DHS "failed to address whether there was 'legitimate reliance' on" MPP. Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1913 (quoting Smiley v. Citibank (S.D.), N.A., 517 U.S. 735, 742 (1996)). In its seven-page June 1 Memorandum, DHS does not directly mention any reliance interests, especially those of the States. The closest the June 1 Memorandum gets is a reference to "the impact [terminating MPP] could have on border management and border communities." AR5. But the Memorandum makes clear that "border communities" do not include border states. See id. ("referring only to "nongovernmental organizations and local officials"). And the vague reference to "border management" is insufficient to show specific, meaningful consideration of the States' reliance interests.

In response, the Government concedes that it failed to consider the States' reliance interests. But it argues that is irrelevant because "the States have no cognizable reliance interest in a discretionary program." Stay Mot. at 18. We reject that argument for several reasons.

Most importantly, the Government's contention is squarely foreclosed by Regents. There, the Supreme Court acknowledged that the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals ("DACA") program was a discretionary program. 140 S. Ct. at 1910. Still, the Court faulted DHS for not considering reliance interests, including in particular those of the states. As the Supreme Court explained, "[w]hen an agency changes course, . . . it must be cognizant that longstanding policies may have engendered serious reliance interests that must be taken into account." Id. at 1913 (quotation omitted). Those reliance interests included states' interests. See id. at 1914 (highlighting assertions that "[s]tates and local governments could lose $1.25 billion in tax revenue each year"). So if the termination of DACA—a discretionary, immigration program—must consider states' "potential reliance interests," then so does termination of MPP. Id. at 1913. That is particularly true here because the district court found as a matter of fact—and the Government does not contest—that states like Texas face fiscal harm from the termination of MPP. See D. Ct. Op. at 18–20.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The district court also found that the "termination of MPP has and will continue to increase the number of aliens being released into the United States." Id. at 17. The Supreme Court has recognized that border states "bear[] many of the consequences of unlawful immigration." Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 397 (2012). It therefore follows that a "potential reliance interest" that DHS must consider includes Texas.

The DHS-Texas Agreement reinforces the Government's awareness of the State's reliance interests. In that Agreement, DHS stipulated:

- "Texas, like other States, is directly and concretely affected by changes to DHS rules and policies that have the effect of easing, relaxing, or limiting immigration enforcement." Compl., Ex. B at 1.
- "The harm to Texas is particularly acute where its budget has been set months or years in advance and it has no time to adjust its budget to respond to DHS policy changes." Id.
- "[A]n aggrieved party will be irreparably damaged." Id. at 5.

The Agreement further states that it "establishes a binding and enforceable commitment between DHS and Texas." Id. at 2. Texas therefore could reasonably rely on the Agreement. And Texas did in fact rely on the Agreement by including DHS's breach as a cause of action in its complaint—filed months before the June 1 Memorandum. And then—despite these reliance interests and despite being on notice of the Agreement from the States' complaint—the June 1 Memorandum said not one word about the Agreement. A "reasonable and reasonably explained" decision would have said something. Prometheus, 141 S. Ct. at 1158. That is why this "omission alone [likely] renders [the Secretary's] decision arbitrary and capricious." Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1913.[4] b.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The June 1 Memorandum also failed to consider DHS's prior factual findings on MPP's benefits. In its October 2019 Assessment of MPP, DHS found that "aliens without meritorious claims—which no longer constitute[d] a free ticket into the United States—[were] beginning to voluntarily return home." D. Ct. Op. at 10. DHS also found that MPP addressed the "perverse incentives" created by allowing "those with non-meritorious claims . . . [to] remain in the country for lengthy periods of time." Id. These benefits, DHS emphasized, were a "core component" or "cornerstone" of the agency's prior immigration policy. Id. at 12.

Nonetheless, the June 1 Memorandum did not expressly mention, let alone meaningfully discuss, DHS's prior factual findings. Instead, the Secretary changed policies based on his own findings that contradict DHS's October 2019 findings. But an agency must provide "a more detailed justification" when a "new policy rests upon factual findings that contradict those which underlay its prior policy." FCC v. Fox Television Stations, Inc.,

[4] As the D.C. Circuit has emphasized in a different APA context, "the opportunity to comment is meaningless unless the agency responds to significant points raised by the public." Sherley v. Sebelius, 689 F.3d 776, 784 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (Sentelle, C.J.) (quotation omitted). We do not suggest that DHS needed notice-and-comment rulemaking to rescind MPP. But it did need to consider "relevant factors" to that rescission decision. Id. And you might reasonably think that one "relevant factor[]" to that decision was DHS's pledge "to consult Texas and consider its views before taking any action, adopting or modify[ing] a policy or procedure, or making any decision that" affects MPP. Compl., Ex. B at 2. Perhaps DHS has a good reason for its action. But it is likely arbitrary and capricious for DHS not even to acknowledge its agreement—let alone do anything to consult Texas or consider its views.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

556 U.S. 502, 515 (2009). The Secretary did not provide the required "more detailed justification." Id. This further indicates that the termination of MPP was arbitrary and capricious.

The June 1 Memorandum also insufficiently addressed alternatives to terminating MPP. "[W]hen an agency rescinds a prior policy[,] its reasoned analysis must consider the alternatives that are within the ambit of the existing policy." Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1913 (quotation omitted). While considering alternatives, DHS "was required to assess whether there were reliance interests, determine whether they were significant, and weigh any such interests against competing policy concerns." Id. at 1915. As explained above, DHS did not adequately assess reliance interests. So it would be impossible for the June 1 Memorandum to properly weigh the relevant interests against competing policy concerns while considering alternatives.

The June 1 Memorandum offers a single conclusory sentence addressing potential modifications to MPP: "I also considered whether the program could be modified in some fashion, but I believe that addressing the deficiencies identified in my review would require a total redesign that would involve significant additional investments in personnel and resources." AR.5. But "belief" that a "total redesign" was required, id., is no substitute for a "reasonable and reasonably explained" decision. Prometheus, 141 S. Ct. at 1158.

Of course, "DHS was not required . . . to consider all policy alternatives in reaching [its] decision," and the agency has "considerable flexibility" to "wind-down" a program. Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1914 (emphasis added) (quotation omitted). But the problem is that the Secretary failed to mention any modification to MPP as a possible alternative, even though "the alternatives . . . are within the ambit of the existing policy." Id. at 1913

(quotations omitted). And merely stating that an alternative was considered is not enough to show reasoned analysis. Cf. United Techs. Corp. v. U.S. Dep't of Def., 601 F.3d 557, 562 (D.C. Cir. 2010) ("We do not defer to the agency's conclusory or unsupported suppositions." (quotation omitted)).

The Government's principal counterargument is that DHS considered an alternative outside "the ambit of the existing policy." Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1913. Specifically, the June 1 Memorandum pointed to a "Dedicated Docket" program designed to provide counsel to aliens in removal proceedings. AR.4–5 & n.6; see Stay Mot. at 16; Reply at 7. This argument is unpersuasive for at least two reasons. First, by the Government's own admission, the "Dedicated Docket" is outside the ambit of MPP—and hence it does not count as a reasoned consideration of alternatives "within the ambit of the existing policy." Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1913 (emphasis added). And second, neither the June 1 Memorandum nor the Government in its stay motion explains why MPP and the "Dedicated Docket" are mutually exclusive.

The June 1 Memorandum also failed to consider the legal implications of terminating the policy. After the Government suspended MPP—but before it rescinded the program—Texas filed this lawsuit. In its original complaint, and in its initial motion for preliminary injunction, Texas argued that the suspension of MPP violated § 1225. See Compl. at 36–38; Prelim. Inj. Mot., ECF No. 30. About a month and a half later, the Secretary issued the memorandum terminating MPP. So the government was on notice of the legal implications. Yet in the memorandum, the Secretary does not mention the lawfulness concerns involving § 1225—even though, the "natural response" to this "newly identified problem" would be to consider the problem. Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1916. This further indicates that "the process by which" the Secretary reached that result was neither "logical" nor "rational." Michigan, 576 U.S. at 750.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Government offers a hodgepodge of counterarguments to justify the June 1 Memorandum's omissions. None is persuasive.

The Government repeatedly argues that DHS's statement that it considered this or that factor is enough to avoid any arbitrary-and-capricious problems. See Stay Mot. at 16. The law says otherwise. "Stating that a factor was considered . . . is not a substitute for considering it." Getty v. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ins. Corp., 805 F.2d 1050, 1055 (D.C. Cir. 1986); see also Corrosion Proof Fittings v. E.P.A., 947 F.2d 1201, 1226 (5th Cir. 1991) ("The EPA's failure to consider the regulatory alternatives, however, cannot be substantiated by conclusory statements . . . ."); United Techs., 601 F.3d at 562 ("We do not defer to the agency's conclusory or unsupported suppositions." (quotation omitted)); cf. Gerber v. Norton, 294 F.3d 173, 185 (D.C. Cir. 2002) ("And stating that a factor was considered—or found—is not a substitute for considering or finding it." (quotation omitted)); Gresham v. Azar, 950 F.3d 93, 103 (D.C. Cir. 2020) ("Nodding to concerns raised by commenters only to dismiss them in a conclusory manner is not a hallmark of reasoned decisionmaking."). This well-established principle makes sense. After all:

> [A]n agency's "experience and expertise" presumably enable the agency to provide the required explanation, but they do not substitute for the explanation, any more than an expert witness's credentials substitute for the substantive requirements applicable to the expert's testimony under Fed. R. Evid. 702. The requirement of explanation presumes the expertise and experience of the agency and still demands an adequate explanation in the particular matter.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CS Wind Viet. Co. v. United States, 832 F.3d 1367, 1377 (Fed. Cir. 2016) (citations omitted).

The Government also points to the June 1 Memorandum's observations on MPP's shortcomings. See Stay Mot. at 16–17. Even if creditable, these observations cannot justify the other omissions discussed above. But in any event, many of those observations are neither "logical" nor "rational." Michigan, 576 U.S. at 750. Take DHS's termination justification based on in absentia removal orders. DHS observed that "the high percentage of cases completed through the entry of in absentia removal orders (approximately 44 percent, based on DHS data) raises questions for me about the design and operation of the program." AR.4 (emphasis added). The district court found that "[t]he federal government's data shows similarly high rates of in absentia removals prior to implementation of MPP." D. Ct. Op. at 40. The Government has not said one word to suggest the district court's factual finding was clearly erroneous.[5] We therefore cannot conclude that the Secretary "examine[d] the relevant data and articulate[d] a satisfactory explanation" with "a rational connection between the facts found and the choice" to terminate MPP. State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43 (quotation omitted). And even on the Government's own terms—considering only half the statistics and ignoring the district court's factual finding—the June 1 Memorandum only said that in absentia statistics "raise[d] questions for [DHS] about the design and operation of the [5] In its reply brief, the Government argues that it need not have commissioned an "in-depth empirical analysis" of the in absentia statistics before rescinding MPP. Reply at 9. Of course that is true. But it is equally true that the Government cannot cherry-pick only the statistics it likes in the administrative record. Nor can the Government fail to address statistics that already exist in that record. See Encino Motorcars, LLC v. Navarro, 136 S. Ct. 2117, 2126 (2016) (holding "an unexplained inconsistency in agency policy is a reason for holding an interpretation to be an arbitrary and capricious change from agency practice" (quotation omitted)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

program." AR.4. But the process required by the APA requires agencies to seek answers and reasonably explain the outcome of that effort, including its conclusions.

The June 1 Memorandum places much weight on COVID-19. According to the Memorandum, the pandemic "compounded" "challenges faced by MPP" when "immigration courts designated to hear MPP cases were closed for public health reasons between March 2020 and April 2021." AR.4. But DHS issued its memorandum terminating MPP at least one month after courts reopened. As the district court explained: "Past problems with past closures are irrelevant to the decision to prospectively terminate MPP in June 2021. This is especially true when the Secretary admits DHS had maintained the facilities during the pandemic." D. Ct. Op. at 41. The Government challenges this conclusion on the ground that "infrastructure used for MPP remains shuttered." Stay Mot. at 19 n.4. But the Government provides no indication that the facilities are not maintained or are shuttered because of the pandemic—as opposed to the choice the Government itself made when it suspended MPP in January 2021.

In addition to the APA, the district court also relied on 8 U.S.C. § 1225. The Government claims that the district court determined that "the Secretary is required to return any noncitizen he fails to detain" and that the district court's "core legal analysis" is that DHS has "a binary choice between detention or return to Mexico for noncitizens arriving from Mexico." Stay Mot. at 11–13. In essence, the Government characterizes the district court's decision and injunction as removing the Government's ability to use its discretion under 8 U.S.C. §§ 1182(d)(5)(A) and 1226. But as we explain in Part III, infra, the Government has mischaracterized the district court's order. This matters because all of the Government's § 1225 arguments hinge on an incorrect premise.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Therefore, we cannot conclude that the Government is likely to succeed on either its APA arguments or its § 1225 arguments—let alone that the Government is likely to succeed on both. The Government therefore has not come close to a "strong showing" that it is likely to succeed on the merits. Nken, 556 U.S. at 426.

III.

The Government also has not shown that it will be irreparably injured absent a stay pending appeal. The Government's arguments are largely built on two strawmen. We consider and reject those before turning to the Government's other arguments.

First, the Government complains that it will be irreparably harmed absent a stay because DHS is incapable of reinstating MPP "in a matter of days." Stay Mot. at 21; see also Decl. of David Shahoulian ¶ 16 (Aug. 16, 2021) (arguing DHS cannot immediately "reestablish the entire infrastructure upon which [MPP] was built"). This is a strawman. The district court did not order the Government to restore MPP's infrastructure overnight. It ordered that, once the injunction takes effect on August 21, DHS must "enforce and implement MPP in good faith." D. Ct. Op. at 52. DHS does not argue that good faith is an unreasonably high standard to meet.

Second, the Government asserts it will be irreparably injured because the injunction obligates DHS to detain "every single person described in 8 U.S.C. § 1225," which DHS cannot do because it lacks "sufficient detention capacity." Decl. of David Shahoulian ¶ 5 (Aug. 16, 2021). This is a second strawman. The injunction does not require the Government to detain every alien subject to § 1225. Nor does it order the Government to "build or obtain" additional detention facilities. Stay Mot. at 21. Instead, it requires the Government to "enforce and implement MPP in good faith . . . until such a time as the federal government has sufficient detention capacity to detain all aliens subject to mandatory detention." D. Ct. Op. at 52 (second emphasis added).

And far from ordering the Government to detain "every single person described in 8 U.S.C. § 1225," Decl. of David Shahoulian ¶ 5 (Aug. 16, 2021), the district court specifically acknowledged that the Government has other options. Under § 1225(b)(2)(A), which provides the statutory authority for MPP, an alien arriving on land from a contiguous foreign territory can be returned to that territory. See D. Ct. Op. at 43 & n.11 (noting this discretion). Under 8 U.S.C. § 1182(d)(5)(A), DHS can parole an alien into the United States "on a case-by-case basis for urgent humanitarian reasons or significant public benefit." (Emphasis added); see D. Ct. Op. at 43 & n.11 (noting this discretion). Under 8 U.S.C. § 1226, DHS can release on "bond" or "conditional parole" an alien arrested on a warrant and detained "pending a decision on whether the alien is to be removed." See also Stay Mot. at 12; D. Ct. Op. at 51 (noting this discretion). Last but not least, of course, the Government can choose to detain an alien in accordance with § 1225. See D. Ct. Op. at 43 (noting this discretion).

What the Government cannot do, the district court held, is simply release every alien described in § 1225 en masse into the United States. The Government has not pointed to a single word anywhere in the INA that suggests it can do that. And the Government cannot claim an irreparable injury from being enjoined against an action that it has no statutory authorization to take.

Third and finally, we turn to the Government's non-strawmen arguments for its irreparable injuries. Most of these are self-inflicted and therefore do not count. See 11A CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ET AL.,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2948.1 (2021) ("[A] party may not satisfy the irreparable harm requirement if the harm complained of is self-inflicted"). For example, the Government notes that "DHS has been in the process of unwinding MPP and its infrastructure for months," such that restarting the program now would be difficult. Stay Mot. at 21. But as the district court noted, "Texas filed suit challenging the suspension of enrollments in MPP . . . nearly two months before DHS purported to terminate the program entirely in the June 1 Memorandum." D. Ct. Op. at 47. Therefore, DHS could have avoided this problem by waiting to unwind MPP until this litigation was resolved. The self-inflicted nature of the government's asserted harm "'severely undermines' its claim for equitable relief." Al Otro Lado v. Wolf, 952 F.3d 999, 1008 (9th Cir. 2020) (quoting Hirschfeld v. Bd. of Elections in City of N.Y., 984 F.2d 35, 39 (2d Cir. 1993)); accord Second City Music, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 333 F.3d 846, 850 (7th Cir. 2003) ("[S]elf-inflicted wounds are not irreparable injury."); Caplan v. Fellheimer Eichen Braverman & Kaskey, 68 F.3d 828, 839 (3d Cir. 1995) ("If the harm complained of is self-inflicted, it does not qualify as irreparable.").

Before the district court, the Government also suggested that it began unwinding MPP four or more months before the June 1 Memorandum. See D. Ct. Op. at 48. That understandably would make it harder for DHS to restart MPP on Saturday. But it also makes DHS's legal position dramatically weaker. It is a fundamental precept of administrative law that an administrative agency cannot make its decision first and explain it later. See, e.g., Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1908–10. Insofar as DHS concedes that its June 1 Memorandum is a post hoc rationalization for a decision that it made many months earlier, it has conceded that the June 1 Memorandum is arbitrary, capricious, and not a good faith explanation for its decision. Such inequitable conduct is "sufficient to deny" DHS's request for an equitable stay pending appeal. See In re GGW Brands, LLC, No. 2:13-bk-15130, 2013 WL 6906375, at *26–*27 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. Nov. 15, 2013).

The Government also asserts that reinstating MPP will cause harm because "DHS cannot restart MPP without significant cooperation with Mexico," and the injunction implicates "delicate and ongoing discussions with Mexico." Stay Mot. at 21. There are at least four problems with that. First, as the district court noted, DHS created MPP unilaterally and without any previous agreement with Mexico. See D. Ct. Op. at 49 & n.15. DHS does not explain why it cannot likewise restart MPP unilaterally. Second, the Government does not point to any evidence that Mexico has withdrawn its support for MPP. See AR.152–53 (Mexico's December 20, 2018 statement of support). Third, the Government "'could have avoided' any disruptions by simply informing Mexico that termination of MPP would be subject to judicial review." D. Ct. Op. at 47 (quoting Texas, 809 F.3d at 187). Insofar as the Government failed to do that, again, its injury is self-inflicted. Fourth, even assuming Mexico's support is required, assuming Mexico has withdrawn its support, and assuming Mexico will not support a new MPP, the injunction still does not irreparably harm the Government. The injunction only requires good faith on the part of the United States—if the Government's good-faith efforts to implement MPP are thwarted by Mexico, it nonetheless will be in compliance with the district court's order, so long as it also adheres to the rest of the statutory requirements.

Finally, because the Government has requested a stay pending completion of appellate proceedings, the relevant question is whether the Government will be irreparably harmed during the pendency of the appeal. Even if the Government were correct that long-term compliance with the district court's injunction would cause irreparable harm, it presents no reason to think that it cannot comply with the district court's requirement of good faith while the appeal proceeds. Therefore, the Government has failed to demonstrate that it will be irreparably injured absent a stay pending appeal.

IV.

The final two Nken factors also do not warrant a stay. See Nken, 556 U.S. at 434.

The district court concluded that the States have suffered, and will continue to suffer, harms as a result of the termination of MPP. See D. Ct. Op. at 17 ("The termination of MPP has [increased] and will continue to increase the number of aliens being released into the United States and has [imposed] and will continue to impose harms on Plaintiff States Texas and Missouri."). We agree. See supra Part II.A.1 (standing). A stay "would enable" aliens released into the interior "to apply for driver's licenses and other benefits, and it would be difficult for the states to retract those benefits or recoup their costs even if they won on the merits." Texas, 787 F.3d at 768.

Likewise, the "public interest [is] in having governmental agencies abide by the federal laws that govern their existence and operations." Washington v. Reno, 35 F.3d 1093, 1102 (6th Cir. 1994). Here, the Government has failed to carry its burden to show that its conduct comports with federal law. And "[t]here is generally no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful agency action." League of Women Voters of U.S. v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 12 (D.C. Cir. 2016).

The Government is also wrong to say that a stay would promote the public interest by preserving the separation of powers. All the district court's injunction requires of the Government is that it act in accordance with the INA. And in all events, "it is the resolution of the case on the merits, not whether the injunction is stayed pending appeal, that will affect" principles of "separation of powers and federalism." Texas, 787 F.3d at 768.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The DHS-Texas Agreement also suggests the public interest counsels against issuing a stay. That Agreement expressly acknowledged that if DHS failed to comply with the Agreement's terms, Texas would "be irreparably damaged" and would "not have an adequate remedy at law." Compl., Ex. B at 4. The Agreement remained binding until August 1, 2021, and the parties agree DHS violated its terms. See D. Ct. Op. at 14 ("The parties agree DHS did not follow the[] procedures" required by the Agreement.). The district court concluded that the expiration of the Agreement mooted Texas's claim under it. See id. at 44. As noted in Part II above, however, the States' likelihood of success on the merits of their APA claims means that DHS will have to consider all relevant factors before attempting to rescind MPP—including its effects on the States. The public interest plainly lies in not allowing DHS to circumvent those federalism concerns.

V.

Finally, the Government argues a stay is warranted because the district court should have remanded without vacating the June 1 Memorandum or issuing an injunction. Stay Mot. at 22; see also Reply at 12. "Remand, not vacatur, is generally appropriate when there is at least a serious possibility that the agency will be able to substantiate its decision given an opportunity to do so." Texas Ass'n of Manufacturers v. United States Consumer Prod. Safety Comm'n, 989 F.3d 368, 389 (5th Cir. 2021). But it is unclear how DHS can substantiate its decision on remand. Neither in its opening stay motion nor in its reply does the Government suggest how it can. See generally Stay Mot. at 22–23; Reply at 12. And Supreme Court precedent suggests that any later memorandum on remand elaborating on the June 1 Memorandum would be irrelevant to an arbitrary-and-capricious analysis because it is a post hoc rationalization. See Regents, 140 S. Ct. at 1907–09. So at this stage, without any argument whatsoever to the contrary, it appears that DHS would have to issue "a new rule implementing a new policy" that

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"compl[ies] with the procedural requirements for new agency action." Id. at 1908 (emphases added).

Vacatur, by contrast, would not cause "disruptive consequences". See United Steel v. Mine Safety & Health Admin., 925 F.3d 1279, 1287 (D.C. Cir. 2019) (also considering "the disruptive consequences of vacatur" (internal quotation marks omitted)). The Government makes no argument materially different from its irreparable-injury argument. So we reject the Government's arguments here for the same reasons we rejected them in Part III, supra.

* * *

The Government has failed to make the requisite showing for all four Nken factors. The Government's motion for a stay pending appeal is therefore DENIED. The Government's appeal is hereby EXPEDITED for consideration before the next available oral argument panel.

All,
Tomorrow evening, the Missouri Attorney General's Office will play in a round-robin softball tournament against the Federal Public Defender's Office, St. Louis County Prosecutor's Office, U.S. Attorneys' Offices in the Eastern District of Missouri and Southern District of Illinois, and the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's Office.

Unfortunately, I have received a large amount of cancellations this afternoon. So, in order to avoid having to forfeit, I am once again putting out a call for people to play.

If you have not attended in the past, it is a great time in a relaxed atmosphere and a good opportunity to support the office and get to know your coworkers. We had a great turnout two years ago with players of all skill levels and spectators.

All are welcome to attend and cheer us on, but if you are interested in playing and have not already responded to me today, please let me know. Please email me separately without replying all, as this is being sent to the entire St. Louis. If not, no need to send regrets. If any Section Chiefs are able to help recruit, I would greatly appreciate it.

If you have any questions, there are more details below, or feel free to contact me directly. Thank you!

Happy Friday, everyone. A few updates. Apologies for all of the emails.

1. Softball Tournament is tentative at this point due to all of the rain and more expected this evening. The organizer is waiting to hear from the Parks Department as to whether we can play. I will send a follow-up email either way to let you all know. If we do play, please try to arrive by 4:00pm. We will have a first-round bye so I don't expect to play until 4:30pm, but there is a chance that some offices, perhaps those with a history of not showing up to court, may not show up to play, so we could play sooner.
2. If you ordered merchandise, it is available for pickup from Rachael Houser's office. Please go get it this morning or this afternoon.

Thanks!

All,
Tomorrow is the day! This casual event is open to both attorneys and support staff (so long as your schedule accommodates), and we would love to see as many people as possible come out. As of now, we have 11 people committed to playing, but we could definitely use more. So if you are on the fence, I urge you to come by even if you are in as bad of shape as I am currently. Especially if you identify as female, your presence would be greatly appreciated, as 4 females are required in the field at all times and the batting order must alternate men and women. If you have not already, please let me know if you are able to play!

If you have a ball glove or bat, please bring it with you. Parking is available in the park and also directly across Hampton on the side of Schnucks. I would encourage you to patronize the store if possible and put the receipt on your dashboard. Please do not park in the Walgreens lot.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

If you ordered a t-shirt through the AGO Pop-Up Shop that Rachael Houser so graciously organized, those will arrive in the St. Louis office tomorrow morning after Rachael picks them up. If you did not order one, I would suggest wearing the blue AGO t-shirts we wore last time (pictured below) or any other shirt with a similar color.

There is a good possibility that it rains and storms tomorrow, unfortunately, so if the tournament is canceled, I will inform everyone as soon as I know, but I would still plan on playing at this point.

Any questions, please feel free to reach out!

Thanks,

Nos. 99-4317/14-3718

On Petition for Rehearing En Banc
United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio at Youngstown.
No. 4:96-cv-00795—Paul R. Matia and John R. Adams, District Judges.

Decided and Filed: August 20, 2021

COUNSEL

ARGUED EN BANC: Vicki Ruth Adams Werneke, FEDERAL PUBLIC DEFENDER'S OFFICE, Cleveland, Ohio, for Appellant. Benjamin M. Flowers, OFFICE OF THE OHIO ATTORNEY GENERAL, Columbus, Ohio, for Appellee. ON SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF: Vicki Ruth Adams Werneke, Lori B. *Pursuant to 6 Cir. I.O.P. 35(c), Composition of the En Banc Court, Judge Merritt, senior judge of the court who sat on the original panel in this case, participated in this decision. Judge Murphy recused himself from participation in this decision.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

GIBBBONS, J., delivered the opinion of the court in which SUTTON, C.J., and GRIFFIN, KETHLEDGE, THAPAR, BUSH, LARSEN, NALBANDIAN, and READLER, JJ., joined. MOORE, J. (pp. 29–63), delivered a separate dissenting opinion, in which MERRITT, COLE, CLAY, WHITE, STRANCH, and DONALD, JJ., joined. An excerpt of the panel's 2018 opinion, see 881 F.3d 483 (6th Cir. 2018), is appended, (app. 64–81).

OPINION

JULIA SMITH GIBBONS, Circuit Judge. In this death penalty habeas case, appellant Danny Hill seeks collateral review of his conviction for the murder of Raymond Fife, a twelve-year-old boy. The case has been to the Supreme Court once and before panels of this court twice. The core issue in the underlying state case was whether Hill was ineligible for the death penalty because he is intellectually disabled, a question that became pertinent after the Supreme Court's 2002 decision in Atkins v. Virginia. 536 U.S. 304 (2002). Before us, the issues are whether, under governing AEDPA review principles, the state court decision "was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States" or was "based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d). We conclude that the state court's resolution of the issue does not meet either of the criteria that would permit a federal court to disturb a state conviction. Thus, we affirm the district court's denial of Hill's petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

I.

In 1986, a three-judge Ohio state court panel convicted Hill of the murder of Raymond Fife, a twelve-year-old boy. State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d 108, 111 (Ohio Ct. App. 2008). Hill abused and injured Fife in multiple horrible ways. Id. Fife was found by his father and died two days later. Id. The same panel sentenced Hill to death. Id. During the mitigation stage of Hill's sentencing, the court heard testimony from three medical professionals about whether Hill was intellectually disabled.[1] One found that Hill's intelligence level "fluctuat[ed] between mild retarded and borderline intellectual functioning," another that Hill fell "in the mild range of mental retardation," and the last that Hill's "upper level cortical functioning indicated very poor efficiency." Id. at 112 (quoting State v. Hill, 595 N.E.2d 884, 901 (Ohio 1992)). After considering this evidence, the Ohio state court found that the record evidence suggested that Hill had a "diminished mental capacity" and that testimony suggested he would be "categorized as mildly to moderately retarded." Id. (quoting State v. Hill, Nos. 3720, 3745, 1989 WL 142761, at *32 (Ohio Ct. App. Nov. 27, 1989)). The Ohio Court of Appeals and Ohio Supreme Court both affirmed the trial court's imposition of the death penalty because they found that the aggravating circumstances outweighed any mitigating factors, including Hill's diminished intellectual capacity. Id.

In 2002, the Supreme Court decided Atkins v. Virginia, which held that it was unconstitutional to execute the intellectually disabled. 536 U.S. 304 (2002). The Atkins Court provided some discussion of the clinical definitions of intellectual disability, but it left it to the states to "develop[] appropriate ways to enforce the constitutional restriction upon [their] execution of sentences." Id. at 317 (second alteration in original) (quoting Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399, 416–17 (1986)). In State v. Lott, the Ohio Supreme Court articulated a three-part test for establishing intellectual disability based on Atkins: "(1) significantly subaverage intellectual functioning, (2) significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills, such as communication, self-care, and self-direction, and (3) onset before the age of 18." 779 N.E.2d 1011, 1014 (Ohio 2002), overruled by State v. Ford, 140 N.E.3d 616 (Ohio 2019).

In response to Atkins, Hill filed a petition for state post-conviction relief in 2003. State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 113. The trial court held an evidentiary hearing, and Hill, the prosecution, and the court each chose a medical expert to evaluate Hill's intellectual capabilities. Id. Hill retained Dr. David Hammer, a professor and director of psychology services at the Ohio State University; the prosecution hired Dr. Gregory Olley, a professor and director of the Center for [1]At the time, the condition was referred to as "mental retardation." While some of the past decisions and material we cite use that outdated terminology, the preferred term in the current lexicon is "intellectual disability." See Hall v. Florida, 572 U.S. 701, 704 (2014).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

the Study of Development and Learning at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill; and the court appointed Dr. Nancy Huntsman, a forensic psychologist who worked at the Court Psychiatric Clinic in Cleveland, Ohio. Id. The Ohio Court of Appeals, in reviewing Hill's Atkins claim, described the trial court proceedings as follows:

> In April 2004, Drs. Olley, Hammer, and Huntsman evaluated Hill at the Mansfield Correctional Institution for the purposes of preparing for the Atkins hearing. At this time, Hill was administered the Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale ("WAIS–III") IQ test, the Test of Mental Malingering, the Street Survival Skills Questionnaire, and the Woodcock–Johnson–III. The doctors concurred that Hill was either "faking bad" and/or malingering in the performance of these tests. As a result, the full scale IQ score of 58 obtained on this occasion was deemed unreliable, and no psychometric assessment of Hill's current adaptive functioning was possible. Thus, the doctors were forced to rely on collateral sources in reaching their conclusions, such as Hill's school records containing evaluations of his intellectual functioning, evaluations performed at the time of Hill's sentencing and while Hill was on death row, institutional records from the Southern Ohio Correctional Institution and the Mansfield Correctional Institution, interviews with Hill, corrections officers, and case workers, and prior court records and testimony.
> The evidentiary hearing on Hill's Atkins petition was held on October 4 through 8 and 26 through 29, 2004, and on March 23 through 24, 2005. Doctors Olley and Huntsman testified that in their opinion, Hill is not mentally retarded. Doctor Hammer concluded that Hill qualifies for a diagnosis of mild mental retardation.

Id. at 113–14.

