CDC's subject-matter experts and responded to Facebook with the CDC's view on the scientific questions, as she did with similar requests. Crawford Dep. 140:16-141:4.

507. On July 20, 2021, Facebook emailed Crawford another biweekly "CrowdTangle content insights report" on COVID-19. Crawford Ex. 18, at 1. One of the misinformation-trending topics that Facebook flagged in bold in the email was "Door-to-Door Vaccines," which stated that "The highest interaction Page posts for this topic convey concern from political opponents about the Biden Administration's strategy to ramp up vaccination efforts in communities with low vaccination rates by going 'door-to-door' to educate and encourage more Americans to get vaccinated." Id. The same topic, in the same time frame, was emphasized in the Virality Project report as a prime example of viral vaccine-related "misinformation," when in fact it involved only expressions of political opinion. Scully Ex. 2, at 39, 54-55.

508. The same email also noted posts "expressing skepticism about vaccinating children." Crawford Ex. 18, at 1. Earlier CrowdTangle reports in the same email chain had flagged for the CDC highly engaged content about "Vaccine Side Effects … especially for children and pregnant women," "Vaccine Refusal," and "Vaccination Lawsuits … lawsuits over compulsory vaccination related to employment." Id. at 2-3 (bold in original).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

509. Facebook noted that the CrowdTangle reports were confidential and not to be disclosed further: "As always, please do not share." Id. at 1.

510. Facebook continued to send biweekly CrowdTangle reports, which flagged in bold high-engagement topics such as "Proof of Vaccination Requirement," "COVID-19 and Unvaccinated Individuals" (addressing "concerns that the recent uptick in hospitalizations and deaths is being driven up by unvaccinated individuals"), and "COVID-19 Mandates," as well as "allowing people to return to … religious services." Crawford Ex. 19, at 1-3 (bolds in original).

511. On August 19, 2021, Facebook asked Crawford for a "VAERS Policy Consultation" meeting for the CDC to give Facebook guidance on how to address VAERS-related misinformation: "Our Health Policy folks would like to meet with your VAERS experts for a consultation meeting regarding VAERS and misinformation." Crawford Ex. 20, at 1. Crawford responded, "I'm sure we can do this, and I'm glad you're asking." Crawford Ex. 20, at 1.

512. "VAERS" is the HHS's Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System, see https://vaers.hhs.gov/. At that time, the CDC was greatly concerned about VAERS-related "misinformation" on social-media, because users cited and discussed VAERS data and reports to raise concerns about the safety of vaccines in ways that the CDC thought misleading, as Crawford recounted: "the topic of VAERS was an area that was widely discussed on social media, and there was a lot of areas of confusion about what VAERS data was. There was myths about VAERS data, and there was misinformation about VAERS data. So it was always one of the things that rose to the top in terms of volume of discussion of people were very confused about VAERS." Crawford Dep. 150:21-151:3. So it is not surprising that Crawford was "glad" Facebook was "asking" for a meeting in which the CDC would give Facebook guidance on how to censor "misinformation" about VAERS. Crawford Ex. 20, at 1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

513. Crawford also followed up with Facebook by providing written CDC-provided materials for Facebook to use in addressing VAERS-related "misinformation" on its platforms: "If of use, we just published a new video and I've attached some recent talking points that may also inform your efforts." Crawford Ex. 20, at 1. Plainly, the "efforts" Crawford wished to "inform" were Facebook's efforts to remove VAERS-related "misinformation" from its platforms.

514. The CDC also had a meeting with Facebook about VAERS-related misinformation: "We did have a session with the VAERS experts with Facebook." Crawford Dep. 151:8-9. In the meeting, the CDC had "two experts for VAERS and a couple of their communication experts on the line with Facebook's team," which consisted of "their misinformation and policy type team" that the content-moderation official "was part of." Id. 151:20-24. In the meeting, the CDC "offered the [subject-matter expert] just to answer their questions about what VAERS was and what it wasn't. And my recollection is [Facebook] asked a lot of questions like … who can report something on VAERS and things like that during the session." Id. 152:1-6.

515. On September 1, 2021, Crawford emailed Facebook and stated: "BOLO for a small but growing area of misinfo. One of our lab alerts … was misinterpreted and was shared via social media." Crawford Ex. 21, at 1. ("BOLO" stands for "Be on the lookout." Crawford Dep. 153:21.). She explained what the CDC viewed was misinformation, and then stated, "I've attached some example Facebook posts and another document with the facts around the issue." Crawford Ex. 21, at 1.

516. Plainly, Crawford was flagging these posts and related posts for possible censorship under Facebook's content-moderation policy. She admits that the CDC's "BOLO" alerts were provided to "assist" the platforms with their enforcement decisions under their policies: "Similar to all the other BOLOs, we still thought it was good to point out if we had facts around something that was widely circulating as a cause of misinformation to the platforms to assist them in whatever they were going to do with their policy or not do." Crawford Dep. 153:23-154:3.

517. When asked what she "expected [Facebook] to do once they were on the lookout" for the supposed misinformation that the CDC had flagged, Crawford responded: "I knew that they had various options. They could have just used it to inform people. They could have considered it in their algorithm, I believe. I did understand that potentially removing posts was something that they might do." Crawford Dep. 155:15-20. So she provided the information knowing it would happen and wanting it to happen.

518. On November 2, 2021, Facebook's content-moderation official sent Crawford and other CDC officials an email stating, "thanks so much for confirming the ability for the claims in question last week having the risk of causing vaccine refusals." Crawford Ex. 22, at 1. Again, that is one of the criteria Facebook used to justify removal of content from its platforms. Crawford Ex. 26, at 4 ("We remove … posts on the grounds that the claim is false and that it is harmful because if people believed it, it might make them less likely to get vaccinated."). The content-moderation official also stated, "thank you all so much for your input over the last week on our many questions about vaccine misinformation relative to the EUA." Crawford Ex. 22, at 1. ("EUA" refers to the FDA's "emergency use authorization to the Pfizer vaccine for children." Id.)

519. The content-moderation official also stated: "I wanted to share that as a result of our work together, when the FDA gave emergency use authorization to the Pfizer vaccine for children last week, we immediately updated our policies globally to remove additional false claims about the COVID-19 vaccine for children (e.g. 'the COVID vaccine is not safe for kids')." Crawford Ex. 22, at 1. She also noted, "We also launched a new feature on Instagram, where accounts that repeatedly post content that violates our policies on COVID-19 or vaccine misinformation may now lose the ability to be tagged or mentioned or may see pop-ups asking if they'd like to delete certain posts that may violate our policies." Crawford Ex. 22, at 1. Thus, Facebook noted that, "as a result of our work together" with the CDC, Facebook had updated its content-moderation policies to increase censorship of vaccine-related claims in significant ways. Id.

520. The content-moderation official went on to ask the CDC to debunk additional claims: "we have identified a number of additional claims we would like to get your team's assessment on … Would it at all be possible to get input by Monday, November 8th?" Crawford Ex. 22, at 1 (bold and underline in original). She requested, "For each of the following new claims, which we've recently identified on the platform, can you please tell us if: 1. The claim is false; and 2. If believed, could this contribute to vaccine refusals?" Id. (bold in original). Again, these are the two precise criteria that Facebook relied on to remove content from its platforms. Crawford Ex. 26, at 4 ("We remove … posts on the grounds that the claim is false and that it is harmful because if people believed it, it might make them less likely to get vaccinated."). She then included a new list of ten specific claims about the COVID-19 vaccines for the CDC to debunk. Crawford Ex. 22, at 1-2.

521. Crawford understood, again, that this request was made to "inform their policies," i.e., inform Facebook's application of its content-moderation policies to these claims: "It was still my interpretation that she was asking to inform their policies." Crawford Dep. 159:7-8.

522. Crawford also admits that she was "happy" when the CDC's information to Facebook caused "less spread of misinformation" on Facebook and other platforms, i.e., that she desired that outcome: "I'm happy that providing the scientific information led to less spread of misinformation." Id. 161:23-25.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

523. Crawford also understood that Facebook was, in fact, removing content from its platforms based on the CDC's information: "I understand that she's removing claims … that are not scientifically accurate." Id. 162:21-22.

524. Crawford responded to Facebook, "Thank you so much for the feedback on what you've been able to do. This is very good to know." Crawford Ex. 22, at 1. She also stated, regarding Facebook's request that the CDC debunk the ten new claims, that "I'm going to work on this one …. I hope we can do it by Monday, I will keep you posted." Id.

525. The following Monday, November 8, 2021, Crawford followed up with a response from the CDC addressing seven of the ten claims Facebook had asked CDC to evaluate. Crawford Ex. 23, at 1-2. The CDC rated six of the seven claims "False." Id. (bold in original). Crawford also noted in the response email, without citing any support, that "It appears that any of these could potentially cause vaccine refusal." Crawford Ex. 23, at 1. Under Facebook's policies, a claim that is both false and could contribute to vaccine refusal was subject to removal. Crawford Ex. 26, at 4 ("We remove … posts on the grounds that the claim is false and that it is harmful because if people believed it, it might make them less likely to get vaccinated.").

526. On February 3, 2022, Facebook's content-moderation official sent Crawford another email, stating that she "wanted to share updates we made as a result of our work together" and "ask for your assessment on a few things." Crawford Ex. 26, at 1 (bold in original). She described the "updates" as follows: "On February 2nd, we launched several updates to our COVID-19 Misinformation and Harm Policy based on your [i.e. CDC's] inputs." Id. These "updates" included "[r]emoving claims that COVID-19 vaccines cause heart attacks," and "[t]aking steps to reduce the distribution of content that our systems predict likely violates our COVID-19 and vaccine misinformation policies, but has not yet been reviewed by a human; if at any point this content is confirmed to violate the policy then it will be removed from the platform." Crawford Ex. 26, at 1. Crawford responded, "the update is very helpful, thank you for including that!" Id.

527. Facebook's content-moderation official also included, under the heading "NEW: For CDC Input," another request that "For each of the following new claims, can you please tell us if: 1. The claim is false; and 2. If believed, could this claim contribute to vaccine refusals?" Crawford Ex. 26, at 1 (bold and underline in original). She then provided a long, detailed list of claims and sub-claims about COVID-19 for CDC's input. Id. at 2-4.

528. Among other things, Facebook asked the CDC to pre-refute claims based on events that had not occurred yet. Facebook asked Crawford to address "How FDA EUA authorization for children under 5 might impact our policies." Crawford Ex. 26, at 1. Facebook noted, "We understand that the FDA is considering giving emergency use authorization for the COVID-19 vaccine for children under five in the coming weeks. We are considering how our existing policies on COVID-19 vaccines … should apply to claims about children 6 months to 4 years once the vaccine is approved for use. Can you please assess for each claim whether it is false for children in this age range and if believed, likely to contribute to vaccine hesitancy or refusals? Please let us know if it is easiest to set up a time to meet and discuss each one." Crawford Ex. 26, at 2 (italics in original). There followed a long, detailed list of claims about the vaccines, for which Facebook sought CDC's input on their falsity as to children under 5. Id. at 2-3.

529. For this long list of claims, Crawford understood that Facebook would use the CDC's input to "determine" Facebook's censorship policy for such claims: "I know that they're using our scientific information to determine their policy." Crawford Dep. 170:19-20.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

530. Regarding Facebook's request for CDC's input on these many new claims, Crawford responded, "I will talk to the Vaccine program and see what we can do." Crawford Ex. 27, at 1. The next day, February 4, 2022, she followed up, stating, "I'm heading out today but do you have a minute to discuss this by chance? Call anytime," and provided her phone number. Crawford Ex. 27, at 1. Crawford also changed the subject line of the email to state, "Have 5 minutes to chat? [re]: Vaccine Misinformation Questions for CDC." Id.

C. CDC's and Census's Pressure and Collusion with Google/YouTube.

531. On March 18, 2021, Crawford emailed contacts at Google, stating: "As I believe we discussed previously, CDC is now working with Census to leverage some of their infrastructure to help identify and address COVID vaccine mis-info." Crawford Ex. 28, at 1. She went on, "As I understand it from the Census team … when they were doing this for the Census project last year, they meet regularly with a Google/YouTube Trust team." Id. A "Trust team" is a content-moderation team. Crawford then asked, "Is it possible for us to start up regular meetings on this topic or maybe use our existing meeting time." Id. The subject line of this email was "COVID Misinfo Project." Id. Google and Crawford then set up a time to talk and discuss the project. Id.

532. Crawford states that this email refers to "the work of the IAA with Census to help consult and work with us on the COVID misinformation…" Crawford Dep. 175:6-8. Her reference to Census's infrastructure referred to "the fact that Christopher [Lewitzke, the Census contractor] ran those reports and looked for misinformation on those areas for us." Id. 175:11-13.

533. Crawford's reference to Census's previous project referred to their work on combating misinformation about the 2020 Census. Id. 175:18-19.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

534. Crawford does not remember the specific call referenced in this email, but she admits that, "This was in 2021. So we had been meeting pretty regularly with Google by this time." Id. 179:5-6.

535. On March 23, 2021, Crawford sent a calendar invite for a meeting on March 24 that included herself and five other CDC employees, four Census Bureau employees and contractors (including Zachary Schwartz, Christopher Lewitzke, and Jennifer Shopkorn), and six Google/YouTube officials. Jones Decl., Ex. T, at 1-2. The subject of the meeting was "COVID Misinformation: CDC/Census/Google." Id. at 1. The invite stated: "CDC/Census to meet with Google regarding our misinformation efforts." Id.

536. At the meeting, CDC and Census presented a slide deck similar to the one that Census prepared for the meeting with Facebook on March 25, 2021, discussed above. See id. 3-16. The slide deck was entitled, "COVID Vaccine Misinformation: Issue Overview." Id. at 3. As with the Facebook slide decks, this one stated of "Misinformation Topics" that "[t]hese topics were selected due to high volume, continued public discussion, and high-profile coverage." Id. at 4. It noted that these topics included "infertility, misinformation about side effects, and claims of vaccines leading to deaths." Id.

537. For each topic, the slide deck included a description of a common claim, specific examples of videos on YouTube and social-media postings making the disfavored claim, and a putative refutation by the CDC. Id. at 6-14. For infertility, the slide deck stated that "[c]ommon claims about the COVID vaccine's side effects include that it causes infertility in women and men, miscarriages, and stillbirth," and it provide screen shots of specific videos on YouTube and social-media posts making this claim. Id. at 6-8. The deck asserted that "[a]ccording to CDC there is no evidence that fertility problems are a side effect of any vaccine, including COVID-19 vaccines."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Id. at 6. Regarding supposed misinformation about side effects, the deck stated, "speculation and misinformation about side effects after taking the COVID vaccine have been prevalent on social media since the first vaccines were approved," and it provided screen shots of an example video on YouTube and social-media posts making such claims, along with a putative refutation by the CDC. Id. at 9-11. Regarding the topic "Death from Vaccines," the slide deck stated that "[v]accine-hesitant groups spreading misinformation and conspiracy theories about alleged vaccine-related deaths erode trust in the COVID-19 vaccine and the public health system," and it provided a sample video on YouTube and social-media posts linking the vaccines to deaths, along with a putative refutation by the CDC: "According to CDC, VAERS has not detected patterns in cause of death that would indicate a safety problem with COVID-19 vaccines." Id. at 12-14. As with the similar Facebook slide deck, the evident purpose of this presentation was to induce YouTube to censor these claims on its platform.

538. On March 25, 2021, Kate Galatas of the CDC emailed the group attending the meeting and stated: "Many thanks, again, for the time yesterday. This is such important shared work we are doing in the mis/dis information space, and we deeply appreciate your contributions. Please find attached the slide deck referenced during the meeting, and we ask that you treat it close hold and not for further distribution. We are looking forward to our future collaboration efforts!" Id. at 1.

539. On March 29, 2021, Crawford followed up with Google, inquiring "Are you all open to using our regular 4pm meetings to go over things with Census or what is preferred?" Crawford Ex. 29, at 2. Google responded: "We would like to follow up on our discussion with your colleague, Cynthia, on vaccine information a few months ago. Specifically, we plan to share a new list of common vaccine misinformation claims and would love it if Cynthia or other vaccine experts could join." Id. He also stated that "we can save a few minutes … to discuss potential next steps regarding the Census…" Id. The subject line of this email was "Follow up on mis-info conversation." Id.

540. Crawford recalls that Census was asking for regular meetings with platforms specifically focused on misinformation: the statement "is in reference to discussing how to engage on an ongoing basis about misinformation and the Census suggestion that we have regular meetings with them just on that topic." Crawford Dep. 184:14-18. The exchange was "about how to engage more regularly about misinformation, or … whatever Census had done with Google and YouTube, should we have a similar structure with CDC." Id. 185:11-14.

541. Regarding the request for input on the "new list of common vaccine misinformation claims," Crawford responded, "I've arranged for a few SMEs [subject-matter experts] to join the call, including Cynthia." Crawford Ex. 29, at 2.

542. A few days later, on April 2, 2021, Google emailed Crawford stating, "Thanks again for your time this week. Attached are some of the claims we discussed for your reference." Crawford Ex. 29, at 1.

543. Crawford's reference to the "4pm meeting" refers to a regular biweekly meeting with Google, which still continues to the present day: "I still have a 4:00 p.m. meeting every other Monday with Google." Crawford Dep. 180:6-7.

544. Crawford also has "similar regular meetings with … Meta and Twitter." Id. 180:11-16. She admits that she has ongoing meetings with Google and Facebook/Meta that continue to the present: "we had regular meetings with Google, and we had regular meetings with Meta…. you know, the frequency changed…. I mean, Google we meet every other week. Right now with Meta it's more ad hoc." Id. 180:16-21.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

545. Crawford also "had a regular meeting with Pinterest for a short period of time, and we had … just more ad hoc meetings on occasion with Twitter." Id. 180:23-181:1.

546. Crawford states that these meetings "were mostly about things other than misinformation; though misinformation was discussed in the meetings." Id. 181:22-24.

547. On April 12, 2021, Google/YouTube followed up with an email to Crawford, stating, "For tomorrow's call, would it be possible to include Cynthia or other COVID-19 treatment SMEs [subject-matter experts] to follow up on some additional questions?" Crawford Ex. 30, at 1. Crawford responded, "Can you give me an idea of what topics we'll be covering? But yes, I'll ask them to attend." Id.

548. Crawford notes that it "wasn't uncommon" for Google/YouTube to ask her to bring subject-matter experts to meetings to go over such topics. Crawford Dep. 188:19-22.

549. On May 10, 2021, Crawford emailed her Google contacts and invited them to attend in the BOLO meetings: "We would like to establish COVID BOLO meetings on misinformation and invite all platforms to join the meetings. We are aiming for our first one on Friday at noon. We have heard through the grapevine that [an official] at YouTube would want to join. Are there other POCs on your end I should include on the invite?" Crawford Ex. 40, at 1. The subject of the email was "COVID BOLO meetings on misinformation." Id.

D. CDC's and Census's "BOLO Meetings."

550. On May 11, 2021, Crawford followed up with an email stating, "We would like to invite digital platforms to attend a short 'Be On The Lookout' meeting on COVID. Please let us know if you have questions and feel free to forward this message to anyone in your organization that should attend." Crawford Ex. 40, at 2. Google responded by asking that Crawford include the YouTube official in the meeting, and Crawford noted that she "was going to ask about" him at the 4:00pm recurring meeting. Id.

551. Crawford testified that she wanted to include YouTube on the BOLO meetings because they hosted the most content: "people from YouTube would occasionally be on our regular meetings, depending on what we talked about. And because YouTube has the most content, like, hosting, … they were a part of the BOLO meetings…" Crawford Dep. 244:21-245:1.

552. The Census officials "were arranging" the BOLO meetings, and "they drafted the slides" for the meetings. Id. 246:12-20.

553. Crawford ran the BOLO meetings. Id. 265:13. She "opened up the meeting, introduced myself, gave context for why we were doing the BOLO meeting in brief. And then I believe that Christopher [Lewitzke] went through the slide decks, and I occasionally piped in on them." Id. 265:15-19.

554. The "slide decks" shown at the meetings were "similar to the table" of 16 Facebook posts that Crawford previously emailed to Facebook, but "they were more like this is a theme, and then there'd be maybe a little info about what the theme was and then maybe a couple of example posts. And then there would be a slide maybe with CDC links or information related to that theme." Id. 266:1-6.

555. The first BOLO meeting was held on May 14, 2021. Jones Decl., Ex. U, at 1. The slide deck for that meeting was entitled "COVID Vaccine Misinformation: Hot Topics." Id. at 2-10. It contained a list of five "Hot Topics" with an "ADVISORY" in red noting that platforms should "Be On the Lookout" for "Potential Misinformation" on each topic, and provided specific examples of social-media posts for each topic, "Associated Link(s) and Hashtag(s)" for each topic, and the CDC's position on each topic (listed as "The Facts"). Id. at 4-8.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

556. Crawford also emailed similar slide decks for BOLO meetings scheduled for May 28 and June 18, 2021, though the latter was canceled due to the new Juneteenth holiday. Jones Decl., Exs. V and W. In the cover email to the May 28 slides, Crawford requested secrecy: "Please do not share outside your trust and safety teams." Jones Decl., Ex. V, at 1. Just like the May 14 BOLO slides, these slides contained lists of "Hot Topics" with an "ADVISORY" in red noting that platforms should "Be On the Lookout" for "Potential Misinformation" on each topic, and provided specific examples of social-media posts for each topic, "Associated Link(s) and Hashtag(s)" for each topic, and the CDC's position on each topic (listed as "The Facts"). Jones Decl., Ex. V, at 4-6; id. Ex. W, at 4-6.

557. In conducting the BOLO meetings, Crawford described CDC's goal as follows: "our goal is to be sure that credible information about COVID was out there. A lot of people seek information on platforms. We thought that by giving the platform scientific information it might help in our goals to being sure that credible information could be found." Crawford Dep. 266:16-21. Of course, the BOLO meetings did not address identifying and promoting "credible information," but flagging information that the CDC thinks is not credible for potential removal. Crawford effectively admits this; when asked if CDC's goal includes that "incredible information would not be found," she agreed that "I did want the credible information to be found in advance of the uncredible information." Id. 266:22-267:4.

558. Crawford believes that the third BOLO meeting was cancelled because Juneteenth was declared a new federal holiday, and "that is why we didn't end up having it and we sent the materials out via email." Id. 248:17-22.

559. On October 28, 2021, Google emailed Crawford stating, "do you have time to connect early next week on anticipated guidance on vaccines for [children ages] 5-11? It would be great to connect as the CDC plans communications on authoritative information for pediatric vaccines." Crawford Ex. 42, at 2.

560. Crawford responded: "Yes, we can discuss pediatric vaccines early next week but let me give you some general info: ACIP is likely to vote on this on Nov 2. CDC is likely to start posting final information on Nov 3 (possibly late Nov 2), if that helps to know. There will be many updates so the changes might span over a few days. We are also looking ahead and misinformation and hope to have a BOLO type meeting later that week with platforms that are interested." Crawford Ex. 42, at 1. ("ACIP" is the "Advisory Council for Immunization Practices." 253:21-22.)

561. On June 29, 2022, Google/YouTube emailed Crawford and her deputy, stating: "The YouTube Policy team is requesting evidence-based input on the claims below. In the past, the CDC has reviewed COVID information claims and commented TRUE or FALSE + add any additional context needed." Crawford Ex. 43, at 1. YouTube then presented two claims, relating to the safety and effectiveness of administering progesterone to reverse chemical abortion. Id. ("CLAIM: High doses of progesterone is a safe method of reversing chemical abortion … CLAIM: High doses of progesterone is an effective method of reversing chemical abortion….") (bold in original). Crawford responded, "I'll check on this but I think I'll probably end up needing to refer you to another agency. I'll get back to you." Id.

562. Regarding this exchange, Crawford notes that the CDC's "focus is not solely on COVID. We're focusing on other topics. I think [YouTube] thought that we might be able to help with this topic as well." Crawford Dep. 256:5-8. Thus, Crawford admits that the CDC is continuing to engage with social-media platforms to provide information that will lead to the censorship of health-related claims on social media, and that it is willing to expand its focus to other health topics beyond COVID-19.

E. CDC's and Census's Pressure and Collusion with Twitter.

563. On April 8, 2021, Twitter emailed Crawford stating, "I'm looking forward to setting up regular chats; my team has asked for examples of problematic content so we can examine trends. All examples of misinformation are helpful…." Crawford Ex. 32, at 1. The subject line of this email was "Request for problem accounts." Id. Crawford responded, "Yes, we'll get that to you early next week." Id.

564. Crawford believes that Twitter sent this email in response to her inquiry, "Is there a good way that we should start engaging on misinformation?" 197:19-20.

565. Crawford responded on April 14, 2021, "The Census team put this spreadsheet together with four example areas," which included the topics, "Vaccines aren't FDA approved," "Fraudulent cures," "VAERS data taken out of context," and "Infertility." Crawford Ex. 33, at 1. The attachment was called, "Twitter CDC Examples 4-13-21.xlsx." Id. The spreadsheet contained a "list [of] things that [Census] saw that were being stated as misinformation." Crawford Dep. 203:24-204:1. "Infertility" referred to "people claiming that getting the vaccines led to infertility." Id. 204:17-18.

566. Crawford believes that Twitter "was asking for these examples in this email because he was wondering … what would come up in BOLO meetings, or what we would be discussing." Id. 204:22-24.

567. On May 10, 2021, Crawford emailed Twitter, stating "We wanted to point out two issues we are seeing a great deal of misinfo about…." Crawford Ex. 34, at 4. She then provided a list of "sample posts" that included 12 Tweets reproduced verbatim. She stated, "Our census team is copied here, has much more info on it if needed." Id.

568. In the same email on May 10, 2021, Crawford wrote, "Also, we are standing up a BOLO COVID misinformation meeting and inviting all tech platforms. We are shooting for 12pm EST on Friday for our first meeting. I'll include you on the invite…." Crawford Ex. 34, at 4.

569. Crawford agrees that she was "sending this to [Twitter] so that he would be on the lookout for those things appearing on Twitter." Crawford Dep. 208:25-209:3.

570. Crawford notes that "the BOLO format … was used previously," id. 209:12-13, because Census had done "BOLO meetings … for their own work," id. 209:23-24. The platforms had done BOLO meetings for Census "in relation to the 2020 census." Id. 210:5-9.

571. Regarding the BOLO meetings, Census officials "explained" to Crawford "how they did it." Id. 210: 16. "In fact, they drafted the slide deck" for the CDC BOLO meetings with social-media platforms. Id. 210:16-17. Census "drafted it and showed me how they thought that we should do it, and that … we would give examples, we would give the science, and then … people could follow up separately." Id. 210:18-22.

572. Crawford believes that regular meetings with Twitter were not set up, but that "I know they participated in the BOLO meetings." Id. 198:15-16.

573. Regarding the BOLO meetings, Crawford remembers that two occurred and a third one was scheduled but cancelled due to a holiday, and "in lieu of a meeting" she sent "a Powerpoint." Id. 198:24-199:1.

574. Twitter responded to Crawford's May 10, 2021 email flagging 12 specific Twitter posts as examples of trending misinformation, stating: "Thanks for sharing this – agree these are important trends to note; a quick scan shows that at least some of these have been previously reviewed and actioned." Crawford Ex. 34, at 3. He then stated: "I will now ask the team to review the others." Id.

575. Crawford understood that "asking the team to review the others" meant referring Crawford's flagged posts and issues to Twitter's content-moderation team for possible censorship: "I interpreted it as Twitter made decisions about the areas of misinformation based on whatever policy they had." Crawford Dep. 211:17-19.

576. As with Facebook, Crawford understood that her flagging of posts would result in Twitter censoring at least some of these materials in different ways, including removing posts: "similar to Meta that they probably had multiple options. I am sure some were removed. I am sure some … were flagged. I see flags all the time on the Twitter posts. I am sure some were just maybe … maybe they weren't distributed as much on peoples' feeds." Id. 212:10-16.

577. In the same email, Twitter offered to enroll CDC officials in its "Partner Support Portal" to provide expedited review of content flagged for censorship: "Carol, remind me: did you have a chance to enroll in our Partner Support Portal? In the future, that's the best way to get a spreadsheet like this reviewed." Crawford Ex. 34, at 3.

578. Crawford understood that Twitter's Partner Support Portal was "similar to what I described for Meta. It's an offering where you log in and you can report misinformation or threats or problematic posted content in this portal, and it puts it in a system for review." Crawford Dep. 212:3-7.

579. On May 10, 2021, Twitter noted to Crawford, "I'd be glad to enroll you in our Partner Support Portal, which allows you a special, expedited reporting flow in the Twitter Help Center. It worked very well with Census colleagues last year." Crawford Ex. 34, at 3.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

580. Crawford responded by asking for instructions on how to enroll in the Partner Support Portal, and Twitter offered to enroll any Twitter accounts she identified. Crawford Ex. 34, at 3. Crawford provided her personal Twitter account to enroll. Id.

581. Then, on May 24, Census Bureau contractor Christopher Lewitzke followed on the same email chain with Twitter, asking about "the partner support portal enrollment for CDC." Crawford Ex. 34, at 2. Lewitzke indicated that they planned to report COVID misinformation to Twitter using existing Census accounts already enrolled in the portal, not CDC accounts, stating: "would there be any issues or complications stemming from flagging COVID misinformation on the portal using the existing census.gov accounts that have access? We'll want to have at least some CDC accounts whitelisted, but that backup may be helpful short-term." Id. He then stated: "Let us know any next steps we can take to make sure CDC is all set with the portal." Id.

582. Crawford confirms that Census had used similar portals to report misinformation to platforms in the past: "I did know from discussions with them that one technique I think that they used was using portals … for their work to report [mis]information." Crawford Dep. 213:16-19.

583. Twitter emailed Crawford on May 27, 2021, noting that she should be fully enrolled. Crawford Ex. 34, at 1. A screen shot of the portal proclaims, in very large, bolded type, "Report any issue to get priority service." Id. (bold in original, font greatly reduced).

584. Crawford believes that she attempted to use Twitter's Partner Support Portal "every now and then," but that she never solved technical issues that prevented her from reporting anything. Crawford Dep. 215:9-22.

585. Christopher Lewitzke is "a Census contractor." Id. 217:5-6.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

586. On September 2, 2021, Crawford emailed Twitter, stating, "A quick BOLO for a small but growing area of misinfo." Crawford Ex. 35, at 1. To Twitter, she claimed that "one of our Lab alerts … was misinterpreted and was shared via social media." Crawford Ex. 35, at 1. She stated, "I've attached some example Twitter posts and another document with the facts around the issue." Id. The subject line of the email was "BOLO: CDC lab alert & misinformation." Id.

587. This report was very similar to the report Crawford provided Facebook the day before, September 1, 2021. Crawford Ex. 21, at 1. "The only difference is this email is going to Twitter." Crawford Dep. 220:7-8.

588. By sending these emails to Facebook and Twitter flagging what the CDC believed was a misinterpretation of a CDC lab alert on social media, CDC intended to prevent the disfavored message from spreading on social media: "We saw this confusion about this alert brewing and more posts were going up with confusion, and we thought it would be a good idea to provide the platforms with the facts before it became something bigger." Id. 220:13-17 (emphasis added). In other words, CDC wished to cause the disfavored viewpoint to be censored before it could be viewed or repeated by others—a quintessential prior restraint.

589. CDC specifically flagged this information to the platforms, knowing that they would evaluate it for potential censorship under their content-moderation policies: Crawford "knew their policy teams or their trust teams or misinfo teams … would evaluate it." Id. 220:21-23. And Crawford "knew that removal was one of the options that they had, yes." Id. 220:25-221:1.

F. CDC Endorses the States' Theory of Standing.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

590. Crawford admits that government communicators have a strong interest in tracking what their constituents are saying on social media: "It's helpful for communicators to know what is being discussed because it helps improve our communication materials." Id. 53:10-12.

591. Crawford emphasized this point multiple times: "as I mentioned before, it does help … for communicators to know what conversations occurs on social media because it helps us identify gaps in knowledge, or confusion, or things that we're not communicating effectively that we need to adjust." Id. 54:15-20.

592. CrowdTangle reports "would help us understand what was being discussed on social media about COVID, which helps us look for gaps in information, confusion about facts, things that we might need to adjust our communication materials for." Id. 57:24-58:3.

593. Crawford specifically expressed the concern that, if content was censored or removed from social-media platforms, government communicators would not know what the citizens' true concerns were: She "was wondering if they delete the info will we know those myths or information so we could update communication activity. So if they were deleting content would we know what the themes were." Id. 75:14-18. Thus, Crawford was concerned that, if the platforms "were deleting content," she might not know "what the themes were" of "myths or [mis]information," which would prevent her from "updat[ing the CDC's] communication activity" to address those myths and misinformation. Id. Accordingly, Crawford wanted to know, "would [CDC] be able to see in CrowdTangle or other reports … what kind of themes were removed so we would still have the full picture of areas of confusion." Id. 75:21-76:1.

594. Crawford inquired of Facebook "about the data that we could get so we had a full picture on confusion so that we could adjust communication materials, or ways that we were communicating" about COVID-19. Id. 81:10-13. In other words, Crawford wanted to know about speech that was censored, as well as speech that was left up, on social-media platforms so CDC could get "a full picture" and "adjust communication materials" to address people's actual concerns. Id.

595. The CDC "did searches in CrowdTangle, the same way we do searches in other social media and listening tools that we have to create, to understand what's being discussed in the environment, to update our communication material." Id. 148:11-15.

V. Dr. Fauci's Campaigns to Censor Disfavored Viewpoints on Social Media.

596. Dr. Fauci, cooperating frequently with NIH Director Dr. Francis Collins, engaged in a series of campaigns to discredit and procure the censorship of viewpoints he disfavored on social media, beginning at least in early 2020. Once he became Chief Medical Advisor in the Biden Administration in early 2021, his censorship efforts coordinated with and reinforced those of federal officials in the White House, the Office of the Surgeon General, the CDC, and elsewhere.

597. Until his recent retirement, Dr. Anthony S. Fauci was the director of the National Institute for Allergy and Infectious Diseases at the National Institutes of Health and the Chief Medical Advisor to President Biden. Fauci Dep. 10:8-16. At the time of his deposition, Dr. Fauci had been the director of NIAID for over 38 years. Id. at 10:25-11:1.

A. Dr. Fauci's Conspiracy and Campaign to Suppress the Lab-Leak Theory.

598. First, in early months of 2020, Dr. Fauci worked closely with Dr. Francis Collins and Jeremy Farrar to orchestrate a campaign to discredit and suppress the opinion that SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19, leaked from a laboratory at the Wuhan Institute of Virology—an opinion that has recently been confirmed as likely true. Early in the pandemic, Dr. Fauci was aware that NIAID, under his direction, had funded dangerous gain-of-function research on coronaviruses at that laboratory, and he sought to discredit and suppress the lab-leak theory to deflect the scandal and blame associated with potential responsibility for the deaths of millions in the ensuing pandemic. He engaged in a campaign of deception to discredit the theory, and as a result of his efforts, the lab-leak theory was heavily censored on social media.

599. On December 30, 2011, Dr. Fauci co-authored an op-ed with Dr. Francis S. Collins in the Washington Post entitled A Flu Virus Risk Worth Taking. Fauci Ex. 1, Fauci Dep. 13:13-20.

600. In this op-ed, Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins advocated for creating potentially dangerous viruses in laboratories, writing that "important information and insights can come from generating a potentially dangerous virus in a laboratory." Fauci Ex. 1, at 1. According to Fauci and Collins, "[u]nderstanding the biology of … virus transmission has implications for outbreak prediction, prevention and treatment," and "[i]dentifying threatening viruses can also facilitate the early stages of manufacturing vaccines that protect against such a virus in advance of an outbreak." Id. at 2. They further argued that "identifying the molecular Achilles heel of these viruses can allow scientists to identify novel antiviral drug targets that could be used to prevent infection … or better treat those who become infected." Id.

601. Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins acknowledged the significant risks associated with such research, writing that "[s]afeguarding against the potential accidental release or deliberate misuse of laboratory pathogens is imperative." Id. But they believed that those risks were contained, writing that "engineered viruses … are maintained in high-security laboratories." They further state that "scientists, journal editors, and funding agencies involved are working together to ensure that access to specific information that could be used to create dangerous pathogens is limited to those with an established and legitimate need to know." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

602. Thus, long before the COVID-19 pandemic, Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins were highly visible, public advocates for laboratory experiments that involve "generating a potentially dangerous virus in a laboratory." Id. at 1.

603. Such research of "generating a potentially dangerous virus in a laboratory" is commonly called "gain-of-function" research. Dr. Fauci testified that "[g]ain of function is a very potentially misleading terminology, and that was one of the reasons why several years ago outside groups, not the NIH … did away with the terminology 'gain of function' because it can often be very confusing and misleading." Fauci Dep. 16:3-10. But Dr. Fauci confirms that "the NIH" did not "d[o] away" with that terminology, id., and Dr. Fauci's own internal email uses the phrase "SARS Gain of Function" to describe the research on bat coronaviruses that was conducted by Dr. Shi Zhengli and others at the Wuhan Institute of Virology, partly funded by Dr. Fauci's NIAID through the subgrants from the EcoHealth Alliance, discussed below, see Fauci Ex. 6, at 8.

604. On June 1, 2014, Dr. Fauci's NIAID funded a grant to the EcoHealth Alliance for the five-year period June 1, 2014, to May 31, 2019. Fauci Ex. 2, at 2. The title of the project was "Understanding the Risk of Bat Coronavirus Emergence." Id. at 1. The project's Abstract stated, "This project will examine the risk of future coronavirus (CoV) emergence from wildlife using in-depth field investigations across the human-wildlife interface in China, molecular characterization of novel CoVs and host receptor binding domain genes, mathematical models of transmission and evolution, and in vitro and in vivo laboratory studies of host range." Id.

605. The Abstract noted that one of the project's "three specific aims" would be to "[t]est predictions of CoV inter-species transmission" by engaging in two forms of research to enhance the bat coronaviruses' transmissibility to humans: "reverse genetics," i.e., genetic manipulation of the viruses to render them more transmissible; and "virus infection experiments"

using "humanized mice," i.e., repeatedly infecting humanized mice with bat coronaviruses to provoke mutations that render them more infectious to human cells (a process known as "serial passage," see https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Serial_passage). Id. at 1. Specifically, the Abstract stated: "Predictive models of host range (i.e.[,] emergence potential) will be tested experimentally using reverse genetics, pseudovirus and receptor binding assays, and virus infection experiments across a range of cell cultures from different species and humanized mice." Id. (emphases added).

606. Dr. Fauci attempted to argue that "reverse genetics" is so vague that it might not refer to gain-of-function research. See Fauci Dep. 23:18-20 ("I'm not really quite sure what they're referring to. Reverse genetics can mean many things."). But Dr. Fauci admits that "reverse genetics" means "[m]anipulation of a virus, recombination, things like that." Id. at 23:19-21. In 2015, in an article reporting on research performed pursuant to this grant, Dr. Ralph Baric and Dr. Shi Zhengli wrote that they used "reverse genetics" to "generate[] and characterize[] a chimeric virus" that was more infectious and more virulent in humans. Fauci Ex. 4, at 1. Dr. Fauci's own internal email describes that article as addressing "SARS Gain of Function." Fauci Ex. 6, at 8.

607. Dr. Fauci admits that "EcoHealth has a subaward from their original grant that goes to Shi Zhengli at the Wuhan Institute of Virology." Fauci Dep. 36:4-6. He agrees that EcoHealth and Shi Zhengli of the Wuhan Institute of Virology "work together on research that's directly funded by NIAID." Fauci Dep. 36:7-13.

608. Dr. Fauci also attests that Dr. Peter Daszak likely has access to the genetic sequences of chimeric viruses that Shi Zhengli created during her research funded by EcoHealth using NIAID funds: "I don't know absolutely for sure, but I would imagine that if Peter Daszak is collaborating scientifically with Shi Zhengli, that it is likely, given the norms of scientific collaboration, that he would have access to data," and "they are collaborators, since he has a subaward to the Wuhan Institute that I believe goes to Dr. Shi." Fauci Dep. 37:1-13. Daszak, therefore, is likely in possession of genetic evidence demonstrating whether SARS-CoV-2 originated from NIAID-funded research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology.

609. Dr. Fauci claimed that he had never seen this grant award before his deposition, and that he was only "vaguely" aware of NIAID's funding of EcoHealth Alliance. Id. at 18:10-12 ("I'm vaguely familiar with the fact that EcoHealth Alliance has been doing research on trying to understand the bat coronavirus emergence."); id. at 19:7-8 ("I have no recollection of the initiation of this grant."). Dr. Fauci admits that "NIAID has funded EcoHealth Alliance," 20:5-6, but he contends that he is completely unfamiliar with this project. Id. at 20:8-9 ("[T]his is the first time that I have seen this piece of paper."). But this very grant project was flagged for Dr. Fauci in an email from his subordinate on January 27, 2020, at the beginning of the pandemic. Fauci Ex. 5. Given the public and Congressional scrutiny of this particular project and its relation to the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic, Dr. Fauci's testimony on these points is not credible.

610. Peter Daszak is listed as the "Contact PI/Project Leader" for the grant award "Understanding the Risk of Bat Coronavirus Emergence." Fauci Ex. 2, at 1. The "Awardee Organization" is the EcoHealth Alliance. Id.

611. Dr. Fauci claims that he is not acquainted with Peter Daszak and does not know how to pronounce Daszak's name, Fauci Dep. 20:13 ("I'm not sure"), and that he "do[es]n't even remember meeting him," id. at 21:1-2, but that he has seen a photo of himself with Daszak at a public event as the only evidence that they have met. Id. at 21:2-8.

612. In fact, Dr. Fauci has exchanged cordial emails with Daszak on a first-name basis, and he participated in a podcast with him on February 9, 2020, in which they both sought to discredit the lab-leak theory of COVID's origins. Fauci Ex. 15, 16, 30. Dr. Fauci's attempt to deny or downplay his acquaintance and familiarity with Daszak is not credible.

613. On October 17, 2014, the U.S. Government entered a "research funding pause" on gain-of-function research on coronaviruses, in a document entitled "U.S. Government Gain-of-Function Deliberative Process and Research Funding Pause on Selected Gain-of-Function Research Involving Influenza, MERS, and SARS Viruses." Fauci Ex. 3, at 1 (the "GoF Pause" or "Pause").

614. Contrary to Dr. Fauci's testimony that the "pause" was an occasion to jettison the term "gain-of-function," the Pause provided a simple and clear definition of "gain of function" research, defining "Gain-of-function studies" as "research that improves the ability of a pathogen to cause disease." Fauci Ex. 3, at 2. The research on bat coronaviruses described in Fauci Ex. 2 meets this simple definition.

615. The Pause applied to funding for all "research such as this until a new U.S. Government research policy could be adopted." Fauci Dep. 27:17-19; Fauci Ex. 3, at 2-3.

616. The Pause provided an exception in Footnote 1, which stated: "An exception from the research pause may be obtained if the head of the USG funding agency determines that the research is urgently necessary to protect the public health or national security." Fauci Ex. 3, at 2 n.1.

617. Dr. Fauci testified that he does not recall whether NIAID ever invoked that exception during the years that the Pause was in place (2014-2017). Fauci Dep. 28:22-29:3. He testified that authorization for funding under the exception would "not usually rise up to the office of the director, but is handled at the level of staff and deputy." Id. at 29:1-2. He testified that such approval for projects "urgently necessary to protect the public health or national security" could have come from "any of a number of people. It could have been people at the program level. It could have been my deputy. It could have been program managers and division directors." Id. at 30:16-19.

618. This testimony contradicts the plain language of the exception, which states that "the head of the USG funding agency" must "determine[] that the research is urgently necessary to protect the public health and national security" to allow continued funding for gain-of-function research on coronaviruses. Fauci Ex. 3, at 2 n.1. At all relevant times, Dr. Fauci was the "head of the USG funding agency," i.e., the Director of NIAID, and he was responsible for authorizing funding for gain-of-function research on the ground that it was "urgently necessary to protect the public health or national security."

619. Dr. Fauci states that he does not recall whether NIAID ever authorized continued funding for Peter Daszak or EcoHealth Alliance pursuant to the exception to the Pause in footnote 1. Fauci Dep. 30:3-12.

620. In fact, Dr. Fauci testified that "I don't recall" or "I do not recall" 174 times in his deposition, and testified that he could not recall or remember using variations on that phrase 212 times. See Fauci Dep. 22:21-352:17-18. This contrasts sharply with his public statements about the very same issues that, during his deposition, he professed near-complete loss of memory. See, e.g., Jones Decl., Ex. X, at 1 ("I remember it very well"). It also contrasts sharply with his clear, specific recollection of unrelated events from the same time frame. See, e.g., Fauci Dep. 353:20-354:16. Dr. Fauci's repeated claims to not remember or not recall key events and people are not credible.

621. Dr. Fauci's chief deputy is Dr. Hugh Auchincloss, who is the Principal Deputy Director of NIAID. Id. at 30:20-25.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

622. In December 2015, during the research "Pause" on gain-of-function funding, Nature Medicine published an article entitled, "A SARS-like cluster of circulating bat coronaviruses shows potential for human emergence." Fauci Ex. 4, at 1. Dr. Ralph Baric of the University of North Carolina was listed as the corresponding author, and Dr. Shi Zhengli of the Wuhan Institute of Virology was listed as a co-author. Id. at 1 & n.8.

623. The 2015 Nature Medicine article clearly described gain-of-function research on bat coronaviruses. The Abstract states: "Here we examine the disease potential of a SARS-like virus, SHC014-CoV, which is currently circulating in Chinese horseshoe bat populations. Using the SARS-CoV reverse genetics system, we generated and characterized a chimeric virus expressing the spike of bat coronavirus SHC014 in a mouse-adapted SARS-CoV backbone." Fauci Ex. 4, at 1. Notably, the article uses the same phrase as the EcoHealth grant, "reverse genetics," to describe creating "a chimeric virus." Id.

624. The article reports that the "chimeric virus" created from a "SARS-like" bat coronavirus had become highly transmissible in human tissue: it could "replicate efficiently in primary human airway cells and achieve in vitro titers equivalent to epidemic strains of SARS-CoV." Id. It had also become more virulent: "Additionally, in vivo experiments demonstrate replication of the chimeric virus in mouse lung with notable pathogenesis." Id. There were no available treatments for this lab-created "chimeric" virus: "Evaluation of available SARS-based immune-therapeutic and prophylactic modalities revealed poor efficacy; both monoclonal antibody and vaccine approaches failed to neutralize and protect from infection with CoVs using the novel spike protein." Id.

625. The article noted that the authors had then "synthetically re-derived an infectious full-length SHC014 recombinant virus and demonstrate robust viral replication both in vitro and in vivo." Id. The article concluded that "[o]ur work suggests a potential risk of SARS-CoV re-emergence from viruses currently circulating in bat populations" – and this conclusion was based on creating a more transmissible (to humans) and more virulent (to humans) SARS-like coronavirus in a lab. Id.

626. The article acknowledged that NIAID was the principal funder of this research, and that it had received funding from the EcoHealth Alliance, Daszak's group: "Research in this manuscript was supported by grants from the National Institute of Allergy & Infectious Disease and the National Institute of Aging of the US National Institutes of Health (NIH) … and by USAID-EPT-PREDICT funding from EcoHealth Alliance." Id. at 5.

627. The article also noted that the NIH had reviewed and approved the research under the GoF Pause: "Experiments with the full-length and chimeric SHC014 recombinant viruses were initiated and performed before the GOF research funding pause and have since been reviewed and approved for continued study by the NIH." Id. "GOF" is short for "gain-of-function."

628. Dr. Fauci testified that he first became aware of this Nature Medicine article "likely … several months" after the outbreak of the COVID-19 pandemic, and that "it was brought to my attention in the context of questions that were raised by members of Congress about experiments that were funded by the NIAID." Fauci Dep. 31:17-20, 32:7-9. In fact, Dr. Fauci attached this article to a confidential midnight email to his principal deputy, Hugh Auchincloss, on January 31, 2020, and directed Auchincloss to read it immediately and take unspecified actions on it on a Saturday morning. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

629. Dr. Fauci testified that he does not believe he has ever met Dr. Ralph Baric, the corresponding author of the 2015 Nature Medicine article. Fauci Dep. 32:16-19 ("I know who he is, I doubt I've ever met him. I may have met him at one of the meetings where there are thousands of scientists saying hi to each other…"); see also id. at 33:25-34:1. In fact, Dr. Fauci's official calendar shows a one-on-one meeting with Dr. Ralph Baric on February 11, 2020, during the events described herein. Fauci Ex. 17, at 1. A contemporaneous Slack message on February 18, 2020 reports that Dr. Baric "sat in Fauci's office talking about the outbreak and chimeras," i.e., lab-created chimeric viruses. Jones Decl., Ex. Y, at 1. And Dr. Fauci testified that Dr. Baric may be the source of the phrase "SARS Gain of Function" in the attachment to his midnight email to Hugh Auchincloss. Fauci Dep. 57:11-12. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

630. Dr. Fauci professed to be ignorant of the identity of Dr. Shi Zhengli, the notorious "Bat Woman" of the Wuhan Institute of Virology. When asked if he knows who she is, he stated, "I'm not a hundred percent certain. I get sometimes confused with Asian names." Id. at 33:9-10, 18-19. Yet Dr. Shi Zhengli, the so-called "bat woman," is world-renowned as the researcher who may have caused the COVID-19 pandemic, and has been so since the beginning of the pandemic, see, e.g., Jones Decl., Ex. Z, at 1, and the name "Shi" is included in the title of the article that Dr. Fauci forwarded to Dr. Hugh Auchincloss after midnight on February 1, 2020. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8. Dr. Fauci's testimony is not credible on this point.

631. Dr. Fauci testified that he first became aware of the outbreak of COVID-19 either December 31, 2019 or "the first couple days of 2022." Fauci Dep. 34:8-11.

632. Dr. Fauci recounts that he first became aware of concerns that the SARS-CoV-2 virus that causes COVID-19 "might have been genetically engineered or originated in a laboratory" when "[t]here was a phone call in late January of 2020, I believe, from Jeremy Farrar. There was one other person on the phone. I believe it was [K]ristian [Andersen], who piped me in on a three-way call, saying that they looked at the virus and there was some concern about the molecular configuration or makeup of the virus that made them think there was a possibility that there could have been a manipulation of the virus." Id. at 34:12-35:1.

633. Dr. Fauci states that he does not believe that anyone ever raised the concern to him before that late January call, and he specifically attests that he does not recall Dr. Robert Redfield, then-Director of the CDC, raising the concern to him in mid-January 2020. Id. at 35:2-15. Dr. Fauci's recollection conflicts with that of Dr. Redfield, who specifically recalls raising this issue to Dr. Fauci earlier in January 2020, and having his concerns fall on deaf ears: "Dr. Robert Redfield, a virologist and the director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), had urged Fauci privately to vigorously investigate both the lab and natural hypotheses. He was then excluded from the ensuing discussions—learning only later that they'd even occurred. 'Their goal was to have a single narrative,' Redfield [said]." Jones Decl., Ex. AA, at 7.

634. "In mid-January of 2020, … Redfield expressed his concerns in separate phone conversations with three scientific leaders: Fauci; Jeremy Farrar, the director of the U.K.'s Wellcome Trust; and Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, director general of the World Health Organization (WHO). Redfield's message, he says, was simple: 'We had to take the lab-leak hypothesis with extreme seriousness.'" Id. at 23. Dr. Fauci disputes this account and states that this conversation did not happen: "To my recollection, no." Fauci Dep. 35:9-12.

635. On January 27, 2020, Dr. Fauci and several other senior NIAID officials received an email from Greg Folkers, who is his "immediate chief of staff in my office group," id. at 38:2-4; the email provided "Talking Points for NIAID Director Dr. Fauci." Fauci Ex. 5. The email stated that "when talking about CoV … we have on our team (Vincent and folks we fund, Peter Daszak, Ralph Baric, Ian Lipkin, etc.) probably the world's experts on non-human coronaviruses. … EcoHealth group (Peter Daszak et al) has for years been among the biggest players in coronavirus work, also in collaboration Ralph Baric, Ian Lipkin, and others." Id. at 1. It also flagged the ongoing NIAID grant to Daszak and its work with Wuhan Institute of Virology: "NIAID has funded Peter's group for coronavirus work in China for the past five years through R01 1R01AI110964: 'Understanding the Risk of Bat Coronavirus Emergence.' That's now been renewed." Id. It noted that "[t]he results of the work to date include … Found SARS-related CoVs that can bind to human cells (published in Nature) and that cause SARS-like disease in humanized mouse models"—a clear reference to the 2015 Nature Medicine article. Id. Three days later, Dr. Fauci would attach that Nature Medicine article to a midnight email to Hugh Auchincloss. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8.

636. Like so many other things, Dr. Fauci testifies that he does not recall receiving this email. Fauci Dep. 40:5-6.

637. Dr. Fauci states that he first became aware of the concern that the virus might be bioengineered and lab-created in a call with Dr. Kristian Andersen of Scripps and Jeremy Farrar of the Wellcome Trust on January 31, 2020. Fauci Dep. 43:17-25. In that call, according to Dr. Fauci, "Jeremy and [K]ristian said they had looked at -- or at least [K]ristian did, possibly Jeremy -- and maybe one other scientist -- and said that it is possible that there may have been a manipulation because it was an unusual virus." Fauci Dep. 44:3-9. A phone call was arranged for the next day, Saturday, February 1, 2020, to discuss the possibility. Id. at 44:15-17.

638. According to contemporaneous emails, Eddie Holmes and Bob Garry were involved in this call with Dr. Fauci and Kristian Andersen as well. Fauci Ex. 7, at 2. Eddie Holmes, who was then raising serious concerns that the virus had leaked from a lab, would go on to be the lead drafter of a key article discrediting the lab-leak theory.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

639. After the January 31 call with Farrar and Andersen, in the evening of the same day, Dr. Fauci forwarded them an article that was skeptical of the lab-leak theory, stating that "it is of interest to the current discussion." Ex. 6, at 1. Andersen responded, stating that he was not convinced by the article because "one has to look really closely at all the sequences to see that some of the features look (potentially) engineered," and that "after discussion earlier today, Eddie [Holmes], Bob [Garry], Mike [Laribee], and myself all find the genome inconsistent with expectations from evolutionary theory." Id. (emphasis added); see also Fauci Dep. 51:3-8.

640. A few hours later, shortly after midnight, at 12:29 a.m. on February 1, 2020, Dr. Fauci sent an email to his principal deputy, Hugh Auchincloss. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8. The subject line of the email said "IMPORTANT." Id. The email stated: "Hugh: It is essential that we speak this AM. Keep your cell phone on. … Read this paper as well as the e-mail that I will forward to you now. You will have tasks today that must be done. Thanks, Tony." Id.

641. The "this paper" that was attached to the email was the 2015 Nature Medicine article entitled "A SARS-like cluster of circulating bat coronaviruses shows potential for human emergence," Fauci Ex. 4, co-authored by Dr. Ralph Baric and Dr. Shi Zhengli and funded by NIAID and the EcoHealth Alliance. Fauci Ex. 6, at 8; Fauci Dep. 55:23-56:25. As an attachment to Dr. Fauci's email, this article was called "Baric, Shi et al – Nature Medicine – SARS Gain of Function.pdf." Fauci Ex. 6, at 8.

642. Dr. Fauci claims that he can recall virtually nothing about sending this urgent, confidential email to his principal deputy in the middle of the night of the day when he found out that highly qualified researchers were concerned that SARS-CoV-2 might have leaked from a laboratory. See Fauci Dep. 55:15-63:21 ("I don't recall … I don't know for sure … I can't say that I recall that in particular … I don't recall. I'm not sure exactly why those words got in there

… I don't recall … I don't recall … I don't precisely recall … I don't recall if I did … I might have, but I don't recall. … I don't recall. … I don't recall … I don't recall. … I don't recall … I really don't recall … I actually don't recall why I forwarded it to him … I don't recall why I did that … I don't remember … I don't recall speaking to him."). This contrasts starkly with Dr. Fauci's public claim to "remember … very well" key events of the same day. Jones Decl., Ex. X, at 1. Dr. Fauci's claim to an amazing loss of memory about this urgent clandestine email to his confidential deputy is not credible.

643. Dr. Fauci admits, however, that he wanted Auchincloss to find out what coronavirus research NIAID was funding in China before his call later that afternoon with scientists about the lab-leak concerns raised by Andersen and Farrar: "And at my recollection, I brought to Hugh's attention, saying, 'We have to speak in the morning, because I want to find out what the scope of what it is that we are funding so I'll know what we're talking about.'" Fauci Dep. 58:1-5. In particular, Dr. Fauci wanted to find out what EcoHealth Alliance was doing: "this was the first that I had heard about specifics of what EcoHealth and what other people were doing, and I wanted my staff to say get me up to date. So that's what I meant by you have work to do." Id. at 58:6-12.

644. Regarding the "tasks that must be done," Dr. Fauci admits that "I wanted to be briefed on the scope of what our collaborations were and the kind of work that we were funding in China. I wanted to know what the nature of that work was." Id. at 59:12-15.

645. The tone of the email and Dr. Fauci's own testimony strongly support the inference that Dr. Fauci sent the email to Auchincloss because he was concerned that NIAID, under his leadership, was funding research in China that might have led to the creation and leak of SARS-CoV-2, and he wanted to know the full extent of NIAID's exposure before his call later that day with scientists and funding authorities. See also Fauci Dep. 58:18-25. If it became public that

NIAID had funded the creation of SARS-CoV-2, Dr. Fauci and his agency potentially faced an enormous crisis of public credibility and accountability.

646. Immediately after sending Auchincloss the 2015 Nature Medicine article, Dr. Fauci also forwarded Auchincloss another article about the possibility that SARS-CoV-2 had leaked from a lab—the Jon Cohen article that he had sent to Kristian Andersen and Jeremy Farrar earlier that evening. Fauci Ex. 6, at 9. This email confirms that Dr. Fauci was deeply concerned about the prospect that NIAID, under his watch, might have funded the creation of the virus causing the global pandemic.

647. Dr. Fauci denies that, when he sent this email to Auchincloss, he was then concerned that NIAID might have funded the creation of the virus that caused the COVID-19 pandemic. When asked, "Were you concerned at that time that the work that you had funded in China might have led to the creation of the coronavirus?" Dr. Fauci responded: "I wasn't concerned that it might have." Fauci Dep. 59:16-19. In light of the tone and content of his emails at the time, and Dr. Fauci's other testimony, this statement is plainly not credible.

648. According to Dr. Fauci, when he participated in the secret call with the scientists and funding authorities later that afternoon on Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, he did not share with them that NIAID had been funding "SARS Gain of Function" research in China leading to the outbreak of COVID-19. Fauci Dep. 63:22 ("I don't believe I did.").

649. In fact, once again, Dr. Fauci claims that he does not recall what he said on the clandestine February 1, 2020 phone call. Id. at 64:17 ("I don't recall").

