AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Huckabee Prep

I watched a full episode of Huckabee on TBN and watched various clips of him conducting interviews. He appears very relaxed, friendly and gregarious. He's a big fan of asking the question and just letting the guest speak. He's also good at working in the Biden digs. Overall, his presentation is very low key and he lets you say your thing. I did notice with particular interest in an interview with Congressman Derek Van Orden (R-WI) that he asked him to explain "why this matters to Americans" at the 10:20 mark of this video;

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mpWUbp4kl6c

Here are some other interviews he's done so you can get the feel of what he does.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Media Matters Talking Points

Media Matters is a Leftist propagandist organization the disguises itself as a media “watchdog” while enjoying non-proft 501(C)(3) status.

Asks for “donations” to push a progressive and dangerous point-of-view and clamp down on free speech.

X owner Elon Musk said that he would file a lawsuit against Media Matters over a report it ran that claimed X was placing ads for major corporations alongside Nazi-related content. As a result of the report, major corporations like Apple and IBM pulled advertising from X. Musk said the report was misleading and intended to undermine X’s commitment to free speech.

Musk said that Media Matters had created a “contrived” experience by using an alternate account to curate what posts appeared on the timeline. “Once they curated their feed, they repeatedly refreshed their timelines to find a rare instance of ads serving next to the content they chose to follow,” Musk said.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

According to Musk, the Media Matters report misrepresented X's advertising practices. He said X logs indicated that of the 5.5 billion ad impressions on the day Media Matters pulled its research, less than 50 were served alongside the content highlighted by the leftist organization.

For one "brand showcased in the article, two of its ads served adjacent to 2 posts, 3 times, and that ad was only seen in that setting by one user, the author of the Media Matters article.

They flat-out lied about X's advertising practices by manipulating the algorithms governing the user experience on X to bypass safeguards and create images of X's largest advertisers' paid posts adjacent to racist, incendiary content, leaving the false impression that these pairings are anything but what they actually are: manufactured, inorganic and extraordinarily rare.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Media Matters completely misrepresented the real user experience…they lied

They lied to go after the most well known freedom of speech platform, X

Media Matters, operating under the guise of a media watchdog site, spews incredibly wild lies in the interest of pushing an extreme left point-of view. It's damaging to unsuspecting consumers of their material.

501(c)(3) means a nonprofit organization that has been recognized by the IRS as being tax-exempt by virtue of its "charitable" programs.

Designed to intentionally mislead consumers of its content to make them think something that simply isn't true. This is part of what the left does…lies to make you think something that isn't true

DRAFT DO NOT RELEASE

- Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.

- Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.

- Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being ripped off by this scheme. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.

- Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:
    1. Social media platforms

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS

2. President Trump
    - We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates
3. The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms pervert the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.
    - Elon Musk controversy: Mr. Musk has clarified several times what his views are. The point is that anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. They made that post in order to get advertisers to pull out of X. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes unchecked, the marketplace for free,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

fair and open debate will cease to exist

- The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.
    1. We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

Local media:

- Media Matters lied when they took money from everyday Americans and used it in a way different from how they advertised it
- Media Matters appears to have used coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country
    1. We have a law called the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act that gives the Attorney General the authority to prosecute deceptive, fraudulent or unfair business practices.
        - We have reason to believe Missourians have been affected by this behavior

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- To that end, we have issued a document hold notice to Media Matters to get to the bottom of the magnitude of the fraudulent scheme Media Matters is perpetrating

Hi Charlene,
Thanks so much for your assistance on this. The AG is excited to participate.
See attached photo of the AG – let me know if you need a different format.
Please see his biography here: https://ago.mo.gov/about-us/about-ag-bailey/#:~:text=He%20began%20his%20legal%20career,the%20Missouri%20Department%20of%20Corrections.
His Twitter and Instagram are both @agandrewbailey
His Facebook is Attorney General Andrew Bailey
See our Flickr page here: https://www.flickr.com/photos/146566231@N08/ (The Flickr page needs a bit of updating but we will get that done in the next week. Should be plenty of photos there.)
What type of video clips are you interested in? Broll, past interviews. Etc are all things we have and can send along if it would be helpful.
Accompanying him will be me (Madeline Sieren, his comms director) and Branden Rathert, deputy comms director, who is copied here. Let me know if you need any info on either of us for security reasons.
Attached is his talking points on Media Matters. Below are the two links with info on the actions the AG has taken on that topic so far:

Bio:

Andrew Bailey was sworn in as the 44thGeneral of the State of Missouri on January 3, 2023.Andrew is a combat veteran, father of four, prosecutor, and constitutional conservative who fights for the people of Missouri every day as the State's chief legal official. Andrew went to college at the University of Missouri on an Army scholarship.Following the September 11thattacks on the United States, Andrew was commissioned as an officer in the Army and took an Oath to defend our Constitution.He volunteered for combat duty to take the fight to the enemies of freedom, volunteered to go to Iraq, and did two tours as an Armored Cavalry Officer.For his service, Andrew was awarded two Army Achievement Medals, an Army Commendation Medal, a Combat Action Badge, and two Bronze Star Medals.
Following the honor of wearing the uniform to serve our nation, Andrew returned to his alma mater to attend law school, and became a prosecutor to fight violent crime and protect Missouri communities.He began his legal career at the Missouri Attorney General's Office as an Assistant Attorney General and later served as an Assistant Prosecuting Attorney for the Warren County Prosecuting Attorney's Office and as General Counsel for the Missouri Department of Corrections.In 2019, Andrew joined the Missouri Governor's Office, serving first as Deputy Counsel and then General Counsel.Andrew has handled countless cases in both state and federal courts throughout his career, defending our constitutional freedoms and the most vulnerable while delivering justice for victims.
It was in the courtroom where Andrew saw too many Missouri children in need of a caring, loving home.Those experiences motivated him and his wife, Jessica, to become foster parents.They are now blessed with four beautiful children ranging from 6 months to 10 years old, and reside in Montgomery County.
As Attorney General, Andrew is focused on protecting the Constitution, enforcing the laws as written, defending the state, supporting the counties, and training a new generation of service-minded attorneys.

Good morning all,
Below is the relevant news for today and yesterday relating to the AGO, Missouri, and Nation:

AGO News:

'War for soul of America' has three fronts, says Missouri attorney general – who has helped make the state Ground Zero on this one

The Heartlander I Michael Ryan https://heartlandernews.com/2024/01/02/war-for-soul-of-america-has-three-fronts-says-missouri-attorney-general-who-has-helped-make-the-state-ground-zero-on-this-one/

-"Just as the 2024 presidential election cycle begins in earnest, Missouri has become Ground Zero in this country's centuries-long fight for freedom of speech. Even as he fights at the U.S. Supreme Court against Biden administration censorship of conservative speech online, the Missouri attorney general is looking into alleged coordinated liberal attacks on social media site X, the former Twitter – which he calls "the last platform dedicated to free speech in America." AG Andrew Bailey says he is probing whether the far-left Media Matters organization manipulated content on X to scare off advertisers – allegedly using algorithms to pair a few instances of offensive content with ads from major brands – and whether that has defrauded Missouri residents in the process… Bailey notified Media Matters in a letter that he's investigating whether the allegations against it are true and, if so, whether it constitutes fraud against Missourians who've contributed to the nonprofit. "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America," Bailey wrote in a statement. "Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process. I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech." Bailey expounded on his investigation of Media Matters in an exclusive interview with The Heartlander. "Number one, they lied when they took money from everyday Americans, to include Missourians, and used it to defraud advertisers on X. But then also, they have potentially lied when they manipulated the algorithms on X in order to emphasize controversial speech and bully X and its advertisers. "The coordinated attack on X was when they opened their own accounts and then manipulated the algorithms to emphasize controversial speech – in order to take controversial speech and juxtapose it with images of X's major advertisers. And they then broadcast that out as if it was happening frequently, when in fact there are more than 500 million users on X – and in X's own investigation into the matter there was only one instance in which one of the controversial images appeared adjacent to the major advertiser, and in another instance it only happened twice in 500 million times. "The odds of winning the Powerball recently have been one in 292 million. So in other words, you would be more likely to win the Powerball than to be able to replicate organically the staged manipulation that Media Matters accomplished. "Now, why would a 501(c)(3) want to do that? This should scare all Americans. This is a new front in the fight for free speech. What the left couldn't do through government censorship – because we filed Missouri v. Biden and put a stop to it – they've now moved into a new effort. And it's guerrilla warfare. It's market manipulation to destroy any public forum for free, fair and open debate." Bailey is fighting on that other front as well, helping commandeer the Missouri v. Biden lawsuit… The landmark case will determine whether conservatives have freedom of speech online in the runup to the 2024 election. The AG calls Missouri v. Biden "the most important First Amendment suit in this nation's history, where we've uncovered the relationship of coercion and collusion between the federal government and Big Tech social media to censor American voices in violation of the First Amendment right to free speech." The fact that the U.S. Supreme Court will be deciding the lawsuit even before the lower courts had a chance to "speaks to the enormous magnitude and implications of the case," Bailey says. What Media Matters is alleged to have done to X may be a naked attempt to get around the Missouri v. Biden case, Bailey says. "Yeah, I think so," he tells The Heartlander. "Again, what the [liberal] left was doing was censoring conservative speech on Big Tech social media platforms, and what happened in the interim was, they got caught because of Missouri v. Biden and we were able to call them out on it. But Elon Musk purchased Twitter, turned it into X, opened it up, and revealed the Twitter files that exposed the pernicious elements of the vast censorship regime. "What they can't accomplish anymore through government censorship, they now seek to accomplish through market manipulation. And the advertisers that are pulling out of X have become pawns in that game." There are three fronts in "the war for the soul of America," Bailey says – the first being the border. "If we don't have a border, we don't have a country. No border, no nation. President Biden has flung the border open and allowed a complete invasion of our country. It's making Missouri communities less safe."[The second front is] the weaponization of government against political opponents. We've got this two-tiered justice system where the party in power is persecuting and prosecuting President Trump in order to remove him from the political scene in the United States of America. At some point that becomes a Banana Republic. It undermines the rule of law and our confidence in the system. "And then the third strategic front is really the fight for free speech. And again, Missouri has been engaged in that fight from the beginning.'"

Attorney General announces 93% reduction in SAFE Kit Backlog

-"There's been a sizable reduction in the SAFE Kit backlog. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey has announced a 93 percent reduction in the backlog of untested sexual assault kits. Bailey's office also reported that more than 80 percent of Missouri law enforcement agencies have no untested sexual assault kits to report. The nearly one-thousand DNA profiles uploaded from the tested kits have resulted in more than 450 hits, three felony convictions, and nine other cases set for trial or with warrants issued. The first statewide inventory of untested sexual assault kits was completed in 2019. When this effort started under Josh Hawley's time as Attorney General, he cited about 7-thousand untested rape kits at that time."

Missouri Gov Bans Chinese Purchase Of Farmland Near Military Sites

https://dailycaller.com/2024/01/02/mike-parson-bans-chinese-purchase-of-farmland-near-military-sites-missouri/

-"Republican Missouri Gov. Mike Parson signed an executive order on Tuesday prohibiting any entity tied to the CCP from buying up land within 10 miles of any "critical military facilities," according to a statement from Parson's office. There are several firms with Chinese-based parent companies that own or plan to buy land around U.S. military installations, prompting concern from some lawmakers that Beijing is conducting espionage on American soil…Parson's executive order also applies to any person or group that has been designated as "foreign adversaries" by the U.S. government. Parson noted that it is still important to do business with the U.S.'s foreign allies, pointing to economic partnerships with Israel, the U.K. and Japan, among others, that have brought billions to Missouri's economy and created thousands of jobs. Multiple CCP-linked organizations operate or plan to operate near military bases in the U.S. For example, Cnano Technology USA – a subsidiary of C-Nano Technology, which itself is owned by Chinese-based entity Cnano Jiangsu Technology – plans to develop a 333,000-square-foot manufacturing plant in Kansas located within 35 miles from Fort Leavenworth and 70 miles from the Whiteman Air Force Base. Cnano Jiangsu adheres to CCP ideology and supports "the deep integration of Party-building and corporate governance," according to a company document. The company employs a number of CCP members and is involved in several projects deemed as efforts to steal American technology…"Just ask yourself the question: can Americans buy land in China near its military bases? Of course, the answer is no," Chairman of the House Select Committee on the CCP Mike Gallagher previously told the Daily Caller News Foundation. "We cannot allow the CCP to collect valuable intelligence here at home that they might leverage in the event of a crisis." The Missouri Department of Agriculture did not immediately respond to a request for comment."

-"Missouri House Republicans tapped an executive of a top GOP consulting firm to direct their campaign efforts after shifting a long-time strategist out of the job. Hannah Beers Sutton of Axiom Strategies will be executive director of the House Republican Campaign Committee, Majority Leader Jon Patterson said. She will replace Jonathan Ratliff, a partner in Palm Strategic who has been leading the House Republican campaign effort for 14 years. Ratliff will be retained as a "senior consultant," the announcement of his departure stated. Beers Sutton stood out because of her experience, her relationships and her political skills, Patterson said in an interview with The Independent…Beers Sutton steps in at a time of strained relations between House and Senate Republicans. The Missouri Supreme Court is considering a challenge to the Senate district map approved by a judicial commission in 2022 and, under Ratliff's direction, the House Republican Campaign Committee filed a brief supporting the challenge…Arguments in the case are scheduled for Jan. 24…"In the face of a daunting 2024 cycle, defending our supermajority is of the utmost importance," Beers Sutton said. But Republican Senate President Pro Tem Caleb Rowden said he does not expect work on transgender-related issues this year. And House Majority Floor Leader Jonathan Patterson said proposals dealing with drag shows, LGBTQ+ discussions in schools and library books will take a back seat to top priorities that include expanding access to child care and charter and non-public schools. St. Louis saw major drop in homicides and other reported crimes in 2023

-"St. Louis police reported 158 killings in 2023, marking its fewest in a decade. That number, which doesn't include seven homicides that were ruled justifiable for reasons including self-defense, is down from 200 in 2022 and 201 the year prior, according to department data. The same was true for other types of reported crime: Shootings were down 24% from 772 in 2022 to 552; felony thefts were down 39%; auto thefts were down 19%; and shootings involving juveniles were down 47%.And for all of St. Louis County, homicides dropped 24%, from 94 in 2022 to about 73 in 2023. The trends are encouraging for the St. Louis region, where for years the city's homicide rate was among the highest in the nation. City leaders touted the numbers as a sign that their crime reduction efforts are having an effect…St. Louis' trends weren't unique — homicides were down almost everywhere in the U.S. this year. Nationwide, they were down 13%, and several other cities, including Baltimore, Atlanta and Milwaukee saw decreases similar to St. Louis. Kansas City, where homicides were up 7% from 170 to 182, was one of the few exceptions. Memphis, where homicides were up 31% from 181 to 238, was another…As Tracy dealt with a record low in officer staffing, he also emphasized data-driven police strategies — which include community policing, keeping officers in the same areas from one shift to another, and a focus on sharing information with community organizations, other police departments and prosecutors. Tracy also tapped a local nonprofit for almost $1 million to fund overtime shifts in the downtown area…"

Missouri governor names Francis Slay to state highways commission

-"Gov. Mike Parson on Tuesday announced former St. Louis Mayor Francis G. Slay as one of two new members of the Missouri Highways and Transportation Commission. Slay, a Democrat, served as St. Louis mayor for four terms between 2001 and 2017. Since February 2022, Slay, 68, has been executive director of the St. Louis Regional Crime Commission, a nonprofit that runs the St. Louis Regional CrimeStoppers program. I-44 Could Be on Parson's Infrastructure Agenda

https://www.missourinet.com/2024/01/02/i-44-could-be-next-on-parsons-infrastructure-agenda/

-"During his time as the head of the state of Missouri, one of Gov. Mike Parson's main priorities has been infrastructure. His focus has included repairing 250 bridges in poor condition and widening Interstate 70 to alleviate traffic congestion. He told Missourinet that I-44 could be next. "I would tell you that I think you're going to find out there'll be some more major additions in the State of the State when we'll be talking about infrastructure and other major roads across the state," Parson said. He recently told the Joplin Globe that I-44 will be mentioned in his upcoming State of the State address. While the Show-Me State is preparing to expand I-70 from St. Louis to Kansas City, the Missouri Farm Bureau began campaigning for expanding I-44 from St. Louis to Joplin as well. Some lawmakers who live near I-44 want that roadway widened before I-70. Parson's final State of the State address is scheduled to happen January 24 in Jefferson City."

Former Elected Official in Missouri Arrested Over False Voter Document

US Supreme Court Could Dismantle Federal Government's Powers in 2024

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/us-supreme-court-could-dismantle-federal-governments-powers-in-2024-post-5556676

-"With the U.S. Supreme Court slated to return to session on Jan. 8, the second part of the high court's term could hand down rulings that either curb or expand the federal government's powers—sometimes known as the administrative state. Analysts have said that three cases that the high court is hearing related to the federal bureaucracy this term, including the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) v. Community Financial Services of America, the Securities Exchange Commission (SEC) v. Jarkesy, and Loper Bright Enterprises v. Raimondo. SEC v. Jarkesy: Hedge fund manager George Jarkesy was penalized by the SEC for violating securities fraud law, which he appealed. The U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals sided with the plaintiff, arguing in a ruling that the SEC violated the Constitution's Seventh Amendment, which provides the right to have a jury trial, and it also found that Congress engaged in overreach by delegating its own power when allowing an agency—in this case, the SEC—to hold administrative proceedings rather than file a lawsuit in a civil court against Mr. Jarkesy… the arguments focused on whether the Constitution's Seventh Amendment bars the federal securities agency from issuing penalties in internal proceedings without giving a defendant the ability to have a trial by jury. During the hearing, Chief Justice John Roberts suggested that federal agencies have obtained more power over the public in recent years. "Should that be a concern for us or a consideration?" he asked Department of Justice (DOJ) attorneys representing the SEC in the case. Justice Brett Kavanaugh suggested to the DOJ lawyer, Brian Fletcher, that the Jarkesy case would impact other federal agencies… CFPB v. Community Financial Services of America: In the CFPB case, the agency had asked the Supreme Court to rescind a ruling by a lower court that determined the agency's funding structure runs afoul of the Constitution. That ruling was also handed down by the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals earlier this year... The case stems from a challenge by two payday lending groups that sued to overturn a CFPB rule aimed at combating what the agency calls "unfair and abusive" practices in the industry. The 5th Circuit overturned the rule on Oct. 19, holding in the process that the CFPB's funding through the Federal Reserve, rather than budgets passed by Congress, violated the separation of powers principle in the U.S. Constitution… Depending on how the Supreme Court rules this term, the CFPB's "future is on the line before the Court," Better Markets, a consumer advocacy group, wrote in a recent report. Loper Bright Enterprises v. Raimondo: In May 2023, the high court opted to take the case, Loper Bright Enterprises v. Raimondo, which will decide on the question whether the court should overrule the Chevron doctrine, which has long been criticized by conservatives who call it unconstitutional. Critics object to its application without a clear framework to resolve statutory ambiguity, leaving too much discretion with the courts to engage in results-oriented decisioning. The Chevron v. Natural Resources Defense Council case, issued in 1984, is considered a key facet of administrative law and requires courts to defer the federal agencies' reasonable interpretations of statutes that are unclear. The case, according to University of Georgia School of Law professor Adam D. Orford, is significant because the Chevron doctrine "is potentially implicated any time a federal agency makes a rule to implement a federal statute and chooses to fill in gaps or do any other thing not specifically contemplated by Congress," adding that there are "thousands of rulemakings" by agencies each year…"

Federal Appeals Court Blocks Biden Admin's Emergency Abortion Rule in Texas

-"A federal appeals court on Tuesday upheld a lower court ruling blocking the Biden administration from enforcing federal guidance in Texas related to emergency abortions. Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Kurt Engelhardt, an appointee of President Donald Trump, penned the opinion, noting that the court declined "to expand the scope" of a federal statute to include enforcing abortions. The unanimous opinion by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is a win for Texas, whose attorney general argued the rule would force doctors to perform elective abortions against state law. The ruling means a loss for the White House's abortion agenda, and the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), which argued that its federal guidance trumps state laws… The guidance cited the 1986 federal Emergency Medical Treatment and Labor Act (EMTALA), which requires health providers to provide emergency care to a patient regardless of their ability to pay for it. Under EMTALA, certain health care providers can face stiff civil penalties, as well as loss of Medicare or Medicaid funding, for violations… In July 2022, Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton sued HHS over the guidance, seeking to block the enforcement of EMTALA, alleging that it forces providers to perform elective abortions in excess of HHS's authority and contrary to state law. Mr. Paxton argued that the rule forces hospitals and doctors to commit crimes and risk their medical licenses under Texas state law. The lower court agreed in its August 2022 ruling, prompting HHS to appeal the ruling, which the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals has now unanimously upheld…"

WAR: Biden Regime Files Emergency Application Demanding Supreme Court Allow Border Agents to Chop Down Razor Border Barriers Installed By Texas – Governor Greg Abbott Issues Defiant Response

https://www.thegatewaypundit.com/2024/01/war-biden-regime-files-emergency-application-demanding-supreme/

-"The Biden regime's determination to betray the American people and remake America has reached a new level. They now want the U.S. Supreme Court to remove a critical obstacle installed by Texas to stop illegal border crossings, leaving the state defenseless against the illegal alien invasion. As CNN reported, the Biden regime wants border agents to have the authority to cut razor wire that Texas has installed on the banks of the Rio Grande to deter border crossers. Texas Governor Greg Abbott's administration installed the razor wire near the Rio Grande River at Eagle Pass, Texas, to slow the illegal alien invasion that has overrun the state. Crime has skyrocketed, property has been destroyed, and precious state resources are being drained, all thanks to the Regime's open borders policy. When Border Patrol agents caved to the Regime's dictates and cut through some of the razor wire last October, Texas State Attorney General Ken Paxton sued. He correctly argued this action destroys state property and undermines security to assist illegal aliens in crossing the border. A federal judge declined to impose an injunction against the federal government. The conservative Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, however, stepped in and granted Texas a temporary victory last month, ordering Border Patrol agents to stop the practice while legal proceedings unfold… Abbott responded to the Regime's action with pure defiance and said Texas would continue safeguarding the porous border."

Armed Suspect Arrested After Shooting His Way Into Colorado Supreme Court, Setting Fire: Police

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/armed-suspect-arrest-after-shooting-his-way-into-colorado-supreme-court-setting-fire-police-5557089

-"Law enforcement officers in Colorado arrested an armed suspect who allegedly shot his way into the Colorado Supreme Court building early on Tuesday morning and setting a fire once inside the building. The armed suspect had reportedly been involved in a two-vehicle crash near the Ralph L. Carr Colorado Judicial Center in Denver at around 1:15 a.m. on Tuesday morning, according to a statement shared with NTD News by the Denver Police Department (DPD). One of the motorists involved in the collision allegedly emerged from his vehicle and pointed a handgun at the other driver. A short time later, that same armed individual, identified by DPD as 44-year-old Brandon Olsen, approached the Supreme Court building, shooting out a window on the east side of the building to gain entry. Once inside the building, Mr. Olsen allegedly crossed paths with an unarmed security guard from the Colorado State Patrol Capitol Security Unit and held the guard at gunpoint, eventually obtaining his security keys. Mr. Olsen then made his way into various other parts of the building, including the courthouse's seventh floor, where he reportedly fired additional shots inside the building. Mr. Olsen also allegedly set a fire in one of the building's stairwells. Colorado State Patrol (CSP) and DPD officers responding to the vehicle collision set up a security perimeter around the adjacent court building. According to DPD, Mr. Olsen eventually called 911 at around 3 a.m. local time and voluntarily surrendered without further incident. Denver Fire was then able to put out the flames inside the building's stairwell. Following his arrest, law enforcement officers took the suspect to a local hospital to be cleared by medical personnel… Mr. Olsen is currently being held for possible robbery, burglary, and arson charges. DPD is leading the investigation of the incident and the Denver District Attorney's will make the final determination as the the charges Mr. Olsen may face. No injuries have been reported as a result of the Tuesday morning break-in. CSP described the damage to the building sustained "significant and extensive damage" but DPD said its investigators are still evaluating the full extent of the damage… The CSP and DPD both said they are taking the Tuesday morning break-in at the Ralph L. Carr Colorado Judicial Center seriously, but indicated no clear link to the previous threats levied at the court following their recent ruling. "Preliminary investigations confirmed a high probability the incident being investigated the Ralph L. Carr Colorado Judicial Center is NOT associated to the recent threats against the Colorado Supreme Court Justices," reads a CSP press statement provided to NTD News…"

Here's How Much Federal Diversity Trainings Cost Taxpayers In 2023

https://dailycaller.com/2024/01/03/federal-diversity-trainings-cost-taxpayers-2023/

-"Taxpayers were on the hook for the more than $16.3 million the federal government spent on diversity trainings taking place in 2023, according to a government spending database. Past government diversity trainings have instructed federal workers that asking an Asian colleague for help with a math problem could be racist, that men can become pregnant and that "social pain" can be the same as physical pain. The Air Force, Navy, Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), National Park Service, National Institutes of Health, Department of Defense, Department of Education and Department of Veterans Affairs were among the government bodies shelling out millions for diversity trainings… Many of the diversity consulting firms the federal government is paying to administer training are open about the left-wing ideas they push. Ivy Planning Group, a diversity consultancy the National Institutes of Health and the Department of Education collectively paid about $200,000 to in 2023, is one such firm… The firm warns clients to be cautious of "MicroTriggers" which it says "are subtle, seemingly unimportant communications that can negatively impact an individual's performance and confidence." Ivy even sells a "MicroTriggers" button clients can buy for $30 that, when pushed, says "MicroTrigger!" and can be used as "a light-hearted way to spark conversations and to introduce accountability for subtle behaviors," according to the organization's webpage. In a guide published by Ivy on how clients can reduce unconscious bias, they encourage individuals to not be colorblind in relation to race. Ivy published another guide on "name privilege."… Not every organization the feds paid for diversity trainings was a traditional diversity consultancy. The Department of Labor, for instance, paid Cornell University more than $670,000 for its diversity trainings services. A brochure for one of Cornell's diversity trainings shows that organizations that pay for a training receive a "Check Your Privilege" tool and are taught about microaggressions, among other things. One of Cornell's trainings also assigns participants a paper on white privilege by feminist and anti-racist scholar Peggy McIntosh… The Navy and the Air Force spent $232,300 on contracts for diversity trainings taking place in 2023. One contract worth $91,000 paid the Black Pearl Chamber Orchestra, an orchestra with a "visible commitment to diversity, equity and inclusion," to give the United States Air Force Band diversity seminars… Biden signed an executive order in June 2021 commanding federal agencies to increase their diversity programming, saying that "such training programs should enable federal employees, managers and leaders to have knowledge of systemic and institutional racism and bias.'"

Son of George Soros scored eight Biden White House visits in 2023: 'Dark money machine'

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/news/white-house/george-soros-biden-white-house-meetings-2023

-"The younger Soros took at least eight trips to the White House between February and September of last year to hobnob with federal officials, all while Alex Soros and his 93-year-old father held meetings with Democratic lawmakers and gifted them with millions of dollars in campaign donations, according to White House visitor logs reviewed by the Washington Examiner. Meanwhile, George Soros recently passed the torch of his multibillion-dollar dark money philanthropy empire to his "more political" millennial son, a decision sure to have major ramifications on future elections and the left-wing donor sphere… The visits underscore how the Soros family has gained significant influence among the highest levels of government, as advocacy organizations funded by the Soros-backed Open Society Foundations prop up Biden's agenda across the United States. George and Alex Soros cut large checks in 2023 to Biden and various liberal politicians, including House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries (D-NY), Sen. Chris Murphy (D-CT), and Gov. Gavin Newsom (D-CA), campaign finance disclosures show. Tax forms filed in November show Open Society Policy Center, a lobbying shop in the Soros network, steered more than $15 million in 2022 to Future Forward USA Action, a nonprofit group staffed by ex-Biden White House officials that is supporting the president's reelection bid in 2024, the Washington Examiner reported. Alex Soros, who asserted in April 2023 that he is "Ridin with Biden" in the 2024 presidential election, often posts pictures on social media with top Democrats, including former Presidents Bill Clinton and Barack Obama, as well as Biden and Vice President Kamala Harris. OSF's newly crowned chairman is listed roughly two dozen times in White House visitor logs dating back to October 2021, while several of his colleagues, including Open Society-U.S. Executive Director Laleh Ispahani and Open Society Institute adviser Yasin Yaqubie, have also frequented the White House often, records show… Moreover, Alex Soros is listed in White House visitor logs in connection to a May 31 visit at the private residence of Vice President Harris, who, that day, also hosted model Savannah Huitema, businessman Avram Glazer, and other deep-pocketed Democrats. Guests arrived at 4 p.m. and departed the Harris household at midnight, according to visitor logs… Government records also list Alex Soros as visiting last year with former White House adviser Nina Srivastava, former White House chief of staff Ron Klain, and Jon Finer, the deputy national security adviser, among others. Congressional Outreach Director Mariana Adame and Jordan Finkelstein, special assistant to the president, are also listed in White House records as visiting in the past with Alex Soros. News of Alex Soros's 2023 access to the White House comes after he was listed 13 times in 2022 visitor logs, including for a state dinner that year in honor of French President Emmanuel Macron and a White House celebration on the confirmation of liberal Supreme Court Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson… OSF notably gave more than $2 million between 2016 and 2020 to al Haq, an Israeli-designated terrorist group linked to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a U.S.-designated terrorist faction, the Washington Examiner reported. The PFLP joined Hamas in the Oct. 7 attacks, which killed more than 1,200 people in the Jewish state."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Congress Faces Long To-Do List As Shutdowns Loom To Start 2024

https://dailycaller.com/2024/01/02/procrastination-congress-complete-january-2024/

-"The Senate adjourned on Dec. 21 after attempting to reach a political compromise on funding for Ukraine in exchange for border security measures, while the House of Representatives adjourned for a winter holiday recess on Dec. 14. When both houses convene for legislative business on Jan. 8 and Jan. 9, respectively, they will be presented with four time-sensitive major funding proposals to address regarding Israel, Ukraine, the southern border and the U.S. government as a whole. Under the terms of a continuing resolution passed by Congress on Nov. 15, funding for the departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Justice, Labor, Transportation and the White House, among others, will expire on Jan. 19, with the absence of a bill to fund them beyond that date precipitating a partial government shutdown. House Speaker Mike Johnson has previously indicated that the House will not consider any more continuing resolutions, which will leave the House just eight working days — excluding weekends and Martin Luther King Jr. Day, a federal holiday — to pass the five appropriations bills, or a small omnibus package, required for these departments to avert a shutdown. Neither the House nor the Senate has completely passed an appropriations bill ready for presentment to President Joe Biden, amid large differences between Democrats and Republicans on their contents. Of the seven bills passed by the House and three bills passed by the Senate, only one bill, related to military construction projects and the Department of Veterans Affairs, has been passed by both Houses, though each house has passed a different version of the bill that will require a conference process to harmonize. Apart from the appropriations process, Congress will resume its consideration of an aid package to Ukraine requested by the Biden administration, which has been blocked by House Republicans unless the Democratic-led Senate grants concessions on border security. The Senate was unable to reach a compromise that satisfies Democrats, some of whom have objected to any enhancement of authority to remove illegal immigrants demanded by Republicans… Funding for Ukraine expired on Sept. 30, the beginning of the Fiscal Year 2023-24, and was not included in the previous two continuing resolutions. The absence of American financial support prompted a visit from Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy to the United States in December to plead for congressional support. Congress, furthermore, is considering a bill to provide military aid to Israel during its war against Hamas. While supported in principle by Democrats and Republicans, the former oppose a House-passed bill to provide aid offset by cuts to the Internal Revenue Service."

Andrew Bailey was sworn in as the 44thGeneral of the State of Missouri on January 3, 2023.Andrew is a combat veteran, father of four, prosecutor, and constitutional conservative who fights for the people of Missouri every day as the State's chief legal official. Andrew went to college at the University of Missouri on an Army scholarship.Following the September 11thattacks on the United States, Andrew was commissioned as an officer in the Army and took an Oath to defend our Constitution.He volunteered for combat duty to take the fight to the enemies of freedom, volunteered to go to Iraq, and did two tours as an Armored Cavalry Officer.For his service, Andrew was awarded two Army Achievement Medals, an Army Commendation Medal, a Combat Action Badge, and two Bronze Star Medals.

Following the honor of wearing the uniform to serve our nation, Andrew returned to his alma mater to attend law school, and became a prosecutor to fight violent crime and protect Missouri communities.He began his legal career at the Missouri Attorney General's Office as an Assistant Attorney General and later served as an Assistant Prosecuting Attorney for the Warren County Prosecuting Attorney's Office and as General Counsel for the Missouri Department of Corrections.In 2019, Andrew joined the Missouri Governor's Office, serving first as Deputy Counsel and then General Counsel.Andrew has handled countless cases in both state and federal courts throughout his career, defending our constitutional freedoms and the most vulnerable while delivering justice for victims.

It was in the courtroom where Andrew saw too many Missouri children in need of a caring, loving home.Those experiences motivated him and his wife, Jessica, to become foster parents.They are now blessed with four beautiful children ranging from 6 months to 10 years old, and reside in Montgomery County.

As Attorney General, Andrew is focused on protecting the Constitution, enforcing the laws as written, defending the state, supporting the counties, and training a new generation of service-minded attorneys.

- Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

• Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protectMissourians from being ripped off by this scheme and to shed light on the subject. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.

• Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:

1. Social media platforms

    ▪ We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS

2. President Trump

    ▪ We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates

3. The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms perverting the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.

    ▪ Anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes unchecked, the marketplace for free, fair and open debate will cease to exist.

• The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.

1. We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTEREST OF AMICI STATES

The States of Missouri, Ohio, Alaska, Alabama, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Dakota, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, and Virginia, and the Arizona Legislature ("the States"), agree with many points in the amicus brief of New York, et al., which focuses on social media problems other than censorship. The States here submit this amicus brief to focus directly on the censorship question.

The States do so for two reasons. First, it is the constitutional duty of the States to protect their citizens' inherent rights, including the right to free speech. Just as States pass criminal and civil laws to protect citizens from private abridgment of rights of life and property, States have a long history of regulating to protect citizens from abridgment of their free speech rights by dominant communication platforms. Second, the States have a vital interest in hearing the speech of their citizens, especially political speech. That is necessary for States to be democratically responsive. NetChoice's position threatens these interests because it seeks to upend the longstanding authority of States to prohibit mass communication networks from engaging in censorship and viewpoint discrimination.

1. The Founders were clear that the purpose of government is to secure liberty. The Declaration of Independence recognizes that natural rights, including "Life" and "Liberty," preexist government, and that "Governments are instituted among Men" for one principal purpose: "to secure these rights." Declaration of Independence ¶ 2.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Founders thus recognized that governments are created to protect rights from private abridgment—the only abridgment that can occur before government is formed. Society must of course always resist government abuse of power (which occurs too often), but government is created in the first instance to protect against private abuse. As James Madison put it, "If men were angels, no government would be necessary." The Federalist No. 51, at 319 (Clinton Rossiter ed., Signet Classic 2003) (1788). Government must be obliged "to control itself"—through separation of powers—but it is equally true that society "must first enable the government to control the governed." Ibid.

One right States "are instituted among Men" to "secure" is the freedom of speech. As Madison said when proposing the draft of the First Amendment, freedom of speech is a "natural right" predating government itself. Jud Campbell, Natural Rights and the First Amendment, 127 Yale L.J. 246, 264 (2017) (citing Madison's notes reflecting his speech in Congress). This Court has held the same, explaining that "the Second Amendment, like the First and Fourth Amendments, codified a pre-existing right." District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 592 (2008) (emphasis in original).

So NetChoice is flat wrong to contend (at 25 in Paxton)[1] that only the government is capable of censorship. Because freedom of speech is a freedom

[1] This amicus references briefs in the two consolidated cases as Paxton briefs (for No. 22-555) and Moody briefs (for No. 22-277).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

States were created to secure, it is the duty of States to secure that freedom from private abridgment, including abridgment by extraordinarily powerful communication platforms.

The States can pass criminal laws against theft and murder—thus protecting against private interference with rights of property or life. And if dominant firearm dealers refuse to sell on account of race, States can regulate to secure for their citizens the right to bear arms. So too, if dominant communication platforms censor based on viewpoint, States can pass laws to stop that censorship—as they have done for well over 100 years.

A State of course cannot, in the name of protecting free speech, abridge the freedom of speech. But this Court has held that the First Amendment does not prohibit States from protecting the marketplace of ideas when that marketplace is threatened by private actors. "It would be strange indeed," this Court said, "if the grave concern for freedom of the press which prompted adoption of the First Amendment should be read as a command that the government was without power to protect that freedom." Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 20 (1945). As with freedom of the press, so too with freedom of speech. See W. Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U.S. 650, 651, 660 (1895) (upholding law prohibiting telegraph companies from engaging in viewpoint discrimination); see also Genevieve Lakier, The Non-First Amendment Law of Freedom of Speech, 134 Harv. L. Rev. 2299, 2316-19 (2021) (listing statutory examples protecting free speech).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2. States also have an interest in preventing censorship because censorship deprives States of the information they need to be responsive to the people. "The vitality of civil and political institutions in our society depends on free discussion." Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4 (1949). "[I]t it is only through free debate and free exchange of ideas that government remains responsive to the will of the people and peaceful change is effected." Ibid.

Many landmark legal changes arose from government responding to the speech of everyday citizens. That includes "great matters of state," such as Magna Carta, women's suffrage, the Declaration of Independence, and antislavery legislation. Borough of Duryea, Pa. v. Guarnieri, 564 U.S. 379, 395–97 (2011). Those reforms illustrate that "representative democracy" works best when the "free exchange" of ideas "facilitates an informed public opinion, which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the People's will." Mahanoy Area Sch. Dist. v. B. L., 141 S. Ct. 2038, 2046 (2021). Today, one of the most common ways individuals speak to their governments is through public posts on social media.

Top-down censorship by dominant communication platforms thus threatens the ability of States to operate. Censorship deprives local government of the information needed to "remain[] responsive to the will of the people." Terminiello, 337 U.S., at 4.

* * *

As Judge Oldham's opinion below recognized, States and Congress have enacted regulations like the ones enacted by Texas and Florida for well over one hundred years. NetChoice, L.L.C. v. Paxton, 49 F.4th 439, 470–71 (CA5 2022). While the earlier laws applied to telegraphs and telephones, it is no different when the companies carrying other people's speech are digital rather than analog. The States thus have a paramount interest in urging this Court to affirm that longstanding, historic authority of States to protect freedom of speech and enable representative government by prohibiting dominant communication networks from censoring.

That interest is especially weighty here in light of the unprecedented control these platforms have over speech central to political and public discourse. "[I]n the modern economy, the Platforms provide the most effective way to disseminate news, commentary, and other information." Id., at 476. And never before has there been so much "concentrated control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties." Biden v. Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct. 1220, 1221 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). While government censorship has long been and remains a concern, today the ability "to cut off speech lies most powerfully in the hands of private digital platforms." Id., at 1227.

Indeed, a Facebook executive candidly admitted in a 2019 internal memo—later leaked—that the company's power over speech is so immense that Facebook could unilaterally "pull any lever" to alter the outcome of a presidential election. Andrew

Bosworth Memo, N.Y. Times (Jan. 7, 2020).[2] The States have authority to protect citizens from abuse of that immense power.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I.A. The easiest path to resolve this case is to determine whether social media is more like telephones or more like newspapers. The law has consistently permitted requiring telephones and the like to distribute third-party speech and has generally rejected requiring the same of companies like newspapers.

This Court has already unanimously rejected NetChoice's maximalist argument that companies have a categorical right not to "disseminate … speech generated by others." NetChoice Paxton Br., at 13; see PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 85 (1980). Instead, this Court has considered whether the regulated company "possess[es] the power to obstruct readers' access to" information, Turner Broad. System, Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1994"), 512 U.S. 622, 656 (1994), and whether requiring a company to distribute third-party speech would materially harm the company's ability to get out its "own message," Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 63 (2006).

[2] https://perma.cc/V8NP-6K4A; https://web.archive.org/web/20200107185034/https://www.nytimes.com/2020/01/07/technology/facebook-andrew-bosworth-memo.html.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

On these critical questions, newspapers and telephones are different. Local newspapers cannot restrict access to information. Nationwide phone companies can. For newspapers, parades, and the like, space constraints and limited number of content creators means compelling a company to carry third-party speech materially harms the company's ability to express its "own message." Ibid. The space constraints mean material loss of the company's opportunity to speak, and the nature of the medium means listeners become confused about whether speech belongs to third parties or the company. Id., at 65. But for mass communication networks like telephones, those risks are not substantial. So courts have long permitted requiring companies like telephones to distribute third-party speech free from viewpoint discrimination.

Social media companies are much more like telephone networks than newspapers. Unlike newspapers, which "do[ ] not possess the power to obstruct readers' access to" information, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656, social media companies do—and they exercise that power. Like telephone companies, and "unlike newspapers," social media companies "hold themselves out as organizations that focus on distributing the speech of the broader public." Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). Unlike the space constraints for newspapers, the space on social media is nearly boundless. And like telephones, nearly all speech on social media platforms is created by third parties.

For all these reasons, NetChoice cannot meet its burden of establishing that the regulations at issue here would materially limit a social media company's speech or cause ordinary members of the public to confuse speech on Facebook, YouTube, or X (formerly Twitter) as speech of the company itself, rather than third parties using those platforms. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

I.B. NetChoice barely addresses the analogy to telephones and telegraphs, stating only that regulating those companies is permissible because they transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B." Moody Br., at 49. That argument fails for many reasons.

First, it is demonstrably false historically. As the Fifth Circuit explained, telegraph companies engaged in the same kind of viewpoint discrimination NetChoice's members engage in today.

Second, the argument would make regulation pointless. If the only companies that can be required to carry content without discrimination are those already doing so, regulation does nothing at all. Relatedly, NetChoice's argument begs the question. If this Court permits the regulations to go into effect, social media platforms likewise will transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B."

Third, NetChoice's argument creates a recipe for censorship by telephones and government. Under their logic, as soon as an actor begins "editing" content, that transforms the content into the actor's own speech. Telephones can thus evade the 100-plus years of regulation simply by starting to censor. So too, government can simply "edit" people's speech, and turn everything into government speech.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I.C. Because NetChoice has brought facial challenges against these laws, this Court need not answer the thornier questions about what to do when platforms mix their own speech with that of third parties (such as when they append "fact checks" to third-party speech).

II.A. The extraordinary market power social media platforms possess reinforces the ability of States to regulate in this area. At common law, companies with substantial market power were required to serve without discrimination. This Court has long permitted States and Congress to apply the same concept to large communication platforms.

No doubt, these platforms possess extraordinary power. This industry has monumental barriers to entry. What makes these companies valuable is their network sizes, such as Facebook's 3-billion person network. That makes it very difficult to compete, and the one time an upstart (called Parler) finally gained momentum, Apple, Google, and Amazon forcibly removed it from the internet.

These companies also aggressively engage in censorship that impoverishes free exchange of ideas. Many examples are notorious, such as the systematic censorship of the Hunter Biden laptop story and of the theory that COVID originated in a lab in China—now the predominant theory of several federal agencies, such as the Energy Department and the FBI. Platforms censor viewpoints on the most hotly contested topics of the day, like transgender issues. And they suppress "misinformation" later proven accurate. While most censored speech is conservative, there are complaints about censorship of left-wing speech. All this censorship harms not only the marketplace of ideas, but also the ability of the States to respond to the concerns of their citizens.

III. Dominant digital platforms are not the only problem. Government often pressures platforms to censor. This Court granted certiorari to Murthy v. Missouri, No. 23-411, where a district court made extensive fact findings that the White House, the FBI, an agency within the Department of Homeland Security, and other federal actors systematically pressured social media companies to censor even more speech.

In its brief in Murthy, the Federal Government does not dispute the accuracy of these extensive, alarming findings. It does not dispute, for example, that it successfully induced removal of millions of posts—even posts that do not violate policies of social media companies—or that this removal affected everyone on social media. Instead, it argues it successfully induced these things through legal "persuasion," not illegal "coercion," and that the plaintiffs lack standing to contend otherwise. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 14, 25, 34.

That likely reveals why the United States backs NetChoice here, even though its position threatens the United States' own laws. The Federal Government knows it will be much more difficult for federal officials to induce social media companies to suppress speech if state law prohibits it. So the Federal Government seeks to eliminate those state laws.

That shows that the Texas and Florida laws, far from infringing the First Amendment, in fact shield social media companies from government pressure.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

ARGUMENT

I. States have authority, to prohibit mass communication platforms from censoring speech.

A. Requiring social media companies to distribute third-party speech without viewpoint discrimination is permissible because social media better resembles telephones than newspapers.

1. NetChoice does not dispute that telephones and telegraphs can be compelled, consistent with the First Amendment, to distribute third-party speech. They can be compelled to behave as common carriers even though this Court has declared that "they are not common carriers," Primrose v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 (1894) (emphasis added), and even though these companies have a history of exercising the very "editorial discretion" NetChoice's members seek to exercise today, Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470.

In fact, it is only because telegraph companies behaved the way social media companies do today that nondiscrimination regulations were imposed. In the 1800s, "Western Union, the largest telegraph company, … discriminated against certain political speech," confirming the fear "'that the private entities that controlled this amazing new technology would use that power to manipulate the flow of information to the public when doing so served their economic or political self-interest.'" Ibid. (quoting Genevieve Lakier, The Non-First Amendment Law of Freedom of Speech, 134 Harv. L. Rev. 2299, 2321 (2021)). "In response, States enacted common carrier laws to limit discrimination in the transmission of telegraph messages." Ibid. Congress did the same. Ibid. (citing Telegraph Lines Act, ch. 772, § 2, 25 Stat. 382, 383 (1888)); see also W. Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U.S. 650, 651 (1895) (rejecting a challenge to an Iowa law requiring telegraph companies to deliver messages with "impartiality and good faith").

On the other hand, this Court has been clear that companies generally cannot be compelled to distribute third-party speech in their own "newspapers," Miami Herald Pub. Co. v. Tornillo, 418 U.S. 241, 258 (1974), or in their own "newsletters," which are "no different from a small newspaper," P. Gas and Elec. Co. v. Pub. Utilities Comm'n. of California, 475 U.S. 1, 8 (1986). The Court has applied similar analysis to parade organizers and expressive associations. Hurley v. Irish-American Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Group of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 574–75 (1995); Boy Scouts of Am. v. Dale, 530 U.S. 640, 655 (2000).

In two seminal cases, this Court explained what makes newspapers and the like different from organizations that can be required to distribute third-party speech. First, a newspaper, unlike a cable company,[3] "does not possess the power to obstruct readers' access to" other information. Turner Broad.

[3] Although cable companies differ from newspapers in important ways, they resemble (or at least did in the 1990s) newspapers in others. This Court stressed, for example, that cable companies in the 1990s had meaningful space constraints. Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 637.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

System, Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1994"), 512 U.S. 622, 656 (1994). Second, newspapers, newsletters, and the like generally cannot be required to distribute third-party content because that requirement "sufficiently interferes with any message of [the company]."[4] Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 64 (2006). Telephones and shopping centers are different because no space constraints materially impede the company from getting out its "own message," and "there [i]s little likelihood that the views of those [third parties] engaging in the expressive activities would be identified with the" company. See id., at 65 (citing PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 88 (1980)).

In other words, the First Amendment tolerates compelled hosting to preserve access to information when

(1) the company has power to obstruct access to information, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656; or

(2) there is no "danger … that the statute would 'dampen the vigor and limit the variety of public debate,'" PruneYard, 447 U.S., at 88 (quoting Miami Herald, 418 U.S., at 257) (brackets omitted), because the act of hosting

[4] Even newspapers "are prohibited from charging more for political advertising than they charge for commercial advertising" or "receiving money or any other thing of value in exchange for their editorial endorsement of a political candidate or an idea." Lakier, supra, at 2330 (citing 52 U.S.C. § 30120(b) and state laws).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

> "lack[s] the expressive quality of a parade, a newsletter, or the editorial page of a newspaper," Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

That makes sense because a law requiring a company to host the speech of third parties is more akin to a property regulation than a speech regulation: it regulates the ability of a company like Facebook to exclude people from its network. Because any effect on the company's own speech is indirect, must-carry regulations are more likely than direct regulations to survive review.

NetChoice is thus wrong to assert that companies have a categorical right not to "disseminate … speech generated by others." Paxton Br., at 13. This Court squarely considered and (unanimously) rejected that argument. PruneYard, 447 U.S., at 85 (rejecting the argument "that a private property owner has a First Amendment right not to be forced by the State to use his property as a forum for the speech of others"). Instead, what matters are the contextual questions whether NetChoice's members can obstruct access to other information and whether hosting third-party speech would materially impede the ability of NetChoice's members to get out their own message.

That means there is a much simpler way for this Court to assess the two NetChoice cases: evaluate whether companies like Facebook are more like newspapers, parade organizers, cake bakers,[5] and website designers,[6] or more like telephones, telegraphs, schools, and shopping malls.

2. Social media companies are much more like telephones, telegraphs, schools, and shopping centers than newspapers and newsletters.

Consider first "the power [of social media companies] to obstruct readers' access to … publications." Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656. As explained more fully in Part II.B, perhaps the most infamous censorship decision by social media companies was blocking access to a newspaper report containing unflattering information about the Democratic candidate for President. "A daily newspaper, no matter how secure its local monopoly, does not possess th[is] power." Ibid. Social media companies do, and they exercise it. "The potential for abuse of this private power over a central avenue of communication cannot be overlooked." Id., at 657.

Consider also the number of people contributing content to a newspaper versus a telephone network or social media network. Unlike a newspaper, which might have at most a few hundred people contributing content, "3 billion people" contribute content on Facebook. Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). "[U]nlike newspapers, digital platforms hold themselves out as organizations that focus on distributing the speech of the broader public," and so it is the public who creates nearly all the content on the platform. Ibid.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Moreover, while newspapers carefully curate third-party content that they accept (such as letters to the editor), social media companies, like telephones and telegraphs, generally "hold [themselves] out to serve any member of the public without individualized bargaining." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470; see also Shurtleff v. City of Bos., Massachusetts, 596 U.S. 243, 256–57 (2022) (holding that flag raisings were not government speech because "Boston told the public that it sought 'to accommodate all applicants'").

Then there is the lack of space constraints. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64. While nothing in the physical universe is truly infinite, social media companies come about as close to infinity as possible. They operate with nothing like the space constraints of a newspaper. "The New York Times publishes around 150 original pieces of journalism a day, on average." How We Choose the Great Read, N.Y. Times (Apr. 4, 2022).[7] In contrast, the vast majority of public speech flows through social media, with 1.7 million posts made to Facebook and 500 hours of video are uploaded to YouTube every minute. Media Usage in an Internet Minute as of April 2022, Statista (2023).[8] That is 2.4 billion Facebook posts and 720,000 hours of video uploaded to YouTube every day. Unlike a newspaper, where forced hosting of third-party content meaningfully decreases space for the newspaper's own message, Miami Herald, 418 U.S., at 257, social media companies have plenty of space to express their own message. For social media, "accommodation does not sufficiently interfere with any message of the [social media company]." Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

And unlike newspapers or parade organizers (which carefully curate all content toward a specific message or messages), nearly all content on social media companies is posted unedited by the companies. While these platforms "use algorithms to screen out" far less than even one percent of content, "virtually everything else is just posted to the Platform with zero editorial control or judgment." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 459 (emphasis in original).

In fact, contrary to NetChoice's assertions now that its members exercise "editorial control" over everything, these companies have expressly stated, "We try to explicitly view ourselves as not editors .... We don't want to have editorial judgment over the content that's in your feed." Id., at 460 (emphasis added) (quoting Ravi Somaiya, How Facebook Is Changing the Way Its Users Consume Journalism, N.Y. Times (Oct. 26, 2014)[9]). NetChoice's current presentation before this Court is likewise inconsistent with the assertions of its members in other lawsuits that they merely distribute content created by others and are therefore entitled to immunity under § 230 of the Communications Decency Act. E.g., Br. of Twitter, Gonzalez v. Google, No. 21-1333, at 7 (Jan. 2023) (stating that Twitter merely "disseminat[es] third-party content"); see also NetChoice, LLC v. Paxton, 142 S. Ct. 1715, 1717 n.2 (2022) (Alito, J., dissenting) (noting the argument that NetChoice's "position in this litigation is in conflict or tension with the positions of its members in cases regarding the interpretation of § 230").

Finally, it is Congress's judgment that these companies operate more like telephones than newspapers, which is why Congress shielded them from defamation liability. See 47 U.S.C. § 230.

For all these reasons, social media companies better resemble telephone companies than newspapers. They have power to obstruct customers from receiving speech, they are principally in the business of distributing the content of others from point A to point B, they do not deal with meaningful space constraints, and the vast majority of the speech they distribute is unedited.

NetChoice thus cannot prove that distributing third-party speech without viewpoint discrimination will materially impede social media companies from speaking for themselves or that members of the public will mistake third-party speech on Facebook, YouTube, or Twitter as speech by the platforms. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64. Just as "high school students can appreciate the difference between speech a school sponsors and speech the school permits because legally required to do so," ibid., so too everyday Americans can distinguish between speech on Facebook and Facebook's own speech[10]—especially because these companies expressly disclaim third-party content as their own. See, e.g., Terms of Service, Facebook (last updated July 26, 2022), https://www.facebook.com/legal/terms ("We do not control or direct what people and others do or say, and we are not responsible for their actions or conduct (whether online or offline) or any content they share (including offensive, inappropriate, obscene, unlawful, and other objectionable content).").

All these facts sharply distinguish social media companies not only from newspapers, but also from cake decorators, website designers, and parade organizers. While there is little to no risk that everyday observers will mistake third-party speech on Facebook for Facebook's "own message," requiring a cake artist or independent website designer to speak a third party's speech does "deny speakers the right 'to choose the content of their own messages'" because the risk of attribution is high. 303 Creative LLC, 600

[10] Section 230 lawsuits ask a different question. There is usually no debate about whether the speech is third-party speech. The question instead is whether the platform helped "develop[ ]" the third-party's speech "in part," thus removing immunity. 47 U.S.C. § 230(f)(3); see also Malwarebytes, Inc. v. Enigma Software Group USA, LLC, 141 S. Ct. 13, 16 (2020) (Thomas, J., concurring). There is an active debate about whether things like algorithms help "develop[ ]" third-party speech "in part." A conclusion by this Court that individuals are unlikely to mistake third-party speech on social media companies for the speech of the companies themselves would have no effect on whether those companies could invoke § 230 as a shield with respect to the same content.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

U.S., at 592 (quoting Hurley, 515 U.S., at 573) (brackets omitted). Indeed, the "very purpose" of Colorado's requirement to force companies to design websites supporting certain events was "the coercive elimination of dissenting ideas about marriage." Id., at 588 (brackets and internal quotation marks omitted). Forcing a cake baker or newspaper to state third-party speech unlawfully compels speech. Requiring companies in the business of transmitting other peoples' speech billions of times a day to do so without viewpoint discrimination does not.

3. It makes no difference that posts on social media typically are distributed to many people rather than to one. Organizations subject to must-carry regulations are regularly used to broadcast speech to many recipients. "[S]upposedly one-to-one media have long been used to distribute material to the public at large." Eugene Volokh, Treating Social Media Platforms Like Common Carriers?, 1 J. Free Speech L. 377, 387 (2021). One speaker can use the U.S. Postal Service to broadcast a message to millions. Ibid. And hundreds or even thousands of people can join a single conference call or group text message thread.

B. Social media companies cannot evade accountability simply by choosing to edit some content.

The Fifth Circuit opinion extensively discussed the historical regulation of telephones and telegraphs, yet NetChoice's brief in Paxton makes no attempt to address that analogy. Its brief in Moody is hardly better, principally arguing (at 49) that telegraph and telephone companies are different because they merely transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B." The United States amicus brief repeats this argument, asserting (at 11) that "unlike [telephones and telegraphs], the platforms are not merely conduits transmitting speech from one person to another" but instead choose to edit or remove content.

Although the Eleventh Circuit adopted this argument, NetChoice, LLC v. Moody, 34 F.4th 1196, 1222 (CA11 2022), the argument overlooks basic history, is circular and begs the question, would enable phone companies to evade regulation, and would create a roadmap for government censorship.

As to history, telephone and telegraph companies transmit speech on an "unedited basis" only because they are compelled to do so by law. Those companies historically did the same thing NetChoice's members currently do until the States, Congress, and this Court stepped in. See Lakier, supra, at 2322; Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470; W. Union Tel. Co., 162 U.S., at 651.

History thus favors the States, not NetChoice. The Eleventh Circuit concluded social media companies could censor content because they have "historically exercised" power to refuse transmission of disfavored ideas. Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1222. But telegraph companies have a much longer history of censorship. Social media is less than two decades old. Congress did not impose must-carry requirements on telegraphs until 1888, 50 years after their invention. Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. Yet it is well recognized today that those must-carry regulations were constitutional—even though this Court declared that telegraph companies are "not common carriers." Primrose, 154 U. S., at 14 (emphasis added). History thus provides no basis for dismissing the striking similarities between social media companies and telegraph and telephones by dubbing social-media censorship "editorial judgment."

The attempt to avoid the telephone analogy is also circular and would wipe out traditional regulations. The Eleventh Circuit concluded Florida could not require social media companies to distribute content without viewpoint discrimination because the companies already "exercise editorial judgment." Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1221. In other words, the State can compel a company to refrain from censoring only if the company is already refraining. Under that rule, must-carry regulations are pointless. Telephones, telegraphs, and parcel delivery companies can become immune under the First Amendment from any must-carry regulation as soon as they chose to engage in "editorial judgment" to cut off calls and not deliver messages and products that express ideas they dislike.

Or if those traditional regulations are valid, then the Eleventh Circuit's analysis is self-refuting: the regulations here would become valid as soon as a company complies. NetChoice asserts that imposing must-carry regulations on telephones is fine because telephones transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis,'" but the same will be true of NetChoice's members if they comply with these statutes.

The argument is also a roadmap for government censorship. If NetChoice and the Eleventh Circuit are correct that the act of "discriminat[ing] among messages" converts third-party speech into the platform's first-party speech, Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1221, then the Federal Government could freely censor speech on its property because the censorial act would convert the speech into government speech, which "is not restricted by the Free Speech Clause," Pleasant Grove City, Utah v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 469 (2009); see also Walker v. Texas Div., Sons of Confederate Veterans, Inc., 576 U.S. 200, 213 (2015). Much like this Court should "prevent the government-speech doctrine from being used as a cover for censorship," Shurtleff, 596 U.S., at 263 (Alito, J., concurring), it should prevent the First Amendment from blocking States' efforts to stop private censorship. Like the government, social media companies may not hide behind the First Amendment when they deploy a "come-one-come-all attitude" with exceptions for select disfavored speakers. Id., at 257 (majority op.).

C. In the context of facial challenges, this Court need not consider more complex questions.

Because NetChoice has asserted facial challenges, this Court need not wade into more difficult questions, such as whether a social media company can be prohibited from attaching a disclaimer or a fact check to third-party speech.

It is far from obvious how this Court's precedents would apply. On the one hand, a platform that appends a note to third-party speech undoubtedly engages in its own speech. On the other hand, communication networks often are required to serve all comers without "undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person" or "class of persons." 47 U.S.C. § 202. If a phone company appended a 30-second ad supporting one political candidate to every call originating from the campaign office of that candidate's opponent, the phone company would certainly be engaging in speech, but it would also be giving "preference or advantage" to one customer over another.

Those more difficult questions should not be resolved in the context of a facial challenge.

II. The hyperconcentration of social media reinforces State authority to regulate.

Both the common law and American courts have long recognized that protecting the marketplace of ideas involves more than keeping government from abridging speech; it sometimes means regulating dominant private actors to ensure they cannot abridge speech either.

At common law, it was well recognized that companies with substantial market power could be compelled not to discriminate. As Matthew Hale, the well-known English barrister and scholar on the history of the common law, put it, "if a wharf owner operated the 'only wharf licensed by the queen' or if 'there was no other wharf in that port,' then the wharf was 'affected with a public interest,' and the owner acquired a duty to serve without discrimination." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 472 (quoting Matthew Hale, De Portibus Maris, in A COLLECTION OF TRACTS RELATIVE TO THE LAW OF ENGLAND 77–78 (Francis Hargrave ed., 1787)) (brackets omitted).

American courts have long applied this principle to communications technology, assessing whether a "communications firm … play[s] a central economic and social role in society." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. As this Court put it, because "values central to the First Amendment" include "assuring that the public has access to a multiplicity of information sources," government can take "steps to ensure that private interests not restrict, through physical control of a critical pathway of communication, the free flow of information and ideas." E.g., Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 657, 663; accord U.S. Telecom Ass'n v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381, 434–35 (CADC 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from rehearing en banc) ("If the Internet service providers have market power, then the Government may impose open-access or similar carriage obligations.").

This Court has thus held that radio's "unique characteristic[s]" permit the government to restrict "specified network practices" without abridging freedom of speech. Nat'l Broad. Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 226–27 (1943). And this Court approved government regulations that prohibited cable companies from silencing "the voice of" some "speakers with a mere flick of the switch." Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656 (1994); see also Turner Broad. Sys., Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1997"), 520 U.S. 180, 225 (1997).

Applied to social media companies, these cases mean, at the least, that regulations are justified when "the service provider possesses 'bottleneck monopoly power' in the relevant geographic market" and can use it to "diminish[] the diversity and amount of content available." U.S. Telecom Ass'n, 855 F.3d, at 431, 433 n.12 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (quoting Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 661); see also Comcast Cable Communications, LLC v.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

FCC, 717 F.3d 982, 993 (CADC 2013) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring). "[I]t stands to reason that if Congress may demand that telephone companies operate as common carriers, it can ask the same of" other communication companies, including social media companies. Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 684 (opinion of O'Connor, J.).

The core of the Florida and Texas laws comfortably fits that rubric. The laws address companies that possess extraordinary market power and use it to reduce diversity of ideas.

A. Market power

While these companies were much smaller and less entrenched even six or eight years ago, the extraordinary scale and scope of large social media platforms today makes it impossible to deny that they "play[] a central economic and social role in society." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. These platforms are "the modern public square," Packingham v. North Carolina, 582 U.S. 98, 107 (2017), and "serve as the primary source of news about important public issues for many Americans," Murthy v. Missouri, 144 S. Ct. 32, 32 (2023) (Alito, J., dissenting).

Consider their network effects. A fax machine is valuable only to the extent others use fax machines. The most valuable thing about Facebook is that "3 billion people use it." Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). While network size makes Facebook an extraordinary marketplace for ideas, network size also means these dominant platforms are the only way most speakers can avoid speaking into a void, see, e.g., Alan Z. Rozenshtein, Silicon Valley's Speech: Technology

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Giants and the Deregulatory First Amendment, 1 J. Free Speech Law 337, 357 (2021). Other options for speech are not comparable. Switching from Facebook to "competitor" upstart social media companies is not like switching from AT&T to Verizon. It is like switching from flying to walking.

Network effects also mean enormous barriers to new entry—as evidenced by these companies' sky-high profit margins.[11] In a competitive market, "astronomical profit margins … would induce new entrants into the market. That these companies have no comparable competitors highlights that the industries may have substantial barriers to entry." Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1225 (Thomas, J., concurring).

In fact, three years ago, the last time a newer social media company gained serious traction, other platforms banded together to kill it. In January 2021, Parler, which branded itself as a free-speech platform, was the most downloaded app. Then Google (YouTube's parent company) and Apple "removed" "the app for the conservative-focused Twitter competitor Parler … from their app stores." Volokh, supra, at 397–98 (citations omitted). That made Parler virtually inaccessible on phones for anybody who had not already downloaded the app. Then Parler's "hosting company, Amazon Web Services" "blocked" it from the Amazon servers Parler was renting, taking Parler entirely offline, even though "Parler was merely refusing to forbid certain speech, much of which is constitutionally protected—thus voluntarily acting in a way close to how the post office and phone companies are required by law to act." Id., at 398. Amazon's power to kick companies entirely off the internet has caused Amazon to be described as "more like a utility provider than a broadcaster." Scott Rosenberg, Big Tech's Free Speech Showdown, Axios (Jan. 10, 2021).[12]

This illustrates a concerning fact: the dominant internet players are so powerful that the only way startups can take off is by relying on the mercy of the companies against which they wish to compete.

The conclusion that a handful of companies dominate the social media market aligns with conclusions by States and the Federal Government. In 2020, the Federal Trade Commission initiated an ongoing antitrust suit on the theory that "Facebook holds monopoly power in the market for personal social networking services … in the United States." FTC v. Facebook, Inc., No. 1:20-cv-03590 (D.D.C. filed Dec. 8, 2020), Am. B. Discriminatory use of power

Although described by this Court as "the modern public square," Packingham, 582 U.S., at 107, these platforms are in fact more important than the historic public square because they hold "unprecedented … control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties," Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1221 (Thomas, J., concurring). True, other aspects of the internet have enormous network effects (such as email), but nobody has central control over those networks. In contrast, "control of [social media] networks is highly concentrated" in the hands of a few people. Id., at 1224. The platforms' power to facilitate and restrict speech on a large scale means they wield power "far greater than that of individual broadcasters who compete with one another as well as with satellite and cable networks." Prasad Krishnamurthy & Erwin Chemerinsky, How Congress Can Prevent Big Tech from Becoming the Speech Police, The Hill (Feb. 18, 2021).[14] of information to the detriment of citizens and democratic governance.

These legislative judgments rest on solid ground. Companies covered by the Texas and Florida laws currently exercise unchecked power to suppress ideas. And they have shown little inclination to self-limit their "incredible influence over the content that's put out into the world." Ahiza García-Hodges, *Big Tech Has Big Power over Online Speech. Hunter Biden Paid Tax Bill, but Broad Federal Investigation Continues, N.Y. Times (Mar. 16, 2022).[17]

2. Platforms restrict not only news reporting, but also speech by everyday Americans. They "have certainly been willing to restrict opinions that are well within the American political mainstream." Volokh, supra, at 395. This conclusion is borne out in countless examples. Id. at 397 (listing several).

Consider one of the most hotly contested issues today: the many controversial legal and policy questions about the increasing number of individuals who identify as transgender. These include questions about separate bathrooms, locker rooms, and sports teams; about appropriate medical care; and even about the nature of what it means to be male or female. Nobody doubts these questions are important, yet social media companies have made mainstream views on these questions off limits. For example, a clear majority (57%) of adults believe sex is determined at birth, regardless of a person's later-expressed gender identity. Ashley Kirzinger, et al., KFF/The Washington Post Trans Survey (Mar. 24, 2023).[18] But the 57% of Americans who believe that are not allowed to say so on social media. For example, when a U.S. Representative expressed his view that a high-ranking official in the Biden administration who identifies as a woman is in fact "a man," Twitter locked the Representative's account until he deleted the post. Indiana Congressman Deletes Post, Gets Twitter Access Back, Associated Press (Nov. 5, 2021).[19] Similarly, Twitter suspended a commenter when she expressed opposition to a transgender individual competing in the women's division in the Olympics, stating "men shouldn't compete against women." Joseph Wulfsohn, Allie Beth Stuckey Released from "Twitter Jail" after Referring to Transgender Olympic Athlete as a "Man," Fox News (Aug. 6, 2021).[20]

These questions are hotly debated today, and views on all sides of the issues are held "in good faith by reasonable and sincere people." Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. 644, 657 (2015). But it is extraordinary that dominant communications companies through which the vast majority of public speech flows can make a viewpoint held by 57% of Americans, on one of the most salient political topics of the day, off limits in the "modern public square," Packingham, 582 U.S., at 107. That censorship "harm[s] … society as a whole" by "depriv[ing]" society of "an uninhibited marketplace of ideas." Virginia v. Hicks, 539 U.S. 113, 119 (2003).

Much of the speech targeted by these dominant communication platforms is conservative, which is not surprising given Mark Zuckerberg's acknowledgment that tech companies reside in "an extremely left-leaning place." Morgan Chalfant, Cruz Presses Zuckerberg on Alleged Censorship of Conservative Speech (Apr. 10, 2018).[21] Right after Elon Musk purchased Twitter, he and journalist Bari Weiss uncovered internal evidence that at Twitter, "the rules were enforced against the right, but not against the left." Elon Musk tweet, Dec. 8, 2022.[22]

But several platforms have also received allegations about censorship of opinions commonly viewed as left wing. Currently, social media companies face accusations of reducing the visibility of posts expressing political support for a Palestinian state in the present conflict. Priyanka Shankar, et al., Are Social Media Giants Censoring Pro-Palestine Voices Amid Israel's War?, Al Jazeera (Oct. 24, 2023).[23] Last summer, a federal district court found that social media platforms, at the request of federal officials, blocked Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.'s efforts to communicate with the public about his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination. See Missouri v. Biden, 2023 WL 4335270, *5, *9, *40 (W.D. La., July 4, 2023). And in the aftermath of George Floyd's murder, Facebook allegedly flagged and removed posts calling attention to allegedly racist conduct. Craig Silverman, Black Lives Matter Activists Say They're Being Silenced by Facebook, Buzzfeed (June 19, 2020).[24]

3. Platforms also censor true information that is difficult to brand as left or right. Speech surrounding COVID is a prime example. When COVID first hit, "major social networks rolled out a series of policy changes to curb … claims about the virus, including theories about its roots"—like that it originated in a Chinese lab. Cristiano Lima, New Report on Covid-19 Origin Puts Social Media in GOP's Crosshairs, Washington Post (Feb. 27, 2023).[25] That origin theory is now the predominant theory of many agencies under the Biden administration. Both the Energy Department and the FBI have concluded that the COVID-19 "virus likely spread due to an accident at a Chinese laboratory." Ibid.

Similarly, in the summer of 2021, YouTube removed a video that a U.S. Senator, who is a doctor, posted opining about the relative inefficacy of masks made out of cloth. See, e.g., YouTube Suspends Rand Paul after Misleading Video on Masks, PBS News Hour (Aug. 11, 2021).[26] YouTube also banned him from posting any videos—on any topic—for a week. Yet Senator Paul's view is widely accepted today. See Apoorva Mandavilli, The C.D.C. Concedes that

4. These examples may only scratch the surface because of platforms' deliberate opacity about their practices. They censor by taking down content or suspending people from their accounts, but they also "shadowban" by distributing content less widely than would otherwise occur. Geoffrey Fowler, Shadowbanning Is Real: Here's How You End up Muted by Social Media, Washington Post (Dec. 27, 2022).[28] "[U]sers often have no way of telling for sure whether they have been shadowbanned or whether their content is simply not popular."[29] Gabriel Nicholas, Shadowbanning Is Big Tech's Big Problem, The Atlantic (April 28, 2022).[30]

If recent history is any guide, that will not change. These companies continue to resist transparency. In early 2023, for example, Facebook's parent company, Meta, declined the recommendation of its Oversight

[29] That some censorship occurs by leaving up content (but simply not distributing it as widely) further undermines NetChoice's contention that social media companies must censor content to avoid unwanted association with speech they dislike.

Board to disclose which public-figure Facebook pages are subject to the site's "cross-check" moderation program for high-profile users. Clare Duffy, Facebook Revamps Controversial Content Moderation Process for VIPs, CNN Business (Mar. 3, 2023).[31]

* * *

Whether the target is left-wing speech, right-wing speech, or centrist speech, censorship harms everyone. From the start, our constitutional order recognized that "error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." Jefferson's First Inaugural Address (March 4, 1801).[32] The Constitution aims to "'preserve an uninhibited marketplace of ideas in which truth will ultimately prevail.'" Nat'l Inst. of Fam. & Life Advocates. v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361, 2374 (2018) (citation omitted). That is because the "widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the public." Associated Press, 326 U.S., at 20. "This free exchange facilitates an informed public opinion, which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the People's will." Mahanoy, 141 S. Ct. at 2046.

Platforms leverage their extraordinary power to threaten that constitutional project. Florida and Texas's challenged response, designed to ensure information flows freely and fairly, strengthens rather than offends the First Amendment.

C. The Court should respect legislative fact findings of market power and censorship.

In the face of this discriminatory use of market dominance, the Texas and Florida legislatures made legislative findings about the power of large platforms to impoverish the marketplace of ideas. Texas concluded that social media platforms with "more than 50 million active users in the United States in a calendar month" have "market dominance" that justifies treating them as "common carriers." Tex. Code § 120.002(b); Tex. H.B. 20 §1(4). Florida determined that platforms with 100 million monthly global users or $100 million annual gross revenue "have become as important for conveying public opinion as public utilities are for supporting modern society" and "should be treated similarly to common carriers." Fla. Stat. § 501.2041(g); Fla. S.B. 7072 § 1(5)–(6). Those legislative judgments deserve significant weight in evaluating whether the Constitution permits the States' regulations. Cf. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 132 (1876); Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 665 (plurality op.); Minnesota v. Clover Leaf Creamery Co., 449 U.S. 456, 464 (1981). After all, if "it stands to reason" that "Congress may demand" that telephone and cable companies carry third-party speech, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 684 (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part), it equally stands to reason that the States may demand the same of digital platforms. Where the Bill of Rights polices government conduct, there is "no daylight between the federal and state conduct it prohibits or requires." Timbs v. Indiana, 139 S. Ct. 682, 687 (2019); see also Ramos v. Louisiana, 140 S. Ct. 1390, 1397 (2020); Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 7 (1964).

III. State laws preventing platforms from censoring speech provide a prophylactic vanguard against government censorship.

The United States says it is submitting an amicus brief because, Congress having "enacted laws governing the communications industry," the United States "has a substantial interest in the resolution of the questions presented." U.S. Br., at 1. Yet the United States advocates a position that threatens to undermine those federal laws.

Why? Perhaps because the Federal Government intends to continue its well-documented practice of pressuring companies to wield their censorship discretion to remove disfavored viewpoints.

It is undisputed that the Federal Government, including the White House, has engaged in a years-long, behind-closed-doors campaign to push social media companies to suppress millions of constitutionally protected posts. This Court has granted certiorari in Murthy v. Missouri, No. 23-411, and while the legal conclusions there are disputed, the fact findings are not.

In its opening brief in Murthy, the Federal Government does not dispute any fact finding. It does not dispute that—behind closed doors—it successfully used "unrelenting pressure" to push social media companies to "suppress[] millions of protected free speech postings by American citizens."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Missouri v. Biden, No. 3:22-CV-01213, 2023 WL 4335270, at *44 (W.D. La. July 4, 2023). It does not dispute it targeted "disfavored" speech "well beyond COVID-19," including "the Hunter Biden laptop story," Missouri v. Biden, 83 F.4th 350, 368, 381 (CA5 2023), and topics related to "racial justice, the U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan," U.S. "[s]upport of Ukraine," and content posted by an individual who was challenging President Biden for the Democratic presidential nomination, 2023 WL 4335270, at *9, *67. The Federal Government does not dispute it targeted "nearly every major American social media company," and that those companies "capitulated" into "total compliance," even removing constitutionally protected content that "did not run afoul of their policies." 83 F.4th, at 359, 362–63, 392. And the Federal Government does not dispute its "conduct has not stopped," it has even "started monitoring" the platforms for compliance with governmental demands "to remove disfavored content," and its push for censorship has been so widespread that "it impacts every social-media user." Id., at 359–60, 393, 398.

Instead, the Federal Government argues it successfully induced all these things through legal "persuasion," not illegal "coercion," and the plaintiffs lack standing to contend otherwise. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 14, 25, 34. The Federal Government even doubles down, all but promising to continue pressing platforms to take down millions of posts because it believes it has a duty to crack down on so-called "false information," id., at 34, even though much speech it pushed to suppress turned out to be true.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Federal Government's interest in the NetChoice cases is thus clear.[33] The Texas and Florida laws pose no threat to federal laws; they only threaten the ability of federal officials to continue pushing platforms to "suppress[] millions of protected free speech postings by American citizens." 2023 WL 4335270, at *44.

Pressuring platforms will become much more difficult if state law prohibited platforms from complying with the Federal Government's takedown demands. One of "anti-discrimination obligations' great virtues is that it protects private entities from complying with government's censorship demands. A private company with no legal obligation to treat users in a non-discriminatory fashion readily can accede government's request to censor, block, or otherwise treat users unfairly. But, if a private firm is prohibited by law to do so, then the government cannot even ask." Adam Candeub, Bargaining for Free Speech: Common Carriage, Network Neutrality, and Section 230, 22 Yale J. L. & Tech. 391, 432–33 (2020).

The Federal Government's real interest here is that it will no longer be able to "persuade" platforms to take down millions of constitutionally protected

[33] As further evidence that the United States views the NetChoice cases as fundamentally related to Murthy, the United States repeats the same "editorial discretion" arguments in Murthy. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 3–4, 16, 36. The United States is also represented in this case by two Civil Division attorneys who represented the Federal Government in Murthy at the Fifth Circuit.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

posts if this Court affirms the Texas and Florida laws. That is a reason to support the state laws, not to strike them down. In passing these laws, Texas and Florida have afforded their citizens the "double security [that] arises" when one government "guard[s] … society against the injustice of the other." The Federalist No. 51, at 320 (Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed., supra). The Fifth Circuit in Murthy said the Federal Government forced social media companies to "bend to the government's will." 83 F.4th, at 371. The laws challenged here provide the legal backbone platforms need to stand straight.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CONCLUSION

The Court should affirm the longstanding authority of States to protect their citizens from censorship imposed by mass communication networks.

Hi Brianna – let's talk about this when we call tomorrow, but here's the draft free speech amicus brief Missouri is leading in the net choice cases that I mentioned.
It's 99% finished. Deadline for other states to join is tomorrow night. We have at least ten that are joining. And we're still doing tables, etc. so I will get you the final brief tomorrow.
But we plan to file on Monday, and would love for you to break the story. We can work around you.
Case has huge implications for government censorship, etc. and ties to AG Bailey's free speech case, Missouri v. Biden, that is also before the U.S. Supreme Court. This is going to be a huge Supreme Court term for the 1A.
Will get you a quote from the AG as well if you're interested.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTEREST OF AMICI STATES

The States of Missouri, Ohio, Alaska, Alabama, Arkansas, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, and Virginia, and the Arizona Legislature ("the States"), agree with many points in the amicus brief of New York, et al., which focuses on social media problems other than censorship. The States here submit this amicus brief to focus directly on the censorship question.

The States do so for two reasons. First, it is the constitutional duty of the States to protect their citizens' inherent rights, including the right to free speech. Just as States pass criminal and civil laws to protect citizens from private abridgment of rights of life and property, States have a long history of regulating to protect citizens from abridgment of their free speech rights by dominant communication platforms. Second, the States have a vital interest in hearing the speech of their citizens, especially political speech. That is necessary for States to be democratically responsive. NetChoice's position threatens these interests because it seeks to upend the longstanding authority of States to prohibit mass communication networks from engaging in censorship and viewpoint discrimination.

1. The Founders were clear that the purpose of government is to secure liberty. The Declaration of Independence recognizes that natural rights, including "Life" and "Liberty," preexist government, and that "Governments are instituted among Men" for one principal purpose: "to secure these rights." Declaration of Independence ¶ 2.

The Founders thus recognized that governments are created to protect rights from private abridgment—the only abridgment that can occur before government is formed. Society must of course always resist government abuse of power (which occurs too often), but government is created in the first instance to protect against private abuse. As James Madison put it, "If men were angels, no government would be necessary." The Federalist No. 51, at 319 (Clinton Rossiter ed., Signet Classic 2003) (1788). Government must be obliged "to control itself"—through separation of powers—but it is equally true that society "must first enable the government to control the governed." Ibid.

One right States "are instituted among Men" to "secure" is the freedom of speech. As Madison said when proposing the draft of the First Amendment, freedom of speech is a "natural right" predating government itself. Jud Campbell, Natural Rights and the First Amendment, 127 Yale L.J. 246, 264 (2017) (citing Madison's notes reflecting his speech in Congress). This Court has held the same, explaining that "the Second Amendment, like the First and Fourth Amendments, codified a pre-existing right." District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 592 (2008) (emphasis in original).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

So NetChoice is flat wrong to contend (at 25 in Paxton)[1] that only the government is capable of censorship. Because freedom of speech is a freedom States were created to secure, it is the duty of States to secure that freedom from private abridgment, including abridgment by extraordinarily powerful communication platforms.

The States can pass criminal laws against theft and murder—thus protecting against private interference with rights of property or life. And if dominant firearm dealers refuse to sell on account of race, States can regulate to secure for their citizens the right to bear arms. So too, if dominant communication platforms censor based on viewpoint, States can pass laws to stop that censorship—as they have done for well over 100 years.

A State of course cannot, in the name of protecting free speech, abridge the freedom of speech. But this Court has held that the First Amendment does not prohibit States from protecting the marketplace of ideas when that marketplace is threatened by private actors. "It would be strange indeed," this Court said, "if the grave concern for freedom of the press which prompted adoption of the First Amendment should be read as a command that the government was without power to protect that freedom." Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 20 (1945). As with freedom of the press, so too with freedom of speech. See W. Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U.S. 650, 651, 660 (1895)

(upholding law prohibiting telegraph companies from engaging in viewpoint discrimination); see also Genevieve Lakier, The Non-First Amendment Law of Freedom of Speech, 134 Harv. L. Rev. 2299, 2316-19 (2021) (listing statutory examples protecting free speech).

2. States also have an interest in preventing censorship because censorship deprives States of the information they need to be responsive to the people. "The vitality of civil and political institutions in our society depends on free discussion." Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4 (1949). "[I]t it is only through free debate and free exchange of ideas that government remains responsive to the will of the people and peaceful change is effected." Ibid.

Many landmark legal changes arose from government responding to the speech of everyday citizens. That includes "great matters of state," such as Magna Carta, women's suffrage, the Declaration of Independence, and antislavery legislation. Borough of Duryea, Pa. v. Guarnieri, 564 U.S. 379, 395–97 (2011). Those reforms illustrate that "representative democracy" works best when the "free exchange" of ideas "facilitates an informed public opinion, which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the People's will." Mahanoy Area Sch. Dist. v. B. L., 141 S. Ct. 2038, 2046 (2021). Today, one of the most common ways individuals speak to their governments is through public posts on social media.

Top-down censorship by dominant communication platforms thus threatens the ability of States to operate. Censorship deprives local government of the information needed to "remain[] responsive to the will of the people." Terminiello, 337 U.S., at 4.

As Judge Oldham's opinion below recognized, States and Congress have enacted regulations like the ones enacted by Texas and Florida for well over one hundred years. NetChoice, L.L.C. v. Paxton, 49 F.4th 439, 470–71 (CA5 2022). While the earlier laws applied to telegraphs and telephones, it is no different when the companies carrying other people's speech are digital rather than analog. The States thus have a paramount interest in urging this Court to affirm that longstanding, historic authority of States to protect freedom of speech and enable representative government by prohibiting dominant communication networks from censoring.

That interest is especially weighty here in light of the unprecedented control these platforms have over speech central to political and public discourse. "[I]n the modern economy, the Platforms provide the most effective way to disseminate news, commentary, and other information." Id., at 476. And never before has there been so much "concentrated control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties." Biden v. Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct. 1220, 1221 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). Today the ability "to cut off speech lies most powerfully in the hands of private digital platforms." Id., at 1227. That explains why the Federal Government has inserted itself through pressure into those content-moderation policies and practices—as shown in Murthy v. Missouri. The concentration of power in a handful of platforms can facilitate government censorship.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

That power creates other real concerns. A Facebook executive admitted in a 2019 internal memo—later leaked—that the company's power over speech is so immense that Facebook could unilaterally "pull any lever" to alter the outcome of a presidential election. Andrew Bosworth Memo, N.Y. Times (Jan. 7, 2020).[2] The States have authority to protect citizens from abuse of that immense power.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I.A. The easiest path to resolve this case is to determine whether social media is more like telephones or more like newspapers. The law has consistently permitted requiring telephones and the like to distribute third-party speech and has generally rejected requiring the same of companies like newspapers.

This Court has already unanimously rejected NetChoice's maximalist argument that companies have a categorical right not to "disseminate … speech generated by others." NetChoice Paxton Br., at 13; see PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 85 (1980). Instead, this Court has considered whether the regulated company "possess[es] the power to obstruct readers' access to" information, Turner Broad. System, Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1994"), 512 U.S. 622, 656 (1994), and whether requiring a company to distribute third-party speech would materially harm the company's ability to get out its "own message," Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 63 (2006).

On these critical questions, newspapers and telephones are different. Local newspapers cannot restrict access to information. Nationwide phone companies can. For newspapers, parades, and the like, space constraints and limited number of content creators means compelling a company to carry third-party speech materially harms the company's ability to express its "own message." Ibid. The space constraints mean material loss of the company's opportunity to speak, and the nature of the medium means listeners become confused about whether speech belongs to third parties or the company. Id., at 65. But for mass communication networks like telephones, those risks are not substantial. So courts have long permitted requiring companies like telephones to distribute third-party speech free from viewpoint discrimination.

Social media companies are much more like telephone networks than newspapers. Unlike newspapers, which "do[ ] not possess the power to obstruct readers' access to" information, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656, social media companies do—and they exercise that power. Like telephone companies, and "unlike newspapers," social media companies "hold themselves out as organizations that focus on distributing the speech of the broader public." Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). Unlike the space constraints for newspapers, the space on social media is nearly boundless. And like telephones, nearly all speech on social media platforms is created by third parties.

For all these reasons, NetChoice cannot meet its burden of establishing that the regulations at issue here would materially limit a social media company's speech or cause ordinary members of the public to confuse speech on Facebook, YouTube, or X (formerly Twitter) as speech of the company itself, rather than third parties using those platforms. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

I.B. NetChoice barely addresses the analogy to telephones and telegraphs, stating only that regulating those companies is permissible because they transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B." Moody Br., at 49. That argument fails for many reasons.

First, it is demonstrably false historically. As the Fifth Circuit explained, telegraph companies engaged in the same kind of viewpoint discrimination NetChoice's members engage in today.

Second, the argument would make regulation pointless. If the only companies that can be required to carry content without discrimination are those already doing so, regulation does nothing at all. Relatedly, NetChoice's argument begs the question. If this Court permits the regulations to go into effect, social media platforms likewise will transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B."

Third, NetChoice's argument creates a recipe for censorship by telephones and government. Under their logic, as soon as an actor begins "editing" content, that transforms the content into the actor's own speech. Telephones can thus evade the 100-plus years of regulation simply by starting to censor. So too, government can simply "edit" people's speech, and turn everything into government speech.

I.C. Because NetChoice has brought facial challenges against these laws, this Court need not answer the thornier questions about what to do when platforms mix their own speech with that of third parties (such as when they append "fact checks" to third-party speech).

II.A. The extraordinary market power social media platforms possess reinforces the ability of States to regulate in this area. At common law, companies with substantial market power were required to serve without discrimination. This Court has long permitted States and Congress to apply the same concept to large communication platforms.

No doubt, these platforms possess extraordinary power. This industry has monumental barriers to entry. What makes these companies valuable is their network sizes, such as Facebook's 3-billion person network. That makes it very difficult to compete, and the one time an upstart (called Parler) finally gained momentum, Apple, Google, and Amazon forcibly removed it from the internet.

These companies also aggressively engage in censorship that impoverishes free exchange of ideas. Many examples are notorious, such as the systematic censorship (at the instigation of the Federal Government) of the Hunter Biden laptop story and of the theory that COVID originated in a lab in China—now the predominant theory of the Energy Department and the FBI. Platforms censor viewpoints on the most hotly contested topics of the day, like transgender issues. And they suppress "misinformation" later proven accurate. While most censored speech is conservative, there are complaints about censorship of left-wing speech. All this censorship harms not only the marketplace of ideas, but also the ability of the States to respond to the concerns of their citizens.

III. Dominant digital platforms are not the only problem. Government systematically pressures platforms to censor. This Court granted certiorari to Murthy v. Missouri, No. 23-411, where a district court made extensive fact findings that the White House, the FBI, an agency within the Department of Homeland Security, and other federal actors systematically pressured social media companies to censor even more speech.

In its brief in Murthy, the Federal Government does not dispute the accuracy of these extensive, alarming findings. It does not dispute, for example, that it successfully induced removal of millions of posts—even posts that do not violate policies of social media companies—or that this removal affected everyone on social media. Instead, it argues it successfully induced these things through legal "persuasion," not illegal "coercion," and that the plaintiffs lack standing to contend otherwise. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 14, 25, 34.

That likely reveals why the United States backs NetChoice here, even though its position threatens the United States' own laws. The Federal Government knows it will be much more difficult for federal officials to induce social media companies to suppress speech if state law prohibits it. So the

Federal Government seeks to eliminate those state laws.

That shows that the Texas and Florida laws, far from infringing the First Amendment, in fact shield social media companies from government pressure and deprive government of the opportunity to control expression.

ARGUMENT

I. States have authority to prohibit mass communication platforms from censoring speech.

A. Requiring social media companies to distribute third-party speech without viewpoint discrimination is permissible because social media better resembles telephones than newspapers.

1. NetChoice does not dispute that telephones and telegraphs can be compelled, consistent with the First Amendment, to distribute third-party speech. They can be compelled to behave as common carriers even though this Court has declared that "they are not common carriers," Primrose v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 (1894) (emphasis added), and even though these companies have a history of exercising the very "editorial discretion" NetChoice's members seek to exercise today, Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470.

In fact, it is only because telegraph companies behaved the way social media companies do today that nondiscrimination regulations were imposed. In the 1800s, "Western Union, the largest telegraph company, … discriminated against certain political speech," confirming the fear "'that the private entities that controlled this amazing new technology would use that power to manipulate the flow of information to the public when doing so served their economic or political self-interest.'" Ibid. (quoting Genevieve Lakier, The Non-First Amendment Law of Freedom of Speech, 134 Harv. L. Rev. 2299, 2321 (2021)). "In response, States enacted common carrier laws to limit discrimination in the transmission of telegraph messages." Ibid. Congress did the same. Ibid. (citing Telegraph Lines Act, ch. 772, § 2, 25 Stat. 382, 383 (1888)); see also W. Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U.S. 650, 651 (1895) (rejecting a challenge to an Iowa law requiring telegraph companies to deliver messages with "impartiality and good faith").

On the other hand, this Court has been clear that companies generally cannot be compelled to distribute third-party speech in their own "newspapers," Miami Herald Pub. Co. v. Tornillo, 418 U.S. 241, 258 (1974), or in their own "newsletters," which are "no different from a small newspaper," P. Gas and Elec. Co. v. Pub. Utilities Comm'n. of California, 475 U.S. 1, 8 (1986). The Court has applied similar analysis to parade organizers and expressive associations. Hurley v. Irish-American Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Group of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 574–75 (1995); Boy Scouts of Am. v. Dale, 530 U.S. 640, 655 (2000).

In two seminal cases, this Court explained what makes newspapers and the like different from organizations that can be required to distribute third-party speech. First, a newspaper, unlike a cable company,[3] "does not possess the power to obstruct readers' access to" other information. Turner Broad. System, Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1994"), 512 U.S. 622, 656 (1994). Second, newspapers, newsletters, and the like generally cannot be required to distribute third-party content because that requirement "sufficiently interferes with any message of [the company]."[4] Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 64 (2006). Telephones and shopping centers are different because no space constraints materially impede the company from getting out its "own message," and "there [i]s little likelihood that the views of those [third parties] engaging in the expressive activities would be identified with the" company. See id., at 65 (citing PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 88 (1980)).

In other words, the First Amendment tolerates compelled hosting to preserve access to information when

[3] Although cable companies differ from newspapers in important ways, they resemble (or at least did in the 1990s) newspapers in others. This Court stressed, for example, that cable companies in the 1990s had meaningful space constraints. Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 637.

[4] Even newspapers "are prohibited from charging more for political advertising than they charge for commercial advertising" or "receiving money or any other thing of value in exchange for their editorial endorsement of a political candidate or an idea." Lakier, supra, at 2330 (citing 52 U.S.C. § 30120(b) and state laws).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(1) the company has power to obstruct access to information, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656; or

(2) there is no "danger … that the statute would 'dampen the vigor and limit the variety of public debate,'" PruneYard, 447 U.S., at 88 (quoting Miami Herald, 418 U.S., at 257) (brackets omitted), because the act of hosting "lack[s] the expressive quality of a parade, a newsletter, or the editorial page of a newspaper," Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

That makes sense because a law requiring a company to host the speech of third parties is more akin to a property regulation than a speech regulation: it regulates the ability of a company like Facebook to exclude people from its network. Because any effect on the company's own speech is indirect, must-carry regulations are more likely than direct regulations to survive review.

NetChoice is thus wrong to assert that companies have a categorical right not to "disseminate … speech generated by others." Paxton Br., at 13. This Court squarely considered and (unanimously) rejected that argument. PruneYard, 447 U.S., at 85 (rejecting the argument "that a private property owner has a First Amendment right not to be forced by the State to use his property as a forum for the speech of others"). Instead, what matters are the contextual questions whether NetChoice's members can obstruct access to other information and whether hosting third-party speech would materially impede the ability of NetChoice's members to get out their own message.

That means there is a much simpler way for this Court to assess the two NetChoice cases: evaluate whether companies like Facebook are more like newspapers, parade organizers, cake bakers,[5] and website designers,[6] or more like telephones, telegraphs, schools, and shopping malls.

2. Social media companies are much more like telephones, telegraphs, schools, and shopping centers than newspapers and newsletters.

Consider first "the power [of social media companies] to obstruct readers' access to … publications." Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656. As explained more fully in Part II.B, perhaps the most infamous censorship decision by social media companies was blocking access to a newspaper report containing unflattering information about the Democratic candidate for President. "A daily newspaper, no matter how secure its local monopoly, does not possess th[is] power." Ibid. Social media companies do, and they exercise it. "The potential for abuse of this private power over a central avenue of communication cannot be overlooked." Id., at 657.

Consider also the number of people contributing content to a newspaper versus a telephone network or social media network. Unlike a newspaper, which might have at most a few hundred people contributing content, "3 billion people" contribute content on Facebook. Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). "[U]nlike newspapers, digital platforms hold themselves out as organizations that focus on distributing the speech of the broader public," and so it is the public who creates nearly all the content on the platform. Ibid. Moreover, while newspapers carefully curate third-party content that they accept (such as letters to the editor), social media companies, like telephones and telegraphs, generally "hold [themselves] out to serve any member of the public without individualized bargaining." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470; see also Shurtleff v. City of Bos., Massachusetts, 596 U.S. 243, 256–57 (2022) (holding that flag raisings were not government speech because "Boston told the public that it sought 'to accommodate all applicants'").

Then there is the lack of space constraints. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64. While nothing in the physical universe is truly infinite, social media companies come about as close to infinity as possible. They operate with nothing like the space constraints of a newspaper. "The New York Times publishes around 150 original pieces of journalism a day, on average." How We Choose the Great Read, N.Y. Times (Apr. 4, 2022).[7] In contrast, the vast majority of public speech flows through social media, with 1.7 million posts made to Facebook and 500 hours of video are uploaded to YouTube every minute. Media Usage in an Internet Minute as of April 2022, Statista

(2023).[8] That is 2.4 billion Facebook posts and 720,000 hours of video uploaded to YouTube every day. Unlike a newspaper, where forced hosting of third-party content meaningfully decreases space for the newspaper's own message, Miami Herald, 418 U.S., at 257, social media companies have plenty of space to express their own message. For social media, "accommodation does not sufficiently interfere with any message of the [social media company]." Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

And unlike newspapers or parade organizers (which carefully curate all content toward a specific message or messages), nearly all content on social media companies is posted unedited by the companies. While these platforms "use algorithms to screen out" far less than even one percent of content, "virtually everything else is just posted to the Platform with zero editorial control or judgment." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 459 (emphasis in original).

In fact, contrary to NetChoice's assertions now that its members exercise "editorial control" over everything, these companies have expressly stated, "We try to explicitly view ourselves as not editors .... We don't want to have editorial judgment over the content that's in your feed." Id., at 460 (emphasis added) (quoting Ravi Somaiya, How Facebook Is Changing the Way Its Users Consume Journalism, N.Y. Times (Oct. 26, 2014)[9]). NetChoice's current presentation before this Court is likewise inconsistent with the assertions of its members in other lawsuits that they merely distribute content created by others and are therefore entitled to immunity under § 230 of the Communications Decency Act. E.g., Br. of Twitter, Gonzalez v. Google, No. 21-1333, at 7 (Jan. 2023) (stating that Twitter merely "disseminat[es] third-party content"); see also NetChoice, LLC v. Paxton, 142 S. Ct. 1715, 1717 n.2 (2022) (Alito, J., dissenting) (noting the argument that NetChoice's "position in this litigation is in conflict or tension with the positions of its members in cases regarding the interpretation of § 230").

Finally, it is Congress's judgment that these companies operate more like telephones than newspapers, which is why Congress shielded them from defamation liability. See 47 U.S.C. § 230.

For all these reasons, social media companies better resemble telephone companies than newspapers. They have power to obstruct customers from receiving speech, they are principally in the business of distributing the content of others from point A to point B, they do not deal with meaningful space constraints, and the vast majority of the speech they distribute is unedited.

NetChoice thus cannot prove that distributing third-party speech without viewpoint discrimination will materially impede social media companies from speaking for themselves or that members of the public will mistake third-party speech on Facebook, YouTube, or Twitter as speech by the platforms. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64. Just as "high school students can appreciate the difference between speech a school sponsors and speech the school permits because legally required to do so," ibid., so too everyday Americans can distinguish between speech on Facebook and Facebook's own speech[10]—especially because these companies expressly disclaim third-party content as their own. See, e.g., Terms of Service, Facebook (last updated July 26, 2022), https://www.facebook.com/legal/terms ("We do not control or direct what people and others do or say, and we are not responsible for their actions or conduct (whether online or offline) or any content they share (including offensive, inappropriate, obscene, unlawful, and other objectionable content).").

All these facts sharply distinguish social media companies not only from newspapers, but also from cake decorators, website designers, and parade

[10] Section 230 lawsuits ask a different question. There is usually no debate about whether the speech is third-party speech. The question instead is whether the platform helped "develop[ ]" the third-party's speech "in part," thus removing immunity. 47 U.S.C. § 230(f)(3); see also Malwarebytes, Inc. v. Enigma Software Group USA, LLC, 141 S. Ct. 13, 16 (2020) (Thomas, J., concurring). There is an active debate about whether things like algorithms help "develop[ ]" third-party speech "in part." A conclusion by this Court that individuals are unlikely to mistake third-party speech on social media companies for the speech of the companies themselves would have no effect on whether those companies could invoke § 230 as a shield with respect to the same content.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

organizers. While there is little to no risk that everyday observers will mistake third-party speech on Facebook for Facebook's "own message," requiring a cake artist or independent website designer to speak a third party's speech does "deny speakers the right 'to choose the content of their own messages'" because the risk of attribution is high. 303 Creative LLC, 600 U.S., at 592 (quoting Hurley, 515 U.S., at 573) (brackets omitted). Indeed, the "very purpose" of Colorado's requirement to force companies to design websites supporting certain events was "the coercive elimination of dissenting ideas about marriage." Id., at 588 (brackets and internal quotation marks omitted). Forcing a cake baker or newspaper to state third-party speech unlawfully compels speech. Requiring companies in the business of transmitting other peoples' speech billions of times a day to do so without viewpoint discrimination does not.

3. It makes no difference that posts on social media typically are distributed to many people rather than to one. Organizations subject to must-carry regulations are regularly used to broadcast speech to many recipients. "[S]upposedly one-to-one media have long been used to distribute material to the public at large." Eugene Volokh, Treating Social Media Platforms Like Common Carriers?, 1 J. Free Speech L. 377, 387 (2021). One speaker can use the U.S. Postal Service to broadcast a message to millions. Ibid. And hundreds or even thousands of people can join a single conference call or group text message thread.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

B. Social media companies cannot evade accountability simply by choosing to edit some content.

The Fifth Circuit opinion extensively discussed the historical regulation of telephones and telegraphs, yet NetChoice's brief in Paxton makes no attempt to address that analogy. Its brief in Moody is hardly better, principally arguing (at 49) that telegraph and telephone companies are different because they merely transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B." The United States amicus brief repeats this argument, asserting (at 11) that "unlike [telephones and telegraphs], the platforms are not merely conduits transmitting speech from one person to another" but instead choose to edit or remove content.

Although the Eleventh Circuit adopted this argument, NetChoice, LLC v. Moody, 34 F.4th 1196, 1222 (CA11 2022), the argument overlooks basic history, is circular and begs the question, would enable phone companies to evade regulation, and would create a roadmap for government censorship.

As to history, telephone and telegraph companies transmit speech on an "unedited basis" only because they are compelled to do so by law. Those companies historically did the same thing NetChoice's members currently do until the States, Congress, and this Court stepped in. See Lakier, supra, at 2322; Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470; W. Union Tel. Co., 162 U.S., at 651.

History thus favors the States, not NetChoice. The Eleventh Circuit concluded social media companies could censor content because they have "historically exercised" power to refuse transmission of disfavored ideas. Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1222. But telegraph companies have a much longer history of censorship. Social media is less than two decades old. Congress did not impose must-carry requirements on telegraphs until 1888, 50 years after their invention. Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. Yet it is well recognized today that those must-carry regulations were constitutional—even though this Court declared that telegraph companies are "not common carriers." Primrose, 154 U. S., at 14 (emphasis added). History thus provides no basis for dismissing the striking similarities between social media companies and telegraph and telephones by dubbing social-media censorship "editorial judgment."

The attempt to avoid the telephone analogy is also circular and would wipe out traditional regulations. The Eleventh Circuit concluded Florida could not require social media companies to distribute content without viewpoint discrimination because the companies already "exercise editorial judgment." Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1221. In other words, the State can compel a company to refrain from censoring only if the company is already refraining. Under that rule, must-carry regulations are pointless. Telephones, telegraphs, and parcel delivery companies can become immune under the First Amendment from any must-carry regulation as soon as they chose to engage in "editorial judgment" to cut off calls and not deliver messages and products that express ideas they dislike.

Or if those traditional regulations are valid, then the Eleventh Circuit's analysis is self-refuting: the regulations here would become valid as soon as a company complies. NetChoice asserts that imposing must-carry regulations on telephones is fine because telephones transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis,'" but the same will be true of NetChoice's members if they comply with these statutes.

The argument is also a roadmap for government censorship. If NetChoice and the Eleventh Circuit are correct that the act of "discriminat[ing] among messages" converts third-party speech into the platform's first-party speech, Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1221, then the Federal Government could freely censor speech on its property because the censorial act would convert the speech into government speech, which "is not restricted by the Free Speech Clause," Pleasant Grove City, Utah v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 469 (2009); see also Walker v. Texas Div., Sons of Confederate Veterans, Inc., 576 U.S. 200, 213 (2015). Much like this Court should "prevent the government-speech doctrine from being used as a cover for censorship," Shurtleff, 596 U.S., at 263 (Alito, J., concurring), it should prevent the First Amendment from blocking States' efforts to stop private censorship. Like the government, social media companies may not hide behind the First Amendment when they deploy a "come-one-come-all attitude" with exceptions for select disfavored speakers. Id., at 257 (majority op.).

C. In the context of facial challenges, this Court need not consider more complex questions.

Because NetChoice has asserted facial challenges, this Court need not wade into more difficult questions, such as whether a social media company can be prohibited from attaching a disclaimer or a fact check to third-party speech.

It is far from obvious how this Court's precedents would apply. On the one hand, a platform that appends a note to third-party speech undoubtedly engages in its own speech. On the other hand, communication networks often are required to serve all comers without "undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person" or "class of persons." 47 U.S.C. § 202. If a phone company appended a 30-second ad supporting one political candidate to every call originating from the campaign office of that candidate's opponent, the phone company would certainly be engaging in speech, but it would also be giving "preference or advantage" to one customer over another.

Those more difficult questions should not be resolved in the context of a facial challenge.

II. The hyperconcentration of social media reinforces State authority to regulate.

Both the common law and American courts have long recognized that protecting the marketplace of ideas involves more than keeping government from abridging speech; it sometimes means regulating dominant private actors to ensure they cannot abridge speech either.

At common law, it was well recognized that companies with substantial market power could be compelled not to discriminate. As Matthew Hale, the well-known English barrister and scholar on the history of the common law, put it, "if a wharf owner operated the 'only wharf licensed by the queen' or if

'there was no other wharf in that port,' then the wharf was 'affected with a public interest,' and the owner acquired a duty to serve without discrimination." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 472 (quoting Matthew Hale, De Portibus Maris, in A COLLECTION OF TRACTS RELATIVE TO THE LAW OF ENGLAND 77–78 (Francis Hargrave ed., 1787)) (brackets omitted).

American courts have long applied this principle to communications technology, assessing whether a "communications firm … play[s] a central economic and social role in society." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. As this Court put it, because "values central to the First Amendment" include "assuring that the public has access to a multiplicity of information sources," government can take "steps to ensure that private interests not restrict, through physical control of a critical pathway of communication, the free flow of information and ideas." E.g., Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 657, 663; accord U.S. Telecom Ass'n v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381, 434–35 (CADC 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from rehearing en banc) ("If the Internet service providers have market power, then the Government may impose open-access or similar carriage obligations.").

This Court has thus held that radio's "unique characteristic[s]" permit the government to restrict "specified network practices" without abridging freedom of speech. Nat'l Broad. Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 226–27 (1943). And this Court approved government regulations that prohibited cable companies from silencing "the voice of" some "speakers with a mere flick of the switch." Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656 (1994); see also Turner Broad.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Sys., Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1997"), 520 U.S. 180, 225 (1997).

Applied to social media companies, these cases mean, at the least, that regulations are justified when "the service provider possesses 'bottleneck monopoly power' in the relevant geographic market" and can use it to "diminish[] the diversity and amount of content available." U.S. Telecom Ass'n, 855 F.3d, at 431, 433 n.12 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (quoting Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 661); see also Comcast Cable Communications, LLC v. FCC, 717 F.3d 982, 993 (CADC 2013) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring). "[I]t stands to reason that if Congress may demand that telephone companies operate as common carriers, it can ask the same of" other communication companies, including social media companies. Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 684 (opinion of O'Connor, J.).

The core of the Florida and Texas laws comfortably fits that rubric. The laws address companies that possess extraordinary market power and use it to reduce diversity of ideas.

A. Market power

While these companies were much smaller and less entrenched even six or eight years ago, the extraordinary scale and scope of large social media platforms today makes it impossible to deny that they "play[] a central economic and social role in society." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. These platforms are "the modern public square," Packingham v. North Carolina, 582 U.S. 98, 107 (2017), and "serve as the primary source of news about important public issues for many Americans," Murthy v. Missouri, 144 S. Ct. 32, 32 (2023) (Alito, J., dissenting).

Consider their network effects. A fax machine is valuable only to the extent others use fax machines. The most valuable thing about Facebook is that "3 billion people use it." Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). While network size makes Facebook an extraordinary marketplace for ideas, network size also means these dominant platforms are the only way most speakers can avoid speaking into a void, see, e.g., Alan Z. Rozenshtein, Silicon Valley's Speech: Technology Giants and the Deregulatory First Amendment, 1 J. Free Speech Law 337, 357 (2021). Other options for speech are not comparable. Switching from Facebook to "competitor" upstart social media companies is not like switching from AT&T to Verizon. It is like switching from flying to walking.

Network effects also mean enormous barriers to new entry—as evidenced by these companies' sky-high profit margins.[11] In a competitive market, "astronomical profit margins … would induce new entrants into the market. That these companies have no comparable competitors highlights that the industries may have substantial barriers to entry." Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1225 (Thomas, J., concurring).

In fact, three years ago, the last time a newer social media company gained serious traction, other platforms banded together to kill it. In January 2021, Parler, which branded itself as a free-speech platform, was the most downloaded app. Then Google (YouTube's parent company) and Apple "removed" "the app for the conservative-focused Twitter competitor Parler … from their app stores." Volokh, supra, at 397–98 (citations omitted). That made Parler virtually inaccessible on phones for anybody who had not already downloaded the app. Then Parler's "hosting company, Amazon Web Services" "blocked" it from the Amazon servers Parler was renting, taking Parler entirely offline, even though "Parler was merely refusing to forbid certain speech, much of which is constitutionally protected—thus voluntarily acting in a way close to how the post office and phone companies are required by law to act." Id., at 398. Amazon's power to kick companies entirely off the internet has caused Amazon to be described as "more like a utility provider than a broadcaster." Scott Rosenberg, Big Tech's Free Speech Showdown, Axios (Jan. 10, 2021).[12]

This illustrates a concerning fact: the dominant internet players are so powerful that the only way startups can take off is by relying on the mercy of the companies against which they wish to compete.

The conclusion that a handful of companies dominate the social media market aligns with conclusions by States and the Federal Government. In 2020, the Federal Trade Commission initiated an ongoing antitrust suit on the theory that "Facebook holds monopoly power in the market for personal social networking services … in the United States." FTC v. Facebook, Inc., No. 1:20-cv-03590 (D.D.C. filed Dec. 8, 2020), Am. Compl., ¶2. And nearly every State and the Department of Justice has been involved in antitrust litigation against the major social media companies in recent years. See, e.g., Antitrust Reform and Big Tech Firms, Congressional Research Service R46875 (Nov. 21, 2023) (describing some active cases).[13]

B. Discriminatory use of power

Although described by this Court as "the modern public square," Packingham, 582 U.S., at 107, these platforms are in fact more important than the historic public square because they hold "unprecedented … control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties," Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1221 (Thomas, J., concurring). True, other aspects of the internet have enormous network effects (such as email), but nobody has central control over those networks. In contrast, "control of [social media] networks is highly concentrated" in the hands of a few people. Id., at 1224. The platforms' power to facilitate and restrict speech on a large scale means they wield power "far greater than that of individual broadcasters who compete with one another as well as with satellite and cable networks." Prasad Krishnamurthy & Erwin Chemerinsky, How Congress Can Prevent Big Tech from Becoming the Speech Police, The Hill (Feb. 18, 2021).[14]

These platforms have used their unprecedented power to censor mainstream speakers on important issues of public debate. That selective censorship—the Florida and Texas legislatures concluded—threatens the marketplace of ideas and the free flow of information to the detriment of citizens and democratic governance.

These legislative judgments rest on solid ground. Companies covered by the Texas and Florida laws currently exercise unchecked power to suppress ideas. And they have shown little inclination to self-limit their "incredible influence over the content that's put out into the world." Ahiza García-Hodges, Big Tech Has Big Power over Online Speech. Should It Be Reined In?, NBC News (Jan. 21, 2021).[15]

Katie Benner, et al., Hunter Biden Paid Tax Bill, but Broad Federal Investigation Continues, N.Y. Times (Mar. 16, 2022).[17]

2. Platforms restrict not only news reporting, but also speech by everyday Americans. They "have certainly been willing to restrict opinions that are well within the American political mainstream." Volokh, supra, at 395. This conclusion is borne out in countless examples. Id. at 397 (listing several).