The trial court held that Hill was not intellectually disabled and rejected his Atkins claim. Id. at 114. The Ohio Court of Appeals affirmed, finding that Hill failed to prove he suffered from two or more significant limitations in adaptive skills that manifested before age 18. Id. at 126–27. The Ohio Supreme Court, with two justices dissenting, declined to hear Hill's appeal. State v. Hill, 912 N.E.2d 107 (Ohio 2009) (Table).

Hill then filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which the district court denied. The district court concluded that Hill had not overcome the highly deferential standard of review under the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 ("AEDPA").[2] Hill v.

[2]The district court was critical of the Ohio Court of Appeals opinion. Some of us agree with some of its observations. Here, however, we do not itemize the opinion's possible flaws in order to focus attention on our

Anderson, No. 4:96 CV 00795, 2014 WL 2890416, at *51 (N.D. Ohio June 25, 2014). The district court explained that while reasonable minds may disagree with the state court's determination and weighing of the evidence, the state court's "conclusion regarding Hill's adaptive behavior at the time he filed his Atkins claim was supported by sufficient credible evidence and, most importantly, the opinions of two experts." Id.

Hill appealed, and a panel of judges on this court reversed the district court's decision on Hill's Atkins claim. The panel found that "the state court judgment . . . amounted to an unreasonable application of the standard articulated by the Supreme Court in Atkins and as later explained by Hall and Moore."[3] Hill v. Anderson, 881 F.3d 483, 489 (6th Cir. 2018). In addition to his Atkins claim, Hill raised four other issues on appeal: an ineffective assistance of counsel claim related to his Atkins hearing, a Miranda claim, a claim of prosecutorial misconduct, and a due process claim based on the trial court's alleged failure to hold a pretrial competency hearing. Id. at 487. The panel pretermitted Hill's ineffective assistance of counsel claim and affirmed the district court's denial of the other three claims, which Hill has not challenged. Id. The Warden filed a petition for rehearing en banc, which was denied. He then filed a petition for a writ of certiorari, which the Supreme Court granted.

The Supreme Court vacated and remanded, finding that the panel's "reliance on Moore was plainly improper under § 2254(d)(1)." Shoop v. Hill, 139 S. Ct. 504, 505 (2019) (per curiam). The Court explained that "habeas relief may be granted only if the state court's adjudication 'resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of,' Supreme Court precedent that was 'clearly established' at the time of the adjudication." Id. at 506 (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1)). Because Moore was decided after Hill's state-court proceedings, the Court found that the panel erred by relying on Moore when determining whether habeas relief was warranted under § 2254(d)(1). Id. at 508–09. The Court ordered that "[o]n remand, the [panel] should determine whether its conclusions can be sustained based strictly on legal rules that were clearly established in the decisions of this Court at the relevant time." Id. at 509. The Supreme Court did not directly comment on any other part of the panel's decision, including its analysis under § 2254(d)(2) or Hill's other four claims for relief. See generally id.

On remand, the panel again granted Hill relief on his Atkins claim. Hill v. Anderson, 960 F.3d 260, 265 (6th Cir. 2020) (per curiam). The panel also once again pretermitted Hill's ineffective assistance of counsel claim and affirmed the district court's denial of Hill's other three claims, incorporating its prior opinion in full. Id. at 265, 283.

The Warden filed a petition for rehearing en banc on Hill's Atkins claim, arguing that the panel erred under both § 2254(d)(1) and § 2254(d)(2). This court granted en banc review, which vacated the prior panel decision. Because we conclude that Hill's Atkins claim does not satisfy the demanding AEDPA standard, we affirm the district court's denial of habeas relief. In addition to our discussion of his Atkins claim, we find that Hill's ineffective assistance of counsel claim fails on its merits. We also reinstate the panel's prior discussion affirming the district court's denial of Hill's remaining claims to the extent it is consistent with this opinion.

II.

Under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1), a federal court may grant a writ of habeas corpus if the state court decision "was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1). A state court's decision is an "unreasonable application" of clearly established federal law if it "correctly identifies the governing legal rule but applies it unreasonably to the facts of a particular prisoner's case." Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 407–08 (2000). "The 'unreasonable application' clause requires the state court decision to be more than incorrect or erroneous"—it must be "objectively unreasonable." Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 75 (2003). Objective unreasonableness is a higher standard than clear error. See White v. Woodall, 572 U.S. 415, 419 (2014). To demonstrate that the state court's decision was objectively unreasonable, the petitioner "must show that the state court's ruling on the claim being presented in federal court was so lacking in justification that there was an error well understood and comprehended in existing law beyond any possibility for fairminded disagreement." Id. at 419–20 (quoting Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 103 (2011)).

A federal court may grant a writ under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(2) if the state court proceedings "resulted in a decision that was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(2). Under AEDPA, the question for this court to answer "is not whether a federal court believes the state court's determination was incorrect but whether that determination was unreasonable—a substantially higher threshold." Schriro v. Landrigan, 550 U.S. 465, 473 (2007). Furthermore, "the petitioner must show that the resulting state court decision was 'based on' that unreasonable determination." Rice v. White, 660 F.3d 242, 250 (6th Cir. 2011). Factual findings made by the state courts based on the trial record are entitled to a presumption of correctness that may be rebutted by clear and convincing evidence. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1); Warren v. Smith, 161 F.3d 358, 360–61 (6th Cir. 1998).

This "highly deferential standard" requires that determinations made in state court "be given the benefit of the doubt." Cullen v. Pinholster, 563 U.S. 170, 181 (2011) (quoting Woodford v. Visciotti, 537 U.S. 19, 24 (2002) (per curiam)). When applying AEDPA, this court considers "the decision of 'the last state court to issue a reasoned opinion on the issue[s]' raised in [the] habeas petition." Shimel v. Warren, 838 F.3d 685, 696 (6th Cir. 2016) (first alteration in original) (quoting Joseph v. Coyle, 469 F.3d 441, 450 (6th Cir. 2006)). Here, that is the Ohio Court of Appeals decision. See State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 108.

While Hill's en banc supplemental brief only asserts a claim for relief under § 2254(d)(2), in his original appeal Hill also argued that he is entitled to relief under § 2254(d)(1). Specifically, Hill claimed that the state court's decision to evaluate whether Hill was intellectually disabled at the time of his Atkins hearing rather than at the time the crime was committed was an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law.[4]

At the time of the Ohio Court of Appeals decision, the only clearly established Supreme Court precedent was Atkins itself.[5] Atkins held that the execution of intellectually disabled individuals violated the Eighth Amendment, but it did not provide a "comprehensive definition of 'mental retardation' for Eighth Amendment purposes." Shoop, 139 S. Ct. at 507. Instead, Atkins delegated to the states "the task of developing appropriate ways to enforce the constitutional restriction." Atkins, 536 U.S. at 317 (quoting Ford, 477 U.S. at 416). Atkins did not, as the Warden appears to claim, relinquish all standard-making authority to the states. Atkins set out several guideposts for the states' discretion by relying heavily on clinical definitions of intellectual disability and factors such as "subaverage intellectual functioning" and "significant limitations in adaptive skills . . . that became manifest before age 18." Atkins, 536 U.S. at 318.

Though Atkins took note of "standard definitions of mental retardation," the Court "did not definitively resolve how" those definitions "w[ere] to be evaluated but instead left [their] application in the first instance to the States." Shoop, 139 S. Ct. at 508; see Bobby v. Bies, 556 U.S. 825, 831 (2009) (explaining that Atkins "did not provide definitive procedural or substantive guides for determining when a person who claims mental retardation will be so

[4]It is unclear whether Hill has waived this argument. In the district court, Hill argued that "[t]o the extent that the state procedures themselves used to render the factual findings of the mental retardation clinical components contributed to and fostered inaccurate and unreliable factfinding by the trial court, the procedures violated clearly established federal law." DE 94, Petition, Page ID 148. Read in the light most favorable to Hill, Hill's current argument that the Ohio Court of Appeals focused its inquiry on the incorrect time period may be construed as one of the state procedures that Hill claimed before the district court contributed to inaccurate and unreliable factual findings. Given the ambiguity, and because neither party raised the potential waiver issue, we will proceed under the assumption that Hill's argument has not been waived.

[5]The Warden and twelve states as amici urge us to take this opportunity to overrule a line of Sixth Circuit precedent which permits courts to rely on clearly established law from both the United States Supreme Court and state supreme courts when considering an Atkins claim under § 2254(d)(1). See CA 6 R. 369, Response Br., at 14; CA 6 R. 371, Amicus Br., at 6; see also Williams v. Mitchell, 792 F.3d 606, 612 (6th Cir. 2015) ("[I]n the Atkins context, 'clearly established governing law' refers to the Supreme Court decisions and controlling state law decisions applying Atkins.") However, Hill does not attempt to rely on state court precedent to establish his § 2254(d)(1) claim. See CA 6 R. 375, Reply Br., at 7 n.2 ("The amicus brief filed on behalf of various states . . . focuses solely on a 2254(d)(1) argument that petitioner does not raise."). Because Hill does not present this issue to us, it is extraneous to this appeal, and we decline to resolve it here. See United States v. Asakevich, 810 F.3d 418, 421 (6th Cir. 2016) ("The federal courts have no license to issue advisory opinions . . . .").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

impaired as to fall within Atkins' compass" (internal quotations omitted) (alteration adopted)). Therefore, Hill faces the difficult task of showing that the Ohio Court of Appeals applied the highly general holding of Atkins in an objectively unreasonable way. Cf. Parker v. Matthews, 567 U.S. 37, 49 (2012) (finding no unreasonable application of the "highly generalized standard for evaluating claims of prosecutorial misconduct"); Lockyer, 538 U.S. at 73, 76 (finding no unreasonable application of clearly established federal law when the "precise contours" of the constitutional standard at issue were "unclear" (internal quotations omitted)).

While it is possible for state courts to unreasonably apply Atkins, evaluating a defendant's intellectual abilities at a later date rather than at the time of the crime is not an unreasonable application of Atkins. Atkins does not define the time period when the inquiry must be made. Hill argues that because the Court in Atkins "list[ed] several common characteristics of those with intellectual disability . . . it contemplated their diminished culpability" which is "a reference to the time the crime was committed. Thus, any assessment of a criminal defendant's intellectual function must derive from that same moment in time." CA 6 R. 295, Petition, at 50. Hill's interpretation of Atkins, however, is hardly the only reasonable interpretation. As this court has previously explained, Atkins supports the conclusion that intellectual disability is not a transient condition. See Williams, 792 F.3d at 619 (concluding that "if an individual is indeed presently intellectually disabled, . . . the disability would have manifested itself before the individual turned eighteen" and "past evidence of intellectual disability . . . is relevant to an analysis of an individual's present intellectual functioning" (emphasis omitted)); see also id. at 626 (Gibbons, J., concurring) ("It is clear from the entire thrust of the Atkins decision—along with the medical literature that it cites in support—that intellectual disability is a permanent condition."); Heller v. Doe, 509 U.S. 312, 323 (1993) (noting, in a different context, that intellectual disability "is a permanent, relatively static condition" (citing S. Brakel et al., The Mentally Disabled and the Law 37 (3d ed. 1985))). If intellectual disability is not a transient condition, then the outcome should not change if the court evaluates a defendant's abilities at the time of the crime or at the time of a later Atkins hearing. Thus, we find Hill's argument that Atkins requires evaluating a defendant's intellectual abilities at the time of the offense to be unpersuasive.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Here, the Ohio Court of Appeals did not question the trial court's decision to evaluate Hill's intellectual abilities at the time of the Atkins proceedings rather than when the crime was committed. Nevertheless, the Ohio court considered evidence of Hill's past abilities including Hill's medical history, public school records, and prior standardized test results. State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 123–24. The court also evaluated criteria mentioned in Atkins such as intellectual functioning, adaptive skills, and the onset age of disability. We cannot say that the Ohio court's decision was objectively unreasonable given the discretion Atkins left to the states.

Next, Hill argues that the Ohio Court of Appeals decision was an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the state court proceedings, in violation of 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(2). Specifically, Hill claims that the state court mischaracterized the record, improperly discounted historical evidence, and unreasonably concluded that Hill failed to establish that his disability manifested before age 18. The Warden argues that the state court's decision was not unreasonable because the court relied on the opinions of two experts and because the court properly evaluated the evidence in the record. We conclude that the Ohio Court of Appeals decision was not based on an unreasonable determination of the facts.

Under Ohio law at the time of Hill's Atkins hearing, a defendant had to prove three factors to establish that he was intellectually disabled: "(1) significantly subaverage intellectual functioning, (2) significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills, . . . and (3) onset before the age of 18."[6] Lott, 779 N.E.2d at 1014. While courts are to conduct an independent review of the evidence presented, they "should rely on professional evaluations of [the defendant's] mental status, and consider expert testimony." Id. at 1015. Both parties agree that Hill satisfied the first factor, that he had significantly subaverage intellectual functioning. The Warden also admits that any adaptive deficits that Hill does have arose before he turned 18. Thus, the only remaining dispute is whether the Ohio Court of Appeals reasonably determined that Hill failed to prove the second Lott factor—"significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills, such as communication, self-care, and self-direction." Lott, 779 N.E.2d at 1014; see also Hill v. Anderson, 2014 WL 2890416, at *22.

[6]Lott has since been overruled, see Ford, 140 N.E.3d at 654–55, but it was the controlling state law at the time of the Ohio Court of Appeals decision.

As an initial matter, the Warden argues that the Ohio Court of Appeals opinion is per se reasonable because two experts concluded that Hill did not have significant adaptive deficits. CA 6 R. 369, Response Br., at 11–12, 17 (citing O'Neal v. Bagley, 743 F.3d 1010, 1023 (6th Cir. 2013); Carter v. Bogan, 900 F.3d 754, 771 (6th Cir. 2018); Apelt v. Ryan, 878 F.3d 800, 837 (9th Cir. 2017); Larry v. Branker, 552 F.3d 356, 370 (4th Cir. 2009)). None of the four cases cited by the Warden, however, suggests such a per se rule. Instead, the court in each case based its conclusion on the content of the expert testimony and overall evidence before it. See O'Neal, 743 F.3d at 1023 ("With expert testimony split, . . . we cannot say from this vantage that [the state court decision to credit two experts over another] was unreasonable . . . ."); Carter, 900 F.3d at 771; Apelt, 878 F.3d at 837; Larry, 552 F.3d at 370. The Warden claims that "[w]hen a credible expert conducts an analysis—and when the defendant failed to put on evidence contradicting that analysis beyond reasonable debate—it is not unreasonable for the trial court to rely on that expert testimony." CA 6 R. 369, Response Br., at 17. But that statement itself is inconsistent with a per se rule. A per se rule would eliminate the need to ask whether the defendant "put on evidence contradicting [the] analysis [of the state's experts] beyond reasonable debate." CA 6 R. 369, Response Br., at 17; cf. Rice v. Collins, 546 U.S. 333, 341–42 (2006). Accordingly, this court must consider whether, based on the evidence presented, the Ohio Court of Appeals's determination that Hill did not suffer from significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills was unreasonable.

Our resolution of this case turns on the Ohio Court of Appeals consideration of the expert testimony presented at the Atkins hearing. Nevertheless, we outline the Court of Appeals's analysis in some detail before turning to the expert opinions, following the order in which the state appellate court considered various portions of the factual record.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Ohio Court of Appeals began its review of the record by analyzing the standardized adaptive behavior tests performed on Hill at various stages of his life.[7] State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 122. First, the court noted that the three experts assigned to evaluate Hill's ability at the time of the Atkins hearing—Drs. Hammer, Olley, and Huntsman—could not obtain "reliable [standardized test] results . . . on account of Hill's lack of effort." Id. The court considered standardized adaptive behavior tests Hill had completed in the past but concluded that they were unreliable because the methods used had later been discredited. Id. at 122–23. A voluminous 6,000 page record contains reports from Hill's teachers, school psychologists, medical experts, and prison officials about Hill's adaptive abilities. See Hill v. Anderson, 2014 WL 2890416, at *24.

The Ohio Court of Appeals next separated this factual record into four categories of largely anecdotal evidence: public school records, reports around the time of the trial for the killing of Raymond Fife, records from Hill's time in prison, and Hill's appearances before the trial court itself. State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124–25. After summarizing each category and considering the expert opinions, the court found that Hill had not met the second Lott factor. Id. at 126.

First, the Ohio Court of Appeals considered Hill's school records. Id. at 124. In one paragraph, the court stated:

> Hill's public school records amply demonstrate a history of academic underachievement and behavioral problems. Hill is often described as a lazy, manipulative, and sometimes violent youth. Although there are references to Hill's being easily led or influenced by others, the trial court noted that much of Hill's serious misconduct, including two rapes committed prior to Fife's murder, occurred when he was acting alone. Hill knew how to write and was described by at least one of his special education teachers as "a bright, perceptive boy with high reasoning ability."

Id.

[7]The Ohio Court of Appeals reviewed the trial court's decision for abuse of discretion and stated that the trial court must be affirmed if its decision is supported by competent and credible evidence. State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 121.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

This characterization of Hill's school records represents a short summary of the records. There are multiple accounts in Hill's records of his lying, stealing, and struggling to interact appropriately with his peers. See, e.g., DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 530 ("Lying needs to be confronted."); id. at Page 568 ("Danny often manipulates the truth to his own advantage."); id. at Page 584 (describing an incident where Hill stole money from teachers' wallets); id. at Page 558 (listing one of Hill's annual goals when he was twelve as "improve peer-group relations"). Hill's behavioral problems, however, do not necessarily correlate with an absence of intellectual disability. See Atkins, 536 U.S. at 306 ("Because of their disabilities in areas of reasoning, judgment, and control of their impulses . . . [intellectually disabled individuals] do not act with the level of moral culpability that characterizes the most serious adult criminal conduct."). Each of the three experts who testified at Hill's Atkins proceeding agreed that Hill's behavioral problems during childhood did not necessarily contradict a finding of significant adaptive limitations. In addition to the accounts of behavioral problems, multiple evaluators also reported that Hill attempted to follow instructions and behaved well, particularly when dealing with adults. See, e.g., DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 513 (school psychologist reported that, when given a test, Hill "did cooperate and accepted all tasks presented to him."); id. at Page 524 (court liaison officer describing Hill as a "personable black child who has good rapport with staff as well as the other residents" in a group home where he was placed when he was sixteen); id. at Page 568 ("Danny is a very affectionate child. He often expresses the desire to be hugged and will often rest his head on the teachers shoulder.").

Hill's school records suggest that he struggled academically as a child. See, e.g., DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 515 (reporting that at age thirteen Hill's relative weaknesses included "not being able to recall everyday information, do abstract thinking, perform mental arithmetic, perceive a total social situation, perceive patterns, and to reproduce symbols using psychomotor speed and coordination"); id. at Page 569 (describing how at age thirteen, Hill was working on spelling words with more than four letters, learning to tell time, "ha[d] just begun working on subtraction," and "[w]hen given sentences, he [could] write them with assistance"); id. at Page 594 (listing one of Hill's goals for ninth grade as being able to "read a one page story and . . . answer comprehension questions with 80% accuracy").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

There is also evidence that Hill needed reminders to perform basic personal hygiene and lacked self-direction. See, e.g., id. at Page 511 (describing one of Hill's weaknesses as "self-direction"); id. at Page 524 ("[Hill] needs constant reminder to shower, brush his teeth, etc., [but] he does attempt to do a [more] thorough job than when he first came to the program."); id. at Page 578 (reporting that Hill was still learning "to shower[] regularly, use[] deodorant regularly, [and] maintain[] a neat appearance" at the age of fourteen); id. at Page 575 (listing one of Hill's goals for ninth grade as being able to "learn to maintain[] a clean, neat, appearance" throughout the day). All of this additional evidence, not included in the Court of Appeals summary, may be relevant to determining whether Hill had significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills.

Second, the Ohio Court of Appeals considered Hill's conduct during the time period surrounding the trial for the killing of Fife:

> Hill's Trial for the Murder of Raymond Fife. The trial court observed that the record of Hill's murder trial provided evidence of Hill's ability concerning self-direction and self-preservation. In particular, the court noted Hill's initiative in coming to the police in order to misdirect the focus of the investigation by implicating others and Hill's ability to adapt his alibi to changing circumstances in the course of police interrogation. This last point was also noted by Dr. Olley in his hearing testimony: Hill "stood his ground during that interrogation very, very strongly. * * * He not only modified his story a little bit when he was faced with evidence that couldn't possibly have avoided. * * * That to me is a kind of thinking and planning and integrating complex information that is a higher level than I have seen people with mental retardation able to do."

State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124 (alterations in original).

In looking at the evidence, it is unclear that Hill's conduct demonstrated self-direction or self-preservation. As the district court explained, under the prevailing medical guidelines at the time, self-direction was defined as:

> skills related to making choices; learning and following a schedule; initiating activities appropriate to the setting, conditions, schedule, and personal interests; completing necessary or required tasks; seeking assistance when needed; resolving problems confronted in familiar and novel situations; and demonstrating appropriate assertiveness and self-advocacy skills.

Hill v. Anderson, 2014 WL 2890416, at *33 (quoting AAMR 1992 Manual, 40). While the trial court's assessment of Hill's conduct is one reasonable interpretation, a reasonable person might also interpret Hill's conduct as evidence of a lack of self-direction. For example, before Hill came forward to the police with information about the crime, the police were not pursuing Hill. Thus, coming forward does not necessarily demonstrate appropriate self-advocacy skills since it drew more attention to Hill and linked him to the crime. But faced with two reasonable interpretations of evidence, we cannot say that the state court's decision to go with one over the other was unreasonable.

The Ohio Court of Appeals does not mention the testimony of three experts—Dr. Douglas Darnall, Dr. Nancy Schmidtgoessling, and Dr. Douglas Crush—who found that Hill was intellectually disabled at the time of the 1986 trial, see Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 901, though the court recognized that "several of the experts pointed out . . . [that Hill] knew right from wrong," Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 118 (quoting Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 901). On direct appeal, the Ohio Supreme Court accepted these experts' conclusion that Hill was intellectually disabled. Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 901. Although the experts at the mitigation stage were not using the definition of intellectual disability that was later articulated in Lott and Atkins, their testimony focused on similar characteristics such as Hill's intelligence level and adaptive skills, including whether Hill was a follower or a leader and whether he acted appropriately in different situations. See, e.g., id. (describing Hill's moral development as "'primitive,' a level at which 'one do[es] things based on whether you think you'll get caught or whether it feels good. [T]hat's essentially whereabout [sic] a 2-year old is.'" (alterations in original)). Failure to grapple with the expert reports from the time of the Fife trial that found Hill to be intellectually disabled is concerning, particularly given Lott's direction that courts should rely on professional evaluations of the defendant's mental state. Lott, 779 N.E.2d at 1015.

Third, the Ohio Court of Appeals examined the records from Hill's time on death row:

> Death Row Records. At the time of the evidentiary hearing, Hill had been incarcerated on death row for 20 years. From this period of time, the trial court considered audiotaped interviews of Hill by Warren's Tribune Chronicle reporter Andrew Gray in the year 2000. These interviews were arranged on Hill's initiative in order to generate publicity for his case. The trial court found Hill's performance on these tapes demonstrated a high level of functional ability with respect to Hill's use of language and vocabulary, understanding of legal processes, ability to read and write, and ability to reason independently.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

> The trial court considered the evidence of the various prison officials who testified at the evidentiary hearing. These witnesses consistently testified that Hill was an "average" prisoner with respect to his abilities in comparison with other death row inmates. They testified that Hill interacted with the other inmates, played games, maintained a prison job, kept a record of the money in his commissary account, and obeyed prison rules. Prison officials offered further testimony in their interviews with the expert psychologists. One official opined that Hill began to behave differently after Atkins was decided, and he believed that Hill was "playing a game" to make others think he is retarded. Another official reported that Hill's self-care was "poor but not terrible" and that Hill had to be reminded sometimes about his hygiene.

Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124–25.

While Hill's conduct in prison is relevant to an analysis of his adaptive skills, his time incarcerated may be an imperfect indicator of his functional abilities. Both Dr. Olley and Dr. Huntsman, who later concluded that Hill was not intellectually disabled, conceded that Hill's conduct in the highly-regulated prison environment was not a good indicator of his adaptive skills. Some courts have also discounted prison records, reasoning that they provide little insight into how the defendant would function in the general community. See Hill v. Anderson, 2014 WL 2890416, at *42 (collecting cases).

Additionally, Hill's prison record is not neat. Describing Hill as an average death row inmate is ambiguous without additional context about the average inmate's adaptive functioning level, particularly if some inmates, such as Hill, had been committed to death row before Atkins was decided. Prison officials are also not trained to diagnose intellectual disability, and, as the district court explained in detail, there were multiple inconsistencies within the prison employees' reports. See Hill v. Anderson, 2014 WL 2890416, at *43–44. The Ohio Court of Appeals, however, accurately described the accounts of some prison officials who reported that Hill did not appear to have significant limitations functioning on death row. See, e.g., DE 97, Atkins Hr'g Tr., Page 787–89 (Hill did not need special accommodations to perform his prison job); id. at Page 793 (Hill would inform the prison staff when he had a medical problem); id. at Page 815 ("[Hill was] slow when he want[ed] to be slow.").

Fourth, the Ohio Court of Appeals considered the trial court's conclusion that "as a lay observer, [he] did not perceive anything about Hill's conduct or demeanor [during the court proceedings] suggesting that he suffers from mental retardation." Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 125. While the Ohio Court of Appeals conceded that trial courts should not rely solely on their own perception of the defendant in court to determine whether the defendant is intellectually disabled, the Ohio Court of Appeals still utilized the trial court's perception here because it aligned with the conclusions of two experts. Id. at 125–26.

The last, and most important, type of evidence the Ohio Court of Appeals considered was the opinions of three medical experts who evaluated Hill in preparation for the Atkins hearing: Dr. Hammer (selected by Hill), Dr. Olley (selected by the prosecution), and Dr. Huntsman (selected by the court). State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 113. All three experts relied on a comprehensive record of Hill's history, including his past medical reports, school records, transcripts and videos from the time of the Fife trial, accounts from prison officials, and their own evaluation of Hill. Dr. Hammer concluded that Hill was intellectually disabled, and Drs. Olley and Huntsman found that he was not. The Ohio Court of Appeals described Drs. Olley's and Huntsman's findings in detail. Id. at 125.

Dr. Hammer was licensed to practice psychology in the state of Ohio and was the director of psychology services at the Nisonger Center at the Ohio State University. During his career, he had specialized in behavioral pediatrics, which included working with children, adolescents, and adults with intellectual disabilities. As part of his evaluation, Dr. Hammer reviewed an extensive list of Hill's relevant history including evaluations from school officials, transcripts from Hill's past court proceedings, and prison records. Hammer concluded that "[o]verall, these records provide an extensive and consistent documentation that Mr. Hill has demonstrated, from an early age, sufficient intellectual and adaptive behavior deficits to qualify for a diagnosis of Mild Mental Retardation." DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 1110. Hammer noted that "the records also indicate that [Hill] was generally regarded as mentally retarded by nearly all the psychological, psychiatric, educational, and youth authority professionals he encountered over the years." Id.

Hammer, along with Olley and Huntsman, interviewed Hill himself. The three doctors performed a series of tests to evaluate Hill's intellectual abilities but could not complete the testing. Id. at Page 1111–12. Hammer reported that Hill "appeared to be quite disinterested and unmotivated" during some of the testing but was unable to determine whether Hill "was trying to deliberately do poorly on the test or whether the significant cognitive demands of the test, especially following the extensive demands of [previous testing] may have caused him to give up and shut down." Id. at Page 1111. However, Hammer also testified at the Atkins hearing that all three experts "agreed that [Hill] was trying to fake bad." DE 97, Atkins Hr'g Tr., Page 264. Because of the difficulties with testing and the inability to measure several adaptive abilities in a prison setting, "all three psychologists agreed that an independent, valid standardized adaptive behavior instrument could not be completed for Mr. Hill." DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 1112.

In his report, Hammer weighed the opinions of prison officials who interacted with Hill. Hammer concluded that the officials' descriptions of Hill:

> [W]ere relatively consistent in describing Mr. Hill across some areas (e.g., average compared to other inmates, helping others, no 'falling out' episodes) and strikingly discrepant in others (e.g., energy level, getting along with other inmates, hygiene and self-care problems.) Overall, the description of Mr. Hill's adaptive and social behavior on Death Row was not inconsistent with that of a person with mild mental retardation and conduct problems and it was not generally contradictory of information in Mr. Hill's historical records.

Id. at Page 1115. In conclusion, Hammer found that "records, observations and interviews indicate adaptive behavior functioning consistent with the Mild Retardation range" and concluded that Hill had "significant deficits in functional academic, social-emotional functioning, self-care and work habits over the years." Id. at Page 1116–17.

Like Hammer, Dr. Olley was a licensed psychologist who specialized in working with individuals who have intellectual disabilities. He had previously testified on behalf of a defendant in nine other capital cases involving claims of intellectual disability. When making his evaluation, Olley considered Hill's historical records including evaluations performed at school, evidence from around the time of the Fife trial, and interviews with Hill and prison officials. Olley testified that "this [was] the most thorough evaluation of a death row inmate that [he] ha[d] been involved with." DE 97, Atkins Hr'g Tr., Page 773. Unlike Hammer, Olley concluded that "[r]ecords regarding Mr. Hill's adaptive behavior before age 18 [were] less extensive." DE 97, Supp. Appendix., Page 1119. But Olley acknowledged that Hill had undergone two formal adaptive behavior tests during childhood, one "yield[ing] a score in the average range, and another yield[ing] a score in the range of mild mental retardation." Id. at

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Page 1119. Olley stated that Hill "had consistently low academic performance," and his "records indicate significant behavior problems from an early age and a history of lying." Id.

Olley also analyzed more recent evidence of Hill's intellectual abilities. He emphasized Hill's latest court appearance where he showed his "ability to orally express his claim of innocence" and "used vocabulary and sentence structure and complex reasoning that, in [Olley's] opinion, indicate[d] intellectual ability above the level of mental retardation." Id. Olley testified that "the way that Mr. Hill presents himself in his language, in his arguing on his own behalf and his assertiveness about his case is substantially more sophisticated than any of the other defendants with whom [he] ha[d] worked."[8] DE 97, Atkins Hr'g Tr., Page 1763. Like Hammer, Olley also interviewed several prison employees and compared their descriptions of Hill against Hill's own description of his abilities. In general, the prison officials reported that Hill had a higher adaptive capability than Hill reported having himself, which Olley stated "further support[ed] the conclusion that Mr. Hill tried to portray himself as having mental retardation." DE 97, Supp. Appendix., Page 1125. In sum, Olley held that there was "[t]oo little information . . . available about adaptive behavior in childhood to make a confident retrospective diagnosis of mental retardation" and that "[t]he available information on Mr. Hill's current functioning [did] not allow a diagnosis of mental retardation." Id. at Page 1124–25; see also DE 97, Atkins Hr'g Tr., Page 1785 (testifying that "this hits me between the eyeballs that this is not a man with mental retardation").

The third expert to testify at Hill's Atkins proceeding was Dr. Huntsman. Unlike Hammer and Olley, Huntsman's work focused on diagnosing defendants who suffered from serious mental disorders rather than intellectual disabilities. She had limited experience working with defendants who had intellectual disabilities and had only administered an adaptive-skills test a handful of times, the last time being several years before Hill's Atkins hearing. Id. at Page 980–81, 992. Like Hammer and Olley, Huntsman considered Hill's past school records, [8]Hammer testified that sometimes individuals with intellectual disabilities will learn "sort of scripts or scenarios that they can kind of pull out and go through when they encounter a situation" to make it appear that they are more competent or well-spoken than they truly are. DE 97, Atkins Hr'g Tr., Page 192–93. Olley, however, did not address this cloak-of-competency theory, and Hammer himself did not verify that Hill was attempting to don a "cloak of competence" when speaking about his past conduct, see DE 97, Atkins Hr'g Tr., Page 191–93.

evidence from around the time of the Fife trial, and contemporary evidence when assessing Hill's intellectual abilities.