650. At 1:19 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 1 – about forty minutes before the secret conference call to discuss the lab-leak concern – Dr. Fauci also forwarded the "Baric, Shi et al – Nature Medicine – SARS Gain of Function" article to Lawrence Tabak of the NIH, saying only "Here it is." Fauci Ex. 6, at 15. Lawrence Tabak was then "the deputy director of the National Institutes of Health," the principal deputy to then-NIH Director Dr. Francis Collins. Fauci Dep. 65:8-11.

651. Dr. Fauci testified that "I don't recall why" he sent the 2015 Nature Medicine article to Lawrence Tabak, but he admits that it was likely to get it into the hands of Dr. Francis Collins, who was about to participate in the 2:00 p.m. secret conference call with Dr. Fauci and the other scientists. Id. at 66:15-17. Dr. Fauci claims that this was "to make sure everyone was aware of what the discussions were," id. at 66:13-15, but that is not credible in light of his testimony that he did not alert any of the other scientists on the call to the concern that NIAID was funding "SARS Gain of Function" research in China. Id. at 63:22.

652. The more compelling inference is that Dr. Fauci wanted Dr. Collins to know that NIAID and NIH faced enormous exposure if the lab-leak theory turned out to be true or publicly accepted. Dr. Collins, along with Dr. Fauci, had publicly championed gain-of-function research since at least 2011, and NIH had jointly funded Dr. Shi Zhengli's work at the Wuhan Institute of Virology through NIAID and the National Institute of Aging. Fauci Ex. 4, at 5 (referring to "grants from the National Institute of Allergy & Infectious Disease and the National Institute of Aging of the US National Institutes of Health (NIH)").

653. On Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, at 11:47 a.m., Hugh Auchincloss emailed Dr. Fauci in response to his 12:29 a.m. email. The subject line stated only "Continued." Auchincloss stated: "The paper you sent me [i.e., the 2015 Nature Medicine article on 'SARS Gain of Function'] says the experiments were performed before the gain of function pause but have since been reviewed and approved by NIH. Not sure what this means since Emily is sure that no Coronavirus work has gone through the P3 framework. She will try to determine if we have any distant ties to this work abroad." Fauci Ex. 6, at 16. At 5:51 p.m., Dr. Fauci responded: "OK. Stay tuned." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

654. "Emily" in Auchincloss's email "is Emily Erbelding, the Director of the Division of Microbiology and Infectious Diseases at NIAID," who "would have been the one who was closest to the ground in understanding what we were doing in funding China." Fauci Dep. 70:14-18. The "P3 framework" refers to the special approval process required for funding of gain-of-function research on coronaviruses that may cause pandemics, as "P3" stands for "potential pandemic pathogens." See National Institutes of Health, Office of Science Policy, Gain of Function Research, at https://osp.od.nih.gov/policies/national-science-advisory-board-for-biosecurity-nsabb/gain-of-function-research/ ("Certain gain-of-function studies with the potential to enhance the pathogenicity or transmissibility of potential pandemic pathogens (PPPs) have raised biosafety and biosecurity concerns…"). Thus, Auchincloss and Dr. Fauci had evidently discussed the concern that NIAID had funded the creation of "potential pandemic pathogens" at the Wuhan Institute of Virology, and Dr. Fauci was concerned about NIAID's "ties to this work abroad." Fauci Ex. 6, at 16.

655. Dr. Fauci admits that this email confirms that he "wanted to be briefed as to the extent of our involvement with funding in China," Fauci Dep. 71:2-4—in particular, NIAID's funding of the Wuhan Institute of Virology, as a global SARS-like pandemic emerged from Wuhan.

656. Dr. Fauci also admits that he may have raised the concern with Auchincloss that Dr. Baric's and Dr. Shi Zhengli's research reflected in the 2015 Nature Medicine article may have been illegally funded in violation of the GoF Pause in effect from 2014 to 2017. Fauci Dep. 71:14-20 ("Q: Did you raise a specific concern with Hugh that the research reflected in the Baric, Shi Nature Medicine paper may have been inconsistent with the pause on -- gain-of-function funding research? A. That is possible.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

657. On Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, Jeremy Farrar sent an email organizing a secret conference call at 2:00 pm EST to a group of scientists and science-funding authorities. Fauci Ex. 6, at 17-18. The first thing that Farrar noted in the email, in bold, was "Information and discussion is shared in total confidence and not to be shared until agreement on next steps." Id. at 17 (bold in original).

658. Separately, Farrar sent just Dr. Fauci an email on the morning of Feb. 1 to ensure that he could join the call, stating "Could you join?" Fauci Ex. 7, at 12. In that email, Farrar listed the participants and stated, "My preference is to keep this a really tight group. … Obviously ask everyone to treat in total confidence." Id. He also stated that the purpose of the call was "To listen to the work of Eddie, Bob and Kristian have done. Question it. And think through next steps." Id.

659. Dr. Fauci described the call as an open debate about the lab-leak theory among "a larger group of evolutionary virologists," Fauci Dep. 58:19-20, but in fact the call included a heavy representation of international government and science-funding authorities—including Dr. Fauci, Director of NIAID; Dr. Francis Collins, Director of NIH; Jeremy Farrar, head of the Wellcome Trust, the United Kingdom's "predominant" science-funding authority; Paul Schreier, the Chief Operating Officer of the Wellcome Trust who is responsible for "research funding" there; and Sir Patrick Vallance, the chief medical advisor to the U.K. government. Fauci Ex. 6, at 18; see also Fauci Dep. 75:11-76:15. All these people had a strong vested interest in avoiding a major scandal about international science-funding practices—such as the concern that Western governments may have funded the creation of a deadly virus that escaped from a lab and infected millions of people. As funding authorities who control the distribution of massive amounts of research funding, they also had powerful influence over the research scientists on the call.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

660. Dr. Fauci took steps to ensure that Dr. Francis Collins would be included on the call "since he's the director of NIH." Fauci Dep. 75:4-6. Dr. Fauci evidently spoke with Dr. Collins before the call, as he emailed Farrar before the call stating, "Jeremy: Francis will be on the call. He is trying to phone you." Fauci Ex. 7, at 17. Farrar then emailed Dr. Collins stating, "Francis Call me on [redacted]." Fauci Ex. 7, at 19.

661. Like the 12:29 a.m. email to Auchincloss, Dr. Fauci repeatedly claimed that he could not recall virtually any details about the 2:00 p.m. secret conference call with scientists and funding authorities about the lab-leak theory. Fauci Dep. 63:19-67:11 ("I don't recall bringing this up … I don't recall … I don't recall … I don't recall when it was … I don't recall … I don't believe that Larry was, but he could have been … I don't recall"); Fauci Dep. 73:20-74:14 ("I don't recall a discussion about confidentiality or not … I may have. I don't recall."); Fauci Dep. 77:13-15 ("Do you remember anything that anybody said on the call? A: No."); Fauci Dep. 78:10-83:10 ("I don't recall whether that was discussed … I don't recall anything from that phone call that said that … I'm not sure if I discussed it … I have a vague recollection that there was a concern … It is certainly possible, but I don't specifically remember … I don't specifically recall.").

662. This testimony to near-complete lack of memory about the call stands in stark contrast to Dr. Fauci's public statements a year and a half after the call occurred, when FOIA releases of Dr. Fauci's emails finally revealed to the public that this secret call had occurred. Then, Dr. Fauci stated, "I remember it very well." Jones Decl., Ex. X, at 1. Dr. Fauci's testimony about lack of recall is not credible.

663. Notwithstanding his repeated testimony that he cannot recall specifically what was said on the call, Dr. Fauci provided a self-justifying and innocent account of the call, describing it as a good-faith discussion among scientists trying to get to the truth without any preconceived biases. See, e.g., Fauci Dep. 77:16-18 ("[T]here was what appeared to me to be good faith discussion back and forth between people who knew each other"); Fauci Dep. 79:23-80:1 ("I think the general feeling among the participants on the call is that they wanted to get down to the truth and not wild speculation about things."); Fauci Dep. 80:9-10 ("I don't think there was any other concern than sticking with the truth and sticking with data").

664. Dr. Fauci thus seeks to have his cake and eat it too—he claims both to remember little or nothing of what was said on the call, and to clearly remember that the entire discussion was done in good faith and without any bias. In any event, subsequent communications and events make clear that Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible, as discussed in detail below, as an aggressive plot to discredit the lab-leak theory commenced immediately after the call.

665. Almost an hour into the 2:00 pm call, at 2:56 p.m., Jeremy Farrar sent a cryptic email to Fauci, Collins, Vallance (all science funders) and Mike Ferguson, stating, "Can I suggest we shut down the call and then redial in? Just for 5-10 mins?" Dr. Fauci responded, "Yes." Fauci Ex. 7, at 26. Dr. Fauci claims he cannot recall whether this occurred. Fauci Dep. 92:1-93:6.

666. Dr. Fauci testified that the call participants concluded that they needed more time to take a much closer look at the biology of the virus and genetic sequences before coming to a conclusion about the virus's origins, and they planned to take more time to continue their inquiry afterward. See Fauci Dep. 78:3-9 ("The ten[or] of it ended that we need more time … they said we need some time to more carefully look at this to see if we can come to a sound conclusion based on further examination of the sequences."); Fauci Dep. 80:24-25 ("The plan was to go and spend more time carefully looking at it."). In fact, Eddie Holmes and Kristian Andersen began drafting an article concluding that the lab-leak hypothesis was baseless and rooted in animus immediately after the call ended, and Dr. Fauci received an initial draft of this article by the next Tuesday morning. See infra. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

667. Dr. Fauci testified that his next interaction with the call's participants was when Kristian Andersen sent him a preprint of that article attacking the lab-leak theory. Fauci Dep. 82:19-83:1. In fact, before the preprint, Holmes and Farrar had sent Dr. Fauci at least four drafts of the article to review. See infra. Dr. Fauci's testimony is not credible on this point.

668. Dr. Fauci states that he cannot remember if he had further discussions with Jeremy Farrar, Francis Collins, and Patrick Vallance surrounding this call on Feb. 1, 2020. Fauci Dep. 83:2-10; 85:8-23, 90:25-91:15, 92:1-21. In fact, Dr. Fauci sent Jeremy Farrar a lengthy email that is entirely redacted at 12:38 a.m. on Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, Fauci Ex. 7, at 1; Farrar emailed Fauci on Jan. 30 stating "Tony Perfect timing – thank you. Great to catch up," and provided Sir Patrick Vallance's phone number, Fauci Ex. 7, at 4; Fauci emailed Farrar and Vallance on Jan. 30, stating "Thanks, Jeremy. Great chatting with you and Patrick. Will stay in close touch," Fauci Ex. 7, at 4; Jeremy Farrar sent Dr. Fauci an email on Friday, Jan. 31, stating "Tony Really would like to speak with you this evening It is 10pm now UK Can you phone me on [redacted]," Fauci Ex. 7, at 3; Farrar and Sir Patrick Vallance had a three-way call with Dr. Fauci on Jan. 30, 2020, Fauci Ex. 7, at 4; Farrar emailed Fauci and Collins after the call referring to "Conversations with you and Tony, and Patrick and others," Fauci Ex. 7, at 34; among others. Dr. Fauci had extensive discussions with Jeremy Farrar, Francis Collins, and Patrick Vallance surrounding the 2:00 p.m. February 1, 2020 secret conference call, and his testimony to the contrary is not credible.

669. After the call, Francis Collins emailed Farrar and stated, "Hi Jeremy, I can make myself available at any time 24/7 for the call with Tedros. Just let me know. Thanks for your leadership on this critical and sensitive issue." Fauci Ex. 7, at 34. Farrar responded, "We are altogether as you know!" Fauci then chimed it: "Thanks, Jeremy. We really appreciate what you are doing here." Fauci Ex. 7, at 34. "Tedros" refers to the director of the World Health Organization. Fauci Dep. 95:6-7.

670. After the call, Dr. Fauci described the scientists as engaging in a careful investigation of the virus: "[K]ristian and a few of the others carefully got together and looked at it and examined the pros and the cons and the ups and downs, and came to the conclusion that their initial concern about the molecular basis of the concern was unwarranted and that what they saw was quite compatible and, in fact, suggestive of a natural evolution." Fauci Dep. 81:8-15. In fact, Eddie Holmes and Kristian Andersen immediately began drafting an article attacking the lab-leak theory with no further investigation, which was sent to Dr. Fauci in less than three days. See infra. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

671. Farrar emailed Dr. Tedros of the World Health Organization and two senior WHO officials, along with Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins, indicating that he had just spoken to the senior WHO officials and "[f]ully agree with your summary." Fauci Ex. 8, at 1. Farrar emphasized the "urgency and importance" of the lab-leak question because of the "[g]athering interest evident in the scientific literature and in mainstream and social media to the question of the origin of this virus," and thus it was "[c]ritical" to "get ahead of the science and the narrative of this" instead of "reacting to reports which could be very damaging." Fauci Ex. 8, at 1. He also wrote, "I am sure I speak for Francis [Collins] and Tony [Fauci] when I say we are here and ready to play any constructive role in this," as they "[d]o think this is an urgent matter to address." Id.

672. Thus, Farrar, joined by Fauci and Collins, sent a message to the WHO that they wanted to "get ahead" of potentially damaging "narrative[s]" that might emerge "in mainstream and social media" about the origins of the virus. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

673. Later that day, on Feb. 2, Farrar separately emailed Fauci and Collins, stating "Tedros and Bernhard have apparently gone into conclave…they need to decide today in my view. If they do prevaricate, I would appreciate a call with you later tonight or tomorrow to think how we might take forward." Fauci. Ex. 8, at 2. He also stated, "Meanwhile…." and linked to an online article speculating about the lab-leak origins of the virus—again indicating that Fauci, Farrar, and Collins were concerned about controlling online discourse about the lab-leak theory. Id.

674. The day after the conference all, Sunday, Feb. 2, Dr. Fauci, Jeremy Farrar, and Dr. Collins shared a series of emails (1) acknowledging that there were very serious arguments in favor of the lab-leak theory, and (2) repeatedly expressing concern about the lab-leak theory's involvement on "social media." The group, including Dr. Fauci, repeatedly expressed concern about postings about the lab-leak theory on social media. See Fauci Ex. 8.

675. First, after the Feb. 1 call, still on Feb. 1, Farrar sent an email to the group expressing concern that "[t]here will be media interest and there is already chat on Twitter/WeChat" about the lab-leak theory, and stating: "In order to stay ahead of the conspiracy theories and social media I do think there is an urgency for a body to convene" to address the lab-leak question. Fauci Ex. 8, at 9.

676. The next day, Feb. 2, Farrar then expressed concern that "these questions are being asked by politicians, starting in the scientific literature, [and] certainly on social and main stream media. If, and I stress if, this does spread further, pressure and tensions will rise. [I] fear these questions will get louder and more polarised and people will start to look to who to blame. … I am concerned if this is not done quite quickly it will be reacting to what may be lurid claims." Fauci Ex. 8, at 7.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

677. Another call participant then agreed that "this needs to be discussed urgently," in part "because of the lurid claims on Twitter." Fauci Ex. 8, at 6. He also noted that "if the evolutionary origins of the epidemic were to be discussed, I think the only people with sufficient information or access to samples to address it would be the teams working in Wuhan." Id.

678. The same day, Farrar acknowledged "this is a very complex issue," and again expressed concern about "social and main stream media": "As discussed on the phone this discussion is not limited to those on this email, it is happening wider in the scientific, social and main stream media." Fauci Ex. 8, at 5.

679. Dr. Collins then responded to Farrar and Dr. Fauci only, stating that "a confidence-inspiring framework … is needed, or the voices of conspiracy will quickly dominate, doing great potential harm to science and international harmony." Fauci Ex. 8, at 5.

680. Farrar then shared notes with Fauci, Collins and Tabak (Collins' deputy) from "Mike Farzan (discoverer of SARS receptor)," which stated that Farzan "is bothered by the furin cleavage site [a virus feature that looks bioengineered] and has a hard time explaining that as an event outside the lab," and that "acquisition of the furin site would be highly compatible with the idea of continued passage of virus in tissue culture," i.e., serial passage. Fauci Ex. 8, at 4. Farzan suggested that "a likely explanation" of the virus was serial passage of SARS-like coronaviruses in human cell lines, and he stated that "I am 70:30 or 60:40" in favor of laboratory origins. Fauci Ex. 8, at 3-4.

681. Farrar also shared notes from "Bob" [Garry] that he had "aligned" the new virus "with the 96% bat CoV sequenced at WIV [Wuhan Institute of Virology]," and viewed the lab-origin theory as highly likely: "I really can't think of a plausible natural scenario … I just can't figure out how this gets accomplished in nature. Do the alignment of the spikes at the amino acid level – it's stunning." Fauci Ex. 8, at 4.

682. Having shared these notes, Farrar noted, "On a spectrum if 0 is nature and 100 is release – I am honestly at 50! My guess is that this will remain grey, unless there is access to the Wuhan lab – and I suspect that is unlikely!" Fauci Ex. 8, at 3. Both Farrar and Collins expressed concerns that the WHO might move too slowly for their liking. Id.

683. Then, still on February 2, 2020, Dr. Fauci wrote to Farrar, Collins, and Lawrence Tabak (Dr. Collins' principal deputy), stating: "Like all of us, I do not know how this evolved, but given the concerns of so many people and the threat of further distortions on social media, it is essential that we move quickly. Hopefully, we can get the WHO to convene." Fauci Ex. 8, at 2 (emphasis added).

684. Dr. Fauci claimed that he is completely dissociated from social media, stating: "I don't do social media so I'm not familiar with them," Fauci Dep. 98:15-16; and "You know, I'm so dissociated from social media. I don't have a Twitter account. I don't do Facebook. I don't do any of that, so I'm not familiar with that," Fauci Dep. 99:5-8; see also, e.g., Fauci Dep. 103:12-14; 210:3-8; 213:10-16; 241:6-9; 241:21-242:1; 301:10-11 ("I don't pay attention to things related to social media accounts."); id. at 312:7-9 ("I can repeat it for the hundredth time, I really don't get involved in social media issues."); id. at 356:15-16 ("I'm not a social media person.").

685. In fact, Dr. Fauci's daughter was then a software engineer at Twitter, Fauci Dep. 99:23-100:15; Dr. Fauci has done numerous podcasts and interviews on social media, including with Mark Zuckerberg, Fauci Dep. 99:16-19, 101:1-6; Dr. Fauci had specifically expressed concern about "the threat of further distortions on social media" about the lab-leak theory in his contemporaneous email, Fauci Ex. 8, at 2; and Dr. Fauci's communications staff had repeatedly emailed Twitter to try to remove postings critical of Dr. Fauci, see infra. Dr. Fauci's professed ignorance of social media is not credible. His communications and conduct make clear that he is keenly aware and deeply concerned about what he believes are "distortions on social media." Fauci Ex. 8, at 2.

686. Dr. Fauci also testified that "I don't recall anything about social media" in his discussions with Farrar about the origins of the virus. Fauci Dep. 102:17-18. In light of the contemporaneous emails repeatedly raising concerns about discussions of the lab-leak theory on social media, this claim is not credible.

687. Dr. Fauci admits that he was "concerned about … there being misinformation or disinformation that would interfere with our trying to save the lives of people throughout the world, which happens when people spread false claims." Fauci Dep. 103:18-22. He states that "misinformation and/or disinformation can lead to loss of life … and that troubles me." Fauci Dep. 104:15-17. This includes the spread of misinformation and disinformation on social media, because "that's part of the way information is disseminated." Fauci Dep. 104:22-23.

688. After Dr. Fauci's email about "the threat of further distortions on social media," Farrar emailed back indicating that the WHO might not move quickly to address the lab-leak theory, and stating to Fauci and Collins: "they need to decide today in my view. If they do prevaricate, I would appreciate a call with you later tonight or tomorrow to think how we might take forward." Fauci Ex. 8, at 2. He also stated: "Meanwhile…." and linked to an online posting expressing concerns about the lab-leak theory – indicating his dominant concern about online speech discussing the lab-leak theory. Id.

689. Soon thereafter, Farrar emailed Dr. Tedros of the WHO and two senior WHO officials, copying Fauci and Collins. Fauci Ex. 8, at 1. Farrar urged the WHO to quickly establish a working group to address the lab-leak theory, and reiterated that they should "[a]ppreciate the urgency and importance of this issue," given the "[g]athering interest evident in the science literature and in mainstream and social media to the question of the origin of this virus," and pressing them to "get ahead of … the narrative of this and not reacting to reports which could be very damaging." Fauci Ex. 8, at 1.

690. Fauci claims that he does not believe there was any further communication between him and Farrar about this issue, despite Farrar's urgent request for a follow-up call if the WHO did not act immediately. Fauci Ex. 8, at 2; Fauci Dep. 109:22-110:7. In light of their subsequent communications, this testimony is not credible.

691. By the early morning of February 4, 2020, Eddie Holmes had already sent a draft research paper attacking the lab-leak theory to Jeremy Farrar. Fauci Ex. 9, at 1. Holmes noted to Farrar that, in the draft, he "[d]id not mention [the virus's] other anomalies as this will make us look like loons." Fauci Ex. 9, at 1. To complete the draft between the afternoon of Saturday, Feb. 1, and the early morning of Tuesday, Feb. 4, Holmes must have started working on it almost immediately after the Feb. 1 conference call.

692. Farrar forwarded this draft to Fauci and Collins at 2:01 a.m. on Tuesday morning, February 4, 2020, in an attachment called "Summary." Fauci Ex. 10, at 3. He noted, "Please treat in confidence – a very rough first draft from Eddie and team – they will send on the edited, cleaner version later." Id.; see also Fauci Ex. 12, at 1.

693. Dr. Collins responded: "I note that Eddie is now arguing against the idea that this is the product of intentional human engineering," Fauci Ex. 10, at 3, a dramatic reversal of Holmes's position a few days earlier that Holmes and Andersen "find the genome inconsistent with expectations from evolutionary theory." Fauci Ex. 6, at 1. The paper's conclusion was also profoundly at odds with Holmes's statement, in the email sending the draft paper itself, that they would "look like loons" if the paper discussed the virus's other "anomalies" that strongly suggested a lab origin. Fauci Ex. 9, at 1.

694. Collins also noted that Holmes had not ruled out the possibility of a lab-created virus through serial passage. Fauci Ex. 10, at 3. Farrar responded, stating "Eddie would be 60:40 lab side. I remain 50:50." Id. Eddie, however, had already drafted a paper that refuted the lab-leak theory, even though he evidently still believed was the better explanation. See id.

695. Regarding the possibility of serial passage, Dr. Fauci noted that "Serial passage in ACE2-transgenic mice" was a possibility for the virus's origin, Fauci Ex. 10, at 2— notably, serial passage in humanized mice as was used in the 2015 Nature Medicine study. (Like so many other things, Dr. Fauci claims he does not recall this statement that he wrote. Fauci Dep. 115:22-116:12.) Collins responded, "Surely that wouldn't be done in a BSL-2 lab?" and Farrar answered, "Wild West…." Fauci Ex. 10, at 2. This exchange indicates that that Fauci, Farrar, and Collins were concerned that the coronavirus had been created in Wuhan by serial passage through humanized mice in a low-security [BSL-2] lab and then escaped from that low-security lab—i.e., the precise concerns surrounding the NIAID-funded research at WIV. Id.; see also, e.g., Jones Decl., Ex. BB< at 14 ("In the above exchange, the health officials [Fauci, Farrar, and Collins] seem to be contemplating the possibility that the repeated passage of a coronavirus through genetically modified mice in an insufficiently secure lab could have resulted in the accidental emergence and release of SARS-CoV-2.").

696. Later in the evening of the same day, Tuesday, Feb. 4, Farrar sent Fauci and Collins a second version of draft, entitled "Summary," with the note "Tidied up." Fauci Ex. 12, at 7. Dr. Fauci claims he does not remember receiving these drafts. Fauci Dep. 127:4-10.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

697. The next day, February 5, 2020, Farrar sent Fauci and Collins a third version of the draft, still entitled "Summary," with a note: "Tony and Francis The revised draft from Eddie, copied here." Fauci Ex. 12, at 8.

698. Two days later, on February 7, 2020, Farrar sent Fauci and Collins a fourth version of the same draft, entitled "Summary.Feb7.pdf," with the note in the subject line, "Revised draft." Fauci Ex. 11, at 2. This draft made clear that Holmes and his co-authors planned to aggressively discredit the lab-leak theory. It stated in bold in the beginning "Overview" section: "Analysis of the virus genome sequences clearly demonstrates that the virus is not a laboratory construct or experimentally manipulated virus." Fauci Ex. 11, at 3 (bold in original).

699. This was the fourth updated draft that Farrar sent to Fauci and Collins of the paper discrediting the lab-leak theory in the first week since the Feb. 1 secret conference call. The draft advocated that genetic evidence "clearly demonstrates" that the lab-leak theory is false. Id.

700. Dr. Fauci claims that he did not have any involvement in Farrar's efforts to push the WHO to assemble a working group to address the lab-leak theory. Fauci Dep. 110:4-7 ("So I really would doubt that there was any further communication between me and the WHO about this. This was fundamentally Jeremy's lane, if you want to call it that."); id. at 125:17-19 ("I didn't have any direct involvement with the WHO, not to my recollection."); id. at 131:14-15 ("This was mostly a Jeremy-led thing"). But in fact, Dr. Fauci sent multiple emails to Farrar urging for the inclusion of a long list of specific scientists in the WHO's working group. Fauci Ex. 13, at 1-2, 6.

701. On Feb. 5, 2020, Farrar emailed Fauci and Collins, stating that he believed that the WHO would assemble a working group to address the lab-leak theory, and urging Fauci and Collins to provide names of scientists to participate in the group. Fauci Ex. 13, at 7. Farrar stated that the WHO "have asked for names to sit on that Group – please do send any names." Id. He then stated, "We can have a call this week with a core group of that to frame the work of the Group including – if you could join?" Id. (emphasis added). And then he stated, "With names to be put forward into the Group from us and pressure on this group from your and our teams next week." Id. (emphasis added). Plainly, Farrar intended, with Fauci and Collins' assistance, to stack the WHO's group with their hand-picked scientists, have an advance call "to frame the work of the Group," and to put "pressure on this group from [Fauci's and Collins'] and our teams next week," id.—to influence and control the outcome of the WHO Group's deliberations.

702. Fauci and Collins did not dispute this plan. On the contrary, Fauci responded by providing Farrar with a detailed list of eight scientists to include in the WHO's group "in addition to the individuals who were on the call with us last Saturday." Fauci Ex. 13, at 2, 6. Fauci then followed up to his own email with an additional scientist, stating she is "an important name for the coronavirus evolution working group. Please include her." Id. at 1. Fauci's attempts to downplay his involvement with the plan to create and control a WHO working group on COVID-19's origins to discredit the lab-leak theory, therefore, are not credible.

703. Dr. Fauci testified that he, Farrar, and Collins "wanted to get them [the WHO] involved because we wanted to make sure that this was an open and transparent discussion," Fauci Dep. 126:9-12, is not credible in light of the contemporaneous email from Farrar to Fauci and Collins plotting to "frame the work of the Group" and put "pressure on this group from your and our teams next week." Fauci Ex. 13, at 3.

704. Dr. Fauci claims he does not recall any discussions about framing the work of the Group, or putting pressure on the Group. Fauci Dep. 137:1-21.

705. On February 9, 2020, Dr. Fauci participated in a joint podcast with Dr. Peter Daszak of the EcoHealth Alliance to discuss the outbreak of COVID-19. Fauci Ex. 15, at 1.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

706. Peter Daszak was then involved in organizing a statement for the Lancet seeking to discredit the lab-leak theory, similar to the article then being drafted by Eddie Holmes, of which Dr. Fauci had received four drafts the previous week. See Jones Decl., Ex. CC, at 1. Just a few days later, The Lancet would publish a statement of scientists organized and co-signed by Daszak and Jeremy Farrar, which stated: "We stand together to strongly condemn conspiracy theories suggesting that COVID-19 does not have a natural origin." Id. Thus, at that time, Daszak was working in parallel with Dr. Fauci, and together with Jeremy Farrar, to produce a published article discrediting the lab-leak theory. Id.

707. During the podcast, both Dr. Fauci and Daszak made comments seeking to discredit the lab-leak theory. Fauci Ex. 16, at 1. Fauci, when asked "Do you have any sense of where [the virus] probably came from?" answered, "Well I think ultimately we know that these things come from an animal reservoir. I heard these conspiracy theories and like all conspiracy theories … they [are] just conspiracy theories…. I think the things you are hearing are still in the realm of conspiracy theories without any scientific basis for it." Id. Daszak was asked, "Is it your sense that it's almost certain it came from an animal-to-human transmission?" and he responded: "All the evidence says that is what happened. … It looks to me and to most scientists like it's a bat virus that got into people either in the market or in rural China and just unfortunately has the capacity to spread." Id.

708. On February 11, 2020, Dr. Fauci had a meeting at NIAID with Dr. Ralph Baric, the corresponding author of the 2015 Nature Medicine article about NIAID-funded gain-of-function research in Wuhan that Dr. Fauci sent to Hugh Auchincloss after midnight on Feb. 1. Fauci Ex. 17, at 1 (Dr. Fauci's official calendar, Feb. 11, 2020, at 2:30 p.m. – "Meeting with Dr. Ralph Baric"). Dr. Fauci does not dispute that he met with Dr. Ralph Baric that day, but (like so many other things) he claims that he does not recall the meeting or what they discussed. Fauci Dep. 149:9-10, 149:21-23. As noted above, given that Dr. Fauci was deeply concerned about Baric's research at the time, Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

709. On Feb. 11, 2020, Ian Lipkin wrote an email referring to the draft paper about the origins of COVID-19 stating that, while the paper was "well-reasoned and provides a plausible argument against genetic engineering," it "does not eliminate the possibility of an inadvertent release following adaptation through selection in culture at the institute in Wuhan. Given the scale of the bat CoV research pursued there and the site emergence of the first human cases we have a nightmare of circumstantial evidence to assess." Fauci Ex. 18, at 1. Dr. Fauci states that he does not recall this email but that "it's entirely possible that Ian wrote this to me," because "Ian communicates with me." Fauci Dep. 153:15-17.

710. Dr. Fauci testified that it is "molecularly" impossible that SARS-CoV-2 originated from NIAID-funded research: "molecularly, that could not have happened." Id. at 157:21-22. But separately, he repeatedly testified that molecular virology is not his field, so his certainty on this one key point is not credible. Id. at 64:8-9 ("that's not my field, evolutionary virology"); id. at 117:19-20 ("I'm hesitant to go there because that's not my area of expertise"); id. at 127:12-13 ("it was an area that was not my area of expertise"); id. at 160:7-9 ("Did I fully understand the molecular virology of it? Unlikely, because I'm not an evolutionary virologist.").

711. On February 17, 2020, the preprint version of the paper drafted by Eddie Holmes attacking the lab-leak theory was released. Fauci Ex. 19. The paper was entitled, "The Proximal Origins of SARS-CoV-2." Id. at 12. Its listed authors were Kristian Andersen, Andrew Rambaut, Ian Lipkin, Edward Holmes, and Robert Garry. Id. All these authors, except possibly Ian Lipkin, had been participants in the secret phone conference at 2:00 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020. Fauci Dep. 161:7-10.

712. These authors had a financial interest in supporting NIH's preferred narrative. "Garry and Andersen have both been recipients of large grants from NIH in recent years, as has another 'Proximal Origin' author, W. Ian Lipkin of Columbia University." Jones Decl., Ex. BB.

713. These authors were stunningly recent converts to the theory of natural origin. On February 11, Ian Lipkin had sent an email about the same paper stating that "we have a nightmare of circumstantial evidence to assess." Fauci Ex. 18, at 1. On February 4, Holmes had written to Farrar that he avoided discussing the virus's "other anomalies as this will make us look like loons." Fauci Ex. 9, at 1.

714. On February 2, Bob Garry had written to Farrar, "I really can't think of a plausible natural scenario … I just can't figure out how this gets accomplished in nature. Do the alignment of the spikes at the amino acid level – it's stunning." Fauci Ex. 8, at 4. On January 31, Andersen had written to Dr. Fauci that the virus's "features (potentially) look engineered," and that "after discussion earlier today, Eddie [Holmes], Bob [Garry], … and myself all find the genome inconsistent with expectations from evolutionary theory." Fauci Ex. 6, at 1.

715. The preprint version of "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" asserted a very different conclusion. It stated that "this analysis provides evidence that SARS-CoV-2 is not a laboratory construct nor a purposefully manipulated virus." Fauci Ex. 19, at 2. It stated that "genomic evidence does not support the idea that SARS-CoV-2 is a laboratory construct." Id. at 6.

716. Dr. Fauci does not dispute that this preprint was sent to him. Fauci Dep. 160:3-4 ("It is likely that this was sent to me"). Dr. Fauci admits that he reviewed the preprint when it was sent to him. Id. at 160:7 ("Did I look through it? Yes."). And Dr. Fauci admits that he was aware of what their conclusion was about the lab-leak theory. Id. at 162:13-15 ("I am certain that having looked at it, I was aware of what their conclusion was.").

717. This was the fifth version of the paper that was sent to Dr. Fauci to review, after four drafts sent to him on Feb. 4, 5, and 7. Id. at 160:13-16.

718. On March 6, 2020, Kristian Andersen emailed Dr. Fauci, Dr. Collins, and Jeremy Farrar, stating, "Dear Jeremy, Tony, and Francis, Thanks again for your advice and leadership as we have been working through the SARS-CoV-2 'origins' paper. We are happy to say that the paper was just accepted by Nature Medicine and should be published shortly …. To keep you in the loop, I just wanted to share the accepted version with you, as well as a draft press release. We're still waiting for proofs, so please let me know if you have any comments, suggestions, or questions about the paper or the press release." Fauci Ex. 22, at 1. He also wrote: "Tony, thank you for your straight talk on CNN last night – it's being noticed." Id.

719. Thus, Andersen thanked Dr. Fauci, Collins, and Farrar for their "advice and leadership" about the paper, sent them the final draft, and asked for their input both on the draft and on their public messaging about the draft. Id.

720. This was the sixth version of the paper that was forwarded to Dr. Fauci for review and input. Id.

721. Dr. Fauci responded: "Kristian: Thanks for your note. Nice job on the paper. Tony." Id.

722. Dr. Fauci denies that he provided "advice and leadership" in the preparation of the paper. Fauci Dep. 171:11-13. In light of the extensive meetings and correspondence detailed above, that testimony is not credible.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

723. On March 17, 2020, Nature Medicine published the online version of The Proximal Origin of COVID-19. Fauci Ex. 24, at 3. The print version appeared in the April 2020 volume of the journal. Id.

724. The final, published version of the article makes even stronger claims attacking the lab-leak theory than the preprint version. In its opening, the article states: "Our analyses clearly show that SARS-CoV-2 is not a laboratory construct or a purposefully manipulated virus." Fauci Ex 24, at 1 (emphasis added). Similarly strong language, leaving no room for doubt, occurs throughout the article: "the genetic data irrefutably show that SARS-CoV-2 is not derived from any previously used viral backbone," id. at 1 (emphasis added). "This clearly shows that the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein optimized for binding to human-like ACE2 is the result of natural selection," id. at 2 (emphasis added). "[T]he evidence shows that SARS-CoV-2 is not a purposefully manipulated virus," id. at 3. "[W]e do not believe that any type of laboratory-based scenario is plausible." Id. at 3. "SARS-CoV-2 originated via natural selection." Id. at 3.

725. Thus, between the preprint version and final version of the article, the article substantially beefed up its conclusion that the lab-leak theory is implausible and should be discredited. Dr. Fauci claims he does not "recall specific conversations" about that conclusion with the authors, but he admits that he is "sure" that he discussed that conclusion with them: "we read the preprint and, therefore, we knew what the conclusion was, and I'm sure that that conclusion was discussed. So I would not be surprised at all following the initial preprint that I discussed the conclusion of these authors that this is not a laboratory construct or a purposely manipulated virus." Fauci Dep. 181:3-10; see also id. at 181:18-22. Based on all these circumstances, it is likely that Dr. Fauci encouraged the authors to express a stronger and more unequivocal conclusion against the lab-leak theory than reflected in the preprint.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

726. Once the article "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" was released, both Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins took steps to push it into prominence. First, on March 26, 2020, Dr. Collins published a blog post on the article on the "NIH Director's Blog" entitled "Genomic Study Points to Natural Origin of COVID-19." Fauci Ex. 25, at 1.

727. Dr. Collins used strong language relying on the study to attack and discredit the lab-leak theory as "outrageous" and "debunk[ed]": "Some folks are even making outrageous claims that the new coronavirus causing the pandemic was engineered in a lab and deliberately released to make people sick. A new study debunks such claims by providing scientific evidence that this novel coronavirus arose naturally." Fauci Ex. 25, at 2. Dr. Collins stated that the study shows that "the coronavirus that causes COVID-19 almost certainly originated in nature," and that "this study leaves little room to refute a natural origin for COVID-19." Fauci Ex. 25, at 3.

728. In his blog post, Dr. Collins did not disclose that he and Dr. Fauci had been part of the group that organized the study, nor that he and Dr. Fauci had reviewed six versions of the study before it was published. Fauci Ex. 25.

729. As was evidently intended, Dr. Collins's blog post immediately fueled media coverage attacking the lab-leak theory as a "conspiracy theory." For example, the next day, March 27, 2020, ABC News ran a story entitled, "Sorry, conspiracy theorists. Study concludes COVID-19 'is not a laboratory construct.'" Fauci Ex. 26. The article quoted Bob Garry—who on January 31 had found "the genome inconsistent with the expectations of evolutionary theory," Fauci Ex. 6, at 1, and on February 1 had told Farrar that "I just can't figure out how this gets accomplished in nature … it's stunning," Fauci Ex. 8, at 4—as stating that "[t]his study leaves little room to refute a natural origin for COVID-19." Fauci Ex. 26, at 3-4.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

730. Dr. Fauci testified that he could not remember any contact from Dr. Collins about "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" after Dr. Collins' blog post on March 26, 2020. Fauci Dep. 186:19-187:6. In light of their subsequent communications and Dr. Fauci's actions, this testimony is not credible.

731. In fact, Dr. Collins emailed Dr. Fauci about the article on Thursday, April 16, 2020. Fauci Ex. 27. The email linked to a Fox News piece by Bret Baier alleging that sources were "increasingly confident" that SARS-CoV-2 originated in a lab, and it stated: "Wondering if there is something NIH can do to help put down this very destructive conspiracy, with what seems to be growing momentum." Fauci Ex. 27, at 1. Dr. Collins stated, "I hoped the Nature Medicine article on the genomic sequence of SARS-CoV-2 [i.e., "The Proximal Origin of COVID-19] would settle this. … Anything more we can do?" Fauci Ex. 27, at 1.

732. Dr. Fauci responded to Dr. Collins at 2:45 a.m. the next day, Friday, April 17, stating only: "Francis: I would not do anything about this right now. It is a shiny object that will go away in times. Best, Tony." Fauci Ex. 27, at 2.

733. Dr. Fauci testified that he did not take "any steps to increase the visibility of the article after this" email exchange with Dr. Collins. 191:21-22; see also 195:10-17. That testimony is incorrect and not credible.

734. In fact, that same day, Dr. Fauci took matters into his own hands to make the lab-leak theory "go away." At the joint press conference on April 17, 2020, with President Trump, Vice President Pence, and Dr. Fauci, a reporter asked, "Mr. President, I wanted to ask Dr. Fauci: Could you address the suggestions or concerns that this virus was somehow manmade, possibly came out of a laboratory in China?" Fauci Ex. 28, at 2. Dr. Fauci responded: "There was a study recently that we can make available to you, where a group of highly qualified evolutionary virologists looked at the sequences there and the sequences in bats as they evolve. And the mutations that it took to get to the point where it is now is [pause for emphasis] totally consistent with a jump of a species from an animal to a human." Id.; see also id. 199:18-25 (Dr. Fauci conceding that, "when you said that sentence about totally consistent, you pause and use that phrase, 'totally consistent' with emphasis" – "Right."); see also Video of April 17, 2020 White House Coronavirus Task Force Briefing, at https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=brbArpX8t6I (exchange starting at 1:38:32 of video).

735. Dr. Fauci then feigned ignorance and unfamiliarity with the authors of the study: "the paper will be available – I don't have the authors right now, but we can make that available to you." Fauci Ex. 28, at 2. Presenting himself as unconnected with the paper, Dr. Fauci did not reveal (1) that he was part of a group that had launched the paper in a clandestine phone call on Saturday, Feb. 1; (2) that he had extensively corresponded with Jeremy Farrar about the paper and its conclusions; (3) that the authors of the paper had sent six versions to him, Jeremy Farrar, and Dr. Collins to review; (4) that he had likely urged the authors to beef up their conclusion attacking the lab-leak theory between the preprint and published versions of the paper; (5) that the authors had personally thanked him for his "advice and leadership" in drafting the paper; or (6) that Dr. Collins had emailed him the day before to ask him to push the paper publicly or take other steps to discredit the lab-leak theory.

736. Dr. Fauci does not dispute that he was referring to "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" in his public remarks at the April 17, 2020, White House press briefing. Fauci Dep. 201:2-6 ("I assume it was the Nature Medicine paper…. I think it was.").

737. Dr. Fauci testified that he did not make that paper available to any reporters after the press conference. Id. at 201:7-9 ("Not to my knowledge.). That testimony is not credible.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

738. In fact, over the weekend following the press conference, Dr. Fauci personally responded to an inquiry from a reporter specifically asking for the study he had referred to at the April 17, 2020 press conference, and provided a link to "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2." Fauci Ex. 29, at 1. On Sunday, April 19, a reporter emailed the White House press office asking, "Dr. Fauci said on Friday he would share a scientific paper with the press on the origin of the coronavirus. Can you please help me get a copy of that paper?" Id.

739. Dr. Fauci personally responded to this reporter, stating, "Bill: Here are the links to the scientific papers and a commentary about the scientific basis of the origins of SARS-CoV-2." Fauci Ex. 29, at 1. He then provided three links. The first was a link to the online version of "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2." The second and third were links to a paper and an online statement by Eddie Holmes, whom Dr. Fauci knew had begun secretly drafting the paper that became "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" immediately after the clandestine Feb. 1 conference call with Dr. Fauci, Jeremy Farrar, and others. Fauci Ex. 29, at 1. The second link to a paper authored by Holmes was "a commentary on [The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2] in the journal Cell." Fauci Dep. 202:25-203:1; see also id. at 203:2-16.

740. On April 18 and 19, 2020, Dr. Fauci exchange cordial emails with Peter Daszak of the EcoHealth Alliance, who steers NIAID funds to finance bat coronavirus research with Dr. Shi Zhengli at the Wuhan Institute of Virology. On Saturday, April 18, Daszak emailed Dr. Fauci, calling him "Tony," and stating: "As the PI of the R01 grant publicly targeted by Fox News reporters at the Presidential press briefing last night, I just wanted to say a personal thank you … for standing up and stating that the scientific evidence supports a natural origin for COVID-19 … not a lab release from the Wuhan Institute of Virology." Fauci Ex. 30, at 1. Daszak also wrote: "Once this pandemic's over I look forward to thanking you in person and let you know how important your comments are to us all." Id. Dr. Fauci responded on April 19: "Peter: Many thanks for your kind note." Id.

741. Dr. Fauci's and Dr. Collins's efforts to orchestrate and publicize "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" as a method of discrediting the lab-leak theory were highly effective. "The Proximal Origin of SARS-CoV-2" became one of the most widely read and most publicized scientific papers in history, with pervasive media coverage using it to discredit the lab-leak theory. "The paper has been accessed online more than 5.7 million times and has been cited by more than 2,000 media outlets. … It became one of the best-read papers in the history of science." Jones Decl., Ex. BB, at 3.

742. As a direct result of these efforts, speech and speakers advocating for the lab-leak theory of COVID-19's origins were extensively censored on social media platforms.

743. Twitter took aggressive censorship action against such speech and speakers. For example, on September 16, 2020, Twitter suspended the account of a Chinese virologist who claimed coronavirus was made in a lab. Fauci Ex. 31, at 1. "Twitter has suspended the account of a Chinese scientist who suggested that the novel coronavirus was created in a lab … despite inconclusive evidence." Fauci Ex. 31 at 2.

744. Facebook, likewise, took aggressive steps to censor the lab-leak theory on social media, even going so far as to formalize this policy as part of its official content-moderation policy. Fauci Ex. 32, at 3 (Facebook announcing that "we are expanding the list of false claims we will remove to include additional debunked claims about the coronavirus and vaccines," including "COVID-19 is man-made or manufactured"). Facebook noted that "we already prohibit these claims in ads," and promised "to take aggressive action against misinformation about COVID-19 and vaccines." Id. Facebook promised to "begin enforcing this policy immediately, with a particular focus on Pages, groups or accounts that violate these rules …. Groups, Pages, and accounts on Facebook that repeatedly share these debunked claims may be removed altogether." Id.

745. Like Twitter, Facebook censored even high-profile speakers who raised questions about the origins of COVID-19 or advanced the lab-leak hypothesis. For example, Facebook censored an article by award-winning British journalist Ian Birrell who raised "the question of the origins of the Covid-19 virus within Wuhan" and criticized the natural-origin theory of the virus. Fauci Ex. 33, at 1.

746. Dr. Fauci claims that he is not aware of any suppression of speech about the lab-leak theory on social media: "I'm not aware of suppression of speech on social media to my knowledge…. I don't recall being aware of suppression of anything." Fauci Dep. 208:10-14. He claims that this ignorance is because he does not pay any attention to anything said on social media: "This is not something that would be catching my attention because, you know, the social media and Twitter, I told you, I don't have a Twitter account. I don't tweet. I don't do Facebook. I don't do anything. So social media stuff, I don't really pay that much attention to." Id. at 210:3-8. As noted above, Dr. Fauci's emails and actions reflect extensive concern about what is said on social media, and his attempt to cast himself as someone with no knowledge of social media is not credible.

747. Further, Dr. Fauci's emails and interrogatory responses show a close relationship with the CEO and founder of Meta (Facebook/Instagram), Mark Zuckerberg.

748. On February 27, 2020, Mark Zuckerberg emailed Dr. Fauci directly to inquire about the development of the COVID-19 vaccine and offer the assistance of the Chan-Zuckerberg foundation. Fauci Ex. 23, 1. Zuckerberg already had Dr. Fauci's email, called Dr. Fauci by his first name "Tony," and wrote as if he had a preexisting acquaintance with Dr. Fauci. Id. Dr. Fauci, likewise, responded to Zuckerberg on a first-name basis and with the familiar tone of an acquaintance. Fauci Ex. 23, at 2.

749. Dr. Fauci claims that he does not recall whether he had already met Mark Zuckerberg. Fauci Dep. 173:17-174:5 ("I meet thousands of people. I'm not sure I ever met him in person."). But in fact, Dr. Fauci still refers to Mark Zuckerberg by his first name. Id. at 289:9-16.

750. On March 15, 2020, Mark Zuckerberg sent Dr. Fauci a lengthy email to offer close coordination between Dr. Fauci and Facebook on COVID-19 messaging. In the email, Zuckerberg thanked Dr. Fauci for his leadership, and "share[d] a few ideas of ways to help you get your message out." Fauci Ex. 23, at 3. Zuckerberg made three proposals: (1) Facebook was about to launch a "Coronavirus Information Hub" visible at the top of the page to all Facebook users to "get authoritative information from reliable sources," and Zuckerberg offered to include "a video from you" as a "central part of the hub," id.; (2) Zuckerberg was "doing a series of livestreamed Q&As from health experts" for his 100 million followers and wanted Dr. Fauci to do one of these videos, id.; and (3) Zuckerberg advised Dr. Fauci that Facebook had "allocated technical resources and millions of dollars of ad credits for the US government to use for PSAs to get its message out over the platform," and he wanted Dr. Fauci to recommend "a point person for the government response," id.

751. Dr. Fauci responded the next day, telling "Mark" that "[y]our idea and proposal sound terrific," that he "would be happy to do a video for your hub," and that "your idea about PSAs is very exciting." Fauci Ex. 23, at 4. He copied his Special Assistant to put Zuckerberg in touch with the right point person for the government to arrange specially subsidized government messaging about COVID-19 on Facebook. Id.

752. Zuckerberg replied the same day, stating "[w]e'd love to move quickly to help the effort and support getting these messages out." Fauci Ex. 23, at 6.

753. Dr. Fauci claims that the U.S. Government did not accept Facebook's offer of free ad credits to support the Government's COVID-19 messaging. Fauci Dep. 177:22-178:4 ("I don't believe that there was any money that was given from the Zuckerberg to the United States government to do PSAs. It's possible, but it certainly didn't happen to my knowledge. I don't recall money being given for PSAs."). But at the time, Dr. Fauci described the proposal as "very exciting" and immediately followed up on Zuckerberg's offer. Fauci Ex. 23, at 4. Separate emails from Facebook to the White House corroborate these ad credits. See, e.g., Doc. 174-1, at 46. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

754. Dr. Fauci and Zuckerberg have "interacted on Facebook Zoom-type podcasts." Fauci Dep. 175:17-18. Dr. Fauci did "[t]hree live stream Facebook-type Q and As" about COVID-19 with Zuckerberg. Fauci Dep. 177:2-4.

755. Dr. Fauci's interrogatory responses reveal extensive direct communications between Dr. Fauci and Zuckerberg. See Scully Ex. 12, at 33, 53-54 (identifying 13 communications between Dr. Fauci and Zuckerberg, including emails, phone calls, virtual meetings, and live broadcasts, over a nine-month period in 2020).

756. Reviewing the foregoing facts about Dr. Fauci's communications with Farrar, Eddie Holmes, and others, former Director of the CDC Robert Redfield "had a dawning realization. He concluded there'd been a concerted effort not just to suppress the lab-leak theory but to manufacture the appearance of a scientific consensus in favor of a natural origin. 'They made a decision, almost a P.R. decision, that they were going to push one point of view only' and suppress rigorous debate, said Redfield. 'They argued they did it in defense of science, but it was antithetical to science.'" Jones Decl., Ex. AA.

B. Dr. Fauci's Efforts to Suppress Speech on Hydroxychloroquine.

757. On May 22, 2020, The Lancet published an online article entitled "Hydroxychloroquine or chloroquine with or without a macrolide for treatment of COVID-19: a multinational registry analysis." Fauci Ex. 35, at 1. The article purported to analyze 96,032 patients to compare cohorts who did and did not receive hydroxychloroquine or chloroquine to treat COVID-19. Id. The study concluded that hydroxychloroquine and chloroquine were "associated with decreased in-hospital survival and an increased frequency of ventricular arrhythmias when used for COVID-19." Id.

758. On May 27, 2020, Dr. Fauci publicly cited this study to claim that hydroxychloroquine is "not effective against coronavirus." Fauci Ex. 34, at 1. Dr. Fauci "became the first Trump administration official to say definitively that hydroxychloroquine is not an effective treatment for the coronavirus." Id. at 2. "'The scientific data is really quite evident now about the lack of efficacy,' Fauci … said on CNN." Id.

759. Dr. Fauci's comments were based on the May 22 Lancet study. Id. at 3 ("Fauci's comments come days after the Lancet published a 96,000-patient observational study that concluded that hydroxychloroquine had no effect on Covid-19 and may even have caused some harm.").

760. The Lancet article was an observational study, not a randomized trial. At the time, "[t]here [wa]s no data yet from randomized, controlled clinical trials of hydroxychloroquine – the gold standard for evaluating potential treatments." Fauci Ex. 34, at 4. "But Fauci was unequivocal on [May 27, 2022], saying that 'the data are clear right now.'" Id.

761. Just a few days later, The Lancet retracted the May 22, 2022 study. Fauci Ex. 35, at 1. An article reporting on the retraction noted that the study's authors "were unable to confirm that the data set was accurate," that "several concerns were raised with respect to the veracity of the data," the study may have "include[ed] more cases than possible," and that "[a] first-year statistics major could tell you about major flaws in the design of the analysis." Jones Decl., Ex. DD, at 2-3.

762. Thus, Dr. Fauci's initial dismissal of hydroxychloroquine was based on a purely observational study – not a randomized, controlled trial – and one that was retracted for glaring errors just days later.

763. Dr. Fauci testified that he did not recall that The Lancet study he cited to discredit the efficacy of hydroxychloroquine had been retracted. Fauci Dep. 223:7 ("I don't recall it being retracted.").

764. Dr. Fauci stepped up his public campaign to discredit hydroxychloroquine by insisting that its effectiveness could only be judged by undergoing rigorous, randomized, double-blind, placebo-based studies, notwithstanding his previous reliance on the less-than-rigorous observational study in The Lancet that was subsequently retracted. On July 31, 2020, Dr. Fauci testified before the House Select Subcommittee on Coronavirus Crisis, during which he stated: "The point that I think is important, because we all want to keep an open mind, any and all of the randomized placebo-controlled trials, which is the gold standard of determining if something is effective, none of them had shown any efficacy by hydroxychloroquine. Having said that, I will state, when I do see a randomized placebo-controlled trial that looks at any aspect of hydroxychloroquine, either early study, middle study, or late, if that randomized placebo-controlled trial shows efficacy, I would be the first one to admit it and to promote it. But I have not seen yet a randomized placebo-controlled trial that's done that. And in fact, every randomized placebo-controlled trial that has looked at it, has shown no efficacy. So, I just have to go with the data. I don't have any horse in the game one way or the other, I just look at the data." See https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RkNC5OQD2UE.

765. Despite his insistence before a congressional committee that randomized, placebo-controlled trials were the determining factor for his opinion regarding the effectiveness of hydroxychloroquine in the treatment of COVID-19, Dr. Fauci quietly admitted that such rigorous studies are not actually required to determine the efficacy of a therapeutic drug. Dr. Fauci was asked, "Do you recall saying in connection with the discussion of hydroxychloroquine that a randomized double blind placebo based study is the gold standard?" Fauci Dep. 244:8-11. He replied, "That is the gold standard for everything. It isn't always needed, but for the most part, it's the gold standard." Id. at 244:12-14 (emphasis added).

766. Dr. Fauci's sudden reversal concerning the critical standards for scientific studies to determine the effectiveness of hydroxychloroquine demonstrated a lack of candor to the House Select Subcommittee on Coronavirus Crisis. Indeed, Dr. Fauci misled the Committee when he failed to disclose that randomized, double-blind, placebo-based studies are not always needed and that he previously relied on the observational, i.e., non-randomized, non-double-blind, non-placebo-based study in The Lancet to form an opinion about that drug's efficacy in the first place. Dr. Fauci lacks credibility on this point.

767. Despite mounting evidence against his position, Dr. Fauci testified that his opinion against hydroxychloroquine was based on other studies as well as the retracted article in The

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Lancet, but he could not identify any of those studies. Fauci Dep. 223:12-18 ("I don't recall specifically what those studies are now.").

768. Dr. Fauci did not retreat from his hard public stance against hydroxychloroquine. On July 26, 2020, a group called "America's Frontline Doctors" held a press conference at the U.S. Capitol criticizing the government's response to the COVID-19 pandemic and touting the benefits of hydroxychloroquine in treating the coronavirus. Fauci Ex. 38, at 5.

769. Dr. Fauci responded to this event with highly visible public statements condemning the use of hydroxychloroquine. For example, he stated on "Good Morning America," that "[t]he overwhelming prevailing clinical trials that have looked at the efficacy of hydroxychloroquine have indicated that it is not effective in coronavirus disease." Fauci Ex. 36, at 5. Dr. Fauci made these comments in direct response to the public claims of America's Frontline Doctors. Fauci Dep. 227:7-228:13. He also stated on MSNBC's "Andrea Mitchell Reports" that the video of the press conference by America's Frontline Doctors constituted "a video out there from a bunch of people spouting something that isn't true." Fauci Ex. 37, at 3.

770. Dr. Fauci also stated that "the cumulative data on trials, clinical trials that were valid, namely clinical trials that were randomized and controlled in a proper way, … showed consistently that Hydroxychloroquine is not effective in the treatment of coronavirus disease or COVID-19." Fauci Ex. 37, at 3. But two months earlier, he had said "the data are clear right now" when no such studies existed. Fauci Ex. 34, at 4.

771. Social-media platforms reacted by aggressively censoring the video of America's Frontline Doctors. Facebook removed the video when it was "the top-performing Facebook post in the world," and "had accumulated over 17 million views by the time of its censorship by Facebook." Fauci Ex. 38, at 3, 4. Further, "Facebook's decision to censor the livestream was quickly followed by YouTube, the Google-owned video-sharing platform." Id. at 6. "The video had 80,000 views on YouTube prior to its removal." Id. "Following Facebook and YouTube's removal of the video, Twitter followed suit…." Id.; see also Fauci Ex. 36, at 3 (noting that "Twitter … removed the video, saying it was 'in violation of our COVID-19 misinformation policy'").

772. Dr. Fauci professed to be unaware of whether 17 million views of a video on Facebook are a large number of views: "I don't know what 17 million views means. What's the denominator? Is 17 million a large amount? Is it a small amount? I don't go on social media, so I don't know what 17 million views means." Fauci Dep. 236:7-11. It is common sense that 17 million views are a large number of views. Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

773. Dr. Fauci does not deny that he or his staff at NIAID may have communicated with Facebook regarding the censorship of the America's Frontline Doctors video. Instead, he claims that he does not recall whether they communicated with Facebook about it, and that it is possible that they did so. Fauci Dep. 238:2-5 ("I don't recall anybody communicating with them about that. Could have been, but I don't recall anybody -- I don't recall anybody communicating with the social media people."); see also id. at 238:6-10. He also does not deny that other federal officials may do so, but he claims that "I don't recall any of that" and "it just doesn't ring a bell to me right now." Id. at 238:21-239:7. He claims he doesn't "pay attention" to whether his staff or other federal officials communicate with social-media platforms about censorship because "I have a really important day job that I work at." Id. at 238:19-20.

774. Nevertheless, regarding the decision by YouTube and Twitter to follow Facebook in censoring the video, Dr. Fauci admits that "Yes, I knew of that." Id. at 239:8-13.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

775. A few days later, on August 1, 2020, the web host provider for America's Frontline Doctors shut down their website. Id. at 242:14-243:8; Fauci Ex. 39. Dr. Fauci testifies that he does not recall this occurrence. Fauci Dep. 243:13-18.

776. On November 18, 2022, a meta-analysis of 449 studies on the efficacy of hydroxychloroquine considered "449 HCQ COVID-19 studies, 351 peer reviewed, 371 comparing treatment and control groups." Fauci Ex. 40, at 1. The meta-analysis concluded that "[l]ate treatment and high dosages may be harmful, while early treatment consistently shows positive results." Id. It also noted that "[n]egative evaluations" of hydroxychloroquine "typically ignore treatment delay." Id. And it noted that "HCQ/CQ was adopted for early treatment in all or part of 41 countries." Id.

C. Dr. Fauci's "Devastating Takedown" of the Great Barrington Declaration.

777. Dr. Fauci recommended Dr. Clifford Lane of NIAID to participate in a WHO mission to China in February 2020. Fauci Dep. 139:15.