Consider one of the most hotly contested issues today: the many controversial legal and policy questions about the increasing number of individuals who identify as transgender. These include questions about separate bathrooms, locker rooms, and sports teams; about appropriate medical care; and even about the nature of what it means to be male or female. Nobody doubts these questions are important, yet social media companies have made mainstream views on these questions off limits. For example, a clear majority (57%) of adults believe sex is determined at birth, regardless of a person's later-expressed gender identity. Ashley Kirzinger, et al., KFF/The Washington Post Trans Survey (Mar. 24, 2023).[18] But the 57% of Americans who believe that are not allowed to say so on social media. For example, when a U.S. Representative expressed his view that a high-ranking official in the Biden administration who identifies as a woman is in fact "a man," Twitter locked the Representative's account until he deleted the post. Indiana Congressman Deletes Post, Gets Twitter Access Back, Associated Press (Nov. 5, 2021).[19] Similarly, Twitter suspended a commenter when she expressed opposition to a transgender individual competing in the women's division in the Olympics, stating "men shouldn't compete against women." Joseph Wulfsohn, Allie Beth Stuckey Released from "Twitter Jail" after Referring to Transgender Olympic Athlete as a "Man," Fox News (Aug. 6, 2021).[20]

These questions are hotly debated today, and views on all sides of the issues are held "in good faith by reasonable and sincere people." Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. 644, 657 (2015). But it is extraordinary that dominant communications companies through which the vast majority of public speech flows can make a viewpoint held by 57% of Americans, on one of the most salient political topics of the day, off limits in the "modern public square,"

Much of the speech targeted by these dominant communication platforms is conservative, which is not surprising given Mark Zuckerberg's acknowledgment that tech companies reside in "an extremely left-leaning place." Morgan Chalfant, Cruz Presses Zuckerberg on Alleged Censorship of Conservative Speech (Apr. 10, 2018).[21] Right after Elon Musk purchased Twitter, he and journalist Bari Weiss uncovered internal evidence that at Twitter, "the rules were enforced against the right, but not against the left." But several platforms have also received allegations about censorship of opinions commonly viewed as left wing. Currently, social media companies face accusations of reducing the visibility of posts expressing political support for a Palestinian state in the present conflict. the Democratic presidential nomination. See Missouri v. Biden, 2023 WL 4335270, *5, *9, *40 (W.D. La., July 4, 2023). And in the aftermath of George Floyd's murder, Facebook allegedly flagged and removed posts calling attention to allegedly racist conduct. Craig Silverman, Black Lives Matter Activists Say They're Being Silenced by Facebook, Buzzfeed (June 19, 2020).[24]

3. Platforms also censor true information that is difficult to brand as left or right. Speech surrounding COVID is a prime example. When COVID first hit, "major social networks rolled out a series of policy changes to curb … claims about the virus, including theories about its roots"—like that it originated in a Chinese lab. Cristiano Lima, New Report on Covid-19 Origin Puts Social Media in GOP's Crosshairs, Washington Post (Feb. 27, 2023).[25] That origin theory is now the predominant theory of many agencies under the Biden administration. Both the Energy Department and the FBI have concluded that the COVID-19 "virus likely spread due to an accident at a Chinese laboratory." Ibid.

Similarly, in the summer of 2021, YouTube removed a video that a U.S. Senator, who is a doctor, posted opining about the relative inefficacy of masks made out of cloth. See, e.g., YouTube Suspends Rand Paul after Misleading Video on Masks, PBS News

4. These examples may only scratch the surface because of platforms' deliberate opacity about their practices. They censor by taking down content or suspending people from their accounts, but they also "shadowban" by distributing content less widely than would otherwise occur. Geoffrey Fowler, Shadowbanning Is Real: Here's How You End up Muted by Social Media, Washington Post (Dec. 27, 2022).[28] "[U]sers often have no way of telling for sure whether they have been shadowbanned or whether their content is simply not popular."[29] Gabriel

If recent history is any guide, that will not change. These companies continue to resist transparency. Whether the target is left-wing speech, right-wing speech, or centrist speech, censorship harms everyone. which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the People's will." Mahanoy, 141 S. Ct. at 2046.

Platforms leverage their extraordinary power to threaten that constitutional project. Florida and Texas's challenged response, designed to ensure information flows freely and fairly, strengthens rather than offends the First Amendment.

C. The Court should respect legislative fact findings of market power and censorship.

In the face of this discriminatory use of market dominance, the Texas and Florida legislatures made legislative findings about the power of large platforms to impoverish the marketplace of ideas. Texas concluded that social media platforms with "more than 50 million active users in the United States in a calendar month" have "market dominance" that justifies treating them as "common carriers." Tex. Code § 120.002(b); Tex. H.B. 20 §1(4). Florida determined that platforms with 100 million monthly global users or $100 million annual gross revenue "have become as important for conveying public opinion as public utilities are for supporting modern society" and "should be treated similarly to common carriers." Fla. Stat. § 501.2041(g); Fla. S.B. 7072 § 1(5)–(6). Those legislative judgments deserve significant weight in evaluating whether the Constitution permits the States' regulations. Cf. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 132 (1876); Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 665 (plurality op.); Minnesota v. Clover Leaf Creamery Co., 449 U.S. 456, 464 (1981). After all, if "it stands to reason" that "Congress may demand" that telephone and cable companies carry third-party speech, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 684 (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part), it equally stands to reason that the States may demand the same of digital platforms. Where the Bill of Rights polices government conduct, there is "no daylight between the federal and state conduct it prohibits or requires." Timbs v. Indiana, 139 S. Ct. 682, 687 (2019); see also Ramos v. Louisiana, 140 S. Ct. 1390, 1397 (2020); Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 7 (1964).

III. State laws preventing platforms from censoring speech provide a prophylactic vanguard against government censorship.

The United States says it submits a brief because, Congress having "enacted laws governing the communications industry," the United States "has a substantial interest in the resolution of the questions presented." U.S. Br., at 1. Yet it advocates a position that threatens to undermine federal laws.

Why? Perhaps because the Federal Government intends to continue its well-documented practice of pressuring companies to wield their censorship discretion to remove disfavored viewpoints.

It is undisputed that the Federal Government, including the White House, has engaged in a years-long, behind-closed-doors campaign to push social media companies to suppress millions of constitutionally protected posts. This Court granted certiorari in Murthy v. Missouri, No. 23-411, and while the legal conclusions there are disputed, the fact findings are not.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In its opening brief in Murthy, the Federal Government does not dispute any fact finding. It does not dispute that—behind closed doors—it successfully used "unrelenting pressure" to push social media companies to "suppress[] millions of protected free speech postings by American citizens." Missouri, 2023 WL 4335270, at *44. It does not dispute it targeted "disfavored" speech "well beyond COVID-19," including "the Hunter Biden laptop story," Missouri v. Biden, 83 F.4th 350, 368, 381 (CA5 2023), and topics related to "racial justice, the U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan," U.S. "[s]upport of Ukraine," and content posted by an individual who was challenging President Biden for the Democratic presidential nomination, 2023 WL 4335270, at *9, *67. The Federal Government does not dispute it targeted "nearly every major American social media company," and that those companies "capitulated" into "total compliance," even removing constitutionally protected content that "did not run afoul of their policies." 83 F.4th, at 359, 362–63, 392. And the Federal Government does not dispute its "conduct has not stopped," it has even "started monitoring" the platforms for compliance with governmental demands "to remove disfavored content," and its push for censorship has been so widespread that "it impacts every social-media user." Id., at 359–60, 393, 398.

Instead, the Federal Government argues it induced all these things through legal "persuasion," not illegal "coercion," and the plaintiffs lack standing to contend otherwise. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 14, 25, 34. The Federal Government even doubles down, all but promising to continue pressing platforms to suppress millions of posts because it believes these posts are "false information," id., at 34, even though much speech it pushed to suppress turned out to be true.

The Federal Government's interest in the NetChoice cases is thus clear.[33] The Texas and Florida laws pose no threat to federal laws; they only threaten the ability of federal officials to continue pushing platforms to "suppress[] millions of protected free speech postings by American citizens." 2023 WL 4335270, at *44.

Pressuring platforms would become much more difficult if state law prohibited platforms from complying with federal takedown demands. One of "anti-discrimination obligations' great virtues is that it protects private entities from complying with government's censorship demands. A private company with no legal obligation to treat users in a non-discriminatory fashion readily can accede government's request to censor, block, or otherwise treat users unfairly. But, if a private firm is prohibited by law to do so, then the government cannot even ask." Adam Candeub, Bargaining for Free Speech: Common Carriage, Network Neutrality, and Section 230, 22 Yale J. L. & Tech. 391, 432–33 (2020).

The Federal Government's real interest here is that it will no longer be able to "persuade" platforms to take down millions of constitutionally protected posts if this Court affirms the Texas and Florida laws. That is a reason to support the state laws, not to strike them down. In passing these laws, Texas and Florida afforded their citizens the "double security [that] arises" when one government "guard[s] … society against the injustice of the other." The Federalist No. 51, supra, at 320 (Madison). The Fifth Circuit in Murthy said the Federal Government forced social media companies to "bend to the government's will." 83 F.4th, at 371. The laws challenged here provide the legal backbone platforms need to stand straight.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CONCLUSION

The Court should affirm the longstanding authority of States to protect their citizens from censorship imposed by mass communication networks.

Hi Brianna,
Here is the slightly updated draft amicus with all the relevant states.
It is 99% complete. Going through one last read-through for typos, etc. but nothing else is subject to change.
I'll let you know if there is any updated version before publication.
A few quotes from AG Bailey depending on where you go with the article:
"In a free society, the debate between opposing viewpoints should be played out in the marketplace of ideas. Our right to free speech is the bedrock of our great nation. I'm proud to be standing in the gap to protect our right to free speech on several fronts in the war for the soul of our country." (Re: Missouri v. Biden, amicus briefs in both net choice cases and NRA v. Vullo)
"If speaking out on public issues in opposition to the social narrative means elites can cut off our ability to speak, our country has become little more than a dictatorship. That's not the America I fought to defend on the battlefields of Iraq or swore to protect as Missouri's 44th Attorney General."
"If the Supreme Court lets social media companies silence speech, it will set a devastating anti-free speech precedent at a time when the First Amendment is under widespread attack."
"This is the most consequential term for the First Amendment in Supreme Court history." (Missouri v. Biden, Net Choice cases, NRA v. Vullo)

Subject: AG Bailey Net Choice Amicus Brief

Hi Brianna – let's talk about this when we call tomorrow, but here's the draft free speech amicus brief Missouri is leading in the net choice cases that I mentioned.
It's 99% finished. Deadline for other states to join is tomorrow night. We have at least ten that are joining. And we're still doing tables, etc. so I will get you the final brief tomorrow.
But we plan to file on Monday, and would love for you to break the story. We can work around you.
Case has huge implications for government censorship, etc. and ties to AG Bailey's free speech case, Missouri v. Biden, that is also before the U.S. Supreme Court. This is going to be a huge Supreme Court term for the 1A.
Will get you a quote from the AG as well if you're interested.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTEREST OF AMICI STATES

The States of Missouri, Ohio, Alaska, Alabama, Arkansas, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, and Virginia, and the Arizona Legislature ("the States"), agree with many points in the amicus brief of New York, et al., which focuses on social media problems other than censorship. The States here submit this amicus brief to focus directly on the censorship question.

The States do so for two reasons. First, it is the constitutional duty of the States to protect their citizens' inherent rights, including the right to free speech. Just as States pass criminal and civil laws to protect citizens from private abridgment of rights of life and property, States have a long history of regulating to protect citizens from abridgment of their free speech rights by dominant communication platforms. Second, the States have a vital interest in hearing the speech of their citizens, especially political speech. That is necessary for States to be democratically responsive. NetChoice's position threatens these interests because it seeks to upend the longstanding authority of States to prohibit mass communication networks from engaging in censorship and viewpoint discrimination.

1. The Founders were clear that the purpose of government is to secure liberty. The Declaration of Independence recognizes that natural rights, including "Life" and "Liberty," preexist government, and that "Governments are instituted among Men" for one principal purpose: "to secure these rights." Declaration of Independence ¶ 2.

The Founders thus recognized that governments are created to protect rights from private abridgment—the only abridgment that can occur before government is formed. Society must of course always resist government abuse of power (which occurs too often), but government is created in the first instance to protect against private abuse. As James Madison put it, "If men were angels, no government would be necessary." The Federalist No. 51, at 319 (Clinton Rossiter ed., Signet Classic 2003) (1788). Government must be obliged "to control itself"—through separation of powers—but it is equally true that society "must first enable the government to control the governed." Ibid.

One right States "are instituted among Men" to "secure" is the freedom of speech. As Madison said when proposing the draft of the First Amendment, freedom of speech is a "natural right" predating government itself. Jud Campbell, Natural Rights and the First Amendment, 127 Yale L.J. 246, 264 (2017) (citing Madison's notes reflecting his speech in Congress). This Court has held the same, explaining that "the Second Amendment, like the First and Fourth Amendments, codified a pre-existing right." District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 592 (2008) (emphasis in original).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

So NetChoice is flat wrong to contend (at 25 in Paxton)[1] that only the government is capable of censorship. Because freedom of speech is a freedom States were created to secure, it is the duty of States to secure that freedom from private abridgment, including abridgment by extraordinarily powerful communication platforms.

The States can pass criminal laws against theft and murder—thus protecting against private interference with rights of property or life. And if dominant firearm dealers refuse to sell on account of race, States can regulate to secure for their citizens the right to bear arms. So too, if dominant communication platforms censor based on viewpoint, States can pass laws to stop that censorship—as they have done for well over 100 years.

A State of course cannot, in the name of protecting free speech, abridge the freedom of speech. But this Court has held that the First Amendment does not prohibit States from protecting the marketplace of ideas when that marketplace is threatened by private actors. "It would be strange indeed," this Court said, "if the grave concern for freedom of the press which prompted adoption of the First Amendment should be read as a command that the government was without power to protect that freedom." Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 20 (1945). As with freedom of the press, so too with freedom of speech. See W. Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U.S. 650, 651, 660 (1895)

[1] This amicus references briefs in the two consolidated cases as Paxton briefs (for No. 22-555) and Moody briefs (for No. 22-277).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(upholding law prohibiting telegraph companies from engaging in viewpoint discrimination); see also Genevieve Lakier, The Non-First Amendment Law of Freedom of Speech, 134 Harv. L. Rev. 2299, 2316-19 (2021) (listing statutory examples protecting free speech).

2. States also have an interest in preventing censorship because censorship deprives States of the information they need to be responsive to the people. "The vitality of civil and political institutions in our society depends on free discussion." Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4 (1949). "[I]t it is only through free debate and free exchange of ideas that government remains responsive to the will of the people and peaceful change is effected." Ibid.

Many landmark legal changes arose from government responding to the speech of everyday citizens. That includes "great matters of state," such as Magna Carta, women's suffrage, the Declaration of Independence, and antislavery legislation. Borough of Duryea, Pa. v. Guarnieri, 564 U.S. 379, 395–97 (2011). Those reforms illustrate that "representative democracy" works best when the "free exchange" of ideas "facilitates an informed public opinion, which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the People's will." Mahanoy Area Sch. Dist. v. B. L., 141 S. Ct. 2038, 2046 (2021). Today, one of the most common ways individuals speak to their governments is through public posts on social media.

Top-down censorship by dominant communication platforms thus threatens the ability of States to operate. Censorship deprives local government of the information needed to "remain[] responsive to the will of the people." Terminiello, 337 U.S., at 4.

As Judge Oldham's opinion below recognized, States and Congress have enacted regulations like the ones enacted by Texas and Florida for well over one hundred years. NetChoice, L.L.C. v. Paxton, 49 F.4th 439, 470–71 (CA5 2022). While the earlier laws applied to telegraphs and telephones, it is no different when the companies carrying other people's speech are digital rather than analog. The States thus have a paramount interest in urging this Court to affirm that longstanding, historic authority of States to protect freedom of speech and enable representative government by prohibiting dominant communication networks from censoring.

That interest is especially weighty here in light of the unprecedented control these platforms have over speech central to political and public discourse. "[I]n the modern economy, the Platforms provide the most effective way to disseminate news, commentary, and other information." Id., at 476. And never before has there been so much "concentrated control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties." Biden v. Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct. 1220, 1221 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). Today the ability "to cut off speech lies most powerfully in the hands of private digital platforms." Id., at 1227. That explains why the Federal Government has inserted itself through pressure into those content-moderation policies and practices—as shown in Murthy v. Missouri. The concentration of power in a handful of platforms can facilitate government censorship.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

That power creates other real concerns. A Facebook executive admitted in a 2019 internal memo—later leaked—that the company's power over speech is so immense that Facebook could unilaterally "pull any lever" to alter the outcome of a presidential election. Andrew Bosworth Memo, N.Y. Times (Jan. 7, 2020).[2] The States have authority to protect citizens from abuse of that immense power.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I.A. The easiest path to resolve this case is to determine whether social media is more like telephones or more like newspapers. The law has consistently permitted requiring telephones and the like to distribute third-party speech and has generally rejected requiring the same of companies like newspapers.

This Court has already unanimously rejected NetChoice's maximalist argument that companies have a categorical right not to "disseminate … speech generated by others." NetChoice Paxton Br., at 13; see PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 85 (1980). Instead, this Court has considered whether the regulated company "possess[es] the power to obstruct readers' access to" information, Turner Broad. System, Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1994"), 512 U.S. 622, 656 (1994), and whether requiring a company to distribute third-party speech would materially harm the company's ability to get out its "own message," Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 63 (2006).

On these critical questions, newspapers and telephones are different. Local newspapers cannot restrict access to information. Nationwide phone companies can. For newspapers, parades, and the like, space constraints and limited number of content creators means compelling a company to carry third-party speech materially harms the company's ability to express its "own message." Ibid. The space constraints mean material loss of the company's opportunity to speak, and the nature of the medium means listeners become confused about whether speech belongs to third parties or the company. Id., at 65. But for mass communication networks like telephones, those risks are not substantial. So courts have long permitted requiring companies like telephones to distribute third-party speech free from viewpoint discrimination.

Social media companies are much more like telephone networks than newspapers. Unlike newspapers, which "do[ ] not possess the power to obstruct readers' access to" information, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656, social media companies do—and they exercise that power. Like telephone companies, and "unlike newspapers," social media companies "hold themselves out as organizations that focus on distributing the speech of the broader public." Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). Unlike the space constraints for newspapers, the space on social media is nearly boundless. And like telephones, nearly all speech on social media platforms is created by third parties.

For all these reasons, NetChoice cannot meet its burden of establishing that the regulations at issue here would materially limit a social media company's speech or cause ordinary members of the public to confuse speech on Facebook, YouTube, or X (formerly Twitter) as speech of the company itself, rather than third parties using those platforms. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

I.B. NetChoice barely addresses the analogy to telephones and telegraphs, stating only that regulating those companies is permissible because they transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B." Moody Br., at 49. That argument fails for many reasons.

First, it is demonstrably false historically. As the Fifth Circuit explained, telegraph companies engaged in the same kind of viewpoint discrimination NetChoice's members engage in today.

Second, the argument would make regulation pointless. If the only companies that can be required to carry content without discrimination are those already doing so, regulation does nothing at all. Relatedly, NetChoice's argument begs the question. If this Court permits the regulations to go into effect, social media platforms likewise will transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B."

Third, NetChoice's argument creates a recipe for censorship by telephones and government. Under their logic, as soon as an actor begins "editing" content, that transforms the content into the actor's own speech. Telephones can thus evade the 100-plus years of regulation simply by starting to censor. So too, government can simply "edit" people's speech, and turn everything into government speech.

I.C. Because NetChoice has brought facial challenges against these laws, this Court need not answer the thornier questions about what to do when platforms mix their own speech with that of third parties (such as when they append "fact checks" to third-party speech).

II.A. The extraordinary market power social media platforms possess reinforces the ability of States to regulate in this area. At common law, companies with substantial market power were required to serve without discrimination. This Court has long permitted States and Congress to apply the same concept to large communication platforms.

No doubt, these platforms possess extraordinary power. This industry has monumental barriers to entry. What makes these companies valuable is their network sizes, such as Facebook's 3-billion person network. That makes it very difficult to compete, and the one time an upstart (called Parler) finally gained momentum, Apple, Google, and Amazon forcibly removed it from the internet.

These companies also aggressively engage in censorship that impoverishes free exchange of ideas. Many examples are notorious, such as the systematic censorship (at the instigation of the Federal Government) of the Hunter Biden laptop story and of the theory that COVID originated in a lab in China—now the predominant theory of the Energy Department and the FBI. Platforms censor viewpoints on the most hotly contested topics of the day, like transgender issues. And they suppress "misinformation" later proven accurate. While most censored speech is conservative, there are complaints about censorship of left-wing speech. All this censorship harms not only the marketplace of ideas, but also the ability of the States to respond to the concerns of their citizens.

III. Dominant digital platforms are not the only problem. Government systematically pressures platforms to censor. This Court granted certiorari to Murthy v. Missouri, No. 23-411, where a district court made extensive fact findings that the White House, the FBI, an agency within the Department of Homeland Security, and other federal actors systematically pressured social media companies to censor even more speech.

In its brief in Murthy, the Federal Government does not dispute the accuracy of these extensive, alarming findings. It does not dispute, for example, that it successfully induced removal of millions of posts—even posts that do not violate policies of social media companies—or that this removal affected everyone on social media. Instead, it argues it successfully induced these things through legal "persuasion," not illegal "coercion," and that the plaintiffs lack standing to contend otherwise. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 14, 25, 34.

That likely reveals why the United States backs NetChoice here, even though its position threatens the United States' own laws. The Federal Government knows it will be much more difficult for federal officials to induce social media companies to suppress speech if state law prohibits it. So the

Federal Government seeks to eliminate those state laws.

That shows that the Texas and Florida laws, far from infringing the First Amendment, in fact shield social media companies from government pressure and deprive government of the opportunity to control expression.

ARGUMENT

I. States have authority to prohibit mass communication platforms from censoring speech.

A. Requiring social media companies to distribute third-party speech without viewpoint discrimination is permissible because social media better resembles telephones than newspapers.

1. NetChoice does not dispute that telephones and telegraphs can be compelled, consistent with the First Amendment, to distribute third-party speech. They can be compelled to behave as common carriers even though this Court has declared that "they are not common carriers," Primrose v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 (1894) (emphasis added), and even though these companies have a history of exercising the very "editorial discretion" NetChoice's members seek to exercise today, Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470.

In fact, it is only because telegraph companies behaved the way social media companies do today that nondiscrimination regulations were imposed. In the 1800s, "Western Union, the largest telegraph company, … discriminated against certain political speech," confirming the fear "'that the private entities that controlled this amazing new technology would use that power to manipulate the flow of information to the public when doing so served their economic or political self-interest.'" Ibid. (quoting Genevieve Lakier, The Non-First Amendment Law of Freedom of Speech, 134 Harv. L. Rev. 2299, 2321 (2021)). "In response, States enacted common carrier laws to limit discrimination in the transmission of telegraph messages." Ibid. Congress did the same. Ibid. (citing Telegraph Lines Act, ch. 772, § 2, 25 Stat. 382, 383 (1888)); see also W. Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U.S. 650, 651 (1895) (rejecting a challenge to an Iowa law requiring telegraph companies to deliver messages with "impartiality and good faith").

On the other hand, this Court has been clear that companies generally cannot be compelled to distribute third-party speech in their own "newspapers," Miami Herald Pub. Co. v. Tornillo, 418 U.S. 241, 258 (1974), or in their own "newsletters," which are "no different from a small newspaper," P. Gas and Elec. Co. v. Pub. Utilities Comm'n. of California, 475 U.S. 1, 8 (1986). The Court has applied similar analysis to parade organizers and expressive associations. Hurley v. Irish-American Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Group of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 574–75 (1995); Boy Scouts of Am. v. Dale, 530 U.S. 640, 655 (2000).

In two seminal cases, this Court explained what makes newspapers and the like different from organizations that can be required to distribute third-party speech. First, a newspaper, unlike a cable company,[3] "does not possess the power to obstruct readers' access to" other information. Turner Broad. System, Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1994"), 512 U.S. 622, 656 (1994). Second, newspapers, newsletters, and the like generally cannot be required to distribute third-party content because that requirement "sufficiently interferes with any message of [the company]."[4] Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 64 (2006). Telephones and shopping centers are different because no space constraints materially impede the company from getting out its "own message," and "there [i]s little likelihood that the views of those [third parties] engaging in the expressive activities would be identified with the" company. See id., at 65 (citing PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 88 (1980)).

In other words, the First Amendment tolerates compelled hosting to preserve access to information when

[3] Although cable companies differ from newspapers in important ways, they resemble (or at least did in the 1990s) newspapers in others. This Court stressed, for example, that cable companies in the 1990s had meaningful space constraints. Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 637.

[4] Even newspapers "are prohibited from charging more for political advertising than they charge for commercial advertising" or "receiving money or any other thing of value in exchange for their editorial endorsement of a political candidate or an idea." Lakier, supra, at 2330 (citing 52 U.S.C. § 30120(b) and state laws).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(1) the company has power to obstruct access to information, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656; or

(2) there is no "danger … that the statute would 'dampen the vigor and limit the variety of public debate,'" PruneYard, 447 U.S., at 88 (quoting Miami Herald, 418 U.S., at 257) (brackets omitted), because the act of hosting "lack[s] the expressive quality of a parade, a newsletter, or the editorial page of a newspaper," Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

That makes sense because a law requiring a company to host the speech of third parties is more akin to a property regulation than a speech regulation: it regulates the ability of a company like Facebook to exclude people from its network. Because any effect on the company's own speech is indirect, must-carry regulations are more likely than direct regulations to survive review.

NetChoice is thus wrong to assert that companies have a categorical right not to "disseminate … speech generated by others." Paxton Br., at 13. This Court squarely considered and (unanimously) rejected that argument. PruneYard, 447 U.S., at 85 (rejecting the argument "that a private property owner has a First Amendment right not to be forced by the State to use his property as a forum for the speech of others"). Instead, what matters are the contextual questions whether NetChoice's members can obstruct access to other information and whether hosting third-party speech would materially impede the ability of NetChoice's members to get out their own message.

That means there is a much simpler way for this Court to assess the two NetChoice cases: evaluate whether companies like Facebook are more like newspapers, parade organizers, cake bakers,[5] and website designers,[6] or more like telephones, telegraphs, schools, and shopping malls.

2. Social media companies are much more like telephones, telegraphs, schools, and shopping centers than newspapers and newsletters.

Consider first "the power [of social media companies] to obstruct readers' access to … publications." Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656. As explained more fully in Part II.B, perhaps the most infamous censorship decision by social media companies was blocking access to a newspaper report containing unflattering information about the Democratic candidate for President. "A daily newspaper, no matter how secure its local monopoly, does not possess th[is] power." Ibid. Social media companies do, and they exercise it. "The potential for abuse of this private power over a central avenue of communication cannot be overlooked." Id., at 657.

Consider also the number of people contributing content to a newspaper versus a telephone network or social media network. Unlike a newspaper, which might have at most a few hundred people contributing content, "3 billion people" contribute content on Facebook. Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). "[U]nlike newspapers, digital platforms hold themselves out as organizations that focus on distributing the speech of the broader public," and so it is the public who creates nearly all the content on the platform. Ibid. Moreover, while newspapers carefully curate third-party content that they accept (such as letters to the editor), social media companies, like telephones and telegraphs, generally "hold [themselves] out to serve any member of the public without individualized bargaining." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470; see also Shurtleff v. City of Bos., Massachusetts, 596 U.S. 243, 256–57 (2022) (holding that flag raisings were not government speech because "Boston told the public that it sought 'to accommodate all applicants'").

Then there is the lack of space constraints. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64. While nothing in the physical universe is truly infinite, social media companies come about as close to infinity as possible. They operate with nothing like the space constraints of a newspaper. "The New York Times publishes around 150 original pieces of journalism a day, on average." How We Choose the Great Read, N.Y. Times (Apr. 4, 2022).[7] In contrast, the vast majority of public speech flows through social media, with 1.7 million posts made to Facebook and 500 hours of video are uploaded to YouTube every minute. Media Usage in an Internet Minute as of April 2022, Statista

[7] https://perma.cc/578R-L88S; https://web.archive.org/web/20220421090948/https://www.nytimes.com/2022/04/21/insider/how-we-choose-the-great-read.html.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(2023).[8] That is 2.4 billion Facebook posts and 720,000 hours of video uploaded to YouTube every day. Unlike a newspaper, where forced hosting of third-party content meaningfully decreases space for the newspaper's own message, Miami Herald, 418 U.S., at 257, social media companies have plenty of space to express their own message. For social media, "accommodation does not sufficiently interfere with any message of the [social media company]." Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

And unlike newspapers or parade organizers (which carefully curate all content toward a specific message or messages), nearly all content on social media companies is posted unedited by the companies. While these platforms "use algorithms to screen out" far less than even one percent of content, "virtually everything else is just posted to the Platform with zero editorial control or judgment." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 459 (emphasis in original).

In fact, contrary to NetChoice's assertions now that its members exercise "editorial control" over everything, these companies have expressly stated, "We try to explicitly view ourselves as not editors .... We don't want to have editorial judgment over the content that's in your feed." Id., at 460 (emphasis added) (quoting Ravi Somaiya, How Facebook Is Changing the Way Its Users Consume Journalism, N.Y. Times (Oct. 26, 2014)[9]). NetChoice's current presentation before this Court is likewise inconsistent with the assertions of its members in other lawsuits that they merely distribute content created by others and are therefore entitled to immunity under § 230 of the Communications Decency Act. E.g., Br. of Twitter, Gonzalez v. Google, No. 21-1333, at 7 (Jan. 2023) (stating that Twitter merely "disseminat[es] third-party content"); see also NetChoice, LLC v. Paxton, 142 S. Ct. 1715, 1717 n.2 (2022) (Alito, J., dissenting) (noting the argument that NetChoice's "position in this litigation is in conflict or tension with the positions of its members in cases regarding the interpretation of § 230").

Finally, it is Congress's judgment that these companies operate more like telephones than newspapers, which is why Congress shielded them from defamation liability. See 47 U.S.C. § 230.

For all these reasons, social media companies better resemble telephone companies than newspapers. They have power to obstruct customers from receiving speech, they are principally in the business of distributing the content of others from point A to point B, they do not deal with meaningful space constraints, and the vast majority of the speech they distribute is unedited.

NetChoice thus cannot prove that distributing third-party speech without viewpoint discrimination will materially impede social media companies from speaking for themselves or that members of the public will mistake third-party speech on Facebook, YouTube, or Twitter as speech by the platforms. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64. Just as "high school students can appreciate the difference between speech a school sponsors and speech the school permits because legally required to do so," ibid., so too everyday Americans can distinguish between speech on Facebook and Facebook's own speech[10]—especially because these companies expressly disclaim third-party content as their own. See, e.g., Terms of Service, Facebook (last updated July 26, 2022), https://www.facebook.com/legal/terms ("We do not control or direct what people and others do or say, and we are not responsible for their actions or conduct (whether online or offline) or any content they share (including offensive, inappropriate, obscene, unlawful, and other objectionable content).").

All these facts sharply distinguish social media companies not only from newspapers, but also from cake decorators, website designers, and parade

[10] Section 230 lawsuits ask a different question. There is usually no debate about whether the speech is third-party speech. The question instead is whether the platform helped "develop[ ]" the third-party's speech "in part," thus removing immunity. 47 U.S.C. § 230(f)(3); see also Malwarebytes, Inc. v. Enigma Software Group USA, LLC, 141 S. Ct. 13, 16 (2020) (Thomas, J., concurring). There is an active debate about whether things like algorithms help "develop[ ]" third-party speech "in part." A conclusion by this Court that individuals are unlikely to mistake third-party speech on social media companies for the speech of the companies themselves would have no effect on whether those companies could invoke § 230 as a shield with respect to the same content.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

organizers. While there is little to no risk that everyday observers will mistake third-party speech on Facebook for Facebook's "own message," requiring a cake artist or independent website designer to speak a third party's speech does "deny speakers the right 'to choose the content of their own messages'" because the risk of attribution is high. 303 Creative LLC, 600 U.S., at 592 (quoting Hurley, 515 U.S., at 573) (brackets omitted). Indeed, the "very purpose" of Colorado's requirement to force companies to design websites supporting certain events was "the coercive elimination of dissenting ideas about marriage." Id., at 588 (brackets and internal quotation marks omitted). Forcing a cake baker or newspaper to state third-party speech unlawfully compels speech. Requiring companies in the business of transmitting other peoples' speech billions of times a day to do so without viewpoint discrimination does not.

3. It makes no difference that posts on social media typically are distributed to many people rather than to one. Organizations subject to must-carry regulations are regularly used to broadcast speech to many recipients. "[S]upposedly one-to-one media have long been used to distribute material to the public at large." Eugene Volokh, Treating Social Media Platforms Like Common Carriers?, 1 J. Free Speech L. 377, 387 (2021). One speaker can use the U.S. Postal Service to broadcast a message to millions. Ibid. And hundreds or even thousands of people can join a single conference call or group text message thread.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

B. Social media companies cannot evade accountability simply by choosing to edit some content.

The Fifth Circuit opinion extensively discussed the historical regulation of telephones and telegraphs, yet NetChoice's brief in Paxton makes no attempt to address that analogy. Its brief in Moody is hardly better, principally arguing (at 49) that telegraph and telephone companies are different because they merely transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B." The United States amicus brief repeats this argument, asserting (at 11) that "unlike [telephones and telegraphs], the platforms are not merely conduits transmitting speech from one person to another" but instead choose to edit or remove content.

Although the Eleventh Circuit adopted this argument, NetChoice, LLC v. Moody, 34 F.4th 1196, 1222 (CA11 2022), the argument overlooks basic history, is circular and begs the question, would enable phone companies to evade regulation, and would create a roadmap for government censorship.

As to history, telephone and telegraph companies transmit speech on an "unedited basis" only because they are compelled to do so by law. Those companies historically did the same thing NetChoice's members currently do until the States, Congress, and this Court stepped in. See Lakier, supra, at 2322; Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470; W. Union Tel. Co., 162 U.S., at 651.

History thus favors the States, not NetChoice. The Eleventh Circuit concluded social media companies could censor content because they have "historically exercised" power to refuse transmission of disfavored ideas. Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1222. But telegraph companies have a much longer history of censorship. Social media is less than two decades old. Congress did not impose must-carry requirements on telegraphs until 1888, 50 years after their invention. Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. Yet it is well recognized today that those must-carry regulations were constitutional—even though this Court declared that telegraph companies are "not common carriers." Primrose, 154 U. S., at 14 (emphasis added). History thus provides no basis for dismissing the striking similarities between social media companies and telegraph and telephones by dubbing social-media censorship "editorial judgment."

The attempt to avoid the telephone analogy is also circular and would wipe out traditional regulations. The Eleventh Circuit concluded Florida could not require social media companies to distribute content without viewpoint discrimination because the companies already "exercise editorial judgment." Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1221. In other words, the State can compel a company to refrain from censoring only if the company is already refraining. Under that rule, must-carry regulations are pointless. Telephones, telegraphs, and parcel delivery companies can become immune under the First Amendment from any must-carry regulation as soon as they chose to engage in "editorial judgment" to cut off calls and not deliver messages and products that express ideas they dislike.

Or if those traditional regulations are valid, then the Eleventh Circuit's analysis is self-refuting: the regulations here would become valid as soon as a company complies. NetChoice asserts that imposing must-carry regulations on telephones is fine because telephones transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis,'" but the same will be true of NetChoice's members if they comply with these statutes.

The argument is also a roadmap for government censorship. If NetChoice and the Eleventh Circuit are correct that the act of "discriminat[ing] among messages" converts third-party speech into the platform's first-party speech, Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1221, then the Federal Government could freely censor speech on its property because the censorial act would convert the speech into government speech, which "is not restricted by the Free Speech Clause," Pleasant Grove City, Utah v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 469 (2009); see also Walker v. Texas Div., Sons of Confederate Veterans, Inc., 576 U.S. 200, 213 (2015). Much like this Court should "prevent the government-speech doctrine from being used as a cover for censorship," Shurtleff, 596 U.S., at 263 (Alito, J., concurring), it should prevent the First Amendment from blocking States' efforts to stop private censorship. Like the government, social media companies may not hide behind the First Amendment when they deploy a "come-one-come-all attitude" with exceptions for select disfavored speakers. Id., at 257 (majority op.).

C. In the context of facial challenges, this Court need not consider more complex questions.

Because NetChoice has asserted facial challenges, this Court need not wade into more difficult questions, such as whether a social media company can be prohibited from attaching a disclaimer or a fact check to third-party speech.

It is far from obvious how this Court's precedents would apply. On the one hand, a platform that appends a note to third-party speech undoubtedly engages in its own speech. On the other hand, communication networks often are required to serve all comers without "undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person" or "class of persons." 47 U.S.C. § 202. If a phone company appended a 30-second ad supporting one political candidate to every call originating from the campaign office of that candidate's opponent, the phone company would certainly be engaging in speech, but it would also be giving "preference or advantage" to one customer over another.

Those more difficult questions should not be resolved in the context of a facial challenge.

II. The hyperconcentration of social media reinforces State authority to regulate.

Both the common law and American courts have long recognized that protecting the marketplace of ideas involves more than keeping government from abridging speech; it sometimes means regulating dominant private actors to ensure they cannot abridge speech either.

At common law, it was well recognized that companies with substantial market power could be compelled not to discriminate. As Matthew Hale, the well-known English barrister and scholar on the history of the common law, put it, "if a wharf owner operated the 'only wharf licensed by the queen' or if

'there was no other wharf in that port,' then the wharf was 'affected with a public interest,' and the owner acquired a duty to serve without discrimination." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 472 (quoting Matthew Hale, De Portibus Maris, in A COLLECTION OF TRACTS RELATIVE TO THE LAW OF ENGLAND 77–78 (Francis Hargrave ed., 1787)) (brackets omitted).

American courts have long applied this principle to communications technology, assessing whether a "communications firm … play[s] a central economic and social role in society." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. As this Court put it, because "values central to the First Amendment" include "assuring that the public has access to a multiplicity of information sources," government can take "steps to ensure that private interests not restrict, through physical control of a critical pathway of communication, the free flow of information and ideas." E.g., Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 657, 663; accord U.S. Telecom Ass'n v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381, 434–35 (CADC 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from rehearing en banc) ("If the Internet service providers have market power, then the Government may impose open-access or similar carriage obligations.").

This Court has thus held that radio's "unique characteristic[s]" permit the government to restrict "specified network practices" without abridging freedom of speech. Nat'l Broad. Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 226–27 (1943). And this Court approved government regulations that prohibited cable companies from silencing "the voice of" some "speakers with a mere flick of the switch." Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656 (1994); see also Turner Broad.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Sys., Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1997"), 520 U.S. 180, 225 (1997).

Applied to social media companies, these cases mean, at the least, that regulations are justified when "the service provider possesses 'bottleneck monopoly power' in the relevant geographic market" and can use it to "diminish[] the diversity and amount of content available." U.S. Telecom Ass'n, 855 F.3d, at 431, 433 n.12 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (quoting Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 661); see also Comcast Cable Communications, LLC v. FCC, 717 F.3d 982, 993 (CADC 2013) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring). "[I]t stands to reason that if Congress may demand that telephone companies operate as common carriers, it can ask the same of" other communication companies, including social media companies. Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 684 (opinion of O'Connor, J.).

The core of the Florida and Texas laws comfortably fits that rubric. The laws address companies that possess extraordinary market power and use it to reduce diversity of ideas.

A. Market power

While these companies were much smaller and less entrenched even six or eight years ago, the extraordinary scale and scope of large social media platforms today makes it impossible to deny that they "play[] a central economic and social role in society." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. These platforms are "the modern public square," Packingham v. North Carolina, 582 U.S. 98, 107 (2017), and "serve as the primary source of news about important public issues for many Americans," Murthy v. Missouri, 144 S. Ct. 32, 32 (2023) (Alito, J., dissenting).

Consider their network effects. A fax machine is valuable only to the extent others use fax machines. The most valuable thing about Facebook is that "3 billion people use it." Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). While network size makes Facebook an extraordinary marketplace for ideas, network size also means these dominant platforms are the only way most speakers can avoid speaking into a void, see, e.g., Alan Z. Rozenshtein, Silicon Valley's Speech: Technology Giants and the Deregulatory First Amendment, 1 J. Free Speech Law 337, 357 (2021). Other options for speech are not comparable. Switching from Facebook to "competitor" upstart social media companies is not like switching from AT&T to Verizon. It is like switching from flying to walking.

Network effects also mean enormous barriers to new entry—as evidenced by these companies' sky-high profit margins.[11] In a competitive market, "astronomical profit margins … would induce new entrants into the market. That these companies have no comparable competitors highlights that the industries may have substantial barriers to entry." Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1225 (Thomas, J., concurring).

In fact, three years ago, the last time a newer social media company gained serious traction, other platforms banded together to kill it. In January 2021, Parler, which branded itself as a free-speech platform, was the most downloaded app. Then Google (YouTube's parent company) and Apple "removed" "the app for the conservative-focused Twitter competitor Parler … from their app stores." Volokh, supra, at 397–98 (citations omitted). That made Parler virtually inaccessible on phones for anybody who had not already downloaded the app. Then Parler's "hosting company, Amazon Web Services" "blocked" it from the Amazon servers Parler was renting, taking Parler entirely offline, even though "Parler was merely refusing to forbid certain speech, much of which is constitutionally protected—thus voluntarily acting in a way close to how the post office and phone companies are required by law to act." Id., at 398. Amazon's power to kick companies entirely off the internet has caused Amazon to be described as "more like a utility provider than a broadcaster." Scott Rosenberg, Big Tech's Free Speech Showdown, Axios (Jan. 10, 2021).[12]

This illustrates a concerning fact: the dominant internet players are so powerful that the only way startups can take off is by relying on the mercy of the companies against which they wish to compete.

The conclusion that a handful of companies dominate the social media market aligns with conclusions by States and the Federal Government. In 2020, the Federal Trade Commission initiated an ongoing antitrust suit on the theory that "Facebook holds monopoly power in the market for personal social networking services … in the United States." FTC v. Facebook, Inc., No. 1:20-cv-03590 (D.D.C. filed Dec. 8, 2020), Am. Compl., ¶2. And nearly every State and the Department of Justice has been involved in antitrust litigation against the major social media companies in recent years. See, e.g., Antitrust Reform and Big Tech Firms, Congressional Research Service R46875 (Nov. 21, 2023) (describing some active cases).[13]

B. Discriminatory use of power

Although described by this Court as "the modern public square," Packingham, 582 U.S., at 107, these platforms are in fact more important than the historic public square because they hold "unprecedented … control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties," Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1221 (Thomas, J., concurring). True, other aspects of the internet have enormous network effects (such as email), but nobody has central control over those networks. In contrast, "control of [social media] networks is highly concentrated" in the hands of a few people. Id., at 1224. The platforms' power to facilitate and restrict speech on a large scale means they wield power "far greater than that of individual broadcasters who compete with one another as well as with satellite and cable networks." Prasad Krishnamurthy & Erwin Chemerinsky, How Congress Can Prevent Big Tech from Becoming the Speech Police, The Hill (Feb. 18, 2021).[14]

These platforms have used their unprecedented power to censor mainstream speakers on important issues of public debate. That selective censorship—the Florida and Texas legislatures concluded—threatens the marketplace of ideas and the free flow of information to the detriment of citizens and democratic governance.

These legislative judgments rest on solid ground. Companies covered by the Texas and Florida laws currently exercise unchecked power to suppress ideas. And they have shown little inclination to self-limit their "incredible influence over the content that's put out into the world." Ahiza García-Hodges, Big Tech Has Big Power over Online Speech. Should It Be Reined In?, NBC News (Jan. 21, 2021).[15]

1. Perhaps most famously, weeks before the 2020 general election while voters were deciding among presidential candidates, Twitter blocked users from posting links to a New York Post article about unflattering information found on the laptop of the Democratic candidate's son, and Facebook "deprecate[d]" the story by preventing users from linking to the New York Post. Katie Benner, et al., Hunter Biden Paid Tax Bill, but Broad Federal Investigation Continues, N.Y. Times (Mar. 16, 2022).[17]

2. Platforms restrict not only news reporting, but also speech by everyday Americans. They "have certainly been willing to restrict opinions that are well within the American political mainstream." Volokh, supra, at 395. This conclusion is borne out in countless examples. Id. at 397 (listing several).

Consider one of the most hotly contested issues today: the many controversial legal and policy questions about the increasing number of individuals who identify as transgender. These include questions about separate bathrooms, locker rooms, and sports teams; about appropriate medical care; and even about the nature of what it means to be male or female. Nobody doubts these questions are important, yet social media companies have made mainstream views on these questions off limits. For example, a clear majority (57%) of adults believe sex is determined at birth, regardless of a person's later-expressed gender identity. Ashley Kirzinger, et al., KFF/The Washington Post Trans Survey (Mar. 24, 2023).[18] But the 57% of Americans who believe that are not allowed to say so on social media. For example, when a U.S. Representative expressed his view that a high-ranking official in the Biden administration who identifies as a woman is in fact "a man," Twitter locked the Representative's account until he deleted the post. Indiana Congressman Deletes Post, Gets Twitter Access Back, Associated Press (Nov. 5, 2021).[19] Similarly, Twitter suspended a commenter when she expressed opposition to a transgender individual competing in the women's division in the Olympics, stating "men shouldn't compete against women." Joseph Wulfsohn, Allie Beth Stuckey Released from "Twitter Jail" after Referring to Transgender Olympic Athlete as a "Man," Fox News (Aug. 6, 2021).[20]

These questions are hotly debated today, and views on all sides of the issues are held "in good faith by reasonable and sincere people." Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. 644, 657 (2015). But it is extraordinary that dominant communications companies through which the vast majority of public speech flows can make a viewpoint held by 57% of Americans, on one of the most salient political topics of the day, off limits in the "modern public square,"

Much of the speech targeted by these dominant communication platforms is conservative, which is not surprising given Mark Zuckerberg's acknowledgment that tech companies reside in "an extremely left-leaning place." Morgan Chalfant, Cruz Presses Zuckerberg on Alleged Censorship of Conservative Speech (Apr. 10, 2018).[21] Right after Elon Musk purchased Twitter, he and journalist Bari Weiss uncovered internal evidence that at Twitter, "the rules were enforced against the right, but not against the left." But several platforms have also received allegations about censorship of opinions commonly viewed as left wing. Currently, social media companies face accusations of reducing the visibility of posts expressing political support for a Palestinian state in the present conflict. Priyanka Shankar, et al., Are Social Media Giants Censoring Pro-Palestine Voices Amid Israel's War?, Al Jazeera (Oct. 24, 2023).[23] Last summer, a federal district court found that social media platforms, at the request of federal officials, blocked Robert F. the Democratic presidential nomination. See Missouri v. Biden, 2023 WL 4335270, *5, *9, *40 (W.D. La., July 4, 2023). And in the aftermath of George Floyd's murder, Facebook allegedly flagged and removed posts calling attention to allegedly racist conduct. Craig Silverman, Black Lives Matter Activists Say They're Being Silenced by Facebook, Buzzfeed (June 19, 2020).[24]

3. Platforms also censor true information that is difficult to brand as left or right. Speech surrounding COVID is a prime example. When COVID first hit, "major social networks rolled out a series of policy changes to curb … claims about the virus, including theories about its roots"—like that it originated in a Chinese lab. Cristiano Lima, New Report on Covid-19 Origin Puts Social Media in GOP's Crosshairs, Washington Post (Feb. 27, 2023).[25] That origin theory is now the predominant theory of many agencies under the Biden administration. Both the Energy Department and the FBI have concluded that the COVID-19 "virus likely spread due to an accident at a Chinese laboratory." Ibid.

Similarly, in the summer of 2021, YouTube removed a video that a U.S. Senator, who is a doctor, posted opining about the relative inefficacy of masks made out of cloth. See, e.g., YouTube Suspends Rand Paul after Misleading Video on Masks, PBS News Concedes that Cloth Masks Do Not Protect Against the Virus as Effectively as Other Masks.*, N.Y. Times (Jan 14, 2022).[27] And his perspective might have been immensely important at the time to individuals deciding how best to protect themselves and others.

4. These examples may only scratch the surface because of platforms' deliberate opacity about their practices. They censor by taking down content or suspending people from their accounts, but they also "shadowban" by distributing content less widely than would otherwise occur. Geoffrey Fowler, Shadowbanning Is Real: Here's How You End up Muted by Social Media, Washington Post (Dec. 27, 2022).[28] "[U]sers often have no way of telling for sure whether they have been shadowbanned or whether their content is simply not popular."[29] Gabriel

[28] https://perma.cc/6AM9-XV7M.

[29] That some censorship occurs by leaving up content (but simply not distributing it as widely) further undermines NetChoice's contention that social media companies must censor content to avoid unwanted association with speech they dislike.

Nicholas, Shadowbanning Is Big Tech's Big Problem, The Atlantic (April 28, 2022).[30]

If recent history is any guide, that will not change. These companies continue to resist transparency. In early 2023, for example, Facebook's parent company, Meta, declined the recommendation of its Oversight Board to disclose which public-figure Facebook pages are subject to the site's "cross-check" moderation program for high-profile users. Clare Duffy, Facebook Revamps Controversial Content Moderation Process for VIPs, CNN Business (Mar. 3, 2023).[31]

* * *

Whether the target is left-wing speech, right-wing speech, or centrist speech, censorship harms everyone. From the start, our constitutional order recognized that "error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." Jefferson's First Inaugural Address (March 4, 1801).[32] The Constitution aims to "'preserve an uninhibited marketplace of ideas in which truth will ultimately prevail.'" Nat'l Inst. of Fam. & Life Advocates. v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361, 2374 (2018) (citation omitted). That is because the "widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the public." Associated Press, 326 U.S., at 20. "This free exchange facilitates an informed public opinion, which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the People's will." Mahanoy, 141 S. Ct. at 2046.

Platforms leverage their extraordinary power to threaten that constitutional project. Florida and Texas's challenged response, designed to ensure information flows freely and fairly, strengthens rather than offends the First Amendment.

C. The Court should respect legislative fact findings of market power and censorship.

In the face of this discriminatory use of market dominance, the Texas and Florida legislatures made legislative findings about the power of large platforms to impoverish the marketplace of ideas. Texas concluded that social media platforms with "more than 50 million active users in the United States in a calendar month" have "market dominance" that justifies treating them as "common carriers." Tex. Code § 120.002(b); Tex. H.B. 20 §1(4). Florida determined that platforms with 100 million monthly global users or $100 million annual gross revenue "have become as important for conveying public opinion as public utilities are for supporting modern society" and "should be treated similarly to common carriers." Fla. Stat. § 501.2041(g); Fla. S.B. 7072 § 1(5)–(6). Those legislative judgments deserve significant weight in evaluating whether the Constitution permits the States' regulations. Cf. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 132 (1876); Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 665 (plurality op.); Minnesota v. Clover Leaf Creamery Co., 449 U.S. 456, 464 (1981). After all, if "it stands to reason" that "Congress may demand" that telephone and cable companies carry third-party speech, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 684 (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part), it equally stands to reason that the States may demand the same of digital platforms. Where the Bill of Rights polices government conduct, there is "no daylight between the federal and state conduct it prohibits or requires." Timbs v. Indiana, 139 S. Ct. 682, 687 (2019); see also Ramos v. Louisiana, 140 S. Ct. 1390, 1397 (2020); Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 7 (1964).

III. State laws preventing platforms from censoring speech provide a prophylactic vanguard against government censorship.

The United States says it submits a brief because, Congress having "enacted laws governing the communications industry," the United States "has a substantial interest in the resolution of the questions presented." U.S. Br., at 1. Yet it advocates a position that threatens to undermine federal laws.

Why? Perhaps because the Federal Government intends to continue its well-documented practice of pressuring companies to wield their censorship discretion to remove disfavored viewpoints.

It is undisputed that the Federal Government, including the White House, has engaged in a years-long, behind-closed-doors campaign to push social media companies to suppress millions of constitutionally protected posts. This Court granted certiorari in Murthy v. Missouri, No. 23-411, and while the legal conclusions there are disputed, the fact findings are not.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In its opening brief in Murthy, the Federal Government does not dispute any fact finding. It does not dispute that—behind closed doors—it successfully used "unrelenting pressure" to push social media companies to "suppress[] millions of protected free speech postings by American citizens." Missouri, 2023 WL 4335270, at *44. It does not dispute it targeted "disfavored" speech "well beyond COVID-19," including "the Hunter Biden laptop story," Missouri v. Biden, 83 F.4th 350, 368, 381 (CA5 2023), and topics related to "racial justice, the U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan," U.S. "[s]upport of Ukraine," and content posted by an individual who was challenging President Biden for the Democratic presidential nomination, 2023 WL 4335270, at *9, *67. The Federal Government does not dispute it targeted "nearly every major American social media company," and that those companies "capitulated" into "total compliance," even removing constitutionally protected content that "did not run afoul of their policies." 83 F.4th, at 359, 362–63, 392. And the Federal Government does not dispute its "conduct has not stopped," it has even "started monitoring" the platforms for compliance with governmental demands "to remove disfavored content," and its push for censorship has been so widespread that "it impacts every social-media user." Id., at 359–60, 393, 398.

Instead, the Federal Government argues it induced all these things through legal "persuasion," not illegal "coercion," and the plaintiffs lack standing to contend otherwise. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 14, 25, 34. The Federal Government even doubles down, all but promising to continue pressing platforms to suppress millions of posts because it believes these posts are "false information," id., at 34, even though much speech it pushed to suppress turned out to be true.

The Federal Government's interest in the NetChoice cases is thus clear.[33] The Texas and Florida laws pose no threat to federal laws; they only threaten the ability of federal officials to continue pushing platforms to "suppress[] millions of protected free speech postings by American citizens." 2023 WL 4335270, at *44.

Pressuring platforms would become much more difficult if state law prohibited platforms from complying with federal takedown demands. One of "anti-discrimination obligations' great virtues is that it protects private entities from complying with government's censorship demands. A private company with no legal obligation to treat users in a non-discriminatory fashion readily can accede government's request to censor, block, or otherwise treat users unfairly. But, if a private firm is prohibited by law to do so, then the government cannot even ask." Adam Candeub, Bargaining for Free Speech: Common Carriage, Network Neutrality,

[33] As further evidence that the United States views the NetChoice cases as fundamentally related to Murthy, the United States repeats the same "editorial discretion" arguments in Murthy. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 3–4, 16, 36. The United States is also represented in this case by two Civil Division attorneys who represented the Federal Government in Murthy at the Fifth Circuit.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

and Section 230, 22 Yale J. L. & Tech. 391, 432–33 (2020).

The Federal Government's real interest here is that it will no longer be able to "persuade" platforms to take down millions of constitutionally protected posts if this Court affirms the Texas and Florida laws. That is a reason to support the state laws, not to strike them down. In passing these laws, Texas and Florida afforded their citizens the "double security [that] arises" when one government "guard[s] … society against the injustice of the other." The Federalist No. 51, supra, at 320 (Madison). The Fifth Circuit in Murthy said the Federal Government forced social media companies to "bend to the government's will." 83 F.4th, at 371. The laws challenged here provide the legal backbone platforms need to stand straight.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CONCLUSION

The Court should affirm the longstanding authority of States to protect their citizens from censorship imposed by mass communication networks.

Hi Brianna,
Here is the slightly updated draft amicus with all the relevant states.
It is 99% complete. Going through one last read-through for typos, etc. but nothing else is subject to change.
I'll let you know if there is any updated version before publication.
A few quotes from AG Bailey depending on where you go with the article:
"In a free society, the debate between opposing viewpoints should be played out in the marketplace of ideas. Our right to free speech is the bedrock of our great nation. I'm proud to be standing in the gap to protect our right to free speech on several fronts in the war for the soul of our country." (Re: Missouri v. Biden, amicus briefs in both net choice cases and NRA v. Vullo)
"If speaking out on public issues in opposition to the social narrative means elites can cut off our ability to speak, our country has become little more than a dictatorship. That's not the America I fought to defend on the battlefields of Iraq or swore to protect as Missouri's 44th Attorney General."
"If the Supreme Court lets social media companies silence speech, it will set a devastating anti-free speech precedent at a time when the First Amendment is under widespread attack."
"This is the most consequential term for the First Amendment in Supreme Court history." (Missouri v. Biden, Net Choice cases, NRA v. Vullo)

Hi Brianna – let's talk about this when we call tomorrow, but here's the draft free speech amicus brief Missouri is leading in the net choice cases that I mentioned.
It's 99% finished. Deadline for other states to join is tomorrow night. We have at least ten that are joining. And we're still doing tables, etc. so I will get you the final brief tomorrow.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But we plan to file on Monday, and would love for you to break the story. We can work around you.
Case has huge implications for government censorship, etc. and ties to AG Bailey's free speech case, Missouri v. Biden, that is also before the U.S. Supreme Court. This is going to be a huge Supreme Court term for the 1A.
Will get you a quote from the AG as well if you're interested.

INTEREST OF AMICI STATES

The States of Missouri, Ohio, Alaska, Alabama, Arkansas, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, and Virginia, and the Arizona Legislature ("the States"), agree with many points in the amicus brief of New York, et al., which focuses on social media problems other than censorship. The States here submit this amicus brief to focus directly on the censorship question.

The States do so for two reasons. First, it is the constitutional duty of the States to protect their citizens' inherent rights, including the right to free speech. Just as States pass criminal and civil laws to protect citizens from private abridgment of rights of life and property, States have a long history of regulating to protect citizens from abridgment of their free speech rights by dominant communication platforms. Second, the States have a vital interest in hearing the speech of their citizens, especially political speech. That is necessary for States to be democratically responsive. NetChoice's position threatens these interests because it seeks to upend the longstanding authority of States to prohibit mass communication networks from engaging in censorship and viewpoint discrimination.

1. The Founders were clear that the purpose of government is to secure liberty. The Declaration of Independence recognizes that natural rights, including "Life" and "Liberty," preexist government, and that "Governments are instituted among Men" for one principal purpose: "to secure these rights." Declaration of Independence ¶ 2.

The Founders thus recognized that governments are created to protect rights from private abridgment—the only abridgment that can occur before government is formed. Society must of course always resist government abuse of power (which occurs too often), but government is created in the first instance to protect against private abuse. As James Madison put it, "If men were angels, no government would be necessary." The Federalist No. 51, at 319 (Clinton Rossiter ed., Signet Classic 2003) (1788). Government must be obliged "to control itself"—through separation of powers—but it is equally true that society "must first enable the government to control the governed." Ibid.

One right States "are instituted among Men" to "secure" is the freedom of speech. As Madison said when proposing the draft of the First Amendment, freedom of speech is a "natural right" predating government itself. Jud Campbell, Natural Rights and the First Amendment, 127 Yale L.J. 246, 264 (2017) (citing Madison's notes reflecting his speech in Congress). This Court has held the same, explaining that "the Second Amendment, like the First and Fourth Amendments, codified a pre-existing right." District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 592 (2008) (emphasis in original).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

So NetChoice is flat wrong to contend (at 25 in Paxton)[1] that only the government is capable of censorship. Because freedom of speech is a freedom States were created to secure, it is the duty of States to secure that freedom from private abridgment, including abridgment by extraordinarily powerful communication platforms.

The States can pass criminal laws against theft and murder—thus protecting against private interference with rights of property or life. And if dominant firearm dealers refuse to sell on account of race, States can regulate to secure for their citizens the right to bear arms. So too, if dominant communication platforms censor based on viewpoint, States can pass laws to stop that censorship—as they have done for well over 100 years.

A State of course cannot, in the name of protecting free speech, abridge the freedom of speech. But this Court has held that the First Amendment does not prohibit States from protecting the marketplace of ideas when that marketplace is threatened by private actors. "It would be strange indeed," this Court said, "if the grave concern for freedom of the press which prompted adoption of the First Amendment should be read as a command that the government was without power to protect that freedom." Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 20 (1945). As with freedom of the press, so too with freedom of speech. See W. Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U.S. 650, 651, 660 (1895)

[1] This amicus references briefs in the two consolidated cases as Paxton briefs (for No. 22-555) and Moody briefs (for No. 22-277).

(upholding law prohibiting telegraph companies from engaging in viewpoint discrimination); see also Genevieve Lakier, The Non-First Amendment Law of Freedom of Speech, 134 Harv. L. Rev. 2299, 2316–19 (2021) (listing statutory examples protecting free speech).

2. States also have an interest in preventing censorship because censorship deprives States of the information they need to be responsive to the people. "The vitality of civil and political institutions in our society depends on free discussion." Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4 (1949). "[I]t it is only through free debate and free exchange of ideas that government remains responsive to the will of the people and peaceful change is effected." Ibid.

Many landmark legal changes arose from government responding to the speech of everyday citizens. That includes "great matters of state," such as Magna Carta, women's suffrage, the Declaration of Independence, and antislavery legislation. Borough of Duryea, Pa. v. Guarnieri, 564 U.S. 379, 395–97 (2011). Those reforms illustrate that "representative democracy" works best when the "free exchange" of ideas "facilitates an informed public opinion, which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the People's will." Mahanoy Area Sch. Dist. v. B. L., 141 S. Ct. 2038, 2046 (2021). Today, one of the most common ways individuals speak to their governments is through public posts on social media.

Top-down censorship by dominant communication platforms thus threatens the ability of States to operate. Censorship deprives local government of the information needed to "remain[] responsive to the will of the people." Terminiello, 337 U.S., at 4.

As Judge Oldham's opinion below recognized, States and Congress have enacted regulations like the ones enacted by Texas and Florida for well over one hundred years. NetChoice, L.L.C. v. Paxton, 49 F.4th 439, 470–71 (CA5 2022). While the earlier laws applied to telegraphs and telephones, it is no different when the companies carrying other people's speech are digital rather than analog. The States thus have a paramount interest in urging this Court to affirm that longstanding, historic authority of States to protect freedom of speech and enable representative government by prohibiting dominant communication networks from censoring.

That interest is especially weighty here in light of the unprecedented control these platforms have over speech central to political and public discourse. "[I]n the modern economy, the Platforms provide the most effective way to disseminate news, commentary, and other information." Id., at 476. And never before has there been so much "concentrated control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties." Biden v. Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct. 1220, 1221 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). Today the ability "to cut off speech lies most powerfully in the hands of private digital platforms." Id., at 1227. That explains why the Federal Government has inserted itself through pressure into those content-moderation policies and practices—as shown in Murthy v. Missouri. The concentration of power in a handful of platforms can facilitate government censorship.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

That power creates other real concerns. A Facebook executive admitted in a 2019 internal memo—later leaked—that the company's power over speech is so immense that Facebook could unilaterally "pull any lever" to alter the outcome of a presidential election. Andrew Bosworth Memo, N.Y. Times (Jan. 7, 2020).[2] The States have authority to protect citizens from abuse of that immense power.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I.A. The easiest path to resolve this case is to determine whether social media is more like telephones or more like newspapers. The law has consistently permitted requiring telephones and the like to distribute third-party speech and has generally rejected requiring the same of companies like newspapers.

This Court has already unanimously rejected NetChoice's maximalist argument that companies have a categorical right not to "disseminate … speech generated by others." NetChoice Paxton Br., at 13; see PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 85 (1980). Instead, this Court has considered whether the regulated company "possess[es] the power to obstruct readers' access to" information, Turner Broad. System, Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1994"), 512 U.S. 622, 656 (1994), and whether requiring a company to distribute third-party speech would materially harm the company's ability to get out its "own message," Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 63 (2006).

[2] https://perma.cc/V8NP-6K4A; https://web.archive.org/web/20200107185034/https://www.nytimes.com/2020/01/07/technology/facebook-andrew-bosworth-memo.html.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

On these critical questions, newspapers and telephones are different. Local newspapers cannot restrict access to information. Nationwide phone companies can. For newspapers, parades, and the like, space constraints and limited number of content creators means compelling a company to carry third-party speech materially harms the company's ability to express its "own message." Ibid. The space constraints mean material loss of the company's opportunity to speak, and the nature of the medium means listeners become confused about whether speech belongs to third parties or the company. Id., at 65. But for mass communication networks like telephones, those risks are not substantial. So courts have long permitted requiring companies like telephones to distribute third-party speech free from viewpoint discrimination.

Social media companies are much more like telephone networks than newspapers. Unlike newspapers, which "do[ ] not possess the power to obstruct readers' access to" information, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656, social media companies do—and they exercise that power. Like telephone companies, and "unlike newspapers," social media companies "hold themselves out as organizations that focus on distributing the speech of the broader public." Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). Unlike the space constraints for newspapers, the space on social media is nearly boundless. And like telephones, nearly all speech on social media platforms is created by third parties.

For all these reasons, NetChoice cannot meet its burden of establishing that the regulations at issue here would materially limit a social media company's speech or cause ordinary members of the public to confuse speech on Facebook, YouTube, or X (formerly Twitter) as speech of the company itself, rather than third parties using those platforms. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

I.B. NetChoice barely addresses the analogy to telephones and telegraphs, stating only that regulating those companies is permissible because they transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B." Moody Br., at 49. That argument fails for many reasons.

First, it is demonstrably false historically. As the Fifth Circuit explained, telegraph companies engaged in the same kind of viewpoint discrimination NetChoice's members engage in today.

Second, the argument would make regulation pointless. If the only companies that can be required to carry content without discrimination are those already doing so, regulation does nothing at all. Relatedly, NetChoice's argument begs the question. If this Court permits the regulations to go into effect, social media platforms likewise will transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B."

Third, NetChoice's argument creates a recipe for censorship by telephones and government. Under their logic, as soon as an actor begins "editing" content, that transforms the content into the actor's own speech. Telephones can thus evade the 100-plus years of regulation simply by starting to censor. So too, government can simply "edit" people's speech, and turn everything into government speech.

I.C. Because NetChoice has brought facial challenges against these laws, this Court need not answer the thornier questions about what to do when platforms mix their own speech with that of third parties (such as when they append "fact checks" to third-party speech).

II.A. The extraordinary market power social media platforms possess reinforces the ability of States to regulate in this area. At common law, companies with substantial market power were required to serve without discrimination. This Court has long permitted States and Congress to apply the same concept to large communication platforms.

No doubt, these platforms possess extraordinary power. This industry has monumental barriers to entry. What makes these companies valuable is their network sizes, such as Facebook's 3-billion person network. That makes it very difficult to compete, and the one time an upstart (called Parler) finally gained momentum, Apple, Google, and Amazon forcibly removed it from the internet.

These companies also aggressively engage in censorship that impoverishes free exchange of ideas. Many examples are notorious, such as the systematic censorship (at the instigation of the Federal Government) of the Hunter Biden laptop story and of the theory that COVID originated in a lab in China—now the predominant theory of the Energy Department and the FBI. Platforms censor viewpoints on the most hotly contested topics of the day, like transgender issues. And they suppress "misinformation" later proven accurate. While most censored speech is conservative, there are complaints about censorship of left-wing speech. All this censorship harms not only the marketplace of ideas, but also the ability of the States to respond to the concerns of their citizens.

III. Dominant digital platforms are not the only problem. Government systematically pressures platforms to censor. This Court granted certiorari to Murthy v. Missouri, No. 23-411, where a district court made extensive fact findings that the White House, the FBI, an agency within the Department of Homeland Security, and other federal actors systematically pressured social media companies to censor even more speech.

In its brief in Murthy, the Federal Government does not dispute the accuracy of these extensive, alarming findings. It does not dispute, for example, that it successfully induced removal of millions of posts—even posts that do not violate policies of social media companies—or that this removal affected everyone on social media. Instead, it argues it successfully induced these things through legal "persuasion," not illegal "coercion," and that the plaintiffs lack standing to contend otherwise. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 14, 25, 34.

That likely reveals why the United States backs NetChoice here, even though its position threatens the United States' own laws. The Federal Government knows it will be much more difficult for federal officials to induce social media companies to suppress speech if state law prohibits it. So the

Federal Government seeks to eliminate those state laws.

That shows that the Texas and Florida laws, far from infringing the First Amendment, in fact shield social media companies from government pressure and deprive government of the opportunity to control expression.

ARGUMENT

I. States have authority to prohibit mass communication platforms from censoring speech.

A. Requiring social media companies to distribute third-party speech without viewpoint discrimination is permissible because social media better resembles telephones than newspapers.

1. NetChoice does not dispute that telephones and telegraphs can be compelled, consistent with the First Amendment, to distribute third-party speech. They can be compelled to behave as common carriers even though this Court has declared that "they are not common carriers," Primrose v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 (1894) (emphasis added), and even though these companies have a history of exercising the very "editorial discretion" NetChoice's members seek to exercise today, Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470.

In fact, it is only because telegraph companies behaved the way social media companies do today that nondiscrimination regulations were imposed. In the 1800s, "Western Union, the largest telegraph company, … discriminated against certain political speech," confirming the fear "'that the private entities that controlled this amazing new technology would use that power to manipulate the flow of information to the public when doing so served their economic or political self-interest.'" Ibid. (quoting Genevieve Lakier, The Non-First Amendment Law of Freedom of Speech, 134 Harv. L. Rev. 2299, 2321 (2021)). "In response, States enacted common carrier laws to limit discrimination in the transmission of telegraph messages." Ibid. Congress did the same. Ibid. (citing Telegraph Lines Act, ch. 772, § 2, 25 Stat. 382, 383 (1888)); see also W. Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U.S. 650, 651 (1895) (rejecting a challenge to an Iowa law requiring telegraph companies to deliver messages with "impartiality and good faith").

On the other hand, this Court has been clear that companies generally cannot be compelled to distribute third-party speech in their own "newspapers," Miami Herald Pub. Co. v. Tornillo, 418 U.S. 241, 258 (1974), or in their own "newsletters," which are "no different from a small newspaper," P. Gas and Elec. Co. v. Pub. Utilities Comm'n. of California, 475 U.S. 1, 8 (1986). The Court has applied similar analysis to parade organizers and expressive associations. Hurley v. Irish-American Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Group of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 574–75 (1995); Boy Scouts of Am. v. Dale, 530 U.S. 640, 655 (2000).

In two seminal cases, this Court explained what makes newspapers and the like different from organizations that can be required to distribute third-party speech. First, a newspaper, unlike a cable company,[3] "does not possess the power to obstruct readers' access to" other information. Turner Broad. System, Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1994"), 512 U.S. 622, 656 (1994). Second, newspapers, newsletters, and the like generally cannot be required to distribute third-party content because that requirement "sufficiently interferes with any message of [the company]."[4] Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 64 (2006). Telephones and shopping centers are different because no space constraints materially impede the company from getting out its "own message," and "there [i]s little likelihood that the views of those [third parties] engaging in the expressive activities would be identified with the" company. See id., at 65 (citing PruneYard Shopping Ctr. v. Robins, 447 U.S. 74, 88 (1980)).

[3] Although cable companies differ from newspapers in important ways, they resemble (or at least did in the 1990s) newspapers in others. This Court stressed, for example, that cable companies in the 1990s had meaningful space constraints. Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 637.

[4] Even newspapers "are prohibited from charging more for political advertising than they charge for commercial advertising" or "receiving money or any other thing of value in exchange for their editorial endorsement of a political candidate or an idea." Lakier, supra, at 2330 (citing 52 U.S.C. § 30120(b) and state laws).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(1) the company has power to obstruct access to information, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656; or

(2) there is no "danger … that the statute would 'dampen the vigor and limit the variety of public debate,'" PruneYard, 447 U.S., at 88 (quoting Miami Herald, 418 U.S., at 257) (brackets omitted), because the act of hosting "lack[s] the expressive quality of a parade, a newsletter, or the editorial page of a newspaper," Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

That makes sense because a law requiring a company to host the speech of third parties is more akin to a property regulation than a speech regulation: it regulates the ability of a company like Facebook to exclude people from its network. Because any effect on the company's own speech is indirect, must-carry regulations are more likely than direct regulations to survive review.

NetChoice is thus wrong to assert that companies have a categorical right not to "disseminate … speech generated by others." Paxton Br., at 13. This Court squarely considered and (unanimously) rejected that argument. PruneYard, 447 U.S., at 85 (rejecting the argument "that a private property owner has a First Amendment right not to be forced by the State to use his property as a forum for the speech of others"). Instead, what matters are the contextual questions whether NetChoice's members can obstruct access to other information and whether hosting third-party speech would materially impede the ability of NetChoice's members to get out their own message.

That means there is a much simpler way for this Court to assess the two NetChoice cases: evaluate whether companies like Facebook are more like newspapers, parade organizers, cake bakers,[5] and website designers,[6] or more like telephones, telegraphs, schools, and shopping malls.

2. Social media companies are much more like telephones, telegraphs, schools, and shopping centers than newspapers and newsletters.

Consider first "the power [of social media companies] to obstruct readers' access to … publications." Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656. As explained more fully in Part II.B, perhaps the most infamous censorship decision by social media companies was blocking access to a newspaper report containing unflattering information about the Democratic candidate for President. "A daily newspaper, no matter how secure its local monopoly, does not possess th[is] power." Ibid. Social media companies do, and they exercise it. "The potential for abuse of this private power over a central avenue of communication cannot be overlooked." Id., at 657.

Consider also the number of people contributing content to a newspaper versus a telephone network or social media network. Unlike a newspaper, which might have at most a few hundred people contributing content, "3 billion people" contribute content on Facebook. Knight First Amend. Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (2021) (Thomas, J., concurring). "[U]nlike newspapers, digital platforms hold themselves out as organizations that focus on distributing the speech of the broader public," and so it is the public who creates nearly all the content on the platform. Ibid. Moreover, while newspapers carefully curate third-party content that they accept (such as letters to the editor), social media companies, like telephones and telegraphs, generally "hold [themselves] out to serve any member of the public without individualized bargaining." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470; see also Shurtleff v. City of Bos., Massachusetts, 596 U.S. 243, 256–57 (2022) (holding that flag raisings were not government speech because "Boston told the public that it sought 'to accommodate all applicants'").

Then there is the lack of space constraints. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64. While nothing in the physical universe is truly infinite, social media companies come about as close to infinity as possible. They operate with nothing like the space constraints of a newspaper. "The New York Times publishes around 150 original pieces of journalism a day, on average." How We Choose the Great Read, N.Y. Times (Apr. 4, 2022).[7] In contrast, the vast majority of public speech flows through social media, with 1.7 million posts made to Facebook and 500 hours of video are uploaded to YouTube every minute. Media Usage in an Internet Minute as of April 2022, Statista

(2023).[8] That is 2.4 billion Facebook posts and 720,000 hours of video uploaded to YouTube every day. Unlike a newspaper, where forced hosting of third-party content meaningfully decreases space for the newspaper's own message, Miami Herald, 418 U.S., at 257, social media companies have plenty of space to express their own message. For social media, "accommodation does not sufficiently interfere with any message of the [social media company]." Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64.

And unlike newspapers or parade organizers (which carefully curate all content toward a specific message or messages), nearly all content on social media companies is posted unedited by the companies. While these platforms "use algorithms to screen out" far less than even one percent of content, "virtually everything else is just posted to the Platform with zero editorial control or judgment." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 459 (emphasis in original).

In fact, contrary to NetChoice's assertions now that its members exercise "editorial control" over everything, these companies have expressly stated, "We try to explicitly view ourselves as not editors .... We don't want to have editorial judgment over the content that's in your feed." Id., at 460 (emphasis added) (quoting Ravi Somaiya, How Facebook Is Changing the Way Its Users Consume Journalism, N.Y. Times (Oct. 26, 2014)[9]). NetChoice's current presentation before this Court is likewise inconsistent with the assertions of its members in other lawsuits that they merely distribute content created by others and are therefore entitled to immunity under § 230 of the Communications Decency Act. E.g., Br. of Twitter, Gonzalez v. Google, No. 21-1333, at 7 (Jan. 2023) (stating that Twitter merely "disseminat[es] third-party content"); see also NetChoice, LLC v. Paxton, 142 S. Ct. 1715, 1717 n.2 (2022) (Alito, J., dissenting) (noting the argument that NetChoice's "position in this litigation is in conflict or tension with the positions of its members in cases regarding the interpretation of § 230").

Finally, it is Congress's judgment that these companies operate more like telephones than newspapers, which is why Congress shielded them from defamation liability. See 47 U.S.C. § 230.

For all these reasons, social media companies better resemble telephone companies than newspapers. They have power to obstruct customers from receiving speech, they are principally in the business of distributing the content of others from point A to point B, they do not deal with meaningful space constraints, and the vast majority of the speech they distribute is unedited.

NetChoice thus cannot prove that distributing third-party speech without viewpoint discrimination will materially impede social media companies from speaking for themselves or that members of the public will mistake third-party speech on Facebook, YouTube, or Twitter as speech by the platforms. Rumsfeld, 547 U.S., at 64. Just as "high school students can appreciate the difference between speech a school sponsors and speech the school permits because legally required to do so," ibid., so too everyday Americans can distinguish between speech on Facebook and Facebook's own speech[10]—especially because these companies expressly disclaim third-party content as their own. See, e.g., Terms of Service, Facebook (last updated July 26, 2022), https://www.facebook.com/legal/terms ("We do not control or direct what people and others do or say, and we are not responsible for their actions or conduct (whether online or offline) or any content they share (including offensive, inappropriate, obscene, unlawful, and other objectionable content).").

All these facts sharply distinguish social media companies not only from newspapers, but also from cake decorators, website designers, and parade

[10] Section 230 lawsuits ask a different question. There is usually no debate about whether the speech is third-party speech. The question instead is whether the platform helped "develop[ ]" the third-party's speech "in part," thus removing immunity. 47 U.S.C. § 230(f)(3); see also Malwarebytes, Inc. v. Enigma Software Group USA, LLC, 141 S. Ct. 13, 16 (2020) (Thomas, J., concurring). There is an active debate about whether things like algorithms help "develop[ ]" third-party speech "in part." A conclusion by this Court that individuals are unlikely to mistake third-party speech on social media companies for the speech of the companies themselves would have no effect on whether those companies could invoke § 230 as a shield with respect to the same content.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

organizers. While there is little to no risk that everyday observers will mistake third-party speech on Facebook for Facebook's "own message," requiring a cake artist or independent website designer to speak a third party's speech does "deny speakers the right 'to choose the content of their own messages'" because the risk of attribution is high. 303 Creative LLC, 600 U.S., at 592 (quoting Hurley, 515 U.S., at 573) (brackets omitted). Indeed, the "very purpose" of Colorado's requirement to force companies to design websites supporting certain events was "the coercive elimination of dissenting ideas about marriage." Id., at 588 (brackets and internal quotation marks omitted). Forcing a cake baker or newspaper to state third-party speech unlawfully compels speech. Requiring companies in the business of transmitting other peoples' speech billions of times a day to do so without viewpoint discrimination does not.

3. It makes no difference that posts on social media typically are distributed to many people rather than to one. Organizations subject to must-carry regulations are regularly used to broadcast speech to many recipients. "[S]upposedly one-to-one media have long been used to distribute material to the public at large." Eugene Volokh, Treating Social Media Platforms Like Common Carriers?, 1 J. Free Speech L. 377, 387 (2021). One speaker can use the U.S. Postal Service to broadcast a message to millions. Ibid. And hundreds or even thousands of people can join a single conference call or group text message thread.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

B. Social media companies cannot evade accountability simply by choosing to edit some content.

The Fifth Circuit opinion extensively discussed the historical regulation of telephones and telegraphs, yet NetChoice's brief in Paxton makes no attempt to address that analogy. Its brief in Moody is hardly better, principally arguing (at 49) that telegraph and telephone companies are different because they merely transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis' from point A to point B." The United States amicus brief repeats this argument, asserting (at 11) that "unlike [telephones and telegraphs], the platforms are not merely conduits transmitting speech from one person to another" but instead choose to edit or remove content.

Although the Eleventh Circuit adopted this argument, NetChoice, LLC v. Moody, 34 F.4th 1196, 1222 (CA11 2022), the argument overlooks basic history, is circular and begs the question, would enable phone companies to evade regulation, and would create a roadmap for government censorship.

As to history, telephone and telegraph companies transmit speech on an "unedited basis" only because they are compelled to do so by law. Those companies historically did the same thing NetChoice's members currently do until the States, Congress, and this Court stepped in. See Lakier, supra, at 2322; Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 470; W. Union Tel. Co., 162 U.S., at 651.

History thus favors the States, not NetChoice. The Eleventh Circuit concluded social media companies could censor content because they have "historically exercised" power to refuse transmission of disfavored ideas. Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1222. But telegraph companies have a much longer history of censorship. Social media is less than two decades old. Congress did not impose must-carry requirements on telegraphs until 1888, 50 years after their invention. Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. Yet it is well recognized today that those must-carry regulations were constitutional—even though this Court declared that telegraph companies are "not common carriers." Primrose, 154 U. S., at 14 (emphasis added). History thus provides no basis for dismissing the striking similarities between social media companies and telegraph and telephones by dubbing social-media censorship "editorial judgment."

The attempt to avoid the telephone analogy is also circular and would wipe out traditional regulations. The Eleventh Circuit concluded Florida could not require social media companies to distribute content without viewpoint discrimination because the companies already "exercise editorial judgment." Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1221. In other words, the State can compel a company to refrain from censoring only if the company is already refraining. Under that rule, must-carry regulations are pointless. Telephones, telegraphs, and parcel delivery companies can become immune under the First Amendment from any must-carry regulation as soon as they chose to engage in "editorial judgment" to cut off calls and not deliver messages and products that express ideas they dislike.

Or if those traditional regulations are valid, then the Eleventh Circuit's analysis is self-refuting: the regulations here would become valid as soon as a company complies. NetChoice asserts that imposing must-carry regulations on telephones is fine because telephones transmit speech "on an 'unedited basis,'" but the same will be true of NetChoice's members if they comply with these statutes.

The argument is also a roadmap for government censorship. If NetChoice and the Eleventh Circuit are correct that the act of "discriminat[ing] among messages" converts third-party speech into the platform's first-party speech, Moody, 34 F.4th, at 1221, then the Federal Government could freely censor speech on its property because the censorial act would convert the speech into government speech, which "is not restricted by the Free Speech Clause," Pleasant Grove City, Utah v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 469 (2009); see also Walker v. Texas Div., Sons of Confederate Veterans, Inc., 576 U.S. 200, 213 (2015). Much like this Court should "prevent the government-speech doctrine from being used as a cover for censorship," Shurtleff, 596 U.S., at 263 (Alito, J., concurring), it should prevent the First Amendment from blocking States' efforts to stop private censorship. Like the government, social media companies may not hide behind the First Amendment when they deploy a "come-one-come-all attitude" with exceptions for select disfavored speakers. Id., at 257 (majority op.).

C. In the context of facial challenges, this Court need not consider more complex questions.

Because NetChoice has asserted facial challenges, this Court need not wade into more difficult questions, such as whether a social media company can be prohibited from attaching a disclaimer or a fact check to third-party speech.

It is far from obvious how this Court's precedents would apply. On the one hand, a platform that appends a note to third-party speech undoubtedly engages in its own speech. On the other hand, communication networks often are required to serve all comers without "undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person" or "class of persons." 47 U.S.C. § 202. If a phone company appended a 30-second ad supporting one political candidate to every call originating from the campaign office of that candidate's opponent, the phone company would certainly be engaging in speech, but it would also be giving "preference or advantage" to one customer over another.

Those more difficult questions should not be resolved in the context of a facial challenge.

II. The hyperconcentration of social media reinforces State authority to regulate.

Both the common law and American courts have long recognized that protecting the marketplace of ideas involves more than keeping government from abridging speech; it sometimes means regulating dominant private actors to ensure they cannot abridge speech either.

At common law, it was well recognized that companies with substantial market power could be compelled not to discriminate. As Matthew Hale, the well-known English barrister and scholar on the history of the common law, put it, "if a wharf owner operated the 'only wharf licensed by the queen' or if

'there was no other wharf in that port,' then the wharf was 'affected with a public interest,' and the owner acquired a duty to serve without discrimination." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 472 (quoting Matthew Hale, De Portibus Maris, in A COLLECTION OF TRACTS RELATIVE TO THE LAW OF ENGLAND 77–78 (Francis Hargrave ed., 1787)) (brackets omitted).

American courts have long applied this principle to communications technology, assessing whether a "communications firm … play[s] a central economic and social role in society." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. As this Court put it, because "values central to the First Amendment" include "assuring that the public has access to a multiplicity of information sources," government can take "steps to ensure that private interests not restrict, through physical control of a critical pathway of communication, the free flow of information and ideas." E.g., Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 657, 663; accord U.S. Telecom Ass'n v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381, 434–35 (CADC 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from rehearing en banc) ("If the Internet service providers have market power, then the Government may impose open-access or similar carriage obligations.").

This Court has thus held that radio's "unique characteristic[s]" permit the government to restrict "specified network practices" without abridging freedom of speech. Nat'l Broad. Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 226–27 (1943). And this Court approved government regulations that prohibited cable companies from silencing "the voice of" some "speakers with a mere flick of the switch." Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 656; see also Turner Broad. Sys., Inc. v. FCC ("Turner 1997"), 520 U.S. 180, 225 (1997).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Applied to social media companies, these cases mean, at the least, that regulations are justified when "the service provider possesses 'bottleneck monopoly power' in the relevant geographic market" and can use it to "diminish[] the diversity and amount of content available." U.S. Telecom Ass'n, 855 F.3d, at 431, 433 n.12 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (quoting Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 661); see also Comcast Cable Commc'ns, LLC v. FCC, 717 F.3d 982, 993 (CADC 2013) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring). "[I]t stands to reason that if Congress may demand that telephone companies operate as common carriers, it can ask the same of" other communication companies, including social media companies. Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 684 (opinion of O'Connor, J.).

The core of the Florida and Texas laws comfortably fits that rubric. The laws address companies that possess extraordinary market power and use it to reduce diversity of ideas.

A. Market power

While these companies were much smaller and less entrenched even six or eight years ago, the extraordinary scale and scope of large social media platforms today makes it impossible to deny that they "play[] a central economic and social role in society." Paxton, 49 F.4th, at 471. These platforms are "the modern public square," Packingham v. North Carolina, 582 U.S. 98, 107 (2017), and "serve as the primary source of news about important public issues for many Americans," Murthy v. Missouri, 144 S. Ct. 32, 32 (2023) (Alito, J., dissenting).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Consider their network effects. A fax machine is valuable only to the extent others use fax machines. The most valuable thing about Facebook is that "3 billion people use it." Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1224 (Thomas, J., concurring). While network size makes Facebook an extraordinary marketplace for ideas, network size also means these dominant platforms are the only way most speakers can avoid speaking into a void, see, e.g., Alan Z. Rozenshtein, Silicon Valley's Speech: Technology Giants and the Deregulatory First Amendment, 1 J. Free Speech Law 337, 357 (2021). Other options for speech are not comparable. Switching from Facebook to "competitor" upstart social media companies is not like switching from AT&T to Verizon. It is like switching from flying to walking.

Network effects also mean enormous barriers to new entry—as evidenced by these companies' sky-high profit margins.[11] In a competitive market, "astronomical profit margins … would induce new entrants into the market. That these companies have no comparable competitors highlights that the industries may have substantial barriers to entry." Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1225 (Thomas, J., concurring).

In fact, three years ago, the last time a newer social media company gained serious traction, other platforms banded together to kill it. In January 2021, Parler, which branded itself as a free-speech platform, was the most downloaded app. Then Google (YouTube's parent company) and Apple "removed" "the app for the conservative-focused Twitter competitor Parler … from their app stores." Volokh, supra, at 397–98 (citations omitted). That made Parler virtually inaccessible on phones for anybody who had not already downloaded the app. Then Parler's "hosting company, Amazon Web Services" "blocked" it from the Amazon servers Parler was renting, taking Parler entirely offline, even though "Parler was merely refusing to forbid certain speech, much of which is constitutionally protected—thus voluntarily acting in a way close to how the post office and phone companies are required by law to act." Id., at 398. Amazon's power to kick companies entirely off the internet has caused Amazon to be described as "more like a utility provider than a broadcaster." Scott Rosenberg, Big Tech's Free Speech Showdown, Axios (Jan. 10, 2021).[12]

This illustrates a concerning fact: the dominant internet players are so powerful that the only way startups can take off is by relying on the mercy of the companies against which they wish to compete.

The conclusion that a handful of companies dominate the social media market aligns with conclusions by States and the Federal Government. In 2020, the Federal Trade Commission initiated an ongoing antitrust suit on the theory that "Facebook

And nearly every State and the Department of Justice has been involved in antitrust litigation against the major social media companies in recent years. See, e.g., Antitrust Reform and Big Tech Firms, Congressional Research Service R46875 (Nov. 21, 2023) (describing some active cases).[13]

B. Discriminatory use of power

Although described by this Court as "the modern public square," Packingham, 582 U.S., at 107, these platforms are in fact more important than the historic public square because they hold "unprecedented … control of so much speech in the hands of a few private parties," Knight First Amendment Inst., 141 S. Ct., at 1221 (Thomas, J., concurring). True, other aspects of the internet have enormous network effects (such as email), but nobody has central control over those networks. In contrast, "control of [social media] networks is highly concentrated" in the hands of a few people. Id., at 1224. The platforms' power to facilitate and restrict speech on a large scale means they wield power "far greater than that of individual broadcasters who compete with one another as well as with satellite and cable networks." Can Prevent Big Tech from Becoming the Speech Police, The Hill (Feb. 18, 2021).[14]

These platforms have used their unprecedented power to censor mainstream speakers on important issues of public debate. That selective censorship—the Florida and Texas legislatures concluded—threatens the marketplace of ideas and the free flow of information to the detriment of citizens and democratic governance.

These legislative judgments rest on solid ground. Companies covered by the Texas and Florida laws currently exercise unchecked power to suppress ideas. And they have shown little inclination to self-limit their "incredible influence over the content that's put out into the world." Ahiza García-Hodges, *Big Tech Has Big Power over Online Speech. 2. Platforms restrict not only news reporting, but also speech by everyday Americans. They "have certainly been willing to restrict opinions that are well within the American political mainstream." Volokh, supra, at 395. This conclusion is borne out in countless examples. Id., at 397 (listing several).

Consider one of the most hotly contested issues today: the many controversial legal and policy questions related to the increasing number of individuals who identify as transgender. These include questions about separate bathrooms, locker rooms, and sports teams; about appropriate medical care; and even about the nature of what it means to be male or female. Nobody doubts these questions are important, yet social media companies have made mainstream views on these questions off limits. For example, a clear majority (57%) of adults believe sex is determined at birth, regardless of a person's later-expressed gender identity. Ashley Kirzinger, et al., KFF/The Washington Post Trans Survey (Mar. 24, 2023).[18] But the 57% of Americans who believe that are not allowed to say so on social media. These questions are hotly debated today, and views on all sides of the issues are held "in good faith by reasonable and sincere people." Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. 644, 657 (2015). But it is extraordinary that dominant communications companies through which the vast majority of public speech flows can make a viewpoint held by 57% of Americans, on one of the most salient political topics of the day, off limits in the "modern public square," Packingham, 582 U.S., at 107. of "an uninhibited marketplace of ideas." Virginia v. Hicks, 539 U.S. 113, 119 (2003).

Much of the speech targeted by these dominant communication platforms is conservative, which is not surprising given Mark Zuckerberg's acknowledgment that tech companies reside in "an extremely left-leaning place." La., July 4, 2023). And in the aftermath of George Floyd's murder, Facebook allegedly flagged and removed posts calling attention to allegedly racist conduct. Craig Silverman, Black Lives Matter Activists Say They're Being Silenced by Facebook, Buzzfeed (June 19, 2020).[24]

3. Platforms also censor true information that is difficult to brand as left or right. Speech surrounding COVID is a prime example. When COVID first hit, "major social networks rolled out a series of policy changes to curb … claims about the virus, including theories about its roots"—like that it originated in a Chinese lab. Cristiano Lima, New Report on Covid-19 Origin Puts Social Media in GOP's Crosshairs, Washington Post (Feb. 27, 2023).[25] That origin theory is now the predominant theory of many agencies under the Biden administration. Both the Energy Department and the FBI have concluded that the COVID-19 "virus likely spread due to an accident at a Chinese laboratory." Ibid.

Similarly, in the summer of 2021, YouTube removed a video that a U.S. Senator, who is a doctor, posted opining about the relative inefficacy of masks made out of cloth. See, e.g., YouTube Suspends Rand Paul after Misleading Video on Masks, PBS News Hour (Aug. 11, 2021).[26] YouTube also banned him from posting any videos—on any topic—for a week.

Times (Jan 14, 2022).[27] And his perspective might have been immensely important at the time to individuals deciding how best to protect themselves and others.

4. These examples may only scratch the surface because of platforms' deliberate opacity about their practices. They censor by taking down content or suspending people from their accounts, but they also "shadowban" by distributing content less widely than would otherwise occur. Geoffrey Fowler, Shadowbanning Is Real: Here's How You End up Muted by Social Media, Washington Post (Dec. 27, 2022).[28] "[U]sers often have no way of telling for sure whether they have been shadowbanned or whether their content is simply not popular."[29] Gabriel Nicholas, Shadowbanning Is Big Tech's Big Problem, The Atlantic (April 28, 2022).[30]

Whether the target is left-wing speech, right-wing speech, or centrist speech, censorship harms everyone. From the start, our constitutional order recognized that "error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." Jefferson's First Inaugural Address (March 4, 1801).[32] The Constitution aims to "'preserve an uninhibited marketplace of ideas in which truth will ultimately prevail.'" Nat'l Inst. of Fam. & Life Advocates. v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361, 2374 (2018) (citation omitted). "This free exchange facilitates an informed public opinion, which, when transmitted to lawmakers, helps produce laws that reflect the People's will." Mahanoy, 141 S. Ct., at 2046.

Platforms leverage their extraordinary power to threaten that constitutional project. Florida and Texas's challenged response, designed to ensure information flows freely and fairly, strengthens rather than offends the First Amendment.

C. The Court should respect legislative fact findings of market power and censorship.

In the face of this discriminatory use of market dominance, the Texas and Florida legislatures made legislative findings about the power of large platforms to impoverish the marketplace of ideas. Texas concluded that social media platforms with "more than 50 million active users in the United States in a calendar month" have "market dominance" that justifies treating them as "common carriers." Tex. Code § 120.002(b); Tex. H.B. 20 §1(4). Florida determined that platforms with 100 million monthly global users or $100 million annual gross revenue "have become as important for conveying public opinion as public utilities are for supporting modern society" and "should be treated similarly to common carriers." Fla. Stat. § 501.2041(g); Fla. S.B. 7072 § 1(5)–(6). Those legislative judgments deserve significant weight in evaluating whether the Constitution permits the States' regulations. Cf. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 132 (1876); Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 665 (plurality op.); Minnesota v. Clover Leaf Creamery Co., 449 U.S. 456, 464 (1981). After all, if "it stands to reason" that "Congress may demand" that telephone and cable companies carry third-party speech, Turner 1994, 512 U.S., at 684 (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part), it equally stands to reason that the States may demand the same of digital platforms. Where the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Bill of Rights polices government conduct, there is "no daylight between the federal and state conduct it prohibits or requires." Timbs v. Indiana, 139 S. Ct. 682, 687 (2019); see also Ramos v. Louisiana, 140 S. Ct. 1390, 1397 (2020); Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 7 (1964).

III. State laws preventing platforms from censoring speech provide a prophylactic vanguard against government censorship.

The United States says it submits a brief because, Congress having "enacted laws governing the communications industry," the United States "has a substantial interest in the resolution of the questions presented." U.S. Br., at 1. Yet it advocates a position that threatens to undermine federal laws.

Why? Perhaps because the Federal Government intends to continue its well-documented practice of pressuring companies to wield their censorship discretion to remove disfavored viewpoints.

It is undisputed that the Federal Government, including the White House, has engaged in a years-long, behind-closed-doors campaign to push social media companies to suppress millions of constitutionally protected posts. This Court granted certiorari in Murthy v. Missouri, No. 23-411, and while the legal conclusions there are disputed, the fact findings are not.

In its opening brief in Murthy, the Federal Government does not dispute any fact finding. It does not dispute that—behind closed doors—it successfully used "unrelenting pressure" to push social media companies to "suppress[] millions of protected free speech postings by American citizens."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Missouri, 2023 WL 4335270, at *44. It does not dispute it targeted "disfavored" speech "well beyond COVID-19," including "the Hunter Biden laptop story," Missouri v. Biden, 83 F.4th 350, 368, 381 (CA5 2023), and topics related to "racial justice, the U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan," U.S. "[s]upport of Ukraine," and content posted by an individual who was challenging President Biden for the Democratic presidential nomination, 2023 WL 4335270, at *9, *67. The Federal Government does not dispute it targeted "nearly every major American social media company," and that those companies "capitulated" into "total compliance," even removing constitutionally protected content that "did not run afoul of their policies." 83 F.4th, at 359, 362–63, 392. And the Federal Government does not dispute its "conduct has not stopped," it has even "started monitoring" the platforms for compliance with governmental demands "to remove disfavored content," and its push for censorship has been so widespread that "it impacts every social-media user." Id., at 359–60, 393, 398.

Instead, the Federal Government argues it induced all these things through legal "persuasion," not illegal "coercion," and the plaintiffs lack standing to contend otherwise. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 14, 25, 34. The Federal Government even doubles down, all but promising to continue pressing platforms to suppress millions of posts because it believes these posts are "false information," id., at 34, even though much speech it pushed to suppress turned out to be true.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Federal Government's interest in the NetChoice cases is thus clear.[33] The Texas and Florida laws pose no threat to federal laws; they only threaten the ability of federal officials to continue pushing platforms to "suppress[] millions of protected free speech postings by American citizens." 2023 WL 4335270, at *44.

Pressuring platforms would become much more difficult if state law prohibited platforms from complying with federal takedown demands. One of "anti-discrimination obligations' great virtues is that it protects private entities from complying with government's censorship demands. A private company with no legal obligation to treat users in a non-discriminatory fashion readily can accede government's request to censor, block, or otherwise treat users unfairly. But, if a private firm is prohibited by law to do so, then the government cannot even ask." Adam Candeub, Bargaining for Free Speech: Common Carriage, Network Neutrality, and Section 230, 22 Yale J. L. & Tech. 391, 432–33 (2020).

The Federal Government's real interest here is that it will no longer be able to "persuade" platforms to take down millions of constitutionally protected

[33] As further evidence that the United States views the NetChoice cases as fundamentally related to Murthy, the United States repeats the same "editorial discretion" arguments in Murthy. U.S. Br., No. 23-411, at 3–4, 16, 36. The United States is also represented in this case by two Civil Division attorneys who represented the Federal Government in Murthy at the Fifth Circuit.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

posts if this Court affirms the Texas and Florida laws. That is a reason to support the state laws, not to strike them down. In passing these laws, Texas and Florida afforded their citizens the "double security [that] arises" when one government "guard[s] … society against the injustice of the other." The Federalist No. 51, supra, at 320 (Madison). The Fifth Circuit in Murthy said the Federal Government forced social media companies to "bend to the government's will." 83 F.4th, at 371. The laws challenged here provide the legal backbone platforms need to stand straight.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CONCLUSION

The Court should affirm the longstanding authority of States to protect their citizens from censorship imposed by mass communication networks.

Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey Announces Emergency Regulation on Gender Transition Interventions for Minors

Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced today that his office is issuing an emergency regulation clarifying that, because gender transition interventions are experimental, they are covered by existing Missouri law governing unfair, deceptive, and unconscionable business practices, including in administering healthcare services. The regulation is necessary due to the skyrocketing number of gender transition interventions, despite rising concerns in the medical community that these procedures are experimental and lack clinical evidence of safety or success.

Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey Promulgates Emergency Regulation Targeting Gender Transition Procedures for Minors

In an effort to protect children, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey promulgated an emergency regulation clarifying that, because gender transition interventions are experimental and have significantside effects, state law already prohibits performing those procedures in the absence of substantial guardrails that ensure informed consent and adequate access to mental health care.

Attorney General Bailey Sues Wentzville School Board for Unlawfully Concealing Transgender Bathroom Policy in Closed Meetings

Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed suit against Wentzville School District's Board of Education for concealing a transgender student bathroom usage policy in direct violation of Missouri's Open Meetings Law. After one Wentzville school board member stated that "quite frankly, it's not the parents' business" to know about the bathroom policy, two other members of the school board emerged as whistleblowers. Over forty community members followed suit, filing formal complaints with the Attorney General's Office.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTERESTS OF AMICI CURIAE AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Amici curiae are the States of Arkansas, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Ohio, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and West Virginia. Amici States submit this brief in support of Petitioners because the consolidated audit trail, or CAT, system would represent a massive, unprecedented threat to the liberty, privacy, and security of millions of Amici States' citizens, as well as Amici States' own investment interests. States are the first line of defense protecting consumers from harm due to data breaches and have a keen interest in preventing such breaches. See, e.g., Personal Information Protection Act, Ark. Code Ann. 4-110-101 et seq (requiring prompt disclosure of information regarding data breaches to consumers).

In May 2010, algorithmic trading decisions caused a "flash crash." That crash sent the markets into an uproar, and in response, the Securities and Exchange Commission began a decade-long push to create the CAT. As ultimately adopted, the CAT would house personal information about every single retail investor and contain real-time information about their investment decisions. The Commission says the CAT will better enable it to reconstruct and analyze events like the flash crash. But its reach isn't so limited.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Rather, the CAT will give thousands of authorized users—and given the Commission's cybersecurity track record who knows how many unauthorized users—access to real-time information about every investor and investment decision. That's a monumental shift from the way things used to work. Before the CAT, if the Commission suspected an individual of wrongdoing, it could request information from the broker-dealers associated with suspicious trades. But no more. Instead, with the CAT, thousands of government employees (and hackers) are free to comb through bulk data on every American investor with a just few clicks of the keyboard—no individual suspicion needed. That system threatens the security and privacy of the Amici States' citizens, and Congress never authorized it. So this Court should set aside the Commission's 2023 order funding and operationalizing the CAT.

I. Not only will the Commission be capable of spying on Americans' trading activity, so will anyone who manages to hack into the CAT database. Given the increasing number of government databases being targeted by hackers, including agents of the Chinese Communist Party, the CAT will be as tempting a target as has ever existed. Ensuring the security of this data would be a tall order for any agency or organization. The Commission—which just this past month suffered an embarrassing (and economically damaging) hack of its X (formerly Twitter) account—has little hope of doing so. The CAT repository will also be a target of attacks from within. Americans have increasingly been targeted by rogue federal officials seeking to advance ideological agendas through the weaponization of confidential information, and the investment information contained in the CAT may well be their next opportunity.

II. Because the CAT endangers personal privacy, one might wonder why Congress gave the Commission the power to create it. The answer is that Congress never gave the Commission the authority to construct this unprecedented surveillance database. Congress never even appropriated funds for it because the Commission chose to fund the CAT through user fees that will ultimately be passed along to the very investors whose information is being put at risk. In the absence of clear language from Congress authorizing such an unprecedented program, the Commission cannot exercise that power.

And even if it could, its decision to do so was arbitrary and capricious. Indeed, the Commission's decision to collect retail investors' personal information makes no sense since individual retail investors don't cause events like the 2010 flash crash. The Commission could have limited such collection to those investors. But the Commission didn't do that because, along the way, it decided it'd be marginally more convenient for its enforcement division to have this information without needing to explain why it needed information about any specific investor.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MO-AG-24-0028-A-000299

ARGUMENT

I. The Commission's massive surveillance program poses grave and unnecessary risks to American investors.

In continuing to insist that the CAT must contain personally identifiable information of every American investor who buys or sells stock, the Commission has given insufficient consideration to the likelihood of a hack. The CAT will be targeted for its economic value, as well as its strategic value to America's foreign adversaries. There is no reason to believe the Commission can ensure the security of the CAT given its own high-profile data-security failures. And investors have every reason to fear being targeted by rogue federal officials pursuing an agenda.

A. Massive repositories of personal information—like the CAT—are massive targets for hackers.

Recent years have shown that the greater the amount of potentially valuable, sensitive data that is stored in a single location, the greater a target it becomes. Numerous large government databases have suffered attacks and data breaches affecting millions of Americans. For example, the Office of Personnel Management's database containing security-clearance background information on 21.5 million people was breached by Chinese state-sponsored hackers in 2015. See The OPM Data Breach: How the Gov't Jeopardized Our Nat'l Sec. for More than a Generation, U.S. H.R. Comm. on Oversight and Gov't Reform, 114th Cong. (Sep. 7, 2016), https://perma.cc/CAX3-B867 . This disastrous hack allowed the Chinese

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Communist Party to obtain highly sensitive "information about everybody who has worked for, tried to work for, or works for the United States government," including disclosures regarding "some of the most intimate and potentially embarrassing aspects" of their lives. Id. It also dealt a "significant blow" to American intelligence efforts. Id.

The U.S. Navy has been the target of multiple attacks, including the hacking of the names and Social Security numbers of over 134,000 sailors from a Navy contractor. Sam LaGrone, Navy: Pers. Data of 134K Sailors 'Compromised', U.S. Naval Inst. News (Nov. 24, 2016), https://perma.cc/D82R-4A33. And just this year, Congress learned that the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau exposed personally identifiable information of 256,000 customers through an unauthorized transfer of data to an employee's email address. Caitlin Reilly, CFPB Employee Sent Data of 250,000 Customers to Pers. Email, Roll Call (April 19, 2023), https://perma.cc/M6NY-P2E9 .

Large private-sector data repositories have been similarly targeted. In another attack by state-sponsored Chinese hackers, Equifax's database was breached, and the names, Social Security numbers, birth dates, and driver's license numbers for 148 million Americans were stolen. The Equifax Data Breach, U.S. H.R. Comm. on Oversight and Gov't Reform, 115th Cong. (Dec. 2018), https://perma.cc/DT2W-GWN8 . Where any large amount of sensitive information is stored, hackers are sure to follow. See Kyle Chin, Top 23 Breaches in U.S. History, UpGuard (July 18, 2023), https://perma.cc/5LDPLCG7 (reporting on data breaches at technology companies impacting hundreds of millions of people).

Finally, the databases underlying critical American infrastructure are continuously targeted by foreign actors, the Chinese Communist Party chief among them. As FBI Director Christopher Wray recently remarked, Chinese state-sponsored "hackers are targeting our critical infrastructure—our water treatment plants, our electrical grid, our oil and natural gas pipelines, our transportation systems." Director Wray's Opening Statement to the House Select Committee on the Strategic Competition Between the United States and the Chinese Communist Party (Jan. 31, 2024), https://perma.cc/JBS8-Z9MB. "Low blows against civilians are part of China's plan," as is "target[ing] our businesses" and "engaging in corporate deception." Id. The CAT won't be overlooked.

B. The Commission's own history of security breaches does not inspire confidence that it can keep the CAT secure.

The Commission has hardly been immune from hacking. And if history is any indication, the Commission cannot be trusted to keep its important data secure. For example, starting in 2016, hackers compromised the Commission's "Edgar" system for corporate filings, allowing them to steal non-public reports for over a year. See Matthew Goldstein, U.S. Charges 2 With Hacking Into S.E.C. System in Stock-Trading Scheme, N.Y. Times (Jan. 15, 2019), https://perma.cc/R49B-KP33.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And just a few years prior, Edgar was used to submit a fake bid that spurred tens of millions of dollars in trading. See Matthew Goldstein & David Gelles, A Phantom Offer Sends Avon's Shares Surging, N.Y. Times (May 14, 2015), https://perma.cc/S5VF-ZEJZ.

And more recent events underscore the Commission's security problems are not limited to Edgar. Indeed, just this past month the Commission's X (formerly Twitter) account was successfully hacked in an apparent effort to manipulate cryptocurrency markets. See Matthew Goldstein, S.E.C. Social Media Hack That Sent Bitcoin Soaring Prompts Investigation, N.Y. Times (Jan. 10, 2024), https://perma.cc/39MP-WJCX. As one of the Commission's former enforcement officials noted, the attack was "a glaring failure of basic cyber-hygiene." Id. If the Commission cannot secure its own social media accounts, it cannot be trusted with Americans' personal data and valuable, real-time information about who is trading what.

C. Citizens remain vulnerable to being targeted by rogue federal officials and contractors.

Even if the Commission could secure the CAT data from profit-seeking hackers and foreign adversaries, the federal government has a poor track record of policing its own employees and contractors. As Commissioner Peirce noted, "[o]ne can imagine a future in which a delectably large database of trades becomes a tool for the government to single people out for making trading decisions that reflect—or are interpreted to reflect—opinions deemed unacceptable in the reigning gestalt." Comm'r Hester M. Peirce, Statement of Hester M. Peirce in Response to Release No. 34-88890; File No. S7-13-19, SEC (May 15, 2020), https://perma.cc/R32N-3JDM. It's easy to imagine because it wouldn't be novel.

Take the IRS, for example. One of its contractors was just sentenced to prison for stealing and leaking tax records for thousands of wealthy individuals, including former President Donald Trump, Jeff Bezos, and Elon Musk to pursue an ideological agenda. See Eileen Sullivan, Former Contractor Who Leaked Trump's Tax Returns Sentenced to 5 Years in Prison, N.Y. Times Jan 29, 2024), https://perma.cc/VYF2-CHQY. Investment records are no less susceptible to ideologically driven attacks than tax records. Indeed, groups like "Climate Action 100+, the Net-Zero Banking Alliance and the Venture Climate Alliance" and other ESG ideologues "have plotted to pressure blacklisted companies into making a priority of decarbonization and other social goals at the behest of the United Nations." Steve Marshall, ESG Defenders Pose as 'Free Market' Disciples (Wall St. J. Op. May 23, 2023), https://perma.cc/5BLM-VGUA. With the CAT housing data on every American's investment decisions, it will be a prime target for ideologically driven leaks. And with thousands of individuals having access to that data, the risk cannot be understated.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Investors are additionally at risk of being targeted by malicious government action. Investors' trading decisions, which provide a window into their values and beliefs, could also be weaponized against them by those with access to the data. After all, the IRS did just that to hundreds of conservative tax-exempt organizations. Emily Cochrane, Justice Department Settles With Tea Party Groups After I.R.S. Scrutiny N.Y. Times (Oct. 26, 2017), https://perma.cc/SYV8-HH6L. More recently, whistleblowers revealed that the Department of Justice was using the FBI's Counterterrorism Division to target parents protesting actions by their local school boards. See Letter from Jim Jordan and Mike Johnson to Hon. Merrick B. Garland (May 11, 2022), https://perma.cc/R9UG-69LD. And even more recently the FBI was caught targeting Catholic congregations for treatment as "violent extremists" for their religious beliefs. See Letter from Virginia and 19 other States to Hon. Merrick B. Garland and Hon. Christopher Wray (Feb. 10, 2023), https://perma.cc/7NXQ-U3H3.

Suffice it to say that Americans have little reason to trust that their personal information is safe with the federal government. The CAT contains more than enough personally identifiable information to help rogue government actors pick their next targets.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

II. The Commission's massive surveillance program is contrary to law.

The Supreme Court has made clear that skeptical scrutiny is warranted where an agency relies on decades-old statutory language to claim authority for massive new programs. The CAT bears all the hallmarks of an instance where the major-questions doctrine counsels against an expansive reading of agency authority. And even if the Commission had the authority it claims here, its exercise of it was arbitrary and capricious.

A. The Commission has never identified any specific statutory authority for its massive surveillance of retail investors.

The Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 provides the Commission authority to regulate the securities markets for "the protection of investors and the maintenance of fair and orderly markets." 15 U.S.C. 78k-1(a)(1)(C). Section 11A of the Act, added in 1975, directs the Commission "to use its authority . . . to facilitate the establishment of a national market system for securities." Id. 78k-1(a)(2). In furtherance of that directive, Section 11A authorizes the Commission to "authorize or require self-regulatory organizations to act jointly with respect to matters as to which they share authority . . . in planning, developing, operating, or regulating a national market system." Id. 78k-1(a)(3).