Huntsman concluded that Hill fell in the "[b]orderline" range of intellectual functioning and his "level of adaptive behavior certainly exceeds the level expected of a mildly mentally retarded individual." DE 97, Supp. Appendix., Page 1140–41. Huntsman stated that "in many respects [the] most persuasive[]" evidence was the prison officials' "consistent descriptions of [Hill] as 'average' within the death row population at Mansfield." Id. at Page 1141. Huntsman, however, testified that it was difficult to assess adaptive behaviors in the prison setting. And as we previously explained, describing Hill as the "average" inmate is ambiguous without additional context. Huntsman also appears to have relied heavily on her own conversations with Hill, where she said Hill "demonstrated a remarkable memory for the history of his case." DE 97, Supp. Appendix., Page 1141. She emphasized that she believed Hill was malingering during standardized testing, trying "to appear less competent than he is." Id. at Page 1140. Huntsman concluded that in her opinion, "when one takes both his probable performance on the formal assessment of I.Q. and his level of adaptive behavior into account, [Hill's] overall level of intellectual functioning falls within the borderline range" rather than intellectually disabled. Id. at Page 1141.

Olley and Huntsman focused on whether Hill was intellectually disabled at the time of the evaluation rather than at the time of the Fife trial or during his childhood. See DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 1125 (Dr. Olley opining that "[t]he available information on Mr. Hill's current functioning does not allow a diagnosis of mental retardation."). Both, however, grappled with the historical evidence of Hill's intellectual functioning and reviewed records from Hill's childhood when making their determinations.

Olley testified that "[b]ased upon the available information," including records from Hill's time in school, it was his opinion that "Hill did not have mental retardation at the time of the offense." DE 97, Atkins Hr'g Tr., Page 779 (emphasis added). Olley did not dismiss Hill's past anecdotal evidence; rather, he concluded after reviewing the record that "there was inadequate information about adaptive behavior that would allow [him] to conclude that there was a significant impairment in adaptive behavior" at the time of the offense. Id. at Page 780.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Olley explained that while there were numerous IQ tests from Hill's childhood that satisfied the first requirement of Lott, there was insufficient evidence to find that Hill had significant adaptive deficits. Id. at Page 783. Olley testified that Hill "certainly did function low in academic skills" but that none of the four formal evaluations Hill had taken during childhood "confirmed adaptive behavior overall at a significantly subaverage level" and the "[o]ther information was anecdotal." Id. Huntsman also testified that she thought Hill probably was not intellectually disabled at the time of the offense. Id. at Page 1051. When making her assessment, Huntsman weighed Hill's past records including formal testing done by psychologists and the evaluations done by school officials. Id. at Page 1046–50. She explained that she gave less weight to school assessments because they "were being done for a very different purpose," namely to create educational interventions rather than determine whether Hill was intellectually disabled under clinical guidelines. Id. at Page 1046. Both doctors weighed the available evidence of Hill's past and present adaptive abilities when reaching their conclusions.

In view of this expert testimony, the Ohio Court of Appeals reasonably concluded that Hill is not intellectually disabled. Three credentialed and independent physicians met with Hill, thoroughly reviewed the evidence—including records dating back to Hill's childhood—and conveyed their findings in detailed reports. Two of those experts found that Hill is not intellectually disabled.

In conclusion, the Ohio Court of Appeals did not act unreasonably in relying on the opinions of Olley and Huntsman, trained medical professionals who had full access to the extensive record in this case. The question before us is narrow, and the AEDPA standard is demanding. The law does not allow us to weigh the evidence according to a modern understanding of intellectual disability or to engage in de novo factfinding. To prevail, Hill must demonstrate that "in light of the evidence presented" before it, the Ohio Court of Appeals's determination that he did not have significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills was unreasonable. Schriro, 550 U.S. at 473 ("The question under AEDPA is not whether a federal court believes the state court's determination was incorrect but whether that determination was unreasonable—a substantially higher threshold."). Hill has not cleared this high hurdle.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Admittedly, there is evidence in the record that shows Hill has limitations in some adaptive skills such as self-care, functional academics, and self-direction. But there is also evidence that Hill's adaptive abilities were not as lacking as several of the anecdotal accounts suggest. Importantly, two medical experts, including Dr. Olley who had significant experience working with individuals with intellectual disabilities, concluded after looking at Hill's entire record that he did not have significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills, and, thus, was not intellectually disabled. In light of the evidence presented, it was not unreasonable for the Ohio Court of Appeals to rely on the reasoned judgment of two experts over another. See O'Neal, 743 F.3d at 1023; see also Lott, 779 N.E.2d at 1015 ("The trial court should rely on professional evaluations of [the defendant's] mental status, and consider expert testimony . . . in deciding this matter."). While another judge could have reasonably reached the opposite conclusion, the determination of the Ohio Court of Appeals was not unreasonable. Accordingly, Hill cannot succeed on his Atkins claim. The district court properly denied Hill relief under § 2254(d)(2).

B.

Hill's ineffective assistance of counsel claim also remains unresolved. In his first habeas petition after his Atkins hearing, Hill argued that his Atkins counsel provided ineffective assistance. The district court held that Hill's claim was barred by 28 U.S.C. § 2254(i) and failed on its merits. Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *53–57. The panel twice pretermitted the ineffective assistance of counsel claim after granting Hill relief on his Atkins claim, Hill, 881 F.3d at 487; Hill, 960 F.3d at 265, and the Supreme Court did not address the issue, see Shoop, 139 S. Ct. at 505–09. The Warden now asks this court to affirm the district court's dismissal of Hill's ineffective assistance of counsel claim under § 2254(i). While Hill does not present a full argument in his supplemental en banc briefing, he notes that "whether Atkins counsel provided ineffective assistance has not been fully adjudicated." CA 6 R. 362, Supp. Br., at 3 n.2. Because we find that Hill's claim fails on the merits, we affirm the district court.

As a preliminary matter, the parties dispute whether Hill's ineffective assistance of counsel claim is barred by § 2254(i), which provides that "[t]he ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during Federal or State collateral post-conviction proceedings shall not be a ground for relief in a proceeding arising under section 2254." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(i). Hill argues that his claim is not barred by § 2254(i) because defendants like him, who were convicted before Atkins was decided have a constitutional right to counsel during their postconviction Atkins hearings. One circuit agrees with Hill, see Hooks v. Workman, 689 F.3d 1148, 1183–84 (10th Cir. 2012), and the Supreme Court has left open the possibility that a right to counsel exists during initial-review collateral proceedings, see Martinez v. Ryan, 566 U.S. 1, 8 (2012) (stating, without deciding, that "the Constitution may require States to provide counsel in initial-review collateral proceedings because 'in [these] cases . . . state collateral review is the first place a prisoner can present a challenge to his conviction'" (alteration and omission in original) (quoting Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 755 (1991))). But see Pennsylvania v. Finley, 481 U.S. 551, 555 (1987) (holding that the right to counsel generally does not extend to collateral proceedings); Murray v. Giarratano, 492 U.S. 1, 10 (1989) (plurality opinion) (applying Finley to capital cases);); id. at 14 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) (agreeing that the Constitution does not require the appointment of counsel for capital defendants in state collateral proceedings). We need not address Hill's constitutional argument here, however, because even if Hill had a right to the effective assistance of post-conviction counsel during his Atkins proceedings, his Atkins counsel provided effective assistance. See Hooks, 689 F.3d at 1208 (Gorsuch, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) ("Caution is always warranted when venturing down the road of deciding a weighty question of first impression and recognizing a previously unrecognized constitutional right. And surely caution must be doubly warranted when nothing turns on it.").

To prevail on his ineffective assistance of counsel claim, Hill must first "show that counsel's performance was deficient" by "an objective standard of reasonableness," meaning that his Atkins counsel "made errors so serious that counsel was not functioning as the 'counsel' guaranteed the defendant by the Sixth Amendment." Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687–88 (1984). "Judicial scrutiny of counsel's performance must be highly deferential," and there is "a strong presumption that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance." Id. at 689. "Second, the defendant must show that the deficient performance prejudiced the defense," meaning that "there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different." Id. at

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

687, 694. "A reasonable probability is a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome." Id. at 694. Because the Ohio state courts did not address the potential ineffectiveness of Hill's Atkins counsel, AEDPA deference does not apply, and we review the district court's findings de novo. Hill v. Mitchell, 842 F.3d 910, 919–20 (6th Cir. 2016).[9]

Hill argues that his Atkins counsel's performance was deficient in four ways: (1) failing to object to the presence of James Teeple during Hill's psychological evaluation; (2) failing to properly investigate Hill's adaptive functioning with school officials, prison psychologists, family members, and death row inmates; (3) failing to object to the Atkins proceeding on competency grounds; and (4) failing to withdraw as counsel given his antagonistic relationship with Hill.

First, Hill claims that his Atkins counsel, Gregory Meyers, was ineffective for failing to object to James Teeple's presence during Hill's psychological evaluation on April 26, 2004, with Drs. Hammer, Olley, and Huntsman. Teeple was one of the detectives who was involved in the initial 1985 investigation into Hill after the killing of Fife, and Hill wrongly believed that Teeple was part of a conspiracy to frame him for Fife's murder. Because Meyers was aware that Hill distrusted Teeple, Hill argues that Meyers should have objected to Teeple's presence during the evaluation after the trial court issued an order on April 15, 2004, stating, among other things, that Teeple would be present to record the April 26 evaluation.[10]

Assuming, without deciding, that Hill is correct that Meyers should have objected to Teeple's presence, Hill has not demonstrated prejudice. To establish prejudice Hill "must show a substantial, not just conceivable, likelihood of a different result." Campbell v. Bradshaw, 674 F.3d 578, 586 (6th Cir. 2012) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Pinholster, 563 U.S. at [9]The Warden argues that Hill's claim is procedurally defaulted because he may have been able to raise a claim of ineffective assistance of Atkins counsel in state court. We decline to review this procedural question because Hill's claim fails on the merits. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(2); see also Lambrix v. Singletary, 520 U.S. 518, 525 (1997); Cyars v. Hofbauer, 383 F.3d 485, 486 n.1 (6th Cir. 2004) ("We need not delve into the morass of procedural bar, however, because Petitioner's claim fails on the merits even assuming he properly exhausted available state court remedies." (emphasis omitted)).

[10]In a rare misreading of the record, the district court incorrectly found that Meyers did not have notice that Teeple would be present at the April 26 evaluation. Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *57.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

189). Both Drs. Huntsman and Olley acknowledged during 2011 depositions that the presence of the three medical experts and Teeple may have negatively impacted Hill's performance during the psychological testing. Hill argues that this calls into doubt the experts' determination that he intentionally performed poorly during testing. However, neither Olley nor Huntsman stated that they believed there is a substantial likelihood that their ultimate conclusion that Hill was not intellectual disabled would have been different if Teeple had not been present. Furthermore, neither expert could say that Teeple's presence on the first of three days of testing was the only possible cause for Hill's performance. For example, Huntsman acknowledged that she did not set a proper tone at the beginning of the evaluation and that could have influenced Hill's performance. While Teeple's presence may have made Hill uncomfortable during the first day of the psychological evaluation, Hill has not proven that there is a reasonable probability that the outcome of his Atkins proceeding would have been different had Meyers objected to Teeple videotaping the evaluation.

Second, Hill argues that Meyers failed to investigate and fully prepare for the Atkins hearing because he only presented one witness, Dr. Hammer. Hill claims Meyers should have also presented testimony during the Atkins hearing from: (1) school psychologists Karen Weiselberg-Ross and Annette Campbell; (2) Dr. John Vermeulen, who evaluated Hill when he was incarcerated in 1986; (3) Dr. James Spindler, who evaluated Hill in 2000; (4) other death-row inmates; and (5) Hill's family members, including his mother. Hill argues that "[t]he failure to investigate the issue of [Hill's] mental retardation more thoroughly and to present these additional witnesses . . . was deficient performance by Meyers which prejudiced [Hill] beyond measure." CA 6 R. 295, Petition, 73.

Failure to reasonably investigate a defendant's background and medical history or present mitigating evidence may establish ineffective assistance of counsel. Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 522–23 (2003). However, a counsel's "strategic choices made after thorough investigation of law and facts relevant to plausible options are virtually unchallengeable; and strategic choices made after less than complete investigation are reasonable precisely to the extent that reasonable professional judgments support the limitations on investigation." Strickland, 466 U.S. at 690–91. While counsel may be deficient for failing to investigate a "known and potentially important witness," United States v. Arny, 831 F.3d 725, 732 (6th Cir. 2016) (quoting Towns v. Smith, 395 F.3d 251, 259 (6th Cir. 2005) (quotation omitted)), a "reasonably diligent counsel may draw a line when they have good reason to think further investigation would be a waste," Rompilla v. Beard, 545 U.S. 374, 383 (2005).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Meyers's decision to rely solely on Dr. Hammer's testimony and the factual record was a reasonable professional judgment. Medical expert testimony is key to determining whether a defendant is intellectually disabled under Ohio law. See Lott, 779 N.E.2d at 1015 ("The trial court should rely on professional evaluations of [the defendant's] mental status, and consider expert testimony, appointing experts if necessary, in deciding this matter."). A trial court "may not disregard credible and uncontradicted expert testimony in favor of either the perceptions of lay witnesses or of the court's own expectations of how a mentally retarded person would behave." State v. White, 885 N.E.2d 905, 915 (Ohio 2008). Given the importance of medical testimony, Meyers's choice to focus on Hammer, an expert in intellectual disabilities, was reasonable. Hammer had reviewed Hill's past school records and medical evaluations as part of his evaluation process, which included reports from many of the individuals Hill argues Meyers should have called as witnesses. Because, as Hill concedes, Hammer's evaluation and testimony "w[ere] thorough and compelling in [their] own right," CA 6 R. 295, Petition, 73, Meyers had good reason to think that further investigation would be a waste. Meyers's decision not to continue the investigation was a reasonable professional judgment. Since Meyers's performance was not deficient, we need not address the prejudice prong of Strickland.

Third, Hill argues that Meyers was deficient for failing to formally raise concerns about Hill's competency. In a preliminary hearing on April 15, 2004, Meyers told the court that he had "deep professional concerns about Mr. Hill's competence" because Hill was considering not continuing his Atkins claim. DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 1192. Hill claims that based on this one statement, Meyers should have petitioned the court to evaluate Hill's competency before proceeding. Hill does not point to any evidence beyond Meyers's statement, however, that suggests that he was incompetent at the time of his Atkins proceeding. Particularly given the fact that Hill continued to pursue his Atkins claim after Meyers's statement on April 15, 2004, there is insufficient evidence to prove either that Meyers's decision not to file a motion to evaluate Hill's competency was deficient or to demonstrate that there was a reasonable probability that, had Hill been evaluated at that time, he would have been found incompetent.

Finally, Hill claims that Meyers should have done more to withdraw as his attorney considering Hill's distrust of Meyers and the Office of the Ohio Public Defender ("OPD"). Hill had a "deep and abiding antipathy towards lawyers affiliated with the [OPD]," which began before Meyers agreed to represent Hill during his Atkins proceeding. DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 461, 464. Hill believed that the OPD had misrepresented him during his first, pre-Atkins, postconviction litigation and was suspicious of the OPD because his uncle, Morris Hill, who Hill believed had tried to wrongly frame him for the Fife murder while working as a police officer, was an OPD investigator during his Atkins proceeding. Hill was also unhappy that OPD attorneys would not pursue an actual innocence claim in conjunction with his Atkins proceeding. According to Meyers, these longstanding issues made it impossible for him to maintain a productive attorney-client relationship with Hill.

Hill argues that Meyers had a "duty to use any means available to get off the case" once he realized the severity of the breakdown in the attorney-client relationship. CA 6 R. 295, Petition, 95. The record demonstrates, however, that Meyers did use any means available to attempt to withdraw after his relationship with Hill deteriorated. Meyers submitted two written motions and one oral motion to withdraw as Hill's counsel. DE 97, Supp. Appendix, Page 461. In his second written motion, Meyers clearly asked to be removed as counsel because he believed Hill's misguided ideas that Meyers was conspiring against him had "utterly destroyed anything akin to an attorney-client relationship" and, in his professional opinion, "no viable attorney-client relationship exist[ed] between" himself and Hill. Id. at Page 467. Despite Meyers's appeals, the trial court denied his motions to withdraw as counsel, citing Meyers's experience as "probably the foremost capital jurisprudence public defender in the State of Ohio" and the complicated nature of Hill's case. Id. at 1178; see also id. at 1219–20 (finding no conflict of interest with respect to Meyers's representation of Hill).[11] Hill has not demonstrated that Meyers was deficient for failing to bring a fourth motion to withdraw or that further attempts by Meyers would have affected the outcome of the proceeding given the trial court's consistent refusal to allow Meyers to withdraw.

Alternatively, Hill claims that Meyers should never have accepted the appointment to represent Hill in the first place because he knew that Hill had conflicts with the OPD during his trial and initial appeals. When questioned by the trial court, however, Meyers explained that he only agreed to represent Hill after carefully considering whether he could provide effective representation given Hill's past conflict with the OPD. Hill has not demonstrated that Meyers, who was not employed by the OPD during Hill's trial and first state postconviction appeal, should have realized before he filed his initial appearance that Hill's past disagreements with OPD lawyers could have prevented Meyers from developing a working attorney-client relationship with Hill. Additionally, Hill has not established a reasonable probability that the outcome of his Atkins proceeding would have been different had Meyers not entered his initial appearance. In sum, Hill's arguments that Meyers provided ineffective assistance of counsel are without merit. Accordingly, we affirm the district court's denial of his claim.

C.

Hill's remaining issues were correctly resolved in the panel's 2018 opinion, see 881 F.3d 483 (6th Cir. 2018), and we reinstate those portions of the opinion to the extent they are consistent with this opinion. For the convenience of the reader, they are attached as an appendix to this opinion.

---

[11]Hill appears to suggest that his right to counsel was violated by the district court's denial of Meyers's motions to withdraw. A trial court's "decision to deny a motion to withdraw or for substitute counsel is reviewed for abuse of discretion." United States v. Powell, 847 F.3d 760, 778 (6th Cir. 2017); see also id. ("Appellate courts reviewing the denial of such a motion generally consider four factors: 'the timeliness of the motion'; 'the adequacy of the court's inquiry into the matter'; 'the extent of the conflict between the attorney and client and whether it was so great that it resulted in a total lack of communication preventing an adequate defense'; and 'the balancing of these factors with the public's interest in the prompt and efficient administration of justice.'" (quoting United States v. Mack, 258 F.3d 548, 556 (6th Cir. 2001)). Hill has not put forth any developed argument supporting his argument that the trial court's decision not to remove Meyers in this case was an abuse of discretion. Accordingly, Hill has waived this argument. See United States v. Johnson, 440 F.3d 832, 846 (6th Cir. 2006).

DISSENT

KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge, dissenting. Danny Hill asserts in his habeas petition that the State of Ohio may not execute him because he is intellectually disabled.[1] See Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304 (2002). Atkins, the case that bars the execution of intellectually disabled defendants, was decided and made retroactive after Hill was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. Before Atkins was decided, Hill had been diagnosed as intellectually disabled approximately ten times over the course of his life, R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 61–76, 513–530, 592–621), including during the penalty phase of his trial when three psychological experts testified that Hill was intellectually disabled. See State v. Hill, Nos. 3720, 3745, 1989 WL 142761 (Ohio Ct. App. Nov. 27, 1989). The Ohio courts agreed, stating that Hill "suffers from some mental retardation" and is "mildly to moderately retarded." See id. at *6; State v. Hill, 595 N.E.2d 884, 901 (Ohio 1992) (discussing the experts' testimony). But ultimately, Hill was sentenced to death because all that his intellectual disability counted for at the time was a point in his favor in the sentencing calculation—not a bar to his execution. See Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *4. When Atkins came down, our court issued a remand order directing the Ohio courts formally to assess Hill's intellectual functioning under Atkins. Hill v. Anderson, 300 F.3d 679, 682 (6th Cir. 2002). Even "[t]hough Ohio courts reviewing his case have concluded that Danny Hill is retarded, and voluminous expert testimony supported this conclusion," we issued a remand because Hill's Atkins claim "ha[d] not been exhausted or conceded." Id. (citations omitted). This time around, the Ohio courts decided that Hill was not intellectually disabled. See State v. Hill, 894 N.E.2d 108, 127 (Ohio Ct. App. 2008).

No person looking at this record could reasonably deny that Hill is intellectually disabled under Atkins. In holding otherwise, the Ohio courts avoided giving serious consideration to past evidence of Hill's intellectual disability. Doing so amounted to an unreasonable determination of the facts and an unreasonable application of even the general Atkins standard. Because Atkins

[1]I will use the medical community's preferred term of "intellectually disabled" in place of "mentally retarded" except where the term is in quoted material.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

and the record inescapably mandate, even under AEDPA deference, that Ohio cannot execute Hill due to his intellectual disability, I dissent.

I. BACKGROUND

The facts and legal proceedings surrounding Hill's conviction and death sentence in 1986 are set out in an earlier opinion. See Hill, 300 F.3d at 680–81. Because this case centers on the issue of intellectual disability, what follows is an account of the facts and proceedings relevant to that question in this case.

Several evaluations conducted around the time of Hill's trial in 1986 reveal that Hill "has a diminished mental capacity," Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *32, a fact acknowledged by the state court after Hill's Atkins hearing. See Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 112 (summarizing the testimony of the three experts who testified during the mitigation phase of the initial trial that Hill was mentally "retarded"). Hill's IQ at the time of trial ranged from 55 to 68, and his moral development was "primitive"—essentially that of a two-year-old. Id. There is no dispute that Hill's IQ is so low that he easily meets the first element of the clinical definition of intellectual disability.

Since his earliest days in school, Hill has struggled with academics. At the age of six, a school psychologist noted that Hill was "a slower learning child" and recommended that his teachers "make his work as concrete as possible" without "talking about abstract ideas." R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 489–91). After kindergarten, Hill was placed into special education classes for the remainder of his time in the public school system. R. 29 (Suppression Hr'g Tr.) (Page ID #3081–92).[2] Hill struggled to keep up academically even in his special education classes and had difficulty remembering even the simplest of instructions. R. 31 (Mitigation Hr'g Tr. at 173–74) (Page ID #3485–86).[3] At the age of thirteen, his academic and social skills were at a first-grade level. R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 568). At the age of fifteen, Hill could barely read or write, and he was noted to have deficits in adaptive behavior, specifically in the areas of self-direction, socialization, and communication. R. 31 (Mitigation Hr'g Tr. at 79–89) (Page ID #3391–401); R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 592–93). Those problems persist today.

Hill has also been unable to take care of his hygiene independently from a young age. During his time in a home for children with behavioral issues, Hill could not remember to comb his hair, brush his teeth, or take a shower without daily reminders. R. 31 (Mitigation Hr'g Tr. at 88) (Page ID #3400). Even in the highly structured environment of death row, Hill would not shower without reminders.

After receiving two convictions for rape at age seventeen, Hill was assessed for intellectual disability by the juvenile court. R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 527). He was diagnosed as "mildly retarded" with very poor adaptive functioning. Id. at 527–28. Before Atkins was decided, Hill had been diagnosed as intellectually disabled approximately ten times over the course of his life. Id. at 61–76, 513–30, 592–621. During the mitigation phase of his trial for the Fife murder, the psychological experts and the Ohio courts decided that Hill was intellectually disabled and had significant adaptive deficits. Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *6; Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 901. Nevertheless, the Ohio Supreme Court upheld his death sentence because it was then constitutional to execute intellectually disabled defendants. See Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *4.

The Supreme Court decided Atkins in 2002 while Hill's appeal from the district court's denial of his habeas petition was pending before this court. We remanded the case to the district court with instructions to remand Hill's unexhausted Atkins claim to the state court and to stay the remaining claims pending resolution of the Atkins claim. Hill, 300 F.3d at 683. After the case was returned to the state court, three experts—Drs. David Hammer, J. Gregory Olley, and Nancy Huntsman—examined Hill and testified over the course of several evidentiary hearings on Hill's Atkins claim. Hill retained Dr. Hammer, Dr. Olley acted as the state's expert, and Dr. Huntsman was appointed by the trial court. Dr. Hammer concluded that Hill met all three prongs for a diagnosis of intellectual disability. However, Drs. Olley and Huntsman concluded that Hill was not intellectually disabled.

The state trial court denied Hill's petition for relief under Atkins, finding that Hill did not exhibit significant adaptive deficits and that any deficits that he did have did not manifest before the age of 18. State v. Hill, No. 85-CR-317 (Ohio Ct. of Common Pleas Feb. 15, 2006) (unreported) [R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 3399–482)]. The Ohio Court of Appeals affirmed that decision, over a dissent, holding in the first instance that issue preclusion did not require a different result "because the finding that he was mentally retarded was not essential to the imposition of the death penalty in the same way that it is essential in the Atkins/Lott context." Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 116, 127. The Ohio Supreme Court declined to review the case, with two justices dissenting. State v. Hill, 912 N.E.2d 107 (Ohio 2009) (table).

With the conclusion of his state-court proceedings, Hill moved to reopen and amend his habeas petition in this case to include claims under Atkins. There is no dispute that Hill's IQ is so low (ranging from a low of 48 to a high of 71) that he easily meets the first element of the clinical definition of intellectual disability. The parties disagree, however, on the propriety of the state courts' holdings that Hill did not exhibit sufficient adaptive deficits (the second element).[4] Thus, the issue before us is whether it was unreasonable for the Ohio courts to decide that Hill did not exhibit significant adaptive deficits.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

In his opening brief, Hill argued that we should review the state courts' determinations on adaptive deficits as both legal and factual conclusions under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) and (2). See Hill Opening Br. at 34 ("The state courts' application of the law and the determination of the facts were unreasonable, and therefore habeas relief is warranted under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) and (2)."). That would mean that we ask whether, under § 2254(d)(1), those decisions amount to an unreasonable application of Atkins and whether, under §§ 2254(d)(2) and 2254(e)(1), there is clear and convincing evidence that the state courts' findings amounted to an unreasonable determination of the facts.

[4]The Warden concedes that Hill's "adaptive deficits (the second element) arose before age eighteen (the third element) if they arose at all." Warden Supp. En Banc Br. at 16.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I agree with Hill that the state courts' determination on adaptive deficits should be analyzed as both legal and factual conclusions under § 2254(d)(1) and (2). Hill's arguments attack the reliability of the state courts' determination of the facts and their interpretation of Atkins. But, at the same time, his case partly turns on what a court must consider under Atkins in testing for intellectual disability, which we have recognized is a question of law. Moreover, Hill presented a § 2254(d)(1) argument in his opening brief. Hill's strategic decision to focus on § 2254(d)(2) in his en banc brief does not waive the prior arguments raised in his opening brief. And the Warden does not argue that Hill has waived his § 2254(d)(1) argument. Warden Supp. En Banc Br. at 12. Accordingly, I will analyze Hill's adaptive-deficits argument under both § 2254(d)(1) and (2), keeping in mind that Hill's arguments draw heavily on the facts.

Under § 2254(d)(1), we must decide whether the state courts' conclusion that Hill did not exhibit significant adaptive limitations was "contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States." Section 2254(d)(1) applies when the state court "correctly identifies the governing legal rule but applies it unreasonably to the facts of a particular prisoner's case." Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 407–08 (2000). Under § 2254(d)(2), our review is limited to the question of whether the state court's findings amount to "an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding." In making that assessment, we are mindful that AEDPA directs us to presume that facts decided by the state court are correct absent "clear and convincing evidence" to the contrary. § 2254(e)(1).

"As a condition for obtaining habeas corpus from a federal court, a state prisoner must show that the state court's ruling on the claim being presented in federal court was so lacking in justification that there was an error well understood and comprehended in existing law beyond any possibility for fairminded disagreement." White v. Woodall, 572 U.S. 415, 419–20 (2014) (quoting Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 103 (2011)). We recognize, of course, that state court determinations are entitled to a great deal of deference. But "[e]ven in the context of federal habeas, deference does not imply abandonment or abdication of judicial review. Deference does not by definition preclude relief." Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U.S. 322, 340 (2003).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Atkins Claim

The Supreme Court held in Atkins that the Eighth Amendment prohibits the execution of intellectually disabled individuals. 536 U.S. at 314–17. Although it ultimately left the development of the test for intellectual disability up to the states, id. at 317, the Supreme Court noted that two diagnostic manuals of the psychiatric profession require three separate findings before a diagnosis of intellectual disability is appropriate.[5] Id. at 308 n.3. Those findings are: (1) "significantly subaverage intellectual functioning";—typically indicated by an IQ level at or below 70; (2) "significant limitations in adaptive functioning in at least two of the following skill areas: communication, self-care, home living, social/interpersonal skills, use of community resources, self-direction, functional academic skills, work, leisure, health, and safety"; and (3) manifestation or onset before the age of 18. Id.

Ohio adopted the three-prong standard set forth in Atkins for evaluating a claim of intellectual disability in State v. Lott, 779 N.E.2d 1011 (Ohio 2002).[6] The Supreme Court of Ohio specifically approved the definition of intellectual disability set forth in the then current editions of the diagnostic manuals. Id. at 1014. Applying the standards in those manuals, individuals had significant limitations in adaptive skills if they exhibited deficits in at least two of the skill areas set out in Atkins. Id.

Hill disputes the Ohio courts' finding that he did not exhibit significant adaptive limitations, and he emphasizes that he has been diagnosed as intellectually disabled and lacking in adaptive skills from a young age. I agree: Hill has exhibited significant adaptive limitations since childhood and cannot justifiably be executed even under the general Atkins standard. See Panetti v. Quarterman, 551 U.S. 930, 953 (2007) ("[E]ven a general standard may be applied in an unreasonable manner."); see e.g., Williams, 529 U.S. at 367 (finding that a state-court decision was both contrary to and an unreasonable application of the generalized standard for evaluating whether a petitioner's right to effective assistance of counsel was violated).

[5]Prior to 2007, the American Association on Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities (AAIDD) was known as the American Association on Mental Retardation (AAMR).

[6]Ohio later overruled Lott and substantially amended its standard for evaluating intellectual disability in State v. Ford, 140 N.E.3d 616 (Ohio 2019).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A state court decision is not entitled to AEDPA deference when "the factfinding procedures upon which the [state] court relied were 'not adequate for reaching reasonably correct results' or, at a minimum, resulted in a process that appeared to be 'seriously inadequate for the ascertainment of the truth.'" Panetti, 551 U.S. at 954 (quoting Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399, 423–24 (1986) (Powell, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment)). Here, the state trial court ruled that the focus of the evaluation would be Hill's present functioning, and therefore that contemporary evidence was what was primarily relevant—not historical accounts. The Ohio courts failed seriously to contend with the extensive past evidence of Hill's intellectual disability. Atkins cannot reasonably be interpreted to permit state courts to exclude or discount past evidence of intellectual disability. And the Ohio courts' cafeteria-style selection of some evidence from Hill's behavior during the proceedings in this case and while incarcerated, over evidence from his special education classes, resulted in an unreasonable determination of the facts.

The Supreme Court stated in Atkins that "clinical definitions of mental retardation require not only subaverage intellectual functioning, but also significant limitations in adaptive skills such as communication, self-care, and self-direction that became manifest before age 18." 536 U.S. at 318 (emphasis added). Accordingly, in Williams v. Mitchell, we held that the "refusal to consider past evidence of intellectual disability in determining whether [the petitioner] has significantly subaverage mental functioning and adaptive skills limitations" contravenes "clearly established Supreme Court precedent." 792 F.3d 606, 617, 619 (6th Cir. 2015). "[T]he clinical definitions cited with approval by Atkins and adopted by Lott do not treat present functioning and early onset as unrelated parts of a disconnected three-part test." Id. at 619. Intellectual disability must manifest before age eighteen. Id. Based on a "plain reading" of Atkins, "past evidence of intellectual disability—including evidence of intellectual disability from an individual's childhood—is relevant to an analysis of an individual's present intellectual functioning." Id.; see also id. at 626 (Gibbons, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment) (noting that Atkins "plainly require[s]" the consideration of past evidence of intellectual disability, including evidence of a defendant's functioning pre-incarceration, "[g]iven the enduring nature of intellectual disability").