778. On April 3, 2020, the NIH Record wrote a report on Lane's trip entitled "NIAID's Lane Discusses WHO COVID-19 Mission to China. Fauci Ex. 20, at 1. Lane praised China's response to the pandemic, especially their reliance on lockdowns and "extreme … social distancing": "The Chinese were managing this in a very structured, organized way,' he explained. 'When we got there, the outbreak was already coming under control in China. The measures they put in place appeared to be working…. It demonstrated their successful response…. From what I saw in China, we may have to go to as extreme a degree of social distancing to help bring our outbreak under control." Id. at 5-6.

779. Dr. Fauci discussed this conclusion with Lane when he returned from China: "Dr. Lane was very impressed about how from a clinical public health standpoint, the Chinese were handling the isolation, the contact tracing, the building of facilities to take care of people, and that's what I believed he meant when he said were managing this in a very structured, organized way." Fauci Dep. 165:4-11.

780. Dr. Fauci admits that Lane "did discuss with me that the Chinese had a very organized way of trying to contain the spread in Wuhan and elsewhere. … he mentioned that they had a very organized, well-regimented way of handling the outbreak." Id. at 166:1-7.

781. Dr. Fauci came to agree with Dr. Lane's rosy assessment of China's draconian response to the outbreak: "Dr. Lane is a very astute clinician, and I have every reason to believe that his evaluation of the situation was accurate and correct." Id. at 166:24-167:1.

782. On Feb. 22, 2020, Dr. Lane sent an email stating, "China has demonstrated that this infection can be controlled, albeit at great cost." Fauci Ex. 21, at 1.

783. On October 4, 2020, Plaintiffs Dr. Jay Bhattacharya of Stanford and Dr. Martin Kulldorff of Harvard, along with Dr. Sunetra Gupta of Oxford, published online the "Great Barrington Declaration," which was one-page treatise opposing reliance on lockdowns and advocating for an approach to COVID-19 called "focused protection." Fauci Ex. 41.

784. The Great Barrington Declaration criticized the social-distancing and lockdown approaches to the pandemic endorsed by government experts such as Dr. Fauci and Cliff Lane: "As infectious disease epidemiologists and public health scientists we have grave concerns about the damaging physical and mental health impacts of the prevailing COVID-19 policies, and recommend an approach we call Focused Protection." Id. It was very critical of such government policies: "Current lockdown policies are producing devastating effects on short and long-term public health. The results (to name a few) include lower childhood vaccination rates, worsening cardiovascular disease outcomes, fewer cancer screenings and deteriorating mental health – leading to greater excess mortality in years to come, with the working class and younger members of society carrying the heaviest burden. Keeping students out of school is a grave injustice. Keeping these measures in place until a vaccine is available will cause irreparable damage, with the underprivileged disproportionately harmed." Id. It called for an end to lockdowns: "The most compassionate approach that balances the risks and benefits of reaching herd immunity, is to allow those who are at minimal risk of death to live their lives normally to build up immunity to the virus through natural infection, while better protecting those who are at highest risk. We call this Focused Protection." Id.

785. The Declaration called for an end of government-imposed lockdowns and an immediate return to normal life for those who are low-risk: "Those who are not vulnerable should immediately be allowed to resume life as normal. Simple hygiene measures, such as hand washing and staying home when sick should be practiced by everyone to reduce the herd immunity threshold. Schools and universities should be open for in-person teaching. Extracurricular activities, such as sports, should be resumed. Young low-risk adults should work normally, rather than from home. Restaurants and other businesses should open. Arts, music, sport and other cultural activities should resume. People who are more at risk may participate if they wish, while society as a whole enjoys the protection conferred upon the vulnerable by those who have built up herd immunity." Id.

786. The Declaration was thus highly critical of the lockdown policies defended by Dr. Fauci and Dr. Cliff Lane of NIAID since Dr. Lane's trip to China at the beginning of the pandemic. The Declaration was "going against the global political consensus, which holds that lockdowns are key to minimising mortality to Covid-19." Fauci Ex. 48, at 3. After it was posted online, it rapidly gathered signatures from doctors and scientists, as well as members of the public.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

787. Four days later, on October 4, 2020, Dr. Francis Collins emailed Dr. Fauci and Cliff Lane, citing the Great Barrington Declaration. Fauci Ex. 42, at 1. Dr. Collins stated: "Hi Tony and Cliff, See https://gbdeclaration.org. This proposal from the three fringe epidemiologists who met with the Secretary seems to be getting a lot of attention – and even a co-signature from Nobel Prize winner Mike Leavitt at Stanford. There needs to be a quick and devastating published take down of its premises. I don't see anything like that on line yet – is it underway? Francis." Id.

788. This email seeking Dr. Fauci's assistance in a "quick and devastating … take down" of the Great Barrington Declaration" is strikingly similar to Dr. Collins' email to Dr. Fauci on April 16, 2020, asking Dr. Fauci's "help [to] put down this very destructive conspiracy," i.e., the lab-leak hypothesis. Fauci Ex. 27, at 1. In both cases, Dr. Collins sought Dr. Fauci's aid in discrediting and silencing an online narrative that federal officials disfavored, and in both cases, Dr. Fauci promptly and effectively complied.

789. Dr. Collins' question to Dr. Fauci in the email, "Is it underway?" implies that Dr. Collins expected Dr. Fauci to be already working on a "quick and devastating … take down" of the Declaration, or to be aware of others working on one. Fauci Ex. 42, at 1. Dr. Fauci denies that Dr. Collins had any reason to think that Dr. Fauci might be working on a refutation of the Great Barrington Declaration, because "[t]his is not something I would be involved in," because "I have a very important day job that is running a $6.4 billion institute." Fauci Dep. 260:11-20. Given Dr. Fauci's immediately subsequent attempts to refute and discredit the Great Barrington Declaration, this testimony is not credible.

790. The same day as Dr. Collins' email, October 8, 2020, Dr. Fauci wrote back to Dr. Collins, stating "Francis: I am pasting in below a piece from Wired that debunks this theory. Best, Tony." Fauci Ex. 43, at 1. Dr. Fauci followed up the same day with an email to Dr. Collins linking to an article by Gregg Gonsalves which Dr. Fauci called "[a]nother refutation of the herd immunity approach." Fauci Ex. 44, at 1.

791. Dr. Fauci has known Gregg Gonsalves for decades, since the 1980s. Fauci Dep. 265:16-19. Dr. Fauci does not deny that he may have contacted Gregg Gonsalves before Gonsalves wrote this piece attacking the Great Barrington Declaration, but claims he does not recall. Id. at 268:8-19 ("I don't recall. I might have.").

792. Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins followed up with a series of public media statements attacking the Great Barrington Declaration. On October 14, 2020, the Washington Post ran a story entitled, "Proposal to hasten herd immunity to the coronavirus grabs White House attention but appalls top scientists." Fauci Ex. 45, at 1. In the article, Dr. Collins described the Great Barrington Declaration and its authors as "fringe" and "dangerous": "This is a fringe component of epidemiology. This is not mainstream science. It's dangerous." Id. at 3.

793. Dr. Fauci consulted with Dr. Collins before he told the Washington Post that the Great Barrington Declaration represented a "fringe" and "dangerous" idea. Fauci Dep. 272:4-7.

794. Dr. Fauci endorsed these comments in an email to Dr. Collins on October 13, 2020, stating, "[w]hat you said was entirely correct." Fauci Ex. 46, at 1.

795. Dr. Fauci admits that Dr. Collins could have been concerned about the spread of the ideas in the Declaration on social media when he called it "fringe" and "dangerous." Fauci Dep. 274:19-20.

796. The next day, October 15, 2020, Dr. Fauci echoed Dr. Collins' comments, calling the Declaration "nonsense" and "dangerous." Fauci Ex. 47, at 1. Describing the proposal as "letting infections rip as it were," Dr. Fauci stated: "Quite frankly that is nonsense, and anybody who knows anything about epidemiology will tell that that is nonsense and very dangerous." Id. at 3.

797. Dr. Fauci testified that "it's possible that" he coordinated with Dr. Collins on their public statements attacking the Great Barrington Declaration. Fauci Dep. 279:23-24.

798. Dr. Fauci also testified of himself and Dr. Collins that "that's not our style to be coordinating things." Id. at 279:22-23. In light of the extensive coordination with Dr. Collins about the lab-leak theory, and the coordination about the Great Barrington Declaration, that testimony is not credible.

799. Shortly after Dr. Collins' email to Dr. Fauci seeking a "quick and devastating … take down" of the Great Barrington Declaration, the Declaration and its authors, Drs. Bhattacharya and Kulldorff, experienced extensive censorship on social media. See infra. In October 2020, Google deboosted the search results for the Declaration, so that "most users in English-speaking countries, when they google 'Great Barrington Declaration,' will not be directed to the declaration itself but to articles that are critical of the declaration." Fauci Ex. 48, at 4.

800. In the same time, "[c]ensorship of the declaration … also spread to Reddit. The two most popular subreddits for discussion of the coronavirus – r/COVID-19 and r/coronavirus – have both removed links to the Great Barrington Declaration. The moderators of r/coronavirus, a forum with 2.3million members, have declared it to be 'spam'." Fauci Ex. 48, at 4-5.

801. In October 2020, YouTube updated its terms of service regarding medical "misinformation," reporting "COVID-19 medical misinformation policy updated to prohibit content about vaccines contradicting consensus from health authorities." Fauci Ex. 49, at 3. "Health authorities" include federal officials like Dr. Fauci and Dr. Collins. See id. This October 2020 update specifically stated that claims which are "not allowed on YouTube" include "[c]laims that achieving herd immunity through natural infection is safer than vaccinating the population," which is listed on the same footing as "[c]laims that COVID-19 vaccines contain a microchip or tracking device." Fauci Ex. 50, at 3-4.

802. Pursuant to this censorship policy of YouTube, the authors of the Great Barrington Declaration had content removed from YouTube, including a video of a roundtable discussion with Governor Ron DeSantis of Florida. See infra.

803. Facebook, likewise, adopted censorship policies against the Great Barrington Declaration. Meta's policy on "Misinformation about vaccines" states that: "We remove misinformation primarily about vaccines when public health authorities conclude that the information is false and likely to directly contribute to imminent vaccine refusals." Fauci Ex. 51, at 4 (emphasis added).

804. Facebook/Meta views Dr. Fauci as a "public health authority" who may dictate what people may post about COVID-19 on its platforms (Facebook and Instagram, among others), because Mark Zuckerberg and Dr. Fauci were collaborating on multiple public appearances and videos for Facebook. See supra; Scully Ex. 12, at 33, 53-54 (identifying 13 communications between Dr. Fauci and Zuckerberg, including emails, phone calls, virtual meetings, and live broadcasts, over a nine-month period in 2020). Indeed, in his March 15, 2020 email to Dr. Fauci, Mark Zuckerberg described Dr. Fauci as an "expert[]," a "health expert[]" and "reliable source[]" for "authoritative information" about fighting COVID-19. Fauci Ex. 23, at 3.

805. Dr. Fauci claims that he would not have paid any attention to the Great Barrington Declaration because he is too busy and important to pay attention to such matters: "this is not something that I would have been paying a lot of attention to. I was knee deep in trying to do things like develop a vaccine that wound up saving the lives of millions of people. That's what I was doing at the time." Fauci Dep. 256:13-17. Given Dr. Fauci's direct involvement in publicly attacking the Great Barrington Declaration and collecting sources for Dr. Collins to "take [it] down," this statement is not credible. In fact, on November 1, 2020, Greg Folkers, Dr. Fauci's staffer at NIAID, sent Dr. Fauci a list of articles attacking the Great Barrington Declaration—including one co-authored by Gregg Gonsalves—with the statement "As discussed. I have highlighted the three I found the most useful." Fauci Ex. 52, at 1. The list of articles were all harshly critical of the Declaration—using phrases like "dangerous," "false promise," "ethical nightmare," and "could kill millions." Id. Thus, four weeks after the Declaration was published, Dr. Fauci and his staffers were still "discuss[ing]" and looking up articles on ways to attack it. Id.

806. Dr. Kulldorff points out that, regardless of disagreements over the policy, describing the Declaration as "fringe" and "nonsense" is fundamentally dishonest, as the Declaration reflects principles of pandemic preparedness that were widely accepted before COVID-19: "the Great Barrington Declaration is merely a restatement of the principles of public health. Lockdown … is a 'terrible experiment' that throws those principles 'out of the window' by focusing solely on one disease at the expense of all other health problems. 'Most countries in Europe had a pandemic-preparedness plan that did not recommend lockdowns, but instead proposed a risk-based strategy to protect those at high risk, which is actually the same as the focused protection we put forward in the Great Barrington Declaration. What we are proposing is, therefore, nothing revolutionary', [Kulldorff] said." Fauci Ex. 48, at 6.

807. Regarding the censorship of the Great Barrington Declaration on social media, Dr. Fauci repeatedly testified that he was oblivious to it: "I don't pay much attention to what goes on in social media … it is highly unlikely that … I paid any attention to this thing of Google censoring the Great Barrington Declaration … I would not have paid much attention to it." Fauci Dep.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

281:15-282:2, 283:7-10. In light of his contemporaneous statements and emails, this statement is not credible.

808. Like so many other topics, Dr. Fauci repeatedly testified that he could not recall virtually anything about his involvement in seeking to squelch the Great Barrington Declaration. He testified at least 33 times that he could not recall his involvement in this matter. See Fauci Dep. 251:11, 252:20, 255:6, 255:9, 256:3, 257:5, 258:12, 263:1, 263:15, 263:21, 264:17, 264:20, 264:22, 265:2, 265:6, 268:10, 268:18, 270:24, 282:19-20, 284:22-23, 290:13, 290:21, 291:13, 291:16, 292:15, 292:24, 293:15, 293:24, 295:9, 295:25, 296:21, 297:2-3, 297:14. For the reasons discussed above, these claims to almost total loss of memory are not credible.

D. NIAID Flags Social-Media Accounts for Censorship Under Dr. Fauci.

809. As noted above, Dr. Fauci testified that he is not aware of any NIAID or NIH staff contacting social media platforms to ask them to remove content. In fact, NIAID and NIH staff—including staffers in Dr. Fauci's senior circle—sent several messages to social-media platforms asking them to remove content lampooning or criticizing Dr. Fauci. Dr. Fauci's testimony to the contrary is not credible.

810. On March 14, 2020, a Twitter employee reached out to CDC officials, including Carol Crawford, and asked if a particular account associated with Dr. Fauci is "real or not." Fauci Ex. 53, at 2. Scott Prince of NIH responded, "Fake/Impostor handle. PLEASE REMOVE!!!" Id. Twitter responded that it would take action promptly and "circle back ASAP." Id. An HHS official then asked if Twitter could pre-block similar parody accounts: "Is there anything else that you can also do to block other variations of [Dr. Fauci's] name from impersonation so we don't have this happen again?" Id. at 1. Twitter replied: "We'll freeze this @handle and some other variations so no one can hop on them." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

811. Likewise, on April 21, 2020, Judith Lavelle of NIAID emailed Facebook, copying Scott Prince of NIH and Jennifer Routh of Dr. Fauci's communications team, and stated: "We wanted to flag a few more fake Dr. Fauci accounts on FB and IG for you. I have also reported them from @niaid and my personal FB account." Fauci Ex. 55, at 3. She listed eight accounts that she considered fake. One of these was called "Dr.FauciTheHero," and she stated, "I think this one may be fine as a fan page but could use a reminder to be a bit more clear," id. at 4—thus noting that she was seeking the censorship only of speech about Dr. Fauci that the government disfavors, while "a fan page" was fine.

812. Both Jennifer Routh and Judith Lavelle are members of Dr. Fauci's communications staff. Fauci Dep. 308:14-21.

813. The fact that Lavelle stated they were flagging "a few more" accounts indicates that NIAID's flagging social-media accounts for censorship was not an isolated incident but an ongoing practice. Fauci Ex. 55, at 3.

814. Lavell then followed up flagging yet another account, saying "Apologies one more," and adding Greg Folkers of Dr. Fauci's personal staff to the email chain reporting these accounts to Facebook for censorship. Fauci Ex. 55, at 3.

815. The same day, Facebook responded, "Flagged this for the fake accounts team and they have confirmed that all but two accounts were removed for impersonation of Dr. Fauci. I guess two of the accounts are fan accounts." Fauci Ex. 55, at 3.

816. The Facebook employee then added, "Also want to intro you all to [two more Facebook employees] who have been working hard to manage any fake accounts for NIH across the board. She can work with you directly if anything like this comes up." Fauci Ex. 55, at 2. Lavelle responded that "our team will be sure to reach out if we identify any more impersonations," id., and Facebook answered that Lavelle of NIAID should "feel [free] to flag to us the various imposter accounts," Fauci Ex. 55, at 1. Again, this response indicates an ongoing and widespread practice of NIH reporting supposedly "fake" accounts for censorship. Id.

817. Dr. Fauci testifies that he does not remember for certain, but he "likely" asked his communications staff to do something about these impersonation or parody accounts. Fauci Dep. 302:6-10 ("I vaguely remember somebody mentioning something about an imposter account. … And I likely would have said, 'Well, how can they do that?'"). He also agrees that his communications staff would do so on their own. Id. at 301:1-4 ("I have a communication staff that I'm sure, if they found out it was a false and misleading account, that they would want it to be removed."); see also id. at 301:23-25; 304:19-21.

818. Dr. Fauci believes it is "totally appropriate" for his communications staff to contact social-media platforms and seek the removal of such accounts. Id. at 312:19-21; see also id. at 310:14-16.

819. He thinks so because "impersonating me is a bad thing." Id. at 303:20; see also id. at 304:11-13; 309:23-310:1 ("fake accounts are bad things, I believe"); 311:20-21. Dr. Fauci specifically believes that removing accounts associated with him is "a good thing" because "those accounts are bad." Id. at 329:12-16.

820. Dr. Fauci does not know whether some of the so-called "fake accounts," which he calls "bad things," that his staff flagged for censorship may actually be parody accounts. Id. at 311:7-9.

821. Moreover, it was not just NIAID staff, but also White House staff, who flagged content about Dr. Fauci for removal from social-media platforms. As noted above on Tuesday, July 20, 2021, Clarke Humphrey of the White House communications office emailed Facebook asking for the removal of an Instagram account associated with Dr. Fauci, saying it "is not actually one of ours." Fauci Ex. 57, at 1-2. Facebook responded one minute later, stating, "Yep, on it!" Fauci Ex. 57, at 1. Courtney Billet, Dr. Fauci's communications director at NIAID, then weighed in, asking Facebook to disclose whether "there's a federal email address attached to whomever set this account up," so that she could ascertain whether the account was set up by "some federal employee outside our official comms offices." Fauci Ex. 57, at 1. The next day, Facebook responded, stating, "This account has been removed. Thank you for flagging!" Fauci Ex. 57, at 1.

822. NIAID's communications with social-media platforms were not limited to flagging impostor or parody accounts. On October 30, 2020, for example, a NIAID staffer wrote an email connecting Google/YouTube with Jennifer Routh of NIAID's "Office of Communications and Government Relations," so that NIAID and the "Google team" could "connect on vaccine communications – specifically misinformation…." Fauci Ex. 56, at 2. Routh then added Courtney Billet ("director of the Office of Communications and Government Relations at NIAID") and two other senior NIAID officials to the communications chain with YouTube. Fauci Ex. 56, at 1.

823. Likewise, in response to a third-party subpoena, Twitter has disclosed that Dina Perry, a Public Affairs Specialist for NIAID, communicates or has communicated with Twitter about misinformation and censorship. Jones Decl., Ex. F, at 1.

824. NIAID did not disclose Dina Perry in response to interrogatories seeking the identities of NIAID officials who communicate with social-media platforms about misinformation, disinformation, and censorship. Scully Ex. 12, at 17-18.

825. Dr. Fauci testified that he has never "contacted a social media company and asked them to remove misinformation from one of their platforms." Fauci Dep. 151:21-24 ("No, I have not."). He also testified that no one on his staff at NIAID has "ever reached out to a social media platform to ask them to take content down or to block content in any way. Id. at 152:7-15 ("To my knowledge, no."). In light of the repeated attempts of Dr. Fauci's staff to have content related to Dr. Fauci removed from social media, Dr. Fauci's testimony on this point is not credible.

E. CDC and NIH Procure the Censorship of Speech on Ivermectin.

826. On September 13, 2021, Facebook emailed Carol Crawford of the CDC to ask the CDC to identify whether the claim that "Ivermectin is effective in treating COVID" is "false, and if believed, could contribute to people refusing the vaccine or self-medicating," which were the qualifications for censoring that claim on Facebook's platforms. Fauci Ex. 58, at 2. Facebook noted that it was currently rating this claim as "not false," i.e., Facebook was not censoring the claim that Ivermectin is effective in treating COVID-19, because there was "no consensus" of its efficacy for treatment. Id. at 3.

827. The next day, the CDC responded, advising Facebook that the claim that "Ivermectin is effective in treating COVID" is "NOT ACCURATE" (bold and italics in original) and thus should be censored on Facebook's platforms. Fauci Ex. 58, at 1. To support this claim, the CDC cited NIH's "Ivermectin | COVID-19 Treatment Guidelines." Id. Thus, the CDC cited the NIH's treatment guidelines for Ivermectin as authority to urge Facebook to censor claims about using Ivermectin to treat COVID-19. Id. CDC also cited NIH to call for the censorship of two related claims about Ivermectin, and noted that "[t]hese responses are based on the independent advice of … NIH," which had "opined that there are not data that indicate ivermectin is effective in the ways described above." Id.

F. Dr. Fauci's Double Standard on Acceptable Speech: Mask Mandates.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

828. "Sylvia Burwell is the former Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services [under President Obama] and the current president of American University." Fauci Dep. 313:9-11. "Sylvia has, over the past couple of years, asked [Dr. Fauci] advice about personal safety during the COVID-19 pandemic." Id. at 313:17-19.

829. On February 4, 2020, Sylvia Burwell wrote Dr. Fauci an email stating that she was traveling and wondering if she should wear a mask in the airport. Fauci Dep. 313:21-314:5; see also Jones Decl., Ex. EE, at 1. Dr. Fauci responded, stating: "Masks are really for infected people to prevent them from spreading infection to people who are not infected, rather than protecting uninfected people from acquiring infection. The typical mask you buy in the drugstore is not really effective in keeping out virus, which is small enough to pass through material. … I do not recommend that you wear a mask…." Fauci Dep. 314:9-19; see also Jones Decl., Ex. EE, at 1.

830. Dr. Fauci agrees that he "made several statements that are similar to that at that time frame." Fauci Dep. 315:12-14.

831. He states that, at that time, there were "no studies" on the efficacy of masking to stop the spread of COVID-19. Id. at 316:8-13.

832. In fact, on March 31, 2020, Dr. Fauci forwarded studies showing that masking is ineffective. Fauci Dep. 318:24-319:7.

833. Dr. Fauci's position on masking dramatically changed by April 3, 2020, when he became an advocate for universal mask mandates. Id. at 317:14-20.

834. Dr. Fauci states that his position on masking changed in part because "[e]vidence began accumulating that masks actually work in preventing acquisition and transmission." Fauci Dep. 317:5-6.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

835. Dr. Fauci was asked to identify any studies that were done between February 2020 and April 3, 2020, that supported his change of position on the efficacy of masking, and he could not identify any. Id. at 318:8-10.

836. Dr. Fauci was asked if there were any "placebo-based, double-blind, randomized studies of the efficacy of masking that were done between February and April 2020," and he could not identify any. Id. at 322:1-5. In fact, it is obvious that there were none.

837. Dr. Fauci's position on masking, therefore, directly contradicts his insistence on randomized, double-blind, placebo-based clinical trials for alternative COVID-19 treatments like hydroxychloroquine and ivermectin. At best, Dr. Fauci's dramatic change in position on masking was based on observational studies—the same kind of studies that he dismissed, in the very same time frame, as inadequate to support the use of hydroxychloroquine to treat COVID-19. At worst, it was based on no evidence at all—and Dr. Fauci identified none.

838. Dr. Fauci believes it can be dangerous to give ordinary people access to scientific information: "If information is clearly inadequate and statistically not sound, there can be a danger in people who don't have the ability or the experience of being able to understand that it's a flawed study." Id. at 323:5-9.

839. Dr. Fauci believes that it is "disturbing" when "unwitting" people believe what he thinks is misinformation: "I think honest debate is important, but when it goes beyond debate and leads people who are unwitting about these things to do things that are clearly detrimental to their life and their safety, I find that disturbing." Id. at 358:13-17.

G. Dr. Fauci and the White House Cause the Censorship of Alex Berenson.

840. Alex Berenson is a former New York Times science reporter and prominent critic of government messaging about COVID-19 vaccines who was deplatformed from Twitter on

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

August 28, 2021, after months of pressure from White House and federal officials. Fauci Ex. 59, at 4.

841. As Berenson notes: "On July 16, 2021, President Biden complained publicly that social media companies were 'killing people' by encouraging vaccine hesitancy. A few hours after Biden's comment, Twitter suspended by account for the first time." Fauci Ex. 59, at 4.

842. Dr. Fauci, who was then Chief Medical Advisor to President Biden, played a key role in procuring the censorship of Alex Berenson. Shortly before President Biden's comments, Dr. Fauci engaged in public attacks on Alex Berenson in attempt to discredit him and silence his government-skeptical opinions.

843. On July 11, 2021, appearing on CNN's "State of the Union," Dr. Fauci described Alex Berenson's comments on vaccine skepticism as "horrifying." Fauci Ex. 60, at 1. Responding to applause for a speech given by Berenson at a conference, Dr. Fauci stated: "It's horrifying. I mean, they are cheering about someone saying that it's a good thing for people not to try and save their lives." Id. In response to Berenson's views, Dr. Fauci stated, "it's almost frightening to say, … we don't want you to do something to save your life." Id. Dr. Fauci also stated, "I don't think that anybody who is thinking clearly can get that." Id.

844. Dr. Fauci's public comments as the President's Chief Medical Advisor specifically criticizing Alex Berenson were made at a time when other White House officials like Andrew Slavitt were privately pressuring Twitter to deplatform Berenson since April 21, 2020. See, e.g., Fauci Ex, 58, at 7 (internal Twitter communications on April 22, 2020, indicating that White House officials "had one really tough question about why Alex Berenson hasn't been kicked off from the platform," and "yes, they really wanted to know about Alex Berenson. Andy Slavitt suggested they had seen data vis that had showed he was the epicenter of disinfo that radiated outwards to the persuadable public.").

845. Dr. Fauci does not deny that he may have discussed Alex Berenson with other White House or federal officials, but claims he does not recall whether he did so. Fauci Dep. 343:16-23.

846. Dr. Fauci believes that misinformation and disinformation "contribute to the deaths" of people: "misinformation and disinformation, particularly that encourages people to avoid lifesaving interventions, can certainly result in the unnecessary death of people whose lives would have been saved. So when misinformation and disinformation leads people to avoid a lifesaving intervention, that is equivalent to contributing to the death of that person." Id. at 345:8-15. "I do feel strongly that misinformation and disinformation, when it leads to people avoiding lifesaving interventions, can be deadly. Id. at 346:1-3.

847. Dr. Fauci also believes that misinformation and disinformation on social media are "contrary to public health" and "the enemy of public health": "If social media is propagating disinformation that leads to the death of people by encouraging them to avoid lifesaving interventions, I believe that's contrary to public health." Id. at 346:5-7, 346:10-13.

848. Dr. Fauci admits that it is "certainly possible" that he discussed the view that "disinformation or misinformation on social media platforms are killing people" with others in the federal government, but claims he cannot remember whether he did so. Id. at 345:3-25.

849. Dr. Fauci testified that the first time he heard of Alex Berenson was when Berenson publicly claimed that the White House demanded that Twitter deplatform him in 2022: "it's the person who says that the White House demanded Twitter ban me months before the company did so. I had never heard of who Alex Berenson was before this … I don't even know who he is." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

at 335:1-7. In light of Dr. Fauci's public attacks on Alex Berenson in 2021, this testimony is not credible.

850. Former FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb also emailed Twitter to pressure them to remove Alex Berenson's content, invoking Dr. Fauci in his email. Sending Twitter a link to a post by Berenson entitled "The Arrogance of Dr. Fauci," Gottlieb wrote: "This is why Tony needs a security detail," Fauci Ex. 62, at 1—thus implying that Berenson's criticism of Dr. Fauci was endangering Dr. Fauci's life.

851. Dr. Fauci does not deny that he may have discussed this issue with Gottlieb before Gottlieb sent this email to Twitter, but he claims he does not recall whether he did so. Fauci Dep. 349:7-19, 352:12-18.

852. After testifying over 200 times during his deposition that he could not remember or could not recall events related to the case, Dr. Fauci was shown an email chain between him and Dr. Ezekial Emanuel from May 2, 2020 that had no direct connection to issues in the case. Fauci Ex 63. Unlike his convenient lack of memory as to case-related communications, Dr. Fauci was immediately able to provide a detailed, specific account of the context and communications with Dr. Emanuel relating to that email chain. Fauci Dep. 353:20-354:16.

VI. The FBI's Censorship Campaign of Pressure and Deception.

853. In parallel with the censorship of health "misinformation" and related issues achieved by the White House, the CDC, Surgeon General Murthy, Dr. Fauci, and others, see supra Parts I-V, federal national-security and law-enforcement agencies flex their considerable muscle to pressure and induce social-media platforms to censor disfavored speech and viewpoints about elections and other topics. The FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force (FITF) and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency's (CISA) "Mis, Dis, and Malinformation Team" play key roles in this efforts – in cooperation with non-profit agencies working in close collaboration with the government, such as the CISA-funded "Center for Internet Security" and the formidable censorship cartel calling itself the "Election Integrity Partnership" and the "Virality Project."

854. Elvis Chan is the Assistant Special Agent in Charge of the Cyber Branch for the San Francisco Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Chan Dep. 8:11-13.

855. In this role, Chan is "one of the primary people" who communicates with social-media platforms about disinformation on behalf of the FBI. Id. 105:3-4 ("I would say I'm one of the primary people with pass-through information" for platforms). There are many other points of contact between the FBI and social-media platforms, however. Id. 105:3-7 ("[W]e have agents on the different cyber squads and our private sector engagement squad who also relay information to the companies.").

856. Chan graduated from the Naval Postgraduate School in 2021 with an M.A. in Homeland Security Studies. Id. 10:16-17. In connection with his master's degree, Chan authored a publicly available thesis entitled, "Fighting Bears and Trolls: An Analysis of Social Media Companies and U.S. Government Efforts to Combat Russian Influence Campaigns During the 2020 U.S. Elections." Id. 11:3-16; Chan Ex. 1, at 1. This thesis overtly relied only on publicly available documents, but it also reflected Chan's personal knowledge and experience of working with social-media platforms during the 2020 elections. See id.

857. Chan's thesis discussed "hack-and-dump activity," also known as "hack-and-leak" operations, as well as "Russian malign influence … on the social media platforms and on fake news websites that the Russians have created." Chan Dep. 13:7-21.

858. Chan's thesis relied on research performed by persons and entities comprising the Election Integrity Partnership, including Graphika, id. 145:1-6; and Renee DiResta of the Stanford

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Internet Observatory, id. 51:20-52:7, 85:4-12. Chan communicated directly with DiResta "about Russian disinformation," and had "[a] lot of conversations about Russian disinformation" with DiResta. Id. 52:5-7, 52:24-25.

859. Chan also knows Alex Stamos, the head of the Stanford Internet Observatory, from the time when Stamos participated on behalf of Facebook in the USG-Industry meetings. Id. 54:2-19. Chan and Stamos were involved in meetings about "malign-foreign-influence activities" on Facebook while Stamos was the chief security officer for Facebook. Id. Chan has also discussed "protecting platforms from hacking" with Stamos. Id. 55:12-13. And Chan's "colleagues at FBI headquarters regularly meet with researchers much more frequently than I do." Id. 57:15-18.

860. According to Chan, the FBI engages in "information sharing" with social-media platforms about content posted on their platforms, which includes both "strategic-level information" and "tactical information." Id. 16:16-19.

A. FBI's and CISA's Regular "USG-Industry" Disinformation Meetings

861. The FBI participates in a CISA-organized "industry working group" with Facebook, Twitter, and Google/YouTube, as well other social-media platforms. Id. 18:21-24. The social-media platforms that participate are Facebook, Microsoft, Google, Twitter, Yahoo! (a.k.a. Verizon Media), Wikimedia Foundation, and Reddit. Id. 23:24-24:3. On the U.S. Government side, the meetings are attended by representatives of CISA, the Department of Homeland Security's Intelligence & Analysis division ("I&A"), the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI), the FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force (FITF), and Elvis Chan on behalf of FBI-San Francisco when he is available. Id. 24:9-19; see also Chan Ex. 6, at 37. Chan later confirmed that "DOJ National Security Division" attends these "USG-Industry" meetings as well. Chan Dep. 171:6-8.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

862. Chan participates in the meetings because most social-media platforms are headquartered in San Francisco, and "FBI field offices are responsible for maintaining day-to-day relationships with the companies that are headquartered in their area of responsibility." Id. 24:21-25:4. As a result, Chan serves as a frequent conduit for communication between federal officials, especially FBI officials but also others, and social-media platforms. See id.

863. Matt Masterson attended, and Brian Scully attends, the USG-Industry meetings on behalf of CISA. They are "regular attendees" and "one of them is usually emceeing the meeting." Id. 25:15-18. "For the 2020 election cycle, Mr. Masterson was … primarily the facilitator. Ahead of the 2022 midterm elections, Mr. Scully has been the primary facilitator." Id. 26:19-22.

864. Chan also "participate[s] in the preparation meetings" for the USG-Industry meetings. Id. 27:24-25.

865. At these CISA-led "USG-Industry" meetings, "the disinformation content was shared by the social media companies. They would provide a strategic overview of the type of disinformation they were seeing on their respective platforms," and the FBI "provided strategic unclassified overviews of the activities that we saw [Russian actors] doing." Id. 156:9-157:1.

866. The "USG-Industry" meetings "are continuing" at the time of Chan's deposition on November 23, 2022, and Chan assumes that they will continue through the 2024 election cycle. Chan Dep. 284:23-285:6. Online "disinformation" continues to be discussed between the federal agencies and the social-media platforms at these meetings. Chan Dep. 285:7-286:16.

B. The FBI's Regular Bilateral Meetings with Social-Media Platforms.

867. The USG-Industry group meetings are not the only censorship-related meetings between the FBI and social-media platforms. Chan also "hosted … bilateral meetings between each of the companies I mentioned"—i.e., Meta/Facebook, Twitter, Google/YouTube,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Yahoo!/Verizon Media, Microsoft/LinkedIn, Wikimedia Foundation, and Reddit, see id. 23:24-24:3—"and the Foreign Influence Task Force." Id. 39:4-8.

868. During these bilateral meetings, the FBI's FITF would also "bring in field offices that had cyber investigations" of "state-sponsored actors that the FBI was investigating that we believe were capable of hack-and-dump campaigns" during the 2020 election cycle. Id. 39:10-16. In other words, in the bilateral meetings, the FBI repeatedly raised the concern about the possibility of "hack and dump" operations during the 2020 election cycle during FITF's bilateral meetings with each of at least seven major social-media platforms. Id.

869. These bilateral meetings between FBI and social-media platforms are continuing—they occurred during the 2020 election cycle, and they continued during the 2022 election cycle. Id. 39:18-40:1. "They occur at roughly a quarterly cadence," but "the cadence increase[s] as elections get close," so that the meetings "become monthly as the election nears and then weekly very close to the elections." Id. 40:2-20. These meetings will continue quarterly, monthly, and then weekly leading up to the 2024 election as well. Id. 41:5-15. The meetings also occurred "[o]n a quarterly cadence" during the 2018 election cycle. Id. 42:18-24.

870. The companies with which FITF conducts these regular bilateral meetings include "Facebook, Google, Twitter, Yahoo!, Reddit, and LinkedIn," as well as "Apple and Wikimedia Foundation." Id. 41:24-42:7. Apple was "added because they are a cloud infrastructure company; and we believe that tactical information, specifically indicates that we shared with them related to foreign-state-sponsored actors, might pop up on … any screening they do on iCloud." Id. 42:12-17.

871. In these meetings, FBI officials meet with senior social-media platform officials in the "trust and safety or site integrity" role, i.e., those in charge of enforcing terms of service and content-moderation policies for the platforms. Id. 43:5-44:1. In other words, the FBI meets with the officials responsible for censoring speakers and content on the platforms—those "directly involved in the enforcement of terms of service for these various platforms," which "includes … content modulation of content on the platforms." Id. 49:19-50:2.

872. The FBI's "quarterly meetings" with social media platforms to "probe" questions about censorship of disinformation began as early as "in the 2017 time frame." Id. 87:24-88:14, 89:19-20.

873. A large number of FBI officials attend each regular bilateral meeting about disinformation with each of those seven social-media platforms. In addition to Chan and Laura Dehmlow, who is the head of FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force (FITF), "between three to ten" FITF officials attend each meeting, as well as "one field office comprised of two representatives" from each of "one to three field offices." Id. 109:21-22, 110:7-14. Frequently the number of FBI agents attending each meeting "could be as high as a dozen." Id. 110:17-18.

874. Likewise, large numbers of officials from the social-media platforms attend these regular bilateral meetings with the FBI about disinformation. "[A] similar amount" of people attend each meeting from the platforms, and "for the three larger companies – specifically Google/YouTube, Facebook, and Twitter – it would be equal numbers or higher numbers than the FBI." Id. 110:21-25.

875. In addition to all these meetings, on February 4, 2019, there was a meeting between Facebook, Google, Microsoft, and Twitter and the FBI's FITF, ODNI, and CISA to discuss election issues. Elvis Chan attended, as did Director Krebs, Matt Masterson, and possibly Brian Scully of CISA. Representatives of the social-media companies at the meeting included those from the "trust and safety" or content-modulation teams, and "the social media companies were focused on discussing disinformation." Id. 151:9-154:6.

876. Discovery obtained from LinkedIn contains 121 pages of emails between Elvis Chan and other FBI officials and LinkedIn officials setting up numerous meetings to discuss disinformation issues during the 2020 and 2022 election cycles. Chan Ex. 2. Chan confirms that he has a similar set of communications setting up a similar series of meetings with each of "six or seven other social-media platforms as well"—he has "similar types of correspondence" with the others, including Facebook, Twitter, Google/YouTube, etc. Chan. Dep. 288:4-17.

877. These emails confirm that Chan and the other FBI officials regularly met with senior officials at social-media platforms with responsibility for content moderation. See Chan Ex. 2, at 3; Chan Dep. 292:7-293:8. The FBI meets with "director level and … their direct reports" from the "trust and safety and site integrity" teams. Chan Dep. 293:4-8.

878. The FBI communicates with social-media platforms using two alternative, encrypted channels—the self-deleting messaging app Signal, and the encrypted messaging service Teleporter. Chan Dep. 295:7-296:9.

879. For each election cycle, during the days immediately preceding and through election day, the FBI maintains a command center around the clock to receive and forward reports of "disinformation" and "misinformation," and the FBI requests that the platforms have people available to receive and process those reports at all times: "FBI headquarters, they just ran 24 hours a day for their command post, I believe from Friday to Tuesday. FBI San Francisco ran from, I believe, 8:00 o'clock in the morning to perhaps 10:00 o'clock at night every day except the election, when we ran until midnight." Chan Dep. 301:14-20. In advance of the elections, the FBI "ask[ed] the companies when they intended to have personnel on what days monitoring their platform for any threats that they saw." Chan Dep. 301:21-24.

C. The FBI's Deceptive Information Censors the Hunter Biden Laptop Story.

880. Elvis Chan, other FBI officials, and other federal officials repeatedly warned industry participants to be alert for "hack and dump" or "hack and leak" operations prior to the 2020 election, even though they had no investigative basis to issue such warnings. These warnings provided the justification for the platforms to censor the Hunter Biden laptop story that the New York Post broke on October 14, 2020. See id. at 232:1-234:3. These "hack and leak" or "hack and dump" warnings were issued many times, both in the "USG-Industry" meetings and in the FBI's bilateral meetings with social-media platforms.

881. Hack and leak operations were discussed at the USG-Industry meetings. Id. 172:3-5. At the USG-Industry meetings, Elvis Chan and other FBI officials "warned the social media companies about the potential for a 2016-style DNC hack-and-dump operation." Id. 172:23-173:1.

882. During these meetings, Chan "warned the companies about a potential for hack-and-dump operations from the Russians and the Iranians on more than one occasion." Id. 175:10-13. Laura Dehmlow, the head of FITF, also "mentioned the possibility of hack-and-dump operations." Id. 175:17-20.

883. The prospect of hack-and-leak operations was also repeatedly raised "[a]t the FBI-led meetings with FITF and the social-media companies." Id. 177:24-25. It was also raised at the "CISA-hosted USG-industry" meetings. Id. 178:1-6, 180:24-25. "[T]he risk of hack-and-leak operations were raised at both sets of meetings, both at CISA-organized USG-industry meetings and the FITF-organized direct meetings between the FBI and social media platforms." Id. 181:6-11. Chan himself raised the warnings "regularly" at the bilateral FITF-platform meetings. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

185:16-18. Laura Dehmlow raised the warning at the USG-Industry meetings "that the FBI is concerned about the potential for hack-and-leak or hack-and-dump operations from foreign state-sponsored actors." Id. 187:1-4. And Chan himself "recollect[s] mentioning the potential for hack-and-dump operations during the CISA-hosted USG-industry meetings." Id. 189:4-7. Chan confirms that he raised these concerns "to the social media platforms on multiple occasions in two sets of meetings in 2020," including "the USG-industry meetings organized by CISA" and "the FITF organized meetings with the individual social media platforms." Id. 204:2-12.

884. In the same time frame in 2020, as federal officials were repeatedly raising these concerns about hack-and-leak operations, some social media platforms updated their policies to provide that posting hacked materials would violate their policies and could result in censorship: "some social media companies adjusted or updated their terms of service or their community standards to say that they would not post any hacked materials." Id. 205:6-9. According to Chan, the "impetus" for these more restrictive censorship policies was the repeated concern raised by Chan, the FBI, and federal national-security officials about the risk of "a 2016-style hack-and-leak operation: "the impetus was in case there was a 2016-style hack-and-leak operation." Id. 205:14-21. The FBI's repeated warnings, therefore, induced social-media platforms to adopt more restrictive censorship policies on hacked materials, see id., which would then be used to censor the Hunter Biden laptop story.

885. Chan denies that the FBI urged the platforms to change their terms of service to address hacked materials, but he admits that the FBI repeatedly inquired of the social-media platforms whether their policies would allow for or require the censorship of hacked materials. The FBI "wanted to know if they had changed their terms of service or modified it, and we wanted to know what they had changed," and thus the platforms "advise[d]" the FBI that "they had changed" their policies "to reflect the ability to pull down content that results from hack operations." Id. 206:5-13.

886. Again, Chan testified that, in meeting with platforms like Facebook, the FBI "asked, 'If you receive a whole -- if you see a trove of potentially hacked materials, what are you going to do about it?' Which would be our way of asking them how their terms of service would handle a situation like that." Chan Dep. 247:25-248:4. The FBI "ask[ed] how they would handle it if potentially hacked materials appeared." Chan Dep. 248:5-8. Chan believes they asked that question of Twitter, Facebook, and YouTube, and the social-media platforms responded, as he "remember[s] the social media companies having terms-of-service policies to handle this sort of situation." Chan Dep. 248:14-16. Both Facebook and Twitter, for example, "said that they would remove hacked materials if they were able to validate that it was hacked." Chan Dep. 252:24-253:4. These conversations happened "ahead of the 2020 elections." Chan Dep. 253:6-7.

887. The FBI asked the platforms how their policies would handle a hack-and-leak operation at the same time as repeatedly warning them about such operations—thus effectively inducing them to adopt such policies. Chan Dep. 248:23-249:2.

888. The FBI inquired about the platforms' hacked-materials policies because "internally we wanted to know what actions that we would need to take, whether we would need to take a legal remedy such as like a seizure warrant" to remove supposedly hacked materials. Chan Dep. 249:17-20.

889. Chan was not the only FBI official to ask the platforms about their censorship policies for hacked materials. Instead, this question was posed repeatedly by multiple FBI officials: "I would say we take turns asking. When I say 'we,' I mean either myself or the members of the Foreign Influence Task Force …. Wherever it seemed like an organic follow-up question, we would ask 'How would your terms of service apply to this situation or that situation?'" Chan Dep. 250:14-20.

890. When asked, "did anyone within the FBI discuss or suggest with you that you should raise the prospect of Russian hack-and-leak operations with social media platforms in 2020?" Chan repeatedly responded with a stock answer, "I do not recollect." Id. 189:14-23; 189:8-191:21, 203:13-15 ("I cannot recollect." … "I do not recollect." … "I do not recollect." … "I don't recollect." … "I don't recollect." … "I do not recollect.").

891. These responses are not credible because they are stock responses, and it is facially implausible that Chan does not recall whether other federal officials discussed warning platforms about "hack-and-leak" operations during 2020, especially after the fiasco of censorship of the Hunter Biden laptop story. These "I do not recollect" responses also contradict Chan's testimony later in the deposition that he "regularly" communicated with FITF and FBI's cyber division about the possibility of a hack-and-leak operation: "I believe that we internally discussed the potential for hack-and-leak operations, and so I regularly was in communication with the cyber division of the FBI as well as with the Foreign Influence Task Force to see if they had heard of anything that I had not heard of. So I would say that the people that I communicate with, everyone was vigilant, but no one -- I believe that in general people at the FBI were concerned about the potential for hack-and-leak operations, but that we had not seen any investigations that led in that direction or that would lead us in that direction." Id. 206:23-207:10. He specifically admitted that he recalls discussing hack-and-leak operations with FITF officials "Ms. Dehmlow, Mr. Olson, Mr. Cone, and Mr. Giannini." Id. 207:19-23. It is not credible that the only aspect of his internal discussions with the FBI about hack-and-leak operations that he does not recall is whether someone from the FBI suggested or directed him to raise the issue with social-media platforms.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

892. Further, as revealed on the video of Chan's deposition, his demeanor in answering questions on this point changes and becomes evasive. Chan's demeanor when testifying on this point undermines his credibility.

893. The FBI and other federal officials had no specific investigative basis for these repeated warnings about possible "hack-and-dump" operations. As Chan admits, "[t]hrough our investigations, we did not see any similar competing intrusions to what had happened in 2016. So although from our standpoint we had not seen anything, we specifically, in an abundance of caution, warned the companies in case they saw something that we did not." Id. 174:7-13. As Chan admits, "we were not aware of any hack-and-leak operations that were forthcoming or impending" when he and other federal officials warned about the "risk of hack-and-leak operations, especially before the general election." Id. 192:19-24.

894. Matt Masterson and Brian Scully of CISA also raised the concern about the threat of hack-and-leak operations in the 2020 election cycle to the social-media platforms during the "USG-Industry" meetings that occurred quarterly, then monthly, then weekly leading up to the 2020 election. Id. 212:3-22.

895. Yoel Roth, then-Head of Site Integrity at Twitter, provided a formal declaration to the Federal Election Commission containing a contemporaneous account of the discussion of the threat of "hack-and-leak operations" at the meetings between the FBI, other federal law-enforcement and national-security agencies, and the social-media platforms. His declaration states: "Since 2018, I have had regular meetings with the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, the Department of Homeland Security, the FBI, and industry peers regarding election security. During these weekly meetings, the federal law enforcement agencies communicated that they expected 'hack-and-leak operations' by state actors [i.e., Russians or other foreign governments] might occur in the period shortly before the 2020 presidential election, likely in October. I was told in these meetings that the intelligence community expected that individuals associated with political campaigns would be subject to hacking attacks and that material obtained through those hacking attacks would likely be disseminated over social media platforms, including Twitter. These expectations of hack-and-leak operations were discussed throughout 2020. I also learned in these meetings that there were rumors that a hack-and-leak operation would involve Hunter Biden." Chan. Ex. 8, ¶¶ 10-11, at 2-3 (emphasis added). Yoel Roth executed this declaration on December 17, 2020, shortly after the events described, and submitted it to the Federal Election Commission in a formal enforcement proceeding, so it has the force of a statement under oath. Id. at 4.

896. Chan's account of these meetings largely matches Roth's account, see, e.g., Chan Dep. 218:5-220:15, but there are two key discrepancies between Roth's and Chan's accounts. First, Roth recounts that the FBI and national-security officials communicated to Twitter that they "expected" that there would be one or more hack-and-leak operations by Russia or other "state actors." Id. at 2. Chan testified that he believed they used words like "concern" instead of "expected." Chan. Dep. 220:20-24, 224:5-17, 226:5-12, 227:3-6. Second, Roth specifically recalls that federal officials told him that "there were rumors that a hack-and-leak operation would involve Hunter Biden." Chan Ex. 8, ¶ 11, at 3. Chan testified that "in my recollection, Hunter Biden was not referred to in any of the CISA USG-Industry meetings." Chan Dep. 213:8-10; see also id. 227:24-228:1, 228:21-23, 229:9-11 229:15-20.

897. On these points, Roth's declaration is more credible than Chan's testimony, for at least four reasons. First, Roth's declaration was executed much closer in time to the events described—just two months later—while Chan's testimony occurred over two years later. Indeed, as noted above, Chan himself admitted that he "could not recollect" key details about the federal officials' course of conduct in warning social-media platforms about a supposed "hack and dump" operation, so there is no reason to think that Chan's recollection is more reliable on these similarly specific details.

898. Second, Roth had no incentive to color or shade his account of communications from federal officials when he submitted this Declaration to the FEC, while Chan has strong incentives to shade his testimony on these points to deemphasize the FBI's involvement in censoring the Hunter Biden laptop story. Indeed, if the FBI and other federal officials warned social-media platforms about a hack-and-leak operation involving Hunter Biden—when the FBI had received Hunter Biden's laptop from the Delaware repair-shop owner and thus knew that it was not hacked, see Doc. 106-3, at 5-11 —that raises a compelling inference that the FBI deliberately gave misleading information to social-media platforms to induce them to wrongfully censor the Hunter Biden laptop story.

899. Third, Chan's testimony on a closely related point—whether Chan was instructed by an FBI official to warn social-media platforms about "hack and leak" operations—is not credible. Chan's minor disagreements with Roth's account are not credible for similar reasons. For example, Chan claims to have extremely specific recollection of the FBI's word-choice in meetings that occurred over two years earlier—disputing that the FBI used the word "expected," id. 220:20-24, 223:12-22, 224:5-17, 226:5-12, 227:3-6, and affirmatively asserting with confidence that "Hunter Biden" was never mentioned, id. 213:8-10, 227:24-228:1, 228:21-23, 229:9-11 229:15-20—while at the same time claiming that he could not recollect whether he discussed the same issues with the FBI internally at all, Id. 189:14-23; 189:8-191:21, 203:13-15.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

900. Fourth, Chan's demeanor while testifying by videotape on this point is evasive and undermines his credibility.

901. Two additional points support the credibility of Roth's account over Chan's. First, Brian Scully's testimony, unlike Chan's, did not dispute or quibble with any aspect of Roth's near-contemporaneous account of these conversations—Scully merely contended that he could not remember. Scully Dep. 247:18-248:2.

902. Second, Roth's account directly matches the less detailed but even more contemporaneous account provided by Mark Zuckerberg in his testimony before Congress on October 28, 2020. Zuckerberg's testimony confirms that, as Yoel Roth recounted, the FBI conveyed a strong risk or expectation of a foreign hack-and-leak operation shortly before the 2020 election: "So you had both the public testimony from the FBI and in private meetings alerts that were given to at least our company … that suggested that we be on high alert and sensitivity that if a trove of documents appeared that we should view that with suspicion, that it might be part of a foreign manipulation attempt." Chan Ex. 9, at 56 (emphasis added). Indeed, Chan did not dispute Zuckerberg's account: "I don't remember the exact framing of our discussions with them [i.e., Facebook]." Chan Dep. 247:14-15. And again, Chan did not dispute the fundamental details of Zuckerberg's account; he admitted that he "hosted several private meetings with Facebook where the concern about a hack-and-leak operation was raised" in 2020. Chan Dep. 246:17-20. Though Chan did state that "I would not have framed it like Mr. Zuckerberg did," Chan essentially concedes the accuracy of Zuckerberg's account. Chan Dep. 255:14-15.

903. After the Hunter Biden story broke on October 14, 2020, Laura Dehmlow of the FBI refused to comment on the status of the Hunter Biden laptop in response to a direct inquiry from Facebook, even though the FBI had the laptop in its possession since late 2019 and knew that its contents were not hacked. Chan Dep. 213:11-215:5.

904. When the Hunter Biden laptop story broke on October 14, 2020, it was widely censored on social media, including by Twitter and Facebook, pursuant to their hacked-materials policies. For example, Twitter's Site Integrity Team "blocked Twitter users from sharing links over Twitter to the applicable New York Post articles and prevented users who had previously sent Tweets sharing those articles from sending new Tweets until they deleted the Tweets" sharing the Hunter Biden laptop story. Chan Ex. 8, at 3. "Facebook, according to its policy communications manager began 'reducing its distribution on the platform,' pending … a third-party fact check. Twitter went beyond that, blocking all users, including the House Judiciary Committee, from sharing the article on feeds and through direct messages. Twitter even locked the New York Post account entirely, claiming the story included hacked materials and was potentially harmful." Chan Ex. 9, at 2.

D. The FBI Routinely Flags Speakers and Content for Censorship.

905. According to Chan, during the 2020 election cycle, "the U.S. government and social media companies effectively impeded [foreign] influence campaigns primarily through information sharing and account takedowns, respectively." Chan Ex. 1, at i (emphasis added).

906. According to Chan, the FBI's "information sharing" includes both "strategic information," which "discusses the tools, tactics or processes" used by foreign-influence campaigns, and "tactical information," which means identifying specific "indicators or selectors," which are both "a term of art" that refers to "IP addresses, email accounts, social media accounts, … website domain names, and … file hash values." Chan Dep. 29:15-30:7.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

907. In other words, according to Chan, the FBI "shares information" with social-media platforms that includes information about specific IP addresses, email accounts, social-media accounts, and website domain names that the FBI believes should be censored, and this sharing of information leads social-media platforms to engage in "account takedowns" based on the FBI's information. See id. According to Chan, this combination of "information sharing" and "account takedowns" "effectively impeded [foreign] influence campaigns" during the 2020 election cycle. Chan Ex. 1, at i.

908. Chan testified that the FBI shares this information with social-media platforms so that they can "protect their platforms"—indeed, "protect their platforms" was a stock phrase in Chan's testimony. Chan Dep. 32:19, 34:7-12, 35:8-10, 36:25, 87:22-23, 274:14. As Chan's testimony makes clear, however, the phrase "protecting their platforms" is a euphemism for "censoring speech that federal officials disfavor." For example, Chan admits that "protect their platforms" means "knocking down accounts or knocking down misinformation content." Chan Dep. 273:12-17. Chan's thesis and testimony make clear that the FBI's purpose in "information sharing" with social-media platforms is to induce them to censor speech that the FBI dislikes and wants to see censored. For example, Chan testified that "my purpose is to share the information with them so they can protect their platforms as they deem appropriate," but he immediately admitted that "one way to protect their platforms is to take down these accounts." Id. 35:9-14. Thus, Chan admits that the FBI's "purpose" in "information-sharing" includes "to take down these accounts" that the FBI believes are Russian-influenced. Id.

909. Chan admits that the purpose and predictable effect of "tactical" information-sharing—i.e., the FBI flagging specific accounts, websites, URLs, IP addresses, web domain names, etc., to social-media platforms for censorship—is that the platforms will take action against such specific content and accounts under their content-moderation policies: "from what I have observed and what they have told me when we have provided them with high confidence of Russian selectors, that they have been able to discover fake Russian accounts and take them down." Id. 32:20-24.

910. According to Chan, the social-media platforms "take the information that we share, they validate it through their own means. And then if they determine that these are accounts being operated by Russian state-sponsored actors, then they have taken them down." Id. 33: 12-17.

911. Chan admits that, during the 2020 election cycle, the U.S. Government engaged in "information sharing with the social media companies to expose Russia's different operations and shut down its accounts." Chan Ex. 1, at xvii. In other words, Chan admits that the purpose of federal officials' "information sharing" was to "shut down … accounts" on social media that the Government disfavored. Id.; see also Chan Dep. 37:17-38:2.

912. In addition to social-media platforms, Chan and the FBI also "share indicators" with state and local government election officials, such as "county registrars or county clerk's offices"—who are also state actors subject to the First Amendment. Chan "would share indicators with them," and "share the same type of information that I shared with social media companies," including "IP addresses and domain names, so that they could see if they were popping up anywhere on their networks." Id. 50:11-51:6. In other words, the FBI feeds information to state and local election officials so that they can make their own reports of supposed "misinformation" and "disinformation" to social-media platforms, creating a First Amendment feedback loop. The FBI seeds concerns with the state and local election officials, who then identify supposed "disinformation" and "misinformation" based on the FBI's information, and then report it to the social-media platforms through CISA and the FBI.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

913. Chan contends that Russian "state-sponsored actors … have created fake social media accounts," which "have either generated disinformation themselves or they have amplified existing content from current users of social media platforms." Id. 60:1-7.

914. These supposedly Russian-controlled accounts "make their own content," such as "mak[ing] their own Facebook postings," and they "try to find what are the hot-button or current issues in the news … and then they will try to either generate content themselves related to that or they will amplify existing content." Id. 60:13-22. This is supposedly done with the goal to "sow discord in the American online environment." Id. 61:12-13.

915. Chan agrees that "the goal there is … they post messages that they anticipate will be divisive and try and get Americans to engage with them." Id. 61:14-18.

916. As Chan agrees, "engagement" with a social-media posting includes viewing the content, liking or disliking it, reposting it, commenting on it, and/or reposting it with commentary. Id. 61:19-63:13. All of these are First Amendment-protected activities. In this way, according to Chan, "the Russians are trying to get people to engage on their divisive content." Id. 63:19-64:1.

917. According to Chan, over 126 million Americans "engaged" with Russian-originated content on Facebook, and 1.4 million Americans engaged with such content on Twitter, during the 2016 election cycle. Id. 66:2-25. All of this was First Amendment-protected activity. Chan credits federal government efforts during the 2020 election cycle with preventing the vast majority of such "engagement" by American citizens with Russian-originate content on social media during the 2020 election cycle. Chan Ex. 1, at v ("This thesis finds that the Russians shifted their tactics from 2016 to 2020. Still, the U.S. government and social media companies effectively impeded their influence campaigns primarily through information sharing and account takedowns, respectively."). Thus, the federal officials' "information sharing" activities prevented an enormous amount of First Amendment-protected activity from occurring.