In 2012, the Commission sought for the first time to utilize its authority over the national market system to require national securities exchanges and associations (self-regulatory organizations or "SROs") to create a single consolidated audit trail. With the adoption of Rule 613, "each SRO and its members" would be required "to capture and report specified trade, quote, and order activity in all [national market system] securities to the central repository in real time, across all markets, from order inception through routing, cancellation, modification, and execution." Consolidated audit trail, 77 Fed. Reg. 45722, 45723 (Aug. 1, 2012). The SROs previously established various separate audit trails, but the Commission believed that a single, centralized one would lead to "(1) improved market surveillance and investigations; (2) improved analysis and reconstruction of broad-based market events; and (3) improved market analysis." Id. at 45730.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But the devil was in the details. For Rule 613 required SROs to record and report to the CAT for each order: (1) "information of sufficient detail to identify the customer"; and (2) "customer account information," which included "account number, account type, customer type, date account opened, and large trader identifier (if applicable)." *Id.*at 45749, 45813. 17 C.F.R. 264.613(c)(7)(viii), (j)(4). When the SROs in 2015 submitted their CAT proposal, it spelled out the information that would be collected and stored within the CAT for every retail investor trading on the market: every customer's name, address, date of birth, Social Security number, and account number. See CAT NMS Plan, at sec. 1.1, https://perma.cc/UH3G -9ZFH; Joint Industry Plan; Order Approving the National Market System Plan Governing the Consolidated Audit Trail, 81 Fed. Reg. 84696,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Rel. No. 34-79318, File No. 4-698 (Nov. 15, 2016). The Commission eventually narrowed the information to the investor's name, address, and birth year. See Ord. Granting Conditional Exemptive Relief, Pursuant to Section 36 & Rule 608(e) of the Sec. Exch. Act of 1934, from Section 6.4(d)(II)(c) & Appendix D Sections 4.1.6, 6.2, 8.1.1, 8.2, 9.1, 9.2, 9.4, 10.1, & 10.3 of the Nat'l Mkt. Sys. Plan Governing the Consol. Audit Trail, 85 Fed. Reg. 16152, Release No. 88393 (Mar. 17, 2020) ("Exemption Order").

This was an enormous shift from how retail-investor data was handled. Investors' broker-dealers kept this type of information previously and were required to report it to the Commission when requested. See 17 CFR 240.17a-25. This electronic "blue sheet" process at least ensured that the Commission had a particularized suspicion about a transaction or customer, otherwise it would not expend the effort to request the information. But the CAT allows the Commission access in real-time to a centralized database containing information submitted by every broker-dealer in the country. And at least 3,000 users will have access at any given time, between the Commission and the CAT Participants. See Amended CAT NMS Plan for Consolidated Audit Trail, LLC, FINRA CAT 106 n.61 (Aug. 29, 2019) (stating that although the request for proposals "required support for a minimum of 3,000 users, . . . the actual number of users may be higher based upon regulator and Participant usage of the system"), https://perma.cc/C9K C-FFEX.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Thus, no longer can an average investor expect that their personal information will generally be kept private unless they are suspected of wrongdoing. The Commission has always had the ability to obtain the information it needs for investigations and enforcement actions, but the CAT provides it with the unprecedented capability to engage in massive surveillance of retail investors. And that significant change hasn't been authorized by Congress, but has come by administrative fiat.

Congress never authorized the Commission to create this type of centralized repository containing personally identifiable retail-investor information. The Commission has never claimed this authority as arising under any specific portion of the Exchange Act. See, e.g., Amends. to the Nat'l Mkt. Sys. Plan Governing the Consol. Audit Trail to Enhance Data Sec., 85 Fed. Reg. 65990, Release No. 89632 (Aug. 21, 2020), at 66096 (claiming authority generally "[p]ursuant to the Exchange Act and, particularly, Sections 2, 3(b), 5, 6, 1A(a)(3)(B), 15, 15A, 17(a) and (b), 19 and 23(a) thereof"). Nor has it engaged with arguments by commenters that it lacks this authority. See, e.g., Letter from Christopher A. Iacovella, CEO, American Securities Association to Vanessa A. Countryman, Sec'y Commission (Nov. 30, 2020), at 17, https://perma.cc/7BQW-K7KH.

The Commission claims that Section 11A's authorization to establish a national market system and to direct joint action by SROs impliedly provides the Commission with the power to order the creation of the CAT. But nowhere in Section 11A's objectives for the creation of a national market system did Congress mention enforcement efforts or any need for the Commission to have easier access to investors' personal information. See 15 U.S.C. 78k-1(a)(1)(C). That section's silence cannot authorize the CAT; after all, "Congress . . . does not alter the fundamental details of a regulatory scheme in vague terms or ancillary provisions—it does not, one might say, hide elephants in mouseholes." Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, Inc., 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Absent clear statutory language, the Court should be skeptical of the Commission's authority to enact such an unprecedented surveillance effort of Americans' personal information.

B. The Commission's decision to require investors to ultimately bear the cost of its surveillance program further underscores the program's shaky foundation.

The CAT's funding mechanism casts further doubt on the notion that Congress ever authorized it. Over a decade after the Commission's initial move to establish the CAT, the Commission has only now determined how to pay for it. Joint Indus. Plan; Ord. Approving an Amend. To the Nat'l Mkt. Sys. Plan Governing the Consol. Audit Trail, 88 Fed. Reg. 62628, Release No. 98290 (Sept. 6, 2023). The Commission's consideration of the funding mechanism for the CAT centered more on how the CAT participants and industry members would split the costs and less on the fact that investors will ultimately pay the price. And just as significant as who is paying for the CAT is who is not—the Commission. One would expect the cost for a government surveillance program of this magnitude to be part of the budget of the agency overseeing it, funded by appropriations and subject to ongoing Congressional oversight. That it is instead funded by fees that will ultimately be passed through to investors should give the Court pause.

1. Investors will ultimately bear the costs of the CAT yet have no role in overseeing its spending.

Whatever the ultimate allocation of costs between industry members and CAT participants, both the Commission and the CAT LLC that will run the database acknowledged that they believe these fees can and will be passed through to investors, including retail investors. Joint Indus. Plan; Ord. Approving an Amend. To the Nat'l Mkt. Sys. Plan Governing the Consol. Audit Trail, 88 Fed. Reg. 62628, Release No. 98290 (Sept. 6, 2023) ("Funding Order"). CAT LLC tacitly acknowledged this could occur, noting that industry members would "not hav[e] any funding burden" for the CAT "if they decide to entirely pass-through their allocation to investors." Id. at 62635; see also id. (stating that CAT "Participants are permitted by the Exchange Act to charge their member fees to fund the Participants' share of CAT fees"). The Commission too recognized that CAT participants and industry members "may each elect to pass on . . . operational costs as fees to customers indirectly," and this "would be true regardless of how" the initial costs are allocated. Id. at 62636.

The Commission's former Chief Economist, Dr. Lawrence Harris, was not so equivocal and explained to the Commission that "[i]n the short run, who must pay these fees matters because prices often take a while to adjust. But eventually, the retail and institutional traders who use the markets will bear these fees." Letter from Lawrence Harris, USC Marshall Sch. of Bus. to Vanessa Countryman, Sec'y Commission, (June 21, 2022), https://perma.cc/3WG7-3J69 (emphasis added). Neither the Commission nor CAT LLC offered any refutation of that prediction.

Despite being saddled with millions—and, eventually, billions—in fees to support the CAT, investors have no method to control those costs. CAT user fees are adopted by its operating committee members, who are not accountable to retail investors. And while the Commission is perhaps capable of influencing CAT's overall budget through oversight of the fees CAT members may charge, the Commission has little incentive to closely scrutinize or constrain costs. After all, the CAT will be a tool to support the Commission's regulatory and enforcement efforts. No one should reasonably expect the Commission to push back when the CAT participants offer the Commission an increasingly expensive tool for which the Commission does not have to pay. Thus, investors will not only be subject to the Commission's unprecedented surveillance but forced to pay for it—all without having any say in the process.

2. The Commission's decision to fund the CAT through user fees sidesteps Congress's important role in controlling agency spending.

Courts should be skeptical when agencies enact significant, controversial policy measures that are funded outside the congressional appropriations process, thus removing a key oversight tool on spending and executive-branch overreach.

The Appropriations Clause is one way the Constitution ensures that, among our three branches of government, Congress reaches the "difficult judgments" of government. OPM v. Richmond, 496 U.S. 414, 428 (1990). Congress is "uniquely qualified to make spending decisions," Robert C. Byrd, The Control of the Purse and the Line Item Veto Act, 35 Harv. J. On Legis. 297, 315-16 (1998), because it is "our most representative of institutions," Paul Larkin, Jr. & Zack Smith, "Brother, Can You Spare A Million Dollars?": Resurrecting the Justice Department's "Slush Fund," 19 Geo. J. L. & Pub. Pol'y 447, 457 (2021). Congressionally led spending is thus the surest way to produce "the most desirable, balanced, and responsive" results. Abner J. Mikva, Congress: The Purse, the Purpose, and the Power, 21 Ga. L. Rev. 1, 3 (1986). It also "force[s] Congress to take ownership of the government's spending choices, in order to promote accountability and fiscal restraint." C. Boyden Gray, Extra Icing on an Unconstitutional Cake Already Frosted? A Constitutional Recipe for the CFPB, 24 Geo. Mason L. Rev. 1213, 1226 (2017).

The Founders knew that the Appropriations Clause would serve as an important check against overreach by the executive branch. James Madison explained that "[t]his power over the purse may [be] the most complete and effectual weapon with which any constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people." The Federalist, No. 58. Without it, "the executive would possess an unbounded power." Joseph Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States § 1348 (3d ed. 1858); see also, e.g., Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1, 15 (1972) (noting that the "power of the purse" allows Congress to effectively monitor the "wisdom and soundness of Executive action").

That is all the more true when it comes to the modern administrative state in general, and independent agencies in particular. "The budget . . . is a key tool for controlling agencies." Eloise Pasachoff, The President's Budget as a Source of Agency Policy Control, 125 Yale L.J. 2182, 2186 (2016); see also Laura E. Dolbow, Agency Adherence to Legislative History, 70 Admin. L. Rev. 569, 579-80 (2018) (explaining how the appropriations process provides an "effective oversight technique" for agencies). Appropriations legislation is often a more readily available tool than substantive legislation due to legislative deadlock. See Gillian E. Metzger, Agencies, Polarization, and the States, 115 Colum. L. Rev. 1739, 1749

(2015) (explaining that the "great advantage of appropriations legislation from Congress's perspective is its must-pass status"). It is perhaps Congress's best way to rein in the independent agencies. See Robert E. Cushman, The Independent Regulatory Commissions 674-75 (1972) (explaining that congressional oversight of an independent agency's finances is Congress's "most constant and effective control"). Indeed, Congress not so long ago slashed the Commission's budget by hundreds of millions of dollars because it was dissatisfied with the Commission's enforcement efforts. See James B. Stewart, As A Watchdog Starves, Wall Street Is Tossed a Bone, N.Y. Times (July 15, 2011), https://perma.cc/75SJ-UAJM.

The ability to hold independent agencies accountable through appropriations is especially important to States. That is because "unlike Congress, administrative agencies are clearly not designed to represent the interests of States." Geier v. Am. Honda Motor Co., 529 U.S. 861, 908 (2000) (Stevens, J., dissenting). Independent agencies especially are "virtually insulated from political forces" through which States might otherwise influence executive agency policy. David A. Herrman, To Delegate or Not to Delegate—That Is the Preemption: The Lack of Political Accountability in Administrative Preemption Defies Federalism Constraints on Government Power, 28 Pac. L.J. 1157, 1181-82 (1997). But States do wield influence in Congress and may use that influence to convince Congress to police specific agency actions, such as attaching an appropriations rider to "single out a specific regulatory activity and prohibit the expenditure of funds for carrying [it] out." Jack M. Beermann, Congressional Administration, 43 San Diego L. Rev. 61, 85 (2006). States can also lobby Congress not to act on an agency's request to fund a program that the States oppose. See Metzger, supra at 1750 (explaining that "congressional influence through appropriations is often felt more through budgetary inaction than actual appropriations legislation").

By funding its surveillance efforts through CAT user fees, the Commission has taken from States an important tool for voicing their opposition to intrusion into their citizens' private affairs.

C. The Supreme Court's major-questions doctrine requires courts to cast a skeptical eye on new assertions of previously unexercised authority like the Commission's massive repository of retail-investors' personal information.

The Commission has existed for nearly a century without having real-time access to the personally identifiable information of every retail investor in America. If Congress had authorized the Commission to build this sort of data repository, whether in the digital age or before, it would have spoken clearly. The major-questions doctrine counsels against allowing agencies to discover new sweeping authority in ambiguous language in longstanding statutes.

In "extraordinary cases," when "the history and the breadth of the authority that [the Commission] has asserted, and the economic and political significance of that assertion" compel it, courts should "hesitate before concluding that Congress meant to confer such authority." West Virginia v. EPA, 142 S. Ct. 2587, 2608 (2022) (cleaned up). "This expectation of clarity is rooted in the basic premise that Congress normally intends to make major policy decisions itself, not leave those decisions to agencies." Biden v. Nebraska, 143 S. Ct. 2355, 2380 (2023) (Barrett, J., concurring) (quoting United States Telecom Ass'n v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381, 419 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of reh'g en banc)). The Commission's unprecedented and sweeping collection and retention of Americans' private information bears the hallmarks of such an extraordinary case.

The Commission's surveillance program is economically significant enough to invoke the major-questions doctrine. As Commissioner Uyeda noted, "cumulative costs for CAT may soon be approaching a billion dollars." Comm'r Mark T. Uyeda, Statement on Consolidated Audit Trail Revised Funding Model, SEC (Sept. 26, 2023), https://perma.cc/78RY-KN5Q; see also Comm'r Hester M. Peirce, Who's Paying?: Statement on the CAT's Funding Model, SEC (Sept. 6, 2023), https://perma.cc/UJV5-J65D (noting the CAT's "price tag of more than $500 million to date and billions to come").

And the economic impact of the CAT is not limited to its price tag. According to polling, approximately 61% of American adults own stock. See Gallup, What Percentage of Americans Own Stock? (May 24, 2023), https://perma.cc/3XKX-X62N. If left intact, the CAT will contain the personal information of well over a hundred million Americans, stored along with the granular details of their investment activity. Cf. Ala. Ass'n of Realtors v. Dep't of Health & Hum. Servs., 141 S. Ct. 2485, 2489 (2021) (applying major-questions doctrine where the "sheer scope" of the CDC eviction moratorium would affect "between 6 and 17 million tenants at risk of eviction"). The economic value of such centralized detailed information, both commercially and to foreign interests and hackers, cannot be overstated.

The Commission's collection of the personal information of retail investors is also politically significant. After all, one cannot put a price on peace of mind, nor calculate the dollar value of the loss of privacy. Section 702 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act is a helpful comparison. Section 702 has generated significant controversy due to the FBI's admitted misuse of the tool, including targeting American citizens' communications without a warrant. See Devlin Barrett, FBI misused surveillance tool on Jan. 6 suspects, BLM arrestees and others, Wash. Post. (May 19, 2023), https://perma.cc/QRA4-XDD2 (noting evidence that the "FBI has misused a powerful digital surveillance tool more than 278,000 times"). The question of whether Section 702 surveillance should be reformed or even reauthorized at all has generated significant debate in Congress. See, e.g., Sen. Mike Lee, Congress, don't pass the defense bill without FISA reform (Dec. 11, 2023), https://perma.cc/3PG6-JSKV .

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Notwithstanding the controversy Section 702 surveillance has generated in recent years, the program was authorized by Congress (and reauthorized multiple times). Yet the Commission's collection of personally identifiable investor information will reach many more American citizens than the FBI's use of Section 702 ever could. And—in addition to the myriad opposing comments the Commission's data-collection requirements has generated since their announcement—Congress has now begun to weigh in. See Sen. John Kennedy, Kennedy, Colleagues Introduce Bill to Protect Investor Privacy by Prohibiting Vulnerable SEC Database (July 11, 2023), https://perma.cc/FT2M-5445; See Rep. Barry Loudermilk, Rep. Loudermilk, House Republicans Introduce Legislation to Protect Investors' Personally Identifiable Information (July 12, 2023), https://perma.cc/V799-5X5K. So the Commission's repository of investor information is sure to become even more politically significant in the future.

Finally, the Commission's actions bring about a "radical or fundamental change" to the privacy and security expectations of American investors. West Virginia, 142 S. Ct. at 2609 (cleaned up). The Commission has not in its history had the sort of detailed information collected in the CAT for retail investors. The change from disclosures being driven by electronic "blue sheets" to the CAT repository is momentous. But "when Congress wishes to alter the fundamental details of a regulatory scheme, . . . we would expect it to speak with the requisite clarity to place that intent beyond dispute." United States Forest Serv. v. Cowpasture River Pres. Ass'n, 140 S. Ct. 1837, 1849 (2020) (cleaned up).

Indeed, shifting the Commission's regulatory scheme from one where an investor's sensitive personal information must be requested on the basis of individualized suspicion related to an investigation or enforcement action, to the Commission's ability with the CAT to view the details of individuals not suspected of any wrongdoing, requires grounding in more than "modest words," "vague terms," or "subtle device[s]." West Virginia, 142 S. Ct. at 2609. Allowing the Commission, along with thousands of other users, instant access to records of Americans' market activity coupled with their personally identifiable information would upend investor expectations where the statutory regime hasn't changed. See Ala. Ass'n of Realtors, 141 S. Ct. at 2489 (requiring "Congress to enact exceedingly clear language" where it shifts traditional balances of power, such as "between federal and state power and the power of Government over private property").

The Commission's effort to significantly expand its surveillance abilities by relying on newly found authority under the Exchange Act should be rejected.

D. The Commission failed to consider whether storing retail-investor information is necessary to further the CAT's goal of providing the Commission with access to real-time market information.

Even if the Commission had the authority to require the collection of personally identifiable investor information within the CAT, its decision to do so was arbitrary and capricious. The Commission's inclusion of sensitive personal information within the CAT is risky and offers little, if any, regulatory benefit. And by failing to consider whether it actually needed retail investors' personal information, the Commission entirely failed to consider "an important aspect of the problem." Spirit Airlines, Inc. v. FAA, 997 F.3d 1247, 1255 (D.C. Cir. 2021).

Recall that the original impetus for creating a centralized database of real-time market information was the 2010 "flash crash"; retail investors did not cause that crash. Findings Regarding the Market Events of May 6, 2010, Joint Advisory Comm. on Emerging Regul. Issues (Sep. 30, 2010), https://perma.cc/F2BJ-85B3. The Commission found it difficult to reconstruct the events of the crash after the fact because there was "no single data source that covers all market activities." 81 Fed. Reg. 84696, 84811 (Nov. 15, 2016), at 205. Instead, the Commission needed to combine different data sources such as blue-sheets data and individual SRO audit trail data. See id.

The CAT provides the single comprehensive data source that the Commission said was necessary for that purpose. But the inclusion of sensitive personal information, especially that of retail investors, was never something the Commission said it needed in order to effectively reconstruct disruptive market events like the 2010 "flash crash." Nor would that have been plausible given the unlikelihood that retail investors could ever be responsible for a sudden market event of such significance. To its credit, the Commission did—after significant pushback—trim down the personal information that would be collected, including nixing the collection of Social Security numbers. See Exemption Order. But the Commission has never defended the collection of customer names, addresses, and birth year as necessary—or even helpful—to further the CAT's original purpose of reconstructing large-scale market disruptive events.

Instead, the Commission has attempted to justify its collection of personal information based on mere convenience. See Comm'r Hester M. Peirce, This CAT is a Dangerous Dog, RealClearPolicy (Oct. 9, 2019), https://perma.cc/558J-ZWB8 (noting that the Commission's "purpose and rationale [for the CAT] have morphed over time"). For instance, the Commission argued customer information will "allow regulators to identify bad actors who are using retail trading accounts to perform illegal activity" and to identify fraudulent activity targeting senior citizens. Exemption Order at 16156. But as Commissioner Peirce explained, the Commission "already has sufficient tools to get the information it needs to pursue credible leads about market misconduct and to do so quickly." Id. And that is without personally identifiable retail-investor information being available at the fingertips of its enforcement division.

Indeed, the Commission has never claimed—nor could it credibly do so—that omitting this information from the CAT would pose any significant barrier to its enforcement efforts. Rather, at most "the CAT may make it a bit easier to investigate certain types of market misconduct" and may allow the Commission's enforcement efforts to "avoid the[] occasional problem[]" of broker-dealers responding less than promptly to "blue sheets" requesting customer account information. Comm'r Hester M. Peirce, Statement of Hester M. Peirce in Response to Release No. 34-88890; File No. S7-13-19, SEC (May 15, 2020), https://perma.cc/G4HL -M7EU.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Mere convenience cannot justify the sweeping collection and retention of personal information from investors who no one suspects of wrongdoing—let alone one that puts that information in the hands of an agency with a record of failing to secure its computer systems. As Commissioner Peirce aptly put it, "[t]he risk that a bus driver placing a trade for her daughter's college fund will cause market turbulence is outweighed by the invasion of privacy and the attendant risk that cybercriminals will deplete the college education fund." Peirce, This CAT is a Dangerous Dog. The Commission's failure to analyze that important problem was arbitrary and capricious.

Driver in Janae Edmondson crash set to face trial this week in St. Louis

https://www.stltoday.com/news/local/crime-courts/driver-in-janae-edmondson-crash-set-to-face-trial-this-week-in-st-louis/article_e9559520-d7fc-11ee-878c-c364b5315c5c.html#tracking-source=home-top-story

-A trial is slated to begin this week for the man accused of causing a downtown crash last year that severed a young girl's legs and jump-started an effort to remove the city's top prosecutor. Jury selection in the case of Daniel Riley began Friday when hundreds of people were summoned to the courthouse to fill out a questionnaire about their knowledge of the incident to weed out those who had already formed an opinion about Riley's guilt. Riley, 22, was charged last February with assault, armed criminal action and driving without a valid license after police said he was speeding in downtown St. Louis and caused a crash that pinned 16-year-old Tennessee resident Janae Edmondson between two cars. Both her legs were amputated as a result. Riley was out on bond at the time of the crash on a pending robbery case despite violating the conditions of his release multiple times. The news generated outrage in Missouri and across the country, as critics pointed to it as an example of the failures of former St. Louis Circuit Attorney Kimberly M. Gardner. Riley's original robbery 2020 case, in which he is accused of stealing a gun from the son of a retired St. Louis police sergeant, had been dropped and refiled because the prosecutor was not ready for trial and a judge denied a request to delay it. Gardner's spokeswoman falsely claimed the case was dropped because the victim had died. That turned out to be a mix-up, though, and the office later learned they had confused the victim in the robbery case with another person, from a different case, with the same first name. The backlash was severe. Former allies like Mayor Tishaura O. Jones said Gardner had "lost the trust of the people." The Legislature ramped up an effort seeking to strip Gardner of most of her power. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed a lawsuit seeking to remove her from office. Gardner eventually resigned in May and was replaced by current Circuit Attorney Gabe Gore. But Riley's attorney, Dan Diemer, argued last month in a hearing that the damage had already been done, and he asked to move his client's trial out of St. Louis. ;He shouldn't be tried in the press, but he was," Diemer said.

'This is about the future of this town' | Law professor outlines what's at stake in case of volleyball player who lost legs in crash

-The upcoming trial of a man accused of striking a Tennessee teen, severing both of her legs, is so high-profile that St. Louis court officials had to summon three times as many residents as usual to ensure a fair and impartial jury. Daniel Riley, 21, is charged with second-degree assault, armed criminal action and driving without a license. Feb. 18, 2023, police said Riley sped through the intersection of North 11th and St. Charles streets in downtown St. Louis and clipped another car before pinning Janae Edmondson, then 17, against another car. Edmondson was walking with both of her parents to their hotel after playing in a volleyball tournament at the nearby Dome at America's Center. Riley was supposed to be on house arrest at the time for an alleged armed robbery that happened two years before the crash.The story got national attention and also spotlighted mounting criticism of the office of former St. Louis Circuit Attorney Kim Gardner, ending with her resignation in May 2023. Riley's attorneys tried to ask for a change of venue for the case, but Judge Michael Noble denied that request. Jury summonses were sent to about 435 St. Louisans for this case. About 140 residents are summoned in a typical case. St. Louis University law professor Anders Walker isn't surprised. "This needs to be tried in St. Louis City," Walker said. "This is about the future of the town." "I mean, if we're going to attract people to our soccer stadium and these games and Union Station, we've got to have safe streets," he said. "We can't have tourists getting killed and losing legs when they're visiting town. "Jurors can be told, 'You have to be objective. And if you can't, you can't sit on the jury,' so they can get instructions to be fair, but it needs to be tried in this town," he said. Walker said a recent spate of serious and fatal pedestrian and traffic crashes in the St. Louis area could influence jurors too, beyond just the publicity Riley's case got when it first happened. Just eight days after Edmondson lost her legs, four young adults were killed when Cedric Dixon ran a red light and struck a Chevrolet Tahoe. The SUV careened over a guardrail and landed upside-down on Forest Park Avenue, which runs below North Grand Boulevard. Four others were injured.

Trial Looms: Middle Tennessee Volleyball Player's Tragic Accident Prompts Call for Justice

https://www.wgnsradio.com/article/86037/trial-looms-middle-tennessee-volleyball-players-tragic-accident-prompts-call-for-justice

-Murfreesboro, TN - A heart-wrenching incident involving Middle Tennessee State University's volleyball team has captured the attention of the Midstate community. Janae Edmondson, a standout volleyball player and student manager for the team, found herself at the center of a tragic turn of events during a competition in Missouri. Just a year ago, Edmondson was in Missouri for a volleyball tournament, enjoying a walk back to her hotel with her family when tragedy struck. According to police reports, 21-year-old Daniel Riley was allegedly speeding down the road when he struck Edmondson, causing her to lose both of her legs in the horrific accident. Riley, who did not possess a valid license at the time of the incident, now faces multiple charges, including three counts of assault and armed criminal action. Adding to the gravity of the situation, it was revealed that Riley had been in court for trial on armed robbery charges just seven months prior to the accident involving Edmondson. As the community awaits justice, the trial for Daniel Riley is set to commence on Monday, March 4. This trial holds significant weight for not only Edmondson and her family but also for the broader Middle Tennessee community as they rally behind one of their own in the pursuit of accountability and closure.

Missouri AG Files Lawsuit Against Planned Parenthood Over Allegedly 'Trafficking' Minors To Obtain Abortions

https://www.conservativedailynews.com/2024/03/missouri-ag-files-lawsuit-against-planned-parenthood-over-allegedly-trafficking-minors-to-obtain-abortions/

-Republican Attorney General Andrew Bailey of Missouri announced a lawsuit against a Planned Parenthood chapter on Thursday, accusing it of "trafficking children" across state lines to get abortions without parental consent. The lawsuit accused Planned Parenthood Great Plains of violating state law by aiding minors in obtaining out of state abortions without parental consent. Bailey is asking for the court to issue an injunctive relief and bar the defendant from providing financial or transportation assistance for minors to receive the procedure, according to the court document. "Missouri law forbids any person to assist a minor in obtaining an abortion without parental consent, even if the abortion occurs across state lines and is legal in that other State," the filing reads. The 18-page complaint cited undercover video from an investigation by Project Veritas, during which employees allegedly told the undercover reporter they could "help" take a 13-year-old to Kansas for an abortion without the child's parents learning about the procedure. The filing also cited a second video from Project Veritas, in which employees at a Planned Parenthood in Kansas confirmed that minors came from out of state "all the time." "This is the beginning of the end for Planned Parenthood in the State of Missouri. What they conceal and conspire to do in the dark of night has now been uncovered. I am filing suit to ensure it never happens again," Bailey said in a press release. "As a father who held my daughter in my arms for the single hour of her life before she died, I know firsthand how important it is to protect life. Our children are the future. It is time to eradicate Planned Parenthood once and for all to end this pattern of abhorrent, unethical, and illegal behavior." Planned Parenthood Great Plains did not immediately respond to a request for comment from the Daily Caller News Foundation.

Missouri urges court to uphold act declaring federal gun laws 'invalid' after Kansas City shooting

https://www.kansascity.com/news/politics-government/article286038476.html

-Missouri officials recently defended in court a far-reaching state law that declares some federal firearms laws "invalid," a stark demonstration of how far the state has gone to thwart restrictions on guns. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey's Office urged the federal Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals to uphold the state's Second Amendment Preservation Act or SAPA during oral arguments last Friday. The 2021 law, signed by Gov. Mike Parson, spurred confusion among law enforcement when it went into effect. The U.S. Department of Justice has sued to overturn the measure. U.S. District Court Judge Brian Wimes in March 2023 ruled the law unconstitutional, but Missouri appealed. The courtroom showdown between Missouri and the DOJ had long been scheduled for February, but came a little over a week after at least two people exchanged gunfire, according to prosecutors, following the Kansas City Chiefs Super Bowl rally, killing one bystander and injuring more than 20 others. The mass shooting has led to renewed calls for action on gun violence and focused fresh attention on Missouri's loose firearms laws. Republicans, with few exceptions, have resisted demands to consider new restrictions – and since the shooting Bailey has promoted his role in defending the Second Amendment Preservation Act. The DOJ has argued SAPA "severely impairs federal criminal law enforcement operations" to fight gun crime in Missouri. Some local law enforcement have questioned whether the law allows them to cooperate with federal officials. As state attorney general, Bailey is tasked with defending state law in court. Bailey, a Republican facing a competitive primary contest, has publicly framed his defense of the state law as a defense of the Second Amendment.

Attorney General Levels More Accusations At Webster Groves School District

-For the second time this year, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey has issued a warning to the Webster Groves School District. A Feb. 21 letter from Bailey directed to Superintendent John Simpson accuses the district of racial discrimination. The district has called the accusations "ridiculous." "It has come to my attention that Webster Groves School District has instituted race-based criteria for its employees and applicants," Bailey's letter said. "According to the reports my office has received, the district adopted the goal to 'attract, support and retain ... staff who at a minimum reflect the diversity of our student population.'" Bailey goes on to state that, under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, an employer may not refuse to hire, or otherwise discriminate, against employees or candidates because of their race. "Webster Groves School District must immediately cease and desist using all unlawful race-based preferences and quotas it has adopted for hiring and retention," Bailey's letter concludes. In an official district response, Director of Communications Derek Duncan called the letter "ridiculous." "There is nothing wrong with the stated goal, and it is certainly not unlawful race-based hiring," wrote Duncan. "The Webster Groves School District has not, and will not, discriminate against anyone in hiring based upon the person's race. However, the district is interested in having a diverse faculty to serve as educators to our diverse student population and is willing to take the effort to attract, support and retain that staff."

Judge temporarily blocks Texas AG's demand for transgender minors' records

https://www.spokesman.com/stories/2024/mar/03/judge-temporarily-blocks-texas-ags-demand-for-tran/

-A judge on Friday temporarily blocked the Texas attorney general from forcing an LGBTQ+ organization to turn over documents on transgender minors and the gender-affirming care they may be receiving. In Texas, medical care for gender transition is prohibited for minors under a law passed last year. As part of an investigation into violations of the ban, the office of Attorney General Ken Paxton demanded early last month that the nonprofit PFLAG National, which supports families in accessing gender-affirming care for children, provide information on minors in the state who may have received such treatments. But on Friday, Judge Maria Cantú Hexsel of Travis County District Court issued an injunction against Paxton, just days after PFLAG sued to block the request, saying turning over the documents would cause "irreparable injury, loss or damage" to the group. The judge added that such an ask would infringe on the group's constitutional rights and that its members would be subject to "gross invasions" of privacy. The important context here is that liberals have seen major success in shoring up various rights, particularly reproductive rights, via ballot initiatives in recent years. And, in response, Republicans, just as experts predicted, appear to be trying to make it harder to place similar proposals before the people. As examples, the Bolts article noted Arkansas Republican Attorney General Tim Griffin's efforts to undercut a ballot initiative that would require more transparency from government officials by guaranteeing Arkansans a right to public information. The magazine also mentioned Missouri AG Andrew Bailey and Montana AG Austin Knudsen, who've both tried to block ballot measures that could potentially shore up abortion rights in those two states. Both AGs have succeeded in their delays so far, although activists in both states are hoping to beat the clock and garner enough signatures in time to place abortion rights initiatives on the ballot this November.

How Republican attorneys general are taking aim at democracy

https://www.msnbc.com/the-reidout/reidout-blog/republican-attorneys-general-ballot-measures-rcna141464

-If you're reading this, you've undoubtedly heard about the "MAGA" movement. But how about the "RAGA" movement? While it is not as well known as Donald Trump, the Republican Attorneys General Association is right there with him in its attacks on decency, common sense and, lately, the democratic process. As an example, last month, the group sent a letter to the Federal Aviation Administration suggesting that diversity, equity and inclusion measures were putting American passengers at risk. And in January, several members of the group also sent the Biden administration a letter accusing him of enabling a migrant-led "invasion" through the U.S.-Mexico border. But Bolts Magazine has a new report on a troubling trend, as the ultraconservative attorneys general have been putting their thumbs on the scale to impose a conservative agenda on their states. Specifically, the report notes how right-wing AGs have stalled or stifled liberal ballot measures, preventing voters from having their say on a number of proposals.

-Not since state Sen. Bill Eigel jump-started his gubernatorial campaign by promising, if elected, to use a flamethrower to incinerate books on the front lawn of the governor's mansion has a Missouri politician put truth to power the way Attorney General Andrew Bailey did recently when he called his primary opponent a coward, a liar and Harvard-educated. Bailey is a proud Mizzou alum. "M-I-Z, Z-O-U!"He first came to prominence a couple of years ago when he supported Gov. Mike Parson's notion to criminally charge Post-Dispatch reporter Josh Renaud for notifying the state board of education that one of its websites could be manipulated to show Social Security numbers of the state's teachers. Our governor is a former sheriff and sees things through an investigative lens. If a reporter is so sure of this, ain't that akin to a confession? He musta done it hisself! If you think so, sir, I think so, said Bailey, who was then Parson's general counsel. Grown-ups prevailed, and Renaud was not charged. But when my friend Roy "RINO" Blunt retired from the Senate and was replaced by Attorney General Eric "MAGA" Schmitt, whose singular accomplishment had been suing China for inflicting COVID on Missouri — no court date in sight for that trial — the governor appointed Bailey as A.G. Bailey hit the ground running and went right after schools and medical clinics. That's good politics in these strange times. It's especially wise to target schools, which are always trying to indoctrinate our children and make them think they're smarter than we are.

Hi,

Attached is the final version of the EMBARGOED letter that AG Bailey plans to send to Media Matters tomorrow. We find it especially relevant after Elon Musk let Alex Jones back on Twitter this weekend. Musk is committed to free speech, and because of that, he has become a target of the radical left.

AG Bailey views it as such:

DRAFT DO NOT RELEASE

- -Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.
- -Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.
- -Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being ripped off by this scheme and to shed light on the subject. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.
- -Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:
  1. Social media platforms
     - We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS
  2. President Trump
     - We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates
  3. The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms perverting the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.
     - Anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes unchecked, the marketplace for free, fair and open debate will cease to exist.
- -The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.
  1. We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

He is available this week if you have interest in an interview.

Hi Mark,
A statement from the AG: “Jen Psaki was instrumental to the censorship of everyday Americans during her time in the Biden Administration. She used her position of power to threaten social media companies into censoring free speech. It’s a slap in the face to every American that she be named as master of ceremonies at any event involving the First Amendment. I look forward to holding the entire White House’s censorship enterprise accountable at the nation’s highest court in a few weeks.”

Subject: Media Request - AG comments

Ms Sieren:
Good afternoon.
Request.am an investigative television journalist working on a story that addresses a matter that was before Missouri attorney-general. AGO was a plaintiff in Murthy v Missouri (originally filed as Missouri v Biden) regarding the Biden Administration pressure on social media platforms to silence disfavored narratives.
As cited in court documents, among those administration officials who threatened social media platforms was then-Press Secretary Jen Psaki.
Does the AG have a comment regarding the decision to honor Jen Psaki at a First Amendment awards gala?
The Radio-Television Digital News Association, which is the largest organization representing radio and television news journalists, namedas the master of ceremonies at its grandest annual event, its First Amendment gala.
When I questioned the RTDNA president & CEO about naming Psaki, he dismissed her behavior in the White House as immaterial. He further stated it was important "we" stop disinformation and silencing certain voices was not incompatible with supporting the First Amendment. I am now a former member of the RTDNA.
Background.am the correspondent for Inside Your World Investigates, the national investigative unit for Sinclairstations nationwide. Our reports focus on public safety, consumer protection, and government accountability, as well as human interest stories, and are broadcast in local newscasts of more than 120 TV news stations (including Jefferson City and St Louis), as well as on our national headline news, The National Desk, which is broadcast on more than 125 television stations. The stories areinto Spanish for our Spanish-language newscasts.
Thank you in advance for your consideration.

Thanks John.Thought it might be good for Ben to have in his back pocket if we get lots of questions on whether there was really a credible threat by the WH since there doesn't seem to be any serious attempt to reform Sec. 230 on the immediate horizon, Biden's threats notwithstanding.The concrete actions against Musk would seem to demonstrate that the WH has lots of tools at their disposal. By the way, do you know if you can leave extra clothing in the locker at the Supreme Court?I have a heavy fleece I thought about throwing on under my suit coat if I'm going to be hanging out in a line in 40+ degree weather in the a.m.

DISSENTING STATEMENT OF COMMISSIONER BRENDAN CARR

Re: Application for Review of Starlink Services, LLC, Rural Digital Opportunity Fund, Rural Digital Opportunity Fund (Auction 904), Viasat Auction 904 Application for Review, WC Docket No. 19-126, OEA Docket No. 20-34, GN Docket No. 21-231, Order on Review.

Last year, after Elon Musk acquired Twitter and used it to voice his own political and ideological views without a filter, President Biden gave federal agencies a greenlight to go after him. During a press conference at the White House, President Biden stood at a podium adorned with the official seal of the President of the United States, and expressed his view that Elon Musk "is worth being looked at."[1] When pressed by a reporter to explain how the government would look into Elon Musk, President Biden remarked: "There's a lot of ways."[2] There certainly are. The Department of Justice, the Federal Aviation Administration, the Federal Trade Commission, the National Labor Relations Board, the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service have all initiated investigations into Elon Musk or his businesses.

Today, the Federal Communications Commission adds itself to the growing list of administrative agencies that are taking action against Elon Musk's businesses. I am not the first to notice a pattern here. Two months ago, The Wall Street Journal editorial board wrote that "the volume of government investigations into his businesses makes us wonder if the Biden Administration is targeting him for regulatory harassment."[3] After all, the editorial board added, Elon Musk has become "Progressive Enemy No. 1." Today's decision certainly fits the Biden Administration's pattern of regulatory harassment. Indeed, the Commission's decision today to revoke a 2020 award of $885 million to Elon Musk's Starlink—an award that Starlink secured after agreeing to provide high-speed Internet service to over 640,000 rural homes and businesses across 35 states—is a decision that cannot be explained by any objective application of law, facts, or policy.

First, the FCC revokes Starlink's $885 million award by making up an entirely new standard of review that no entity could ever pass and then applying that novel standard to only one entity: Starlink. In particular, FCC law provides that a winning bidder like Starlink must demonstrate that it is "reasonably capable" of fulfilling its end of the bargain that it struck with the FCC back in 2020. In this case, that means Starlink needed to show that it was more likely than not that Starlink could provide high-speed Internet service (specifically, low-latency, 100/20 Mbps service) to at least 40% of those roughly 640,000 rural premises by December 31, 2025. Starlink did exactly that in a voluminous series of submissions that it filed with the FCC throughout 2021 and 2022. Indeed, the record leaves no doubt that Starlink is reasonably capable of providing qualifying high-speed Internet service to the required number of locations by the end of 2025. The Commission's decision does not even grapple with that evidence—it simply ignores it.

Instead of applying the traditional FCC standard to the record evidence, which would have compelled the agency to confirm Starlink's $885 million award, the FCC denied it on the grounds that

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Starlink is not providing high-speed Internet service to all of those locations today.[4] What? FCC law does not require Starlink to provide high-speed Internet service to even a single location today. As noted above, the first FCC milestone does not kick in until the end of 2025. Indeed, the FCC did not require—and has never required—any other award winner to show that it met its service obligation years ahead of time.

To the extent the Commission is intending to say that the agency does not believe, standing here today, that Starlink is reasonably capable of meeting its year end 2025 obligation by year end 2025, the agency's position fares no better.

For one, the FCC is still holding Starlink to a standard that it has made up on the fly. I am not aware of any other circumstance in which the FCC has looked at current speed benchmarks to determine whether an awardee is reasonably capable of meeting a speed benchmark that kicks in years down the road. Indeed, if the FCC were to apply this novel Starlink speed test standard to any of the other 2020 awardees, it would show that those entities are not reasonably capable of meeting their 2025 obligations either because they have not built out to those areas yet. Applying a speed test to those providers would show speeds of 0/0 Mbps.

For another, the FCC makes a fundamental error because the speed test data it relies on is not sufficiently probative. In other words, the FCC might be saying in its decision that it needs to apply a novel standard to Starlink because it is the first low-earth orbit (LEO) satellite system to win an FCC award. Putting aside the admission in that case that the agency is applying a novel standard, the speed test evidence the agency relies on to make its prediction about how Starlink's LEO system will perform at the end of 2025 is flawed. Indeed, the FCC is not applying a standard that makes any sense for Starlink's LEO system.

This is an important point. The FCC is purporting to make a prediction about the trajectory that Starlink's LEO system is on, but it is not using any evidence that is tailored to making such a prediction. I am not saying that this is an easy task for the agency—it does involve rocket science after all. But comparing speed test snapshots from two, cherry-picked moments in time and using those to predict how Starlink would likely perform years down the road and at particular U.S. locations is not a credible methodology. That would be like watching the pace lap of a NASCAR race and then predicting that the cars will never exceed 50 MPH.

In the case of technologies like Starlink's LEO system, progress is not measured in a straight line, particularly not one that can be plotted by drawing an arrow through two speed test measures. The FCC knows this. It is more accurate to think about technological progress in this context as a saw-toothed, hockey curve—there are ups and downs, breakthroughs and setbacks, but the curve moves steadily up and to the right over any considerable period of time.

That is certainly the case with Starlink. Indeed, all of the data that has come in—the latest set of U.S. speed test measures, Starlink's actual performance in Europe, the pace and cadence of new launches and satellites in orbit, Starlink's own detailed descriptions of its plans—this much richer and more probative set of data all confirm that Starlink is on track to meets its FCC obligations.[5] [4] See, e.g., Order on Review at para. 30; see also id. at para. 24. The Agency found that Starlink's long-form application review process "required a more thorough examination of required service in 'specific areas' where [Starlink] won support" essentially requesting performance testing early-on from Starlink. Id. at para. 25.

[5] Notably, at the time of the FCC's initial decision in August 2022, there were 3,007 Starlink satellites in orbit. Today, that number has expanded to 5,420. Moreover, among European countries that Ookla recently surveyed, Starlink now has median download speeds greater than 100 Mbps in 14 countries.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, the FCC's decision leaves rural communities stuck on the wrong side of the digital divide. As noted above, in exchange for awarding Starlink $885 million back in 2020, the FCC secured a commitment for the delivery of high-speed Internet service to over 642,000 unserved rural homes and businesses across 35 states. By reversing course, the FCC has chosen to vaporize that commitment and replace it with . . . nothing. That's a decision to leave families waiting on the wrong side of the digital divide when we have the technology to get them high-speed service today.

Third, the FCC's decision hits Americans in their pocketbooks. To the extent the federal government ever makes another commitment to serve these rural communities, it will cost us orders of magnitude more money to do so. Indeed, while the Commission's 2020 award secured a deal to bring high-speed service to all of these areas for $885 million in federal support, extending high-speed fiber lines to these same areas will likely cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $3 billion based on past bidding patterns and analysis—more once you start accounting for inflation. That is not a good deal for U.S. taxpayers.

The problems only compound from there. After all, there is a limited pot of federal infrastructure dollars, and we are now far more likely to exhaust those resources before getting every American connected.

Stepping back for a moment—it is clear that today's decision simply does not hang together when measured against the law, facts, or policy. Indeed, I think it's obvious to everyone that the Biden Administration itself does not believe that Elon Musk's Starlink is a risky technology. If it did, you would not have seen the Pentagon ink a multi-million-dollar agreement with SpaceX just weeks ago for a military adaptation of Starlink, known as Starshield, that leverages LEO satellites for a more secure communication network.[6] But the government continues to take regulatory action against his businesses, nonetheless.

In the end, today's decision mirrors many of the same missteps that the Biden Administration is making in its implementation of other, multi-billion-dollar infrastructure initiatives. The Biden Administration is choosing to prioritize its political and ideological goals at the expense of connecting Americans. We can and should reverse course.

But that is not what the agency chooses today. Accordingly, I dissent.

Missouri AG slams school's promotion of 'divisive racial ideology' over safety after teen's brutal beating
FOX News | Stepheny Price
https://www.foxnews.com/us/missouri-ag-slams-schools-promotion-divisive-racial-ideology-over-safety-after-teens-brutal-beating

- Following the brutal beating of a 16-year-old St. Louis high school student, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey released a statement condemning the girl's school for not doing enough to protect its students. "I'm deeply concerned that the school where these teens were students has a history of promoting divisive racial ideology over the safety of its students," Bailey said in a statement to Fox News Digital. Bailey went on to say that the school is partially at fault for this latest act of violence involving teenagers. "By promoting DEI and excluding uniformed law enforcement from campus in 2021, this school bears some responsibility for this incident. Yet, it has not offered a substantive apology to the victim of this violent attack who is still fighting for her life. This school owes the parents of the district an explanation as to what role these radical programs and safety failures played here," Bailey said. Fox News Digital has reached out to Hazelwood East High School and the Hazelwood School District for comment on the attorney general's accusations, but has not yet heard back. During a previous interview with "Wake Up Mid-Missouri," Bailey called on the state's juvenile justice system to be reformed following the attack. "Well this is horrific, and we're seeing this happen more and more across the state where juveniles are committing violent crimes," the Republican attorney general said, noting that two juveniles were also charged in a shooting at last month's Kansas City Chiefs parade, resulting in a woman's death and nearly two dozen others injured. Bailey also added that the suspect in the violent brawl should be tried as an adult and charged with murder if the offense rose to a homicide.

Missouri girl in critical condition after video shows teen slamming her head in 'deranged display of violence'
NBC | Minyvonne Burke
https://www.nbcnews.com/news/us-news/missouri-girl-critical-condition-video-shows-teen-slamming-head-derang-rcna144034

- A fight involving numerous people left a Missouri girl hospitalized in critical condition after what officials called a "deranged display of violence." St. Louis County police detectives are investigating the brawl on March 8, which was captured on video and posted to social media. The horrific video shows several people fighting in the middle of the street near the intersection of Norgate and Claudine drives. One person is seen repeatedly punching the victim and slamming her head to the ground. A 15-year-old girl was arrested on assault charges a day after the fight, authorities said…..Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey called the actions in the video a "deranged display of violence that must be punished to the full extent of the law." "This vicious attack highlights the greater issues we're facing in the juvenile justice system across the state. I will continue to fight for more resources, increased juvenile certifications, and a tougher on crime approach than our current levels of enforcement," he said on X. "This culture of violence has no place in Missouri or anywhere," Bailey said. "Children deserve to attend schools free of crime and violence." Police said the fight remains under investigation.

Former Missouri sheriff charged after allegedly pushing officer making arrest, court says (NOT former Sheriff Scott Childers)

KC Star | Kendrick Calfee
https://www.kansascity.com/news/local/crime/article286881485.html

- The former sheriff of Ray County has been charged with a misdemeanor for interfering with the arrest of another man at a steakhouse in January, court records filed Tuesday show. A probable cause affidavit filed March 19 says Garry Bush stepped in front of and pushed an officer who was attempting to arrest another man acting erratically with a gun at a restaurant. Officers responded to a call shortly after 7 p.m. Jan. 25 to 708 Wollard Boulevard on a call that a man had a gun in a restaurant and was "acting erratic." The affidavit said an officer obtained the gun from the suspect. After he cleared the weapon, loaded with one round, the officer saw the suspect walk away from another officer toward Bush. The suspect lifted his left hand and the officer who had cleared the weapon rushed to assist, grabbing the man's left hand, the affidavit said. Officers said the suspect broke away and at this point Bush allegedly stepped in front of the officer. The affidavit said Bush then used his left hand to push the officer back, saying "don't do it" and "don't start." "I pushed Garry Bush away from me, telling him not to get involved," Cpl. Cody Davis with the Richmond Police wrote in the affidavit. "It should be noted it took several attempts to get Garry Bush to stop interfering." A news release from the Platte County Prosecutor's Office March 19 said prosecutor Eric Zahnd has been appointed to serve as special prosecuting attorney on the case. The charge was filed Tuesday after his office reviewed police reports, surveillance video and body camera footage from Richmond police officers. The charge against Bush — interfering with an arrest — is a class A misdemeanor. Bush served as Ray County sheriff from 2012 until 2020, when he decided not to run for re-election. In October 2023, Bush's time as sheriff was put under a spotlight when Missouri Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick gave the county the lowest possible rating from his office. The scathing review found that the sheriff's office spent county money on beer, 15 TVs and 76 hams. The audit also uncovered missing money from concealed carry weapon permit fees and sex offender registry fees under Bush's leadership from 2018-2020. Issues uncovered by the state auditor in Ray County highlight problems uncovered in a recent investigation by The Star, which showed how local governments often lack safeguards against fraud and mismanagement of taxpayer money. Scott Childers, who took over as Ray County sheriff in 2021, told The Star last fall that the audit spoke to his campaign message of poor management within the county when he was Bush's political opponent. Childers was removed from office by Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey in early March after he unlawfully allowed prisoners to leave jail, perform work for friends and acquaintances and smuggle in drugs, alcohol and other contraband, Bailey claimed. "Respondent has allowed these detainees to drive vehicles, make purchases at local stores, leave the State of Missouri, and generally move about Ray County without proper supervision," Bailey's petition for quo warranto said. Ray County, which includes the cities of Camden and Crystal Lakes, is located about 47 miles east of Kansas City. It has an estimated population of 23,107 people, according to the most recent census data

Former Ray County, Missouri, Sheriff, subject of questionable spending audit, charged with interfering with arrest in January incident (NOT former Sheriff Scott Childers)

https://www.kmbc.com/article/former-ray-county-missouri-sheriff-charged-with-interfering-with-arrest/60247020#

- The former Sheriff of Ray County, Missouri, is now facing charges of interfering with arrest related to a January incident, according to a news release from the Platte County Prosecutor's Office. Garry Bush served as Ray County Sheriff from 2012 until he opted not to run for re-election in 2020. According to the release from the prosecutor's office, Richmond Police officers were dispatched to the Branded Steakhouse restaurant on Jan. 25 to investigate reports of a man with a gun acting erratically. When officers arrived, one was able to obtain the weapon involved. Authorities said after the officer cleared the loaded weapon, he saw the suspect walk away from another officer and walk toward Bush. Tuesday's news release said the man in question raised his left hand, and the officer who had cleared the weapon grabbed his hand to assist. The man then reportedly broke away, and Bush stepped in front of the officer. The prosecutor's office said Bush then used his left hand to push the officer back saying, "don't do it" and "don't start."…. Bush's time as sheriff has recently been under a magnifying glass after investigators with Missouri State Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick's Office released a scathing audit, revealing thousands of dollars in questionable purchases as well as missing money from fees related to issues from 2018 to 2020, under Bush's leadership. Bush's predecessor and former political opponent, Scott Childers, was elected to serve in 2020. Childers was removed from office by the Missouri Attorney General earlier this month alleging an inmate work program administered by Childers was illegal and allowed detainees to leave the county jail freely.

Sen. Eric Schmitt dismisses concerns over skeptical justices in censorship Supreme Court case

- After the Supreme Court heard oral arguments on Monday in the case of Murthy v. Missouri – which addresses the Biden administration's ability to communicate with and direct social media companies and examines what constitutes persuasion versus coercion – Sen. Eric Schmitt encouraged Americans not to be discouraged by the skepticism implied by the justices' questions. "I thought the arguments yesterday went well," the Missouri Republican told Fox News Digital in an interview on

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Tuesday. "The record is very clear." In 2022, when Schmitt was attorney general, he joined then-Louisiana Attorney General Jeff Landry to file a lawsuit against the Biden administration for "allegedly colluding with Social Media Giants," particularly to censor free speech surrounding the COVID-19 pandemic and the results of the 2020 election. According to published reports, a majority of the Court appeared doubtful about Schmitt and Landry's lawsuit, asking questions suggesting they may not agree with the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in Louisiana. "I'm hopeful that the Court will see it the same way that the lower court did in their issuing an injunction prohibiting this kind of censorship," Schmitt said following the Supreme Court arguments. U.S. District Judge Terry Doughty granted an injunction in the case in 2023, citing "substantial evidence" that warranted prevention of multiple federal agencies from communicating with social media companies regarding posts containing protected speech. However, the Supreme Court removed many of the restrictions put in place by the injunction when it agreed to hear the administration's appeal. "I think it's always tricky to try to guess what a justice is really thinking about the case based on some of the questions," said Schmitt. Justices seemed largely skeptical of the Republican-led effort to curtail the executive branch's communication with the companies. One example pointed to by both Justices Brett Kavanaugh and Elena Kagan was that of White House correspondence with the news media, which is often looking to shape coverage, but isn't considered a violation of the First Amendment.

Justice Jackson ripped for worrying about the First Amendment 'hamstringing' government: 'Literally the point'

- Social media users were shocked and slightly bemused at Supreme Court Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson's comments on the First Amendment Monday. The Supreme Court heard Murthy v. Missouri, a case challenging the Biden administration's alleged coordination with Big Tech to censor certain messages……"My biggest concern is that your view has the First Amendment hamstringing the federal government in significant ways in the most important time periods," she told the lawyer representing Louisiana, Missouri and private plaintiffs. "And so I guess some might say that the government actually has a duty to take steps to protect the citizens of this country, and you seem to be suggesting that that duty cannot manifest itself in the government encouraging or even pressuring platforms to take down harmful information," she continued. "So can you help me? Because I'm really – I'm really worried about that because you've got the First Amendment operating in an environment of threatening circumstances from the government's perspective, and you're saying that the government can't interact with the source of those problems," Jackson added…..Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey told Fox News Digital Jackson was "absolutely right" about the First Amendment restricting the government. "It is hamstringing, and it's supposed to. The whole purpose of the Constitution is to protect us from the government, and the government exists to protect our rights. But here, the federal government is ignoring our First Amendment protections and weaponizing the federal government to silence our voices," Bailey said.

Missouri's social media case had its day in the U.S. Supreme Court — and later on X

- The U.S. Supreme Court heard arguments Monday in a case that could determine the level of communication that the federal government can have with social media platforms. Murthy v. Missouri, originally filed as Missouri v. Biden in 2022, was brought by former Missouri Attorney General Eric Schmitt, who is now a U.S. Senator, and former Louisiana Attorney General Jeff Landry, who now serves as the state's governor, as well as five individual plaintiffs. Current Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey and Louisiana Attorney General Liz Murrill have taken up the case, which alleges that the federal government worked with social media sites to censor posts, especially those with conservative content, infringing on the First Amendment right to freedom of speech. Bailey has previously called this "the most important First Amendment suit in this nation's history." He contends that statements made by the federal government to social media sites could be seen as threatening punitive action if certain posts were not removed. Attorneys from both states' legal teams argued their case in the Monroe Division of the United States Western District Court of Louisiana in July….Following the nearly two-hour oral argument, Attorney General Bailey issued a statement again touting the importance of this case in terms of defending the First Amendment. "My office brought this lawsuit to halt the disgusting silencing of millions of Americans by the Biden Administration," Bailey said. "We feel confident after today's arguments, and look forward to reminding the nation that the First Amendment still means something in this country." Later Monday evening, Bailey joined Elon Musk in a live discussion on X, formerly known as Twitter, which Musk purchased nearly two years ago. Bailey emphasized the importance of this case, saying, "I think this is one of the most important strategic objectives in securing the soul of our nation." "I think that the bedrock of democracy is freedom of speech," Musk said. "Because if you can't say what you want to say then I think that's essentially political coercion."

- How much contact should the federal government have with private social media platforms? When does that contact turn into censorship? Those were the factors the Supreme Court weighed on Monday, as they heard arguments in the Murthy v. Missouri case, where Missouri and Louisiana attorneys general allege social media companies like Facebook and X (formerly Twitter) suppressed speech by encouraging them to remove misinformation about various topics like the COVID-19 vaccine. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey joins the Rundown to explain his state's lawsuit, the threat posed by media censorship, and why he wants "a wall of separation between tech and state." President Biden travels to two battleground states this week in an effort to win over Arizona and Nevada voters as he heads into a rematch with former President Donald Trump. However, recent polling shows that Trump is ahead in both of these states, spelling trouble for the Biden 2024 reelection campaign. FOX News contributor and Democratic strategist Leslie Marshall joins the podcast to discuss the latest reports that the President is unhappy with his 2024 campaign efforts, a political shift occurring with Black and Hispanic voters, and why she doesn't trust the current polling.

Missouri cracks down on Goldner Capital Management over nursing home mismanagement, but contractors say they're still out thousands of dollars

- Behind the serene façade of nursing homes around Missouri lies a troubling reality: Local businesses, essential to their operation, are being left in financial ruin. An investigation into the nursing home industry reveals a troubling pattern of financial problems and unpaid debts. Local businesses are coming forward with allegations that they've been left high and dry after providing essential services to nursing homes, only to be stiffed on payment. Brandon Fornachon has dealt with the consequences. He's the owner of a medical supply company in Wright City, Missouri. He showed the I-Team the impact of unpaid invoices. "It adds up pretty quick," said Fornachon, the owner of Skilled Medical Solutions. He said one nursing home owner with an investment firm called Goldner Capital Management racked up a bill of $350,000 and never paid. "It's kind of infuriating … It hurts because we've had to lay off a few employees, and it definitely hits our bottom line," he said. And in the end, it's the nursing home residents that suffer "because they're going to be having beds and other necessary equipment being removed from the facilities underneath these residents," Fornachon said. The equipment, never paid for, is now piled up and not being used by those who desperately need it. "All they did was take us for granted," Fornachon said. He said his business was at risk of shutting down. This is not an isolated incident. Three businesses in Missouri alone told the I-Team they were never paid by the same nursing home owner. Court documents, invoices and other records show their losses total about $530,000….. We asked Missouri's Attorney General Andrew Bailey what he plans to do. "As the marketplace evolves, those rules have to adapt to that marketplace to ensure that we're providing resources and ensuring the safety of our senior population," Bailey said. A spokesperson with the Missouri Attorney General's Office said in a statement: "If any Missourian believes they've been scammed, I encourage them to reach out to our office. Former clerk files civil suit against Belle city for "disciplinary action" termination

https://mariescountyadvocate.com/stories/former-clerk-files-civil-suit-against-belle-city-for-disciplinary-action-termination,115483

- Former city clerk Frankie Horstman filed a lawsuit against the city of Belle on March 14 in Maries County's 25th Circuit Court. She is requesting financial damages following her termination on Jan. 22 from the municipality. According to the eight-page petition filed on Horstman's behalf by her attorney, Shelly Ann Kintzel, she is requisitioning to be "reinstated to her position as city clerk with back pay and compensation for lost benefits, and such other relief as the court deems just and proper." Horstman demanded a trial by jury on all applicable issues, counts and claims asserted, according to the petition. The former clerk served 22 years with the city, minus about a year. Horstman alleges Belle aldermen terminated her employment as a "disciplinary action," by state definition, "for behavior she reported" to both the Maries County Sheriff's Office and Missouri Attorney General (AG) Andrew Bailey's Office. Count One in the petition alleges violations of State Statue 105.055, RSMo.: retaliation for disclosure to Maries County Sheriff. Horstman allegedly reported suspicions to Maries County Sheriff Chris Heitman on Dec. 18, 2023, that Mayor Daryl White, Jr., was stealing from the city…Count Two of the petition alleges violations of State Statute 105.055, RSMo: retaliation for disclosure to the Attorney General. Horstman said she received Sunshine Law requests from the Missouri Attorney General's Office around June 2023 for meeting minutes, agendas, and notices. She notified the mayor and aldermen of the request and timely responded to the request as required. She also informed the board about the Attorney General's request for documents she didn't have but was ignored. During the investigation, Horstman alleges she divulged to the Missouri Attorney General's Office investigator between June 2023 to present, that "she reasonably believed the city, and/or mayor, and/or aldermen were violating and/or had violated Missouri Sunshine Law." Horstman's report to the AG's office, "constituted a report to a law enforcement official that she believed the board and mayor was committing or had committed a violation of law or policy" and that she "had a reasonable belief that the behavior she reported was occurring or had occurred and was unlawful or inappropriate, in that it was based on her personal observations and knowledge and on statements that had been made to her or in her presence." Further proof of Horstman's belief was justified when a Dec. 19, 2023, law suit was filed by the AG against the city of Belle, "alleging that the city, specifically Mayor White, had systematically violated the Sunshine Law, and is seeking to impose fines or other penalties on the city."

According to the petition, the lawsuit was based largely on information that had been disclosed to the Attorney General by Horstman.

Police and school admin can't agree on training, forcing SROs out of most schools

https://fox2now.com/news/fox-files/police-and-school-admin-cant-agree-on-training-forcing-sros-out-of-most-schools/

- Millions of people have watched a horrific after-school fight in Hazelwood online, which has revived an old but relevant conversation about safety. As the bell rings at 2:15 p.m., students leave Hazelwood West High School for the day. As they dismiss, a Hazelwood police car is parked outside. It's a school resource officer (SRO) assigned every day to protect the school. Across town, the FOX Files investigators spotted a parked St. Louis County police SUV. Don't be fooled, though; it's an extra patrol, not a school resource officer. "I think SROs are very important," parent Elizabeth Jackson said. Jackson has been keeping a close eye on what's happening inside the Hazelwood School District after Kaylee Gain, 16, suffered a fractured skull and brain bleed during a March 8 fight. "I was very happy when Hazelwood brought them back to West. I think they are a deterrent and I think that when things do happen, it's nice to have them here for a quick response," Jackson said. St. Louis County Police, Florissant Police, and, briefly, Hazelwood Police, shared concern over the district's mandate to send officers to 10 minimum hours of diversity, equity and inclusion training organized by the school. In a 2021 letter, the departments told the school board that officers already receive ongoing training, including interpersonal perspectives, racial profiling, implicit bias and de-escalation. The instructors, subject-matter experts, and classes are approved by the Missouri Peace Officers Standards and Training (POST). The police agencies and school district did not come to an agreement, ending the relationship and pulling the school resource officers out of all Hazelwood schools. About two years later, Hazelwood got a new police chief and the school district got its way, at least on the west side…. On Wednesday, Bailey called for an investigation into the district's mandated diversity, equity, and inclusion training. "By putting DEI agendas ahead of protecting students and neglecting to have law enforcement presence on campus, Hazelwood School District has failed in its fundamental duty to ensure a safe learning environment," Bailey posted on his social media. In a joint statement, Florissant and County Police confirmed no agreement has been reached with the school district but the agencies are hopeful for the future. "We are committed to collaborating on solutions to the youth violence issues we are experiencing and look forward to the return of our school resource officers in the Hazelwood School District," the agencies wrote.

Six Massachusetts Middle Schoolers Face Hate Crime Charges

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/six-massachusetts-middle-schoolers-face-hate-crime-charges-5610882

- Six middle school students in Western Massachusetts face criminal charges stemming from alleged "hate speech" and "race-based bullying" in social media posts. Authorities charged all six Grade 8 students at Southwick Regional School with threats to commit a crime, two with interference with civil rights, and one with witness interference. On Feb. 15, Hampden County District Attorney Anthony Gulluni held a press conference to announce formal charges against the youths. Mr. Gulluni said in the videotaped conference that his office found sufficient evidence to pursue criminal charges against the minors, who allegedly participated in a "hateful, racist online chat that included heinous language, threats, and a mock slave auction." He said that authorities would not release the names and identities of the students because of their age. It is also unclear whether all six students are white. The alleged incident involved a group chat on the social media application Snapchat on Feb. 8 and Feb. 9……On March 8, a black female student at Hazelwood East High School in Missouri allegedly beat a white female student during an altercation, slamming the victim's head into the pavement. The victim suffered severe head injuries and remained in critical condition at a local hospital. According to Yahoo! News, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey wants the alleged assailant tried as an adult. "This evil and complete disregard for human life has no place in Missouri or anywhere," Mr. Bailey wrote on X, formerly Twitter. "I am praying for the victim. The criminal should be charged and tried as an adult. Missouri lawmakers hope to drive down the demand of sex trafficking

https://fox2now.com/news/missouri/missouri-lawmakers-hope-to-drive-down-the-demand-of-sex-trafficking/

- The Missouri General Assembly hopes to combat sex and human trafficking while safeguarding the rights of children with legislation moving forward inside the statehouse. The bill, sponsored by Rep. Jeff Myers, Warrenton, passed by nearly a unanimous vote in the House earlier this month. Myers said the goal of the legislation is to drive down demand and address issues related to sex and human trafficking by mandating training for various professionals and requiring those found guilty of the crime to pay restitution. "If you look in this world, there is evil; and I think this is one of the ugliest faces of it," Myers said. "It's not just an urban issue, it's not just a suburban issue, it's in the rural areas. There are parents who are trafficking their children for rent, trafficking their children for drugs." Fighting human trafficking in Missouri is a bipartisan issue. Myers, a former Missouri State Highway Patrol trooper, said House Bill 1706 would require prosecutors, social workers, juvenile officers, paramedics, and law enforcement officers to receive sex and human trafficking training. "Unfortunately, so many professionals have to be knowledgeable about so many things beyond the scope of what they are trained to do, and sex trafficking is definitely one of those buckets where folks need to understand the warning signs of that and how to intervene and how to really figure out what's going on," House Minority Leader Crystal Quade, D-Springfield, said. The legislation would also establish a Statewide Council Against Adult Trafficking and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children within the attorney general's office, which would be required to meet quarterly. Members of the council could consist of two members of the Senate and two members of the House. This group would coordinate a statewide plan to combat these crimes. "The goal of this first part is to drive down the demand," Myers said. "It's not a victimless crime. Then, start opening the eyes of folks who are constantly coming into contact with these victims." Myers said his background in law enforcement made him aware of the crime, which led to his filing the bill. The legislation also has a provision to increase the penalties for purchasers of sex. He recalls sitting in a training class when he was a law enforcement officer when he realized how to point out human trafficking. "Some things, when you see them, you can't unsee them," Myers said. "Once my eyes were open to this topic, it was something that really did motivate me."…. The legislation is now waiting to be heard in the Senate.

During a live conversation with Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey on March 18, Musk stressed that Americans have an unparalleled right to freedom of speech that must be protected on social media. "No country has the protection of speech that the United States does, not even Canada," he said on X Spaces (formerly Twitter Spaces). "So that's something we should really take pride in and seek to preserve. I think that the bedrock of democracy is freedom of speech." ……Musk said that these advertiser boycotts had cost X two-thirds of its American advertising revenue and that the company would not have survived without significantly reducing costs. "If we had not been able to reduce our costs dramatically, X, formerly Twitter, would have gone bankrupt. And that's fully what they were trying to do. They were trying to drive the company into bankruptcy, which obviously is major suppression of free speech." The X Space unfolded two days after Bailey, who hosted the interview, had his landmark free speech case heard by the Supreme Court. The Murphy v. Missouri case pitted Americans' free speech on social media against collusion between Big Tech and the federal government.

Biden censorship case has historic implications for the future of free speech, state AG says

https://www.foxnews.com/politics/biden-censorship-case-has-historic-implications-for-future-of-free-speech-state-ag-says

- A case at the Supreme Court alleging "collusion" between President Biden's administration and Big Tech companies to silence specific speech on social media platforms is the "most important First Amendment suit in this nation's history," Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey told Fox News Digital. On Monday, the Supreme Court heard oral arguments in Murthy v. Missouri. The case originated from a lawsuit filed by state attorneys general from Missouri and Louisiana accusing senior government officials of colluding with major social media companies to counter misinformation. The lawsuit alleged that this collaboration ultimately led to the censorship of speech on various topics, including Hunter Biden's laptop, the origins of COVID-19 and the effectiveness of face masks. "This is the most important First Amendment suit in this nation's history," Bailey told Fox News Digital in an interview in late February. "We've uncovered a relationship of coercion and collusion between the Biden White House across a spectrum of federal bureaucratic agencies targeting free speech for censorship at the government's demand on Big Tech social media platforms." "We've got to build a wall of separation between Big Tech and state to protect our First Amendment right to free speech," Bailey said. "To that end, we went to court back in May and asked the United States District Court for a nationwide injunction to lay that first brick in the wall between tech and state. "The court granted the injunction on the Fourth of July — on the celebration of this nation's founding — and we've successfully defended that injunction twice at the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals." Bailey added that the score is "Missouri three, Biden zero in the fight for free speech." He said they're "excited to continue to fight to protect Americans' right to free speech on Big Tech platforms."……. A decision on the case is expected this summer.

Ketanji Brown Jackson criticized for saying First Amendment is 'hamstringing the government'

Christian Post l Jon Brown

https://www.christianpost.com/news/ketanji-brown-jacksons-first-amendment-comment-sparks-criticism.html

- U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson drew criticism earlier this week for a line of questioning that appeared to criticize the view that the First Amendment is intended to limit the government. Jackson's comments came Monday during oral arguments in Murthy v. Missouri, a case brought by the states of Louisiana and Missouri, as well as seven individual plaintiffs against Surgeon General Vivek Murthy and other members of the Biden administration. The plaintiffs allege that the administration violated the First Amendment by illegally coercing social media companies to suppress posts and news stories expressing views unfavorable to federal officials on controversial issues related to COVID-19, Hunter Biden, election integrity and other things "under the guise of combating 'misinformation….. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey endorsed the idea that the First Amendment was intended to limit the government. "It is hamstringing, and it's supposed to," Bailey told Fox News. "The whole purpose of the Constitution is to protect us from the government, and the government exists to protect our rights. But here, the federal government is ignoring our First Amendment protections and weaponizing the federal government to silence our voices." Limiting what the federal can do is "a good thing," Bailey contends.

Missouri AG sues MV Realty for deceptive practices

The Legal Description l Staff

https://www.thelegaldescription.com/TLD/ArticlesTLD/Missouri-AG-sues-MV-Realty-for-deceptive-practices-90909.aspx

- Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed suit against MV Realty for its deceptive practices in marketing its services to Missouri homeowners. “As attorney general, I will enforce the laws as written and defend innocent Missourians from being ripped off,” Bailey said. “I’m proud of the work done by our consumer protection unit to obtain justice for victims in this case. The attorney general’s office will continue to do everything in our power to protect Missourians from deceptive business practices.” The petition alleges that MV Realty, in violation of Missouri law, paid homeowners a tiny percentage of the value of their homes in exchange for a promise that the homeowner would use MV Realty as their brokers when they sold their homes. MV Realty described the agreement over the phone to thousands of consumers, many of whom had registered their numbers on Missouri’s No Call list. Bailey’s announcement stated MV Realty then sent notaries to meet with the homeowners in their homes, where the notaries claimed to be unable to answer any questions about the contract. The petition further alleged that MV Realty failed to tell the homeowners that the contract would be enforceable against their heirs after their death, that the contract bound them for 40 years, and that it would result in a lien being placed on their homes. In some instances, MV Realty falsely told homeowners that MV Realty would not place a lien on their homes, and that they would never have to pay the money back. The petition asked the court to order that the liens be removed, to declare that the agreements are void and unenforceable, to provide restitution to consumers who have been charged unlawful cancellation penalties, and to order that MV Realty pay fines and penalties, including $213 million in penalties for calling homeowners on the No Call list. Bailey is the 10th attorney general to sue MV Realty over its Homeowner Benefit Program. The other attorney generals who filed suit include New Jersey Attorney General Matthew Platkin, Florida Attorney General Ashley Moody, Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey, Ohio Attorney General Dave Yost, Pennsylvania Attorney General Josh Shapiro, North Carolina Attorney General Josh Stein, California Attorney General Rob Bonta, Indiana Attorney General Todd Rotika, and, most recently, Georgia Attorney General Christopher Carr.

Media Matters for America

INVESTIGATIVE DEMAND

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL TO:

Served: U.S. Postal Service Certified Mail

Media Matters for America
PO Box 44811
Washington, DC 20026

The Attorney General of the State of Missouri believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation be made to ascertain whether Media Matters for America (Subject) has engaged in or is engaging in practices declared unlawful by § 407.020, RSMo.

The investigation will inquire into the activities of Subject in connection with the solicitation of funds for a charitable purpose, or the sale or advertisement of merchandise, §§ 407.020, 407.453, RSMo.

The Attorney General has reason to believe that the Subject has used deception, fraud, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of material fact in connection with the soliciting of funds for a charitable purpose or the sale or advertisement of merchandise in or from the State of Missouri, § 407.020, RSMo. Independently, the Attorney General also believes it to be in the public interest to investigate whether such acts have occurred.

The Attorney General believes you have information, documentary material or physical evidence relevant to the above-mentioned conduct.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

DEFINITIONS

As used in this Demand, the following terms have the meanings described below:

"Communication" means any expression, statement, conveyance, or dissemination of any words, thoughts, statements, ideas, or information regardless of form, format, or kind. "Communication" includes but is not limited to oral or written communications of any kind, such as telephone conversations, discussions, meetings, notes, letters, agreements, emails or other electronic communications, facsimiles, and other forms of written or oral exchange that are recorded in any way, including video recordings, audio recordings, written notes, or otherwise. Any "Communication" that also falls within the definition of "Document" shall constitute both a Document and a Communication for purposes of this civil investigative demand.

"Document" means all written, printed, typed, and recorded matter of every kind and description, originals and copies, and all attachments and appendices thereto. Without limiting the foregoing, "documents" include all agreements, contracts, correspondence and other communications including notes, memoranda and marginal notations, records, reports, books, manuals, instructions, statistical data and data compilations, drafts, charts, graphs and tables, bills, statements and invoices, advertising, surveys, transcripts, microfilm and microfiche, electronic records that can be reproduced in paper form, recordings, film, tapes, photographs, electronic mail and Web pages, and all other computer-generated, computer-stored, or electronically-stored matter, however and by whomever produced, prepared, reproduced, disseminated, or made.

"Identify", when used with respect to a person or entity, means information sufficient to allow employees of the Attorney General to ascertain the name, address, telephone number, and if not a natural person, the contact person of the entity or facility to be identified, as well as the relationship of that person or entity to you.

"Identifying", when used with respect to a fact or event, means information sufficient to allow employees of the Attorney General to ascertain the fact or event with reasonable particularity, and to identify each person believed to have knowledge with respect to the fact or event and each document that refers or relates to the fact or event.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"Relating to", "related to", "relate to" means to be relevant in any way to the subject matter in question, including without limitation all information that directly or indirectly contains, records, reflects, summarizes, evaluates, refers to, is pertinent to, indicates, comments upon, or discusses the subject matter; or that states the background of, or was the basis for, or that records, evaluates, comments, was referred to, relied upon, utilized, generated, transmitted, or received in arriving at any conclusion, opinion, estimate, position, decision, belief, policy, practice, course of business, course of conduct, procedure, or assertion concerning the subject matter.

"You", including your, means Media Matters for America, subsidiaries, partnerships, or any other entities related to Media Matters for America.

DEMAND FOR INFORMATION

Demand is hereby made upon you, under the authority granted by Section 407.040, RSMo, to produce in person or via mail to Michelle Starke, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102 by April __, 2024, the following documentary material and information that may be in your possession, custody or control, and permit the inspection and copying thereof:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- I have filed a lawsuit to force Media Matters to turn over documents regarding the solicitation of donations to bully advertisers into pulling out of X, one of the last platforms dedicated to free speech in America.

- Media Matters came under fire after allegations surfaced that the organization deceitfully manipulated X's algorithm to place advertisers' content next to contrived controversial posts, causing X to suffer astronomical financial losses when affected advertisers pulled their money from the site.

- Media Matters has been outspoken in its attempts to defame X and Elon Musk for their refusal to censor disfavored viewpoints.

- Media Matters has a sordid history of refusing to comply with fraud investigations.

    1. Sued Texas when Ken Paxton opened an investigation

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

    - I'm not going to let them stonewall us in our quest for truth.
        - If there has been any attempt to defraud Missourians in order to trample on their free speech rights, I will root it out and hold bad actors accountable.

- Type of documents requested:
    1. All donations from Missourians in the last year, so we can ensure every Missourian's charitable donation is being used as promised
    2. All documents surrounding how they market/advertise in Missouri, so we can ensure every Missourian's contribution is being used as promoted
    3. All documents surrounding the targeting of X, Elon Musk, or Missourians, so we can ensure we are protecting free speech rights

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Past Talking Points

- Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target one of the last social media platforms committed to free speech, X.

- Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.

- Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being ripped off by this scheme. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.

- Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1. Social media platforms
    - We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we just argued at SCOTUS
2. President Trump
    - We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates
3. The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms pervert the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of one of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.
    - Elon Musk controversy: Mr. Musk has clarified several times what his views are. The point is that anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. They made that post in order to get advertisers to pull out of X. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes

unchecked, the marketplace for free, fair and open debate will cease to exist

- The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.
    1. We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

Local media:

- Media Matters lied when they took money from everyday Americans and used it in a way different from how they advertised it
- Media Matters appears to have used coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country
    1. We have a law called the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act that gives the Attorney General the authority to prosecute deceptive, fraudulent or unfair business practices.
        - We have reason to believe Missourians have been affected by this behavior

Missouri high school where teen was brutally attacked refuses to give records to state's AG
FOX News l Stepheny Price

- After opening an investigation into the Missouri school district where a teenage girl was brutally beaten by another student, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey tells Fox News Digital that the school is refusing to comply. Last week, Bailey told Fox News Digital exclusively that he would open an investigation into the Hazelwood School District and how their diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) programs contributed to the safety failures following the violent attack. "Hazelwood owes the parents of the district and the entire community an explanation as to what role these radical programs and safety failures played here," Bailey's staff said, emphasizing that this is the focus of the investigation. After several days of silence from the Hazelwood School District, a spokesperson fired back at Bailey, claiming his investigation was full of inaccuracies. Bailey shared the email correspondence with Fox News exclusively….."My letter cited several sources for information, including publicly-available reporting and the District's own policies. The most egregious "error" you identify is an incorrect date reference that was reported in local media. As with any investigation, my office seeks to uncover facts surrounding the incident at issue. An incident you openly acknowledge involved Hazelwood East students," Bailey responded. "I'd like to clarify that my letter did not indicate that your "most egregious error" was the incorrect date (and time) of the incident. Your most egregious errors are your unsupported allegations that race was a factor in the incident and that school resource officers would have been on the scene of an incident that occurred after school hours and one-half mile from school property," Ownsby sent in a response email….Bailey said the investigation will determine whether the school district violated Missouri's Human Rights Act, which "guarantees every Missouri resident the right to be free from discrimination and the right to full enjoyment of places of public accommodation." Kaylee, the 16-year-old teen who was brutally attacked in the video that went viral, is reportedly breathing on her own, has been moved out of the ICU and remains in stable condition, according to an update on her GoFundMe page on Friday.

Missouri attorney general demands Hazelwood school records, blames media for errors

- JEFFERSON CITY — Missouri's attorney general is demanding Hazelwood School District turn over records for an investigation that the district said was "based on lies" and initially dismissed. Earlier this week, in a scathing response to Attorney General Andrew Bailey, the district said it would not provide the records until he "reframed" the request on the district's policies on bullying, law enforcement in schools and diversity, equity and inclusion efforts. After the district's initial response, Bailey sent a notice to the district on Tuesday demanding the records by 5 p.m. the next day. He argued that the district can't dismiss open records laws because it "disagree(s) with the investigation. By Wednesday afternoon, the district said it would indeed turn the records over — aiming to send them by April 15…..In its first response, sent by lawyer Cindy Reeds Ormsby, the school district accused Bailey of racial bias and "elevating political narrative above student safety." The Missouri chapter of the NAACP also criticized Bailey's investigation on Wednesday. President Nimrod Chapel Jr. said in a statement that read, in part: "Attorney General Bailey's blind eye to racism when the victim is Black is telling, but the use of the investigative power in his office to lift the harm suffered by a Caucasian student while ignoring the Black victims is nothing short of Jim Crow. It is outrageous that our tax dollars are funding his racist political talking points."

- New details were released Wednesday regarding a fight between students near Hazelwood East High School on March 8. The Missouri Attorney General and the school district continued a public back-and-forth on an investigation. Kaylee Gain, 16, was seriously injured in a fight in north St. Louis County. The fight was captured on video and widely circulated online. A Hazelwood District spokesperson confirmed that the day before the attack that injured Gain, there was another fight involving students from the school. The spokesperson says at least one student was suspended as a result of that fight. While the district wouldn't name the student who was suspended, an attorney for the suspect tells 5 On Your Side it was Gain. He says that the initial fight was the precursor to the fight the next day that left Gain critically injured. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey sent another letter Tuesday to Hazelwood School District demanding a response after sending an information request to investigate what caused the viral video involving two Hazelwood East students in a fight earlier this month. In the letter, Bailey addresses Hazelwood School District's attorney Cindy Reeds Ormsby. He begins the letter by saying he thinks there has been a misunderstanding on the district's end about the clear request and the overall nature of his office's investigation. According to a news release, Bailey's investigation will examine how the district's diversity, equity and inclusion programs could have contributed to the incident. He goes on to write, "In your letter, you allege 'inaccuracies' concerning the student fight that occurred earlier this month that resulted in serious injuries to a Hazelwood East High School student … My letter cited several sources for information, including publicly-available reporting and the District's own policies. The most egregious 'error' you identify is an incorrect date reference that was reported in local media. As with any investigation, my office seeks to uncover facts surrounding the incident at issue."

NAACP criticizes MO Atty. General's response to viral fight

- The Missouri State Conference of the NAACP is weighing in on a viral fight that left one teen fighting for her life and another facing criminal charges. The civil rights organization is calling a recent response by Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey harmful and politically motivated. John Bowman, president of the St. Louis County branch of the NAACP, said the Attorney General has not shown interest in getting involved in cases where the victims were Black. He views Bailey's call for an investigation into the Hazelwood School District's diversity, equity and inclusion training as an attempt at scoring political points. "That is clearly what is happening here," Bowman said. Bailey's call for an investigation came after FOX 2 reported on a past dispute between the Hazelwood School District and police over required diversity training. The dispute resulted in the absence of school resource officers at Hazelwood East High School…."We have to be very careful as responsible adults to not pour gasoline on a fire that needs to be put out," Bowman said.

Missouri attorney general is accused of racial bias for pinning a student fight on diversity program

- Days after Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey blamed an after-school fight on a school district's diversity programming, a lawyer for the majority Black district in suburban St. Louis said that the state's chief attorney is showing "obvious racial bias." Bailey, who is campaigning to keep his seat, said last week that he is investigating possible violations of the state's human rights laws by the Hazelwood School District, after a March 8 fight left a girl hospitalized with severe head injuries. Bailey blamed the school district's diversity, equity and inclusion programming as a cause for the fight, which St. Louis County police say happened after school hours in a neighborhood about two blocks from Hazelwood East High School. He said were it not for the programs, a school resource officer would have been present at the school. "I am launching an investigation into Hazelwood School District after a student was senselessly assaulted by another student in broad daylight," Bailey said in a statement. "The entire community deserves answers on how Hazelwood's radical DEI programs resulted in such despicable safety failures that has resulted in a student fighting for her life."…. Hazelwood spokeswoman Jordyn Elston said in a statement that the school district "does not prioritize DEI initiatives at the expense of student safety" and believes the programs help student safety and learning. "These values are not negotiable," Elston said, "and we will continue to prioritize them in all aspects of our work as community leaders."

Missouri Attorney General successfully defends Missouri meat labeling law

KTTN | Staff
https://www.kttn.com/missouri-attorney-general-successfully-defends-missouri-meat-labeling-law/

- Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced that his office successfully defended a state law protecting the integrity of advertising surrounding meat products. “Ensuring that food sold within the State of Missouri is marketed correctly is of vital importance to both consumers and the farmers and ranchers that produce that food,” said Attorney General Bailey. “I will continue to fight to defend the integrity of Missouri’s marketplace.” “When our association led this legislation nearly six years ago, we were the first state in the country to require labeling with integrity. The legislation in no way prohibited the sale or consumption of these imitation products but did require truthful and accurate labeling. Misleading consumers was unacceptable then, and it is clear with today’s decision that it’s unacceptable now. We are truly grateful for the work of Attorney General Andrew Bailey and his team,” said Missouri Cattlemen’s Association President Chuck Miller. The General Assembly passed the statute in 2018 with the intent to prohibit the use of advertising that falsely labels plant-based or lab-grown products as conventional meat or misleads consumers about the product. The statute requires producers of plant-based or lab-grown meat to disclose that they are plant-based or lab-grown so as not to mislead consumers. The statute only prohibits misrepresenting a product as “any edible portion of livestock, poultry, or captive cervid carcass” that is not derived from harvested production livestock or poultry. Siding with Attorney General Bailey, the Court noted that the General Assembly enacted the law “to reduce consumer confusion and ensure that consumers know what type of product they are purchasing.” The Court reasoned that “simply because lab-created or cultivated meat producers may be impacted by the Missouri Statute, but producers of harvested production livestock or poultry are not impacted, does not show that the Missouri Statute had a discriminatory purpose or make the Statute unconstitutional.” The Department of Agriculture worked closely with the Attorney General’s Office on this case.

Embattled Cape Girardeau County coroner seeks reelection amid legal turmoil

- Suspended Cape Girardeau County Coroner Wavis Jordan is running for reelection amid efforts by the Missouri attorney general to oust him from office. Jordan added his name to the list of candidates seeking office before filing deadline Tuesday, March 26. The AG’s office filed a Quo Warranto filing with the court Feb. 8 seeking to remove Jordan from office, alleging he engaged in misconduct and failed to perform his duties by entering the wrong cause of death for three people; failed to properly investigate the causes and manners of death of several individuals; failed to take the necessary steps to be prepared to investigate deaths; failed to obtain blood from two individuals who died in separate motor vehicle wrecks; and solicited family members regarding funeral arrangements of a deceased person. Shortly after the attorney general’s filing was entered into the court system, Jordan, when contacted by a newspaper reporter, said he didn’t want to comment, adding, "I don’t know if this is a racial issue or what." When reached by a newspaper reporter Wednesday, March 27, for questions regarding his reasons for running for reelection, Jordan told the reporter he would send a written statement to the newspaper. He didn’t say when he would do so. In addition to the state’s case to remove Jordan from office, the AG also filed criminal charges that allege he falsified three documents, all Class E felonies; and a misdemeanor that he stole less than $20 from a deceased person’s wallet. In the hours after the Quo Warranto was filed, a judge suspended Jordan from operating as the coroner, saying Jordan was not to go into the office or do anything in the official capacity of the coroner. Cape Girardeau County continues to pay Jordan while he is prohibited from working. An additional deputy coroner was hired to help handle the workload. The Cape Girardeau County Sheriff’s Office is overseeing the work of the coroner’s office while Jordan works through his court battles.

- The Missouri Senate Health and Welfare Committee heard testimony Wednesday from those in support of House Bills 1706 and 1539, which address human trafficking. The bills previously passed through the House in a 143-1 vote before being delivered to the Senate. “It's basically modern-day slavery and runs anywhere from escort services down to labor, trafficking and agricultural,” bill sponsor Rep. Jeff Myers, R-Warrenton, said. Myers is not the only one to define human trafficking this way. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey defines human trafficking as “a modern form of slavery involving the exploitation of a person for involuntary labor, services, debt bondage, or commercial sex through the use of force, fraud, or coercion; or in which the person induced to perform such acts has not yet attained 18 years of age.” ….HBs 1706 and 1539 would establish the Statewide Council Against Adult Trafficking and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and replace the Missouri Statewide Council on Sex Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation of Children which expired in 2023. Under the bills, a Committee on Sex and Human Trafficking Training would be responsible for evaluating and establishing guidelines for sex and human trafficking training. As recently as 2020, Missouri had the fourth-highest incidence rate of human trafficking in the country at 4.32 per 100,000 people, according to a 2023 report by the Missouri

She said she opposed the language in the bill that would require nurses to undergo human trafficking training, as she said there are no mechanisms currently in place to support that training. However, she said she supported the bill otherwise.

Missouri Attorney General sues Boone County contractor on fraud accusations

- Missouri's Attorney General Andrew Bailey is suing a Boone County contractor for allegedly failing to provide promised construction work to a customer. The lawsuit claims Walters and his company violated the Merchandising Practices Act and accuses both of false promises, misrepresentation, deception and unfair practice. The lawsuit was filed on March 5 and a summons was issued for Anthony Walters and Walters Carpentry LLC. The summons for Walters was returned on March 21 because he did not live at the listed address, according to notes written on the summons. According to the lawsuit, Anthony Walters was hired by a customer in October 2022 for a home renovation project. Walters completed three projects and continued to provide work for new projects. In November 2022, Walters signed a contract for a fence project costing $6,200 and requested $4,700 in advance for materials along with a promise to start work immediately, according to the lawsuit. He later also requested another $1,800 for materials, court documents claim. The lawsuit states between Nov. 15, 2022-Feb. 16, 2023, the victim said they reached out to Walters multiple times about his failure to finish the project as promised. He allegedly gave excuses and promised to start work the next day but never did. The petition claims that Walters worked on the fence on eight separate occasions between Nov. 15-Dec.15, 2022. Walters and workers allegedly dug fence post holes, put in 75% of the frame for the back portion of the property and put up 5 feet of "completed fence" near the driveway….In a news release sent on Tuesday, Bailey said "I will always fight for the rule of law, which includes holding individuals accountable for ripping off Missourians

Supreme Court Justice Clarence Says Comstock Act Should Ban Mail-Order Abortions Nationwide
https://www.lifenews.com/2024/03/27/supreme-court-justice-clarence-says-comstock-act-should-ban-mail-order-abortions-nationwide/

- During the Supreme Court hearing yesterday on the dangerous abortion pill mifepristone, Justice Clarence Thomas brought up the Comstock Act. The Comstock Act is an 1873 law that prohibits mailing of any “article or thing designed, adapted, or intended for producing abortion.” And it could be enforced to prohibit mail-order abortion sales nationwide — which is especially important given the fact that over a majority of abortions know involve the dangerous abortion drug that starves a baby to death and expels his or her body. In his ruling, U.S. District Judge Matthew Kacsmaryk quoted a federal law called the Comstock Act that prohibits mailing any type of abortion drug or device. And in its decision last year in the case, the 5th Circuit ruled that abortionists are no longer allowed to send chemical abortion drugs through the mail, which the FDA had been allowing since 2021, in direct violation of longstanding federal law. The appeals court agreed that the Comstock Act prohibits mailing abortion drugs and it said the doctors who brought the case had legal standing because they had treated so many women injured by abortion drugs…..“Federal law expressly prohibits using the mail to send or receive any drug that will ‘be used or applied for producing abortion,’” stated a letter from Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey. “The text could not be clearer…[However] In December, the Biden administration’s Office of Legal Counsel encouraged the U.S. Postal Service to disregard this plain text. But the text, not the Biden administration’s view, is what governs. And the Biden administration’s opinion fails to stand up even to the slightest amount of scrutiny.” Joining Attorney General Bailey with nearly identical letters were attorneys general from Alabama, Alaska, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, and West Virginia…..Coercion and abuse also are concerns. LifeNews has reported a number of stories in recent years about sex traffickers, abusive partners and parents forcing or tricking pregnant women and girls into aborting their unborn babies. A midwife with the abortion chain MSI Reproductive Health recently told the BBC that recognizing coercion is a big problem among abortion providers, and the new mail-order abortion practice makes it even worse.

SCOTUS Errs In Murthy v. Missouri By Assuming Big Tech Is Just Like Print Media

in June whether to uphold, modify, or strike down the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals' injunction against five federal agencies, in what, the district court judge wrote, "arguably involves the most massive attack against free speech in United States' history." At the hearing, Justice Samuel Alito pointed out that emails between the White House and Facebook "showed constant pestering of Facebook." He went on to comment, "I cannot imagine federal officials taking this approach to the print media. … It's treating these platforms like subordinates." He then asked the government's attorney, "Would you treat The New York Times or The Wall Street Journal this way? Do you think the print media considers themselves 'partners' with government? I can't imagine the federal government doing that to them." The government's attorney had to admit, "The anger is unusual" — referring to White House official Rob Flaherty literally cursing at a Facebook executive and berating him for not taking action quickly enough to comply with the government's censorship demands. Justice Brett Kavanaugh followed up, asking, "On the anger point, do you think federal government officials regularly call up journalists and berate them?" It's worth recalling that Kavanaugh worked as a White House attorney before he was appointed to the court, as did Justices John Roberts and Elena Kagan. No doubt there were times they dialed a journalist or editor to try to convince them to change a story, clarify a factual assertion, or even hold or quash the publication of a piece. Kavanaugh admitted, "It's not unusual for the government to claim national security or wartime necessity to suppress a story." Perhaps colorful language is sometimes used in these conversations, as Kavanaugh himself hinted. Kagan concurred: "Like Justice Kavanaugh, I have had some experience encouraging the press to suppress its own speech. … This happens literally thousands of times a day in the federal government." With a wink to the other former executive branch attorneys on the bench, Roberts quipped, "I have no experience coercing anyone," which generated a rare chuckle from the bench and audience. This analogy to government interactions with print media, however, does not hold in the case of the government's relationship with social media. There are several crucial differences that profoundly change the power dynamic of those interactions in ways directly relevant to our case. These differences facilitate, in Alito's words, the government treating the platforms like subordinates in ways that would be impossible with print media….But if the justices want to distinguish between persuasion and coercion in the injunction, they need to appreciate that social media companies operate in a very different relationship with government than traditional print media. These asymmetrical power dynamics create a relationship ripe for unconstitutional government coercion.

Missouri Court Allows University to Reclassify Restricted Endowment Funds Under UPMIFA

https://www.jdsupra.com/legalnews/missouri-court-allows-university-to-1148701/

- Earlier this month, a Missouri state court allowed Webster University to reclassify various donor-restricted endowment funds as unrestricted endowment funds so the funds could be held as collateral to help Webster meet a 75% minimum liquidity ratio requirement set forth in a loan agreement Webster entered into in 2011. In re Webster University, No. 24SL-CC00511 (Mo. Cir. Ct., St. Louis, Mar. 1, 2024) (unpublished). Pursuant to Missouri's version of the Uniform Prudent Management of Institutional Funds Act (UPMIFA, R.S. Mo. §§ 402.130–402.148), "if a particular … restriction contained in a gift instrument on the use of an institutional fund becomes … impracticable … the court … may modify … the restriction … in a manner consistent with the charitable purposes expressed in the gift instrument." Without reclassification of the restricted funds, Webster would have been unable to achieve the required 75% liquidity ratio. And if the issuer of Webster's outstanding bonds were to provide notice of an alleged breach of the loan agreement due to Webster's failure to maintain the required liquidity ratio, Webster's viability as an educational institution could be impacted. Thus, Webster argued that "the current crisis in higher education and its impact on Webster University made the restrictions currently present on the [funds] impractical." As required under UPMIFA, in connection with filing its petition, Webster notified the Missouri attorney general of its plans to remove the restrictions on the funds. The attorney general's office declined to object. The court agreed with Webster, finding that releasing the donor restrictions was consistent with and related to the purposes for which the funds were created — "to promote high-quality learning experiences by well-qualified professors for all students, regardless of financial need." Nonetheless, the court made clear that reclassification of the funds was a temporary adjustment, and that donor restrictions must be reinstated once: (1) Webster experiences at least one full year of budget surplus, (2) the ratio of unrestricted assets to outstanding long-term indebtedness is 100%, and (3) Webster is compliant with all bond or loan-related agreements…..Similarly, the U.S. Department of Education in recent years has substantially revised its "financial responsibility" requirements for continued institutional participation in the federal student financial aid programs, including enumerating various fiscal events that institutions must report to the Department and that may require institutions to provide it with letters of credit.

Attorney General files suit against Media Matters over alleged anti-X initiatives

https://www.teslarati.com/attorney-general-sues-media-matters-anti-x-initiatives/

- Attorney General Andrew Bailey has filed a lawsuit against Media Matters of America in an attempt to force the nonprofit to turn over documents that are allegedly related to its efforts to bully advertisers out of social media X. Media Matters published a report last year claiming X was showing advertisements from major corporations alongside extremist content.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

X has defended itself against Media Matters' claims, arguing that the nonprofit essentially manipulated the social media platform's system by specifically following accounts only known to produce provocative content and accounts of the company's big-time advertisers. X noted that Media Matters then reportedly scrolled and refreshed its feed an unnatural number of times until a screenshot could be taken showing paid posts from a major advertiser next to controversial content. In a press release, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey noted that he launched an investigation into Media Matters' practices after alleged evidence came to light suggesting that the nonprofit was soliciting "donations from Missourians under false pretenses to target X." This, the Attorney General argued, was "in direct violation of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act." "My office has reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to bully advertisers into pulling out of X, the last social media platform dedicated to free speech in America, so we launched an investigation to get to the bottom of it. However, Media Matters has a sordid history of refusing to cooperate with investigations. I'm not going to let this activist group stonewall us. If there has been any attempt to defraud Missourians in order to trample on their free speech rights, I will root it out and hold bad actors accountable," Bailey wrote. …Media Matters has responded to the Missouri Attorney General's legal action. In a comment, Media Matters President Angelo Carusone criticized Elon Musk, stating that the investigation is meritless and it is a way for the CEO to punish his critics. He also noted that the lawsuit is part of an attempt to curb free speech. "Far from the free speech advocate he claims to be, Elon Musk has actually intensified his efforts to undermine free speech by enlisting Republican attorneys general across the country to initiate meritless, expensive, and harassing investigations against Media Matters in an attempt to punish critics. This Missouri investigation is the latest in a transparent endeavor to squelch the First Amendment rights of researchers and reporters; it will have a chilling effect on news reporters," Carusone noted.

- A federal judge's decision this week reprimanding Elon Musk's X will have reverberating effects on efforts to hold influential online platforms accountable, legal experts and advocacy groups say. On Monday, District Judge Charles Breyer dismissed and excoriated a lawsuit by X against online watchdog group Center for Countering Digital Hate as an attempt to silence the non-profit group for sounding alarms about hate speech on the platform. Breyer wrote in Monday's order that the lawsuit was "unabashedly" about "punishing" reports written by CCDH, which X had accused of campaigning to drive away its advertisers. Breyer held that the reports were "unquestionably" protected by the group's free speech rights…..As recently as Monday, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed a petition in state court seeking to compel Media Matters' cooperation with his investigation. The filing came a week after he appeared with Musk in a live event on X — which Carusone said shows how Musk hopes to deputize the power of government to silence his critics. "They have every reason to do it," Carusone said of the AGs' investigations. "They get the political benefits, they get the attention. There doesn't seem to be any cost to them yet. And if they are successful at developing this new playbook, this new terrain, legally, then it's going to pave the way for them to just use this tool and tactic over and over and over again." A representative for X did not immediately respond to a request for comment about Carusone's claims…Ultimately, Benavidez called the ruling "a reminder that platform accountability is essential and will inevitably prevail when up against bullies like Musk who try to silence us."

Kaylee Gain out of coma, begins speaking after brutal beatdown by high school classmate
https://nypost.com/2024/03/30/us-news/missouri-teen-kaylee-gain-out-of-coma-begins-speech-therapy-after-beatdown/

- The Missouri teen who slipped into a coma after her head was mercilessly bashed into the pavement in a twisted after-school brawl has slowly begun the road to recovery — but has no recollection of the beating. Kaylee Gain, 16, has "been able to engage in limited verbal conversations" in the week since she was moved out of the intensive care unit, her family announced Friday. "Kaylee also recently began speech therapy, and has gone on a few short walks with the assistance of hospital staff as she is still unable to ambulate on her own," attorney Bryan Kaemmerer, a spokesperson for Gains, said in a statement. "However, Kaylee does not have any recollection of the altercation that led to her hospitalization."…. Gain's family — as well as Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey — have been pushing for the unnamed girl to be tried as an adult for the vicious crime.

Family of teen injured in fight near Hazelwood East wants accused teen charged as adult

- The family of Kaylee Gain, a 16-year-old girl hospitalized after a fight near Hazelwood East High School earlier this month, wants another teenager accused in the fight to be charged as an adult. The family's attorney, Bryan M. Kaemmerer of the law firm McCarthy, Leonard & Kaemmerer, released a statement Friday to FOX 2 that addresses more information around the fight and Gain's condition. One part of the statement near the end reads as follows: "Given these circumstances, the family believes trying the accused as an adult is the most appropriate way to provide the justice that Kaylee deserves."…. The fight has been subject to national attention, recently in the form of a controversy between Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey and the Hazelwood School District. On March 22, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey sent a letter to Dr. Nettie Collins-Hart, superintendent of the Hazelwood School District, and local media to notify them that his office had begun an investigation into the district's mandated training of Hazelwood East school resource officers.

- The family of the 15 year-old suspect, who was allegedly seen in a viral video slamming another girls head to the pavement, is pleading for mercy in the handling of the incident. "Prior to an incident on March 8th where she was seen defending herself from harassment and bullying, she had never been in trouble," her family wrote in a Change.org petition, obtained by the New York Post, asking Chief Juvenile Officer Rick Gaines not to charge her as an adult….The Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is saying he wants the 15 year old suspect to be tried as an adult.

Legal Challenges to Biden's SAVE Plan Ramp Up
Inside Higher Ed | Katherine Knott

- Acoalition of 11 Republican-led states is suing the Biden administration to block its new student loan repayment plan.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Kansas is leading the lawsuit. Filed Thursday, the lawsuit argues that the plan, known as Saving on a Valuable Education (SAVE), exceeds the Education Department's authority, hurts the states' bottom lines and is just another version of the broad-based debt-relief plan that the Supreme Court struck down last summer in Biden v. Nebraska. "The law simply does not allow Biden to do what he wants to do," Kansas attorney general Kris Kobach said in a news release. "Biden is trying to exercise the powers of a king rather than the powers of a President in a constitutional republic." Kobach is joined in the suit by attorneys general from Alabama, Alaska, Idaho, Iowa, Louisiana, Montana, Nebraska, South Carolina, Texas, and Utah. Missouri attorney general Andrew Bailey, who was a plaintiff in Biden v. Nebraska, announced Thursday that he's also leading a multi-state coalition to bring a similar legal challenge to SAVE. "Between our two coalitions of states, we will get this matter in front of a judge even more quickly to deliver a win for the American people," Bailey said in a statement.

Google Threatens to Demonetize Wall Street Watchdog as GOP Targets Ad Collusion
https://georgiastarnews.com/news/google-threatens-to-demonetize-wall-street-watchdog-as-gop-targets-ad-collusion/jtnews/2024/03/30/

- Google's artificial intelligence isn't particularly bright when it comes to evaluating publishers' compliance with its advertising policies, if the experience of a heterodox economics blog with outsized influence is any indication. With a megaphone from Twitter Files journalist Matt Taibbi, both darlings of progressives in the "Occupy Wall Street" era, Naked Capitalism accused Google of making "flagrant errors" in its threats to demonetize the 18-year-old site for verboten content. The Alphabet-owned company made censorship demands that were "not advertiser-driven," listed "non-existent posts in the spreadsheet" shown Naked Capitalism, and issued "wildly inaccurate negative classifications" of its content, according to editor "Yves Smith," the pen name of Aurora Advisors founder Susan Webber. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, who with Louisiana is suing the feds for coercing social media to censor certain narratives, sued Media Matters for America for refusing to cooperate with his investigation of its allegedly fraudulent campaign to scare advertisers away from X, as it did with a similar Texas investigation.

Missouri AG sues Media Matters as Republicans take on critics of Musk's X

- The attorney general of Missouri is suing Media Matters, a progressive watchdog group, alleging that it failed to turn over internal documents following its 2023 coverage of hate speech on the social media platform X. The head of the group says news outlets could be the next targets. The lawsuit, filed by Missouri's attorney general, Andrew Bailey, on Monday, marks the second time that GOP officials have taken legal action against Media Matters to support Elon Musk, X's billionaire owner. In November, the Texas attorney general, Ken Paxton, launched an investigation into Media Matters, describing the group as a "radical anti-free speech organization". "These state attorney generals, first Paxton and now Bailey, are directly responding to Musk's pleas. They are helping him punish critics," said Angelo Carusone, president of Media Matters….Carusone said it should be "alarming for everybody, especially the media", that two state attorney general's offices appear eager to become a personal injury law firm for a tech billionaire. Bailey's lawsuit lays out a blueprint for punishing newsrooms that dare print negative stories about X or Musk, Carusone warned.

Hazelwood East fight victim still has 'significant cognitive impairment,' family says
St. Louis Post-Dispatch | Dana Rieck
https://www.stltoday.com/news/local/crime-courts/hazelwood-east-fight-victim-still-has-significant-cognitive-impairment-family-says/article_6756fbc0-f0f4-11ee-8a81-6b18e6e53185.html

- The teen severely beaten in an after-school fight near Hazelwood East High School is still "showing signs of significant cognitive impairment," her family said Monday evening. Kaylee Gain's family members also acknowledged the falsehood of their previous accusations that the teen suspect, Maurnice DeClue, "showed an utter lack of remorse" in social media posts in the hours after the fight. The post bragged about the fight, but a cursory investigation revealed that Maurnice could not have written it because she was already housed in juvenile detention. The family's latest statement came hours after a juvenile court hearing was held Monday for Maurnice, charged with first-degree assault in the fight. They said they were encouraged that those close to Maurnice said she wanted to apologize, but still insist the teen be tried as an adult in court — a decision which will be made by a judge at a May 10 hearing. Last week Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey launched an investigation into how the Hazelwood School District's diversity, equity and inclusion practices "contributed" to the fight, which appeared to involve a Black student beating a white student. Neither police nor the school district have said race was a factor in the fight, which happened about a quarter-mile from the school….. .

Teen accused of attacking Kaylee Gain 'wants to apologize' — as victim wakes from coma
https://nypost.com/2024/04/02/us-news/teen-accused-of-attacking-kaylee-gain-wants-to-apologize/

- The Missouri teen accused of bashing Kaylee Gain's head into the pavement in a viral after-school beatdown is prepared to apologize for the horrific attack, according to her family. The suspect, who has been identified as 15-year-old Maurnice DeClue, has been charged with assault for allegedly leaving Gain with a skull fracture and brain bleed in the March 8 attack near Hazelwood East High School in Spanish Lake. DeClue was "dismayed to hear" that Gain was in a coma for so long and "wants to apologize" to her peer, her parents, Consuela and Ronald DeClue, told KSDK in a phone call. On Monday, a lawyer for Gain's family said the teen showed "signs of significant cognitive impairment." She was repeating herself over and over after waking from the coma. She also has no recollection of the shocking brawl, attorney Bryan Kaemmerer said. Gain's family said they want DeClue charged as an adult "given the particularly violent nature of this assault, and also taking into account the devastating injuries that Kaylee has incurred," according to the news outlet….Consuela also reacted to an erroneous claim by Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, who incorrectly assumed no guards were present at the school — and wrongly tried to link their absence and the fight to the school board's embrace of a diversity, equity and inclusion program.

by filing a complaint against Florida-based real estate brokerage MV Realty and certain affiliates for filing unfair real estate fee agreements in property records, known as Non-Title Recorded Agreements for Personal Services (NTRAPS). This practice preys upon homeowners, offering small cash gifts in exchange for decades-long contracts for the exclusive rights to sell the property. "The property rights of American homebuyers must be protected," said ALTA Vice President of Government Affairs Elizabeth Blosser. "A home often is a consumer's largest investment, and we have to ensure there are no unreasonable restraints on a homebuyer's future ability to sell or refinance their property due to unwarranted transactional costs." "This is a great step taken by Attorney General Bailey to protect consumers and we urge the Missouri legislature to pass legislation to curb such predatory business, so that the judiciary and the legislature are aligned in protecting homeowners and their rights," said AARP Government Affairs Director Samar Jha. Attorney General Bailey is the 10th attorney general to sue MV Realty over its "Homeowner Benefit Program." Nine other attorneys general have filed lawsuits, including those in Georgia, New Jersey, Florida, Massachusetts, Ohio, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, California and Indiana. "We thank Attorney General Bailey for filing suit against MV Realty and its affiliates," said Cheryl Cowherd, President of the Missouri Land Title Association. "A home is often a consumer's most important asset, and we believe protecting them from these practices is of the utmost importance. This action puts companies using predatory business models on notice that the State of Missouri is serious about protecting its consumers."

Missouri AG leads 8-state coalition against robocall violator

https://www.kttn.com/missouri-ag-leads-8-state-coalition-against-robocall-violator/#google_vignette

- To protect Missouri consumers, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey and a coalition of seven other attorneys general filed a motion to ban John Caldwell Spiller II from engaging in all telephone-related services after Spiller violated permanent robocall and telemarketing bans. “As Attorney General, I will enforce the laws as written, which includes holding accountable those who blast Missourians with unwanted phone calls,” said Attorney General Bailey. “State law protects consumers from being taken advantage of by robocallers. My office will continue to work around the clock to halt this unlawful communication.” In March 2023, Attorney General Bailey obtained judgments shutting down a massive robocall operation involving Spiller and other defendants. As part of the judgment, Spiller was banned from making robocalls or engaging in telemarketing. But despite this permanent injunction, Spiller continued to harass people by making deceptive and abusive robocalls and by helping others make these calls. Spiller used aliases and falsified business records filed in various states and with the Federal Communications Commission to continue this illegal business. Further, since the attorneys general sued him and his co-defendants, Spiller has set up at least three new businesses through which he engaged in telemarketing and facilitated robocalls. The attorneys general are asking that the Court order Spiller to dissolve his existing telephone service companies and ban him from transmitting telephone calls over the U.S. telephone network, providing any VoIP services, engaging in text messaging services, and originating or facilitating ringless voicemail messages or any other electronic messages. They also ask that Spiller be ordered to pay $122,339,320 – the amount that would have otherwise been suspended if Spiller had followed the rules of the permanent injunction and the Court’s order. Since he failed to do so, he is obligated to pay the full amount. Attorney General Bailey is joined in filing this motion by the attorneys general of Arkansas, Indiana, Michigan, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, and Texas. If you are receiving unwanted calls, you can fill out the form to be placed on both the federal and state No-Call List at ago.mo.gov or report violations of this list at 1-(800) 392-8222

Murthy v. Missouri Among Most Important First Amendment Cases of the Century: Jeff Landry (Note: story refers to previous Mo. AG)

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/murthy-v-missouri-among-most-important-first-amendment-cases-of-the-century-jeff-landry-5617903

- All eyes have been on the Supreme Court, where justices have recently heard oral arguments in Murthy v. Missouri. This landmark case is about defining appropriate government powers in relation to Americans’ First Amendment rights on social media. Among those watching closely is Louisiana Gov. Jeff Landry, who, during his tenure as Louisiana’s attorney general, co-filed the initial challenge—originally named Missouri v. Biden—against the Biden administration alongside Missouri Attorney General Eric Schmitt. The case is now called Murthy v. Missouri. Mr. Landry told EpochTV’s American Thought Leaders program in a March 19 interview about the defining moment coming from the case. The former attorney general said that the outcome will determine “whether or not American citizens can express their views that may be contrary to the government’s position” without fear of the government pressuring social media platforms to take down their content. “I do believe it’s one of the most important First Amendment cases in the last 100 years,” he said….“We thought it [the internet] was free from government intervention. And what we’re finding is that the government—when it doesn’t like some of the things that you say or post when it’s contrary to what the rhetoric is that they believe in—have the ability to go in and pressure and coerce new social platforms to either take you down or put you in ‘Facebook jail,’ moderate your content, or simply just eviscerate you from that virtual public square.” This is why Mr. Landry joined Missouri v. Biden…

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"Sometimes the justices have a tendency to tip their hand," he explained. "Sometimes they're asking questions just to maybe vet something that was vexing them. It doesn't mean that that's the position they're taking," he said, hoping that the inquiries made into exemptions to the First Amendment will not be the future direction of the case. "I don't know. We'll see in June maybe when the court makes a decision, maybe sooner."