We also noted in Williams that, prior to Atkins, the Supreme Court had recognized that past evidence of intellectual disability is relevant to present or future functioning. See id. at 620 (majority opinion) (citing Heller v. Doe, 509 U.S. 312, 321–23 (1993)). In Heller, the Supreme Court held that civilly committing people with intellectual disabilities based on clear and convincing evidence of future dangerousness was constitutional because intellectual disability manifests during childhood and "is a permanent, relatively static condition, so a determination of dangerousness may be made with some accuracy based on previous behavior." 509 U.S. at 321–23 (citation omitted). "Thus, 'almost by definition in the case of the retarded [adult] there is an 18-year record upon which to rely' when assessing the individual's future intellectual functioning." Williams, 792 F.3d at 620 (alteration in original) (quoting Heller, 509 U.S. at 323). Although Atkins left to the states the job of delineating the precise contours of how to evaluate intellectual disability, clearly established law mandates that courts cannot, under any reasonable interpretation of Atkins's general standard, discount or ignore evidence of intellectual disability from an individual's childhood.

In Hill's case, the Ohio Court of Appeals correctly set forth the three-prong Atkins standard as adopted by the Ohio Supreme Court in Lott. It also correctly noted that the second criterion under Lott requires the defendant to demonstrate "significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills, such as communication, self-care, and self-direction." Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 113 (quoting Lott, 779 N.E.2d at 1014). Then it veered off track. Focusing mostly on Hill's interactions with law enforcement, prison officials, and the courts, the Ohio courts discounted extensive past evidence of intellectual disability—including multiple diagnoses of intellectual disability and numerous comments on Hill's adaptive deficiencies made while Hill was in school. The two experts who concluded that Hill did not exhibit significant adaptive deficits did the same. In the few instances where the Ohio courts did confront Hill's school records, they grossly misrepresented the contents. The Ohio courts' decision to focus on and privilege contemporary evidence over historical accounts is contrary to clearly established Supreme Court precedent in Atkins and Heller and seriously undermined the courts' ability to make an accurate assessment of Hill's intellectual disability. These errors amount to an unreasonable application of Atkins and an unreasonable finding of fact. See Williams, 792 F.3d at 626 (Gibbons, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment) ("By excluding the pre–1989 evidence, the state court severely limited its own ability to make a reasoned assessment of Williams's condition according to the legal and medical standard that Atkins . . . plainly require[s]."); see also Panetti, 551 U.S. at 953 (recognizing that "a general standard may be applied in an unreasonable manner," especially when a reviewing court faces "a record that cannot, under any reasonable interpretation of the controlling legal standard, support a certain legal ruling"). The majority, in concluding otherwise, refuses to acknowledge the significance, and in some cases the very existence, of these failures, misrepresentations, and omissions.

1. Significant Limitations

The history of Hill's diagnoses and adaptive limitations was given short shrift in the Ohio courts. According to the Ohio courts, the anecdotal evidence in the record "constituted a 'thin reed' on which to make conclusions about Hill's diagnosis." Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124. Yet, as the district court noted, "the state-court record was hardly a 'thin reed.' At well over 6,000 pages, it was voluminous." Hill v. Anderson, No. 4:96-cv-00795, 2014 WL 2890416, at *24 (N.D. Ohio June 25, 2014). "[T]he true 'thin reed' in this case was the information that was available concerning Hill's adaptive functioning at the time he filed his Atkins claim," which, for whatever reason, was "the focus of the evaluation." Id.

Of the criteria for adaptive deficits set out in Lott, it is clear from the record that Hill displayed significant limitations, at the very least, in functional academics, hygiene/self-care, social skills, and self-direction. With respect to functional academics, Hill was considered "mentally retarded" by the Warren City Schools. He was diagnosed as "mildly retarded," "trainable mentally retarded," or "educable mentally retarded" several times before he turned 18, beginning with the recognition that he was a "slower learning child" when he began formal schooling at age 6. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 489–91). He scored 70 or below on every IQ test administered during his school years. Id. at 489–94, 511–19. He attended special education classes for the entirety of his school career. R. 29 (Suppression Hr'g Tr.) (Page ID #3081–88).[7]

At age six, Hill did not know his age, but thought he was nine. R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 489). His visual-motor coordination was at the three-year-old level, his reading and verbal skills were at the five-year-old level, and he had a mental age of four years and six months. Id. at 490. At age 8 years and 8 months, Hill was considered functioning at a "mid-kindergarten to beginning first grade level." Id. at 493. At age thirteen, he was functioning at the "mid-2nd grade level" in reading and the "mid-1st grade level" in arithmetic. Id. at 515. His psychologist noted that his learning abilities "ha[d] fallen 22 points" in the last five years, and that his relative weaknesses lie "in not being able to recall everyday information, do abstract thinking, perform mental arithmetic, perceive a total social situation, [and] perceive patterns." Id. At the same age, he was sent to a school for intellectually disabled children to continue his special education. See id. at 513–19. A school psychologist set out instructional goals that included teaching Hill his address and phone number, as well as how to tell time. Id. at 578. He exhibited weaknesses in reasoning ability, originality, verbal interaction, and a lack of intellectual independence.

By age fourteen, Hill was reading at a first-grade level and his math skills were at a third-grade level. He still had not mastered writing his own signature. Id. His teacher was working on self-control skills that should generally be mastered by a kindergarten student, including "working without being disruptive" and not touching other students inappropriately. Id. Teachers set academic objectives like learning to: tell time in five-minute intervals; write his own signature; shower regularly; put soiled clothing in the appropriate place; and eat and drink in a manner appropriate in a school setting.

Hill was transferred to another, similar school at fifteen because of poor academic achievement and behavior. R. 31 (Mitigation Hr'g Tr. at 77–79) (Page ID #3389–91). He received tutoring at a first-grade level for reading and a second-grade level for math. R. 97

[7]Hill was "mainstreamed" only in physical education and music, and struggled even there to keep up with and socialize normally with his peer group. R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 247–49). There is no record of him taking "mainstream" classes in any academic subject area, i.e., math, reading, or history. See id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT MO-AG-22-0644-A-003564

[disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 525). At seventeen years old, after being arrested for, and pleading guilty to, two felony rape charges, the juvenile court placed Hill in a facility that housed youth offenders with mental disabilities or emotional problems. R. 31 (Mitigation Hr'g Tr. at 120–23) (Page ID #3432–35). There, Hill completed ninth grade in special education classes at age 18. R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 533). After being released, he returned to high school, and testing indicated Hill was at a second-grade level for reading and math. Id. at 1109. Fife's murder occurred six months later.

The record also demonstrates that Hill was deficient in hygiene and self-care. At the age of fourteen, he still needed to be told to shower regularly, brush his teeth, and apply deodorant every day. He would not independently follow through and take care of his hygiene unless he was told to do so. At approximately age sixteen, a group home officer noted that although Hill was "improving in his personal hygiene," he still "need[ed] constant reminder[s] to shower, brush his teeth, etc." Id. at 524. Hill continued to have problems with his hygiene in prison and had to be reminded frequently to groom himself.

The record also demonstrates that Hill had limitations in the area of social skills. For example, the district court pointed to the testimony of psychologists who spoke to Hill's "poor self-esteem, inability to interpret social situations and create positive relationships, and [the fact] that he was easily influenced by people, gravitated toward an antisocial peer group, and did not respond appropriately to authority figures." Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *38. Hill's school and court records demonstrate that he had trouble making friends. At seventeen, Hill was described as "socially constricted" and possessing "very few interpersonal coping skills." R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 530).

Hill also showed limitations in at least one more area—self-direction. Hill was described as "easily led" in both his school and court records, during periods both before and after he committed serious crimes while apparently acting alone. In school, Hill was described as immature and "easily led by others into trouble around school," like fighting. Id. at 515. He was vulnerable to exploitation by older individuals, displayed inappropriate and immature behaviors in class, rarely considered the consequences before acting, and had trouble conforming his behavior to the rules or the law. When Hill was thirteen, he was described as exhibiting a "great deal of impulsivity." Id. When Hill was seventeen, he was evaluated by a psychologist who concluded that he had poor judgment, "d[id] not think of consequences," was "highly suggestable," and "was 'likely to be exploited'" if placed in a halfway home for adults "[b]ecause of his passivity and limited intellectual ability." Id. at 527–28. Another report from that same time expressed concern about his tendency to follow others. Even when he was in prison at age twenty-one, a correctional officer reported that Hill was easily led by other inmates and had to be told how to do his job at every step of the way. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 437–39).

Time after time, psychologists examined Hill and diagnosed him as intellectually disabled. R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 61–76, 513–30, 592–621). These psychologists assessed Hill's IQ and his adaptive skills. During one of the earliest assessments, his school's psychologist noted that Hill was limited in functional academics and self-direction. Id. at 63–65 (noting that Hill is "limited in his ability to generalize, to transfer learning from one situation to another, . . . or to do much self-evaluation"). Later assessments consistently detailed the same issues and deficits in social skills, communication, and self-care as well. See, e.g., id. at 69, 71, 516, 519, 527–28, 530, 592.

In addition to his significant limitations in functional academics, self-care, social skills, and self-direction, the record also demonstrates that Hill never has lived independently, never had a driver's license or a bank account, never has been able to perform a job without substantial guidance from supervisors, was labeled "functionally illiterate" at school and in prison, could never read or write above a third-grade level, and could never adequately sign his own name.

Even if Hill appeared to be functioning at an average skill level to a layperson's eyes, it is common for someone with mild intellectual disability to present as functioning. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 189). That is why the impressions of schoolteachers are critical—because children often are not diagnosed "until they get to school and teachers who are familiar with kids at various cognitive abilities discover that this child is, No. 1, not where they should be for their age in terms of their current [intellectual] functioning . . . . And, two, that as they try to teach them they learn at a much slower rate." Id. Comments from Hill's schoolteachers were largely left unaddressed—or were distorted—in the Ohio courts' analysis.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2. Unreliable Experts

Nevertheless, it might seem that the Ohio courts rendered a reasonable decision because they relied on the opinions of two psychological experts who found that Hill did not exhibit significant adaptive deficits. The majority here certainly takes that stance. Maj. Op. at 21–22. According to the Ohio Court of Appeals, the experts and the record provided "competent and credible evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that Hill does not meet the second criterion for mental retardation." Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 126. But both experts, at the trial court's direction, ignored evidence of adaptive deficiencies from Hill's school years, or set it aside as irrelevant to the task at hand. Anecdotal evidence, such as comments and records from schoolteachers and others who have interacted with or evaluated the subject, is key to the adaptive-deficits analysis. See Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124–25 (discussing anecdotal evidence); R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 383–84) (stating that the psychological profession values "collateral information"); R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 696) (stating the importance of "drawing information from many different sources of functioning in every day life under every day circumstances").

Two experts testified in Hill's Atkins proceedings that Hill did not display significant adaptive limitations. State v. Hill, No. 85-CR-317, at 79–80 (Ohio Ct. of Common Pleas Feb. 15, 2006) (unreported) [R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 3477–78)]. The state trial court relied upon their opinions to conclude that Hill had failed to demonstrate significant adaptive deficits. Id. at 81 (Page 3479).[8] All three experts, including Dr. Hammer (Hill's expert), found that Hill malingered or tried to "fake bad" on the adaptive skills tests given to him in 2004. Id. at [8]We have previously denied Atkins relief in an AEDPA case arising out of Ohio where, as here, two of the three mental-health experts testified that the petitioner was not intellectually disabled. O'Neal v. Bagley, 743 F.3d 1010, 1023 (6th Cir. 2013) ("With expert testimony split, as it often is, the state court chose to credit Dr. Chiappone and Dr. Nelson over Dr. Tureen, and we cannot say from this vantage that it was unreasonable to do so."). However, O'Neal is distinguishable on its facts, and Hill's claim for Atkins relief is much stronger than the petitioner's claim in O'Neal. For example, in O'Neal there was insufficient evidence to prove that the petitioner met the first prong in demonstrating "significantly subaverage intellectual functioning." Id. at 1022. Here, by contrast, Hill's IQ is so low that the Warden concedes that Hill satisfies the first prong. Additionally, O'Neal's claim for Atkins relief also failed because his adaptive deficits may well have been better explained by his drug abuse and personality disorder rather than organic mental illness. Id. at 1022–23. Furthermore, we have never held that a reliance on an expert witness's conclusion makes a state court's determination reasonable per se. Instead, we consider whether "the record read as a whole" allows a reviewing court to conclude that the state court's determination was unreasonable. Id. at 1022; see also Carter v. Bogan, 900 F.3d 754, 768, 771 (6th Cir. 2018).

53, 81 (Pages 3451, 3479). In coming to their decision that Hill was not, at present, intellectually disabled, Drs. Olley (the state's expert) and Huntsman (the trial court's expert) heavily weighed the fact that Hill malingered. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 781); R. 97 [disc 1] (Huntsman Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 1050–51). But see R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 211) (stating that a person with intellectual disability can still lie, manipulate, and cheat). Drs. Olley and Huntsman also emphasized the sophistication of Hill's crimes and his interactions with prison, law-enforcement, and court officials. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 726–31, 737–50, 770–75); R. 97 [disc 1] (Huntsman Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 1027, 1034–35, 1040–44). Dr. Hammer, on the other hand, based his diagnosis on all types of anecdotal evidence, including Hill's records from school, and concluded that Hill satisfied all three prongs for a diagnosis of intellectual disability. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 383–84); id. at 156 ("My opinion is that [Hill] falls within the high end of the mild retardation range."); see also id. at 190 (describing mild intellectual disability as "significant" or "severe" impairment in the ability to function).

Dr. Olley (the state's expert) stated that Hill's memory was very good in court on April 15, 2004, when he provided details of events. R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 744). Dr. Olley also stated, based on an interview with Hill, that Hill was able "to express a complex explanation of the crime in order to support his claim of innocence." R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 1125). Although Dr. Olley admitted that Hill's case was a "close call," R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 861), he nevertheless concluded that Hill's "way of presenting himself," both in his police interrogation and before the court, was inconsistent with an intellectual-disability diagnosis, id. at 718–19, 726–27. Dr. Olley said that he had never heard of an intellectually disabled inmate calling the media to arrange an interview, as Hill did in this case by reaching out to the Tribune Chronicle. Id. at 763. Dr. Olley noted that Hill was able to tell an elaborate "conspiracy" theory about the events leading to his capital trial for Fife's murder, which echoed a "very similar" soliloquy he made before the trial court on April 15, 2004. Id. at 770–72. Dr. Olley characterized this soliloquy as "long," "rambling," and ultimately implausible—but he testified that he was nonetheless "struck" by Hill's "sophisticated memory and reasoning." Id. at 744, 771–72.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Dr. Huntsman (the trial court's expert) similarly focused in her report on Hill's "remarkable memory for the history of his case," his detailed and "very complex explanation for how Raymond Fife came to be killed," as well as the "competencies" observed by staff members in prison. R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 1141). Dr. Huntsman described Hill's story as "bouncing around in time," and she initially "couldn't keep track of what [they] were talking about." R. 97 [disc 1] (Huntsman Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 1021). She characterized the conspiracy story as "remarkable and not likely, not very plausible." Id. at 1025. Still, despite the story's apparent lack of "logic," Dr. Huntsman noted "the degree of organization, the degree of complexity[,] and the degree of memory that he displayed as [they] talked." Id. at 1025–26, 1031. She testified that it was not the story Hill told, but his "process of telling the story"—which demonstrated complexity, "sophistication," a noteworthy vocabulary, and a "general ability to communicate"—that led to her conclusion that he was not intellectually disabled. Id. at 1190.

In the end, Drs. Olley and Huntsman each opined that Hill was "borderline intellectual functioning" as defined in the DSM-IV. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 936); R. 97 [disc 1] (Huntsman Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 1044); id. at 1049 (stating that "what makes me say that I believe that in my opinion he falls within the borderline range of intellectual functioning has to do with his adaptive behavior"). Dr. Olley described borderline intellectual functioning as "no mental retardation but it is the . . . functioning that is . . . between one standard deviation below the mean and two standard deviations below the mean," i.e., an IQ range between "71 to 85." R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 936). Drs. Olley and Huntsman came to this conclusion even though people at the lower end of borderline intellectual functioning and the higher end of intellectual disability are "going to be quite similar . . . in some regards," R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 465), including in their ability to create a "script" involving various people and events, id. at 537–38.

In the opinion of Dr. Hammer (Hill's expert), Hill's behavior was not inconsistent with that of a person with mild intellectual disability because those persons often attempt to don a "cloak of competence." Id. at 191–92. "[M]any people with mild [intellectual disability]," he explained, "are quite aware of their deficits in learning and functioning and are somewhat worried that other people will find that also. So they oftentimes will develop certain skill areas that they can hold out as indicating that they have a competence in a certain area and, therefore, are trying to mask . . . what their deficits actually are." Id. This frequently involves "learning sort of . . . scripts or scenarios that they can kind of pull out." Id. at 192–93. The trial court, which adopted the opinions of Drs. Olley and Huntsman, but made no reference to Dr. Hammer's cloak of competence discussion in its opinion, apparently did not afford this concept much weight.

Drs. Olley and Huntsman also placed significant weight on the testimony of prison officials about Hill's recent behavior in the prison environment. These officials considered Hill "average" in intelligence compared to other death row inmates. "They testified that Hill interacted with the other inmates, played games, maintained a prison job, kept a record of the money in his commissary account, and obeyed prison rules." Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *39 (quoting Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124). One official said that Hill was feigning intellectual disability for his Atkins claim, and another said that Hill's hygiene was "poor but not terrible." Id. (quoting Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 125).

As the district court noted, all of the experts conceded that relying on Hill's behavior in prison to assess adaptive skills is problematic because "death row is a segregated, highly structured and regulated environment." Id. at *42.[9] Evidence of adaptive functioning in this kind of controlled setting is of limited value because inmates do not have the same opportunities to acquire new skills or show weaknesses in existing skills. Assessing Hill's adaptive deficits as an adult is particularly challenging given the absence of any reliable testing to measure Hill's adaptive functioning and the lack of reliable evidence of how Hill would have functioned as an adult in general society as he has been incarcerated for all but six months of his adult life. Given the lack of evidence regarding Hill's likely adaptive performance as an adult in the general community, the experts should have utilized all available evidence.

[9]The medical literature available in 2008 prohibited the assessment of adaptive skills in atypical environments like prison. For example, the 2002 AAMR Manual says "[l]imitations in present functioning must be considered within the context of community environments typical of the individual's age peers and culture." AAMR, Mental Retardation: Definition, Classification, and Systems of Supports 13 (10th ed. 2002). It explains: "[t]his means that the standards against which the individual's functioning must be measured are typical community-based environments, not environments that are isolated or segregated by ability." Id. at 8.

The majority acknowledges that Dr. Huntsman, in particular, considered prison officials' descriptions of Hill's adaptive behavior as "'[the] most persuasive[]' evidence" of Hill's adaptive functioning. Maj. Op. at 22 (alterations in original) (quoting R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 1141)). Given that the existing medical guidelines prohibited measuring an individual's functioning based on their behaviors in a prison setting, Dr. Huntsman's weighty reliance on this evidence in coming to her conclusion about Hill's intellectual disability casts serious doubt on its reasonableness. The same is true for Dr. Olley, especially in light of his own admission that "[i]t is impossible to assess all of Mr. Hill's adaptive behavior while he is in prison." R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 1124).

Drs. Olley and Huntsman leaned heavily on these prison officials' testimony rather than treating them with the degree of skepticism mandated by the medical literature. As the district court noted, the weight of the testimony from various death-row prison officials was limited by their potential bias against the inmates they were charged with guarding, as well as the shortcomings affecting lay opinions about intellectual disability generally. Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *42–43. And many of the specific prison officials' statements were "rife with contradictions, with themselves and each other." Id. at *43.

These flaws might be forgivable under AEDPA deference, but there is one problem with Drs. Olley's and Huntsman's testimony that we cannot overlook: neither of them grappled with the extensive past evidence of Hill's intellectual disability. Both experts, instead, assessed Hill's adaptive skills "as they existed at the time of the hearing"—even though intellectual disability is a static condition. Id. at *23; see Heller, 509 U.S. at 323; Williams, 792 F.3d at 617–19; R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 1125) (Dr. Olley reporting that "[t]he available information on Mr. Hill's current functioning does not allow a diagnosis of mental retardation") (emphasis added). At the State's urging, the trial court ruled that it would focus the Atkins inquiry on Hill's current functioning, but noted that it would not preclude historical evidence from coming in. R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 175–81, 217–23, 247–50). As a result, the opinions of Drs. Olley and Huntsman, like the Ohio courts' own assessments, lack a credible foundation.

Dr. Olley recognized the importance of anecdotal evidence when he relied on testimony from prison guards to assess Hill's adaptive skills. But when it came to past anecdotal evidence of Hill's adaptive deficits, Dr. Olley dismissed it as evidence of low academic skills only. R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 783). Acknowledging that Hill's schoolteachers thought he was intellectually disabled, Dr. Olley said that he could not say the same because "[t]he information is simply not available." Id. As detailed extensively above, that is simply not true.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The majority finds Dr. Olley's determination to be reliable because Dr. Olley "did not dismiss Hill's past anecdotal evidence; rather, he concluded after reviewing the record that 'there was inadequate information about adaptive behavior that would allow [him] to conclude that there was a significant impairment in adaptive behavior' at the time of the offense." Maj. Op. at 20 (alteration in original) (quoting R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 780)). But that conclusion ignores Dr. Olley's failure to engage with or consider the numerous reports from teachers, mental health professionals, and other relevant observers of Hill's adaptive behavior, directly contravening Dr. Olley's admitted methodology for determining intellectual disability and what constitutes adequate information. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 696–97) (noting that for retrospective determinations of intellectual disability, experts should rely on records and statements from "teachers," "mental health professionals," and "other people who know the individual well").[10] Those records are replete with observations and diagnoses of significant limitations in adaptive behavior that Dr. Olley never mentioned or explained away as irrelevant or inadequate in the areas of self-care or self-direction. For example, in the area of self-direction, Dr. Olley failed to contextualize the results of the standardized tests administered by mental health professionals with the numerous accounts throughout Hill's childhood and teenage years from teachers, psychologists, and social workers who testified that Hill was easily led and a follower. Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *30–33. More importantly, Dr. Olley admitted that Dr. Nancy Schmidtgoessling, one of the psychologists who testified during the mitigation phase of Hill's trial, assessed Hill's adaptive behavior when she diagnosed him as intellectually disabled. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 941–42). But Dr. Olley never explained why he found that diagnosis unreliable.

[10]Dr. Olley explained to the trial court that "our protocol was different" from other cases for which he had served as an expert "in the sense that in speaking among the three psychologists, we were aware of your order to look at Mr. Hill's present functioning." R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 862). He further explained that it was because of the trial court's order that the experts focused on Hill's adaptation to prison life. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As for Dr. Huntsman, she, too, did not give much thought to the past anecdotal evidence of Hill's adaptive deficits. She stated that she was retained to decide "whether [Hill] is now a mentally retarded individual." R. 97 [disc 1] (Huntsman Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 1052) (emphasis added). When prompted for her opinion of Hill's school records, she stated that these records were not as reliable as the court-conducted tests because teachers' assessments "were being done for a very different purpose." Id. at 1046. Never mind that the Ohio Supreme Court had already decided in White that school records are relevant for an adaptive-deficits analysis. State v. White, 885 N.E.2d 905, 916 (Ohio 2008); see also Heller, 509 U.S. at 323 (noting that for intellectual disability determinations "there is an 18-year record [of past behavior] upon which to rely"). Never mind that several of the assessments used to evaluate Hill relied on definitions of intellectual disability that match Lott's factors. See e.g., R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 592–93) (finding that Hill qualified for placement into a special education program for intellectually disabled students because he exhibited "significant subaverage intellectual functioning" and deficiencies in at least two areas of adaptive behavior as determined by a multidisciplinary team that included a qualified psychologist). Dr. Huntsman also speculated that Hill had not tried his hardest in school. R. 97 [disc 1] (Huntsman Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 1048).[11] In fact, at one point Dr. Huntsman dismissed the evidence of Hill's adaptive deficits during his teenage years as Hill being "a pretty troubled and pretty troublesome youth" due to his school system record. Id. at 1047. Despite Dr. Huntsman's detailed analysis of the reports from prison guards, there is no comparable analysis of the overwhelming historical records detailing Hill's struggles with self-care, self-direction, and academic functioning. Dr. Huntsman testified that, excluding Hill's mother, the record did not contain any non-school records providing evidence of Hill's adaptive skills or deficits. Id. at 1090, 1098.[12] This completely ignores the highly relevant non-school records and testimony from Brinkhaven, where social workers observed Hill at all times and noted significant limitations in self-care, academic functioning, and self-direction. See Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *31. Having disregarded much of the past anecdotal evidence, Dr. Huntsman stated that Hill [11]Dr. Huntsman did not point to, nor have we been able to discover, any evidence in Hill's school records demonstrating that he intentionally performed poorly in school.

[12]The record also indicates that, if anything, Hill's mother "overestimated [Hill's] adaptive behavior." R. 97 (Suppl. App.) (Page 527).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"probably" was not intellectually disabled at the time of the offense. R. 97 [disc 1] (Huntsman Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 1052) ("I think that the only thing that I've said today that I didn't say previously in my report, because I wasn't asked to address it in my report, is that my opinion is that he was probably not retarded at the time of the offense.").

Even though Drs. Olley and Huntsman conceded that this was a close case, they made no real attempt to reconcile their outcome with Hill's past diagnoses of intellectual disability and the voluminous relevant evidence of Hill's significant adaptive limitations—and in fact, they were effectively told not to do so. As we held in Williams, Atkins and Lott recognized that intellectual disability presents itself in childhood and is a permanent condition. See Williams, 792 F.3d at 619–20. Under Atkins, courts cannot limit their focus to contemporary accounts while discounting past evidence of intellectual disability. The Ohio trial court's erroneous instruction substantially undermined the Ohio courts' ability to rely reasonably on Dr. Olley's and Dr. Huntsman's conclusions regarding Hill's intellectual disability.

Having set their gaze on Hill's interactions with prison, court, and police officials, Drs. Olley and Huntsman said next to nothing about the substantial evidence in the record from Hill's time both in school and in prison that Hill was easily led, struggled to communicate, struggled with his personal hygiene, and struggled to read. These failures only encouraged the Ohio courts to do the same. Rather than grapple with the extensive record of Hill's intellectual disability, the state trial court made its findings based on Hill's scattered and scripted conspiracy story of the Fife murder, his demeanor in interacting with law enforcement and the legal system, and the supposed sophistication of his crimes. State v. Hill, No. 85-CR-317, at 73–77 (Ohio Ct. of Common Pleas Feb. 15, 2006) (unreported) [R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Pages 3471–76)]. Those "adaptive strengths" convinced the state trial court that Hill could not be intellectually disabled because he had "remarkable" communication and vocabulary skills and was self-directed. Id. at 74 (Page 3472). As shown throughout this discussion, there is substantial evidence in the record to contradict these findings, which are based on evidence—Hill's functioning in a prison setting—prohibited by existing medical guidelines. See, e.g., discussion infra Section III.A.3. Unlike the Ohio courts and Drs. Olley and Huntsman, I cannot cast aside years of highly probative evidence and repeated diagnoses of intellectual disability. To do so flies in the face of then-prevailing medical standards, relevant guidance from the Ohio Supreme Court, and the doctors' own methodologies. Viewed in the context of the entire record and based on clearly established Supreme Court precedent, no fairminded jurist could find their factual determinations to be reasonable.

3. Myths and Misrepresentations

To the extent that the Ohio courts addressed past evidence of Hill's adaptive deficits, they misconstrued it or tried to offset it with irrelevant facts. Rather than take this evidence seriously, the Ohio Court of Appeals adopted the trial court's analysis as consistent with its own perception of the record:

> Public School Records. Hill's public school records amply demonstrate a history of academic underachievement and behavioral problems. Hill is often described as a lazy, manipulative, and sometimes violent youth. Although there are references to Hill's being easily led or influenced by others, the trial court noted that much of Hill's serious misconduct, including two rapes committed prior to Fife's murder, occurred when he was acting alone. Hill knew how to write and was described by at least one of his special education teachers as "a bright, perceptive boy with high reasoning ability."
> Hill's Trial for the Murder of Raymond Fife. The trial court observed that the record of Hill's murder trial provided evidence of Hill's ability concerning self-direction and self-preservation. In particular, the court noted Hill's initiative in coming to the police in order to misdirect the focus of the investigation by implicating others and Hill's ability to adapt his alibi to changing circumstances in the course of police interrogation. This last point was also noted by Dr. Olley in his hearing testimony: Hill "stood his ground during that interrogation very, very strongly. * * * He not only modified his story a little bit when he was faced with evidence that couldn't possibly have avoided. * * * That to me is a kind of thinking and planning and integrating complex information that is a higher level than I have seen people with mental retardation able to do."
> Death Row Records. At the time of the evidentiary hearing, Hill had been incarcerated on death row for 20 years. From this period of time, the trial court considered audiotaped interviews of Hill by Warren's Tribune Chronicle reporter Andrew Gray in the year 2000. These interviews were arranged on Hill's initiative in order to generate publicity for his case. The trial court found Hill's performance on these tapes demonstrated a high level of functional ability with respect to Hill's use of language and vocabulary, understanding of legal processes, ability to read and write, and ability to reason independently.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

> The trial court considered the evidence of the various prison officials who testified at the evidentiary hearing. These witnesses consistently testified that Hill was an "average" prisoner with respect to his abilities in comparison with other death row inmates. They testified that Hill interacted with the other inmates, played games, maintained a prison job, kept a record of the money in his commissary account, and obeyed prison rules. Prison officials offered further testimony in their interviews with the expert psychologists. One official opined that Hill began to behave differently after Atkins was decided, and he believed that Hill was "playing a game" to make others think he is retarded. Another official reported that Hill's self-care was "poor but not terrible" and that Hill had to be reminded sometimes about his hygiene.
> Hill's Appearances in Court. The trial court stated that it had "many opportunities" to observe Hill over an extended period of time and, as a lay observer, did not perceive anything about Hill's conduct or demeanor suggesting that he suffers from mental retardation.

Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124–25.

These findings are deeply troubling. To start, the Ohio courts' finding "that Hill 'underachieved' academically or in any other adaptive skill as a child is," as the district court remarked, "squarely contradicted by the record." Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *26. The district court could not find, and neither could I, "one reference in Hill's school records by a teacher, school administrator, psychologist, psychiatrist, or anyone else suggesting that Hill was capable of performing at a substantially higher level but chose not to." Id. (footnote omitted). And as the experts in this case testified, evidence of behavioral problems or a conduct disorder simply does not undermine a simultaneous finding of intellectual disability. See R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 612); R. 97 [disc 1] (Olley Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 713) ("[I]f he's having conduct problems in school, that's neither here nor there to a diagnosis of mental retardation."); (R. 97 [disc 1] (Huntsman Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 1102–03). While conceding that "there are references to Hill's being easily led or influenced by others, the trial court noted that much of Hill's serious misconduct, including two rapes committed prior to Fife's murder, occurred when he was acting alone." Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124.[13] The state courts incorrectly discounted the numerous reports that Hill was easily led because he committed [13]The Ohio courts' use of the word "references" is also a serious mischaracterization of the record. As the district court found, almost every evaluation of Hill in his school records described Hill's tendency to be "easily influenced" by others. Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *26 n.19. These consistent assessments amount to much more than fleeting "references."

crimes on his own. Under then-prevailing medical standards, Hill's prior criminal behavior is completely irrelevant to any determination of whether he exhibited deficits in adaptive skills. See Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *26.

The Ohio courts' focus on a note drafted by a teacher in a school for intellectually disabled children describing Hill as "'bright' and 'perceptive,' with 'high reasoning ability'" was, as the district court put it, "almost cynical in its selective misrepresentation of the facts." Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *27. In the same report, Hill's special education teacher noted that Hill, who was thirteen at the time, had the reading skills of a first-grader and the math skills of a third-grader. R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 578). Her proposed goals for Hill were for him to shower regularly, eat and drink in a manner appropriate to school, blend letter sounds to say words altogether out loud, tell time in five-minute intervals, and count change up to $1.00. Id. The Ohio courts' statement that Hill knew how to write suffers from the same flaw. At best, it is an erroneous description of Hill's abilities; at worst, it purposefully distorts the record. See Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *27 (finding that there is "no evidence in the record that Hill could write much more than his name during his school years, and struggled even with that"). More importantly, the Ohio Court of Appeals blatantly omits the uncontradicted evidence from Hill's childhood through teenage years detailing Hill's consistent academic struggles. See discussion supra Section III.A.1.