918. Chan's thesis and testimony provide clear examples of how supposedly Russian-originated "disinformation" on social media becomes intertwined with, and inseparable from, First Amendment-protected forms of expression by American citizens. Chan identifies a supposedly Russian-originated political ad on Facebook that features a picture of Hillary Clinton with a black X painted over her face, advertising an event called "Down with Hillary!" and stating, "Hillary Clinton is the co-author of Obama's anti-police and anti-Constitutional propaganda." Chan Ex. 1, at 29. None of this is "disinformation" in any meaningful sense—it is actually expression of political opinions. The posting notes that it received 763 reactions and 78 comments on Facebook, which Chan agrees are "engagements by users." See id.; see also Chan Dep. 67:1-68:20. Chan contends that the underlying ad was "Russian-originated content masquerading as something posted by an American," id. 67:6-10—i.e., just the sort of content that the FBI would flag for censorship to social-media platforms through "tactical information-sharing." But once the FBI induces Facebook to pull down the ad from the platform, the First Amendment-protected "engagements" by Americans—likes, dislikes, re-posts, comments, etc.—are all obliterated as well. This is the collateral damage to Americans' freedom of speech in the FBI's war on so-called Russian "disinformation."

919. Chan's thesis provides similar examples of supposedly Russian-originated content with heavy engagement by Americans. For example, it reproduces two supposedly Russian-originated political ads containing a secure-borders message ("Secured Borders: Every man should stand for our borders! Join!") and a pro-Second Amendment message ("Defend the 2nd: The community of 2nd Amendment supporters, gun-lovers & patriots"). Chan Ex. 1, at 32. Again, these are expressions of political opinion, not "disinformation" in any meaningful sense. The former posting garnered 134,943 "likes," and the latter posting garnered 96,678 "likes"—each of which is a First Amendment-protected expression of support for the underlying, supposedly Russian-originated, political message. See id. Another similar ad, targeting black voters, simply stated "Black Matters: Join us because we care. Black matters!" and it drew 223,799 "likes" from ordinary users. Id. at 32; Chan Dep. 80:12-20. Chan admits that these are "high" levels of "engagement" from ordinary users. Chan Dep. 83:21.

920. Chan also reports that "IRA employees used social media bots, i.e., computer programs which control social media accounts, to amplify existing content." Chan Ex. 1, at 30. To "amplify existing content" means to do "things like liking it or reposting it." Chan Dep. 71:20-24.

921. Based on research, Chan estimates that "over 100,000 real people had their postings amplified by [Russian]-controlled social media bots." Id. 87:2-6.

922. In addition, the "indicators" that the FBI targeted for censorship included supposedly Russian-aligned websites that hosted First Amendment-protected content posted by Americans. For example, Chan identified a supposedly Russia-generated website called "PeaceData," which "hire[d] unwitting freelance journalists, including Americans, to write articles for the site." Id. 141:24-142:3. "[A]t least 20 freelance journalists, which includes Americans, had been duped into writing articles for the site." Id. 142:4-9. The FBI identified this site as Russia-generated to the social-media platforms, and as a result, the platforms "identified accounts that were foreign-associated … that were directing users to those platforms" and "t[ook] actions against those accounts." Id. 143:10-20. The speech of the American freelance journalists was thus suppressed due to FBI inducement.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

923. Similarly, Chan identified a website called "NAEBC" as a Russia-generated website. According to Chan, the Russians "used various social media accounts to engage with real users and convince them to post on the NAEBC site, which met with some success." Id. 144:13-145:2. Thus, "the NAEBC site also included content drafted and written by real users that had posted on that site." Id. 145:3-6. "The FBI flagged the NAEBC site to social-media platforms as a … Russian-originated source." Id. 146:12-15. On that basis, "the companies were able to discover Russian-controlled accounts that were used to try to redirect users to those websites," and the platforms "said they had taken down those accounts." Id. 146:16-147:7. The FBI thus induced the platforms to censor the speech of "real users" on a supposedly fake Russian website.

924. Chan admits that "Russia's influence operations" are deeply intertwined with First-Amendment-protected speech by ordinary social-media users, as he describes: "Many factors are at play when trying to measure the effects of Russia's influence operations. First-order effects include real users interacting with inauthentic content, Russian-bot amplification of divisive organic content, and IRA-controlled accounts communicating directly with real users." Chan Ex. 1, at 94.

925. During the days surrounding the 2020 election, the FBI's command post also routed reports of domestic "disinformation" to social-media platforms for censorship to social-media. "During FBI San Francisco's 2020 election command post, which I believe was held from the Friday before the election through election night, that Tuesday at midnight, information would be provided by other field offices and FBI headquarters about disinformation …. These were passed to FBI San Francisco's command post, which I mentioned to you before I was the daytime shift commander, and we would relay this information to the social media platforms where these accounts were detected." Chan Dep. 162:12-24.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

926. The FBI made no attempt to distinguish whether these reports of "election disinformation" "whether they were American or foreign." Id. 163:1-3. "[M]any field offices" of the FBI "relayed this information to us." Id. 163:7-11.

927. "[T]hose reports would come to FBI San Francisco … and then FBI San Francisco would relay them to the various social media platforms where the problematic posts had been made," in order "to alert the social media companies to see if they violated their terms of service…. which may include taking down accounts." Id. 165:3-17.

928. The FBI has about a "50 percent success rate" in getting reported disinformation taken down or censored by the platforms, i.e., "that some action had been taken because it was a terms-of-service violation." Id. 167:7-14.

E. The FBI Demands Information on Censorship from the Platforms.

929. Regarding the algorithms that platforms use to detect inauthentic activity and to censor content, the FBI has "probed them to ask for details" about those algorithms, "so that we could make sure we were sharing the most effective and actionable type of information with them," id. 88:5-7, 20-22—in other words, to maximize the chances that disfavored speech would be censored as a result of the FBI's "information sharing."

930. The FBI "would … ask them what their terms of service or community standards were." Id. 90:21-23. But Chan contends that "we never told the companies to modify their terms of service or community standards." Id. 92:5-7.

F. The FBI Flags Accounts and URLs for Censorship on a Monthly Basis

931. The FBI gives "tactical information" to social-media platforms, where "tactical information includes identifying specific social media accounts and URLs" to be evaluated for censorship. Id. 96:24-97:2. Chan estimates that this occurs "one to five times per month." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

97:17-18. This includes such "tactical" information-sharing at most quarterly meetings. Id. 98:18-19.

932. To flag such specific accounts, URLs, and content to the platforms, Chan "would typically … send an email to the recipients at the companies" notifying them that he would be using "a secure file transfer application within the FBI that is called Teleporter," and "the Teleporter email contains a link for them to securely download the files from the FBI." Id. 98:20-11. The Teleporter files contain "different types of indicators," i.e., specific social-media accounts, web sites, URLs, email accounts, etc. that the FBI wants the platforms to evaluate under their content-moderation policies. Id. 99:15.

933. Each such communication may contain any number of such "indicators," ranging "from one account or one selector to many, like a whole spreadsheet full of them." Id. 100:16-17.

934. Chan "estimate[s] that during 2020 [he] shared information with the companies between one to five or one to six times per month." Id. 100:21-24. Each such incident of information-sharing included flagging a number of specific "indicators" that ranged anywhere from one to "hundreds" of specific accounts, web sites, URLs, etc... Id. 101:4-7.

935. During the 2022 election cycle, Chan shared such information with the platforms "one to four times per month." Id. 101:13-14. Each such incident involved flagging a number of specific "indicators" that ranged anywhere from one to "in the tens, in the dozens" of specific accounts, web sites, URLs, etc. Id. 101:17-19.

936. "[I]n general" these flagging communications would go to all seven social-media platforms identified above, but sometimes there would be "company-specific information" that would go to a particular company. Id. 102:3-9. "[M]ost of the time we would share with that list of [seven] companies." Id. 102:14-15.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

937. When it made such communications, the FBI would request that the platforms report back to the FBI their specific actions taken toward the accounts that the FBI specifically flagged for possible censorship. Id. 102:18-25. "[A]t every quarterly meeting we try to follow up to ask if information we shared has been relevant if we have not received a response yet." Id. 103:5-9. Sometimes, but not always, the platforms report back to the FBI on what accounts they have removed based on the FBI's information, in which case the FBI documents the report to "help[] us fine-tune the information we're sharing." Id. 103:14-22.

938. Including Chan, at least eight FBI agents in the San Francisco field office are involved in reporting disinformation to social-media platforms—Chan himself, two GS-14 supervisors who report to Chan, and roughly five FBI field agents in two different squads within the office. Id. 105:19-108:18. All these agents share both "strategic" and "tactical" information with social-media platforms about supposed malign-foreign-influence content on platforms, and they are "involved in following up to find out if their tactical information was acted on." Id. 108:8-10.

939. In addition, a significant number of FBI officials from FBI's Foreign Influence Task Force (FITF) also participate in regular meetings with social-media platforms about supposed disinformation. Id. 108:19-110:14. These include "three to ten" FITF officials at bilateral meetings with social-media platforms. Id. 110:7-8.

940. The FBI uses both its criminal-investigation authority and its national-security authority to gather information about supposed malign-foreign-influence activities and content on social-media platforms. This specifically includes using "the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act … the PATRIOT Act, [and] Executive Order 12333 that allows us to gather national security intelligence" to investigate content on social media. Id. 111:13-112:8.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

941. In one case in 2020, for example, a single "Teleporter message was sent" to platform(s) "with a spreadsheet with hundreds of accounts," all of which the FBI was flagging for the platforms as supposed malign-foreign-influence accounts. Id. 112:9-14.

942. Chan expressed a high degree of confidence that the FBI's identification of "tactical information" (i.e., specific accounts, URLs, sites, etc.) to social-media platforms was always accurate, and that the FBI never misidentified accounts, content, web sites etc. as operated by malign foreign actors when in fact they were operated by American citizens. He testified that "we only share information that we have a high confidence that is attributed to a foreign-state actor," and that "[i]n my experience, it has always been correct." Id. 112:15-113:16.

943. But there are substantial reasons to think that Chan is wrong. For example, Chan reports that the FBI induced Twitter to remove accounts and Tweets related to the #ReleaseTheMemo hashtag in 2019, which supported Congressman Devin Nunes' investigation regarding Russia collusion. Id. 149:13-21; Chan Ex. 1, at 71 (noting that 929,000 Tweets removed by Twitter as supposedly Russian disinformation included thousands of Tweets amplifying the #ReleaseTheMemo hashtag). In fact, recent reporting indicates that Twitter was aware that the accounts pushing #ReleaseTheMemo were not Russian-controlled inauthentic accounts, but core political speech by ordinary American citizens that the FBI conspired to suppress.

944. The FBI's flagging accounts for censorship often leads to the censorship of additional accounts. According to Chan, the FBI "may share, for example, one account with them, but then they may find ten connected accounts and take all of them down." Id. 113:23-114:1.

G. Pressure from Congress Induces Platforms to Increase Censorship.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

945. According to Chan, the social-media platforms were far more aggressive in taking down disfavored accounts and content in the 2018 and 2020 election cycles than they were in the 2016 cycle. Id. 115:18-116:6.

946. Based on his personal observation, experience, and research, Chan concludes that "pressure from Congress, specifically HPSCI and SSCI," induced the social-media platforms to adopt more aggressive censorship policies in 2018 and 2020. Id. 116:1-3. "HPSCI" stands for the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, and "SSCI" stands for the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. Id. 116:11-14.

947. This "pressure from Congress" took multiple forms. First, those Congressional committees called "the CEOs for the companies … to testify in front of their committees," including "Mark Zuckerberg and Jack Dorsey and Sundar Pichai." Id. 116:20-117:2. These CEOs were called to testify about disinformation on their platforms "more than once." Id. 117:5-6. Chan believes that "that kind of scrutiny and public pressure from Congress … motivated them to be more aggressive in the account takedowns." Id. 117:7-14. Chan believes this based on conversations with social-media platform employees. Id. 117:15-118:2.

948. Chan identifies specific congressional hearings that placed such pressure on social-media platforms to adopt more restrictive censorship policies: "On April 10–11, 2018, the Senate Commerce Committee and Senate Judiciary Committee held hearings on consecutive days with Mark Zuckerberg to discuss Russia's influence campaigns on Facebook and its countermeasures to combat them…. The Senate committees also used this as an opportunity to hold Facebook accountable for its actions and exert pressure for positive change." Chan Ex. 1, at 50 (emphasis added). "On July 17, 2018, the House Judiciary Committee held a hearing with senior executives from Facebook, Google, and Twitter so they could provide updates on their companies' efforts for content filtering to stop foreign influence campaigns on their platforms." Id. On September 5, 2018, the Senate Intelligence Committee held a hearing with senior executives from Facebook and Twitter to discuss their companies' efforts to stop foreign influence campaigns and illegal transactions on their platforms." Id.

949. Chan links these Congressional hearings to "constructive change," i.e., more aggressive censorship policies by the platforms: "On October 31, 2017, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing with senior executives from Facebook, Google, and Twitter to discuss the extent of the Russian disinformation campaigns on their respective platforms." Chan Ex. 1, at 48. "This public hearing … provided politicians with the occasion to exert pressure on the companies to make constructive changes to their platforms." Id. at 48-49. According to Chan, this "constructive change" means the adoption of more restrictive censorship policies. Chan Dep. 133:9-23.

950. In addition, Congress put pressure on the platforms to adopt and enforce more aggressive censorship policies and practices by sending high-level congressional staff from HPSCI and SSCI to meet with the social-media platforms directly and threaten them with adverse legislation. According to Chan, "staffers from both of those committees have visited with … those [social-media] companies," and after these meetings with congressional staffers, employees of the social-media platforms "would indicate that they had to prepare very thoroughly for these types of meetings … and they indicated that it felt like a lot of pressure." Id. 117:19-119:2.

951. The Congressional staffers had such meetings with "Facebook, Google, and Twitter." Employees from those three companies "experienced these visits from congressional staffers as exercising a lot of pressure on them." Id. 118:12-16.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

952. In those meetings, the Congressional staffers discussed potential legislation with the social-media platforms, and before or after they met with those three companies, the Congressional staffers "discussed with [Chan] … legislation that they were thinking about doing." Id. 118:17-120:3.

953. It is Chan's opinion that the social-media platforms' "changes in takedown policies" to make them more restrictive "resulted from that kind of pressure from Congress." Id. 118:17-20.

954. Chan's opinion is the result of discussing these meetings with participants on both sides—both the Congressional staffers and employees of Facebook, Twitter, and Google. Chan "and FBI San Francisco personnel would meet with the congressional staffers, typically before they met or after they met with the social media companies," because "they wanted an FBI opinion about what they had heard from the social media companies." Id. 119:23-120:3.

955. To the best of Chan's recollection, these meetings between Congressional staffers and social-media platforms were an "annual occurrence" that began in 2017 and recurred annually after 2017. Id. 120:7-8. "The staffers had separate meetings with each of the companies." Id. 121:4-5. "[A]fter those meetings, the staffers would come to [Chan] and ask [his] opinion of potential legislation." Id. 121:6-9.

956. Chan also discussed these meetings with the social-media platform employees who participated, as he "talk[s] with the social media platform personnel regularly," and he understood from them that "the congressional staffers put a lot of pressure on them" in the meetings. Id. 122:18-25. He spoke directly to the personnel who participated in the meetings. Id. 123:21-24. Senior officials from the social-media platforms, including Yoel Roth of Twitter, Steven Siegel of

Facebook, and Richard Salgado of Google, participated in the meetings with Congressional staffers. Id. 123:25-125:7.

957. The Congressional staffers involved in the meetings were "senior-level staffers," including "a director-level" staffer, "the committee counsel or a senior counsel for the committee," and "one or two other … line-level staffers." Id. 123:6-13.

958. According to Chan, "intense pressure from U.S. lawmakers and the media … eventually force[d] the social media companies to examine what had taken place on their platforms [in 2016] and strive to ensure that it did not happen in the future." Id. 127:3-23; Chan Ex. 1, at 42.

959. These steps included actions by the social-media platforms to take more aggressive enforcement against violations of their terms of service, but also policy changes to the terms of service themselves to make their policies more restrictive: "the policy changes specifically to their terms of service or community standards." Chan Dep. 129:17-19. These involved "more robust or more aggressive content-modulation policies," that "clarify that certain things actually violate their policies and can be taken down." Id. 130:4-18.

960. Chan notes that "Facebook and Twitter faced more Congressional scrutiny … as their senior executives testified before Congress on three separate occasions before the midterm elections," Chan Ex. 1, at 46, and he concludes that "political pressure from Congress was a contributing factor" leading social-media platforms to adopt more restrictive content-moderation policies. Chan Dep. 132:7-9. Chan believes that these more restrictive censorship policies that include "account takedowns" are "constructive change," id. 133:2-23.

961. These policy changes, induced by "political pressure from Congress," resulted in a dramatic increase in censorship on social-media platforms, including for example that "zero [Twitter] accounts were taken down during the 2016 cycle but 3,613 Twitter accounts were taken down during the 2018 cycle." Id. 133:24-134:5. Likewise, 825 accounts were removed from Facebook and Instagram based on publicly available reports, but according to Chan, the actual number was much higher. Id. 147:8-148:18. In 2019, Twitter announced the takedown of "422 accounts which made 929,000 tweets." Id. 149:9-12. "[S]ome subset of that amount was due to information [the FBI] provided." Id. 150:12-14.

962. When meeting with social-media platforms, Chan "typically meet[s] with the trust and safety individuals and then their associated attorneys." Id. 135:16-18.

963. Samaruddin K. Stewart ("Sam") of the State Department's Global Engagement Center "would meet with social media companies … primarily with policy individuals." Id. 135:2-15.

964. Sam Stewart would offer "different types of software made by vendors that they would pilot to see if they could detect malign foreign influence on social media platforms." Id. 135:25-136:3. Chan believed that the Global Engagement Center's products "might accidently pick up U.S. people information." Id. 138:10-12.

965. Elvis Chan knows and has worked with Peter Strzok and Lisa Page. Id. 234:19-240:5. He also knows and has worked with James Baker, the former general counsel of the FBI who went on to become deputy general counsel of Twitter and encouraged Twitter to keep censoring the Hunter Biden laptop story. Id. 239:13-16.

H. The FBI's Censorship Activities Are Ongoing.

966. Chan urges the public to report supposed misinformation on social media directly to the platforms, or else report it to the FBI or DOJ so that they can report it to the platforms, and boasts that the platforms are "very aggressive" in taking down misinformation. As he stated in a public podcast just before the 2020 election: "If you're also seeing something related to the election on your social media platform, all of them have portals where you can report that sort of information. They're being very aggressive in trying to take down any disinformation or misinformation, and then, lastly, if they see anything on election day or before election day, you can always report it to FBI.gov or justice.gov … We take all of these very seriously." Chan Ex. 13, at 3, 9:9-19. FBI San Francisco, when it receives such reports, "would then relay those to social media platforms," so that "the social media platforms will assess those in connection with their terms of service." Chan Dep. 267:13-23. Chan characterizes the platforms as "very aggressive" in taking down disinformation because they "[adjusted] their policies to be able to handle foreign-malign-influence operations." Id. 270:23-25.

967. The FBI continues the same efforts in 2022 and later election cycles that it pursued in 2020. As Chan publicly stated, "post 2020, we've never stopped … as soon as November 3rd happened in 2020, we just pretty much rolled into preparing for 2022." Chan Ex. 15, at 2, 8:2-4. Chan stated: "[W]e are also really engaged with the technology companies that are out here … We're also working with the social media companies to make sure that any foreign disinformation that's coming out … if we can identify them, we can share that information with them so they can knock down accounts, knock down disinformation content," and he noted that they are "having conversations with all of those organizations as they're building up to November of [2022]." Chan Ex. 15, at 2-3, 8:15-9:4.

VII. CISA's Censorship: Pressure, "Switchboarding," and Working Through Nonprofits.

968. CISA, the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency within the Department of Homeland Security, serves as a "nerve center" for federal censorship efforts. CISA meets routinely with social-media platforms about censorship in at least five different sets of standing meetings, CISA pressures platforms to increase censorship of speech that federal officials disfavor, and CISA serves as a "switchboard" by "routing disinformation concerns to social-media platforms" for censorship. CISA also seeks to evade the First Amendment by outsourcing many of its censorship activities to nonprofit agencies that it collaborates closely with, including the CISA-funded Center for Internet Security and its "EI-ISAC" ("Election Infrastructure – Information Sharing & Analysis Center") for state officials, and the massive censorship cartel calling itself the "Election Integrity Partnership."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

969. Brian Scully is the chief of the so-called "Mis, Dis, and Malinformation Team" or "MDM Team" within the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) in the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Scully Depo. 15:14-20. Before the Biden Administration, the MDM Team was known as the "Countering Foreign Influence Task Force," or CFITF.

970. Lauren Protentis is the "Engagements Lead" for the MDM Team, and she is in charge of "outreach and engagement to key stakeholders, interagency partners, [and] private sector partners," including "social media platforms." Scully Depo. 18:2-18. During relevant periods in both 2020 and 2022, however, Protentis was on maternity leave, and during those times, Scully performs her role as chief engagement officer for communicating with other federal agencies, private-sector entities, and social-media platforms about misinformation and disinformation. Scully Depo. 18:19-20:10.

971. Both Scully and Protentis have done or are doing extended details at the National Security Council where they work on misinformation and disinformation issues. Protentis began a one-year detail at the NSC in January 2023, as soon as she came back from maternity leave, and she will deal with mis- and disinformation issues for the NSC as part of her detail. Scully Depo. 19:15:20:5.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A. CISA "Switchboards" by Flagging Government-Reported "Misinformation."

972. Scully admits that, during 2020, the MDM team "did some switchboard work on behalf of election officials." Scully Depo. 16:23-25. "Switchboard work" or "switchboarding" is a disinformation-reporting system that CISA provides that allows state and local election officials (who are government officials subject to the First Amendment) "to identify something on social media they deemed to be disinformation aimed at their jurisdiction. They could forward that to CISA and CISA would share that with the appropriate social media companies." Scully Depo. 17:3-8.

973. In reporting perceived misinformation to the platforms, CISA and the state and local officials have "an understanding that if the social media platforms were aware of disinformation that they might apply their content moderation policies to it," and "the idea was that they would make decisions on the content that was forwarded to them based on their policies." Scully Depo. 17:15-21.

974. CISA's "switchboarding" activity causes social-media speech to be censored that otherwise would not have been censored: Scully agrees that "if it hadn't been brought to their attention then they obviously wouldn't have moderated it." Scully Depo. 17:22-18:1.

975. Scully contends that "we didn't do switchboarding in 2022." Scully Depo. 21:24-25. But he admits that this decision was made in late April or early May 2022. Scully Depo. 22:15-23. This lawsuit was filed, specifically challenging CISA's "switchboarding" activity, on May 5, 2022. Doc. 1.

976. Throughout the 2022 election cycle and through the present date, CISA continues to publicly state on its website that the MDM Team "serves as a switchboard for routing disinformation concerns to appropriate social media platforms": "The MDM team serves as a switchboard for routing disinformation concerns to appropriate social media platforms and law enforcement. This activity began in 2018, supporting state and local election officials to mitigate disinformation about the time, place, and manner of voting. For the 2020 election, CISA expanded the breadth of reporting to include other state and local officials and more social media platforms." Scully Ex. 24, at 3; see also Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency, "Mis, Dis, Malinformation," https://www.cisa.gov/mdm (visited Feb. 4, 2023).

977. According to Scully, "switchboarding is CISA's role in forwarding reporting received from election officials, state/local election officials, to social media platforms." Scully Depo. 23:24-24:2.

B. CISA Organizes the "USG-Industry Meetings" on Misinformation.

978. The MDM Team continues to communicate regularly and extensively with social-media platforms about misinformation and disinformation, including during the 2022 election cycle. These communications include at least "two general types of communications, one, we did regular sync meetings between government and industry, so federal partners and different social media platforms." Scully Depo. 21:2-6. This is "a coordinated meeting. Facebook was the industry lead, so [Scully] would have coordination calls with them prior to the meetings, just to set the agenda for meetings…" Scully Depo. 21:6-10. These meetings are described in CISA's interrogatory responses as "USG-Industry" meetings. Scully Ex. 12, at 38-40.

979. In addition, the MDM Team received regular reports from social-media platforms about any changes to their censorship policies or their enforcement actions on censorship: "if a platform was putting out a … public report on policies or activities" relating to disinformation and censorship," CISA would "get a briefing on that or at least get an awareness that it was going out." Scully Depo. 21:11-16.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

980. The USG-Industry meetings increase in frequency as each election nears. In 2022, they were "monthly" as the election approached, and then in October, they became "biweekly," so that there were two "biweekly meetings … prior to the [2022] election." Scully Depo. 24:16-21.

981. "DOJ, FBI, ODNI, and … DHS" participate in these meetings on the federal government's side. Scully Depo. 25:23. DHS's participation includes at least two components: CISA, typically represented by Scully and Geoff Hale, Scully's supervisor; and the Office of Intelligence and Analysis ("I&A"). Scully Depo. 25:11-26:13. Scully's role is to "oversee" and "facilitate the meetings." Scully Depo. 25:14-16. On behalf of CISA, Kim Wyman, Allison Snell, and Lauren Protentis also participate in the meetings. Scully Depo. 28:4-13.

982. On behalf of FBI, FITF Chief Laura Dehmlow and Elvis Chan participate in these "USG-Industry" meetings, and "periodically other people would be on from different parts of FBI," while "Laura [Dehmlow] was usually who [CISA] coordinated through." Scully Depo. 29:14-30:12.

983. These "USG-Industry" meetings have been occurring "for years," and "the first meeting we had … between federal and … industry was in 2018." Scully Depo. 31:10-16.

984. In addition, prior to each "USG-Industry" meeting, CISA hosts at least two planning meetings before the main meeting: a bilateral planning meeting between CISA and Facebook, and an interagency meeting with the federal agencies that participate. Scully Depo. 36:21-37:13.

985. Even though the 2022 meetings were still quite recent at the time of his deposition, Scully professed that "I don't recall specifics, so I'll just say that upfront" about the discussions at these meetings. Scully Depo. 37:19-20; see also Scully Depo. 39:23-25.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

986. The social-media platforms attending these meetings include "Facebook, Twitter, Microsoft, Google, Reddit, … [and] LinkedIn," as well as "others." Scully Depo. 38:15-20. For example, Wikimedia Foundation participated in "some." Scully Depo. 39:2-6.

987. Scully agrees that "concerns about misinformation and disinformation on social media platforms [were] discussed in these meetings in the 2022 timeframe." Scully Depo. 39:7-11. This includes federal officials reporting on disinformation concerns that they believe will affect speech on social media; for example, the "intelligence community" would report on "information operations": "the intelligence community, if their reporting included foreign actors who were potentially going to use information operations, they might mention that in their briefings." Scully Depo. 39:19-23.

988. The social-media platforms, likewise, would report back to federal officials about disinformation "trends" on their platforms, and provide additional information to the federal government not included in their public reports about such trends: "the platforms, they might share some high-level trend information from public reporting that they put out. So a lot of the platforms do their own regular reports on what they're seeing on their platforms and … what actions they're taking. And so the platforms, themselves, would share that type of information…. they would share essentially what they were getting ready to make public or what they had already made public… and then potentially provide some additional context around that." Scully Depo. 40:4-22. The government would ask for additional information about their observations of disinformation trends on social media, and the platforms would provide it: "they would share that, and if the government had questions or was looking for additional context they would often talk about that, they would generally talk about any new tactics that they were seeing." Scully Depo. 41:1-5.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

989. Scully admits that the discussion of foreign-originated misinformation is ultimately targeted at preventing domestic actors' from engaging in certain government-disfavored speech. He states that "my recollections for the time period we're talking about here, from September 2022 to the election in 2022, I recall most of it was foreign based. But … often what you see overseas essentially makes its way to the United States." Scully Depo. 41:6-12.

990. At the various meetings, the platforms discuss misinformation and disinformation as "coordinated inauthentic behavior," which is subject to removal under their terms of service, but Scully admits that "coordinated inauthentic behavior" concerns CISA because it "could lead to mis and disinformation, for sure." Scully Depo. 42:12-14.

C. CISA Is Deeply Embedded in the Election Integrity Partnership.

991. Scully admits that CISA has established relationships with researchers at "Stanford" and the "University of Washington," as well as "Graphika." Scully Depo. 46:23, 48:1-4. CISA's coordination with these researchers has continued since before the 2020 election cycle. Scully Depo. 47:22-25. Detailed additional information about these entities and their collaboration with CISA in the "Election Integrity Partnership" (or "EIP") is provided below. See infra.

992. Stanford Internet Observatory, University of Washington, the Atlantic Council, and Graphika are all involved in the EIP. Scully Depo. 48:1-22.

993. When EIP was starting up, Scully admits that CISA's "involvement" with the EIP included at least the following collaborations: (1) "a couple of our [CISA] interns came up with the idea and … [CISA] had some communications with" the EIP. Scully Depo. 49:8-10. (2) CISA "received some briefings on the work that they were doing." Scully Depo. 49:13-14. (3) CISA "had some communications early on in the process, when they were making decisions, when Stanford was trying to figure out what the gap was." Scully Depo. 49:18-21. (4) CISA "connected them [EIP] with the Center For Internet Security," which is a CISA-funded nonprofit that channels reports of disinformation from state and local government officials to social-media platforms. Scully Depo. 50:5-6. (5) CISA also "connected them [EIP] with some of the election official groups," i.e., "the National Association of Secretaries of State [NASS] and the National Association of State Election Directors [NASED]," both of which are groups of state and local government officials. Scully Depo. 50:6-10. (6) And CISA "facilitated some meetings between those three." Scully Depo. 50:10-11.

994. The CISA interns who originated the idea of the EIP "worked for the Stanford Internet Observatory, as well … which was part of the [Election Integrity] Partnership." Scully Depo. 51:7-8, 22-24.

995. According to Scully, the "gap" that the EIP was designed to fill, was that state and local election officials lack the resources to monitor and report on disinformation that affects their jurisdictions: "One of the gaps that we identified from 2018 is, as you know, most election officials their offices are fairly low staff, low resourced, and so there was no – they didn't have capabilities to try to identify disinformation targeting their jurisdictions, and so was essentially the gap is that most election offices throughout the country just didn't have that capacity or capability to be monitoring so that they could identify anything that would be potentially target their jurisdictions, so that was the gap." Scully Depo. 57:6-17.

996. Scully and other CISA officials identified the "gap" as a problem to CISA interns who were simultaneously working for the Stanford Internet Observatory: "So we had a conversation with the interns, and they were asking questions about kind of needs that the election officials have, generally. One of the gaps that we identified from 2018 is, as you know, most election officials their offices are fairly low staff, low resourced, and so … they didn't have the capabilities to try to identify disinformation targeting their jurisdictions." Scully Depo. 57:2-11.

997. Thus, Scully and other CISA officials were involved in originating and brainstorming about the creation of the EIP in the first place, as they "had some initial conversation with the interns" about this "gap," and then they also "had a conversation with the Stanford Internet Observatory folks about the gap." Scully Depo. 52:3-6. Then, CISA "received a briefing from them [EIP], or two, on kind of what they were putting together." Scully Depo. 52:7-9. Scully and other CISA officials then "facilitated some meetings between Stanford folks, the Center For Internet Security, and election officials, where they had discussions about how they would work together." Scully Depo. 52:10-13. And CISA's involvement did not end there, as Scully admits that "we had some conversations, kind of throughout, when they were -- particularly when they were putting out public reporting about what they were seeing." Scully Depo. 52:14-17. In addition, Scully "wouldn't be surprised if there were some other kind of brief conversations in there." Scully Depo. 52:18-20.

998. The EIP continued to operate during the 2022 election cycle. Scully Depo. 53:4-5. At the beginning of the 2022 election cycle, the EIP "gave us [CISA] a briefing, early on, about what they were thinking about," which occurred in "May/June of 2022." Scully Depo. 53:14-19. Scully and Geoff Hale of CISA received the briefing from Renee DiResta and another EIP official. Scully Depo. 53:22-54:7. In that briefing, the EIP officials "walked through what their plans were for 2022, [and] some of the lessons learned from 2020." Scully Depo. 54:11-13. Their plans for 2022 were that "they were going to do something similar to what they did in 2020 in terms of trying to support election officials." Scully Depo. 54:16-18. They planned to "work with state and local election officials." Scully Depo. 54:22-25.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

999. CISA followed EIP's public reporting during the 2022 election cycle, and in particular, Scully relied on "at least one public report … that I thought was pretty good," which was "about specific disinformation" and "was basically how to think about whether or not a narrative poses risks." Scully Depo. 56:12-17.

1000. Scully admits that CISA has "an established relationship" with the EIP and the Stanford Internet Observatory personnel who lead it. Scully Depo. 55:24-25.

1001. The Center for Internet Security is a "non-profit that oversees the multi-state ISAC and the election infrastructure subsector information sharing and analysis center, that's what ISAC stands for." Scully Depo. 59:13-16. In other words, CIS oversees the "Multi-State Information Sharing and Analysis Center," or "MS-ISAC," and the "Election Infrastructure Information Sharing and Analysis Center," or "EI-ISAC." Scully Depo. 60:9-20. Both of these are organizations of state and/or local government officials, organized for information sharing. Scully Depo. 60:3-11, 60:25-61:6.

1002. CISA funds the Center for Internet Security in its activity of overseeing the EI-ISAC, which is an organization for information-sharing among state and local government election officials. Scully Depo. 61:9-10, 62:1 ("CISA provides funding for the EI-ISAC").

1003. CISA directed election officials to the Center for Internet Security, which CISA funds, as an alternative route for reporting misinformation to social-media platforms, because CISA found the "switchboarding" role to be resource-intensive. Scully Depo. 62:16-24.

1004. CISA connected the Center for Internet Security with the EIP because "the EIP was working on the same mission," so "we wanted to make sure that they were all connected." Scully Depo. 62:24-63:1. Thus, CISA originated and set up the collaborations between local government officials and the CIS, and between the EIP and the CIS. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1005. The Center for Internet Security worked closely with CISA in reporting misinformation to social-media platforms, as CISA served as a pass-through for reports from CIS to the platforms: CIS officials "were receiving reporting directly from election officials. In the early part of 2020, they would forward what they were receiving election officials to us at CISA, and then we would push that to the social media platform; as 2021 moved along, CIS more frequently provided that directly to the platforms, themselves. And so I would say early on in the process, the switchboarding generally came through CISA. Later on in the process, it was more of a mixed bag of how the switchboarding worked." Scully Depo. 63:23-64:10.

1006. In addition to CIS and CISA, EIP also reported supposed misinformation to social-media platforms. Scully Depo. 64:13-14. CISA and CIS coordinated directly with each other on reporting misinformation. Scully Depo. 64:18-20.

1007. CISA served a mediating role between CIS and the EIP, and the platforms, to coordinate their efforts in reporting misinformation to the platforms: "There was a point where one of the platforms was concerned about too much kind of duplicate reporting coming in, and so we did have some conversations with EIP and CIS on how to kind of better manage that activity to make sure we weren't overwhelming the platforms." Scully Depo. 64:21-65:1.

1008. There was also direct email communication between EIP and CISA about misinformation reporting. Scully Depo. 66:9-12.

1009. When CISA reported misinformation to platforms, CISA would "generally copy the Center for Internet Security," which was coordinating with EIP. Scully Depo. 67:20-68:6.

1010. Alex Stamos and Renee DiResta of the Stanford Internet Observatory briefed Scully about the EIP's report, "The Long Fuse," in "late spring, early summer 2021." Scully Depo. 70:1-10. Scully also reviewed portions of the report. See id.; Scully Ex. 1 (EIP Report).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1011. Dr. Kate Starbird of the University of Washington, who works with the EIP, is also on the MDM Subcommittee for CISA. Scully Depo. 72:19-73:4. Kate Starbird of the University of Washington serves on CISA's CSAC MDM Subcommittee, as well as working with the EIP. Scully Ex. 59, at 1.

1012. Alex Stamos and Renee DiResta, who quarterback the EIP, also have roles in CISA. Renee DiResta of the Stanford Internet Observatory—a key player in the EIP—also serves as a "Subject Matter Expert (SME)" for the CISA's Cybersecurity Advisory Committee's MDM Subcommittee. Id.; Scully Depo. 361:19-362:6. Alex Stamos, the director of the Stanford Internet Observatory who launched the EIP, serves on the CISA Cybersecurity Advisory Committee, along with Kate Starbird. Jones Decl., Ex. FF, at 3, 12-13.

1013. CISA had extensive communications to coordinate with the EIP when it was starting up during the 2020 election cycle: "we had conversations with Stanford about the gap. They gave us some briefings on what they were doing, how they were doing it. Prior to the election, we had some conversations with them to facilitate and coordinate meetings, as I mentioned. And then when they put public reporting out, if we had questions about it, we would probably have conversations with them around that, as well." Scully Depo. 74:17-75:1.

1014. In addition to Scully, Matt Masterson was involved in communicating with the EIP. Scully Depo. 75:6-11. In addition, Scully "wouldn't be surprised" if Geoff Hale participated in some conversations with EIP. Scully Depo. 76:1-2.

1015. The then-Director of CISA, Director Krebs, "had a relationship with Alex Stamos," the head of the Stanford Internet Observatory, while CISA was coordinating with the EIP, and Director Krebs "may have had conversations in that context" about the EIP. Scully Depo. 76:8-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

10. In fact, when he left CISA in late 2020, Director Krebs "joined Alex Stamos," and "they started a business together," called the "Krebs/Stamos Group." Scully Depo. 76:5-23.

1016. Scully believes that "Director Krebs may have participated in a couple of meetings that I'm aware of, that Stamos was also in." Scully Depo. 77:20-22, 78:3-11.

1017. According to Scully, "generally speaking, the reporting that CISA received came through the Center for Internet Security." Scully Depo. 79:19-21.

1018. Matt Masterson and Scully presented questions to the EIP about their "public reporting," which consisted of "regular blog posts on what they were seeing" about supposed election-related misinformation. Scully Depo. 81:19-82:16. Masterson was also involved in at least one of the initial discussions with the Stanford Internet Observatory about starting up the EIP. Scully Depo. 81:24-82:4. Masterson spoke to Stanford about "clarifying the gap that election officials faced for the folks at the Stanford Internet Observatory early on in the process." Scully Depo. 83:22-25.

1019. The idea of the "gap" came from Scully and CISA, which he "shared with the interns." Scully Depo. 84:8-22.

1020. Matt Masterson "was in the meeting where we talked about the gap with [Alex] Stamos, in particular. And I believe Stamos mentioned that [i.e., the collaboration that became the Election Integrity Partnership] as an option during that call." Scully Depo. 85:21-24.

1021. Matt Masterson left CISA in January 2021. He started at Microsoft in early 2022. In the intervening year, immediately after leaving CISA, Masterson "was a fellow at the Stanford Internet Observatory." Scully Depo. 88:21-89:8. Thus, both the CISA Director (Krebs) and the political appointee directly involved in the establishment of the EIP (Masterson) went to work with Alex Stamos of Stanford Internet Observatory immediately after the 2020 election cycle.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1022. Alex Stamos consulted with CISA in part because "he knew he would need us helping him connect with election officials." Scully Depo. 100:17-18.

1023. Scully believes that there was at least "a fifth call" between CISA and Alex Stamos in 2020. Scully Depo. 101:4.

1024. Scully put Stamos in touch with NASED and NASS, and "facilitated some meetings between … them [EIP] and election officials." Scully Depo. 101:15-102:10. Scully "facilitated meetings … some meetings between EIP and CIS" because "they didn't have relationship" and "didn't know each other. So [CISA] just facilitated getting them together to talk and figure out how they were going to work together." Scully Depo. 102:14-20. The purpose of these meetings was "to set up a direct line of communication between CIS and EIP." Scully Depo. 103:7-10.

1025. Scully also put EIP in contact and facilitated meetings between EIP (i.e., folks at the Stanford Internet Observatory, which organized EIP) and representatives of NASED and NASS, the organizations of state and local election officials. Scully Depo. 103:11-104:19. These occurred in July or August 2020. Scully Depo. 104:24-25.

1026. Scully believes that the Center for Internet Security, which CISA funds, "forward[ed] messages that election officials sent them" reporting misinformation "to EIP." Scully Depo. 106:10-16.

1027. Scully agrees that "EI-ISAC is a part of CIS and we do fund the EI-ISAC." Scully Depo. 110:20-23.

1028. Scully agrees that CISA collaborated with the EIP. Scully Depo. 111:15-18.

1029. CISA probably had "between two and four" conversations with the EIP about its public reports on disinformation trends on social media. Scully Depo. 113:20-24. "[I]f we had a question about jurisdiction[s] being targeted or a new [disinformation] tactic or things like that, we would just ask them … questions about that sort of thing." Scully Depo. 114:17-21. Scully "was following the public reports" from the EIP during 2020. Scully Depo. 115:16-17.

1030. CISA received misinformation reports principally from three sources: first, from the Center for Internet Security; and second, "sometimes election officials would send them in to CISA central, which is CISA's kind of ops center block room type setup. And then the third way was they would just send direct to a CISA employee, … often Matt Masterson, who had relationships with many of the election officials." Scully Depo 119:7-11, 119:22-120:5.

1031. CISA coordinated with the Center for Internet Security on reporting misinformation to platforms: "we would let them know when we reported something to a platform … to avoid duplication," and "most of the reporting that I recall in 2020 came through CIS. And so we just wanted to let them know that we were acting on what they sent us. For reporting that didn't come through CIS, we would often let them know after we had shared it with the platforms that we had shared something with the platforms for their arrangement." Scully Depo. 120:23-121:9.

1032. CIS and EIP also "had a relationship. They shared information." Scully Depo. 121:20-21.

1033. According to Scully, "CISA does not do attribution. We didn't do analysis of what we received from election officials. So we would not know what percentage" of misinformation reports "were foreign derived." Scully Depo. 122:25-123:3. CISA thus forwards reports of "misinformation" to social-media platforms "without assessing whether they were originated from foreign or domestics sources." CISA would not "take steps to see whether this came from foreign or domestic sources," but "would just pass it along to the social-media platforms." Scully Depo. 123:4-18.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1034. Scully was aware that social-media platforms changed their content-moderation policies to be more restrictive of election-related "misinformation" during the 2020 election cycle, because the platforms reported on those changes to federal officials "in our regular sync meetings," i.e., the "USG-Industry" meetings. Scully Depo. 127:18-19. In those meetings, "that would be one of their briefing points, that they were making significant changes" to policies for censoring election-related speech. Scully Depo. 128:4-6.

1035. During 2020, Matt Masterson was "a senior election security person at CISA," and he was a "political appointee." Scully Depo. 129:23-130:4. Masterson was "familiar with the switchboarding work that we were doing." Scully Depo. 131:8-10. And "when he would receive emails" reporting misinformation, "he forwarded them to us." Scully Depo. 131:13-14.

1036. Scully understands that the Virality Project was "Stanford's attempt to mimic the EIP for COVID." Scully Depo. 134:10-11.

1037. The Virality Project "sent [Scully] some of their public reports." Scully Depo. 134:13-14.

1038. Scully was aware that Alex Stamos and Renee DiResta of the Stanford Internet Observatory were involved in the Virality Project. Scully Depo. 134:21-22.

1039. Scully "did have some conversations where they were … asking me … for any connections I had with HHS or CDC." Scully Depo. 135:10-12.

1040. In addition, Scully recalls "some informal … conversations that I may have had with Alex, in particular, and maybe Renée, as well," about the Virality Project. Scully Depo. 136:3-6.

1041. Alex Stamos gave Scully an "overview what they planned to do in the Virality Project" that "was similar to what they did … with the EIP." Scully Depo. 136:19-22.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1042. Scully also had conversations with Renee DiResta about commencing the Virality Project. Scully Depo. 139:5-14.

1043. With respect to the EIP, Alex Stamos and Renee DiResta "shared … lessons learned," and "what some of their big takeaways were" with Scully. Scully Depo. 141:6-8.

1044. CrowdTangle is a "Facebook-owned social media monitoring service." Scully Depo. 144:23-24.

1045. According to the Virality Project report, "as voting-related mis-and disinformation arose in the 2020 presidential election, the Election Infrastructure Information Sharing and Analysis Center (EI-ISAC) served a critical role in sharing information with the Election Integrity Partnership and pushing its rapid response analysis back out to election stakeholders across all states." Scully Ex. 2, at 150. Scully understands that this refers to the Center for Internet Security, which operates the EI-ISAC through CISA-provided funding, and that "it was Center for Internet Security" that engaged in direct communications with the EIP and played a critical role in sharing information with the EIP. Scully Depo. 147:17-25.

1046. During the summer of 2020, CISA was "piloting a capability that would allow us to monitor narratives online," Scully Depo. 151:13-15—i.e., the work that the EIP eventually did and does.

1047. In his public statements, Alex Stamos has identified the EIP's "partners in government" as "most particularly those in CISA and DHS, but also in all of the local and state governments with whom we operated with." Scully Ex. 6, at 4. Scully agrees that "CISA and DHS were partners of the EIP." Scully Depo. 369:1-11.

1048. According to Stamos, "[t]he Election Integrity Partnership started with our team in Stanford sending a group of interns to go work with the cyber security and infrastructure security agency at the DHS to work election security. And what these interns found is, there's a lot of opportunity for them to contribute to the technical components of election security. They also found that there was a lack of capability around election disinformation. This is not because CISA didn't care about disinformation, but at the time they lacked both kind of the funding and the legal authorizations to go do the kinds of work that would be necessary to truly understand how election disinformation was operated." Scully Ex. 6, at 4.

1049. Stamos says that the EIP is "a project between four different institutions to try to fill the gap of the things that the government cannot do themselves." Scully Ex. 6, at 4.

1050. Stamos states that CISA was one of "four major stakeholders" in the EIP: "There are kind of four major stakeholders that we operated with that we worked beside at EIP. Our partners in government, most particularly those in CISA and DHS, but also in all of the local and state governments with whom we operated with." Scully Ex. 6, at 4.

1051. EIP had access to data for monitoring social-media speech that the federal government does not have: The EIP "also worked with the major platforms, Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, TikTok, Reddit, NextDoor and the like. … [S]ome of those cases we had agreements for access of data. In other cases, we had to have individual analysts go work with them." Scully Ex. 6, at 5.

1052. According to Stamos, there was very little foreign disinformation in 2020: "We find very little evidence that there's any foreign involvement at all. In fact, the vast majority of election disinformation in 2020 came from Americans who had verified accounts and very large follower accounts." Scully Ex. 6, at 6.

1053. According to Stamos, its founder, the EIP targeted "large follower account political partisans who are spreading misinformation intentionally, doing so in a multi-media context. So they're doing so online, on social media, but they're also doing so on cable news, doing so on the radio, through a variety of different outlets and are able to amplify their message and to motivate their followers to go try find evidence of the incorrect claims that they're making." Scully Ex. 6, at 7.

1054. According to Renee DiResta, "in August 2020, students from the Stanford Internet Observatory were doing an internship with CISA and they identified a massive gap in the capability of federal, state, and local governments to become aware of, to analyze, and to rapidly respond to mis and disinformation, both foreign and domestic, targeting the 2020 election." Scully Ex. 7, at 4. The EIP was designed to fill that "gap" in the governments' capability to "rapidly respond to mis- and disinformation … targeting the 2020 election." Id.

1056. DiResta agrees that "the vast majority of voting related misinformation in the 2020 election was domestic." Scully Ex. 7, at 6.

1057. The Virality Project was immediately established on the heels of the EIP: "Following the success of EIP and the certification of the 2020 election, SIO [Stanford Internet Observatory] … almost immediately we recognized the need to ramp back up. This time to support government health officials' efforts to combat misinformation and targeting the COVID-19 vaccines. In February 2021, we formally established the Virality Project drawing on the same partners from EIP and adding a few more, and much like EIP, it focused on realtime observation, analysis, and understanding of cross platform vaccine-related misinformation." Scully Ex. 7, at 7.

1058. The CISA-funded Center for Internet Security coordinated with EIP regarding online misinformation and reported it to CISA. For example, on October 1, 2020, CIS emailed Scully about alleged misinformation, noting that "the impact seems to be escalating. Our hope is the platforms can do more to take down the misinformation. The EIP has been tracking this spread under ticket EIP-243 and has more examples." Scully Ex. 9, at 1. Scully forwarded this report to social media platforms. Id.

1059. EIP had advised Scully that it was using a ticketing system to track misinformation narratives. Scully Depo. 159:1-5.

1060. Scully forwarded this report tracked under EIP-243 to Twitter, as well as Facebook and YouTube, because "people generate traffic … by posting it across platforms," and he "would sometimes share across other platforms that we thought there might be … relevant content showing up on their platforms." Scully Depo. 160:2-5; Scully Ex. 9, at 1, 7, 12.

1061. Scully asked social-media platforms to report back how they were handling reports of misinformation and disinformation received from CISA. See Scully Ex. 9, at 11 (asking Twitter "to see if there's anything you can share about how you're approaching" misinformation reported by CISA). According to Scully, "periodically … we would ask if the decision was made and if we can share back." Scully Depo. 164:15-17.

1062. CISA maintained a "tracking spreadsheet" of its misinformation reports to social-media platforms during the 2020 election cycle. Scully Depo. 165:14-166:13. After Scully's deposition, CISA produced this "tracking spreadsheet" in response to Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel. Jones Decl., Ex. GG.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1063. At least six members of the MDM team "took shifts" in reporting supposed misinformation to social-media platforms, including Scully, Chad Josiah, Rob Schaul, Alex Zaheer, John Stafford, and Pierce Lowary. Scully Depo. 166:9-168:11, 183:14-16.

1064. At the time, Pierce Lowary and Alex Zaheer were simultaneously serving as interns for CISA and working for the Stanford Internet Observatory, which was then operating the Election Integrity Partnership. Scully Depo. 168:22-171:16, 183:20-22. Thus, Zaheer and Lowary were simultaneously engaged in reporting misinformation to social-media platforms on behalf of CISA, and in reporting misinformation to social-media platforms on behalf of the EIP. Id.

1065. Zaheer and Lowary were also two of the four Stanford interns who originated the idea of the EIP. Scully Depo. 171:14-16, 184:22-24, 185:12-14.

1066. Zaheer "was one of the people that were working the ticketing system" for EIP. Scully Depo. 181:21-23. Likewise, Lowary "did both SIO and CISA push forwarding" at the same time during the fall of 2020. Scully Depo. 183:14-16.

1067. CISA's misinformation reporting to platforms "ramped up as we got closer to the election." Scully Depo. 174:1-2. On election night, they "were up until at least midnight," and "if we received anything we would push it forward." Scully Depo. 175:12-14. Close to the election, they would "monitor their phones" for disinformation reports even during "off hours." Scully Depo. 175:16-17. "[T]he expectation [was] … that they would be responsible for forwarding something" to the platforms. Scully Depo. 175:19-21.

1068. Alex Zaheer, when switchboarding for CISA, forwarded detailed a report of supposed "misinformation" from the Election Integrity Partnership (EIP) to CISA's reporting system, which called for "swift removal of … posts and continued monitoring of the user's account" because that user had "claimed (1) that mail-in voting is insecure, [and] (2) conspiracy theories about election fraud are hard to discount." Scully Ex. 9, at 62. Scully forwarded this report to Twitter, which reported back that it had taken action pursuant to its civic integrity policy. Id. at 61; see also Scully Depo. 199:6-200:17.

1069. According to Scully, forwarding such reports of misinformation from the EIP to social-media platforms "was our standard practice." Scully Depo. 200:25. In fact, CISA's tracking spreadsheet contains at least eleven entries of "switchboarded" reports of misinformation that CISA received directly from "EIP" and forwarded to social-media platforms for review under their policies. Jones Decl., Ex. GG, at 4-5, Column C ("From"), Lines 86-96, 115, 123 (all listing "EIP"). CISA also used EIP tracking numbers for those reports. See id. Column D. One of these notes that content was reported to Twitter for censorship because "EIP … saw article on The Gateway Pundit." Id. at 4 (Column F, Line 94).

1070. CIS routinely reported misinformation by sending the notice simultaneously to both CISA and to the EIP, using the EIP's misinformation-reporting email "tips@2020partnership.atlassian.net." Scully Ex. 9, at 33, 52, 58; Scully Ex. 10, at 1. Scully Ex. 11, at 1-2 (indicating that "tips@2020partnership.atlassian.net" is the reporting email for the EIP); Scully Depo. 229:18-230:25 (Scully admitting that this email is the EIP reporting email).

1071. State officials, likewise, simultaneously reported supposed "misinformation" to CISA, CIS, and the EIP. See, e.g., Scully Ex. 9, at 59 (Colorado state official reporting misinformation to "EI-ISAC, CISA and Stanford Partners").

1072. State officials sometimes indicated that they were reporting misinformation to platforms for censorship precisely because federal officials at FBI and CISA had warned them about it. See, e.g., Scully Ex. 9, at 59 (noting that Colorado was reporting two Twitter accounts, one with 14 followers and one with 2 followers, because "[t]hese are concerning to us here in Colorado because of recent FBI/CISA warnings about impersonation accounts spreading false information about the election").

1073. One platform complained to Scully that it was receiving duplicate reports of misinformation from the EIP and Center for Internet Security, and asked if CISA could be designated reporter for the group: "Hey Brian, can we talk about CIS Misinformation reporting duplicate reports to EIP? Possible to have just you escalate?" Scully Ex. 9, at 63. Scully coordinated with CIS and EIP to set forth a coordinated reporting process involving agreed roles for all three of them—CISA, CIS, and EIP. Id.; Scully Depo. 209:14-212:12. Scully admits that there was "an agreement for EIP and CIS and CISA to coordinate and let each other know what they were reporting to platforms like Twitter." Scully Depo. 212:7-12.

1074. State and local officials reported misinformation to the FBI in parallel with their reports to CIS and CISA. See, e.g., Scully Ex. 10, at 10. This is because CISA "tell[s] election officials to report what they saw to either DHS or the FBI, and it would end up where it needed to be." Scully Depo. 215:8-14.

1075. The Center for Internet Security, likewise, sometimes used EIP ticket numbers on the misinformation reports it sent to CISA for forwarding to platforms. See, e.g., Scully Ex. 10, at 27 (reporting supposed misinformation in Pennsylvania under ticket number "EIP-664"); Scully Depo. 217:16-218:19. As noted, CISA's "tracking spreadsheet" used similar EIP ticket numbers at least 13 times for misinformation reports sent to platforms. Jones Decl., Ex. GG, at 4-5.

D. CISA Uses Switchboarding to Pressure Platforms to Censor Speech.

1076. CISA and Scully did not just forward misinformation reports to platforms; in addition, they also engaged in fact-checking for the platforms. For example, regarding a report about election security in Pennsylvania, Facebook asked Scully if he could please "confirm" two factual aspects of the report, and Scully responded with an explanation of why the government believed that the report was misinformation violating Facebook's terms of service. Scully Depo. 218:22-219:24; Scully Ex. 10, at 25-27; Scully Depo. 222:20-224:20; Scully Ex. 10, at 35-37 (Scully engaging in his own research to debunk an election-integrity claim on Twitter and reporting to Twitter, which relied on his research to label the Tweet).

1077. Scully admits that CISA commonly engaged in such informal fact-checking for the platforms: "if social media platforms needed additional information from an election official we would try to support that. … "[G]enerally speaking, we would do what we did here, which is if the -- if the jurisdiction made a public statement or if there was additional information the jurisdiction could provide, and the platforms asked for it, that we would try to facilitate getting the information they asked for." Scully Depo. 220:6-20. CISA would do its own research as well as relaying statements from public officials to help debunk postings for social-media platforms. Scully Depo. 221:1-4 ("If it was a public statement, I'm sure we pulled it ourselves. If there was not a public statement, I would imagine we would go back to the election official."); Scully Depo. 221:23-222:19.

1078. In presenting such "debunking" information to platforms to urge them to remove content, CISA always assumed—without any independent research—that the government official was a reliable source, and that the social-media user was unreliable, even for first-hand accounts: "if there was a public statement that was put out by the jurisdiction, we would … defer to that." Scully Depo. 221:9-12. CISA would not "take any steps to find out" if the private citizen's account might actually be truthful, and CISA would not "do further research to figure out who was telling the truth," but would simply "relay … the official statement from the jurisdiction" to the platforms for censorship. Scully Depo. 221:13-22.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1079. CISA's fact-checking activity included both relaying "debunking" information from state and local officials—always assuming without question that the state and local officials were truthful, not the social-media speakers—and performing its own fact-checking when the claim related to federal activities. For example, "[t]here was also one time when I believe it was Facebook had a question about DHS immigration and customs enforcement having agents going places where we also provided a response back on a specific piece." Scully Depo. 220:8-13.

1080. CIS and CISA's "switchboarding" activities reached, not just public postings, but private postings on social-media platforms. See, e.g., Scully Ex. 10, at 45-46 (reporting a "post on a private FB page," i.e., a "(private) Facebook post that Trump already won AZ").

1081. Social-media platforms treated CISA as a privileged reporter of misinformation, frequently responding with great promptness to CISA's reports of misinformation, immediately "escalating" the content for moderation, and reporting back the censorship action taken. For example, on November 10, 2020, at 7:23 pm, Scully reported offending Tweets, and Twitter responded within two minutes, "Thanks Brian. We will escalate." Shortly after midnight the same night, at 12:11 a.m., Twitter followed up with a report on censoring the Tweets. Scully Ex. 10, at 59. On November 13, 2020, Scully reported an offending tweet at 11:20 pm, and Twitter responded at 11:21 pm, "Thanks Brian. We will escalate." Scully Ex. 18, at 26; Scully Depo. 291:15-294:3.

1082. CISA's censorship partners also originated their own reports for censorship. CIS and the EIP sometimes reached out to state and local officials to invite them to debunk and report speech that CIS and EIP had observed on social media. For example, on December 1, 2020, the Center for Internet Security emailed local government officials stating, "The EI-ISAC, and our partners at the Election Integrity Partnership (EIP), are tracking a social-media post that is gaining traction very quickly." Scully Ex. 11, at 4. The CIS asked the local officials to debunk the post so that "we can work with the social media platforms to have the posts removed as misinformation. Please let us know as soon as possible." Id. The local officials responded with information disputing the posts, and CIS promptly forwarded the dispute to CISA and EIP: "Brian [Scully] and EIP, misinformation tweet … a [local official] confirmed the misinformation." Id. at 2. Scully then forwarded the report to Twitter, which responded within three hours, "We have labeled the tweet and are taking steps to limit trending on this." Id. at 1; Scully Depo. 228:5-231:7.

E. CISA's Many Misinformation Meetings with Platforms.

1083. In its interrogatory responses, CISA disclosed five sets of recurring meetings with social-media platforms that involve discussions of misinformation, disinformation, and/or censorship of speech on social media. Scully Ex. 12, at 38-40.

1084. Scully provided the information in the interrogatory responses regarding CISA's meetings with social-media platforms regarding misinformation and censorship. Scully Depo. 232:24-233:3. In doing so, Scully failed to disclose a long series of bilateral meetings between CISA and social-media platforms. See, e.g., Scully Depo. 238:11-13 ("we had some Twitter-only calls, as well, that [Yoel Roth] participated in"); Scully Depo. 238:21-22 ("we had some briefings from [Twitter] on some of their public reports" about misinformation); Scully Depo. 239:8-12 (agreeing that there were "briefings in those bilateral meetings with Twitter as relating to misinformation and disinformation on social media"); Scully Depo. 239:20-240:3 (admitting that CISA conducted "bilateral meetings with other social media platforms, like this, where misinformation was discussed"); Scully Depo. 241:4-22 (admitting to a series of bilateral meetings with social-media platforms beginning in 2018 and continuing through 2020); Scully Depo. 241:7-14 (testifying that "in 2018 … in our initial stages of trying to build those relationships, we would go meet with each platform one-on-one"); Scully Depo. 241:20-22 (admitting that, "prior to starting the switchboarding work, in 2020, we had conversations with each platform individually").