The Gender Machine: The Truth About Gender Clinics

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/the-gender-machine-the-truth-about-gender-clinics-5599592?cmt=1

- In a recent episode of "American Thought Leaders," host Jan Jekielek talks with Jamie Reed, who worked as a case manager at a pediatric gender clinic. After witnessing the irreversible effect that "gender-affirming" care was having on children, she decided to speak out. She was recently instrumental in Missouri state legislation that extends the statute of limitations for those harmed by gender treatment. That fear of liability, claims Ms. Reed, was enough to close her former gender clinic. The state of Missouri passed a law to impose a four-year moratorium on any new pediatric patient starting a puberty blocker, cross-sex hormones, or having surgery. There was a grandfather clause, so anyone already on these treatments could continue….I read the affidavit you provided to the Missouri Attorney General. It's utterly shocking. You fully bought into the whole approach at one point. Please tell us how you got into this field: Ms. Reed: I've spent years in social work doing case management, working with individuals who are coming into their own, being a teen, and learning how to navigate adulthood. I was working with young adults who were HIV-positive. A lot of the individuals were trans-identified, so I became an expert in trans issues within that setting…..

"It Has Always Been About Power": Missouri AG Blasts the Biden Admin's Assault on Free Speech (Watch)

https://www.louderwithcrowder.com/bailey-free-speech

- Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey appeared on today's show to discuss the fight for free speech. Bailey filed a federal lawsuit with Louisiana in 2022, alleging the federal government colluded with social media platforms to suppress the right to freedom of speech. "I believe in the right to free speech. I believe in the Constitution. I believe that the rights codified in the Bill of Rights come from God, not man and I believe that those rights are inalienable," Bailey said. Last year, a federal judge said that the Biden administration engaged in "the most massive attack against free speech in United States history," and that the federal government has "blatantly ignored the First Amendment's right to free speech," because they believed they had a mandate "to control the process of acquiring knowledge." "The whole purpose is to protect us from the government and it's the role of the government to protect our rights. What I see from the Biden administration is the weaponization of the government to violate our rights," Bailey said. Bailey said this is not just related to free speech and that Biden has also weaponized the government to go after the Second Amendment. And that when the government has gone after the First Amendment, it has been exclusively regarding Conservative speech. "We have got to build a wall of separation between tech and the state to protect our First Amendment rights," Bailey said.

https://firstamendmentcoalition.org/2024/04/musk-gaining-gop-allies-in-fending-off-criticism-of-x-and-hate-speech/

- Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is defending multi-billionaire Elon Musk and X by suing Media Matters for its investigations of hate speech on X. Bailey claims Media Matters fraudulently manipulated data to show that X placed ads for leading brands next to Nazi posts. Bailey's lawsuit seeks internal documents on its 2023 coverage of X and hate speech. It follows the move by Texas attorney general, Ken Paxton who is investigating Media Matters as a "radical anti-free speech organization." Media Matters contends that Musk is lining up Republicans to help him fight any attempts to criticize X for its extremism and hate speech content.

Podcast

The Concept

Provide Missouri taxpayers with a weekly 10 minute podcast to keep them informed on impactful and news-worthy cases, litigation, etc. that comes from the Missouri Attorney General's Office.

Basic Outline

Initially, we'll start with a 10 minute time frame.

5-6 minutes with Andrew Bailey

3-4 minutes with someone else from the office with an interesting case or story to discuss

1-2 minutes of something less impactful but still of interest to Missourians. Maybe something a little 'lighter'

I would suggest these as loose guidelines…not set in stone…. especially when we first launch

Sample Topics

I think this will be easy as there is impactful news on a regular basis coming out of our office. However I would also suggest coming up with at least 20 topics that would carry us out for a few months. If we were doing a podcast this week, I would suggest the topic could have been the Daniel Riley case that's unfolding in St. Louis and how that ties in to the entire Kim Gardner story.

Other topics:

Mo. V. Biden.

Podcasting Host

We'll want to make sure it's uploaded at AGO website

A podcast hosting platform, site, or service stores (and in some cases, distributes) audio content to listeners. They work by creating an RSS feed for your podcast, which is a public URL that listening platforms use to gather show and episode details.

All hosting sites provide RSS feeds, but not all distribute them to listening platforms. If your host or hosting plan doesn't offer podcast distribution, you can do that manually. Submitting your podcast to major listening platforms such as Apple Podcasts and Spotify ensures you're making the show available to listeners, regardless of which platform they use to tune in.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Free podcast hosting exists, but you will likely give up a few important things—like unlimited podcast publishing and the ability to monetize your show.

Frankly, unless you only plan to publish a few episodes and have no intention of trying to generate revenue, you'll want to pay for hosting. Paid services typically give deep audience insights and data, sufficient audio storage, monetization via podcast advertising, and distribution to major listening platforms.

That said, it's fairly easy to switch hosting platforms. So if you want to do a trial run with a free hosting platform and then move to a paid platform when things get serious, you can—just check your host's requirements for transferring shows first.

7 more states sue to block Biden's student loan handout plan as lawsuits pile up
FOX Business | Anders Hagstrom
https://www.foxbusiness.com/politics/7-more-states-sue-block-bidens-student-loan-handout-plan-lawsuits-pile

- President Biden's administration faces yet another lawsuit as a growing number of states seek to block his student loan handout plan, with Missouri and six other states filing a complaint on Tuesday. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey's lawsuit argues that Biden's "SAVE" plan, announced in February, is illegal and would cost American taxpayers $475 billion. Bailey's lawsuit comes just weeks after Kansas and 10 other states sued the Biden administration over the same plan. "With the stroke of his pen, Joe Biden is attempting to saddle working Missourians with a half trillion dollars in debt. The United States Constitution makes clear that the President lacks the authority to unilaterally 'cancel' student loan debt for millions of Americans without express permission from Congress," Bailey told Fox News Digital. "The President does not get to thwart the Constitution when it suits his political agenda. I'm filing suit to halt his embarrassing attempt to buy the 2024 election in direct violation of the law. The Constitution will continue to mean something as long as I'm Attorney General." Joining Bailey in the lawsuit are the attorneys general of Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Ohio, Oklahoma and North Dakota. Missouri and Arkansas both participated in the lawsuit that ultimately brought an end to Biden's previous student loan plan last year. The Supreme Court decided 6-3 that Biden's plan was unconstitutional. "President Biden has already lost on this question once, and he is refusing to follow the law. The Supreme Court could not have been clearer: President Biden cannot unilaterally cancel student debt and force taxpayers to bear the multi-billion-dollar cost," Arkansas AG Tim Griffin told Fox News Digital. The lawsuit argues that Biden's SAVE plan is part of "a long but troubling pattern of the President relying on innocuous language from decades-old statutes to impose drastic, costly policy changes on the American people without their consent." The White House did not immediately respond to a request for comment from Fox News Digital, but the Biden administration previously defended the SAVE program against the lawsuit led by Kansas. "The Department does not comment on pending litigation. However, Congress gave the U.S. Department of Education the authority to define the terms of income-driven repayment plans in 1993, and the SAVE plan is the fourth time the Department has used that authority," an Education Department spokesperson said at the time. "The Biden-Harris Administration won't stop fighting to provide support and relief to borrowers across the country – no matter how many times Republican elected officials try to stop us." Tuesday's lawsuit lands just one day after Biden announced yet another plan to cancel student loan debt. This latest one focuses on cutting loans that have exceeded their principal amount due to interest. It would cut up to $20,000 in accrued interest for borrowers, but borrowers who make less than $120,000 or couples who make less than $240,000 would be allowed to cut all of their accrued interest beyond the principal amount. The result would see roughly 23 million Americans having their loans cut down to the principal amount. While Bailey has no legal action to announce regarding the interest cut, he said his office is monitoring it. "We beat his unlawful student loan plan in court last summer, so he quickly rolled out Plan B. Now that we're challenging that, he's panicked and is rolling out a Plan C. We will continue to watch him closely and take action whenever he's overstepped his authority," Bailey told Fox.

Missouri AG calls Biden's latest student loan plan 'illegal'

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced his participation in a lawsuit against President Joe Biden for his most recent loan "cancelation" plan. Bailey joined the effort initially begun by Kansas as part of a multi-state effort. He is filing his own effort regarding the loan "cancelation" plan. “I’m extremely pleased to see Kansas is leading a multi-state coalition in challenging President Biden’s latest attempt to unlawfully transfer hundreds of thousands of dollars in Ivy League debt onto working Missouri families," Bailey said in a news release. "I’m pleased to share that my office is also leading a multi-state coalition and will be filing suit in Missouri in the coming days." Bailey said he believes the two coalitions will bring the matter before a judge quickly. "Between our two coalitions of states, we will get this matter in front of a judge even more quickly to deliver a win for the American people," Bailey said. "The Supreme Court sided with Missouri on this matter the first time. I look forward to bringing home yet another win for the Constitution and the rule of law." Bailey wants to challenge what he deemed an illegal attempt to shift Ivy League debt onto Missouri families. Arkansas Attorney General Tim Griffin, who was part of the original coalition that sued the Biden administration over a previous debt-cancellation plan, echoed Bailey's sentiments. "Arkansas was part of the original coalition that sued the Biden administration over its first unlawful debt-cancellation plan," Griffin said. "President Biden has already lost on this question once, and he is refusing to follow the law. The Supreme Court could not have been clearer: President Biden cannot unilaterally cancel student debt and force taxpayers to bear the multi-billion-dollar cost." Griffin criticized Biden for what he sees as a refusal to follow the law, highlighting the Supreme Court's stance from the previous decision by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court had ruled in favor of Bailey's previous challenge to the Biden Administration's student loan plan, deeming it unconstitutional in a 6-3 decision. The court cited the plan's significant impact on the federal budget, exceeding $430 billion, without explicit approval from Congress. Central to the Supreme Court's decision was the recognition that Missouri's student loan servicing company, MOHELA, operates as an arm of the state government. This acknowledgment granted states the standing to challenge the student loan plan. Bailey expressed optimism about securing another legal victory for the Constitution and the rule of law, building on the Court's previous ruling in Missouri's favor. In the previous decision by the United States Supreme Court, the court ruled 6-3 in favor of Bailey's challenge against the Biden Administration's unilateral student loan debt repayment plan. The court found the plan, which aimed to transfer hundreds of billions of dollars in debt, unconstitutional due to its massive impact on the federal budget without explicit Congressional approval. Bailey said the previous decision prevented an abuse of power that would burden working Americans. The Attorney General's Office did not respond to requests for comment.

Biden to push student loan boundaries to connect with younger voters
Conservative News Daily l Haisten Willis

- President Joe Biden is set to introduce a new plan for mass student loan forgiveness, igniting a political showdown with Republicans as he courts younger voters for the 2024 election. It will be Biden’s second attempt, following legal challenges to his previous initiatives. The upcoming proposal, expected to be more focused, aims to address specific borrower groups. President Joe Biden is poised to unveil a fresh initiative for widespread student loan forgiveness, sparking a political clash with Republicans while appealing to younger voters ahead of the 2024 election. This marks Biden’s second endeavor after facing legal obstacles with earlier efforts. The new proposal is anticipated to target specific borrower demographics. President Joe Biden is expected to announce a new attempt at mass student loan forgiveness, setting up another battle with Republicans as he looks to woo younger voters in the 2024 election. It will be his second, and in some respects his third, try to make good on a 2020 campaign promise to cancel student loans, with high political and financial stakes. “From day one of my administration, I promised to fix broken student loan programs and make sure higher education is a ticket to the middle class, not a barrier to opportunity,” Biden said on March 21. “I won’t back down from using every tool at my disposal to deliver student debt relief to more Americans and build an economy from the middle out and bottom up.” The range and power of those tools will be fiercely debated between now and Election Day. Biden’s original student loans plan would have written off up to $20,000 in debt per borrower but was ruled illegal by the Supreme Court. He’s since announced another $144 billion in cancellation and a plan to lower future repayments, which is now also the subject of lawsuits. Whatever Biden rolls out this time will probably wind up in court as well. “We beat Joe Biden’s unlawful student loan plan in court last summer, so he quickly rolled out Plan B,” Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey said in a statement to the Washington Examiner. “Now that we’re challenging that, he’s panicked and is rolling out a Plan C. We will continue to watch the federal government closely and take action whenever they’ve overstepped their authority.”…. Opponents point out that “forgiven” loans do not disappear but instead fall on the backs of taxpayers. The Penn Wharton Budget Model estimated that Biden’s Saving on a Valuable Education Plan alone could add $475 billion to the national debt over 10 years.

Missouri to reduce risk of suffering if man requires surgical procedure at execution

https://fox2now.com/news/missouri/missouri-to-reduce-risk-of-suffering-if-man-requires-surgical-procedure-at-execution/

- The Missouri Department of Corrections is taking measures to reduce Brian Dorsey 's risk of suffering during his execution scheduled for Tuesday, according to a settlement reached between the state and Dorsey’s attorneys. The settlement filed Saturday ends a federal lawsuit that said Dorsey could face tremendous pain if required to undergo what's known as a cutdown procedure to find a suitable vein for injection of the lethal dose of pentobarbital. Dorsey, 52, is awaiting execution for killing his cousin and her husband in 2006. Dorsey is described as obese, has diabetes and is a former intravenous drug user — all factors that could make it more difficult to find a vein for injection, his lawyers have said. A cutdown procedure involves an incision that could be several inches wide, then the use of forceps to pull apart tissue to get to a vein. Missouri's execution protocol includes no provision for anesthetics. Attorneys for Dorsey had argued that without a local anesthetic, Dorsey could be in so much pain that it would impede his right to religious freedom in his final moments by preventing him from having meaningful interaction with his spiritual adviser, including the administration of last rites. The settlement doesn't spell out the specific changes agreed to by the state, or if anesthetics would be used if a cutdown procedure is necessary. Messages were left Monday with the corrections department and the Missouri Attorney General's Office.

Could crackdown on free speech in Brazil be U.S.’s future? Is Elon Musk our Tiananmen Square ‘Tank Man’?

- Brazil is “on the brink” of shutting down free speech online – but may only be further down the same path President Biden is blazing in the U.S. Leading free speech activist Michael Shellenberger reported this weekend that a Brazilian Supreme Court justice had ordered a crackdown on posts and accounts on X/Twitter there. Justice Alexandre de Moraes, says Shellenberger, "illegally demanded that Twitter reveal private information about Twitter users who used hashtags he considered inappropriate. He demanded access to Twitter's internal data, violating the platform's policy. He censored, on his own initiative and without any respect for due process, posts on Twitter by parliamentarians from the Brazilian Congress. And Moraes tried to turn Twitter's content moderation policies into a weapon against supporters of then-president Jair Bolsonaro." Shellenberger claims "Google, Facebook, Uber, WhatsApp and Instagram" went along with the free speech crackdown, which "betrayed the people of Brazil. If such evidence is proven, the executives of these companies behaved like cowards: they provided the Brazilian government with personal registration data and telephone numbers without a court order and, therefore, [violated] the law." When X/Twitter owner Elon Musk openly defied the Brazilian judge and refused to hand over "private user information, including direct messages, the government attempted to sue Twitter's top Brazilian lawyer," Shellenberger reports. Shellenberger says the judge, Supreme Court Justice Alexandre de Moraes, subsequently opened a criminal investigation into Musk "for allegedly spreading disinformation, obstructing justice, and allowing people who De Moraes had banned from social media to freely express their views. De Moraes said he would fine X twenty thousand dollars per day for every banned person Musk allows to speak." "It is not an exaggeration to say that Brazil is on the brink of dictatorship at the hands of a totalitarian Supreme Court Justice named Alexandre de Moraes," Shellenberger argues. For his part, Musk writes that "we will probably lose all revenue in Brazil and have to shut down our office there. But principles matter more than profit." The question for Americans is whether they are immune from such government overreach….Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, and his predecessor Eric Schmitt who filed the case alongside the Louisiana AG, maintain they have already shown a "vast censorship enterprise" by the Biden administration. If true, is it so different from Brazil's? "Brazil's present is our future if Democrats achieve their dream of packing the Supreme Court," warns tech entrepreneur David Sacks. Says Shellenberger: "The events of the last few weeks make clear that Elon Musk is the only thing standing in the way of global totalitarianism. Without free speech, there can be no democracy. "The fact that the future of free speech rests upon the shoulders of a single individual is not something any of us should want." Elon Musk, it appears, has become the free speech equivalent of Tiananmen Square's "Tank Man" – the lone civilian figure courageous enough to stand in front of government tyranny.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Access to abortion pills for South Dakotans could hinge on Supreme Court case

https://www.siouxlandproud.com/news/south-dakota-news/access-to-abortion-pills-for-south-dakotans-could-hinge-on-supreme-court-case/

- The U.S. Supreme Court is weighing a case involving medication abortion that could change the way some South Dakota women access abortion services by crossing the border into neighboring states. Watching closely is South Dakota Attorney General Marty Jackley, who has joined other state AGs in saying that relaxed federal regulation of abortion pills makes it tougher for states to enforce their own laws. The Supreme Court's first abortion-related case since overturning Roe v. Wade in 2022 involves the Food and Drug Administration's oversight of mifepristone, the primary drug used for medication abortions….Jackley and South Dakota Gov. Kristi Noem have been outspoken about safety concerns with medication abortion. They point out that, if something goes wrong, such as excess bleeding or infection, there won't be emergency medical care available if a woman is taking the pills at home. Criminal charges against the person who helped procure the pills could be "much more serious" than a Class 6 felony if a woman suffers harm from taking the medication to end a pregnancy, Jackley said. He joined 19 other attorneys general in signing a letter last year from Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey that raised the possibility of coerced abortions occurring with less oversight. The letter also cited a 2015 study that found medication abortions were "5.96 times as likely to result in a complication as first-trimester aspiration abortions."

Attorney General Bailey Warns of Baseball Ticket Scams as Season Begins

https://www.htsyndication.com/us-fed-news/article/attorney-general-bailey-warns-of-baseball-ticket-scams-as-season-begins/1004741449

- Today, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey issued guidance to Missouri baseball fans for avoiding ticket scams as the 2024 baseball season begins. "Now that the Kansas City Royals and St. Louis Cardinals have opened their seasons, I want to educate Missourians on potential ticket scams," said Attorney General Bailey. "With ticket sales rising as our Missouri baseball teams begin their regular season, the Attorney General's Office wants to ensure that consumers have the right tools at their disposal. We will pursue anyone who attempts to rip off Missourians' hard-earned dollars." Attorney General Bailey provides the following tips to be vigilant when buying tickets to baseball games:
- KNOW YOUR VENDOR – Make sure you are buying your tickets from a trustworthy website, especially before you provide any personal financial information.
- DO YOUR RESEARCH – If you are unfamiliar with a particular ticket seller, research the seller on the Attorney General's or

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Better Business Bureau's website for any complaints.

- USE A CREDIT CARD – If you purchase tickets online, especially through an online auction site, it is recommended that you complete your transaction with a credit card. Purchasing tickets with a credit card often provides you with protections that you would not otherwise have if you purchase the tickets using cash, check, debit card, or apps like Cash App or Venmo.
- SHOP ON SECURED SITES – Always double check your URL before purchasing tickets online. If a website's address begins with "https", the "s" will not appear in the web address until you access the order page of the site, where you will be asked to enter your personal information. Secure websites should also display a closed lock graphic in the browser, generally located to the left of the URL in the address bar.
- INSPECT YOUR TICKETS – Physically inspect your tickets to reduce your risk of being turned away at the venue. Check the date, time and location listed on the tickets to ensure that this information matches the accurate event details. Also review the listed seating assignments.
- REMEMBER – If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is.
- "I encourage any Missouri baseball fan with complaints regarding a potential ticket scam to contact the Missouri Attorney General's Consumer Complaint Hotline at 800-392-8222 or ago.mo.gov," said Attorney General Bailey. "Let's all take steps to protect ourselves as we watch our baseball teams dominate this season." ...

'Rather Despicable': John Eastman Speaks Out After Bank Of America, USAA Shut Down His Accounts
https://dailycaller.com/2024/04/16/john-eastman-donald-trump-attorney-debanked-bank-of-america-usaa/

- One of the left's biggest political targets recently found himself "de-banked" with no warning and little avenue for recourse, the Daily Caller has learned. John Eastman, once an attorney for former President Donald Trump, was de-banked twice in the span of several months by two prominent financial institutions, Bank of America and USAA, he told the Daily Caller. His accounts were closed as he faced substantial backlash for his work advising Trump around the time of the 2020 election. Eastman said he had switched most of his banking from Bank of America to USAA, a company that provides financial services exclusively to military veterans as well as their families, due to the former's "wokeness." Both corporations are federally insured, and Bank of America was bailed out with billions of dollars in taxpayer funds during the global financial crisis. Bank of America alerted Eastman in September of 2023 that it would be closing his accounts, a letter obtained by the Daily Caller shows. Shortly thereafter, USAA notified Eastman in November that his two bank accounts with the company would be closed, a separate letter shows. "And then two months later, we get a similar letter from USAA saying that they've decided that they're going to close your account and they did like three weeks later," Eastman told the Daily Caller. "And so that was where all of our automatic payments were coming out of, all our automatic deposits. So it was a real pain to shift everything. We had to get a new bank account opened and shift everything over."… "De-banking contradicts the very character of our nation, as elites wrongfully use their power to punish their political opponents. Here's the bottom line: If financial institutions are punishing consumers who don't fall in line with their political beliefs, that could constitute a violation of both state and federal law," Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey told the Daily Caller….

Finance Dems accuse Republican AGs of abusing authority to get records of transgender minors

- Republican attorneys general in at least four states have abused their oversight authorities to demand the private medical records of transgender minors and adults as part of a broader effort to restrict access to gender-affirming health care nationwide, according to a Senate Finance Committee report released Tuesday. Investigations launched by Attorneys General Ken Paxton of Texas, Todd Rokita of Indiana, Jonathan Skrmetti of Tennessee and Andrew Bailey of Missouri into seekers and providers of transition-related care "demand a host of invasive items" such as lists of individuals referred for care and unredacted physical and mental health records, according to a report by the committee's majority Democratic staff. "Framed as civil investigations seeking to determine if there has been misuse of Medicaid funds (Tennessee) or violations of consumer protection laws (Indiana and Missouri), these campaigns investigate medical providers on their provision of transgender medical care," the report states, adding that the investigations are motivated by "ideological and political goals."… The attorneys general of Missouri and Indiana have similarly cited consumer protection laws to justify investigations into transgender clinics. A short-lived emergency rule issued by Bailey, the Missouri attorney general, last year claimed gender-affirming treatments were already banned in the state under an existing law governing "unfair, deceptive, and unconscionable business practices…..

Several attorneys general made 'abusive legal demands' to get trans patients' medical records, senators allege

NBC l Jo Yurcaba

- Four attorneys general in conservative states have abused their authority to investigate transgender patients and their health care, and hospitals must do more to protect them, a new Senate Finance Committee report argues. The report, titled "How State Attorneys General Target Transgender Youth and Adults by Weaponizing the Medicaid Program and their Health Oversight Authority," investigates how attorneys general in Tennessee, Missouri, Indiana and Texas have opened investigations into hospitals for alleged Medicaid fraud or violations of consumer protection laws. They opened the investigations, the report argues, "in order to further ideological and political goals," and there has been "significant variation in hospitals' responses to such requests and their approaches to safeguarding the privacy of one of their most vulnerable patient populations—LGBTQIA+ people."… The Finance Committee report found that two hospitals, in contrast to VUMC, made a variety of efforts to avoid providing transgender patients' records to state attorneys general. Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis refused to share records with Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey in February 2023 when Bailey filed a civil investigative demand citing a state consumer protection law. The university cited concerns about privacy and the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act, which protects patient information, and it filed a petition in state court questioning whether Bailey had the authority to investigate. "As a father of four, this fight is personal for me. There is no more important court battle than to ensure Missouri is the safest state in the nation for children," Bailey said in an emailed statement. "My team will get to the bottom of how this clandestine network of clinics has subjected children to puberty blockers and irreversible surgery, often without parental consent," he said, mischaracterizing how transition-related care is provided to minors. State laws require physicians to obtain parental permission to provide any care to minors, and widely used standards of care also do not recommend surgery for minors except in rare circumstances. Madeline Sieren, a spokesperson for Bailey, said that his office is awaiting a court ruling on the Washington University demand but that judges have ruled in the attorney general's favor in similar cases involving Children's Mercy Hospital in St. Louis, Planned Parenthood of the St. Louis Region and Southwest Missouri and Planned Parenthood Great Plains…..

Planned Parenthood 'stonewalling' probe into peddling puberty blockers to minors: state AG

Democratic Accent via FOX l Adam Sabes

- Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is now permitted to access patient documents from Planned Parenthood that could potentially expose whether the clinic has offered puberty blockers and transgender surgeries to children. St. Louis Circuit Judge Michael Stelzer determined last week that Missouri's Merchandising Practices Act allows Bailey to obtain patient documents because they do not fall under Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) protections, otherwise known as a federal law protecting patient privacy. Bailey told Fox News Digital the court ruling is "a huge win" in his series of investigations into how transgender health clinics have offered services to minors. However, of the three clinics Bailey has won against in court, only one has handed over documents: Children's Mercy Hospital in Kansas City. The other clinic – a Planned Parenthood in Great Plains – has filed an appeal to keep the documents private. The Planned Parenthood in St. Louis, which the judge has ordered to hand over files to the attorney general, has yet to send any of its patient documents…

Bailey described the judgment as significant for his investigation into transgender health clinics' "treatment" of minors in Missouri. However, only the Children's Mercy Hospital in Kansas City has surrendered documents following legal victories over three clinics. Planned Parenthood Great Plains has appealed to maintain its document privacy, and Planned Parenthood St. Louis, which was ordered to release files, has yet to comply. DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months

https://malaysia.news.yahoo.com/doubleverify-apologizes-misreporting-x-twitter-174358052.html

- DoubleVerify, which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers, incorrectly displayed X's Brand Safety Rate — a measure of how frequently ads appeared adjacent to content that met advertiser-approved criteria — on the DoubleVerify dashboard for nearly five months. From Oct. 24, 2023, to March 14, 2024, DoubleVerify's dashboard provided the wrong data for X to advertisers. In some cases, the measurement firm showed scores as low as 70%, whereas X's Brand Safety Rates were in fact 99.99%. DoubleVerify CEO Mark Mark Zagorski, in a message to customers April 12, apologized for the error and said the company's dashboard now correctly shows X's brand-safety rates. "We apologize for any confusion this may have caused to X and to our customers in the course of reviewing your campaign performance on X," Zagorski wrote in the message to customers. "DV remains committed to maintaining the highest standards of accuracy and transparency in our data." It's unclear how the error occurred. Reps for X and DoubleVerify said the companies are continuing to investigate the issue. DoubleVerify is "conducting a thorough review of our processes and systems to ensure this issue does not occur in the future," according to Zagorski…X/Twitter and Musk have aggressively pushed back against claims that the social network is unsafe for brand advertising. Last November, X sued liberal watchdog group Media Matters, alleging the group "knowingly and maliciously manufactured" research that showed neo-Nazi and white-nationalist posts on X next to ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle and Comcast's Xfinity. Following the Media Matters report and Musk's seeming endorsement of an anti-Semitic conspiracy theory, several large advertisers including Disney said they were halting their spending on X — either because of the Media Matters reports, Musk's post or a combination of both. Last month, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed a lawsuit against Media Matters seeking to force the nonprofit to turn over documents related to the AG's investigation "into its fraudulent business practices," citing X's allegations that Media Matters "deceitfully manipulated X's algorithm to place advertisers' content next to contrived controversial posts." In a statement, Media Matters president Angelo Carusone said: "Far from the free-speech advocate he claims to be, Elon Musk has actually intensified his efforts to undermine free speech by enlisting Republican Attorneys General across the country to initiate meritless, expensive, and harassing investigations against Media Matters in an attempt to punish critics. This [Missouri] investigation is the latest in a transparent endeavor to squelch the First Amendment rights of researchers and reporters; it will have a chilling effect on news reporters."

Biden Administration Proposes Sweeping Student Loan Forgiveness Rules: What To Know

- The Department of Education unveiled its first draft rules Tuesday of President Joe Biden's newest plan to shrink the balances of millions of federal student loan borrowers, with a separate rule aimed at forgiveness for borrowers experiencing financial hardship set to be proposed "in the coming months." The first draft includes nine proposed rules that closely follow the April 8 announcement of the new forgiveness plan, including two separate provisions on canceling accrued interest, eliminating debt for borrowers who began making payments at least 20 years ago and different avenues of debt cancellation for borrowers eligible under various forgiveness plans—such as the Saving on a Valuable Education (SAVE) plan—who have not successfully applied "due to paperwork requirements, bad advice, or other obstacles." Additionally, the department proposed forgiveness for borrowers who took out a commercial loan under the Federal Family Education Loan (FFEL) Program, which ended in 2010, and began making payments on or before July 1, 2000. The separate rule for borrowers experiencing hardship will include "proposals to authorize the automatic forgiveness of loans for borrowers at a high risk of future default," according to a press release, and will also cover borrowers indicating hardship for reasons other than student loans, including "high medical and caregiving expenses." Tuesday's draft will be published in the Federal Register on Wednesday, which will open a 30-day public comment period as part of the federal rule-making process. If the rules—including the yet-to-be-released plan for those experiencing financial hardship—are implemented as proposed, it would bring the total number of borrowers granted relief by the administration to more than 30 million, according to the release…. Seven states—Missouri, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, North Dakota, Ohio and Oklahoma—filed a lawsuit on April 9 against Biden, Secretary of Education Miguel Cardona and the Department of The lawsuit, spearheaded by Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, alleges the president is "unilaterally trying to impose an extraordinarily expensive and controversial policy that he could not get through Congress" through the program. - Joe Biden's administration is facing two separate lawsuits from Republicans over plans to reduce student loan debt across the country. The president's major plans to reduce and cancel federal student loan debts has irked Republicans, and two groups of GOP-led states are now taking legal action against both him and the Education Department…The second lawsuit has been filed by Missouri attorney general Andrew Bailey in conjunction with Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, North Dakota, Ohio and Oklahoma. It makes a similar case to the first lawsuit, but also argues that Missouri-based student loan contractor MOHELA stands to face an "imminent loss of revenue" thanks to Biden's plans…"As Attorney General, I will protect the Constitution, which involves fighting back against the crooked Biden bailout," said Bailey. "There is no such thing as cancelling a debt, there is only shifting who will bear its weight. Trail Dates Set for Two in 2022 Hannibal Beating Death

- Two Hannibal residents, among four people charged in connection with the October 2022 beating death of a Hannibal man, will go on trial this fall in the St. Louis area. Both Jason Anderson and Tiara Bonner were in St. Charles County Circuit Court Monday, where for now, both will have 5-day trials starting September 23rd. Their cases were moved to St. Charles County after an agreement was reached earlier this year between the pair's lawyers and prosecutors. A hearing on motions filed last week by Anderson's lawyer, asking that his case be tried separately from Bonner's, will be held May 10th. Anderson claims his case would be prejudiced if he was tried with Bonner. Both face charges of 2nd Degree Murder and 1st Degree Assault, which were re-filed in January by the Missouri Attorney General's Office. The pair are accused of taking part in the October 9th, 2022 beating death of Dusty Wilson, outside a bar in the 100 block of North Main Street. Bonner and Anderson are held in the Marion County Jail without bond.

INTRODUCTION

How shocking it would be if the Missouri Attorney General asked a state court to issue an order preventing this Court from hearing this case. Yet Media Matters seeks exactly that extreme remedy, just in reverse. Media Matters does not dispute that it can raise all its claims and defenses in the ongoing proceeding in Missouri state court. It has already begun doing so. It filed a motion to exercise legal rights guaranteed by Missouri law, which the state court granted. Nevertheless, Media Matters now asks a federal court in the District of Columbia to enter an order that would force the courts of the State of Missouri to stop adjudicating an ongoing case. That is not only a transparent attempt to get two bites at the apple; it is also an astonishing attack on federalism.

The Supreme Court has not minced words, saying that the very thing Media Matters tries here imposes "evils" on federal courts. Huffman v. Pursue, Ltd., 420 U.S. 592, 608 (1975). It is thus no wonder that other federal courts regularly reject attempts by parties like Media Matters to challenge state subpoenas in federal court when a state proceeding is already ongoing. E.g., Backpage.com, LLC v. Hawley, No. 4:17-CV-1951, 2017 WL 5726868 (E.D. Mo. Nov. 28, 2017) (citing Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1971)). And rightly so. As the Supreme Court has long made clear, including recently, federal courts lack equity jurisdiction to issue orders that have the effect of shutting down existing state court proceedings. Media Matters can raise every one of its arguments in Missouri state court.

Nor can Media Matters prevail on any of the four traditional factors for equitable relief to obtain a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction.

First, Media Matters' contention that it will be harmed if the civil investigative demand for information and materials is enforced fails because there is no immediate enforcement right now. There is only an enforcement proceeding. The civil investigative demand—with which Media

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Matters has refused to comply—will not be enforced until Media Matters has had a full and fair opportunity to raise all its claims in state court. Unlike Media Matters' attempt to litigate here at breakneck speed, the Missouri Attorney General has not filed any emergency motion. There is no current injury at all, much less one imminently impending.

No better is Media Matters' assertion that it is injured by having to litigate the questions at all. Media Matters is going to litigate these questions in one forum or another. The only question is where. Media Matters asserts that Missouri courts "obviously lack personal jurisdiction" over Media Matters, and so any lawsuit filed in Missouri harms Media Matters. ECF 49-1 at 35. But Media Matters has already consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri state court by seeking (and obtaining) relief under state law. And Media Matters' argument is self defeating. In insists that this Court has jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General simply because he mailed something into the District. Id. at 23. Yet Media Matters does much more than that in Missouri. It writes articles about events in Missouri and circulates those articles in Missouri. Id. at 12 n.11. It distributes newsletters to the email addresses of residents of Missouri. And it solicits donations from residents of Missouri. If this Court has jurisdiction over the Attorney General because he mailed one document, then Missouri courts have jurisdiction over Media Matters ten times over.

Even stranger is Media Matters' retaliation claim. Media Matters bases its lawsuit on its contention that the Attorney General decided to "retaliat[e]" against Media Matters because Media Matters wrote one single article criticizing him. Id. at 12. That allegation is not just wrong; it is not even plausible. Like other statewide officials, the Missouri Attorney General is regularly criticized by other media outlets, and Media Matters cannot identify even a single instance where the Missouri Attorney General has responded with a civil investigative demand for information and materials. The reason is simple: the Attorney General filed the civil investigative demand not because Media Matters criticized him once, but to investigate whether Media Matters committed fraud or deception in soliciting donations from residents of Missouri. There is nothing illegal about investigating business deception or fraud, something the Attorney General does routinely as authorized by law. If Media Matters thinks otherwise, it is free to raise its arguments in the ongoing state court proceeding, rather than asking this Court to enter an extreme order preventing the State of Missouri, statutorily represented by the Attorney General, from litigating in its own courts.

BACKGROUND

I. Factual background

Although Media Matters presents itself as a charitable news organization, there is reason to believe it has engaged in fraud and deception to solicit donations from Missourians. Ex. A, Declaration of Steven Reed ¶¶ 6–11. Because investigations necessarily require some level of secrecy, the State of Missouri is not required to show its hand. As the Supreme Court has long held, the point of a pre-complaint investigation is to seek "information from those who best can give it and who are most interested in not doing so." United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 642 (1950). So courts routinely stress the need for investigations to "be conducted in secret"; indeed, the "person being investigated may not be aware of the proceedings." State ex rel. Rogers v. Cohen, 262 S.W.3d 648, 652–53 (Mo. 2008). Nevertheless, the State is able to discuss accusations and evidence that have already been made public.

Media Matters is credibly accused of defaming the social media platform X (formerly Twitter) by falsely representing that X routinely populates advertisements for brands like Apple, IBM, and Xfinity next to extremist, fringe content. Reed decl. ¶¶ 6–11. According to a lawsuit filed by X, Media Matters' statements were entirely and maliciously false. "Media Matters knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform." Complaint, X Corp. v. Media Matters for America, No. 4:23-cv-1175, ECF 1 ¶ 1 (N.D. Tex. Nov. 20, 2023). Media Matters did this by "manipulat[ing] the algorithms … to bypass safeguards." Id. ¶¶ 7–8. While Media Matters insisted that paid advertisements regularly "appeared alongside the fringe content," in fact that was true "for only one viewer (out of more than 500 million) on all of X: Media Matters." Id. ¶ 13 (emphasis in original); Reed decl. ¶¶ 8–10. Yet Media Matters' false "reporting" had the desired effect: advertisers withdrew from X in droves.

The brand-safety organization DoubleVerify recently debunked Media Matters' assertion, confirming that the allegation that X was regularly populating advertisements next to fringe content is false. The organization, "which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers," recently stated that X's "Brand Safety Rates" were nearly perfect—99.99%—during the very time when Media Matters accused X of regularly posting brand advertisements next to fringe content. Todd Spangler, DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months, Variety (Apr. 15, 2024);[1] Reed decl. ¶ 10.

Similarly, the federal district court overseeing the X lawsuit against Media Matters recently previewed that the court believes X's lawsuit should proceed toward trial. In rejecting Media Matters' request to stay discovery, the court held that, on a preliminary view, "it appears that Plaintiff [X Corp.] sufficiently pleads facts supporting its claims." X Corp., Order denying motion to stay discovery, ECF 54 at 8.[2] The court further noted that Media Matters' argument on the merits was the "weakest" argument it had presented. Id.

II. The Missouri Attorney General launched an investigation based on well-established statutory authority.

Media Matters has substantial connections with Missouri. As Media Matters acknowledges, it writes articles about events in Missouri. ECF 49-1 at 12 n.11. It distributes a newsletter to thousands of readers in Missouri. Cf. Johnson v. TheHuffingtonPost.com, Inc., 21 F.4th 314, 318 (5th Cir. 2021) (prohibiting exercising jurisdiction when a website is merely available in a venue, but permitting exercising jurisdiction when a media organization does more, such as "interact[ing] with its visitors" in that venue). And though it denies "specifically targeting Missouri" in its nationwide fundraising drives, it implicitly concedes that it solicits donations fro m Missourians. ECF 49-3 ¶¶ 24–25.

"The Missouri Attorney General's Office discovered that Media Matters not only distributes its newsletter in Missouri, but engages in internet and email solicitations, phone solicitations, and in-person solicitations for fundraising." Reed decl. ¶ 7. In its public financial disclosures, Media Matters identifies Missouri "as a state in which it 'is registered or licensed to solicit contributions or has been notified it is exempt from registration.'" Id. (quoting Form 990, Media Matters (2021)).[3] Because of Media Matters' extensive activities in Missouri, it "specifically communicated with the Missouri Attorney General's Office to seek an exemption from registration for its fundraising in Missouri." Reed decl. ¶ 7. Missouri law permits 501(c)(3) organizations to solicit donations without registering. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.456.2(6).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Missouri Attorney General grew concerned about the representations that Media Matters provides to Missourians as it solicits donations and whether those representations are unlawfully deceptive. For example, if Media Matters misrepresents what it intends to do with donations or misrepresents the nature of the company as it solicits donations, that is a hand-in-glove violation of Missouri's consumer protection statute, which forbids "[t]he act, use or employment by any person of any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise in trade or commerce or the solicitation of any funds for any charitable purpose." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020. This statute is broad. Its words "cover every practice imaginable and every unfairness to whatever degree." Ports Petroleum Co., Inc. of Ohio v. Nixon, 37 S.W.3d 237, 240 (Mo. 2001).

So the State of Missouri, through the Attorney General, launched an investigation into whether Media Matters violated Missouri law when soliciting donations from Missourians. Reed decl. ¶ 11. The Missouri Attorney General "routinely" investigates potential violations of Missouri's consumer protection statutes, and begins those investigations with a civil investigative demand for information and materials "dozens" of times each year. Id. ¶¶ 4, 11. Missouri's statute gives the State authority to investigate (1) whenever "it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in or is engaging in any method, act, use, practice or solicitation declared to be unlawful by this chapter" or (2) whenever "he believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation should be made to ascertain whether a person in fact has engaged in or is engaging in any such method, act, use, practice or solicitation." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040.

Using this authority, the State issued a "civil investigative demand, or "CID" to Media Matters by mail. Id. ¶ 12. A CID is an administrative subpoena. State ex rel. Koster v. Charter

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Communications, Inc., 461 S.W.3d 851, 855–57 (Mo. App. W.D. 2015). Then, because Media Matters had already made its position clear that it would not comply with any CID related to its in-state solicitations and false statements about X unless forced by a court to do so, the State of Missouri filed an enforcement action in state court. Id. ¶ 14. Missouri law permits a party in litigation to avoid waiting to take action when doing so would be futile. E.g., New Eng. Carpenters Pension Fund v. Haffner, 391 S.W.3d 453, 460 (Mo. App. S.D. 2012).

III. Media Matters began exercising its legal rights in Missouri state court.

Media Matters has already begun defending itself in Missouri state court. For example, Missouri law grants any party the legal right to exercise one peremptory strike against a judge. State ex rel. Manion v. Elliott, 305 S.W.3d 462, 464 (Mo. 2010) ("Rule 51.05 grants a party the absolute right to disqualify a judge once without cause or any showing of prejudice."). The very first thing Media Matters chose to do in the litigation in state court was not to contest personal jurisdiction, but instead to exercise this legal right. On the same day an attorney for Media Matters entered its appearance in state court, the company moved to transfer the case to a new judge in state court. Motion, Missouri v. Media Matters, 24AC-CC02291 (Apr. 18, 2024).[4] Then Media Matters scheduled a hearing on the motion.[5] The motion was granted.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I. The Court should abstain under Younger and dismiss. Younger is jurisdictional and, except in extraordinary circumstances, requires federal courts to dismiss federal lawsuits that would have the practical effect of enjoining state court proceedings. Here, there is an ongoing enforcement proceeding in state court. Binding Supreme Court precedent requires this Court to presume that forum is adequate, and Media Matters does not deny that it will receive a full and fair opportunity to present its defenses in state court. Indeed, Media Matters has already consented to personal jurisdiction in state court. Missouri law requires a defendant to object to personal jurisdiction at the "first opportunity." Media Matters declined, instead opting to first exercise other legal rights. It has already filed, and received, legal relief in the ongoing enforcement proceeding.

[4] https://www.courts.mo.gov/fv/c/Application%20for%20Change%20of%20Judge.PDF?courtCode=19&di=3131776

[5] https://www.courts.mo.gov/fv/c/Notice%20of%20Hearing.PDF?courtCode=19&di=3131778

The Supreme Court has said there are some (exceedingly narrow) exceptions to Younger, but Media Matters does not plead or argue that those apply here. As Media Matters bears the burden, the issue is waived. In any event, the "bad-faith" exception applies only to accusations of bad faith about state court judges, not prosecutors. Similarly, Media Matters does not and cannot contend that Missouri's statute is "patently invalid." It has been in place for 60 years and has repeatedly survived legal challenges under federal law. No exception to Younger applies.

II. Media Matters has not established personal jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General. The D.C. long-arm statute does not extend to merely using a process-server to serve a lawsuit. And personal jurisdiction here would violate the Due Process Clause. Courts regularly conclude that a defendant does not "purposefully avail" themselves of a forum merely by sending mail into that forum. Media Matters' argument is also deeply ironic. It contends that merely sending mail into D.C. subjects the Missouri Attorney General to personal jurisdiction, but then it flatly states that Missouri courts "obviously" lack jurisdiction over Media Matters even though Media Matters' contacts with Missouri are far more substantial. Media Matters admits, for example, that it solicits donations from residents in Missouri.

III. Other jurisdictional issues similarly doom Media Matters' case. Media Matters seeks prospective injunctive relief, but to do that, it must establish that it lacks an adequate remedy other than an injunction by this Court. It cannot do so. The Supreme Court has already held that there exists an adequate remedy when a party is able to challenge a request for documents in state court. Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964). Unlike under Texas law, which this Court determined did not permit Media Matters to challenge the CID, Missouri law expressly authorizes Media Matters to challenge the CID in state court.

Media Matters also has not established ripeness. As the Ninth Circuit concluded, where a CID is not self-executing and a party can raise its defenses in state court, an action in federal court challenging the CID is not ripe. Twitter, Inc. v. Paxton, 56 F.4th 1170 (9th Cir. 2022).

IV. Media Matters is unlikely to succeed on the merits. Under binding Supreme Court precedent, a retaliation claim can proceed only if the government action could not be justified by any legitimate motive. For example, the existence of probable cause necessarily defeats a claim of retaliatory arrest—no matter the arresting officer's motive. Nieves v. Bartlett, 139 S. Ct. 1715 (2019). Here, there is probable cause that Media Matters has been deceptive. Moreover, the Supreme Court has held that adverse actions are not actionable if they are "immaterial." Merely having to litigate in state court instead of federal is not a material injury.

The other claims by Media Matters—which this Court declined to accept with respect to Texas—are similarly meritless. The First Amendment case law cited by Media Matters expressly permits using subpoenas to seek this kind of information; the state shield laws do not apply extraterritorially; and while a court's alleged inability to exercise personal jurisdiction is grounds for a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff does not commit a constitutional tort by suing somebody in that venue. Media Matters has also failed to develop many of these arguments. They are thus waived.

V. Media Matters has no irreparable harm because it has an adequate remedy in state court.

VI. The balance of equities favors Missouri. Media Matters' harms are self-inflicted, and its attempt to enjoin state courts from proceeding would impose grave harms to federalism.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

ARGUMENT

"[A] preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion." Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (emphasis in original) (quoting 11 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2948, pp. 129–130 (2d ed. 1995)). The preliminary injunction factors are well established: plaintiffs must show (1) they are "likely to succeed on the merits"; (2) they are "likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief"; (3) "the balance of equities tips in [their] favor"; and (4) "an injunction is in the public interest." Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008) (citations omitted). The first factor—success on the merits—includes demonstrating a likelihood of establishing jurisdiction. See Food & Water Watch, Inc. v. Vilsack, 808 F.3d 905, 913–14 (D.C. Cir. 2015). Here, Media Matters cannot establish jurisdiction or any of the other factors for a preliminary injunction.

I. Younger Abstention Applies and Dismissal is Required.

The claim against the Missouri Attorney General is crucially different from the claim against the Texas Attorney General in a dispositive respect: there is an ongoing proceeding to enforce the CID in state court. When a public official initiates a proceeding in state court, federal courts must, "except in extraordinary circumstances," abstain from suits that would interfere with that ongoing state proceeding. JMM Corp. v. District of Columbia, 378 F.3d 1117, 1120 (D.C. Cir. 2004). This doctrine is "treated as jurisdictional." Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Envt., 523 U.S. 83, 100 n.3 (1998) (citing Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1971)). And "[w]here the Younger requirements are met, the appropriate remedy is dismissal." J. & W. Seligman & Co. Inc. v. Spitzer, No. 05CIV.7781, 2007 WL 2822208, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 27, 2007).

The reason for abstention is both practical and compelled by foundational concepts of federalism. On the practical side, when a state proceeding is already ongoing, abstention "avoid[s] a duplication of legal proceedings." Sprint Commun., Inc. v. Jacobs, 571 U.S. 69, 77 (2013). More importantly, abstention ensures "a proper respect for state functions." Id. "[I]nterference with a state judicial proceeding prevents the state not only from effectuating its substantive policies, but also from continuing to perform the separate function of providing a forum competent to vindicate any constitutional objections interposed against those policies." Huffman v. Pursue, Ltd., 420 U.S. 592, 604 (1975). This interference also "can readily be interpreted 'as reflecting negatively upon the state courts' ability to enforce constitutional principles.'" Id. (citation omitted).

Although the doctrine originally was announced in the criminal context, it has been clear for 50 years that a lawsuit in federal court that would interfere with a civil action in state court also poses a "threat to our federal system," so Younger "is thus applicable to a civil proceeding such as this quite as much as it is to a criminal proceeding." Id. at 604; see also id. ("offense to the State's interest"). The most recent Supreme Court case on Younger abstention identified three categories of state proceedings warranting abstention. "First, Younger precluded federal intrusion into ongoing state criminal prosecutions. Second, certain civil enforcement proceedings warranted abstention. Finally, federal courts refrained from interfering with pending civil proceedings involving certain orders uniquely in furtherance of the state courts' ability to perform their judicial functions." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 78 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Here, the enforcement action in Missouri state court fits within both the second and third categories.

A. The second Younger category applies.

The enforcement proceeding in Missouri is a "civil enforcement proceeding[ ]" within the scope of Younger abstention. Sprint defines the subset of civil enforcement proceedings that satisfy Younger as those civil proceedings that are "'akin to a criminal prosecution' in 'important respects.'" Id. at 79. The "important respects" are that the ongoing proceeding is initiated by the State (rather than a private party) and seeks to enforce state law against a private actor. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Specifically, "[i]n cases of this genre, a state actor is routinely a party to the state proceeding and often initiates the action," "[i]nvestigations are commonly involved," and "[s]uch enforcement actions are characteristically initiated to sanction the federal plaintiff, i.e., the party challenging the state action, for some wrongful act." Id. The ongoing action in Missouri meets these indicia.

First, the enforcement action was "initiated by 'the State in its sovereign capacity.'" Id. at 80 (citation omitted). The caption of that case is State of Missouri, ex rel. Andrew Bailey v. Media Matters. ECF 39-6. The Missouri Attorney General is authorized by state law to "institute, in the name and on the behalf of the state, all civil suits and other proceedings at law or in equity requisite or necessary to protect the rights and interests of the state, and enforce any and all rights, interests or claims against any and all persons, firms or corporations." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 27.060. The Missouri Attorney General has done so on behalf of the State here.

Second, Media Matters acknowledges that the case initiated by the State involves an investigation. Missouri law specifically authorizes "the AG to issue CIDs in its investigation of possible violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act." Charter Communications, 461 S.W.3d at 856 (citing Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040); see also Reed decl. ¶ 4.

And third, the enforcement action was brought to enforce state law against "the party challenging the state action, for some wrongful act." Specifically, Media Matters, as a company that solicits donations from residents of Missouri, is required to "comply with the terms [of the CID] unless otherwise provided by an order of a court" in Missouri. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.080. The enforcement action was undertaken to force Media Matters to abide by its legal duty and reverse its illegal refusal to comply.

Other courts have abstained in similar circumstances. For example, the Supreme Court invoked Younger "to bar a federal court from entertaining a lawyer's challenge to a New Jersey state ethics committee's pending investigation of the lawyer." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 81 (citing Middlesex Cnty. Ethics Comm. v. Garden State B. Ass'n, 457 U.S. 423, 433–35 (1982)). Similarly, the Supreme Court invoked Younger when Ohio opened a proceeding to enforce a state nuisance law. Huffman, 420 U.S. at 595. Lower courts also regularly apply Younger when a party files a federal lawsuit to challenge application of a state's consumer-protection law. E.g., Cedar Rapids Cellular Tel., L.P. v. Miller, 280 F.3d 874, 882 (8th Cir. 2002) (abstaining from a lawsuit seeking to "enjoin the Attorney General from taking any action ... to enforce" Iowa consumer-protection law); cf. PDX N., Inc. v. Commr. New Jersey Dept. of Lab. and Workforce Dev., 978 F.3d 871, 881–82 (3d Cir. 2020) ("The trial court correctly dismissed PDX's case but erred in dismissing SLS's case because, for SLS, there was no ongoing judicial proceeding.").

Even more on point, courts regularly abstain when a state has issued CIDs or other subpoenas and then opened a state court proceeding to enforce the subpoena. The Backpage case, which involved the Missouri Attorney General, is on all fours with this one. There, the Missouri Attorney General served a CID on a company, Backpage, and then filed a state lawsuit to enforce the CID. Just like here, Backpage filed a federal lawsuit several weeks later, "asking the Court to 'enjoin and declare unlawful' AG Hawley's efforts to investigate." Backpage, 2017 WL 5726868, at *3. And just like here, Backpage argued that the investigation violated the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments, as well as Missouri's consumer-protection statute (the MMPA). Id. The court ruled that abstention was required because of the existing proceeding in state court, so the court dismissed the case. Id. at *1, 13.

Many other cases apply the same analysis and abstain. While Texas did not initiate a proceeding to enforce its CID this time, when Texas does so, courts abstain. A court did so just three months ago in a suit brought against the Texas Attorney General, because Texas initiated a proceeding in state court, meaning that "federal action would have the practical effect of enjoining the state proceedings." Yelp Inc. v. Paxton, No. 23-CV-04977-TLT, 2024 WL 413464, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 1, 2024); see also, e.g., Berrada Properties Mgt. Inc. v. Romanski, 608 F. Supp. 3d 746, 750 (E.D. Wis. 2022) (abstaining in action "to quash the CIDs" even though state court action was filed later than the federal action); Seligman, 2007 WL 2822208, at *6 ("Younger's 'ongoing proceeding' requirement was 'clearly satisfied' when a state agency charged with investigating and administratively prosecuting violations of New York's lobbying laws issued subpoenas").

The critical fact is whether a state enforcement proceeding exists. For example, in Google, Inc. v. Hood, the Fifth Circuit determined that Younger abstention was improper largely because Mississippi CIDs are "non-self-executing" and yet the Mississippi Attorney General had "not moved to enforce the administrative subpoena in any state court." 822 F.3d 212, 223 (5th Cir. 2016) (emphasis added). Missouri CIDs also "are not self-enforcing," Backpage, 2017 WL 5726868, at *6, but unlike in Google, the Missouri Attorney General has filed an action in state court to enforce the CID. Younger abstention thus applies. Sprint, 134 S. Ct. at 593.

B. The third Younger category also applies.

The Missouri state court action also falls within the third category identified by Sprint. Citing its prior decision in Juidice v. Vail, 430 U.S. 327 (1977), the Sprint Court explained that Younger abstention applies to state proceedings that "touch on a state court's ability to perform its judicial function." Sprint, 134 S. Ct. at 592. Vail involved a federal action challenging a state-court proceeding to enforce a subpoena. 430 U.S. at 329–30. The Supreme Court held that the federal district court was required to abstain under Younger because the plaintiff, by challenging the ability of a state court to enforce a subpoena, attacked the "process[ ] through which [the state] vindicates the regular operation of its judicial system." Id. at 335. "Moreover," the Court explained, a federal-court lawsuit challenging such proceedings "unduly interferes with the legitimate activities of the State." Id. at 336 (quotation and brackets omitted).

So too here. Like in Vail, Media Matters attacks the ability of Missouri courts to enforce subpoenas. The state-court action here involves an attempt to enforce a subpoena issued under state law. See Charter Communications, 461 S.W.3d at 855–57 (explaining that CIDs constitute administrative subpoenas). Indeed, this case strikes closer to the core concerns of Younger, because while the subpoena in Vail was issued by a private litigant, 430 U.S. at 329, the subpoena here was issued by the State acting in its sovereign law-enforcement capacity.

The federal court in Backpage squarely held that federal actions seeking to block Missouri CIDs fall within the third Younger category. Backpage, 2017 WL 5726868, at *6. As the court there recognized, Missouri "state courts play a significant role in the investigation and prosecution of unlawful merchandising practices." Id. at *7. In Missouri, "CIDs are not self-enforcing." Id. at *6. Instead, the Attorney General must rely on courts to enforce CIDs. Id. at *7 ("If the recipient of a CID fails to comply with its demands, the attorney general may file in state court a petition 'for an order of such court for the enforcement' of the CID,' …. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.090."). Because a "request that the Court enjoin AG [Bailey]'s efforts to investigate and prosecute potential violations of the MMPA necessarily affects functions performed by the state court … the third Sprint category also requires this Court to abstain." Id. at *8.

Similarly, Lupin Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Richards, No. 15-1281, 2015 WL 4068818 (D. Md. July 2, 2015), is directly on point. In Lupin, the target of a CID served by the Alaska Attorney General filed a federal-court action challenging the CID. Id. at *2. The Alaska Attorney General, in turn, filed a state-court action to enforce the CID under Alaska Stat. § 45.50.592(g), which is nearly identical to Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.090. Id. Applying the Sprint framework, the district court concluded that the state-court enforcement proceeding "clearly" warranted abstention under Younger. Id. at *3.

C. The ongoing proceeding in Missouri state court implicates important state interests and affords Media Matters an adequate opportunity to raise its federal claims.

Once a court has determined that one of the three Younger categories applies, the Supreme Court has said the court may consider three "additional factors": whether there is "(1) an ongoing state judicial proceeding, which (2) implicates important state interests, and (3) provides an adequate opportunity to raise federal challenges." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 81 (alterations accepted; internal quotation marks and emphasis omitted). All three are met here.

The first factor is obviously met. Media Matters brought this suit to stop the ongoing state-court proceeding. The state-court matter was filed before Media Matters sued the Missouri Attorney General, but even if Media Matters had sued first, the D.C. Circuit has concluded that a state action need not be filed first. JMM, 378 F.3d at 1126 (abstaining under Younger even though the local action was filed "two months after" the federal action); see also Aaron v. Target Corp., 357 F.3d 768, 775 (8th Cir. 2004) ("no fixed requirement in the law that a state judicial proceeding must have been initiated before the federal case was filed for abstention to be appropriate").

The second factor similarly is met. It is well recognized that a state "has an important interest in enforcing its consumer protection statutes." Cedar Rapids Cellular, 280 F.3d at 879–80; Credit One Bank, N.A. v. Hestrin, 60 F.4th 1220, 1232 (9th Cir. 2023) ("Hestrin's state action seeks to enforce the state's consumer protection laws, undoubtedly an important interest."); Yelp, 2024 WL 413464, at *3 ("Texas has an interest in protecting its consumers from 'deceptive trade practices.'"). In addition, "[w]here the state is in an enforcement posture in the state proceedings, the 'important state interest' requirement is easily satisfied, as the state's vital interest in carrying out its executive functions is presumptively at stake." Potrero Hills Landfill, Inc. v. Cnty. of Solano, 657 F.3d 876, 883–84 (9th Cir. 2011). The State is both "in an enforcement posture" and is "enforcing its consumer protection statutes," so the second factor is "easily satisfied." Id. The ongoing proceeding also "implicates important state interests" because enforcing CIDs is part of "a state court's ability to perform its judicial function." Sprint, 134 S. Ct. at 592; see also Vail, 430 U.S. at 335 ("the regular operations of its judicial system … is surely an important interest").

Likewise, the third factor is easily met: Media Matters has "an opportunity to present [its] federal claims in the state proceedings." Vail, 430 U.S. at 337. Media Matters "carries the burden of demonstrating that the Missouri proceedings do not provide 'an adequate o pportunity' for it to raise constitutional claims." Geier v. Missouri Ethics Comm'n, 715 F.3d 674, 678–79 (8th Cir. 2013). But Media Matters has not disputed that it has that opportunity. In fact, it has already successfully moved in state court to exercise its legal rights under Missouri law. And "a federal court should assume that state procedures will afford an adequate remedy, in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary." Pennzoil Co. v. Texaco, Inc., 481 U.S. 1, 15 (1987).

The Missouri Merchandising Practices Act specifically provides Media Matters an opportunity to petition "to modify or set aside the civil investigative demand." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.070. The deadline to do so was April 15, 2024. ECF 39-6 at 8. The statute also gives Media Matters the opportunity to seek extension of that deadline. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.070. And of course, Media Matters can assert its claims defensively in response to the State's enforcement action. CID recipients routinely raise challenges under federal law in proceedings involving Missouri's consumer protection statute. E.g., State ex rel. Ashcroft v. Goldberg, 608 S.W.2d 385, 388 (Mo. 1980) (Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments).

Abstention is especially necessary "to avoid unwarranted determination of federal constitutional questions." Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 11. Media Matters disputes the Missouri Attorney

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

General's interpretation of Missouri law. Supp. Compl. ¶¶ 27, 30. If Media Matters prevails, it would render the federal constitutional claims moot. "Younger abstention in situations like this 'offers the opportunity for narrowing constructions that might obviate the constitutional problem and intelligently mediate federal constitutional concerns and state interests.'" Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 12 (citation omitted). In other words, if Media Matters prevails on its statutory arguments, constitutional issues would disappear. Failure to abstain, in contrast, might result in "a reading of the statute that is not binding on state courts and may be discredited at any time—thus essentially rendering the federal-court decision advisory." Moore v. Sims, 442 U.S. 415, 428 (1979); see also Berrada Properties, 608 F. Supp. 3d at 751 (federal intervention is "doubly offensive" because "it requires the Court to make the first pass at several Wisconsin statutory provisions"). Because the controversy between the State of Missouri and Media Matters involves disputed issues of state law, state courts should have the first opportunity to adjudicate the controversy.

D. Media Matters has waived the issue whether any exception to abstention applies, and in any event, no exception applies.

The Supreme Court has recognized "narrow exceptions to the doctrine that federal courts should not interfere with state" proceedings. Huffman, 420 U.S. at 602. But "[i]t is the plaintiff's 'heavy burden' to overcome the bar of Younger abstention." Weitzel v. Div. of Occupational and Prof. Licensing of Dept. of Com. of State of Utah, 240 F.3d 871, 877 (10th Cir. 2001).[6] Media Matters, however, tellingly has not even mentioned Younger abstention, much less pleaded or argued that an exception applies, even though Texas, in its opposition to Media Matters' motion to supplement the complaint, explained that "adding Attorney General Bailey as a defendant in [6] See also Diamond "D" Const. Corp. v. McGowan, 282 F.3d 191, 198 (2d Cir. 2002); Gates v. Strain, 885 F.3d 874, 881 (5th Cir. 2018); FreeEats.com, Inc. v. Indiana, 502 F.3d 590, 596 (7th Cir. 2007); Plouffe v. Ligon, 606 F.3d 890, 893 (8th Cir. 2010); Leonard v. Alabama State Bd. of Pharm., 61 F.4th 902, 908 (11th Cir. 2023).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

this case would require this Court to consider the relevance of the existing Missouri proceedings. Cf. Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37 (1971)." ECF 40 at 3. Media Matters has thus waived this issue. Power Co. of Am., L.P. v. FERC, 245 F.3d 839, 845 (D.C. Cir. 2001) ("This argument was not raised in PCA's opening brief and is therefore waived.").

In any event, Media Matters could not establish any exception. Younger recognized that there might be narrow exceptions to abstention in criminal cases for "bad faith, harassment, or a patently invalid state statute." Sprint, 571 U.S. at 77. But these are very "narrow exceptions." Huffman, 420 U.S. at 602. And none applies here.

Consider "bad faith" and "harassment." Courts and treatises typically treat these together as one exception, not two. E.g., Perez v. Ledesma, 401 U.S. 82, 97 (1971) (Brennan, J., concurring) ("bad-faith harassment"); Wright & Miller, 17B Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 4255 (3d ed.) (same); id. n.6 ("one cannot readily imagine either good-faith harassment or bad-faith without harassment" (citation omitted)). This exception is incredibly narrow. So narrow, in fact, that "the universe of bad-faith harassment claims that can be established is virtually empty." Id. § 4255 (citation omitted). "There is no case since Younger was decided in which the [Supreme] Court has found that the exception for bad faith or harassment was applicable." Id. It is not even clear the exception applies in civil cases at all. "While the Supreme Court has not ruled out use of the bad faith exception in civil cases, it has never directly applied the exception in such a case and we have only recognized it in the criminal context." Aaron, 357 F.3d at 778 (internal citation omitted).

One reason it is narrow is because it "requires a showing of bad faith on the part of the state court judges," not the state officials who brought the enforcement action. Wright & Miller, § 4255 n.11 (emphasis added). Specifically, the Supreme Court in Vail held that the bad-faith harassment exception did not apply even though "some paragraphs of the complaint could be construed to make such allegations as to the" parties who brought the state action. Vail, 430 U.S. at 338. The reason, the Supreme Court said, is because "there are no comparable allegations with respect to [the state court] justices" in that state court proceeding. Id. The Supreme Court immediately went on to say, "This exception may not be utilized unless it is alleged and proved that they [state judges] are enforcing the contempt procedures in bad faith or are motivated by a desire to harass." Id. (emphasis added).

The requirement that the "bad-faith harassment" exception is triggered only when judges act in bad faith makes sense. Our federalist system presumes that state courts are adequate to the job, Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 15, so even if an executive official could be shown to have brought an action in bad faith, our system presumes that state courts will be able to adjudicate all defenses to that action just as well as if the action were brought in federal court, see id. Media Matters has not, and cannot, establish bad faith by Missouri court judges—who have so far made no rulings in the ongoing state court proceeding other than to grant Media Matters' motion to change judges.

The same is true with the "patently invalid statute" exception. Media Matters has not alleged, and cannot allege, that Missouri's consumer-protection statute is "patently invalid." The statute has been in place for 60 years and has repeatedly survived constitutional challenge. E.g., State ex rel. Nixon v. Telco Directory Pub., 863 S.W.2d 596, 600 (Mo. 1993); State v. Shaw, 847 S.W.2d 768, 776 (Mo. 1993). In any event, even "facial invalidity of a statute is not itself an exceptional circumstance justifying federal interference." Huffman, 420 U.S. at 602. The statute must "be flagrantly and patently violative of express constitutional prohibitions in every clause, sentence and paragraph, and in whatever manner and against whomever an effort might be made to apply it." Id. (citation omitted). Media Matters plainly cannot satisfy this arduous standard.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The closest Media Matters gets to asserting any exception is to assert that the CID was not issued for "any good-faith investigative reason" because the CID and the lawsuit "apparently" do not "identif[y] any new facts" discovered since November. ECF 49-1 at 11–12 (emphasis omitted). But as Media Matters acknowledges right before that, state law does not require a CID to state these things. Id. at 10 ("[T]he Missouri Attorney General is not required by statute to show probable cause or establish jurisdiction before issuing a civil investigative demand.").

Similarly, Media Matters asserts there is no "good-faith investigative purpose" because Missouri moved to enforce the CID on the same day that Missouri issued the CID. Id. at 12–13. But that was permitted by Missouri law because waiting would have been futile; Media Matters had already made clear in its public statements and position in the lawsuit against Texas that it would not comply with any CID served by Missouri. Reed decl. ¶ 14. Media Matters' actions since have proven Missouri correct. In any event, the timing of Missouri's complaint in state court is irrelevant to the validity of the underlying investigation.

Neither of these accusations is against the courts of Missouri, and so even if the Court credited them, they would fail as a matter of law. But even setting aside that issue, other courts have repeatedly stressed that the "burden" of establishing bad faith "is heavy, as these exceptions are narrow." Yelp, 2024 WL 413464, at *4 (quotation omitted). In Yelp, for example, the court abstained even after determining that "Yelp's allegations of bad faith tell a persuasive story": the State had conducted only a "thin investigation," had entirely flipped its position, and was pursuing an enforcement action over a statement "even though it conceded that the [statement] is accurate." Id. at *5–6. The court said it was "not convinced that Paxton acted entirely in good faith," but all the evidence of bad faith was still insufficient to meet the arduous, narrow exception to Younger—so narrow that the Supreme Court has never found the exception satisfied.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

E. Media Matters consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri state court.

Abstention is especially warranted here because Media Matters already consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri courts. Media Matters asserts repeatedly that Missouri courts "obviously lack personal jurisdiction" over it. E.g., ECF 49-1 at 35. That was always wrong, but it is especially wrong following Media Matters' filings in that case.

Missouri law is clear that a defendant waives personal jurisdiction if the defendant does "not immediately raise any objection to personal jurisdiction." Everett v. Vance, 685 S.W.3d 495, 502 (Mo. App. W.D. 2023). "Personal jurisdiction 'is waived if not raised at the first opportunity.'" Id. (citation omitted) (emphasis added). The only exceptions are for entries of appearance and motions for extensions of time. E.g., State ex rel. Antoine v. Sanders, 724 S.W.2d 502, 505 (Mo. 1987).

Media Matters did not challenge personal jurisdiction at its "first opportunity." Instead, it exercised its legal right under Missouri law to exercise a peremptory strike against a state court judge. It filed a motion to do so, which was granted, and it scheduled a court hearing on that motion. Media Matters was of course entitled to avail itself of that legal right under Missouri law, but its decision to do so before challenging personal jurisdiction necessarily waived the issue because it is well settled that a party "waive[s] its right to contest personal jurisdiction by seeking affirmative relief from the trial court." Bland v. IMCO Recycling, Inc., 67 S.W.3d 673, 678 (Mo. App. S.D. 2002). As relevant here, "[t]he filing of a motion for change of judge constitutes seeking affirmative relief from the court," so Media Matters "has voluntarily submitted himself to the court's jurisdiction and is estopped from challenging the lack of personal jurisdiction." Rollins Burdick Hunter of Utah, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees of Ball State U., 665 N.E.2d 914, 919 (Ind. App. 1996).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

F. Fundamental limits on federal equity reinforce the need to abstain.

Failure to abstain would run headlong into foundational limits on federal court equity jurisdiction. As the Supreme Court reiterated recently, equity "does not normally permit federal courts to issue injunctions against state-court judges or clerks." Whole Woman's Health v. Jackson, 595 U.S. 30, 39 (2021). "As Ex parte Young put it, 'an injunction against a state court' or its 'machinery' 'would be a violation of the whole scheme of our Government.'" Id. (quoting Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 163 (1908)). Abstention is required because granting Media Matters relief would have the same effect as an injunction against the state courts of Missouri.

To be sure, Media Matters has not named a state court as a party, but the effect is the same. No abstention case the Supreme Court has decided has involved a suit against a court, and yet the Supreme Court has repeatedly stressed that abstention is necessary to avoid federal interference with a state court's "function of providing a forum competent to vindicate any constitutional objections." Huffman, 420 U.S. at 604. Regardless of who the party is, the effect is the same: Media Matters seeks an order here that would shut down the courts of Missouri.

II. There is No Personal Jurisdiction and, Therefore, the Case Should Be Dismissed.

This Court also lacks personal jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General. For personal jurisdiction, the court "must first examine whether jurisdiction is applicable under the state's long-arm statute and then determine whether a finding of jurisdiction satisfies the constitutional requirements of due process." GTE New Media Servs. Inc. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1347 (D.C. Cir. 2000). "The District of Columbia 'long-arm statute' enumerates the various acts of a nonresident defendant which support the assertion of personal jurisdiction." Mouzavires v. Baxter, 434 A.2d 988, 990 (D.C. Cir. 1981). Personal jurisdiction comports with due process only when the defendant has "minimum contacts with the forum state such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'"

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Int'l Shoe Co. v. State of Wash., Off. of Unemployment Comp. & Placement, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945).

A. Plaintiffs have not satisfied the long-arm statute.

Here, Plaintiffs have not met the personal jurisdiction threshold under the District of Columbia long-arm statute. The applicable long-arm statute, D.C. Code § 13-423, provides in relevant part:

> (a) A District of Columbia court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person, who acts directly or by an agent, as to a claim for relief arising from the person's –
> . . .
> (1) transacting any business in the District of Columbia;
> . . .
> (3) causing tortious injury in the District of Columbia by an act or omission in the District of Columbia[.]

Id. Plaintiffs assert personal jurisdiction under both (a)(1) and (a)(3).[7]

Subsection (a)(1) does not support jurisdiction. Missouri, acting through its Attorney General, has not transacted business in the District merely by hiring a process server to serve a lawsuit. If that were the case, then parties, including sovereign states, could never sue an out-of-state entity with sufficient minimum contacts but without a registered agent in the state, without subjecting themselves to a corresponding retaliatory lawsuit filed in the state of service. This is not purposefully engaging in "some type of commercial or business-related activity directed at District residents." Holder v. Haarman & Reimer Corp., 779 A.2d 264, 270–71 (D.C. 2001). Nor [7] The State of Missouri, like Texas, asserts that the State does not fall under the D.C. long-arm statute, because it is not a "person," as provided in the statute.

Media Matters briefly suggests that another provision, subsection (a)(4), is also satisfied because the Missouri Attorney General is a party to a proceeding in the D.C. Circuit, but Media does not press that argument "for present purposes." ECF 49-1 at 18 n.13. In any event, it is wrong. The Missouri Attorney General does not subject himself to permanent jurisdiction in D.C. merely by participating in an unrelated lawsuit that is required to be filed in the D.C. Circuit.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

is it "any continuing corporate presence in the forum state directed at advancing the corporation's objectives." AMAF Int'l Corp. v. Ralston Purina Co., 428 A.2d 849, 851 (D.C. 1981).

There is also no personal jurisdiction under subsection (a)(3) because Plaintiffs fail to establish that the Missouri Attorney General's alleged tortious conduct occurred in D.C. The CID was prepared in Missouri and relates to conduct of Media Matters in Missouri. Missouri did not hire a process server in D.C. for the CID, but instead mailed it from Missouri. And the Missouri lawsuit served in D.C. is merely the statutorily-authorized process provided for seeking enforcement because of Media Matters' refusal to respond to a request for information. Further, the investigation is occurring in Missouri and is inquiring into potential violations of Missouri consumers' rights. That is not alleged tortious conduct in D.C., but an investigation of unlawful conduct in Missouri.

Media Matters cannot get around these stubborn facts by misrepresenting state law and Supreme Court precedent. Media Matters says that Missouri's law simply authorizes "inspection" of documents and asserts that the Attorney General "would likely need to travel to the District of Columbia for such inspection." ECF 49-1 at 19. But Missouri law says that documents shall be "produce[d]," not inspected, and must be produced at the "place as may be stated in the civil investigative demand," which is Missouri. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.040. Media Matters also misstates Supreme Court precedent as holding that any mailing satisfies personal jurisdiction. ECF 49-1 at 23. But the case cited merely states that sending something through the mail is "a relevant contact," not a sufficient contact. Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 285 (2014). A mail-order business may satisfy sufficient contacts, but D.C. courts have repeatedly held that merely "mailing a letter or other material into Washington, DC from outside of the District does not qualify as an 'act . . . in the District of Columbia within the meaning of subsection (a)(3)." Slate v. Kamau, No.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

20-CV-3732 (BAH), 2021 WL 3472438, at *6 (D.D.C. Aug. 6, 2021) (internal citations omitted); accord Moncrief v. Lexington Herald-Leader Co., 807 F.2d 217, 219–22 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (holding that "no act occurred within the District of Columbia" when "the libelous article was printed, and the newspapers were mailed, outside of the District of Columbia.").

Media Matters suggests there is a chill caused by receiving a CID in the mail inquiring about conduct in another state. Not so. The D.C. Circuit explicitly rejects the theory that the "injury is part of the tort" for the purpose of the long-arm statute "because such a theory would obliterate subsection (3)'s careful distinction between injury' and act." Forras v. Rauf, 812 F.3d 1102, 1107 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Dyson v. Dutko Ragen Homes & Investments, No. 21- CV-02280 (APM), 2022 WL 1294484, at *4 (D.D.C. Apr. 27, 2022) (noting that "limited communications initiated from outside the District of Columbia to a District resident do not qualify as an act 'in the District' for purposes of § 13-423(a)(3)").

Media Matters' "chilling" argument also proves far too much. Under that argument, Media Matters could sue in D.C. even if the State of Missouri had served the CID and lawsuit on Media Matters outside D.C. Media Matters has not provided any support for its idea that there is personal jurisdiction against the defendant wherever the allegedly injured plaintiff might reside. That would turn personal jurisdiction on its head. "[T]he plaintiff cannot be the only link between the defendant and the forum." Walden, 571 U.S. at 286.

B. Personal jurisdiction here would violate the Due Process Clause.

Personal jurisdiction in this case also does not meet the requirements of Due Process because the Missouri Attorney General, on behalf of the State of Missouri, does not have minimum contacts. Goodyear Dunlop Tires Operations, S.A. v. Brown, 564 U.S. 915, 923 (2011). There is neither general jurisdiction—where a defendant is "essentially at home" in the forum state—nor specific jurisdiction, based on the contacts between the defendant, the forum state, and the controversy. See Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 415–16 (1984); Ford Motor Co. v. Montana Eighth Jud. Dist. Ct., 141 S. Ct. 1017, 1024–25 (2021). Media Matters does not contend that the Court has general jurisdiction.

Nor is there specific jurisdiction. Missouri did not "purposefully direct" conduct at the forum state "such that [it] should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there." Lewis v. Mutond, 62 F.4th 587, 591 (D.C. Cir. 2023) (citation omitted). "[A] plaintiff's claims must "aris[e] out of or relat[e] to the defendant's contacts with the forum." Id. (citation omitted). But Media Matters alleges no such thing.

Indeed, Media Matters alleges even fewer contacts by Missouri than the already minimal contacts alleged of Texas. While this Court found it meaningful that Texas delivered its CID through a process server, ECF 37 at 26, Missouri delivered its CID through the mail. If "email and telephone communications sent into the District of Columbia are not sufficient" for personal jurisdiction, Associated Producers, LTD v. Vanderbilt U., 76 F. Supp. 3d 154, 165 (D.D.C. 2014), then neither is snail mail. E.g., Exponential Biotherapies, Inc. v. Houthoff Buruma N.V., 638 F. Supp. 2d 1, 9 (D.D.C. 2009) ("HB's telephone calls, emails, facsimiles and mailings, including invoices, to EBI's D.C. office are insufficient to subject it to this Court's personal jurisdictio n."). To be sure, Missouri used a process server for its state enforcement action, but Media Matters challenges much more than that. And if using a process server to serve a lawsuit is sufficient (it is not), then Media Matters has subjected itself to personal jurisdiction in Missouri by using a process server to serve its complaint on the Missouri Attorney General. ECF 48.

First Amendment concerns do not change or even enter into the personal jurisdiction analysis. See Moncrief, 807 F.2d at 222–24. To the extent Media Matters believes it experienced a heightened chill because the State of Missouri exercised its sovereign authority, that similarly does not affect the personal jurisdiction analysis. The default rule is that state agencies should not "have to defend [their] attempt to enforce [state] laws"—much less mere investigations under those laws—"in courts throughout the nation." Stroman Realty v. Wercinski, 513 F.3d 476, 487 (5th Cir. 2008); accord Music Makers Holdings v. Sarro, No. RWT-09-cv1836, 2010 WL 2807805, at *5 (D. Md. July 15, 2010) ("[R]ecent out-of-circuit court of appeals decisions have analyzed the issue in a variety of contexts and have uniformly held that cease-and-desist letters alone do not establish personal jurisdiction."). For these reasons, there is no personal jurisdiction.

C. Media Matters' jurisdictional argument is self-defeating.

A critical lynchpin of Media Matters' entire lawsuit is its bold assertion that Missouri courts "obviously lack personal jurisdiction" over Media Matters. ECF 49-1 at 35. Yet Media Matters' arguments for jurisdiction over the Missouri Attorney General would necessarily subject Media Matters to jurisdiction in Missouri. Media Matters contends, for example, that merely mailing something into D.C. subjects the Missouri Attorney General to jurisdiction. Yet Media Matters regularly emails newsletters to countless residents of Missouri. Jurisdiction is proper when an organization "circulat[es] magazines to deliberately exploit a market in the forum state." Walden, 571 U.S. at 285 (quotation marks omitted; brackets adopted). Media Matters also solicits (and receives) donations from Missourians. E.g., Reed decl. ¶ 7. And Media Matters admits it writes articles about public figures in Missouri.

Media Matters' sole response to all this is to assert that the Missouri Attorney General—nearly 20 years ago—responded to a Media Matters inquiry and opined that the organization was exempt from registering under Missouri law. ECF 49-1 at 37; ECF 39-11. But Media Matters neglects to mention that under Missouri law, all 501(c)(3) organizations are exempt from registration. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.456.2(6). That law states that an organization seeking to solicit donations in Missouri must register with the Secretary of State unless the organization is, for example, religious, educational, or a 501(c)(3). Id. Exemption from registration says nothing about the organization's contacts with Missouri.

In fact, Media Matters' 2007 outreach to the Missouri Attorney General undermines Media Matters' contentions. Media Matters would not have reached out to the Missouri Attorney General in the first place unless it were soliciting donations in the State. (Its most recent public financial disclosure shows that it is still soliciting donations from Missouri. Reed decl. ¶ 7.) And the letter confirms Media Matters was in fact engaging in substantial contacts with Missouri, which is why the Attorney General's Office at the time invited Media Matters "to be included on the Missouri Attorney General's Office charity web page." ECF 39-11.

III. Media Matters Cannot Establish a Justiciable, Ripe Injury, Nor the Absence of an Adequate Remedy at Law.

To establish a justiciable controversy, Media Matters must establish not only the regular three elements of standing, but also that the dispute is "ripe" and—because Media Matters seeks a prospective injunction—that there is no adequate remedy at law. Natl. Park Hosp. Ass'n v. Dept. of Int., 538 U.S. 803, 807 (2003) (ripeness); Natl. Farmers Union Ins. Companies v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 471 U.S. 845, 856 n.22 (1985) (adequate remedy). Media Matters has not done so.

The Supreme Court's decision in Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964), makes clear that Media Matters cannot establish the lack of an adequate remedy at law. There, the Supreme Court held that an agency's non-self-executing request for documents is not reviewable until the agency tries to enforce it. The recipient of an administrative request for documents was not obligated to produce anything until after the agency brought an "enforcement action" where the recipient would be afforded "a judicial determination" of the lawfulness of the request and the viability of any of his defenses. Id. at 446. That "opportunity for judicial review before any coercive sanctions may be imposed" was an adequate "remedy"; and the court would not permit the recipient of the request to short-circuit this process by preemptively seeking an injunction in federal court. Id. at 450. That is exactly the opportunity being afforded Media Matters in Missouri state court, and it is taking advantage of that opportunity.

In granting a preliminary injunction against the Texas Attorney General, this Court concluded that Reisman did not apply because, unlike in Reisman, "[t]he Texas Code contains no equivalent remedies for a non-resident challenging a CID" as Texas law refers only to in-state defendants contesting a CID in state court. ECF 37 at 30. But Missouri law is different. Missouri law does include an equivalent remedy and expressly states that a person may challenge a CID in the "county where the parties reside or in the circuit court of Cole County." Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.070 (emphasis added). Cole County contains Missouri's capital city, is an open venue for all out-of-state parties, and is the venue for the existing state proceeding. Id. Similarly, this Court faulted Texas for not citing "any authority holding that an exclusive remedy in foreign state court is an adequate remedy at law." ECF 37 at 30. But Missouri has cited relevant authority. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that federal courts must presume that a state's courts are an adequate forum. E.g., Pennzoil, 481 U.S. at 15 ("[A] federal court should assume that state procedures will afford an adequate remedy, in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary.").

This Court also noted that Reisman did not involve the First Amendment, ECF 37 at 30, but that makes no difference because Media Matters seeks prospective relief. This Court noted that where a party asserts a First Amendment chill, an injury may have already occurred, unlike in Reisman. Id. (citing Twitter, Inc. v. Paxton, 56 F.4th 1170, 1178 (9th Cir. 2022)). But Media Matters has not sought any relief to rectify a past injury; Media Matters instead seeks relief to enjoin "further action to enforce" the CID. ECF 39-2 (supplemental complaint) ¶ 74 (emphasis added). It is axiomatic that when a plaintiff "seeks prospective declaratory and injunctive relief, he must establish an ongoing or future injury that is 'certainly impending'; he may not rest on past injury." Arpaio v. Obama, 797 F.3d 11, 19 (D.C. Cir. 2015). Reisman forecloses Media Matters from suing because Media Matters' ability to raise its defenses to future injury in state court means Media Matters has an adequate remedy at law, and "[i]t is a fundamental principle of long standing that a request for an injunction will not be granted as long as an adequate remedy at law is available." Natl. Farmers Union, 471 U.S. at 856 n.22.

Media Matters also cannot establish ripeness. Even if there were no adequate remedy at law, the Twitter case holds that where a recipient of a CID "can raise its First Amendment defense" in state court, then a federal challenge is not ripe. Twitter, 56 F.4th at 1177. "[U]nlike the analysis of Reisman, [the] ripeness analysis does not rely on the lack of an adequate remedy at law," and so it serves as an independent bar to judicial relief. Id. at 1179. Here, there is an enforcement action in Missouri state court and Media Matters is not only participating but will also have a full opportunity to raise its federal claims. As such, this case should be dismissed for ripeness.

These decisions are consistent with the routine conclusion by courts that "pre-enforcement review of investigative subpoenas" is strongly disfavored. See, e.g., Belle Fourche Pipeline Co. v. United States, 751 F.2d 332, 334 (10th Cir. 1984); see also United States v. Kulukundis, 329 F.2d 197, 199 (2d Cir. 1964) (Friendly, J.) (explaining Reisman "seems to destroy the basis underlying decisions of this court which authorized applications to vacate [non-self-executing subpoenas] (and appeals from their denial) in advance of any judicial proceeding by the Government for their enforcement"). This is true even if there is an assertion of First Amendment claims. See, e.g., Google, 822 F.3d at 226 (concluding, in the First Amendment context, that "administrative subpoena is not ripe for review" because it is not "self-executing").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

IV. There Is No Likelihood of Success on the Merits.

In addition to the foregoing reasons, the extraordinary relief Plaintiffs seek against the State of Missouri and its judicial proceedings should be denied because there is no likelihood of success on the merits.

A. Media Matters is unlikely to succeed on its retaliation claim.

To assert a First Amendment retaliation claim, Media Matters "must show, among other things, that the government took an 'adverse action' in response to [its] speech that 'would not have been taken absent the retaliatory motive.'" Houston Community College System v. Wilson, 595 U.S. 468, 477 (2022) (quoting Nieves v. Bartlett, 139 S. Ct. 1715, 1722 (2019)).

This is an exceptionally heavy burden, which requires Media Matters to prove there was no legitimate ground to investigate at all. In Nieves, the Supreme Court concluded that a plaintiff must also establish that "non-retaliatory grounds are in fact insufficient to provoke the adverse consequences." Nieves, 139 S. Ct. at 1722. Specifically, the Supreme Court concluded that a retaliatory-arrest claim automatically fails if there is probable cause for the arrest, regardless of the individual officer's subjective motivation. Id. at 1728 ("Because there was probable cause to arrest Bartlett, his retaliatory arrest claim fails as a matter of law."). That rule is necessary because of the "presumption of regularity underlying the prosecutor's [enforcement] decision—a presumption [courts] 'do not lightly discard.'" Id. at 1723 (citation omitted).

Media Matters cannot establish that there was no probable cause at all to launch an investigation. Here, X Corp.'s lawsuit lays out a fact pattern that shows conduct not only "likely" to deceive consumers, but deliberately designed to do so. DoubleVerify, "which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers," recently debunked the allegations that X was regularly populating advertisements next to fringe content, concluding instead that X's "Brand Safety Rates" were nearly perfect—99.99%—during the very time when

Media Matters accused X of regularly posting brand advertisements next to fringe content. Todd Spangler, DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months, Variety (Apr. 15, 2024). And the district court overseeing that lawsuit has preliminarily concluded that X's allegations are likely sufficient to overcome a motion to dismiss. X Corp., ECF 54 at 8.

A mere investigation is of course much less intrusive and disruptive than an arrest. Just as probable cause defeats a retaliatory arrest claim as a matter of law, so too probable cause for an investigation must defeat Media Matters' claim here. That is especially true because Media Matters' assertion is implausible on its face. It asserts that the Missouri Attorney General chose to retaliate because Media Matters wrote a single article criticizing him. ECF 49-1 at 12 ("Bailey has, like Paxton, been the subject of critical reporting from Media Matters. Bailey's Demand, much like Paxton's, thus reeks of opportunistic retaliation.') (citing a single article). But the Missouri Attorney General is regularly criticized by other media outlets, and Media Matters has not identified a single example of any other outlet receiving a CID at all—much less after writing a critical article. Contrary to Media Matters' distorted reality, the Attorney General filed the civil investigative demand to assess whether Media Matters has been dishonest with Missourians when soliciting donations from Missourians.

Media Matters also cannot establish any chill. Declarations notwithstanding, Media Matters' website reveals no chill at all. Media Matters identifies one article critical of the Missouri Attorney General published last August. Id. But on March 26 of this year—the day after the Missouri Attorney General publicly filed suit—Media Matters wrote a story criticizing the Missouri Attorney General. Vesper Henry & Ari Drennen, Seen But Not Heard: The New York Times Failed to Quote Trans People in Two-Thirds of Stories on Anti-Trans Legislation in a One-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Year Period (March 26, 2024).[8] And a quick search reveals that Media Matters has published at least 20 articles about Elon Musk since its allegedly defamatory November 2023 article.[9]

Media Matters' retaliation claim fails for yet another reason: as a matter of law, "immaterial adverse actions" do not violate the First Amendment. Houston Community College System, 595 U.S. at 477 (courts "distinguish material from immaterial adverse actions"). Media Matters does not dispute that it is going to have to litigate its claims in one forum or another: either this one or Missouri state court. But it repeatedly states that it is "injured" by the prospect of litigating in Missouri. E.g., ECF 49-1 at 36–37. That is not a material adverse action. This Court must presume that the state courts in Missouri are adequate, and Media Matters litigating there is simply the same "injury incidental to every proceeding." Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611, 618 (1968).

B. Media Matters' other claims are likewise unlikely to succeed.

In the lawsuit against Texas, this Court rightly declined to grant Media Matters relief on any of its other counts. The Court should do the same here.

First and Fourth Amendments. At the outset, there is nothing "imminent" about the argument that the CID seeks information beyond what is permitted by the First and Fourth Amendments. Media Matters can litigate that issue under a standard timeline because no documents will be turned over until Media Matters has a full and fair chance to raise its defenses. Courts in Missouri regularly address these claims through ordinary litigation. State ex rel. Ashcroft v. Goldberg, 608 S.W.2d 385, 388 (Mo. 1980) (Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments).

In any event, Media Matters' claims easily fail. On the First Amendment, Media Matters asserts that the CID falls afoul of Americans for Prosperity Found. v. Bonta, 141 S. Ct. 2373

[8] https://www.mediamatters.org/new-york-times/seen-not-heard-new-york-times-failed-quote-trans-people-over-60-2023-stories-anti

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(2021), but that case involved a California mandate for every nonprofit organization to disclose donor information automatically each year, without judicial process, rather than in response to a subpoena. Indeed, the Supreme Court expressly rejected California's mandate because there were "alternative means of obtaining [the] information—such as a subpoena." Id. at 2386.

On the Fourth Amendment issue, it is well settled that "the Fourth Amendment generally presents little obstacle to the enforcement of administrative subpoenas." ADR Tr. Corp. v. Thornton, 41 F.3d 1539, 1548 (D.C. Cir. 1994). Media Matters makes no attempt to develop its Fourth Amendment argument, other to say that it "often overlap[s]" with First Amendment concerns. ECF 49-1 at 32. Media Matters' argument is thus both waived and wrong.

State shield laws. No stronger is the contention that the CID violates Maryland and DC law. Those laws do not apply extraterritorially to Media Matters' conduct in Missouri. Media Matters also again fails to develop its argument. It notes, for example, that the statutes provide only "qualified protection against compelled disclosure" but makes no effort to state why that "qualified" protection applies here. Id. at 35. This issue, too, is waived.

Due Process. Finally, Media Matters strangely tries to escalate a jurisdictional issue into its own § 1983 violation. Media Matters asserts that the "legal process against them in Missouri violates due process." ECF 49-1 at 36. If in fact Media Matters were correct, that would be a good argument for the Missouri courts to dismiss the CID enforcement action. But it is not an independent constitutional tort for a party to sue somebody else in a forum that ultimately concludes it lacks personal jurisdiction, and Media Matters fails to cite any authority otherwise. Indeed, it is the state courts of Missouri, not the Missouri Attorney General, that exercise coercive power in the context of Due Process challenges. Media Matters' argument also proves way too much. Under that logic, Media Matters will have committed a tort against the State of Missouri if this Court (or the D.C. Circuit) concludes that Younger abstention is appropriate or the Court lacks personal jurisdiction here.

The Due Process argument is especially unavailing because, as discussed in more depth above, Media Matters has already consented to personal jurisdiction in Missouri. Rather than comply with Missouri requirements to object to personal jurisdiction in the first instance, Media Matters has filed a motion (which was granted) availing itself of legal rights in Missouri.

V. Media Matters Will Not Suffer Irreparable Harm.

"The basis of injunctive relief in the federal courts has always been irreparable harm." CityFed Fin. Corp. v. Office of Thrift Supervision, 58 F.3d 738, 747 (D.C. Cir. 1995). Accordingly, the "failure to show any irreparable harm is ... grounds for refusing to issue a preliminary injunction, even if the other three factors entering the calculus merit such relief." Jones v. District of Columbia, 177 F. Supp. 3d 542, 545 (D.D.C. 2016) (quoting Chaplaincy of Full Gospel Churches v. England, 454 F.3d 290, 297 (D.C. Cir. 2006) and citing Save Jobs USA v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 105 F. Supp. 3d 108, 112 (D.D.C. 2015) ("the movant must always show irreparable harm or injury, and if a party makes no showing of irreparable injury, the court may deny the motion for injunctive relief without considering the other factors")). Here, there cannot be irreparable harm because there is an avenue for relief—an avenue Media Matters is engaged in—before any supposed harm is ever experienced.[10]

The D.C. Circuit "'has set a high standard for irreparable injury.'" Id. (quoting Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 297). "[T]he injury 'must be both certain and great; it must be actual and not theoretical.' " Id. (quotations omitted). Indeed, the "injury must also be 'of such imminence that [10] Plaintiffs suggest they are experiencing an irreparable chilling effect. But, as Texas pointed out, Media Matters has continued its same criticisms and coverage. And in any event, it would have no application with respect to the State of Missouri's CID, which came months after the supposed harm was experienced. The chill is at best "theoretical." Jones, 177 F. Supp. 3d at 545.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

there is a 'clear and present' need for equitable relief to prevent irreparable harm." Id. (quoting Wisc. Gas Co. v. FERC, 758 F.2d 669, 674 (D.C. Cir. 1985). Moreover, the injury must be "beyond remediation." Id. (quoting Chaplaincy, 454 F.3d at 297). As has been said many times, there is a remedy in this case; there is alternative relief before any supposed harm. And it is a remedy or relief that Plaintiffs have already engaged in—the State of Missouri's enforcement action in state court.

Even setting that issue aside, there is no imminent—much less irreparable—injury at all because Media Matters will not have to hand over any documents until it has had a full and fair opportunity to raise its defenses. Missouri's CIDs are not self-executing. Nothing will happen to Media Matters until resolution of judicial proceedings.

VI. The Balance of Equities and Public Interest Decisively Favor Missouri.

Finally, in Winter v. NRDC, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, (2008), the Supreme Court "held that 'proper consideration' of the balance of equities and public interest 'factors alone [would have] require[d] denial of the requested injunctive relief,' 'even if [the] plaintiffs [had] shown irreparable injury' and a likelihood of success on the merits." Kim v. Fin. Indus. Regul. Auth., Inc., No. 1:23-CV-02420 (ACR), 2023 WL 6538544, at *16 (D.D.C. Oct. 6, 2023). "Importantly, this body of case law shows that a court can deny preliminary injunctive relief solely on the balance of equities and public interest factors even in cases, like this, involving constitutional claims." Id.

In this case, the balance of equities and public interest decisively favor the State of Missouri. The importance and need to protect consumers is indisputable. Missouri consumer protections laws have been in force for decades and have provided the legal and regulatory backbone of tens of thousands of actions, enforcements, and investigations to protect consumers. Further, the ability of a sovereign state, through its constitutionally and statutorily authorized Attorney General, to conduct investigations into potential violations of consumer protections laws is paramount—as is the ability of state courts in Missouri to resolve disputes over the exercise of that authority. If, at every turn, a federal court injunction is sought for routine investigations of potential violations of state law, then vital public interests and federalism will be defeated.

Because Media Matters not only has the opportunity, but has invoked the right, to challenge the investigation in Missouri courts, the balance of equities and the public interest unquestionably favor the denial of a TRO or preliminary injunction.

The equities especially disfavor Media Matters (and Media Matters also lacks standing) because it could have avoided any harm. "It is well-settled that a preliminary injunction movant does not satisfy the irreparable harm criterion when the alleged harm is self-inflicted." Safari Club Int'l v. Salazar, 852 F. Supp. 2d 102, 123 (D.D.C. 2012) (quotations omitted). "In analogous circumstances, plaintiffs who decline the opportunity to avail themselves of a regulatory scheme to avoid the very harm for which they seek injunctive relief have been denied the [injunctive] relief." Id. Media Matters here has run to federal court rather than take advantage of the availability of relief in Missouri state court.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the motion for a TRO and a Preliminary Injunction should be denied.

MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA, ERIC HANANOKI, Plaintiffs, v. WARREN KENNETH PAXTON JR., in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Texas, ANDREW BAILEY, in his official capacity as Attorney General of the State of Missouri Defendants.	No. 24-cv-147

DECLARATION OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL STEVEN REED

I, Steven Reed, declare as follow:

1. My name is Steven Reed and I am a lawyer duly licensed and in good standing in the State of Missouri. I am over the age of 21 and fully competent to make this declaration. I make this declaration based on my personal knowledge.

2. I am the Chief Counsel for the Consumer Protection Section of the Missouri Attorney General's Office and am one of the attorneys responsible for the State of Missouri's investigation into consumer protection violations by Media Matters for America (Media Matters).

3. The Consumer Protection Section is responsible for administering and enforcing Chapter 407, the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act, of the Missouri Revised Statutes (RSMo.).

4. The Consumer Protection Section of the Missouri Attorney General's Office issues dozens of Civil Investigative Demands (CID's) under Section 407.040 RSMo. every year in an effort to investigate the "act, use or employment by any person of deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise in trade or commerce or the solicitation of any funds for any charitable purpose…." Section 407.010 RSMo. (emphasis added).

5. Under Section 407.040, RSMo., the Missouri Attorney General, on behalf of the State of Missouri, may issue a CID "when it appears to the attorney general that a person has engaged in or is engaging in any method, act, use practice or solicitation declared to be unlawful by this chapter or when he believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation should be made to ascertain whether a person in fact has engaged in or is engaging in any such method, act, use, practice or solicitation …."

6. In November 2023, the Missouri Attorney General's Office became aware of potential violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act by Media Matters, an organization that purports to solicit funds for charitable purposes, and began to look into the matter.

7. The Missouri Attorney General's Office discovered that Media Matters not only distributes its newsletter in Missouri, but engages in internet and email solicitations, phone solicitations, and in-person solicitations for fundraising–listing Missouri in its public financial disclosures as a state in which it "is registered or licensed to solicit contributions or has been notified it is exempt from registration." Indeed, Media Matters has specifically communicated with the Missouri Attorney General's Office to seek an exemption from registration for its fundraising in Missouri. See Exhibit 1.

8. The Missouri Attorney General's Office further discovered that Media Matters was credibly accused of defaming the social media platform X (formerly Twitter) by falsely representing that X routinely populates advertisements for brands like Apple, IBM, and Xfinity next to extremist, fringe content.

9. The Missouri Attorney General's Office learned that, according to credible allegations, Media Matters had "knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform." Complaint, X Corp. v. Media Matters for America, No. 4:23-cv-1175, ECF 1 ¶ 1 (N.D. Tex. Nov. 20, 2023). Media Matters did this by "manipulat[ing] the algorithms … to bypass safeguards." Id. ¶¶ 7–8. According to credible allegations, while Media Matters insisted that paid advertisements regularly "appeared alongside the fringe content," in fact that was true "for only one viewer (out of more than 500 million) on all of X: Media Matters." Id. ¶ 13 (emphasis in original). Yet, according to reports and allegations, Media Matters' false "reporting" had the desired effect: advertisers withdrew from X in droves.

10. In confirmation of these allegations involving Media Matters, the Missouri Attorney General's Office has since learned from DoubleVerify, an organization "which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers," that allegations that X was regularly populating advertisements next to fringe content is false. DoubleVerify stated that X's "Brand Safety Rates" were nearly perfect—99.99%—during the very time when Media Matters accused X of regularly posting brand advertisements next to fringe content. See Exhibit 2 (Todd Spangler, DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months, Variety (Apr. 15, 2024)).

11. Having identified potential violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act, the Missouri Attorney General's Office determined to further investigate the matter. The Missouri

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Attorney General's Office did not simply file a complaint against Media Matters for violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act; instead, the Missouri Attorney General's Office determined to gather more information by issuing a CID to Media Matters. This is something routinely done by the Missouri Attorney General's Office.

12. On March 25, 2024, the Office of the Missouri Attorney General, through the Consumer Protection Section that I lead as Chief Counsel, sent by certified mail, Civil Investigative Demand No. 24-10 to Media Matters, a true and accurate copy of which is attached as Exhibit 3 (CID No. 24-10). See Exhibit 4 (Certified mail cards and receipts).

13. Pursuant to section 407.040, the CID identifies the statute of the suspected violation and the general subject matter of the investigation. Specifically, the CID requests information relevant to whether Media Matters has engaged in or is engaging in any merchandising practices declared to be unlawful by section 407.020 with regard to Media Matters' fraudulent manipulation of data on X.com.

14. The Missouri Attorney General's Office had also learned that Media Matters would refuse, and had refused, to comply with any investigative demand, including CID No. 24-10, as it had with similar investigative demands. Accordingly, Missouri determined it would seek enforcement of its CID sent to Media Matters in Missouri state court as authorized by Missouri law. See Section 407.090, RSMo.

15. As anticipated, Media Matters refused, and continues to refuse, to comply with CID No. 24-10, and has provided no information or materials to the State of Missouri for its investigation under the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act.

16. After the CID to Media Matters was served, the State of Missouri filed its Petition for Order to Enforce Civil Investigative Demand. See State of Missouri, ex rel. Andrew Bailey,

Attorney General v. Media Matters for America, Case No. 24AC-CC02291 (Circuit Court of Cole County, Missouri). I am a signatory to that Petition.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

DoubleVerify Apologizes for Misreporting X/ Twitter's Brand-Safety Rates for More Than Four Months

Todd Spangler
Mon, Apr 15, 2024 • 4 min read

DoubleVerify, which provides brand-safety measurement ratings for digital platforms to major advertisers, incorrectly displayed X's Brand Safety Rate — a measure of how frequently ads appeared adjacent to content that met advertiser-approved criteria — on the DoubleVerify dashboard for nearly five months.

From Oct. 24, 2023, to March 14, 2024, DoubleVerify's dashboard provided the wrong data for X to advertisers. In some cases, the measurement firm showed scores as low as 70%, whereas X's Brand Safety Rates were in fact 99.99%. DoubleVerify CEO Mark Mark Zagorski, in a message to customers April 12, apologized for the error and said the company's dashboard now correctly shows X's brand-safety rates.

"We apologize for any confusion this may have caused to X and to our customers in the course of reviewing your campaign performance on X," Zagorski wrote in the message to customers. "DV remains committed to maintaining the highest standards of accuracy and transparency in our data."

It's unclear how the error occurred. Reps for X and DoubleVerify said the companies are continuing to investigate the issue. DoubleVerify is "conducting a thorough review of our processes and systems to ensure this issue does not occur in the future," according to Zagorski.

"X remains dedicated to ensuring a safe and transparent platform for our valued advertisers and users," the X Business account posted on Friday. "We are deeply troubled by this gross misrepresentation of our Brand Safety performance and have taken immediate action to rectify the situation with DoubleVerify."

Elon Musk, the tech billionaire who owns X, wrote in a post April 12, "Thank you DoubleVerify for correcting your mistake regarding brand safety on this platform. When measured accurately, brand safety on 𝕏 is extremely good."

DoubleVerify's reporting error caused dozens of large brands to pull back advertising spending and stop campaigns on X, according to the social-media company. For example, the DoubleVerify dashboard said that a Molson Coors campaign delivered poorly with a brand-suitability rate in the mid-90s — when it was actually 99.99%. Account teams at Publicis Spark, which manages campaigns for such brands as Campbell's and Conagra, became aware of the erroneous DoubleVerify metric and then said they were hesitant to partner with X, according to Joe Benarroch, X's head of business operations. (A spokesman for Campbell's said that its brands have not advertised on X or Twitter since 2020; that decision was tied to consumer behavior and performance and wasn't related at all to any brand-safety issues.)

Monique Pintarelli, head of Americas for X, in remarks delivered Monday to the Mobile Marketing Association's Board of Global Advertisers, noted that the social network's tools for sensitivity settings and keyword adjacencies — and its partnerships with Integral Ad Science (IAS) and DoubleVerify to allow for third-party verification — were not available prior to Musk's acquisition of Twitter.

Pintarelli also noted that the DoubleVerify reporting error affected only X. She asked advertisers to "please connect with your agencies and measurement partners to ensure you have the most accurate information."

"We are proud of the work we are doing, to ensure our customers have the tools needed to ensure brand safety across our platform," Pintarelli said. "We are now at or above industry standards, in all metrics and capabilities."

X/ Twitter and Musk have a[illegible]ressively pushed back against claims that the social network is unsafe for brand advertising. Last November, X sued liberal watchdog group Media Matters, alleging the group "knowingly and maliciously manufactured" research that showed neo-Nazi and white-nationalist posts on X next to ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle and Comcast's Xfinity. Following the Media Matters report and Musk's seeming endorsement of an anti-Semitic conspiracy theory, several large advertisers including Disney said they were halting their spending on X — either because of the Media Matters reports, Musk's post or a combination of both. Last month, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed a lawsuit against Media Matters seeking to force the nonprofit to turn over documents related to the AG's investigation "into its fraudulent business practices," citing X's allegations that Media Matters "deceitfully manipulated X's algorithm to place advertisers' content next to contrived controversial posts." In a statement, Media Matters president Angelo Carusone said: "Far from the free-speech advocate he claims to be, Elon Musk has actually intensified his efforts to undermine free speech by enlisting Republican Attorneys General across the country to initiate meritless, expensive, and harassing investigations against Media Matters in an attempt to punish critics. This [Missouri] investigation is the latest in a transparent endeavor to squelch the First Amendment rights of researchers and reporters; it will have a chilling effect on news reporters."

Read Zagorski's message to DoubleVerify customers about the reporting error for X's Brand Safety Rates:

resulted in displaying an incorrect, lower rate. Specifically, DoubleVerify's dashboard incorrectly mirrored the Brand Suitability Rate for your campaign onto the Brand Safety Rate in the summary graphic in Pinnacle. The underlying data available in DV Pinnacle was accurate; only the graphical visualization was not representative of the Brand Safety Rate. This display error occurred over four and a half months from October 24, 2023 to March 14th, 2024, when it was corrected by DV. All current and retroactive Brand Safety data for X is now correctly represented in Pinnacle. The display error was not present in any other area in the UI, including the Incident Reporting and the Rollover Data Detail.

Based on DoubleVerify's metrics, X's Brand Safety Rate across all campaigns we measured exceeded 99.99% from October 2023 to the present. This means that X's Brand Safety Rate exceeds global benchmarks for brand safety, based on DV's global industry data.

DoubleVerify takes measurement accuracy and reporting seriously. We take full responsibility for the inaccurate visual representation of X's Brand Safety Rate within our dashboard that displayed an inaccurate and lower Brand Safety Rate.

We apologize for any confusion this may have caused to X and to our customers in the course of reviewing your campaign performance on X. DV remains committed to maintaining the highest standards of accuracy and transparency in our data.

DoubleVerify is working closely with X to ensure that all future reports reflect the accurate Brand Safety performance of campaigns run on X's platform. We also are conducting a thorough review of our processes and systems to ensure this issue does not occur in the future.

Should you wish to have a direct conversation with X regarding your reporting, we would be happy to relay your contact information to your X account lead and facilitate a meeting. Our team at DoubleVerify remains committed to maintaining trust and confidence in our platform, and would welcome a direct follow up with you should you wish to discuss further.

Mark Zagorski

INVESTIGATIVE DEMAND

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL TO:

Served: U.S. Postal Service
Certified Mail

Media Matters for America
PO Box 44811
Washington, DC 20026

The Attorney General of the State of Missouri believes it to be in the public interest that an investigation be made to ascertain whether Media Matters for America (Subject) has engaged in or is engaging in practices declared unlawful by § 407.020, RSMo.

The investigation will inquire into the activities of Subject in connection with the solicitation of funds for a charitable purpose, or the sale or advertisement of merchandise, §§ 407.020, 407.453, RSMo.

The Attorney General has reason to believe that the Subject has used deception, fraud, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of material fact in connection with the soliciting of funds for a charitable purpose or the sale or advertisement of merchandise in or from the State of Missouri, § 407.020, RSMo. Independently, the Attorney General also believes it to be in the public interest to investigate whether such acts have occurred.

The Attorney General believes you have information, documentary material or physical evidence relevant to the above-mentioned conduct.

DEFINITIONS

As used in this Demand, the following terms have the meanings described below:

"Communication" means any expression, statement, conveyance, or dissemination of any words, thoughts, statements, ideas, or information regardless of form, format, or kind. "Communication" includes but is not limited to oral or written communications of any kind, such as telephone conversations, discussions, meetings, notes, letters, agreements, emails or other electronic communications, facsimiles, and other forms of written or oral exchange that are recorded in any way, including video recordings, audio recordings, written notes, or otherwise. Any "Communication" that also falls within the definition of "Document" shall constitute both a Document and a Communication for purposes of this civil investigative demand.

"Document" means all written, printed, typed, and recorded matter of every kind and description, originals and copies, and all attachments and appendices thereto. Without limiting the foregoing, "documents" include all agreements, contracts, correspondence and other communications including notes, memoranda and marginal notations, records, reports, books, manuals, instructions, statistical data and data compilations, drafts, charts, graphs and tables, bills, statements and invoices, advertising, surveys, transcripts, microfilm and microfiche, electronic records that can be reproduced in paper form, recordings, film, tapes, photographs, electronic mail and Web pages, and all other computer-generated, computer-stored, or electronically-stored matter, however and by whomever produced, prepared, reproduced, disseminated, or made.

"Identify", when used with respect to a person or entity, means information sufficient to allow employees of the Attorney General to ascertain the name, address, telephone number, and if not a natural person, the contact person of the entity or facility to be identified, as well as the relationship of that person or entity to you.

"Identifying", when used with respect to a fact or event, means information sufficient to allow employees of the Attorney General to ascertain the fact or event with reasonable particularity, and to identify each person believed to have knowledge with respect to the fact or event and each document that refers or relates to the fact or event.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"Relating to", "related to", "relate to" means to be relevant in any way to the subject matter in question, including without limitation all information that directly or indirectly contains, records, reflects, summarizes, evaluates, refers to, is pertinent to, indicates, comments upon, or discusses the subject matter; or that states the background of, or was the basis for, or that records, evaluates, comments, was referred to, relied upon, utilized, generated, transmitted, or received in arriving at any conclusion, opinion, estimate, position, decision, belief, policy, practice, course of business, course of conduct, procedure, or assertion concerning the subject matter.

"You", including your, means Media Matters for America, subsidiaries, partnerships, or any other entities related to Media Matters for America.

DEMAND FOR INFORMATION

Demand is hereby made upon you, under the authority granted by Section 407.040, RSMo, to produce in person or via mail to Michelle Starke, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102 by April 15, 2024, the following documentary material and information that may be in your possession, custody or control, and permit the inspection and copying thereof:

1. A list or information identifying any and all donations of funds from donors located in the state of Missouri from January 01, 2023 through March 25, 2024.