The Ohio courts' handling of evidence regarding self-care is equally troubling. The Ohio Court of Appeals's sole reference to Hill's deficits with regard to self-care was its summary of testimony provided by a prison official "that Hill's self-care was 'poor but not terrible' and that Hill had to be reminded sometimes about his hygiene." Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 125. Such a statement downplays the record's extensive chronicling of Hill's struggles with hygiene, including the fact that an individual education plan established for Hill when he was nearly fourteen years old included an "[a]nnual [g]oal and [o]bjective" of helping Hill "learn to shower when necessary" and to "put soiled clothing in the appropriate place." R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Pages 280–81, 327). In short, the Ohio Court of Appeals's description of Hill's school records does not contain a single accurate characterization of the evidence that is relevant to determining whether Hill exhibits significant limitations in adaptive behavior.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Instead, we are left to assume that the appellate court and also the trial court were all but oblivious to the ample amount of evidence that credibly establishes Hill's limitations in functional academics, self-care, social skills, and self-direction.

The state trial court also unduly relied on Hill's "initiative in coming to the police" after Fife's death, as well as his alleged efforts to misdirect the investigation and fabricate an alibi while under interrogation, as "evidence of Hill's ability concerning self-direction and self-preservation." Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 124. But Hill was not even a suspect before he went to the police, and his statements are what aroused their suspicion. Incriminating oneself is hardly self-preservation. And as the district court noted, "'[s]elf-preservation' is not [even] among the adaptive skills measured under the clinical definitions of intellectual disability." Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *33. And "self-direction" covers a host of behaviors—including "initiating activities appropriate to the setting" and "demonstrating appropriate assertiveness and self-advocacy skills"—that are either unrelated or directly contrary to Hill's decision to make contact with the police. Id. (quoting AAMR, Mental Retardation: Definition, Classification, and Systems of Supports 40 (9th ed. 1992)).

Moreover, contrary to the Ohio courts' findings, Hill's "performance" during the police interrogation revealed him to be "childlike, confused, often irrational, and primarily self-defeating," and Hill's attempts to change his story under pressure failed to "skillfully hid[e] his part" in Fife's death. Id. at *34. The police even stated that Hill was suggestible, telling him that "Everytime [sic] we suggest something to you, you have a tendency to agree with us." R. 26 (Trial Tr. at 30) (Page ID #2105). Hill often changed his story or "embellished his statement[s] at the slightest suggestion by the police, even when the information at issue was irrelevant or incriminating." Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *35. These actions "were quite the opposite of adaptive." Id. at *34. This is especially true where Hill's decision to approach the police did not "resolve his problems," but "succeeded only in immediately drawing the police's attention to himself." Id. I fail to see how such behavior reasonably could be interpreted as exhibiting skills in "making choices," "resolving problems," and "demonstrating appropriate assertiveness and self-advocacy skills." AAMR, Mental Retardation: Definition, Classification, and Systems of Supports 40 (9th ed. 1992).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

While purportedly relying on prison accounts, the Ohio courts made no mention of Hill's prison records. Those records reflect that prison officials always understood Hill to be mentally incapacitated or "slow." As when he was in school, Hill was considered to be illiterate in prison. He was understood to have a "very limited writing ability," and he had other inmates write for him. R. 97 [disc 1] (Hammer Test., Atkins Hr'g Tr.) (Page 439). Notes written from Hill to prison officials make clear that he had trouble keeping track of his prison account balance. According to fellow inmates, when Hill was given a task, he had to be carefully supervised because he could not remember how to complete the assigned task. At least one prison official reported that Hill was able to perform his job as a porter because the cleaning supplies were sorted by color, so Hill was not required to read the supplies' instructions. Id. at 363, 1381.

Rather than credit the ten intellectual-disability diagnoses that Hill received prior to Atkins even being decided, the trial court made its own lay judgment that "there is nothing about [Hill's] general appearance—facial expressions or conduct—suggesting . . . that the Petitioner is mentally retarded." State v. Hill, No. 85-CR-317, at 76 (Ohio Ct. of Common Pleas Feb. 15, 2006) (unreported) [R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 3474)]. The Ohio Court of Appeals defended that lay judgment on the basis that the experts also believed that Hill failed to exhibit significant adaptive deficiencies. See Hill, 894 N.E.2d at 125–26.

Perhaps most disturbing, three psychologists who testified at Hill's pre-Atkins mitigation hearing concluded that Hill was intellectually disabled and had extremely poor adaptive functioning. On appeal, the Ohio Supreme Court and Court of Appeals found these psychologists' testimony credible and concluded that Hill was intellectually disabled. See State v. Hill, 595 N.E.2d 884, 901 (Ohio 1992); State v. Hill, Nos. 3720, 2745, 1989 WL 142761, at *6, *32 (Ohio Ct. App. Nov. 27, 1989). It was only after Atkins came down, and Hill was again assessed for intellectual disability in renewed state-court proceedings, that the Ohio courts reversed course. See Hill, 300 F.3d at 682 (remanding this case to the Ohio courts so that Hill could exhaust his Atkins claim, while recognizing that the "Ohio courts reviewing his case have [already] concluded that Danny Hill is retarded and voluminous expert testimony supported this conclusion" (citation omitted)). Yet the Ohio Court of Appeals does not attempt to address this highly relevant evidence. See Maj. Op. at 15.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Unfortunately, the majority papers over, when it does not outright ignore, the Ohio Court of Appeals's egregious mischaracterizations and omissions of probative favorable evidence. Like the Ohio courts, the majority flagrantly downplays the overwhelming evidence in Hill's juvenile records that sets out Hill's limitations in adaptive functioning. For example, the majority describes Hill's school records as merely "suggest[ing] that [Hill] struggled academically as a child." Maj. Op. at 13. But unanimous observations from teachers, social workers, and psychologists that Hill consistently performed far below his age-level in almost every academic arena do not constitute a "suggestion" of a deficit. They are uncontradicted evidence of a significant limitation. The majority admits that the Ohio Court of Appeals's "short summary of [Hill's school records]" omits evidence concerning Hill's skills in academics, self-direction, and self-care. Id. at 12. But again, it attempts to erase the significance of this error by portraying the evidence as only possibly "relevant to determining whether Hill had significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills." Id. at 14. That characterization cannot stand in the face of clearly established law that instructs us to rely on "the documentation and other evidence of [intellectual disability]" that has accumulated during the individual's first eighteen years when assessing intellectual functioning. Williams, 792 F.3d at 620 & n.4 (quoting Heller, 509 U.S. at 322) ("[E]vidence of intellectual disability from earlier in life is directly relevant to present-day intellectual disability determinations.").

The majority refuses to recognize the substantial effect of these errors on our determination of whether the Ohio Court of Appeals's conclusion that Hill did not have significant limitations in two or more adaptive skills was more than just incorrect but was unreasonable. Several courts have recognized that errors of this magnitude can fatally undermine the factfinding process, rendering the resulting factual finding unreasonable. See Taylor v. Maddox, 366 F.3d 992, 999–1001 (9th Cir. 2004) (holding that a state court's clear misapprehension or misstatement of the record that "goes to a material factual issue that is central to petitioner's claim" and a state court's "failure to consider and weigh relevant evidence" that is "highly probative and central to the petitioner's claim" can render "the resulting factual finding unreasonable"), abrogated on other grounds by Cullen v. Pinholster, 563 U.S. 170 (2011); Byrd v. Workman, 645 F.3d 1159, 1171–72 (10th Cir. 2011) (following Taylor); Gray v. Zook, 806 F.3d 783, 791 (4th Cir. 2015) ("When a state court apparently ignores a petitioner's properly presented evidence, its fact-finding process may lead to unreasonable determinations of fact under § 2254(d)(2)."); see also Miller-El, 537 U.S. at 346 (finding it concerning under § 2254(d)(2) that a "state court also had before it, and apparently ignored" probative evidence that was central to a petitioner's claim of a constitutional violation). The Ohio Court of Appeals did not just plainly misstate and grossly mischaracterize the record. Its misstatements and mischaracterizations are of highly probative evidence related to Hill's adaptive functioning, which is central to his Atkins claim. Furthermore, the Ohio Court of Appeals's treatment of the historical record and of Hill's functioning in prison contained inexcusable omissions of evidence that not only are inconsistent with its findings but also are "sufficient to support [Hill's Atkins] claim when considered in the context of the full record." Taylor, 366 F.3d at 1001, 1007–08. As detailed above, the Ohio courts' reliance on the conclusions of Drs. Olley and Huntsman cannot serve to mitigate or cure these errors.

The evidence that Hill is intellectually disabled is overwhelming. It is clear from the record that Hill was universally considered to be intellectually disabled and seriously lacking in adaptive skills by schoolteachers, administrators, social workers, psychologists, the juvenile court system, and even (previously) the Ohio Supreme Court. Hill consistently performed very poorly in school (functional academics); there was consistent documentation that he had trouble maintaining proper hygiene despite reminders (self-care); he had trouble making friends and responding appropriately to authority figures (social and communication); and he was described as a follower, easily led, and vulnerable to exploitation by adults (self-direction). The record shows that these deficits largely continued into adulthood, particularly with respect to self-care and functional academics. Nevertheless, the state courts and the experts they retained failed to grapple with this extensive social history, choosing instead to favor the accounts of prison guards and personal observations.

The Ohio courts' legal conclusions breach the most basic tenets of Atkins, and their factual findings cannot be sustained on this record. Atkins, on its most basic level, forbids the execution of persons who are intellectually disabled. It requires courts to look at all relevant evidence of intellectual disability—and certainly evidence of manifestations before the age of 18.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

This is not a case where evidence of intellectual disability comes out after conviction. Hill was diagnosed as intellectually disabled from a very young age. He attended special education classes. He could not be counted on to bathe. Yet, the Ohio courts were impressed by his ability to incriminate himself to the police and to rehash a scripted story in a cloak of competency. They valued the conflicting opinions of prison guards interacting with Hill in a highly structured setting over professional reports and diagnoses recorded over a lifetime. Even if Atkins alone poses no bar to offsetting adaptive deficiencies with adaptive strengths, the Ohio courts failed to grapple with the evidence in the record indicating that Hill's perceived strengths were actually weaknesses. As the Ohio Court of Appeals itself stated at the penalty phase, "The record is replete with competent, credible evidence which states that [Hill] has a diminished mental capacity. He is essentially illiterate, displays poor word and concept recognition and, allegedly, has deficient motor skills." Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *32. There is no getting around it—Hill is intellectually disabled. To deny the obvious is unreasonable. Thus, respectfully, I dissent.

B. Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

Because I believe that we should grant habeas relief on Hill's Atkins claim, I would pretermit Hill's claim of ineffective assistance by his Atkins counsel. However, because the majority reaches Hill's ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim, I write to express my views on its analysis. The district court held that Hill's ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim is barred by 28 U.S.C. § 2254(i), which prohibits a petitioner from seeking habeas relief because of the ineffectiveness of his counsel at a post-conviction proceeding. Hill, 2014 WL 2890416, at *52–53. At the heart of this issue is a deeply important constitutional question: whether petitioners bringing Atkins claims that arise after their initial appeals due to the retroactivity of Atkins have a Sixth Amendment right to the effective assistance of counsel. An answer in the affirmative would trump any statutory instruction that seemingly bars such a claim. The majority, in denying Hill's claim on the merits, decides not to resolve this issue. Maj. Op. at 23. However, I believe that the importance of the issue warrants addressing why we should conclude that Hill had the right to effective assistance of counsel during his Atkins hearing.

The Warden's argument and the district court's conclusion that § 2254(i) prevents Hill from bringing a habeas claim based on the ineffectiveness of his Atkins counsel rests on the foundation that Hill's Atkins hearing qualifies as a post-conviction proceeding. Thus, under the Supreme Court's general rule, Hill had "no constitutional right to an attorney" and consequently "cannot claim constitutionally ineffective assistance of counsel in such [a] proceeding[]." Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 752 (1991). However, in Hooks v. Workman, the Tenth Circuit, the only other circuit to review this issue, "concluded that defendants in Atkins proceedings have the right to effective counsel secured by the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments" even when the Atkins proceeding takes place after a defendant's conviction due to the retroactivity of Atkins. 689 F.3d 1148, 1183–84 (10th Cir. 2012). Consequently, the Tenth Circuit held that, in such circumstances, a defendant's ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim "[was] properly . . . subject to federal habeas review under 28 U.S.C. § 2254." Id. at 1174. I find the Tenth Circuit's reasoning to be persuasive. The Supreme Court's fundamental-fairness jurisprudence also mandates that we conclude that Hill's claim is cognizable under § 2254. When examined in the context of Supreme Court habeas and capital-punishment caselaw, Atkins should be read as establishing a special exception regarding the right to counsel for intellectual-disability determinations due to the high stakes of the penalty involved: the irrevocable taking of a person's life.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

First, as Hooks makes clear, the nature of an Atkins proceeding clearly compels a determination that the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of effective assistance of counsel attaches to the proceeding. For petitioners like Hill, an Atkins proceeding is "'postconviction' only in the strict chronological sense." Id. at 1183. Because Atkins was decided in 2002, after Hill had been convicted and sentenced in 1986, Hill's Atkins hearing was "'the first designated proceeding' at which he could raise a claim of mental retardation." Id. (quoting Martinez v. Ryan, 566 U.S. 1, 11 (2012)). That Hill had not and could not previously litigate his substantive constitutional right not to be executed due to his intellectual disability "underscores the importance of providing a capital defendant with the opportunity to fully present his constitutional issue, even in the postconviction context." State v. Lorraine, No. 2003-T-0159, 2005 WL 1208119, at *6 (Ohio Ct. App. May 20, 2005). Moreover, because the Atkins hearing was Hill's first time arguing the merits of his constitutional claim, Hill did not "have a brief from counsel or an opinion of the court" on the issue, rendering Hill "ill equipped to represent [himself]." Martinez, 566 U.S. at 11 (quoting Halbert v. Michigan, 545 U.S. 605, 617 (2005)).[14] Consequently, "the usual rationale for denying a right to counsel in postconviction proceedings is inapposite." Hooks, 689 F.3d at 1183.[15] In the death-penalty context, a defendant's first opportunity to argue that the State should not impose a capital sentence is always accompanied by the Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel. There is no reason why that should not be the case here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Although initiated by a civil petition in cases like Hill's, an Atkins claim is intimately associated with a capital criminal prosecution and its sentencing proceeding. Both the Supreme Court and the Sixth Circuit recognize that an Eighth Amendment prohibition on the execution of intellectually disabled persons imposes a substantive restriction on "the State's power to punish." Penry v. Lynaugh, 492 U.S. 302, 330 (1989), abrogated on other grounds by Atkins, 536 U.S. at 304; see Atkins, 536 U.S. at 321; Hill, 300 F.3d at 681–82. Because an Atkins hearing goes to the essential question of whether the State can impose the death penalty at all, it is "inextricably intertwined with sentencing" and therefore cannot simply be categorized as a civil proceeding. Hooks, 689 F.3d at 1184; see also Montgomery, 577 U.S. at 205–06; Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602, 608–09 n.4 (1993) (noting that "protections associated with criminal cases may apply to a [civil proceeding] if it is so punitive that the proceeding must reasonably be considered criminal"). And it is beyond question that an Atkins hearing is a critical stage of a criminal proceeding, holding "significant consequences for the accused." Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 696 (2002); Hooks, 689 F.3d at 1184 ("We are hard-pressed to imagine a more 'significant consequence[] for the accused' than a determination of whether the State has the power to take his life." (alteration in original) (quoting Bell, 535 U.S. at 696)). Thus, in his Atkins proceeding, Hill has the Sixth Amendment right to effective assistance of counsel guaranteed to all critical

[14]The trial court also suggested that Hill's "case may present a first time opportunity for an Ohio common pleas court to determine whether the Atkins decision bars the execution of a particular Death Row Inmate." R. 97 [disc 1] (Suppl. App.) (Page 177).

[15]I join the Tenth Circuit in querying "whether the retroactive applicability of Atkins to cases on collateral review . . . makes void, as a matter of law, any 'post conviction' character that an Atkins proceeding might have." Hooks, 689 F.3d at 1183–84 n.18; see also Montgomery v. Louisiana, 577 U.S. 190, 205 (2016) (noting "that the retroactive application of substantive rules does not implicate a State's weighty interests in ensuring finality of convictions and sentences" because "no resources marshaled by a State could preserve a conviction or sentence that the Constitution deprives the State of power to impose").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

stages of criminal proceedings, including sentencing proceedings. See Montejo v. Louisiana, 556 U.S. 778, 786 (2009); Gardner v. Florida, 430 U.S. 349, 358 (1977).

Additionally, the Fourteenth Amendment's fundamental-fairness jurisprudence compels us to conclude that Atkins hearings occurring due to retroactivity require effective assistance of counsel. Importantly, neither Martinez nor Coleman forecloses applying the Fourteenth Amendment's fundamental-fairness concerns to this issue. As Martinez notes, "Coleman v. Thompson, left open . . . a question of constitutional law" and "suggested, though without holding, that the Constitution may require States to provide counsel in initial-review collateral proceedings because 'in [these] cases . . . state collateral review is the first place a prisoner can present a challenge to his conviction.'" Martinez, 566 U.S. at 8 (second and third alterations in original) (quoting Coleman, 501 U.S. at 755). And Martinez declined to answer that constitutional question. Id. at 9.

As discussed above, Hill's Atkins posture is akin, but not identical, to an initial-review collateral proceeding. No Supreme Court caselaw explicitly precludes applying due-process considerations to this issue. In fact, the Supreme Court's Due Process jurisprudence implicitly and explicitly mandates that fundamental fairness requires the effective assistance of counsel as a procedural safeguard in Atkins proceedings, even if they occur after a petitioner's conviction and initial sentencing due to chronological happenstance. In assessing what due process requires for the post-conviction collateral proceedings at issue in Coleman, Murray v. Giarratano, 492 U.S. 1 (1989), and Pennsylvania v. Finley, the Supreme Court held that "the fundamental fairness mandated by the Due Process Clause does not require that the State supply a lawyer." 481 U.S. 551, 557 (1987). Unlike the discretionary post-conviction collateral proceedings at issue in those cases, "the Constitution requires state collateral review courts to give retroactive effect to [substantive rules]," which includes any procedural requirements, such as hearings, that "give[] effect" to the Supreme Court's "substantive holding." Montgomery, 577 U.S. at 200, 210. Unlike other post-conviction claims that states are allowed to bar, states are constitutionally required to provide hearings for non-frivolous Atkins claims. Unlike collateral attacks that attempt to "upset the prior determination of guilt," Finley, 481 U.S. at 555 (quoting Ross v. Moffit, 417 U.S. 600, 611 (1974)), an Atkins claim seeks to demonstrate that the imposed sentence is in fact void. See Montgomery, 577 U.S. at 203 ("[A] court has no authority to leave in place a conviction or sentence that violates a substantive rule, regardless of whether the conviction or sentence became final before the rule was announced."). Defendants like Hill are in a "fundamentally different position." Finley, 481 U.S. at 559. They seek to vindicate a constitutionally mandated right and to litigate their first opportunity to challenge the State's effort to deprive them of their life.

Due to Hill's unique position, at the very least, fundamental fairness mandates that he receives effective assistance of counsel. "[F]undamental fairness entitles indigent defendants to 'an adequate opportunity to present their claims fairly within the adversary system.'" Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68, 77 (1985) (quoting Ross, 417 U.S. at 612). "[T]he lodestar of any effort to devise a procedure must be the overriding dual imperative of providing redress for those with substantial claims and of encouraging accuracy in the factfinding determination." Ford, 477 U.S. at 417 (Marshall, J.) (plurality opinion). This is particularly so in the Eighth Amendment context where "[t]he stakes are high." Id.; see also id. at 425 (Powell, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment) ("Due process is a flexible concept, requiring only 'such procedural protections as the particular situation demands.'" (quoting Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 334 (1976))).

The nature of an Atkins hearing evinces a clear need for effective assistance of counsel. One reason is because of the penalty at issue. The Supreme Court has consistently recognized the "qualitative difference between death and other penalties calls for a greater degree of reliability when the death sentence is imposed." Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586, 604 (1978). In turn, the Court has held that determining "whether [a] petitioner should be executed at all," requires "heightened procedural requirements." Ford, 477 U.S. at 425 (Powell, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment); see Murray, 492 U.S. at 8–9 (noting that heightened protections are needed when a court and jury "decide the question[] of . . . punishment"). Among the myriad of procedural protections afforded to defendants in capital proceedings to ensure fairness and reliability, the most basic and fundamental is the right to effective counsel. As the Supreme Court explained in Powell v. Alabama, "[t]he right to be heard," especially for "those of feeble intellect," "would be, in many cases, of little avail if it did not comprehend the right to be heard by counsel." 287 U.S. 45, 68–69 (1932); see also Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 462–63 (1938) (stating that the right to counsel "embodies a realistic recognition of the obvious truth that the average defendant does not have the professional legal skill to protect himself when brought before a tribunal with power to take his life or liberty"). Without the assistance of counsel, in cases like Hill's, the defendant often remains unequipped to develop and litigate effectively the factual and legal basis for an Atkins claim and already is at a disadvantage due to confinement and intellectual disabilities. Under these conditions, when the defendant has the burden of proof, the fairness and reliability of an Atkins proceeding must be called into question. To hold that defendants do not have a right to counsel in an Atkins hearing, when it is the first opportunity to determine whether the State has the power to execute a petitioner under the applicable law, would require us to ignore the great weight of Supreme Court precedent that instructs us that a proceeding determining the irreversible punishment of death necessitates additional procedural protections. The loss of the right to counsel would ensure that "justice will not 'still be done.'" Johnson, 304 U.S. at 462 (citation omitted).

Second, a claim of intellectual disability makes defendants like Hill different from other petitioners, even other capital petitioners, because "some characteristics of [intellectual disability] undermine the strength of the procedural protections that [the Supreme Court's] capital jurisprudence steadfastly guards." Atkins, 536 U.S. at 317. Persons with intellectual disabilities "have diminished capacities to understand and process information, to communicate, . . . [and] engage in logical reasoning." Id. at 318. To force them to litigate their condition without the aid of counsel by definition leaves them subject to an increased risk of wrongful execution. See id. at 306–07 (noting that these "impairments can jeopardize the reliability and fairness of capital proceedings"). And any perceived competence could lead judges and juries to find a lack of a disability, just as the Ohio courts did with Hill. Furthermore, due to the infirmities of those who are intellectually disabled, the risk that they might be executed in violation of the Eighth Amendment is heightened if their counsel provides ineffective assistance. For an action in which the State's legitimacy must be unassailable, the failure to recognize a constitutional right to counsel in Atkins hearings occurring post-conviction would inflict grievous doubts on the legitimacy of the State to take the life of one of its citizens.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Whatever procedures a state devises to give effect to the Supreme Court's substantive holding in Atkins, the Supreme Court's reasoning in Atkins and its fundamental fairness jurisprudence already have established a constitutional floor, which includes effective assistance of counsel. Due to the nature of the penalty and the "special risk of wrongful execution" that intellectually disabled defendants face, Atkins, 536 U.S. at 321, the risk of a wrongful sentence is intolerably high without the assistance of counsel. That is a risk that the Due Process Clause cannot tolerate. And it is a risk that we, as a society, cannot tolerate. See Gardner, 430 U.S. at 357–58.

Following Hooks and based on the above discussion, it is clear that "the right to counsel flows directly from, and is a necessary corollary to, the clearly established law of Atkins." Hooks, 689 F.3d at 1184. I acknowledge, as does the Tenth Circuit, that the Supreme Court has never explicitly said that defendants have a right to counsel in Atkins proceedings or identified an Atkins proceeding as a critical stage. Id. But the Court's recognition in Atkins of the impairments caused by intellectual disability and their effects on the reliability and fairness of capital proceedings, as well as the Court's Due Process jurisprudence at the time of Atkins, dictate only one conclusion. In a proceeding in which one of our fundamental rights, the right to life, can be extinguished by the State, the Sixth Amendment and due process demand, at the very least, the right to effective assistance of counsel as a safeguard to ensure a court's determination in an Atkins proceeding is fundamentally fair. See id. at 1185. I see no other constitutionally permitted outcome.

"[F]undamental fairness is the central concern of the writ of habeas corpus." Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 697 (1984). In this context, not only would § 2554(i) curtail a constitutional right, but also it would run afoul of the central purpose of the constitutional writ that it governs. For these reasons, we should conclude that Hill had a right to effective assistance of counsel during his Atkins hearing and thus § 2254(i) does not bar his claim.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

IV. CONCLUSION

Long before the Supreme Court decided Atkins, teachers, administrators, psychologists, and even the Ohio courts all determined that Danny Hill is intellectually disabled. Voluminous records and observations detail Hill's significant struggles with academics, self-care, and other adaptive skills. At the time of Hill's sentencing, none of those determinations carried any constitutional significance in barring the State from imposing the death penalty as Hill's sentence for his conviction. But they mattered. That changed after Atkins held that the Eighth Amendment bars the execution of intellectually disabled defendants. Now their consequence also carried constitutional heft. Faced with a potential restriction on the ability of Ohio to execute Hill, the Ohio courts reversed course and heedlessly discounted or disregarded the historical evidence they once respected and considered. The question before us is whether this sea change was an unreasonable application of Atkins and resulted in an unreasonable factual determination. Somehow, the majority here answers no, brushing a thin veneer of deference over the Ohio courts' glaring omissions and mischaracterizations of the record and blatant alteration of Atkins's requirements. But the basic tenets of Atkins and the record evidence compel us not to discount or disregard the Ohio courts' unreasonable determinations. They matter. Respectfully, I dissent.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

APPENDIX

V. Suppression of Pretrial Statements to the Police

In addition to challenging his eligibility for the death penalty after Atkins, Hill raised several challenges to his conviction in his habeas petition. Because we remanded his case to the state court after Atkins was decided in 2002, we did not reach the merits of those claims. Hill v. Anderson, 300 F.3d 679 (6th Cir. 2002). We do so now and AFFIRM his conviction.

Hill contends that the Ohio courts unreasonably applied clearly established federal law in determining that Hill's statements to police were admissible. Hill maintains that his statements were "involuntary and false" because: his intellectual disability made him especially vulnerable to police coercion; his intellectual deficiencies were known by the police, including interrogators Sergeant Thomas Stewart, Sergeant Dennis Steinbeck, and his physically abusive uncle, Detective Morris Hill; the police made statements to Hill that led him to believe that denying guilt was "hopeless"; and Hill lacked the intellectual capacity to understand the legal consequences of the statements he made (and the police recorded) while he was at the Warren police station.

Because the Ohio courts rejected this claim on the merits as part of Hill's direct appeal, see Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 890-91; Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at 5-8, Hill must show that the state courts' decisions involved an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1). "[A]n unreasonable application of th[e Supreme Court's] holdings must be objectively unreasonable, not merely wrong; even clear error will not suffice." White v. Woodall, 134 S. Ct. 1697, 1702 (2014) (citation and quotation marks omitted).

In Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966), the Supreme Court held that "[a] suspect in custody must be advised . . .[,] 'prior to any questioning[,] that he has the right to remain silent, that anything he says can be used against him in a court of law, that he has the right to the presence of an attorney, and that if he cannot afford an attorney one will be appointed for him prior to any questioning if he so desires.'" Berghuis v. Thompkins, 560 U.S. 370, 380 (2010)

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(quoting Miranda, 384 U.S. at 479). This holding was necessitated by the Supreme Court's acknowledgement that "the coercion inherent in custodial interrogation blurs the line between voluntary and involuntary statements, and thus heightens the risk that an individual will not be accorded his privilege under the Fifth Amendment not to be compelled to incriminate himself." Dickerson v. United States, 530 U.S. 428, 434-35 (2000) (citation, quotation marks, and ellipses omitted). Thus, "[w]hen police ask questions of a suspect in custody without administering the required warnings, Miranda dictates that the answers received be presumed compelled and that they be excluded from evidence at trial in the State's case in chief." Oregon v. Elstad, 470 U.S. 298, 317 (1985); see also Lego v. Twomey, 404 U.S. 477, 487-88 (1972) ("[Miranda] excludes confessions flowing from custodial interrogations unless adequate warnings were administered and a waiver was obtained.").

In this case, it is undisputed that Hill was given Miranda warnings and signed a waiver prior to making the recorded statements that he sought to suppress at trial. Hill's challenge, then, is to the validity of that waiver. He argues that because his waiver was not knowing, intelligent, and voluntary, it was invalid.

A suspect may waive his Miranda rights only if "the waiver is made voluntarily, knowingly and intelligently." Moran v. Burbine, 475 U.S. 412, 421 (1986) (citation and quotation marks omitted).

> The inquiry has two distinct dimensions. First, the relinquishment of the right must have been voluntary in the sense that it was the product of a free and deliberate choice rather than intimidation, coercion, or deception. Second, the waiver must have been made with a full awareness of both the nature of the right being abandoned and the consequences of the decision to abandon it. Only if the totality of the circumstances surrounding the interrogation [reveals] both an uncoerced choice and the requisite level of comprehension may a court properly conclude that the Miranda rights have been waived.

Id. (citations and quotation marks omitted). For a waiver to be knowing and intelligent, the suspect must be "fully advised of [his] constitutional privilege[s]." Colorado v. Spring, 479 U.S. 564, 574 (1987). To be voluntary, a confession may not be "the product of coercion, either physical or psychological." Rogers v. Richmond, 365 U.S. 534, 540 (1961). However, "[p]loys to mislead a suspect or lull him into a false sense of security that do not rise to the level of compulsion or coercion to speak are not within Miranda's concerns." Illinois v. Perkins, 496 U.S. 292, 297 (1990); see, e.g., Oregon v. Elstad, 470 U.S. 298, 317 (1985) ("[T]he [Supreme] Court has refused to find that a defendant who confesses, after being falsely told that his codefendant has turned State's evidence, does so involuntarily.") (citation omitted).

"[C]oercive police activity is a necessary predicate to the finding that a confession is not 'voluntary . . . .'" Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 167 (1986). Although a suspect's mental condition may be a "significant factor in the 'voluntariness' calculus," that "mental condition, by itself and apart from its relation to official coercion, should [n]ever dispose of the inquiry into constitutional 'voluntariness.'"[11] Id. at 164.

On December 16, 1985, the Ohio state trial court held a hearing on Hill's motion to suppress his audio- and video-taped statements to the police.[12] At the suppression hearing, witnesses testified to the following facts.

On September 12, 1985, two days after Fife was attacked, Hill went to the Warren Police Department and approached Sergeant Stewart to talk about that "boy being beat up in the field." R. 28, PageID# 2748-49. Stewart, who was a friend of Detective Hill and had known (Danny) Hill since he was approximately six years old, agreed to talk to Hill in the "Narcotics Room." Id. at 2750-51, 2782. Stewart testified that Hill had come to the police station voluntarily, i.e., that no one had "brought him in," and Hill's testimony corroborated this assertion. Id. at 2751; R. 29, PageID# 3130.

Once in the Narcotics Room, Hill told Stewart that he had seen another boy, Reecie Lowery, riding the bike of the boy "who was beat up." R. 28, PageID# 2751-52. When Stewart asked Hill, "How do you know it's the boy's bike?", Hill responded, "I know it is." Id. at 2752.

[11]Under Supreme Court precedent, a person who meets the standard for intellectual disability may not be executed. As discussed extensively above, we find that Hill is intellectually disabled and is entitled to have the writ issue with respect to his sentence. However, the requirements for determining whether someone is intellectually disabled under Atkins and Lott are different from the requirements for determining whether a waiver is knowing and voluntary under Miranda. And a person who is intellectually disabled may still be able to knowingly and voluntarily waive his Miranda rights.