1085. None of these many bilateral meetings with social-media platforms about misinformation was disclosed in CISA's interrogatory responses. Scully Ex. 12, at 38-40; Scully Depo. 243:6-21.

1086. In its interrogatory responses, CISA describes the "USG-Industry" meetings as follows: "A recurring meeting usually entitled USG – Industry meeting, which has generally had a monthly cadence, and is between government agencies and private industry. Government participants have included CISA's Election Security and Resilience subdivision, DHS's Office of Intelligence and Analysis, the FBI's foreign influence task force, the Justice Department's national security division, and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence. Industry participants generally include Google, Facebook, Twitter, Reddit, [and] Microsoft but, have also included Verizon Media, Pinterest, LinkedIn, and the Wikimedia Foundation as well. The topics discussed include, but are not limited to: information sharing around elections risk, briefs from industry, threat updates, and highlights and upcoming watch outs." Scully Ex. 12, at 38-39.

1087. In fact, the CISA's description of the "USG-Industry" meeting as having "a monthly cadence" is misleading. The meetings became biweekly and weekly close to elections, when they were most needed: "from summer of 2018 … to early 2020 they were quarterly. Sometime in 2020 they became monthly and then as we got closer to the election in 2020 they became weekly." Scully Depo. 234:7-11.

F. CISA Worked with FBI to Suppress the Hunter Biden Laptop Story.

1088. Scully claims that he does not recall whether or not "hack and leak" or "hack and dump" operations were raised at the USG-Industry meetings, but he does not dispute that they may have been raised: "I don't recall a specific incident of that [i.e., discussions of "hack and dump" or "hack and leak" operations], but it's definitely possible. It's a tactic that had been used in the past." Scully Depo. 236:6-12. Scully does not dispute that he may have raised it: "Me, personally, I don't recall myself raising that, but it's possible." Scully Depo. 236:15-16. He does not dispute that Laura Dehmlow of FBI's FITF may have raised the concern: "Again, I don't know. It was a tactic that had been used globally, previously. So it wouldn't surprise me if there was some discussion of that somewhere in these meetings." Scully Depo. 236:20-23. He does not dispute that Elvis Chan and/or Matt Masterson may have raised the concern. Scully Depo. 237:10-22.

1089. Scully also does not dispute Yoel Roth's account of the communications to social-media platforms from federal officials about hack-and-leak operations and the possibility of a hack-and-leak operation involving Hunter Biden in Paragraphs 10-11 of Yoel Roth's Declaration dated December 17, 2020. Scully Ex. 13, at 2-3; Scully Depo. 245:23-248:11. Scully does not dispute that federal officials repeatedly raised the concern that they "expected hack and leak operations by state actors" in the USG-Industry meetings, Scully Depo. 245:23-247:17 ("it's certainly possible, because it was a common tactic … I would definitely not be surprised if these were included in the conversations"); and Scully does not dispute Roth's statement that Roth learned in these meetings that "there were rumors that a hack and leak operation would involve Hunter Biden," Scully Depo. 247:18-248:7.

1090. Contemporaneous emails confirm that CISA officials were warning of "hack and leak" operations during the USG-Industry and other meetings with social-media platforms during 2020. For example, on September 16, 2020, Facebook employees emailed Scully and other CISA officials a draft of a joint industry statement, which stated: "For several years, tech companies have worked together with … U.S. government agencies … to counter election threats across our platforms…. At today's meeting, we specifically discussed: … (2) Ways to counter targeted attempts to undermine the election conversation before, during, and after the election. This includes preparing for so-called 'hack and leak' operations attempting to use platforms and traditional media for unauthorized information drops." Scully Ex. 16, at 1 (emphasis added). This email confirms that "preparing for so-called 'hack and leak' operations" was discussed at the USG-Industry meeting on Sept. 16, 2020, which included CISA, FBI's FITF, DOJ's National Security Division, ODNI, and Google, Microsoft, Facebook, Twitter, Reddit, Verizon Media, Pinterest, LinkedIn, and Wikimedia Foundation. Scully Ex. 16, at 1; see also Scully Depo. 253:14-255:13.

1091. Likewise, the agenda for the July 15, 2020 USG-Industry meeting included, as a "Deep Dive Topic," a 40-minute discussion of "Hack/Leak and USG Attribution Speed/Process." Scully Ex. 17, at 16. According to Scully, "attribution" in this context means identifying the hacker and leaker, and "USG" means "United States Government." Scully Depo. 274:4-275:10.

1092. Like Elvis Chan, Scully was not aware of any "pending investigations, at that time, into possible hack and leak operations." Scully Depo. 255:9-13.

1093. At the USG-Industry meeting, CISA asked platforms to report back on "Themes / narratives / approaches you anticipate for races you think will be targeted." Scully Ex. 15, at 1.

G. CISA's Ongoing and Expanding Censorship Efforts.

1094. In the spring and summer of 2022, Lauren Protentis requested the social-media platforms to prepare "one-pagers" for state and local election officials to address their content moderation rules. See Scully Ex. 17, at 1 (including "One-Pager Reminder" on the agenda for the April 2020 USG-Industry meeting); Scully Depo. 260:3-261:11 ("we had asked industry to provide a one-page summary of their content moderation rules that we could share with election officials").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1095. The purpose of these "one-pagers" was to provide a summary of the platforms' content moderation rules to state and local government officials who would be reporting misinformation to the platforms. Scully Depo. 260:3-261:11.

1096. Lauren Protentis of CISA repeatedly lobbied the social-media platforms to include in their "one-pagers" for state and local officials a description of how to report perceived misinformation to the platform for censorship. See, e.g., Scully Ex. 18, at 41 (Protentis requesting that Facebook update its one-pager to include its "steps for flagging or escalating MDM content" to "make this a comprehensive product on both the critical needs for officials—account security and MDM concerns"); id. at 44 (Protentis asking Microsoft to create a one-pager for election officials to "provide steps to … report MDM"); id. at 45 (Protentis requesting that Twitter update its one-pager for government officials to include information about "how to report disinformation"). Scully agrees that Protentis was "trying to make sure that election officials have the information they need if they want to report" disinformation. Scully Depo. 300:23-25.

1097. CISA also set up an "operation center" on and around Election Day that engaged in "switchboarding" reports of election-day misinformation to platforms: "CISA regularly set up an operation center on election day, around the election. And the platforms and some of the other agencies do the same." Scully Depo. 262:16-19. This "operation center" received "switchboard reporting" in 2018 and 2020. Scully Depo. 263:15-18. It was also communicating with platforms and other federal agencies, including "connectivity with FBI, DOJ, NEI, I&A." Scully Depo. 264:18. When these reports came in, CISA would "perform the same misinformation routing function and pass that along to the platforms." Scully Depo. 265:1-7.

1098. The CISA-funded Center for Internet Security continued to report misinformation and disinformation to platforms for censorship in 2022: "CIS was up and running [in 2022]."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Scully Depo. 266:2. Scully understands that "CIS continued to receive disinformation/misinformation reports from state and local election officials during the 2022 election cycle, and relay them directly to social media platforms." Scully Depo. 266:5-13.

1099. Scully also believes that NASS and NASED routed disinformation concerns directly to social-media platforms in 2022. Scully Depo. 268:25-269:3.

1100. Scully agrees that foreign-originated social-media content typically becomes repeated from domestic sources: "We often see what happens overseas send up showing up domestically." Scully Depo. 279:9-11.

1101. CISA has also teamed up directly with the State Department's Global Engagement Center (GEC) to seek removal of social-media content; for example, on one occasion, the GEC enlisted CISA's aid to seek the removal of "a YouTube channel run by Americans falsely claiming" that a certain State Department special envoy was "Patient Zero" for COVID-19. Scully Ex. 18, at 2. Scully forwarded the report to Facebook, which reported within minutes that it had "flagged for our internal teams." Scully Ex. 18, at 1.

1102. CISA flagged obvious parody and joke accounts for censorship, including a Colorado parody account with 56 followers whose handle stated, "dm us your weed store location (hoes be mad, but this is a parody account)," and one with 27 followers whose handle stated, "Smoke weed erry day." Scully Ex. 18, at 11-12. The government official who reported these stated that "these are concerning to us … because of recent FBI/CISA warnings about impersonation accounts spreading false information about the election." Scully Ex. 18, at 11. In other words, the government official sought to censor these accounts before they posted any election-related speech, because (according to "FBI/CISA"), they might engage in misleading election-related speech. See id. Scully forwarded these reports to Twitter for censorship. Scully Ex. 18, at 10.

1103. Platforms report to CISA when they update their content-moderation policies to make them more restrictive. On September 10, 2020, for example, Twitter reported to Masterson and Scully that it was "updating our Civic Integrity Policy" to "label or remove false or misleading information intended to undermine public confidence in an election or other civic process." Scully Ex. 18, at 9. This includes censorship of "Disputed claims that could undermine faith in the process itself, e.g. unverified information about election rigging, ballot tampering, vote tallying, or certification of election results." Scully Ex. 18, at 9. The EIP had successfully lobbied platforms to adopt such changes ahead of the 2020 election. See infra.

1104. CISA pushed for the censorship of content that CISA's Director particularly disfavored, including supposed disinformation about CISA itself, and about the so-called "Hammer and Scorecard" narrative that attributed election interference to federal intelligence agencies. For example, Scully requested censorship of a "disinfo report about CISA and Director Krebs." Scully Ex. 18, at 19. And on November 10, 2022, Scully reported to platforms that "Director Krebs is particularly concerned about the hammer and scorecard narrative that is making the rounds," and asked for information about their tracking and "amplification" of the narrative. Scully Ex. 18, at 22, 24. Twitter and Facebook promptly reported back on their efforts to censor the narrative. Scully Ex. 18, at 21 (Facebook reporting that "our teams are labelling and downranking the content as identified"); id. at 24 (Yoel Roth of Twitter explaining Twitter's attempts to censor the narrative, and asking CISA "Let us know if there are especially high-profile examples of tweets sharing the conspiracy that haven't been labeled" so Twitter can censor them). See also Scully Depo. 286:3-289:25.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1105. CISA also purposely debunks online narratives, knowing that the social-media platforms will use its debunks as censorship. For example, Yoel Roth emailed CISA about the Hammer and Scorecard narrative stating: "We've tracking the Hammer/Scorecard issue closely, particularly since Director Krebs' tweet on the subject (which was pretty unambiguous as far as debunks go)." Scully Ex. 18, at 24. Scully admits that CISA was aware that "social-media platforms were following the rumor page posted by CISA and using that as a debunking method for content on their platforms." Scully Depo. 290:13-17 ("We had a sense they were doing that, yeah.").

1106. CISA publicly states that it is expanding its efforts to fight disinformation heading into the 2024 election cycle. Scully Ex. 27, at 1. On August 12, 2022, Director Easterly was reported to be "beef[ing] up [CISA's] efforts to fight falsehoods," and "has taken several specific steps to fight the problem." Id.

1107. In January 2022, Director Easterly asked Facebook for a "briefing from us on 2022 election approach." Scully Ex. 28, at 2. Easterly responded to an email by Facebook and directed her staff to set up the meeting. Id. Scully does not know what was discussed at the meeting. Scully Depo. 309:12-19.

1108. Director Easterly also exchanged text messages with Matt Masterson on February 26, 2022, when he was recently employed by Microsoft. Scully Ex. 29, at 2-3. In those texts, referring to a previous unidentified group call, Easterly told Masterson that she is "Just trying to get us in a place where Fed can work with platforms to better understand the mis/dis trends so relevant agencies can try to prebunk/debunk as useful." Scully Ex. 29, at 2. She stated that CISA is "looking to play a coord role so not every D/A [i.e., department and agency] is independently reaching out to platforms which could cause a lot of chaos." Scully Ex. 29, at 2. Masterson responded, agreeing with Easterly, and stating, "Platforms have got to get comfortable with gov't. It's really interesting how hesitant they remain." Scully Ex. 29, at 3. (Scully notes that "D/A" is "one of our common abbreviations for department and agency." Scully Depo. 316:23-24.)

1109. Scully agrees with Director Easterly that, when multiple federal agencies contact platforms independently, "it does create challenges and provides the platforms opportunities to play departments off each other." Scully Depo. 317:6-9. For CISA to play a "coordinating" role among the agencies, therefore, allows federal officials to keep better influence and control over the platforms.

1110. According to a September 2022 leaked draft copy of DHS's "Quadrennial Homeland Security Review, DHS's capstone report outlining the department's strategy and priorities in the coming years, the department plans to target 'inaccurate information' on a wide range of topics, including "the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic and the efficacy of COVID-19 vaccines, racial justice, U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan, and the nature of U.S. support to Ukraine." Scully Ex. 30, at 4.

1111. Scully agrees that DHS has discussions about targeting misinformation regarding the efficacy of COVID-19 vaccines, Scully Depo. 322:9-21 ("our building critical infrastructure help in public health is one of the sectors of critical infrastructure, so we engage with CDC and HHS to help them"); about the origins of the COVID-19 pandemic, Scully Depo. 323:16-17 ("We did some work on the … bio-lab narratives"); and regarding Ukraine, Scully Depo. 324:5-10 ("We saw this with COVID. … We saw this around Ukraine. And so, again, just helping people understand … these disinformation narratives…."). In particular, CISA participated in a "Unified Coordination Group" regarding Russia's invasion of Ukraine, which addressed misinformation: "there was a … Unified Coordination Group, when Russia invaded Ukraine, to coordinate DHS activities related to the crisis. As a part of that there was an MDM component, and a member of the MDM team was detailed to lead the MDM component of the Russian/Ukraine work." Scully Depo. 325:5-12. Scully believes that this group communicated with social-media platforms as well (again, not disclosed in CISA's interrogatory responses). Scully Depo. 327:1-18.

1112. As of August 12, 2022, DHS's Office of Inspector General continued to call for a more aggressive, not less aggressive, approach to combating disinformation. Scully Ex. 31, at 1 (OIG calling for DHS to adopt a "Unified Strategy to Counter Disinformation Campaigns").

1113. DHS's OIG reports that CISA is expanding, not contracting, its efforts to fight disinformation. OIG reports that CISA's "MDM team focuses on disinformation activities targeting elections and critical infrastructure. According to a CISA official, the MDM team counters all types of disinformation, to be responsive to current events." Scully Ex. 31, at 9. "An official from the MDM team stated that, through this work, CISA is building national resilience to MDM, such as COVID-19 vaccine hesitancy and foreign influence activities." Id. at 10. OIG further reports that, "[a]ccording to selected Intelligence Community officials, the Office of the Director of National Intelligence and the U.S. Department of Justice worked with CISA and I&A to counter disinformation related to the November 2020 elections. For example, according to an Office of the Director of National Intelligence official, prior to the November 2020 elections, CISA and I&A joined in weekly teleconferences to coordinate Intelligence Community activities to counter election-related disinformation. The Office of the Director of National Intelligence official stated the teleconferences continued to occur every 2 weeks after the 2020 elections and were still taking place as of the time of this audit." Id. at 11. Further, OIG reports that "CISA and I&A also work with the U.S. Department of State's (State Department) Global Engagement Center on countering disinformation." Id. at 11.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1114. On November 21, 2021, Director Easterly reported that CISA is "beefing up its misinformation and disinformation team in the wake of a divisive presidential election that saw a proliferation of misleading information online." Scully Ex. 23, at 1. "I am actually going to grow and strengthen my misinformation and disinformation team," Easterly stated publicly. Id. She stated that she "had a meeting with 'six of the nation's experts' in the misinformation and disinformation space." Id. And she "stressed her concerns around this being a top threat for CISA … to confront." Id. "One could argue that we're in the business of protecting critical infrastructure, and the most critical infrastructure is our cognitive infrastructure," Easterly said. Id. "We now live in a world where people talk about alternative facts, post-truth, which I think is really, really dangerous if people get to pick their own facts," Easterly said. Id. at 2. Evidently, Easterly thinks that government officials should help Americans "pick their own facts" for them. Id.

1115. According to Scully, CISA has an expansive mandate to address all kinds of misinformation that may affect "critical infrastructure" indirectly: "mis, mal-information threatens critical infrastructure in a number of ways, it could be operational impact, so in the case of the elections, disrupting election operations …. So a multitude of ways that disinformation could impact critical infrastructure, like I said … there's financial, there's reputational, there's just a multitude of ways that this disinformation could affect critical infrastructure." Scully Depo. 340:10-341:1. This could include, for example, "misinformation" that undermines confidence in any kind of national institution, including banks and financial services industry: "from mis, dis and mal-information, a reputational risk could come about if the integrity or the public confidence in a particular sector was critical to that sector's functioning. So I think the financial services would probably be a good example. So if there's a loss of confidence by the American public in financial services, financial systems of the United States, that could create national security concerns." Scully Depo. 341:17-342:2. This is a breathtakingly broad—even limitless—interpretation of CISA's mandate to protect "critical infrastructure," which would allow CISA to target virtually any kind of core political speech as "mis, dis and mal-information" that "create national security concerns" by undermining "public confidence in a particular sector." Id.

1116. In fact, CISA is "working with Treasury to develop a product to help the financial services sector understand MDM risks to the sector." Scully Depo. 355:22-24.

1117. Scully has publicly stated that CISA is "trying to reduce the amount that Americans engage with disinformation," where "engaging with disinformation" means "amplifying it, re-tweeting it, resending it, things like that." Scully Depo. 346:7-24; Scully Ex. 49.

1118. On June 22, 2022, CISA's Cybersecurity Advisory Committee issued a "Draft Report to the Director" calling for an extremely broad view of CISA's mandate. The report states that "[t]he spread of false and misleading information poses a significant risk to critical functions like elections, public health, financial services, and emergency response." Scully Ex. 46, at 1. "Pervasive MDM diminishes trust in information, in government, and in democratic processes more generally." Id. The report states that "CISA should consider MD across the information ecosystem," including "social media platforms of all sizes, mainstream media, cable news, hyper partisan media, talk radio, and other online resources." Id. at 2. Scully agrees with this report that CISA is trying to make its "resilience activity … as broad as possible so it's applicable anywhere that someone may come across MDM." Scully Depo. 358:7-11.

1119. In September 2022, the Center for Internet Security is still working on a "portal" for government officials to report election-related misinformation to social-media platforms. Scully Ex. 19, 21. "[W]ork on the online 'portal' for election officials to flag misinformation to social-media platforms … continues today." Scully Ex. 21, at 4. Scully states that "my understanding is that [CIS] did do something along those lines, I just don't know the extent of it." Scully Depo. 365: 3-6.

1120. As of January 2023 and today, CISA's website continues to proclaim, "[t]he MDM team serves as a switchboard for routing disinformation concerns to appropriate social media platforms and law enforcement. This activity began in 2018, supporting state and local election officials to mitigate disinformation about the time, place, and manner of voting. For the 2020 election, CISA expanded the breadth of reporting to include other state and local officials and more social media platforms. This activity leverages the rapport the MDM team has with the social media platforms to enable shared situational awareness." Scully Ex. 24, at 3; see also www.cisa.gov/mdm (visited Feb. 10, 2023). CISA thus proclaims that it is "expand[ing] the breadth of reporting," not retreating from it. Id.

1121. Regarding misinformation reports, CISA "would generally share whatever we received from the election officials with the FBI, in case there was an ongoing investigation related to whatever it was that we forwarded to them." Scully Depo. 366:17-20.

1122. CISA engaged in switchboarding and colluding with social-media platforms to promote censorship in other ways as well.

VIII. The State Department's Global Engagement Center's Censorship Efforts.

1123. The State Department's Global Engagement Center ("GEC") also conducts numerous meetings with social-media platforms about disinformation.

1124. The GEC's "front office and senior leadership engage with social media companies." Kimmage Dep. 29:12-13. These senior leadership meet with social-media platforms "[e]very few months, can be quarterly, but sometimes less than quarterly." Id. at 32:9-10.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

According to Daniel Kimmage, Principal Deputy Coordinator of the GEC, these meetings focus on the "tools and techniques" of spreading disinformation on social media, and it "would be rare" for them to discuss specific "content that's posted on social media that might be of concern to the GEC." Id. at 30:9-31:3.

1125. In addition, the GEC's "Technology Engagement Team does engage with social media companies" as well. Id. at 29:11-12. The Technology Engagement Team meets with social media companies "[m]ore frequently" than the senior leadership, which meets with them "every few months." Id. at 37:9-15.

1126. Kimmage recalls at least two meetings with Twitter. Id. at 129:22-25. At such meetings, the GEC would bring "between five and ten" people, including "the acting coordinator, me, in that capacity, then one or more of the deputy coordinators, team chiefs from the Global Engagement Center, and working-level staff with relevant subject matter expertise." Id. 130:24-131:13. These GEC staff meet with the platforms' content-moderation teams, i.e., the people responsible for censorship on the platforms. Id. at 133:1-20, 135:1-11.

1127. In such a meeting, "the GEC would provide an overview of what it was seeing in terms of foreign propaganda and disinformation. And Twitter would, to the extent that they felt comfortable sharing information, would discuss similar topics." 136:8-13.

1128. In addition to meeting with Twitter, the GEC's senior leadership had similar meetings with Facebook and Google as well during the same time frames. Id. at 139:22-140:6. These meetings were also with Facebook and Google's content-moderation or trust and safety teams, i.e., the people responsible for censoring content on their platforms. Id. at 141:17-143:3.

1129. The GEC brought similar numbers of people to the meetings with Facebook and Google. Id. at 143:16-17 ("I believe the lineup would have been similar.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1130. In addition to the senior-leadership and TET meetings, the GEC also maintained a Senior Advisor as a permanent liaison in Silicon Valley, Samaruddin K. Stewart, for the purpose of meeting with social-media platforms about disinformation. Id. at 159:24-160:13; Kimmage Ex. 9, at 2. Stewart set up a series of meetings with LinkedIn to discuss "countering disinformation" and to "explore shared interests and alignment of mutual goals regarding the challenge." Kimmage Ex. 9, at 2. Like the senior-leadership meetings, Stewart scheduled these meetings with the head of the trust and safety team, i.e., the person responsible for censorship on the platform. See id. at 7 (meeting with the "Head of Threat Prevention, Trust & Safety" at LinkedIn). Kimmage confirms that Stewart set up similar meetings with other social-media platforms. Kimmage Dep. 160:12-13.

1131. On March 25, 2021, the GEC set an email to Rob Schaul of CISA flagging "a disinfo campaign on YouTube targeting a [diplomatic security] officer" on a "Youtube channel run by Americans." Kimmage Ex. 11, at 2. Brian Scully of CISA forwarded the disinformation report to Twitter, Facebook, and YouTube. Id. at 1, 3, 7. Facebook responded, "Thank you so much for this! Have flagged for our internal teams." Id. at 1.

1132. The GEC also coordinated with the Election Integrity Partnership. George Beebe of the GEC was in contact with the EIP. Kimmage Dep. 202:10-24. Kimmage admits that the GEC had "a general engagement with the EIP. … the GEC was engaging with the partnership." Id. at 214:11-19. In addition to Mr. Beebe, Adele Ruppe, who "liaised on election-related issues," may have engaged with the EIP. Id. 214:23-215:5.

1133. Kimmage states that the GEC's work against disinformation "equips … technology companies to better understand" disinformation "so that they can take whatever actions they would take to stop the spread." Id. 280:24-281:3.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1134. On October 17, 2022, at an event at Stanford University, Secretary of State Blinken was asked, "Stanford is one of the leading institutions to combat misinformation research and pointing out propaganda narratives and how they spread. How do you envision the cooperation between the State Department and institutions like Stanford in combatting the spread of propaganda?" Kimmage Ex. 16, at 5. Secretary Blinken responded, mentioning the GEC and noting that State is engaging in "collaborations" and "build[ing] out … partnerships" with Stanford: "Stanford is doing remarkable work on that, and it's one of the things that we want to make sure that we're benefitting from, because this is a day-in, day-out battle for us, combating misinformation and disinformation around the world. We have at the State Department itself a big focus on this. We have something called the Global Engagement Center that's working on this every single day. But that work is both inspired by work that's being done in academia, including here at Stanford, as well as where appropriate collaborations. …So we're trying to build out these kinds of partnerships to make sure that we're looking at every place that is actually developing answers, including Stanford, and then integrating that into what we do." Id.

IX. The Election Integrity Partnership and Virality Project – Federal Collaborators.

1135. Federal officials also work through nonprofit organizations to achieve their censorship goals. Most notably, federal officials at CISA and the GEC, and state officials through the CISA-funded EI-ISAC, work in close collaboration with the Stanford Internet Observatory and other nonprofit organizations to achieve censorship and attempt to evade the First Amendment. Moreover, the Surgeon General's Office and other federal officials collaborate closely with the Stanford Internet Observatory and the same entities under the aegis of the "Virality Project."

A. The Election Integrity Project Is a Formidable Censorship Cartel.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1136. According to its website, "[t]he Election Integrity Partnership (EIP) was formed in July 2020 as a coalition of research entities focused on supporting real-time information exchange between the research community, election officials, government agencies, civil society organizations, and social media platforms." The 2020 Election Integrity Partnership, Election Integrity Partnership (last visited Feb. 22, 2023) (emphasis added), https://www.eipartnership.net/2020. The EIP's "objective was to detect and mitigate the impact of attempts to prevent or deter people from voting or to delegitimize election results." Id. (emphasis added). As discussed further herein, "mitigate[ing] the impact" means pushing social-media platforms to censor supposed "misinformation."

1137. "In March 2021 [the EIP] published [its] final report. This page displays an archive of the work carried out by the EIP and its partners during the 2020 U.S. election." Id. The EIP report is publicly available, it provides a detailed account of the EIP's activities in the 2020 election, and it is Exhibit 1 to the deposition of Brian Scully. Scully Ex. 1 (containing Stanford Internet Observatory et al., Election Integrity P'Ship, The Long Fuse: Misinformation and the 2020 Election (v1.3.0 2021), https://www.eipartnership.net/report [https://purl.stanford.edu/tr171zs0069]).

1138. The EIP was created "in consultation with CISA [the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency at the Department of Homeland Security] and other stakeholders." Id. at 20 (2).[1] After "consultation with CISA," the EIP "assembled" a "coalition … with like-minded partner institutions." Id.

1139. CISA interns originated the EIP: "The initial idea for the Partnership came from four students that the Stanford Internet Observatory (SIO) funded to complete volunteer internships at the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) at the Department of Homeland Security." Id.

1140. The EIP agrees with Scully that the EIP was formed to fill in a perceived "gap" in the ability of the government to "monitor and correct" misinformation: "Responsibility for election information security is divided across government offices: CISA has authority to coordinate on cybersecurity issues related to the election, the FBI to investigate cyber incidents and enforce election laws, and intelligence agencies to monitor for foreign interference. Yet, no government agency in the United States has the explicit mandate to monitor and correct election mis- and disinformation." Id.

1141. The EIP acknowledges that the federal government directly targeting misinformation posted Americans would "likely" violate the First Amendment and exceed agencies' lawful authority: "This is especially true for election disinformation that originates from within the United States, which would likely be excluded from law enforcement action under the First Amendment and not appropriate for study by intelligence agencies restricted from operating inside the United States." Id. As noted below, the EIP's founders publicly admit that virtually all the misinformation targeted by the EIP was domestic in origin, not foreign, and thus subject to the First Amendment.

1142. The EIP specifically notes CISA and the FBI in discussing the need to fill this "gap" in their ability to police "election misinformation originating from domestic sources": "none of these federal agencies has a focus on, or authority regarding, election misinformation originating from domestic sources within the United States. This limited federal role reveals a critical gap for non-governmental entities to fill. Increasingly pervasive mis- and disinformation, both foreign and domestic, creates an urgent need for collaboration across government, civil society, media, and social media platforms." Id. at 9 (v).

1143. "As a result" of the First Amendment and lack of legal authority, according to the EIP, "during the 2020 election, local and state election officials, who had a strong partner on election-system and overall cybersecurity efforts in CISA, were without a clearinghouse for assessing mis- and disinformation targeting their voting operations." Id. at 20 (2). The EIP was deliberately formed to fill this "gap."

1144. The EIP "was formed between four of the nation's leading institutions focused on understanding misinformation and disinformation in the social media landscape: the Stanford Internet Observatory, the University of Washington's Center for an Informed Public, Graphika, and the Atlantic Council's Digital Forensic Research Lab." Id.

1145. The EIP makes clear that its "aim" was not just to observe but to "defend[]" the public from misinformation: "With the narrow aim of defending the 2020 election against voting-related mis- and disinformation, it bridged the gap between government and civil society, helped to strengthen platform standards for combating election-related misinformation, and shared its findings with its stakeholders, media, and the American public." Id. at 9 (v).

1146. The EIP's statement that it "helped to strengthen platform standards for combating election-related misinformation" refers to the fact that the EIP successfully pushed virtually all major social-media platforms to adopt or increase censorship policies targeted at election-related "misinformation" during the 2020 election cycle. See id.

1147. The EIP notes that its efforts to push social-media platforms to adopt more restrictive censorship policies were highly effective, both in procuring changes in policies and censoring speech: "Many platforms expanded their election-related policies during the 2020 election cycle. … Platforms took action against policy violations by suspending users or removing content, downranking or preventing content sharing, and applying informational labels." Id. at 12 (viii).

1148. Alex Stamos, the director of the Stanford Internet Observatory who founded the EIP, has publicly stated that the EIP successfully pushed social-media platforms to adopt more restrictive policies about election-related speech in 2020: "My suggestion, if people want to get the platforms to do stuff is, first, you've got to push for written policies that are specific and that give you predictability; right? And so this is something we started in the summer, in August, is as Kate [Starbird] talked about Carly Miller led a team from all four institutions to look at the detailed policies of the big platforms and to measure them against situations that we expected to happen. Now we're not going to take credit for all of the changes they made, but there -- we had to update this thing, like, eight or nine times; right? And so like putting these people in a grid to say, you're not handling this, you're not handling this, you're not handling this, creates a lot of pressure inside of the companies and forces them to kind of grapple with these issues, because you want specific policies that you can hold them accountable for." Scully Ex. 4, at 7 (Audio Tr. 4).

1149. Alex Stamos notes that the EIP then pressured the platforms to aggressively enforce the new policies that the EIP had pushed them to adopt: "The second is, when you report stuff to them, report how it's violating those written policies; right? So there's two steps here. Get good policies, and then say, this is how it's violated it." Id.

1150. Other EIP participants have also publicly stated that the EIP induced social-media platforms to adopt much more aggressive censorship policies on election-related speech. On March 3, 2021, at an EIP-hosted conference on the release of the EIP report, Emerson Brooking of the Atlantic Council's DRFLab, an EIP participant, stated: "I think the EIP really helped push the envelope with things like just the notion that … this delegitimization of electoral processes that we were seeing in the summer and early fall that this should be against content moderation policies on these platforms, and begin to take proactive steps there…." Scully Ex. 5, at 6 (Audio Tr. 2). He also stated, "after November 3rd, we saw that market shift where content moderation actions that … we could hardly contemplate a few weeks before began to be taken. There was a much stronger emphasis on cracking down on the sort of content we've been tracking from the beginning." Id.

1151. The EIP treats "Government" and Social-Media "Platforms" as two of its "Four Major Stakeholders," providing input to the EIP and receiving feedback from the EIP. Scully Ex. 1, at 26 (8) & fig.1.2 (graphic showing "Government" as the EIP's first "Major Stakeholder," submitting information to EIP's "Intake Queue" and receiving feedback on the EIP's "Mitigation"—i.e., censorship—efforts).

1152. The EIP organizes its misinformation reports under groups called "tickets," and it notes that "[t]ickets were submitted by … trusted external stakeholders…" Id. at 26 (8). "Trusted external stakeholders" include "government": "External stakeholders included government, civil society, social media companies, and news media entities." Id. at 30 (12). Thus, it is clear that "government" submitted "tickets," i.e., reports of misinformation to be processed for censorship on social media, to the EIP. See id. at 26, 30 (8, 12).

1153. And it is clear that the "government" partners who submit tips to the EIP are CISA, the State Department's Global Engagement Center (GEC), and the Elections Infrastructure Information Sharing & Analysis Center (EI-ISAC), an organization of state and local government officials coordinated by the Center for Internet Security (CIS) pursuant to funding from CISA, see EI-SAC, Center for Internet Security (last visited Fed. 22, 2023)

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

("The EI-ISAC is federally funded by CISA."), https://www.cisecurity.org/ei-isac. Specifically, the "Government" "stakeholders" listed under the EIP's "Four Major Stakeholder Groups" are CISA, GEC, and the EI-ISAC. Scully Ex. 1, at 30 (12).

1154. These "Government" stakeholders report misinformation to the EIP: "Government and civil society partners could create tickets or send notes to EIP analysts, and they used these procedures to flag incidents or emerging narratives to be assessed by EIP analysts." Id.

1155. The CISA-funded EI-ISAC and CISA itself worked in collaboration with the EIP to report misinformation to social-media platforms: "[T]he EI-ISAC served as a singular conduit for election officials to report false or misleading information to platforms. By serving as a one-stop reporting interface, the EI-ISAC allowed election officials to focus on detecting and countering election misinformation while CIS and its partners reported content to the proper social media platforms. Additionally, the Countering Foreign Influence Task Force (CFITF), a subcomponent of CISA, aided in the reporting process and in implementing resilience efforts to counter election misinformation." Id. at 31 (13).

1156. The EIP report mentions The Gateway Pundit, the website operated by Plaintiff Jim Hoft, 47 times. See id. at 51, 74, 76, 101, 103, 110, 112, 145, 150-51, 153, 155-56, 172, 175, 183, 194-95, 206-09, 211-12, 214-16, 226-27.[2]

1157. The EIP boasts that it "used an innovative internal research structure that leveraged the capabilities of the partner organizations through a tiered analysis model based on 'tickets' collected internally and from our external stakeholders. Of the tickets we processed, 72% were related to delegitimization of the election," i.e., core political speech. Id. at 10 (vi).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1158. The EIP admits that the speech it targets for censorship is domestic, grassroots speech by American citizens: "The production and spread of misinformation was multidirectional and participatory. Individuals participated in the creation and spread of narratives. Bottom-up false and misleading narratives started with individuals identifying real-world or one-off incidents and posting them to social media. Influencers and hyperpartisan media leveraged this grassroots content, assembling it into overarching narratives about fraud, and disseminating it across platforms to their large audiences. Mass media often picked up these stories after they had reached a critical mass of engagement. Top-down mis- and disinformation moved in the opposite direction, with claims first made by prominent political operatives and influencers, often on mass media, which were then discussed and shared by people across social media properties." Id. at 11 (vii). In other words, virtually everything it targets is quintessential First Amendment-protected political speech.

1159. This included censorship of highly visible political figures: "The primary repeat spreaders of false and misleading narratives were verified, blue-check accounts belonging to partisan media outlets, social media influencers, and political figures, including President Trump and his family." Id. at 12 (viii).

1160. One key point that the EIP emphasizes is that it wants greater "access" to platforms' internal data to achieve greater monitoring of Americans' speech on social media. The EIP complains that "Lack of transparency and access to platform APIs hindered external research into the effectiveness of platform policies and interventions." Id. (emphasis added). "API" stands for "Application Programming Interface," so the EIP wants greater direct access to platforms' internal data about so-called "misinformation" on their platforms. See id. This directly echoes the repeated demands from the White House and the Surgeon General that social-media platforms provide access to their internal data about misinformation on their platforms, both to government and "researchers." The relevant "researchers" include Stanford Internet Observatory and the other constituents of the EIP and the Virality Project, who are working hand-in-glove with federal officials.

1161. The EIP contends that not enough censorship was achieved during 2020 as a result of their lack of direct access to platforms' APIs: "Many platforms expanded their election-related policies during the 2020 election cycle. However, application of moderation policies was inconsistent or unclear." Id.

1162. The EIP recommends that platforms increase enforcement of censorship policies: "Impose clear consequences for accounts that repeatedly violate platform policies. These accounts could be placed on explicit probationary status, facing a mixture of monitoring and sanctions." Id. at 14 (x).

1163. The EIP report acknowledges the contributions of Alex Stamos, Renee DiResta, Kate Starbird, Matt Masterson, Pierce Lowary, and Alex Zaheer. Id. at 16 (xii). All of these individuals have or had formal roles in CISA.

1164. The EIP is partially funded by the federal government: "Researchers who contributed to the EIP … receive partial support from the U.S. National Science Foundation (grants 1749815 and 1616720)." Id. at 17 (xiii).

1165. In addition, the Atlantic Council, one of the four nonprofit organizations in the EIP, is partially government-funded. Kimmage Dep. 294:8-18.

1166. "The initial idea for the Partnership came from four students that the Stanford Internet Observatory (SIO) funded to complete volunteer internships at the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) at the Department of Homeland Security." Scully Ex. 1, at 20 (2).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1167. "The students approached SIO leadership in the early summer, and, in consultation with CISA and other stakeholders, a coalition was assembled with like-minded partner institutions." Id.

1168. "The Election Integrity Partnership (EIP) was officially formed on July 26, 2020—100 days before the November election—as a coalition of research entities who would focus on supporting real-time information exchange between the research community, election officials, government agencies, civil society organizations, and social media platforms." Id.

1169. As a key point in its "Operational Timeline," the EIP lists a July 9, 2020, "Meeting with CISA to present EIP concept." Id. at 21 (3). In other words, the Stanford Internet Observatory "present[ed]" the "EIP concept" to CISA two weeks before the EIP was formed. Id.

1170. The SIO's EIP team was "led by … Research Manager Renee DiResta … and Director Alex Stamos." Id. at 22 (4). The University of Washington's "contributing team" was "led by … Kate Starbird." Id.

Summit 2021: Responding to Mis, Dis, and Malinformation, YouTube (Oct. 27, 2021), https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=yNe4MJ351wU.

1172. One of the EIP's goals was to "flag policy violations to platforms." Scully Ex. 1, at 24 (6).

1173. As noted above, the EIP describes "Government" as one of "four major stakeholders," who both provided input into the "intake queue" for "tickets" (i.e., reporting misinformation) and received feedback on "mitigation" (i.e., censorship). Id. at 26 (8).

1174. The EIP tracked misinformation using "tickets," which tracked "informational event[s]" that could encompass many social-media postings: "The EIP tracked its analysis topics and engaged with outside stakeholder organizations using an internal ticketing workflow management system. Each identified informational event was filed as a unique ticket in the system." Id.

1175. "Tickets were submitted by both trusted external stakeholders (detailed in Section 1.4 on page 11) and internal EIP analysts." Id. "Section 1.4" on pages 11-12 of the report identifies government as a trusted external stakeholder: "Trusted external stakeholders" include "government, civil society, social media companies, and news media entities." Id. at 29-30 (11-12). Page 12 specifically identifies CISA, the EI-ISAC, and the State Department's GEC as the EIP's "Government" stakeholders. Id. at 30 (12) fig.1.3.

1176. A "ticket" could encompass many individual postings: "A single ticket could map to one piece of content, an idea or narrative, or hundreds of URLs pulled in a data dump." Id. at 27 (9).

1177. The EIP's managers both report misinformation to platforms and communicate with government partners about their misinformation reports: "The manager had the ability to tag platform partners on a ticket for action. They also communicated with the EIP's partners in government, and could request further information from election officials if necessary," thus serving as a conduit for a back-and-forth about misinformation reports between government officials and platforms. Id. at 27-28 (9-10).

1178. The scope of the EIP's monitoring of Americans' speech on social media is enormous: "Team members from each of these tiers were divided into on-call shifts. Each shift was four hours long and led by one on-call manager. It was staffed by a mix of Tier 1 and Tier 2 analysts in a 3:1 ratio, ranging from five to 20 people. Analysts were expected to complete between two to five shifts per week. The scheduled shifts ran from 8:00 am to 8:00 pm PT for most of the nine weeks of the partnership, ramping up only in the last week before the election from 12-hour to 16- to 20-hour days with all 120 analysts on deck." Id. at 28 (10).

1179. The "Government" stakeholders flag misinformation to the EIP for censorship: "Government and civil society partners could create tickets or send notes to EIP analysts, and they used these procedures to flag incidents or emerging narratives to be assessed by EIP analysts." Id. at 30 (12).

1180. Of the "Four Major Stakeholder Groups" who participated in the EIP, the first listed is "Government," which includes three government entities: the Elections Infrastructure ISAC, CISA, and the State Department's GEC. Id.

1181. The EIP reports that CISA, CIS, and the EI-ISAC collaborated with the EIP in reporting misinformation: "In this election cycle, the EI-ISAC served as a singular conduit for election officials to report false or misleading information to platforms. By serving as a one-stop reporting interface, the EI-ISAC allowed election officials to focus on detecting and countering election misinformation while CIS and its partners reported content to the proper social media platforms. Additionally, the Countering Foreign Influence Task Force (CFITF), a subcomponent of CISA, aided in the reporting process and in implementing resilience efforts to counter election misinformation." Id. at 31 (13).

1182. The EI-ISAC jointly reports misinformation flagged by state and local election officials to CISA and to the EIP: "Content reported by election officials to the EI-ISAC was also routed to the EIP ticketing system. This allowed analysts to find similar content, ascribe individual content pieces to broader narratives, and determine virality and cross-platform spread if applicable. This analysis was then passed back to election officials via the EI-ISAC for their situational awareness, as well as to inform potential counter-narratives. Additionally, if an internally generated EIP ticket targeted a particular region, analysts sent a short write-up to the EI-ISAC to share with the relevant election official. This allowed the state or local official to verify or refute the claim, and enabled analysts to properly assess whether or not the content violated a platform's civic integrity policies. In this way, the EIP demonstrated the upside of using the EI-ISAC coordinating body to connect platforms with authoritative voices to determine truth on the ground and help election officials effectively counter viral falsehoods about election infrastructure." Id.

1183. The EIP created established channels for reporting misinformation to platforms for censorship: "The EIP established relationships with social media platforms to facilitate flagging of incidents for evaluation when content or behavior appeared to violate platform policies." Id. at 35 (17).

1184. The EIP receives real-time reports on censorship actions from the platforms, who communicate directly with EIP managers about censorship through the EIP's system: "Analysts conducted their initial assessment on all tickets, and, if content in a ticket appeared to be a violation of a platform's published content policies, an analyst or manager added the platform representative to the ticket. If questions arose, a manager communicated with the platform representative in the ticket comments. Analysts put the ticket back in the queue and updated the ticket to note if the content in question received a moderation action." Id.

1185. Virtually all major social-media platforms participate directly in the EIP: "The EIP onboarded the following social media companies: Facebook and Instagram, Google and YouTube, Twitter, TikTok, Reddit, Nextdoor, Discord, and Pinterest." Id.

1186. In the 2020 election cycle, the EIP "processed 639 in-scope tickets. 72% of these tickets were related to delegitimizing the election results." Id. at 45 (27).

1187. The EIP had a high level of success in pushing the platforms to censor speech: "35% of the URLs we shared with Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, TikTok, and YouTube were either labeled, removed, or soft blocked." Id. "In total, we believe the four major platforms we worked with all had high response rates to our tickets." Id. at 55 (37). "We find, overall, that platforms took action on 35% of URLs that we reported to them." Id. at 58 (40).

1188. The Center for Internet Security, which runs the EI-ISAC using funding from CISA, is a major reporter of misinformation to the EIP: "16% of tickets were filed by the Center for Internet Security (CIS), an election official community partner, in the form of tips." Id. at 46 (28); see also Center for Internet Security, EI-ISAC (last visited Feb. 24, 2023), https://www.cisecurity.org/ei-isac.

1189. The EIP "prioritize[es] … swing states over non-swing states." Scully Ex. 1, at 46 (28).

1190. The EIP's "dataset included 639 distinct, in-scope tickets." Id. A "ticket" could be extremely broad, "map[ping] to" and entire "idea or narrative." Id. at 27 (9). For example, the "SHARPIEGATE" ticket was submitted on November 4, 2020, to "try and consolidate all the content" regarding the Sharpiegate story from "a variety of different states across Twitter, FB, TikTok, and Youtube." Id. at 47 (29) fig.2.1.

1191. The EIP includes extensive collaboration with a "government partner" in its Sharpiegate ticket. Id. at 48 (30). Its internal ticket-management software ("Jira") simultaneously allowed the "government partner" to communicate directly with the "platform partner" to debunk the online claim. Id. at 48 (30) fig.2.2.

1192. The EIP reports that it repeatedly flagged The Gateway Pundit, Plaintiff Jim Hoft's website, as a purveyor of social-media misinformation: "The top misinformation-spreading websites in our dataset were … thegatewaypundit[.]com, a far-right news website. 65% of these tickets involved an exaggeration of the impact of an issue within the election process." Id. at 51 (33) (alteration in original).

1193. The EIP does not claim that most of The Gateway Pundit's content was false, only that it involved the "exaggeration of the impact of an issue within the election process." Id.

1194. As noted above, the EIP Report cites The Gateway Pundit 47 times. See supra paragraph 1156 and accompanying citation.

1195. The EIP "coded tickets based on whether they … had an element of foreign interference. Interestingly … less than 1% related to foreign interference." Scully Ex. 1, at 53 (35). Thus, virtually all the speech targeted for censorship comes from American speakers.

1196. The EIP targeted speech for censorship or debunking in most tickets: "Of our 639 tickets, 363 tickets tagged an external partner organization to either report the content, provide situational awareness, or suggest a possible need for fact-checking or a counter-narrative." Id. at 55 (37).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1197. "[G]roups that reported tickets include the State Department's Global Engagement Center…" Id. at 60 (42). Daniel Kimmage testified that George Beebe of the GEC was in contact with the EIP. Kimmage Dep. 202:10-24. Kimmage attests that the GEC had "a general engagement with the EIP. … the GEC was engaging with the partnership." Id. at 214:11-19. In addition to Mr. Beebe, Adele Ruppe, who "liaised on election-related issues," may have engaged with the EIP. Id. 214:23-215:5.

1198. In addition, left-wing advocacy groups like "MITRE, Common Cause, the DNC, the Defending Digital Democracy Project, and the NAACP" submitted tickets to the EIP. Scully Ex. 1, at 60 (42).

1199. The EIP indicates that the "misinformation" it targeted during the 2020 election cycle was core political speech of American citizens protected by the First Amendment: "Our analysis demonstrates that the production and spread of misinformation and disinformation about Election 2020 … was participatory. In other words, these dynamics were not simply top-down from elites to their audiences, but were bottom-up as well, with members of the 'crowd' contributing in diverse ways—from posting raw content, to providing frames for that content, to amplifying aligned messages from both everyday members of the crowd and media (including social media) elites. Repeatedly, our data reveal politically motivated people sincerely introducing content they mistakenly believed demonstrated real issues with election integrity…" Id. at 181 (163). "Well-meaning, though often politically motivated, individuals repeatedly introduced this content into the broader information sphere, often via social media…" Id. at 182 (164).

1200. EIP analysts collected data from Twitter "contemporaneously," and they also have access to "CrowdTangle and Facebook search functionality." Id. at 199-200 (181-82).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1201. The EIP's tickets encompassed almost 5,000 URLs: "Through our live ticketing process, analysts identified social media posts and other web-based content related to each ticket, capturing original URLs (as well as screenshots and URLs to archived content). In total, the EIP processed 639 unique tickets and recorded 4,784 unique original URLs." Id. at 200 (182).

1202. These tickets and URLs encompass millions of social media posts, including almost 22 million posts on Twitter alone: "In total, our incident-related tweet data included 5,888,771 tweets and retweets from ticket status IDs directly, 1,094,115 tweets and retweets collected first from ticket URLs, and 14,914,478 from keyword searches, for a total of 21,897,364 tweets." Id. at 201 (183).

1203. The EIP "collected data from Twitter in real time from August 15 through December 12, 2020," and did so "[u]sing the Twitter Streaming API" to "track[] a variety of election-related terms …. The collection resulted in 859 million total tweets." Id. at 200-01 (182-83). Thus, the EIP had privileged access to Twitter's internal data about speech on its own platform.

1204. The EIP did not have privileged access to Facebook's internal data, however: "To understand how the information ecosystem looks from the perspective of Facebook and Instagram, we collected public posts through the CrowdTangle API from Facebook Groups, Facebook Pages, Facebook verified profiles and public Instagram accounts." Id. at 201 (183). This explains the White House's and Surgeon General's insistence in 2021 that Facebook grant "researchers" such as Renee Diresta access to Facebook's internal data.

1205. The EIP treats as "misinformation" truthful reports that the EIP believes "lack[] broader context." Id. at 203 (185).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1206. The EIP admits that it focuses on speech from the "political right" because it believes that the right spreads misinformation: "Influential accounts on the political right … were responsible for the most widely spread of false or misleading information in our dataset. Right-leaning accounts also more frequently augmented their misinformation posts with narrative-related hashtags … which persisted across multiple incidents and were shared millions of times in our dataset." Id. at 204-05 (186-87).

B. The EIP Targets Plaintiff Jim Hoft and The Gateway Pundit.

1207. According to the EIP, "[t]he 21 most prominent repeat spreaders on Twitter … include political figures and organizations, partisan media outlets, and social media all-stars. … [A]ll 21 of the repeat spreaders were associated with conservative or right-wing political views and support of President Trump." Id. at 205 (187).

1208. The EIP lists The Gateway Pundit as the second-ranked "Repeat Spreader[] of Election Misinformation" on Twitter, ranking it above Donald Trump, Eric Trump, Breitbart News, and Sean Hannity. Id. at 206 (188) tbl.5.2. In the 2020 election cycle, the EIP flagged The Gateway Pundit's speech in 25 incidents with over 200,000 retweets. Id.

1209. The EIP claims that "[f]ar-right hyperpartisan media outlets also participated in a wide range of [Twitter] incidents, including The Gateway Pundit, which ranked #2 in the dataset." Id. at 206 (188).

1210. In addition, the EIP lists The Gateway Pundit's website as the domain cited in the most "incidents"—its website content was tweeted by others in 29,207 original tweets and 840,740 retweets. Id. at 207 (189) tbl.5.3. The Gateway Pundit ranks above Fox News, the New York Post, the New York Times, and the Washington Post on this list. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1211. In fact, the EIP dedicates an entire subsection of its report to The Gateway Pundit. Id. at 214-16 (196-98). The EIP reports that "The Gateway Pundit was among the most active spreaders of election-related misinformation in our analyses. … It appeared as a top repeat spreader through its website, its Twitter account, its YouTube channel, and its Instagram account." Id. at 214 (196).

1212. The EIP report notes that "Twitter suspended [The Gateway Pundit's] account on February 6, 2021," indicating that The Gateway Pundit's deplatforming on Twitter was the result of the EIP's efforts. Id.

1213. The EIP states that "The Gateway Pundit was highly active throughout the election lifecycle, including during the weeks leading up to the election, when it repeatedly spread content—in distinct information incidents—that sought to undermine trust in mail-in voting specifically and the eventual election results more generally." Id.

1214. According to the EIP, "[o]n Twitter, The Gateway Pundit's account was highly retweeted across 26 different incidents (#2 among repeat spreaders). Evidence from our data suggest that its prominence was due both to production of its own material and to amplification (via original and quote tweets) of other partisan content." Id. at 215 (197).

1215. According to the EIP, "[o]f all the domains linked to in our Twitter data, The Gateway Pundit's website was connected to the largest number of incidents (46) while also garnering the most related original tweets (29,207) and retweets (840,750). Their YouTube channel appeared in five incidents, and their 13 incident-related videos had more than 4 million views on YouTube." Id. at 215-16 (197-98).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1216. According to the EIP, "[t]he Gateway Pundit['s] … Instagram account was tied for #2 among repeat spreaders, appearing in 10 incidents for 20 posts that received more than 132,000 engagements." Id. at 216 (198).

C. The EIP Induces Major Changes in Platform Censorship Policies.

1217. The EIP notes that "during the 2020 election, all of the major platforms made significant changes to election integrity policies, both as the campaigns kicked off and through the weeks after Election Day—policies that attempted to slow the spread of specific narratives and tactics that could potentially mislead or deceive the public…." Id. at 229 (211).

1218. The EIP notes that "[m]ajor social media platforms such as Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, Pinterest, and TikTok introduced changes to their community standards in the months leading up to the election and in the aftermath." Id. at 230 (212).

1219. In particular, starting just over a month after the EIP launched, in "September 2020," "[a] number of platforms announced the first updates to election-specific policies: making large additions; adding more clarity and specificity; or stating clearly that they will label or remove content that delegitimizes the integrity of the election." Id.

1220. The policy changes reflected that the EIP and the platforms anticipated that they would have to target speech by domestic speakers, not supposed "foreign disinformation," during the 2020 election: "[M]uch of the misinformation in the 2020 election was pushed by authentic, domestic actors, and platforms shifted their focus to address downstream harms related to the content itself. As a result, most subsequent updates introduced policies related to specific content categories." Id. at 231 (213).

1221. The EIP lobbies platforms to "remove" so-called "repeat spreaders" like The Gateway Pundit, and complains that they are not removed often enough: "Despite what appeared to be clear policy to penalize or remove repeat spreaders and high-profile disinformation actors, platforms appeared to shy away from using this particular intervention. In some cases, this was a result of a variety of 'newsworthiness' exceptions, which allowed some high-profile repeat spreaders, including politicians, to evade bans. Yet many of the repeat spreaders we saw were not politicians"—including The Gateway Pundit, among many others. Id. at 233 (215).

1222. The EIP indicates that it will continue its censorship activities in future elections: "The next election will have its own unique set of misinformation narratives, yet many of the tactics, dynamics, and basic structures of these narratives will likely remain the same." Id. at 243-44 (225-26).

1223. The EIP reinforces this intention by calling for even more aggressive, more expansive censorship of social-media speech, including into other areas such as "public health": "Doing nothing is not an option. … Not pursuing structural policy change will accelerate our country's slide toward extremism, erode our shared national and inclusive identity, and propel yet more individuals toward radicalization via mis- and disinformation. The problem is larger than elections: it spans politics, self-governance, and critical policy areas, including public health." Id. at 251 (233). The EIP acted on this statement promptly by forming the "Virality Project" in 2021. See infra.

1224. The EIP proclaims that the "EIP's novel structure, enabling rapid-response analysis and a multistakeholder reporting infrastructure, could prove effective to many information spaces blighted by pervasive misinformation," in addition to election-related speech. Id. at 259 (241).

1225. The EIP calls for more aggressive penalties to enforce censorship on social media, in language that was copied and parroted by the demands of Jen Psaki and the Surgeon General: "Establish clear consequences for accounts that repeatedly violate platform policies." Id. at 256

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(238). "Prioritize quicker action on verified or influential accounts if they have already violated platform policies in the past." Id. at 257 (239).

1226. The EIP even advocates for an express system of pre-publication approval for disfavored speakers—the ultimate prior restraint: "Consider implementing holding areas for content from high-visibility repeat spreaders, where content can be evaluated against policy before posting." Id.

1227. The EIP proclaims that it offers "a whole-of-society response," in words parroted by the Surgeon General's Health Advisory. Id. at 259 (241).

1228. The EIP boasts that "[t]he EIP, in its structure and its operations … united government, academia, civil society, and industry, analyzing across platforms, to address misinformation in real time." Id. (emphasis added).

1229. The EIP states that "[t]he lessons from EIP should be both learned and applied. The fight against misinformation is only beginning. The collective effort must continue." Id. at 259-60 (241-42).

1230. The EIP specifically advocates for a broader role for CISA in federal efforts to combat election-related "misinformation." Id. at 252-53 (234-35).

1231. Alex Stamos, the director of the Stanford Internet Observatory who launched the EIP, publicly states that virtually all the speech targeted by the EIP is by domestic speakers engaging in core political speech. He has publicly stated: "almost all of this is domestic: right? … It is all domestic, and the second point on the domestic, a huge part of the problem is well-known influencers …. you have … a relatively small number of people with very large followings who have the ability to go and find a narrative somewhere, pick it out of obscurity and … harden it into these narratives." Scully Ex. 4, at 5 (Audio Tr. 2).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1232. Likewise, on October 3, 2020, at a CISA-hosted cybersecurity conference, Clint Watts of the EIP stated that election misinformation "is overwhelmingly more domestic than foreign this time around in 2020." Scully Ex. 3, at 4 (Audio Tr. 2).

1233. At the same conference, Alex Stamos stated: "The bigger issue in 2020, is going to be domestic … we have set up this thing called the [E]lection [I]ntegrity [P]artnership, so we went and hired a bunch of students. We're working with the University of Washington, Graphika, and DFRLab, and the vast, vast majority of the contact we see we believe is domestic. You know, some of it you can't tell, but a lot of it is coming from domestic blue checkmark verified elites; right? And so I think a much bigger issue for the platforms is elite disinformation. The stuff that is being driven by people who are verified that are Americans who are using their real identities." Id. at 5 (Audio Tr. 3). He also stated, "the truth is, that the vast majority of these problems or the kind of problems in the information environment are domestic problems." Id. at 6 (Audio Tr. 4).

1234. Alex Stamos has noted that the fear of government regulation pushes the platforms to respond to government pressure and increase censorship. On November 10, 2020, at a conference hosted by the Atlantic Council, Alex Stamos stated: "So, you know, on effectively pushing the platforms to do stuff … they will always be more responsive in the places that are both economically highly important and that have huge potential regulatory impact, most notably right now that would be the United States and Europe." Scully Ex. 4, at 6 (Audio Tr. 3) (emphasis added).

1235. On November 17, 2021, at a conference hosted by the Digital Publics Symposium, Kate Starbird of CISA's Subcommittee and the University of Washington's Center for an Informed Public, an EIP participant, stated: "Now fast forward to 2020, we saw a very different story around disinformation in the U.S. election. It was largely domestic coming from inside the United States.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

… Most of the accounts perpetrating this … they're authentic accounts. They were often blue check and verified accounts. They were pundits on cable television shows that were who they said they were … a lot of the major spreaders were blue check accounts, and it wasn't entirely coordinated, but instead, it was largely sort of cultivated and even organic in places with everyday people creating and spreading disinformation about the election." Scully Ex. 8, at 4 (Audio Tr. 2). She also stated: "So we see this – the disinformation campaign was top down … but this campaign was also bottom up with everyday people sharing their own experiences, their own misperceptions of being disenfranchised or finding what they thought to be evidence of voter fraud." Id. at 5 (Audio Tr. 3). These are the voices that the EIP silenced.

D. The Virality Project Expands EIP's Censorship Work with Federal Officials.

1236. Soon after the 2020 election cycle, beginning in early 2021, the same four entities that launched the Election Integrity Partnership established a similar program to address COVID-19-vaccine-related "misinformation" on social media, which they called the "Virality Project." See Scully Ex. 2 (containing Stanford Internet Observatory, et al., The Virality Project, Memes, Magnets, and Microchips: Narrative Dynamics Around COVID-19 Vaccines (v.1.0.1 2022), https://purl.stanford.edu/mx395xj8490).