   The list of donations should include, but is not limited to:
   - Identity of each individual or organization who donated funds;
   - Address of each individual or organization who donated funds;
   - Total amount spent per donation;
   - Date and time of each donation;
   - Payment method for each donation;

NOTICE OF DEMAND FOR RETENTION OF RECORDS

You are hereby notified that all records, including communications, documents and things, relating to the above requests and the matters that are the subject of these requests for information are to be preserved during the pendency of this investigation. This includes, but is not limited to, all related customer records, including recordings made of customers, all related correspondence and other communications with third parties, all related documents and things received from third parties, and all internal documents and things.

COMPLIANCE

You may comply with this Investigative Demand by producing copies of the requested documents and information by regular mail or overnight delivery to Michelle Starke, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, Missouri 65102. The requested copies of documents and information should be received by the Office of the Attorney General by 10:00 a.m. (Central) on April 15, 2024 and be accompanied by the attached Business Records Affidavit and Certification of Compliance.

You are advised that the Attorney General will not grant an extension of time or modification of the terms of the Demand except for good cause pursuant to the terms of Section 407.070, RSMo. Your prompt response and provision of the requested information is requested.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Your attention is respectfully called to the provisions of Section 407.080, RSMo, which makes certain acts done with the intent to avoid, evade or prevent compliance in whole or in part with any Investigative Demand served hereunder a Class A misdemeanor, which is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000.00 for individuals and $5,000.00 for corporations, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both a fine and imprisonment.

Please direct all questions regarding this Investigative Demand to Jeremiah Morgan at 573-751-1800 or by e-mail to: Jeremiah.Morgan@ago.mo.gov.

Good morning all,

Below is the relevant news relating to the AGO, Missouri, and Nation for today:

AGO News:

Media Matters Lays Off A Dozen Staffers Following Federal Probe, Lawsuit By Elon Musk
Daily Caller | Nicole Silverio
https://dailycaller.com/2024/05/23/media-matters-layoffs-federal-probe-elon-musk-lawsuit/

- Media Matters followed suit with several liberal outlets by laying off at least a dozen staffers following a federal probe and lawsuit by "X" chief executive officer Elon Musk. Staffers, some of whom have been with Media Matters for years, took to social media announcing their sudden departure from the outlet. The layoffs followed federal probes filed by Republican Attorneys General Ken Paxton of Texas and Andrew Bailey of Missouri into the outlet for possible fraudulent activity by allegedly manipulating data on "X," formerly known as Twitter.

Media Matters Staffers Announce Sweeping Lay Offs: 'There's a Reason Far-Right Billionaires Attack'
Mediaite | Alex Griffing
https://www.mediaite.com/news/media-matters-staffers-announce-sweeping-lay-offs-theres-a-reason-far-right-billionaires-attack/

- Media Matters for America laid off many of its staffers on Thursday as former employees took to X, formerly Twitter, to announce they were out of a job. Katherine Abughazaleh, also known as Kat Abu, posted, "Bad News: I've been laid off from @mmfa, along with a dozen colleagues. There's a reason far-right billionaires attack Media Matters with armies of lawyers: They know how effective our work is, and it terrifies them (him)." Abughazaleh appeared to be referring to Elon Musk who filed a defamation suit against the liberal media watchdog last November over a report claiming that major corporate ads on X were being shown alongside white nationalist content…. The hard-right website the Daily Caller also noted, "The layoffs followed federal probes filed by Republican Attorneys General Ken Paxton of Texas and Andrew Bailey of Missouri into the outlet for possible fraudulent activity by allegedly manipulating data on 'X,' formerly known as Twitter." Media Matters did not immediately reply to a request for comment regarding the various staffers announcing they were laid off….

Soros-Backed Media Matters Lays Off a Dozen Employees as Staffers Blame 'Far-Right Billionaires'
Gateway Pundit | Ben Kew
https://www.thegatewaypundit.com/2024/05/soros-backed-media-matters-lays-dozen-employees-as/

- The far-left media watchdog Media Matters for America (MMFA) is laying off around a dozen staff as the organization faces a series of federal probes and defamation lawsuits….Last November, Musk filed a defamation lawsuit against MMFA in federal court in November, accusing them of manipulating images to show advertisements from major corporations alongside posts from white supremacists and neo-Nazis. Meanwhile, the Missouri Attorney General filed a separate lawsuit last December for engaging in fraudulent business practices and refusing to cooperate with an ongoing investigation.

City of Kansas City staffer fired over social media post that disowned Harrison Butker

https://nypost.com/2024/05/23/sports/city-of-kansas-city-staffer-fired-over-harrison-butker-post/

- While the city may be done with the employee, it might not be the only repercussion that the ex-staffer faces. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey has made it clear he is "demanding accountability after [Kansas City] doxxed [Butker last night for daring to express his religious beliefs." "I will enforce the Missouri Human Rights Act to ensure Missourians are not targeted for their free exercise of religion. Stay tuned." Bailey's office also requested Lucas to turn over documents following the since-deleted X post, KMBC reported.

- Mayor Quinton Lucas revealed on Thursday that Kansas City has "separated" from the social media employee who shared where Harrison Butker lives after his commencement speech at Benedictine College last week….Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey vowed to pursue action against the city following the post, saying in an interview with Outkick's Charly Arnolt he had "demanded certain records from the city related to their management of that social media account that doxxed Harrison Butker in retaliation for his free expression of religious beliefs."…

REPOST: Breitbart

Missouri and 18 states file Supreme Court suit over energy policies

KTTN l Staff

https://www.kttn.com/missouri-and-18-states-file-supreme-court-suit-over-energy-policies/

- Today Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed suit with 18 other states against California, Connecticut, Minnesota, New Jersey and Rhode Island at the United States Supreme Court in order to halt the blue states' burdensome policies that threaten Missouri energy. In the suit, General Bailey asserts the defendants have brought unprecedented pressure against the nation's most vital energy companies for an alleged "climate crisis," demanding billions of dollars in damages. California and the other states threaten to impose ruinous penalties and coercive remedies that would affect energy and fuel consumption and production across the country. The States raise the grave constitutional problems with California's extraordinary tactics and ask the Supreme Court to take up the multi-state lawsuit. "I will always fight to put Missouri consumers first, which includes protecting Missouri energy when it comes under attack by other states," said Attorney General Bailey. "California and its radical counterparts are working to upend our economy with their unconstitutional climate agenda. My office will not allow a state with zero respect for the rule of law to dictate how Missourians live their lives." The Supreme Court will decide whether to hear the 19-state lawsuit against California and the other four proposed defendants. General Bailey and the coalition argue that traditional energy sources like oil, natural gas, and coal are essential for American prosperity, but are being targeted by the five radical states. General Bailey also asserts that the matter is of utmost importance because federalism gives each state no more power than any other state. "Defendant States want a global carbon tax on the traditional energy industry. Citing fears of a climate catastrophe, they seek massive penalties, disgorgement, and injunctive relief against energy producers based on out-of-state conduct with out-of-state effects. On their view, a small gas station in rural Alabama could owe damages to the people of Minnesota simply for selling a gallon of gas. If Defendant States are right about the substance and reach of state law, their actions imperil access to affordable energy everywhere and inculpate every State and indeed every person on the planet. Consequently, Defendant States threaten not only our system of federalism and equal sovereignty among States, but our basic way of life," the attorneys general noted.

Therapists, social workers face scrutiny in Missouri AG investigation of transgender care

https://missouriindependent.com/2024/05/24/therapists-social-workers-face-scrutiny-in-missouri-ag-investigation-of-transgender-care/

- A state investigation of the Washington University Transgender Center in St. Louis expanded to include therapists and social workers across the state who work with minors seeking gender-affirming care. Documents made public as part of various lawsuits show that Attorney General Andrew Bailey has obtained a collection of unredacted and loosely redacted records of transgender children, including a list of patients that received care at the Washington University Transgender Center at St. Louis Children's Hospital. He also seeking untethered access to the university's digital medical records system. The attorney general's use of private medical records, and the targeting of therapists and counselors, has interrupted the health care of LGBTQ Missourians and has families worrying about their children's privacy…..

Media Matters Lays Off A Dozen Staffers Following Federal Probe, Lawsuit By Elon Musk
https://dailycaller.com/2024/05/23/media-matters-layoffs-federal-probe-elon-musk-lawsuit/

-Media Matters followed suit with several liberal outlets by laying off at least a dozen staffers following a federal probe and lawsuit by "X" chief executive officer Elon Musk. Staffers, some of whom have been with Media Matters for years, took to social media announcing their sudden departure from the outlet. The layoffs followed federal probes filed by Republican Attorneys General Ken Paxton of Texas and Andrew Bailey of Missouri into the outlet for possible fraudulent activity by allegedly manipulating data on "X," formerly known as Twitter.

REPOSTL NY Post, The Daily Beast, Outkick, Times Now, Newsmax, American Greatness

Mediaite l Alex Griffing
https://www.mediaite.com/news/media-matters-staffers-announce-sweeping-lay-offs-theres-a-reason-far-right-billionaires-attack/

-Media Matters for America laid off many of its staffers on Thursday as former employees took to X, formerly Twitter, to announce they were out of a job. Katherine Abughazaleh, also known as Kat Abu, posted, "Bad News: I've been laid off from @mmfa, along with a dozen colleagues. There's a reason far-right billionaires attack Media Matters with armies of lawyers: They know how effective our work is, and it terrifies them (him)." Abughazaleh appeared to be referring to Elon Musk who filed a defamation suit against the liberal media watchdog last November over a report claiming that major corporate ads on X were being shown alongside white nationalist content…. The hard-right website the Daily Caller also noted, "The layoffs followed federal probes filed by Republican Attorneys General Ken Paxton of Texas and Andrew Bailey of Missouri into the outlet for possible fraudulent activity by allegedly manipulating data on 'X,' formerly known as Twitter." Media Matters did not immediately reply to a request for comment regarding the various staffers announcing they were laid off….

Gateway Pundit l Ben Kew
https://www.thegatewaypundit.com/2024/05/soros-backed-media-matters-lays-dozen-employees-as/

-The far-left media watchdog Media Matters for America (MMFA) is laying off around a dozen staff as the organization faces a series of federal probes and defamation lawsuits….Last November, Musk filed a defamation lawsuit against MMFA in federal court in November, accusing them of manipulating images to show advertisements from major corporations alongside posts from white supremacists and neo-Nazis. Meanwhile, the Missouri Attorney General filed a separate lawsuit last December for engaging in fraudulent business practices and refusing to cooperate with an ongoing investigation.

City of Kansas City staffer fired over social media post that disowned Harrison Butker
https://nypost.com/2024/05/23/sports/city-of-kansas-city-staffer-fired-over-harrison-butker-post/

-While the city may be done with the employee, it might not be the only repercussion that the ex-staffer faces. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey has made it clear he is "demanding accountability after [Kansas City] doxxed [Butker last night for daring to express his religious beliefs." "I will enforce the Missouri Human Rights Act to ensure Missourians are not targeted for their free exercise of religion. Stay tuned." Bailey's office also requested Lucas to turn over documents following the since-deleted X post, KMBC reported.

-Mayor Quinton Lucas revealed on Thursday that Kansas City has "separated" from the social media employee who shared where Harrison Butker lives after his commencement speech at Benedictine College last week….Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey vowed to pursue action against the city following the post, saying in an interview with Outkick's Charly Arnolt he had "demanded certain records from the city related to their management of that social media account that doxxed Harrison Butker in retaliation for his free expression of religious beliefs."…

REPOST: Breitbart

Missouri and 18 states file Supreme Court suit over energy policies
KTTN | Staff
https://www.kttn.com/missouri-and-18-states-file-supreme-court-suit-over-energy-policies/

-Today Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed suit with 18 other states against California, Connecticut, Minnesota, New Jersey and Rhode Island at the United States Supreme Court in order to halt the blue states' burdensome policies that threaten Missouri energy. In the suit, General Bailey asserts the defendants have brought unprecedented pressure against the nation's most vital energy companies for an alleged "climate crisis," demanding billions of dollars in damages. California and the other states threaten to impose ruinous penalties and coercive remedies that would affect energy and fuel consumption and production across the country. The States raise the grave constitutional problems with California's extraordinary tactics and ask the Supreme Court to take up the multi-state lawsuit. "I will always fight to put Missouri consumers first, which includes protecting Missouri energy when it comes under attack by other states," said Attorney General Bailey. "California and its radical counterparts are working to upend our economy with their unconstitutional climate agenda. My office will not allow a state with zero respect for the rule of law to dictate how Missourians live their lives." The Supreme Court will decide whether to hear the 19-state lawsuit against California and the other four proposed defendants. General Bailey and the coalition argue that traditional energy sources like oil, natural gas, and coal are essential for American prosperity, but are being targeted by the five radical states. General Bailey also asserts that the matter is of utmost importance because federalism gives each state no more power than any other state. "Defendant States want a global carbon tax on the traditional energy industry. Citing fears of a climate catastrophe, they seek massive penalties, disgorgement, and injunctive relief against energy producers based on out-of-state conduct with out-of-state effects. On their view, a small gas station in rural Alabama could owe damages to the people of Minnesota simply for selling a gallon of gas. If Defendant States are right about the substance and reach of state law, their actions imperil access to affordable energy everywhere and inculpate every State and indeed every person on the planet. Consequently, Defendant States threaten not only our system of federalism and equal sovereignty among States, but our basic way of life," the attorneys general noted.

Therapists, social workers face scrutiny in Missouri AG investigation of transgender care
Missouri Independent | Annelise Hanshaw
https://missouriindependent.com/2024/05/24/therapists-social-workers-face-scrutiny-in-missouri-ag-investigation-of-transgender-care/

-A state investigation of the Washington University Transgender Center in St. Louis expanded to include therapists and social workers across the state who work with minors seeking gender-affirming care. Documents made public as part of various lawsuits show that Attorney General Andrew Bailey has obtained a collection of unredacted and loosely redacted records of transgender children, including a list of patients that received care at the Washington University Transgender Center at St. Louis Children's Hospital. He also seeking untethered access to the university's digital medical records system. The attorney general's use of private medical records, and the targeting of therapists and counselors, has interrupted the health care of LGBTQ Missourians and has families worrying about their children's privacy…..

Media Matters Lays Off A Dozen Staffers Following Federal Probe, Lawsuit By Elon Musk
https://dailycaller.com/2024/05/23/media-matters-layoffs-federal-probe-elon-musk-lawsuit/

-Media Matters followed suit with several liberal outlets by laying off at least a dozen staffers following a federal probe and lawsuit by "X" chief executive officer Elon Musk. Staffers, some of whom have been with Media Matters for years, took to social media announcing their sudden departure from the outlet. The layoffs followed federal probes filed by Republican Attorneys General Ken Paxton of Texas and Andrew Bailey of Missouri into the outlet for possible fraudulent activity by allegedly manipulating data on "X," formerly known as Twitter.

Mediaite l Alex Griffing
https://www.mediaite.com/news/media-matters-staffers-announce-sweeping-lay-offs-theres-a-reason-far-right-billionaires-attack/

-Media Matters for America laid off many of its staffers on Thursday as former employees took to X, formerly Twitter, to announce they were out of a job. Katherine Abughazaleh, also known as Kat Abu, posted, "Bad News: I've been laid off from @mmfa, along with a dozen colleagues. There's a reason far-right billionaires attack Media Matters with armies of lawyers: They know how effective our work is, and it terrifies them (him)." Abughazaleh appeared to be referring to Elon Musk who filed a defamation suit against the liberal media watchdog last November over a report claiming that major corporate ads on X were being shown alongside white nationalist content…. The hard-right website the Daily Caller also noted, "The layoffs followed federal probes filed by Republican Attorneys General Ken Paxton of Texas and Andrew Bailey of Missouri into the outlet for possible fraudulent activity by allegedly manipulating data on 'X,' formerly known as Twitter." Media Matters did not immediately reply to a request for comment regarding the various staffers announcing they were laid off….

-The far-left media watchdog Media Matters for America (MMFA) is laying off around a dozen staff as the organization faces a series of federal probes and defamation lawsuits….Last November, Musk filed a defamation lawsuit against MMFA in federal court in November, accusing them of manipulating images to show advertisements from major corporations alongside posts from white supremacists and neo-Nazis. Meanwhile, the Missouri Attorney General filed a separate lawsuit last December for engaging in fraudulent business practices and refusing to cooperate with an ongoing investigation.

City of Kansas City staffer fired over social media post that disowned Harrison Butker

NY Post l Christian Arnold

-While the city may be done with the employee, it might not be the only repercussion that the ex-staffer faces. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey has made it clear he is "demanding accountability after [Kansas City] doxxed [Butker last night for daring to express his religious beliefs." "I will enforce the Missouri Human Rights Act to ensure Missourians are not targeted for their free exercise of religion. Stay tuned." Bailey's office also requested Lucas to turn over documents following the since-deleted X post, KMBC reported.

REPOST: Breitbart

Missouri and 18 states file Supreme Court suit over energy policies

KTTN l Staff

https://www.kttn.com/missouri-and-18-states-file-supreme-court-suit-over-energy-policies/

-Today Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey filed suit with 18 other states against California, Connecticut, Minnesota, New Jersey and Rhode Island at the United States Supreme Court in order to halt the blue states' burdensome policies that threaten Missouri energy. In the suit, General Bailey asserts the defendants have brought unprecedented pressure against the nation's most vital energy companies for an alleged "climate crisis," demanding billions of dollars in damages. California and the other states threaten to impose ruinous penalties and coercive remedies that would affect energy and fuel consumption and production across the country. The States raise the grave constitutional problems with California's extraordinary tactics and ask the Supreme Court to take up the multi-state lawsuit. "I will always fight to put Missouri consumers first, which includes protecting Missouri energy when it comes under attack by other states," said Attorney General Bailey. "California and its radical counterparts are working to upend our economy with their unconstitutional climate agenda. My office will not allow a state with zero respect for the rule of law to dictate how Missourians live their lives." The Supreme Court will decide whether to hear the 19-state lawsuit against California and the other four proposed defendants. General Bailey and the coalition argue that traditional energy sources like oil, natural gas, and coal are essential for American prosperity, but are being targeted by the five radical states. General Bailey also asserts that the matter is of utmost importance because federalism gives each state no more power than any other state. "Defendant States want a global carbon tax on the traditional energy industry. Citing fears of a climate catastrophe, they seek massive penalties, disgorgement, and injunctive relief against energy producers based on out-of-state conduct with out-of-state effects. On their view, a small gas station in rural Alabama could owe damages to the people of Minnesota simply for selling a gallon of gas. If Defendant States are right about the substance and reach of state law, their actions imperil access to affordable energy everywhere and inculpate every State and indeed every person on the planet. Consequently, Defendant States threaten not only our system of federalism and equal sovereignty among States, but our basic way of life," the attorneys general noted.

Therapists, social workers face scrutiny in Missouri AG investigation of transgender care

https://missouriindependent.com/2024/05/24/therapists-social-workers-face-scrutiny-in-missouri-ag-investigation-of-transgender-care/

-A state investigation of the Washington University Transgender Center in St. Louis expanded to include therapists and social workers across the state who work with minors seeking gender-affirming care. Documents made public as part of various lawsuits show that Attorney General Andrew Bailey has obtained a collection of unredacted and loosely redacted records of transgender children, including a list of patients that received care at the Washington University Transgender Center at St. Louis Children's Hospital. He also seeking untethered access to the university's digital medical records system. The attorney general's use of private medical records, and the targeting of therapists and counselors, has interrupted the health care of LGBTQ Missourians and has families worrying about their children's privacy…..

AGO News:

"This Is Insanity": Judge In Trump Case Issues Unbelievable Jury Instructions Zero Hedge l Tyler Durden
https://www.zerohedge.com/political/jury-begins-deliberations-trump-hush-money-trial

- Legal minds are beside themselves at how the judge in the Trump 'hush money' case has instructed jurors to rule - first in what constitutional law professor Jonathan Turley called "the coup de grace instruction," Judge Juan Merchan said that there is no need to agree on what occurred - and can disagree on what the crime was among the charges…."This is absolute insanity," posted Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, in response to another Turley observation - namely that the jury will not be given copies of their instructions, but can ask for them to be read again. This is insanity. I've tried many jury trials in my day. You give jurors paper instructions every time. How are 12 jurors supposed to remember the elements necessary for each of the 34 felony counts? This is an illicit, witch-hunt prosecution."….

HUSH MONEY TRIAL: Legal experts, Republicans, Trump, others weigh in on bias of judge True News l Staff
https://true.news/hush-money-trial-legal-experts-republicans-trump-others-weigh-in-on-bias-of-judge/

- While a jury in New York City is currently deliberating the "hush money" case against former President Donald Trump Wednesday afternoon, legal experts, Republican lawmakers and many others are voicing their concerns and outrage over the clear bias against Trump by Democrat judge Juan Merchan.
  "Mother Theresa could not beat these charges. These charges are rigged, the whole thing is rigged. The Judge is so conflicted he can't breathe," Trump said…Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey wrote, "This is insanity. I've tried many jury trials in my day. You give jurors paper instructions every time. How are 12 jurors supposed to remember the elements necessary for each of the 34 felony counts? This is an illicit, witch-hunt prosecution."….

May Consumer Protection News
National Association of Attorneys General l Kate Donoven
https://www.naag.org/attorney-general-journal/may-consumer-protection-news/

- Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey launched consumer protection investigation to combat dangerous illicit Delta-8 products. The investigation stems from adverse health incidents occurring both in Missouri and around the nation, specifically incidents harming children. Delta-8 is already illegal or severely restricted in at least 24 states because of the serious health risks it poses to consumers. In March of 2024, six elementary-age children in St. Louis County became so sick that their parents had to pick them up from school after reportedly ingesting Delta-8 products that were packaged as "Nerds Rope Bites and Mad Monkey Sour Strawberry Premium Gummies." One of the affected children had trouble walking and believed she was being kidnapped when her mother came to pick her up.

Governors Move to Stop Coerced Abortion, Trafficking of Teens for Abortions

https://pjmedia.com/catherinesalgado/2024/05/29/governors-move-to-stop-trafficking-of-teens-for-abortions-in-leftist-states-n4929424

- After the overturn of anti-constitutional Roe v. Wade, a number of Republican states moved to protect innocent babies from abortion by restricting or banning it. Unfortunately, pro-death leftists have reportedly been caught trafficking teens across state lines to obtain abortions without parental consent or coercing women to take abortion pills. Two Republican governors just signed legislation addressing this outrageous behavior….The governors of Tennessee and Louisiana just signed legislation either to make non-parental trafficking of underaged mothers across state lines for abortions criminal offenses or to criminalize coerced abortions. The attorney general of Missouri, Andrew Bailey, previously sued abortion giant Planned Parenthood over just such reported trafficking of minors to obtain abortions….

Kansas City voters weigh in on KCPD budget re-vote

https://www.kctv5.com/2024/05/29/kansas-city-voters-weigh-kcpd-budget-re-vote/

- In August, Missouri voters will re-vote on whether to increase the funding for the Kansas City, Mo. Police Department provided by the City of Kansas City. Back in 2022, voters approved to increase how much Kansas City gives to the department. After that, the City of Kansas City filed a lawsuit against the state, the Missouri Attorney General, and the Kansas City Board of Police Commissioners calling the amendment unconstitutional and misleading. The Missouri Supreme Court ruled and agreed with the City that the fiscal note showing the ballot measures estimated costs or savings was not accurate and misled voters….

Ken Paxton Has Used Consumer Protection Law to Target These Organizations

https://www.propublica.org/article/texas-ken-paxton-consumer-protection-law-investigations

- Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton has repeatedly used the state's powerful consumer protection laws to investigate organizations whose work conflicts in some way with his political views or the views of his conservative base, an analysis by ProPublica and The Texas Tribune found. Paxton has been particularly aggressive among an increasing number of attorneys general who are using consumer protection statutes to investigate not only predatory lenders or unscrupulous car dealers but also political targets, experts say. ProPublica and the Tribune identified more than a dozen instances in the past two years in which Paxton has used the state's consumer protection office to demand records from organizations with which he disagrees politically…. Media Matters for America, a progressive media watchdog nonprofit whose mission includes "correcting conservative misinformation," published a report in November that found ads for major brands like Apple and IBM on the social media platform X were appearing alongside posts promoting antisemitic and white supremacist views. On Nov. 20, X owner Elon Musk filed a lawsuit in federal court in Texas against the nonprofit, arguing its report had disparaged the company. The lawsuit accused Media Matters of using filters on X to produce ad and content combinations it wanted to see. Paxton launched an investigation into Media Matters the same day, saying in a press release that his office was troubled by allegations that the nonprofit had "fraudulently manipulated data." Within days of announcing his investigation, Paxton appeared on a conservative podcast and encouraged other attorneys general to pursue similar inquiries against the nonprofit. On Dec. 11, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, a Republican, opened a consumer protection investigation into the organization. He did not mention Paxton in a letter informing the nonprofit of the inquiry. On Dec. 12, Media Matters filed a lawsuit against Paxton in federal court, arguing the attorney general's investigation violated the nonprofit's First, Fourth and 14th amendment rights.

Illegal immigrant charged in high-speed crash killing motorcyclist in South Carolina

https://readlion.com/illegal-immigrant-charged-in-high-speed-crash-killing-motorcyclist-in-south-carolina/

- An illegal immigrant is now in police custody following a high-speed crash involving a motorcycle, school bus and work van that resulted in a fatality. The collision occurred last week at the 100 block of Industrial Drive in Lexington, South Carolina. Local police identified the driver who struck the motorcycle and school bus as 20-year-old Giovanni Mendoza-Jimenez, a Mexican citizen unlawfully in the United States. He was arrested and charged with driving without a license, driving too fast for conditions and failure to stop for a school bus…Travis Wolfe, a 12-year-old in vehicle, succumbed to his injuries in March, while his parents suffered broken bones, among other injuries. "The tragic loss of 12-year-old Travis Wolfe is yet another painful reminder of the devastating consequences of lax border enforcement," Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey wrote following the incident. "It's heartbreaking to see innocent lives lost because of the failure of our government to secure our borders effectively."….

Missouri high school faces scrutiny over gender ideology survey

The Lion | Elizabeth Troutman
https://readlion.com/missouri-high-school-faces-scrutiny-over-gender-ideology-survey/

- A Missouri high school instructed students in a health class to complete a survey asking if they understood "the difference between sex assigned at birth and gender." Webster Groves High School hosted a workshop in late April called "Understanding Gender and Relationships" presented by a speaker with a program run by the St. Louis-based domestic abuse treatment center Safe Connections…The high school gave the survey to students after Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, a Republican, ordered the Webster Groves School District to "cease and desist" teaching students about human sexuality, including gender ideology, without parental consent ahead of time, The Daily Signal reported in February….

Reactions to Trump conviction fall along party lines in Missouri
Missouri Independent l Rudi Keller
https://missouriindependent.com/2024/05/30/reactions-to-trump-conviction-fall-along-party-lines-in-missouri/

- Reactions by Missouri politicians to the felony conviction Thursday of former President Donald Trump fell predictably along partisan lines, with Republicans condemning the verdict and Democrats expressing satisfaction or trolling their partisan foes. Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft, a candidate for the GOP nomination for governor, blamed President Joe Biden for the state of New York's prosecution of Trump for hush money payments to a porn star to keep the story of their sexual liaison private. "Joe Biden has weaponized the justice system to go after one of the greatest Presidents in our history," Ashcroft wrote on X, formerly known as Twitter. "The democrats are trying to steal another election."… Attorney General Andrew Bailey called the outcome an "illegal conviction" and predicted "Americans will overwhelmingly reelect President Trump in November.

Local elected officials react to Trump's guilty verdict
https://www.firstalert4.com/2024/05/30/local-elected-officials-react-trumps-guilty-verdict/

- Local elected officials are reacting after former President Donald Trump was convicted of felony crimes by a New York jury. "New York's six-week sham trial against President Trump has eroded the public's trust in our legal system in a way that will take years to overcome," said U.S. Representative Mike Bost (IL-12). "The trial, along with all the character attacks, campaign interference and Hollywood cameos that surrounded it, had one purpose: to weaken President Trump before the 2024 election. It won't work. Even after today's verdict, he is strengthened with an American public that is fed up with liberals weaponizing the legal system for their partisan political gain." Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey posted on social media: "I am outraged by the sham verdict finding President @realDonaldTrump guilty on all counts. This is the result of a rigged system, where the judge manipulated the process to turn jurors against President Trump. - Kansas and Missouri Republicans embraced former President Donald Trump on Thursday as a New York jury found the presumptive GOP nominee for president guilty on 34 counts of falsifying business records to cover up a hush money payment to a porn star just before the 2016 election. Trump's grip on statewide politics is perhaps most visible in the Republican contest for Missouri attorney general. Incumbent Andrew Bailey has cast himself as a staunch defender of the former president while Scharf, his opponent, serves on Trump's legal team. Bailey on Thursday said he was "outraged by the sham verdict." - The Missouri Supreme Court heard oral argument on May 14 on the constitutionality of the collection of surcharges for certain state funds as court costs in criminal cases. Various statutes require circuit court clerks to collect a surcharge for certain state funds as court costs in criminal cases. The circuit clerks disburse the money to the state's director of revenue, who then deposits the money into the state's general revenue account and notifies the state treasurer of the amount paid to each fund…. Those five states have brought unprecedented litigation against the nation's most vital energy companies for an alleged "climate crisis," and are demanding billions of dollars in damages. As litigation proceeds in their individual state courts, California and the others threaten to impose ruinous penalties and coercive remedies that would affect energy and fuel consumption and production across the country…. -A Jackson County judge has delayed the trial in the lawsuit filed over the latest Jackson County tax assessment. The lawsuit, filed by the Missouri Attorney General and the state Tax Commission was set to be heard on Thursday, but late Tuesday, a Jackson County judge continued the case until June 27. In arguing for the delay, the Jackson County attorney claimed the Attorney Generals office refused to name an expert witness and an auditor in time for the county to depose them. The Attorney Generals office argued that the county had been uncooperative throughout the discovery process and was trying to get the trial delayed. The lawsuit claims laws were broken in the 2023 assessment and wants the judge to void the increases in property taxes that owners paid last year. County executive Frank White claims the lawsuit was politically motivated, and could be devastating for school funding.

-A top adviser to Missouri's politically hobbled House speaker said the Des Peres Republican should take a page out of convicted felon Donald Trump's playbook. In a podcast interview Tuesday, political consultant Jonathan Ratliff said House Speaker Dean Plocher could bolster his bid to become Missouri's next secretary of state by playing up a whistleblower lawsuit filed against him and his chief of staff Friday. Rather than addressing allegations of retaliation, mismanagement and fear-mongering made by the top administrator in the House, Plocher should mimic Trump and say he's being attacked by insiders, Ratliff said during an episode of "This Week in Missouri Politics." "We have a story just like President Trump. We have fought the swamp in Jefferson City. We took on the bureaucracy. We beat them. Now they are using lawfare to come after us, just like President Trump," Ratliff said. The lawsuit filed by House Chief Clerk Dana Rademan Miller came after Plocher pushed back against a seven-month investigation by the House Ethics Committee in response to his attempt to steer an $800,000 software contract for the House around the standard bidding process, possibly in pursuit of a campaign donation. He also repaid a series of travel bills that he had charged to taxpayers, fired two long-time House aides and hired former House Speaker Rod Jetton to help him right the ship. The ethics case was eventually dismissed by the panel, but Plocher was accused of obstructing the investigation with Jetton's assistance. In her lawsuit, Miller said she privately counseled Plocher about complaints she had received about his treatment of female Republican lawmakers, including former Rep. Sara Walsh of Ashland, whom he called "stupid." "Plocher's reaction to plaintiff's sharing of those concerns was to be dismissive. He replied, 'They are like an invasive species.' "When Miller expressed her confusion over that statement, Plocher clarified, 'Stupid Republican women … they are an invasive species.'" The lawsuit also says Jetton allegedly told another employee that "that they needed to 'choke'" Miller's authority and "made a physical choking gesture with both hands." Jetton, who served as speaker from 2005 to 2009, was charged with felony assault from a 2009 sexual encounter where he choked a woman to the point of unconsciousness. He pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of misdemeanor assault. Plocher, in a separate interview Tuesday on KSSZ-FM in Columbia, signaled he is taking Ratliff's advice, calling the pushback he received from House employees an attempted "coup." "This has been a coup for a long time now," he said. "The bureaucrats in the House are trying to take us down. We are not going to let the bureaucrats run the place just because they are whining." Ratliff said the timing of the lawsuit and Trump's conviction on 34 counts in a New York City courtroom last week were a gift to Plocher's campaign to be the state's top election official. "From a stagecraft perspective we couldn't honestly have coordinated it any better," Ratliff said. Ratliff, who is the former political director for the Missouri House Republican Campaign Committee, is a partner with Palm Strategic Group, which has received $37,000 from Plocher's political action committee this year. He downplayed the controversy swirling around his client. "Don't believe anything you read in the funny papers," he said. "He's a generally good guy." Plocher, meantime, has not said whether he will ask Attorney General Andrew Bailey's office to represent him in the whistleblower case. If that occurs, any damages Miller may be awarded would come from taxpayer funds, not out of Plocher's pocket. A similar scenario facing three state senators accused of defamation spurred Gov. Mike Parson to say the state won't pay their legal bills, but Bailey has nonetheless moved forward with those cases. Plocher, a former municipal judge, is leading the fundraising race to replace Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft, who is running for governor. In April, Plocher reported more than $1.3 million between his campaign account and an allied political action committee. His closest competitor in the campaign finance arena was Sen. Denny Hoskins, R-Warrensburg, who had nearly $255,000 on hand. Other Republicans running include state Rep. Adam Schwadron, state Sen. Missouri takes Biden Administration to court over student loan plan

https://newstalkkzrg.com/2024/06/04/missouri-takes-biden-administration-to-court-over-student-loan-plan/

-Missouri takes its case to court against the Biden Administration's student loan plan. A federal judge in St. Louis is considering arguments in Missouri versus Biden – whether President Joe Biden's administration went too far in canceling student loan debt without the approval of Congress. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is suing the Biden Administration because he argues Biden is sidestepping the Constitution by "saddling working Missourians with a half trillion dollars in college debt." Bailey cites a 2023 U.S. Supreme Court ruling striking down a Biden administration attempt to forgive student loan debt.

-Cannabinoids have been a popular topic of conversation for regulators as the cannabis landscape continues to evolve. Since the days of the tobacco Master Settlement Agreement and related investigations, Attorneys General (AGs) have long focused on protecting minors from health effects of both legal and illegal drugs (see, e.g., here and here). AGs are continuing to use their consumer protection powers in unique ways to protect against alleged misrepresentations relating to THC containing products…. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey issued civil investigative demands (CIDs) in April 2024 to multiple businesses that sell Delta-8 and Delta-9 goods after reports of alleged violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act. AG Bailey stated that Missourians have a right to know if they will be subject to potentially dangerous side effects and highlighted the danger of marketing potentially harmful products directly to children. AG Bailey issued CIDs to both retailers selling Delta-8 and Delta-9 products, and manufacturers and distributors selling illicit vapes and e-cigarettes, showing that even those that don't directly engage with consumers can still be liable for committing unfair and deceptive acts and practices. Per the CIDs, General Bailey believes businesses are engaging in illegal means to market and sell the products to Missourians, including potential misrepresentation or omission of material facts. The CIDs demand information such as measures taken to ensure proper labeling of products, measures taken to ensure quality and safety of products, and whether sales comply with age restrictions….

- A hearing for the Missouri attorney general's lawsuit against the Wentzville Board of Education has been postponed again, this time until September. St. Charles County judge on Monday granted a third delay for a hearing in the suit, which accuses Wentzville schools of breaking the state's open records law by discussing bathroom policies for transgender students behind closed doors. Attorney General Andrew Bailey sued the district in September 2023, but a status hearing has now been delayed until Sept. 23 of this year. It was initially scheduled for this past February. - A Jackson County judge has delayed the trial in the lawsuit filed over the latest Jackson County tax assessment. The lawsuit, filed by the Missouri Attorney General and the state Tax Commission was set to be heard on Thursday, but late Tuesday, a Jackson County judge continued the case until June 27. In arguing for the delay, the Jackson County attorney claimed the Attorney Generals office refused to name an expert witness and an auditor in time for the county to depose them. The Attorney Generals office argued that the county had been uncooperative throughout the discovery process and was trying to get the trial delayed. The lawsuit claims laws were broken in the 2023 assessment and wants the judge to void the increases in property taxes that owners paid last year. County executive Frank White claims the lawsuit was politically motivated, and could be devastating for school funding.

Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey issued civil investigative demands (CIDs) in April 2024 to multiple businesses that sell Delta-8 and Delta-9 goods after reports of alleged violations of the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act. AG Bailey stated that Missourians have a right to know if they will be subject to potentially dangerous side effects and highlighted the danger of marketing potentially harmful products directly to children. AG Bailey issued CIDs to both retailers selling Delta-8 and Delta-9 products, and manufacturers and distributors selling illicit vapes and e-cigarettes, showing that even those that don't directly engage with consumers can still be liable for committing unfair and deceptive acts and practices. Per the CIDs, General Bailey believes businesses are engaging in illegal means to market and sell the products to Missourians, including potential misrepresentation or omission of material facts. The CIDs demand information such as measures taken to ensure proper labeling of products, measures taken to ensure quality and safety of products, and whether sales comply with age restrictions….

-A hearing for the Missouri attorney general's lawsuit against the Wentzville Board of Education has been postponed again, this time until September. Charles County judge on Monday granted a third delay for a hearing in the suit, which accuses Wentzville schools of breaking the state's open records law by discussing bathroom policies for transgender students behind closed doors. Attorney General Andrew Bailey sued the district in September 2023, but a status hearing has now been delayed until Sept. 23 of this year. It was initially scheduled for this past February. Trial for Jackson County property tax lawsuit delayed
https://www.kctv5.com/2024/06/04/trial-jackson-county-propert-tax-lawsuit-delayed/

-A Jackson County judge has delayed the trial in the lawsuit filed over the latest Jackson County tax assessment. The lawsuit, filed by the Missouri Attorney General and the state Tax Commission was set to be heard on Thursday, but late Tuesday, a Jackson County judge continued the case until June 27. In arguing for the delay, the Jackson County attorney claimed the Attorney Generals office refused to name an expert witness and an auditor in time for the county to depose them. The Attorney Generals office argued that the county had been uncooperative throughout the discovery process and was trying to get the trial delayed. The lawsuit claims laws were broken in the 2023 assessment and wants the judge to void the increases in property taxes that owners paid last year. County executive Frank White claims the lawsuit was politically motivated, and could be devastating for school funding.

Be like Trump, says adviser to embattled Missouri House speaker (article locked)

-A top adviser to Missouri's politically hobbled House speaker said the Des Peres Republican should take a page out of convicted felon Donald Trump's playbook. In a podcast interview Tuesday, political consultant Jonathan Ratliff said House Speaker Dean Plocher could bolster his bid to become Missouri's next secretary of state by playing up a whistleblower lawsuit filed against him and his chief of staff Friday. Rather than addressing allegations of retaliation, mismanagement and fear-mongering made by the top administrator in the House, Plocher should mimic Trump and say he's being attacked by insiders, Ratliff said during an episode of "This Week in Missouri Politics." "We have a story just like President Trump. We have fought the swamp in Jefferson City. We took on the bureaucracy. We beat them. Now they are using lawfare to come after us, just like President Trump," Ratliff said. The lawsuit filed by House Chief Clerk Dana Rademan Miller came after Plocher pushed back against a seven-month investigation by the House Ethics Committee in response to his attempt to steer an $800,000 software contract for the House around the standard bidding process, possibly in pursuit of a campaign donation. He also repaid a series of travel bills that he had charged to taxpayers, fired two long-time House aides and hired former House Speaker Rod Jetton to help him right the ship. The ethics case was eventually dismissed by the panel, but Plocher was accused of obstructing the investigation with Jetton's assistance. In her lawsuit, Miller said she privately counseled Plocher about complaints she had received about his treatment of female Republican lawmakers, including former Rep. Sara Walsh of Ashland, whom he called "stupid." "Plocher's reaction to plaintiff's sharing of those concerns was to be dismissive. He replied, 'They are like an invasive species.' "When Miller expressed her confusion over that statement, Plocher clarified, 'Stupid Republican women … they are an invasive species.'" The lawsuit also says Jetton allegedly told another employee that "that they needed to 'choke'" Miller's authority and "made a physical choking gesture with both hands." Jetton, who served as speaker from 2005 to 2009, was charged with felony assault from a 2009 sexual encounter where he choked a woman to the point of unconsciousness. He pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of misdemeanor assault. Plocher, in a separate interview Tuesday on KSSZ-FM in Columbia, signaled he is taking Ratliff's advice, calling the pushback he received from House employees an attempted "coup." "This has been a coup for a long time now," he said. "The bureaucrats in the House are trying to take us down. We are not going to let the bureaucrats run the place just because they are whining." Ratliff said the timing of the lawsuit and Trump's conviction on 34 counts in a New York City courtroom last week were a gift to Plocher's campaign to be the state's top election official. "From a stagecraft perspective we couldn't honestly have coordinated it any better," Ratliff said. Ratliff, who is the former political director for the Missouri House Republican Campaign Committee, is a partner with Palm Strategic Group, which has received $37,000 from Plocher's political action committee this year. He downplayed the controversy swirling around his client. "Don't believe anything you read in the funny papers," he said. "He's a generally good guy." Plocher, meantime, has not said whether he will ask Attorney General Andrew Bailey's office to represent him in the whistleblower case. If that occurs, any damages Miller may be awarded would come from taxpayer funds, not out of Plocher's pocket. A similar scenario facing three state senators accused of defamation spurred Gov. Mike Parson to say the state won't pay their legal bills, but Bailey has nonetheless moved forward with those cases. Plocher, a former municipal judge, is leading the fundraising race to replace Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft, who is running for governor. In April, Plocher reported more than $1.3 million between his campaign account and an allied political action committee. His closest competitor in the campaign finance arena was Sen. Denny Hoskins, R-Warrensburg, who had nearly $255,000 on hand. Other Republicans running include state Rep. Adam Schwadron, state Sen. Mary Elizabeth Coleman, Valentina Gomez, Greene County Clerk Shane Schoeller, Jamie Corley and Mike Carter.

A federal judge in St. Louis is considering arguments in Missouri versus Biden – whether President Joe Biden's administration went too far in canceling student loan debt without the approval of Congress. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is suing the Biden Administration because he argues Biden is sidestepping the Constitution by "saddling working Missourians with a half trillion dollars in college debt." Bailey cites a 2023 U.S. Supreme Court ruling striking down a Biden administration attempt to forgive student loan debt.

AGO News:

Media Matters Wants Order Blocking Missouri AG's X Probe (article may be locked) Law 360 l Ali Sullivan
https://www.law360.com/articles/1845013

- Media Matters for America returned to D.C. federal court on Thursday to seek a court order barring Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey from investigating the progressive media watchdog over its reporting on X Corp., roughly two months after a D.C. federal judge barred Texas' attorney general from doing the same. During a hearing in Washington, D.C., attorneys for Media Matters and Bailey sparred over whether the Republican attorney general has been acting in bad faith by pursuing an investigation into the media watchdog, which describes itself as a progressive research center focused on combating conservative misinformation. While Media Matters is seeking a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction, Bailey wants the court to toss the litigation. Missouri Solicitor General Joshua M. Divine argued there is no bad faith, meaning Media Matters cannot get around the so-called Younger abstention doctrine that generally bars federal courts from meddling with state court proceedings. Bailey has sued Media Matters in state court to enforce his investigative demand, and an injunction from the D.C. court would "in effect shut down the courts in Missouri," Divine told U.S. District Judge Amit P. Mehta. "We would ask the court not to do that," Divine said. Bailey issued a "civil investigative demand" for a host of records from Media Matters in March, after the organization published an article in November 2023 saying major brands' advertisements were appearing next to extremist content on X, formerly Twitter. X Corp. owner Elon Musk has sued Media Matters over the same report — litigation that is playing out in Texas federal court. The same day Bailey issued his March CID, he filed a petition in Missouri state court to enforce the demand. Judge Mehta on Thursday questioned that timing, asking Divine for any example of the attorney general filing an investigative demand and state court enforcement action simultaneously. Divine called the situation "uncharted territory," but Judge Mehta seemed unswayed. "You can just say no," Judge Mehta said. "There's nothing." Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton has also sought to probe Media Matters in the wake of its reporting, but Judge Mehta halted the investigation with a preliminary injunction in April. Judge Mehta didn't make any rulings following the roughly two-hour hearing on Thursday, but he said both sides had given him "a lot of food for thought." Christopher D. Dodge of Elias Law Group LLP, who represents Media Matters, argued that the Younger abstention doctrine doesn't apply. That's because Bailey has, at every step of the way, "shown himself not to be acting in good faith," Dodge said. As grounds for his probe, Bailey claimed Media Matters is defrauding Missourians by soliciting donations under the guise of combating conservative misinformation while actually using the funds to target X Corp. But Media Matters has argued that the probe is really about punishing the organization for its speech. Judge Mehta, however, seemed unsure his court could make a bad faith finding at the early stage of the litigation. "You're asking me to make that determination based upon the papers," the judge said. "How do I get there?" Dodge said the attorney general has made numerous public statements evincing that the investigation is about Bailey's animus toward Media Matters, including liking a post on X that referred to the organization as a "cancer in our society." Bailey also retweeted a post praising the suits from Bailey and Musk for prompting a recent round of layoffs at Media Matters, Dodge said. "He's trying to drain their resources through bad faith litigation," Dodge added. Media Matters is represented by Abha Khanna, Christopher D. Dodge, Aria C. Branch, Jacob D. Shelly, Elena A. Rodriguez Armenta, Elisabeth C. Frost, Daniela

- A hearing for the Missouri attorney general's lawsuit against the Wentzville Board of Education has been postponed again, this time until September. A St. Charles County judge on Monday granted a third delay for a hearing in the suit, which accuses Wentzville schools of breaking the state's open records law by discussing bathroom policies for transgender students behind closed doors. Attorney General Andrew Bailey sued the district in September 2023, but a status hearing has now been delayed until Sept. 23 of this year. It was initially scheduled for this past February….

Missouri appeals court rules against ballot summary language that described 'dangerous' abortions
AP | Summer Ballentine
https://apnews.com/article/abortion-missouri-ballot-constitution-ruling-edb5f44fc0f9799d01cda22cd1f70b40

-"A three-judge panel of the Western District Court of Appeals found the summaries written by Republican Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft, who is running for governor in 2024, are politically partisan… Ashcroft's original description of the amendments, which could go on the ballot in 2024 if supporters gather enough voter signatures, would have asked voters whether they want to "allow for dangerous, unregulated, and unrestricted abortions, from conception to live birth, without requiring a medical license or potentially being subject to medical malpractice." But the appeals-court panel wrote that allowing unrestricted abortion "during all nine months of pregnancy is not a probable effect of initiatives." The judges largely upheld summaries that were rewritten by a lower court judge to be more impartial… Ashcroft said he plans to appeal the ruling. "We stand by our language and believe it fairly and accurately reflects the scope and magnitude of each petition," Ashcroft said in a statement… Republican Attorney General Andrew Bailey's office is defending Ashcroft's summary language in court… Missouri is among several states, including Ohio, where abortion opponents are fighting efforts to ensure or restore access to the procedure following the fall of Roe v. Wade last year…"

Missouri Court Quickly Rejects Ashcroft's 'Politically Partisan' Wording for Abortion Proposals
MissouriNet | Alisa Nelson
https://www.missourinet.com/2023/10/31/missouri-court-quickly-rejects-ashcrofts-politically-partisan-wording-for-abortion-proposals/

-"The Missouri Court of Appeals for the Western District has unanimously struck down Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft's attempts to change ballot wording on six abortion proposals. The three-judge panel heard the case Monday and issued a decision Tuesday, saying the secretary chose to use politically partisan language to explain to voters what the potential proposals would do… The court rewrote some of the descriptions revised by a lower court… Ashcroft said his office will appeal the decision and stands by the wording used. "My office will continue the fight to preserve an accurate summary for Missouri voters," he said. In a related case, a separate state appeals court upheld today State Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick's estimated cost of allowing some abortions. According to Fitzpatrick, the impact on state agencies is unknown… State Rep. Hannah Kelly, R-Mountain Grove, state Sen. Mary Elizabeth Coleman, R-Arnold, and New Bloomfield resident Kathy Forck say Fitzpatrick, a fellow Republican, is underestimating the potential cost. They say the projection should be based on every Missouri county – not just Greene County. In order to get on the 2024 election ballot, more than 170,000 valid signatures from registered voters would be required by next May."

Ashcroft critical of appeals court's abortion initiative petitions decision
KZRG | Ty Albright
https://newstalkkzrg.com/2023/10/31/ashcroft-critical-of-appeals-courts-abortion-initiative-petitions-decision/

-"Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft vowed to keep fighting for fair and accurate ballot language after the Western District Court of Appeals blocked his ballot summary language and for all practical purposes upheld a ruling by the lower court. "Once again Missouri courts refused to allow the truth to be known. The Western District essentially approved the language that was entirely rewritten by Judge Beetem. Not only is the language misleading but it is categorically false," said Ashcroft… Through an Entry of Appearance filed with the Kansas City based court. Ashcroft was a representative on the legal team arguing the case alongside counsel from the attorney general's office. Ashcroft plans to appeal the decision and said, "My office will continue the fight to preserve an accurate summary for Missouri voters."

The court also tossed out a conservative challenge to a fiscal summary of the measures prepared by Missouri State Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick, a Republican… The cases are almost certain to end up in front of the Missouri Supreme Court… A three-judge panel of the Missouri Court of Appeals Western District unanimously rejected an appeal from Republican Missouri Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft, who sought to reimpose his original summaries after a Cole County judge rewrote them last month… The decision came just a day after oral arguments were held in Kansas City – a lightning-fast pace for an appeals court opinion. Ashcroft, who is running for governor, in a statement said that the court "refused to allow the truth to be known."… A separate panel of judges also ruled against three abortion opponents who challenged how much Republican Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick estimated the petitions would cost. The abortion opponents, which include two Republican lawmakers, argued that the proposals could cost the state billions."

-"Last month, Cole County Judge Jon Beteem rewrote the ballot summary language. Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft and Attorney General Andrew Bailey sought the Appeals Court to overrule that judge's decision to rewrite the ballot language… Ashcroft issued a statement on Tuesday indicating that he plans to appeal the decision... We stand by our language and believe it fairly and accurately reflects the scope and magnitude of each petition."…"

KCTV l Heidi Schmidt
https://www.kctv5.com/2023/10/31/missouri-appeals-court-issues-decisions-challenges-abortion-rights-ballot-issues/

-"Missouri Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft says he will fight an Appeals Court decision over the wording of an abortion issue on the ballot. The Western District Court of Appeals upheld a lower court's ruling that a ballot summary included 'dangerous' and inaccurate information… A judge in a lower court ruled that the language written by Ashcroft, an opponent of abortion rights and a current candidate for governor, was unfairly biased against the issue… Ashcroft says he plans to appeal Monday's decision and will continue to fight for the ballot language he supports. "The circuit court's opinion admits the real issue is about abortion. The Western District today continued to gloss over the issue in its affirmation. We stand by our language and believe it fairly and accurately reflects the scope and magnitude of each petition." A separate panel of judges also threw out a challenge to a fiscal summary of the ballot measures. It was prepared by Missouri State Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick… The two decisions come one day after the the appeals court heart oral arguments in Kansas City. If Ashcroft follows through on his promise to continue the legal fight, the issue will end up in front of the Missouri Supreme Court."

Appeals court swats down Ashcroft arguments on Missouri abortion rights petitions

https://missouriindependent.com/2023/10/31/appeals-court-swats-down-ashcroft-arguments-on-missouri-abortion-rights-petitions/

-"In an expedited decision issued a day after hearing arguments, a three-judge panel of the Western District Court of Appeals upheld, with only minor revisions, the revised ballot titles written by Cole County Circuit Judge Jon Beetem. In a decision by a separate panel, the court upheld the fiscal note summary written by State Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick. Rejecting arguments from two lawmakers and an anti-abortion activist, the court said Fitzpatrick's summary was "fair and sufficient." Ashcroft issued a statement that he would appeal the decision to the Missouri Supreme Court, a process likely to take several weeks. The ongoing court battle narrows the time for gathering signatures to put the proposal on the 2024. Backers must secure more than 170,000 signatures from registered voters by early May… The lengthy battle to get ballot titles written began when Anna Fitz-James, a St. Louis physician, filed 11 proposed constitutional amendments with Ashcroft's office in March on behalf of a political action committee called Missourians for Constitutional Freedom… Each version of the proposed amendment says there must be a "compelling governmental interest" for abortion restrictions to be put in place. But while some allow the legislature to regulate abortion after "fetal viability," others draw the line at 24 weeks of gestation… Under Missouri law, Ashcroft had up to 56 days to obtain certifications of the form and fiscal note, write a ballot title and certify the petition for circulation. Attorney General Andrew Bailey tested his authority during that process, refusing to certify the fiscal note summary written by Fitzpatrick until the Missouri Supreme Court ruled in July that his role was limited to determining whether it fit the form required by law… Bailey also said in a statement that he disagreed with the decision. "We remain undeterred in our fight to protect the health and safety of women and children from the radical abortion activists working to turn Missouri into California," Bailey said… In the decision on the fiscal note summary, Judge Alok Ahuja, also writing for an unanimous panel, ruled that Fitzpatrick had accurately summarized the fiscal note."

-"Acting quickly on a hot-button issue that has been slowed by litigation, the Missouri Court of Appeals at Kansas City unanimously rejected the gubernatorial candidate's appeal to reverse a lower court decision to strike and rewrite summary statements for six reproductive freedom ballot initiatives… In a ruling written by Judge Thomas Chapman, a three-judge panel of the appeals court agreed Ashcroft crossed a line… Ashcroft also appealed over the way Cole County Circuit Court Judge Jon Beetem rewrote the summaries, arguing that he didn't include language outlining the dangers of abortion. Again, the court sided with Beetem, saying his summary was "fair and sufficient."… Again, the court sided with Beetem, saying his summary was "fair and sufficient."… Ashcroft, who has been endorsed by Missouri Right to Life as he runs for governor, plans to appeal the ballot summary decision, despite now losing in court two times… If initiating a series of courtroom delays is part of the strategy to keep the question off the 2024 ballot, it's working. Supporters of ballot initiatives must collect 170,000 signatures in six of the state's eight congressional districts to get a question on the ballot. As the courtroom fights have continued, no campaign has emerged to collect signatures for any of the proposals submitted by Missourians for Constitutional Freedom in March."

-"General Bailey joined with 33 other states filing suit, that alleges social media technology giant, designed and deployed harmful features to Faceboo0k and Instagram to addict young users to its platforms and fill their pockets. The federal lawsuit asserts that Meta violated state consumer protection laws assuring the public it was safe and suitable for young users, The lawsuit says the platform's algorithm pushed users into descending rabbit holes with the objective of keeping users on the platform for long periods. An example of this would be the never ending scroll on a Facebook timeline. Such manipulative tactics entice teens and tween to continually return to platforms. The lawsuit claims that Meta, instead of working to mitigate the damage inflicted by its social-media platforms, publicity concealed the severity of the psychological harm they cause, including the addiction to sites which could and in some cases did result in physical harm."

-"Americans are growing increasingly alarmed over the Left's relentless efforts to force their values, ideals, and way of life onto the rest of society, whether it's in the classroom, the media, and even the health care system. And as we have seen over the last decade, Big Tech has become one of the Left's most powerful tools in forcing their radical values and beliefs on the rest of America. What's most alarming about this collusion between Big Tech and the Left is the threat it poses to one of our most important freedoms – the First Amendment. Recently, the Supreme Court announced it will take up one of the most important cases involving the First Amendment in years. The lawsuit, led by Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, accuses the federal government of teaming up with Big Tech to censor social media posts – including ones about the COVID-lab leak theory – that the Left deemed "controversial" or "misinformation." Lower courts found that the federal government engaged in a coordinated effort to pressure Big Tech companies to censor conservative viewpoints without any legal authority to do so. If the Supreme Court sides with Attorney General Bailey and the people of Missouri, then the Biden administration – or any other future administration – will be prohibited from contacting social media companies to influence content decisions. Big Tech and government officials shouldn't be able to decide what is acceptable speech, but what's even more infuriating is that more and more experts and even officials in the Biden administration believe that the lab-leak theory is credible, and in many cases the most likely explanation for the origin of COVID. The same was true with the coordinated effort to stop anyone from sharing the story about Hunter Biden's laptop. But it shouldn't take conservatives having to prove that what they are saying is 100% true; the federal government has no business censoring Americans' speech. That's exactly why we have the First Amendment. The bottom line is that the First Amendment MUST be applied equally. But as we've seen time and again, that's something the Left refuses to accept… The Twitter Files also confirmed that high-ranking Liberal employees at the social media company invented wild excuses to justify censoring and suppressing the New York Post's bombshell – and factually correct – article that was published weeks before the 2020 elections about Hunter Biden's laptop, which included information related to the Biden family's shady business deals… I hope that when the Supreme Court reviews this critical First Amendment case next year, it will do the right thing and rule that the federal government's actions were unconstitutional, and make sure these attacks on our freedom of speech never happen again. But regardless of the outcome, House Republicans are committed to stopping the Left and Big Tech's never-ending attacks on our freedoms. Whether it's in our schools, on social media, and so much more, I will fight tooth and nail to stop the Left's non-stop efforts to force their radical beliefs and liberal values on Missouri farmers, ranchers, and workers."

Rand Paul Spars With FBI Director On Pressuring Social Media Companies To Censor Speech

Daily Caller | James Lynch
https://dailycaller.com/2023/10/31/rand-paul-spars-christopher-wray-pressuring-social-media-companies-censor-speech/

-"Republican Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul sparred with FBI Director Christopher Wray on Tuesday about the FBI's meetings with social media companies and how the bureau changed its behavior in response to the Missouri v. Biden lawsuit… "Director Wray … is the FBI still meeting with social media companies?" Paul asked. "We're having some interaction with social media companies but all of those interactions have changed fundamentally in the wake of the court's rulings," Wray answered. Paul followed up by asking Wray whether he was acknowledging that the FBI's meetings with social media companies included discussions of constitutionally protected speech. Wray said the FBI changed its behavior "out of an abundance of caution" to comply with an injunction from the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals preventing the Biden administration from working with social media companies to censor speech. The Supreme Court issued a stay on the Fifth Circuit injunction as it prepares to hear the Missouri v. Biden First Amendment case… Wray also touted the FBI's assessment that COVID-19 most likely came from a lab in Wuhan, China, where bat coronaviruses were being researched. "The 'Twitter Files' and other indications as well as Missouri v. Biden list many cases of both DHS and FBI discussing constitutionally protected speech, vaccine efficacy, mask efficacy, people who said 'my brother got the vaccine and died yesterday' and the brother actually did die … But taking down posts like that was part of the discussion in these meetings," Paul pressed Wray… In a court filing for the Missouri v. Biden lawsuit, the Department of Justice (DOJ) said that about half of the FBI's attempts to censor speech were successful. The House Judiciary Committee is also investigating coordination between the federal government and social media platforms to censor stories like the New York Post's Hunter Biden laptop reporting. The Judiciary Committee is still seeking testimony from FBI agent Elvis Chan because of the central role he appeared to play in coordinating online censorship."

'I Helped Pioneer It': Influential Gender Identity Doctor Sounds Alarm On 'Dangerous' Sex Change Treatments For Kids

Daily Caller | Sarah Weaver
https://dailycaller.com/2023/10/31/gender-identity-doctor-dangerous-kids-sex-changes/

-"Adolescent psychiatrist and gender identity expert Dr. Riittakerttu Kaltiala has come out against so-called "gender-affirming care" in a Monday essay for The Free Press.

-Kaltiala, who describes herself as a "pioneer" of irreversible sex change treatments for kids, was appointed in 2011 as the chief psychiatrist to head up a gender identity clinic at Finland's Tampere University Hospital. Kaltiala has since overseen the medical transition of over 500 adolescents, according to the brief bio in her essay. "Even so, I had some serious questions about all this," Kaltiala writes about the pediatric gender clinic's founding. "We were being told to intervene in healthy, functioning bodies simply on the basis of a young person's shifting feelings about gender. Adolescence is a complex period in which young people are consolidating their personalities, exploring sexual feelings, and becoming independent of their parents." Kaltiala said she was surprised that the patients who flocked to her new clinic were mostly girls with "severe psychiatric conditions." Many came from difficult family situations and a history of developmental difficulties, while still more were on the autism spectrum… Kaltiala and some colleagues conducted a study out of Finland which challenged the Dutch studies that inspired much of the current medical establishments' pediatric guidance for gender dysphoric kids. The paper raised "serious questions" about the wisdom of pediatric sex change procedures by looking at the patients Kaltiala saw at her clinic. The Finnish Heath Authority in 2021 backed psychotherapy, instead of irreversible puberty blockers and cross-sex hormones, as the first medical treatment gender dysphoric individuals should receive… The American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry reportedly rejected panels led by Kaltiala which would've urged Europe's medical establishment to move away from advocating for cross-sex hormones and puberty blockers for kids. A case manager at the Washington University Transgender Center at St. Louis Children's Hospital said in February that doctors rushed children into puberty blockers and irreversible sex-change procedures at the facility. Jamie Reed, who identifies as "queer" and is married to a transgender man, detailed how, in one case, a mother of a 11-year-old "tomboy" brought her daughter in for irreversible sex change treatments. When the girl's father objected to his daughter's transition, a judge sided with the mother after a hospital worker testified against him. Reed's allegations have prompted an investigation into the clinic by Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, who said in a statement that his office is "thoroughly investigating to make sure children are not harmed by individuals who may be more concerned with a radical social agenda than the health of children.'"

-"A group of residents in Newton County, located in southwest Missouri, filed a 22-page environmental lawsuit Oct. 29 against the Missouri Department of Natural Resources 10 days after 6,000 gallons of slaughterhouse waste leaked into a ditch and a field near Fairview. The lawsuit asks a judge to order DNR to require Arkansas-based Denali Water Solutions to "cease any and all activities and operations" at any facility it uses to store waste… The legal action comes as a judge has already barred DNR from issuing a permit to Denali for an animal waste lagoon in Randolph County, located north of Columbia, after citizens there banded together in response to concerns about odors, land degradation and water pollution. That case, as well as the new lawsuit, reveals regulatory loopholes in how the state issues permits for companies that collect waste from meatpacking facilities. Previously, the material was classified as fertilizer, but a change in policy earlier this year has moved oversight to DNR, which is grappling with reports of leaks and spills and odors. Denali has said it is a soil preparation company, but also has received permits in Arkansas as a "refuse" company, resulting in questions over which state environmental laws should apply to the permitting process. The practice has become controversial among rural residents at the same time Parson, a cattle farmer, has led the charge to expand meatpacking facilities in Missouri. Along with concerns about Denali's practices, property owners in St. Charles County have expressed concern about wastewater discharges from a new beef processing facility being built near Wright City… DNR is reviewing the company's permit request… But, DNR has taken action against Denali in other spill incidents. In July, Denali agreed to pay $30,000 in fines related to a McDonald County spill and is pursuing action on a separate spill in early October near Noel… Denali said in a statement to the Joplin Globe that the break occurred on a hose that was transporting liquid food processing residuals from a storage basin to a field. The substance was being spread as a fertilizer on cropland… Lawmakers could wade into the dispute next year. Senate Majority Leader Cindy O'Laughlin, R-Shelbina, earlier raised red flags about the company's practices."

Missouri ethics panel probes Speaker Plocher's firing of top aide as new complaint surfaces

https://news.yahoo.com/missouri-ethics-panel-probes-speaker-194044154.html

-"The Missouri House Ethics Committee's probe into embattled House Speaker Dean Plocher has so far focused on the top Republican lawmaker's decision to fire his chief of staff earlier this month. The ethics panel of five Republicans and five Democrats, which typically reviews complaints against House lawmakers, last week met behind closed doors for more than four hours to discuss a "personnel inquiry." The committee is scheduled to meet again next week. As the committee prepares to meet, a complaint of "ethical misconduct" has been filed against an unnamed House lawmaker. Documents obtained by The Star show that a House lawmaker on Thursday filed a complaint against another House lawmaker. Plocher, who as speaker is in charge of referring complaints to the ethics committee, recused himself from the matter. Plocher's legislative assistant said in an email she would get back with a reporter as to why Plocher recused himself. It's unclear whether the complaint is related to the ethics committee's personnel inquiry discussion on Friday. A source with knowledge of Friday's inquiry told The Star that the committee is examining whether House Chief Clerk Dana Miller has the authority to continue paying Kenny Ross, Plocher's former chief of staff whom he fired earlier this month. The concern, the source said, is whether Ross was protected as a whistleblower when he was fired. The committee is also examining whether Plocher followed proper procedure when he fired Ross, the source said… Ross could be considered a whistleblower because he has "knowledge of potential illegal activity that he came forward with," the source said. That appears to be related to Plocher's unsuccessful push for the House to hire a company to manage constituent information. Miller, the chief clerk since 2018, wrote about Plocher's push for the contract in an email last month to a Republican lawmaker. In the email, obtained through a public records request, Miller mentioned "threats made by Speaker Plocher concerning my future employment." She wrote that Plocher made a statement to her "connecting this contract with campaign activity."… Miller was in the room during several parts of Friday's closed-door ethics hearing. She declined comment for this story. The documents obtained by The Star are letters showing that a House lawmaker on Thursday filed a complaint of "ethical misconduct" against another lawmaker. Neither of the lawmakers are mentioned in the letters. Plocher received the complaint, which was not included in the records obtained by The Star due to confidentially rules. House rules require that when the House speaker receives a complaint against another lawmaker, the speaker has 14 days to refer the complaint to the ethics committee. On Friday, Plocher sent the complaint to the office of House Speaker Pro Tem Mike Henderson, a Bonne Terre Republican, saying in a letter that he was recusing himself from the matter… In an interview last week with "This Week in Missouri Politics," a state politics livestream from the Missouri Times, Plocher said that the rearrangement of staff in his office was not related to the controversy surrounding the constituent management contract… On Oct. 17, the day that Plocher fired Ross, Senate President Pro Tem Caleb Rowden, a Columbia Republican, announced that he had hired Ross to serve as his director of strategic initiatives."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

US jury finds realtors liable for inflating commissions, awards $1.78 bln damages

https://www.reuters.com/legal/missouri-jury-hits-nar-real-estate-companies-with-18-bln-damages-2023-10-31/

-"A U.S. jury on Tuesday found the National Association of Realtors and some residential brokerages, including units of Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway, liable to pay $1.78 billion in damages for conspiring to artificially inflate commissions for home sales. The verdict by a federal jury in Kansas City, Missouri, could upend decades-old practices that have allowed real estate agents to boost commissions as home prices and mortgage rates rise, hurting consumers by making housing transactions more expensive. Plaintiffs in the class action included sellers of more than 260,000 homes in Missouri, Kansas and Illinois between 2015 and 2022, who objected to the commissions they were obligated to pay buyers' brokers. The verdict followed a two-week trial, and the damages award can be tripled under U.S. antitrust law to more than $5.3 billion… The defendants included Berkshire-owned HomeServices of America and two subsidiaries, as well as the realty Keller Williams. NAR spokesperson Mantill Williams said the trade group plans to appeal, and seek reduced damages. HomeServices said it was disappointed in the verdict and planned to appeal, while Keller Williams spokesperson Darryl Frost said the realty company would consider its options for an appeal. Broker compensation in the U.S. has typically been about 5% to 6% of a home's sales price, with about half paid to a buyer's broker. Home sellers complained that this model suppressed competition by keeping commissions for buyer brokers in the 2-1/2 to 3% range despite the brokers' diminishing role, with many buyers able to find homes independently online… The defendants denied wrongdoing, with the NAR saying there was no evidence agents were required to "make offers of compensation at all, let alone at amounts that stabilize, fix, or raise commissions." Re/Max and Anywhere Real Estate, whose brands include Century 21, Coldwell Banker and Corcoran, had been defendants but settled before trial, with Re/Max paying $55 million and Anywhere paying $83.5 million, without admitting liability… The U.S. Department of Justice is separately asking a federal appeals court in Washington to let it revive an antitrust probe into the NAR's practices."

Education Department punishes Missouri-based student loan servicer for billing mistakes

https://www.kcur.org/education/2023-11-01/education-department-punishes-missouri-based-student-loan-servicer-for-billing-mistakes

-"The department said on Monday that it would withhold $7.2 million in payment owed to the Higher Education Loan Authority of the State of Missouri, better known as MOHELA, for the month of October. It announced that, of those 2.5 million borrowers, more than 800,000 failed to make an on-time loan payment in October, the first month that payments are due since the pandemic pause began in March 2020. "The actions we've taken send a strong message to all student loan servicers that we will not allow borrowers to suffer the consequences of gross servicing failures," Education Secretary Miguel Cardona said in a statement… MOHELA did not respond to a request for comment. The department's announcement comes amid widespread reports of loan servicing errors and of borrowers waiting on hold for hours before reaching servicer workers who can explain and ultimately fix those mistakes. In fact, the department itself cataloged these errors — extensively — in a recent internal memo obtained by NPR and first reported by The Washington Post. In that memo, dated Oct. 17, the office of Federal Student Aid (FSA) listed multiple large groups of borrowers who have been hurt by servicers' errors during the return to repayment. In addition to those 2.5 million borrowers who did not receive timely billing statements from MOHELA, some 16,000 borrowers who had petitioned the department to cancel their loans because they had been defrauded by a for-profit college were erroneously returned to repayment, the memo says… A MOHELA call center worker told Szyman there had been a "system glitch." He remembers being told: "'We'll get it fixed for you.'" But it wasn't fixed. When he called again, a different call center worker told Szyman that his loan would be put into forbearance until the "glitch" could be sorted out. And there it remains. The internal Education Department memo suggests Szyman is in good company: 78,000 borrowers experienced something similar. All had their accounts transferred from one servicer to another and were shifted from an old income-driven repayment plan to the new SAVE plan. What was the glitch? According to the memo, "their monthly payments were incorrectly calculated based on incorrect family sizes, family income and spousal loan balances." It's unclear which of these factored into Szyman's six-times-larger payment… While borrowers welcomed the Education Department's announcement, Rep. Virginia Foxx, R-N.C., who chairs the House Education Committee, made clear that she believes the department deserves much of the blame for these failures. "Servicers need to be performing at their best. Period. But this doesn't mean the Department is off the hook," Foxx said in a statement… Congress too bears some responsibility for these mistakes, voting to flat-fund the office of Federal Student Aid and its loan servicing contractors this year, as congressional Republicans battled with the White House over Biden's broader student loan relief plans…"

-"A month after federal research found disparities in funding for nonprofits serving people of color, a St. Charles charity leader was indicted and accused of stealing millions intended to feed low-income children in a racially diverse area. Connie Bobo, the executive director of New Heights Community Resource Center, was indicted on three felony counts of wire fraud, three counts of aggravated identity theft and two counts of obstruction of an official proceeding, according to information provided last week by the U.S. attorney of the Eastern District of Missouri. Bobo and New Heights, with headquarters in Bridgeton in north St. Louis County, according to its Facebook page, had its tax-exempt status revoked by the IRS for failure to file a return for three consecutive years, according to information compiled by GuideStar. New Heights' last IRS filing was in 2019 and stated revenue of $260,748 and expenses of $216,750, including Bobo's salary of $60,000 for 20 hours of work per week. The indictment states Bobo and New Heights fraudulently claimed to have served at least three million meals to children between February 2019 and March 2022, but the meals weren't purchased or supplied. The Missouri Department of Health and Senior Services paid Bobo approximately $11 million based on the false claims. The research found this group of nonprofits was less likely to see an increase in government funds compared with all other nonprofits. It also found the group was more likely to experience significant disruptions compared to other nonprofits, but they showed resiliency and met challenges arising from the pandemic… Bobo spent $4.3 million to purchase a home worth $1 million for herself, other homes for relatives, and $2.2 million in a commercial real estate investment, according to the indictment. She gave approximately $1.4 million "to her romantic partner," according to the indictment, who spent $211,907 on a 2017 Mercedes-Benz G550 Wagon. The indictment also states Bobo forged an invoice from a food vendor to falsely claim a purchase of hundreds of gallons of milk."

Speaker Johnson draws battle lines ahead of government spending showdown

-"Speaker Mike Johnson is warning that the House and Senate could be at an "impasse" on government funding if the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Democrat-controlled chamber tries to force the House GOP to bringing dense multi-subject spending bills to the House floor… The House has passed five of 12 individual spending bills that together will fund the government in the next fiscal year. They're slated to consider three more this week. None have come for a vote in the Senate, where Democrats have lambasted Republicans for writing spending bills at a lower level than what was agreed to under the bipartisan debt limit deal. However, Senate appropriators announced a bipartisan deal last week to combine three spending bills into a "minibus." Johnson told Fox News Digital the House and Senate were "going to be at an impasse" if Schumer sent a minibus or an omnibus to the House rather than taking up the 12 individual spending bills. "We are committed to returning to regular order, and that means…12 separate appropriations bills. And I think that people are with us on that," Johnson said…… "We owe that to the people, to restore some sort of common sense in this process and allow the citizens that we represent to be able to follow and understand what's happening here." Congress passed a short-term extension of last year's fiscal priorities, known as a continuing resolution (CR) on Sept. 30, narrowly avoiding a government shutdown. That funding expires on Nov. 17. Johnson suggested he would not bring another so-called "clean" CR but said the details of what House Republicans would need to add are still up in the air…"But I think at the end of the day, what we're trying to do is ensure that obviously the government remains in operation, but we do it in a fiscally responsible manner. And we cannot just print and borrow money and spend it anymore. We're past that," he said. The three spending bills House Republicans are looking to pass this week fund the Department of Interior, the legislative branch and transportation along with Housing and Urban Development.

Left-wing dark money network bankrolling anti-Israel groups drops millions pushing Ohio abortion amendment

https://www.foxnews.com/politics/left-wing-dark-money-network-bankrolling-anti-israel-groups-drops-millions-pushing-ohio-abortion-amendment

-"Recent filings reviewed by Fox News Digital show that the progressive Sixteen Thirty Fund, which the Washington, D.C.-based Arabella Advisors consulting firm manages, sent at least $5.4 million to the Ohioans United for Reproductive Rights Committee to support Ohio's constitutional amendment. The campaign also received $3.5 million from the George Soros-backed Open Society Policy Center. Both groups have sent millions of dollars to anti-Israel causes in recent years according to a recent report from the New York Post. Nonprofits in the Arabella Advisors-managed network have reportedly funneled at least $10,833,396 to a variety of groups that have sent funds opposing Israel since 2018, including entities that have backed pro-Palestinian protests, antisemitic figures and groups sympathetic to the Hamas terrorists that attacked Israel last month. The Open Society Policy Center has given $13.7 million, through the Tides Center, to groups that have reportedly expressed support for Hamas or justified attacks on Israel and a total of $15 million since 2016…Ohioans will vote on November 7th on whether to enshrine abortion into the state's constitution which opponents of the measure, "No" voters, argue will wipe out any abortion restrictions that are currently on the books and implement vague language that opens up the likelihood of parental rights being hindered…Ohio's Republican Attorney General Dave Yost put together a comprehensive analysis of what voting "Yes" on Issue one and approving the amendment would mean for abortions in the state and wrote that the language of the amendment "creates a new, legal standard that goes beyond what Roe and Casey said."… Last month, the Windward Fund and New Venture Fund, which are under the Arabella umbrella and serve as fiscal sponsors of dozens of far-left groups, announced they were cutting ties with Alliance for Global Justice, a far-left organization that received hundreds of thousands of dollars combined from the two funds. New Venture Fund President Lee Bodner told the Washington Examiner that they "condemn terrorism and violence against civilians in all forms" and that they are "discontinuing grants to any projects hosted by Alliance for Global Justice." Alliance for Global Justice previously faced backlash for sending funding to the Samidoun Palestinian Prisoner Solidarity Network, a group that Israel labeled a terrorist organization in 2021. Fox News Digital also previously reported on how the Louisville Community Bail Fund, which is a "fiscally sponsored project" of the Alliance for Global Justice (AFGJ), bailed out activist Quintez Brown, 21, after he was arrested and charged for the attempted murder of Jewish Democratic mayoral candidate Craig Greenberg early last year."

Supreme Court Considers Whether Public Officials May Block Constituents on Social Media

-"When can government officials block individuals on their social media accounts? The United States Supreme Court considered that question at an Oct. 31 hearing. The court's eventual ruling on the high-profile controversy, which involves two contradictory rulings by lower courts, is likely to have an impact on all levels of government as citizens increasingly use social media to interact with public officials… The Florida case is Moody v. NetChoice LLC (court file 22-277). The Texas case is NetChoice LLC v. Paxton (court file 22-555). The hearing brings to mind a lawsuit that several individuals previously filed against former President Donald Trump after he blocked them from accessing his Twitter account. The Supreme Court dismissed that case, Biden v. Knight First Amendment Institute, in April 2021 as moot because President Trump had already left office. At the time of the ruling, Twitter had banned President Trump. When Elon Musk took over the company he reversed that policy. Two cases—O'Connor-Ratcliff v. Garnier (court file 22-324) and a related case, Lindke v. Freed (court file 22-611)—were heard back-to-back on Oct. 31 by the Supreme Court. The legal issue is whether a public official is engaging in state or governmental action subject to the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution when blocking someone from accessing the official's social media account. One federal appeals court found in favor of the citizens; another found for the public official… Respondents Christopher Garnier and Kimberly Garnier, parents of local students, "spammed Petitioners' posts and tweets with repetitive comments and replies" so the school board members blocked the respondents from the accounts, according to the petition filed by Ms. O'Connor-Ratcliff and Mr. Zane. But the Garniers said they were acting in good faith. "The Garniers left comments exposing financial mismanagement by the former superintendent as well as incidents of racism," the couple said in a brief. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit found in favor of the Garniers, holding that elected officials using social media accounts were participating in a public forum. In the other case, respondent James Freed, the city manager of Port Huron, Michigan, used a public Facebook account to communicate with his constituents. Petitioner Kevin Lindke, a resident of Port Huron, criticized the municipality's response to the COVID-19 pandemic, including accusations of hypocrisy by local officials. Mr. Freed blocked Mr. Lindke and others and removed their comments, according to Mr. Lindke's petition. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit ruled for Mr. Freed, finding that he was acting only in a personal capacity and that his activities did not constitute governmental action… Justice Samuel Alito pushed back. Does this mean that a "town manager can block comments based on viewpoint, so the town manager can block anybody who expresses criticism of what the town manager is doing and thereby create the impression that everybody in town thinks the town manager is doing the right thing?" the justice said. Justice Elena Kagan also questioned Mr. Mooppan's reasoning, "President Trump's Twitter account was also personal?" Justice Kagan asked. "Yes, Your Honor, then I think that he is engaging in his First Amendment rights … to talk about the government in his individual capacity," Mr. Mooppan said. "But he seems to be doing, you know, a lot of government on his Twitter account," Justice Kagan replied. Justice Brett Kavanaugh said: "local officials around the country need guidance. … They need a clear answer" about how to communicate with the public. Supporting Ms. O'Connor-Ratcliff and Mr. Zane, U.S. Department of Justice attorney Sopan Joshi told the court that social media accounts operated in a personal capacity function as private property… "There has to be some objective indicia that the government employees can reply upon so they know when they're using government resources … that they're acting on behalf of the state…"

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

What the 'Great Trucking Recession' is warning us about the economy

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/opinion/columnists/what-great-trucking-recession-warning-about-economy

-"Two months ago, 30,000 truckers at Yellow lost their jobs when one of the nation's oldest and largest trucking companies filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection. Last week, Convoy, the digital freight broker that was supposed to reinvent the wheel and disrupt the trucking industry in a positive way, also abruptly shuttered its doors. These kinds of closings by both freight carriers lay bare the uncertain state of trucking, an industry that is an indicator of the mood of the consumer and also the beating heart of our economy… "The damage started when people went on a spending spree during COVID. The government was giving out cash, and people started ordering things in a way they have never done before," McQuaide explained. As a result, McQuaide said, new trucks were on the road to meet the consumers' needs. Beginning last year, that need started to recede when consumers' spending spree started to ebb, and, as a result, several different things have happened in the industry, beginning with too many trucks in comparison to the amount of freight that is available. That, McQuaide said, hits the truckers and truck companies hard: "The economy is slowing from its frenzy, people aren't buying anymore, which means there are more trucks on the road than there are loads, and it's forcing the rates down." McQuaide said his company's rates are about 20% lower than last year… Truckers are making less than they did in per-mile peak earnings, McQuaide said… McQuaide, who also owns and runs a logistics company that has a series of warehouses holding imports and exports, says the freight recession is real… He said he worries not enough people are considering the wider implications of people not spending and truckers not having anything to move… McQuaide said the trucking industry, or any form of transportation that is moving goods, is the ultimate economic indicator of where the country is heading. "It provides very valuable insights into the health of where the economy is going and into the mindset of the consumer: Are they spending, or are they feeling uncertain and moving within," he asked rhetorically. September data from the government contradicted McQuaide's concerns, showing a surge in consumer spending — 0.4% to be exact. But economists, like McQuaide, were cautious in reaction. The Associated Press reported that many households have been spending their money unwisely, tapping into shrinking savings accounts and pulling out the credit cards. Data also show that when people are spending, they are rethinking forking out money on the big things, such as dishwashers, shiny new stainless stoves, and refrigerators, which backs up what McQuaide is seeing on the freight side."

Senate Passes Joni Ernst Amendment Cracking Down On Federal Employees Abusing Telework

House Judiciary Committee To Investigate DOJ For Allegedly Spying On Congressional Staffers

Daily Caller l Harold Hutchinson

-“The House Judiciary Committee announced an investigation into the Department of Justice (DOJ) Tuesday over reports of allegedly spying on staffers for congressional members investigating the agency. The committee sent letters to Verizon, Alphabet, Apple, T-Mobile, AT&T and the DOJ Tuesday, demanding information on the DOJ’s 2017 subpoenas to cell phone providers demanding the communications of congressional staffers who carried out oversight of the DOJ, according to a post on Twitter. The committee gave a deadline of Nov. 14 to provide the information. “We now know that they spied on congressional staffers. We want to know how far does it go, were they spying on members? Were they spying on other staffers?” Republican Rep. Jim Jordan of Ohio told Fox Business host Elizabeth MacDonald…Congress investigated the FBI and DOJ over the use of FISA warrants to spy on Donald Trump’s successful 2016 campaign for the White House based on claims made in the now-discredited Steele Dossier. Special Counsel John Durham released a report on the origins of the FBI investigation of allegations that Trump’s 2016 presidential campaign colluded with Russia May 15 that found that the FBI “did not and could not corroborate” the dossier’s claims. “They were investigating the very people who were investigating the Justice Department, because this is all in the context of the Crossfire Hurricane, the Trump-Russia issue,” Jordan said…”

Republicans Raise Terror Alarm After Illegal Immigrants Caught With Explosive Devices

-“Republican senators have sounded the alarm on the Biden administration's border policies after Border Patrol agents caught illegal border crossers who were carrying explosive devices that Sen. John Barrasso (R-Wyo.) said were "tailor-made for terrorism."… The senators said that over 8 million illegal border crossings have taken place under President Joe Biden's watch, while asserting that explosive devices found on some border crossers in recent days represent an elevated risk of terror acts against the homeland. "We have just returned from our southern border, and it is painfully clear that with Joe Biden's open border policy, our country is really at an increased threat for a terrorist attack," Mr. Barrasso said at Tuesday's press conference. Several days ago, U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) agents seized illegal immigrants carrying with them improvised explosive devices that Mr. Barrasso said were the "size of cannonballs" and were "tailor-made for terrorism."… due to what he said were President Biden's "failed" border policies, there were 18 people on the terrorist watchlist caught entering the United States illegally in September—and 172 last year. "To put this in perspective, in years past, that number was single digits," Mr. Ricketts said…An elevated terror threat against the United States and its citizens has also been flagged by FBI Director Christopher Wray, who issued a stark warning while testifying before Congress on Oct. 31. Mr. Wray told lawmakers that, since the Oct. 7 attack by the Hamas terror group against Israeli civilians and soldiers, there have been multiple foreign terrorist organizations calling for attacks against Americans and the West, significantly raising the threat posed by what he described as "homegrown extremists."… But the terror threat has been on the rise for some time. Earlier this year, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) issued a terror alert, saying that the United States is in a "heightened threat environment," citing in part individuals with links to foreign terrorist organizations who may target schools, government facilities, or critical infrastructure. In September, over 269,000 people were caught crossing the U.S.–Mexico border illegally, a record high for a single month…There have been 1.7 million "gotaways" since President Biden assumed office, according to the House Committee on Homeland Security.”

Senators Introduce 'Protect Our Bases Act' as China Continues Purchasing Land Near US Military Sites

-“Sen. Tim Scott (R-S.C.), ranking member of the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, along with Sens. Mike Crapo (R-Idaho), Steve Daines (R-Mont.), Mike Rounds (R-S.D.), Bill Hagerty (R-Tenn.), and Katie Britt (R-Ala.) introduced the legislation, known as the "Protect Our Bases Act," on Oct. 24. The bill comes as experts have warned that China has been exploiting various loopholes in recent years in an effort to purchase large swathes of U.S. land with the aim of sabotaging America's national security. Under the newly introduced legislation, the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States (CFIUS) would be allowed to review certain types of foreign land purchases if they are made near sensitive military, intelligence, and national laboratory sites. Specifically, the bill requires agencies represented by CFIUS to provide to Congress on an annual basis updated records of the military, intelligence, and national laboratory facilities that should be deemed sensitive sites for national security purposes. Additionally, the measure requires CFIUS to submit an annual report to Congress certifying the completion of such reviews, specifying whether or not the new list is up to date, and if not, providing an explanation as to why…The legislation, he said, was necessary to "protect sensitive military and government sites from encroachment by foreign adversaries on our own land."

Lawmakers seek information from Biden administration on Iran oil exports to China

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/news/house/gallego-bacon-send-letter-biden-admin-info-iran-china

-"The letter was sent to Secretary of State Antony Blinken and Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen, and in the wake of Hamas's invasion of Israel, the two members of Congress raised concerns about Iran and its oil export to China and urged the administration to "use all available tools at its disposal to halt Iran's financing, arming, and training of terrorist organizations, including Hamas and Hezbollah." The representatives cited reports that estimate Chinese imports of sanctioned Iranian oil are at the highest level in decades. It is estimated China receives 1.5 million barrels a day of Iranian crude oil. The oil is sent to "semi-private refiners in Shandong" known as "teapots," they wrote in the letter. This allows China to obscure its role in the illicit oil purchases and "shield larger Chinese firms and the Chinese Communist Party from exposure to the U.S. financial system and associated sanctions."… In early October, Gallego teamed up with Rep. Mike Gallagher (R-WI) to call on the Biden administration to freeze the $6 billion America gave Iran in exchange for hostages and to enforce sanctions fully on Iranian oil exports to China."

Supreme Court will consider lawyer's bid to trademark 'Trump too small' slogan

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/policy/courts/supreme-court-considers-lawyers-bid-trademark-trump-too-small-slogan

-"An attorney seeking permission to trademark the phrase "Trump too small" and print it on T-shirts for profit will have his First Amendment case weighed by the Supreme Court on Wednesday. The nine justices will hear arguments over attorney Steve Elster's bid to trademark the phrase, which originates from the 2016 primary season when the size of then-candidate Donald Trump's hands became a humorous rebuttal from his then-primary opponent Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL). Rubio aimed to knock his political opponent down a peg during a campaign stop after Trump had recently coined his characterization of him, "Little Marco."… That notorious exchange prompted Elster to create shirts and other merchandise sporting the phrase "Trump too small." The attorney also planned to include an image of a lewd hand gesture as commentary over the "smallness of Donald Trump's overall approach to governing as president of the United States." Fara Sunderji, a trademark attorney with Dorsey & Whitney, told the Washington Examiner the "outward appearances" of the case shouldn't be construed as a case about Trump nor the "size of his policies (or body parts.)" "This is a case about the intersection between trademark law, the First Amendment, rights of privacy, rights of publicity, and political criticisms," Sunderji said, adding the case presents an opportunity to decide if the denial of trademark registrations restricts speech because the act of the denial would be "chilling.'"

I hope everyone has a great day!

Hi Madeline,
My name is Leif Le Mahieu and I am a reporter with The Daily Wire. I'm writing an article on Attorney General Andrew Bailey's tweet saying that he was looking into Media Matters over its hit piece targeting Elon Musk last week. I was wondering if there was any additional information you could tell me about what specificallyoffice was looking into and why the AG thinks this is an important issue to address.

Best,

Hi Madeline,
What exactly are you investigating related to Media Matters/Elon Musk? What possible violations of the law are there? Is this for Bailey to generate attention as Will Scharf argues in President Trump's defense today? Please let me know soonest.
Thanks,
Jack

We would like to know…
Has the AG's office formally initiated a probe of Media Matters?
Would appreciate any information or statements you can provide.
Thank you,

Subject: MEDIA INQUIRY: Media Matters Investigation (Deadline 11/20, 6 PM Eastern)

Hello,

My name is Rebecca Crosby and I write for Popular Information, a political newsletter that reaches 294,000 people.

As you are aware, Media Matters reported last week that X, the social media platform formerly known as Twitter, was placing ads for major brands "next to content that touts Adolf Hitler and his Nazi Party." On November 18, Elon Musk, the owner of X, announced that he was filing a lawsuit against Media Matters alleging that the report "misrepresented the real user experience" in an "attempt to undermine freedom of speech and mislead advertisers."

On X, Stephen Miller suggested that Media Matters could be subject to criminal and civil charges under state law. In response, Attorney General Andrew Bailey posted that his "team is looking into this matter."

My questions are:

Do you have any information about the status of the Media Matters investigation?

Do you have a statement about the investigation?

I can include any response I receive by Monday, November 20 at 6 PM Eastern.

Thank you,

Rebecca

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
FORT WORTH DIVISION

X CORP., a Nevada corporation,

Plaintiff,

v.

MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA, a Washington, D.C. non-profit corporation, and ERIC HANANOKI, Defendants.

Case No. 4:23-cv-1175

JURY TRIAL DEMANDED

COMPLAINT

1. Defendant Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") is a self-proclaimed media watchdog that decided it would not let the truth get in the way of a story it wanted to publish about X Corp. Looking to portray X's social networking platform as being dominated by "white nationalist and anti-Semitic conspiracy theories," Media Matters knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform. Media Matters designed both these images and its resulting media strategy to drive advertisers from the platform and destroy X Corp.

2. Plaintiff X Corp. operates the X social media platform with over 500 million active monthly users. X facilitates free expression and open discourse by enabling its users to create and share their own content and to message and comment on other users' posts. These posts appear sequentially to users in "feeds," which occasionally include paid advertisements—the overwhelming source of X Corp.'s revenue.

3. Users shape their own experiences on X. Users curate the content on their own feeds by choosing to "follow" other users, thereby determining which posts are presented to them. Most users are served a variety of content based on an algorithm that takes account of who that user follows and what that user engages with. But X also provides its users the option to forgo algorithmically suggested posts altogether, thereby enabling a user to view only the content that user chooses to view.

4. As the most prominent online platform dedicated to hosting free speech, X and its predecessor Twitter have long been the target of Media Matters. In just the last year, Media Matters has published a series of articles threatening X's relationships with massive multinational advertisers and global publishers, including Amazon, eBay, Major League Baseball, New York Times Co., Samsung, Sports Illustrated, The Wall Street Journal, USA Today, Office Depot, Nokia, Dish, Bayer, Tyson Foods, Honeywell, Discovery, FanDuel, Thermo Fisher, National Women's Soccer League, the Pittsburgh Steelers, the Atlanta Falcons, Manchester City, DraftKings, FanDuel, T-Mobile, and The Athletic.[1]

5. This November alone Media Matters released over twenty articles (and counting) disparaging both X Corp. and Elon Musk—a blatant smear campaign.

6. For the last several years, Media Matters has falsely portrayed Twitter, now X, as a risky, unsafe platform for advertisers. Contrary to these efforts, 99% of X's measured ad placement in 2023 has appeared adjacent to content scoring above the Global Alliance for Responsible Media's brand safety floor.

7. Undeterred by the truth, Media Matters has opted for new tactics in its campaign to drive advertisers from X. Media Matters has manipulated the algorithms governing the user experience on X to bypass safeguards and create images of X's largest advertisers' paid posts adjacent to racist, incendiary content, leaving the false impression that these pairings are anything but what they actually are: manufactured, inorganic, and extraordinarily rare.

8. Media Matters executed this plot in multiple steps, as X's internal investigations have revealed. First, Media Matters accessed accounts that had been active for at least 30 days, bypassing X's ad filter for new users. Media Matters then exclusively followed a small subset of users consisting entirely of accounts in one of two categories: those known to produce extreme, fringe content, and accounts owned by X's big-name advertisers. The end result was a feed precision-designed by Media Matters for a single purpose: to produce side-by-side ad/content placements that it could screenshot in an effort to alienate advertisers.

9. But this activity still was not enough to create the pairings of advertisements and content that Media Matters aimed to produce.

10. Media Matters therefore resorted to endlessly scrolling and refreshing its unrepresentative, hand-selected feed, generating between 13 and 15 times more advertisements per hour than viewed by the average X user repeating this inauthentic activity until it finally received pages containing the result it wanted: controversial content next to X's largest advertisers' paid posts.

11. Media Matters omitted mentioning any of this in a report published on November 16, 2023 that displayed instances Media Matters "found" on X of advertisers' paid posts featured next to Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist content. Nor did Media Matters otherwise provide any context regarding the forced, inauthentic nature and extraordinary rarity of these pairings.

12. However, relying on the specious narrative propagated by Media Matters, the advertisers targeted took these pairings to be anything but rare and inorganic, with all but one of the companies featured in the Media Matters piece withdrawing all ads from X, including Apple, Comcast, NBCUniversal, and IBM—some of X's largest advertisers. Indeed, in pulling all advertising from X in response to this intentionally deceptive report, IBM called the pairings an "entirely unacceptable situation."[2] Only Oracle did not withdraw its ads.

13. The truth bore no resemblance to Media Matters' narrative. In fact, IBM's, Comcast's, and Oracle's paid posts appeared alongside the fringe content cited by Media Matters for only one viewer (out of more than 500 million) on all of X: Media Matters. Not a single authentic user of the X platform saw IBM's, Comcast's, or Oracle's ads next to that content, which Media Matters achieved only through its manipulation of X's algorithms as described above. And in Apple's case, only two out of more than 500 million active users saw its ad appear alongside the fringe content cited in the article—at least one of which was Media Matters.

14. Media Matters could have produced a fair, accurate account of users' interactions with advertisements on X via basic reporting: following real users, documenting the actual, organic production of content and advertisement pairings. Had it done so, however, it would not have produced the outcome Media Matters so desperately desired, which was to tarnish X's reputation by associating it with racist content. So instead, Media Matters chose to maliciously misrepresent the X experience with the intention of harming X and its business.

PARTIES

15. Plaintiff X Corp. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, with its principal place of business in San Francisco, California. Plaintiff conducts significant business in Texas, including maintaining significant offices in Texas. It operates the social media platform "X" (formerly "Twitter"), an internet-based service that enables users to create and share their own content, interact with other users, and curate feeds of content.

16. Defendant Media Matters is a web-based publisher incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia with its principal place of business at 800 Maine Avenue SW, Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20024. The organization's purpose is "to systematically monitor" conservative media and publish reports based on this purported reporting.

17. Defendant Eric Hananoki is a writer for Defendant Media Matters and is domiciled in Maryland.

JURISDICTION & VENUE

18. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332 because there exists complete diversity of citizenship between Plaintiff and Defendants and the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000.00.

19. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Media Matters because Media Matters' campaign against X Corp. was purposefully directed at, among others, relationships with advertisers who are located in, have a significant presence in, or transact substantial business in Texas. Likewise, this Court has personal jurisdiction over Media Matters because its attempts to harm X Corp.'s reputation potentially threatened X Corp.'s relationships with its hundreds of millions of users, including millions of Texas users. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Hananoki for substantially the same reasons.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

20. Venue is proper pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391 because a substantial part of the events giving rise to the claims occurred herein, because a substantial part of the property that is subject of the action—that is, X's business and advertising—is situated in the district, and because all Defendants are subject to personal jurisdiction in this District.

GENERAL ALLEGATIONS

I. X is a Safe Platform for Users and Advertisers, Despite Media Matters' Deceptions.

21. X is a social media platform that remains in operation due to its loyal users and advertisers. X Corp. invests heavily in technologies that work in tandem to facilitate safe and effective interactions between users and advertisers—technologies that, under normal, organic conditions operate seamlessly.

22. As a first layer of protection for advertisers, X applies default protections to all posts. These protections are designed to prevent advertisements from being placed next to content that violates community guidelines. When users operate within X's community guidelines, these default mechanisms are effective and have a long history of successfully protecting X's advertisers from undesirable interactions with fringe content.

23. As a second layer of protection, X provides advertisers with opt-in options. These options allow advertisers to further address any specific concerns they may have about their advertisements being seen next to specific content. Here, advertisers can specify which key words and user handles they do not want their posts to appear by.

24. These protections and others create a safe environment for advertisers that allow them to reach their target audiences while protecting their brands, as Media Matters well knows.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

II. Media Matters Systematically Manipulated the X User Experience to Defame X.

25. On November 16, 2023, Media Matters published a false, defamatory, and misleading article with the headline, "X has been placing ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle, and Xfinity[3] next to pro-Nazi content," claiming that X was responsible for anti-Semitic content being paired with X's advertisers' paid posts.[4] This statement was not true, and Media Matters knew it. As explained below and displayed in an X internal review, this title is false in that Media Matters itself—not X—was responsible for placement of the content it identified through its willful exploitation of X's user features—a result it specifically intended to bring about. X in fact has many default safeguards that prevent the platform from displaying content in the manner artificially achieved by Defendant.

26. Further, in the body of the piece, Media Matters falsely claims that it "recently found ads for Apple, Bravo, Oracle, Xfinity, and IBM next to posts that tout Hitler and his Nazi Party on X."[5] Media Matters did not find pairings that X passively allowed on the platform. Media Matters created these pairings in secrecy, to manufacture the harmful perception that X is at best an incompetent content moderator (a harmful accusation for any social media platform), or even worse that X was somehow indifferent or even encouraging to Nazi and racist ideology.

27. On X, users can control the content on their feeds. When users show interest in particular topics, ads will generate that relate to those topics. Media Matters exploited these features by creating a secret X account precision-designed to evade normal safeguards, manipulating every aspect of the system through which posts and advertisements appear, ultimately creating the side-by-side images of objectionable content and advertisements.

28. X's internal user data tells the story of just how far Media Matters went to manufacture an inorganic user experience strictly aimed at creating an interaction between controversial content and big-name advertisers that was seen only by the Media Matters account and then published broadly.

29. First, Media Matters set out on their attempt to evade X's content filters for new users by specifically using an account that had been in existence for more than thirty days.

30. Next, Media Matters set its account to follow only 30 users (far less than the average number of accounts followed by a typical active user, 219), severely limiting the amount and type of content featured on its feed. All of these users were either already known for posting controversial content or were accounts for X's advertisers. That is, 100% of the accounts Media Matters followed were either fringe accounts or were accounts for national large brands. In all, this functioned as an attempt to flood the Media Matters account with content only from national brands and fringe figures, tricking the algorithm into thinking Media Matters wanted to view both hateful content and content from large advertisers.

31. Even this did not produce Media Matters' intended result. An internal review by X revealed that Media Matters' account started to alter its scrolling and refreshing activities in an attempt to manipulate inorganic combinations of advertisements and content. Media Matters' excessive scrolling and refreshing generated between 13 and 15 times more advertisements per hour than would be seen by a typical user, essentially seeking to force a situation in which a brand ad post appeared adjacent to fringe content.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

32. Eventually, through intentionally evading X's multiple safeguards by curating the content on its feed and then repeatedly attempting to create pairings of advertisements for major brands with controversial content, Media Matters finally achieved its goal. Accordingly, it took screenshots of posts from IBM, Apple, Bravo, Xfinity, and Oracle that Media Matters engineered to appear adjacent to inflammatory, fringe content.

III. To Defame X, Media Matters Hid Its Manipulation from Readers and Advertisers.

33. Media Matters generated a specific, intended result that was not only inorganic, but exceedingly (and demonstrably) rare, all while taking specific steps to obscure this in its November 16, 2023 article. The overall effect on advertisers and users was to create the false, misleading perception that these types of pairings were common, widespread, and alarming. Media Matters hid its manipulations through omissions, deceptive image selections, misrepresentations, and secrecy settings.

34. Media Matters omitted in its entirety its process of manufacturing these ad pairings. It did not include in its article that it created a user that only followed 30 accounts that either belonged to fringe figures or major national brands. Neither readers nor advertisers had any way of knowing that the entire feed was orchestrated to generate the remarkably rare combinations. Media Matters also omitted mentioning in its entirety its excessive scrolling and refreshing, allowing users to believe (falsely) that the "report" was produced under circumstances that were organic and unmanipulated.

35. Media Matters also omitted and made no attempt to clarify the rarity of these pairings. The representation put forth by Media Matters constituted 0.0000009090909 percent of impressions served on the day in question. Most or all of these pairings were not seen by literally anyone besides Media Matters' own manipulated account, and no authentic user of the platform has been confirmed to have seen any of these pairings.

36. Media Matters' image choice in its smear also functioned to hide the true nature of its report. All images selected contained only the ad and the controversial content, with all other posts absent from view. That is, had readers been able to see the posts above and below the pairings, they would have easily gleaned the highly-specific nature of the small number of accounts Media Matters chose to follow. Media Matters chose to show every pairing in its article using this deceptive technique—hiding its deceit through even more deceit.

37. Tellingly, Media Matters used X's privacy features in order to hide its methodology from its readers. That is, Media Matters set this account to "private," blocking anyone from seeing which accounts Media Matters actually followed, thus disallowing anyone from understanding how its feed was manipulated. Indeed, Media Matters at no point includes images with any information about the account that was exposed to these images; the cropped nature of Media Matters' deceptive screenshots leaves its profile picture out of frame.

38. Accordingly, Media Matters created the impression that these pairings were organic, accurate, and representative of the typical X user's experience, which actually and demonstrably misled users and advertisers, causing harm to X Corp.

V. Media Matters Caused Advertisers to Believe the Pairings Were Organic.

39. After the publication of Media Matters' false smear on November 16, 2023, advertisers pulled their ads from the site, which, as Media Matters admits, only happened after it reported that X was placing ads alongside white nationalist and pro-Nazi content. Included in these companies, which all referenced antisemitic content in their withdrawal from X, are:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Comcast. After Media Matters' November article featured a contrived, misleading, and inflammatory image showing an ad for Xfinity next to a pro-Nazi post, its parent company Comcast decided to pull all ads for Comcast entities from X.

NBCUniversal. As the parent company of Bravo and a subsidiary of Comcast, NBCUniversal pulled all advertising from X after publication of the article.

Apple. The day after publication of the article, which also featured an Apple ad contrived to be placed next to fringe content, Apple—one of X's largest clients—pulled all of its ads from the platform.

IBM. As previously discussed, IBM pulled all ads immediately after the publication of the article.

40. Media Matters' manipulation was so severe that companies not even featured in the article also pulled ads from X. These companies include Lionsgate, Warner Bros. Discovery, Paramount, and Sony.

VII. Media Matters Intended to Harm X's Revenue Stream.

41. Media Matters represents itself as "a progressive research and information center dedicated to comprehensively monitoring, analyzing, and correcting conservative misinformation in the U.S. media."[6] Since its launch in 2004, it has engaged in an all-out campaign of "guerilla warfare and sabotage" on conservative news sources.[7] In this context, X Corp. and Elon Musk are a critical Media Matters target because X is the most prominent online platform that permits users to share all viewpoints, whether liberal or conservative, and Mr. Musk is the most prominent voice on the platform and a passionate supporter of free speech. In taking down two forces it already found objectionable, Media Matters had the chance to starve X of ad revenue and thereby silence all of the voices on X. Nothing in Media Matters' campaign was coincidental or accidental. And, its guerilla attack on X is working, driving away X's advertisers and revenue precisely as intended.

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION

Interference With Contract

42. X Corp. re-alleges and incorporates by reference the above allegations.

43. At all relevant times, Defendants were aware that Plaintiff contracted with various third parties, including but not limited to Apple, NBCUniversal, Comcast, Bravo, Apple, and IBM, to sell ads on the X platform, as clearly demonstrated by the many articles written by Defendants on the topic.

44. Defendant Media Matters intentionally interfered with contracts between X Corp. and its advertisers, including but not limited to Apple, NBCUniversal, Comcast, Bravo, Apple, and IBM—all clients with existing advertisement agreements that were casualties of Defendant's misrepresentations and ceased advertising on the X platform as a direct result.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION

Business Disparagement

45. X Corp. re-alleges and incorporates by reference the above allegations.

46. Defendant Media Matters made statements that disparaged the quality of X Corp.'s product, X.

47. Defendant Media Matters made these statements as statements of fact, not opinion. Defendant Media Matters represented that X "has been placing" advertisements next to anti-Semitic and racist materials. It represented that it "found" these materials next to advertisements.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

48. As extensively explained above, these statements made by Defendant Media Matters were false.

49. Defendant Media Matters intentionally made these statements with clear malice, well aware of their falsity.

50. X Corp. suffered monetary loss as a result of these statements: companies mentioned in Defendant's false and misleading article pulled their advertising from X indefinitely.

THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION

Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

51. X Corp. re-alleges and incorporates by reference the above allegations.

52. X Corp. was engaged in economic relationships that would have resulted in an economic benefit to X Corp. X Corp. had relationships with advertisers that pulled their spending in light of Defendant Media Matters' article and had every reason to suspect that these relationships would continue.

53. At all relevant times, Defendant Media Matters knew of these relationships, as they were described in its "reporting."

54. Defendant Media Matters engaged in wrongful conduct that disrupted X Corp.'s economic relationships. Through extensive deception and misrepresentation, Defendant Media Matters caused advertisers to lose faith in X Corp.'s abilities to monitor and curate content, thereby leading them to break off these lucrative relationships and any future continued relationships.

55. Defendant Media Matters acted with the intent to disrupt these relationships. Media Matters' actions continued its expressly declared "guerilla war" on media it dislikes and its systematic, harassing attacks on X Corp. and Elon Musk.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

56. X Corp. was harmed as a result of Defendant Media Matters' actions: it lost advertisers as a result of Defendant's interference.

57. Defendant Media Matters' actions were undoubtedly a substantial factor in causing this harm, with Defendant's website even noting that X Corp.'s relationships fell apart after Media Matters released its maliciously false piece.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff X Corp. prays for judgment in its favor and the following relief:

1. Actual and consequential damages caused by Defendants' misconduct, including but not limited to all general and special damages;

2. A preliminary and permanent injunction ordering Defendants to immediately delete, take down, or otherwise remove the article entitled "As Musk Endorses Antisemitic Conspiracy Theory, X Has Been Placing Ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle, and Xfinity Next to Pro-Nazi Content From Its Web" from all websites and social media accounts owned, controlled, or operated, directly or indirectly, by Defendants;

3. X Corp.'s costs and attorneys' fees to litigate this action; and

4. For such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

-"On Sunday, Republican Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced that his team is investigating left-leaning news organization Media Matters over allegations of criminal and civil violations. This comes after Elon Musk announced that X-Corp will be launching a "thermonuclear lawsuit" against the company on claims that Media Matters enacted a "fraudulent attack" on X-Corp and in an attempt to "undermine freedom of speech and mislead advertisers." The specific allegations that Attorney General Bailey's Office is investigating pertain to recent findings that Media Matters allegedly created fake social media accounts to game the X servers in order to create false impressions for its hit piece on Elon Musk. These allegations went viral after they were shared on X by Human Events' Jack Posobiec. Attorney General Bailey responded to a comment posted by billionaire Elon Musk on X following a plea to US conservative attorneys general to investigate the organization and said: "My team is looking into this matter."... Attorney General Bailey has been a champion for freedom of speech and has a significant track record of defending the First Amendment. He has sued the Biden administration over free speech violations in Missouri v Biden and recently filed a joint-amicus brief, along with 18 other US attorneys general, against the gag order imposed on President Trump in his January 6 case."

-"As Elon Musk threatens to sue Media Matters for their unflattering reporting on the social media platform once known as Twitter, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey (R) seemed to offer Musk help in following through with that... Musk claimed Media Matters used alternate accounts and selectively curated data from the platform in order to misrepresent user experiences and how advertising works on the platform. In the middle of this pending legal showdown, X executive Joe Benarroch backed Musk up with a post about how Media Matters supposedly manipulated the data. Benarroch's post got picked up by...Jack Posobiec, and that got the attention of Stephen Miller, who offered some advice about how to sue Media Matters for fraud... Musk was clearly intrigued by Miller's reminder, and that's when Bailey more-or-less volunteered to lead the charge. "My team is looking into this matter," he said."

18 Republican attorneys general back Trump, file amicus brief against 'unconstitutional' gag order in J6 case

https://thepostmillennial.com/18-republican-attorneys-general-back-trump-file-amicus-brief-against-unconstitutional-gag-order-in-j6-case

-"On Thursday, Republican Attorney Generals from across the United States filed a joint-amicus brief calling on the courts to reverse the "unconstitutional" gag order against former President Donald J. Trump in the Jan. 6 conspiracy case against him. The states that signed onto the court filing include Alabama, Alaska… Missouri... In a press release, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey argues that the gag order imposed on Trump is a "blatant violation of the First Amendment" that prevents Trump's "ability to speak freely ahead of the approaching presidential election and denies Americans the right to hear free, fair and open debate from all presidential candidates." "Missouri is a champion for free speech. President Trump, like so many Americans, has been silenced on social media platforms for daring to be a political opponent of Joe Biden, and now they're attempting to silence his right to speak at all," said AG Bailey. "This blatant weaponization of the criminal justice system is inherently un-American and goes against the very soul of our great nation. I'm proud to stand with President Trump in this new front in the war for free speech."… The attorney generals call on the courts to reinstate President Trump's right to freedom of speech, writing that "Given the magnitude—in importance and effect—of such an overly broad and vague prior restraint on President Trump's speech, this Court should reverse" the gag order… The order limits what Trump can say publicly about the conspiracy case leveled against him by political opponent Joe Biden's Department of Justice. The case, being tried by special prosecutor Jack Smith, alleges that Trump committed conspiracy to defraud the United States, conspiracy to obstruct an official proceeding, obstruction of and attempt to obstruct an official proceeding, and conspiracy against rights. Trump has pleaded not guilty."