[12]The transcript of the suppression hearing can be found in the district court record at R. 28 and R. 29 in Hill v. Anderson, No. 4:96-cv-00795 (N.D. Ohio Jan. 28, 1997). Because the pagination in the original transcript is unclear, we will cite to the pagination used by the district court.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Hill then told Stewart about the bike's location and encouraged Stewart to "go out and get the bike" before Lowery put it back in the wooded field where Fife was attacked. Id. After Hill told Stewart that he was willing to show him where the bike was located, Stewart and Hill began talking about various persons, including Tim Collins and Tim Combs (Hill's co-defendant). Hill insinuated that both Collins and Combs liked boys and might have been the ones who attacked Fife. At some point during their talk, Hill mentioned that Fife was choked with his underwear. Id. at 2756-57.

Eventually, Stewart drove Hill to look for the bike, but because it was raining and visibility was poor, Stewart and Hill did not go to the wooded field. Instead, Hill showed Stewart where Combs lived. Id. at 2753-54. After dropping Hill off at his house, Stewart compiled a report that he shared with his fellow officers, including Sergeant Steinbeck. Id. at 2755, 2757-58.

The next day, September 13, 1985, Steinbeck went to Hill's home around 9:30 or 10:00 in the morning to follow-up on the information that Hill had given to Stewart. Steinbeck asked Hill to come talk to him at the police station and Hill agreed. Id. at 2762-63, 2881. Hill was driven to the police station in the front seat of Steinbeck's police cruiser and was not booked, fingerprinted, or placed under arrest. Steinbeck read Hill his Miranda rights aloud, asked Hill if he understood those rights, and had Hill sign a waiver of his Miranda rights before questioning Hill off and on for approximately three hours. Id. at 2863-64, 2882-84. During those three hours, Hill never asked for the questioning to stop, tried to leave, or asked to see an attorney. Id. at 2865-66, 2885-89. After talking to Hill, Steinbeck transcribed a copy of Hill's statement, which also included a recital of his Miranda rights. However, Hill did not sign the statement that day because Steinbeck had forgotten to ask him to do so after telling Hill he could go home with his mother. Id. at 2866-69, 2889-90.

On September 16, 1985, both Steinbeck and Detective Hill went to Hill's home, ostensibly to ask Hill to sign his statement from September 13 and to ask Hill's mother for a written statement regarding Hill's alleged alibi. After putting up some initial resistance to speaking to the police again, Hill, at the behest of his mother, agreed to come down to the police station, this time accompanied by his mother. Hill was not placed under arrest, booked, fingerprinted, or handcuffed. Id. at 2869-70, 2890-92, 2899-2901, 2930-32.

In the interrogation room, and apparently separated from his mother, Hill was verbally advised of his Miranda rights by Detective Hill. Id. at 2871, 2901-02, 2933. Hill indicated that he understood his rights. Id. at 2902. Although not initially present, Sergeant Stewart eventually encountered Sergeant Steinbeck and Detective Hill in the interrogation room with (Danny) Hill. Id. at 2758, 2872, 2908. At some point, officers told Hill they did not believe he was telling the truth, and Stewart told Hill that he needed to be honest if he had "anything to do with [Fife's murder]." Id. at 2872, 2909-10. Officers also told Hill that it would "benefit him" to tell them the truth, believing that Combs would likely blame the attack on Hill alone. Id. at 2909.

Apparently at Hill's request, Detective Hill was left alone with his nephew. According to (Danny) Hill, while he and Detective Hill were alone, Detective Hill "threw [him] against the wall," slapped him across the face, and told him that he "better tell" the police what happened. Id. at 2759, 2810-11, 2859, 2910, 2936-37, 2953. Hill also testified that his uncle kicked him under the table in order to prompt Hill to (1) consent to his statement being taped and (2) begin talking to police at the beginning of the taping.

Detective Hill, unsurprisingly, described the time he spent alone with his nephew very differently, testifying:

> At that point in time, you know, I set [sic] there, and I tried to let Danny know that wasn't anyone [sic] going to hurt him. No one was going to do anything to him, but [I also told him] the fact that I kn[e]w that he was involved in the homicide, and I wanted to get the truth out of him. At that point in time, he looked at me and tears started to come from his eyes. When tears started coming from his eyes, he told me . . . , "I was there. I was in the field when he got murdered." When the young Fife kid got murdered.[13]

R. 28, PageID# 2937. When Detective Hill emerged from the interrogation room a few minutes later, he told the other officers that Hill was going to cooperate and tell them what happened. At the time Detective Hill made this announcement, Hill was either crying or had tears in his eyes. Id. at 2759, 2811, 2839, 2873, 2937-38.

[13]Detective Hill also denied kicking his nephew.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

At Stewart's suggestion, Hill gave the police permission to tape his statement. Id. at 2759-60, 2873-76, 2912. Sergeant Steinbeck, Sergeant Stewart, and Detective Hill were all present when Hill gave this initial audiotaped statement, as well as when Hill gave a second statement that was videotaped by Detective James Teeple. Id. at 2874-75. According to Stewart, Hill was not crying during the taped statement itself. About halfway through the audio-taping, the police asked Hill to sign the statement he had given to Steinbeck on September 13. Id. at 2903. Hill was also read his Miranda rights once more at some point prior to giving the second, videotaped statement. Id. at 2876, 2923, 2963-64. While giving his statements, Hill never asked to stop the interrogation, requested an attorney, or asked to leave. Sometime after the interrogation, Hill was placed under arrest based on the details included in his statements. Id. at 2776.

When asked questions about the nature of the interrogation generally, both Detective Hill and Sergeant Stewart denied that the police threatened or made promises to Hill during the interrogation, and asserted that Hill never asked for a lawyer. Id. at 2760, 2772, 2935, 2938. When prompted by the prosecutor about Hill's previous encounters with the police, Detective Hill estimated that by the date of the September 16, 1985 interrogation, Hill had been arrested by the Warren Police Department "[a]pproximately 15 to 20 times." Id. at 2929. Both Detective Hill and Sergeant Steinbeck testified that they had arrested Hill on prior occasions and had read him his Miranda rights "[m]any times." Id. at 2876, 2928-29. And two of the prosecution's exhibits at the suppression hearing included a waiver form and voluntary statement—both of which included a recitation of Miranda rights—signed by Hill on March 6, 1984, which was approximately a year-and-a-half before the September 16, 1985 interrogation.

In adjudicating this claim, the state appellate court rejected Hill's argument that his waiver of his Miranda rights was invalid. Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *5. Acknowledging that it needed to make "discrete inquiries" as to both the "knowing and intelligent" and "voluntary" aspects of Hill's waiver, the appellate court considered these criteria in turn.

With regard to the knowing and intelligent factor, the appellate court noted that although the "lack of mental acuity . . . can interfere with an accused's ability to give a knowing and intelligent waiver," there is no bright line rule for distinguishing between "those capable of an intelligent waiver from those who lack the ability to do so." Id. The appellate court also acknowledged the Supreme Court's admonition in Connelly that a suspect's mental condition, by itself, does not necessarily prevent him from effectively waiving his Miranda rights. Id. In analyzing the facts of Hill's case specifically, the appellate court opined:

> [Hill] admittedly suffers from some mental retardation (although the evidence presented is divergent as to the severity of the handicap) and has had concomitant difficulties in language comprehension throughout his formal education. [Hill] is categorized as being mildly to moderately retarded. Evidence was presented which indicates that appellant is illiterate and this court acknowledges that literal recognition of each word contained in the "Miranda Rights" and/or "waiver form" may be beyond [Hill's] mental comprehensive capacity.
> However, from the record here, particularly during the suppression hearing, this court is also aware (as was the trial court below) of the long and multi-faceted exposure [Hill] has had with the state's criminal justice system. The evidential table in this case also demonstrates that [Hill] exhibited a functional capacity to understand these rights, including the right to appointed counsel. This was evident from the exchange that occurred during the audio and video tape sessions. The officers who interrogated [Hill] had either significant contact with him and/or had questioned him on prior occasions and had developed informed estimates as to [Hill's] ability to understand, albeit in a vernacular sense, all aspects of the Miranda warning. The audio and video tapes of [Hill's] interrogations disclose that [Hill] was capable of understanding the questions put to him and of responding intelligently.
> Moreover, the behavior of [Hill] during the police investigation belies the notion that he was no more than a malleable victim of police suggestion. [Hill] possessed the requisite intelligence to implicate other persons in the murder and was capable of modifying his story when inconsistencies were demonstrated to him. Additionally, [Hill] qualified and corrected the police officers' misstatements of the factual scenario which he had related to them. He also was able to follow "verbal concepting," displaying an understanding of the officers' direction of questioning and the dialogue utilized during the interrogation.

Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *6. Based on the aforementioned concerns, and citing the Supreme Court's decisions in Miranda and Lego in support, the state appellate concluded that Hill's waiver was knowing and intelligent. Id.

In addressing voluntariness, the appellate court rejected Hill's argument that his waiver was involuntary "as a result of his mental [infirmities] and the coercive action of the police." Id. First, the court noted that Hill's IQ was not necessarily dispositive as to whether he was incapable of voluntarily waiving his Miranda rights, particularly since he had been read those rights in his many prior encounters with police. Id. at 6-7. In addressing Hill's argument that his intellectual deficiencies made him vulnerable to the police officers' "psychological ploys," the appellate court noted that Hill was read his Miranda rights multiple times on September 13 and 16, 1985, and "appeared articulate and coherent as he answered questions." Id. at *8. Finally, in concluding that the record was "devoid of evidence indicating that the custodial interrogation of [Hill] violated his constitutional rights," the appellate court reasoned that because (among other things): (1) Hill originally approached the police on September 12 of his own accord; (2) Hill was read his Miranda rights numerous times without ever being placed under arrest; and (3) "[t]he recorded conversations [between Hill and the police] d[id] not suggest the use of any improprieties by the police," Hill's Miranda claim was without merit. Id. at 9-10.

The Ohio Supreme Court ruled similarly, stating: "Upon a careful review of the record, we can discern no coercive or overreaching tactics employed by the police during questioning." Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 890. In making this finding, the court explicitly acknowledged that before Hill turned 18, Detective Hill "would at times physically discipline [his nephew] at the request of [Hill's] mother."[14] Id. In fact, the court appeared to credit Detective Hill's version of events—i.e., that "[Hill] stated to [Detective] Hill that he was 'in the field behind Valu King when the young Fife boy got murdered.'" Id. The court also found, based on the Supreme Court's ruling in Connelly and Hill's "his prior dealings with the criminal process as a juvenile," that Hill's "mental aptitude did not undercut the voluntariness of his statements or his waiver of Miranda rights." Id. Finally, the Ohio Supreme Court rejected Hill's contention that his waiver was rendered involuntary by virtue of the police's tactics during the interrogation. Id. at 891 ("Upon a careful review of the testimony and the audiotape and videotape statements, we do not find that the interrogation tactics used by the police officers, even in light of [Hill's] mental capacity, rendered the statements involuntary, or that the officers improperly induced [Hill] to make incriminating statements.").

[14]Hill was 18 at the time of the September 16, 1985 interrogation, and Detective Hill testified at the suppression hearing that he had not physically disciplined his nephew since at least six to eight months prior. R. 28, PageID# 2976.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Reviewing the state courts' decisions under § 2254(d)(1), the district court found that Hill's arguments that he should be granted habeas relief on this claim were without merit. Hill v. Anderson, No. 4:96-cv-00795, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23332, at 78-92 (N. D. Ohio Sept. 29, 1999).

Applying AEDPA's deferential review standard, we ask whether the state courts unreasonably applied Supreme Court precedent in finding that Hill's waiver of his Miranda rights was voluntary, knowing, and intelligent. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1). Connelly tells us that a compromised mental state does not, "by itself and apart from its relation to official coercion," vitiate a defendant's ability to waive his Miranda protections. See 479 U.S. at 164. And Miller v. Fenton, 474 U.S. 104 (1985), directs us to treat state-court findings on "subsidiary questions, such as the length and circumstances of the interrogation, the defendant's prior experience with the legal process, and familiarity with the Miranda warnings" as "conclusive" on habeas review if they are "fairly supported in the record." Id. at 117.

In light of these admonitions, the state courts' conclusion that Hill effectively waived his Miranda rights was not "unreasonable" as that term has been defined by the Supreme Court. The state courts could plausibly credit Detective Hill's account of his interrogation techniques over Hill's allegations of physical abuse to find a lack of undue coercion and could point to Hill's prior experiences with the criminal justice system and the Miranda process as evidence that Hill understood the nature of his waiver.

Although the required deference to the state courts' finding compels our holding on this issue, we wish to express our consternation with this result. The record contains ample evidence demonstrating that Hill's waiver was neither voluntary nor knowing. Hill was interrogated, in private, by a police-officer uncle who admitted to disciplining Hill physically in the past, and who allegedly "'threw [Hill] against the wall,' slapped him across the face, and told him that he 'better tell' the police what happened" during the course of the interrogation. Supra p. 28. Hill's uncle then purportedly kicked Hill under the table to induce his consent to a videotaped confession and kicked Hill again when he was reluctant to begin the confession. When considered alongside Hill's intellectual disabilities, Detective Hill's behavior raises grave questions about the voluntariness of Hill's waiver.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And while Hill was certainly exposed several times to Miranda warnings, we are not convinced that he ever registered the warnings' meaning. During the suppression hearing the state trial court held in 1985, Hill's attorney asked Hill a number of basic questions about his understanding of Miranda:

> Q: [W]hat are your Constitutional Rights?
> A: I don't know.
> Q: What's the word constitution mean?
> A: I don't know.
> Q: What's the word appointed—
> A: When you point at somebody.
> Q: You point at somebody?
> A: Yeah.
>
> . . . .
>
> Q: When the police talked to you, did you go ahead and talk to them?
> A: Yes.
> Q: Why?
> A: They police. [sic] You're supposed to talk to them.
> Q: You have to talk to them?
> A: Yep!
> Q: Do you know what's an attorney? [sic]
> A: I don't know.

R.29, PageID# 3114-16.

It is difficult, in light of this testimony, to accept the state courts' determination that Hill "exhibited a functional capacity to understand [his] rights." Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *6. Nevertheless, because of the procedural posture of this case, we are compelled to affirm the district court.

Accordingly, we AFFIRM the district court's denial of habeas relief as to his suppression claim.

VI. Inflammatory Statements by the Prosecutor During Hill's Bench Trial

Hill also makes a prosecutorial misconduct claim based on the prosecutor's allegedly inflammatory statements to the three-judge panel that convicted Hill and sentenced him to death.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

This claim is governed by § 2254(d)(1). As indicated above, Hill must show that the state court's decision "involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1).

The full-text of the "inflammatory statements" challenged by Hill may be found in his opening brief. Some of those comments included:

- A reference to Raymond Fife being a 12-year-old boy from the community who had a "right to live," a right to "be in school," and a right "to be here today";
- Statements that Hill was an "animal," who "destroyed and devoured" Fife, and "would make the Marquis de Sade proud";
- A statement that "you don't necessarily have fingerprints on everything" with reference to the apparent lack of Fife's fingerprints on his bike;
- The prosecutor's opinion about which expert witness on a particular issue was "more qualified";
- A statement that Detective Hill did not want to testify against his nephew;
- A reference to Hill being a "poor, dumb boy" who nonetheless violently raped two women and therefore "relishe[d] . . . inflicting pain and torture [on] other human beings";
- A statement that Hill put Fife through a "living hell," that Fife "had no justice while he was living," and that justice demanded a guilty verdict;
- The prosecutor's opinion that defense counsel had not shown "any mitigating factors" and that the aggravated factors "clearly outweigh[ed] the absence of any mitigation";
- Two more references to Hill's history of sexual assault, which the prosecution argued belied the idea that Hill had "difficulty with his motors skills";
- A rambling soliloquy about how the prosecution would have liked to called Fife as a witness so he could describe the beating, strangulation, and sexual assault he endured, but Fife was "not here to testify about that thanks to [Hill]." The prosecutor also stated that Fife, if alive, would have testified about how he missed his family and his friends;
- A reference to Hill as "this manifestation of evil, this anomaly to mankind, this disgrace to mankind."

In adjudicating this claim as part of Hill's direct appeal, the Ohio Supreme Court (1) noted that trial counsel never objected to any of the "complained-of comments," (2) opined that those comments were therefore subject to plain error review only, and (3) concluded that the prosecutor's statements amount to "neither prejudicial error nor plain error[.]" Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 898. The Ohio Supreme Court also noted that in Ohio, "[courts] indulge in the usual presumption that in a bench trial in a criminal case the court considered only the relevant, material, and competent evidence in arriving at its judgment unless it affirmatively appears to the contrary." Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 898 (quoting State v. White, 239 N.E.2d 65, 70 (1968)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The district court rejected Hill's prosecutorial misconduct claim as well, reasoning that:

> [Hill's] case was tried before a three judge panel [that] presumably was able to remember the evidence presented at trial and not be misled by any of the prosecutor's statements. Most of the statements were harmless . . . . Three judges should have been able to disregard any intended undue influence.[15]

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23332, at *110. Accordingly, the district court concluded that the Ohio Supreme Court's determination that "no prejudicial or plain error occurred . . . was not an unreasonable application of clearly established law." Id. at 110-11.

In assessing whether the Ohio Supreme Court's decision involved an unreasonable application of federal law, the relevant Supreme Court holding is the Court's decision in Darden v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 168, 181 (1986), which held that "a prosecutor's improper comments will be held to violate the Constitution only if they 'so infected the trial with unfairness as to make the resulting conviction a denial of due process.'" Parker v. Matthews, 576 U.S. 37, 45 (2012) (quoting Darden, 477 U.S. at 181). The Supreme Court has also held that "the Darden standard is a very general one, leaving courts 'more leeway in reaching outcomes in case-by-case determinations.'" Id. at 48 (citation, quotation marks, and ellipses omitted).

In Darden, the Supreme Court found that comments similar to some of those made by the prosecutor in this case—particularly allusions to the death penalty and the defendant being an "animal"—were improper. 477 U.S. at 179-80. Those comments, unlike the comments in this case, were made before a jury, not a three-judge panel. Id. at 170-71. Nonetheless, the Supreme Court noted that these improper statements did not "manipulate or misstate the evidence, [or] implicate other specific rights of the accused such as the right to counsel or the right to remain silent." Id. at 182.

[15]The state appellate court, in adjudicating this claim, similarly noted that although some of the prosecutor's comments would have "perhaps [been] prejudicially erroneous in a jury trial, [that] was not so [in Hill's case]." Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at *15.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In this case, it is clear that the prosecutor's comments were emotionally charged and designed to paint Hill in a bad light. However, it does not appear that they misstated the evidence in the case or implicated Hill's constitutional rights. Further, any efforts to play on the emotions of the three-judge panel would likely have been futile. Although they may not adopt a presumption as strong as the one "indulged" by the Ohio courts, federal courts similarly presume that a judge, as the trier of fact, can readily identify credible evidence, United States v. Thomas, 669 F.3d 421, 425 (4th Cir. 2012), give proper weight to the evidence, Caban v. United States, 728 F.2d 68, 75 (2d Cir. 1984), and understand what law is relevant to his or her deliberations, United States v. Curtis, 782 F.2d 593, 599 (6th Cir. 1986). And Hill has put forth no evidence indicating that the three-judge panel that tried his case was incapable of discerning what constitutes admissible evidence and parsing such evidence out from any inflammatory or irrelevant[16] comments by the prosecutor.[17] For these reasons, we conclude that the decision by the Ohio Supreme Court was not an unreasonable application of clearly established law.

We AFFIRM the district court's denial of habeas relief as to Hill's prosecutorial misconduct claim.

VII. The Trial Court's Failure to Hold a Pretrial Competency Hearing

Lastly, Hill argues that the trial court's failure to inquire about Hill's competency denied him a fair trial under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Here, the term "trial court" refers to the court that tried Hill's underlying offenses in 1985 and 1986.

This claim is governed by § 2254(d)(1). As indicated above, the Supreme Court has held that to obtain relief under § 2254(d)(1), the petitioner "must show that the state court's ruling on the claim being presented in federal court was so lacking in justification that there was an error

[16]For example, the three-judge panel disclaimed any reliance on Hill's "prior crimes . . . in reaching its verdict." See Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 893.

[17]Hill's reference to a single line in the panel's opinion that referred to Hill and Combs' "blood lust characterized by a series of acts of torture, rape, and murder," does not change this conclusion. The rest of the opinion describes Fife's injuries, and the means by which they were inflicted (based on the evidence at trial), in great detail. The opinion also indicates that the judges were struck by the "total lack of remorse" shown by Hill appearing at the police station to seek a reward after Fife's death. Looking at the document as a whole, there is no indication that the comment with which Hill takes issue was derived from the prosecutor's statements rather than the judges' own assessments of the offenses.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

well understood and comprehended in existing law beyond any possibility for fairminded disagreement." Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 103 (2011). In assessing competence, the relevant question is whether the defendant's "mental condition is such that he lacks the capacity to understand the nature and object of the proceedings against him, to consult with counsel, and to assist in preparing his defense." Indiana v. Edwards, 554 U.S. 164, 170 (2008). If the defendant's mental condition meets this description, the courts may not try him.[18] Id.

Hill maintains that because the trial court knew that he had "limitations in vocabulary, ability to calculate, and ability to draw" and "could not recognize or understand a majority of the words on the Miranda waiver form," the trial court should have "conduct[ed] further inquiry into [Hill's] competency to stand trial." Hill's Br. at 124-25. With regard to this final issue, Hill requests that this Court determine "not whether the state court was unreasonable in finding Danny competent to stand trial, but whether it was unreasonable under Pate[19] and Drope[20] not to make such an inquiry in the first instance." Id. at 124. Hill also argues, with no elaboration and minimal citation to the record,[21] that the Ohio Supreme Court "unreasonably applied Pate and Drope" in determining that Hill was competent to stand trial. Id. at 125.

The Warden, for his part, asserts that "[a]lthough Hill is intellectually limited, his demeanor at trial was such that the trial court had no reason to sua sponte assess Hill for competence to stand [trial]." The Warden also argues that:

> The trial record gives every indication that Hill was compliant, cooperative and appropriately attentive to the proceedings. Moreover, the trial judge had ample opportunity to assess Hill's ability to navigate through the trial proceedings, where Hill testified extensively during a pre-trial suppression hearing, and also had a direct colloquy with the trial court for acceptance of the jury waiver. In [18] Again, our conclusion that Hill is intellectually disabled and thus ineligible for execution under Atkins does not mean that Hill was incompetent to stand trial or that the trial court should have presumed his incompetence and ordered a competency hearing sua sponte. The two inquiries are different, and even Atkins recognizes that "[m]entally retarded persons frequently . . . are competent to stand trial." 536 U.S. at 318.

[19] Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375 (1966).

[21] This issue occupies three pages in Hill's opening brief and just over a page in his reply brief. The only record citation in the opening brief seeks to demonstrate that Hill "could not recognize or understand a majority of the words on the Miranda waiver form."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

> addition, none of the three mental health experts who testified for the defense at trial expressed a concern about Hill's competence to stand trial.

Warden's Br. at 97. Hill's reply brief does not address these contentions.

Neither the state appellate court nor the Ohio Supreme Court opinions from Hill's direct appeal noted Hill's competency argument as one of his nineteen assignments of error and twenty-five propositions of law, respectively. See generally State v. Hill, 595 N.E.2d 884 (Ohio 1992); State v. Hill, Nos. 3720, 3745, 1989 WL 142761 (Ohio Ct. App. Nov. 27, 1989). Instead, the only similar claims addressed by these courts pertained to Hill's arguments that he could not knowingly and voluntarily waive his right to counsel or his right to a jury trial due to his alleged intellectual disability. See, e.g., Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 890-91, 895; Hill, 1989 WL 142761, at 3, 5-7, 13-14. The district court found that Hill raised the issue of competency only under state law, not federal law, and that Hill did not raise the competency claim under federal law until filing for state post-conviction relief. Hill, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23332, at 92-93. On this basis, the district court concluded that Hill's competency claim was procedurally defaulted. Id. at 93-94 (citing State v. Hill, No. 94-T-5116, 1995 WL 418683 (Ohio Ct. App. June 16, 1995)). The Warden argues that even if Hill's claim was not procedurally defaulted, it fails on the merits. We agree.

On December 16, 1985, the trial court held a hearing on Hill's motion to suppress his statements to the police. Defense counsel called Hill as a witness to testify with respect to "the circumstances under which [he] gave statements to the police department." R. 29, PageID# 3101. In response to the trial court's questions, Hill indicated that he understood the purpose and nature of the hearing. Id. at 3103-04. He went on to testify about the means by which he arrived at the police station, as well as his inability to leave police custody prior to the arrival of his mother on Friday, September 13, 1985. On Monday, September 16, 1984, Hill returned to the police station at his mother's behest with his uncle, Detective Hill, and another police officer, Sergeant Steinbeck. As discussed earlier, Hill testified that while he and Detective Hill were alone, Detective Hill threw Hill against the wall, slapped him, and told him to tell the police what had happened. Hill also claimed that after being physically abused by his uncle, he told the police what they wanted to hear because he was afraid of both Detective Hill and the other officers. Id. at 3114, 3118-19.

Defense counsel, for his part, attempted to demonstrate that Hill could neither read nor write and that Hill signed the Miranda waiver without understanding its contents or knowing what it meant; meanwhile, the prosecutor attempted to demonstrate that Hill had been to the Warren police department many times before based on theft-related crimes and was therefore familiar with the department's Miranda form. Id. at 3107-09, 3115, 3121-23, 3152-53, 3155. On cross-examination, Hill testified that he signed the Miranda waiver because the police told him to do so. Id. at 3135-37. Hill's testimony ended following questions from the trial court about Hill's alleged physical abuse at the hands of Detective Hill.

Hill appeared before the trial court once more on January 7, 1986, this time to waive his right to a jury trial. See Hill, 595 N.E.2d at 889. The trial court's colloquy with Hill, which was designed to determine whether Hill's waiver was knowing and voluntary, included an explanation of the jury selection system, the role of the jury, the jury waiver's effect on some of Hill's pending motions, defense counsel's possible motives for seeking to waive Hill's right to a jury trial, and the differences between a jury and three-judge panel in terms of number of persons, familiarity with the law and the facts of the case, and demographic composition. The trial court read the waiver aloud to Hill and suggested the Hill go over the waiver with his attorney. Waiver of Jury Trial Hr'g Tr. at 10-11.[22] Hill indicated that he had discussed the issue of waiver with both his attorney and his mother, and there was a 25-minute recess in which the attorney and Hill's mother apparently discussed the waiver with him further. Id. at 5-6. After the recess, Hill affirmatively stated that he wanted to be tried by the three-judge panel. Id. at 12.

A review of Hill's testimony during the December 16, 1985, suppression hearing reveals that Hill claimed to understand the nature of the hearing and was able to answer questions posed by the prosecutor, defense counsel, and the trial court. Hill stated more than once when he did not understand or did not know the answer to a question, either on his own or with attorney prompting. He also appeared to understand the role of the trial judge. Hill's interactions with the trial court at the January 7, 1986 hearing on his waiver of jury trial also failed to raise any red flags regarding competence. Although the trial court did most of the talking, Hill did not express any confusion about the nature of the waiver, and was given an opportunity to go over the considerations discussed by the trial court with his attorney and mother before and during the hearing. After Hill conferred with his attorney, the following exchange took place:

[22]The transcript of the jury waiver hearing can be found in the district court record at R. 30 in Hill v. Anderson, No. 4:96-cv-00795 (N.D. Ohio Jan. 28. 1997).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

> COURT: All right. Danny, you've been talking with your lawyer now, have you not, for the last 25 minutes or so?
> DEFENDANT HILL: Yeah.
> COURT: And did he go over this matter of a jury trial with you?
> DEFENDANT HILL: Yeah.
> COURT: And you want to tell me now what decision you've made after talking this over.
> DEFENDANT HILL: I want to have—
> COURT: What do you want to do? Who do you want to try it? Three judges—> DEFENDANT HILL: Three judges.
> COURT: —or do you want the jury?
> DEFENDANT HILL: You.
> COURT: I hope you understand—you mean myself and two other judges?
> DEFENDANT HILL: (Nods head affirmatively.)

Id. At no point during the hearing did Hill behave in a manner, or make a statement indicating, that he did not understand the nature of the waiver.

On this record, there is no indication that Hill did not understand the nature of the proceedings against him or that he could not consult with defense counsel to assist in his case. See Edwards, 554 U.S. at 170. Although Hill is correct that the record suggests that he was functionally illiterate at the time of the suppression hearing, Hill cites no authority for the proposition that trial courts should equate illiteracy to incompetence. He also cites no authority for the proposition that because there were other signs that he was intellectually limited, i.e., his limited vocabulary or "ability to draw similarities," the trial court should have doubted his competence to stand trial and ordered a competency hearing sua sponte. As indicated above, the trial court had at least two opportunities to observe Hill and interact with him directly, and these incidents did not suggest that Hill was incompetent to stand trial under Pate, Drope, or the more recent Supreme Court case, Edwards.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

For the aforementioned reasons, we AFFIRM the district court's denial of habeas relief as to Hill's due process claim.

Good morning everyone,
I just wanted to share that our AGO Softball Team competed hard Friday afternoon and defeated the St. Louis County Prosecutor's Office in our first game. Unfortunately, we fell just short in the championship game to the Eastern District of MO US Attorney's Office. I was real proud of the squad that we were able to put together at the last minute on Friday and how hard everyone played in the blinding sun and dead heat.
A special shout-out goes out to those who participated alongside me - Jason Lewis, Verdina Pilipovic, Megen Campbell, Michael Schwalbert and his wife Jessica, former intern Jeff Suddy, Mik Ebert, and Cris Stevens. Thanks again to Rachael Houser for ordering new shirts. I hope that next year we can come out in greater numbers and take back the title!

Until next year, thanks.

All,
Tomorrow evening, the Missouri Attorney General's Office will play in a round-robin softball tournament against the Federal Public Defender's Office, St. Louis County Prosecutor's Office, U.S. Attorneys' Offices in the Eastern District of Missouri and Southern District of Illinois, and the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's Office.

Unfortunately, I have received a large amount of cancellations this afternoon. So, in order to avoid having to forfeit, I am once again putting out a call for people to play.

If you have not attended in the past, it is a great time in a relaxed atmosphere and a good opportunity to support the office and get to know your coworkers. We had a great turnout two years ago with players of all skill levels and spectators.

All are welcome to attend and cheer us on, but if you are interested in playing and have not already responded to me today, please let me know. Please email me separately without replying all, as this is being sent to the entire St. Louis. If not, no need to send regrets. If any Section Chiefs are able to help recruit, I would greatly appreciate it.

If you have any questions, there are more details below, or feel free to contact me directly. Thank you!

Tim

Softball tournament tonight is postponed due to rain.

We will play next Friday, August 20th at 4:00pm at Wilmore Park

If you are now able or unable to play, please let me know as soon as possible so we can determine if we will have enough to play. Remember, we want to win, but all skill levels are welcome and we would love to have you come out.

Thanks,

Happy Friday, everyone. A few updates. Apologies for all of the emails.

1. Softball Tournament is tentative at this point due to all of the rain and more expected this evening. The organizer is waiting to hear from the Parks Department as to whether we can play. I will send a follow-up email either way to let you all know. If we do play, please try to arrive by 4:00pm. We will have a first-round bye so I don't expect to play until 4:30pm, but there is a chance that some offices, perhaps those with a history of not showing up to court, may not show up to play, so we could play sooner.
2. If you ordered merchandise, it is available for pickup from Rachael Houser's office. Please go get it this morning or this afternoon.

Thanks!

All,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Tomorrow is the day! This casual event is open to both attorneys and support staff (so long as your schedule accommodates), and we would love to see as many people as possible come out. As of now, we have 11 people committed to playing, but we could definitely use more. So if you are on the fence, I urge you to come by even if you are in as bad of shape as I am currently. Especially if you identify as female, your presence would be greatly appreciated, as 4 females are required in the field at all times and the batting order must alternate men and women. If you have not already, please let me know if you are able to play!