1237. The Virality Project's final report, dated April 26, 2022, lists Renee DiResta as the principal Executive Editor, and lists Renee DiResta, Kate Starbird, and Matt Masterson as contributors. Scully Ex. 2, at 4 (i).[3] Current and former CISA interns Jack Cable, Isabella Garcia-Camargo, Pierce Lowary, and Alex Zaheer are listed as "researchers and analysts" who participated in social-media "monitoring" for the project. Id.

[3] Citations of this exhibit are formatted "Scully Ex. 2, at [page of exhibit] ([page of report]).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1238. The same four entities that operated the EIP launched the Virality Project ("VP") in 2021: Stanford Internet Observatory, University of Washington's Center for an Informed Public, Graphika, and the Atlantic Council's Digital Forensics Research lab. Id. at 8-9 (1-2). Three new nonprofit entities were added as well. Id.

1239. According to its report, "[t]he VP team developed technology to identify emerging narratives, to understand what communities they appeared within, and to gauge their scope, speed, and spread. In addition, the analysts assessed social media platforms' published policies to understand how (if at all) platforms might limit or action the spread of misleading vaccine-related content." Id. at 9 (2). As discussed below, like the EIP, the VP took action to push "platforms [to] limit or action the spread of misleading vaccine-related content." Id.

1240. According to the VP, "[v]accine mis- and disinformation was largely driven by a cast of recurring actors," including "long-standing anti-vaccine influencers and activists, wellness and lifestyle influencers, pseudomedical influencers, conspiracy theory influencers, right-leaning political influencers, and medical freedom influencers." Id.

1241. Like the EIP, the VP admits that the speech it targets is heavily speech by "domestic actors," i.e., American citizens: "Foreign … actors' reach appeared to be far less than that of domestic actors." Id.

1242. Like the EIP, the VP indicates that it pushes platforms to adopt more aggressive censorship policies on COVID vaccine-related content: "While online platforms have made progress in creating and enforcing vaccine related policies, gaps still exist." Id. at 10 (3).

1243. Like the EIP, the VP notes that it did not only observe and report on misinformation but took action to stop the spread of misinformation: "Detection, however, was only part of the work. The Virality Project also sought to relate its findings to the public and to stakeholders in public health, government, and civil society." Id.

1244. The VP indicates that it should increase the efficiency of having "government partners" share "tips" of misinformation with entities like the VP, stating that "[r]esearch institutions" should "[s]treamline a tip line process to make it easy for civil society and government partners to share observations. Establish a feedback loop to discuss what types of analysis or tips are most relevant." Id.

1245. The VP strives to "[d]evelop and maintain clear channels of communication that enable federal, state, and local agencies to understand and learn from what might be happening in other regions. Federal Information Sharing and Analysis Centers (ISAC) are one path forward." Id. at 11 (4).

1246. The VP recommends that the federal government "[i]mplement a Misinformation and Disinformation Center of Excellence housed within the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency." Id.

1247. The VP states that social-media "[p]latforms owe the public transparency and accountability as they face the challenges of deciding what to surface, what to curate, and how to minimize the virality of harmful false claims. Tech platform policies against public health misinformation should be clear and precise, and their enforcement should be consistently applied." Id. (emphasis added). The Surgeon General copied this messaging verbatim in his Health Advisory, which he launched at the VP.

1248. The VP calls for more aggressive censorship of COVID-19 "misinformation," stating: "To these ends, platforms should: Consistently enforce policies, particularly against recurring actors," and "Continue to improve data sharing relationships with researchers." Id. The emphasis on "data sharing relationships" is directly echoed in the White House's and the Surgeon General's demands that platforms share their internal data with researchers.

1249. The VP boasts that the "Office of the Surgeon General incorporated VP's research and perspectives into its own vaccine misinformation strategy," and specifically cites the Surgeon General's Health Advisory on this point. Id. at 11 (4) & 13 (6) n.5 (citing Off. U.S. Surgeon Gen., Confronting Health Misinformation: The U.S. Surgeon General's Advisory on Building a Healthy Information Environment (July 15, 2021), https://hhs.gov.sites.default.files.surgeon.general-misinformation-advisory.pdf).

1250. "Over the course of its seven months of work, the Virality Project observed narratives that questioned the safety, distribution, and effectiveness of the vaccines." Id. at 11 (4).

1251. Like the EIP, the VP states that "[t]he enormity of the challenge demands a whole-of-society response," id. at 12 (5) (emphasis added), and calls for more federal agencies to be involved through "cross-agency collaboration," id. The Surgeon General adopted and echoed the VP's call for a "whole-of-society" response.

1252. The VP admits that "it was not always clear what was misinformation; in the case of the novel coronavirus, it was often simply not yet clear what was true or where scientific consensus lay," id. at 14 (7), and that "[g]round truth about COVID-19 was rapidly evolving, and even institutional experts were not always aligned on the facts," id. at 15 (8).

1253. According to the VP, "[v]iral posts that claimed to have the answers to the public's most pressing questions appeared online; fact-checkers struggled to evaluate them, and platforms wrestled with whether to leave them up or take them down. Social media influencers of varying backgrounds debated the merits and efficacy of masking, providing detailed breakdowns of their analyses in public posts." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1254. The VP attributes opposition to mask mandates and lockdowns to right-wing political ideology: "In the months before vaccines or treatments emerged, governments worldwide turned to preventative measures such as masking requirements and lockdowns. In the US, these measures were quickly framed as affronts to liberty by facets of the US right-wing political spectrum, turning individual responses to the virus into a function of political identity." Id.

1255. The VP suggests that it flagged for censorship COVID-related posts with enormous engagement on social media, reporting for example that "[b]efore the major social media platforms began to take down [one] video—which was in violation of their COVID-19 misinformation policies—[it] amassed tens of millions of views and was shared into a wide variety of communities." Id. at 16 (9).

1257. "It was against this backdrop" of widespread First Amendment–protected speech on social media "that the Virality Project (VP) came together. A collection of research institutions had previously collaborated through the Election Integrity Partnership (EIP) to identify and understand the spread of election mis- and disinformation in the US during the 2020 presidential campaign. In December 2020, these partners jointly observed that the same tactics used to great effect during the 2020 election were already in use to expand the spread of COVID-19 vaccine mis- and disinformation." Id.. The VP used the same tactics as the EIP to engage in "rapid response" to misinformation: "The Project's broad array of institutions enabled information sharing and rapid response when false and misleading information percolated across social platforms." Id. (emphasis added).

1258. The VP was overtly biased against "anti-vaccine" viewpoints from the beginning: "The Project's original framing document articulated the threat: A surge of anti-vaccine disinformation will pose significant challenges to the rollout and public adoption of COVID-19 vaccines in the United States." Id. (bold in original).

1259. Just like the EIP, the VP boasts that it is a "multistakeholder collaboration" that includes "government entities" among its key stakeholders: "The Virality Project adopted a multistakeholder collaboration with civil society organizations, social media platforms, and government entities to respond to misand disinformation around the novel vaccines." Id. at 17 (10) (emphasis added).

1260. "The research institutions that comprised the Election Integrity Partnership—the Stanford Internet Observatory, the University of Washington's Center for an Informed Public, the Atlantic Council's Digital Forensic Research Lab, and Graphika—along with new partners the National Conference on Citizenship (NCoC)'s Algorithmic Transparency Institute and New York University's Center for Social Media and Politics and Tandon School of Engineering—all elected to participate in this new initiative: the Virality Project." Id.

1261. The VP report complains that "the internet has no editorial gatekeepers." Id. at 18 (11).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1262. The VP decries the influence of "social media influencers" such as "Doctors" and "Mommy Bloggers." Id. at 19 (12).

1263. According to the VP, "[t]hese influencers have adopted the best practices of communication in the internet age, and their effectiveness in drawing in online users is made evident by the mass followings they have acquired across social media sites: platforms as varied as Pinterest, Instagram, and YouTube…" Id.

1264. The VP targets misinformation "tactics" that involve speech that the VP does not contend is false or even falsifiable. It states that speakers "use tactics that have persisted over time, many of which have been used in service of spreading mis- and disinformation in contexts beyond the vaccine conversation; for example, the Election Integrity Partnership observed several of these tactics during the lead-up to the 2020 US election." Id.

1265. These "tactics" include such things as "Hard-to-Verify Content: Using content that is difficult to fact-check or verify, such as personal anecdotes"; "Alleged Authoritative Sources: Using or pointing to information from an alleged public health official, doctor, or other authoritative source"; "Organized Outrage: Creating events or in-person gatherings, or using or co-opting hashtags"; and "Sensationalized/Misleading Headlines: Using exaggerated, attention-grabbing, or emotionally charged headlines or click-bait." Id. (bold in original). Notably, none of these "tactics" involves false speech, and all are protected by the First Amendment.

E. The Virality Project Targets Plaintiff Jill Hines and Health-Freedom Groups.

1266. According to the VP report's taxonomy, Plaintiff Jill Hines, the founder of Health Freedom Louisiana, constitutes a "medical freedom influencer[]" who engages in the "tactic" of "Organized Outrage" simply because she "create[ed] events or in-person gatherings" to oppose mask and vaccine mandates in Louisiana. See id. at 9, 19 (2, 12) (bold in original). But this "tactic" is First Amendment–protected activity.

1267. Another "tactic" decried by the VP is "Group super-spreader: An individual account sharing posts into multiple online groups." Id. at 20 (13) (bold in original). This is also quintessential First Amendment expression.

1268. The VP report repeatedly emphasizes the problem of "health freedom" or "medical freedom influencers" like Plaintiff Jill Hines. It identifies "Liberty" as a "trope" of social-media disinformation: "Liberty: Individuals have the right to 'health freedom'; no government or employer should be able to tell people what to put in their bodies." Id. (italics in original) (bold added).

1269. The VP also identifies political and religious opinions—including well-established and widespread views—as "themes" and "tropes" of anti-vaccine "misinformation," such as: "Distrust of industry: Vaccines are produced by profit-motivated pharmaceutical companies that have repeatedly concealed harm in pursuit of profit"; "Religiosity: Vaccines contain materials that are objectionable on religious grounds"; and "Conspiracy: … Governments have covered up information proving vaccines are dangerous, [and] Doctors and politicians who advocate for vaccines have been bought off by 'Big Pharma.'" Id.

1270. Like the EIP, the VP agrees that government pressure pushes social-media platforms to adopt more aggressive censorship policies: "Platforms had started adapting their policies to address vaccine misinformation in early 2019, spurred by public outcry, negative press coverage, and government inquiries…" Id. at 21 (14) (emphasis added).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1271. The VP boasts that its "analysts had to develop a nuanced and nimble understanding of what content constituted policy violations"—evidently because it was flagging content to platforms for censorship in real time. Id. at 21-22 (14-15).

1272. The VP extensively monitored and tracked Americans' speech about COVID-19 and vaccines on social media: "To surface in-scope content, VP's team of analysts were divided into topical detection teams, referred to as pods…. These pods … enabled analysts to develop and ensure sustained familiarity with how the COVID-19 vaccine conversation was evolving within particular communities on public platforms." Id. at 22 (15).

1273. This monitoring involved VP analysts reading and searching Americans' social-media accounts in real time: "Analysts in each pod assessed emerging narratives that were within scope … , surfacing content both via qualitative observation of the pages and accounts, and by using lists of common terms associated with vaccine hesitancy and long-standing anti-vaccine rhetoric." Id.

1274. The VP states that "Anti-vaccine activists and influencers, including those discussed in the Center for Countering Digital Hate's 'Disinformation Dozen' Report … surfaced the greatest amount of content …" Id. at 23 (16).

1275. This covert monitoring of Americans' online speech about vaccine was extensive, sophisticated, and adaptive: "At the beginning of the project, analysts used broad search terms ("vaccine," "jab") to surface relevant content and incidents (specific events or stories), but gradually began to incorporate a combination of machine learning and hand coding to identify additional recurring narratives relevant to the four in-scope categories. This included terms related to medical freedom under "Vaccine Distribution," or severe adverse effects and death under

"Vaccine Safety," among others. As narratives and new keywords emerged throughout the analysis period, analysts continually refined their searches." Id.

1276. This mass-social-media-surveillance project included federal agencies as key "stakeholders": "The Virality Project established a nonpartisan, multi-stakeholder model consisting of health sector leaders, federal health agencies, state and local public health officials, social media platforms, and civil society organizations. These stakeholders provided tips, feedback, and requests to assess specific incidents and narratives, and each entity type brought specific expertise to bear on understanding COVID-19 vaccine hesitancy." Id. at 24 (17).

1278. The government "stakeholders" such as "federal health agencies" and "state and local public health officials" were among those who "provided tips" and "requests to assess specific incidents and narratives," i.e., flagging content for social-media censorship. Id.

1279. The VP emphasizes the role of "Federal government agencies" in the VP, including the CDC and the Office of Surgeon General: "Federal government agencies served as coordinators for national efforts. The Virality Project built strong ties with several federal government agencies, most notably the Office of the Surgeon General (OSG) and the CDC, to facilitate bidirectional situational awareness around emerging narratives. The CDC's biweekly "COVID-19 State of Vaccine Confidence Insights" reports provided visibility into widespread anti-vaccine and vaccine hesitancy narratives observed by other research efforts." Id. (bold in original).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1280. Social media platforms served as stakeholders alongside federal and state officials: "Platforms were the final stakeholders in the VP effort. Six social media platforms engaged with VP tickets—Facebook (including Instagram), Twitter, Google (including YouTube), TikTok, Medium, and Pinterest—acknowledging content flagged for review and acting on it in accordance with their policies. On occasion, platforms also provided information on the reach of narratives previously flagged by VP, which provided a feedback loop leveraged to inform the Project's understanding of policies and ongoing research." Id. at 25 (18) (bold in original) (italics added).

1281. Thus, the VP openly proclaims that it "flagged" "content … for review" to platforms to "act[] on it in accordance with their policies." Id. Government officials provided "tips" to the VP about misinformation on social media, and the VP flagged it for platforms for censorship.

1282. The VP emphasizes the importance of federal officials and social-media platforms in its collaboration on censorship: "As the effort progressed, input from these partners was crucial in defining the VP's output formats and in surfacing where the impacts of vaccine mis- and disinformation were being felt offline." Id.

1283. The VP engaged in continuous, ongoing communication with federal officials, platforms, and other stakeholders: "The Virality Project delivered 31 weekly briefings focused on increasing situational awareness and enabling the stakeholders working on countering vaccine mis- and disinformation to develop the most effective possible response." Id.

1284. The VP boasts that it "provided strategic insights" to federal officials in combating misinformation: "Briefings directly informed counter-messaging efforts by public health stakeholders … and public health officials (for example, the CDPH), and provided strategic insights to government entities such as the OSG, CDC, and the Department of Health and Human Services." Id. (emphasis added).

1286. Like the EIP, the VP used "tickets" to track social-media narratives, where each "ticket" could encompass many postings: "As part of the Virality Project, analysts created tickets documenting URLs of in-scope content. In total, 911 tickets were created, tracking both specific pieces of misinformation and broader narratives. At the end of the monitoring period, analysts had created 845 tickets tracking specific vaccine misinformation incidents (events or pieces of content) and 66 tickets tracking broad narratives." Id. at 34 (27).

1287. The VP aimed, not just to track, but to "respond to" misinformation: "The Virality Project operated with a team of analysts drawn from across the partner organizations. Workflows were designed to detect, analyze, and respond to incidents of COVID-19 vaccine-related disinformation in online ecosystems." Id. (emphasis added).

1288. "From February to August 2021, VP analysts systematically monitored activity across social media platforms to document emerging narratives and trends in public discourse while also tracking the popularity and spread of older content." Id. (emphasis added).

1289. "The [VP] used the Jira Service Desk software to log mis- and disinformation incidents that were determined to be in scope for specific areas of the public COVID-19-related conversation. For each single incident of anti-vaccine mis- or disinformation surfaced during monitoring, an analyst filed a ticket that provided a brief description of the incident, including engagement numbers at the time of creation and links to relevant social media posts." Id. at 35 (28).

1290. The VP boasts that it targeted online speech for censorship before it could go viral, thus imposing massive prior restraints on the amplification of targeted content: "Tickets also enabled analysts to quickly tag platform or health sector partners to ensure their situational awareness of high-engagement material that appeared to be going viral, so that these partners could determine whether something might merit a rapid public or on-platform response (such as a label)." Id. at 37 (30) (emphasis added).

1291. The VP reported the content in 174 "tickets" to social-media platforms for censorship: "Managers gave all incident analyses a final review for quality-control purposes, to determine appropriate next steps and to make a final decision about whether tickets should be shared with external stakeholders. Of the 911 incidents monitored, 174 were referred to platforms for potential action." Id. (emphasis added).

1292. Like the EIP, the VP appears to have had direct access to Twitter's and YouTube's internal data about speech spreading on its platform, but not Facebook's: "The engagement data or video view data for links associated with each ticket was collected differently depending on the social media platform in question: Facebook and Instagram: CrowdTangle API; Twitter: Twitter API…" Id. at 38 (31).

1293. Like the Surgeon General and the White House, the VP complains that the platforms must make their internal data more available to VP: "Due to limited transparency from social media platforms, engagement is the closest proxy researchers can use to understand what content users are seeing on social media platforms. Metrics such as impression counts are generally unavailable to outside researchers." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1294. The VP's monitoring tracked content with about 6.7 million engagements on social media per week, or over 200 million over the seven months of the reported project: "Average weekly engagement with content tracked across all Virality Project tickets was 6.7 million." Id. at 39 (32).

1296. According to the VP, "[o]f the engagement captured by tickets, more than a third came from content primarily spread by accounts that demonstrated recurring success making content go viral; we refer to them here as 'recurring actors.'" Id. at 41 (34).

1297. The VP boasts that it induced "platform action" against such "recurring actors" in 2021: "Recurring actors drove a majority of engagement in the first half of the study period, but fell off in importance after that, most likely due to platform action against certain users beginning in the late spring of 2021." Id. at 43 (36).

1299. "Four distinct weeks during the monitoring period had incidents observed by Virality Project analysts that generated more than 10 million engagements." Id. at 43 (36).

1300. One of these "Viral Incidents" tracked by the VP was: "In July, posts went viral expressing outrage at attempts by the Biden administration to engage in vaccine outreach." Id. at [4] Report pages 16 & 25 n.43, 36 & 41 n.7, 104 & 122 n.179.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

45 (38). This incident did not involve any vaccine-related misinformation at all, but core political speech: "the Biden administration used the phrase 'door-to-door' to describe a push for on-the-ground community-led efforts to persuade more Americans to get vaccinated. Prominent Republican politicians miscast this as a forced vaccination campaign by 'Needle Nazis' and a prelude to the government knocking on the door to take away guns." Id. at 46 (39).

1301. The VP boasts that censorship enforcement was effective, especially in "deplatforming" key actors: "The decline of content from recurring actors midway through the monitoring period potentially reflects a policy impact, as deplatforming these actors led to an apparent reduction in false or misleading content." Id. at 47 (40).

1302. The VP tracked and flagged "Claims that [supposedly] misrepresent … vaccine mandates," not just misinformation about the vaccines. Id. at 50 (43).

1303. According to the VP, "content" that "leveraged decontextualized statistics from the US Department of Health and Human Services' Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS) database" is misinformation. Id. at 51 (44).

1304. According to VP, it was also misinformation when true adverse health events from vaccines were "shared absent context": "Rare incidents documenting verified adverse health events, including blood clotting and heart inflammation, were shared absent context, often in an effort to present them as common and significant risks." Id.

1305. According to the VP, discussing "breakthrough" cases and "natural immunity" was also misinformation: "False and misleading narratives related to efficacy sought to undermine the perceived benefits of vaccines. These narratives included stories of people diagnosed with COVID-19 after being vaccinated—"breakthrough" cases, particularly in the time of the Delta variant—to promote the idea that the vaccines aren't effective. Later, the idea that natural immunity from infection is superior to immunity from vaccination became a political talking point raised repeatedly by right-leaning political influencers, despite inconclusive scientific evidence." Id.

1306. According to VP, misinformation also included "discussions of vaccine passports and mandates (including months before any state or federal officials began advocating for them)." Id.

1307. The VP also counts as misinformation "claims that the government was headed toward mandating an unsafe vaccine." Id. The government did, of course, eventually mandate the vaccines for most Americans.

1308. The VP also treated Americans' "long-standing mistrust of pharmaceutical companies' profit motives" as part of anti-vaccine misinformation. Id.

1309. "Conspiracy Theories" that "assign blame to … government" are also misinformation to be tracked and censored, according to VP. Id.

1310. According to VP, "personal anecdotes" about "vaccine injuries and severe side effects—ranging from rashes, to blood clots, to death" are also misinformation." Id. at 52 (45).

1311. "Personal anecdotes often made their way into mainstream media coverage after gaining traction online. Distortions of official government statistics—most often from VAERS, described in more depth later in this section—were used both to reinforce the personal anecdotes and for focused misinformation solely discussing the statistics." Id.

1312. According to VP, "stripp[ing] both individual stories and official statistics of important context" is misinformation. Id.

1313. According to VP, "adverse event stories" were objectionable because they were "employed to push back against vaccine mandates." Id. at 52-53 (45-46).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1314. Like the White House and Dr. Fauci, the VP treats Alex Berenson as a major malefactor in spreading COVID-19 vaccine "misinformation." See id. at 54, 57 (47, 50).

1315. Like the White House and Rob Flaherty, the VP flagged and tracked Fox News host Tucker Carlson as a spreader of vaccine misinformation: "In May 2021, Tucker Carlson misrepresented VAERS data on his talk show, decontextualizing it while claiming that 3,362 Americans had died following COVID-19 vaccinations between December 2020 and April 2021, equating to roughly 30 people every day." Id. at 57 (50) (emphasis added).

1316. Health Freedom groups, like Plaintiff Jill Hines's group Health Freedom Louisiana, are particular targets of the VP's tracking and censorship activities.

1317. The VP report includes an entire section on such groups: "Section 3.2.2 – Government Overreach and Medical Freedom Narratives." Id. at 59 (52).

1318. According to the VP, "[o]ne of the primary long-standing themes of anti-vaccine distribution narratives is that mass vaccine distribution constitutes a government overreach. The movement sees vaccine mandates, including, historically, school vaccine requirements, as an assault on 'health freedom' or 'medical freedom.'" Id.

1319. According to the VP, "[i]n 2020, following the emergence of COVID-19, these same health freedom groups expanded their vaccine protests to social distancing, masks, and other prevention measures." Id. This includes Plaintiff Jill Hines.

1320. The VP describes the role of Facebook groups—also employed by Jill Hines—in organizing health freedom groups to oppose vaccine mandates: "groups emerged on platforms such as Facebook during the pandemic, with names specifically related to COVID-19 or mRNA vaccines, to assist in discoverability; some grew their numbers into the tens of thousands." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1321. The VP focused, not just on misinformation about vaccines, but political speech and political organizing against "vaccine passports and vaccine mandates": "During the VP's period of analysis, narratives about government overreach and medical freedom focused on two areas of controversy: vaccine passports and vaccine mandates." Id.

1322. The VP treats as misinformation political speech and political opinions on these topics: "This amplification hinged upon misleading framing that suggested the implementation of any form of vaccine passport would be compulsory. In reality, the plans for many programs were entirely optional. Other framing from domestic right-leaning political actors created a portrait of governments as prying or snooping into citizens' private matters." Id. at (60) 53.

1323. The VP views virtually all conservative speech opposing government-imposed COVID mandates as misinformation: "Activists pushed the idea that through a passport system, governments and 'Big Tech' were limiting the public's freedoms—situating the conversation within a larger set of narratives surrounding pandemic public health regulations like mask mandates, lockdowns, and social distancing." Id.

1324. Like the EIP, the VP specifically flagged Jim Hoft's The Gateway Pundit as a purveyor of misinformation and COVID "conspiracy theories: "Headlines sometimes hawked conspiracy theories: one Gateway Pundit headline, "The Great Reset: Big Tech and Big Pharma Join Forces to Build Digital COVID Vaccination Passport," was a nod to groups such as QAnon…. The article alleged collusion between Big Tech and Big Pharma that would threaten 'individual rights.'" Id. at 60-61 (53-54) & 68 (75) n.49 (citing Joe Hoft, The Great Reset: Big Tech and Big Pharma Join Forces to Build Digital COVID Vaccination Passport, Gateway Pundit (January 17, 2021), https://thegatewaypundit.com/great-reset-big-tech-big-pharma-joining-forces-build-digital-covid-vaccination-passport).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1325. Other right-leaning speakers flagged by the VP include One America News Network, Breitbart News, and others. Id. at 60 (53).

1326. The VP attributes political successes such as state-level bans on vaccine passports to such supposed misinformation. Id. at 61 (54).

1327. The VP attributes opposition to vaccine mandates by employers to such supposed misinformation: "The backlash to COVID-19 vaccine requirements for employment and other activities parallels the conversation about vaccine passports. It, too, relies on and attempts to exacerbate distrust in public health officials and government institutions." Id.

1328. According to VP, even truthful information about vaccine effects on health that are still being studied constitutes misinformation: "In early 2021, users on Twitter, Facebook, and Reddit reported unverified reproductive side effects, ranging from abnormal menstrual cycles to miscarriages and infertility. … At the time there was no medical consensus on the vaccine's effect on reproductive health, yet anti-vaccine activists presented the theory as fact and evidence of harm. Research is ongoing…." Id. at 66-67 (59-60).

1329. According to VP, even "videos that appeared to be created satirically" are misinformation when they "were taken seriously." Id. at 68 (61).

1330. Alex Berenson is mentioned 49 times in the Virality Project report. Id. at 54, 57, 71, 73, 96-97, 122-23, 188-90, 195, 207-08.[5]

1331. "Health freedom" or "medical freedom" groups are discussed dozens of times in the VP report. The word "freedom" occurs 100 times, almost always in direct connection with a discussion of "health freedom" or "medical freedom" groups, influencers, or content. See id. at 6, [5] Report pages 47, 50, 64, 66, 89-90, 115-16, 181-83, 188, 200-01.

9, 20, 23, 59-62, 66, 70, 74, 77, 82, 84-86, 93-96, 105, 117-18, 121-22, 130-31, 137-38, 141, 143, 187, 197-98, 201, 204, 210, 220-22.[6]

1332. The VP defines "Medical freedom influencers" as actors who "are averse to government interference in individuals' personal lives. While they explicitly advocate for "health freedom" or "vaccine choice," these actors often propagate vaccine doubt by contextualizing the choice with misleading claims of vaccines' adverse medical consequences." Id. at 82 (75).

1333. Fox News host Tucker Carlson, who has wide audiences in Missouri and Louisiana, is cited 42 times in the Virality Project report. See id. at 57, 73, 87, 91-92, 98, 115, 119-20, 122-23, 193, 201, 208, 215-16, 218.[7]

1334. In fact, the VP report cites the entire Fox News channel as a source of vaccine misinformation: "Fox News has played a particularly pivotal role in spreading vaccine misinformation and anti-vaccine beliefs during the COVID-19 pandemic…. [B]etween June 28 and July 11, 2021, Fox News ran 129 segments about the COVID-19 vaccine on its cable broadcast; more than half of those segments included unverified claims that undermined vaccination efforts." Id. at 91 (84).

1335. According to VP, "Fox News television host Tucker Carlson has been one of the most prominent and sensationalist spreaders of false or misleading information about vaccines throughout the COVID-19 pandemic." Id.; see also id. at 91 (describing "Right-wing media personality Tucker Carlson" as part of a "cast of recurring characters" that influenced vaccine hesitancy in Spanish- and Chinese-speaking communities).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1336. The VP also cites Candace Owens and The Daily Wire as purveyors of vaccine misinformation. See, e.g., id. at 86, 92 (79, 85).

1337. The VP cites Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., a well-known anti-vaccine activist with wide followings in Missouri and Louisiana, as one of the most influential purveyors of vaccine misinformation. Id. at 83 (76). The VP describes Kennedy as "especially pernicious" because he has a large audience: "RFK Jr.'s activism is especially pernicious because, like other long-standing influencers, he has a large and committed following and has become somewhat of a household name in the US." Id.

1338. The VP also cites America's Frontline Doctors and its founder, Dr. Simone Gold, as a source of vaccine misinformation. Id. at 87-88 (80-81).

1339. The VP notes that "Simone Gold, a licensed emergency room physician, was the second most prominent PMI across Virality Project's tickets. Gold is the leader of America's Frontline Doctors…. Gold has been influential since the summer of 2020, when the White Coat Summit, an event broadcast online in which members of America's Frontline Doctors spoke on the steps of the Supreme Court. The White Coat Summit promoted hydroxychloroquine both as a preventative measure and as a cure for COVID-19." Id.

1340. The VP treats Dr. Joseph Mercola, another anti-vaccine speaker with wide audiences in Missouri and Louisiana, as a purveyor of vaccine misinformation. Id. at 87 (80). Again, the VP criticizes Mercola precisely because his speech reaches wide audiences. Id.

1341. The VP asserts that Gold's "false and misleading claims about the COVID-19 vaccine" include core political speech like "encouraging her followers to boycott companies for their vaccine protocols" and "organizing a cross-country tour to fight back against 'censorship, chaos, and the undeniable slide towards communism that lurks beneath the tyrannical lockdowns for governmental 'public health' policy'." Id. at 88 (81). To the VP, political "organizing" to oppose vaccine mandates and lockdowns constitutes a "false and misleading claim[]." Id.

1342. The VP asserts that "the right-leaning media ecosystem differs from the rest of the media environment in ways that make it especially vulnerable to the spread of mis- and disinformation." Id. at 91 (84).

1343. The VP states that "[t]he newest iteration of medical freedom, adapted for COVID-19, challenges the legitimacy of government or corporate vaccine mandates and public health interventions specific to COVID-19, including vaccine passport systems and masking requirements." Id. at 93 (86).

1344. The VP states that "medical freedom" groups spread misinformation "across all 50 states": "Medical freedom influencers (MFIs) active in the anti-COVID-19-vaccine movement were fairly distinct from other categories of influencer in that rather than hinging on a handful of key (and often celebrity-status) individuals, they spread their narratives via a franchise model across all 50 states." Id. (emphasis added).

1345. The VP indicates that it tracked and flagged "medical freedom" groups "at a messaging and organizing level," i.e., the level where Jill Hines was targeted: "As medical freedom activists have fought requirements imposed by states, cities, or private employers, they have learned from each others' successes and failures—at a messaging and an organizing level—and have brought those lessons to their local communities. What one state does, another state will often echo." Id. at 94 (87).

1346. Like Andrew Slavitt, the VP treats Alex Berenson as one of the "most significant influencer[s]" who opposes vaccines: "Alex Berenson is perhaps the most significant influencer who defies categorization. A former New York Times reporter and a bestselling novelist with no specific anti-vaccine background …, Berenson … over time evolved into a key player in repeatedly spreading false and misleading information about the COVID-19 pandemic and vaccines. He underplayed the danger of the virus and challenged the efficacy of vaccines and masks, even as evidence supported their value as life-saving public health measures." Id. at 96 (89) (providing an image of Berenson's tweets).

1347. The VP disfavors Berenson because he reaches wide audiences and criticizes the government: "Berenson's popular posts on Twitter notably claimed to be "digging up" or "uncovering" information that was hidden from the public about vaccine safety or effectiveness. In one incident in July 2021, Berenson amplified a conspiracy theory from a statement filed with a lawsuit from America's Frontline Doctors stating that the government was covering up more than 45,000 vaccine-related deaths. Berenson's 17-tweet thread, which received over 16,000 interactions on July 21, 2021, claimed that the CDC had "quietly more than DOUBLED" the number of deaths reported in VAERS, suggesting the CDC had misled the public." Id. at 96-97 (89-90).

1348. The VP notes that Berenson had wide audiences nationwide when he was censored: "Twitter permanently deplatformed Berenson in August 2021 for repeated violations of Twitter's COVID-19 falsehoods policy. At the time he lost his account, he had more than 200,000 followers." Id. at 97 (90).

1349. The VP states that the government pushed for "accountability" from platforms in successfully pressuring them to adopt vaccine-related censorship policies in the years leading up to COVID-19: "During and after the [2018-19 measles] outbreaks, scientists and congressional leaders sought accountability from the platforms, inquiring about the extent to which vaccine hesitancy among impacted communities had been exacerbated by misinformation on their products." Id. at 131 (124).

1350. The VP provides a timeline of policy changes becoming more restrictive of vaccine-related misinformation that shows repeated tightening of policies by Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube once President Biden had been elected. Id. at 133 (126) fig.5.1.

1351. The VP calls for more aggressive censorship policies to target speech that is not false or incorrect and that constitutes core political speech: "While progress has been made since platforms first developed vaccine-related policies in 2019, clear gaps in platform policy exist with respect to moderating vaccine-related content, including posts that employ personalized stories, medical freedom claims, and misleading headlines and statistics." Id. at 143 (136).

1352. The VP also calls for more aggressive action to "suppress content" and "deplatform accounts": "In addition, policies about the actions platforms can take to suppress content, promote trusted voices, and deplatform accounts vary widely from platform to platform and are still not enforced consistently, both within and across platforms." Id.

1354. Like the Surgeon General, the VP argues that "a whole-of-society effort is needed" to stop the spread of so-called misinformation: "[A] whole-of-society effort is needed in which stakeholders build robust and persistent partnerships to ensure that significant high-harm claims can be addressed as they arise." Id. 147 (140).

1355. This "whole-of-society" effort includes an active role for the government in censoring disfavored speech: "The Virality Project sought to do just that by bringing together four types of stakeholders: (1) research institutions, (2) public health partners, (3) government partners, and (4) platforms. Our recommendations recognize the collective responsibility that all stakeholders have in mitigating the spread of mis- and disinformation…" Id.

1357. According to the VP, it used "ingenuity" to facilitate "the intake of tips from … government partners": "An area that required ingenuity was creating a framework for facilitating the intake of tips from civil society and government partners…. However, their tips are often highly valuable, so overcoming this challenge is a priority for future efforts." Id. at 148 (141) (emphasis added).

1358. The VP recommends an even more "streamlined" process for "government partners" to provide "tips" of misinformation to be reported for censorship, and it notes that it received tips through "informal exchanges, such as Zoom meetings or calls with our partners": "Streamline tip line processes for civil society and government partners. Set up an efficient channel for intaking external tips…. The Virality Project often had to leverage informal exchanges, such as Zoom meetings or calls with our partners, to receive the tips verbally or encourage additional reporting. In future projects, external reporting channels should be strengthened via an easier means of reporting and increased access to the reporting channels, especially for partners on the ground (such as health practitioners or government health officials)." Id.

1359. The VP repeatedly cites the work of Surgeon General Murthy, noting that "[d]uring a July 15, 2021, panel with the Virality Project, US Surgeon General Vivek Murthy discussed the importance of vaccination by sharing his own story about COVID-19 … alongside data around the effectiveness of the vaccines." Id. at 149 (142). "In the context of vaccine misinformation specifically, some examples of engagement best practices can be found in the Virality Project's July 15, 2021, hosted discussion with Surgeon General Vivek Murthy…" Id. at 150 (143).

1360. According to VP, "While the federal government (through DHHS, the CDC, and the Surgeon General) has ramped up its engagement and communications, more can be done moving forward. There are several areas where government officials can focus to improve their ongoing response to mis- and disinformation surrounding the COVID-19 vaccines." Id. at 149-50 (142-43).

1362. The VP recommends that the federal government "[i]mplement a Misinformation and Disinformation Center of Excellence (CoE) housed within the federal government," which

"would centralize expertise on mis- and disinformation within the federal government at the Cybersecurity & Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) with its existing mis- and disinformation team," i.e., Brian Scully's group. Id.

1363. The VP's "Recommendations to Platforms" reflect near-verbatim language used by the Surgeon General's Health Advisory: "Consistently enforce policies against recurrent actors. … While many platforms have improved transparency around content moderation, there is still inconsistent enforcement of policies, notably in the case of recurring actors. More consistency and transparency is needed around enforcement practices, particularly when prominent or verified accounts are involved. While past policy environments have been slower to enforce policies against prominent accounts, these are the accounts with the greatest potential for impact. If anything, they may merit closer scrutiny." Id. at 152 (145).

1364. Likewise, the VP recommends that platforms "[c]ontinue to prioritize and improve data sharing. The Virality Project's research would not have been possible without access to public platform data. For privacy reasons, some data understandably may be limited, but in general, establishing standardized guidelines about how platforms can share data with research institutions is needed." Id. at 153 (146).

1365. "Notably, engagement numbers are the closest proxy that researchers have to understand what content users see on social media platforms. However, engagement is not the same thing as impressions, or user views—how many times a piece of content is seen by users. Ideally, access to user impression data would be available, allowing researchers to directly measure when and how content is surfaced to users by social media platforms. Unfortunately, social media platforms often do not make impression data available to researchers; as a result of this chronic gap, assessing impact and reach, or the dynamics of platform curation, remains a significant challenge." Id.

X. Federal Censorship Inflicts Grave, Imminent, and Ongoing Injuries on Plaintiffs.

1366. The foregoing conduct has inflicted and continues to inflict ongoing and imminent injuries on both the private Plaintiffs and the States of Louisiana and Missouri.

A. Defendants Gravely Injure the Individual Plaintiffs.

1367. The individual Plaintiffs provide undisputed evidence of how they have suffered from federally-induced censorship. Docs. 10-3 (Declaration of Dr. Jayanta Bhattacharya), 10-4 (Declaration of Dr. Martin Kulldorff), 10-5 (Declaration of Jim Hoft), 10-7 (Declaration of Dr. Aaron Kheriaty), 10-12 (Declaration of Jill Hines). The Government does not dispute this evidence.

1368. Dr. Bhattacharya attests that, "Because of my views on COVID-19 restrictions, I have been specifically targeted for censorship by federal government officials." Doc. 10-3, ¶ 5. He notes that "[t]he Great Barrington Declaration received an immediate backlash from senior government officials who were the architects of the lockdown policies, such as Dr. Anthony Fauci…" Id. ¶ 13. "Because it contradicted the government's preferred response to COVID-19, the Great Barrington Declaration was immediately targeted for suppression by federal officials." Id. ¶ 14. "Instead, what followed was a relentless covert campaign of social-media censorship of our dissenting view from the government's preferred message." Id. ¶ 15.

1369. As a result of this "covert campaign," Dr. Bhattacharya experiences ongoing injuries, including the de-boosting of search results in Google, id. ¶16; the removal of links to the Great Barrington Declaration in Reddit discussions, id.; the ongoing removal of a YouTube video discussing the Great Barrington Declaration and related issues with Governor DeSantis, id. ¶¶ 17-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

18; the removal of personal Tweets, id. ¶¶ 25-26; the removal of LinkedIn posts, id. ¶¶ 28-29; and account termination by LinkedIn, id. ¶ 30.

1370. Dr. Bhattacharya observes that he lacks access to his colleagues' speech and viewpoints as well, because "social-media censorship has not focused solely on the co-authors of the Great Barrington Declaration, but has swept in many other scientists as well: Twitter, LinkedIn, YouTube, Facebook, they have permanently suspended many accounts—including scientists." Id. ¶ 31.

1371. As Dr. Bhattacharya observers, "[t]hese censorship policies have driven scientists and others to self-censorship, as scientists … restrict what they say on social-media platforms to avoid suspension and other penalties." Id. ¶ 31.

1372. Dr. Bhattacharya attests based on personal experience: "Having observed and lived through the government-driven censorship of the Great Barrington Declaration and its co-authors, it is clear to me that these attacks were politically driven by government actors. … One of the motivations for that was a motivation to create … an illusion of consensus within the public that there was no scientific dissent against lockdowns. [T]he Great Barrington Declaration … posed a political problem for them because they wanted to tell the public that there was no dissent. And so, they had to destroy us. They had to do a devastating takedown." Id. ¶ 32.

1373. Dr. Kulldorff likewise attests that there is "an organized campaign against the Great Barrington Declaration," Doc. 10-4, ¶ 14. He notes that the GBD "was censored on social media in an apparent attempt to prevent it from … 'getting a lot of attention,'" id. ¶ 15; including Google deboosting search results, id., and Facebook removing content related to it, id. ¶ 16.

1374. Dr. Kulldorff also identifies an ongoing campaign of censorship against his personal social-media accounts, including censored personal Tweets on Twitter, id. ¶¶ 17-18; censored posts criticizing mask mandates, id. ¶ 19; ongoing self-censorship to avoid further censorship penalties, id. ¶¶ 20, 27; removal of YouTube content, id. ¶ 21; removal of LinkedIn posts, id. ¶¶ 22-25; and the ongoing permanent suspension of his LinkedIn account, id. ¶ 26.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1375. Dr. Kulldorff has experienced direct censorship of his social-media speech in addition to the Great Barrington Declaration. For example, his Tweets questioning the efficacy of masking and criticizing government mask mandates have been censored and caused him to be suspended from Twitter. Id. ¶¶ 18-19.

1376. Dr. Kulldorff has also engaged in self-censorship to avoid being suspended or removed from social media: "Twitter is an important venue for communicating accurate public health information to the public. Because of the censoring, and the suspension of other scientists, I have had to self-censor myself on the platform." Id. ¶ 20.

1377. Dr. Bhattacharya and Dr. Kulldorff's roundtable discussion with Governor Ron DeSantis—which featured all three co-authors of the Great Barrington Declaration—was removed from YouTube. The roundtable discussion addressed the Great Barrington Declaration and its premises in detail. As Dr. Kulldorff recounts, "On March 18, 2021, I participated in a two-hour roundtable discussion with Governor Ron DeSantis in Florida, along with Dr. Sunetra Gupta at Oxford, Dr. Jay Bhattacharya at Stanford and Dr. Scott Atlas at Stanford. In this discussion, we made remarks critical of COVID-19 restrictions, including mask mandates on children. I stated that 'children should not wear face masks, no. They don't need it for their own protection, and they don't need it for protecting other people either.' … Dr. Gupta stated that "to force [children] to wear masks and distance socially, all of that to me is in direct violation of our social contract.' In the same roundtable, we also argued against vaccine passports. 'Let's try to argue against that from the very beginning before it sort of takes off.' Unfortunately, the video of the roundtable was removed by YouTube, which is owned by Google." Id. ¶ 21.

1378. Dr. Kulldorff also experiences ongoing censorship on "LinkedIn, which is a popular communications platform among scientists and other professionals." Id. ¶ 22-26. LinkedIn has blocked and removed his posts opposing vaccine mandates and promoting the benefits of natural immunity. Id. These included posts in which he and Dr. Bhattacharya "criticized the official Covid-19 response as formulated by Dr. Anthony Fauci." Id. ¶ 25.

1379. Dr. Kulldorff states that he and other scientists engage in self-censorship to avoid being terminated from social-media platforms: "Twitter and LinkedIn are important venues for communicating accurate public health information to other scientists and to the public. Because of the censoring, and the suspension of other scientists, I have had to self-censor myself on both platforms. Sometimes by not posting important public health information." Id. ¶ 27.

1380. Dr. Kulldorff notes that social-media censorship directly affects him as a reader of other scientists' speech on social media, on an ongoing basis, by reducing his access to the thoughts and views of scientists who dissent from the government-mandated orthodoxy: "Social-media censorship has not focused solely on the co-authors of the Great Barrington Declaration but has swept in many other scientists as well. These censorship policies have driven scientists and others to self-censor, as scientists like me restrict what we say on social-media platforms to avoid suspension and other penalties. In fact, the most devastating consequence of censoring is not the actual posts or accounts that are censored or suspended, but the reluctance of scientists to openly express and debate scientific questions using their varied scientific expertise. Without scientific debate, science cannot survive." Id. ¶ 28.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1381. Dr. Kheriaty, also, describes ongoing injuries from social-media censorship of views dissenting from the government-preferred narratives about COVID-19. He experiences an ongoing pattern of censorship and removals lasting over years: "I have always shared peer-reviewed research findings as well as my own opinions and perspectives on Twitter and LinkedIn. It was not until I began posting information about covid and our covid response policies, however, that I encountered censorship on the Twitter platform. This began in 2020 when I published an article on the adverse mental health consequences of lockdowns. The problem became more pronounced in 2021 when I shared my Wall Street Journal article and other information on ethical issues related to vaccine mandates." Doc. 10-7, ¶ 11.

1382. As Dr. Kheriaty notes, "[t]he Twitter censorship took several forms." Id. He describes suffering artificial limitations on the number of followers on his social-media accounts, id. ¶¶ 12-13; "shadow banning" of social-media posts that "challenge[] the federal government's preferred covid policies," id. ¶¶ 14-15; self-censorship to avoid further adverse consequences or permanent bans, id. ¶ 16; and removal of content from YouTube, id. ¶ 17. Dr. Kheriaty specifically notes that the problem of "shadow banning" his social-media posts is ongoing and increasing, as it "intensified in 2022." Id. ¶ 15. Further, he notes that "[t]he pattern of content censored on these social media platforms mirrors closely the CDC and Biden administration policies." Id. ¶ 18.

1383. Dr. Kheriaty describes the ongoing experience of shadow-banning: "I encountered evidence of this shadow-banning in 2021 before I was let go from the University after I started posting on covid topics, and the problem intensified in 2022 following my dismissal, as I continued to post frequently on the ethics of vaccine mandates for competent adults." Id. ¶ 15.

1384. Dr. Kheriaty also experiences ongoing injury as a reader of other speakers' content on social media, as government policies cause censorship and self-censorship of their content as well: "I have several of my friends and colleagues—including Dr. Peter McCollough and Dr. Robert Malone—who were temporarily (McCollough) or permanently (Malone) banned from Twitter for posing peer-reviewed scientific findings regarding the covid vaccines." Id. ¶ 16.

1385. Dr. Kheriaty also engages in self-censorship to avoid more severe penalties from the platforms: "Even though the ethics of vaccine mandates is among my areas of expertise, and an area that has impacted me personally and professionally, I am extremely careful when posting any information on Twitter related to the vaccines, to avoid getting banned. This self-censorship has limited what I can say publicly on topics where I have specific scientific and ethical expertise and professional experience." Id. ¶ 16.

1386. Dr. Kheriaty observes a close link between this ongoing pattern of social-media censorship and speech that criticizes government policies: "The pattern of content censored on these social media platforms mirrors closely the CDC and Biden administration policies. In my experience using these platforms to discuss covid topics, any content that challenges those federal policies is subject to severe censorship, without explanation, on Twitter and YouTube—even when the information shared is taken straight from peer-reviewed scientific literature." Id. ¶ 18.

1387. Plaintiff Jim Hoft attests both ongoing injuries and the imminent expectation of future injuries. Doc. 10-5. Hoft is the "founder, owner, and operator of the popular news website The Gateway Pundit ('GP'), gatewaypundit.com. … Since its founding in 2004, the Gateway Pundit has grown from a one-man blog to one of the internet's largest destinations for conservative news and commentary. In 2021, The Gateway Pundit was ranked fourth on a list of top ten conservative news websites, ranked by monthly web searches, with over 2 million searches per month." Id. ¶ 2. The Gateway Pundit has large social-media followings on multiple platforms: "In particular, GP's Twitter account had over 400,000 followers before it was suspended. GP's Facebook account has over 650,000 followers. GP's Instagram account has over 205,000 followers. GP's YouTube account has over 98,000 followers." Id. ¶ 3.

1388. Hoft notes that The Gateway Pundit's "social media accounts have experienced censorship on all major social-media platforms," which "has followed and reflected the calls for censorship from federal government officials, including in the Biden Administration." Id. ¶ 4. These acts of censorship include suspensions from his Twitter account and another personal Twitter account, id. ¶¶ 6-7, 10; a permanent ban from his Twitter account, id. ¶ 8; labels applied to Twitter posts on personal accounts, id. ¶ 9; warning labels imposed on Facebook posts and other restrictions on his Facebook account, id. ¶ 12; permanent removal of content posted on Facebook, id. ¶ 13; prevention of sharing of Facebook-posted content, id.; removal of content from YouTube, id. ¶ 14; imposition of sanctions on Mr. Hoft's followers for re-posting or amplifying his speech, id. ¶ 15; engaging in self-censorship to avoid permanent bans or other more serious sanctions from the social-media platforms, id. ¶ 16; and demonetization by Google, id. ¶ 19; see also id. ¶¶ 18-20.

1389. Hoft observers that "GP's social media accounts have experienced censorship on all major social-media platforms, including its speech regarding COVID-19 issues and election security. In many instances, we have noticed that this censorship has followed and reflected the calls for censorship from federal government officials, including in the Biden Administration." Id. ¶ 4. "For example, the current Administration has repeatedly called for censorship of social media speech regarding election integrity and so-called 'COVID-19 misinformation.' GP has experienced significant social-media censorship regarding its speech on both of those issues, including on Twitter, Facebook, and YouTube." Id. ¶ 5.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1390. Hoft has experienced censorship for COVID speech that is now widely acknowledged to be true, such as a suspension from Twitter for claiming that the vaccines do not prevent infection, and the claim that COVID deaths are overcounted by including deaths from other causes: "On or about January 2, 2021, Twitter suspended GP's Twitter account (@gatewaypundit) after it posted a tweet that stated, "Then It's Not a Vaccine: Crazy Dr. Fauci Says Early COVID Vaccines Will Only Prevent Symptoms and NOT Block the Infection …What?" Id. ¶ 6; see also id. ¶ 9.

1392. Hoft also experiences a long list of acts of censorship from Facebook: "Facebook frequently imposed warning labels and other restrictions on our content, particularly content related to election integrity and COVID-19. Facebook's censorship was so aggressive that I was forced to hire an assistant to monitor and address censorship on Facebook." Id. ¶ 11; see also id. ¶ 12. Facebook imposes labels on Hoft's content that require the reader, before viewing Hoft's content, to click-through a Facebook-imposed screen that states: "The Gateway Pundit is an American far-right news and opinion website. The website is known for publishing falsehoods, hoaxes, and conspiracy theories." Id. at 12. It also labels Hoft's postings as "Missing Context" even when their truth is undisputed. Id. at 20-23. And it labels expressions of core political opinion as "Partly False." Id. at 28; see also id. 29-58 (many other examples of such labeling and blocking from reposting on Facebook and Twitter).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1393. As Hoft notes, Facebook also prevents Hoft's audiences from reposting or amplifying his content: "Facebook also [dis]courages (or otherwise outright prohibits) the public from sharing our content with their social networks." Id. ¶ 13. Hoft describes this second-order censorship in detail: "The social-media platforms have extended their censorship policies to our followers as well. We have received numerous reports from followers that they have received temporary suspensions or other adverse actions from social-media platforms (such as seven-day suspensions of their Facebook accounts) for re-posting or amplifying our content. This chills our followers from re-posting, re-tweeting, or otherwise amplifying our content. The risk of being locked out of Facebook for seven days, or suffering other forms of censorship, deters our followers from amplifying our content on social media platforms, which reduces the reach of our message." Id. ¶ 15.

1394. Hoft also describes ongoing self-censorship to avoid more severe penalties on social media: "These social-media censorship policies chill GP's freedom of expression on social media platforms as well. To avoid suspension and other forms of censorship, we frequently avoid posting content that we would otherwise post on social-media platforms, and we frequently alter content to make it less likely to trigger censorship policies." Id. ¶ 16.

1395. Hoft observes that the censorship of his content on social media closely tracks the censorship preferences of federal officials: "Based on my close observation of the patterns of censorship of GP's social-media accounts and related accounts in recent years, I have strong reason to infer that federal government officials are directly involved in the censorship of our speech and content." Id. ¶ 17. Hoft's posts that have faced censorship include posts criticizing the FBI, id. at 9; and criticizing the administration of the 2020 election, id. at 11;

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1396. Hoft continues to experience censorship, including up to the date he executed his declaration. For example, he received a strike on YouTube on May 14, 2022, and YouTube removed the video he had posted, for speech regarding election integrity that discussed the problem of election fraud and raised questions about the outcome of the 2020 Presidential election, including money Idaho illegally received from Mark Zuckerberg and other problems relating to voter fraud. Id. ¶ 14.

1397. Plaintiff Jill Hines is the "Co-Director of Health Freedom Louisiana, a consumer and human rights advocacy organization." Doc. 10-12, ¶ 2. Hines's "organization engages in public advocacy on behalf of Louisiana citizens on issues of health freedom and fundamental human rights. [Hines] ha[s] testified before the Louisiana legislature approximately 20 times on such issues." Id. ¶ 3. Hines attests that, "Because our organization recognizes the need to educate and inform the public of their rights regarding state and federal laws concerning vaccinations, we have experienced social media censorship of our speech regarding vaccine information." Id.¶ 2. Hines has "approximately 13,000 followers each on Health Freedom Louisiana and Reopen Louisiana." Id. ¶ 2. Among other things, Hines' organization "advocate[s] against the imposition of mask mandates on children, especially during prolonged periods, as in schools." Id.¶ 4. Hines also "launched a grassroots effort called Reopen Louisiana on April 16, 2020 to help expand our reach on social media and take on the issues surrounding the continued government shutdown." Id. ¶ 6.

1398. Hines describes continuous and ongoing censorship on social media from pressure wielded by federal officials: "In the last two years, any information that was not positive in nature or conveyed adverse events associated with shutdown or mitigation efforts was deemed 'misinformation.' Dr. Anthony Fauci has used the term repeatedly and it has been adopted by the press and media." Id. ¶ 5. Hines continues to suffer ongoing social-media censorship, and the acts of censorship include application of warnings on Facebook content, id. ¶ 8; the reduction of her reach to audiences on Facebook, id.; removal of content and sanctions, including 30-day suspensions, from Facebook, id. ¶ 9; 24-hour suspensions that prevented her from organizing people to advocate to the Louisiana legislature, id. ¶ 10; shadow-banning and dramatically restricting the reach of her speech to its audiences, id. ¶ 10; and the complete de-platforming of Facebook groups intended to organize Louisianans to petition their government, id. ¶¶ 13-14. Ms. Hines states that "[r]emoving our closed group at such a crucial time effectively stopped our ability to communicate with our representatives in the state legislature." Id. ¶ 14. "To say the cards are stacked against me is an understatement." Id. ¶ 16.

1399. Hines attests that the censorship campaign against her social-media speech is ongoing, noting that "[p]osts pointing to lack of safety of masking were and are targeted, as well as articles that mention adverse events of vaccinations, including VAERS data." Id. ¶ 9. She continues to suffer specific, new acts of censorship, including right up to the time when she executed her Declaration on June 9, 2022: "The most recent restriction [was] in late May 2022." Id. Ms. Hines notes that "[m]y personal Facebook page, and the Facebook pages of both Health Freedom Louisiana and Reopen Louisiana, are all under constant threat of being completely deplatformed. My personal account is currently restricted for 90 days." Id. ¶ 12.

1400. Hines reports that acts of censorship of her COVID-19-related speech have occurred continuously up to the present: "Over the last year and a half since we noticed social-media censorship beginning in October 2020, my pages have been hit with numerous 'fact checks' and 'community standards' violations." Id. ¶ 11.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1401. Hines has observed a link between the censorship that her groups have experienced and the public demands for censorship from federal officials: "Many similar threats from federal officials followed … especially as covid became a public concern. In the last two years, any information that was not positive in nature or conveyed adverse events associated with shutdown or mitigation efforts was deemed 'misinformation.' Dr. Anthony Fauci has used the term repeatedly and it has been adopted by the press and media." Id. ¶ 5.

1402. Social-media censorship dramatically reduces the reach of Hines's speech: "our analytics showed that we were reaching approximately 1.4 million people in a month's time on one of our Facebook pages, but after sharing photos of the mouths of children suffering from impetigo from long-term mask use, our page received a warning and our reach was reduced to thousands." Id. ¶ 8.

1403. Hines experiences an ongoing campaign of social-media censorship that extends to the present, the date she executed her declaration: "This began a long series of attempts to censor our posts on Facebook and other social-media platforms. Posts pointing to lack of safety of masking were and are targeted, as well as articles that mention adverse events of vaccinations, including VAERS data. I was completely restricted from Facebook for 30 days starting in January 2022 for sharing the image of a display board used in a legislative hearing that had Pfizer's preclinical trial data on it. The most recent restriction, in late May 2022, was for re-posting an Epoch Times article that discussed a pre-print study detailing increased emergency calls for teens with myocarditis following covid vaccination." Id. ¶ 9.

1404. Censorship of Hines's social-media speech directly impairs her efforts to engage in political organization to petition her government to change its policies: "One post in particular that was hit with a 'community standards' warning on October 6, 2020, was a 'call to action' asking people to contact their legislators to end the governor's mask mandate. On the same day, we were asking people to testify during the Legislature's Second Extraordinary Session regarding a bill … that would prohibit a covid vaccine employee mandate. I was prohibited from posting for 24 hours on all pages, including my own. When I was finally able to post again, our reach was significantly diminished, compared with our 1.4 million per month rate beforehand. Our page engagement was almost non-existent for months. It felt like I was posting in a black hole. Each time you build viewership up, it is knocked back down with each violation. Our current analytics show Reopen Louisiana is reaching around 98,000 in the last month and Health Freedom Louisiana is only reaching 19,000. There are warnings when you search for Health Freedom Louisiana. People that regularly interacted with our page were never heard from again. Some people who did find the page later on, asked us where we went." Id. ¶ 10.

1405. Hines suffers repeated censorship on individual posts as well, including undisputedly truthful information: "Over the last year and a half since we noticed social-media censorship beginning in October 2020, my pages have been hit with numerous 'fact checks' and 'community standards' violations. Articles with health concerns related to mask wearing have been targeted … as well as articles relating to pregnant women being vaccinated. … Data taken directly from VAERS was flagged as misinformation and we received 'fact checks' for that as well, even if it contained a disclaimer about causation." Id. ¶ 11.

1406. Hines attests that she is under current and constant threat of more severe censorship penalties, including deplatforming: "My personal Facebook page, and the Facebook pages of both Health Freedom Louisiana and Reopen Louisiana, are all under constant threat of being completely deplatformed. My personal account is currently restricted for 90 days." Id. ¶12.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1407. Hines engages in self-censorship to avoid more severe penalties: "On many occasions, I have altered the spelling of words, used emoji's, or placed links in comments to avoid censorship." Id. ¶ 12.

1408. Hines's health-freedom groups were completely deplatformed, inflicting a severe and direct injury on her ability to engage in political organization to amplify her message and petition the government: "two of our Facebook groups were completely deplatformed, effectively disbanding a group of more than two thousand people who were organized to engage in direct advocacy to our state legislature, on two separate occasions. There were two groups that were deplatformed: HFL Group and North Shore HFL. … HFL Group had almost 2,000 people, and North Shore HFL had less than 500 before it was taken down." Id. ¶ 13.

1409. This censorship directly interfered with the core political speech and advocacy of Hines and thousands of Louisianans: "The last post I made in our HFL Group on July 13, 2021, was a 'call to action' for the upcoming Veto Session, asking people to contact legislators regarding health freedom legislation. During the regular legislative session, we had two bills that were passed successfully, but both were vetoed by the governor, including a hugely popular bill that prohibited the addition of vaccine information on a state issued driver's license. The other bill provided immunity from liability for businesses that did not impose a covid vaccine mandate. Removing our closed group at such a crucial time effectively stopped our ability to communicate with our representatives in the state legislature." Id. ¶ 14.