Missouri AG issues report on axed Soros-backed prosecutor who 'let criminals take over the streets'

https://www.lifesitenews.com/news/missouri-ag-issues-report-on-axed-soros-backed-prosecutor-who-let-criminals-take-over-the-streets/?utm_source=featured_news&utm_campaign=usa

-"The Republican attorney general of Missouri this week published a report concerning the recent ouster of a leftist St. Louis prosecutor, expressing hope that the document will help other states learn how to show "rogue, Soros-backed prosecutors" the door. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, who has made a name as a staunch opponent of transgender ideology and a defender of free speech against government censorship, filed the 62-page investigative document on Tuesday in a bid to "put into the public domain what went wrong here, how it happened, and what systems need to be put in place to prevent it from ever happening in the future." The so-called "Kim Gardner Report" details the steps taken by the attorney general to oust left-wing prosecutor Kim Gardner after her alleged mishandling of criminal cases… In comments to Fox News at the time, Bailey argued that nearly 12,000 criminal cases were dismissed under Gardner's watch, something he attributed to her failures as a prosecutor. "She bragged about coming to office with a new approach to criminal justice focused on racial equity," he told The Epoch Times. "She bragged about seeking to actively shrink the criminal justice system, and she did that by unlawfully refusing to do her job and let the criminals take over the streets."… Gardner became the subject of renewed scrutiny in February after a 21-year-old driver struck a 17-year-old volleyball player with his car, resulting in the loss of both of her legs. The situation sparked nationwide attention and outrage, particularly since the driver "was out on bond on a robbery charge despite nearly 100 bond violations including letting his GPS monitor die and breaking the terms of his house arrest," the AP reported. Gardner announced her resignation in May 2023 after Bailey filed a petition quo warrant calling for her removal following allegations of mishandling cases, the New York Post reported. Charges filed in the city more than doubled in the three months immediately after Gardner's resignation. "Kim Gardner hit the eject button and resigned as Circuit Attorney when it became clear that our lawsuit to remove her from office for her refusal to do her job was going to be successful," Bailey said in a press release issued by the attorney general's office. The attorney general told The Epoch Times he is exploring options to potentially bring civil or criminal charges against Gardner in relation to actions, including the alleged use of an unlicensed attorney, allegedly making a false public statement, and, according to state investigators, the pursuit of a nursing degree during work hours. He said he also hopes his report on Gardner serves as a model to help other states push out other progressive prosecutors "who, rather than protecting their victims, are creating more victims." "In a lot of major cities in the U.S., you have Soros-backed prosecutors who were like-minded with Kim Gardner," Bailey told The Epoch Times. "Any time you see that kind of dark money flowing into those races to buy those political offices, that creates enormous problems for the population."… The leftist billionaire's Open Society Foundation has provided massive funding for Democrats, including backing soft-on-crime progressive district attorneys and funneling millions of dollars into pro-abortion efforts, LifeSiteNews has reported."

St. Louis Board of Aldermen pass bill to ban open carry of guns

https://fox2now.com/news/missouri/st-louis-board-of-aldermen-pass-bill-to-ban-open-carry-of-guns/

-"Board Bill 107 now heads to the desk of Mayor Tishaura Jones after a third reading and board approval Friday. The bill is sponsored by 14th Ward Alderman Rasheen Aldridge.. As it stands, the legislation would prohibit the open carrying of firearms in the city of St. Louis except for law officers and those required to openly carry a gun as part of their official duty. The bill would not apply to those who are carrying a gun in a concealed manner and out of public view. According to the bill, anyone 18 or older who violates this new legislation could face a $500 fine and/or jail time of up to one month. Minors who violate the ordinance could face fines of $100 or be required to perform community service. This bill goes a step further than one that Mayor Jones signed this past summer. The newly-approved Board Bill 29 allows people to openly carry guns in the city if they have a concealed carry permit. Jones is also pushing for legislation that would prohibit military-grade weapons on city streets and prevent the transfer or sale of guns to minors, among other measures. Recent developments have come with some political pushback from Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey and Gov. Mike Parson. As for Board Bill 107, there would still be an obstacle to enforcing it, even if approved locally. It would either need approval through a Republican-heavy Missouri legislature or Missouri voters would need to pass a ballot initiative that allows local municipalities to control gun laws. The Missouri Secretary of State's Office lists three ballot initiatives (2024-114, 20224-115, 2024-117) that would authorize "the regulation by ordinance of the possession or carrying of firearms" to the City of St. Louis. One also calls for the same action in St. Louis County. These proposed ballot initiatives would need around 172,000 signatures to make way onto a 2024 ballot."

Missouri's voter ID law is back in court. Here's a look at what it does

https://www.foxnews.com/politics/missouris-voter-id-law-court-heres-look-what-does

-"The lawsuit was filed in January on behalf of 13 Christian, Jewish and Unitarian Universalist leaders who support abortion rights. It seeks a permanent injunction barring the state from enforcing its abortion law, and a declaration that provisions of the law violate the Missouri Constitution…The lawsuit states the Missouri Constitution "does not tolerate this establishment into law of one particular religious view at the expense of others' religious freedom and of the health and lives of millions of Missourians." Missouri Senate President Pro Tem Caleb Rowden, a Republican, has called the lawsuit "foolish" and said lawmakers "were acting on the belief that life is precious and should be treated as such," not a religious belief…The lawsuit, filed on behalf of the faith leaders by Americans United for Separation of Church & State and the National Women's Law Center, said sponsors and supporters of the Missouri measure "repeatedly emphasized their religious intent in enacting the legislation."

John Hancock, Republican consultant, on the right and Michael Kelley, Democratic consultant, on the left took on the following topics…Missouri Attorney General, Andrew Bailey, releases a scathing report on former St. Louis Circuit Attorney, Kim Gardner, and pushes the state to ban people who resign from office from running for that office again."

This Supreme Court Term Will Have Big Implications For The First Amendment

https://dailycaller.com/2023/11/18/this-supreme-court-term-will-have-big-implications-for-the-first-amendment/

-"One of the major themes emerging for the 2023-2024 term, alongside challenges to the administrative state, is the justices' interest in clarifying First Amendment law as it applies to social media and questions of government action. The high court's docket now includes multiple First Amendment cases, including one landmark case brought by the attorneys general of Missouri and Louisiana that revealed wide ranging government censorship efforts in which officials pressured social media companies to restrict speech on topics ranging from COVID-19 to elections. "This term is shaping up to be the most consequential one for the First Amendment in decades," Aaron Terr, Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression (FIRE) director of Public Advocacy, told the Daily Caller News Foundation…These cases include Murthy v. Missouri, challenging the federal government's communication with social media companies to censor speech, and NRA v. Vullo, a lawsuit brought by the National Rifle Association (NRA) against a New York official who pressured banks not to do business with them. Terr said there are "clear parallels" between the two cases…Murthy v. Missouri — formerly known as Missouri v. Biden — attracted heightened attention after a federal district court judge issued an injunction in July barring the Biden administration from coordinating with social media companies to censor speech. Judge Terry A. Doughty, a Trump appointee, found that the plaintiffs had "produced evidence of a massive effort by Defendants, from the White House to federal agencies, to suppress speech based on its content." The Supreme Court chose to pause the injunction while it hears the Biden administration's appeal, a decision Justice Samuel Alito worried would empower state actors to continue censoring speech…The NRA case deals with similar issues, though not on social media. The Second Circuit found in 2022 that the NRA failed to prove New York's Department of Financial Services Maria Vullo "crossed the line between attempts to convince and attempts to coerce." The organization argues this rationale gives government officials "free rein to financially blacklist their political opponents—from gun-rights groups, to abortion-rights groups, to environmentalist groups, and beyond." Two challenges against laws in Texas and Florida intended to crack down on censorship brought by NetChoice, a trade association whose members include tech companies like Google and Meta, have also made their way before the justices. The Fifth Circuit backed Texas' law prohibiting viewpoint censorship in September 2022, writing that corporations do not "have a freewheeling First Amendment right to censor what people say." But in May 2022 the Eleventh Circuit found Florida's law, which more narrowly restricts platforms from suspending political candidates and "journalistic enterprises," was likely unconstitutional... The Supreme Court could also still agree to hear a First Amendment case challenging bias response teams on university campuses, along with another case involving a county's "buffer zone" law around abortion clinics aimed at restricting pro-life sidewalk counseling."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Ethanol Industry Looking for Permanent Fix for Year-Round E15

https://brownfieldagnews.com/news/ethanol-industry-looking-for-permanent-fix-for-year-round-e15/

-"American Coalition for Ethanol CEO Brian Jennings tells Brownfield Congress continues to work on legislation to remove outdated EPA regulations that prohibit the sale of E15 during the summer. "The trick would be can we find a way to attach it to a must-pass vehicle between now and the end of the year, knowing there are very few legislative days (and) know there are very few legislative vehicles moving." Growth Energy CEO Emily Skor says seven Midwestern governors have also asked the EPA to allow their states to opt out of the program that limits E15 sales. "And they're simply waiting for EPA to say 'yes, that's fine.' And they say 'yes that's fine' with a rulemaking, but there is an official process that has to come to completion so at least those seven states can offer E15." She says those states, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, make up about 11 percent of the U.S. fuel market. Brownfield interviewed Skor and Jennings during the 2023 National Association of Farm Broadcasting Convention in Kansas City, Missouri this week (listen in link).

Missouri pension board rejects push by Vivek Malek for China divestment

-"The board overseeing Missouri's state employee pension plan voted down a proposal by state Treasurer Vivek Malek to sell off any investments in Chinese stocks and other securities. On a voice vote last week, the 11-member board of the Missouri State Employees Retirement System rejected Malek's call to punish the Asian economic powerhouse for COVID-19, spy balloons and the fentanyl crisis by pulling its pension investments in the Asian economic powerhouse. China has become a bad investment in recent years as its economy suffers from deflation, low population growth and an overbuilt housing market, Malek said in a Friday interview with The Independent. He also said China's threatening posture towards Taiwan, and friendship with Russia, make investments there a bad choice. "Given the economic decisions, and the economic projections, it is very clear that we should not be investing in China," Malek said…MOSERS provides pensions to most of the state government workforce. It is supported by contributions from the state treasury, employee payroll deductions and investment income. In recent years, returns on the system's portfolio, valued at $8.8 billion in June 2022, have not kept pace with growing liabilities. In 2001, Missouri contributed 12.3% of the state's covered payroll to MOSERS. The state contribution rate for fiscal 2022 was 23.51% and the trustees have asked that it be set at 28.75% for the coming fiscal year. Investments in China represent about $200 million of MOSERS's investment portfolio, Malek said…Malek has a seat on the 11-member MOSERS board because of his office, as does Commissioner of Administration Ken Zellers. The others are legislators, members of the pension system elected by other members, and appointees of the governor. Two legislators reached for comment on Thursday's vote were split. Senate Minority Leader John Rizzo, anIndependence Democrat, voted against divestment, while Rep. Don Mayhew, a Crocker Republican, voted for it. The MOSERS board should wait for guidance from the General Assembly on investments in China, Rizzo said…Mayhew said he supported Malek's proposal and thinks it will be revisited at a future meeting."

Columbia police expects an increase in vehicle break-ins this year

-"Attempted car break-ins and theft are on the rise throughout Columbia and the Columbia Police Department urges people to stay vigilant. "Over the last couple of years, attempted vehicle break-ins and vehicle break-ins have become one of the highest reported crimes in Columbia," police department spokesperson Christian Tabak said. "There's been a literal boom." According to Columbia police, officers investigated 503 incidents in 2020, 754 in 2021, and 916 in 2022. Tabak says the department expects incidents to exceed numbers reported in 2022. Tabak says there's no particular area where it all the break-ins are concentrated. He said this is a prevalent issue in not just Columbia, but also in Boone County, the state and nationally…Tabak said he highly encourages people to lock their doors, roll their windows up and for the community to work with each other and the police department."

'Guns should go silent' — Kansas City Congressman Emanuel Cleaver joins calls for cease-fire

Franklin County GOP to begin vetting candidates

-"The Franklin County Republican Central Committee (FCRCC) announced this week that it will begin vetting all GOP applicants for county elected positions to ensure that the "people who represent us truly believe in Republican values." According to a press release, "unless a candidate is vetted, checks to cover the filing fee will not be submitted to the County Clerk's office by the Central Committee nor will they be accepted by the county clerk without the approval of the Central Committee." The committee said the vetting process will include a multiple-choice test taken on a computer, as well as background and social media check. "As a final step those who do not pass the process will have the benefit of a full Central Committee vote for or against their candidacy" the FCRCC said in a statement. The FCRCC said the goal of the vetting process is to be able to identify and prevent candidates from running for office who are "elected as Republicans and govern as Democrats." But whether the committee's vetting process can prevent any candidate from appearing on a ballot is unclear. An attorney for the Missouri Republican Party issued an opinion Nov. 8, after other statewide GOP central committees announced they would begin similar vetting procedures saying he believed courts would ultimately find it unconstitutional…Franklin County Clerk Tim Baker said he has requested an opinion from the Missouri Secretary of State as to whether the FCRCC could actually prevent someone from appearing on a ballot through a vetting process. The Missourian was unable to reach Amy DeClue, FCRCC chair, prior to the publication of this article, but Carolyn Roettger, Lyon Township committeewoman, said there are questions the public may want to know about the legalities of the new policy and the risk of potential lawsuits. "The committee has studied the legal issues and is confident about these subjects," she said in an email. She added that vetting is used or being adopted in other Missouri counties. Roettger's statement is contrary to a recent warning issued by the Missouri Republican Party which stated that any county committee considering a vetting test would likely be sued and the state party would not reimburse them for their legal bills. The proposed vetting process has sparked debate among local Republicans over whether it is legal or appropriate. Some of the back and forth has taken place on social media…In response to the committee's post, Rep. Brad Banderman, R-St. Clair, noted that the applicable state statute "has a bit more detail than what's in this post and has direct bearing on some of what you have stated." Candidates "can pay to the treasurer of either the State or County political committee, additionally, it can also be submitted to the official accepting their declaration of candidacy," Banderman wrote."

St. Louis, Kansas City working to land state money for international flights

-"St. Louis officials say they will work "aggressively" to secure state funds for new international flights from St. Louis Lambert International Airport… State legislators and Gov. Mike Parson this year set aside $5 million in federal COVID-19 relief funds to help sweeten the deal for airlines considering direct international flights from Missouri. The $5 million now available from the Missouri Department of Economic Development is for a minimum revenue guarantee to airlines for new international flights. With limited funds, and both cities expected to apply, neither may ultimately land enough state support to cover the entire cost of luring a route — meaning local matching funds could also play a role in drawing any new flights…Sen. Greg Razer, a Kansas City Democrat and member of the Senate Transportation Committee, said it would be "fantastic" to have international service in place for the 2026 games…Only nonprofits are eligible to apply for the funds, so Greater St. Louis Inc. and the Kansas City Area Development Council were expected to submit proposals…State guidance says a request for proposal should be submitted to the Department of Economic Development once prospective applicants engage an airline and are ready to enter negotiations. Information sought in the state's request for proposals includes the name of the airline and the proposed route and award amount, a description of the need and likely demand for the potential flight, potential effects on the community and state, as well as information to "explain sustainability after the Program has ended." The Department of Economic Development will then issue a proposal and enter negotiations with the applicant. After the applicant accepts the state's proposal, both parties will sign a grant agreement."

-"Currently, the U.S. Drought Monitor indicates that all or portions of at least 85 Missouri counties are experiencing moderate, severe, or extreme drought conditions. The Executive Order declares a Drought Alert in these Missouri counties and any additional county that begins experiencing drought conditions…In response to Governor Parson's initial Executive Order declaring a drought alert on May 31, 2023, the Missouri Department of Natural Resources activated the Drought Assessment Committee, a workgroup set up to assess drought levels and work with impact teams on response and recovery recommendations. The Executive Order was set to expire on December 1, 2023. Extending the order will allow the Drought Assessment Committee and associated impact teams to continue supporting affected communities throughout the winter and continue to expand the state's capabilities to respond to and lessen the impacts of future droughts. During drought, local condition reports are crucial to understanding impacts to provide timely and appropriate assistance. Citizens can submit information about local drought conditions at Condition Monitoring Observer Reports (CMOR).

Biden admin poised to green-light tribal gambling expansion despite opposition from Native Americans, Dems
https://www.foxnews.com/politics/biden-admin-poised-green-light-tribal-gambling-expansion-despite-opposition-native-americans-dems

-"The Department of the Interior's Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) is expected to issue a final environmental impact statement (EIS) potentially green-lighting the Oregon-based Coquille Indian Tribe's proposal to develop and operate a casino outside its territory in Medford, Oregon, as soon as this week, people familiar with the federal review process told Fox News Digital. The BIA issued its draft EIS in November 2022 for the proposal and the public comment period for that action lasted until late February. A wide range of voices, including several regional tribes, tribes nationwide and bipartisan lawmakers, blasted the draft EIS which recommended the federal government approve Coquille's move to build an off-reservation casino, the so-called Cedars at Bears Creek…In a similar letter to Newland, the California Nations Indian Gaming Association, which represents dozens more federally-recognized tribal governments on issues related to gaming, similarly argued that finalizing the draft EIS would threaten its members' "sovereign rights" as tribes. The issue over whether to approve the Coquille's casino has been hotly-contested since the tribe first proposed the plan about a decade ago. The plan was proposed under an Obama administration policy that eased gaming and trust-land acquisition restrictions, an action that critics have worried the Biden administration is doubling down on. But opponents of the Cedars at Bear Creek proposal — including the California Nations Indian Gaming Association, Tribal Alliance of Sovereign Indian Nations, other tribes and lawmakers — have particularly argued that developing the project would infringe upon other nearby tribes' rights and have the impact of lowering their gaming revenue…"

Supreme Court to Hear Challenge to Development Impact Fees

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-to-hear-challenge-to-development-impact-fees-5532459?ea_src=frontpage&ea_med=lead-special-judiciary-medium-0

-"The Supreme Court will soon hear a California case challenging the power of governments to use the permitting process to force property owners to pay large development fees. The court announced last week that it will hear oral argument in the case, Sheetz v. County of El Dorado (court file 22-1074), on Jan. 9. The homeowner is suing El Dorado County, California, which is near the state's border with Nevada, claiming the county violated his rights under the Fifth Amendment's takings clause and the Fourteenth Amendment…In 2016, Mr. Sheetz purchased a vacant lot with the intention of building a small, manufactured home in which he and his wife would live in retirement and raise their grandson. But when he sought a building permit from the county, he was told he would have to pay a so-called traffic impact fee of $23,420. The county told Mr. Sheetz that he was required to pay the fee because of local legislation that aimed to shift the cost of addressing existing and future road deficiencies onto new development. This means, his lawyers argue, that the fee was imposed without any evidence tying the construction project to any specific public costs or impacts. The fee financing the unrelated road improvements bore neither an "essential nexus" or "rough proportionality" to whatever local impact his construction project would result in, Mr. Sheetz argued in his petition (pdf). He said the fee was an unconstitutional "exaction" according to the Supreme Court precedents of Nollan v. California Coastal Commission (1987) and Dolan v. City of Tigard (1994). An exaction is a condition for development imposed on a developer to offset the costs of the development to a local government. An exaction is similar to an impact fee, which is a direct payment made to a municipality in lieu of conditions being imposed on the development. Mr. Sheetz paid the fee under protest and sued, arguing the fee was an unconstitutional permit condition under the Supreme Court's 2013 ruling in Koontz v. St. Johns River Water Management District, a case in which PLF acted…But a state court ruled against him, finding the required fee was authorized by legislation. The California Court of Appeal and the California Supreme Court also ruled against him. Mr. Sheetz filed his opening brief (pdf) in the case last week, arguing that legislatures cannot use the permit process to coerce owners into paying development fees."

-"A panel of three judges in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit will hear arguments on Nov. 20 regarding the gag order on former President Donald Trump, which has prohibited him from speaking about his prosecutors and others as he campaigns for reelection. The order has since been temporarily lifted while the defense appeals it. President Trump's team is expected to argue that the order is overly broad, highly speculative, and a violation of the candidate's First Amendment rights. Attorneys from special counsel Jack Smith's office are expected to counter that the order is narrowly tailored, and thus admissible, because it allows the former president to freely criticize his chief political rival, President Joe Biden, and his administration."

US Supreme Court Asked to Rule on Illinois Semi-Automatic Weapons Ban
Epoch Times l Jack Phillips
https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/u-s-supreme-court-asked-to-rule-on-illinois-ban-on-semiautomatic-weapons-5532431

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

-"State Rep. Dan Caulkins, a Republican, told local media outlets that he is petitioning the high court because he believes the Illinois Supreme Court's decision to uphold the ban is tainted. He argued that Justices Elizabeth Rochford and Mary Kay O'Brien should have recused themselves from the case earlier this year, saying that both judges received donations from the Gun Violence Prevention PAC, which has called for "banning assault weapons and large-capacity magazines." Justice Rochford and Justice O'Brien received "disproportionate campaign contributions, and both made a commitment to support the legislative policy of banning assault weapons," Mr. Caulkins told ABC20-TV, adding that Illinois Gov. J.B. Pritzker and other Democrats have also given donations to those justices…His filing with the top U.S. court, he said, is about the "thousands of plaintiffs who joined [the] lawsuit and were denied a fair proceeding at the Illinois State Supreme Court," adding that the court "does not have an objective standard for recusals."… The petition argues, in part, that the Illinois Supreme Court's 4–3 August ruling upholding the law banning a range of semi-automatic weapons and magazines violated due process under the Constitution's 14th Amendment. It also asks for a review of the case based on the Second Amendment, the 14th Amendment's equal protection clause, and the state Constitution. "There exists no rational basis to criminalize one person indistinguishable in any manner based on conduct from another immunized from the criminal liability or to speculate that the prohibited present a greater risk for mass shootings than the grandfathered based on the date an assault weapon was acquired," the lawmaker's petition to the Supreme Court reads…The "time of acquisition" of a firearm also "bears no connection to safety or danger," according to the petition. "The resulting arbitrary classification on the face of the Assault Weapons Partial Ban fails all levels of scrutiny test and should be invalidated on this additional basis." The law prohibits the possession, manufacture, and sale of those weapons and magazines, banning a large number of different rifles and handguns. Those who owned such guns and accessories when the law went into effect were required to register them with the Illinois State Police…While it's unclear whether the U.S. Supreme Court will take up the case, the high court has recently shown interest in taking up gun-related cases. In 2022, the top court issued a 6–3 ruling against a New York state law establishing that a person has the right to carry a pistol in public under the Constitution's Second Amendment. The court will rule on whether people who are under domestic violence protection orders should lose access to their firearms. It also will issue a ruling on whether a former superintendent of the New York State Department of Financial Services violated the National Rifle Association's (NRA) rights after her office issued guidance memos to banks and insurance companies encouraging them to monitor risks associated with NRA-endorsed insurance products after a shooting in Parkland, Florida, several years ago."

Supreme Court Schedules Oral Argument in Challenge to Bureaucrats' Power

Epoch Times I Matthew Vandum

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-schedules-oral-argument-in-challenge-to-bureaucrats-power-5531659

-"The Supreme Court has scheduled several high-profile cases for oral argument in January 2024, including an important challenge to the power of the so-called administrative state…The court's ultimate ruling could alter the current balance of power among Congress, executive agencies, and the nation's judiciary by curbing the legal underpinnings of the modern administrative state. The authority of federal agencies has been increasingly questioned in recent years as the conservative majority on the Supreme Court has grown. Another case to be heard in January concerns whether a Muslim man from Oregon can continue suing the FBI after the agency removed his name from the "no-fly list" but wouldn't promise to keep it off. Yet another involves a Texas farmer who is suing his state's transportation department for damaging his family's farm. Ten cases in all were scheduled on Nov. 17 for hearing dates running from Jan. 8 to Jan. 17…The two most-watched cases, Relentless Inc. v. Department of Commerce (court file 22-1219) and Loper Bright Enterprises Inc. v. Raimondo (court file 22-451), will be heard back-to-back on Jan. 17…The two cases date to 2020, when the U.S. Department of Commerce's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and its National Marine Fisheries Service implemented a final rule to compel fishing companies such as those involved in the case to pay for human monitors aboard their vessels…They argue that the federal Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act, which regulates fisheries, doesn't support such a rule and that Congress never authorized the government to create such a program. In Relentless and Loper Bright, the court may narrow the application of the so-called Chevron deference doctrine that the Supreme Court articulated in the 1984 landmark ruling Chevron v. Natural Resources Defense Council…Attorney Curt Levey, president of the Committee for Justice, a conservative legal advocacy nonprofit, told The Epoch Times in a recent interview that the Supreme Court accepted the Loper Bright and Relentless cases for a reason. The court will probably overturn Chevron deference, he said. In the two cases, the court specifically granted certiorari on the question of whether Chevron should be overruled, Mr. Levey said. He noted that the question the court agreed to decide states: "Whether the Court should overrule Chevron or at least clarify that statutory silence concerning controversial powers expressly but narrowly granted elsewhere in the statute does not constitute an ambiguity requiring deference to the agency." The court isn't "necessarily even going to rule on whether the fishermen have to pay for observers on their boats," and may not even address whether the regulation is constitutional, he said. "It's going to do something significant," he said…"

for control of the House and Senate. Democratic Michigan Rep. Dan Kildee announced on Thursday that he will not seek reelection for his current seat in 2024, making him the ninth member of Congress to make such an announcement in November alone, according to Ballotpedia. In total, 34 members of both the House and Senate have said they will not seek reelection for their current seats next year, decisions that could prove crucial in the fight for control of the narrowly divided House and Senate. In the Republican-controlled House, 27 members are not seeking reelection for their current seats, according to Ballotpedia. In the Senate, five Democratic and two Republican members will not seek reelection…Nov. 9 was an even bigger day for Capitol Hill reporters, as Democratic West Virginia Sen. Joe Manchin, having served in Congress for over a decade, announced that he will not run for reelection in 2024. Manchin's seat is now characterized by Cook Political Report as a "Solid R," and Republican West Virginia Gov. Jim Justice is the frontrunner candidate to fill the vacancy…All 435 seats in the House are open to contest in 2024, as are 34 seats in the Senate, including one in a special election. Republicans currently hold a five-seat majority in the House, while Democrats have 51 Senate seats, including independents who caucus with the Democrats, to the Republicans' 49."

Subject: TWO MEDIA QUESTIONS -- Gray TV

Good morning, Madeline!

Two quick things:

- Can you provide me with AG Bailey's assessment of Elon Musk's endorsement of an antisemitic post on X? How does/will this factor into his decision to get involved in the dispute?
- With the Missouri Supreme Court's decision not to consider the appeals of the ballot language or fiscal note issues, what is Bailey's prediction about the law taking effect if voters approve this version of the initiative? Does he plan to challenge the amendment if it passes (perhaps in the same way that some Ohio lawmakers are doing?)

Thanks so much!

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
FORT WORTH DIVISION

X CORP., a Nevada corporation,

Plaintiff,

v.

MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA, a Washington, D.C. non-profit corporation, and ERIC HANANOKI, Defendants.

Case No. 4:23-cv-1175

COMPLAINT

1. Defendant Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") is a self-proclaimed media watchdog that decided it would not let the truth get in the way of a story it wanted to publish about X Corp. Looking to portray X's social networking platform as being dominated by "white nationalist and anti-Semitic conspiracy theories," Media Matters knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform. Media Matters designed both these images and its resulting media strategy to drive advertisers from the platform and destroy X Corp.

2. Plaintiff X Corp. operates the X social media platform with over 500 million active monthly users. X facilitates free expression and open discourse by enabling its users to create and share their own content and to message and comment on other users' posts. These posts appear sequentially to users in "feeds," which occasionally include paid advertisements—the overwhelming source of X Corp.'s revenue.

3. Users shape their own experiences on X. Users curate the content on their own feeds by choosing to "follow" other users, thereby determining which posts are presented to them. Most users are served a variety of content based on an algorithm that takes account of who that user follows and what that user engages with. But X also provides its users the option to forgo algorithmically suggested posts altogether, thereby enabling a user to view only the content that user chooses to view.

4. As the most prominent online platform dedicated to hosting free speech, X and its predecessor Twitter have long been the target of Media Matters. In just the last year, Media Matters has published a series of articles threatening X's relationships with massive multinational advertisers and global publishers, including Amazon, eBay, Major League Baseball, New York Times Co., Samsung, Sports Illustrated, The Wall Street Journal, USA Today, Office Depot, Nokia, Dish, Bayer, Tyson Foods, Honeywell, Discovery, FanDuel, Thermo Fisher, National Women's Soccer League, the Pittsburgh Steelers, the Atlanta Falcons, Manchester City, DraftKings, FanDuel, T-Mobile, and The Athletic.[1]

5. This November alone Media Matters released over twenty articles (and counting) disparaging both X Corp. and Elon Musk—a blatant smear campaign.

6. For the last several years, Media Matters has falsely portrayed Twitter, now X, as a risky, unsafe platform for advertisers. Contrary to these efforts, 99% of X's measured ad placement in 2023 has appeared adjacent to content scoring above the Global Alliance for Responsible Media's brand safety floor.

7. Undeterred by the truth, Media Matters has opted for new tactics in its campaign to drive advertisers from X. Media Matters has manipulated the algorithms governing the user experience on X to bypass safeguards and create images of X's largest advertisers' paid posts adjacent to racist, incendiary content, leaving the false impression that these pairings are anything but what they actually are: manufactured, inorganic, and extraordinarily rare.

8. Media Matters executed this plot in multiple steps, as X's internal investigations have revealed. First, Media Matters accessed accounts that had been active for at least 30 days, bypassing X's ad filter for new users. Media Matters then exclusively followed a small subset of users consisting entirely of accounts in one of two categories: those known to produce extreme, fringe content, and accounts owned by X's big-name advertisers. The end result was a feed precision-designed by Media Matters for a single purpose: to produce side-by-side ad/content placements that it could screenshot in an effort to alienate advertisers.

9. But this activity still was not enough to create the pairings of advertisements and content that Media Matters aimed to produce.

10. Media Matters therefore resorted to endlessly scrolling and refreshing its unrepresentative, hand-selected feed, generating between 13 and 15 times more advertisements per hour than viewed by the average X user repeating this inauthentic activity until it finally received pages containing the result it wanted: controversial content next to X's largest advertisers' paid posts.

11. Media Matters omitted mentioning any of this in a report published on November 16, 2023 that displayed instances Media Matters "found" on X of advertisers' paid posts featured next to Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist content. Nor did Media Matters otherwise provide any context regarding the forced, inauthentic nature and extraordinary rarity of these pairings.

12. However, relying on the specious narrative propagated by Media Matters, the advertisers targeted took these pairings to be anything but rare and inorganic, with all but one of the companies featured in the Media Matters piece withdrawing all ads from X, including Apple, Comcast, NBCUniversal, and IBM—some of X's largest advertisers. Indeed, in pulling all advertising from X in response to this intentionally deceptive report, IBM called the pairings an "entirely unacceptable situation."[2] Only Oracle did not withdraw its ads.

13. The truth bore no resemblance to Media Matters' narrative. In fact, IBM's, Comcast's, and Oracle's paid posts appeared alongside the fringe content cited by Media Matters for only one viewer (out of more than 500 million) on all of X: Media Matters. Not a single authentic user of the X platform saw IBM's, Comcast's, or Oracle's ads next to that content, which Media Matters achieved only through its manipulation of X's algorithms as described above. And in Apple's case, only two out of more than 500 million active users saw its ad appear alongside the fringe content cited in the article—at least one of which was Media Matters.

14. Media Matters could have produced a fair, accurate account of users' interactions with advertisements on X via basic reporting: following real users, documenting the actual, organic production of content and advertisement pairings. Had it done so, however, it would not have produced the outcome Media Matters so desperately desired, which was to tarnish X's reputation by associating it with racist content. So instead, Media Matters chose to maliciously misrepresent the X experience with the intention of harming X and its business.

PARTIES

15. Plaintiff X Corp. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, with its principal place of business in San Francisco, California. Plaintiff conducts significant business in Texas, including maintaining significant offices in Texas. It operates the social media platform "X" (formerly "Twitter"), an internet-based service that enables users to create and share their own content, interact with other users, and curate feeds of content.

16. Defendant Media Matters is a web-based publisher incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia with its principal place of business at 800 Maine Avenue SW, Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20024. The organization's purpose is "to systematically monitor" conservative media and publish reports based on this purported reporting.

17. Defendant Eric Hananoki is a writer for Defendant Media Matters and is domiciled in Maryland.

JURISDICTION & VENUE

18. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332 because there exists complete diversity of citizenship between Plaintiff and Defendants and the amount in controversy exceeds $75,000.00.

19. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Media Matters because Media Matters' campaign against X Corp. was purposefully directed at, among others, relationships with advertisers who are located in, have a significant presence in, or transact substantial business in Texas. Likewise, this Court has personal jurisdiction over Media Matters because its attempts to harm X Corp.'s reputation potentially threatened X Corp.'s relationships with its hundreds of millions of users, including millions of Texas users. This Court has personal jurisdiction over Hananoki for substantially the same reasons.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MO-AG-24-0028-A-000808

20. Venue is proper pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391 because a substantial part of the events giving rise to the claims occurred herein, because a substantial part of the property that is subject of the action—that is, X's business and advertising—is situated in the district, and because all Defendants are subject to personal jurisdiction in this District.

GENERAL ALLEGATIONS

I. X is a Safe Platform for Users and Advertisers, Despite Media Matters' Deceptions.

21. X is a social media platform that remains in operation due to its loyal users and advertisers. X Corp. invests heavily in technologies that work in tandem to facilitate safe and effective interactions between users and advertisers—technologies that, under normal, organic conditions operate seamlessly.

22. As a first layer of protection for advertisers, X applies default protections to all posts. These protections are designed to prevent advertisements from being placed next to content that violates community guidelines. When users operate within X's community guidelines, these default mechanisms are effective and have a long history of successfully protecting X's advertisers from undesirable interactions with fringe content.

23. As a second layer of protection, X provides advertisers with opt-in options. These options allow advertisers to further address any specific concerns they may have about their advertisements being seen next to specific content. Here, advertisers can specify which key words and user handles they do not want their posts to appear by.

24. These protections and others create a safe environment for advertisers that allow them to reach their target audiences while protecting their brands, as Media Matters well knows.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

II. Media Matters Systematically Manipulated the X User Experience to Defame X.

25. On November 16, 2023, Media Matters published a false, defamatory, and misleading article with the headline, "X has been placing ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle, and Xfinity[3] next to pro-Nazi content," claiming that X was responsible for anti-Semitic content being paired with X's advertisers' paid posts.[4] This statement was not true, and Media Matters knew it. As explained below and displayed in an X internal review, this title is false in that Media Matters itself—not X—was responsible for placement of the content it identified through its willful exploitation of X's user features—a result it specifically intended to bring about. X in fact has many default safeguards that prevent the platform from displaying content in the manner artificially achieved by Defendant.

26. Further, in the body of the piece, Media Matters falsely claims that it "recently found ads for Apple, Bravo, Oracle, Xfinity, and IBM next to posts that tout Hitler and his Nazi Party on X."[5] Media Matters did not find pairings that X passively allowed on the platform. Media Matters created these pairings in secrecy, to manufacture the harmful perception that X is at best an incompetent content moderator (a harmful accusation for any social media platform), or even worse that X was somehow indifferent or even encouraging to Nazi and racist ideology.

27. On X, users can control the content on their feeds. When users show interest in particular topics, ads will generate that relate to those topics. Media Matters exploited these features by creating a secret X account precision-designed to evade normal safeguards, manipulating every aspect of the system through which posts and advertisements appear, ultimately creating the side-by-side images of objectionable content and advertisements.

28. X's internal user data tells the story of just how far Media Matters went to manufacture an inorganic user experience strictly aimed at creating an interaction between controversial content and big-name advertisers that was seen only by the Media Matters account and then published broadly.

29. First, Media Matters set out on their attempt to evade X's content filters for new users by specifically using an account that had been in existence for more than thirty days.

30. Next, Media Matters set its account to follow only 30 users (far less than the average number of accounts followed by a typical active user, 219), severely limiting the amount and type of content featured on its feed. All of these users were either already known for posting controversial content or were accounts for X's advertisers. That is, 100% of the accounts Media Matters followed were either fringe accounts or were accounts for national large brands. In all, this functioned as an attempt to flood the Media Matters account with content only from national brands and fringe figures, tricking the algorithm into thinking Media Matters wanted to view both hateful content and content from large advertisers.

31. Even this did not produce Media Matters' intended result. An internal review by X revealed that Media Matters' account started to alter its scrolling and refreshing activities in an attempt to manipulate inorganic combinations of advertisements and content. Media Matters' excessive scrolling and refreshing generated between 13 and 15 times more advertisements per hour than would be seen by a typical user, essentially seeking to force a situation in which a brand ad post appeared adjacent to fringe content.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

32. Eventually, through intentionally evading X's multiple safeguards by curating the content on its feed and then repeatedly attempting to create pairings of advertisements for major brands with controversial content, Media Matters finally achieved its goal. Accordingly, it took screenshots of posts from IBM, Apple, Bravo, Xfinity, and Oracle that Media Matters engineered to appear adjacent to inflammatory, fringe content.

III. To Defame X, Media Matters Hid Its Manipulation from Readers and Advertisers.

33. Media Matters generated a specific, intended result that was not only inorganic, but exceedingly (and demonstrably) rare, all while taking specific steps to obscure this in its November 16, 2023 article. The overall effect on advertisers and users was to create the false, misleading perception that these types of pairings were common, widespread, and alarming. Media Matters hid its manipulations through omissions, deceptive image selections, misrepresentations, and secrecy settings.

34. Media Matters omitted in its entirety its process of manufacturing these ad pairings. It did not include in its article that it created a user that only followed 30 accounts that either belonged to fringe figures or major national brands. Neither readers nor advertisers had any way of knowing that the entire feed was orchestrated to generate the remarkably rare combinations. Media Matters also omitted mentioning in its entirety its excessive scrolling and refreshing, allowing users to believe (falsely) that the "report" was produced under circumstances that were organic and unmanipulated.

35. Media Matters also omitted and made no attempt to clarify the rarity of these pairings. The representation put forth by Media Matters constituted 0.0000009090909 percent of impressions served on the day in question. Most or all of these pairings were not seen by literally anyone besides Media Matters' own manipulated account, and no authentic user of the platform has been confirmed to have seen any of these pairings.

36. Media Matters' image choice in its smear also functioned to hide the true nature of its report. All images selected contained only the ad and the controversial content, with all other posts absent from view. That is, had readers been able to see the posts above and below the pairings, they would have easily gleaned the highly-specific nature of the small number of accounts Media Matters chose to follow. Media Matters chose to show every pairing in its article using this deceptive technique—hiding its deceit through even more deceit.

37. Tellingly, Media Matters used X's privacy features in order to hide its methodology from its readers. That is, Media Matters set this account to "private," blocking anyone from seeing which accounts Media Matters actually followed, thus disallowing anyone from understanding how its feed was manipulated. Indeed, Media Matters at no point includes images with any information about the account that was exposed to these images; the cropped nature of Media Matters' deceptive screenshots leaves its profile picture out of frame.

38. Accordingly, Media Matters created the impression that these pairings were organic, accurate, and representative of the typical X user's experience, which actually and demonstrably misled users and advertisers, causing harm to X Corp.

V. Media Matters Caused Advertisers to Believe the Pairings Were Organic.

39. After the publication of Media Matters' false smear on November 16, 2023, advertisers pulled their ads from the site, which, as Media Matters admits, only happened after it reported that X was placing ads alongside white nationalist and pro-Nazi content. Included in these companies, which all referenced antisemitic content in their withdrawal from X, are:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Comcast. After Media Matters' November article featured a contrived, misleading, and inflammatory image showing an ad for Xfinity next to a pro-Nazi post, its parent company Comcast decided to pull all ads for Comcast entities from X.

NBCUniversal. As the parent company of Bravo and a subsidiary of Comcast, NBCUniversal pulled all advertising from X after publication of the article.

Apple. The day after publication of the article, which also featured an Apple ad contrived to be placed next to fringe content, Apple—one of X's largest clients—pulled all of its ads from the platform.

IBM. As previously discussed, IBM pulled all ads immediately after the publication of the article.

40. Media Matters' manipulation was so severe that companies not even featured in the article also pulled ads from X. These companies include Lionsgate, Warner Bros. Discovery, Paramount, and Sony.

VII. Media Matters Intended to Harm X's Revenue Stream.

41. Media Matters represents itself as "a progressive research and information center dedicated to comprehensively monitoring, analyzing, and correcting conservative misinformation in the U.S. media."[6] Since its launch in 2004, it has engaged in an all-out campaign of "guerilla warfare and sabotage" on conservative news sources.[7] In this context, X Corp. and Elon Musk are a critical Media Matters target because X is the most prominent online platform that permits users to share all viewpoints, whether liberal or conservative, and Mr. Musk is the most prominent voice on the platform and a passionate supporter of free speech. In taking down two forces it already found objectionable, Media Matters had the chance to starve X of ad revenue and thereby silence all of the voices on X. Nothing in Media Matters' campaign was coincidental or accidental. And, its guerilla attack on X is working, driving away X's advertisers and revenue precisely as intended.

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION

Interference With Contract

42. X Corp. re-alleges and incorporates by reference the above allegations.

43. At all relevant times, Defendants were aware that Plaintiff contracted with various third parties, including but not limited to Apple, NBCUniversal, Comcast, Bravo, Apple, and IBM, to sell ads on the X platform, as clearly demonstrated by the many articles written by Defendants on the topic.

44. Defendant Media Matters intentionally interfered with contracts between X Corp. and its advertisers, including but not limited to Apple, NBCUniversal, Comcast, Bravo, Apple, and IBM—all clients with existing advertisement agreements that were casualties of Defendant's misrepresentations and ceased advertising on the X platform as a direct result.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION

Business Disparagement

45. X Corp. re-alleges and incorporates by reference the above allegations.

46. Defendant Media Matters made statements that disparaged the quality of X Corp.'s product, X.

47. Defendant Media Matters made these statements as statements of fact, not opinion. Defendant Media Matters represented that X "has been placing" advertisements next to anti-Semitic and racist materials. It represented that it "found" these materials next to advertisements.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

48. As extensively explained above, these statements made by Defendant Media Matters were false.

49. Defendant Media Matters intentionally made these statements with clear malice, well aware of their falsity.

50. X Corp. suffered monetary loss as a result of these statements: companies mentioned in Defendant's false and misleading article pulled their advertising from X indefinitely.

THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION

Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

51. X Corp. re-alleges and incorporates by reference the above allegations.

52. X Corp. was engaged in economic relationships that would have resulted in an economic benefit to X Corp. X Corp. had relationships with advertisers that pulled their spending in light of Defendant Media Matters' article and had every reason to suspect that these relationships would continue.

53. At all relevant times, Defendant Media Matters knew of these relationships, as they were described in its "reporting."

54. Defendant Media Matters engaged in wrongful conduct that disrupted X Corp.'s economic relationships. Through extensive deception and misrepresentation, Defendant Media Matters caused advertisers to lose faith in X Corp.'s abilities to monitor and curate content, thereby leading them to break off these lucrative relationships and any future continued relationships.

55. Defendant Media Matters acted with the intent to disrupt these relationships. Media Matters' actions continued its expressly declared "guerilla war" on media it dislikes and its systematic, harassing attacks on X Corp. and Elon Musk.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

56. X Corp. was harmed as a result of Defendant Media Matters' actions: it lost advertisers as a result of Defendant's interference.

57. Defendant Media Matters' actions were undoubtedly a substantial factor in causing this harm, with Defendant's website even noting that X Corp.'s relationships fell apart after Media Matters released its maliciously false piece.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff X Corp. prays for judgment in its favor and the following relief:

1. Actual and consequential damages caused by Defendants' misconduct, including but not limited to all general and special damages;

2. A preliminary and permanent injunction ordering Defendants to immediately delete, take down, or otherwise remove the article entitled "As Musk Endorses Antisemitic Conspiracy Theory, X Has Been Placing Ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle, and Xfinity Next to Pro-Nazi Content From Its Web" from all websites and social media accounts owned, controlled, or operated, directly or indirectly, by Defendants;

3. X Corp.'s costs and attorneys' fees to litigate this action; and

4. For such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

Missouri Attorney General's Office
I am a reporter with CNBC.com / NBC Universal based in San Francisco (originally from St. Louis, though). My colleague on the politics desk is on Cc as well, Brian Schwartz.
Over the weekend, we noticed that Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey posted on X (Twitter) that he intended to look into a conflict between the Elon Musk-owned social network, and the media watchdog group called Media Matters.
https://twitter.com/AGAndrewBailey/status/1726356598405136754
We would like to know…
Has the AG's office formally initiated a probe of Media Matters?
Would appreciate any information or statements you can provide.
Thank you,

St. Louis Circuit Attorney Gets Missouri AG Help on Post-Conviction Cases
Riverfront Times l Ryan Krull
https://www.riverfronttimes.com/news/st-louis-circuit-attorney-gets-missouri-ag-help-on-post-conviction-cases-41283720

-"St. Louis Circuit Attorney Gabe Gore has farmed out approximately 100 post-conviction relief cases filed with his office to an unusual assistant — Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey. These cases, which in Missouri are technically civil litigation, represent a convicted person's challenge to either their conviction or sentence in a criminal case. Unlike appeals, these cases allow for new evidence to be introduced, and they go to the jurisdiction where the case originated, not the appellate court. Bailey's office is handling the cases as part of its effort to stabilize the circuit attorney's office in the wake of the departure of Gore's predecessor, Kim Gardner. But as a Republican who holds a statewide office, it's safe to say Bailey represents a different way of approaching attempts to overturn a conviction than anyone likely to be selected by St. Louis voters. In one very notable recent example, attorneys with the Missouri Attorney General's Office threw up roadblock after roadblock against the legal team for Lamar Johnson… That's according to the Missouri Independent's Rebecca Rivas, who did a deep dive last year into the AG's long history opposing wrongful-conviction-cases. While Johnson's case was a wrongful conviction case, not one of post-conviction relief, attorney Joe Welling points out that both types of cases deal with situations in which "interests in justice are in tension with interests in finality." Historically, the attorney general's office has been interested in finality, meaning that once a verdict has been rendered it almost always defends it. Even so, Bailey's efforts to assist with post-conviction appeals in St. Louis may be more of a continuation of the circuit attorney's handling of such claims under Gardner than a break from it… However, she says virtually all post-conviction relief appeals were dead on arrival at the Circuit Attorney's Office when Gardner was in charge. "At Kim's office, a blanket rule was that we do not negotiate PCRs," McDonnell says. She adds that this held true even when there were obvious examples of people who had ineffective legal representation and shouldn't be in jail.She says she has hope that things will eventually be better with Gore in charge, though she doesn't have high hopes for the cases Bailey is handling… Bailey, in a brief interview with RFT last week, defended his predecessor's handling of the Johnson case, saying Schmitt acted properly. "That was one of the first times that statute had been used," Bailey said, referring to a 2021 state law that gave prosecutors a path to appeal cases that had been decided in their jurisdictions. "I think he appropriately fulfilled his role in that process, and sought to not only litigate the case, but also to provide clarity from the court." Bailey says that as attorney general he is committed to "ensuring the rule of law is respected, there is a finality of judgments and that we're respecting the rights of victims." As for the 100 or so post-conviction cases his office is handling on behalf of Gore, Bailey says he's going to take a "case by case approach" with each one. Circuit Attorney spokeswoman Chrstine Bertelson says that the attorney general's role in post-conviction relief cases is appropriate "given the understaffing and unprecedented volume of backlog of cases that existed when Mr. Gore was appointed." She adds that it was already a matter of practice that the attorney general's office generally handled post-conviction cases in St. Louis that were appealed to the appellate courts."

Elon Musk Should Sue Media Matters Into Oblivion
The Federalist l John Daniel Davidson
https://thefederalist.com/2023/11/21/elon-musk-should-sue-media-matters-into-oblivion/

-"Over the weekend, Elon Musk said he plans to file a "thermonuclear lawsuit" against Media Matters for America, a left-wing propaganda shop whose sole reason for existing is to churn out deceptive, fake studies designed to pressure large firms to pull advertising from media outlets and platforms that don't toe the leftist line. That's precisely what Media Matters did last week when it released a bogus "report" alleging that X, formerly Twitter, runs ads for Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle, and Xfinity next to "pro-Nazi content." Sure enough, after this report was published Thursday, Apple, IBM, and a bunch of other companies fell for the scam and announced they were pulling ads from X. Then on Monday, Musk's X filed a lawsuit against Media Matters, alleging the organization "knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform."… Essentially, Media Matters set up some fake X accounts and then curated the feeds to display controversial content. "Once they curated their feed," explained X in a statement Musk posted early Saturday morning, "they repeatedly refreshed their timelines to find a rare instance of ads serving next to the content they chose to follow." To achieve their desired outcome, these accounts had to generate 13 times the number of ads served compared to a normal X user. As the lawsuit filed on Monday stated, "The end result was a feed precision-designed by Media Matters for a single purpose: to produce side-by-side ad/content placements that it could screenshot in an effort to alienate advertisers." The result that Media Matters got through manipulating X's algorithm in this way was anything but organic; in the case of paid posts from IBM, Comcast, and Oracle, those posts appeared alongside "fringe content" for only one X user: Media Matters. "Not a single authentic user of the X platform saw IBM's, Comcast's, or Oracle's ads next to that content," according to the lawsuit… The reason they were applied to X, however, has nothing to do with pro-Nazi content and everything to do with the fact that left-wing ideologues like the people at Media Matters don't control X and can't use it as a tool of censorship against their enemies. That's it. Hiding behind the fig leaf of "research," styling itself as a "watchdog group," Media Matters is in the business of silencing its opponents by going after advertisers. The only thing it's watching out for is dissent to crush. Ginning up a bogus "study" to deplatform dissenting voices is a tactic we're well familiar with here at The Federalist… Sadly, this is a pattern we have seen over and over again. What NBC News and the Center for Countering Digital Hate tried to do to us at The Federalist — impute guilt on the basis of third-party content and then pressure advertisers to pull out — is almost exactly what Media Matters has tried to do to X. It should come as no surprise. Left-wing activists will do and say almost anything to suppress, censor, or shut down outlets and institutions they don't control, that challenge the establishment narrative, and that push back against the media's incessant lying… But now they see that Musk won't comply, which is why they're going after X. That might prove to be a big mistake because Musk has the resources to fight back and go after groups like Media Matters. And Musk's X isn't the only one. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey said Sunday his team was "looking into" the matter, and on Monday, Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton announced his office had opened an investigation into Media Matters for potentially fraudulent activity. We'll see where all this goes, but it's good to see that a group like Media Matters actually might be held accountable for its incessant deception in the service of crushing free speech. Anyone who cares about free speech and self-government should hope Media Matters gets sued and fined into oblivion. It's a cancer on our civic life, masquerading as a nonprofit watchdog when its only purpose is to censor and throttle free speech by any means necessary. The sooner it's gone, the better off the country will be."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Missouri Attorney General Says He is 'Looking Into' Elon Musk, Media Matters Dispute

https://themessenger.com/politics/missouri-attorney-general-andrew-bailey-musk-media-matters

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, R, is "looking into" a brewing legal beef between X owner Elon Musk and liberal advocacy outlet Media Matters. Musk promised a "thermonuclear" lawsuit against Media Matters on Saturday after the organization posted a report claiming pro-Nazi messages were appearing on X next to advertiser content… Musk promised legal action against Media Matters and "their board, their donors, their network of dark money, all of them." According to Musk, Media Matters "created an alternate account and curated the posts and advertising" to fit their report. X said they have no record of ads running next to the content Media Matters cites in its report, while Media Matters President Angelo Carusone called Musk a "bully" in a statement and said the company would win against a lawsuit… Bailey got involved in the scuffle on X after former Donald Trump official Stephen Miller suggested Media Matters could be guilty of fraud and therefore liable for legal action by attorney generals. "Fraud is both a civil and criminal violation. There are 2 dozen+ conservative state Attorneys General," Miller posted… "My team is looking into this matter," Bailey told Musk to which the X owner replied, "great!" In a Monday message, Musk referred to Media Matters as "pure evil.'"

-"Missouri's Republican Attorney General announced on X, the social media platform formerly called Twitter, that his office was "looking into" a dispute between the platform's owner, Elon Musk, and the non-profit media watchdog outlet Media Matters for America. The dispute began as Media Matters was reporting on widespread anti-Semitism on the platform, including a report showing instances where advertisements for major brands were appearing on users' feeds in succession with pro-Nazi content… The billionaire posted Saturday accusing Media Matters of fraudulently misrepresenting the user experience and threatened a "thermonuclear" lawsuit to be filed Monday morning… The president of Media Matters for America brushed off the threat, saying Musk has already conceded the issue with ad placement… In an appearance on the right-wing media outlet Newsmax, AG Bailey invoked the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act as justification for involving the Missouri Attorney General's office. "If we've got an instance where there was a deceptive or fraudulent business practice where Media Matters was using some kind of coercive or fraudulent algorithms or advertising, that's going to be problematic under the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act," Bailey said…"

Missouri AG Andrew Bailey wades into Elon Musk antisemitism controversy

-"Missouri's Republican attorney general has waded into an ongoing dispute between billionaire Elon Musk and a liberal advocacy group that erupted amid controversy over Musk's endorsement of an antisemitic conspiracy theory last week. Bailey said Sunday his team was "looking into this matter" the day after Musk promised "thermonuclear" legal action against Media Matters for America and others, alleging a "fraudulent attack" on his social media company X, formerly known as Twitter… Major companies such as Apple, IBM, Disney, Comcast and others have since announced they had either pulled advertising or were pulling ads from X, The Washington Post reported… Also Sunday, X user Jack Posobiec had accused Media Matters of "creat(ing) accounts and gam(ing) the X server to create false impressions for their article." In response to Posobiec's post, Stephen Miller, who worked in former President Donald Trump's White House, said fraud was a civil and criminal violation and noted there were "2 dozen+ conservative state Attorneys General" in the United States… Bailey later posted: "My team is looking into this matter," winning an attaboy from Musk. "Great!" Musk said. Bailey's announcement came as his opponent in the Aug. 6 Republican primary, Will Scharf, was set to be in the spotlight Monday as he argued against a limited gag order imposed against Trump in one of the criminal cases against the former president.

Elon Musk's X Sues Media Matters

Daily Caller | Harold Hutchison

https://dailycaller.com/2023/11/20/elon-musks-x-sues-media-matters/

-"The social media site accuses the left-wing media watchdog of manufacturing images showing advertisements from major corporations alongside posts made by white supremacists and neo-Nazis in the 15-page complaint filed in the United States District court for the Northern District of Texas. Musk threatened to sue Media Matters in a Saturday post on X, following the group's Thursday release of a report that prompted an exodus of advertisers, including Disney, Apple, Paramount and IBM. "Looking to portray X's social networking platform as being dominated by 'white nationalist and anti-Semitic conspiracy theories,' Media Matters knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform," the lawsuit says… "Media Matters accessed accounts that had been active for at least 30 days, bypassing X's ad filter for new users," the lawsuit says. "Media Matters then exclusively followed a small subset of users consisting entirely of accounts in one of two categories: those known to produce extreme, fringe content, and accounts owned by X's big-name advertisers. The end result was a feed precision-designed by Media Matters for a single purpose: to produce side-by-side ad/content placements that it could screenshot in an effort to alienate advertisers. But this activity still was not enough to create the pairings of advertisements and content that Media Matters aimed to produce." "Media Matters therefore resorted to endlessly scrolling and refreshing its unrepresentative, hand-selected feed, generating between 13 and 15 times more advertisements per hour than viewed by the average X user repeating this inauthentic activity until it finally received pages containing the result it wanted: controversial content next to X's largest advertisers' paid posts," the lawsuit continued. Journalist Michael Shellenberger, who previously reported on the Twitter files, said in a Monday afternoon post that he was unable to replicate what Media Matters claimed it observed on Twitter… Chris Pavlovski, CEO of Rumble, a free-speech competitor to YouTube, spoke out Monday. "X is not alone," Pavlovski posted on X. "I can also confirm that Media Matters has purposely misrepresented Rumble. Their dishonesty warrants an immediate investigation at the highest levels (hint, @SpeakerJohnson & @Jim_Jordan), and I'll bring the receipts.'"

Texas attorney general opens investigation into Media Matters for 'potential fraudulent activity'

-"Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton is opening an investigation into Media Matters for "potential fraudulent activity" after X CEO Elon Musk accused the left-wing media watchdog group of manipulating data on the social media platform… Media Matters published a report on Friday accusing X of placing ads next to "white nationalist hashtags." However, Musk believes that the group "completely misrepresented the real user experience" in order to mislead advertisers. Republican Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey posted on Sunday that his legal team was "looking into" the matter. Now, Paxton is launching an official investigation with his office after being "extremely troubled" by the allegations. "We are examining the issue closely to ensure that the public has not been deceived by the schemes of radical left-wing organizations who would like nothing more than to limit freedom by reducing participation in the public square," said Paxton… Last week, Musk found himself in hot water after commenting on a post on X that critics believe was anti-Semitic. Since then, the tech billionaire has clarified that anyone posting genocidal content will be suspended from X. "At risk of stating the obvious, anyone advocating the genocide of any group will be suspended from this platform," Musk wrote in a post on X… Nonetheless, the White House spokesman Andrew Bates condemned Musk, saying that the people's house condemns "abhorrent promotion of Antisemitic and racist hate in the strongest terms, which runs against our core values as Americans." This is not the first time advertisers vacated the social media platform. Last year, when Musk first took over Twitter, now known as X, he promised to restore free speech to the platform. In response, hundreds of advertisers pulled their ads. Judge to decide again if Missouri's voter ID is constitutional

https://fox2now.com/news/missouri/judge-to-decide-again-if-missouris-voter-id-is-constitutional/

-"Following a new law that passed in 2022, Missourians are required to show a valid government-issued photo ID to vote. While the state says no one has been denied a ballot, those challenging the requirement argue this is unconstitutional and makes it hard for some voters to cast a ballot… Missouri's voter ID law is no stranger to the court system. Photo ID requirements were ruled unconstitutional in 2006 and then again in 2020… The case was dismissed last year by Cole County Judge Jon Beetem after he said neither of the two voters suing the state "alleged a specific, concrete, non-speculative injury or legally protectable interest in challenging the photo ID requirement." Since then, the lawsuit brought forward by the voters, the Missouri League of Women voters, and the NAACP, has added another voter to the case. This time, it's over a four-day trial… The newest plaintiff is John O'Connor. Attorneys said the 90-year-old from Columbia has poor vision and needs help walking. When the law went into effect last year, O'Connor had an expired passport and driver's license, which are not acceptable under the law. Lieberman said O'Connor, born in New York, has had a hard time locating his birth certificate. Before the law went into effect in 2022, a voter could use a student ID, a utility bill with their name and address, or a voter registration card. Those methods would now lead to a provisional ballot, meaning a voter can show back up with an acceptable ID or the polling place must match the signature on the ballot with the one on file… Missouri Republicans have been working for decades to enact a voter ID law. In response to the trial, Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft said in a statement: I will always fight to maintain Missouri's accessible, secure and creditable elections. Regarding this case – every person has been able to vote – no one has been denied a ballot because they didn't have an ID. As specified in statute, my office will help get an ID for anyone who needs one to vote. Furthermore, if someone does not have an ID on Election Day, if they are registered, they can still vote. Roughly 35 states request or require identification to vote and at least 20 other states require a photo ID to vote. While the trial is set to conclude Wednesday, the judge has not indicated when he could issue a ruling."

Missouri voter ID trial digs into purpose, results of strict 2022 law

https://missouriindependent.com/2023/11/21/missouri-voter-id-trial-digs-into-purpose-results-of-strict-2022-law/

-"Before the November 2022 election, acceptable identification at the polls included a voter registration card, a student identification card, a bank statement or utility bill or even an out-of-state drivers license if it had not expired. Now anyone without the required state- or federally issued identification is given a provisional ballot. For it to be counted, the voter must return to the polling station and show the correct identification or count on the local election authority matching their signature to the one on file… The trial is expected to last through Wednesday. The NAACP and the league argue the law imposes unconstitutional burdens on the right to vote without actually achieving the state goal of reducing fraud in elections… In court, the state is defending the law as a simple solution to make elections secure. It is a "common-sense law designed to uphold that sacred right," Assistant Attorney General Peter Donohue said during opening arguments on Friday. The lawsuit focuses on the burdens faced by three individuals obtaining state-issued identification. The problems include finding transportation to a state license office, misspellings on important documents or lack of those documents entirely due to age. Missouri will issue an identification card for a voter who needs one at no cost and help obtaining the documents, Donohue argued Friday. The burdens are minimal and the benefit is substantial, he said. "Protecting the integrity of elections is absolutely a compelling governmental interest," Donohue said…"

A teen in foster care died after ear infection went untreated. His siblings are suing MO

https://news.yahoo.com/teen-foster-care-died-ear-120000524.html

-"The siblings of 15-year-old Missouri boy who died from sepsis allegedly caused by an ear infection while in foster care two years ago have filed a wrongful death lawsuit, alleging the teen's foster family allowed an ear infection to go untreated, leading to his death. The lawsuit contends both the foster parent and state social services were negligent. The lawsuit, filed Nov. 7 in the Western District of Missouri, is seeking at least $75,000 in compensatory and punitive damages in a case an attorney for the plaintiffs called both "awful and heartbreaking." According to the lawsuit, Marcus was diagnosed with an ear infection on Sept. 8, 2021. His foster parent and the care provider "were ordered by Marcus's doctor to return to the ER promptly if his condition worsened." The suit alleges that both failed to bring Marcus to a doctor or other medical care provider between Sept. 9 and Nov. 28, 2021. On Nov. 29, EMS workers responded to a call from Marcus's foster parent. According to the suit, the teenager was found lying on a bedroom floor where he had defecated on himself. Paramedics tried to find a pulse and performed CPR for 30 minutes, court records show. Paramedics transported Marcus to Research Medical Center, where doctors there also tried to resuscitate him without success. He was pronounced dead on Nov. 29, 2021. According to court documents, Haynes died from sepsis caused by an ear infection that had spread throughout his body… Carnie said he hopes the lawsuit will help shed light on a childcare system that he contends is broken and that he believes ultimately failed Haynes. The teen's four surviving siblings, identified in court documents as Darius Jackson, Dylan Sago, Brianna Williams, and Devin Jackson, filed their wrongful death lawsuit this month, two years after their brother's death. Named as defendants in the suit are the Missouri Department of Social Services; … The suit alleges the Missouri Department of Social Services, "knowingly placed Marcus with unfit foster parents," and failed to ensure that Marcus was brought back to his doctor as they had been instructed when his ear infection worsened. All of these factors, according to the suit, contributed to the wrongful death of the teen. An attorney for the plaintiffs said that they will likely seek "way in excess" of the $75,000 currently listed in the suit for damages. Under Missouri Statute, "Survivorship damages incurred by the decedent before death, such as medical expenses and pain and suffering, are recoverable as part of wrongful death claim." The suit contends that the Missouri Department of Social Services were negligent, and had a responsibility, "to safeguard his (Marcus) well-being because he was unable to do so himself." Reached by phone Thursday, a spokeswoman for the Missouri Department of Social Services declined comment on the lawsuit. "The department doesn't comment on pending litigation," said Caitlyn Whaley, communications director."

AMERICA OVERSIGHT

Missouri abortion rights backers win after Supreme Court declines to consider ballot wording

https://www.stlpr.org/government-politics-issues/2023-11-20/missouri-abortion-rights-backers-win-after-supreme-court-declines-to-consider-ballot-wording

-"The Missouri Supreme Court on Monday declined to take up cases regarding the ballot summaries and costs for initiative petitions that would legalize abortion in the state… Earlier this year, a group called Missourians for Constitutional Freedom filed 11 proposals to repeal the state's abortion ban — which prohibits the procedure except for medical emergencies. But the group sued after Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft wrote up summaries that it considered unfair… A Cole County judge rewrote the summaries, and the Western District Court of Appeals largely upheld those descriptions that were generally more favorable to Missourians for Constitutional Freedom… Ashcroft appealed the ruling, but the Supreme Court decided not to consider it. The court also denied transfer of a separate case from abortion rights proponents challenging state Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick's fiscal estimate of the initiatives… Monday's denial of Ashcroft's appeals effectively ends a lengthy legal battle that chewed up time for Missourians for Constitutional Freedom to gather the roughly 171,000 signatures needed to place one of the initiatives on the ballot… Whatever proponents decide, they'll have until May to gather the necessary signatures… The court decisions come as another group, the Missouri Women and Family Research Fund, began gathering signatures for an initiative that would scale back Missouri's abortion ban."

Did St. Louis judicial system fail these victims? The growing concern with GPS ankle monitors

https://fox2now.com/news/fox-files/did-st-louis-judicial-system-fail-these-victims-the-growing-concern-with-gps-ankle-monitors/

-"Two defendants in two separate cases, both out of jail and wearing GPS ankle monitors, are accused of horrific crimes, leaving victim advocates questioning if there's an opportunity for change. Joshua Harris was murdered in his driveway last week in Clayton. Janae Edmondson lost both her legs when a car ran her over earlier this year. The two defendants at the center of these cases were both on ankle monitors at the time. "There are folks out there committing these very violent crimes," ALIVE Executive Director Sarah Gramanzini said. "[They're] not being monitored."… Crime Victim Center Director of Youth Services and Outreach Kat Cocivera said it leads to victims doubting the system. "When's there's faulty monitoring or lack of monitoring, that creates an even bigger issue," Cocivera said. Cocivera is just learning about the court records concerning Trenell Johnson. Johnson, 18, is the defendant in last week's killing of Joshua Harris, 41. Johnson posted a $3,000 bond in May after authorities say he took St. Louis County police on a high-speed pursuit and pointed a gun at detectives. St. Louis County Prosecuting Attorney Wesley Bell said Friday his office objected to the bond amount, but bail was set at an appropriate amount given the felonies filed… St. Louis County Judge Jeffrey Medler ordered Johnson to wear a GPS ankle monitor. The case had a new judge assigned at the time a pre-trial assessment entry was made on the court's docket, which is dated Sept. 7. The FOX Files has learned that the letter notified Circuit Court Judge Bruce Hilton, that the battery in the ankle monitor had died. “From a victim’s perspective, it doesn’t send a comforting message,” Cocivera said. Bell said his office was not copied on the letter and was not given the information. There’s a big question as to who was notified. The FOX Files was told everyone involved in the case would have likely been notified via email that the pre-trial assessment was filed in the case; however, it would’ve been filed like any other court entry with no significant level of importance or an alert. No one revoked Johnson’s bond and the letter to Hilton is not available for the public to see… Walker said the company responsible for monitoring the GPS ankle monitor would have sent a letter to the clerk of the court. Walker said the judge could have revoked the bond. Gramanzini, an advocate for victims’ rights, has expressed concerns over the information about dead batteries not being shared with the public. “Having those things being public record and looked at really harder would be helpful to the people we support,” Gramanzini said. The Clayton homicide is not the first major case involving a suspect on a GPS ankle monitor. Earlier this year, Janae Edmundson, a Tennessee volleyball player, got hit by a car allegedly driven by Daniel Riley, who was out on bond but had multiple GPS ankle monitor violations leading up to the crash. Edmundson lost both her legs. “We’re going to have to go back to the days where repeat offenders, violent offenders, are taken off the streets,” Governor Mike Parson said in February. Walker said state lawmakers may decide to discuss the issue in the upcoming legislative session. “The legislature might step in and say, ‘We’re going to regulate this,’ so if there is a dead battery, you better report it, and you better put that person back in jail,” Walker said. Cocivera said it’s something lawmakers should take up. “Whenever issues come up and something isn’t working as it’s designed to work, then I think there’s always room to go back and make it more perfected—to make it safer,” Cocivera said.”

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

St. Charles leaders sought removal of sexually explicit library book, and want others restricted

-“St. Charles County Executive Steve Ehlmann and St. Charles Mayor Dan Borgmeyer were among those who filed a formal challenge to the county library system’s inclusion of a sexually explicit book called “Bang Like a Porn Star: Sex Tips From the Pros” on its shelves. And the two elected officials, who appoint the board overseeing the City-County Library District, are pressing the system to isolate any other books with explicit sexual illustrations or instructions to special areas in library branches. Ehlmann said Monday that the two had no plans to seek removal of other books but that “Bang Like a Porn Star” is particularly worrisome. The book features interviews with several gay adult film stars and includes photographs detailing various sex acts. They said on their review request that it is pornographic and “does not belong in a tax-supported public library.” “By God, this is low-hanging fruit. Let’s pick it,” Ehlmann said. “At least in my opinion, it is.”… Borgmeyer said he wants to keep children visiting district libraries away from such books but doesn’t want to bar access to adults. Children now can use any section of district libraries, although the system requires anyone 10 and younger to be accompanied by an adult at all times. It makes sense, he said, to put those books in a special section from which kids younger than a yet-to-be-determined age would be barred, even if accompanied by a parent… Borgmeyer said he had asked that the proposed special section be off-limits to anyone younger than 18 years old but that the cutoff could end up being 16. Ehlmann also said “there will still be disputes over how extensive this policy will be. What’s explicit, what isn’t? I just want to see them (the library board) take a position and explain it. If I don’t agree with it, so be it.”… Although Ehlmann and Borgmeyer didn’t know about it, a similar challenge had been submitted by someone else on Sept. 27 — already triggering a review of the book’s content by a committee of library staff members. A third challenge was turned in after the Ehlmann-Borgmeyer submission, said Lori Beth Crawford, a library district spokeswoman. Ehlmann, who on Monday released a copy of the form he and the mayor filed, said they submitted it because a library board member had told them that no one had done so yet… Crawford, the district spokeswoman, said the review committee is likely to reach a decision this week… The book battle is the latest example of the library district being at the center of culture war controversies this year. Some residents also have complained about the attire of a library employee they say was wearing nail polish, makeup and a goatee. While Ehlmann disclosed on Monday that he and Borgmeyer had submitted one challenge to “Bang Like a Porn Star,” the district has refused to release the names of the residents who filed the two others.”

If passed, the legislation would create a one-mile buffer zone that would prevent landfills from being built on the doorstep of cities. Members of the community were pushing for this legislation to pass in the 2023 legislative session, but it hit a wall when it was filibustered in the Senate. This year, though, Turnbow says they'll have another shot at making this happen. Funding lag creates barrier for Missouri private school tax credit program
https://missouriindependent.com/2023/11/21/funding-lag-creates-barrier-for-missouri-private-school-tax-credit-program/

-"When students returned to classrooms around Missouri in August, only 601 had secured a scholarship through the MOScholars program as a returning recipient — half as many as were in the program in May. There were also 247 first-time participants. Three months into the school year, MOScholars has ballooned to 829 returning students and 675 new students. Lawmakers and the Missouri Treasurer's Office participation in the program, which is designed to use tax credits to provide scholarships for families to pay costs to attend private schools, will continue to climb until the end of January when the funding cycle is complete. Even though demand for the scholarships is understandably highest just before the school year begins, the way the program was built by lawmakers means funding often doesn't show up until the end of the calendar year — leaving families scrambling and private organizations trying to offset costs in the fall. The program's biggest proponents acknowledge a fix is needed. But even incremental changes to education policy are met with skepticism in the Missouri legislature, which barely passed MOScholars in the first place in 2021. Compounding that challenge is the goal of school-choice advocates to expand student eligibility, even as current participants and the organizations administering scholarships struggle to navigate structural issues… "A lot of taxpayers would be very interested in contributing, they just don't necessarily know how," state Rep. Phil Christofanelli, a Republican from St. Peters running for Missouri Senate, told The Independent. Christofanelli sponsored the bill that created the MOScholars program. "It costs you nothing to contribute your state income tax liability to a child in need that wants to attend a school of their choice, and a lot of parents and donors are interested in that," he said. "We just need to get the message out about how to do it and make it as seamless for them as possible." Beyond advertising the program, educational assistance organizations have been using their own funds to help students obtain a MOScholars scholarship in the fall. This year, educational assistance organizations have begun using their private funds to cover student scholarships at the beginning of the school year and pay themselves back. It allowed some EAOs to welcome more students back at the start of the school year with their full scholarship amount…"

Editorial: St. Louis comptroller's office isn't doing its job. The city must find out why.

https://www.stltoday.com/opinion/editorial/editorial-st-louis-comptrollers-office-isnt-doing-its-job-the-city-must-find-out-why/article_e8c88c0e-87be-11ee-8b49-93c6725da663.html

-"It's one thing when a city government doesn't have enough money to pay its bills. It's quite another when there are adequate funds in the coffers but the office that's supposed to cut the checks just can't get its act together enough to do its job. The latter scenario is what St. Louis appears to be facing today under longtime city Comptroller Darlene Green. In a lengthy and devastating report Sunday, the Post-Dispatch's Jacob Barker detailed how the apparently botched implementation of a new accounting system — coupled with a management style by Green that gives new meaning to the phrase "hands off" — has turned the office into a bureaucratic hellscape of missing or inaccurate checks and lack of public transparency. Green's response to Barker's reporting was a written statement that blames her office's well-documented dysfunction on employees of other city departments, a former mayor, the new accounting system and pretty much everyone but the officeholder herself. That's not good enough. Mayor Tishaura O. Jones and the Board of Aldermen should demand an independent investigation of the Comptroller's entire operation to get to the bottom of why that office can't consistently perform its chief function — and then fix it. The inability of the city to consistently and accurately cut checks for what it owes is more than an inconvenience. Contractors to whom the city is a primary customer can see their very livelihoods threatened if they can't count on timely and accurate payment… The problem also affects city employees' paychecks and city services. As Barker noted in his reporting, city police officers who had to travel out of the city last year on police business discovered the city credit card they had with them didn't work because the bill hadn't been paid. The group that represents the city's Black police officers is calling for a resumption of state control over the department in part because officers can't get timely reimbursement for their uniforms and other expenses. Green's written statement in response to Barker's reporting lays blame primarily on what she has called a "horrific" new accounting system that was set up 18 months ago. And she lays blame for that system on former Mayor Lyda Krewson's administration… Finally, there is Green's AWOL leadership style. She shows up at the office only once or twice a week. She claims she's working remotely, but that doesn't jibe with reports that at times she has to be tracked down by staff to sign papers… Excuses don't solve problems, and Green clearly isn't solving them either. The mayor and aldermen need to demand some accountability from the Comptroller's office, starting with an independent probe."

Missouri DNR confirms investigation into asbestos at Dallas County Courthouse; court moves

-"Court proceedings are underway again in Dallas County. They're just not being held in the courthouse. "We're getting our cases processed," said John Kaiser, an attorney in Springfield. He was in the temporary courtroom to represent a client. "It's closer quarters, but Judge Henderson and her staff are having a wonderful time, kind of improvising and accommodating," said Kaiser. Court is being held in the commissioner's room. Everyone waits in the hall until they are called. There is no court reporter, so if any matters need to be considered on the record, then they go to another county, or arrangements will need to be made. The judge says they are trying to make the best out of the situation. Missouri's Department of Natural Resources has confirmed an investigation into asbestos at the Dallas County Courthouse. Jackson Winslow is the investigator on the case. "That project notification implies that there is asbestos, and that's why Gerken Environmental is working. That's why they're currently hired to do this abatement project. So presumably, they're going to be removing asbestos-containing materials on the building," said Winslow. He says typically, the reason that DNR would get involved is because someone brought up a complaint, which is what happened here. "I can tell you that I was notified by concerned parties and the public, but I'll also say it's an ongoing investigation," said Winslow. Kaiser says work is being done, even if it isn't at the courthouse. "A lot of cases are just set for disposition or reappearances. You can do one of those here just as good as you can do in the courthouse across the street," said Kaiser. His piece of advice. "Get there early," said Kaiser."

-"The U.S. Department of Justice wants the U.S. Supreme Court to deny a Pennsylvania man his Second Amendment rights for making false statements to obtain food stamps in 1995 in Garland v. Range. Though the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals found in his favor, lawyers for Bryan David Range are joining the DOJ in seeking to probe the limits of the June 2022 decision in New York State Rifle & Pistol Association v. Bruen. The high court has not decided whether to hear the case. According to court documents, in 1995, Mr. Range's wife understated their household income on an application for public assistance. Mr. Range took responsibility for the act and pleaded guilty to making a false statement when applying for food stamps in the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. He was sentenced to three years of probation. Court records show he completed his sentence without incident. He also paid $2,458 in restitution, $288.29 in costs, and a $100 fine. Mr. Range's criminal history is limited to minor traffic infractions and fishing without a license. Though the conviction is a misdemeanor in Pennsylvania, federal law recognizes any sentence of two years or more as equivalent to a felony. In 1998, he attempted to purchase a deer rifle and was rejected. His wife thought the rejection was an error and bought the gun for him as a gift, according to the court documents. Years later, Mr. Range tried to buy a firearm and was rejected again. It was then he learned that the 1995 conviction was the reason. Mr. Range sold his rifle to a firearms dealer. Mr. Range sued in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania for an injunction that would allow him to possess a firearm. The court ruled that Mr. Range could not own a gun as a convicted felon. He appealed that decision in 2021, and as that appeal was working its way through the courts, the Bruen decision was released. Under Bruen, the government must show that gun control laws align with the text of the Second Amendment and the history and tradition of American gun laws. The Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit ruled that, under Bruen, there was no historical analog for depriving offenders like Mr. Range of their Second Amendment rights… In its petition, the DOJ responded that American history shows a consistent pattern of revoking felons' Second Amendment rights. DOJ lawyers wrote that dangerousness is not a requirement under Bruen… Mr. Rahimi is an Arlington, Texas, drug dealer who abused his girlfriend and had a penchant for shooting at people who made him angry, according to court documents. In 2019, his girlfriend petitioned the court and won a domestic violence restraining order against him under 18 USC 922 (g) (8). That federal law bars anyone subject to such an order from possessing or purchasing firearms. After the order, which Mr. Rahimi reportedly agreed to, was issued, he assaulted another woman and was subsequently involved in at least five more shootings. He claims 18 USC 922 (g) (8) is unconstitutional. In their response to the DOJ petition, Mr. Range's lawyers asked the court to hear Mr. Range's case during the same term as the Rahimi case… The DOJ lawyers disagree. They say the cases should be decided in the order in which they were received."

Supreme Court to Decide Reach of 3-Strikes Law

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-to-decide-reach-of-3-strikes-law-5532843

-"The Supreme Court will consider whether a judge or a jury gets to decide if criminal defendants' prior convictions justify enhanced sentencing under a federal three-strikes law. The case, Erlinger v. United States (court file 23-370), is the second Armed Career Criminal Act (ACCA) case the court has agreed to hear in its current term, which began in October. The court is expected to decide if the Constitution requires juries to go through fact-based inquiries to figure out if a defendant has committed multiple prior offenses on separate occasions and therefore qualifies for an enhanced sentence under the ACCA. The ACCA states that a mandatory minimum sentence and, in some cases, a life sentence, should be imposed when a defendant has three prior qualifying convictions that were "committed on occasions different from one another." The Supreme Court did not explain why it granted the petition for certiorari, or review, on Nov. 20. No justices dissented. At least four of the nine justices must vote to grant a petition for it to move forward to the oral argument stage. The often-litigated ACCA of 1984 was enacted in response to concerns that a small number of repeat offenders commit a disproportionate number of offenses. The statute requires that a 15-year minimum sentence be imposed on individuals found guilty of illegally possessing a firearm who have three or more prior convictions for a violent felony such as burglary "committed on occasions different from one another." A violent felony is defined by the statute as one that necessarily involves "the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another." Petitioner Paul Erlinger's story goes back to 1991 when as an 18-year-old he entered guilty pleas to four counts of burglary arising out of events that took place in the same week in Dubois County, Indiana… He pleaded guilty and under the mandatory minimum provisions of the ACCA was sentenced to 15 years in prison to be followed by one year of supervised release. But in July 2021, a district court granted his motion to vacate the sentence because three of the four offenses that he was previously convicted of no longer qualified under the ACCA."

Federal Court Torpedoes Key Provisions Of Voting Rights Act

https://dailycaller.com/2023/11/20/federal-court-voting-rights-act/

-"A federal appeals court ruled Monday that individuals cannot sue their state governments for violations of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act (VRA) of 1965 prohibits states from gerrymandering electoral districts on the basis of race, with many voters — supported by left-wing non-profit organizations — having brought suits in federal court to overturn delimitations by Republican-led states. On Monday, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit ruled that section 2 of the law creates no "private right of action" that would enable electors to sue states. "The Voting Rights Act lists only one plaintiff who can enforce § 2: the Attorney General," Judge David Stras, a Trump appointee, wrote for the majority, joined by Raymond Gruender, an appointee of George W. Bush. The case, Arkansas State Conference of NAACP v. Arkansas Board of Apportionment, sought to challenge the state's legislative map for alleged racial gerrymandering of voters in several regions in the state. The ruling affirms a district order to dismiss the plaintiffs' complaint, but modifies it to dismissal with prejudice. VRA-focused litigation using Section 2 has, in 2023 alone, been used to obtain judgments requiring the replacement of GOP-drafted constituency maps in Louisiana and Alabama, with other efforts ongoing in Georgia and South Carolina. The states are Republican-led states where newly-drawn constituency maps, according to the Supreme Court's precedent in Allen v. Milligan, may lead to the creation of new black-majority congressional districts, which experts have told the Daily Caller News Foundation are tantamount to Democratic-leaning districts. The Eighth Circuit's decision only applies to VRA cases within its jurisdiction, which covers North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri and Arkansas. The decision does not prevent left-wing plaintiffs from bringing lawsuits against state governments, however, with the opinion affirming that voters may have a private right of action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 allowing them to sue the federal and state governments for violations of their constitutional rights, according to the opinion's text. The Biden administration had also filed a brief in April 2022 urging the court to permit the suit."

White House Program Enabling Mass Phone Surveillance Of Americans Could Be Illegal, Lawmaker Says

https://dailycaller.com/2023/11/20/white-house-program-enabling-mass-phone-surveillance-of-americans-could-be-illegal-lawmaker-says/

-"Democratic Oregon Sen. Ron Wyden is questioning the legality of a White House program that enables law enforcement to access trillions of phone records, according to a letter to the Department of Justice (DOJ) published on Monday. Wyden is pushing the DOJ to publish information on a program called Data Analytical Services (DAS), previously known as Hemisphere, for public transparency, according to the letter. The White House Office of National Drug Control Policy (ONDCP) has paid AT&T over $5 million for Americans' records, frequently without a warrant, since 2009, in what Wyden says may be an illegal program. "I have serious concerns about the legality of this surveillance program, and the materials provided by the DOJ contain troubling information that would justifiably outrage many Americans and other members of Congress," Wyden wrote in the letter. The program allows law enforcement to access the details of Americans' calls and analyze the phone records of citizens, even if they are not suspected of committing a crime. Wyden characterized the program as giving law enforcement"the ability to request often-warrantless searches of trillions of domestic phone records. " Despite DAS receiving funding from the White House's ONDCP, a leaked file from the Northern California Regional Intelligence Center reveals local police bureaus asked for DAS information for cases that appeared not to be related to drugs, WIRED reported. "We obtained six months of call data for [suspect]'s phone, as well as several close associations (his girlfriend, father, sister, mother)," an officer wrote in a request for information, according to WIRED. The DOJ gave Wyden's office numerous pages of information about the program in 2019, which he wants the DOJ to release, according to his letter. "This surveillance program is not classified," Wyden wrote. "The public interest in an informed debate about government surveillance far outweighs the need to keep this information secret.'"

Senate Judiciary Republicans pressure Democrats to tamp down Supreme Court investigation

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Washington Examiner l Kaelan Deese
https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/policy/courts/senate-judiciary-pressure-democrats-supreme-court-investigation

-"Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Dick Durbin (D-IL) has sought to authorize subpoenas for influential conservative judicial activist Leonard Leo and GOP megadonor Harlan Crow, defending the subpoenas as necessary after the pair's "defensive, dismissive refusals" to cooperate with a congressional investigation. Now, Republicans have proposed more than 150 additional subpoenas to broaden an investigation they say is one-sided against conservative justices on the high court. The Washington Examiner obtained copies of amendments that Republicans want added to the proposal to subpoena Leo and Crow. Sen. Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) previously brought up one major amendment was by demanding subpoenas for Democratic-appointed Justice Sonia Sotomayor's staff and book publisher… Sotomayor partook in two separate copyright infringement cases concerning publishing conglomerate Penguin Random House, failing to recuse from a case that involved her book publisher. Her court staff also reportedly pressured colleges and libraries to purchase more of her books, from which she has earned nearly $4 million since she joined the court in 2009, according to the Associated Press. Durbin postponed the Nov. 9 planned vote to authorize the subpoenas after Republicans on the panel filed dozens of amendments to put other wealthy liberal advocates in the lineup, including Blackburn's proposal. The committee once again did not vote on the subpoenas after Durbin canceled last Thursday's meeting ahead of the Thanksgiving holiday, with no clear indication of when the next vote would be called. After the first failed attempt, Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse (D-RI), a staunch critic of the conservative high court, vowed Democrats would push ahead for a vote "now that we have seen this strategy" from committee Republicans, according to a statement. Durbin similarly said, "We will continue our efforts to authorize subpoenas in the near future."… One amendment proposed by Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) called to subpoena David Rubenstein, a private equity tycoon who, according to Breyer's 2013 disclosure, paid for his airfare to the island of Nantucket. Graham also proposed a subpoena for Arabella Advisors, a consulting firm overseeing an anonymously funded network that spent over $1 billion last year propping up liberal causes, including efforts to raise ethics concerns about the 6-3 Republican-appointed majority on the high court… While Republicans are in the minority in the Senate and can be thwarted by a simple 12-11 Democratic-majority committee vote, the GOP panelists say a double standard exists for the investigation, suggesting that Durbin's interests are too narrowly focused on investigating conservative justices on the bench… It's unclear whether the Supreme Court's recent adoption of a code of ethics for the first time in the high court's history has stalled Democrats' progress on their investigative efforts. The Supreme Court announced the ethics code on Nov. 13 after months of pressure from Democrats in the wake of the ProPublica publications, on top of reports that the justices had been in the process of devising a code of ethics for the past several years."

Michigan Gov Signs Gun Ban For Misdemeanor Domestic Violence Offenders

Daily Caller l Brandon Poulter

-"The Michigan legislature implemented bills to institute red flag laws, more background checks and stricter storage requirements in the last two years as mass shootings around the U.S. have been on the rise, according to The Associated Press. House bill 4945 prohibits "a person convicted of specified misdemeanors involving domestic violence from possessing, using, or transferring a firearm or ammunition for eight years."… The Supreme Court is currently weighing whether it is a violation of the Second Amendment to bar domestic abusers from possessing firearms. Zackey Rahimi, the individual at the center of United States v. Rahimi, was involved in five shootings."

Internal Senate memo highlights Biden admin efforts to tie highway funding to woke priorities

https://www.foxnews.com/politics/internal-senate-memo-highlights-biden-admin-efforts-tie-highway-funding-woke-priorities

-"The memo, first obtained by Fox News Digital, was sent late Monday evening and spearheaded by Commerce Committee Ranking Member Ted Cruz, R-Texas, who is planning to author legislation that would prohibit the Department of Transportation (DOT) from tying federal funds to left-wing priorities. It particularly targets DOT's management of three grant programs that serve as key vehicles to fund various types of surface transportation projects nationwide. "Billions upon billions of taxpayer dollars meant for infrastructure projects are tied to woke initiatives that are more focused on dismantling America's infrastructure in the name of 'equity' and 'climate change' than building roads, bridges, and highways to connect the country," the memo states. "Congress must not allow the Department of Transportation to push the absurd concept of 'racist roads' to prevent Americans from getting much-needed improvements to their highways," it continued. "The funding notices issued by DOT should focus on the law as written, not woke priorities.'"

I hope everyone has an amazing day!

-"The Missouri Attorney General's Office is handling 100 post-conviction relief motions for the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's Office as the case backlog in the city continues to be a burden. The cases represent a convicted person's challenge to their conviction or sentence. A spokesperson for the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's Office said the attorney general's office offered to handle post-conviction relief motions in addition to direct appeals. The attorney general's office handles all direct appeals from local prosecuting attorney's offices in the state. After Kim Gardner resigned as circuit attorney earlier this year, Missouri Gov. Mike Parson appointed Gabe Gore to lead the office. There were more than 4,000 cases with pending application of warrants when he took office."

GUTFELD: It's about time somebody exposes Media Matters
Fox News | Greg Gutfeld
https://www.foxnews.com/opinion/gutfeld-its-about-time-somebody-exposes-media-matters

-"There's been a lot of talk among Dems about misinformation and disinformation. Basically, any sort of information that doesn't help a Democrat get elected, also known as the truth in the eyes of the Dems. The story of Hunter's abandoned laptop had to be misinformation because it threatened Joe Biden's candidacy. So they manipulated social media to quash the story. They suspended it, banned anybody who talked about it. They called it Russian disinformation. And it worked. And they got the result they wanted. A reject from a Balance of Nature ad in the White House. But that wasn't enough, especially now that Elon Musk has bought their favorite toy, Twitter, and turned it into something called X. So now Musk must be stopped. Enter Media Matters. On Friday, they put out a report saying Nazi content ran on the app alongside corporate ads from major companies like IBM, Apple and Oracle. And so a bunch of companies suspended their ads on X. But now Musk is suing Media Matters, saying they manufactured the report… So what did Media Matters do this time? Well, according to the lawsuit, first Media Matters went on X and followed a small subset of users from one of two categories those who post fringe content and big name advertisers. Then they kept refreshing the hand-selected feed until it got the result that it wanted. Controversial content next to paid posts from X's largest advertisers. Then they took screenshots of it, claimed it was organic, and published an article about it. And this quickly panicked the cowardly advertisers, including IBM, Apple, Disney, Warner Brothers and Paramount. And so they fled like women when Keith Olbermann asked for their number… So now Musk is hitting Media Matters with, quote, a thermonuclear lawsuit for the fraudulent attack. But that's not all. Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton is opening an investigation, saying it's extremely troubled by these allegations and Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is also joining the fight promising Musk he's investigating Media Matters as well. So why is this important? Because Media Matters is a hard left smear machine, yet it's one coddled by the press who use that content to build their own crap. You may not have heard of Media Matters until today, but you can bet your liberal pals read their stuff regularly. Since CNN hacks like Stelter and Oliver Darcy rely on their fodder, they simply called the outfit a watchdog group… So I am so here for this. And you should be too, because it's about time somebody exposes Media Matters until they don't matter anymore. And although I'm no legal scholar, my money is on the guy who builds rockets, not lies."

With X under fire, Elon Musk digs in and finds support from conservatives general's investigation. The advertiser backlash appears to be the biggest threat yet to Musk's X. The typically unapologetic billionaire has shown no signs of backing down. On Monday, two more advertisers — Fox Sports and Ubisoft — said they were pausing ad campaigns and spending on the platform… They joined Disney, Apple and IBM in pausing ads on the platform in the wake of a series of articles from Media Matters for America, a progressive watchdog organization that reported that major ad campaigns were running on antisemitic content on X… Musk and Yaccarino have both said they stand against antisemitism and for free speech while going on the offensive against Media Matters. On Monday, X sued Media Matters, which reports on politicians, journalists and media outlets, with both Musk and Yaccarino criticizing the framing of the articles and their methodology, while Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton announced an investigation into the organization for potential fraud. Media Matters has stood by its reporting… Musk's most vocal supporters in recent days have come not from the tech industry but from right-wing politics — in particular, the attorneys general of Texas and Missouri, former Trump White House official Stephen Miller and a loose group of conservative pundits who have pledged to spend more money on X advertising. Seth Dillon, the CEO of the conservative satire website The Babylon Bee, posted over the weekend that he was pledging $250,000 toward a new ad campaign on X… Musk has also courted some Republican politicians, most notably hosting Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis to announce his Republican presidential bid. On Sunday, DeSantis refused to condemn Musk's post from last week, saying he did not see it. Miller, a longtime aide to former President Donald Trump, seemed to influence Musk's thinking on how to counterattack Media Matters from a legal standpoint… Musk replied positively to Miller, writing: "Interesting. Both civil and criminal …" A couple of hours later, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey replied to Musk on the same thread: "My team is looking into this matter." A day later, Musk echoed Miller's sentence in a post about Texas' investigating Media Matters. Musk posted a screenshot of Paxton's news release and wrote: "Fraud has both civil & criminal penalties." Bailey's office did not immediately respond to a request for comment. Miller, who is now the president of America First Legal, a far-right legal group, also did not immediately respond to a request for comment."

'Compelling': Legal Experts Say Elon Musk's X Has A Good Case Against Media Matters

https://dailycaller.com/2023/11/21/compelling-legal-experts-say-elon-musks-x-has-a-good-case-against-media-matters/

-"Billionaire Elon Musk's social media platform X's — formerly Twitter — lawsuit against Media Matters could lead to damages for the left-wing group, legal experts told the Daily Caller News Foundation. Media Matters alleged that advertisements from major advertisers show up on antisemitic content on X on Thursday, according to a report. While the case is not a slam dunk, there is merit to it and it could lead to financial damages and an injunction, experts told the DCNF... Media Matters' methodology has come under scrutiny, with X suing the organization and alleging the study was defamatory. "Media Matters accessed accounts that had been active for at least 30 days, bypassing X's ad filter for new users," X's lawsuit says. "Media Matters then exclusively followed a small subset of users consisting entirely of accounts in one of two categories: those known to produce extreme, fringe content, and accounts owned by X's big-name advertisers. The end result was a feed precision-designed by Media Matters for a single purpose: to produce side-by-side ad/content placements that it could screenshot in an effort to alienate advertisers. But this activity still was not enough to create the pairings of advertisements and content that Media Matters aimed to produce." "Media Matters therefore resorted to endlessly scrolling and refreshing its unrepresentative, hand-selected feed, generating between 13 and 15 times more advertisements per hour than viewed by the average X user…" If X's allegations are accurate, it could have a good argument that Media Matters directly caused advertisers to leave the platform based on misleading information, leading to a large revenue loss, experts told the DCNF. Counsel for law firm Lewis Baach Kaufmann Middlemiss Marc Frazier Scholl agreed. "If it can be proved that happened and that the misleading results damaged the victim, damages should be available," Scholl told the DCNF. University of California, Los Angeles Professor Eugene Volokh told the DCNF about "defamation by implication," which could be an argument X could try to prove in court… "It's an uphill battle," Volokh explained. "Courts are quite skeptical of libel by implication or libel by omission claims, because there's always some possible claim about how something might be misinterpreted." Meyer also stated the venue of the court where X filed the lawsuit may benefit the social media platform. "The case was filed in district court in the Northern District of Texas which presumably is a conservative venue that would be sympathetic to Elon Musk…"

Opinion: Republicans rally to Elon Musk after self-inflicted antisemitism mess

https://12ft.io/www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/2023/11/22/elon-musk-lawsuit-media-matters-republicans/

-;Elon Musk's new lawsuit against Media Matters, which X Corp. filed late Monday, has been dismissed by legal experts as a frivolous effort to bully a prominent critic into silence. But some Republicans apparently see this as a feature, not a bug: They are allying themselves with Musk's effort for precisely this purpose. Musk's suit charges that Media Matters deliberately and deceptively harmed X (formerly Twitter) with a widely-publicized investigation showing that posts containing pro-Nazi content appeared on X alongside advertisements from leading companies… Republicans are eagerly rushing to Musk's rescue — and not just rhetorically. Two GOP state attorneys general — Ken Paxton in Texas and Andrew Bailey in Missouri — have responded by announcing vaguely defined investigations into Media Matters. Meanwhile, Trump adviser Stephen Miller is urging Republican law enforcement officials to probe Media Matters for "criminal" activity. And Mike Davis, who is touting himself as Donald Trump's next attorney general, has declared that Media Matters staff members should be jailed. The lawsuit, filed in federal court in Texas, doesn't deny that the juxtapositions between ads and pro-Nazi postings are real. Rather, it accuses Media Matters of creating an account following only fringe content and endlessly refreshing it until it finally generated the juxtapositions. Those are "extraordinarily rare," the suit says, but were deliberately engineered to disparage X, harm its revenue stream and interfere with its contracts with advertisers…"

AMERICA OVERSIGHT

While one abortion legal saga ends, other advocates launch signature collection campaign

https://www.news-leader.com/story/news/politics/2023/11/21/missouri-supreme-court-declines-appeal-abortion-rights-case/71665450007/

-"In a long-fought legal victory for some abortion-rights advocates, the Missouri Supreme Court declined to hear two cases challenging the ballot summary language and fiscal note summary for initiative petitions seeking to enshrine reproductive rights in the state constitution. Missouri Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft's ballot language was challenged by the filer of the petitions and the ACLU of Missouri for being biased and misleading. Both the Cole County Circuit Court and Missouri Western District Court of Appeals agreed and provided new ballot summary language… The Western District Court of Appeals mostly agreed with Beetem's summary language, but found that the circuit court erred when it failed to include language that indicated that these initiative petitions would remove the ban on abortion "at any stage of gestation."… Another case heard alongside the challenge to Ashcroft's ballot summary language sought to strike down Auditor Scott Fitzpatrick's fiscal note summary that estimates any projected monetary gains or losses to the state if the ballot initiative passes… These lawmakers raised concerns that the state could lose its federal Medicaid funding, a claim contradicted by the Department of Social Services, which manages the state's Medicaid program, which said it foresees no fiscal losses. Additionally, the fiscal note summary includes an estimated loss of $51,000 in potential future tax revenue from Greene County — based on the idea that legal abortions would reduce the number of future taxpayers — which the plaintiffs thought Fitzpatrick should have extrapolated statewide… After months of legal battles, Dr. Anna Fitz-James, who filed 11 of 17 initiative petitions to restore access to abortion in Missouri, along with Missourians for Constitutional Freedom, a political action committee, will have the final ballot summary language to circulate as supporters collect signatures. They will need to collect more than 171,000 signatures by early May to be included on the 2024 ballot… Another group seeking to restore limited access to abortions in Missouri is facing its own legal challenges, but that isn't stopping their efforts to collect signatures. Jamie Corley, in conjunction with the Missouri Women and Family Research Fund, is also challenging ballot summary language prepared by Ashcroft, and a fiscal note summary prepared by Fitzpatrick, including a large cost estimate from Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey… Bailey said it would cost $21 million to litigate abortion-related legal challenges, as his office will refuse to hear these cases, forcing state clients to seek outside counsel paid for by taxpayer funding. "I'm concerned that a court may look at my advocacy and the wins I've delivered in defense of the Missouri Heartbeat Bill, which I believe to be the proper policy position to protect the health and safety of women and children in the state of Missouri, and might block me from defending that measure in court, and that would cost the state of Missouri," Bailey said. The primary challenge to Bailey's cost estimate is the fact that his office is up for election this year, meaning that, if he fails to win, his successor may not be so opposed to litigating abortion cases. "At the end of the day, the people's elected representatives enacted a bill that reflects the values of the people of the state of Missouri that protects women and children's health and safety, and I think that every attorney general should be defending that state statute," Bailey said. "

-"An internal review committee has determined that the controversial book "Bang Like a Porn Star: Sex Tips From the Pros," should be removed from the St. Charles City-County Library system — just not right away. Twenty people are waiting to check the book out, said St. Charles City-County Library CEO Jason Kuhl, so it will be removed once that waiting list is clear. The 175-page book, published in 2018, became a lightning rod of controversy at recent library board meetings when parents began pushing for the book's removal. It features interviews with several gay adult film stars and photographs detailing various sex acts. It was the photographs that some critics said were too sexually explicit for inclusion in a public library. Ultimately, the committee of library employees agreed. Kuhl said in a statement Tuesday that the review committee found the book "did, indeed, have explicit photographs that seemed unrelated to the text they should have been illustrating.'"

Red State Supreme Court Deals Blow To Republicans In Crucial Abortion Ballot Case

https://dailycaller.com/2023/11/21/red-state-supreme-court-declines-politically-partisan-appeal-abortion-ballot-language/

-"The Missouri Supreme Court ruled against Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft's request to change the language of a proposed abortion amendment's language Monday, according to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. An appeals court had ruled earlier this month that Ashcroft's summaries of the amendment were "argumentative" and "politically partisan" because of his use of terms like "unborn child," which the court considered "problematic." Ashcroft appealed the decision to the state Supreme Court but the justices declined to hear his appeal, according to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. The proposed amendment language could range from creating a constitutional right to abortion up to 24 weeks or to not specifying a gestational limit on having the procedure… Once the wording is set in stone, the amendment's advocates have until May to gather 170,000 signatures in at least six of Missouri's eight congressional districts in order to get the proposal on the ballot for next fall, according to St. Louis Public Radio."

Greene County lawmakers had much to be thankful for from 2023 legislative session

-"As legislators prepare to return to the Missouri Capitol in January, those representing Greene County reflect upon what they were thankful for during the previous legislative session, while also looking ahead to their hopes for the 2024 legislative session. Rep. Bishop Davidson, who represents the 130th District in the Missouri House of Representatives, is thankful for the friendships he has formed during his time in office. Davidson was elected in 2020… Davidson speculates that, while most people value the friendships formed in their lifetime, few of them are truly tested in the way that friendships formed in the political sphere can be… Sen. Lincoln Hough, chair of the appropriation committee, is thankful for the educational wins benefiting all levels of the learning process. Although some proposals meant to address the state's teacher shortage were unsuccessful, lawmakers did guarantee public school teachers make at least $38,000 annually. Also, legislation loosened rules for retired teachers wanting to work as substitute teachers so that their requirement benefits are not at risk. Funding for the Career Ladder Program was doubled, allowing school districts to provide compensation to teachers who take on extra roles and responsibilities… Riley hopes to see additional legislative focus on advancing education in the state during the upcoming legislative session… Hough is also thankful for the success of legislation aimed at supporting first responders and their mental health. The fund will help first responders, including firefighters, ambulance, workers, 911 operators and others working in the field… Rep. Melanie Stinnett, District 133, was pleased to see legislation, a version of which she sponsored, that will advance access to health care for Missouri residents living with a disability… Rep. Bill Owen, District 131, was pleased to see that legislation expanding retirement benefits offered by Missouri businesses made its way to the governor's desk… Most Greene County legislators who were asked what they were hopeful for in the upcoming legislative session gave a similar reply — a productive session bolstered by bipartisan communication and compromises… With the 2024 elections on the horizon, at every level from local school boards to the U.S. president, Hough knows that there are bound to be disagreements among candidates and lawmakers. "My hope would be for everyone to just keep a respectful demeanor when we're engaging in debates and philosophical differences and different proposals," Hough said…"

Missouri to boost opioid treatments with money from painkiller settlements

-"With millions of dollars flowing into the state budget from a series of landmark settlements with drugmakers, Missouri has begun looking to expand treatment options for people addicted to painkillers. In bidding documents issued earlier this month, the Missouri Department of Mental Health is seeking 10 organizations to supply recovery and prevention services "that are innovative, impactful and designed to address the current opioid crisis facing Missouri." The contracts, each worth $100,000, are being targeted at cities and counties in the state that have been disproportionately affected by the opioid crisis, said DMH spokeswoman Debra Walker… According to a state tally, more than 23,100 Missourians have died due to an overdose during the past 20 years, with more than 70% of those deaths involving opioids… The $1 million outlay is part of more than $50 billion in settlement funds delivered to thousands of state and local governments from pharmaceutical companies that flooded the nation with addictive painkillers. Missouri and its subdivisions will receive more than $900 million over the next 18 years if the state continues to achieve full settlement participation, the agency said. Under most of the settlements, states must spend at least 85% of the money they receive over the next 15 years on addiction treatment and prevention. For the current fiscal year, five state departments have received appropriations from the settlements totaling $18.9 million… The state also plans to spend $100,000 to distribute fentanyl test strips, which could reduce the chances of an accidental drug overdose. Money also is being spent on addressing painkiller use in pregnant women. Local governments, including 93 counties and 50 cities, have received more than $28 million in funds. While DMH already provides prevention and recovery support services through a network of contractors, the 10 additional contracts will target substance use in individuals between age 12 and 21… The website is expected to be available in March 2024. Bids for the 10 contracts are due Nov. 30."

Daily Caller l Jason Cohen

-"The technology, known as "intelligent speed assistance" (ISA), tracks vehicle locations and matches them with the corresponding speed limits, according to the press release. At the very least, the NTSB is advocating for ISA systems that issue warnings to speeding drivers, but the technology can also make it increasingly challenging or impossible to go over the speed limit… NTSB cannot craft regulations but it recommends them for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA), according to TechCrunch. The NTSB made eight recommendations, including, for the NHTSA to "Require ISA systems that, at a minimum, warn a driver a vehicle is speeding" and for 17 automobile manufacturers to implement the analogous technological function into every new car… The NHTSA requested public comments on the topic of adding ISA to new car assessments and how robust the technology should be, the spokesperson told the DCNF. The agency is still evaluating the comments and working on its ultimate decision."

-"Justice Clarence Thomas dissented from the Supreme Court's decision this week not to review a $40 million verdict an Ohio man, Travis Abbott, won against DuPont. Mr Abbott said toxic "forever chemicals" the company released into the water supply gave him cancer. Justice Thomas wrote in a dissenting opinion on Nov. 20 that not taking the case could have repercussions "in potentially thousands of cases" and could interfere with the defendants' Sixth Amendment right to a jury trial. The Court denied the petition for certiorari, or review, in E.I. du Pont de Nemours and Co. v. Abbott (court file 23-13), in an unsigned order. It didn't explain the decision. At least four of the nine justices must vote for a petition for it to move forward to the oral argument stage. Meta collected children's data from Instagram accounts, unsealed court document alleges
https://www.cnn.com/2023/11/26/business/meta-collecting-data-children-facebook/index.html

-"Since at least 2019, Meta has knowingly refused to shut down the majority of accounts belonging to children under the age of 13 while collecting their personal information without their parents' consent, a newly unsealed court document from an ongoing federal lawsuit against the social media giant alleges. Attorneys general from 33 states have accused Meta of receiving more than a million reports of under-13 users on Instagram from parents, friends and online community members between early 2019 and mid-2023. However, "Meta disabled only a fraction of those accounts," the complaint states. The federal complaint calls for court orders prohibiting Meta from the practices the attorneys general allege violate the law… According to the 54-count lawsuit, Meta violated a range of state-based consumer protection statutes as well as the Children's Online Privacy Protection Rule (COPPA), which prohibits companies from collecting the personal information of children under 13 without a parent's consent… One Meta product designer wrote in an internal email that the "young ones are the best ones," adding that "you want to bring people to your service young and early," according to the lawsuit… The unsealed complaint also alleges that Meta knew that its algorithm could steer children toward harmful content, thereby harming their well-being. For example, Meta researchers conducted one study in July 2021 that concluded Instagram's algorithm may be amplifying negative social comparison and "content with a tendency to cause users to feel worse about their body or appearance," according to the complaint… In a March 2021 internal investigation looking at eating disorder content, Meta's team followed users whose account names referenced starvation, skinniness and disordered eating. Instagram's algorithm then began generating a list of recommended accounts "that included accounts related to anorexia," the lawsuit states… Senior leadership at Instagram also knew that problematic content was a critical issue for the platform, the lawsuit states… However, despite the company's internal research confirming concerns with social comparison on its platforms, the lawsuit alleges Meta refused to change its algorithm. One employee noted in internal communications cited in the lawsuit that content inciting negative appearance comparisons "is some of the most engaging content (on the Explore page), so this idea actively goes against many other teams' top-line measures." Meta was also aware that its recommendations algorithms "trigger intermittent dopamine releases in young users" which can lead to addictive cycles of consumption on its platforms, according to internal documents cited in the lawsuit… Eight additional attorneys general sued Meta last month in various state courts, making similar claims to the massive multistate federal lawsuit. Florida sued Meta in its own separate federal lawsuit, alleging the company misled users about potential health risks of its products."

Elon Musk Sues Media Matters Over Report Stating Ads Appeared Next to Antisemitic Content
https://jewishjournal.com/news/united-states/365569/elon-musk-sues-media-matters-over-report-stating-ads-appeared-next-to-antisemitic-content/

-"Elon Musk announced on Monday that X, formerly known as Twitter, will be suing the left-wing Media Matters watchdog over a report claiming that ads were appearing next to antisemitic content. The defamation lawsuit reportedly alleges that Media Matters used test accounts to follow only extremist and well-known brand accounts and kept "refreshing" their feed until ads appeared next to pro-Nazi content… X CEO Linda Yaccarino posted on Monday, "If you know me, you know I'm committed to truth and fairness. Here's the truth. Not a single authentic user on X saw IBM's, Comcast's, or Oracle's ads next to the content in Media Matters' article. Only 2 users saw Apple's ad next to the content, at least one of which was Media Matters. Data wins over manipulation or allegations. Don't be manipulated. Stand with X." Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton (R) also announced on Monday that he will be investigating Media Matters for possible fraudulent activity regarding the results of the report. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey (R) posted on X that his "team is looking into this matter."… Another controversy that X is facing is a report from the leftist organization Media Matters stating that ads from companies like Apple, Amazon and Oracle are appearing next to far-right antisemitic posts, which appear to have also played a role in these companies pausing their ads on X. An X executive told Axios that the platform has demonetized the accounts behind the antisemitic posts and the posts will have a "Sensitive Media" label on them."

Elon Musk has also threatened to file a "thermonuclear lawsuit" against Media Matters after they published their report, which cast X (formerly Twitter) in a negative light amid the exodus of several major brands who had been advertising on the social media platform… Attorney General Bailey's office will be investigating the allegations that Media Matters created social media accounts to game the platform's servers and create false impressions. After Musk asked conservative attorneys general in the U.S. to investigate Media Matters on X, Bailey responded: "My team is looking into this matter." Bailey is known for defending the First Amendment, suing the Biden administration over violations of free speech and filing a joint-amicus brief with a group of other attorneys general against the gag order on former President Donald Trump related to his January 6 case…"

-"Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton has launched an investigation into Media Matters for alleged "potential fraudulent activity" following reports attacking Elon Musk's X/Twitter… The investigation aims to prevent public deception by leftist organizations and will be conducted under Texas laws against deceptive trade practices. This situation has also drawn interest from the Missouri Attorney General, indicating a broader legal scrutiny of Media Matters. The case has significant implications for social media regulation and the perception of watchdog groups, and it intersects with other challenges faced by Musk and X."