If you have a ball glove or bat, please bring it with you. Parking is available in the park and also directly across Hampton on the side of Schnucks. I would encourage you to patronize the store if possible and put the receipt on your dashboard. Please do not park in the Walgreens lot.

If you ordered a t-shirt through the AGO Pop-Up Shop that Rachael Houser so graciously organized, those will arrive in the St. Louis office tomorrow morning after Rachael picks them up. If you did not order one, I would suggest wearing the blue AGO t-shirts we wore last time (pictured below) or any other shirt with a similar color.

There is a good possibility that it rains and storms tomorrow, unfortunately, so if the tournament is canceled, I will inform everyone as soon as I know, but I would still plan on playing at this point.

Any questions, please feel free to reach out!

Thanks,
Tim Weaks

Friday, August 13, 2021 at 4:00pm, Wilmore Park (Hampton & Gravois, STL City) - Following last year's cancellation due to COVID, the Missouri Attorney General's Office will fight to defend its title against the likes of the Federal Public Defender's Office, St. Louis County Prosecutor's Office, U.S. Attorneys' Offices in the Eastern District of Missouri and Southern District of Illinois, and the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's Office in a round-robin softball tournament.

We will likely order new shirts this year featuring the logo above. More details to come about those from either myself or Rachael Houser, but please let either of us know if you are interested in one.

My apologies if you have already received an email about the tournament from either me or your section chief.

Thanks!

Subject: RE: 2021 Prosecutors' Softball Challenge - Friday, August 20, 2021

All,
Tomorrow evening, the Missouri Attorney General's Office will play in a round-robin softball tournament against the Federal Public Defender's Office, St. Louis County Prosecutor's Office, U.S. Attorneys' Offices in the Eastern District of Missouri and Southern District of Illinois, and the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's Office.

Unfortunately, I have received a large amount of cancellations this afternoon. So, in order to avoid having to forfeit, I am once again putting out a call for people to play.

If you have not attended in the past, it is a great time in a relaxed atmosphere and a good opportunity to support the office and get to know your coworkers. We had a great turnout two years ago with players of all skill levels and spectators.

All are welcome to attend and cheer us on, but if you are interested in playing and have not already responded to me today, please let me know. Please email me separately without replying all, as this is being sent to the entire St. Louis. If not, no need to send regrets. If any Section Chiefs are able to help recruit, I would greatly appreciate it.

If you have any questions, there are more details below, or feel free to contact me directly. Thank you!

Tim

Softball tournament tonight is postponed due to rain.

We will play next Friday, August 20th at 4:00pm at Wilmore Park

If you are now able or unable to play, please let me know as soon as possible so we can determine if we will have enough to play. Remember, we want to win, but all skill levels are welcome and we would love to have you come out.

Thanks,
Tim Weaks

Happy Friday, everyone. A few updates. Apologies for all of the emails.

1. Softball Tournament is tentative at this point due to all of the rain and more expected this evening. The organizer is waiting to hear from the Parks Department as to whether we can play. I will send a follow-up email either way to let you all know. If we do play, please try to arrive by 4:00pm. We will have a first-round bye so I don't expect to play until 4:30pm, but there is a chance that some offices, perhaps those with a history of not showing up to court, may not show up to play, so we could play sooner.
2. If you ordered merchandise, it is available for pickup from Rachael Houser's office. Please go get it this morning or this afternoon.

Thanks!

All,
Tomorrow is the day! This casual event is open to both attorneys and support staff (so long as your schedule accommodates), and we would love to see as many people as possible come out. As of now, we have 11 people committed to playing, but we could definitely use more. So if you are on the fence, I urge you to come by even if you are in as bad of shape as I am currently. Especially if you identify as female, your presence would be greatly appreciated, as 4 females are required in the field at all times and the batting order must alternate men and women. If you have not already, please let me know if you are able to play!

If you have a ball glove or bat, please bring it with you. Parking is available in the park and also directly across Hampton on the side of Schnucks. I would encourage you to patronize the store if possible and put the receipt on your dashboard. Please do not park in the Walgreens lot.

If you ordered a t-shirt through the AGO Pop-Up Shop that Rachael Houser so graciously organized, those will arrive in the St. Louis office tomorrow morning after Rachael picks them up. If you did not order one, I would suggest wearing the blue AGO t-shirts we wore last time (pictured below) or any other shirt with a similar color.

There is a good possibility that it rains and storms tomorrow, unfortunately, so if the tournament is canceled, I will inform everyone as soon as I know, but I would still plan on playing at this point.

Any questions, please feel free to reach out!

Thanks,
Tim Weaks

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Friday, August 13, 2021 at 4:00pm, Wilmore Park (Hampton & Gravois, STL City) - Following last year's cancellation due to COVID, the Missouri Attorney General's Office will fight to defend its title against the likes of the Federal Public Defender's Office, St. Louis County Prosecutor's Office, U.S. Attorneys' Offices in the Eastern District of Missouri and Southern District of Illinois, and the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's Office in a round-robin softball tournament.

If you have not attended in the past, it is a great time in a relaxed atmosphere and a good opportunity to support the office and get to know your coworkers. We had a great turnout two years ago with players of all skill levels and spectators.

All are welcome to attend and cheer us on, but if you are interested in playing, please let me know so that we can get a preliminary head count. Please email me separately without replying all, as this is being sent to the entire St. Louis Office. If not, no need to send regrets.

We will likely order new shirts this year featuring the logo above. More details to come about those from either myself or Rachael Houser, but please let either of us know if you are interested in one.

My apologies if you have already received an email about the tournament from either me or your section chief.

Thanks!

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA
LAKE CHARLES DIVISION

STATE OF LOUISIANA, ET. AL.	:	CIVIL ACTION NO. 2:21-cv-778
VERSUS	:	JUDGE TERRY A. DOUGHTY
JOSEPH R. BIDEN, JR., ET. AL.	:	MAGISTRATE JUDGE KAY

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Before the court is defendants' Motion to Dismiss all Claims except for Count VI of the plaintiffs' complaint, a Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction, and a Motion to Dismiss the President of the United States as a defendant. Doc. 128. The motions have been referred to the undersigned for review, report, and recommendation in accordance with the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 636. The plaintiffs oppose the motions and the defendants have replied. Docs. 124 and 145.

For the reasons stated herein, we RECOMMEND that the court DENY defendants' Motions to Dismiss.

I.
BACKGROUND

The present suit arises from the issuance of a pause[1] on offshore oil and gas lease sales by President Joseph Biden ("the President"). On January 27, 2021, President Joseph Biden issued Executive Order 14008 ("EO 14008"). Section 208 of the Order provides in pertinent part:

> To the extent consistent with applicable law, the Secretary of the Interior shall pause new oil and natural gas leases on public lands or in offshore > waters pending completion of a comprehensive review and reconsideration of Federal oil and gas permitting and leasing practices in light of the Secretary of the Interior's broad stewardship responsibilities over the public lands and in offshore waters, including potential climate and other impacts associated with oil and gas activities on public lands or in offshore waters.

[1] Though plaintiffs entitle the collection of the challenged actions "the Biden Ban" or "Leasing Moratoriums", we will call the action a "pause" as that is the language used by the President in the executive order at issue.

Exec. Ord. 14008, Tackling the Climate Crisis at Home and Abroad, 86 Fed. Reg. 7619, 7624-25 (Jan. 27, 2021). In a purported attempt to comply with the executive order, agencies within the Department of the Interior ("DOI") rescinded or postponed all scheduled onshore and offshore lease sales. Doc. 1, pp. 26-36.

On March 24, 2021, plaintiffs[2] filed suit against the President and a number of government officials.[3] Plaintiffs allege that the defendants' actions were contrary to the Mineral Leasing Act ("MLA") and the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act ("OCSLA"). Id., p. 4. Plaintiffs bring eight claims under the Administrative Procedure Act ("APA"). Id., pp. 43-48. The APA claims in Counts I and VI request that the court compel specific lease sales since the Bureau of Land Management ("BLM") and the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management ("BOEM") have "unlawfully withheld or

[2] The plaintiffs consist of the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Alaska, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah, and West Virginia. Each state has special interests in the execution of oil and gas lease sales and has sued "to vindicate its sovereign, proprietary, and parens patriae interests." Doc. 1, pp. 6-11, ¶¶ 8-20.

[3] The defendants consist of Joseph R. Biden, Jr. in his official capacity as President of the United States; Deb Haaland, in her official capacity as Secretary of the Interior; Michael Nedd, in his official capacity as Deputy Director of the Bureau of Land Management; Chad Padgett, in his official capacity as Director of the Bureau of Land Management Alaska Office; Raymond Suazo, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Arizona Office; Karen Mouristen, in her official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management California Office; Jamie Connell, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Colorado Office; Mitchell Leverette, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Eastern States Office; John Ruhs, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Idaho Office; John Mehlhoff, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Montana – Dakotas Office; Jon Raby, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Nevada Office; Steve Wells, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management New Mexico Office; Barry Bushue, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Oregon-Washington Office; Greg Sheehan, in his official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Utah Office; Kim Liebhauser, in her official capacity as Director for the Bureau of Land Management Wyoming Office; Amanda Lefton, in her official capacity as Director of the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management; Michael Celata, in his official capacity as Regional Director of the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management Gulf of Mexico Office; Lars Herbst, in his official capacity as Regional Director of Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Gulf of Mexico OCS Office; and Mark Fesmire, in his official capacity as Regional Director of the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement Alaska and Pacific Office.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

unreasonably delayed" executions of these lease sales. Id., pp. 43-44, ¶¶ 127-133; pp. 46-47, ¶¶ 156-159. Counts II-V, VII, and VIII ask the court to vacate and enjoin the action of either BOEM or BLM for three different violations of the APA: acting in an "arbitrary and capricious" manner, acting "contrary to law," or failing to employ a notice and comment period before acting. Id., pp. 43-48, ¶¶ 141, 146, 150, 155, 163, 167. Alternatively, plaintiffs seek relief under Count IX, which alleges a citizen suit under OCSLA. Id., pp. 48-40, ¶¶ 168-174. Finally, Count X alleges a claim for ultra vires review of the President's issuance of EO 14008. Id., pp. 49-50, ¶¶ 175-177.[4]

On March 31, 2021, plaintiffs filed a Motion for Preliminary Injunction requesting that the district court enjoin defendants from implementing the rescission and postponements of certain lease sales and requesting that the court order the agencies to disregard the pause on new leases. Doc. 3, pp. 1-2. Plaintiffs sought injunctive relief pursuant to the APA. Doc. 3, att. 1, pp. 16-26. After hearing oral argument on the matter, the district court granted the motion and issued the injunction. Docs. 139 and 140. That ruling ordered that the named agency officials[5] be enjoined and restrained nationwide from implementing Executive Order 14008's pause "with respect to Lease Sale 257, Lease Sale 258, and all eligible lands onshore." Id., p. 43.

On June 7, 2021, the defendants filed the instant motions, seeking dismissal of all claims except for Count VI,[6] and seeking dismissal of the President as a defendant. Doc. 128. Defendants

[4] As the district court pointed out, the President is not a proper defendant for the APA claims, as the law is clear that the president does not constitute an "agency" under the APA. Doc. 139, att. 1, p. 4; see Franklin v. Massachusetts, 112 S. Ct. 2767, 2775-76 (1992). Even so, the President's actions may still be reviewed for constitutionality. Id. at 2776. Plaintiffs acknowledge that they have alleged Count X, an ultra vires claim challenging the legality of EO 14008, as an "alternative" cause of action to the APA claims. Doc. 3, att. 1, p. 15, n. 5; Doc. 142, p. 20.

[5] The preliminary injunction applies to "the U.S. Department of the Interior, the United States Bureau of Land Management, the United States Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, and the United States Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement, along with their directors, employees and Secretary." Doc. 139, att. 1, p. 43. The President is excluded from the preliminary injunction order. Id.

[6] Plaintiffs' APA claim in Count VI alleges under that BLM unlawfully and unreasonably delayed its quarterly land lease sales, and the complaint seeks to compel BLM to hold the sales "according to their previous schedules with reasonable modifications." Doc. 1, pp. 46-47, ¶ ¶ 156-159 (citing 5 U.S.C. §706(1)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

move to dismiss Count X, plaintiffs' ultra vires claim, arguing that the language of EO 14008 is "facially valid" and therefore could not have been in excess of authority. Id., att. 1, pp 18-21. For 12(b)(6) dismissal of Count IX, the OCSLA citizen suit, defendants argue that plaintiffs failed to comply with OCSLA's requirement that a would-be plaintiff provide notice of intent to sue 60 days before filing a citizen suit claim. Id., pp. 23-26. Defendants urge that plaintiffs have not sufficiently alleged that they would have suffered "immediate" harm to their legal interests, which constitutes a statutory exception to OCSLA's 60-day notice requirement for citizen suits. Id. Finally, defendants challenge the jurisdiction of the court and argue that the agency actions at issue are not reviewable under the APA. Id., pp. 26-32. While the APA only allows for review of "final agency action," defendants argue and plaintiffs' challenge pertains to a wide-ranging program and not discrete agency actions. Id., pp. 26-29. Even if there were proper "actions" to review, defendants contend that those actions would still not be "final" as they are only temporary pauses on leasing. Id., pp. 29-32.

In their opposition, plaintiffs argue that EO 14008 is invalid on its face as its directives cannot be implemented without contravening applicable law. Doc. 142, pp. 21-23. As to their OCSLA citizen suit claim, plaintiffs contend that their complaint sets out the immediate threat of both economic harm and to harm their statutorily vested legal interest in the notice and comment period of lease sales. Id., pp. 24-25. As to the leasing pause as an APA violation, plaintiffs argue that a decision need not be permanent to be considered "final" and therefore subject to judicial review under the APA. Id., pp. 25-29. They urge that the overarching decision to halt all processes for oil and gas leasing was a clear and discrete agency action. Id., p. 27. Further, the cancellation of specific onshore leases, the rescission of offshore Lease Sale 257, and the halt of Lease Sale

258 were certainly discrete and final agency actions that are subject to judicial review under the APA. Id., pp. 29-32.[7]

II.
LAW & ANALYSIS

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allows for dismissal of a claim when a plaintiff "fail[s] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." When reviewing such a motion, the court should focus exclusively on the complaint and its attachments. Wilson v. Birnberg, 667 F.3d 591, 595 (5th Cir. 2012). The court may also take judicial notice of public records. Papasan v. Allain, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 2935 n.1 (1986). The court reviews such motions "accepting all well-pleaded facts as true and viewing those facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Bustos v. Martini Club, Inc., 599 F.3d 458, 461 (5th Cir. 2010). While factual assertions are presumed to be true, "labels and conclusions" and "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action" are not enough to withstand a 12(b)(6) motion. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949 (2009). Additionally, "the plaintiff must plead 'enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" In re Katrina Canal Breaches Litig., 495 F.3d 191, 205 (5th Cir. 2007) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1974 (2007)). The court's task in evaluating a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) is "not to evaluate the plaintiff's likelihood of success," but instead to determine whether the claim is both legally cognizable and plausible. Billups v. Credit Bureau of Greater Shreveport, No. 14-401, 2014 WL 4700254 at *2 (W.D. La. Sep. 22, 2014) (quoting Lone Star Fund V (U.S.), L.P. v. Barclays Bank PLC, 594 F.3d 383, 387 (5th Cir. 2010)).

[7] As the defendants point out, because a preliminary injunction hearing involves a less formal procedure and Counts IX and X were not briefed before the district judge at that time, findings on the motion for a preliminary injunction are not binding at trial on the merits. Doc. 145, pp. 1-2 (citing Jonibach Mgmt. Tr. v. Wartburg Enterprises, Inc., 750 F.3d 486, 491 (5th Cir. 2014)). As a result, the analysis on the merits below does not rest on the district judge's ruling, though we do reach similar conclusions.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A. Statutory Scheme

OCSLA and the MLA are the two comprehensive statutory regimes that govern oil and natural gas development on the Outer Continental Shelf ("OCS") and on federal lands.

1. OCSLA

OCSLA directs the Secretary of the Interior ("the Secretary") to make the OCS "available for expeditious and orderly development, subject to environmental safeguards, in a manner which is consistent with the maintenance of competition and other national needs." 43 U.S.C. § 1332(3). By statute, states benefit economically from oil and gas leasing production on the OCS. OCSLA provides certain coastal states with a percentage of bonuses, rents, royalties, and other revenues arising from oil and gas sales and development. Id. § 1337(g). Several plaintiffs also receive revenues arising from leases under OCSLA's coastal impact assistance program and the Gulf of Mexico Energy Security Act. Id. § 1331(a) note and § 1356a.

OCSLA directs the Secretary to administer a leasing program and to sell exploration interests in portions of the OCS to the highest bidder. Id. § 1334(a) and 1337(a)(1). BOEM, a federal agency under the DOI, oversees the process of offshore oil and gas leasing. The statute sets out a four-stage process for developing federal offshore lands: (1) development of a Five-Year Leasing Program; (2) holding lease sales; (3) exploration of the leased land by the lessees; and (4) development and production. Hornbeck Offshore Servs., L.L.C. v. Salazar, 696 F. Supp. 2d 627, 632-33 (E.D. La. 2010) (citing Sec'y of the Interior v. California, 104 S. Ct. 656, 669-70 (1984)).

The first stage of the leasing process promotes dialogue with and input from affected states and local governments. See 43 U.S.C. §§ 1344(c)-(d);1345(a); 1351(a)(3). In developing a Five-Year Program, the Secretary "must solicit comments from interested federal agencies and the governors of affected states, and must respond in writing to all comments or requests received from the state governors." Sec'y of the Interior, 104 S. Ct. at 669-70 (citing 43 U.S.C. § 1344). The Secretary must submit the proposed plan to the President and Congress, in addition to any comments received, at least sixty days before approval. 43 U.S.C. § 1344(d)(2). Further, such submission must indicate "why any specific recommendation of the Attorney General or a State or local government was not accepted." Id.

The second stage of the leasing process mandates further consultation with the states. OCSLA provides that, within sixty days of public notice of a proposed lease sale, any governor of an affected state or executive of an affected local government "may submit recommendations to the Secretary regarding the size, timing, or location of a proposed lease sale or with respect to a proposed development and production plan." Id. § 1345(a). Then, the Secretary "shall accept recommendations of the Governor and may accept recommendations of the executive of any affected local government" if it is determined that the recommendations "provide for a reasonable balance between the national interest and the well-being of the citizens of the affected State." Id. §1345(c). OCSLA expressly requires that any revision of the Five-Year Program "shall be in the same manner as originally developed" unless the revision is "not significant." Id. § 1344(e). The statute sets forth the procedures with which the Secretary must comply in making "any significant revision or reapproval of the leasing program." Id. § 1344(f).[8]

[8] The specific procedures required in making a significant revision to the program are:

> (1) receipt and consideration of nominations for any area to be offered for lease or to be excluded from leasing;
> (2) public notice of and participation in development of the leasing program;
> (3) review by State and local governments which may be impacted by the proposed leasing;
> (4) periodic consultation with State and local governments, oil and gas lessees and permittees, and representatives of other individuals or organizations engaged in activity in or on the outer Continental Shelf, including those involved in fish and shellfish recovery, and recreational activities; and > (5) consideration of the coastal zone management program being developed or administered by an affected coastal State pursuant to section 1454 or section 1455 of Title 16.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2. MLA

BLM, a federal agency under the DOI, oversees the leasing process for federal lands. The MLA grants BLM the authority to lease public lands with oil or gas deposits to private industry for development. 30 U.S.C. § 226(a). The MLA requires that the Secretary hold lease sales "for each State where eligible lands are available at least quarterly. . . ." Id. § 226(b)(1)(A). BLM's regulations also require quarterly lease sales. See 43 C.F.R. § 3120.1-2(a) ("Each proper BLM … office shall hold sales at least quarterly if lands are available for competitive leasing."). The MLA provides a certain percentage of "[a]ll money received from sales, bonuses, [and] royalties including interest charges" to the state in which a lease is located. 30 U.S.C. § 191(a).

B. Plaintiffs' Factual Allegations as to All Counts

Plaintiffs allege that the formation of the current Five-Year Program began under the administration of former President Barack Obama in 2014, and BOEM appropriately performed its OCSLA-mandated statutory duties by publishing a request for information in the Federal Register and considering the comments in forming the Draft Proposed Program. Doc. 1, p. 18, ¶ 53. In 2015, BOEM published the Draft Proposed Program and in the 60 days following, received over one million comments in response. Id., ¶ 54. In 2016, BOEM then published the Proposed Program, initiating a ninety-day comment period. Id., ¶ 55. In November 2016, BOEM published the Proposed Final Program and, once the program had been submitted to President Obama and Congress, the Secretary ultimately approved the Final Program on January 17, 2017. Id., pp. 19-20, ¶¶ 56-59. The Final Program included eleven proposed lease sales, including Lease Sale 257 in the Gulf of Mexico and Lease Sale 258 in Cook Inlet, Alaska. Id., ¶¶ 57-59. Plaintiffs allege that, after the approval of the Final Program, seven of those lease sales occurred on schedule between August 2017 and November 2020. Id., p. 20, ¶ 60. Lease Sale 257's Proposed Notice of

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Sale was published by BOEM in November 2020 and, after a period of public comment, was approved and formally scheduled to occur March 17, 2021. Id., pp. 20-22, ¶¶ 61-64. Lease Sale 258 had not reached final approval yet, but as of January 2021, BOEM had published a Notice of Availability of the area proposed for sale and invited public comment. Id., p. 22, ¶ 65.

On January 27, 2021, President Biden issued EO 14008, which commands that the Secretary "pause new oil and natural gas leases on public lands or in offshore waters" pending a comprehensive environmental review. Id., p. 23, ¶ 67. This EO was issued citing "no authority" for the pause and providing no rationale for the departure from the Five-Year Program established by the Obama Administration and left in place by the administration of President Donald Trump. Id. Plaintiffs allege that the EO's only discernable rationale is to "follow through" on the President Biden's promises made during his campaign. Id. Additionally, plaintiffs claim that Secretarial Order No. 3395, issued on January 20, 2021, by the then-acting Secretary "constructively halted" development and exploration of existing oil and gas leases which suspended the previously-delegated authority of BOEM and BLM to oversee the permitting process in already-existing oil and gas leases. Id., pp. 23-24, ¶ 68. This Order shifted the power to oversee the drilling and exploration process from the regional offices of BOEM and BLM to "nine politically appointed officials in Washington"—the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Land and Minerals. Id. ¶¶ 68-69. Plaintiffs' complaint contends that the effective combined result of Secretarial Order No. 3395 and EO 14008 has been a "comprehensive ban on the leasing and development of energy resources on public lands and offshore waters," as the orders have rendered it "impossible" for the DOI to perform its statutorily mandated duties under OCSLA and the MLA. Id., p. 25, ¶¶ 71-72.

Discrete actions taken by regional offices of BOEM and BLM in the months following EO 14008, plaintiffs contend, further demonstrate the existence of a moratorium on oil and gas leasing.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

On February 18, 2021, the Regional Director of BOEM's Gulf of Mexico Office issued a Notice to Rescind the Prior Lease 257 Record of Decision. Id., p. 26, ¶ 73. Plaintiffs contend that the Notice involved "no analysis, no comment period, no reference to statutory factors, no reference to the Current Five-Year Program, and no consultation with the States, Tribes, or local governments." Id. Instead, BOEM's only stated reasoning was to comply with EO 14008. Id. On February 4, 2021, BOEM cancelled the public comment period and public meetings on Lease Sale 258, citing only EO 14008 for its reasoning. Id., pp. 31-32, ¶ 86. Plaintiffs contend that the abrupt Rescission of Lease Sale 257 improperly amends the current Five-Year Program and contravenes OCSLA's requirements that BOEM consult with the states and local governments, submit the plan to Congress and the President, hold waiting and comment periods, and prepare environmental impact statements. Id., p. 27, ¶ 76. Additionally, the unexplained delay of Lease Sale 258 and cancellation of its public comment period ignore the process set forth by OCSLA. Id., p. 32, ¶ 90.

As to the onshore oil and gas lease sales, several BLM offices[9] planned to hold quarterly sales of available lands in March and April of 2021. Id., pp. 33-34, ¶¶ 93-99. Plaintiffs allege that each pending quarterly sale was halted in response to EO 14008. Id., p. 35, ¶ 102. Indeed, in the months following EO 14008, each sale under the MLA was halted, with most offices offering no reasoning for the postponement and BLM's Wyoming Office stating that the sales were postponed to "confirm the adequacy of the underlying environmental analysis." Id., pp. 35-36, ¶¶ 103-110. Plaintiffs urge that BLM's delay of the land sales contravenes the MLA and abdicates BLM's mandatory statutory duty to hold lease sales "for each State where eligible lands are available at least quarterly." Id., p. 37, ¶ 111 (citing 30 U.S.C. § 226(b)(1)(A)).

[9] These sales were to occur through BLM offices of Nevada, Montana-Dakotas, Utah, Colorado, Oklahoma and New Mexico. Doc. 1, pp. 33-34, ¶¶ 94-99.

1. Count X: Ultra Vires Claim

Plaintiffs allege in Count X of their complaint that "[b]ecause neither OCSLA nor MLA authorizes the President to unilaterally impose a moratorium on oil and gas lease sales by Executive Order or otherwise, Section 208 of Executive Order 14008 is ultra vires." Doc. 1, p. 50, ¶ 177. The President's power to pause oil and gas leases "must stem either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself." Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 72 S. Ct. 863, 866 (1952). Judicial review is generally available to determine whether the President has exceeded statutory authority to take a particular action. See, e.g., Rosebud Sioux Tribe v. Trump, 428 F. Supp. 3d 282, 291 (D. Mont. 2019) ("A court's power to enjoin the President extends to enjoining portions of an executive order where the order exceeds the statutory authority delegated by Congress and constitutional boundaries." (citing Hawaii v. Trump, 859 F.3d 741, 768 (9th Cir. 2017) (internal quotations omitted)); Massachusetts Lobstermen's Ass'n v. Ross, 349 F. Supp. 3d 48, 54 (D.D.C. 2018), aff'd, 945 F.3d 535 (D.C. Cir. 2019) ("Because Plaintiffs' claims assert that the President exceeded his statutory authority under the Antiquities Act—i.e., that the Proclamation was ultra vires—they are generally reviewable."); Chamber of Com. of U.S. v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322, 1328 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (recognizing a cause of action for judicial review of an executive order and noting that "[r]eview of the legality of Presidential action can ordinarily be obtained in a suit seeking to enjoin the officers who attempt to enforce the President's directive.")[10]

[10] The defendants' reply argues that Ancient Coin Collectors Guild v. U.S. Customs & Border Prot., Dep't of Homeland Sec.[801 F. Supp. 2d 383, 406 (D. Md. 2011), aff'd, 698 F.3d 171 (4th Cir. 2012)] and several cases that plaintiffs rely on in their opposition are inapposite because they either involve challenges to "self-executing" Presidential actions or involve ultra vires challenges to agency action only. Doc. 145, pp. 3-4, fn. 1. We note that an ultra vires claim can arise not only from the President's action, but generally from any executive officer's action that exceeds legal authority. See California v. Trump, 379 F. Supp. 3d 928, 942 (N.D. Cal. 2019) ("[A] court may grant injunctive relief against executive officers to enjoin both ultra vires acts—that is, acts exceeding the officers' purported statutory authority—and unconstitutional acts."). Here, our inquiry on a 12(b)(6) motion is limited to whether plaintiffs' complaint establishes their entitlement to ultra vires review of an executive order. While plaintiffs' cited cases do not each involve the same facts as those herein—an ultra vires challenge to a President's executive order that directs agency action—we still find plaintiffs' cited cases instructive on the availability of ultra vires review.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Here, defendants seek dismissal of plaintiffs' ultra vires claim on several grounds. First, defendants argue that, because EO 14008's language directs the Secretary to implement the pause only "to the extent consistent applicable law," the order is facially valid. Doc. 128, att. 1, p. 19. Defendants contend that this "savings clause" prevents the order from being implemented in any way that exceeds statutory authority; rather, it instructs the Secretary to follow the law. Id. Defendants urge that OCSLA "does not compel that lease sales occur on any particular date… nor does it require that the agencies proceed with the lease sales proposed in the Five-Year Program." Id., p. 21. Defendants argue that the MLA and OCSLA give the Secretary "considerable discretion" to alter the DOI's leasing programs in a manner consistent with the law—such as reducing the size of sales or postponing sales that require additional environmental analysis. Id., p. 23.

In their opposition, plaintiffs contend they have established that Section 208 of EO 14008 exceeded the President's powers, as the relevant statutes grant the President no authority to "pause" oil and gas leasing. Doc. 142, p. 21-23. Moreover, plaintiffs argue that the language "to the extent consistent with applicable law" does not render the executive order valid because the order also includes the language "shall pause"—a commandment for the Secretary to act. Id., p. 22. Plaintiffs contend that EO 14008's "savings clause" must be read in context with the rest of the executive order, and here, EO 14008 unambiguously directs the Secretary to pause oil and gas leases. Id. Thus, plaintiffs argue the mandatory directive cannot be read out of the executive order. Id. As such, plaintiffs argue that EO 14008 cannot possibly be implemented in a manner that is "consistent with applicable law." Id., p. 23.

Defendants reply argues that EO 14008 is akin to Executive Order No. 13202 challenged in Bldg. & Const. Trades Dep't, AFL-CIO v. Allbaugh, as both orders direct that an agency "shall" take action to the extent "consistent with" or "permitted by" applicable law. 295 F.3d 28, 33 (D.C. Cir. 2002). The Allbaugh court ruled that the mere presence of the language "[t]o the extent permitted by law" would save the executive order from being invalid even if the directive was contrary to the National Labor Relations Act. Id.[11] The court upheld the executive order, reasoning that its language only compelled agency action[12] when doing so would not violate the law. Id. Courts since Allbaugh, however, have interpreted the language of executive orders more broadly.

Courts should interpret an executive order beginning with its text, and the text "must be construed consistently with the Order's 'object and policy.'" City & Cty. of San Francisco v. Trump, 897 F.3d 1225, 1238 (9th Cir. 2018) (quoting Bassidji v. Goe, 413 F.3d 928, 934 (9th Cir. 2005)). Both the Fourth and Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals have held that savings clauses as qualifiers in an executive order should not insulate an executive order from judicial review when that qualifying language would override the substance of the order itself. Id. at 1239 ("Savings clauses are read in their context, and they cannot be given effect when the Court, by rescuing the constitutionality of a measure, would override clear and specific language."); Hias, Inc. v. Trump, 985 F.3d 309, 325 (4th Cir. Jan. 8, 2021) ("[w]e reject the government's attempt to immunize the Order from review through a savings clause which, if operational, would nullify the 'clear and specific' substantive provisions of the Order."). These cases suggest that where an executive order has clear and commanding language, a court need not give effect to the savings clause. Id.; but see Common Cause v. Trump, 506 F. Supp. 3d 39, 47 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (giving effect to a savings [12] In Allbaugh, the D.C. Circuit addressed an executive order issued by then-President George W. Bush that prohibited any federal agency from either requiring contractors and bidders to enter into project labor agreements ("PLA"s) or prohibiting them from doing the same. 295 F.3d 28, 29 (D.C. clause included in a Presidential memorandum and finding that "[w]e cannot ignore these repeated and unambiguous qualifiers imposing lawfulness and feasibility constraints on implementing the memorandum.").

In City & Cnty. of S.F, then-President Trump issued Executive Order 13768 which purported to withhold federal grants from "sanctuary" cities and counties whose policies "shield aliens from removal form the United States." 897 F.3d at 1232. The Ninth Circuit concluded that Congress, not the President, holds the spending power and therefore the President exceeded his authority by withdrawing federal grant money from certain jurisdictions. Id. at 1234. The court then found that Section 9(a) of the Order, which directed the Attorney General and Secretary of State to condition issuance of grants "in their discretion and to the extent consistent with law," did not immunize the Order from judicial review. Id. The court noted that the Order "unambiguously commands action" and therefore the so-called "savings clause" could not override rest of the Order. Id. at 1240.