1410. To this day, Hines's political message, and those of thousands of Louisianans, is greatly diminished from this censorship: "After North Shore was deplatformed, we looked for alternatives for daily communication. We were to the point of speaking in code on Facebook, so moving away from traditional social media was the only option. We currently have 80 members in a chat app called GroupMe. We have no statewide reach with that tool." Id. ¶ 15.

1411. Censorship undercuts Hines's ability to "effectively communicate with people," including Louisiana state officials, about her political views: "It has been incredibly frustrating knowing that the government's narrative is going unchallenged and that we have not been able to effectively communicate with people. Knowing that government agencies colluded with Facebook to suppress the messaging of groups like mine while paying exorbitant amounts to promote vaccinations and covid policies has been especially disheartening. To say the cards are stacked against me is an understatement." Id.¶ 16.

B. Defendants Gravely Injure Similarly Situated Speakers and Listeners.

1412. Plaintiffs' unrebutted evidence demonstrates that other similarly situated speakers have suffered and are suffering similar, ongoing, and imminent injuries from government-induced censorship on social media.

1413. For example, Michael Senger had over 112,000 followers on Twitter, including in Missouri and Louisiana; he attests that he was twice suspended from Twitter and then permanently banned for posting Tweets critical of government policies for responding to COVID-19. Doc. 10-2, ¶¶ 4-8. He was temporarily suspended twice for tweets criticizing the FDA's emergency approval of COVID vaccines and for posting a video document public officials' statements on vaccine effectiveness. Id.¶ 4-6. On March 8, 2022, he was permanently suspended from Twitter for posting a statement of core political opinion criticizing government policy, stating that "every COVID policy—from the lockdowns and masks to the tests, death coding, and vaccine passes—has been one, giant fraud." Id.¶ 7-8. This permanent suspension was inconsistent with Twitter's own policies. Id.¶ 10. Senger attests that the censorship inflicts ongoing harm on him, both

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"personally and professionally": "I discovered a gift that I had for writing and developed a network of thousands of intelligent people from all over the world with whom I had a close relationship discussing these and other issues. Now I have been silenced and cut off from all of them, with no viable way of getting that network back or promoting my work, seemingly for the sole crime of being too articulate in vocalizing my beliefs." Id. ¶ 13.

1414. Jeff Allen is the proprietor of "NewsTalkSTL, a popular news talk radio station in the St. Louis, Missouri region," which "enjoys a substantial Missouri audience." Doc. 10-8, ¶¶ 2-3. His station posts content on YouTube, and he describes how the station "has been targeted by YouTube from the moment of its launch in July 2021" through the present, including flagging the station's first promotional video, and issuing "strikes" for "COVID-related and election-related 'misinformation.'" Id. ¶¶ 4-6. These include removing a video of a show that "featured discussion of timely COVID issues, including testing and vaccines and treatments," and issuing a strike for that posting. Id. ¶¶ 9-10. His station "continued to receive strikes" from YouTube "in the first week of January and into February, 2022" for COVID-related content, id. ¶ 12. On March 14, 2022, Allen's station aired a show on "election integrity" that did not claim any election was stolen, but discussed polling data indicating that many Americans have grave concerns about election integrity. Id. ¶¶ 13-14. On March 21, 2022, YouTube permanently removed the station's channel as a result of that posting. Id.¶ 15. "In so doing, YouTube deleted all of our content and prevented any more posts, silencing our voice and our expression from the platform entirely." Id.¶ 16.

1415. Allen has also experienced significant and ongoing censorship from Facebook: "Facebook has also targeted our content, pulling advertisements and issuing temporary suspensions, also for COVID and election-related 'misinformation.'" Id. ¶ 18.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1416. Mark Changizi is a commentator on Twitter with 37,000 followers, including many in Missouri and Louisiana. Doc. 10-9, ¶ 7, 38. Changizi experiences longstanding and ongoing censorship on Twitter, including a first suspension on April 20, 2021 "for linking to an article on the safety and efficacy of face masks," id. ¶ 18; additional suspension on June 25, 2021, id.¶ 19; having his account secretly "heavily censored and deboosted," meaning that "the user's tweets are de-platformed—they appear in Twitter feeds much less frequently and replies to other posts may be hidden," id. ¶ 20; covert loss of followers, much like Dr. Kheriaty, ¶ 21; and a permanent Twitter suspension on December 18, 2021, for tweets comparing the danger of COVID-19 to the flu and promoting the benefits of natural immunity, id. ¶ 23. He experiences similar shadow-banning by YouTube, as his "follower-ships at YouTube also plateaued and reversed despite the fact that [he] was very active," id. ¶ 31. He observes that Twitter is also censoring his private direct messages to other Twitter users, id. ¶¶ 32-35. And two of his YouTube videos are also censored with their content removed from YouTube. Id. ¶ 36.

1417. Changizi engages in self-censorship on social media to avoid more severe penalties, id. ¶¶ 39-42, and he has "become very careful about what I say on Twitter and YouTube (and Facebook and Instagram) to avoid suspension." Id. ¶ 39.

1418. Changizi perceives a link between the censorship he experiences and pressure from federal officials, id.¶¶ 43-47. He observes: "Twitter notoriously suspends only those who question the wisdom and efficacy of government restrictions, or who cast doubt on the safety or efficacy of the vaccines." Id.¶ 50. He also observes the pro-government bias in social-media censorship decisions: "there are no examples of Twitter suspending individuals who have spread misinformation from the other side—by, for example, exaggerating the efficacy of masks or the threat the virus poses to children." Id.¶ 51.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1419. Daniel Kotzin observes that his censorship at Twitter began in September 2021, after which he was suspended by Twitter four times, including a 24-hour suspension, two seven-day suspensions, and a permanent ban. Doc. 10-10, ¶¶ 11-12. He received these penalties for tweets questioning whether COVID vaccines reduce infection and transmission, referring to natural immunity, and criticizing government policies on lockdowns and mask mandates. Id. ¶¶ 13, 15, 17. He was permanently suspended on April 29, 2022, for a truthful tweet stating: "Myocarditis, pericarditis, blood clots, and strokes are known potential side effects of covid vaccination. That is not my idea of safe." Id. ¶ 19.

1420. Kotzin attests that "[p]ermanent expulsion from Twitter has been devastating for me. I had spent 2 years building my Twitter following. Two years ago, I had fewer than 100 followers, and at the time of my permanent suspension I had nearly 32,000. When my account is suspended, I am unable to communicate with my followers." Id. ¶¶ 21-23.

1421. Kotzin observes an increase in censorship on Twitter after the Surgeon General's Request for Information issued on March 3, 2022. "Based on my observations and extensive Twitter use, many more accounts than usual have been suspended since the Surgeon General's RFI on March 3." Id. ¶ 25. This increase in censorship affected Kotzin directly: "Since the Surgeon General's Request for "health misinformation" in March [2022] I have been suspended four times by Twitter, and have now been permanently banned." Id. ¶ 35.

1422. Kotzin notes that suspension results in loss of one's own prior expression: "When an account is permanently suspended, everything the person ever wrote is erased and cannot be accessed by anyone." Id. ¶ 27.

1423. Kotzin describes that he "methodically self-censored" to avoid permanent suspension: "Since the [Surgeon General's] RFI, many of us who are critical of government covid policies have been regulating our speech more carefully than ever, because we have noticed that more of us are getting suspended than ever before, and we don't want to risk losing our audience. I considered the possibility of 'permanent suspension' to be such a devastating prospect that I methodically self-censored." Id. ¶¶ 28-29; see also id. ¶¶ 31-32.

1424. Kotzin observes a close link between social-media censorship and the federal government's policies and preferred narratives: "Twitter suspends only those who question the wisdom and efficacy of government restrictions, or those who cast doubt on the necessity, safety or efficacy of the vaccines. If all or almost all suspensions are targeted at critics of the government and government policies, and no or almost no suspensions are targeted at purveyors of factually incorrect information, then it is not 'misinformation' that is being censored, but criticism of the government." Id. ¶¶ 34-35.

1425. Joshua McCollum is a concerned parent in a school district in Missouri. Doc. 10-14, ¶¶ 1-4. Like Hines, he has experienced censorship that directly interferes with his ability to organize, associate with like-minded people, and petition his local government: "On or about July 28, 2021, in the midst of discussing with others a recent school board meeting related to masks, and whether FHSD would keep its policy of optional masking versus change their policy to mandatory masking, [McCollum] decided to launch an online petition to encourage the board members to keep their optional masking policy and not change to mandatory masking." Id. ¶ 9. Through his account on Nextdoor (a Meta/Facebook platform), he posted this petition on change.org, and "[t]he posting of this petition on change.org was the beginning of the shadow-banning and blocking of my Nextdoor account." Id. ¶ 11. Comments were blocked from his Nextdoor account, and then his Nextdoor account was suspended for one month for "spreading misinformation." Id.¶¶ 12-14. This censorship prevented him from organizing, associating with others, and petitioning his local government, when those on the other side of the issue were allowed to do so: "Subsequently, on August 12, 2021, FHSD decided to reinstate their mandatory masking policy, shortly after the voice of myself and the 280 fellow petition signers was suppressed. There were petitions encouraging reinstatement of mandatory masking, but our contrary petition was suppressed by Nextdoor. I am a parent simply trying to have a voice in my local school district and its policies regarding my own children, but social media has stooped down to censor even my voice within my local community." Id.¶¶ 15-17.

1426. Jessica Marie Gulmire is a freelance journalist for the Epoch Times who resides in Missouri, and has readership in Missouri and Louisiana. Doc. 10-15, ¶¶ 1-3. Gulmire has "been censored numerous times by Facebook and Twitter even before I joined The Epoch Times in the summer of 2021," as her "personal posts regarding excessive COVID-19 measures and regarding the election were repeatedly flagged and taken down by Facebook and Twitter." Id. ¶¶ 7-8. Her journalism for the Epoch Times has also been censored by Facebook, including an article questioning the evidence for vaccinating pregnant women with COVID-19 vaccines that was later validated by Pfizer documents, id. ¶¶ 10-13; and an article in March 2022 for The Federalist about the People's Convoy of truckers in the United States supporting their Canadian counterparts, id. 18-19. She has also had eleven articles about "mask mandates, vaccines, lockdowns and mental health" censored on Pinterest, id. ¶ 17.

C. Defendants Gravely Injure the State Plaintiffs, Louisiana and Missouri.

1. Fundamental policies favoring freedom of speech for their citizens.

1427. Both Louisiana and Missouri have adopted fundamental policies favoring freedom of speech, without government-induced censorship, for their citizens. LA. CONST. art. I, § 7; MO. CONST. art. I, § 8.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2. Direct censorship of the States and their political subdivisions.

1428. Both Louisiana and Missouri, and their political subdivisions, have experienced direct social-media censorship on COVID and related issues. For example, Louisiana's Department of Justice—the office of its Attorney General—was directly censored on YouTube for posting video footage of Louisianans criticizing mask mandates and COVID-19 lockdown measures on August 18, 2021—on August 18, 2021, just after the federal Defendants' most vociferous calls for censorship of COVID "misinformation." Bosch Decl., Doc. 10-13, ¶ 7.

1429. In addition, a Louisiana state legislator was censored by Facebook when he posted content addressing vaccinating children against COVID-19. Bosch Decl., Doc. 10-13, ¶ 9.

1430. St. Louis County, a political subdivision of Missouri, conducted public meetings regarding proposed county-wide mask mandates, at which some citizens made public comments opposing mask mandates. Flesh Decl., Doc. 10-6, ¶ 7. Missouri's open-meetings law required St. Louis County to post publicly the videos of those meetings, but YouTube censored the entire videos of four public meetings, removing the content, because some citizens publicly expressed views that masks are ineffective. Id.

3. The States' interest in following the uncensored discourse of their citizens.

1431. Patrick Flesch, Director of Constituent Services for the Missouri Attorney General's Office, explains that he is "personally involved in, receiving, reviewing, and responding to thousands of communications from Missouri constituents per year." Doc. 10-6, ¶ 3. He explains that being able to follow Missourians' uncensored speech on social media is essential for him to do his job effectively, as understanding Missourians' true thoughts and concerns on policy matters like election integrity and COVID-19 is necessary to craft policies and messages that are responsive to constituents' actual concerns. Doc. 10-6, ¶ 3-4. This "includes monitoring activity and mentions on multiple social media platforms, including Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube." Id. "I monitor these sorts of trends on a daily or even hourly basis when needed on behalf of the Office." Id. (emphasis added). For example, regarding the censorship of St. Louis County's video of its public meeting where citizens opposed mask mandates, Flesch notes: "This video is just the sort of information that is important for me to review, and yet it was unavailable for a critical period of time due to online censorship of speech questioning the efficacy of mask mandates." Id.¶ 7. Likewise, regarding YouTube censoring Jeff Allen's radio station NewsTalkSTL, and Nextdoor censoring Joshua McCollum's online petition, Flesch observes: "These examples are just the sort of online speech by Missourians that it is important for me and the Missouri Attorney General's Office to be aware of." Id. ¶¶ 9.

1432. As Flesch attests, "The kinds of speech discussed above and in the Complaint in this case—such as speech about the efficacy of COVID-19 restrictions, and speech about issues of election security and election integrity—are matters of core interest and high importance to me in my work on behalf of the AGO. When such speech is censored on social media, it makes it much harder for me to do my job and to understand what Missourians really are concerned about." Id.¶ 10.

1433. As Mr. Flesch explains in detail: "Issues regarding COVID-19 responses (such as mask mandates imposed by municipalities and school districts on schoolchildren) and election security and integrity have been of critical importance to Missourians in recent months and years. … It is very important for me to have access to free public discourse on social media on these issues so I can understand what Missourians are actually thinking, feeling, and expressing about such issues, and so I can communicate effectively with them." Id. ¶ 5. "[O]nline censorship of free public discourse on social-media companies has hampered my ability to follow Missourians' speech on these issues." Id. ¶ 6.

1434. Ashley Bosch, Communications Officer for the Louisiana Department of Justice, attests on behalf of the State of Louisiana: "Part of my job is to gather and synthesize topical subject matters that are important to Louisiana citizens, on behalf of the Department." Doc. 10-13, ¶ 4. "Understanding what subject matters and issues are important to Louisianans is critical for the Department to formulate policies and messaging that will address the concerns expressed by our constituents." Id. This "includes monitoring activity and mentions on social media platforms, including Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, and YouTube." Id. Doc. 10-13, ¶ 4. "It is very important for me to have access to free public discourse on social media on these issues so I can understand what our constituents are actually thinking, feeling, and expressing about such issues, and so I can communicate properly with them." Id. ¶ 5. "Online censorship of Louisiana citizens by social media companies interferes with my ability to follow Louisianans' speech on these issues." Id. ¶ 6. Bosch notes that it is particularly important for her to follow Louisianan's speech on topics of federally-induced censorship: "For example, mask and vaccine mandates for students have been a very important source of concern and public discussion by Louisiana citizens over the last year." Doc. 10-13, ¶ 5. "Louisianans' speech about the efficacy of COVID-19 restrictions, and speech about issues of election security and election integrity are matters of great interest and importance to me in my work on behalf of the Louisiana Department of Justice." Doc. 10-13, ¶ 10.

1435. As noted above, Defendants' witness from the CDC, Carol Crawford, attests to exactly the same government interest in being able to read and follow the true, uncensored opinions of the government's constituents.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1436. Crawford admits that government communicators have a strong interest in tracking what their constituents are saying on social media: "It's helpful for communicators to know what is being discussed because it helps improve our communication materials." Crawford Dep. 53:10-12. Crawford emphasized this point multiple times: "as I mentioned before, it does help … for communicators to know what conversations occurs on social media because it helps us identify gaps in knowledge, or confusion, or things that we're not communicating effectively that we need to adjust." Id. 54:15-20.

1437. Crawford said that CrowdTangle reports "would help us understand what was being discussed on social media about COVID, which helps us look for gaps in information, confusion about facts, things that we might need to adjust our communication materials for." Id. 57:24-58:3. Crawford specifically expressed the concern that, if content was censored or removed from social-media platforms, government communicators would not know what the citizens' true concerns were: She "was wondering if they delete the info will we know those myths or information so we could update communication activity. So if they were deleting content would we know what the themes were." Id. 75:14-18. Accordingly, Crawford wanted to know, "would [CDC] be able to see in CrowdTangle or other reports … what kind of themes were removed so we would still have the full picture of areas of confusion." Id. 75:23-76:1.

4. States' interest in fair, unbiased, open processes to petition state government.

1438. Social-media censorship directly interferes with the States' interest maintaining fair, even-handed, and open processes for petitioning their own governments and political subdivisions. When one side of a debate can organize on Facebook or Nextdoor and petition the government, and the other side cannot because of social-media censorship, that means that state officials never receive a fair, unbiased presentation of their constituents' views.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1439. As noted above, social-media censorship has perverted state and local political processes by artificially restricting access to the channels of advocacy to one side of various issues. For example, social-media censorship prevented Louisiana advocacy groups from organizing effectively to advocate in favor of legislative action on issues of great public import. Hines Decl., Doc. 10-12, ¶¶ 13-14. Likewise, social-media censorship prevented a Missouri parent from circulating an online petition to advocate against mandatory masking at his local school district, a political subdivision of the State. McCollum Decl., Doc. 10-14, ¶¶ 9-17; see also Doc. 10-12, ¶¶ 13-14; Doc. 10-14, ¶¶ 9-17; Doc. 10-15, ¶¶ 11-16, 18-19.

1440. Plaintiff Jill Hines explains that "two of our Facebook groups were completely deplatformed, effectively disbanding a group of more than two thousand people who were organized to engage in direct advocacy to our state legislature, on two separate occasions." Doc. 10-12, ¶ 13. She attests that "[t]he last post I made in our HFL Group on July 13, 2021, was a 'call to action' for the upcoming Veto Session, asking people to contact legislators regarding health freedom legislation.." Id. ¶ 14. Suppressing these Facebook groups directly interfered with state officials' ability to receive free and fair communications of their constituents' concerns: "Removing our closed group at such crucial time effectively stopped our ability to communicate with our representatives in the state legislature." Id.

5. State quasi-sovereign interests.

1441. The States also assert quasi-sovereign interests in protecting the freedom of speech of a substantial segment of their population—i.e., their citizens who are both speakers and audiences of speech on social media; and in ensuring that their citizens receive the full benefit of participation in the federal system—which includes, among other benefits, the full protection of the First Amendment.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1442. Based on the foregoing evidence, social-media censorship afflicts a substantial segment of the populations of both Missouri and Louisiana.

THIRD AMENDED COMPLAINT

NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. In 1783, George Washington warned that if "the Freedom of Speech may be taken away," then "dumb and silent we may be led, like sheep, to the Slaughter." George Washington, Address to the Officers of the Army (March 15, 1783). The freedom of speech in the United States now faces one of its greatest assaults by federal government officials in the Nation's history.

2. A private entity violates the First Amendment "if the government coerces or induces it to take action the government itself would not be permitted to do, such as censor expression of a lawful viewpoint." Biden v. Knight First Amendment Institute at Columbia Univ., 141 S. Ct. 1220, 1226 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). "The government cannot accomplish through threats of adverse government action what the Constitution prohibits it from doing directly." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

3. That is exactly what has occurred over the past several years, beginning with express and implied threats from government officials and culminating in the Biden Administration's open and explicit censorship programs. Having threatened and cajoled social-media platforms for years to censor viewpoints and speakers disfavored by the Left, senior government officials in the Executive Branch have moved into a phase of open collusion with social-media companies to suppress disfavored speakers, viewpoints, and content on social-media platforms under the Orwellian guise of halting so-called "disinformation," "misinformation," and "malinformation."

4. The aggressive censorship that Defendants have procured constitutes government action for at least five reasons: (1) absent federal intervention, common-law and statutory doctrines, as well as voluntary conduct and natural free-market forces, would have restrained the emergence of censorship and suppression of speech of disfavored speakers, content, and viewpoint on social media; and yet (2) through Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act (CDA) and other actions, the federal government subsidized, fostered, encouraged, and empowered the creation of a small number of massive social-media companies with disproportionate ability to censor and suppress speech on the basis of speaker, content, and viewpoint; (3) such inducements as Section 230 and other legal benefits (such as the absence of antitrust enforcement) constitute an immensely valuable benefit to social-media platforms and incentive to do the bidding of federal officials; (4) federal officials—including, most notably, certain Defendants herein—have repeatedly and aggressively threatened to remove these legal benefits and impose other adverse consequences on social-media platforms if they do not aggressively censor and suppress disfavored speakers, content, and viewpoints on their platforms; and (5) Defendants herein, colluding and coordinating with each other, have also directly coordinated and colluded with social-media platforms to identify disfavored speakers, viewpoints, and content and thus have procured the actual censorship and suppression of the freedom of speech. These factors are both individually and collectively sufficient to establish government action in the censorship and suppression of social-media speech, especially given the inherent power imbalance: not only do the government actors here have the power to penalize noncompliant companies, but they have threatened to exercise that authority.

5. Defendants' campaign of censorship includes the recent announcement of the creation of a "Disinformation Governance Board" within the Department of Homeland Security. "Our constitutional tradition stands against the idea that we need Oceania's Ministry of Truth." United States v. Alvarez, 567 U.S. 709, 728 (2012) (plurality op.). Likewise, our constitutional tradition stands against the idea that we need a "Disinformation Governance Board" within our federal domestic-security apparatus.

6. Email correspondence between the CDC, the Census Bureau, and major social-media platforms including Twitter, Facebook, and YouTube was released that reveals yet more evidence that Defendants are directing social media censorship.

7. As a direct result of these actions, there has been an unprecedented rise of censorship and suppression of free speech—including core political speech—on social-media platforms. Many viewpoints and speakers have been unlawfully and unconstitutionally silenced in the modern public square. These actions gravely threaten the fundamental right of free speech and free discourse for virtually all citizens in Missouri, Louisiana, and America, both on social media and elsewhere. And they have directly impacted individual Plaintiffs in this case, all of whom have been censored and/or shadowbanned as a result of Defendants' actions.

8. Under the First Amendment, the federal Government should play no role in policing private speech or picking winners and losers in the marketplace of ideas. But that is what federal officials are doing, on a massive scale – the full scope and impact of which yet to be determined.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

9. Secretary Mayorkas of DHS commented that the federal Government's efforts to police private speech on social media are occurring "across the federal enterprise." It turns out that this statement is quite literally true. This case involves a massive, sprawling federal "Censorship Enterprise," which includes dozens of federal officials across at least eleven federal agencies and components, who communicate with social-media platforms about misinformation, disinformation, and the suppression of private speech on social media—all with the intent and effect of pressuring social-media platforms to censor and suppress private speech that federal officials disfavor.

10. This Censorship Enterprise is extremely broad, including officials in the White House, HHS, DHS, CISA, the CDC, NIAID, and the Office of the Surgeon General; as well as the Census Bureau, the FDA, the FBI, the State Department, the Treasury Department, and the U.S. Election Assistance Commission, among others. And this effort rises to the highest levels of the U.S. Government, including numerous White House officials overseeing the Censorship Enterprise.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

11. This Court has subject-matter jurisdiction because the federal claims arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

12. Venue is proper in this District under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b)(2) because a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred in this District.

PARTIES

A. Plaintiffs.

13. Plaintiff State of Missouri is a sovereign State of the United States of America. Missouri sues to vindicate its sovereign, quasi-sovereign, and proprietary interests.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

14. Andrew Bailey is the Attorney General of Missouri. Under Missouri law, he has authority to bring suit on behalf of the State of Missouri to vindicate the State's sovereign, quasi-sovereign, and proprietary interests, and to protect the constitutional rights of its citizens. See, e.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 27.060.

15. Plaintiff State of Louisiana is a sovereign State of the United States of America. Louisiana sues to vindicate its sovereign, quasi-sovereign, and proprietary interests.

16. Jeffrey M. Landry is the duly elected Attorney General of Louisiana. Under Louisiana law, he has authority to bring suit on behalf of the State of Louisiana to vindicate the State's sovereign, quasi-sovereign, and proprietary interests, and to protect the constitutional rights of its citizens.

17. Missouri and Louisiana, and their agencies and officials, have a sovereign and proprietary interest in receiving free flow of information in public discourse on social-media platforms. This includes an interest in preventing the States, their agencies, and their political subdivisions from suffering direct censorship on social-media platforms when they post their own content. In addition, Missouri and Louisiana, and their agencies and officials, are constantly engaged in the work of formulating, enacting, advancing and enforcing public policies, and formulating messages and communications related to such policies, and they frequently and necessarily rely on the flow of speech and information on social media to inform public-policy decisions. Further, information and ideas shared on social media frequently are repeated in, and impact and influence, public discourse outside of social media, which Missouri and Louisiana, and their agencies and officials, also rely upon.

18. Missouri and Louisiana further have a sovereign interest in ensuring that the fundamental values reflected in their own Constitutions and laws, and the fundamental rights guaranteed to their citizens, are not subverted by the unconstitutional actions of federal officials and those acting in concert with them. Missouri's Constitution provides the highest level of protection for the freedom of speech, protecting it in even more expansive language than that in the First Amendment, and Louisiana's Constitution provides similar protection for free-speech rights. Defendants' unlawful subversion of Missourians' and Louisianans' fundamental rights and liberties under state law violates both the state and federal Constitutions, and it injures Missouri's and Louisiana's sovereign interests in advancing their own fundamental laws and fundamental policies favoring the freedom of speech.

19. In addition, Missouri and Louisiana have a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting the free-speech rights of the vast majority of their citizens, who constitute "a sufficiently substantial segment of its population." Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, ex rel., Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 607 (1982). This falls within Missouri's and Louisiana's "quasi-sovereign interest in the health and well-being—both physical and economic—of its residents in general." Id. This injury "suffices to give the State standing to sue as parens patriae" because "the injury" to Missourians' and Louisianans' free-speech and free-expression rights "is one that the State … would likely attempt to address"—indeed, Missouri and Louisiana have addressed, see, e.g., MO. CONST., art. I, § 8; LA. CONST., art. I, § 7—"through [their] sovereign lawmaking powers." Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 607.

20. Further, Missouri and Louisiana "ha[ve] an interest in securing observance of the terms under which [they] participate[] in the federal system." Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 607–08. This means bringing suit to "ensur[e] that the State and its residents are not excluded from the benefits that are to flow from participation in the federal system." Id. at 608. The rights secured by the First Amendment, and analogous state constitutional provisions, are foremost among the "benefits that are to flow from participation in the federal system." Id. Missouri and Louisiana "have an interest, independent of the benefits that might accrue to any particular individual, in assuring that the benefits of the federal system are not denied to its general population." Id. Missouri and Louisiana sue to vindicate all these interests here.

21. Plaintiff Dr. Jayanta Bhattacharya is a former Professor of Medicine and current Professor of Health Policy at Stanford University School of Medicine and a research associate at the National Bureau of Economic Research. He is also Director of Stanford's Center for Demography and Economics of Health and Aging. He holds an M.D. and Ph.D. from Stanford University. He has published 161 scholarly articles in peer-reviewed journals in the fields of medicine, economics, health policy, epidemiology, statistics, law, and public health, among others. His research has been cited in the peer-reviewed scientific literature more than 13,000 times. He was one of the co-authors of the Great Barrington Declaration, a statement criticizing government-mandated COVID restrictions, which was co-signed by over 930,000 people, including over 62,000 scientists and healthcare professionals. Dr. Bhattacharya and his audiences have experienced significant censorship and suppression of his speech on social-media caused by Defendants, as detailed in his previously filed Declaration, ECF No. 10-3, which is attached as Exhibit C and incorporated by reference herein.

22. Plaintiff Dr. Martin Kulldorff is an epidemiologist, a biostatistician and a former Professor of Medicine at Harvard University and Brigham and Women's Hospital, from 2015 to November 2021. Before that, he was Professor of Population Medicine at Harvard University from 2011 to 2015. He holds a Ph.D. from Cornell University. He has published over 200 scholarly articles in peer-reviewed journals in the fields of public health, epidemiology, biostatistics and medicine, among others. His research has been cited in the peer-reviewed scientific literature more than 25,000 times. He was one of the co-authors of the Great Barrington Declaration, a statement criticizing government-mandated COVID restrictions, which was co-signed by over 930,000 people, including over 62,000 scientists and healthcare professionals. Dr. Kulldorff and his audiences have experienced significant censorship and suppression of his speech on social-media caused by Defendants, as detailed in his previously filed Declaration, ECF No. 10-4, which is attached as Exhibit D and incorporated by reference herein.

23. Plaintiff Dr. Aaron Kheriaty earned his M.D. from Georgetown University, and completed residency training in psychiatry at the University of California Irvine. For many years, he was a Professor of Psychiatry at UCI School of Medicine and the Director of the Medical Ethics P rogram at UCI Health, where he chaired the ethics committee. He also chaired the ethics committee at the California Department of State Hospitals for several years. He is now a Fellow at the Ethics & Public Policy Center in Washington, DC, where he directs the program on Bioethics and American Democracy. He has authored numerous books and articles for professional and lay audiences on bioethics, social science, psychiatry, religion, and culture. His work has been published in the Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post, Arc Digital, The New Atlantis, Public Discourse, City Journal, and First Things. He has conducted print, radio, and television interviews on bioethics topics with The New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, CNN, Fox News, and NPR. He maintains social-media accounts, including the Twitter account @akheriaty, which has over 158,000 followers. Dr. Kheriaty and his audiences have experienced significant censorship and suppression of his speech on social-media caused by Defendants, as detailed in his previously filed Declaration, ECF No. 10-7, which is attached as Exhibit G incorporated by reference herein.

24. Plaintiff Jim Hoft is the founder, owner, and operator of the popular news website The Gateway Pundit. He resides in St. Louis, Missouri. The Gateway Pundit is one of the most popular conservative news sites in the country, with over 2.5 million web searches per day. Mr. Hoft maintains and operates The Gateway Pundit's social-media accounts, including a Facebook account with over 650,000 followers, an Instagram account with over 205,000 followers, and (until its recent permanent suspension) a Twitter account with over 400,000 followers. Mr. Hoft and his audiences have experienced extensive government-induced censorship on social-media platforms, including of his speech on COVID-19 issues and election security issues, as set forth in his Declaration, ECF No. 10-5, which is attached as Exhibit E and incorporated by reference herein.

25. Plaintiff Jill Hines is a resident of Louisiana. She is the Co-Director of Health Freedom Louisiana, a consumer and human rights advocacy organization. She also launched, in 2020, a grassroots effort called Reopen Louisiana. She maintains social-media accounts for both Health Freedom Louisiana and Reopen Louisiana with approximately 13,000 followers. Ms. Hines and her audiences have experienced extensive government-induced censorship of her speech on social media, including her speech related to COVID-19 restrictions, as set forth in her Declaration, ECF No. 10-12, which is attached as Exhibit L and incorporated by reference herein.

B. Defendants.

26. Defendant Joseph R. Biden, Jr., is President of the United States. He is sued in his official capacity.

92. Defendant U.S. Election Assistance Commission ("EAC") is an independent agency within the Government of the United States. According to its website, the EAC " was established by the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA). The EAC is an independent, bipartisan commission charged with developing guidance to meet HAVA requirements, adopting voluntary voting system guidelines, and serving as a national clearinghouse of information on election administration."

93. Defendant Mark A. Robbins is the Interim Executive Director of the EAC. He is sued in his official capacity.

94. Defendant Kristen Muthig is the Director of Communications for the EAC. According to the EAC's website, Muthig "manages media relations, communications strategy and supports the commissioners and EAC leadership." She is sued in her official capacity.

GENERAL ALLEGATIONS

A. Freedom of Speech Is the Bedrock of American Liberty.

95. The First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution states that "Congress shall make no law … abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press…" U.S. CONST. amend. I.

96. Article I, § 8 of the Missouri Constitution provides "[t]hat no law shall be passed impairing the freedom of speech, no matter by what means communicated: that every person shall be free to say, write or publish, or otherwise communicate whatever he will on any subject, being responsible for all abuses of that liberty…." MO. CONST. art. I, § 8. Article I, § 7 of the Louisiana Constitution provides that "[n]o law shall curtail or restrain the freedom of speech or of the press. Every person may speak, write, and publish his sentiments on any subject, but is responsible for abuse of that freedom." LA. CONST. art. I, § 7. All other State Constitutions likewise protect the freedom of speech as a fundamental right of the first order.

97. The freedom of speech and expression guaranteed by the First Amendment is one of the greatest bulwarks of liberty. These rights are fundamental and must be protected against government interference.

1. Government officials lack authority to censor disfavored speakers and viewpoints.

98. If the President or Congress enacted a law or issued an order requiring the suppression of certain disfavored viewpoints or speakers on social media, or directing social media to demonetize, shadow-ban, or expel certain disfavored speakers, such a law or order would be manifestly unconstitutional under the First Amendment.

99. "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion." W. Va. State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 642 (1943).

100. "[T]he First Amendment means that government has no power to restrict expression because of its message, its ideas, its subject matter, or its content." Ashcroft v. ACLU, 535 U.S. 564, 573 (2002) (quotations omitted).

101. "In light of the substantial and expansive threats to free expression posed by content-based restrictions," the Supreme "Court has rejected as 'startling and dangerous' a 'free-floating test for First Amendment coverage ... [based on] an ad hoc balancing of relative social costs and benefits.'" United States v. Alvarez, 567 U.S. 709, 717 (2012) (plurality op.) (quoting United States v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 470 (2010)).

2. Merely labeling speech "misinformation" or "disinformation" does not strip away First Amendment protections.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

102. Labeling disfavored speech "misinformation" or "disinformation" does not strip it of First Amendment protection. "Absent from those few categories where the law allows content-based regulation of speech is any general exception to the First Amendment for false statements. This comports with the common understanding that some false statements are inevitable if there is to be an open and vigorous expression of views in public and private conversation, expression the First Amendment seeks to guarantee." Id. at 718.

103. The Supreme Court has thus rejected the argument "that false statements, as a general rule, are beyond constitutional protection." Id.

104. "Permitting the government to decree this speech to be a criminal offense, whether shouted from the rooftops or made in a barely audible whisper, would endorse government authority to compile a list of subjects about which false statements are punishable. That governmental power has no clear limiting principle. Our constitutional tradition stands against the idea that we need Oceania's Ministry of Truth." Id. at 723 (citing G. ORWELL, NINETEEN EIGHTY–FOUR (1949) (Centennial ed. 2003)).

105. "Were the Court to hold that the interest in truthful discourse alone is sufficient to sustain a ban on speech … it would give government a broad censorial power unprecedented in this Court's cases or in our constitutional tradition. The mere potential for the exercise of that power casts a chill, a chill the First Amendment cannot permit if free speech, thought, and discourse are to remain a foundation of our freedom." Id. at 723.

3. Counterspeech, not censorship, is the proper response to supposed "misinformation."

106. When the Government believes that speech is false and harmful, "counterspeech," not censorship, must "suffice to achieve its interest." Id. at 726. The First Amendment presumes that "the dynamics of free speech, of counterspeech, of refutation, can overcome the lie." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

107. "The remedy for speech that is false is speech that is true. This is the ordinary course in a free society. The response to the unreasoned is the rational; to the uninformed, the enlightened; to the straightout lie, the simple truth." Id. at 727.

108. "The theory of our Constitution is 'that the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market.'" Id. at 728 (quoting Abrams v. United States, 250 U.S. 616, 630 (1919) (Holmes, J., dissenting)).

109. "The First Amendment itself ensures the right to respond to speech we do not like, and for good reason. Freedom of speech and thought flows not from the beneficence of the state but from the inalienable rights of the person. And suppression of speech by the government can make exposure of falsity more difficult, not less so. Society has the right and civic duty to engage in open, dynamic, rational discourse. These ends are not well served when the government seeks to orchestrate public discussion through content-based mandates." Id. at 728.

4. Americans have a First Amendment right to be exposed to a free flow of speech, viewpoints, and content, free from censorship by government officials.

110. The First Amendment also protects the right to receive others' thoughts, messages, and viewpoints freely, in a free flow of public discourse. "[W]here a speaker exists …, the protection afforded is to the communication, to its source and to its recipients both." Va. State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Va. Citizens Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748, 756 (1976).

111. The right to receive information is "an inherent corollary of the rights to free speech and press that are explicitly, guaranteed by the Constitution," because "the right to receive ideas follows ineluctably from the sender's First Amendment right to send them." Bd. of Educ., Island Trees Union Free Sch. Dist. No. 26 v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853, 867 (1982). "The dissemination of ideas can accomplish nothing if otherwise willing addressees are not free to receive and consider them.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

It would be a barren marketplace of ideas that had only sellers and no buyers." Lamont v. Postmaster Gen., 381 U.S. 301, 308 (1965) (Brennan, J., concurring).

112. "A fundamental principle of the First Amendment is that all persons have access to places where they can speak and listen, and then, after reflection, speak and listen once more." Packingham v. North Carolina, 137 S. Ct. 1730, 1735 (2017).

113. "[A]ssuring that the public has access to a multiplicity of information sources is a governmental purpose of the highest order, for it promotes values central to the First Amendment." Turner Broadcasting Sys., Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 663 (1994). Indeed, "the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the public." United States v. Midwest Video Corp., 406 U.S. 649, 668 n.27 (1972) (plurality op.) (quotations omitted).

5. Government officials may not circumvent the First Amendment by inducing, threatening, and/or colluding with private entities to suppress protected speech.

114. It is "axiomatic" that the government may not "induce, encourage, or promote private persons to accomplish what it is constitutionally forbidden to accomplish." Norwood v. Harrison, 413 U.S. 455, 465 (1973) (quotations omitted).

115. A private entity violates the First Amendment "if the government coerces or induces it to take action the government itself would not be permitted to do, such as censor expression of a lawful viewpoint." Knight First Amendment Institute, 141 S. Ct. at 1226 (Thomas, J., concurring). "The government cannot accomplish through threats of adverse government action what the Constitution prohibits it from doing directly." Id.

116. Threats of adverse regulatory or legislative action, to induce private actors to censor third parties' speech, violate the First Amendment. See Hammerhead Enters. v. Brezenoff, 707 F.2d 33, 39 (2d Cir. 1983) ("Where comments of a government official can reasonably be interpreted as intimating that some form of punishment or adverse regulatory action will follow the failure to accede to the official's request, a valid claim can be stated."); see also Bantam Books v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 68 (1963) (holding that a veiled threat of prosecution to pressure a private bookseller to stop selling disfavored books could violate the First Amendment).

117. The unprecedented control over private speech exercised by social-media companies gives government officials an unprecedented opportunity to circumvent the First Amendment and achieve indirect censorship of private speech. "By virtue of its ownership of the essential pathway," a social media platform "can . . . silence the voice of competing speakers with a mere flick of the switch." Turner, 512 U.S. at 656*; see also Knight First Amendment Inst.*, 141 S. Ct. at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). "The potential for abuse of this private power over a central avenue of communication cannot be overlooked." Turner, 512 U.S. at 656.

B. The Dominance of Social Media as a Forum for Public Information and Discourse.

118. Social media has become, in many ways, "the modern public square." Packingham v. North Carolina, 137 S. Ct. 1730, 1737 (2017). Social media platforms provide "perhaps the most powerful mechanisms available to a private citizen to make his or her voice heard." Id.

119. "Today's digital platforms provide avenues for historically unprecedented amounts of speech, including speech by government actors. Also unprecedented, however, is the concentrated control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties." Knight First Amendment Institute, 141 S. Ct. at 1221.

120. The "concentration" of power in social media companies "gives some digital platforms enormous control over speech." Id. at 1224. Defendants have not hesitated to exploit this power.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

121. For example, on information and belief, Facebook has close to 3 billion registered users worldwide and over 124 million users in the United States, including millions of Missourians and millions of citizens of other States.

122. On information and belief, Twitter has more than 340 million users worldwide, including approximately 70 million users in the United States. Approximately 500 million tweets are posted on Twitter every day, and they are accessible to non-Twitter users on the internet. Moreover, Twitter users include large numbers of politicians, journalists, public figures, and others with a disproportionately large impact on public discourse in other forums, so Twitter's impact on public discourse is even larger than its numbers alone reflect.

123. On information and belief, YouTube has more than 4 billion hours of video views every month. Videos on YouTube channels are visible to both YouTube users and to the general public on the internet. An estimated 500 hours of video content are uploaded to YouTube every minute.

124. YouTube is extremely popular among politicians and public figures in reaching their audiences. On information and belief, in 2020, approximately 92 percent of U.S. Senators and 86 percent of U.S. Representatives uploaded content on YouTube.

125. According to a recent Pew Research study, 66 percent of U.S. adults use Facebook, and 31 percent of U.S. adults say they get news regularly on Facebook. Walker et al., News Consumption Across Social Media in 2021, PEW RESEARCH CENTER (Sept. 20, 2021), at https://www.pewresearch.org/journalism/2021/09/20/news-consumption-across-social-media-in-2021/.

126. According to the same study, 72 percent of U.S. adults say that they use YouTube, and 22 percent of U.S. adults say that they regularly get news on YouTube. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

127. According to the same study, 23 percent of U.S. adults say that they use Twitter, and 13 percent of U.S. adults say they regularly get news on Twitter. Id. This comprises 55 percent of Twitter users. Id.

128. According to the same study, 41 percent of U.S. adults say that they use Instagram, and 11 percent of U.S. adults say they regularly get news on Instagram. Id.

129. The free flow of information and expression on social media directly affects non-users of social media as well. Social-media users who are exposed to information, ideas, and expression through social media communicate the same information, ideas, and expression with non-social-media users. News, information, messages, narratives, and storylines that originate on social media are frequently replicated in other forums, such as television, print media, and private discourse. Further, much content posted on social-media is directly available to non-social-media users. For example, posts on Twitter are directly accessible on the internet to non-Twitter-users, and content on YouTube is available to the general public on the internet as well.

130. In the aggregate, these numbers of Americans who (1) use social-media platforms, and (2) regularly use social-media platforms to obtain news and information about matters of public interest, comprise hundreds of millions of Americans, including millions of Missourians and Louisianans, and very substantial segments of the populations of Missouri, Louisiana, and every other State.

131. There are also many ways for social-media companies to censor or suppress speech on social-media platforms. Some of these methods are immediately known to the speaker and /or his or her audience, and some are not visible to them. Censorship, therefore, can occur without the knowledge of the speaker and/or his or her audience. These methods include, but are not limited to, terminating speakers' accounts, suspending accounts, imposing warnings or strikes against accounts to chill future disfavored speech, "shadow banning" speakers, demonetizing content, adjusting algorithms to suppress or de-emphasize speakers or messages, promoting or demoting content, placing warning labels on content, suppressing content in other users' feeds, promoting negative comments on disfavored content, and requiring additional click-through(s) to access content, among many others. Many methods, moreover, have a chilling effect on social-media speech, as the threat of censorship (such as suspension, demonetization, or banning) drives speakers to self-censor to avoid making statements that might be deemed to violate the social-media companies' vague, ever-changing, often-hidden, and inconsistently enforced standards for censoring and suppressing speech. Collectively herein, all these methods of suppressing and/or censoring speech on social media are called "censorship" and/or "suppression" of social-media speech.

132. The censorship and suppression of free speech on social media functions in most cases as a prior restraint on speech, both through its direct effect and its chilling effects. A prior restraint is the most severe form of restriction on freedom of expression.

C. Public and Private Attempts to Police "Misinformation" or "Disinformation" on Social Media Have Proven Embarrassingly Inaccurate.

133. Yesterday's "misinformation" often becomes today's viable theory and tomorrow's established fact. "Even where there is a wide scholarly consensus concerning a particular matter, the truth is served by allowing that consensus to be challenged without fear of reprisal. Today's accepted wisdom sometimes turns out to be mistaken." Alvarez, at 752 (Alito, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). This prediction has proven true, again and again, when it comes to suppressing "misinformation" and "disinformation" on social media.

1. The Hunter Biden laptop story.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

134. Perhaps most notoriously, social-media platforms aggressively censored an October 14, 2020 New York Post exposé about the contents of the laptop of (then-Candidate Biden's son) Hunter Biden, which had been abandoned in a Delaware repair shop and contained compromising photos and email communications about corrupt foreign business deals. As the New York Post reported at the time, "[b]oth Twitter and Facebook took extraordinary censorship measures against The Post on Wednesday over its exposés about Hunter Biden's emails … The Post's primary Twitter account was locked as of 2:20 p.m. Wednesday because its articles about the messages obtained from Biden's laptop broke the social network's rules against 'distribution of hacked material,' according to an email The Post received from Twitter," even though there were "zero claims that [Hunter Biden's] computer had been hacked." Twitter, Facebook censor Post over Hunter Biden exposé, N.Y. POST (Oct. 14, 2020), at https://nypost.com/2020/10/14/facebook-twitter-block-the-post-from-posting/. "Twitter also blocked users from sharing the link to The Post article indicating that Hunter Biden introduced Joe Biden to the Ukrainian businessman, calling the link 'potentially harmful.'" Id.

135. As the Wall Street Journal Editorial Board reported, "nearly all of the media at the time ignored the story or 'fact-checked' it as false. This … was all the more egregious given other evidence supporting the Post's scoop. Neither Hunter Biden nor the Biden campaign denied that the laptop was Hunter's. And Hunter's former business partner, Tony Bobulinski, went public with documents backing up some of the laptop's contents." Editorial Board, Hunter Biden's Laptop Is Finally News Fit to Print, WALL ST. J. (March 18, 2022).

136. Biden, his allies, and those acting in concert with them falsely attacked the Hunter Biden laptop story as "disinformation." Id. Fifty "intelligence officials—headlined by former Obama spooks James Clapper and John Brennan—circulated a statement peddling the Russian

'disinformation' line—even as they admitted they had no evidence. Th[e] result was a blackout of the Hunter news, except in a few places…." Id. Parroting the Biden campaign's false line, both social media platforms and major news organizations treated the story as "disinformation" and aggressively censored it.

137. In early 2022—over a year and a half later—major news organizations finally admitted that the Hunter Biden laptop story was truthful and rested on reliable sourcing and information. Id. The Washington Post and the New York Times quietly acknowledged the truth and reliability of the story "17 months" later, in mid-March 2022. Id.

138. Free-speech advocate Glenn Reynolds aptly described this embarrassing episode as one that permanently damaged the credibility and reputation for fairness of social-media platforms and major media outlets: "Twitter and other tech giants banned The Post's reporting, since admitted to be accurate, on Hunter Biden's laptop and the damaging information it contained. Many social-media giants banned any links to the story, and Twitter even went so far as to stop its users from sharing the story one-on-one through direct messages. (CEO Jack Dorsey later admitted that was a 'total mistake.') Their purpose was to affect the election's outcome in favor of the Democrats, and they probably did." Glenn H. Reynolds, 'Censorship is free speech' is the establishment's Orwellian line on Elon Musk's Twitter crusade, N.Y. POST (Apr. 15, 2022), https://nypost.com/2022/04/14/the-establishments-orwellian-line-on-elon-musks-twitter-crusade/.

2. Speech about the lab-leak theory of COVID-19's origins.

139. Likewise, beginning in February 2020, social-media platforms censored speech advocating for the lab-leak theory of the origins of SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19. The lab-leak theory postulates that the virus did not originate naturally in bats or other animals, but leaked from a biotech laboratory in Wuhan, China, operated by the Wuhan Institute of Virology.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

140. On information and belief, Defendant Dr. Anthony Fauci, a senior federal government official, coordinating with others, orchestrated a campaign to discredit the lab-leak hypothesis in early 2020. As director of NIAID, Dr. Fauci had funded risky "gain-of-function" research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology through intermediaries such as EcoHealth Alliance, headed by Dr. Peter Daszak. Thus, if the lab-leak theory were established, Dr. Fauci and Dr. Daszak could be potentially implicated in funding the research on viruses that caused the COVID-19 pandemic and killed millions of people worldwide.

141. During the same time frame as he was orchestrating a campaign to falsely discredit the lab-leak theory, Dr. Fauci was exchanging emails with Mark Zuckerberg, the CEO of Facebook, regarding public messaging and the dissemination of COVID-19 information on social-media. On information and belief, Dr. Fauci coordinated directly with Facebook and/or other social-media firms to suppress disfavored speakers and content of speech on social media.

142. Not surprisingly, social-media platforms like Facebook promptly accepted Dr. Fauci's initiative to discredit the lab-leak theory, and they engaged in an aggressive campaign to censor speech advocating for the lab-leak theory on social media on the ground that it was supposedly disinformation. Facebook "expand[ed] its content moderation on Covid-19 to include 'false' and 'debunked' claims such as that 'COVID-19 is man-made or manufactured.'" Editorial Board, Facebook's Lab-Leak About-Face, WALL ST. J. (May 27, 2021), https://www.wsj.com/articles/facebooks-lab-leak-about-face-11622154198. This included suppressing speech by highly credentialed and well-respected writers, such as "science journalist

Nicholas Wade," id., and scientist Alina Chan. Other social-media platforms likewise censored speech advocating for the lab-leak hypothesis.

143. By 2021, however, "the circumstantial evidence" favoring the lab-leak theory "finally permeated the insular world of progressive public health," id., and Fauci and other Biden Administration officials were forced to admit the theory's inherent plausibility. After a long period of censorship, in May 2021, Facebook and other platforms announced that they would no longer censor social-media speech advocating for the lab-leak theory.

144. The Wall Street Journal noted the close link between government and social-media platforms in censoring this speech: "Facebook acted in lockstep with the government," indicating that "[w]hile a political or scientific claim is disfavored by government authorities, Facebook will limit its reach. When government reduces its hostility toward an idea, so will Facebook." Id. "Free speech protects the right to challenge government. But instead of acting as private actors with their own speech rights, the companies are mandating conformity with existing government views." Id.

145. There had long been credible—even compelling—evidence of the plausibility of the lab-leak theory, long before social-media companies stopped censoring it. See, e.g., House Foreign Affairs Committee Minority Staff Report, The Origins of COVID-19: An Investigation of the Wuhan Institute of Virology (Aug. 2021), https://gop-foreignaffairs.house.gov/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/ORIGINS-OF-COVID-19-REPORT.pdf (detailing evidence available long before censorship lifted); Nicholas Wade, The origin of COVID: Did people or nature open Pandora's box at Wuhan?, BULL. ATOMIC SCIENTISTS (May 5, 2021), https://thebulletin.org/2021/05/the-origin-of-covid-did-people-or-nature-open-pandoras-box-at-wuhan/; ALINA CHAN, VIRAL: THE SEARCH FOR THE ORIGIN OF COVID-19 (Sept. 3, 2021).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

146. Facebook's decision to stop censoring the lab-leak theory did not come until "after almost every major media outlet, and … even the British and American security services, finally confirmed that it is a feasible possibility." Freddie Sayers, How Facebook censored the lab leak theory, UNHERD (May 31, 2021), https://unherd.com/2021/05/how-facebook-censored-the-lab-leak-theory/. Facebook admitted that its decision to end censorship was made "in consultation with" government officials, i.e., "public health experts." Id.

147. The reach of Facebook's censorship alone (to say nothing of other platforms that censored the lab-leak theory) was enormous. Facebook "displayed 'warnings'" on such supposed COVID-19-related misinformation, and claimed that "[w]hen people saw those warning labels, 95% of the time they did not go on to view the original content." Id. "Moreover, if an article is rated 'false' by their 'fact checkers', the network will 'reduce its distribution'. This means that, while an author or poster is not aware that censorship is taking place, the network could be hiding their content so it is not widely disseminated." Id.

148. Ironically, while admitting that it had erroneously censored speech on the lab-leak theory for over a year, Facebook announced that it was "now extending its policy of 'shadow-banning' accounts that promote misinformation. 'Starting today, we will reduce the distribution of all posts in News Feed from an individual's Facebook account if they repeatedly share conte nt that has been rated by one of our fact-checking partners.' So now, if you share something deemed to contain misinformation multiple times, your account could be silenced; you won't be informed, you won't know to what degree your content will be hidden and you won't know how long it will last—all thanks to group of 'fact-checkers' whose authority cannot be questioned." Id. It is astonishing that "this announcement was made on the very same day as Facebook's admission of error" on the lab-leak theory. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

3. Speech about the efficacy of mask mandates and COVID-19 lockdowns.

149. Social-media platforms also aggressively censored speech questioning the efficacy of masks and lockdowns as COVID-19 mitigation measures. Yet evidence revealed that concerns about the efficacy of these measures were well-founded.

150. For example, on information and belief, Twitter's "COVID-19 misleading information policy," as of December 2021, noted that Twitter will censor (label or remove) speech claiming that "face masks … do not work to reduce transmission or to protect against COVID-19," among many other restrictions. See Twitter, Covid-19 misleading information policy, https://help.twitter.com/en/rules-and-policies/medical-misinformation-policy. On information and belief, both Twitter and other social-media platforms have imposed similar policies, imposing censorship on speech questioning the efficacy of masks and the efficacy of lockdowns as COVID-19 mitigation measures.

151. On April 8, 2021, YouTube "deleted a video in which Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis and a handful of medical experts," including Plaintiffs Bhattacharya and Kulldorff, "questioned the effectiveness of having children wear masks to stop the spread of COVID-19." YouTube Purges Ron DeSantis Video Over Claims Children Don't Need to Wear Masks, THE WRAP (Apr. 8, 2021), https://www.thewrap.com/youtube-purges-florida-governor-video-over-claims-children-dont-need-to-wear-masks/.

152. On August 10, 2021, "YouTube barred Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) from uploading new videos to the site for seven days, after the ophthalmologist posted a video last week arguing that most masks 'don't work' against the coronavirus." Rand Paul Suspended from YouTube Over Covid Claims, FORBES (Aug. 10, 2021), https://www.forbes.com/sites/joewalsh/2021/08/10/rand-paul-suspended-from-youtube-over-covid-claims/?sh=31f1d4e01971.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

153. "When Scott Atlas, a member of the Trump White House's coronavirus task force, questioned the efficacy of masks last year, Twitter removed his tweet. When eminent scientists from Stanford and Harvard recently told Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis that children should not be forced to wear masks, YouTube removed their video discussion from its platform." How Facebook uses 'fact-checking' to suppress scientific truth, N.Y. POST (May 18, 2021), https://nypost.com/2021/05/18/how-facebook-uses-fact-checking-to-suppress-scientific-truth/.

154. In the same vein, Facebook suppressed a scientist for citing a peer-reviewed study "by a team of researchers in Germany who established an online registry for thousands of parents to report on the impact of masks on their children. More than half of those who responded said that masks were giving their children headaches and making it difficult for them to concentrate. More than a third cited other problems, including malaise, impaired learning, drowsiness and fatigue." Id.

155. On November 21, 2020, "[t]wo leading Oxford University academics … accused Facebook of 'censorship' after it claimed an article they wrote on face masks amounted to 'false information'." Two top Oxford academics accuse Facebook of censorship for branding their article on whether masks work 'false information', DAILY MAIL (Nov. 21, 2020) https://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-8973631/Two-Oxford-academics-accuse-Facebook-censorship-article-warning.html.

156. No convincing evidence supported the efficacy of mask mandates, while compelling evidence contradicted it, both before and after their implementation. Tracking the aggregate case numbers in States with and without mask mandates over the course of the COVID-19 pandemic, in a "natural experiment," demonstrates that mask mandates made "zero difference." John Tierney, The Failed COVID Policy of Mask Mandates, CITY J. (April 19, 2022), https://www.city-journal.org/the-failed-covid-policy-of-mask-mandates. Both case rates and mortality rates were "virtually identical." Id. Indeed, "mask mandates were implemented without scientific justification," and "they failed around the world." Id. "In their pre-Covid planning strategies for a pandemic, neither the Centers for Disease Control nor the World Health Organization had recommended masking the public—for good reason. Randomized clinical trials involving flu viruses had shown, contrary to popular wisdom in Japan and other Asian countries, that there was 'no evidence that face masks are effective in reducing transmission,' as the WHO summarized the scientific literature." Id. "Anthony Fauci acknowledged this evidence early in the pandemic, both in his public comments ('There's no reason to be walking around with masks,' he told 60 Minutes) and in his private emails ('I do not recommend you wear a mask,' he told a colleague, explaining that masks were too porous to block the small Covid virus)." Id. "Instead of carefully analyzing the effects of masks, the CDC repeatedly tried to justify them by misrepresenting short-term trends and hyping badly flawed research, like studies in Arizona and Kansas purporting to show that infections had been dramatically reduced by the mask mandates imposed in some counties. But in each state, … infection rates remained lower in the counties that did not mandate masks." Id.; see also, e.g., IAN MILLER, UNMASKED: THE GLOBAL FAILURE OF COVID MASK MANDATES (Jan. 20, 2022).

157. Ironically, Plaintiff Kulldorff was suspended on Twitter for several weeks for posting that masks endow vulnerable individuals with a false sense of security, because they actually do not work well to protect against viral infection. This exemplifies the danger of government involvement in social media censorship: preventing a world-renowned epidemiologist from conveying to the public that vulnerable people should not rely on masks for protection could indirectly cause great harm.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

158. Likewise, no convincing evidence supported the efficacy of lockdowns. Quite the contrary. In January 2022, a Johns Hopkins meta-analysis reviewed the efficacy of lockdowns as a COVID-19 mitigation measure and found that they had minimal impact, if any, on COVID-19 mortality rates. The study reached "the conclusion that lockdowns have had little to no effect on COVID-19 mortality… [L]ockdowns in Europe and the United States only reduced COVID-19 mortality by 0.2% on average…. While this meta-analysis concludes that lockdowns have had little to no public health effects, they have imposed enormous economic and social costs where they have been adopted. In consequence, lockdown policies are ill-founded and should be rejected as a pandemic policy instrument." Herby et al., A Literature Review and Meta-Analysis of the Effects of Lockdowns on COVID-19 Mortality, STUDIES IN APPLIED ECONOMICS (Jan. 2022), available at https://sites.krieger.jhu.edu/iae/files/2022/01/A-Literature-Review-and-Meta-Analysis-of-the-Effects-of-Lockdowns-on-COVID-19-Mortality.pdf.

159. On December 21, 2021, Dr. Leana Wen, a CNN medical commentator and strong advocate for COVID-19 restrictions, tweeted that "cloth masks are little more than facial decorations." CNN's Leana Wen: 'Cloth Masks Are Little More Than Facial Decorations', REASON, at https://reason.com/2021/12/21/leana-wen-cloth-mask-facial-decorations-covid-cdc-guidance/. Twitter did not censor this tweet, even though it undermined the efficacy of mask mandates that permitted the use of cloth masks (i.e., virtually all of them)—undoubtedly because it was advocating for more aggressive mitigation measures (i.e., higher-quality masks than cloth masks), not less.