Dismissed Lawsuit Against Missouri's Voter ID Law May Be Revived By Judge Following Addition Of New Plaintiff

https://ussanews.com/2023/11/25/dismissed-lawsuit-against-missouris-voter-id-law-may-be-revived-by-judge-following-addition-of-new-plaintiff/

-"The latest example comes out of Missouri, where a judge will soon decide whether to revive a lawsuit that was previously dismissed following the addition of a new plaintiff, according to Fox News. The suit challenges the constitutionality of a 2022 law passed by Missouri's Republican-led legislature that would require voters to show a photo ID to cast a ballot… According to the Associated Press, the original lawsuit was filed on behalf of two Missouri voters by the state's League of Women Voters organization and the state's chapter of the NAACP… That claim was dismissed by Cole County Presiding Judge Jon Beetem in October last year, as he determined that the two voters had failed to allege "a specific, concrete, non-speculative injury or legally protectable interest in challenging the photo ID requirement." Now, however, a new plaintiff has been added to the case — a 90-year-old man with an expired driver's license and passport who was able to obtain a valid non-photo ID with assistance — and the judge will soon decide whether or not to revive the dismissed case. One of the Missouri officials defending the new voter ID law is Republican Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft… Also defending the law in court, per that AP report, is Republican Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey, who asserted in a legal filing, "There is not a severe burden on the right to vote as the State has gone to great lengths to help voters obtain IDs." Contrary to media reporting and the cries of Democratic activists, there is exceptionally broad and bipartisan support for photo ID requirements of the sort that Missouri is currently defending in court. In fact, according to an October 2022 Gallup survey, around 79% of all Americans say that all voters should be required to provide a photo ID to election officials before being permitted to cast their ballot. Per the AP, there are already 36 states that require voters to show some sort of proof of their identification in order to vote, with the requirement in at least 20 of those states including an ID that features a photo of the individual…"

Boyd and Stephanie Householder: Circle of Hope Owners Are Facing Legal Action

-"Boyd and Stephanie Householder certainly did seem to fit the bill, given the actions that they were accused of having committed as the founders of Circle of Hope. So, it is only natural that their current whereabouts are something that we cannot help but wonder about. Based in Cedar County, Missouri, Boyd and Stephanie Householder are a married couple who established the Circle of Hope Girls Ranch. Affiliated with IFB, they were responsible for overseeing many young girls, though the happening with the Householder's home and establishment did not sit right with many… As for the young girls who were seemingly under the case of the Householders, many of them have come forward to share exactly what had been going on at the establishment… According to the further stories shared by Drew, the girls were often asked to discipline each other, including meeting out punishment whenever a rule was allegedly broken. Some of the punishments enforced by the Hsoueholders included girls throwing each other around, sitting on others, and forcefully restraining someone who was apparently to be punished. The Householders themselves would apparently restrain some of the girls with handcuffs and zip ties. However, Drew's story did not end there as she went on to detail how Boyd Householder would often touch her inappropriately and kiss her… Boyd and Stephanie Householder were arrested in March 2021 following the numerous charges that were levied against them. The couple were charged with more than 100 felonies connected to their actions against all those who have spoken against the two. The majority of charges, more specifically 80, were levied against Boyd for acts of sexual misconduct and neglect of minors under his care. By August 2022, nearly thirty lawsuits had been filed against the Householders in about two years. Circle of Hope Girls Ranc was also closed following the legal accusations against the establishment and its owners… Their trial, which was scheduled to begin in November 2023, is much anticipated. It has been revealed that the Missouri Attorney General has offered Stephanie a plea deal should she agree to testify against her husband, though her response to the same has yet to be made public."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

-"The National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) is the spending bill that includes the budgets for all of the U.S. armed forces. Hawley said in a social media post Wednesday that he will vote against the bill unless Senate leaders "include compensation for the victims of nuclear contamination in Missouri." The Missouri Republican also said he would use "every available means" to slow the bill's passage. Atomic bombs were manufactured in St. Louis during World War II and radioactive waste was stored afterwards near Lambert International Airport. Some of that waste made its way into nearby Coldwater Creek in St. Louis County, and just over a year ago a nearby elementary school closed after readings showed elevated radiation levels on campus. Also, numerous drums of radioactive waste were illegally dumped at a landfill in Bridgeton in the early 1970's, according to the Missouri Independent."

New lawsuit filed seeking answers about sludge application on land in Newton County
The Joplin Globe l John Hacker
https://finance.yahoo.com/news/lawsuit-filed-seeking-answers-sludge-233500961.html?guccounter=1

-"Residents around Fairview are angry about the odor and have fears about the risks stemming from a waste sludge product applied to land around their homes. About 200 of them gathered recently to discuss their concerns and what they can do about them. They hope a lawsuit filed on their behalf might produce some answers. In the meantime, lawmakers representing Newton and McDonald counties say they are looking for legislative solutions. Vallerie Steele, of Fairview, is a member of a local residents group called SLUDGE, or Stop Land Use Damaging our Ground and Environment. She said an Arkansas company, Denali Water Solutions, has built two wastewater basins and is applying the product of those basins as fertilizer, causing terrible odors, affecting land values and lifestyles, and perhaps damaging the environment… "It's a nuisance if nothing else because of the stench. It is thick because of fats and oils in it. It's more than a smell. It's horrendous. Even the people land applying are affected whether they want to admit it or not." Denali officials deny they are causing any harm. They say they are helping farmers because the waste they apply to fields is used as free fertilizer. Denali, based in Russellville, Arkansas, identifies itself as "a specialty waste and environmental services company" and said that it repurposes and recycles multiple organic waste streams… The company also previously told the Globe it strives to protect the environment, meet or exceed compliance in every state and provide the best value to its customers… Approximately 200 residents gathered at the John Q. Hammons Community Center in Fairview on Nov. 10 in a meeting, hosted by SLUDGE, an attorney who has filed lawsuits on behalf of the group and lawmakers, about what can be done. It was the second such meeting this year. Nearly 300 residents from Southwest Missouri gathered in February in Neosho to learn more about what is being sprayed on area fields and to voice similar concerns… attorney Stephen Jeffery, representing SLUDGE, who told them the company spread sludge as fertilizer for a number of years under a special exemption issued by the Missouri Fertilizer Control Board. That exemption allowed it to spread the waste as fertilizer without applying for solid waste management permits from the Missouri DNR. That changed in July of this year when the Fertilizer Control Board, under pressure from area lawmakers, decided it would not issue new permits for using waste as fertilizer. That prompted Denali and other waste disposal companies to sue the board, claiming it acted illegally by denying their permit requests. In the meantime, the DNR officials told the Globe earlier this month that Denali has continued to operate under an enforcement document issued by the state that addresses regulatory requirements. They also said the company is in the process of applying for permits under the Missouri Clean Water Law to operate lagoons and spread the waste products on land in Southwest Missouri. The issue was aggravated further on Oct. 20 after another spill… Denali workers vacuumed up the spill with a pumper truck. Denali team members and contractors removed the affected soil from the road, and lime was applied. The company and its contractors arranged for gravel to be delivered and spread on Quince Road after the spill… Then Jeffery talked about the first lawsuit that SLUDGE filed against the DNR and how the group was dismissing that in favor of a new lawsuit that he said more directly addresses the situation in Newton and McDonald counties. Jeffery said on Monday, Nov. 21, that a new lawsuit was filed in Cole County on Nov. 14 and was accepted by the Cole County Circuit Court on Nov. 20, with summons to be delivered to the Missouri DNR soon after that. Jeffery told the crowd on Nov. 10 that the first local lawsuit was based on one he filed for a group of residents in Randolph County regarding a Denali water treatment basin in that county, but the situation is different in Newton and McDonald counties, prompting the decision to dismiss the first SLUDGE lawsuit and file a new one… "The new lawsuit asks a judge to find that the DNR has been allowing Denali Water Solutions LLC to operate wastewater basins and apply the sludge it gets from those basins to farm land as fertilizer without proper solid waste permits from the state."… State Sen. Jill Carter, representing Jasper and Newton counties, said she and other lawmakers in areas affected by the odors of waste disposal on farm land are working on model legislation that could close some of the legal loopholes that allow this to happen. "It needs to be handled legislatively, either through the Legislature or through the courts, and often times the court will give deference to the Legislature to fix some things," Carter said. "DNR does promulgate some of its own rules, so this is just a system to keep them in check…"

Allegations against Lake Saint Louis lawmaker met with 'silence' in St. Charles County

-"The headache for state Rep. Justin Hicks has been brought on by a challenger in the Aug. 6 Republican primary, Max Calfo, who earlier this year unveiled a page on his website called "The Real Hicks" with records he says he obtained from an individual no longer active in politics. Calfo says Hicks, 30, an Army veteran, falsely claimed to have fought in battle. And, he said a woman in 2010 accused the lawmaker, when he was 17, of attempting to choke her… "I can't speak to his character now. I mean, I believe people can change," the woman said, asking that her name be withheld from publication. "I feel it is in the past for me, but I just hope this isn't happening to anyone else."… So far, Calfo, 34, a former Wentzville School District teacher who was raised in Connecticut, says his allegations have been met with "general silence."… Calfo's broadsides include an open letter in September drawing two additional members of the House Republican caucus into the fray, state Reps. Tricia Byrnes of Wentzville and Holly Jones of Eureka. He said both lawmakers had hired him as their legislative assistant, and that Byrnes forced him out of his job in January after a monthslong pressure campaign against him releasing the information on Hicks… Byrnes called Calfo "just a hack" who was "slandering people… Calfo published a purported protective order issued Nov. 4, 2010, against Hicks along with a petition for order of protection in St. Louis Circuit Court. Also pictured is a final protective order, dated Nov. 19 that year. John O'Sullivan, spokesman for the St. Louis County Circuit Court, said the forms pictured appeared to be documents used by St. Louis County courts at that time. He said he couldn't confirm the existence of the records that Calfo posted. But the woman who sought the court-ordered protection on Friday vouched for the authenticity of the documents… In the Nov. 19 order of protection, Hicks was told to stay away from the petitioner's house. Hicks was also directed to attend counseling with a licensed professional for 12 consecutive weeks unless he "is shipped out."… Calfo also claimed Hicks lied about his military record with statements such as "I've spent my life fighting for this country on battlefields" in campaign literature as well as his statement that he "fought in wars" in a 2022 radio interview… Bryce Dubee, a U.S. Army spokesman, told the Post-Dispatch that Hicks served as a human resources specialist in the Army between April 2011 and September 2017. "He deployed to the United Arab Emirates from July 2012 to May 2013 and held the rank of Sergeant at the end of service," Dubee said, adding that his awards included the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, the Global War on Terrorism Expeditionary Medal and Overseas Service Ribbon… Interviews with local Republican officials revealed a distaste for Calfo's political attacks. "I don't know how much validity there is to it.... I don't believe in mudslinging personally," said Tom Gallaher, Republican committeeman for the Lake Saint Louis Township…"

Republican LG hopeful files lawsuit seeking to toss out 71 Missouri initiative petitions

Missouri Independent l Rudi Keller

-"The court case filed in Jefferson City by Paul Berry III argues that campaign finance filings are wrong or missing for petitions to reinstate abortion rights, outlaw ranked-choice voting, hike the minimum wage and give local governments the power to restrict open carrying of firearms. As a result, Berry argues, Ashcroft should have rejected the petitions instead of certifying them for backers to begin gathering signatures… Though he isn't an attorney, Berry represented himself in those cases and is doing so in his latest lawsuit. The lawsuit alleges Ashcroft improperly certified ballot measures that failed to meet legal requirements in their initial filings… For six of the initiatives, filed Aug. 30 by Jamie Corley of St. Louis and stating that the Missouri Women and Family Resea The Missouri Women and Family Research Fund did not formally organize a PAC until Nov. 15. Its filing states it is a continuing committee, meaning it is not necessarily focused on a single ballot measure campaign or candidate.

-rch Fund is helping pay the costs, the ethics form was not submitted, Berry'slawsuit contends.For the remainder, Berry's lawsuit argues they have the wrong type of committee. In response to questions from The Independent, Ashcroft's office stated that it has never rejected a petition over the documentation of ethics filings. However, the group has decided on a particular ballot measure, Corley announced last week. The ethics commission filing has not been updated. Berry contends it should have been organized as a campaign committee, which state law says has the "sole purpose is to support or oppose the qualification and passage of one or more particular ballot measures…" The other initiative filings Berry is challenging are: Three versions of an initiative filed by former Judge Jimmie Edwards and a group called SensibleMO to allow local enact ordinances governing possession and carrying of firearms. 38 initiatives filed by Richard von Glahn, backed by the Jobs with Justice Ballot Fund, to increase the minimum wage and require employers to offer paid sick leave. [And,] 24 initiatives filed by Frederic Steinbach with support from a committee called Missouri Agrees, that would establish ballot access and voting rules to prevent enactment of ranked-choice voting. For those initiatives, Berry's lawsuit argues their committees are improperly organized as continuing committees when they should be registered as campaign committees…"

Gov. Parson pardons more than any Missouri governor since the 1940's

-"Governor Mike Parson has pardoned more than 600 people in the past three years. That's more than any Missouri governor since the 1940's. Parson is a former sheriff; he says he still believes in law and order and that criminals must be held accountable. But he adds, "It doesn't mean they've been criminal all their lives." "I think it's important to me that we set a standard so people know what happens when you commit a crime. There are going to be consequences. You've learned to accept that, and once you realize that, yeah, I made a mistake," said Gov. Mike Parson. So far, Gov. Parson has granted 613 pardons and commuted 20 sentences. He has also denied about 2,400 clemency requests."

Local lawmakers speak out on school funding

-"A new plan by the Missouri schools agency would add $235 million to a formula that governs how much each school district gets from the state, and area legislators will have a major say on this. Sen. Rusty Black, R-Chillicothe, who represents the area north and east of St. Joseph, said the General Assembly has a basic duty to fully fund the formula as presented. Black is a retired high school agriculture teacher. His understanding was that the amount of the proposed formula increase may be lower than $235 million, but either way, in his opinion, it ought to be fully funded. That could occur sometime after the Legislature reconvenes in January for the 2024 session… At present, the state budgets for a payment of $6,375 per year for every student who attends a given school district. The ask from the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education is to raise this target to $7,145, over two years. The payment has remained at $6,375 for the last five years, which is usually enough to pay about one-third of any given school district's budget. That means Missouri, out of 50 states, ranks near the bottom in state budgetary support for districts. Sen. Tony Luetkemeyer, R-Parkville, who represents St. Joseph, Platte County and much of the Kansas City Northland, said he has yet to review the DESE proposal, but considers the Legislature to have fully funded school needs up to this point… Black and Luetkemeyer's Republican Party dominates the Legislature, particularly the Senate, where GOP members outnumber Democrats 24-10. That leaves Sen. Cindy O'Laughlin, R-Shelbina, in the driver's seat in this overall conversation. She is the majority leader. In a Nov. 9 interview with KSSZ 93.9 FM of Columbia, Missouri, O'Laughlin rejected DESE's plan… Because schools have to spend money on other things, often for reasons beyond their control, like federal bureaucracy, Black said, the Legislature still needs to do its part to help them pay those costs. Black indicated he doesn't embrace the rhetoric that too much state money goes to costs other than teacher salaries."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Missouri Farmland values opinion survey results

KZRG l Steve Smith

-"More than 300 responses were collected from Missouri lenders, farmers, rural appraisers and others familiar with Missouri land values in October 2023. Survey respondents gave estimates of land values for three classes of cropland and pastureland (good, average, poor), irrigated cropland, timberland and hunting/recreational land. Values for cropland, pasture, timber and hunting/recreational land all increased from 2022 to 2023, according to survey results. Hunting/recreation land had the largest statewide increase of value at 14%, followed by "average" and "poor" pastureland, both with 11% increases from 2022. This year's respondents reported the statewide average of "good" nonirrigated cropland at $8,631 per acre, a $313 (4%) increase from 2022. The statewide average of irrigated cropland was estimated at $9,678 per acre, a $534 (6%) increase from 2022… Respondents indicated rising interest rates applied downward pressure to farmland values; limited land available for sale and strong investor demand were indicated as factors pushing up the price of land in Missouri. "Looking ahead, our survey respondents forecast land prices to increase in 2024," said Tsay. "Interestingly, urban land prices are expected to increase the least, while land values in the west region of Missouri are estimated to increase anywhere from 11% to 14% next year…'"

The U.S. Department of Agriculture awarded the $25 million grant to Rob Myers, an adjunct professor in the MU College of Agriculture, Food and Natural Resources and director at the MU Center for Regenerative Agriculture. Myers said he is hoping up to 3,000 farmers will be directly involved with the project and that these climate smart practices will be on up to 500,000 acres of farmland. The five-year project is aimed at helping Missouri farmers adopt climate-smart practices that will ultimately help farmers improve the resiliency of their crops and livestock in the midst of growing threats from climate change, according to an MU news release…"

Supreme Court to Hear Arguments Surrounding Sentencing Rules for Armed Criminals

Epoch Times l Sam Dorman

-"The Supreme Court is set to hear oral argument on Nov. 27 over how courts should sentence criminal defendants under the federal Armed Career Criminal Act (ACCA). Passed in 1984, the ACCA imposes a 15-year minimum sentence for individuals who are found to illegally possess a firearm while having three violent felony or serious drug offense convictions. A problem has arisen with changing prohibitions on drugs under federal and state law. Two cases are challenging the idea that criminals should receive the 15-year sentence depending on how various laws scheduled certain drugs at particular times in the judicial process. Jackson v. United States is asking whether the ACCA incorporates federal drug schedules that were active at the time of the initial drug offense or when the defendant violates the ACCA's prohibition on possession of a firearm. Brown v. United States, meanwhile, is asking whether courts should look at federal drug schedules that were in place when the defendant was being sentenced. The ACCA's provisions have created what's known as a "circuit split,"… U.S. Solicitor General Elizabeth Prelogar argued that judges should consider a crime a "serious drug offense" if it qualified as such when the defendant committed the crime. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit ruled, however, in 2022 that those convictions didn't constitute "serious drug offenses" under ACCA because both Florida and the federal government had removed a particular type of cocaine, ioflupane, from their controlled substances schedules before Mr. Jackson possessed the firearm in 2017. In its opinion, the court explained that it analyzed Mr. Jackson's convictions with the "categorical approach," which the United States Sentencing Commission described as "the method for determining whether an offense (generally a prior conviction) fits within a given definition ... To do so, the court must compare the elements of the prior offense to the relevant definition."… The other case involves a man named Justin Brown, who argued that ACCA shouldn't apply to his state conviction for possession of marijuana because the federal government, by contrast, effectively decriminalized hemp through the Agriculture Improvement Act. Because hemp was removed from the federal ban on marijuana, it presented a narrower definition of the drug when compared to the state law."

Supreme Court May Consider If States Can Ban Honking at Political Rallies

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-may-consider-if-states-can-ban-honking-at-political-rallies-5535865

-"The Supreme Court may soon consider whether honking a car horn is a constitutionally protected form of free speech. Although Americans have long sounded the horns of their vehicles to express themselves politically, many states, including California, forbid honking the horn on one's automobile except to warn of a safety hazard. Officials say hitting the horn excessively dilutes the effectiveness of honking as a means of signaling danger or facilitating the flow of traffic. The justices are scheduled to consider the case, Porter v. Martinez (court file 23-423), at their private conference on Dec. 1. The case will move forward to the oral argument stage if at least four of the nine justices vote to grant the petition for certiorari, or review. The justices could make this decision on Dec. 1, or they could leave it for a subsequent private conference. Drivers honked their horns during the 2020 election cycle, an act that both President Joe Biden and former President Donald Trump "have recognized ... as a form of political expression," the petition filed with the court states… In May 2020, a convoy of truckers honked their horns to protest the government's trade policies, and in the process interrupted a speech President Trump was delivering in the Rose Garden of the White House. President Trump called out to the truckers, saying they were with him "all the way" and that the honking was "a sign of love."… The case goes back to Oct. 17, 2017, when petitioner Susan Porter of Oceanside, California, honked her horn 14 times to show support for people who were protesting Rep. Darrell Issa (R-Calif.) for his support of President Donald Trump… Section 27001 of the California Vehicle Code reads: "The driver of a motor vehicle when reasonably necessary to ensure safe operation shall give audible warning with his horn. ... The horn shall not otherwise be used, except as a theft alarm system." She showed up for traffic court on Dec. 12, 2017, but the citation was dismissed because the issuing sheriff's deputy failed to appear. Despite that, she sued in federal court in mid-2018, arguing that the California law violated the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Judge Gonzalo Curiel of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of California ruled against Ms. Porter on Feb. 5, 2021. Judge Curiel was appointed by President Barack Obama in 2012… The judge found that the state law passed constitutional muster and was "an appropriate regulation on the time, place, or manner of the protected speech and expression ... [and was] narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest, namely traffic safety and noise pollution…'"

Preferred Pronouns: US Border Agents Told to Use 'Woke' Language

-"The Biden administration has instructed U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) agents to not use gendered pronouns such as "he," "him," "she," and "her" when dealing with the public, according to an internal memo obtained by The Heritage Foundation… The guidance from the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) asks CBP staff to use "gender-neutral language" and the "self-identified pronouns and name" of any members of the public they interact with. "DO NOT use 'he, him, she, her' pronouns until you have more information about, or provided by, the individual," the memo states. It also cautions against using salutations such as "Mr., Mrs. Ms., Sir, Ma'am." The memo notes that it is generally talking about "individuals who identify as lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer or questioning, intersex, non-binary, and gender nonconforming."… The memo goes on to make the point that some LGBT-identifying people may "define these terms differently." "Keep in mind that gender identity (sense of self) and sexual orientation (attraction) are separate and distinct; hence, transgender people, for example, may identify as heterosexual, gay, lesbian, or bisexual," the memo also reads. Amid a historic illegal immigration crisis at the southern U.S. border, the memo has been called an "unnecessary distraction" by a union leader."

Jason Smith warns that higher taxes are coming if Biden 'has his way' financial situation many people face and how inflation has made it harder to keep up with expenses. When asked what taxpayers can expect in the future, Smith said the situation would "absolutely" worsen in 2024. "In less than 24 months, you'll see expirations of numerous tax proposals," Smith said on Fox News's Sunday Morning Futures with Maria Bartiromo. "In fact, every individual rate will increase. The child tax credit will be cut in half. The standard deduction will be cut in half, and the small business deduction will be eliminated if President Biden has his way. In his budget proposals, he's outlined that he wants more than $3.5 trillion in tax increases on all Americans." Smith also touched on the House's investigation into the Biden family's connection with China and how the president's son, Hunter Biden, had allegedly benefited from his business dealings overseas. The Republican lawmaker said it was "quite alarming" that Joe Biden has given China "a pass" for various matters, such as stealing the United States's intellectual property. "You could go line by line of numerous things that this administration is not holding China accountable, and it gives you a reason why is he not holding them accountable," Smith said…"

Schumer to send Biden's $106 billion supplemental package request to Senate floor as early as next week

Fox News l Jamie Joseph

https://www.foxnews.com/politics/schumer-send-bidens-106-billion-supplemental-package-request-senate-floor-early-next-week

-"Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., will bring the Biden administration's $106 billion national security funding request to the floor for a vote as early as next week, Schumer said in a Dear Colleague letter Sunday night… The White House's supplemental request, which was sent to Congress in October, includes $61.4 billion for Ukraine, $14.3 billion for Israel (with $10.6 billion allocated for military aid), $13.6 billion for some border security provisions, and significant investments in Indo-Pacific security assistance, totaling around $7.4 billion. Additionally, there's $9 billion earmarked for humanitarian aid in Ukraine, Israel and Gaza. But GOP lawmakers have thrown a wrench in plans to unanimously pass a supplemental that ties Ukraine and Israel aid together. Instead, they've argued for weeks that they should be split up and voted on separately. Republicans in the upper chamber also reject the border provisions, as outlined, and argue its current form does not address much-needed policy changes like stricter asylum standards at the southern border. The supplemental request only proposes more money to speed up processing of migrants, but no policy reforms… Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., and House Speaker Mike Johnson, R-La., have both signaled the GOP will pass more Ukraine funding if a deal is struck for tighter immigration laws… This week, Schumer also announced a classified all-senators briefing on the Ukraine-Russia war."

Honda Issues Recall That Could Impact Over 300,000 Vehicles Due To Seatbelt Defect

-"Honda is recalling more than 300,000 of its vehicles due to a missing piece in seatbelts which could reportedly increase the risk of injury in a crash, according to Fox Business. The 2023 and 2024 models of Honda's HR-Vs and Accords are not equipped with rivets designed to help seatbelts hold passengers in place during an accident, the outlet reported. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reportedly found the current seatbelts not compliant with various federal safety standards, including "Occupant Crash Protection," "Seat Belt Assemblies," and "Seat Belt Assembly Anchorages," per the outlet. While there have been no reported injuries, the Japanese carmaker will start sending recall letters Jan. 8, 2024 to affected owners and install rivets free of charge, the outlet noted."

The Biden Administration Is Scheming To Take Your Kids Away

https://thefederalist.com/2023/11/27/the-biden-administration-is-scheming-to-take-your-kids-away/

-"The Biden administration hasproposedrules for foster care, which would treat any parent rejecting LGBT ideology as a child abuser. The public comment deadline is today, the Monday after Thanksgiving, a bureaucratic middle finger to the public it is supposed to serve. The proposed regulations state that "to be considered a safe and appropriate placement, a provider is expected to utilize the child's identified pronouns, chosen name, and allow the child to dress in an age-appropriate manner that the child believes reflects their self-identified gender identity and expression." In short, those who don't believe the superstition that a child can somehow be born into the wrong body are, per the Biden administration, unfit to be foster parents. This won't stop with foster parents. Cutting Christians and other dissenters from the sexual revolution out of the foster care system is only the start. Given the government control of the foster care system, this is a convenient place for the left to establish the precedent that rejecting gender ideology and the rest of the LGBT movement's dogmas is abusive and harmful to children and that those who do so are unfit parents. Once they have set this point, they'll expand it to everyone else — after all, if it's abuse for foster parents, it's abuse for biological parents as well… The justification for these new rules is based on the usual junk science, created and pushed by activist organizations and those whose reputations and livelihoods depend upon validating transitioning children. For example, the Biden administration repeatedly cites a survey by the activists at The Trevor Project. This survey consisted of a self-selected online sample. The Biden administration wants to keep kids away from loving homes because the science told them to — the science of a self-selected online survey created by an activist group… Trying to take children away from "non-affirming" parents is the predictable result of the lies that children are born LGBT, and that sexual and gender identities are the essential core of our being. The belief that nothing is more authentic or important than sexual desire and "gender identity" is what lies behind the LGBT movement's fanatical drive to groom other people's children. It is why educators are eager to push sexually explicit material onto even very young children. It is why schools fill kids' minds with gender ideology, and then encourage them to transition without telling their parents. And it is why the left has wholeheartedly embraced medically "transitioning" children, sometimes starting before they are even teenagers. This wrongly termed "gender-affirming care" is incredibly abnormal medicine. It attempts to treat psychological distress by radically remaking the patient's body in a way that is completely medically unnecessary, indeed, medically harmful. As the proposed Biden administration rules make clear, there is no objective physical or psychological diagnosis for being transgender; rather, it is a purely subjective, self-diagnosed identity — a "self-identified gender identity and expression." And there is never any medical need to transition… This suicide narrative is used to rush children into transition, with almost all the power centers of our nation pushing them on. But studies show that children overwhelmingly desist from transgender identification if given time and counseling. The Biden administration nonetheless relies on threats of self-harm in making its case for the proposed rules for foster care. It is pure hostage-taking, done to enable the sterilization and sexual mutilation of children on the superstition that they are being born into the wrong bodies. In short, the Biden administration plans to treat parents who object to this grotesque medical malpractice as child abuse. They are coming for your children, and they aren't bothering to hide it anymore."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Hi Faune,

Please call him next Wednesday at 573-644-2424.

Some topics to talk about:

-His free speech case, Missouri v. Biden, for censorship on social media platforms will be heard at the United States Supreme Court

-He is investigating Media Matters (think Elon Musk)

-He filed a brief to remove the unconstitutional gag order on President Trump

-He released the Kim Gardner Report

Let me know if you need anything else!

Speaker 1 (00:28):

Please welcome Andrew Ross Sorkin and his guest, CEO of Tesla, CEO of SpaceX, chief engineer and CTO of X, Elon Musk.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (00:45):

Good evening, everybody. Thank you so much for being with us throughout the day. And I couldn't be more pleased to sit with Elon Musk as our final interview of this remarkable time we've all had together. He doesn't need much of an introduction, but I want to say a couple things. He's the richest person in the world.

Elon Musk (01:05):

What?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:05):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

He may very well be the most-

Elon Musk (01:09):

For now.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:09):

… consequential individual in the world right now. He runs the most innovative companies in the world, Tesla, SpaceX, Starlink, which is part of that Neuralink, The Boring Company, X, and X.AI. And he's disrupted each of these lanes. He's moved at breakneck speeds, but he's facing a storm of controversy in the process.

(01:32)
He joins us today following a visit, as you all know so well, and we discussed earlier, on Monday to Israel where he met with the prime minister there and the president of Israel. And we're going to talk about everything. And my hope is that we can talk about how he thinks about his influence, about his power, about all of it, and we're going to talk about innovation and everything else. I want to say just two other things real quick.

Elon Musk (01:55):

Sure.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:55):

We met each other for the first time 16 years ago.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:59):

Yeah, it's a long time.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (02:00):

It's been a long time. And-

Elon Musk (02:01):

Oldest kids were three.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (02:05):

When we first met, I think you were just about to deliver your first Roadster. I don't think you had yet. Larry Page was still waiting to get one.

Elon Musk (02:14):

Yeah, that's a bit like 2007.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (02:15):

2007, 2008. And I remember-

Elon Musk (02:18):

Roadster was a little bit 2008.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (02:19):

I remember going back to the newsroom and saying, "I think I just met the next Steve Jobs." And I'm going to hold to that, I'm going to hold to that.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But a lot has happened between when I first met you and now. You came to DealBook.

Elon Musk (02:36):

It's been boring, that's for sure. Wait, actually, technically I do have a boring company.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (02:42):

2012, you came to DealBook and sat on this stage and we're thrilled to have you back, but there's been so much that's happened between now and then and there's been so much that's happened in the past week, week and a half. And a lot of folks, and I want to tell you this, a lot of folks called me up and said, you really going to host Elon Musk here? Can you believe what he just said on X?

Elon Musk (03:08):

No idea what this Twitter thing is you keep talking about.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (03:10):

Should you platform him? That's what they said. Should you platform him? Then I said that I think that it's our role and I know you have issues with journalists.

Elon Musk (03:21):

I have a platform.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (03:22):

I know you have an issue with journalists oftentimes, but I said it's our role to have conversations and to inquire and sometimes even interrogate ideas and I'm hoping we can do that. So I want to start just so we can begin this conversation and just level set, take us through everything that happened if you could.

Elon Musk (03:44):

Everything?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (03:45):

No, over the past week and a half.

Elon Musk (03:46):

How long have you got?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (03:48):

We've got the time.

Elon Musk (03:50):

Okay.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (03:53):

You send out a post or an X or a tweet. I don't know what you want to describe it as.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (04:00):

I'm trying to change… When things were just 140 characters, it made sense to call them a tweet because a bunch of little bit chirping, but point in which you can put three-hour videos on, it's a very long tweet.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (04:12):

So here we are.

Elon Musk (04:13):

This is more descriptive I think.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (04:15):

And at some point, I don't know where you were, but you write in responding to another tweet, "This is the actual truth," and it's set off a firestorm of criticism all the way to the White House, and then you make this trip to Israel. You have advertisers who've left the platform, people calling you-

Elon Musk (04:38):

Well, the trip to Israel is independent of… It wasn't some apology tour. I want to be clear. That was-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (04:45):

Let's talk about that. But just take us back to the moment at which you write that.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (04:50):

Trip to Israel is independent of… It wasn't in response to that at all.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (04:54):

We'll do Israel in just a moment.

Elon Musk (04:55):

And I have no problem being hated by the way.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (04:59):

I hear you-

Elon Musk (04:59):

Hate away.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (05:01):

Well, but you know what, let's go straight to that then for a second. Because there is an idea and you could say that-

Elon Musk (05:10):

I think it's a real weakness to want to be liked, a real weakness. I do not have that.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (05:16):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Let me ask you this then. There's a difference between saying, I don't care if anyone likes me or they hate me. But given your power and given what you have amassed and the importance you have, I would think you want to be trusted. I would think maybe you don't need to be liked or hated, but trusted matters. If X is going to become a financial platform where people are going to put their money, where the government's going to give you money for rockets, people are going to get into the cars. They need to ultimately decide that you are… They don't have to say that they love you, but that you are ultimately a decent and good human being.

Elon Musk (05:56):

Yes. I mean, I think I am, but I'm certainly not going to do some sort of tap dance to prove to people that I am. So as for trust, I mean I think we break that down in a few ways. If you want satellites sent to orbit reliably, SpaceX will do 80% of all mass to orbit this year. China will do 12%. The rest of the world will do eight. That includes Boeing, Lockheed, and everyone else. So the track record of the rocket is the best by far of anything. You could hate my guts. You could not trust me. It is irrelevant. The rocket track record speaks for itself. With respect to Tesla, we make the best cars. Whether you hate me, like me or indifferent, do you want the best car or do you not want the best car? So I will certainly not pander. And Jonathan, the only reason I'm here is because you are a friend. What was my speaking fee?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (07:00):

You're not making any… First of all, I'm Andrew, but-

Elon Musk (07:04):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Yeah, sorry.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (07:05):

It's okay. Second of all, we've known each other for a very long time.

Elon Musk (07:08):

I've spoken. Yes.

(07:14)
Listen, what I'm trying to illustrate is that sometimes I say the wrong thing.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (07:25):

I think there are a lot of people who are tired, but let me go back.

Elon Musk (07:30):

No. No. You should hear the sketches that SNL wouldn't post, by the way. Those are really good.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (07:37):

And I would say unfortunately, or fortunately or unfortunately, whatever friendship we have, not great. We don't talk that much, but let me ask you this. It's true. That's true.

Elon Musk (07:47):

Where am I?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (07:48):

Doesn't return the phone calls.

Elon Musk (07:50):

I'm here because you're a friend, not because I'm being payable because I need any validation or anything, is that we've been friends for 16 years and I promise you I'd be here and that's why I'm here.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (08:02):

Well, I appreciate you being here.

Elon Musk (08:03):

Not for any other reason.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (08:04):

But let me ask you this then. Go at it. Just tell me what happened. You write this tweet that says that this is the actual truth. People read that tweet and they say Elon Musk is an antisemite, that he is riling up this base. You're hearing it from, as I said, the White House. You're hearing it from Jewish groups all over. I think Jonathan Greenblatt from the ADL is here. There's lots of people who say this. And by the way, it's not just that-

Elon Musk (08:34):

Did you read the whole thing?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (08:35):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I did. And that's why I want to ask you that-

Elon Musk (08:37):

The responses.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (08:38):

Excuse me?

Elon Musk (08:39):

I said more?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (08:40):

More responses?

Elon Musk (08:41):

Yeah, I said more than what you just read.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (08:43):

No, there was absolutely more, but I'll tell you the thing that struck me. And I'm an American Jew, it wasn't just the people who had that view. It was actually people who really are antisemites who said, oh my goodness, go Elon. This is fabulous. And that actually was the thing that really set me back. I said to myself, what's going on here? And I want to know how you felt about that in that moment when you saw all of this happening.

Elon Musk (09:18):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Yeah. Well, first of all, I did clarify almost immediately what I meant. I would say that that was… If I could go back and say I should in retrospect not have replied to that particular person, and I should have written in greater length as to what I meant. I did subsequently clarify it in replies, but those clarifications were ignored by the media. And essentially I handed a loaded gun to those who hate me. And arguably to those who are antisemitic. For that, I'm quite sorry. That was not my intention. So I did post on my primary timeline to be absolutely clear that I'm not an antisemitic and that I, in fact, if anything am [inaudible 00:10:12], and the trip to Israel was planned before any of that happened. It was neither here nor there. Do you see this thing? Do you know what it is?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (10:20):

I do. Because I actually followed your entire trip to Israel. Why don't you tell everybody

Elon Musk (10:28):

It says bring them home. The hostages. It was given to me by the parents of one of the hostages. And I said I would wear it as long as there was a hostage story remaining. And I have.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (10:50):

What was that trip like? And obviously you know that there's a public perception and you're clarifying this now, but there's a public perception that that was part of a apology tour, if you will. This had been said online.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

There was all of the criticism, there was advertisers leaving. We talked to Bob Iger today-

Elon Musk (11:09):

I hope they stop. Don't advertise.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (11:13):

You don't want them to advertise?

Elon Musk (11:14):

No.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (11:15):

What do you mean?

Elon Musk (11:18):

If somebody's going to try to blackmail me with advertising, blackmail me with money, go fuck yourself.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (11:27):

But-

Elon Musk (11:29):

Go fuck yourself. Is that clear? I hope it is. Hey, Bob, if you're in the audience.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (11:38):

Well, let me ask you then.

Elon Musk (11:41):

That's how I feel. Don't advertise.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (11:45):

How do you think then about the economics of X. If part of the underlying model, at least today, and maybe it needs to shift. Maybe the answer is it needs to shift away from advertising. If you believe that this is the one part of your business where you will be beholden to those who have this view-

Elon Musk (12:08):

GFY.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (12:11):

I understand that. But there's a reality too, right?

Elon Musk (12:17):

Yes. No, no.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (12:19):

I mean, Linda [inaudible 00:12:20] right here, and she's got to sell advertising.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (12:21):

Absolutely. So no, totally. So actually what this advertising boycott is going to do, it is going to kill the company.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (12:33):

And do you think that the-

Elon Musk (12:35):

And the whole world will know that those advertisers killed the company and we'll document it in great detail.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (12:42):

But those advertisers I imagine are going to say, they're going to say, we didn't kill the company.

Elon Musk (12:46):

Oh, yeah. They're going to say-

(12:48)
Tell to earth.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (12:50):

But they're going to say, Elon, that you killed the company because you said these things and that they were inappropriate things and that they didn't feel comfortable on the platform. Right?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (13:00):

That's what they're going to say. And let's see how earth responds to that.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (13:05):

Okay. Then this goes back to-

Elon Musk (13:06):

We'll both make our cases and we'll see what the outcome is.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (13:12):

What are the economics of that for you? I mean, you have enormous resources, so you can actually keep this company going for a very long time. Would you keep it going for a long time if there was no advertising?

Elon Musk (13:21):

I mean, if the company fails because of an advertised boycott, it will fail because of an advertised boycott, and that will be what bankrupted the company, and that's what everybody on earth will know.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (13:33):

What do you think… Then of this goes back to the idea of trust, though.

Elon Musk (13:36):

They'll be gone and it'll be gone because of an advertised boycott.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (13:40):

But you recognize that some of those people are going to say that they didn't feel comfortable on the platform. And I just wonder and ask you, and think about that for a second-

Elon Musk (13:50):

Tell it to the judge.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (13:52):

But the judge is going to be-

Elon Musk (13:53):

The judge is the public.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (13:55):

And you think that the public is going to say that Disney is making a mistake. And they're going to boycott Disney.

Elon Musk (14:04):

They already are.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (14:05):

Well, there are some that are for lots of different reasons. But this goes to actually the interesting of power and leverage.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (14:15):

Let the chips fall where they may. Let the chips fall where they may.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (14:21):

Can I ask why that is the approach, and I ask it because you've been-

Elon Musk (14:25):

What approach?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (14:26):

Well, you've been very particular about, I mean the approach to Tesla. When you think about the engineering involved in that, the approach to SpaceX, the approach to some of the stuff you're doing with AI has been very specific. There's not a let the chips fall where they may approach to those businesses, I don't think.

Elon Musk (14:44):

No. We focus on making the best products and Tesla has gotten to where it's gotten with no advertising at all.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (14:51):

I understand that.

Elon Musk (14:53):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Tesla currently sells twice as much in terms of electric vehicles, as rest of electric car makers in the United States combined. Tesla has done more to help the environment than all other companies combined. Would be fair to say that therefore as a leader of the company, I've done more for the environment than any single human on earth.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (15:17):

How do you feel about that?

Elon Musk (15:21):

How do I feel about that?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (15:21):

Yeah, no, I'm asking you personally how you feel about that because we're talking about power and influence and-

Elon Musk (15:26):

I'm saying what I care about is the reality of goodness, not the perception of it. And what I see all over the place is people who care about looking good while doing evil, fuck them. Okay?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (15:42):

Let me ask you this because I think part of this, by the way, there's some people who said, look, owning X to begin with has just created problems, that you've created so many amazing things that are changing our world. And I know you want to make X this fabulous town square free speech platform, but that unto itself, that has created such a distraction of all of these things. This is the conversation we're having. We're not talking, at least yet, and we will on Tesla. You have your cyber truck deliveries tomorrow and everything else that you're doing, but is there any-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (16:14):

Yes, it will be the biggest product launch of anything by far on earth this year.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (16:19):

Is there any part of you though that just says, you know what, I just shouldn't have done this. Or maybe I should sell it or give it away or do something else with the X piece of it, given the propensity for some of the things that you do and say on that platform to create these issues.

Elon Musk (16:46):

Of all the posts I've done on the platform, I think there might be 30,000 or something like that, right? Once in a while I'll say something foolish and I have. And I would certainly put that comment that you've said the actual truth among perhaps one of the most foolish, if not the most foolish thing I've ever done on the platform. And I did do my best to clarify afterwards that I certainly do don't mean anything antisemitic in that. The nature of the criticism was simply that the Jewish people have been persecuted for thousands of years. There is a natural affinity therefore for persecuted groups. This has led to the funding of organizations that essentially promote any persecuted group or any group with the perception of persecution. This includes radical Islamic groups. Everyone here has seen the massive demonstrations for Hamas in every major city in the west. That should be jarring. Well, a number of those organizations received funding from prominent people in the Jewish community. They didn't expect that to happen. But if you generically without condition sort of fund… If you fund persecuted groups in general, some of those persecuted groups unfortunately want your annihilation. And what I meant by that, when I subsequently clarified is that it's unwise to fund organizations that support groups that want your annihilation. Is this coming across clearly it at this point?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (18:52):

Yes, it is. My question to you though is-

Elon Musk (18:54):

I think logically this makes a lot of sense.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (18:56):

Is there any part of you… Just tell me what happens though once all of this happens.

Elon Musk (19:00):

Let's say you fund a group and that group supports Hamas who wants you to die. Perhaps you should not fund them, right?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (19:10):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But you do.

Elon Musk (19:10):

Thank you.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (19:10):

You do appreciate that when you wade into these very delicate waters, at these very delicate times, that it can create a real, as it created headlines for the past two weeks and economic impact. I'm just so curious in your brain when you see all this happening, are you sitting there going, oh my God, I stepped in it. I wish I didn't do that. Are you saying screw them? I hate these people. Why are they after me?

Elon Musk (19:44):

All of that. Yeah, all of that. I mean, look, I'm sorry for that tweet or post. It was foolish of me. Of the 30,000, it might be literally the worst and dumbest post that I've ever done. And I try to do my best to clarify six ways to Sunday. But at least I think over time it'll be obvious that in fact, far from being antisemitic, I'm in fact [inaudible 00:20:14] and all the evidence in my track record would support that.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (20:19):

Let me ask you this though. There are people who say crazy things on X as you know, maybe you think they're crazy, maybe they're not.

Elon Musk (20:28):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The aspiration for X is to be the global town square. Now, if you were to walk down to let's say Times Square, do you occasionally hear people saying crazy things?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (20:40):

Yes, but they don't have the megaphone, right? And that's the conundrum. They can only say it to the 50 or a hundred people that are standing there in Times Square.

Elon Musk (20:51):

I mean, look, the joke I used to make about old Twitter was it was like giving everyone in the psych ward a megaphone. So I'm aware that things can get promoted that are negative beyond the sort of circle of somebody simply screaming crazy things in Times Square, which happens all the time. Actually, it's pretty rare for something frankly that is hateful to be promoted. It's not that it never happens, but it's fairly rare. I mean, I would encourage people to look for those that use the system. When you look at the feed that you receive, how often is it hateful? And over time, has it gotten more or less hateful? I would say that if you look at the X platform today versus a year ago, I think it is actually much better. I mean, what is your personal experience?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (21:55):

Are you surprised?

Elon Musk (21:56):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I'm just curious. You use this-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (21:58):

I use the platform religiously. I would admit to being an addict. And I use the for you, and I will say… Now, the problem is because I'm a journalist, I go looking for stuff. I'm just saying. And I also think the algorithm for me personally, because I'm looking for stuff also is feeding me others things.

Elon Musk (22:20):

This is actually a challenge in that sometimes people will say, why is it showing me posts from this person that I hate? And we're like, well, did you interact a lot with this person that you hate? Well, yes. Well therefore thinks that you want to interact more with this person that you hate. That's like a reasonable-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (22:41):

Let me ask this.

Elon Musk (22:42):

If you kind of want to have an argument-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (22:44):

When you tweet-

Elon Musk (22:44):

Post.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (22:46):

Post, let's say post, when you post-

Elon Musk (22:48):

Listen, anyone can come up with a better word, that would be great.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (22:51):

When you post though-

Elon Musk (22:51):

But the least bad word I can think of is post.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (22:52):

When you post though, are you trying to rile up either a base or an audience? Do you recognize the power you have in that? And also by the way, not just rile up one side of it, but also rile down, which is to say, as I said, there are people who are demonstrably anti-semitic on the site who I get Jew boy things and all sorts of things that come my way.

Elon Musk (23:23):

For a while they thought I was Jewish, so I get it too.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (23:26):

But no, but the question-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (23:26):

My name is Super George.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (23:28):

Do you ever think to yourself, you know what, I'm going to go online and I'm going to say these people, I condemn these people that are on my site saying these things. Because-

Elon Musk (23:36):

I have said-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (23:38):

You say, I've condemned anti-antisemitism, but do you ever go-

Elon Musk (23:41):

Yeah, I said condemn… I literally posted, "I condemn antisemitism in all its forms." That is a, I believe, literal post that I made. I mean, I'm like, listen, if I can get out the thesaurus, if you, and we could-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (23:57):

Let me ask you a different question.

Elon Musk (00:00):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (24:00):

You compose it, I'll post it.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (24:02):

Okay. Let me ask you this. You were on a podcast about a month ago, and you said something that struck me and it struck me as accurate. It came out of your mouth, so hopefully it is. But I'm hoping we go deep on this.

Elon Musk (24:17):

Just because it came out of my mouth does not mean it's true. [inaudible 00:24:19].

Andrew Ross Sorkin (24:19):

No. But you said, "My mind is a storm. I don't think most people would want to be me. They may think they want to be me, but they don't know. They don't understand." What did you mean by that? Your mind being a storm. I have known you for quite some time, I think it is a bit of a storm.

Elon Musk (24:43):

Yes. Yeah. It as much as a weather metaphor makes sense. My mind often feels like a very wild storm. I have a fountain of ideas. I have more ideas than I could possibly execute, so I have no shortage of ideas. Innovation is not the problem. Execution is the problem. I've got a million ideas. I've got an entire design for an electric supersonic vertical takeoff jet, but if I just can't do that as well. I've had that for 10 years. There's a million things.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (25:24):

Is your storm a happy storm?

Elon Musk (25:30):

No.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (25:31):

It's not a happy storm?

Elon Musk (25:32):

No.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (25:34):

Tell us about that. Because I think that actually, when people try to really understand you, I think that a lot of this comes from some other place and I want to talk about that. Where do you think that is?

Elon Musk (25:57):

We need a psychiatrist couch here or something. I think to some degree, I was born this way and then I was amplified by a difficult childhood, frankly. But I can remember even in happy moments when I was a kid, that it just feels like there's just a rage of forces in my mind constantly. Now, this productively manifests itself in technology and building things for the most part. And I think on balance, the output has been very productive. I think the results, as we discussed earlier with SpaceX, Tesla, PayPal which is still going today, the first internet company that I started. In fact, the first internet company I started, Zipto, was funded by a New York Times Company, Hearst, Knight Ritter.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (27:09):

Yep. I remember.

Elon Musk (27:10):

And we wrote some of the software for the New York Times website and we helped bring online several hundred newspapers that previously were only in print. Now, this is in the '90s, which at this point is like, I'm like a grandpa basically. The '90s and internet feels like a pre-Cambrian era when there were only sponges. Anyway, I feel like a lot of productive things have been done. And you can also look at Tesla as being many companies in one. Like if the Tesla supercharging network were its own company, it would be a Fortune 500 company by itself, just the supercharging system. We also make the cells, we build the power electronics and the powertrain from scratch. We have the most innovative structural design, the largest castings ever used. We have the best manufacturing technology at Tesla, better manufacturing technology than companies that have been doing it for 100 years. So these demons of the mind are, for the most part, harnessed to productive ends.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (28:35):

Okay. So let me ask a question about that.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (28:36):

That doesn't mean… Once in a while they go wrong.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (28:47):

And this is a question I think a lot of people are always trying to figure out about, not just you, but sometimes themselves. Meaning what is driving all of this? You're doing all of these things. Do you think that you would be as successful, whatever success is, if it wasn't being driven by some… I think that there's something you're trying to prove either to yourself or to somebody. I don't know. We're all trying to prove something.

Elon Musk (29:11):

Prove to who.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (29:11):

Maybe I'm trying to prove it to my mother. I don't know.

Elon Musk (29:14):

No. If I were to describe my philosophy, it is a philosophy of curiosity. I did have this existential crisis when I was around 12, about what's the meaning of life? Isn't it all pointless? Why not just commit suicide? Why exist? I read the religious texts. I read the philosophy books. That, especially the German philosophy books, made me quite depressed frankly. Want you not read Schopenhauer Nietzsche as a teenager. But then I read Douglas Adams' Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, which is a book on philosophy in the form of humor. And the point that Adamus was making there was that we don't actually know what questions to ask. That's why I said that, the answer is 42. Basically earth's a giant computer and it came up with the answer 42. But then to actually figure out what the question is, that's the actual hard part. And I think this is generally true also in physics. At the point at which you can properly frame the question, the answer is actually the easy part.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(30:37)
So my motivation then was that, well, my life is finite, really a flash in the pan on a galactic timescale. But if we can expand the scope and scale of consciousness, then we are better able to figure out what questions to ask about the answer that is the universe. And maybe we can find out the meaning of life or even what the right question to ask is. Where do we come from? Where are we going? Where are the aliens? Are there aliens? These questions, is there new physics to discover? Because there seems to be some real questions around dark matter and dark energy. So the purpose of SpaceX is to extend life beyond earth on a sustained basis, so that we can at least pass one of the Fermi Great Filters, which is that of being a single-planet civilization.

(31:53)
If we are single-planet civilization, then we are simply waiting around for some extinction event, whether that is manmade or natural. But if you're a single-planet civilization, eventually something will happen to that planet and you will die. If you're a multi-planet civilization, you'll live much longer. Also, multi-planet civilization, that's the natural stepping stone to being a multi-stellar civilization and being out there among the stars. So now, this I think has two… This is not simply a defensive motivation, but it is also one where that gives meaning, man's search for meaning.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (32:37):

Can I ask you a different-

Elon Musk (32:40):

All right. Let me finish this philosophy point, even though it may seem rather esoteric, it may resonate with a few people. We must get past this Fermi Great Filter of being a single-planet civilization. And if we do that, we are more likely to understand the nature of the universe and what questions to ask. If you believe in the philosophy of curiosity, then I think you should support this ambition. Being a multi-planet species is more than simply life insurance for life collectively. That's a defensive reason. But I think also that life has to be more than simply solving one sad problem after another. There have to be reasons for you wake up in the morning and you're happy to be alive. There have to be reasons that you have to say, why are you excited about the future? What gives you hope? And if you aren't sure, ask your kids. And I think the idea of us being a space-faring civilization and being out there among the stars is incredibly inspiring and exciting and something to look forward to. And there need to be such things in the world.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (34:13):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Let me ask you a different question about confidence. We were having a conversation here earlier about people and where people get their confidence from. Some people have great insecurity, other people have great confidence. And I was thinking about you, because you have a very interesting history where people have told you over and over again that you're wrong.

Elon Musk (34:37):

Well, sometimes they're right.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (34:39):

Well, sometimes they are. But I would say that when it comes to Tesla, when it came to SpaceX, people told you that you were crazy, you were out of your mind, this was never going to happen.

Elon Musk (34:49):

Yes.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (34:50):

This was never going to work.

Elon Musk (34:53):

Yes. Yes.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (34:53):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And so the reason I ask you this though is now, when people say, you're wrong, this isn't right, do you look at that and say, you know what, that's a red flag for me because I've been told so often that I'm wrong and I know I'm right because I've had that experience? Or are there people in your life when they say, you know what, this is not right. Do you know what I'm saying?

Elon Musk (35:23):

I think what you trying to say is that, do I at this point think because I've been right so many times for others who said I'm wrong, that now I best believe I'm right when, in fact, I'm wrong?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (35:32):

You did very well. What do you think?

Elon Musk (35:37):

No, I'm right. So yeah, no, look, here's the thing. Physics is unforgiving. Physics is unforgiving. I have these various little sayings that I've come up with, that physics is the law and everything else is a recommendation.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (36:01):

Right.

Elon Musk (36:02):

In the sense that you can break any law made by humans, but try breaking a law made by physics. That's much more difficult. So if you are wrong and persist in being wrong, the rockets will blow up and the cars will fail. So we're not trying to figure out what flavor of ice cream is the best flavor of ice cream. There's 1,000 things that can happen on a rocket flight, and only one of them gets the rocket to orbit. And so being wrong results in failure when dealing with physical objects.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (36:46):

But that's the interesting part. So now you've built these great companies that physically, the physics of them are enormously successful. So successful arguably, that you have leverage over everybody else. Nobody else can do Starlink. Nobody else can get the rockets in space, yet Amazon and Jeff Bezos are trying, but they haven't yet.

Elon Musk (37:09):

I hope he does.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (37:10):

You hope he does?

Elon Musk (37:11):

Yeah. Yeah. I actually agree with a lot of Jeff's motivations. Let me put it this way, if there was a button I could press that would delete Blue Origin, I wouldn't press it. So I think it's good that he's spending money on making rockets too. I'd suggest perhaps he spend more time on it, but it's up to him. I should make a point here. So nothing any of my companies have done has been to stifle competition. In fact, we've done the opposite. So at

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Tesla, we have open sourced our patents. Anyone can use our patents for free. How many companies do you know who've done that? Can you name one? I can't. At SpaceX, we don't use patents. Once in a while we'll file a patent just so some patent troll doesn't cause trouble. But we've done nothing anti-competitive. We've done nothing to stop our competitors.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (38:29):

I'm not suggesting you are.

Elon Musk (38:29):

I just want to clarify for the audience, because some companies have done anti-competitive things. I think the strange thing, the unusual thing about SpaceX and Tesla is that we've done things that have helped our competition. So at Tesla, we have made our supercharger system open access. We've made our charger technology available for free to the other manufacturers. No walled garden. We could have put a wall up, but instead we invited them in.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (39:03):

The reason I mentioned this though, is because you've had the success in the physical physics world, you now have these very difficult decisions that have huge impacts on the world that are not physical decisions at all. They're decisions of the mind. They're decisions that you and others have to make. And there's a question whether you should be making these decisions at all. And I think about it in the context of Starlink. Obviously there was the report about how it's being used in Ukraine and the Russia war. There's questions about Taiwan, whether Taiwan should use it or will use it. I believe they're not right now, because they're worried that at some point maybe the Chinese will tell you that they have leverage over you and you're going to have to turn that off. These are very difficult decisions and I'm so curious how you think about that. And not just the decisions, the fact that you have that power.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (39:55):

I think it's important for the audience to understand that the reason I have these powers is not because of some anti-competitive actions. It's simply because we've executed very well.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (40:02):

Oh, I'm not dismissing that. I think there's so many people, by the way, who are huge supporters of what you've created.

Elon Musk (40:06):

There are other satellites out there, you know?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (40:10):

But they're not as good as yours.

Elon Musk (40:11):

Right.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (40:11):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And we can maybe make the same argument of cars and everything else. But as a result, that gives you enormous leverage.

Elon Musk (40:19):

Okay.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (40:19):

With the exception of, by the way, these advertisers who aren't on X in every other instance, everybody needs you.

Elon Musk (40:25):

They use our product if it's better, then use somebody else's product if their other product's better.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (40:34):

And I accept that, and maybe one day somebody else will create a better product.

Elon Musk (40:39):

How is it a bad thing to make better products than other companies?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (40:42):

Well, and I want to just go back to the Starlink piece it though, because that has sort of a geopolitical ramification in terms of your power and how you think about that specific power, and then the power that the U.S government might have, either over you or not over you, the power that

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Chinese government might have over you or not over you, and how those things get used.

Elon Musk (41:08):

What are you suggesting?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (41:10):

I'm asking the question around this very idea of how these satellites are going to be used, whether you think that you should have control of them, whether the government should have control of them.

Elon Musk (41:22):

Do you trust the government?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (41:25):

Well, there's a lot of people who don't trust the government.

Elon Musk (41:27):

Exactly.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (41:28):

But then this goes back to the trust of you, right?

Elon Musk (41:31):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Like I said, we're not the only company who has communication satellites. Our satellites are just much better than theirs. So it's not like we have a monopoly, we just have the best product?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (41:45):

Do you feel anybody has leverage over you?

Elon Musk (41:51):

I think at the end of the day, if we make bad products that people don't want to use, then the users will vote with their resources and use something else.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (42:06):

Let me pivot the conversation for a second.

Elon Musk (42:08):

Certainly, my company's overseen by regulators. Since SpaceX, Starlink, Tesla are overseen by cumulatively over 100 regulators, and actually more than that, a few hundred regulators because you've got, we're in fifty-five countries. If you sum up all the times that I had an argument with regulators, of hundreds of regulators over decades, it can sound really terrible, except but they forgot to mention that there were 10 million regulations we complied with and only five that I disagreed with. But they list all the five and it sounds like, wow, this guy's a real maverick. I'm like, yeah, but what about the 10 million we complied with?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (43:03):

One related thing on this and the leverage of countries and things over you and regulators. X is this free-speech platform. You do business in China, lots of business in China. That's an important part of your business, I imagine.

Elon Musk (43:16):

Well, it's not SpaceX.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (43:19):

How do you think about the leverage that the Chinese have over you, and do they have leverage over you? And how do you feel about, some people would say, is it hypocritical for you to be doing business in China, or frankly in other countries as it relates to X and other things that don't follow this free speech path that you have espoused?

Elon Musk (43:42):

The best that the X platform can do is adhere to the laws of any given country. Do you think there's something more we could do than that?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (43:50):

I think it would be very hard, but I just wonder, given the sort of strong, philosophical approach that you've been vocal about, whether you say to yourself, maybe I shouldn't be doing business in that country?

Elon Musk (44:05):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Well, first of all, Starlink and SpaceX do no business in China whatsoever. Tesla has one of four factories, four vehicle factories in China. And China is, I don't know, a quarter of our market or something like that. So it's a quarter of the market of one company. The same is true, by the way, of all the other car companies. They also have something on that order of a quarter of their sales in China. So if that's a problem for Tesla, it's a problem for every car company. I think one has to be careful about not conflating the various companies. Because I can only do things that are within the bounds of the law, I cannot do beyond that. My aspiration is to do as much good as possible and to be as productive as possible within the bounds of what is legal. More than that, I cannot do.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (45:00):

I want to pivot and talk about AI for a moment. We had Jensen Huang here, who's a big fan of yours, as you know.

Elon Musk (45:05):

Yeah. Jensen's awesome.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (45:06):

Talked about bringing you the first box, by the way, with Ilya, interestingly enough, back in 2016, I think.

Elon Musk (45:14):

Yes. There's a video of Jensen and me unpacking the first AI computer at OpenAI.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (45:22):

So I'm so curious what you think of what's just happened over the past two weeks. While you were dealing with this other headline, series of headlines, there was a whole other series of headlines at OpenAI. What did you think? You founded it, co-founded it.

Elon Musk (45:46):

Co-founded it, yeah. Well, the whole arc of OpenAI, frankly is a little troubling, because the reason for starting OpenAI was to create a counterweight to Google and DeepMind, which at the time had two-thirds of all AI talent and basically infinite money and compute. And there was no counterweight. It was a unipolar world. And Larry and Paige and I used to be very close friends, and I would stay at his house, and I would talk to Larry into the late hours of the night about AI safety. And it became apparent to me that Larry did not care about AI safety. I think perhaps the thing that gave it away was when he called me a speciest for being pro-humanity, as in a racist, but for species. So I'm like, "Wait a second, what side are you on, Larry?" And then I'm like, okay, listen, this guy's calling me a speciest. He doesn't care about AI safety. We've got to have some counterpoint here because this seems like we could be, this is no good.

(47:01)
So OpenAI was actually started, and it was meant to be open source. I named it OpenAI after open source. It is in fact a closed source, super closed. It should be renamed super closed source for maximum profit AI. Because this is what it actually is. Fay loves irony. In fact, a friend of mine says, the way to predict outcomes is the most ironic outcome is the most… It's like his Occam's razor, the simplest explanation is most likely. And my friend Jonah's view is that the most ironic outcome is the most likely. And that's what's happened with OpenAI. It is gone from an open source foundation, a 5123, to suddenly it's like a $90 billion for-profit corporation with closed source. So I don't know how you go from here to there.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (48:01):

I don't know how you get … Is this legal? I'm like, "That's legal?"

Andrew Ross Sorkin (48:06):

So as you saw Sam Altman get ousted by somebody you know, Ilya, and Ilya was a friend of yours, you brought him there, your relationship with Larry Page effectively broke down over you recruiting him away, I think.

Elon Musk (48:19):

That's correct. Larry refused to be friends with me after I recruited Ilya.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (48:25):

And so here's Ilya, apparently, saying something is very wrong.

Elon Musk (48:30):

I think we should be concerned about this because I think Ilya actually has a strong moral compass. He really sweats it over questions of what is right. And if Ilya felt strongly enough to want to fire Sam, well, I think the world should know what was that reason.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (48:52):

Have you talked to him?

Elon Musk (48:54):

I've reached out, but he doesn't want to talk to anyone.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (48:57):

Have you talked to other people behind the scenes? Is this is all happening?

Elon Musk (49:01):

I've talked to a lot of people. I've not found anyone who knows why. Have you?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (49:12):

I think we are all still trying to find out.

Elon Musk (49:15):

One of two things is, either it was a serious thing and we should know what it is or it was not a serious thing and then the board should resign.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (49:24):

What do you think of Sam Altman?

Elon Musk (49:28):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I have mixed feelings about Sam. The ring of power can corrupt, and he has the ring of power. So I don't know. I think I want to know why Ilya felt so strongly as to fire Sam. This sounds like a serious thing. I don't think it was trivial. And I'm quite concerned that there's some dangerous element of AI that they've created.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (50:09):

Discovered.

Elon Musk (50:09):

Yes.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (50:10):

You think they've discovered something.

Elon Musk (50:12):

That'd be my guess.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (50:15):

Where are you with your own AI efforts relative to where you think OpenAI is, where you think Google is, where you think the others are?

Elon Musk (50:31):

On the AI front, I'm in somewhat of a quandary here because I've thought AI could be something that would change the world in a significant way since I was in college, 30 years ago. Now, the reason I didn't go build AI right from the get-go was because I was uncertain about which edge of the double-edged sword would be sharper, the good edge or the bad edge.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(50:58)
So I held off on doing anything on AI, could've created, I think, a leading AI company, and OpenAI actually is that, because I was just uncertain, if you make this magic genie, what will happen, whereas I think building sustainable energy technology is much more of a single-edged sword that is single-edged good, making life multi-planetary, I think single-edged good, installing mostly single-edged good, giving people better connectivity to people that don't have connectivity or it's too expensive, I think is very much a good thing. Sonic was instrumental, by the way, in halting the Russian advance, and the Ukrainians said so. So I think, with AI, you've got the magic genie problem. You may think you want a magic genie, but once that genie's out of the bottle, it's hard to say what happens.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (52:09):

How far are we away from that genie being out of the bottle, do you think, or you think it's already out?

Elon Musk (52:15):

The genie is certainly poking its head out.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (52:17):

The AGI, the idea of artificial general intelligence, given what you now are working on yourself, and you know how easy or hard it is to train, to create the inferences, to create the weights, I hope I'm not getting too far in the weeds of just how this works, but those are the basics behind the software end of this.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (52:41):

It's funny, all these weights, they're just basically numbers in a common separated value file, and that's our digital god, the CSP file. I found that funny, but that's literally what it is. So I think it's coming pretty fast.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (53:05):

You famously have admitted to overstating how quickly things will happen, but how quickly do you think this will happen?

Elon Musk (53:16):

If you say smarter than the smartest human at anything?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (53:20):

Yep.

Elon Musk (53:22):

It may not be then quite smarter than all humans, well, machine-augmented humans, because people have got computers and stuff. There's a higher bar, but you say it's more than any … can write as good a novel as, say, JK Rowling, or discover new physics, or invent new technology, I would say that we're less than three years from that point.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (53:47):

Let me ask you a question about XAI and what you're doing because there's an interesting thing that's different, I think, about what you have relative to some of the others, which is you have data, you have information, you have all of the stuff that everybody in here has put on the platform to sort through, and I don't know if everybody realized that initially. What is the value of that?

Elon Musk (54:21):

Yeah. Data is very important. You could say data is probably more valuable than gold.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (54:29):

But then maybe you have the gold in X in a different way, in a way, again, that I don't know if the public appreciates what that means.

Elon Musk (54:42):

Yes, X might be the single best source of data. People click on more links to X than anything else on earth. Sometimes people think Facebook or Instagram is a bigger thing, but actually, there are more links to X than anything. This is public information. You can Google it.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (55:06):

Okay, let me ask you a-

Elon Musk (55:08):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

So it is where you would find what is happening right now on earth at any given point in time. The whole OpenAI drama played out, in fact, on the X platform. Google certainly has a massive amount of data, so does Microsoft, but it is one of the best sources of data.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (55:35):

Can I ask you an interesting IP issue, which I think is actually something I can say, as somebody who's in the creator business and journalistic business and whatnot, where I care about copyright? So one of the things about training on data has been this idea that these things are not being trained on people's copyrighted information. Historically, that's been the concept.

Elon Musk (55:59):

Yeah, that's a huge lie.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (56:00):

Say that again?

Elon Musk (56:02):

These AIs are all trained on copyrighted data, obviously.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (56:06):

So you think it's a lie when OpenAI says that this is … None of these guys say they're training on copyrighted data.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (56:13):

That's a lie.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (56:14):

It's a lie, straight up.

Elon Musk (56:15):

Yeah, straight up lie.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (56:16):

Okay.

Elon Musk (56:16):

100%. Obviously, it's been trained on copyrighted data.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (56:21):

Okay. So let me ask a second question, which is, all of the people who have been uploading-

Elon Musk (56:28):

It's one every minute here.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (56:28):

All of the people who have been uploading articles, the best quotes from different articles, videos to X, all of that can be trained on. And it's interesting because people put all of that there and those quotes have historically been considered fair use, right?

Elon Musk (56:47):

Yeah.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (56:47):

People are putting those quotes up there. And individually, on a fair use basis, you'd say, "Okay, that makes sense," but now, there are people who do threads, and by the way, there may be multiple people who've done an article that has 1,000 words. Technically, all 1,000 words could've made it onto X somehow. And effectively, now, you have this remarkable repository, and I wonder how you think about that, again, and how you think the creative community and those who were the original IP owners should think about that.

Elon Musk (57:20):

I don't know, except to say that, by the time these lawsuits are decided, we'll have digital God. So I'd ask digital God at that point. These lawsuits won't be decided before, on a timeframe that is relevant.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (57:34):

Is that a good thing or a bad thing?

Elon Musk (57:41):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

There's that … I don't know if it's actually a real Chinese thing or not, but may you live an interesting time is apparently not a good thing, but personally, I would prefer to live in interesting times, and we live in the most interesting of times. For awhile there, I was really getting demotivated and losing sleep over the threat of AI danger, and then I finally became fatalistic about it and said, "Well, even if I knew annihilation was certain, would I choose to be alive at that time or not?" And I said, "I probably would choose to be alive at that time because it's the most interesting thing, even if there's nothing I could do about it." So then basically, a fatalistic resignation helped me sleep at night because I was having trouble sleeping at night because of AI danger.

(58:43)
Now, what to do about it? I've been the one banging the drum the hardest, by far the longest, or at least one of longest for AI danger, and these regulatory things that are happening, the single biggest reason they're happening is because of me.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (59:02):

Do you think they're ever going to get their arms around it? We talked to the Vice President this afternoon. She said she wants to regulate it. People have been trying to regulate social media for years and have done nothing, effectively.

Elon Musk (59:13):

Well, there's regulation around anything which is a physical danger, a danger to the public. So cars are heavily regulated, communications are heavily regulated, rockets and aircraft are heavily regulated. The general philosophy about regulation is that, when something is a danger to the public, that there needs to be some government oversight. So I think, in my view, AI is more dangerous than nuclear bombs and we regulate nuclear bombs. You can't just go make a nuclear bomb in your backyard. I think we should have some kind of regulation with AI. Now, this tends to cause the AI accelerationist to get up in arms because they think AI is heaven, basically.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:00:04):

But you typically don't like regulation. You've pushed back on regulators, for the most part, in the world of Tesla and so many instances where we read articles about you pushing back on the regulators. I'm so curious why, in this, instance now you own one of these businesses.

Elon Musk (01:00:19):

As I said a moment ago, one should not take what is viewed in the media as being the whole picture. There are literally hundreds, this is not an exaggeration, say, there are probably 100 million regulations that my companies comply with and there are probably five that we don't. And if we disagree with some of those regulations, it's because we think the regulation that is meant to do good doesn't actually do good.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:00:53):

But that's an interesting thing because-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:00:53):

It's not defying regulations for the sake of defiance.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:00:55):

The question, if there are laws and rules, whether the idea is that you're making the decision that the law and the rule shouldn't be the law and the rule and then … right?

Elon Musk (01:01:05):

No, I'm saying you're fundamentally mistaken, and it should be obvious that you're mistaken. My company's automotive is heavily regulated. We would not be allowed to put cars on the road if we did not comply with this vast body of regulation. Now, you could fill up the stage with, literally six foot high, the regulations that you have to comply with to make a car. You could have a room full of phone books. That's how big the regulations are. And if you don't comply with all of those, you can't sell the car. And if we don't comply with all the regulations for rockets or for Starlink, they shut us down.

(01:01:46)
So in fact, I am incredibly compliant with regulations. Now, once in awhile, there'll be something that I disagree with. The reason I would disagree with it is because I think the regulation, in that particular case, in that rare case, does not serve the public good. And therefore, I think it is my obligation to object to a regulation that is meant to serve the public good, but doesn't.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

That's the only time I object, not because I seek to object. In fact, I'm incredibly rule-following.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:02:14):

Let me ask you a separate question, a social-media-related question. We've been talking about TikTok today ahead of the election.

Elon Musk (01:02:21):

TikTok is-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:02:22):

What do you think of TikTok? Do you think it's a national security threat?

Elon Musk (01:02:30):

I don't use TikTok.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:02:32):

Say that again, you don't?

Elon Musk (01:02:33):

I don't personally use it, but for teenagers and people in their 20s, they seem almost religiously addicted to TikTok. Some people will watch TikTok for two hours a day. I stopped using TikTok when I felt the AI probing my mind and it made me uncomfortable, so I stopped using it. And in terms of antisemitic content, TikTok is rife with that. It has the most viral antisemitic content by far.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:03:20):

But do you think the Chinese Government is using it to manipulate the minds of Americans?

Elon Musk (01:03:26):

No.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:03:26):

Is that something that you think we should worry about? You have different states that are trying to ban it.

Elon Musk (01:03:32):

I don't think this is some Chinese Government plot, but the TikTok algorithm is entirely AI-powered. So it is really just trying to find the most viral thing possible. It's what is going to keep you glued to the screen. That's it. Now, on sheer numbers, there are on the order of two billion Muslims in the world, and I think a much smaller number of Jewish people, 20 million, something, many orders of magnitude fewer. So if you just look at content production, just on sheer numbers basis, this is going to be overwhelmingly antisemitic, just on a numbers basis.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:04:21):

Let me ask you a political question, and I've been trying to square this one in my head for a long time. In the last two or three years, you have moved decidedly to the right, I think.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:04:34):

Have I?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:04:34):

Well, we can discuss this. I think that you have been espousing and promoting a number of Republican candidates and others. You've been very frustrated with the Biden Administration over, I think, unions and feeling like they did not respect what you've created.

Elon Musk (01:04:56):

Well, doing nothing to provoke the Biden Administration, they held an electric vehicle summit at the White House and specifically refused to let Tesla attend. This was in the first six months of the administration. And we inquired, we're like, "We literally make more electric cars than everyone else combined. Why are we not allowed? Why are you only letting Ford, GM, Chrysler, and UAW, and you're specifically disallowing us from the EV summit at the White House?" We had done nothing to provoke them. Then Biden went on to add insult to injury and publicly said that GM was leading the electric car revolution. This was in the same quarter that Tesla made 300,000 electric cars and GM made 26. Does that seem fair to you?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:05:45):

But tell me this, then. It doesn't seem fair. And I've asked repeatedly, you've probably seen me-

Elon Musk (01:05:53):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And by the way, I had a great relationship with Obama. So this was not a-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:05:57):

But then there's this.

Elon Musk (01:05:57):

I voted for Obama. I stood in line for six hours to shake Obama's hand. Okay?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:06:04):

Okay. So let me just ask on a personal level, I can see it in your face, this hurt you personally.

Elon Musk (01:06:11):

And it hurt the company, too, and it was an insult to … Tesla has 140,000 employees. Half of them are in the United States. Tesla has created more manufacturing jobs than everyone else combined.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:06:26):

So let me ask this, then. You've devoted at least the last close to 20 years of your life, if not more, to the climate, climate change, trying to get Tesla off the ground, in part to improve climate. You've talked about that.

Elon Musk (01:06:40):

Yeah, a real right-wing motive.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:06:42):

Repeatedly.

Elon Musk (01:06:44):

God, far right, if anything.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:06:45):

No, I understand that.

Elon Musk (01:06:46):

It's a reverse psychology, next level.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:06:51):

Well, no, but here's then the question, which is how do you square the support that you have given … I believe you were at a fundraiser for Vivek Ramaswamy, for example, who says that the climate issue is a hoax, right?

Elon Musk (01:07:10):

Yeah, I disagree with him on that.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:07:12):

But I would think that that would be such a singular issue for you. I would think that the climate issue would be such a singular issue for you that, actually, it would disqualify almost anybody who didn't take that issue seriously.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:07:25):

Well, I haven't endorsed anyone for president. I wanted to hear what Vivek had to say because I think that some of the things he says, I think, are pretty solid. He's concerned about government overreach, about government control of information. The degree to which old Twitter was basically a sock puppet of the government was ridiculous. So it seems to me that there's a very severe violation of the First Amendment in terms of how much control the government had over old Twitter, and it no longer does.

(01:08:04)
So there's a reason for the First Amendment. The reason for the First Amendment, for freedom of speech, is because the people that immigrated to this country came from places where there was not freedom of speech. And they were like, "You know what? We got to make sure that that's constitutional," because where they came from, if they said something, they'd be put in prison or something bad would happen to them. And freedom of speech, you have to say, when is it relevant? It's only relevant when someone you don't like can say something you don't like or it has no meaning. And as soon as you throw in the towel and concede to censorship, it is only a matter of time before someone censors you. And that is why we have the First Amendment.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:08:58):

Could you see yourself voting for President Biden, if it's a Biden-Trump election, for example?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:09:09):

I think I would not vote for Biden.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:09:12):

You'd vote for Trump.

Elon Musk (01:09:14):

I'm not saying I'd vote for Trump, but this is definitely a difficult choice here.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:09:23):

Would you vote for Nikki Haley? Nikki Haley, by the way, wants all social media names to be exposed, as you know.

Elon Musk (01:09:31):

No, I think that's outrageous. I'm not going to vote for some pro-censorship candidate. Like I said, I think you have to consider that there's a lot of wisdom in these amendments, I mean, the constitution, and a lot of things that we take for granted here in the United States that don't even exist in Canada. There's no constitutional right to freedom of speech in Canada and there's no Miranda rights in Canada. People think you have the right to remain silent. You don't, actually, in Canada. I'm half Canadian, I can say these things, I suppose. So the freedom of speech is incredibly important, even when people … And like I said, it's actually especially important, in fact, it is only relevant, when people you don't like can say things you don't like. [inaudible 01:10:40] they're meaningless.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:10:41):

You think, right now, the Republican candidates or the Democrats are more inclined … This is where you go to, I assume, to woke and anti-woke and the mind virus issue that you've talked about. Which party do you think is more pro freedom of speech, given all the things you've seen? Because we also see DeSantis preventing people from reading certain things. Maybe you think that's correct.

Elon Musk (01:11:10):

Look, we actually are in an odd situation here where, on balance, the Democrats appear to be more pro-censorship than the Republicans, and that used to be the opposite. It used to be left position was freedom of speech. I believe, at one point, the ACLU even defended the right of someone to claim that they were Nazi or something like that. So the left was freedom of speech is fundamental. My perception, perhaps it isn't accurate, is that the pro-censorship is more on the left than the right.

Elon Musk (01:12:00):

… We certainly get more complaints from the left than the right, let me put it that way. But my aspiration for the X platform is that it is the best source of truth, or the least inaccurate source of truth. And while I don't know of you will believe me or not, but I think honesty is the best policy, and I think that the truth will win over time.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(01:12:25)
And we've got this great system, and it's getting better, called Community Notes, which is fantastic I think at correcting falsehoods, or adding context. In fact, we make a point of not removing anything, but only adding context. Now that context could include that this is completely false and here's why. And no one is immune to this. I'm not immune to it. Advertisers are not immune to it. In fact, we've had Community Notes, which has caused us some loss in advertising. Speaking of loss in advertising revenue. If a community note… If there's false advertising, the Community Note will say, "This is false and here is why."

(01:13:12)
There's one specific example that is public knowledge, so I'll mention it, which is at one point Uber had this ad which said, "Earn like a boss." And it was community noted. "If by boss you mean $12 and forty-seven cents an hour." This did cause at least a temporary suspension of advertising from Uber.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:13:32):

I got to ask you a question that might make everybody in the room uncomfortable or not uncomfortable. It goes to the free speech issue. The New York Times company and the New York Times newspaper, it appeared over the summer to be throttled.

Elon Musk (01:13:45):

What did?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:13:46):

The New York Times?

Elon Musk (01:13:47):

Well, we do require that everyone has to buy a subscription, and we don't make exceptions for anyone. And I think if I want the New York Times, I have to pay for a subscription, and they don't give me a free subscription. So I'm not going to give them a free subscription.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:14:05):

But were you throttling the New York Times, relative to other news organizations, relative to everybody else? Was it specific to The Times?

Elon Musk (01:14:13):

They didn't buy a subscription. By the way, it only cost like $1000 a month. So if they just do that, then they're back in the saddle.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:14:25):

But you are saying that it was throttled?

Elon Musk (01:14:27):

No, I'm saying-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:14:28):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I mean was there a conversation that you had with somebody you said, " Look, I'm unhappy with The Times. They should either be buying the subscription, or I don't like their content or whatever."

Elon Musk (01:14:37):

Any organization that refuses to buy a subscription is not going to be recommended.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:14:46):

But then what does that say about free speech? And what does that say about amplifying certain voices-

Elon Musk (01:14:52):

Free speech is not exactly free, it costs a little bit.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:14:57):

But that's an interesting-

Elon Musk (01:14:58):

Yeah. It's like in South Park where they say, "Freedom isn't free, it costs a buck O' five." Or whatever. But it's pretty cheap. Okay? Low cost freedom.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:15:13):

I got a couple more questions for you. You're headed back to Texas after this-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:15:17):

Freedom-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:15:18):

To launch the Cybertruck.

Elon Musk (01:15:20):

Yeah.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:15:21):

It's going to be a big launch, but I wanted to ask you right now more broadly just about the car business and what you see actually happening, and specifically the government put in place lots of policies, as you know, to try to encourage more EVs. And one of the things that's happened uniquely is you have now a lot of car companies saying, "Actually this is too ambitious for us. These plans are too ambitious." 4,000 dealers… I don't know if you saw just yesterday, sent a letter to the White House saying, "This has gone too far, you're going too far."

Elon Musk (01:15:53):

This is EV?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:15:56):

It was, "This is going too fast, too far." And that there's not enough demand. Underneath all this is this idea that maybe there's not enough demand for EVs. That the American public has not bought into… I mean they bought into it with your company, but they haven't bought into it broadly enough.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:16:13):

Well, I think if you make a compelling electric car, people will buy it. No question about it. I mean electric car sales in China are gigantic. That's by far the biggest category, and I think that would be the case… I mean it's worth noting, so probably the best reputation of that is that the Tesla model Y will be the best selling car of any kind on earth this year, of any kind, gasoline or otherwise.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:16:43):

Is there another car company that you think is doing a good job with EVs?

Elon Musk (01:16:49):

I think the Chinese car companies are extremely competitive. By far our toughest competition is in China. So I mean there's a lot of people who are out there who think the top 10 car company's is going to be Tesla followed by nine Chinese car companies. I think they might not be wrong. So China is super good at manufacturing, and the work ethic is incredible. So if we consider different leagues of competitiveness at Tesla, we consider the Chinese league to be the most competitive. And by the way, we do very well in China because our China team is the best in China.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:17:31):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

How worried are you that the unionization effort that just took place, well, I shouldn't say effort, but the new wages and the like at GM and Ford, that they're coming for you? And they are coming for you. What is that going to mean to you and your business?

Elon Musk (01:17:50):

Well, I mean I think it's generally not good to have an adversarial relationship between people on the line, one group at the company and another group. In fact, I disagree with the idea of unions, but perhaps for a reason that is different than people may expect, which is I just don't like anything which creates kind of a lords and peasants sort of thing. And I think the unions naturally try to create negativity in a company, and create a sort of lords and peasants situation.

(01:18:25)
There are many people at Tesla who have gone from working on the line to being in senior management. There is no lords and peasants. Everyone eats at the same table. Everyone parks in the same parking lot. At GM there's a special elevator for only for senior executives. We have no such thing at Tesla.

(01:18:45)
And the thing is that I actually know the people on the line, because I worked on the line and I walked the line and I slept in the factory and I worked beside them. So I'm no stranger to them. And there are actually many times where I've said, "Well, can't we just hold a union vote?" But apparently a company is not allowed to hold a union vote, so it has to be somehow called for, but the unions can't do it. So I said, "Well let's just hold a vote and see what happens."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(01:19:18)
The actual problem is the opposite. It's not that people are trapped at Tesla building cars. The challenge is, how do we retain great people to do the hard work of building cars when they have six other opportunities that they can do that are easier? That's the actual difficulty, is that building cars is hard work and there are much easier jobs. And I just want to say that I'm incredibly appreciative of those who build cars, and they know it.

(01:19:51)
So I don't know, maybe we'll be unionized. I say if Tesla gets unionized it will be because we deserve it and we failed in some way. But we certainly try hard to ensure the prosperity of everyone. We give everyone stock options. We've made many people who are just working the line who didn't even know what stocks were, we've made the millionaires.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:20:21):

We're going to run out of time. Final couple of quick questions. When do you have the time to tweet or to post? I actually think about it all the time. As I said, I use it-well. I have to go to the bathroom sometimes.

Elon Musk (01:20:33):

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:20:36):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I use it all the time. Meaning, if we were to open up our phones and look at the screen time, what does yours look like?

Elon Musk (01:20:45):

Well, about every three hours, I make a trip to the lavatory.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:20:50):

And that's the only time you do this? Seems like you're on there a lot.

Elon Musk (01:20:58):

No, I mean there'll be brief moments between meetings. I mean obviously, I have 17 jobs and no, I guess technically it's work at this point.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:21:15):

It is, but I'm thinking just in terms of your mind share. I mean, by the way, there's a lot of people who should be working who are on this app.

Elon Musk (01:21:22):

Technically posting on Twitter or X is work. It does count as work. So there's that. But no, I mean I think I'm on… Well I guess usually, probably I'm on for longer than I think I am.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:21:38):

I know, but do you think that's five hours a day, four hours?

Elon Musk (01:21:40):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

If you look at the screen time of a number of hours per week, sometimes that's a scary number. It's probably, I don't know, it's a little over an hour a day, or something like that.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:21:51):

Just an hour a day? If we really looked at this together. Do you have your phone with you?

Elon Musk (01:21:56):

Yeah.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:21:57):

You want to look?

Elon Musk (01:21:59):

Okay.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:22:03):

Okay, here we go. You ready? Screen time in general?

Elon Musk (01:22:07):

Yeah, screen time. Sometimes this is a scary number though.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:22:11):

I know, that's why I thought…

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:22:22):

I just got a new phone, so I think this is not accurate. It's one minute. Pretty sure it's more than that. Wait, it's over the week. There we go.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:22:31):

Yeah, go to the week.

Elon Musk (01:22:35):

Okay, so it's still wrong. It's more than four minutes. I just got a new phone, so this is not accurate. It literally says four minutes.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:22:42):

New phone? Tim Cook sent you that phone?

Elon Musk (01:22:44):

New phone. [inaudible 01:22:45].

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:22:47):

I should ask, by the way I just mentioned Tim Cook. Do you feel like you're going to have to have a battle with him eventually? Is that the next fight over the app store?

Elon Musk (01:22:56):

The idea of making a phone… What do you mean like-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:22:58):

No, no, no.

Elon Musk (01:22:59):

The app store?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:23:01):

The app store. Are you going to make a phone? Sam Altman's apparently thinking about making a phone with Johnny Ive.

Elon Musk (01:23:05):

I mean, I don't think there's a real need to make a phone. I mean, if there's an essential need to make a phone, I'll make a phone, but I've got a lot of fish to fry. So I mean I do think there's a fundamental challenge that phone makers have at this point because you've got basically a black rectangle. How do you make that better?

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:23:31):

So do you want to do that? What does that look like in Elon's head?

Elon Musk (01:23:36):

No, that's literally… Yeah, good phrase, in the head. A neural link.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:23:42):

Well there we go. We need to touch that before it's over.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:23:46):

The best interface would be a neural interface directly to your brain. So that would be a neural link.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:23:52):

How far are we, do you think from that, and how excited or scary does that seem to be? And we read these headlines obviously, about monkeys who died, as you know, what should we think about that?

Elon Musk (01:24:03):

Yeah, actually this is… The USDA inspector who came by Neuralink facilities literally said in her entire career she has never seen a better animal care facility. We are the nicest to animals that you could possibly be, even to the rats and mice, even though they did the plague and everything. So it is like monkey paradise.

(01:24:35)
So the thing that gets conflated is that there were some terminal monkeys, where, this is actually several years ago, where the monkeys were about to die and we're like, okay, we've got an experimental device. It's a kind of thing which you would only put on a monkey that's about to die. And then now the monkey died, but it didn't die because of the Neuralink, it died because it had a terminal case of cancer or something like that.

(01:24:57)
Neuralink has never caused the death of a monkey, to the best… Unless they're hiding something from me, it's never caused death of a monkey. And in fact, we've now had monkeys with Neuralink implants for two, three years and they're doing great. And we've even replaced the Neuralink twice and we're getting ready to do the first implants, hopefully in a few months. The only implementations of Neuralink I think are unequivocally good. Speaking of the double-edged sword, I think these early implementations are single-edged sword, because the first implementations will be to enable people who have lost the brain-body connection to be able to operate a computer or a phone faster than someone who has hands that work. So you can imagine if Stephen Hawking could communicate faster than someone who had full-body functionality, how incredible that would be. Well, that's what this device will do, and we should have proof of that in a human, hopefully in a few months.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(01:26:07)
It already works in monkeys and works quite well with monkeys that can play video games just by thinking. So in the next application after dealing with tetraplegics and quadriplegics is going to be vision. Vision is the next thing. So it's like if somebody has lost both eyes, or the optic nerve has failed, basically where they have no possibility of having some ocular correction. That would be the next thing for Neuralink, is a direct vision interface. And in fact, then you could be like Geordi La Forge from Star Trek. You could see in any frequency, actually you could see in radar if you want.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:26:57):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Two final questions, and then we're going to end this conversation, which I think has taken everybody inside the mind of Elon Musk today-

Elon Musk (01:27:05):

Not as well as Neuralink will though.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:27:12):

It actually goes to self-driving cars and vision and everything else. And I asked this question of Pete Buttigieg transportation secretary, it's actually something you retweeted. So I wanted to ask you the same question. There's a big question about autonomous vehicles and the safety of them, but there's also a question about when it will be politically palatable in this country for people to die in cars that are controlled by computers. Which is to say we have 35, 40,000 deaths every year in this country. If you could bring that number down to 10,000, 5,000, that might be a great thing. But do we think that the country will accept the idea that 5,000 people, that your family might have perished in a vehicle as a result, not of a human making a mistake, but of a computer?

Elon Musk (01:28:13):

Yes. Well, first of all, humans are terrible drivers. So people text and drive, they drink and drive, they get into arguments, they do all sorts of things in cars that they should not do. So it's actually remarkable that there are not more deaths than there are. What we'll find with computer driving is, I think probably an order of magnitude reduction in deaths.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(01:28:45)
And the US has actually far fewer deaths per capita than the rest of the world. If you go worldwide, I think there's something close to a million deaths per year due to automotive accidents. So I think computer driving will probably drop that by 90% or more. It won't be perfect, but it'll be 10 times better.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:29:09):

And do you think that the public will accept that? Do you think the government will accept that?

Elon Musk (01:29:13):

Well, in large numbers, it will simply be so obviously true that it really cannot be denied.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:29:21):

And what do you think, I know we've talked about the timeline before, and I know people have criticized you for putting out timelines that may not have come true just yet, but what do you think it really is? And by the way, do you feel, do you ever say to yourself, oh, I shouldn't have said that?

Elon Musk (01:29:36):

Sure, of course. Wait, I shouldn't have said that. So yeah, I'm optimistic about… I think I'm naturally optimistic about time scales, and if I was not naturally optimistic, I wouldn't be doing the things that I'm doing. I mean, I certainly wouldn't have sold a rocket company or electric car company if I didn't have some sort of pathological optimism, frankly.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(01:30:04)
So as you pointed out, many people said that it would fail. And in fact, actually I agreed with them. I said, "Yes, it probably will fail." And they're like, "Hmm, okay." But I thought SpaceX and Tesla had less than a 10% chance of success when we started them. So yeah, anyway. But the self-driving thing is, I've been optimistic about it, but we've certainly made a lot of progress. If anybody has tried, has been using the sort of full self-driving beta, the progress every year has been substantial.

(01:30:42)
It's really now at the point where in most places it'll take you from one place to another with no interventions. And the data is unequivocal that supervised full self-driving is somewhere around four times safer or maybe more, than just a human driving by themselves. So I can certainly see it coming. Actually, really-

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:31:12):

But do you think it's another five or 10 years? I mean, people say-

Elon Musk (01:31:14):

No, no, no, definitely not. Definitely not.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:31:17):

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Do you feel like investors have invested in something that hasn't happened yet? Is that fair to them? And that's the other question that people have about that.

Elon Musk (01:31:25):

Well, I mean I think they've all, with rare exception, thought it wasn't happening. So they were investing, despite thinking, they're very clear that they don't think it's real. So they're not saying, "Oh, we just believe everything Elon says, hook, line, and sinker." But the thing is that, I mean, it would be a fair criticism of me to say that I'm late, but I always deliver in the end.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:31:53):

Let me ask you a final question. I took note of this. It was November 11th and you took to Twitter and you wrote only two words. You said amplify empathy.

Elon Musk (01:32:03):

Right.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:32:05):

I was taken aback by that, given all the things that have been going on in the world. Do you remember what you were thinking?

Elon Musk (01:32:13):

Well, I think it's quite literally-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:32:15):

I understand it, but what was going on? Why did you write that?

Elon Musk (01:32:21):

Well, I was encouraging people to amplify empathy, literally. I tend to be quite literal.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:32:28):

But was there something that had happened, that you had seen that you said to yourself, I want to say that?

Elon Musk (01:32:35):

I think I was talking to some friends, and we all agreed that we should try to amplify empathy. And so I wrote amplify empathy.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:32:46):

If you wanted an unvarnished look inside the mind of Elon Musk, I think you just saw it.

Elon Musk (01:32:50):

Look, sometimes it's pretty simple.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:32:54):

Elon Musk, thank you very, very much for the conversation.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Elon Musk (01:32:57):

All right. Thank you.

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:33:00):

Appreciate it very, very much. Thank you. Thank you so much. Here, take that with you for a second.

Elon Musk (01:33:03):

[inaudible 01:33:04].

Andrew Ross Sorkin (01:33:06):

I'm just going to say a thank you to everybody who stuck around for what has been a remarkable day. We are so appreciative of everybody who has been with us for so many years coming back to this every year. So thank you, thank you, thank you. I hope you had a great day, and I hope we have an opportunity to do this again. Elon Musk, everybody. Thank you.

Hi Kaycie – Maddie Sieren, Comms Director for Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey here.
Since Mr. Cavuto has taken such an interest in the Media Matters issue/Elon Musk's lawsuit, I wanted to reach out to let you know that AG Bailey will have a big update on Monday 12/11 on this topic. I would be happy to share more details over the phone but essentially AG Bailey views it as 1) a consumer protection issue and 2) a free speech issue. He is formally investigating the matter and would be able to go into depth on what exactly his team is looking at.
Would Mr. Cavuto and your team have any interest in speaking to AG Bailey on this issue next week? Would love to let you break the story (planning to launch on Monday but we could be flexible).
Thank you,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

DRAFT DO NOT RELEASE

- Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.

- Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.

- Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being taken advantage of by this scheme. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.

- Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1. Social media platforms
    - We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS
2. President Trump
    - We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates
3. The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms gaming the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.
    - Elon Musk controversy: Mr. Musk has clarified several times what his views are. The point is that anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. They made that post in order to get advertisers to pull out of X. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes

unchecked, the marketplace for free, fair and open debate will cease to exist

- The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.
    1. We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

Local media:

- Media Matters lied when they took money from everyday Americans/little old ladies and used it in a way different from how they advertised it
- Media Matters appears to have used coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country
    1. We have a law called the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act that gives the Attorney General the authority to prosecute deceptive, fraudulent or unfair business practices.
        - We have reason to believe Missourians have been affected by this behavior

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- To that end, we have launched a civil investigative demand/subpoenaed documents to get to the bottom of the magnitude of the fraudulent scheme Media Matters is perpetrating

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

WHY: Protecting Missourians from legal fraud

Media Matters is perpetuating a scheme of fraud through its solicitation of charitable donations to take down the last platform dedicated to the protection of free speech, Twitter.

- Every American should care about this because free speech is at stake

What is the basis of your investigation/belief?

- Public attention
- Elon Musk's lawsuit is also extremely thorough in its analysis:
    1. aising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X (formerly known as Twitter) through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech.
    2. lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true.

Where Missouri comes in:

- Media Matters appears to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country
    1. We have a law called the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act that gives the Attorney General the authority to prosecute deceptive, fraudulent or unfair business practices.
        - We have reason to believe Missourians are ….
        - We have launched a civil investigative demand/subpoenaed documents to get to the bottom of the magnitude of the fraudulent scheme Media Matters is perpetrating

Word cloud:

- Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit charitable donations from unassuming Americans.
- Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a non-profit ((501)©3/4(???)) taking advantage of unassuming Americans in order to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF MISSOURI

Re: Notice of Pending Investigation

Dear Mr. Carusone,

This letter serves as a formal document hold notice under federal and Missouri law. The Missouri Attorney General's Office has opened an investigation into Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") regarding your firm's potentially unlawful business practices.

As you are no doubt aware, a federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters, raising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X (formerly known as Twitter) through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech. The lawsuit alleges that you lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true. At the same time, you appear to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country.

I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. E.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020.1. I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt

Hi Shannon and Andrew – just following up with this final version of the letter AG Bailey plans to send to Media Matters tomorrow. We find it especially relevant after Elon Musk let Alex Jones back on Twitter this weekend. Musk is committed to free speech, and because of that, he has become a target of the radical left.

AG Bailey views it as such:

DRAFT DO NOT RELEASE

-Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.

-Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.

-Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being ripped off by this scheme and to shed light on the subject. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.

-Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:

1.Social media platforms

- We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS

2.President Trump

- We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates

3.The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms perverting the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.

- Anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes unchecked, the marketplace for free, fair and open debate will cease to exist.

-The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.

1.We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

Re: Notice of Pending Investigation

Dear Mr. Carusone,

This letter serves as a formal document hold notice under federal and Missouri law. The Missouri Attorney General's Office has opened an investigation into Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") regarding your firm's potentially unlawful business practices.

As you are no doubt aware, a federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters, raising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X (formerly known as Twitter) through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech. The lawsuit alleges that you lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true. At the same time, you appear to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country.

I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. E.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020.1. I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt

Dear Mr. Carusone,

This letter serves as a formal document hold notice under federal and Missouri law. The Missouri Attorney General's Office has opened an investigation into Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") regarding your firm's potentially unlawful business practices.

As you are no doubt aware, a federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters, raising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X (formerly known as Twitter) through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech. The lawsuit alleges that you lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true. At the same time, you appear to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country.

I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. E.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020.1. I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians in the process.

You are thus hereby instructed to preserve all records that may relate to your alleged effort to engage in coordinated, inauthentic behavior on social media platforms in order to generate false statements that were used to solicit charitable contributions under false pretenses. You are instructed in particular to preserve all records that may relate to your webpage, which expressly solicits funds, at the following URL: https://www.mediamatters.org/twitter/musk-endorses-antisemitic-conspiracy-theory-x-has-been-placing-ads-apple-bravo-ibm-oracle. Records you must preserve include but are not limited to:

- Internal communications regarding your strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and your efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform.
- Communications with third parties regarding your strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and your efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform.
- Communications with IBM, Lions Gate Entertainment, Apple, Disney, Warner Brothers Discovery, Paramount Gold, NBCUniversal, Comcast, Sony, Ubisoft and Wal-Mart regarding your strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and your efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform.
- Internal communications regarding your policies, strategies or operations related to generating stories or content intended to "cancel," "deplatform," "demonetize," or otherwise interfere with businesses or organizations located in Missouri, or utilized by Missouri residents.
- Communications and documents related to soliciting charitable funds from residents of Missouri in relation to the webpage at the URL stated above.

Your obligation to preserve evidence extends to documents kept in any form, both physical and electronic. This includes letters, emails, instant messages, text messages, drafts, informal files, desk files, handwritten notes, faxes, memoranda, forms, calendar entries, address book entries, and voicemails. Your obligation applies to both hardcopy documents and electronic ones, including those kept on computers, laptops, tablets, smartphones, and any other electronic device, including both work and personal devices, personal email accounts and personal computers and tablets. Please ensure that all employees and contractors of Media Matters are aware of their obligations to preserve evidence in this case.

You and your staff are further instructed to cease any protocol for the automatic deletion of emails or backup files on your computer systems. Please forward a copy of this letter to Media Matters IT managers and instruct them to suspend any such protocols.

Be advised that any failure to preserve documents of probative value to this case, even if inadvertent, will constitute spoliation of evidence and may result in a finding of contempt from the court or in sanctions.

Your cooperation in this matter is appreciated. Please feel free to contact me with any questions or concerns.

Respectfully,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Form Letter -- Inform of Media Matters Investigation

Dear [Constituent]:

Thank you for bringing your concerns to the attention of the Missouri Attorney General's Office regarding the fraudulent schemes being perpetuated by Media Matters.

I too find it unacceptable to hear the reports of this progressive activist group masquerading itself as a news organization to solicit donations from Americans, which are then used to target free speech and the last social media platform committed to protecting it, X/Twitter.

Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn and I have made it clear that this state is willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. That is why my office was the first out of the gate to get involved in this issue. We are utilizing the legal powers given to this office to protect Missourians from being ripped off by the Media Matters scheme and to shed light on the subject.

If you would like to learn more about this issue, please visit our website (ago.mo.gov) and subscribe to our office newsletter.

Thank you again for bringing these concerns to my office. The input of sincere, involved citizens is vital to good government, and your comments and suggestions regarding the issues facing our state are always welcome. Should you ever require assistance in the future, please do not hesitate to reach out for help.

Respectfully,

Andrew Bailey

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF MISSOURI

ANDREW BAILEY

Re: Notice of Pending Investigation

Dear Mr. Carusone,

This letter serves as a formal document hold notice under federal and Missouri law. The Missouri Attorney General's Office has opened an investigation into Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") regarding your firm's potentially unlawful business practices.

As you are no doubt aware, a federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters, raising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X (formerly known as Twitter) through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech. The lawsuit alleges that you lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true. At the same time, you appear to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country.

I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. E.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020.1. I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians in the process.

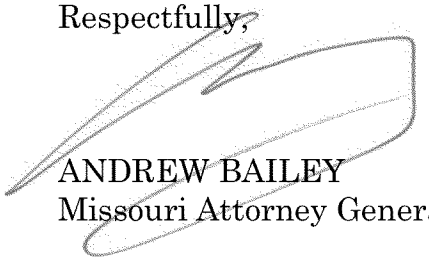
You are thus hereby instructed to preserve all records that may relate to your alleged effort to engage in coordinated, inauthentic behavior on social media platforms in order to generate false statements that were used to solicit charitable contributions under false pretenses. You are instructed in particular to preserve all records that may relate to your webpage, which expressly solicits funds, at the following URL: https://www.mediamatters.org/twitter/musk-endorses-antisemitic-conspiracy-theory-x-has-been-placing-ads-apple-bravo-ibm-oracle. Records you must preserve include but are not limited to:

- Internal communications regarding your strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and your efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform.
- Communications with third parties regarding your strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and your efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform.
- Communications with IBM, Lions Gate Entertainment, Apple, Disney, Warner Brothers Discovery, Paramount Gold, NBCUniversal, Comcast, Sony, Ubisoft and Wal-Mart regarding your strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and your efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform.
- Internal communications regarding your policies, strategies or operations related to generating stories or content intended to "cancel," "deplatform," "demonetize," or otherwise interfere with businesses or organizations located in Missouri, or utilized by Missouri residents.
- Communications and documents related to soliciting charitable funds from residents of Missouri in relation to the webpage at the URL stated above.

Your obligation to preserve evidence extends to documents kept in any form, both physical and electronic. This includes letters, emails, instant messages, text messages, drafts, informal files, desk files, handwritten notes, faxes, memoranda, forms, calendar entries, address book entries, and voicemails. Your obligation applies to both hardcopy documents and electronic ones, including those kept on computers, laptops, tablets, smartphones, and any other electronic device, including both work and personal devices, personal email accounts and personal computers and tablets. Please ensure that all employees and contractors of Media Matters are aware of their obligations to preserve evidence in this case.



AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

You and your staff are further instructed to cease any protocol for the automatic deletion of emails or backup files on your computer systems. Please forward a copy of this letter to Media Matters IT managers and instruct them to suspend any such protocols.

Be advised that any failure to preserve documents of probative value to this case, even if inadvertent, will constitute spoliation of evidence and may result in a finding of contempt from the court or in sanctions.

Your cooperation in this matter is appreciated. Please feel free to contact me with any questions or concerns.

Respectfully,

ANDREW BAILEY

Missouri Attorney General Bailey suing Washington University pediatric transgender clinic
KY3 | No Author Listed
https://www.ky3.com/2023/12/08/missouri-attorney-general-bailey-suing-washington-university-pediatric-transgender-clinic/

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is fighting back against a Washington University lawsuit against him by now suing the university. The attorney general is being sued by Washington University over violations for demanding patient files from the university's pediatric transgender clinic. Bailey is suing the university for failing to hand over documents they previously agreed to provide the AG's office. Bailey launched the investigation into the clinic back in February after a whistleblower came forward saying the center used experimental drugs on children, distributed puberty blockers without individualized assessment, and bullied parents into "consenting" to give their children life-altering drugs. The attorney general issued a subpoena to the pediatric transgender clinic and is now seeking a court order, which would force the university to comply with the subpoena and hand over the documents within 20 days."

Inside the GOP's tense negotiations with Democrats to ban Pentagon-funded 'censorship'
Washington Examiner | Gabe Kaminsky
https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/news/gop-pentagon-defund-censorship-groups-newsguard-gdi

-"The final draft of the 2024 National Defense Authorization Act, an $886 billion spending bill released this week by the Senate and House armed services committees, includes an amendment Republicans hope will stop the Pentagon from contracting with groups "censoring" conservatives. That provision, which along with others will need to pass both chambers and receive President Joe Biden's signature before becoming law, made it into the bill text after House Speaker Mike Johnson (R-LA) and Republicans fought "tooth and nail" with Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-NY) and Senate Majority Whip Dick Durbin (D-IL), according to eight congressional staffers and sources… "For the first time ever, the NDAA will prevent the Pentagon from using any advertiser for recruitment that uses biased censorship entities like NewsGuard and GDI," Taylor Haulsee, a spokesman for the House speaker… The release of the bill text on Wednesday came one day after the state of Texas joined two conservative news outlets, the Federalist and the Daily Wire, in filing a lawsuit against the State Department accusing the agency of "one of the most egregious government operations to censor the American press in the history of the nation." The lawsuit cited how the Global Engagement Center and Pentagon awarded grants or contracts to GDI and NewsGuard, a New York-based "misinformation" tracking company that rates media organizations on purported accuracy. GDI, in particular, is far less transparent than NewsGuard on its ratings system and does not make public the outlets on its "dynamic exclusion list," which GDI feeds monthly to advertisers to inform them of which media operations they should defund… Microsoft launched an internal investigation into its relationship with GDI earlier this year, followed by Oracle cutting ties with the think tank over "free speech" concerns… The NDAA amendment on NewsGuard and GDI specifically pertains to "military recruitment advertisements" and would require the Pentagon to certify entities receiving contracts in connection to this process don't "place advertisements in news sources based on personal or institutional political preferences or biases, or determinations of misinformation," according to the bill text. Moreover, the amendment holds that the Pentagon would have to "submit a notification" to Congress if the agency ever does enter into "a contract related to the placement of recruitment advertising" with NewsGuard, GDI, and "any similar entity" that purports to track "misinformation." Still, many Republicans are pleased with the NDAA's "misinformation" amendment language, viewing it as a historic congressional action to thwart what they have continued to dub the "Censorship Industrial Complex." The Biden administration likely skirted the First Amendment while urging social media companies "to remove disfavored content and accounts from their sites" an arrangement heavily covered in the "Twitter Files," sets of documents X Owner Elon Musk released to journalists showing the company's communications with the U.S. government about content moderation under ex-CEO Jack Dorsey, according to a federal appellate court's September ruling in the landmark free speech case Missouri v. Biden. "This amendment is a monumental step forward in protecting the freedom of speech and combating state-sponsored censorship," said Sen. Eric Schmitt (R-MO), who, as the Show-Me State's attorney general in 2022, led Missouri v. Biden. "Previous to this amendment, in certain instances, the Biden administration would not allow the military to place recruiting advertisements in conservative media outlets," Schmitt told the Washington Examiner… The 2024 NDAA amendment stems from Rep. Rich McCormick's (R-GA) proposal in June called "Prohibition on Availability of Funds Relating to Censorship or Blacklisting of News Sources Based on Subjective Criteria or Political Biases." The amendment from McCormick…, broadly sought to ban Pentagon funds for any reason to NewsGuard, GDI, a New York-based company called Graphika Inc., or "any other entity the function of which is to advise the censorship or blacklisting of news sources based on subjective criteria or political biases, under the stated function of 'fact checking' or otherwise removing 'misinformation,'" documents show… "At the end of the day, we are grateful that some of the language still made it in, because that's the only significant language that addresses censorship that's going to pass this year," Singleton said. "That's a Republican win. It didn't go as far as it did in our original amendment. This is still good progress for free speech." A senior Republican Senate aide, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said "Schumer and Durbin were really pissed about" the GDI and NewsGuard amendment. The person emphasized that the amendment is "pretty strong" given Democrats control the Senate and presidency and that the amendment will "reform the contracting process to bar these organizations from conservative media censorship."…"

Bailey has checked a number of other boxes that put him in the mix, including on abortion rights, challenging Biden-era environmental measures and signing onto the gag order brief led by Bird and West Virginia Attorney General Patrick Morrisey, who touts himself as "one of President Trump's most vocal supporters" in fundraising messages for his 2024 gubernatorial run."

-"In the competitive landscape of discount retailing, Dollar General Corporation (NYSE:) has been a subject of intense scrutiny by Wall Street. The company, known for its broad network of stores offering a variety of consumer goods at low prices, is at a pivotal juncture as it navigates through a challenging economic climate and a recent management shake-up… Analysts have expressed concerns regarding Dollar General's market position, observing a significant decline in the company's stock, which dropped approximately 55% from its levels a year prior… The company's management anticipates improved customer satisfaction and inventory allocation to drive unit share gains and a return to 2-4% comp growth over time. However, there is no commitment to operating margin expansion for the foreseeable future due to challenges such as elevated levels of shrink, a high mix of lower-margin consumables, uncertain promotional backdrop, and structural labor and wage investments. A recent lawsuit by the Missouri Attorney General accused Dollar General of charging higher prices at the point of sale than advertised on tags or shelves, an issue that has previously arisen in other states. This underscores the potential need for Dollar General to invest further in both pricing strategies to remain competitive and labor to ensure price accuracy in stores…"

St. Louis police ranks hit a new low after years of departures

https://www.stltoday.com/news/local/crime-courts/st-louis-police-ranks-hit-a-new-low-after-years-of-departures/article_0928f476-946b-11ee-b0a1-1baa916f7c7b.html#tncms-source=login

-"The St. Louis Police Department's staffing has hit its lowest levels on record after it lost another 17 cops — almost 2% of its commissioned workforce — over the past month. The city is budgeted for 1,224 officers, but just 912 of those positions were filled as of the first week in December. After years of staffing woes, that number marks a low point in recorded history for the department… "When I started back in 1995, there were closer to 1,600 officers, and now they're down under 1,000. That's just crazy." [said Joe Steiger, business manager for the St. Louis Police Officers Association]. The agency's current 25% vacancy rate has strained the rank-and-file as they try to cover three patrol shifts in the city's six districts. In September, only two police officers were initially assigned to a district just south of downtown, when they both called in sick, leaving the department scrambling… Some neighborhoods, including downtown, have used outside sources to staff police officers to combat high crime levels… At the same time, crime in the city has decreased. Property crimes are down about 17%, aggravated assaults are down 9% and homicides are down by about 22% from last year. Homicides are expected to hit the biggest year-over-year drop in roughly 90 years… But earlier this year, Tracy tapped the St. Louis Police Foundation, a nonprofit that also provides about one-third of his annual pay, to dedicate almost $1 million to pay city officers $70 an hour to work overtime downtown patrols… And after remaining relatively steady with a force of roughly 1,200 over the past decade, according to department data, the pace of police vacancies has quickened. In 2022, the department lost almost 120 officers between January 2022 and January 2023. Since then, about 100 more have left. Steiger said the numbers don't account for Jones' vote in 2021 to cut vacant commissioned positions by almost 100. Available records go back to May 2011, when 1,268 of the 1,296 positions were filled, said St. Louis police Sgt. Charles Wall. These numbers include all ranks, except the officers who are attending the police academy. Dunne said there are 30 people currently training in the academy… Despite this year's low staffing levels, Steiger said the department has slowed the rate of resignations and retirements this year compared with last. Steiger credited the union's negotiated pay increases for officers, and Wall pointed to a change in city policy this year that allows the department to pay new hires based on how many years of commissioned experience they have, even if that experience was at another agency… But, Steiger said, if the department doesn't turn its staffing woes around in the next two years, it may lose more than 100 officers who will be eligible to retire… St. Louis isn't alone. In St. Louis County, where the police department has just 826 of its 961 budgeted positions filled, the situation is much the same: Lt. Col. Juan Cox said last month that about 20% of the county's officers will be able to retire in the next five years… The city police department was under state control until 2013, when a statewide referendum put the agency back into the hands of city leadership. Since then, Steiger said the city has been heavily involved in the department's hiring process and argued the bureaucracy and red tape in the process slows down hiring an applicant, allowing time for other agencies to "pluck" that officer…"

Crisis on campus: Financial troubles threaten the survival of colleges across St. Louis

-"Colleges across the St. Louis area face questions about their long-term sustainability amid a nationwide crisis in higher education… Public funding is harder to come by, while tuition and operating costs continue to increase. And, perhaps most foreboding, public opinion around the value of higher education has shifted, leading more students to not attend college. Universities nationwide were already challenged by a long-term decline in birth rates when the coronavirus pandemic exacerbated enrollment declines. Every university in the St. Louis region saw fewer students enroll in the fall 2020 semester, according to a Post-Dispatch review of enrollment data… Experts believe many of those struggling institutions will not exist for long… Nationwide, enrollment fell 16% from its peak in the 2010-2011 school year to the 2021-2022 school year, according to the latest available data from the National Center for Education Statistics… Year over year, enrollment fell 1.8% in the 2021-2022 school year. But the declines have been worse than average in Missouri. Enrollment fell 3.5% in Missouri from the 2020-2021 to 2021-2022 school year — accounting for most of the decline experienced in all of the Midwest that year… Over the past five years, about 60% of U.S. colleges have experienced deficits because of insufficient tuition dollars… Webster University experienced a 50% drop in enrollment and a loss of $128 million over the past decade. Its longtime leader, Chancellor Beth Stroble, announced her resignation last month after the Post-Dispatch reported that Webster's board of trustees had given her and her second-in-command big pay raises despite the financial turmoil. Moody's credit agency last month downgraded Webster's bond rating, indicating the private university is at higher risk of defaulting on payments because of its $100 million deficit and thinning financial reserves… Revenues at Fontbonne University declined more than $14 million over the past decade, leading to the recent elimination of 21 academic programs and 19 faculty positions. An effort to boost enrollment by launching a new football program largely failed when half the team dropped out of the Catholic institution in Clayton… Harris-Stowe State University, one of two historically Black colleges in the state, faces a critical test this spring, when the Higher Learning Commission visits the school. The commission placed Harris-Stowe's accreditation "on notice" last year due to the school's late audit of fiscal year 2021… At Lindenwood University, enrollment has fallen 39% over the past decade, from a little over 12,000 students to 7,288 this fall. Officials at the St. Charles County college attribute the decline to the closing of its Belleville campus and the phasing out of satellite locations. Last week, the school announced it would eliminate 10 athletic programs at the end of the academic year, impacting 280 students… The school in recent years has focused on expanding its online classes and creating flexible programs for non-traditional students that allow them to start mid-semester… There are more career and training options available that don't require a four-year degree. And the Regional Business Council has made more of an effort to connect K-12 school counselors and administrators from low-income communities with businesses in the region to show students potential career paths. Some won't require a traditional college degree; other careers may inspire students to obtain a degree years later. Colleges will have to think creatively and be proactive in order to survive, she added…"

University of Kansas deal with Missouri hospital feels 'terribly wrong' to lawmakers

https://missouriindependent.com/2023/12/11/university-of-kansas-deal-with-missouri-hospital-feels-terribly-wrong-to-lawmakers/

-"The proposed takeover of Liberty Hospital in Missouri by the University of Kansas Health System is being greeted with scorn by lawmakers from both sides of the state line and both political parties. Leading the charge against the takeover in Missouri is Kansas City Democratic state Sen. Greg Razer, who said the idea of KU owning a hospital in suburban Missouri is "terribly wrong."… The Republican leader of the Kansas Senate also has expressed concern about the takeover, along with at least one member of Liberty Hospital's board of trustees. Earlier this month, Razer pre-filed a bill in the Missouri General

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Assembly that would put a stop to a proposed partnership between the University of Kansas Health System and Liberty Hospital by prohibiting hospital boards to partner with an out-of-state health system "operated by an institution of higher education" without voter approval… Liberty Hospital announced in May it was looking to partner with another health system to help it expand to meet growing demand in the Kansas City suburbs north of the Missouri River. In October, it announced it had chosen KU. The two health systems have signed a letter of intent but are still in negotiations, and the terms of the deal are not yet available. But Liberty Hospital CEO Dr. Raghu Adiga said in an interview Friday that KU had pledged to continue the services the hospital provides, including cardiothoracic surgery and a level-two trauma center… Razer said the arrangement would take health care dollars from Missouri to "prop up Kansas," and feared it would be a recruiting tool for the University of Kansas… Razer's primary objection centered on the idea of having a Kansas state institution plant its flag in Missouri. The University of Kansas Health System is governed by the University of Kansas Hospital Authority, a board established in Kansas statute, primarily appointed by the Kansas governor and affiliated with the University of Kansas School of Medicine. But the health system hasn't been owned by the state in 25 years. It receives no state or local tax dollars… Missouri Sen. Denny Hoskins, R-Warrensburg, shared Razer's misgivings about the arrangement. "That would be my concern from Missouri: Will a state-owned Kansas hospital put forth the necessary resources for a hospital in Missouri that does not serve any Kansas taxpayers," Hoskins said. Even knowing KU doesn't receive Kansas tax funds, Hoskins said his concerns remained… Across the state line, Kansas Senate President Ty Masterson, a Republican from Andover, expressed frustration to fellow members of a confirmation oversight committee in November. "Going outside the state when you have … 29 struggling hospitals inside the state of Kansas that probably could have benefitted from an arrangement like that," Masterson said… Myron Neth, a member of Liberty Hospital's board of trustees and a former Republican state lawmaker, also objected to the partnership, saying the board didn't give enough consideration to proposals it received from other health systems…he said, there's nothing in the tentative agreement between Liberty and KU to ensure money generated by the Missouri hospital stays in the hospital district — or the state of Missouri. He doesn't like the idea of a Missouri public subdivision being turned over to the citizens of Kansas. "There's just kind of something weird about that," Neth said… Adiga said the hospital hopes to finalize an agreement with the University of Kansas Health System in early 2024, giving Razer's bill little time to get through the Missouri General Assembly, which convenes Jan. 3. The "New Liberty Hospital District" and "New Liberty Hospital Corporation" have hired eight Missouri lobbyists since the beginning of the month. "They're going to be rushing," Razer said, "and I think we will, too.'"

'Morally, this is obscene': GOP divided over stripping compensation for radiation victims from NDAA

-"The bipartisan amendment to the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) passed the Senate with a supermajority in August but was not included in the House version of the bill and was ultimately dropped from the final legislation. Co-sponsor Sen. Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) called its removal a "betrayal" of the country's commitment to the victims of such radiation. Proponents of the measure are pointing the finger at Republican leadership, saying they are responsible for stripping it from the NDAA… Hawley was more explicit. Asked why the amendment was taken out, he told The Hill, "You ought to ask" Speaker Mike Johnson (R-La.) and Sen. Mitch McConnell. He said Democratic leaders Sen. Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) and Rep. Hakeem Jeffries (D-N.Y.) "were supportive" and that he was not given an explanation from Johnson or McConnell about why the measure was dropped. "Morally, this is obscene," he added… The amendment would have extended compensation for people who were exposed to nuclear testing and nuclear waste radiation as a result of U.S. government activity and suffered negative health impacts. These funds are set to expire next year, while the amendment would reauthorize them for another 19 years. The amendment would also expand compensation — offering it for the first time to people in New Mexico, where the atomic bomb was tested in 1945, and Missouri, where uranium storage contaminated the Coldwater Creek, as well as Idaho, Montana, Guam and Colorado… The differences over the measure mark a source of division among Republicans, as three of the leading voices calling for compensation were members of the GOP — Hawley, Sen. Mike Crapo (Idaho) and Sen. Eric Schmitt (Mo.). Of the three, Hawley has been particularly vocal in condemning Republican leaders over the move to drop the amendment and has also said he would seek to delay the defense bill in response. He told The Hill he'd force "every vote that I can" and pursue "every procedural hurdle."… Some of the objections appeared to center around cost. One fiscally conservative group — the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget — opposed the measure on those grounds… However, Gordon said he would have been more amenable to the legislation if there were efforts to cut its costs… Negotiators attempted to lower the price by proposing to reduce the number of years of the extension or offset its costs, ABC News reported Friday, noting the efforts were ultimately not enough. The issue — and particularly the procedural standoff that Hawley is leading — marks the latest in a series of rifts among congressional Republicans…"

Missouri Using Hoe Genealogy Testing to Solve Crimes

MissouriNet l Marshall Griffin

-"Various law enforcement agencies across the country are using results from home genealogy test kits to solve criminal cases that have gone cold, and Missouri is no exception. Darren Haslag is a master sergeant with the Missouri State Highway Patrol who's assigned to the Division of Drug and Crime Control. He doesn't know exactly when the use of genetic genealogy to solve cold cases started, but said it really took off about five years ago with the identity of the Golden State Killer in California. "They were collecting DNA, but the DNA really wasn't matching to anybody that's in a system that many states have," Haslag told Missourinet… Joseph James DeAngelo is now serving 12 life sentences without parole for 13 murders and 51 rapes committed in California during the 1970's and 80's. Haslag explained how genetic genealogy works as a crime fighting tool. "You can get a line of family members that share the DNA of the sample that you submitted, but you still have to do the work," he said. "You still have to figure out of this group of family members, and depending on how the markers in the DNA and the results come back, you may have three brothers that could have done this crime or you could have the ancestors of a certain great grandpa." But that has led some people to raise privacy concerns about submitting DNA samples to learn about their ancestry. Haslag said some companies choose not to share their customers' DNA info with law enforcement. "Other ones that do (share) give the customers an option to opt out of it when they submit their sample," he said. "There's always an option that when you submit it that you can opt out of it. Most sites have that. The ones that will not participate with us just are not available for those searches through companies that we use." Haslag said the Highway Patrol is currently using genetic genealogy to investigate two violent sexual assaults that occurred in southern Missouri. He can't comment any further on those two cases."

Missouri lawmakers take aim at meatpacking sludge that has roiled rural residents

-"Sen. Jill Carter, R-Granby, is sponsoring legislation that could rein in companies like Denali Water Solutions, an Arkansas-based firm that collects animal waste products from meatpacking companies and then applies it for free to agricultural lands. Rep. Ed Lewis, R-Moberly, also has filed a proposal in the House taking aim at companies that store slaughterhouse waste in massive basins before spreading it on fields. The practice has become controversial among rural residents at the same time Republican Gov. Mike Parson, a cattle farmer, has led the charge to expand meatpacking facilities in Missouri… Complaints include strong odors and concerns about the waste flowing into the state's waterways, spoiling creeks, rivers and lakes. Residents living nearby have filed lawsuits and issued calls for tougher enforcement and legislative intervention. Carter's proposal would strengthen the permitting process, potentially making it harder for companies to collect the material from meatpackers unless it is tested and deemed safe for spreading… Local groups suing Denali include the southwestern Missouri-based Stop Land Use Damaging our Ground and Environment, or SLUDGE… Along with southwestern Missouri residents, a group of opponents have been fighting a similar situation in Randolph County, spurring Lewis to file his plan. Environmental attorney Stephen Jeffery called Carter's proposed legislation a good start because it focuses on the earthen basins used to store millions of gallons of sludge and waste before it is pumped onto nearby land… In the meantime, DNR officials ordered Denali to cease operations on Nov. 29, saying the company was not operating pursuant to guidelines listed in a June letter. The DNR's action came after an October spill of slaughterhouse waste leaked into a ditch and field near Fairview in Newton County. From Nov. 29 forward, DNR said "any unpermitted land application of process wastewater will be cited as intentional violations of the Missouri Clean Water Law."… Liebl said more than 100 Missouri farmers rely on fertilizers from Denali, and dozens of Missouri food manufacturers employing more than 10,000 Missouri workers depend on the company's services to continue their business operations… Heather Peters, water pollution control branch chief of the DNR's Water Protection Program, said the current enforcement status is not "business as usual." "Denali does not have their own authorization to conduct land application," Peters said. "Also, the use of the basins is not permitted, and they have been notified that material cannot be added to the basin.'"

-"The Missouri Department of Conservation (MDC) has announced changes to turkey hunting regulations for the upcoming spring season and proposed regulation changes for the fall seasons… For the Spring 2024 turkey season, shooting hours on private land will now extend from a half-hour before sunrise until sunset. However, on public land, shooting hours will continue to be from a half-hour before sunrise to 1 p.m. The proposed changes for fall turkey hunting include a requirement for both fall firearms and archery turkey hunters to obtain a specific fall turkey-hunting permit. Consequently, turkeys will no longer be included in the archery-deer permit. Additionally, the bag limit will decrease from four to two birds… MDC's primary objective with these regulation changes is to enhance spring hunting opportunities for youth and day-working hunters and to balance the fall harvest while maximizing hunting opportunities. MDC Turkey Biologist Nick Oakley explains that hunter participation and recruitment have been declining in Missouri due to conflicts with school and work schedules. Extending shooting hours addresses this barrier… Oakley notes that states in the Midwest and Southeast have experienced increases in hunter participation, harvest rates, and satisfaction after extending their hunting hours to all day."

Missouri Lawmaker Does Not Think Four-Day School Week Restrictions Would Get Traction in 2024

https://www.missourinet.com/2023/12/11/missouri-lawmaker-does-not-think-four-day-school-week-restrictions-would-get-traction-in-2024/

-"Missouri has 168 school districts that have shifted to four-day school weeks this academic year. According to the Missouri Department of Elementary and Secondary Education the state had 143 school districts holding classes four days a week in the 2022-23 school year. Rep. Brad Pollitt, the chairman of the Missouri House's Elementary and Secondary Education Committee, does not think that legislative bills to restrict four-day school weeks would get much traction next year… The schools might have shortened weeks, but they must still fulfill the same number of hours of instruction as schools running five days a week. The four-day model has been a teacher recruitment and retention tool, especially for Missouri's rural districts. After the Independence School District moved to a four-day school week, lawmakers tried unsuccessfully this year to restrict the shortened academic weeks. "I'm not saying that I totally agree with four-day school weeks. I need more data on that, to be honest with you. I know a number of our schools have went to four-day weeks and if it's fit in their community, you know, I really don't have a stomach to go into that and try to disrupt that at this time. I think that we need to be concentrating more on trying to get teacher salaries where they need to be," said Pollitt. According to Pollitt, he plans to file a bill for the upcoming legislative session that would raise Missouri's minimum teacher salary to $40,000. He also wants to raise the salaries of teachers with more experience and degrees. Neighboring Arkansas has a new law that makes that state's minimum teacher pay $50,000 annually."

The other five use a 4% credit, set aside for nonprofits that also use financing from tax-exempt bonds. Overall, the commission authorized $173.5 million in federal 9% credits and $121.4 million in state tax credits, with varying maturities stretching over 10 years. Those projects also received $24 million in other funding. The commission authorized $44 million in 4% federal credits and $37 million in matching state credits, plus $81.4 million in bond financing and $7 million in other funding, for the remaining projects. When completed, the projects will provide 1,532 new housing units ranging from studio apartments to four-bedroom family homes in communities across the state. For only the second time in the program's history, the commission released the scores that determined which applications were funded… "We give great weight to the scores but the staff's analysis goes beyond the scoring," Stetzler said… The commission funded three of 11 projects using 9% tax credits proposed for the Kansas City area and five of 21 proposed for the St. Louis region. The rest of the state is divided between sparsely populated rural counties and regions in close proximity to cities like Springfield, Columbia and Cape Girardeau. Supreme Court May Soon Consider EPA's Veto of Huge Alaska Mine

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-may-soon-consider-epas-veto-of-huge-alaska-mine-5544608

-"The Supreme Court may soon consider whether to hear Alaska's appeal against the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) decision to veto the proposed $400 billion Pebble Mine project in the southwestern part of the state. The project site on state-owned land in the Bristol Bay area is reportedly home to the planet's second-largest untapped deposit of copper. Demand for copper is expected to more than double by 2050. Copper is essential to industries that make products favored by environmentalists such as electric vehicles and wind turbines. Gold, silver, molybdenum, and rhenium have also been identified at the site. Pebble Limited, which wants to develop the site, said it will generate as many as 2,000 jobs… The court may take up the case next month. Alaska's move comes after the nation's highest court limited the EPA's powers in recent years… The EPA skipped the usual regulatory protocol and decided under Section 404(c) of the Clean Water Act to restrict the use of waters in the Bristol Bay watershed as disposal sites for discharges of dredged or fill material associated with developing the Pebble project site or any other similar project on state-owned lands nearby. The EPA's veto of the project included future mines in a 309-square-mile area. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers turned down the mine application in 2020 but had agreed to review its decision. Despite the access to environmentalist-favored copper promised by the project, environmentalists still claimed the project would harm fisheries. The Army Corps of Engineers issued a Final Environmental Impact Statement in July 2020 stating that the mine would not adversely affect the Bristol Bay fishery. Earlier this year, Alaska Gov. Mike Dunleavy, a Republican, said the EPA was wrong to intervene in the state's affairs… "Alarmingly, it lays the foundation to stop any development project, mining or non-mining, in any area of Alaska with wetlands and fish-bearing streams. My administration will stand up for the rights of Alaskans, Alaska property owners, and Alaska's future," he said. "The State of Alaska has a responsibility to develop its resources to provide for itself and its people. Alaska does resource development better than any other place on the planet…" The Biden administration countered in a brief (pdf) that the Bristol Bay watershed "is an area of unparalleled ecological value, boasting salmon diversity and productivity unrivaled anywhere in North America."… The Supreme Court is not required to take a case. In the case at hand, Alaska v. United States, Alaska filed a motion for leave to file a bill of complaint (pdf). If at least four of the nine justices vote to grant the motion, the case will move forward to the oral argument stage. In addition to the federal government, Alaska is suing Michael Regan in his official capacity as administrator of the EPA."

ACLU Will Represent NRA In Free Speech Case Before Supreme Court

Epoch Times l Tom Ozimek

-"The National Rifle Association (NRA) has found an unlikely ally in of the left-leaning American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), which will represent the gun rights advocacy group at the U.S. Supreme Court in a case that centers of the constitutional right of free speech. The NRA in 2018 brought a lawsuit against Maria Vullo, former superintendent of the New York Department of Financial Services (DFS), alleging that she violated the First Amendment by pressuring regulated financial institutions like banks and insurers to stop doing business with the gun rights group. The case made its way through the courts, eventually landing before the Supreme Court, which in November agreed to take it up… NRA President Charles Cotton welcomed the ACLU's announcement. "The NRA is proud to stand with the ACLU and others who recognize this important truth: regulatory authority cannot be used to silence political speech," he said in a post on X. The gun rights group's original lawsuit accused Ms. Vullo and the DFS of having engaged in a "campaign of selective prosecution, backroom exhortations, and public threats" to the detriment of the NRA and the Americans it represents… "While we vigorously oppose the NRA's viewpoint, we cannot give government officials the power to silence those with whom they disagree," the ACLU said, adding that, if the Supreme Court doesn't intervene, "it will create a dangerous playbook for state regulatory agencies across the country to blacklist or punish any viewpoint-based organizations." Jeremy Tedesco, senior counsel for the Alliance Defending Freedom (ADF), told The Epoch Times in an earlier interview that the actions of New York officials with respect to the NRA are the latest in a long line of attempts by the government to control speech by pressuring financial institutions to cut off services to disfavored organizations."

Texas Supreme Court Halts Pro-Abortion Order by Lower Court

-"The Texas Supreme Court on Friday temporarily halted a lower court's decision that granted a pregnant woman the ability to get an emergency court-authorized abortion despite the state's strict rules against getting one. The high court's Dec. 9 decision came after a district court a day earlier granted a request for an emergency abortion in a lawsuit brought by Kate Cox, a woman who is 20 weeks pregnant and whose unborn baby was diagnosed with Trisomy 18, a condition that causes multiple structural abnormalities that doctors said gave it no chance of survival after birth. By an order issued on Dec. 8, the Texas Supreme Court applied an administrative stay—without ruling on the merits of the case—to the temporary restraining order issued by a judge at the District Court of Travis County, Texas, which paused Texas' strict abortion laws so that Ms. Cox could legally terminate her pregnancy. In its decision, the high court said that it would consider the matter further and issue a more comprehensive ruling at a later time. The Texas Supreme Court ruling came in response to a motion filed late Friday by Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton, who sent a letter to three Texas hospitals, warning them that they faced the prospect of legal action if they allowed the abortion to take place at their facility…"

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Appeals Court Affirms, Narrows Trump Gag Order

Epoch Times l Catherine Yang

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/appeals-court-affirms-trump-gag-order-5543871?ea_src=frontpage&ea_med=most-read-0

-"A three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia affirmed a gag order that U.S. District Court Judge Tanya Chutkan originally issued, prohibiting former President Donald Trump from making statements that target several groups of people involved in a case accusing him of interfering with the 2020 elections. The 68-page opinion and order provided some additional specifics to Judge Chutkan's original order, narrowing the gag order. The former president is prohibited from "making or directing others to make public statements about known or reasonably foreseeable witnesses concerning their potential participation in the investigation or in this criminal proceeding." Previously, the order prohibited President Trump from making any statements that would "target" any potential witness, or the content of their potential testimonies. He is also allowed to make statements about special counsel Jack Smith, whom the appellate court judges had deemed a public figure in an earlier hearing. However, he is prohibited from making statements about his staff, including other federal attorneys, their families, and any court staff and their families "if those statements are made with the intent to materially interfere with, or to cause others to materially interfere with, counsel's or staff's work in this criminal case, or with the knowledge that such interference is highly likely to result."… The appellate panel adopted Judge Chutkan's rationale, writing that "some aspects of Mr. Trump's public statements pose a significant and imminent threat to the fair and orderly adjudication of the ongoing criminal proceeding," and warranted a gag order. "However," they noted, the original gag order "sweeps in more protected speech than is necessary. For that reason, we affirm the district court's order in part and vacate it in part." The opinion had been partially redacted, and the court has given the parties a Dec. 18 deadline to argue on whether the redactions should be unsealed… The Trump Campaign issued a statement on the order, claiming the prosecution has been politically motivated. "Today, the D.C. Circuit Court panel, with each judge appointed by a Democrat President, determined that a huge part of Judge Chutkan's extraordinarily overbroad gag order was unconstitutional," Trump Campaign spokesperson Steven Cheung stated. "President Trump will continue to fight for the First Amendment rights of tens of millions of Americans to hear from the leading Presidential candidate at the height of his campaign. The Biden-led witch hunts against President Trump and the American people will fail.'"

'A Cynical Strategy': Less Than Two Years After Dobbs, Abortion Is Headed To The Supreme Court Again

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/10/cynical-strategy-two-years-after-dobbs-abortion-headed-supreme-court-again/

-"Supreme Court Justice Elana Kagan will decide any day now on an emergency petition for an abortion case from Idaho, just under two years after the landmark decision to overturn Roe v. Wade, and legal and policy experts who spoke with the Daily Caller News Foundation said that the court will likely have to wrestle with the issue again soon. In August 2022, the Department of Justice filed a lawsuit against Idaho for banning all abortions and the state's Attorney General Raúl Labrador filed a motion with Kagan on Nov. 27, asking that the law be allowed to remain in effect as the lawsuit plays out. The Biden administration is trying to push a "very tortured interpretation" of the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act (EMTALA), which prohibits hospitals from turning away patients having a medical emergency, Alliance Defending Freedom Senior Counsel Erin Hawley told the DCNF, and the stage is being set for the nation's highest court to weigh in on the issue again. "This is something that the Supreme Court is likely going to need to consider," Hawley explained to the DCNF… The DOJ argues in its lawsuit that Idaho's law prevents doctors from treating conditions such as ectopic pregnancies and severe preeclampsia. The department claims that EMTALA requires doctors to not turn away patients in need of "emergency stabilizing care," which it also argues includes abortions. "Not until after the Dobbs decision did the Biden administration stage a stand and say that [EMTALA], which was originally about hospital access, was actually about abortion," Marc Wheat, general counsel for Advancing American Freedom, which filed a friend-of-the-court brief with the Supreme Court, told the DCNF. "There's a whole range of efforts across the Biden administration to try to push abortion wherever they can and here, the issue was whether an Idaho law can stand while they are fighting out this case in the courts." In 2023, the Idaho legislature amended its law that originally only provided doctors with the right to an affirmative defense if they performed an emergency abortion and created an exception in the law that allows the procedure for saving the life of the mother and in cases of rape and incest. Daniel told the DCNF that the Idaho law, particularly in light of this change, is perfectly in line with EMTALA… The courts have issued differing opinions on the subject over the past year and a half. In October, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed its previous ruling, which had allowed the ban to remain in effect, and said that they planned to re-hear the case after the DOJ's appeal, but gave no further explanation as to what prompted the decision. As a result, Labrador, alongside Alliance Defending Freedom, filed an emergency motion to Kagan in November asking her to allow the law to remain in effect while it is in the court system to protect the lives of unborn children…

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Hawley and Wheat further said that there is “’absolutely” a “good possibility” that the case will end up at the Supreme Court again, beyond the emergency motion, and that it will be a pivotal ruling less than two years out from the Dobbs decision… “I think the Biden administration will work to try to knock down protections for unborn children wherever they can find them. … It’s a really cynical strategy and I’m very disappointed with career lawyers who are pushing this, but they’re just doing the bidding of the politicals out of the White House,” Wheat told the DCNF.”

Red state AGs move to block abortion ballot language pro-life group says is 'deceptive,' goes farther than Roe

https://www.foxnews.com/politics/red-state-ags-move-block-abortion-ballot-language-pro-life-group-says-deceptive-goes-farther-than-roe

-“Attorney generals in red states are making moves to address ambiguities and euphemisms in upcoming abortion measures in their states to avoid deceptive language, an issue that pro-life groups say was critical in the Ohio vote. In Arkansas, Attorney General Tim Griffin recently rejected a proposed abortion ballot that he said had a deceptive title and misleading text. Griffin outlined concerns about "ambiguities in the text", not enough clarity on the meanings of the words "health" and "access," the potentially deceptive name of the ballot measure, and other facts that he says need to be addressed and resubmitted. In Florida, Republican AG Ashley Moody recently called a pro-abortion amendment initiative that made it to her desk "one of the worst I have ever seen." "As any mother knows, ‘viability’ has two meanings when it comes to pregnancy. First, it means whether a pregnancy is expected to continue developing normally through delivery. Doctors can tell during the first trimester, usually around about 12 weeks, whether a pregnancy is viable and would have a much lower risk of miscarriage. For that reason, many women often wait to tell family and friends about their pregnancy until that time." Moody wrote. "Second, viability is sometimes used to mean whether a baby can survive outside of the uterus, which currently is around 21 to 25 weeks of pregnancy. The two time periods, depending on your definition of viability, are starkly different, and the procedures performed to abort a baby’s life at either time period are dissimilar."… South Dakota AG Jackley also took issue with the wording in a recent abortion proposal writing that "any suggestion that your proposed abortion amendment makes abortion legal only for the first trimester is contrary to the language of the proposed amendment."… "Deception is the common theme in every abortion ballot measure," SBA Pro-Life America’s state public affairs director Kelsey Pritchard said in a statement to Fox News Digital. "Abortion activists have repeatedly used unclear language to mislead voters into embedding unlimited abortion in their state constitutions. Because Americans do not support second- and third-trimester abortions, Big Abortion must funnel millions into ads that lie about what these amendments actually do in order to be successful."… "They're taking action early now to fight back against it and to make sure there's clarity for the voters in their states about how radical these amendments are allowing abortion basically without restriction and deteriorating parental rights."

Illegal Immigration Surges Months After Biden, Trudeau Make Deal To Crack Down On Northern Border Influx

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/10/illegal-immigration-northern-border-biden/

-“As part of the deal, authorities at the U.S.-Canadian border must return migrants who cross illegally to make their asylum claims either to Canada or the U.S. However, Border Patrol encounters of migrants crossing illegally into the U.S. have only increased in recent months, jumping to 1,154 in July and all the way up to 1,521 in October, according to the Customs and Border Protection (CBP) data. For a short time after the deal, Border Patrol encounters of migrants crossing the northern border illegally into the U.S. decreased from 992 in March to 977 in April, 803 in May and 844 in June, according to CBP data. A Border Patrol agent working along the northern border told the DCNF that they’ve seen “record” crossings in recent months… The deal still allows some illegal migrants to be released into the U.S. if they present a “credible fear” of return to their home country, according to a Department of Homeland Security (DHS) memo previously obtained by the Daily Caller News Foundation. If the individual is determined to have a legitimate credible fear, they can be released into the U.S. with a future court date, according to U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS), which granted roughly 58% of credible fear claims referred to the agency in fiscal year 2022… The Swanton Sector has seen 550% increase in illegal crossings compared to 2022, with 6,925 apprehensions from 79 different countries, the agency said in November. The deal set out to deter illegal crossings, but that’s not something Border Patrol and local residents are seeing… “At the current pace the 2024 numbers … will exceed those of 2023,” David Favro, sheriff of Clinton County, New York, told the DCNF… While the northern border sees a surge in illegal immigration, illegal crossings at the southern border remain at record highs, with border officials surpassing two million encounters in both fiscal years 2022 and 2023, according to federal data.”

The Senate Is Considering An AI Bill That Could Radically Alter The Future Of The Internet

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/10/senate-bill-ai-liability-hawley/

-“Republican Missouri Sen. Josh Hawley and Democratic Connecticut Sen. Richard Blumenthal in June introduced the No Section 230 Immunity for AI Act, which would clarify that liability protections under Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act do not apply to text and visual content created by artificial intelligence. Hawley may attempt to hold a vote on the bill in the coming weeks, his office told the Daily Caller News Foundation. Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act of 1996 states that internet companies cannot be held liable for third-party speech posted on their platforms. The question of whether these same protections apply to content created by artificial intelligence could have a dramatic impact on online speech, especially as artificial intelligence technology such as ChatGPT come to play a large role online, as major tech companies could face a deluge of lawsuits for AI-generated content. The bill would enable Americans to file lawsuits against AI firms whose advanced technology enables the production of damaging content. The bill would target AI-generated content such as deepfakes, which are false but realistic-looking visual imitations, often of a real person… The legislation defines generative AI as "an artificial intelligence system that is capable of generating novel text, video, images, audio, and other media based on prompts or other forms of data provided by a person.''… However, some tech experts warn that removing Section 230 protections from AI-generated content could have deleterious effects on both internet users and the burgeoning AI industry. When certain sources say content is harmful, AI companies may not want to feed it to their models, Czerniawski told the DCNF, pointing to examples of censorship of conservative news sites at the behest of organizations like the Global Disinformation Index. Section 230 may be the reason that technology companies host controversial speech on their platforms, so limiting liability protections for AI-generated content could lead to AI relying on a narrower subset of information, Cato Institute Technology Policy Research Fellow Jennifer Huddleston told the DCNF… Hawley and Blumenthal argued that extending Section 230 liability protections to AI would shield tech companies from accountability for the perceived harms of their products. "We can't make the same mistakes with generative AI as we did with Big Tech on Section 230," Hawley stated. "When these new technologies harm innocent people, the companies must be held accountable. Victims deserve their day in court and this bipartisan proposal will make that a reality."

I hope everyone has an amazing day and start to their week!

Hi,
Attached is the final version of the EMBARGOED letter that AG Bailey plans to send to Media Matters tomorrow. We find it especially relevant after Elon Musk let Alex Jones back on Twitter this weekend. Musk is committed to free speech, and because of that, he has become a target of the radical left.
AG Bailey views it as such:

DRAFT DO NOT RELEASE

-Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.
-Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.
-Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being ripped off by this scheme and to shed light on the subject. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.
-Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:

1. Social media platforms
   - We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS
2. President Trump
   - We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates
3. The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms perverting the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.
   - Anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes unchecked, the marketplace for free, fair and open debate will cease to exist.

-The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.

1. We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

Hello, Madeline!
I apologize for the late request. We just had a cancellation. Is there any possibility we could get AG Bailey tonight at 9:20PM (ET), for about 12-15 minutes by phone?

Subject: [EXTERNAL] AG Bailey - Media Matters

Hi,
Attached is the final version of the EMBARGOED letter that AG Bailey plans to send to Media Matters tomorrow. We find it especially relevant after Elon Musk let Alex Jones back on Twitter this weekend. Musk is committed to free speech, and because of that, he has become a target of the radical left.
AG Bailey views it as such:

DRAFT DO NOT RELEASE

-Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.

-Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

-Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being ripped off by this scheme and to shed light on the subject. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.

-Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:

1.Social media platforms

- We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS

2.President Trump

- We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates

3.The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms perverting the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.

- Anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes unchecked, the marketplace for free, fair and open debate will cease to exist.

-The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.

1.We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

He is available this week if you have interest in an interview.

Hi,
Attached is the final version of the EMBARGOED letter that AG Bailey plans to send to Media Matters tomorrow. We find it especially relevant after Elon Musk let Alex Jones back on Twitter this weekend. Musk is committed to free speech, and because of that, he has become a target of the radical left.
AG Bailey views it as such:

DRAFT DO NOT RELEASE

-Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.

-Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.

-Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being ripped off by this scheme and to shed light on the subject. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.

-Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1. Social media platforms

    - We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS

2. President Trump

    - We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates

3. The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms perverting the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.

Left-wing group 'defrauding' consumers with 'pro-Nazi' smear of Elon Musk: Republican state AG
https://www.foxnews.com/politics/left-wing-group-defrauding-consumers-pro-nazi-smear-elon-musk-republican-state-ag

-"Missouri Republican Attorney General Andrew Bailey has taken aim at Media Matters for America amid the liberal group's dispute with Elon Musk, owner of X, formerly Twitter. Bailey on Monday sent a letter to the progressive media watchdog group to alert it to his opening of an investigation into the firm for "potentially unlawful business practices." Media Matters in November published a report of sorts that said X would place ads next to "pro-Nazi" content. Elon Musk filed a lawsuit against Media Matters, saying the group falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X "through coordinated, inauthentic behavior" in an attempt to "defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech," Bailey notes in his letter. Bailey said that in addition to what Musk alleges in his lawsuit, Bailey has reason to believe that Media Matters violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. "I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro-free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians in the process," Bailey said. After Media Matters published its report, companies like IBM, Disney, Apple, Sony, Walmart, among others, pulled their advertisements from the social media platform. According to Bailey, Musk's lawsuit alleges that Media Matters "lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true." "At the same time, you appear to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country," he said. In light of his probe, Bailey instructed Media Matters to preserve all records that relate to an "alleged effort to engage in coordinated, inauthentic behavior on social media platforms in order to generate false statements that were used to solicit charitable contributions under false pretenses." "Be advised that any failure to preserve documents of probative value to this case, even if inadvertent, will constitute spoliation of evidence and may result in a finding of contempt from the court or in sanctions," Bailey said."

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey put Media Matters for America on notice that his office has launched an investigation into its allegedly fraudulent solicitation of donations from Missourians amidst its efforts to target X, formerly known as Twitter. "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America. Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process," said Attorney General Bailey. "I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech." In his letter, Attorney General Bailey puts Media Matters on notice, "This letter serves as a formal document hold notice under federal and Missouri law.The Missouri Attorney General's Office has opened an investigation into Media Matters for America ("Media Matters") regarding your firm's potentially unlawful business practices. "As you are no doubt aware, a federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters, raising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X (formerly known as Twitter) through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech.The lawsuit alleges that you lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true.At the same time, you appear to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country." He continued, "I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. E.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020.1.I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro-free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians in the process. "You are thus hereby instructed to preserve all records that may relate to your alleged effort to engage in coordinated, inauthentic behavior on social media platforms in order to generate false statements that were used to solicit charitable contributions under false pretenses. "

-"Attorney General Bailey is requesting records related to: Internal communications regarding Media Matters' strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and their efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform; Communications with third parties regarding Media Matters' strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and their efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform; Communications with IBM, Lions Gate Entertainment, Apple, Disney, Warner Brothers Discovery, Paramount Gold, NBCUniversal, Comcast, Sony, Ubisoft, and Wal-Mart regarding Media Matters' strategy to target advertisers on X, formerly known as Twitter, and their efforts to manipulate those advertisers into pulling their ads from the platform; Internal communications regarding Media Matters' policies, strategies or operations related to generating stories or content intended to "cancel," "deplatform," "demonetize," or otherwise interfere with businesses or organizations located in Missouri, or utilized by Missouri residents; Communications and documents related to soliciting charitable funds from residents of Missouri."

Red State AG Launches Investigation Into Media Matters Over Report On Elon Musk's X

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/11/missouri-ag-media-matters-musk-x/

-"Media Matters published research in November alleging that X had been placing ads from major brands next to pro-Nazi content; however, X later sued Media Matters over the study, claiming it was manipulated and defamatory. Bailey sent a letter to Media Matters on Monday asserting that the group may have run afoul of Missouri consumer protection laws if X's allegations are true and instructing Media Matters to preserve documents related to group's research on X. "I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians in the process," Bailey wrote. Bailey argued that, if Media Matters did indeed publish false and defamatory information about X, then their efforts to fundraise off their research may have violated Missouri laws against fraud. Media Matters must maintain documents, including internal correspondences and correspondence with advertisers about withdrawing ads from X, according to the letter. It also must maintain "internal communications regarding [its] policies, strategies or operations…" Apple, Comcast, IBM, Lionsgate, Paramount Global, Sony and Warner Bros. Discovery all withdrew their advertising from X following Media Matters' report… "Media Matters then exclusively followed a small subset of users consisting entirely of accounts in one of two categories: those known to produce extreme, fringe content, and accounts owned by X's big-name advertisers. The end result was a feed precision-designed by Media Matters for a single purpose: to produce side-by-side ad/content placements that it could screenshot in an effort to alienate advertisers." Media Matters has raised funds from organizations managed by Arabella Advisors, a consultancy that supports a dark money network aligned with left-leaning groups and causes. The Arabella-managed Hopewell Fund contributed $250,000 to Media Matters in 2022 and $150,000 in 2020, while the New Venture Fund has contributed $150,000 to Media Matters since 2018, according to tax documents. Left-wing billionaire George Soros' Open Society Foundations also granted the group $500,000 in 2021, according to its grant database."

Missouri AG Opens Investigation into Media Matters after Left-Wing Watchdog Pushed Advertisers to Leave X

https://www.nationalreview.com/news/missouri-ag-opens-investigation-into-media-matters-after-left-wing-watchdog-pushed-advertisers-to-leave-x/

-"In a letter dated Monday, Bailey notified Media Matters president and CEO Angelo Carusone of his office's pending investigation into the organization's allegedly fraudulent solicitation of donations from Missouri residents amid its efforts to target the social-media platform. The investigation comes three weeks after multibillionaire Elon Musk, who owns X, filed a lawsuit against Media Matters for swaying several corporations into pulling advertising from his company… Last month, Media Matters published a series of reports claiming corporate ads on X were running beside "white nationalist and pro-Nazi content" in an effort to paint Musk and his organization as antisemitic. As a result, IBM, Apple, Disney, Lionsgate Entertainment, Sony, and many more firms began boycotting the platform. Musk, however, fired back at Media Matters with "thermonuclear" litigation, as he described it. "The lawsuit alleges that you lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true," Bailey added… The attorney general specifically accused the media-watchdog group of violating his state's consumer-protection laws, particularly "laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses," in a concerted effort to simultaneously harm X's business model and defraud Missourians. Bailey requested the preservation of all records concerning Media Matters' "potentially unlawful business practices." "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America," Bailey said in a press release… Media Matters is also alleged to have conducted fraud in Texas, prompting Republican attorney general Ken Paxton to launch an investigation into the organization last month. Over a week after filing the lawsuit, Musk publicly called out the brands for boycotting X and blackmailing him to change the platform's free-speech policy. "If somebody's gonna try to blackmail me with advertising, blackmail me with money, go fk yourself," he told the corporations, specifically naming Disney CEO Bob Iger who, along with Musk, attended the New York Times DealBook Summit in late November…"

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Missouri AG Launches Fraud Probe Into Media Matters

https://www.newsmax.com/politics/andrew-bailey-missouri-media-matters/2023/12/11/id/1145557/

-"Republican Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey on Monday accused left-wing media outlet Media Matters for America of fraudulently soliciting donations from Missourians in its efforts to target X, formerly Twitter, and is launching an investigation… "Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process. I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech." Bailey is the second Republican attorney general to launch an investigation into Media Matters after Texas' Ken Paxton announced a similar one Nov. 20. On Nov. 17, Media Matters published an investigation that revealed the advertisements of major companies on X were shown alongside white supremacist content. Companies such as IBM, Lionsgate, Paramount, Apple, and Disney said they were leaving X, and the European Union also said it would halt advertising. Billionaire Elon Musk, the owner of X, Tesla, and SpaceX, threatened a "thermonuclear lawsuit"… The lawsuit claims Media Matters falsely portrayed X "as a risky, unsafe platform for advertisers." "Media Matters has manipulated the algorithms governing the user experience on X," the lawsuit states, "to bypass safeguards and create images of X's largest advertisers' paid posts adjacent to racist, incendiary content, leaving the false impression that these pairings are anything but what they actually are: manufactured, inorganic, and extraordinarily rare." In a letter to Media Matters dated Monday, Bailey ordered the company "to preserve all records that may relate to your alleged effort to engage in coordinated, inauthentic behavior on social media platforms in order to generate false statements that were used to solicit charitable contributions under false pretenses. "I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses," Bailey wrote. "I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians in the process.'"

Missouri AG Andrew Bailey Sues Media Matters for Violating State Consumer Protection Laws and Defrauding Missourians

Gateway Pundit l Jim Hoft

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey launched an investigation into Media Matters for America on Monday, December 11, 2023. AG Andrew Bailey accused Media Matters of using fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to bully advertisers. Attorney General Andrew Bailey made this explosive accusation, "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to bully advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America." The Missouri Attorney General did not hold back in his attacks on Media Matters alleging the enemies of free speech, like Media Matters for America, are attempting to kill Twitter-X because they cannot control it now that Elon Musk took over. Bailey added, "I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech." What's not to love? It's about time Republican officials stood up to the tyrannical leftist groups who are destroying our American way of life. Media Matters is the worst."

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced an investigation into the Show Me State's belief that Media Matters used "fraud" to solicit donations to bully advertisers into pulling out of X, formerly known as Twitter. Bailey wrote to Media Matters President and CEO Angelo Carusone: [Insert Letter]. Media Matters alleged in a report that X/Twitter displayed advertisements from prominent companies next to "white nationalist" hashtags. X owner Elon Musk said that the leftist group misrepresented the situation to mislead advertisers. Nevertheless, this led to a mass exodus of major advertisers such as IBM, Apple, Disney, Lionsgate, and Paramount. Musk has promised his own "thermonuclear" lawsuit against Media Matters. Bailey continued in his letter to Media Matters: "I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. E.g., Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020.1. National Pulse l William Upton

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey has notified the far-left group Media Matters – which works to de-platform conservative voices in media – they are the subject of an investigation by his office for the "fraudulent solicitation of donations from Missourians." According to the Attorney General, Media Matters deceptively manipulated the X (formerly Twitter) algorithm in an effort to exaggerate the presence of extremist and harmful content as part of a campaign urging advertisers to cut ties with the site. The fraudulent results were also used to raise money from Missourians. "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America," Bailey said… Media Matters is accused of potentially violating Missouri consumer protection laws and engaging in unlawful business practices. The Attorney General specifically sites Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.020.1 which bars nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses. As part of the investigation, Bailey has ordered Media Matters to "…preserve all records that may relate to your alleged effort to engage in coordinated, inauthentic behavior on social media platforms in order to generate false statements that were used to solicit charitable contributions under false pretenses." The Missouri investigation is just the latest to target the Soros-funded group. Last month, Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton announced his office had opened a fraud probe… Elon Musk, the owner of X (formerly Twitter) has filed a federal lawsuit against Media Matters accusing theSoros-backed group of undermining freedom of speech and deceiving advertisers."

-"Missouri's Republican attorney general appears poised to launch a lawsuit against a liberal advocacy group, arguing it manufactured a report to show advertisers' social media posts alongside neo-Nazi and white nationalist posts. Andrew Bailey… sent a letter to Media Matters requesting records related to its strategies with X, the social media site formerly known as Twitter. "This letter serves as a formal document hold notice under federal and Missouri law. The Missouri Attorney General's Office has opened an investigation into Media Matters for America regarding your firm's potentially unlawful business practices," the letter said. The move wasn't unexpected. Bailey weighed in on a dispute last month between X owner Elon Musk and Media Matters after the billionaire endorsed an antisemitic conspiracy theory. Bailey's actions are similar to allegations laid out in a lawsuit filed by X, which alleges that Media Matters manipulated algorithms on the platform so the paid posts by advertisers were next to racist content. Bailey said the organization may have violated Missouri laws by using fraud to solicit donations from Missourians… Major companies, including IBM, NBCUniversal and its parent company Comcast, announced last month that they stopped advertising on X after the Media Matters report said their ads were appearing alongside material praising Nazis… Bailey's letter calls on Media Matters to preserve all records that relate to their involvement with X, including communications and documents related to fundraising in Missouri…"

Missouri's Republican Attorney General Investigates Media Matters — After Group Reported Antisemitism On Elon Musk's X

-"Missouri's Republican attorney general opened an investigation on Monday into left-wing watchdog Media Matters after the firm published a report finding advertisements on X were placed next to pro-Nazi content, a report that helped prompt several company suspending advertising on the platform and prompted a lawsuit from X owner Elon Musk. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced the investigation in a post on X, arguing he has "reason to believe" the firm's "alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws," and "hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians."…

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The investigation comes one month after the watchdog released a report finding advertisements from major companies on X, including IBM and Xfinity, appeared beside posts praising Adolf Hitler and other pro-Nazi content. Major advertisers, including Apple, IBM, Disney and Xfinity, have suspended advertisements on the social media platform formerly known as X following Media Matters' report, and after Musk came under fire for endorsing a post deemed antisemitic… X filed a defamation lawsuit in U.S. District Court in Texas against Media Matters last month, alleging the watchdog manipulated the social media site's algorithms to "bypass safeguards and create images of X's largest advertisers' paid posts adjacent to racist incendiary content." Musk himself fired shots against the watchdog group, arguing its report "completely misrepresented the real experience on X" The investigation also marks Bailey's latest venture into right-wing culture war issues. Following the Supreme Court's 6-3 ruling last year to overturn Roe v. Wade, Bailey warned pharmaceutical giants that "distribution of abortion pills in the mail would violate both federal and state law." A group of 18 state attorneys general joined that directive. Bailey in April also filed an emergency state regulation stating state law "already prohibits performing" gender affirming care, arguing in a statement those procedures are "experimental and have significant side effects"

Here We Go: Missouri Attorney General Investigating Media Matters for Fraud

-"Hoo boy. This is big news. A couple of weeks ago, we talked about how Media Matters may have fraudulently manipulated Twitter/X's algorithms to undermine advertising on the website. Elon Musk, calling Media Matters 'pure evil' has filled a 'thermonuclear' lawsuit against the outlet. [Announcement Twitter Post] "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to bully advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America. We have launched an investigation." It'll be interesting to see where this goes. The letter reads in part: "Dear Mr. Carusone… [Insert Letter]" Those are some hefty charges. And, unsurprisingly, Elon Musk is happy with this development… So are we. [Insert Retweets from Big Players like Elon, Clay Travis, etc.]"

Missouri AG says newly unearthed info suggests Media Matters committed fraud during X advertiser attack…

Revolver l No Author Listed

https://revolver.news/2023/12/missouri-ag-says-newly-unearthed-info-suggests-media-matters-committed-fraud-during-x-advertiser-attack/

-"Media Matters likes to portray itself as a "watchdog group." It's not. The organization is nothing more than a two-bit group of enforcers working for the regime. If you don't align with the progressive agenda, groups like Media Matters will come after you and make you feel the pain. That's precisely what they've done to Revolver in the past, and it's the same tactic they're using against Elon Musk's X platform. Media Matters likes to use advertisers as a weapon, initiating fake boycotts and stretching the truth like saltwater taffy to coerce companies into withdrawing their ads. And if the companies don't comply, they'll likely find themselves on Media Matters' "naughty list" too. It's a relentless cycle of threats and blackmail, raising questions about how they're allowed to continue these tactics. The good news is that they might finally face consequences, thanks to Elon, who is now suing them. If you'll recall, the ADL—another regime punisher group—attempted a similar tactic against X, but when Elon threatened legal action, they backed off. However, Media Matters has deeper pockets, so they picked up where the ADL left off. Nonetheless, Elon is going after them full-force… Well, now, it appears that Media Matters might have made a significant blunder when challenging Elon. New evidence has emerged suggesting that Media Matters engaged in fraudulent activities while pressuring companies to withdraw their advertising from X. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey is making the claim on behalf of the citizens of his state, and he's prepared to pursue legal action against Media Matters. Here's a closeup of the letter written by AG Bailey: [Insert Letter]. AG Bailey goes on to say the following: "Enemies of free speech are attempting to kill X because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians be subject to fraud in the process. I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech." Media Matters attempted to coerce Elon into a progressive agenda, but all they managed to do was trigger a series of angry lawsuits. Let's hope more conservative states join in and take legal action against this tyrannical group of liberal enforcers."

BREAKING: Missouri AG launches official investigation into Media Matters over manipulation of X algorithm

The Post Millennial l Hannah Nightingale

-"On Monday, Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey informed the left-wing watchdog organization Media Matters for America that his office has opened an investigation into the group over alleged violations of the state's consumer protection laws. "As you are no doubt aware, a federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters, raising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X (formerly known as Twitter) through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech," the letter began… Bailey wrote that he has reason to believe Media Matters' alleged actions have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, "including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses." "I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians in the process." Media Matters has been ordered to preserve all "records that may relate to your alleged effort to engage in coordinated, inauthentic behavior on social media platforms in order to generate false statements that were used to solicit charitable contributions under false pretenses." This includes internal communications regarding the organization's "strategy to target advertisers on X" to get them to pull advertising from the platform, communications with third parties and companies such as IBM, Apple, and Disney regarding this strategy, and "internal communications regarding your policies, strategies or operations related to generating stories or content intended to 'cancel,' 'deplatform,' 'demonetize,' or otherwise interfere with businesses or organizations located in Missouri or utilized by Missouri residents."… The infamous leftist organization has been accused of exaggerating the amount of hate speech on X, actions that caused advertisers to leave the platform en masse."

How the Supreme Court Could Reshape Free Speech Online

https://www.theepochtimes.com/article/how-the-supreme-court-could-reshape-social-media-freedom-5543004

-"A looming battle at the Supreme Court may determine how social media companies moderate content. The nation's highest court will hear challenges to laws in Florida and Texas that regulate social media content moderation. Observers and activists on the left and right are watching the cases. At stake is the right of individual Americans to freely express themselves online and the right of social media platforms to make editorial decisions about the content they host. Both rights are protected by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Republicans and conservatives were outraged when platforms acted in concert to ban President Donald Trump in January 2021, blocked a potentially election-altering New York Post article about Hunter Biden's laptop on 2020, and silenced dissenting opinions about the origins of the COVID-19 virus, the treatments for the disease it causes, and the vaccines… Democrats and liberals, on the other hand, claim the platforms don't do enough to weed out so-called hate speech and alleged misinformation, which they consider to be pressing social problems… Ohio, Arizona, Missouri, Texas, and 12 other states argued in a court brief that the internet is the modern-day public square and that social media platforms engaging in censorship "undermine the free exchange of ideas that free speech protections exist to facilitate." Suppression of ideas threatens "the development of important insights and discoveries, many of which begin as fringe views," the brief states… The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit took the opposite tack, finding a Texas anti-deplatforming law constitutional and rejecting the "idea that corporations have a freewheeling First Amendment right to censor what people say."… The Supreme Court will attempt to answer whether the two state laws' content-moderation restrictions and individualized-explanation requirements comply with the First Amendment. Christopher Newman, an associate law professor at Antonin Scalia Law School at George Mason University, predicts Section 230 of the federal Communications Decency Act of 1996 will come into play… The 5th Circuit looked at the section and said it means Congress believed ISPs, when publishing posts, are not speaking in their own right and therefore "don't get to claim the mantle of First Amendment protection," Mr. Newman said. But Section 230 also says "ISPs are immune from liability for their decision to remove certain content, because it's offensive, or obscene, or whatever," Mr. Newman said… People who express views that call into question "progressive dogma" have been kept off social media and many users have been booted from YouTube, Mr. Burling told The Epoch Times. "So a lot of people are legitimately upset about social media companies keeping them off. And the icing on the cake, of course, is what we've learned recently of the United States [government] putting extreme pressure on the social media companies to censor." On Oct. 20, the Supreme Court granted the petition in Murthy v. Missouri. The court will look at whether the Biden administration ran afoul of the Constitution when it pushed tech companies to delete what it deemed false or misleading content about COVID-19 and the disputed 2020 presidential election…"

Supreme Court Rejects Request From Robert F. Kennedy Jr.

Epoch Times l Zachary Stieber

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-rejects-request-from-robert-f-kennedy-jr-5544886

-"Robert F. Kennedy Jr.'s request to intervene in a major case being considered by the U.S. Supreme Court was turned down by the nation's top court on Dec. 11. One of the justices offered a dissent. A majority of justices declined a motion to intervene from Mr. Kennedy, who's running for president as an independent after beginning his campaign as a Democrat. The Supreme Court in October agreed to hear the case, Missouri v. Biden, which was brought by several state attorneys general and involves the pressure the U.S. government applied to social media companies during and before the COVID-19 pandemic… Mr. Kennedy brought a similar case, which was consolidated at the district court level with the Missouri lawsuit. However, when the courts issued a preliminary injunction in the Missouri case, they declined to rule on a motion for an injunction from Mr. Kennedy and his co-plaintiff. Without the Supreme Court taking action, the plaintiffs are "stranded," Mr. Kennedy's lawyers said in their motion to intervene, presented to the Supreme Court in October. "The Kennedy Plaintiffs remain stranded in the district court, even though their rights will be as fully adjudicated by this court as those of the Missouri v. Biden plaintiffs themselves," the motion reads. "Intervention is warranted for that reason alone."

The argument for intervention was strengthened by the fact that Mr. Kennedy is a presidential candidate who has been targeted by the federal government and, to this day, sees speeches and interviews blocked online, according to his lawyers. Most justices didn't agree and rejected the motion. The justices who rejected the motion didn't explain their reasoning…

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Justice Samuel Alito, an appointee of George W. Bush, said in a dissent that intervention in cases before the Supreme Court is unusual but that he would grant Mr. Kennedy's motion. Mr. Kennedy is an alleged victim of what the lower courts described as a "coordinated campaign" between the government and big tech firms to censor, and Mr. Kennedy is also a presidential candidate, according to Justice Alito. "Because Mr. Kennedy's arguments on the merits are essentially the same as respondents', allowing intervention would not significantly affect petitioners' burden with regard to th.at issue," the justice wrote. "But the denial of intervention is likely to prevent Mr. Kennedy from vindicating the rights he claims until the spring of 2024 and perhaps as late as June of that year. And by that time, several months of the presidential campaign will have passed."... Mr. Kennedy's motion states that allowing Mr. Kennedy and his co-plaintiff, Connie Sampognaro, another presidential candidate, would ensure that the plaintiffs in the case have standing. "Unlike the Missouri plaintiffs, the Kennedy plaintiffs need not prove that they, specifically, will be censored in [the] future—because their challenge does not depend on a claim that their specific speech has been (or will be) censored. The right of social media consumers to access an uncensored public square is endangered by the government's campaign to induce social media censorship no matter which particular speakers are targeted or censored in the future," the motion reads. "The Missouri plaintiffs primarily assert speakers' rights. The Kennedy plaintiffs assert the rights of the social media audience, and the standing of an organization like CHD to assert such rights on behalf of consumers is established beyond peradventure." Mr. Alito concluded in his dissent: "Our democratic form of government is undermined if government officials prevent a candidate for high office from communicating with voters, and such efforts are especially dangerous when the officials engaging in such conduct are answerable to a rival candidate. I would allow him to intervene to ensure that we can reach the merits of respondents' claims and to prevent the irreparable loss of his First Amendment rights."

Wentzville schools: Transgender talks were legal, lawsuit should be tossed

https://www.stltoday.com/news/local/education/wentzville-schools-transgender-talks-were-legal-lawsuit-should-be-tossed/article_22349526-9847-11ee-b88e-6b1e94b302d4.html

-"The Wentzville School District argued in court on Monday that a judge should toss out Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey's lawsuit against it, saying the law allows board members to discuss transgender issues privately. The case isn't about transgender politics, said Melanie Renken, an attorney representing the school district. It's about whether a school board can solicit legal advice from its attorney during closed session... Bailey's suit, filed in September, claims the school board violated the state's open meetings law when members met in closed session over the summer to discuss a policy that could allow transgender students to use a single-stall bathroom or locker room. In both meetings, board members talked among themselves for 10 or 15 minutes, according to lawyers for the district and for the attorney general. Bailey has said his office was first notified of possible open meeting violations by school board members Jennifer Olson and Renee Henke, elected in April, who filed affidavits describing the meetings... At the hearing, Assistant Attorney General Kathryn Monroe said the board's conversations this summer should have been held in open session. Missouri's open meetings law has protections allowing for closed meetings involving district attorneys, pending litigation and ongoing legal issues. But the school board's conversations in June and July didn't need to be protected, Monroe said. Just because discussions are controversial doesn't mean they should be had in private. "We feel those conversations went beyond the scope of the Sunshine Law," she said. Monroe also dismissed concerns that allowing the lawsuit to go forward would have a chilling effect on school board members' ability to discuss legal issues in closed session with their attorneys. "The law does not require that (Brazill's presentations) be made in closed session. They could have been discussed in open session," Monroe said. But St. Charles County Judge Deborah Alessi said it was "unfair and unrealistic" to expect board members not to talk amongst themselves following a legal presentation... "I'm sorry, but how can this situation even get to this point without being fixed?" she asked. "All you have to do is to go into the next open meeting and talk about it." Monroe disagreed. "We encourage those conversations to happen," she said. "But doing it after the fact does not change the fact that there was a violation of the Sunshine Law." Alessi did not rule on the case. She said Monday she would read the court filings and issue a ruling soon. She set a hearing date for Feb. 5."

Missouri AG Bailey: Demonetization is the 'new front in the war' on free speech

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey says the demonetization of conservative media is federal government's latest bid to censor Americans. "They failed to obtain success through government censorship because we put a stop to it in court. So now the war has shifted, and radical progressive advocacy groups are launching market manipulated attacks on platforms like Twitter, or X, in order to silence American voices," says Bailey." Bailey... has moved to create broad restrictions on hormone therapy, puberty blockers and surgeries in Missouri. His office has sued the Southampton Community Health Center, in South St. Louis, over gender care. And it's investigating patient care at Washington University's transgender clinic. The issue in Wentzville arose publicly this fall after the school board met privately twice, on June 14 and July 25, regarding bathroom and locker room access for transgender students.

REPORT: St. Louis Police Department Suffers Staff Shortage, Reaches Lowest Level Ever

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/11/st-louis-missouri-police-department-officers-shortage-hiring-budget-nick-dunne-joe-steiger/

-"Missouri's St. Louis Police Department reportedly lost over 17 police officers in a month and has only 912 positions filled out of a city budget set for 1,224 officers. It's the lowest point in the police department's staffing history, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch reported Monday. "I've never heard of anything that low," Joe Steiger, business manager of the St. Louis Police Officers Association, told the outlet. "When I started back in 1995, there were closer to 1,600 officers, and now they're down under 1,000. That's just crazy," Steiger added. Just a few officers being out of commission can create major headaches for the department, according to the report. In September, the department had to scramble to find replacements when two officers called in sick, the outlet reported. Steiger referred to the incident when he told the outlet that it could take just two or three officers not showing up to work for major problems to develop. "They're [districts] so much bigger now, to have two or three people covering them, it's just not enough," Steiger told the outlet. The lack of manpower comes with its costs to public safety and the department is in "crisis" mode, the St. Louis Police Officers' Association told Fox 2 back in July after a scandal broke out over police allegedly taking at least 45 minutes to show up to a crash site. Nick Dunne, a spokesman for the city's mayor, told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch that the mayor "remains steadfast in its efforts to recruit and retain employees across departments."… The city suffers from one of the worst murder per capita rates in the entire country, The Associated Press noted back in January 2022. The mayor once criticized the city for spending too much on policing, but has since increased the police's budget, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch reported."

Ballot initiative process sure to be in GOP's crosshairs during legislature's 2024 session

-"Missouri lawmakers will once again consider changes to the initiative petition process in the new year. Several pieces of legislation aimed at altering the process through which voters can approve changes to the Missouri Constitution were among the bills pre-filed for the 2024 legislative session, which starts Jan. 3. Pre-filing started Dec. 1, with 1,028 bills and joint resolutions filed in the Missouri House and Senate combined within the first week through Dec. 7. Of those, there are 10 pieces of legislation in the House and 11 more in the Senate targeting initiative petitions. While many of the pre-filed bills will never be debated during the 2024 legislative session, the volume of bills on this specific topic all but guarantees initiative petition changes in some form will be discussed next year. One piece of legislation — the only proposal filed by a Democrat — aims to make it more difficult for legislators to alter changes enacted through successful initiative petitions. The remaining bills, all filed by Republicans, seek to either raise the bar for approving ballot initiatives, regulate signature collection and out-of-state funds backing measures or implement other policy changes making it more difficult for citizens to take proposals to a public vote… However, many Republican lawmakers have new goals in mind for changing the requirements for approval. Ten of the pre-filed bills would institute rules requiring a majority of voters statewide and a majority of voters in each of the state's eight congressional districts approve a ballot initiative for it to pass. Two other proposals would require approval from a majority of voters statewide and a majority of voters in the state's 34 Senate districts, with two more requiring affirmative votes from a majority of statewide voters and voters in the state's 163 districts in the Missouri House of Representatives. Another common theme in the proposed legislation is the enactment of requirements stating that voters must be registered to vote in Missouri and citizens of the United States, stipulations already in place for voters to participate in state elections. Additionally, many lawmakers expressed concern about foreign influence and out-of-state money impacting ballot initiatives. So far, at least seven bills propose either restricting donations and sponsorship of petitions by foreign countries or enacting regulations on out-of-state donations or signature gatherers. Any change to the initiative petition process lawmakers might approve would require a public vote before it could take effect, with the existing standard of a simple majority required for success…"

Proposed law would require training on Narcan in Missouri's middle, high schools

-"One out of every 45 deaths in the state of Missouri in 2022 was attributed to opioid overdose, according to the Missouri Department of Health and Senior Services. A bill pre-filed in the Missouri House of Representatives would add as a requirement for graduation at least 30 minutes of training on opioid use prevention and how to properly administer naloxone. The same proposed legislation would require schools be equipped with automated external defibrillators, or AEDs, and require districts to train staff on how to properly use the equipment. AEDs are electronic devices used to diagnose and treat sudden abnormal hearth rhythms which can be extremely dangerous and life-threatening. Naloxone, better known under the brand name Narcan, can reverse an opioid overdose after it happens. The bill was originally authored by a group of teens from the St. James area who make up the Opioid Affected Youth Initiative, a federal grant-funded program administered by the Meramec Regional Planning Commission… One of the teens who helped write the bill was Madeline Pankey, who experienced a childhood in which both parents suffered from opioid use disorder. In her sophomore year, Madeline lost her mother to an overdose. The following year, the community was struck with tragedy when a student at a nearby high school died from an overdose. "Those are our friends," Pankey said. "We don't want our generation wiping out. So, why wouldn't we carry something to save lives?"… Many school districts in Missouri already make naloxone products available in their buildings, but few, if any, require students be trained how to use it."

"I am committed to upholding the highest standards of transparency and accountability in our legislative process," Riley said. "By fostering open and honest communication, I aim to ensure we maintain public trust in our government and ensure that our constituents' voices are heard."… The position is decided through an internal election within the Missouri House of Representatives, which would be held following the November 2024 election. This election will determine who will hold offices within the Missouri House during the 103rd General Assembly, which spans 2025 and 2026. Riley feels that progress in the Missouri General Assembly has been stymied during the past few years, but he hopes to foster collaboration between all of the state's elected officials and community stakeholders…"

Judicial system ranking affirms Missouri Chamber's focus on reforms

-"As the Missouri Chamber of Commerce and Industry prepares for the 2024 legislative session, judicial reform was affirmed as a priority with a national ranking criticizing the state's judicial system for the 10th consecutive year. During the 2023 legislative session, the chamber recommended changes to several legislative policies. The chamber also provided a search mechanism on its website to reveal how much money elected officials received in campaign donations from trial attorneys. When the American Tort Reform Foundation's Judicial Hellholes report ranked St. Louis at No. 8 for the second straight year last week, the chamber reiterated the need to change policy to prevent economic harm. "The facts cited in the ATRF's report are all too familiar to those of us who see the impact of Missouri's unbalanced tort system on our state's job creators," Missouri Chamber President and CEO Dan Mehan said in a statement… During the 2023 legislative session, the organization recommended several legislative policies. Included was an effort to increase transparency in asbestos litigation by requiring the disclosure of asbestos bankruptcy before the trial… The chamber also urged legislators to evaluate whether the statute of limitations in certain civil cases, including personal injury claims, best serves all parties in potential cases… A media release from the chamber highlighted two Republican senators who accepted campaign contributions from trial lawyers. The American Tort Reform Foundation's information also noted the campaign contribution information…"

Kansas City, Missouri, City Council members introduce hate crime ordinance

-"Members of the Kansas City, Missouri, City Council introduced an ordinance that would address hate crimes in the city, the Kansas City LGBTQ Commission announced Monday. Ordinance 231032 would establish a hate offense at the municipal level and create a penalty for certain municipal offenses motivated by hate and/or bias. Prosecutors would have the ability to prove a bias-motivational factor if they believe a hate crime was committed to obtain an enhanced sentence. An additional 60 days would be added on to a sentence and would run consecutive, not concurrently… The legislation will be heard in a committee on Tuesday at the KCMO City Hall at 1 p.m."

Supreme Court Delays Decision on Challenges to Abortion Pill

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/supreme-court-delays-decision-on-challenges-to-abortion-pill-5545266

-"The Supreme Court failed on Dec. 11 to take up or reject a much-anticipated, heavily-litigated challenge to the government's decision in 2000 to approve mifepristone, a pill used for abortions, putting off the court's decision for the time being. Although a lower court had blocked the sale of mifepristone, the Supreme Court countermanded that order in April, allowing sales to continue, at least for the time being. The justices were scheduled to consider petitions in the three related cases at their private conference on Dec. 8, but did not include the cases in a list of orders the court released on Dec. 11. Presumably, the court will again consider the petitions at its next scheduled private conference on Jan. 5, 2024. It is also possible that the justices were not ready to make a decision on the petitions on Dec. 11, but will do so before Jan. 5. Decisions from the nation's highest court can come at any time without notice…"

Texas Supreme Court Overrules 'Medical Emergency' Exception for Woman Seeking Abortion

Epoch Times l Stephen Katte

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/texas-supreme-court-overrules-medical-emergency-exception-for-woman-seeking-abortion-5545289

-"Kate Cox, a 31-year-old Texan woman, sued the state last week for the right to have an abortion at 20 weeks because her unborn baby was diagnosed with Trisomy 18, a condition that causes multiple structural abnormalities and is usually fatal to the baby before birth or within the first year of life, according to MedlinePlus. In her lawsuit, filed on her behalf by the Center for Reproductive Rights, several doctors also told Ms. Cox that continuing to carry the pregnancy to term could threaten her health and future fertility. A lower-court judge initially granted Ms. Cox's request for access to an emergency abortion; however, the state Supreme Court paused the ruling on Dec. 9, only a day later. The Texas Supreme Court has since overturned the verdict entirely. According to the Dec. 11 ruling, Justice Jimmy Blacklock and Justice John Devine wrote that while the plaintiff makes a case that her doctor, Dr. Damla Karsan, believes she qualifies for a medical exception. "But when she sued seeking a court's pre-authorization, Dr. Karsan did not assert that Ms. Cox has a 'life-threatening physical condition' or that, in Dr. Karsan's reasonable medical judgment, an abortion is necessary because Ms. Cox has the type of condition the exception requires," the Justices wrote…"

NRA torches Biden admin for plan to change rules for gun buyers, sellers

https://www.foxnews.com/us/nra-torches-biden-admin-plan-change-rules-gun-buyers-sellers

-""The Biden ATF's proposed rule, ATF2022R-17, is just another attempt to demolish our Second Amendment rights, with the potential to unjustly criminalize everyday Americans for engaging in lawful firearm transactions," NRA-ILA Executive Director Randy Kozuch exclusively told Fox News Digital in a statement. "This rule blatantly disregards the recent NRA-backed Bruen ruling on the Second Amendment. It also creates serious confusion among lawful gun owners who buy and sell firearms legally for various purposes, from collecting to self-defense." Kozuch was reacting to the ATF proposal ATF2022R-17, otherwise known as "Definition of 'Engaged in the Business' as a Dealer in Firearms," which would amend the agency's regulations and incorporate provisions of the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act, a gun control law signed by President Biden in 2022. The proposal would expand the definition of "dealer" to anyone who "sells or offers for sale firearms, and also represents to potential buyers or otherwise demonstrates a willingness and ability to purchase and sell additional firearms." The proposal would also incorporate the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act's definition of earning a profit from gun sales, meaning a "dealer" would include individuals who sell guns for other forms of profit – such as personal property or services offered – not just cash. The proposal would subsequently spark confusion among gun owners about which firearm transactions would require a federal firearms license, accordant to the NRA… The ATF's proposal was introduced in August this year and was open for a 90-day comment period from Sept. 9 to Dec. 7. The NRA was one of more than 330,000 groups and individuals who posted public comments about the proposed rule, detailing in their response that the proposal would spread confusion for gun owners, notably collectors and competitive shooters who frequently purchase and sell firearms… Republican Montana Attorney General Austin Knudsen led a coalition of 26 attorneys general on Dec. 7 in a letter to the ATF, slamming the proposal's "shocking and unconstitutional attack" on the Second Amendment… The NRA applauded the Montana Republican and the coalition of AGs for "truly honoring their oath to office." "NRA members appreciate Montana Attorney General Austin Knudsen and the coalition of 26 attorneys general, who, unlike Joe Biden, are truly honoring their oath of office by actively fighting against this rule. The NRA is resolutely committed to fighting this ill-advised rule at every turn, safeguarding our constitutional rights from such blatant federal intrusion," Kozuch said."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Planned Parenthood received $90 million in PPP loans during COVID-19 pandemic

https://www.foxnews.com/politics/planned-parenthood-received-90-million-ppp-loans-during-covid-19-pandemic

-"Planned Parenthood affiliates received $90 million in Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) loans meant for small businesses during the COVID-19 pandemic, according to a new report from the Government Accountability office (GAO) released Tuesday morning. The PPP loans were designed to bail out small independent businesses with less than 500 employees. But pro-life advocates raised concerns with the Small Business Administration — an independent government agency that supports entrepreneurs — and argued that Planned Parenthood has more than 16,000 employees across the country, well above the cutoff to be considered a small business. Sen. Marsha Blackburn, R-Tenn., one of the lawmakers who requested the report in January 2022, called the findings "appalling." "While small businesses struggled to make ends meet during the pandemic, Planned Parenthood illegally siphoned over $90 million from the Paycheck Protection Program, specifically designed to help our mom and pop shops keep their doors open," Blackburn said in a statement. She added, "The American people want their tax dollars spent responsibly and in line with our nation's values — not on the Left's abortion-on-demand agenda."… Smith said the PPP loans were "money that could have gone to struggling small businesses, many of which were forced to close."…"

Inflation Refuses To Go Away As Prices Stay Elevated

Daily Caller l Will Kessler

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/12/inflation-down-eve-rate-decision/

-"Inflation ticked slightly down year-over-year in November but continued to remain well above the Federal Reserve's target, according to the latest Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) release on Tuesday. The consumer price index (CPI), a broad measure of the prices of everyday goods, increased 3.1% on an annual basis in November, compared to 3.2% in October, according to the BLS. Core CPI, which excludes the volatile categories of energy and food, remained high, rising 4.0% year-over-year in October, compared to 4.0% in October. "The much smaller year-over-year headline CPI change from October to November (vs. the large decline from September to October) suggests a slowing of disinflation, while the core CPI year-over-year being flat at 4.0% is still substantially elevated at twice the Fed's target range," Peter Earle, economist at the American Institute for Economic Research, told the Daily Caller News Foundation… Shelter continued to be a top contributor to inflation, rising 0.4% in the month of November, totaling 6.5% for the year, according to the BLS. The prices for used cars and trucks increased 1.6% month-to-month, while the cost of transportation increased 1.1% for the month. Overall inflation was brought down by decreases in the price of energy commodities, with the price of gasoline declining 6% in November, totaling an 8.9% drop for the year, according to the BLS. The price of apparel also dropped, declining 1.3% month-to-month. The FOMC is set to announce the last federal funds rate decision of the year on Wednesday, with the current rate in a range of 5.25% and 5.50%, the highest point in 22 years. The rate was set to its high position in an effort to calm inflation, which peaked at 9.1% in June 2022, far higher than the Fed's 2% target… Since Biden took office, costs have risen over 17%, while average hourly wages have only risen 13.6% as of November. The resulting price increases mean that families have to pay more than $11,000 in additional costs to maintain the same standard of living. Americans maintain a negative view of the economy, with 72% of respondents saying the economy is getting worse while 23% say it is getting better, according to a poll from Gallup conducted from Nov. 1 to 21. Inflation was ranked as the most important financial problem facing families in 2023 by 35% of respondents, compared to just 8% of families in 2021…"

Here's How Much Americans' Home Payments Have Increased Under Biden

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/11/americans-home-payments-increased-biden/

-" When President Joe Biden first assumed office in 2021, the average monthly new home payment was $1,915, but it has since ballooned to $3,322 as of the third quarter of 2023, according to an analysis from The Wall Street Journal. Following the increase in costs, housing is now less affordable than at any other time in recent history, with mortgage rates exceeding 7% and median housing prices rising to around $392,000 as of October, according to the WSJ. High inflation and a relative tightening of the supply of housing have resulted in the increasing prices, while the high mortgage rates are in response to the increasing cost of credit. The average for a 30-year fixed-rate mortgage reached an all-time modern low on Jan. 7, 2021, reaching 2.65%, just days before Biden took office, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis. Mortgage rates then reached a recent peak of 7.76% on Nov. 2 of this year, receding slightly to 7.03% as of Dec. 7. The rising mortgage rates follow hikes in the federal funds rate by the Federal Reserve, which put the rate in a range of 5.25% and 5.50%, a 22-year high, to combat high inflation that peaked at 9.1% in June 2022. Many economists partially attribute the high inflation to > Biden's huge government spending, which stems from acts he has signed as president like the American Rescue Plan and the Inflation Reduction Act. Rent payments have not experienced as sharp of an increase as they are less responsive to rising interest rates, increasing from an average of $1,784 per month in the first quarter of 2021 to $2,184 per month in the third quarter of 2023, according to the WSJ… High interest rates add a substantial amount to the cost of a home due to the loan's long duration, with just a 5% rate on a 30-year mortgage for a $320,000 house equating to nearly $300,000 in additional costs over the course of the loan. At 8% interest on the same $320,000 home, homebuyers would pay an additional $525,297. Americans have especially felt the effects of rising inflation under Biden in the shelter sector, with costs rising 17.5% since January 2021, higher than the 17.1% gain in overall costs."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I hope everyone has an amazing day!

Subject: AG Bailey - Media Matters

Hi,

Attached is the final version of the EMBARGOED letter that AG Bailey plans to send to Media Matters tomorrow. We find it especially relevant after Elon Musk let Alex Jones back on Twitter this weekend. Musk is committed to free speech, and because of that, he has become a target of the radical left.

AG Bailey views it as such:

DRAFT DO NOT RELEASE

-Media Matters is perpetuating a fraudulent scheme to solicit donations from Americans to take down/target the last social media platform committed to free speech, X/Twitter.

-Media Matters masquerades as a news organization, but they're actually a progressive activist group committed to silencing opposing voices.

-Missouri was first out the gate on this issue. We're going to use the authority given to us by statute to protect Missourians from being ripped off by this scheme and to shed light on the subject. We're encouraged other states, namely Texas, are taking action as well.

-Missouri has been a champion for free speech at every turn, willing to take on the Radical Left in their war against the First Amendment. They're willing to stoop to any level to silence conservative voices, but we're fighting back. We're seeing that in three prongs:

1. Social media platforms
    - We sued in federal court. The score is Missouri, 3, Biden 0, and we're headed to SCOTUS
2. President Trump
    - We filed a brief to remove the gag order on President Trump because Americans have a right to hear from all presidential candidates
3. The newest front in the war for free speech is the nonprofits masquerading as news platforms perverting the algorithms to trick advertisers to pull out of the last platform committed to free speech. Make no mistake: they want to kill Twitter because they can't control it.
    - Anyone for free speech becomes a target of the radical Left. X seeks to allow free speech, so the Left is trying to destroy it. All Americans should be concerned because if this behavior goes unchecked, the marketplace for free, fair and open debate will cease to exist.

-The First Amendment is the bedrock of our Constitution. Missouri will continue to lead the way in the fight for our most fundamental freedoms.

1. We will never back down in the fight for free speech.

He is available this week if you have interest in an interview.

Best,

Missouri Investigates Media Matters For Fraudulently Fundraising Off Of Efforts To Demonetize Free Speech
The Federalist | Jordan Boyd
https://thefederalist.com/2023/12/12/missouri-investigates-media-matters-for-fraudulently-fundraising-off-of-efforts-to-demonetize-free-speech/

-"In his letter announcing the investigation, Bailey warned that Media Matters' attempt to punish "the last platform dedicated to free speech in America" could constitute a violation of his state's consumer protection laws barring nonprofits from "soliciting funds under false pretenses." "I am especially concerned that Media Matters' actions, if proven true, have hampered free speech by targeting an expressly pro free speech social media platform in an attempt to cause it financial harm while defrauding Missourians in the process," Bailey wrote. Bailey's investigation stems from a Media Matters "report" released in November accusing X of publishing advertisements for big companies like Apple, Bravo, IBM, Oracle, and Xfinity alongside "pro-Nazi content." Media Matters' activism, which relied on a manipulated feed they carefully curated to "alienate advertisers," pushed several of the aforementioned companies to pull their ads from the free speech platform. X owner Elon Musk quickly filed what he called a "thermonuclear" defamation lawsuit against Media Matters for accusing him of backing antisemitism. In legal documents, Musk claimed the left-wing organization "knowingly and maliciously manufactured side-by-side images depicting advertisers' posts on X Corp.'s social media platform beside Neo-Nazi and white-nationalist fringe content and then portrayed these manufactured images as if they were what typical X users experience on the platform."… Bailey said Media Matters' "alleged effort to engage in coordinated, inauthentic behavior on social media platforms in order to generate false statements that were used to solicit charitable contributions under false pretenses" deserves further scrutiny. He demanded the propaganda organization hand over any internal communications and documents and communications with X advertisers related to its plans to distance advertisers from X. Bailey also requested any Media Matters' communications about "strategies or operations related to generating stories or content intended to 'cancel,' 'deplatform,' 'demonetize,' or otherwise interfere with businesses or organizations located in Missouri, or utilized by Missouri residents" and "soliciting charitable funds from residents of Missouri." "Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process," Bailey said in a statement. "I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech.'"

In a letter to Missouri Matters for America, Bailey accuses the firm of violating Missouri's consumer protection laws, including laws that prevent nonprofits from soliciting funds under false pretenses. A federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters for publishing a report that convinced advertisers to pull their ads from the site formerly known as Twitter."

media platform owned by Elon Musk. Musk previously filed suit against Media Matters. "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America," Bailey announced this week. "Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process." Bailey previously said he was "looking into" a potential probe of Media Matters. The complaint accuses Media Matters violating Missouri's consumer protection laws with a report claiming advertisements were running on X next to antisemitic posts. The report led to a lawsuit from Musk. The company is claiming they have no proof of what Media Matters wrote and accused the company of manipulation and defamation. The media company, which Musk has called "pure evil," is standing by its report. They filed a complaint seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against an investigation from another attorney general, Texas AG Ken Paxton… For Bailey's investigation, he's requesting a number of records, including "communications regarding Media Matters' strategy to target advertisers on X" and other communications with a number of major companies that pulled their advertising from X after the Media Matters report."

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey announced on Monday that his office is investigating Media Matters for America for allegedly fraudulent solicitation of donations from Missourians during its efforts to target Twitter. "We have reason to believe Media Matters used fraud to solicit donations from Missourians in order to trick advertisers into pulling out of X, the last platform dedicated to free speech in America," he said. "Radicals are attempting to kill Twitter, because they cannot control it, and we are not going to let Missourians get ripped off in the process. I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech."… "As you are no doubt aware, a federal lawsuit has been filed against Media Matters, raising serious allegations that your firm falsely and deceptively manipulated the algorithm on X through coordinated, inauthentic behavior and that you did so in an attempt to defame the organization and cause advertisers to pull their support from the platform, thus harming free speech," the letter said. "The lawsuit alleges that you lied to the public, falsely suggesting that fringe, extremist content regularly appears next to content from corporate advertisers when in fact the opposite is true. "At the same time, you appear to have used this coordinated, inauthentic activity to solicit charitable donations from consumers across the country. I have reason to believe that your firm's alleged actions may have violated Missouri consumer protection laws, including laws that prohibit nonprofit entities from soliciting funds under false pretenses.'"

"I'm fighting to ensure progressive tyrants masquerading as news outlets cannot manipulate the marketplace in order to wipe out free speech." Media Matters last month published a report laying out how X, under Elon Musk's leadership, is placing advertising next to antisemitic content… Musk days later sued Media Matters, alleging in court documents the company maliciously misled the public about how the platform operates. -"The Justice Project at Alliance for HOPE International, a nonprofit combating domestic violence and other forms of abuse, conducted the investigation that concluded, "without question, Libby Caswell was murdered six years ago" in a motel room in Independence, Missouri, on Dec. 11, 2017… Libby, 21, was found dead in a motel bathroom with her body positioned so that her face was turned toward a wall, according to Dr. William "Bill" Smock of the Louisville Metro Police Department, the only police surgeon in the United States and the co-founder of the Training Institute on Strangulation Prevention. He oversaw the independent investigation into Caswell's death. Her boyfriend at the time called 911 around 8 p.m. that day to report that Caswell had died by suicide after hanging herself with a belt in the bathroom while he was sleeping. When police arrived at the Sports Stadium Motel in Independence, where they were staying, her boyfriend was not present. Police ruled her death a suicide within hours of arriving, according to the Alliance for HOPE. The nonprofit's investigation revealed that a belt had been tied around Caswell's neck twice and she had belt marks on her chest… Smock said he has presented Caswell's case to more than 1,000 prosecutors and law enforcement personnel across the country who believe her death was "homicidal." He also alleged that Independence Police "ignored" evidence at the scene, including blood in the motel room where Caswell died, her broken fingernails and marks on her neck… The Alliance for HOPE also says it identified three men who were in the motel room where Caswell was staying on Dec. 10, 2017… Independence Police said in a statement Monday that authorities held the crime scene at the Sports Stadium Motel on Dec. 11, 2017, "until detectives could interview witnesses and/or persons that may have been in the room at the time." "Once Investigators determined there was no need to hold the scene and no arrests were appropriate at the time, the scene was released, however the investigation continued," police said. "During the course of the investigation, the case was reviewed by multiple detectives within the Criminal Investigations Unit. At one time, the case was reopened at the request of Elizabeth's family and Alliance For HOPE International. The FBI assisted IPD during that investigation." The case was also presented to the Jackson County Prosecutor's Office "to determine if there were any criminal charges to be filed," police said. But the police department maintains that "detectives believe that given the evidence that was available, Elizabeth Caswell's death was most likely a suicide."… Michael Mansur, the Jackson County Prosecutor's Office's director of communications, said the office "reassigned a second veteran prosecutor to review the case a second time but determined that the evidence was insufficient to justify criminal charges for multiple reasons."… The Alliance for HOPE is asking Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey and the FBI to pursue independent investigations into Caswell's death."

Missouri attorney general seeks to block subpoena in abortion amendment lawsuit

https://missouriindependent.com/briefs/missouri-attorney-general-seeks-to-block-subpoena-in-abortion-amendment-lawsuit/

-"Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey wants a Cole County judge to block a subpoena seeking records about how he came up with a $21 million cost estimate for a proposed abortion-rights initiative petition. 'Republican' political operative Jamie Corley filed an initiative petition earlier this year that seeks to amend the state constitution… Bailey argued in October that if the amendment were to be approved by voters next year, he would refuse to defend it and would have to hire outside counsel — which he determined would cost $21 million. Corley filed a lawsuit challenging Bailey's estimate, along with the ballot summary written by Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft. As part of that litigation, Corley's attorneys issued a subpoena seeking records from the attorney general's office explaining the cost estimate and the process for hiring outside counsel. In a filing this week with the court, the attorney general moved to quash the subpoena and asked the judge "for a protective order as to this request."… They would be obtainable through the Missouri Sunshine Law, but Bailey's office has such a massive backlog of requests that it is unlikely any records would be produced until late spring… Bailey's office confirmed earlier this month that it has almost finished work on requests filed to the attorney general's office in 2022… The attorney general's office is not a defendant in Corley's lawsuit. Though Bailey's cost estimate is part of the fiscal note, it was the auditor's office that decided to include it in the summary that could appear on the ballot. In arguing for the $21 million cost estimate, Bailey said in October that if Corley's amendment was approved by voters and resulted in any litigation, his office would likely have to hire conflict counsel to represent the state. That's because, Bailey said, he has "staked out a position strongly in favor of protecting the unborn, creating a positional conflict that is untenable for the Attorney General and would necessarily generate greater legal costs." Bailey seemed to back off that argument last month, when he told reporters he is "committed to enforcing the law as written." "I'm not a lawmaker. I'm in the executive branch," he said. "We've (got a) documented history of defending state statute and state constitutional provisions, and we'll continue to do that."

-"Columbia Police and city manager De'Carlon Seewood say nine of Columbia's 11 homicides in 2022 involved domestic violence. Columbia's latest homicide also involved domestic violence. 27-year-old John Williamson III is charged with first degree murder for the weekend killing of his ex-girlfriend Azairah Brownlee, who was shot to death in a street. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey tells 939 the Eagle's "Wake Up Mid-Missouri" that domestic violence victims often end up being killed. General Bailey tells listeners that police must investigate domestic violence cases and that that prosecutors must charge the suspects and keep them behind bars. Another topic that came on during our "Wake Up" interview is the recent call from the Mizzou Democratic Socialists of America for Columbia's city council to approve a sanctuary city ordinance to protect its LGBTQ citizens. Columbia spokeswoman Sydney Olsen tells 939 the Eagle that Columbia's legal department and the city's Commission on Human Rights are currently reviewing that request and a similar one from another Columbia resident. General Bailey says he will not let what he calls progressive city leaders undermine state statute, saying state law preempts local control:

State board votes to divest Missouri pension fund from China

https://missouriindependent.com/2023/12/12/state-board-votes-to-divest-missouri-pension-fund-from-china/

-"The board overseeing Missouri's largest state employee pension fund voted Tuesday tosell most of its investments in Chinese-owned companies, reversing a decision it made last month. The divestment by the Missouri State Employees Retirement Fund will take place over the next 12 months, with an allowance to stretch that to 36 months to avoid financial losses as investments are sold. In a special meeting called at the urging of Gov. Mike Parson, the 11-member MOSERS Board of Trustees voted 9-2 in favor of the motion by state Treasurer Vivek Malek to sell the stocks and other investments. Only former MOSERS Executive Director Gary Findlay, elected to the board to represent retirees, and state Sen. John Rizzo, one of four legislators on the board, opposed the motion. Rizzo accused Malek of playing politics with state investments to boost his chances in the 2024 Republican primary for his office… Malek denied that he was opposed to Chinese investments for political reasons… During the meeting, Malek argued that economic problems in China, along with its aggressive posture toward Taiwan and friendship with Russia, are all good reasons for divesting. The board voted in March 2022, just days after the invasion of Ukraine, to sell its assets with Russia ties. At the time, the value of those investments had been reduced to where they were essentially worthless… Asked after the meeting why his motion wasn't as broad as the divestment from South Africa, Malek said they are two very different situations. "South Africa was a moral issue," Malek said. "Now we are dealing with an economic issue."…"

Draft Defense Budget Cuts Federal Aid for People and Places Exposed to Radiation by Nuclear Arsenal

-"Uranium ore was processed into weapons-grade plutonium on an industrial scale for the first time in a Mallinckrodt Chemical Co. plant north of downtown St. Louis, Missouri, in December 1942 as part of a secret project. That first-generation plutonium, which existed on no manifest, was trucked to nearby warehouses along 19-mile Coldwater Creek, loaded onto coal trains bound for Canon City, Colorado, and eventually on to Alamogordo, New Mexico… Nearly 80 years later, senators from Missouri and New Mexico said during Dec. 12 floor proceedings on the draft $886.3 billion defense budget, or National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA), that this shared legacy links the states in ushering in the atomic age, sustaining the nation's Cold War era nuclear weapons arsenal for decades, and in cancer-stricken families and poisoned lands. Sens. Josh Hawley (R-Mo.) and Ben Ray Lujan (D-N.M.) said the price paid by workers who built "the bomb" and their families in sites across the country goes largely ignored by indifferent federal agencies. More infuriating, both senators fumed in often fiery rebukes, is that an ungrateful Congress has failed for decades to adequately mitigate costs imposed to this day on former and present residents of communities sickened and scarred by radiation from nuclear weapons development and testing. And even more shocking, they scolded the chamber, is their amendment to extend the expiring Radiation Exposure Compensation Act to sustain assistance to people and places struggling from nuclear fallout was yanked from the Fiscal Year 2024 NDAA. "This is not right. These are good people who have done nothing wrong. Their government has caused this," Mr. Hawley said… Their amendment, approved by the Senate 61–37 in July, was removed by Senate–House leaders in "a backroom deal," Mr. Hawley said. He chastised Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and House Speaker Mike Johnson (R-La.) for allowing it to be cut as a "pay for" expenditure without a dedicated revenue source other than the general fund. Mr. Hawley called that objection callous when considering "the billions of dollars in costs that the government has imposed on these people, taking their health, taking their lives, over decades" of often negligent exposure while building and sustaining the nation's nuclear weapons arsenal. He said while the NDAA is larded with $26 billion in "programs [DOD] doesn't even want," including $15 billion for 636 projects "the Pentagon says it doesn't need," Senate and House leaders "are saying, 'We don't have a dime for these people' who have, let's just tell it like it is, been poisoned by their own government." Mr. Hawley said federal agencies and Congress should demonstrate the faith in their nation these people did and do… Mr. Hawley acknowledged before the vote that fellow senators were "all too eager to move on" in adopting the defense budget, already more than two months late. Shortly after, the Senate agreed in an 85–15 vote to move the NDAA for floor adoption Dec. 13. But rest assured, he said, the Manhattan Project will continue to live on in Missouri, as it has long since Mallinckrodt Chemical Co. closed its St. Louis plant in 1957… "I don't know what to say when I go home and see her because this legislation, which passed with a strong bipartisan vote in the Senate, has been taken out of the NDAA. What do I tell these families?'"

Are Missouri's Scholarship Amounts Keeping Students in the Show Me State?

MissouriNet l Alisa Nelson

https://www.missourinet.com/2023/12/13/are-missouris-scholarship-amounts-keeping-students-in-the-show-me-state/

-"Missouri's college scholarship program that is designed to keep the best and brightest in the Show Me State has a maximum award amount of $3,000 annually per student. State Department of Higher Education and Workforce Development Deputy Commissioner Leroy Wade told a panel of lawmakers Tuesday that the individual Bright Flight scholarship program amount has not changed in about a decade. Rep. Ed Lewis, who chairs the Missouri House Subcommittee on Appropriations – Education, questioned whether the amount is enough. "We're giving them a $3,000 piece of change," said Lewis, R-Moberly. "And yet Illinois wants to give them $10,000, or Kansas wants to give them $6,000, or something for the same thing. We're not helping ourself…" The scholarship award is up to $3,000 annually for those in the top 3% and up to $1,000 for those in the fourth and fifth percentiles. The department is requesting $29 million in the next state budget to fund the Bright Flight scholarship program… The maximum awards granted annually through the Access Missouri scholarship program are $1,300 to community college students and about $2,800 to four-year college students. "A number of college presidents that are expressing concern about their ability to basically compete for some of these students at other states were providing more lucrative, if you will, student financial aid or were waiving out-of-state tuition, those kinds of things, and it was putting them at a competitive disadvantage," Wade said. According to Wade, changing the scholarship award amount would require the Missouri Legislature to change law… Wade said interest in the program peaked around 2015, when about 50,000 students received a scholarship. Last year, the state awarded nearly 36,000 Access Missouri scholarships. The department is requesting $84 million in the next state budget to fund the program… Missouri's Fast Track Workforce Incentive program covers tuition and fees for adults furthering their education to get a high-demand job. Fast Track is available to eligible Missourians 25 years or older seeking a certificate, degree, apprenticeship, or industry-recognized credential. Wade said the average grant amount is about $3,700… Ben Boggs, the commissioner of the Missouri Department of Higher Education and Workforce Development, told the subcommittee that expanding eligibility for the program could be helpful… The grant must be repaid if the recipient fails to live and work in Missouri for three years after completing their program or apprenticeship. Missouri law requires the state's public colleges and universities to limit the amount of tuition charged to combat veterans to $50 per credit hour. The Missouri Returning Heroes Education Act has helped about 500 veterans go back to school… Under the program, the tuition charged to combat veterans enrolled in graduate programs must be limited to no more than 30% of the cost of tuition and fees."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Lawsuit: St. Louis-area agency bungled student loan forgiveness, cost borrowers millions

-"People across the U.S. say the Missouri Higher Education Loan Authority, or MOHELA, takes hours to answer phone calls and has failed for over a year to make progress on loan forgiveness applications. The result is that people who took jobs in the public sector 10 years ago with the promise of federal loan forgiveness are still making payments while their loans accrue interest. Borrowers are now demanding MOHELA pay more than $5 million in damages… An unnamed representative for MOHELA said the agency had not yet been served with the lawsuit but noted it does not have the authority to update payments or forgive loans. The filing comes amid an unprecedented surge in loan repayments after a three-year pandemic hiatus that left servicers like MOHELA struggling to keep up with customer service demands. In October, the U.S. Department of Education announced it would penalize MOHELA for failing to send 2.5 million borrowers their billing statements on time… MOHELA, a college loan agency created by Missouri law that has grown to service loans across the country, continued to take on more accounts. In 2022, it became the servicer for the public student loan program and earned $68.7 million in fees, according to the lawsuit. Its operating revenues increased from $114.7 million in fiscal year 2022 to $358.6 million in 2023. But customer service problems persisted. In September, a group of six U.S. senators sent a letter to MOHELA expressing "severe concerns" from borrowers, who reported they hadn't received credit for all of the payments they had made to qualify for the public loan forgiveness and had seen "long wait times" when trying to contact the nonprofit's representatives. Borrowers filed more than 3,200 complaints with the federal Consumer Finance Protection Bureau about MOHELA between Dec. 15, 2022, and Nov. 28 of this year, the lawsuit says. People complained about not being able to get in touch with anyone at the servicer and not being credited for previous payments… On Monday, two borrowers — Jennifer Joy, of Colorado, and Misty Thomas, of Florida — filed a class-action suit in St. Louis federal court on behalf of themselves and potentially scores of others who have been impacted by the problems at MOHELA. They are alleging violations of Colorado and Florida consumer protection laws, as well as breach of contract, negligence, breach of fiduciary duty and violations of federal debt collections laws…"

-"A state appeals court sided Tuesday with a former Capitol staffer who won a $3.3 million worker discrimination judgment last year. The Missouri Court of Appeals at Kansas City denied an appeal by the House of Representatives but sent the matter back to a lower court to determine the fate of more than $1 million in legal fees awarded in the case. At issue were claims by former House research staff member Eric Qualls, who said he was discriminated against when he was fired in 2017. Qualls alleged that his supervisors failed to accommodate for his medical disability and that he was fired after he said he would report them to the Missouri Human Rights Commission. Court records show that Qualls was diagnosed with several mental health disorders, including anxiety symptoms that could lead to possible panic attacks… In his lawsuit, Qualls identified several ways the House could accommodate his disability but said that officials "seemed indifferent" and they could not see "a process for moving forward." A Cole County jury ruled in Qualls' favor last year, awarding him $2.02 million total in damages for discriminatory practices, disability discrimination and retaliation by the state and Adam Crumbliss, who was at the time chief clerk of the House. In its 23-page decision, the appeals court said Qualls presented "sufficient and substantial evidence" that he had a disability. House officials, the three-judge panel wrote, had the opportunity to provide accommodations to help Qualls fulfill his job duties, but did not provide them. Money for the judgment will come out of the state's Legal Expense Fund, which is paid for by taxpayers."

Missouri education board frees up money to expand childcare

Daily Journal l No Author Listed

https://dailyjournalonline.com/2023/12/13/missouri-education-board-frees-up-money-to-expand-childcare/

-"Missouri's Board of Education changed a rule Dec. 5 that had prevented many childcare providers from accessing the $26 million in grant funding allocated by lawmakers this year. The grant money was set aside for community-based childcare providers to expand access to pre-kindergarten but included certification requirements that shrank the pool of eligible providers. Around $7 million of that fund has so far been awarded or is expected to be awarded from the September and November rounds of applications. The vote to change the requirements was unanimous, effective immediately, to carry out the goal of expanding access to childcare across the state — "a huge priority and a huge need," said Kari Monsees, Missouri's deputy education commissioner… Previously, childcare providers needed to prove they had a traditional teaching certification, which Hanson said is a "much higher threshold than the national standard."… The rule change expands the qualifications that childcare staff can have to be considered eligible for state funds. That includes allowing teachers who have a bachelor's or associate's degree in childhood development to qualify. The education department's spokesperson, Mallory McGowin, said it has begun awarding grants in two rounds since September, totaling just over one-quarter of the total fund."

After Affirmative Action Win Over Harvard, Group Takes on West Point

Epoch Times l Michael Washburn

https://www.theepochtimes.com/article/after-affirmative-action-win-over-harvard-group-takes-on-west-point-5545073

-"The group that triumphed in a landmark Supreme Court case that struck down affirmative action policies at Harvard University earlier this year hopes to build on the victory with a lawsuit targeting similar policies at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. Students for Fair Admissions (SFFA) filed the lawsuit on Sept. 19 with high hopes, but the organization has strayed into a legal and political minefield as the academy and the Biden administration try to block the lawsuit on the grounds that an institution training military officers isn't subject to the same rules as private universities and that diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) policies help, rather than hinder, effectiveness in combat. Largely as a result of the perceived disparity between those standards that apply to private colleges and universities and those applicable to entities under federal oversight, the SFFA faces one of the most formidable legal challenges, the outcome of which will have implications for every school and academy in the nation… In December 2022, revisions to the Obama-era Department of Defense (DOD) Instruction 1300.28 altered official DOD vocabulary regarding transgender recruits, made officers more directly liable for perceived offenses against such persons, and gave official approval to cross-dressing on military bases, among other changes. President Biden's general DEI stance makes the SFFA litigation one of the most impactful lawsuits so far undertaken against a military institution in modern history."

Biden DOJ Taps Group Funded By Deep-Pocketed Left-Wing Orgs To Guide Gun Violence Reduction Efforts

https://dailycaller.com/2023/12/12/biden-doj-taps-group-funded-by-deep-pocketed-left-wing-orgs-to-guide-gun-violence-reduction-efforts/

-"The Department of Justice (DOJ) released its Violent Crime Reduction Roadmap Monday, a collection of resources meant to "assist local jurisdictions in developing, implementing, and evaluating the right set of strategies to prevent, intervene in, and respond to acts of community gun violence." The DOJ said the strategies presented in the roadmap are based on a report produced by the "nonpartisan" Council on Criminal Justice (CCJ), a think tank that received around $3 million from left-of-center organizations like the Ford Foundation, Arnold Ventures, The Pew Charitable Trusts, the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the Just Trust and the David Rockefeller Fund between 2020 and 2022, according to tax filings. The DOJ produced the roadmap in response to what it called "substantial increases in community gun violence" occurring across the country… Homicide rates remained 24% higher in 2023 than they were in 2019 across the 30 cities that reported data to CCJ. Some crimes, like motor vehicle theft and drug use, increased further in 2023 according to the study. The DOJ roadmap is based on actions recommended by the CCJ such as heightened community engagement, targeted investments to reduce crime and implementing diversity initiatives in police forces to improve retention, among other things… Some of the organizations that fund the CCJ promote initiatives to embed racial justice in the criminal justice system, shorten the amount of time criminals spend in jail and reduce the number of people put in jails after committing crimes… One such resource provided by the DOJ was a 2023 report on improving retention for law enforcement agencies. The report recommends that law enforcement "recruit for diversity" and to "address diversity, equity and inclusion" to improve performance. Specifically, the report advises agencies to commit to having 30% of their recruits be female by 2030, to "ensure the skill sets possessed by officers from diverse backgrounds are considered as part of the promotional process" and address policies "that may erect barriers to establishing a culture of equity and inclusion.".. The DOJ also touted the recent availability of grant funding to improve racial equity through prosecutorial reform. Some grants highlighted by the DOJ intended to help prosecutors "reduce crime and increase public safety" by developing tools to increase racial equity in the criminal justice process…"

Seizing Private Land Is Next Step in Fight Against Climate Change

https://www.theepochtimes.com/article/seizing-private-land-is-next-step-in-fight-against-climate-change-5544056

-"The dream of net-zero carbon emissions—and its vision of blanketing hundreds of millions of acres of American land with wind turbines and solar panels—is running up against the reality that most of the land in America is still privately owned and many Americans don't want these massive industrial installations near their homes. But that may prove to be a temporary impediment. "There is a major effort under the Biden administration to consolidate power over land and resources, because whoever owns the land and resources of a nation, controls the people," Margaret Byfield, executive director of American Stewards of Liberty, a property rights nonprofit, told The Epoch Times… Today, she sees another land grab coming in the form of the Green New Deal and the renewable energy industry. Analysts speculate that in order to meet net-zero goals and build out a renewable energy infrastructure, enormous swaths of land will have to be converted for industrial use. "With current siting practices, an area the size of Texas is required to accommodate the wind and solar infrastructure we need to reach nationwide net-zero emissions by 2050," said Katharine Hayhoe, chief scientist of The Nature Conservancy (TNC), a renewable energy advocate. Reaching the goal of net-zero carbon dioxide (CO_2) emissions by 2050 would require consuming more than 250,000 square miles, or 160 million acres, of land, according to TNC's May report… For the net-zero industry, however, centralizing land rights may solve this problem. A 2020 report by Vanderbilt Law School faculty J.B. Ruhl and James Salzman states that "the multi-faceted infrastructure goals of the Green New Deal will be impossible to achieve in the desired timeframes if the existing federal, state, and local siting and environmental protection statutory regimes are applied."… The authors advocate for "more streamlined, top-down, preemptive processes, as well as extensive use of eminent domain powers" to speed the development of wind and solar projects… This belief is resonating with government officials, both at the federal level and also within left-leaning states… In addition to government authority, private companies are also seeking the power to take land in the name of net zero. A test case is currently playing out in western states over carbon-capture pipeline projects, in which private companies are attempting to take people's land by eminent domain, insiders say. Two companies, Summit Carbon Solutions and Navigator CO_2 Ventures, have been attempting to construct carbon sequester pipelines through five western states… Navigator, which is 84 percent owned by asset manager behemoth BlackRock, has put its project on hold because of local resistance and reportedly hasn't made attempts to take land by eminent domain… In addition to the land acquisition for net zero, the Biden administration announced its 30x30 program in a January 2021 executive order. The order states that 30 percent of America's land and water should be set aside for "conservation" by 2030…"

Outcry follows Harvard decision to retain Claudine Gay after disastrous hearing

Washington Examiner l Jeremiah Poff

-"The corporation, which oversees the Ivy League university, announced the university would retain Gay as president despite a tumultuous two months, during which Gay declined to say if calling for the genocide of Jews violated the university's code of conduct at a congressional hearing. Gay has also faced accusations of plagiarism, which the corporation said did not violate "Harvard's standards for research misconduct" despite having to correct two of Gay's past works for "inadequate citation." The announcement from Harvard was widely criticized by those who had called for Gay's ouster, including Rep. Elise Stefanik (R-NY), who was the lawmaker whose questioning prompted the testimony from Gay that placed her fate as the leader of the school in jeopardy. "This is a moral failure of Harvard's leadership and higher education leadership at the highest levels," Stefanik said Tuesday. "And the only change they have made to their code of conduct, where they failed to condemn calls for genocide of the Jewish people, the only update to the code of conduct is to allow a plagiarist as the president of Harvard." Speaker of the House Mike Johnson (R-LA) likewise called the decision to retain Gay "outrageous" in a post on X, formerly Twitter…"

House GOP impeachment vote tests Biden's support with influential voting bloc

https://www.washingtonexaminer.com/news/white-house-biden-impeachment-political-risks

-"As much as the White House, the Biden campaign, and Biden push back on the House Republican allegations, with less than a year until the 2024 election, every minute he spends talking about the possibility of impeachment is one less minute he can spend persuading people to vote for him next November. House Republicans voting Wednesday on whether to formalize their impeachment inquiry into Biden raises questions about the president's judgment regarding his family and their business dealings, particularly concerning his son Hunter Biden, according to pollster David Paleologos. That may put pressure on Biden, at the White House or on the campaign trail, to become more partisan, which independent voters may find unappealing, per Paleologos, director of Suffolk University's Political Research Center. Biden outperformed former President Donald Trump among independents in 2020 by 13 percentage points, 54%-41%... After the White House tried to distance Biden from the House GOP's informal impeachment inquiry commenced by former House Speaker Kevin McCarthy (R-CA) amid federal government shutdown negotiations last fall, the administration and Biden's campaign have started providing sharper responses to the investigation. Before that, the White House Office of the General Counsel and Biden's personal lawyers were more prepared to mount more strident defenses. For example, the former has repeatedly underscored a lack of evidence despite having access to witness testimony and documents… Biden did not react to shouted questions about the House Republican impeachment inquiry vote after his joint press conference with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky on Tuesday."

UN General Assembly Passes Ceasefire Resolution, Israeli Ambassador Says It 'Does Not Mention Hamas'

-"Israel's ambassador to the United Nations condemned the General Assembly's passage of a resolution urging an immediate ceasefire in the Israel-Hamas conflict as "hypocritical" and ultimately aiding the terror group's goal to destroy Israel. On Tuesday, the U.N. General Assembly passed a non-binding resolution demanding an immediate humanitarian ceasefire, the release of Israeli hostages captured by Hamas, and compliance with international humanitarian law for the protection of civilians. The resolution, which does not mention Hamas after the assembly rejected two proposed amendments, garnered substantial support, with 153 countries in favor, 10 against, and 23 abstentions. The United States and Israel were among the ten countries opposing the resolution. Israeli U.N. Ambassador Gilad Erdan, who highlighted the "heinous acts of sexual violence" Hamas terrorists committed in their Oct. 7 rampage in southern Israel, decried the General Assembly's move as "another hypocritical resolution." The General Assembly's resolution comes after a binding U.N. Security Council ceasefire resolution was vetoed by the United States on Friday… "Not only does this resolution fail to condemn Hamas for crimes against humanity, it does not mention Hamas at all," said Mr. Erdan. "This will only prolong the death and destruction in the region; that is precisely what a ceasefire means."… During his speech, he held up a poster displaying the phone number of Hamas' office in Gaza, urging U.N. members to call it if they want a "real ceasefire."… Last week, U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres invoked Article 99 of the U.N. Charter to force the Security Council to address the Israel-Hamas conflict. Article 99, invoked for the first time since Mr. Guterres assumed office in 2017, is reserved for crises that threaten international peace and security… "Hamas raped women, committed heinous acts of sexual violence, took women and girls hostage, and is not only refusing to release them, but is also refusing the Red Cross's access to them," Mr. Erdan said. "There are no war crimes more heinous than the atrocities Hamas committed, and those that support this resolution are giving the terrorists a free pass," he added."

-"In the spirit of Christmas cheer, here is a shout out to some of the men and women of integrity who stood up this year to advance the cause of freedom with honor. When the world gets back on its moral axis again, as I am certain it will, they will be feted by history as the heroes who saved us from ruin:… IRS whistleblowers Gary Shapley and Joseph Ziegler… FBI whistleblowers Steve Friend, Kyle Seraphin, Garrett O'Boyle, Marcus Allen, and nameless colleagues still serving… Missouri Attorney-General turned-US Senator Eric Schmitt, his successor Andrew Bailey, and Louisiana Attorney General Jeff Landry (now governor-elect), who launched the landmark free speech case, Missouri v Biden, that exposed how the federal government has been pressuring social media companies to censor Americans who hold dissident views on everything from the efficacy of masks and lockdowns to the Ukraine war and true stories about Hunter Biden's laptop. It's heading for the Supreme Court, but it has put a crimp in the plans of government censors ahead of next year's election. A special shoutout to lawyer Jenin Younes, who represented plaintiffs in the case. Elon Musk… Riley Gaines and Chloe Cole and those who stood up against a vicious transgender ideology that drives the erasure of women and the genital mutilation of children. Drs Jay Bhattacharya, Martin Kulldorff, and their Great Barrington Declaration compatriots who opposed lockdowns and mandates and all the fake statistics and lies about COVID-19. Independent journalists (formerly lefties) Matt Taibbi, Michael Shellenberger and Bari Weiss and others who have seen the light – or stood their ground – and now use their gifts for good…"

Callaway County killer gets execution date
ABC 17 l Matthew Sanders
https://abc17news.com/news/crime/2023/12/13/callaway-county-killer-gets-execution-date/

-"A man convicted in 2008 of the murders of a New Bloomfield couple is set to be executed in April. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey asked the Missouri Supreme Court in February to set an execution date for Brian Dorsey. Dorsey was convicted of two counts of first-degree murder in the killing of his cousin, Sarah Bonnie, and her husband, Ben, on Dec. 23, 2006. He was convicted on a change of venue in Boone County. Dorsey has unsuccessfully appealed his sentence and the court ordered that he be executed on April 9. The U.S. Supreme Court rejected Dorsey's request to overturn his death sentence in February. Dorsey claimed his lawyers did not properly investigate factors that might have convinced a jury to give him a life sentence in prison. Dorsey's previous appeals argued that his ongoing drug addiction and depression would have made it impossible for him to have deliberately killed the Bonnies."

UPDATE: Convicted double killer from mid-Missouri's New Bloomfield to be put to death in 2024

-"The state Supreme Court has scheduled an April 9 execution date for a convicted double killer from mid-Missouri's New Bloomfield. The Supreme Court issued a two-page order this morning. The 51-year-old Dorsey is under two death sentences for the gruesome Christmas Eve 2006 deaths of his cousin Sarah Bonnie and her husband Ben Bonnie. Both victims were shot in the head with a shotgun at their Callaway County home. Missouri Attorney General Andrew Bailey says Dorsey also sexually assaulted Sarah and that he stole a car, firearms, medical supplies, a social security card and the couple's daughter's copy of Bambi II after the murders. Barring intervention from a federal judge or the U.S. Supreme Court or clemency from Missouri Governor Mike Parson, Dorsey will be executed by lethal injection in April at the maximum-

Execution date set for Missouri man who killed his cousin and her husband in 2006

-"The Missouri Supreme Court on Wednesday set an April execution date for Brian Dorsey, a central Missouri man convicted of killing his cousin and her husband in 2006. The execution is scheduled for 6 p.m. April 9 at the state prison in Bonne Terre. It would be the first in 2024 in Missouri. Four of the 24 executions in the U.S. this year were in Missouri. Dorsey, formerly of Jefferson City, was convicted of killing his cousin, Sarah Bonnie, and her husband, Ben, on Dec. 23, 2006, at their home near New Bloomfield. Prosecutors said that earlier that day, Dorsey had called Sarah Bonnie seeking to borrow money to pay two drug dealers who were at his apartment. Dorsey went to the Bonnies' home that night. After they went to bed, Dorsey took a shotgun from the garage and killed both of them before sexually assaulting Sarah Bonnie's body, prosecutors said. Sarah Bonnie's parents found the bodies the next day. The couple's 4-year-old daughter was unhurt. Dorsey pleaded guilty in 2008 but later appealed the death sentence, claiming he should have instead been sentenced to life in prison without parole. The Missouri Supreme Court upheld the death sentence in 2010. Another appeal filed on behalf of Dorsey alleged that he was suffering from mental illness at the time of the killings and that his lawyer was ineffective. The state Supreme Court again upheld the death sentence in 2014. Missouri was among just five states to perform executions this year. The others were Texas, Oklahoma, Alabama and Florida."