160. "On September 26, 2021, CDC Director Walensky cited an Arizona study to claim that schools without mask mandates were 3.5 times more likely to experience COVID-19 outbreaks. However, the study is so flawed that experts have said it 'should not have entered into the public discourse' and that you 'can't learn anything' about mask rules from the study." March 11, 2022 Letter of U.S. Rep. Cathy McMorris Rodgers, et al., to Surgeon General Murthy, at https://republicans-energycommerce.house.gov/wp-content/uploads/2022/03/3.11.22-Letter-to-Surgeon-General-Murthy-Final.pdf. Yet Director Walensky's statement circulated widely on social media without being censored.

4. Speech about election integrity and the security of voting by mail.

161. In or around 2020, social-media platforms began aggressively censoring speech that raised concerns about the security of voting by mail, a major election-security issue. Notoriously, social-media platforms aggressively censored core political speech by then-President Trump and the Trump campaign raising concerns about the security of voting by mail in the run-up to the November 2020 presidential election.

162. This censorship is ironic because, for many years before 2020, it was a common left-wing talking point to claim that fraud occurred in voting by mail. In opposing photo-ID requirements for in-person voting, Democrats and their allies frequently claimed that photo IDs for in-person voting were pointless because voting by mail, not in-person voting, presented the real opportunities for fraud.

163. These Democratic claims of fraud in voting by mail were widely parroted in mainstream media for many years. For example, in 2012, the New York Times wrote that "votes cast by mail are less likely to be counted, more likely to be compromised and more likely to be contested than those cast in a voting booth, statistics show," in an article headlined "Error and Fraud at Issue as Absentee Voting Rises." https://www.nytimes.com/2012/10/07/us/politics/as-more-vote-by-mail-faulty-ballots-could-impact-elections.html. In 2012, The Washington Post published an articles stating that "[i]t may still be possible to steal an American election, if you know the right way to go about it," citing a case in which "[c]onspirators allegedly bought off absentee voters" and "faked absentee ballots." https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/decision2012/selling-votes-is-common-type-of-election-fraud/2012/10/01/f8f5045a-071d-11e2-81ba-ffe35a7b6542_story.html. In 2014, MSNBC claimed: "Indeed, election experts say absentee ballot fraud is the most common form of organized voter fraud, since, because of the secret ballot, there's no way to ensure that an in-person voter is voting for the candidate he promised to." https://www.msnbc.com/msnbc/greg-abbott-bogus-voter-fraud-crusade-msna291356. In 2016, Slate claimed, in a piece titled, "Voter Fraud Exists. Republican Restrictions Won't Stop It," that "[t]he vast majority of voter fraud prosecutions touted by conservative groups like the Heritage Foundation involve absentee ballots that were illegally cast. And the only voting fraud schemes with the potential to actually swing elections involved mail-in ballots." https://slate.com/news-and-politics/2016/09/voter-fraud-exists-through-absentee-ballots-but-republicans-wont-stop-it.html.

164. Many other authorities confirm the reasonableness of concerns about security of voting by mail. For example, in Crawford v. Marion County Election Board, the U.S. Supreme Court held that fraudulent voting "perpetrated using absentee ballots" demonstrates "that not only is the risk of voter fraud real but that it could affect the outcome of a close election." Crawford v. Marion County Election Bd., 553 U.S. 181, 195–96 (2008) (opinion of Stevens, J.) (emphasis added).

165. The bipartisan Carter-Baker Commission on Federal Election Reform—co-chaired by former President Jimmy Carter and former Secretary of State James A. Baker—determined that "[a]bsentee ballots remain the largest source of potential voter fraud." AMERICAN OVERSIGHT at https://www.legislationline.org/download/id/1472/file/3b50795b2d0374cbef5c29766256.pdf. According to the Carter-Baker Commission, "[a]bsentee balloting is vulnerable to abuse in several ways." Id. "Blank ballots mailed to the wrong address or to large residential buildings might be intercepted." Id. "Citizens who vote at home, at nursing homes, at the workplace, or in church are more susceptible to pressure, overt and subtle, or to intimidation." Id. "Vote buying schemes are far more difficult to detect when citizens vote by mail." Id. Thus, the Commission noted that "absentee balloting in other states has been a major source of fraud." Id. at 35. It emphasized that voting by mail "increases the risk of fraud." Id. And the Commission recommended that "States … need to do more to prevent … absentee ballot fraud." Id. at v.

166. The U.S. Department of Justice's 2017 Manual on Federal Prosecution of Election Offenses, published by its Public Integrity Section, states: "Absentee ballots are particularly susceptible to fraudulent abuse because, by definition, they are marked and cast outside the presence of election officials and the structured environment of a polling place." U.S. Dep't of Justice, Federal Prosecution of Election Offenses 28 (8th ed. Dec. 2017), at https://www.justice.gov/criminal/file/1029066/download. This Manual reports that "the more common ways" that election-fraud "crimes are committed include … [o]btaining and marking absentee ballots without the active input of the voters involved." Id. at 28. And the Manual notes that "[a]bsentee ballot frauds" committed both with and without the voter's participation are "common" forms of election fraud. Id. at 29.

167. Thus, social-media censorship that has occurred since 2020 to suppress speech raising concerns about the security of voting by mail would, if applied even-handedly, suppress statements about the risks of fraud in mail-in voting by the United States Supreme Court, the Carter-Baker Commission co-chaired by President Jimmy Carter, and the U.S. Department of

Justice's prosecution manual for election-integrity crimes. One would not be able to quote Justice Stevens' opinion for the Supreme Court in Crawford on social media if it followed its own rules. Raising concerns about election integrity, and questioning the security of voting by mail, became unspeakable on social media only after it became expedient for the Democratic Party and the political Left to suppress these ideas, viewpoints, and concerns.

168. This censorship of speech, speakers, and viewpoints on such topics and concerns continues to this day, at Defendants' instigation, as alleged further herein.

169. There is a common theme to all these examples of wrong-headed censorship: Each involved censoring truthful or reliable information that contradicted left-wing political narratives. What led to the censorship was not the fact that the speech was supposedly false, but that the message was politically inconvenient for Democratic officials and government-preferred narratives. As a result, the ability of politicians and social-media platforms to reliably identify actual "misinformation" and "disinformation" has been proven false, again and again.

D. Defendants, Using Their Official Authority, Have Threatened, Cajoled, and Colluded With Social-Media Companies to Silence Disfavored Speakers and Viewpoints.

170. On information and belief, the individual Defendants and those acting in concert with them have conspired and colluded to suppress Americans' First Amendment and analogous state-law rights to freedom of expression on social-media platforms, and to be exposed to free expression on such platforms, and they have taken many overt actions to achieve this goal.

1. Section 230 of the CDA subsidized, protected, and fostered the creation of speech-censorship policies in a small, concentrated group of social-media firms.

171. First, the Defendants did not act in a vacuum. For decades, the federal government has artificially encouraged, protected, fostered, and subsidized the aggregation of control over speech, including the specific power of censorship, by a small group of powerful social-media firms.

172. In particular, Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act (CDA) artificially empowered and subsidized the growth of social-media companies and their censorship policies by effectively immunizing much censorship on social media from liability. Section 230's unique liability shield fostered the aggregation of power in the field into a concentrated cluster of powerful social-media firms, and it directly fostered, protected, and encouraged the development of speech-censorship policies. This process was greatly accelerated and enhanced by the social-media platforms' success in convincing courts to adopt ever-broadening interpretations of Section 230 immunity, which stray beyond the statutes' text.

173. "Historically, at least two legal doctrines limited a company's right to exclude." Knight First Amendment Institute, 141 S. Ct. at 1222 (Thomas, J., concurring). "First, our legal system and its British predecessor have long subjected certain businesses, known as common carriers, to special regulations, including a general requirement to serve all comers." Id. "Second, governments have limited a company's right to exclude when that company is a public accommodation. This concept—related to common-carrier law—applies to companies that hold themselves out to the public but do not 'carry' freight, passengers, or communications." Id. Absent the artificial immunity created by the overly expansive interpretations of Section 230 immunity, these legal doctrines, and free-market forces, would impose a powerful check on content- and viewpoint-based censorship by social-media platforms. See id.

174. The CDA was enacted in 1996 for the purpose of promoting the growth of internet commerce and protecting against the transmission of obscene materials to children over the internet. It was intended to "offer a forum for a true diversity of political discourse," 47 U.S.C. § 230(a)(3), but in recent years Defendants have exploited it to produce the opposite effect.

175. Section 230 of the CDA, 47 U.S.C. § 230, provides unique liability protections for internet publishers of information, such as social-media companies, which are not available to other publishers, such as those of printed media. Section 230(c)(1) provides that "[n]o provider or user of an interactive computer service shall be treated as the publisher or speaker of any information provided by another information content provider." 47 U.S.C. § 230(c)(1). In other words, social-media firms are generally protected from liability for what their users post.

176. Section 230(c)(2), however, also provides that: "No provider or user of an interactive computer service shall be held liable on account of (A) any action voluntarily taken in good faith to restrict access to or availability of material that the provider or user considers to be obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, excessively violent, harassing, or otherwise objectionable, whether or not such material is constitutionally protected." 47 U.S.C. § 230(c)(2)(A) (emphasis added). Courts have interpreted Section 230 broadly—beyond its plain textual import—to shield social-media platforms from liability for censoring anything they deem "objectionable," even if it is constitutionally protected speech.

177. This reading is unreasonable and exceeds what Congress authorized. Viewpoint and content-based discrimination—now widely practiced by social-media platforms—are the antithesis of "good faith." Id. Moreover, Congress intended the "otherwise objectionable" material in § 230(c)(2)(A) to refer only to content similar to "obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, excessively violent, [and] harassing" content referred to in the same list. Id. But social-media companies have interpreted this liability shield unreasonably broadly, and have convinced courts to adopt overbroad interpretations of Section 230 immunity. See, e.g., Malwarebytes, Inc. v. Enigma

Software Grp. USA, LLC, 141 S. Ct. 13, 15 (2020) (statement of Thomas, J., respecting the denial of certiorari) ("[C]ourts have extended the immunity in § 230 far beyond anything that plausibly could have been intended by Congress."); id. at 15-18 (discussing and criticizing the overbroad reading of § 230 liability that has shielded social-media firms).

178. These platforms, therefore, have the best of both worlds: They claim that they are exempt from liability if they leave even atrocious content posted, but they are also exempt from liability if they censor anything they deem "objectionable, whether or not such material is constitutionally protected." 47 U.S.C. § 230(c)(2)(A).

179. Further, Section 230 of the CDA purportedly shields such platforms from liability for colluding with other social-media platforms on how to censor speech: "No provider or user of an interactive computer service shall be held liable on account of … (B) any action taken to enable or make available to information content providers or others the technical means to restrict access to material described in paragraph (1)." 47 U.S.C. § 230(c)(2)(B). On information and belief, social-media platforms do, in fact, extensively coordinate with one another in censoring social-media speech.

180. Section 230 also purports to preempt any state law to the contrary: "No cause of action may be brought and no liability may be imposed under any State or local law that is inconsistent with this section." 47 U.S.C. § 230(e)(3).

181. On information and belief, the immunity provided by Section 230 of the CDA directly contributed to the rise of a small number of extremely powerful social-media platforms, who have now turned into a "censorship cartel." The liability shield provided by the federal government artificially subsidized, fostered, and encouraged the viewpoint and content-based censorship policies that those platforms have adopted at Defendants' urging.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

182. On information and belief, social-media firms greatly value the immunity provided by § 230 of the CDA, which continues to provide them with artificial liability protections, and credible threats to amend or repeal that immunity are powerful motivators to those platforms. Defendants are aware of this.

183. On information and belief, the largest and most powerful social-media firms are also greatly concerned about antitrust liability and enforcement, given their dominance in the social-media market(s), and credible threats to impose antitrust liability and/or enforcement are powerful motivators to those platforms as well. Defendants are aware of this too.

2. The campaign of threats against social-media companies to demand censorship.

184. Defendant Biden, his political allies, and those acting in concert with him have a long history of threatening to use official government authority to impose adverse legal consequences against social-media companies if such companies do not increase censorship of speakers and messages disfavored by Biden and his political allies. Common threats of adverse legal and/or regulatory consequences include the threat of antitrust enforcement or legislation, and the threat of amending or repealing the liability protections of Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act (CDA), among others, if social-media companies fail to engage in more aggressive censorship of viewpoints, content, and speakers disfavored by Defendants. These threats are effective because they address legal matters of critical concern to dominant social-media firms.

185. Defendants have leveraged these threats to secure such increased censorship of speakers, content, and viewpoints that they disfavor on social-media platforms; and they have now moved into a phase of open collusion with the threatened companies, cooperating with them directly to censor speech, speakers, and viewpoints that Defendants disfavor.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

186. Threats from Biden, senior government officials in the Biden administration, and those acting in concert with them come in the context of a history of such threats from senior federal officials politically allied with them. These threats have routinely linked (1) the prospect of official government action in the form of adverse legislation, regulation, or agency action—especially threats of antitrust legislation and/or enforcement and calls to amend or repeal Section 230 of the CDA, among others—with (2) calls for more aggressive censorship and suppression of speakers, viewpoints, and messages that these officials disfavor. Recent examples include, but are by no means limited to, the following:

- Speaker Nancy Pelosi, April 12, 2019: "I do think that for the privilege of 230, there has to be a bigger sense of responsibility on it. And it is not out of the question that that could be removed." Nancy Pelosi warns tech companies that Section 230 is 'in jeopardy', TECH CRUNCH (April 12, 2019), at https://techcrunch.com/2019/04/12/nancy-pelosi-section-230/. ("When asked about Section 230, Pelosi referred to the law as a 'gift' to tech companies that have leaned heavily on the law to grow their business…. 'It is a gift to them and I don't think that they are treating it with the respect that they should, and so I think that that could be a question mark and in jeopardy… I do think that for the privilege of 230, there has to be a bigger sense of responsibility on it. And it is not out of the question that that could be removed.'").
- Senator Mark Warner, Oct. 28, 2020: "It saddens me that some of my colleagues have joined in the Trump Administration's cynical and concerted effort to bully platforms into allowing dark money groups, right-wing militias and even the President himself to continue to exploit social media platforms to sow disinformation, engage in targeted harassment, and suppress voter participation. We can and should have a conversation about Section

230—and the ways in which it has enabled platforms to turn a blind eye as their platforms are used to facilitate discrimination and civil rights violations, enable domestic terrorist groups to organize violence in plain sight, assist in stalking and networked harassment campaigns, and enable online frauds targeted at vulnerable users…." - Senator Richard Blumenthal, Nov. 17, 2020: "I have urged, in fact, a breakup of tech giants. Because they've misused their bigness and power. … And indeed Section 230 reform, meaningful reform, including even possible repeal in large part because their immunity is way too broad and victims of their harms deserve a day in court." *Breaking the News: Censorship, Suppression, and the 2020 Election Before the S. - Senator Mazie Hirono, Feb. 5, 2021: "Sec 230 was supposed to incentivize internet platforms to police harmful content by users. Instead, the law acts as a shield allowing them to turn a blind eye. The SAFE TECH ACT brings 230 into the modern age and makes platforms accountable for the harm they cause." https://twitter.com/maziehirono/status/1357790558606024705?lang=bg.

- March 2021 Joint Hearing of the Communications and Technology Subcommittee, Joint Statement of Democratic Committee Chairs: "This hearing will continue the Committee's work of holding online platforms accountable for the growing rise of misinformation and disinformation. ... For far too long, big tech has failed to acknowledge the role they've played in fomenting and elevating blatantly false information to its online audiences. Industry self-regulation has failed. We must begin the work of changing incentives driving social media companies to allow and even promote misinformation and disinformation." See Yaël Eisenstat & Justin Hendrix, A Dozen Experts with Questions Congress Should Ask the Tech CEOs—On Disinformation and Extremism, JUST SECURITY (Mar. 25, 2021), https://www.justsecurity.org/75439/questions-congress-should-ask-the-tech-ceos-on-disinformation-and-extremism/.

- On April 20, 2022, twenty-two Democratic members of Congress sent a letter to Mark Zuckerberg of Facebook (n/k/a "Meta Platforms, Inc."), demanding that Facebook increase censorship of "Spanish-language disinformation across its platforms." The letter claimed that "disinformation" was a threat to democracy, and it made explicit threats of adverse legislative action if Facebook/Meta did not increase censorship: "The spread of these narratives demonstrate that Meta does not see the problem of Spanish-language disinformation in the United States as a critical priority for the health of our democracy. The lack of Meta's action to swiftly address Spanish-language misinformation globally demonstrates the need for Congress to act to ensure Spanish-speaking communities have fair access to trustworthy information." The letter demanded information about Facebook's censorship policies on election-related speech for the upcoming elections: "How is Meta preparing to proactively detect and address foreign disinformation operations targeted at Spanish-speaking communities for future elections within the United States, including the 2022 primaries and general election? … [W]hat new steps has Meta taken to ensure the effectiveness of its algorithmic content detection policies to address disinformation and hate-speech across different languages?" 187. Comments from two House Members summarize this campaign of pressure and threats: "In April 2019, Louisiana Rep. Cedric Richmond warned Facebook and Google that they had 'better' restrict what he and his colleagues saw as harmful content or face regulation: 'We're going to make it swift, we're going to make it strong, and we're going to hold them very accountable.' New York Rep. Jerrold Nadler added: 'Let's see what happens by just pressuring them.'" Vivek Ramaswamy and Jed Rubenfeld, Editorial, Save the Constitution from Big Tech: Congressional threats and inducements make Twitter and Facebook censorship a free-speech violation, WALL ST. J. (Jan. 11, 2021), https://www.wsj.com/articles/save-the-constitution-from-big-tech-11610387105.

188. Defendants' political allies have repeatedly used congressional hearings as forums to advance these threats of adverse legislation if social-media platforms do not increase censorship of speakers, speech, content, and viewpoints they disfavor. They have repeatedly used such hearings to berate social-media firm leaders, such as Mark Zuckerberg of Facebook, Jack Dorsey of Twitter, and Sundar Pichai of Google and YouTube, and to make threats of adverse legal consequences if censorship is not increased. Such hearings include, but are not limited to, those cited above, as well as an antitrust hearing before the House Judiciary Committee on July 29, 2020; a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on November 17, 2020; and a House Energy and Commerce Hearing on March 25, 2021.

189. The flip side of such threats, of course, is the implied "carrot" of retaining Section 230 immunity and avoiding antitrust scrutiny, allowing the major social-media platforms to retain their legally privileged status that is worth billions of dollars of market share.

190. Starting in or around 2020, if not before, social-media firms have responded to these threats by engaging in increasingly more aggressive censorship of speakers, messages, and viewpoints disfavored by Defendants, senior government officials, and the political left. "With all the attention paid to online misinformation, it's easy to forget that the big [social-media] platforms generally refused to remove false content purely because it was false until 2020." Gilead Edelman, Beware the Never-Ending Disinformation Emergency, THE WIRED (March 11, 2022), at https://www.wired.com/story/youtube-rigged-election-donald-trump-moderation-misinformation/. On information and belief, it was in response to such threats of adverse legal consequences that social-media companies ramped up censorship in 2020, disproportionately targeting speakers and viewpoints on the political right. On information and belief, the examples of censorship of truthful and reliable speech in 2020, cited above, were motivated in whole or in part by such threats.

191. Then-candidate and now-President Biden has led this charge. He has tripled down on these threats of adverse official action from his colleagues and allies in senior federal-government positions. His threats of adverse government action have been among the most vociferous, and among the most clearly linked to calls for more aggressive censorship of disfavored speakers and speech by social-media companies.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

192. For example, on January 17, 2020, then-candidate Biden stated, in an interview with the New York Times editorial board, that Section 230 of the CDA should be "revoked" because social-media companies like Facebook did not do enough to censor supposedly false information in the form of political ads criticizing him—i.e., core political speech. He stated: "The idea that it's a tech company is that Section 230 should be revoked, immediately should be revoked, number one. For Zuckerberg and other platforms." He also stated, "It should be revoked because it is not merely an internet company. It is propagating falsehoods they know to be false.... There is no editorial impact at all on Facebook. None. None whatsoever. It's irresponsible. It's totally irresponsible." N.Y. Times Editorial Board, Joe Biden (Jan. 17, 2020), at https://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2020/01/17/opinion/joe-biden-nytimes-interview.html. These claims were specifically linked to Facebook's alleged failure to censor core political speech—i.e., political ads on Facebook criticizing candidate Biden. Id.

193. Candidate Biden also threatened that Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg should be subject to civil liability and even criminal prosecution for not censoring such core political speech: "He should be submitted to civil liability and his company to civil liability…. Whether he engaged in something and amounted to collusion that in fact caused harm that would in fact be equal to a criminal offense, that's a different issue. That's possible. That's possible it could happen." Id. In other words, Biden's message—not long before he became President of the United States—was that if Facebook did not censor political ads against him, Zuckerberg should go to prison. These two threats echoed the same threats made by numerous political allies of the President since 2019, cited above.

194. During the presidential campaign, now-Vice President Harris made similar threats against social-media firms to pressure them to engage in more aggressive censorship of speakers, content, and viewpoints she disfavors. For example, in addition to the statements cited above, she stated in 2019: "We will hold social media platforms responsible for the hate infiltrating their platforms, because they have a responsibility to help fight against this threat to our democracy. And if you profit off of hate—if you act as a megaphone for misinformation or cyberwarfare, if you don't police your platforms—we are going to hold you accountable as a community." Kamala Harris Wants to Be Your Online Censor-in-Chief, REASON.COM (May 7, 2019), at https://reason.com/2019/05/07/kamala-harris-promises-to-pursue-online-censorship-as-president/.

195. In or around June 2020, the Biden campaign published an open letter and online petition (ironically, on Facebook) calling for Facebook to engage in more aggressive censorship of core political speech and viewpoints that then-Candidate Biden disfavored. The open letter complained that Facebook "continues to allow Donald Trump to say anything — and to pay to ensure that his wild claims reach millions of voters. Super PACs and other dark money groups are following his example. Trump and his allies have used Facebook to spread fear and misleading information about voting.... We call for Facebook to proactively stem the tide of false information by no longer amplifying untrustworthy content and promptly fact-checking election-related material that goes viral. We call for Facebook to stop allowing politicians to hide behind paid misinformation in the hope that the truth will catch up only after Election Day. There should be a two-week pre-election period during which all political advertisements must be fact-checked before they are permitted to run on Facebook. ... Anything less will render Facebook a tool of misinformation that corrodes our democracy." Biden-Harris, Our Open Letter to Facebook (last visited May 5, 2022), https://joebiden.com/2961-2/.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

196. The online petition demanded that Facebook "[p]romote real news, not fake news," "[q]uickly remove viral misinformation," and "[e]nforce voter suppression rules against everyone—even the President [Trump]." The petition complained that Facebook "continues to amplify misinformation and lets candidates pay to target and confuse voters with lies." It demanded that Facebook "promote authoritative and trustworthy sources of election information, rather than rants of bad actors and conspiracy theorists," "promptly remove false, viral information," and "prevent political candidates and PACs from using paid advertising to spread lies and misinformation – especially within two weeks of election day." Biden-Harris, #Movefastfixit (last visited May 5, 2022), https://joebiden.com/facebook/.

197. On September 28, 2020, the Biden-Harris campaign sent a letter to Facebook accusing it of propagating a "storm of disinformation" by failing to censor the Trump campaign's political speech, including social-media political ads. Sept. 28, 2020 Biden-Harris Letter, at https://www.documentcloud.org/documents/7219497-Facebook-Letter-9-28.html. The letter accused Facebook of allowing "hyper-partisan" and "fantastical" speech to reach millions of people, and it demanded "more aggressive" censorship of Trump. Id.

198. A federal lawsuit filed in 2021 alleged that "before and after the November, 2020 election," California government officials "contracted with partisan Biden campaign operatives to police speech online. The secretary of state of California then sent these flagged tweets to Twitter, Instagram, YouTube and other platforms for their removal." Harmeet Dhillon: Biden White House 'flags' Big Tech – here's why digital policing is so dangerous, FOX NEWS (July 16, 2021), at https://www.foxnews.com/opinion/biden-white-house-flags-big-tech-digital-policing-harmeet-dhillon. Once in power, Biden and those acting in concert with him would continue this same course of conduct of "flagging" content for censorship by private social-media firms, now using the authority of the federal government to "flag" specific speech and speakers for censorship and suppression.

199. On December 2, 2020—during the presidential transition—Biden's former chief of staff and top technical advisor, Bruce Reed, publicly stated that "it's long past time to hold the social media companies accountable for what's published on their platforms." Biden Tech Advisor: Hold Social Media Companies Accountable for What Their Users Post, CNBC.com (Dec. 2, 2020), at https://www.cnbc.com/2020/12/02/biden-advisor-bruce-reed-hints-that-section-230-needs-reform.html. This comment specifically referred to the amendment or repeal of Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act. See id. Thus, the threat of adverse legal consequences for social-media companies that did not censor opposing political viewpoints was at the forefront of the incoming Biden Administration's public messaging.

200. Coming into the new Administration, with now-President Biden's political allies in control of both Houses of Congress, social-media companies were on clear notice that the federal 5government's involvement in social-media censorship was likely to escalate, and their threats of adverse legislation, regulation, and legal action became more ominous. On information and belief, this caused a chilling effect on speech by prompting social-media companies to ramp up their own censorship programs against disfavored speech and speakers, to preempt the risk of adverse action against them by the Government.

201. Once in control of the Executive Branch, Defendants promptly capitalized on these threats by pressuring, cajoling, and openly colluding with social-media companies to actively suppress particular disfavored speakers and viewpoints on social media.

202. Defendants, those acting in concert with them, and those allied with them routinely seek to justify overt censorship of disfavored speakers and viewpoints by wrapping it in the monikers "misinformation," "disinformation," and/or "malinformation." Their standard tactic is to label speech that contradicts their preferred political narratives "misinformation," "disinformation," and "malinformation" to justify suppressing it. Other common buzzwords include calls for a "healthy information ecosystem," "healthy information environment," or "healthy news environment," among others. This is the Orwellian vocabulary of censorship. It is deployed aggressively to undermine fundamental First Amendment rights.

203. As noted above, these labels have proven extremely unreliable. Defendants' and the political Left's ability to accurately identify "misinformation" and "disinformation" is unreliable because they apply such labels, not based on actual truth or falsity, but based on their current preferred political narrative. This has resulted, again and again, in the suppression of truthful information under the name of "disinformation" and "misinformation."

3. White House and HHS officials collude with social-media firms to suppress speech.

204. Before the Biden Administration took office, on information and belief, coordination and collusion between senior HHS officials and social-media companies to censor viewpoints and speakers was already underway. Once in office, senior officials in the Biden Administration—in the White House, in HHS, and elsewhere—capitalized and greatly expanded on these efforts.

205. On information and belief, beginning on or around January or February 2020, if not before, Defendant Dr. Anthony Fauci, a senior federal government official, coordinated with social-media firms to police and suppress speech regarding COVID-19 on social media.

206. Prior to 2020, as head of NIAID, Dr. Fauci had overseen funding of risky gain-of-function research on viruses, including research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology. This included research funded through intermediaries such as Dr. Peter Daszak and the EcoHealth Alliance, among others.

207. In late January and early February 2020, Dr. Fauci received information from colleagues that suggested that the COVID-19 virus may have originated in a laboratory in Wuhan, China. This revelation threatened to implicate Dr. Fauci in the virus's origins, as he had funded the risky research that, under this theory, led to the virus's origin. Soon thereafter, Dr. Fauci participated in a conference call with scientists and science-funding authorities intended to discredit and suppress this lab-leak theory. After the conference call, influential individuals signed public statements that were placed in science journals in attempt to discredit the lab-leak theory.

208. In the same time frame, Dr. Fauci communicated with Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg directly regarding public messaging and the flow of information on social media about the government's COVID-19 response. For example, in a series of emails produced in response to FOIA requests dated from March 15 to 17, 2020, Zuckerberg invited Fauci to make public statements to be posted for viewing by all Facebook users regarding COVID-19, and also made another proposal that is redacted in FOIA-produced versions but was treated as a high priority by Fauci and NIH staff.

209. In an email on March 15, 2020, Zuckerberg proposed coordinating with Fauci on COVID-19 messaging to "make sure people can get authoritative information from reliable sources," and suggested including a video message from Fauci because "people trust and want to hear from experts." Zuckerberg proposed including this content in a "hub" that "we're going to put at the top of Facebook" to reach "200+ million Americans, 2.5 billion people worldwide."

210. In the same email, Zuckerberg made a three-line proposal to Fauci that was redacted by the federal government before the email was produced in a FOIA request.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

211. The next day, NIH's communications director emailed Fauci and strongly recommended that he do the videos for Facebook. Regarding the redacted proposal from Zuckerberg, she stated: "But an even bigger deal is his offer [REDACTED]. The sooner we get that offer up the food-chain the better." She also stated that her staff was "standing by to discuss this with HHS and WH comms," and requested authority to "determine who the best point of contact would be so the Administration can take advantage of this officer, soonest." Fauci responded that "I will write or call Mark and tell him that I am interested in doing this. I will then tell him that you will get for him the name of the USG [on information and belief, shorthand for "U.S. Government"] point of contact."

212. Fauci responded by email to Zuckerberg on March 17, 2020, agreeing to the collaboration that Zuckerberg proposed and describing his redacted proposal as "very exciting."

213. As alleged above, around the same time frame as the Zuckerberg-Fauci emails, Facebook and other social-media companies censored and suppressed speakers and speech advocating for the lab-leak theory of COVID-19's origins, despite the overwhelming circumstantial evidence favoring that theory. This censorship directly implemented the plan, orchestrated by Fauci and others in early 2020, to discredit and suppress the lab-leak theory.

214. In the same timeframe, Facebook and other social-media companies began an ever-increasing campaign of monitoring, censorship, and suppression of speech and speakers about COVID-19 and issues related to COVID-19. This campaign would dramatically escalate with the advent of the Biden Administration.

215. On information and belief, those firms coordinated directly with Fauci, CDC, and other government officials regarding censorship and suppression of disfavored speech and speakers.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

216. For example, Facebook's "COVID and Vaccine Policy" states that Facebook "does not allow false claims about the vaccines or vaccination programs which public health experts have advised us could lead to COVID-19 vaccine rejection." Facebook, COVID-19 and Vaccine Policy Updates & Protections, https://www.facebook.com/help/230764881494641 (emphasis added). On information and belief, Fauci and CDC officials are included among those "public health experts" who "advise[]" Facebook on what to censor. Facebook also censors COVID-19 information as "false," not based on actual truth or falsity, but based on whether the claim contradicts or challenges the pronouncements of Fauci and the CDC. Id. This includes strongly supported claims such as "[c]laims that wearing a face mask properly does not help prevent the spread of COVID-19," along with an elaborate list of additional disfavored content and viewpoints subject to censorship. Id.

217. On information and belief, other social-media firms have similar policies and similar practices of coordinating with Fauci and the CDC and with each other, directly or indirectly, on the suppression of disfavored speakers and speech.

218. Such collusion between HHS officials and social-media companies on the censorship of disfavored speakers and speech accelerated once the Biden Administration took office.

219. On May 5, 2021, Defendant Psaki gave a White House press conference at which she stated that "[t]he President's view is that the major platforms have a responsibility related to the health and safety of all Americans to stop amplifying untrustworthy content, disinformation, and misinformation, especially related to COVID-19, vaccinations, and elections. And we've seen that over the past several months, broadly speaking…. we've seen it from a number of sources." White House, Press Briefing by Press Secretary Jen Psaki and Secretary of Agriculture Tom

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Vilsack, May 5, 2021, at https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/press-briefings/2021/05/05/press-briefing-by-press-secretary-jen-psaki-and-secretary-of-agriculture-tom-vilsack-may-5-2021/.

220. Echoing Biden's past threats to social-media firms, Psaki immediately went on to state that President Biden "supports better privacy protections and a robust anti-trust program." Id. (emphasis added). She linked the threat of anti-trust enforcement to the demand for more aggressive censorship by social-media platforms, stating that the President's "view is that there's more that needs to be done to ensure that this type of misinformation; disinformation; damaging, sometimes life-threatening information is not going out to the American public." Id.

221. At a White House press briefing with Psaki on July 15, 2021, Surgeon General Vivek Murthy announced that "health misinformation" constitutes an "urgent public health threat," stating that he had "issued a Surgeon General's Advisory on the dangers of health misinformation. Surgeon General Advisories are reserved for urgent public health threats. And while those threats have often been related to what we eat, drink, and smoke, today we live in a world where misinformation poses an imminent and insidious threat to our nation's health." The White House, Press Briefing by Press Secretary Jen Psaki and Surgeon General Dr. Vivek H. Murthy, July 15, 2021, at https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/press-briefings/2021/07/15/press-briefing-by-press-secretary-jen-psaki-and-surgeon-general-dr-vivek-h-murthy-july-15-2021/.

222. Surgeon General Murthy stated that "[m]odern technology companies have enabled misinformation to poison our information environment with little accountability to their users. They've allowed people who intentionally spread misinformation — what we call 'disinformation' — to have extraordinary reach." Id. He accused their algorithms of "pulling us deeper and deeper into a well of misinformation." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

223. Surgeon General Murthy explicitly called for more aggressive censorship of social-media speech, stating that "we're saying we expect more from our technology companies. …. We're asking them to monitor misinformation more closely. We're asking them to consistently take action against misinformation super-spreaders on their platforms." Id. "

224. He also stated that "technology companies have a particularly important role" to play in combating "misinformation." He stated: "We know that the dramatic increase in the speed — speed and scale of spreading misinformation has, in part, been enabled by these platforms. So that's why in this advisory today, we are asking them to step up. We know they have taken some steps to address misinformation, but much, much more has to be done. And we can't wait longer for them to take aggressive action because it's costing people their lives." Id.

225. He also stated: "we are asking technology companies to help lift up the voices of credible health authorities…. [T]hey have to do more to reduce the misinformation that's out there so that the true voices of experts can shine through." Id.

226. At the same press briefing, after the Surgeon General spoke, Defendant Psaki stated: "[W]e are in regular touch with these social media platforms, and those engagements typically happen through members of our senior staff, but also members of our COVID-19 team, given, as Dr. Murthy conveyed, this is a big issue of misinformation, specifically on the pandemic." Id. (emphasis added). She added, "We're flagging problematic posts for Facebook that spread disinformation." Id. (emphasis added). She stated, "we have recommended—proposed that they create a robust enforcement strategy," i.e., a more aggressive censorship program. Id.

227. Psaki called on social-media companies to censor particular disfavored speakers, stating: "[T]here's about 12 people who are producing 65 percent of anti-vaccine misinformation on social media platforms. All of them remain active on Facebook, despite some even being banned on other platforms, including Facebook — ones that Facebook owns." Id. And she called on Facebook and other social-media companies to censor disfavored content and disfavored viewpoints: "[I]t's important to take faster action against harmful posts. As you all know, information travels quite quickly on social media platforms; sometimes it's not accurate. And Facebook needs to move more quickly to remove harmful, violative posts — posts that will be within their policies for removal often remain up for days. That's too long. The information spreads too quickly." Id.

228. She stated that "[w]e engage with them [i.e., social-media companies] regularly and they certainly understand what our asks are." Id. (emphasis added). She stated that, "we've made a calculation to push back on misinformation," and that "we are working to combat misinformation that's traveling online." Id.

229. The same day, the Surgeon General released his advisory regarding "health misinformation." It defined "health misinformation" as "information that is false, inaccurate, or misleading according to the best available evidence at the time. Misinformation has caused confusion and led people to decline COVID-19 vaccines, reject public health measures such as masking and physical distancing, and use unproven treatments." Confronting Health Misinformation: The U.S. Surgeon General's Advisory on Building a Healthy Information Environment, at 4 (July 15, 2021), at https://www.hhs.gov/sites/default/files/surgeon-general-misinformation-advisory.pdf.

230. The Surgeon General's advisory called for social-medial companies to "make meaningful long-term investments to address misinformation, including product changes," to "[r]edesign recommendation algorithms to avoid amplifying misinformation," to "build in 'frictions'— such as suggestions and warnings—to reduce the sharing of misinformation," and to "make it easier for users to report misinformation." Id. at 12. It called on social-media companies to "[s]trengthen the monitoring of misinformation," and to censor disfavored speakers swiftly and aggressively: "Prioritize early detection of misinformation 'super-spreaders' and repeat offenders. Impose clear consequences for accounts that repeatedly violate platform policies." Id.

231. Facebook responded by stating that it was, in fact, aggressively censoring "health misinformation," and coordinating with the Government to do so. "A Facebook spokesperson said the company has partnered with government experts, health authorities and researchers to take 'aggressive action against misinformation about COVID-19 and vaccines to protect public health.'" White House Slams Facebook as Conduit for COVID-19 Misinformation, REUTERS (July 15, 2021), at https://www.reuters.com/world/us/us-surgeon-general-warns-over-covid-19-misinformation-2021-07-15/ (emphasis added). "'So far we've removed more than 18 million pieces of COVID misinformation, [and] removed accounts that repeatedly break these rules…,' the spokesperson added." Id.

232. Facebook stated that it "has introduced rules against making certain false claims about COVID-19 and its vaccines." Id.

233. The next day, July 16, 2021, a reporter asked President Biden what he thought of COVID misinformation on social media, and he responded, referring to platforms like Facebook, by stating: "They're killing people." They're Killing People: Biden Denounces Social Media for Virus Disinformation, N.Y. TIMES (July 16, 2021), at https://www.nytimes.com/2021/07/16/us/politics/biden-facebook-social-media-covid.html. The New York Times reported that "this week, White House officials went further and singled out social media companies for allowing false information to proliferate. That came after weeks of failed attempts to get Facebook to turn over information detailing what mechanisms were in place to combat misinformation about the vaccine, according to a person familiar with the matter." Id.

234. The same day, July 16, 2021, Psaki explicitly called for social-media companies to coordinate with each other in censoring disfavored speakers, to ensure that such speakers are completely muzzled. "You shouldn't be banned from one platform and not others … for providing misinformation out there." White House, Press Briefing by Press Secretary Jen Psaki, July 16, 2021, at https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/press-briefings/2021/07/16/press-briefing-by-press-secretary-jen-psaki-july-16-2021/. On information and belief, social-media companies have heeded this demand, and they do, in fact, coordinate extensively with each other in censorship of disfavored speakers, speech, and viewpoints on social media.

235. Psaki also demanded that social-media companies "create robust enforcement strategies," "tak[e] faster action against harmful posts," and "promot[e] quality information algorithms"—which is a euphemism for algorithms that suppress disfavored messages. Id. When asked whether Facebook's already-aggressive censorship—it claimed to have suppressed 18 million pieces of COVID-19-related "misinformation"—was "sufficient," she responded, "Clearly not, because we're talking about additional steps that should be taken." Id.

236. Four days later, July 20, 2021, the White House explicitly threatened to amend or repeal the liability protections of § 230 of the Communications Decency Act if social-media companies did not increase censorship of disfavored speakers and viewpoints. 'They Should Be Held Accountable': White House Reviews Platforms' Misinformation Liability, USA TODAY (July 20, 2021), at https://www.usatoday.com/story/news/politics/2021/07/20/white-house-reviews-section-230-protections-covid-misinformation/8024210002/. The White House communications director announced that "[t]he White House is assessing whether social media platforms are legally liable for misinformation spread on their platforms." Id. "We're reviewing that, and certainly, they should be held accountable," she said. Id.

237. She "specified the White House is examining how misinformation fits into the liability protections granted by Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act, which shields online platforms from being responsible for what is posted by third parties on their sites." Id. Media reported that, in connection with this threat, "Relations are tense between the Biden administration and social media platforms, specifically Facebook, over the spread of misinformation online." Id.; see also, e.g., White House says social media networks should be held accountable for spreading misinformation, CNBC.com (July 20, 2021), at https://www.cnbc.com/2021/07/20/white-house-social-networks-should-be-held-accountable-for-spreading-misinfo.html. When asked whether the President is "open to amending 230 when Facebook and Twitter and other social media outlets spread false information that cause Americans harm, shouldn't they be held accountable in a real way?" White House Communications Director Bedingfield responded, "We're reviewing that and certainly they should be held accountable. And I think you heard the president speak very aggressively about this. He understands that this is an important piece of the ecosystem." Id.

238. After this series of public statements, responding to "White House pressure," Facebook censored the accounts of the 12 specific disfavored speakers whom Psaki accused of spreading health misinformation. Facebook takes action against 'disinformation dozen' after White House pressure, CNN.com (Aug. 18, 2021), at https://www.cnn.com/2021/08/18/tech/facebook-disinformation-dozen/index.html. Psaki had "hammered the platform in July for allowing the people identified in the report to remain on its platform." Id. After they were singled out for censorship by the White House, Facebook "removed over three dozen Pages, groups and Facebook or Instagram accounts linked to these 12 people, including at least one linked to each of the 12 people, for violating our policies." Id.

239. In the same time frame, Twitter permanently suspended the account of prominent lockdown critic Alex Berenson, despite repeated reassurances from high-level Twitter executives that his account was safe, just days after Dr. Fauci singled him out as a danger for suggesting young people might reasonably decline the vaccine.

240. On October 29, 2021, the Surgeon General tweeted from his official account (as opposed to his personal account, which remains active), in a thread: "We must demand Facebook and the rest of the social media ecosystem take responsibility for stopping health misinformation on their platforms. The time for excuses and half measures is long past. We need transparency and accountability now. The health of our country is at stake." See https://twitter.com/Surgeon_General/status/1454181191494606854.

241. Defendants' response to this censorship was to demand still more censorship by social-media platforms, including but not limited to Facebook. "[A]fter Facebook's action against the 'disinformation dozen,' a White House spokesperson continued to strongly criticize the company." Id. "'In the middle of a pandemic, being honest and transparent about the work that needs to be done to protect public health is absolutely vital, but Facebook still refuses to be straightforward about how much misinformation is circulating—and being actively promoted—on their platform,' a White House spokesperson told CNN Business. 'It's on everyone to get this right so we can make sure the American people are getting accurate information to protect the health of themselves and their loved ones -- which is why the Administration will continue to push leaders, media outlets, and leading sources of information like Facebook to meet those basic expectations,' the spokesperson added." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

242. On February 1, 2022, Psaki was asked at a White House press conference whether the Administration was satisfied with Spotify's decision to affix advisory warnings to Joe Rogan's immensely popular podcast, which featured speakers that contradicted the Administration's messaging about COVID-19 and vaccines, or whether the government "think[s] that companies like Spotify should go further than just, you know, putting a label on" disfavored viewpoints and speakers. Psaki responded by demanding that Spotify and other platforms "do[] more" to block disfavored speech: "[O]ur hope is that all major tech platforms … be vigilant to ensure the American people have access to accurate information on something as significant as COVID-19. So, this disclaimer – it's a positive step. But we want every platform to continue doing more to call out … mis- and disinformation while also uplifting accurate information." She stated that Spotify's advisory warnings are "a good step, it's a positive step, but there's more that can be done." White House, Press Briefing by Press Secretary Jen Psaki, February 1, 2022 (emphases added), at https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/press-briefings/2022/02/01/press-briefing-by-press-secretary-jen-psaki-february-1-2022/.

243. On March 3, 2022, the Surgeon General issued a formal "Request for Information" on the "Impact of Health Misinformation" on social media. HHS, Impact of Health Misinformation in the Digital Information Environment in the United States Throughout the COVID-19 Pandemic Request for Information (RFI), 87 Fed. Reg. 12,712-12,714 (March 2, 2022).

244. In the RFI, "[t]he Office of the Surgeon General requests input from interested parties on the impact and prevalence of health misinformation in the digital information environment during the COVID–19 pandemic." Id. at 12,712. The RFI states that "the speed, scale, and sophistication with which misinformation has been spread during the COVID-19 pandemic has been unprecedented," and it implies that social-media companies are to blame, carrying a clear threat of future regulation: "This RFI seeks to understand both the impact of health misinformation during the COVID–19 pandemic and the unique role that technology and social media platforms play in the dissemination of critical health information during a public health emergency." Id. at 12,713.

245. The RFI seeks specific information about health "misinformation" on such social-media platforms: "Information about how widespread COVID–19 misinformation is on individual technology platforms including: General search engines, content sharing platforms, social media platforms, e-commerce platforms, crowd sourced platforms, and instant messaging systems." Id.

246. The RFI seeks: "Any aggregate data and analysis on how many users were exposed, were potentially exposed, or otherwise engaged with COVID–19 misinformation," where "[e]xposure is defined as seeing content in newsfeeds, in search results, or algorithmically nominated content," and "[p]otential exposure is the exposure users would have had if they could see all the content that is eligible to appear within their newsfeeds." Id. at 12,714. It also seeks "[i]nformation about COVID–19 misinformation policies on individual technology platforms," including "[a]ny aggregate data and analysis of technology platform COVID–19 misinformation policies including implementation of those policies and evaluations of their effectiveness." Id.

247. Media reports aptly described Murthy as "demand[ing]" information about the major sources of COVID-19 misinformation by May 2, 2022. Brad Dress, Surgeon General Demands Data on COVID-19 Misinformation from Major Tech Firms, THE HILL (March 3, 2022), at https://thehill.com/policy/healthcare/596709-surgeon-general-demands-data-on-covid-19-misinformation-from-major-tech/. "In a formal notice, Murthy requested major tech platforms submit information about the prevalence and scale of COVID-19 misinformation on their sites, from social networks, search engines, crowdsourced platforms, e-commerce platforms and instant messaging systems." Id. "In his notice to major tech platforms, Murthy is requesting specific information on demographics affected by misinformation as well as sources of misinformation and 'exactly how many users saw or may have been exposed to instances of Covid-19 misinformation.'" Id.

248. On or around July 27, 2022, a limited number of emails between CDC officials and representatives of social-media platforms from late 2020 and early months of 2021 became publicly available, over a year after they had been requested under FOIA. These newly revealed emails—which are attached as Exhibit A, and incorporated by reference herein—confirm the allegations of collusion between HHS officials and social-media platforms to censor disfavored speech, speakers, and viewpoints, as alleged herein.

249. These emails indicate that Defendant Carol Y. Crawford of CDC and other CDC officials frequently communicated and coordinated with social-media platforms, including Facebook/Meta, Twitter, Google/YouTube, and Instagram, regarding the censorship of speech on social-media platforms, including flagging specific content for censorship. During 2021, Crawford organized "Be On the Lookout" or "BOLO" meetings on "misinformation" with representatives of social-media platforms—including Twitter, Facebook/Meta, and Google/YouTube—in which she and other federal officials colluded and/or collude with those platforms about speech to target for suppression. These meetings include Crawford and other federal officials flagging specific social-media posts for censorship and providing examples of the types of posts to censor. Crawford emailed "slides" from the "BOLO" meetings to participants afterwards. These slides included repeated examples of specific posts on social-media platforms flagged for censorship. The slides called for "all" social-media platforms to "Be On the Lookout" for such posts. Crawford cautioned the meeting participants, with respect to these slides, "[p]lease do not share outside your trust and safety teams."

250. Officials of the Census Bureau participated and/or participate in these BOLO meetings, including Defendant Jennifer Shopkorn and Christopher Lewitzke, who is a Senior Digital Marketing Associate with Reingold, a communications firm that was, on information and belief, acting on behalf of the Census Bureau. Crawford's emails indicate that the Census Bureau and its officials and agents, such as Lewitzke and Shopkorn, play an important, active, and ongoing role in colluding with social-media platforms to censor disfavored speech. On March 18, 2021, Crawford emailed Twitter officials and stated that "[w]e are working on a project with Census to leverage their infrastructure to identify and monitor social media for vaccine misinformation," and stated that "[w]e would like the opportunity to work with your trust team on a regular basis to discuss what we are seeing." She also noted that "I understand that you did this with Census last year as well." Twitter responded by stating, "With our CEO testifying before Congress this week is tricky," but otherwise agreed to the collusive arrangement. Likewise, in subsequent emails to Twitter (on May 6) and Facebook (on May 10), Crawford noted to the social-media platform officials that "[o]ur census team," i.e., Lewitzke and Shopkorn, who were cc'ed on the emails, "has much more info on it if needed" regarding "some example posts" of "misinfo" that she flagged for censorship.

251. Defendants Crawford and others, including the Census officials and agents Lewitzke and Shopkorn, took other steps to procure the censorship of disfavored speech on social media. For example, on May 10, 2021, Crawford emailed Twitter officials to flag "two issues that we are seeing a great deal of misinfo about," noting that Lewitzke and Shopkorn "ha[ve] much more info on it if needed." The same email included 13 specific Twitter posts as examples of the sort of posts to be censored. On May 6, 2021, Crawford sent a similar email to Meta/Facebook officials, also copying Lewitzke and Shophorn and stating that they have "much more info" about the issue; this email included 16 specific posts from Facebook and Instagram as examples of posts to be targeted for censorship. On May 12, 2021, Crawford emailed Facebook officials to flag "some new info on myths your misinfo folks might be interested in," with links to specific issues of "misinformation" for Facebook to censor. On April 9, 2021, Crawford agreed with a Twitter official that CDC would provide "examples of problematic content" posted on Twitter, and the Twitter official noted that "all examples of misinformation are helpful." Calendar invites from early 2021 indicate that Crawford, Jay Dempsey, and other CDC officials participated in Facebook's "weekly sync with CDC," with "CDC to invite other agencies as needed."

252. In another exchange of emails, Crawford agreed with Facebook officials that CDC would participate in a COVID-19 "misinfo reporting channel," and arranged for CDC officials to have training on the use of Facebook's "misinfo reporting channel." On information belief, Crawford's "team" at CDC, as well as Shopkorn and Lewitzke from Census, were "onboarded" onto Facebook's "misinfo reporting channel." A calendar invite in May 2021 included Crawford, Lewitzke, Shopkorn, other CDC officials, and other Reingold employees who were, on information and belief, acting on behalf of the Census Bureau, to participate in the "onboarding" onto Facebook's "misinfo reporting channel."

253. Crawford's communications with Facebook indicate that CDC, the Census Bureau, and other government agencies collaborate with Facebook to flag speech regarding both COVID-19 and elections for censorship using "CrowdTangle," which Facebook describes as "a Facebook tool that tracks how content spreads online." An email from a Facebook official to Crawford stated that, using CrowdTangle, "[w]hen health departments flag potential vaccine misinformation on Facebook and Instagram, we review and remove the content if it violates our policies… This is similar to how governments and fact-checkers use CrowdTangle ahead of elections…." (Emphasis added.)

254. Additional communications between CDC and social-media platforms reflect an ongoing, close, and continuing collaboration, effectively amounting to a joint enterprise, on censorship of COVID-19 "misinformation" and related issues. See Ex. A. For example, the communications reflect close coordination on creating and publishing content on behalf of CDC on social-media platforms, and artificially "amplifying" government messaging on social-media to the suppression of private messaging, including a gift of $15 million in Facebook ad credits from Facebook to CDC. They also reflect close coordination on amplifying CDC's content and other related issues.

4. White House and DHS officials collude with social-media firms to suppress speech.

255. On information and belief, senior officials in the Biden Administration and the Department of Homeland Security are also colluding with social-media companies to suppress disfavored speakers and viewpoints. These efforts include censorship of disfavored content and viewpoints about election integrity and COVID-19, among other topics, under the guise of suppressing "misinformation" and "domestic terrorism." These efforts culminated with the Orwellian announcement of the creation of a "Disinformation Governance Board" within DHS.

256. A direct forum for government officials to call for social-media censorship of election-related "misinformation" was already in place during the general election cycle of 2020.

257. In August 2020, social-media firms "met with federal government officials to discuss how to handle misinformation during this month's political conventions and election results this fall." Ingram et al., Big Tech met with govt to discuss how to handle election results,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

NBC News (Aug. 20, 2022), at https://www.nbcnews.com/tech/tech-news/big-tech-met-gov-t-discuss-how-handle-election-results-n1236555.

258. This was one of a "series" of meetings between major social-media companies and government officials about the suppression of election-related "misinformation": "'We held the latest in a series of meetings with government partners today where we each provided upda tes on what we're seeing on our respective platforms and what we expect to see in the coming months,' companies including Google, Facebook, Twitter and Reddit said in a joint statement after the meeting." Id. "The statement also included Microsoft, Verizon Media, Pinterest, LinkedIn and the Wikimedia Foundation, which operates Wikipedia and other sites." Id.

259. The discussion was reported as "one in a series of monthly meetings between the government and tech companies" and involved "back-and-forth conversation on a variety of topics." Id. Neither the "topics" of the "conversation" nor the particular participants on behalf of the government were disclosed. Id. "According to the industry statement, participants in Wednesday's meeting also included representatives from the FBI's foreign influence task force, the Justice Department's national security division, the Office of the Director of National Intelligence and the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency." Id. "The companies said they would continue to meet regularly before the November election." Id.

260. On September 28, 2020, the Biden-Harris campaign sent a letter to Facebook demanding that Facebook take "more aggressive" action to censor statements by President Trump and the Trump campaign that raised concerns about election security and the security of voting by mail. Sept. 28, 2020 Biden-Harris Letter, https://www.documentcloud.org/documents/7219497-Facebook-Letter-9-28.html. The letter accused Facebook of being a "propagator of disinformation" for refusing to censor the rival campaign's core political speech, thus promoting

"distrust in our democracy" and threatening to "undermine democracy." Id. The Biden-Harris campaign described the Trump campaign's political speech as "dangerous claptrap" and argued that "[r]emoving this video should have been the easiest of calls." Id. The letter demanded that Facebook "remove Mr. Trump's posts, which violate your policies." Id. (underline in original).

261. The same letter complained that Facebook's "algorithm" permitted Trump's political speech to reach millions of people. It complained about the successful reach on Facebook of political speech that it opposed, bemoaning the fact that "a hyperpartisan propaganda organ like the Daily Wire is Facebook's top web publisher." Id. The Biden-Harris campaign accused Facebook of allowing speech that it favored "to be drowned out by a storm of disinformation." Id. And it concluded, "We will be calling out those failures [to censor Trump's political speech] as they occur over the coming 36 days," i.e., until the November 2020 general election. Id.

262. On information and belief, responding to prior threats from Defendants and those acting in concert with them, Facebook complied with this demand and did engage in "more aggressive" censorship of the Trump campaign's core political speech from then on, resulting in an aggressive campaign to suppress President Trump and his campaign's political speech, especially on issues related to election security. In the wake of the Biden -Harris letter, Facebook declared that it "won't allow ads with content that seeks to delegitimize the outcome of an election," and it ramped up censorship of Trump's political speech thereafter.

263. As one commentator noted, "It's no surprise that Facebook's policy change happened the same week that the Biden campaign demanded Trump's Facebook posts be censored." Alexander Hall, Liberal Media Used to Warn Against Mailing Votes; Now Big Tech, Left Are Protecting It (Oct. 30, 2020), at https://www.newsbusters.org/blogs/free-speech/alexander-hall/2020/10/30/liberal-media-used-warn-against-mailing-votes-now-big.

264. At the same time, "Twitter also modified its rules, stating: 'we may label and reduce the visibility of Tweets containing false or misleading information about civic processes in order to provide additional context' in its Civic integrity policy." Id.

265. Both platforms ramped up censorship of core political speech of President Trump and his campaign, as well as core political speech by others favoring their messages and campaigns, in the critical final month before the 2020 general election, resulting in egregious acts of censorship. These acts of censorship included suppression of expressions of concern about election security as a result of the massive increase in voting by mail during the 2020 general election.

266. In perhaps the most notorious example, as noted above, Twitter, Facebook, and other social-media companies censored the New York Post's entirely truthful and carefully sourced article about Hunter Biden's laptop on October 14, 2020, as discussed further above. This censorship included locking the New York Post's social-media accounts for weeks until after the election.

267. According to one survey, sixteen percent of Biden voters polled stated that they would have changed their votes if they had known about the Hunter Biden laptop story before the election, which could have changed the outcome of the election.

268. This censorship required deliberate, aggressive action by social-media firms. "Facebook moderators had to manually intervene to suppress a controversial New York Post story about Hunter Biden, according to leaked moderation guidelines seen by the Guardian." Facebook leak reveals policies on restricting New York Post's Biden story, THE GUARDIAN (Oct. 30, 2020), at https://www.theguardian.com/technology/2020/oct/30/facebook-leak-reveals-policies-restricting-new-york-post-biden-story.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

269. At the time, Facebook claimed that the censorship of the Hunter Biden laptop story was "part of our standard process to reduce the spread of misinformation. We temporarily reduce distribution pending factchecker review." Id. But this was not true. In fact, Facebook imposed "special treatment" on the New York Post to suppress the story, which included "manually overrid[ing]" Facebook's own guidelines for suppressing so-called "misinformation." Id.

270. On December 10, 2020, nine Democratic House Members in the so-called "Congressional Task Force on Digital Citizenship" (a group of exclusively Democratic members of Congress) sent a letter to President-elect Biden, calling for the incoming Administration to create task forces that would increase censorship of "disinformation and misinformation" on social media. Dec. 10, 2020 Letter of Rep. Wexton, et al., at https://wexton.house.gov/uploadedfiles/12.10.20_house_democrats_disinformation_roadmap_to_president-elect_biden.pdf.

271. The letter decried the rise of "news environments online, which report vastly different information and do not offer the same editorial standards to protect against disinformation and misinformation that traditional news media do." Id. It criticized social-media platforms for failing to censor "disinformation" more aggressively: "As social media platforms post record revenues from engagement, they seldom act as responsible information gatekeepers and, in fact, have financial incentives to direct users to posts that are false, misleading, or emotionally manipulative." Id.

272. The letter called on President-elect Biden to "[s]upport collaboration between government and civic organizations to combat dangerous propaganda." Id. The letter acknowledged that "social media platforms have taken some steps to limit the spread of harmful disinformation and misinformation over the past year," but urged that these steps were not nearly enough, arguing that "we can still see how easily this content is posted and amplified by ba d actors and unknowing citizens," that "platforms have financial incentives for engaging posts to reach larger audiences, regardless of the content," and that "computer algorithms still make up a majority of content moderation, and platforms have at times refused to take action against accounts and groups promoting violence and hate speech." Id.

273. The letter called for President-elect Biden to deploy the U.S. Department of Justice and the Department of Homeland Security to combat "disinformation," and it called for more direct government involvement in policing the content of political speech on social media platforms, in order to "build citizen resilience to disinformation and support a healthy information ecosystem"—which is Newspeak for viewpoint- and content-based censorship.

274. In announcing the letter, its lead signer, Rep. Wexton, openly stated that Americans lack the sophistication to make their own judgments about truth and falsity of online speech, and that government-approved "gatekeepers" of information should be imposed: "In the letter, the Members recognize that, while a growing number of people in the U.S. are getting their news from social media platforms, many Americans are ill-equipped to recognize and sift through false, misleading, or emotionally manipulative posts. Additionally, there exists a lack of effective information gatekeepers to protect against disinformation threats online." See Dec. 10, 2020 News Release, https://wexton.house.gov/news/documentsingle.aspx?DocumentID=431.

275. Consistent with this letter, the Biden Administration launched several initiatives designed to inject the power and authority of federal agencies like DHS into policing "disinformation" and "misinformation" online—which, all too often, means censoring core political speech disfavored by government officials.

276. On information and belief, DHS and its officials are actively engaged in this project of procuring the censorship of disfavored speakers, content, and viewpoints in speech about election integrity.