In Hias, then-President Trump's Executive Order 13888 required the consent of states and local governments before the federal government could settle refugees within their borders. 985 F.3d at 317. States and localities could withhold their consent for any reason or no reason at all. Id. at 322. Section 2(b) of the Order allowed the Secretary of State to override a state's decision not to consent only if the Secretary determined that the failure to resettle refugees in that state would be "inconsistent with the policies and strategies established under [the Refugee Act of 1980] or other applicable law." Id. at 325. The Fourth Circuit held that the Order was irreconcilable with the Refugee Act, which required that the federal government "consult" with the states and localities and assess several factors in making resettlement decisions, such as the availability of employment and other resources in the destined resettlement states. Id. at 320, 322. The court reasoned that the text of the order essentially "supplant[ed]" the Refugee Act's requirements of consultation with the states and consideration of the statutory criteria. Id. at 322. Additionally, the court rejected the government's argument that Section 2(b)'s "savings clause" immunized the Order from judicial review: "[t]he intent of the Order is clear… the savings clause 'does not and cannot override [the Order's] meaning.'" Id. at 325 (quoting City & Cnty. of S.F., 897 F.3d at 1240). Since the purported "savings clause" lacked any mechanism for agencies to implement the Order in a manner consistent with the Refugee Act, the court held that the clause could not "save" the Order from its "infirmities." Id.

Defendants urge that Hias and City & Cnty. of S.F are distinguishable as they both involved presidential directives that "facially contradict[ed] a federal statute." Doc. 128, att. 1, p. 20. We disagree. Rather, we find that Hias and City & Cnty. of S.F. are analogous and therefore applicable since EO 14008, as written, also contradicts two federal statutes—both the MLA and OCSLA. As we noted, the Secretary is required to consider the states' input and justify departures from their recommendations in writing. Sec'y of the Interior, 104 S. Ct. at 669-70 (citing 43 U.S.C. § 1344). Like the Executive Order in Hias, EO 14008 overwrites a statutorily mandated process of consultation with the states and localities. 985 F.3d at 317. EO 14008's across-the-board pause expressly prevents BLM from executing lease sales in accordance with this statutory duty under the MLA. 30 U.S.C. § 226(b)(1)(A). EO 14008 orders the DOI to pause all oil and gas leasing, essentially amending the current Five-Year Program without the requisite consultation with states and localities, and without the requisite review by the President and Congress before the Secretary approves the Final Plan. 43 U.S.C. § 1344(c); 1344(d)(2). Thus, on its face, EO 14008 contradicts the mandatory processes set forth by OCSLA and the MLA. As such, we follow Hias and City & Cnty. of S.F. and similarly decline to give effect to Section 208's so-called "savings clause." In doing so, we also reject the reasoning of Allbaugh and Common Cause which, as applied here, would allow the President to evade judicial review with the mere inclusion of the savings clause. See City & Cnty. of S.F., 897 F.3d at 1240 ("If 'consistent with law' precludes a court from examining whether the Executive Order is consistent with law, judicial review is a meaningless exercise, precluding resolution of the critical legal issues.").

Here, EO 14008 unambiguously commands the Secretary to act with the language "shall pause." While it includes the boilerplate language "consistent with applicable law," this is a "purely theoretical" savings clause as it offers no mechanism for the DOI to implement the order in a manner consistent with law other than simply refusing to implement the order outright.[13] Much like the executive order in City & Cnty. of S.F., the DOI simply cannot give effect to EO 14008's directive without otherwise violating OCSLA or the MLA. 897 F.3d at 1240 (citing Allbaugh, 295 F.3d at 33).

We find that plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged facts demonstrating that the President acted in excess of his statutory or constitutional authority in issuing EO 14008 and state a claim for ultra vires review. Plaintiffs have therefore demonstrated their entitlement to judicial review of the President's actions. We recommend that the court deny defendants' Motion to Dismiss as to Count X and deny defendants' Motion to Dismiss the President as a defendant.[14]

[13] Defendants' reply argues that since the Five-Year Program only proposed that each sale occur within a certain year, the Secretary could have implemented a "pause" by delaying 2021's Lease Sales until December. Doc. 145, pp. 5-6. This, defendants argue, would allow the Secretary to comply with the Five-Year Program while still giving effect to EO 14008. That point does not sway our reasoning—in our view, a 9-month delay of already-scheduled lease sales, such as Lease Sale 257, would still constitute a significant revision to the Five-Year Program.

[14] In their motions, defendants only argued generally that the President should be dismissed as a defendant because the plaintiffs pled "no viable claim against the President for which relief can be granted." Doc. 128, att. 1, p. 8. In defendants' reply, they suggest that dismissal of the ultra vires claim would call for dismissal of the President as a defendant. Doc. 145, p. 3. Otherwise, defendants raise no specific arguments for the President's dismissal. As such, we find dismissal of the President would be inappropriate at this time since plaintiffs have stated an ultra vires claim. We make no finding as to whether the President is a proper defendant for the remaining Counts.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2. Count IX: OCSLA Citizen Suit

OCSLA's citizen suit provision allows citizens, as well as and local and state governmental officials, to participate in OCSLA's enforcement. OXY USA Inc v. Babbitt, 122 F.3d 251, 257 (5th Cir. 1997). OCSLA provides that "any person having a valid legal interest which is or may be adversely affected" can file suit to compel compliance with OCSLA. 43 U.S.C. § 1349(a)(1). The United States and "any other government instrumentality or agency" may be a proper defendant. Id. Moreover, OCSLA's definition of a "person" who can properly bring suit under this provision includes not only natural persons, but also states. Id. § 1331(d). Typically, a would-be plaintiff for an OCSLA citizen suit must give the Secretary sixty days' notice of the intent to file suit. Id. § 1349(a)(2). An exception to the 60-day notice requirement lies where the alleged violation "constitutes an imminent threat to the public health or safety or would immediately affect a legal interest of the plaintiff." Id. § 1349(a)(3). Under those circumstances, the plaintiff may file suit "immediately after notification of the alleged violation." Id. The Fifth Circuit has recognized that the immediacy exception does not apply where the alleged harm has occurred in the past. Brown v. Offshore Specialty Fabricators, Inc., 663 F.3d 759, 768 (5th Cir. 2011).

Plaintiffs bring an OCSLA citizen suit claim in Count IX of their complaint, alleging that "Executive Order 14008 and its OCLSA Leasing Moratorium violate OCSLA by failing to adhere to its comprehensive procedures applicable to promulgating and amending Five Year Programs and holding lease sales." Doc. 1, p. 48, ¶ 170. Specifically, plaintiffs allege that the Secretary violated OCSLA in "failing to adhere to comprehensive lease sale procedures for Lease Sales 257 and 258 and by allowing an unauthorized officer to cancel Lease Sale 257." Id., ¶ 171. They also allege that they gave notice to the Secretary of their intent to file suit under OCSLA's citizen suit provision on March 21, 2021. Id., ¶ 173. Though they gave notice only two days before filing the instant action, plaintiffs allege that the immediacy exception applies because the Secretary's violations "immediately affect Plaintiff States' legal interest by denying the States revenues from March 2021 lease sales, denying conservation funds to help protect the States' coastline from further degradation, and inflicting economic harms upon the States' citizens." Id., ¶ 172.

As a preliminary matter, we address defendants' jurisdictional challenge to the OCSLA citizen suit. Defendants argue that judicial review of the Secretary's approval of a leasing program can only proceed in the United States Court of Appeal for the District of Columbia. Doc. 128, att. 1, p. 24 n. 6.[15] The current 2017-2022 Five-Year Leasing Program was previously published to the states for the initial notice and comment period, properly reviewed by Congress and the President, and ultimately approved by the then-acting Secretary in January 2017. Doc. 1, pp. 19-20, ¶¶ 56-59. The plaintiffs' OCSLA citizen suit does not challenge the Secretary's preparation of the current Five-Year Program, but only the Secretary's failure to adhere to the already-promulgated Five-Year Program and OCLSA's procedures for execution of the scheduled lease sales. Id., p. 49, ¶ 171. We therefore find that the violations alleged in plaintiffs' complaint do not fall within the scope of § 1349(c)(1) since the action does not challenge the Secretary's approval of a Five-Year Program but rather the Secretary's modification of that Program in contravention of the OCLSA's reapproval process.[16] We instead find that this court has jurisdiction over the [15] "Any action of the Secretary to approve a leasing program pursuant to section 1344 of this title shall be subject to judicial review only in the United States Court of Appeal for the District of Columbia." 43 U.S.C. § 1349(c)(1).

[16] We note that challenges to prior Five-Year Programs under the citizen suit provision only required the D.C. Circuit's exclusive jurisdiction when the action challenged the initially approved Final Program—not the Secretary's subsequent failures to execute the Program. See Ctr. for Sustainable Econ. v. Jewell, 779 F.3d 588, 595-96 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (challenging the 2012-2017 program); Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. United States Dep't of Interior, 563 F.3d 466 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (challenging the 2007-2012 Program); Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc. v. Hodel, 865 F.2d 288 (D.C. Cir.1988) (challenging the 1987-1992 Program); California v. Watt (Watt II) 712 F.2d 584 (D.C.Cir.1983) (challenging the 1982-1987 Program); State of Cal. By and Through Brown v. Watt (Watt I), 668 F.2d 1290 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (challenging the 1980-1985 Program). These challenges were primarily based on the Secretary's failure to balance the need for expeditious development of the OCS with environmental concerns, such as negative effects on marine life (see e.g., Ctr. for Biological Diversity, 563 F.3d 466) or the risk of damage from oil spills (see e.g., Watt II, 712 F.3d 584), in the initial approval of the Program.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

citizen suit under 43 U.S.C. § 1349(b) and would recommend the court deny defendants' Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction.[17]

Defendants also seek dismissal of plaintiffs' citizen suit on other grounds. First, they argue that plaintiffs "make no allegations regarding threats to public health and safety, and do not allege any 'immediate' threat to a legal interest." Doc. 128, att. 1, p. 24. Defendants argue that plaintiffs allege past injuries and potential remote future injuries but fail to allege "immediate harm" sufficient to merit the exception to the 60-day notice requirement. Id., pp. 24-25. They contend that the postponement of Lease Sale 257 and cancellation of the comment period for Lease Sale 258 have already occurred and there is no continued threat of immediate harm to plaintiffs' legal interest in participating in the notice and comment process. Id., p. 25. Additionally, they argue that the harms that plaintiffs characterize as "immediate" are only prospective injuries and that "many months and several intervening agency decisions" would stand between holding any lease sale and plaintiff-states' ultimate receipt of revenues from that sale. Id.[18]

In plaintiffs' opposition, they re-emphasize the points alleged in their complaint: that every month, the plaintiffs will lose revenue in the form of ground rents, bonuses, and royalties. Doc. 142, p. 24. Additionally, they contend that they have a "statutorily-vested right to be consulted [17] "[T]the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of cases and controversies arising out of, or in connection with (A) any operation conducted on the outer Continental Shelf which involves exploration, development, or production of the minerals, of the subsoil and seabed of the outer Continental Shelf, or which involves rights to such minerals, or (B) the cancellation, suspension, or termination of a lease or permit under this subchapter. Proceedings with respect to any such case or controversy may be instituted in the judicial district in which any defendant resides or may be found, or in the judicial district of the State nearest the place the cause of action arose." 43 U.S.C. § 1349(b)(1).

[18] The defendants also argue that at the preliminary injunction hearing, plaintiffs conceded that they did not immediately receive funds from new federal leases. Doc. 145, p. 9. However, considering the substance of the preliminary injunction hearing moves beyond the bounds of the 12(b)(6) analysis. We are limited to only the plaintiffs' complaint along with its attachments and may take judicial notice of public records. Papasan v. Allain, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 2935 n.1 (1986). Even if defendants' contentions were true, however, we note that the economic impacts claimed by plaintiffs are broader than revenue lost directly from the lease sales.

about the leasing program" and that their legal interests are immediately affected by the cancellation of the lease sales' notice-and-comment process. Id.

We find that plaintiffs' complaint sufficiently alleges that they have previously suffered and will immediately suffer additional economic harm from the agency action at issue. The complaint sets forth that "both OCSLA and the MLA expressly entitle States to substantial portions of the proceeds from lease sales and subsequent development." Doc. 1, pp. 42-43, ¶ 126. We find that plaintiffs' alleged injuries constitute "immediate" economic harm. Plaintiffs will lose the opportunity to financially benefit from continued development under already-cancelled leases and future leases. We reject defendants' argument to the contrary: though plaintiffs' harm might have already been realized in part at the time they filed their complaint,[19] the economic vitality of the plaintiffs continues to be affected by the pause with each month that passes. According to plaintiffs, those lost economic benefits include not only the loss of direct lease sale revenue, but also lost tax revenue and employment opportunities. Id., pp. 41-42, ¶ 123.

We find the anticipated economic harm as alleged in the complaint satisfies the "immediate[] … effect on legal interest" requirement of § 1349(a)(3). As such, we find that plaintiffs' complaint established their entitlement to OCSLA's exception to the 60-day notice requirement. Thus, the fact that plaintiffs only gave notice to the Secretary two days in advance does not bar this claim. We need not reach the parties' other arguments about whether plaintiffs' ongoing procedural injury is sufficient. Plaintiffs therefore state a claim for relief, and we would recommend the court deny defendants' Motion to Dismiss the OCSLA citizen suit.

[19] Though this court has found no guidance on this issue, we construe the statute as requiring the effect on legal interest to be "immediate" at the time the plaintiff filed suit. 43 U.S.C § 1349(a)(3). Otherwise, the immediacy exception would be meaningless, as the result would vary depending on the timeframe that a court makes the inquiry. Viewing the facts under either lens, however, we find that plaintiffs' monthly loss of revenue and effect on their economies constitutes an "immediate" effect on their legal interests.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

3. Counts I-V, VII and VIII: APA Violation Claims

Under the APA, "[a] person suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute, is entitled to judicial review thereof." 5 U.S.C. § 702. The APA permits judicial review of "final agency action" for which there is no other adequate remedy in court. 5 U.S.C. § 704. Notably, both the Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit have recognized a "strong presumption that Congress intends judicial review of administrative action." Bowen v. Michigan Academy of Family Physicians, 106 S. Ct. 2133, 2135 (1986); Deering Milliken, Inc. v. OSHA, 630 F.2d 1094, 1099 (5th Cir. 1980).

Where an agency action is subject to judicial review, the APA also provides several specific remedies. It provides that a reviewing court "shall [] compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed." 5 U.S.C. § 706(1). Additionally, under the APA, a "reviewing court shall ... hold unlawful and set aside agency action ... found to be ... not in accordance with law" or "in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right." Id. § 706(2)(A) and (C). A reviewing court shall also "hold unlawful and set aside agency action … found to be… arbitrary, capricious, [or] an abuse of discretion." Id. § 706(2)(A). Finally, agency action must be set aside if promulgated "without observance of procedure required by law." Id. § 706(2)(D).

a. APA Reviewability Generally

Here, the threshold inquiry is whether plaintiffs' claims are reviewable under the APA. There are four requirements for review of an agency action: (1) the plaintiffs must demonstrate that their causes of action fall within the "zone of interests" under the relevant statutes; (2) the statutes that defendants have allegedly violated do not preclude judicial review; (3) the action at issue constitutes a "final agency action;" and (4) the action is not "committed to agency discretion by law." See Texas v. United States, No. 21-3, 2021 WL 2096669, at *21 (S.D. Tex. Feb. 23, 2021).

i. Zone of Interests

The first requirement for APA review is that the plaintiffs establish they are in the "zone of interests" of the statutes that were allegedly violated: here, the OCSLA and MLA. Id. The general "zone of interests" test requires us to "determine, using traditional tools of statutory interpretation, whether a legislatively conferred cause of action encompasses a particular plaintiff's claim." Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 1377, 1387 (2014). Since the APA serves "a broad[] remedial purpose," [Ass'n of Data Processing Serv. Orgs., Inc. v. Camp, 90 S. Ct. 827, 831 (1970)] the test as applied in APA cases is not "especially demanding." Lexmark Int'l, 134 S. Ct. at 1389. APA review will be denied only "if the plaintiff's interests are so marginally related to or inconsistent with the purposes implicit in the statute that it cannot reasonably be assured Congress intended to permit the suit." Ensco v. Offshore Co. v. Salazar, No.10-1941, 2010 WL 4116892, at *4 (E.D. La. Oct. 19, 2010) (citing Clarke v. Sec. Indus. Ass'n, 107 S. Ct. 750, 757 (1987)).

Here, the plaintiffs allege that their claims are within the zone of interests of both OCSLA and the MLA since both statutes grant states a statutory right to participate in the leasing process, and both statutes entitle the states to "substantial portions of the proceeds from lease sales and subsequent development." Doc. 1, p. 42-43, ¶ 126. We agree and find that each of plaintiffs' APA claims seek protection of their interests under OCSLA and the MLA. Noting that the zone of interest test has a low threshold, we find that plaintiffs have met the first requirement for APA review.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

ii. Statutory Preclusion of Judicial Review

The second requirement for APA review is that the relevant statute does not preclude judicial review. 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1).

The general presumption favoring judicial review of administrative action controls unless congressional intent to preclude judicial review is "fairly discernable in the statutory scheme." Block v. Cmty. Nutrition Inst., 104 S. Ct. 2450, 2456 (1984) (quoting Camp, 90 S. Ct. at 831-32). The defendants have not argued that any portion of OCSLA or the MLA precludes judicial review, nor has our review of the statutes revealed Congress's intent to do so. Thus, plaintiffs meet the second requirement for APA review.

iii. Final Agency Action

The third requirement for APA review is that the challenged action is a "final agency action." The APA's requirement that only "agency action" is subject to judicial review means that courts cannot review and correct broad "programmatic challenges."[20] Lujan v. Nat'l Wildlife Fed'n, 110 S. Ct. 3177, 3189 (1990) (rejecting petitioners' challenge to the entirety of BLM's land withdrawal review program and holding that the broad challenge did not constitute an "agency action" under 5 U.S.C. § 702). As such, the plaintiffs must point to an "identifiable action or event" that will be subject to APA review. Alabama-Coushatta Tribe of Texas v. United States, 757 F.3d 484, 490 (5th Cir. 2014).

Moreover, if the agency action at issue was not "final," we lack subject matter jurisdiction over review of that action. Peoples Nat. Bank v. Off. of Comptroller of Currency of U.S., 362 F.3d [20] Courts may not entertain review of efforts to alter broad federal policies and programs since the APA does not waive sovereign immunity for such challenges. See Walmart Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Just., --- F. Supp. 3d ---, No. 20-817, 2021 WL 410618, at *11 (E.D. Tex. Feb. 4, 2021) (citing Alabama-Coushatta Tribe of Texas v. United States, 757 F.3d 484, 490 (5th Cir. 2014)). As such, requests for "wholesale" improvement of an agency's programs are not subject to judicial review. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

333, 336 (5th Cir. 2004). "Final" means that the action marks "the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process—it must not be of a merely tentative or interlocutory nature. And second, the action must be one by which rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow." U.S. Army Corps. of Engineers v. Hawkes Co., 136 S. Ct. 1807, 1813 (2016) (quoting Bennett v. Spear, 117 S. Ct. 1154, 1168 (1997)). We note that the Fifth Circuit has held that the inquiry into the finality of an agency decision is "flexible" and "pragmatic." Qureshi v. Holder, 663 F.3d 778, 781 (5th Cir. 2011).

The defendants urge that the plaintiffs' complaint makes an "improper programmatic challenge"—that is, instead of challenging specific agency actions, plaintiffs instead challenge the OCSLA and MLA leasing moratoriums as a general program and policy of the DOI as set forth in EO 14008. Doc. 128, att. 1, p. 26. Defendants contend that plaintiffs seek review of an "amalgam of interim decisions, press releases, and other actions that Plaintiffs have self-titled 'moratoriums.'" Id., p. 8. Defendants contend that rather than review of individual agency decisions, that plaintiffs' claims seek "systemic changes" which only the executive or legislative branches of government may enact. Id., p. 28. Defendants argue that since plaintiffs cannot identify "a single discrete agency action tantamount to a program-wide moratorium" that would be properly reviewable under the APA, they have failed to state a claim for relief. Id., p. 27.

Defendants also argue that the purported agency action challenged by plaintiffs is not "final" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 704. Id., p. 30. Rather, they contend the decisions are merely "interim" postponements of the lease sales, urging: "they are not decisions to forego the sales entirely, and the ultimate decision has not yet been made." Id. Deferrals and postponements of agency decisions, they argue, are "necessarily interlocutory in nature." Id. Defendants additionally urge that the challenged actions do not determine rights or obligations or trigger legal consequences. Id., p. 31. The Record of Decision would "not have caused any lease sale to happen" because it only constituted notice of where the agency stood in its decision-making process and did not guarantee a lease sale would happen. Id. Thus, the rescission of those specific lease sales "had no real-world consequences" since they were rescinded prior to being fully executed. Id.

In their opposition, plaintiffs urge that they have established that a moratorium is in place, and further that BOEM and BLM's decision to implement the moratorium is a final, discrete agency action of the type that courts frequently review under the APA. Doc. 142, pp. 25-26. Plaintiffs contend that they do not ask the court to impermissibly "dictate policy" or supervise the DOI's administration of the leasing program, but only ask the court to enjoin specific agency action. Id., p. 28. Plaintiffs therefore urge that their lawsuit is not an improper programmatic challenge but only an appeal for the court to enforce the agencies' duties under OCSLA and the MLA. Id., p. 29.

Additionally, plaintiffs argue that the pause is still a "final" action even though the DOI never formally committed it to writing. Id., p. 27. Unwritten but clear and discrete policies may constitute reviewable agency action and here the Secretary clearly implemented an unwritten policy prompting the defendant agencies to suspend lease sales pursuant to EO 14008. Id. They also suggest that that denying APA review here would set bad precedent in allowing the Executive Branch to "make a major national decision in the most opaque manner possible." Id. Thus, federal agencies should not be able to circumvent APA review merely by declining to put a final decision in writing. Id., pp. 27-28.

Finally, plaintiffs argue that the decision to implement the pause was a final agency action because it "left agency officials without discretion" to conduct oil and gas lease sales, therefore marking the "consummation of a decision making process." Id., p. 29. Additionally, the decision altered the obligations of federal officials to hold such lease sales, deprived the bidders of their right to acquire the lease sales and deprived the states of their right to collect revenue from those sales. Id. Thus, they urge, legal consequences certainly flowed from the implementation of the pause. Id.

As to whether the challenged agency actions at issue are "discrete," we start with Lujan, wherein the Supreme Court declined APA review of a plaintiff's challenge to the entirety of the Secretary's "land withdrawal review program." 110 S. Ct. at 3189. Plaintiff therein challenged the "continuing (and thus constantly changing) operations of the BLM" in withdrawal and classification of public lands. Id. Unlike the programmatic challenge like in Lujan, plaintiffs here seek relief from the cancellation and postponement of two specific Lease Sales in offshore waters—Lease Sale 257 and Lease Sale 258—in addition to the systematic cancellation of mineral leases on eligible lands. Indeed, they specifically request that the pause be vacated and enjoined[21] under the APA or that the court compel offshore Lease Sale 257 and Lease Sale 258, and BLM's previously scheduled onshore lease sales.[22] Doc. 1, pp. 43-48. Plaintiffs seek to compel the defendants to comply with their duties under OCSLA and the MLA. In our view, such relief does not seek the kind of "wholesale revision" of a federal program in which Lujan precludes our engagement.[23]

Moreover, the Secretary's decision to implement the pause was a discrete agency action even if not formally published like the BOEM and BLM regional offices' decisions were. Doc. 1, [21] Counts II-V, VII, and VIII request the court to vacate and enjoin the action of either BOEM or BLM for three violations of the APA: being arbitrary and capricious, contrary to law, or failing to employ a requisite notice and comment period. Doc. 1, pp. 43-48, ¶¶ 141, 146, 150, 155, 163, 167.

[22] Counts I and VI request the court compel specific lease sales since their executions have been "unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed." Id., ¶¶ 133, 159. Notably, the defendants are not seeking dismissal of Count VI.

[23] See W. Energy All. v. Jewell, No. 16-912, 2017 WL 3600740, at *13 (D.N.M. Jan. 13, 2017) ("The Court agrees with WEA that requesting BLM conduct quarterly leases of eligible and available parcels is not a programmatic challenge, but a request that this Court enforce a discrete, non-discretionary duty contained in a single statutory provision, unlike the situation in Lujan.")

p. 26, ¶ 73; pp. 31-32, ¶ 86; pp. 35-36, ¶¶ 104-110. A "final" agency action need not be committed to writing. See, e.g., Bhd. of Locomotive Engineers & Trainmen v. FRRA, 972 F.3d 83, 100 (D.C. Cir. 2020). Even though plaintiffs' complaint must deduce the Secretary's decision from the collective actions of the BOEM and BLM offices after the issuance of EO 14008, they have still sufficiently alleged it is a discrete action subject to APA review.

Defendants rely on Alabama-Coushatta, which held that a lawsuit challenging the federal management of natural resources in purported tribal territory was an improper programmatic challenge. 757 F.3d at 490. We find those facts distinguishable as well. There, the court rejected the Tribe's lawsuit as a "blanket" challenge to "all of the Government's actions with respect to all permits and leases" on land covering several national parks in Texas. Id. (emphasis in original.) The court reasoned that the challenge was directed at broad policies and practices: specifically, the agencies' systematic failure to consider the Tribe's claim to aboriginal title and incidental rights relating to the land at issue. Id., p. 491. Here, plaintiffs are not challenging the DOI's overall management of the leasing program, nor have they lodged a "blanket" challenge as was present in Alabama-Coushatta. Instead, the challenge is specifically targeted towards the Secretary's unwritten decision to postpone and cancel previously scheduled lease sales under the MLA and OCLSA and the agencies' subsequent implementation of that decision.

Additionally, we find that challenged actions under the APA are "final." Neither the Secretary's implementation of the pause, nor BOEM and BLM's subsequent cancellations of lease sales, are "interlocutory in nature," as defendants urge. Rather, case law interpreting the finality requirement demonstrates that an action need not be permanent to constitute a "final" agency action. See Texas, 2021 WL 2096669 at *31 (S.D. Tex. Feb. 23, 2021) (the 100-day temporary pause on removal of aliens ordered by the Department of Homeland Security was a "final" agency action subject to judicial review). The presently challenged actions are still "final" despite the possibility the DOI may decide to later make the same federal lands available for purchase. Id. (recognizing that the defendants' purported "'discretion' to reverse course, by itself, is insufficient to convert an action that is final to one that is nonfinal."); See also Hawkes Co., 136 S. Ct. at 1814 (possibility that the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers would revise a jurisdictional determination is a "common characteristic of agency action, and does not make an otherwise definitive decision nonfinal."); Sackett v. EPA., 132 S. Ct. 1367, 1372 (2012) (the mere possibility that the EPA would later reconsider a decision under the Clean Water Act was insufficient to make a final agency action nonfinal.)

While EO 14008 commands a "pause" of new oil and gas lease sales, that language is of no moment to the finality inquiry, which is flexible and pragmatic. See Whitman v. Am. Trucking Associations, 121 S. Ct. 903, 915 (2001) ("Though the agency has not dressed its decision with the conventional procedural accoutrements of finality, its own behavior thus belies the claim that its interpretation is not final."). Semantics aside, the essential actions at issue are the Secretary's decision to systematically cancel and postpone various onshore and offshore lease sales, and the agencies' subsequent cancellation and postponement of them. In our view, those actions are "final", as they action alter the obligations of the various federal officials charged with performing the lease sales and affect the statutory rights of plaintiffs to collect proceeds from the sales.

Accepting plaintiffs' allegations as true and noting that there is a strong presumption for reviewability of administrative action, we find that the Secretary's decision to pause oil and gas leases in compliance with EO 14008 is a discrete and final agency action. Additionally, plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that each cancellation or postponement of specific lease sales, including

BOEM's Rescission of Lease Sale 257,[24] BOEM's delay of Lease Sale 258,[25] and BLM's delay of quarterly onshore lease sales[26] is a discrete and final agency action.

iv. Committed to Agency Discretion by Law

The fourth requirement for plaintiffs to obtain APA review is that the challenged actions under the APA are not "committed to agency discretion by law." See 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2). This inquiry requires "careful examination of the statute on which the claim of agency illegality is based." Webster v. Doe, 108 S. Ct. 2047, 2052 (1988). "Where statutes granting agency discretion are drawn in such broad terms" such that there are "no meaningful standards against which to judge the agency's exercise of discretion" then § 701(a)(2)'s exception will apply. Perales v. Casillas, 903 F.2d 1043, 1047 (5th Cir. 1990) (internal quotations omitted.) To honor the presumption in favor of reviewability of administrative action, courts construe the exception in § 701(a)(2) narrowly, "confining it to those rare administrative decision[s] traditionally left to agency discretion." Dep't of Homeland Sec. v. Regents of the Univ. of California, 140 S. Ct. 1891, 1905 (2020) (internal quotations omitted).

While the OCSLA vests the Secretary with some discretion in development of the Five-Year Program,[27] we find that plaintiffs' claims arise from specific provisions of the statute that command action. "'[T]he word 'shall' usually connotes a requirement." Maine Cmty. Health Options v. United States, —— U.S. ——, 140 S. Ct. 1308, 1320 (2020). A sister court has noted,

[25] Id., pp. 31-32.
[26] Id., pp. 32-38.
[27] Specifically, the statute requires the Secretary to "prepare and periodically revise, and maintain an oil and gas leasing program" which "shall consist of a schedule of proposed lease sales indicating, as precisely as possible, the size, timing, and location of leasing activity which he determines will best meet national energy needs for the five-year period following its approval or reapproval." 43 U.S.C. § 1344(a). Moreover, the statute sets forth several considerations for the Secretary to make, including economic, social, and environmental factors. Id. § 1344(a)(1). Additionally, the Secretary considers specific factors in determining the timing and location of the leasing, ultimately striking a "proper balance between the potential for environmental damage, the potential for discovery of oil and gas, and the potential for adverse impact on the coastal zone." Id. § 1344(a)(2)-(3).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

however, that the use of "shall" alone cannot compel government action unless coupled with "'some stronger indication' from the legislature that the call to action was mandatory." Texas, 2021 WL 2096669, at *34 (S.D. Tex. Feb. 23, 2021) (citing Cairo & F.R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U.S. 168, 170 (1877) and Town of Castle Rock, Colo. v. Gonzales, 125 S. Ct. 2796, 2806 (2005)).

OCSLA states that the Secretary "shall prepare and periodically revise" a Five-Year Leasing Program. 43 U.S.C. § 1344(a). In preparing a Five-Year Program, the statute further states that the Secretary "shall invite and consider suggestions" from any State potentially affected by the leasing program, and "shall submit a copy of such proposed program to the Governor of each affected States for review and comment." Id. § 1344(c)(1)-(2). In executing the lease sales, the Secretary "shall" again solicit recommendations from state governors and "shall" accept such recommendations if the recommendations strike a "reasonable balance" between national and state interests. Id. § 1345(c). In contrast, the statute uses the language "may" in referring to the Secretary's duty to solicit and accept recommendations from affected local governments. See id. §§ 1344(c)(1)-(2), 1345(c). From the statutory construction, it is clear Congress intended the language "shall" to impose a mandatory duty upon the Secretary, while the reciprocal use of "may" is permissive and allows the Secretary to use her discretion. Fogerty v. Fantasy, Inc., 114 S. Ct. 1023, 1033 (1994) ("The word 'may' [] clearly connotes discretion.").

Moreover, the policy of the United States, as declared through OCSLA, is that the OCS is a "vital national resource reserve" that the federal government holds "for the public." 43 U.S.C. § 1332(3). Additionally, it recognizes that certain states and local governments will be affected by exploration, development, and production on the OCS and are therefore "entitled to an opportunity to participate" in the development of oil and gas exploration and production. Id. § 1332(4) & (4)(C). See Texas, 2021 WL 2096669, at *34. Thus, while the Secretary may hold a residuum of discretion over oil and gas leasing operations on the OCS, we find that the specific OCSLA provisions forming the basis of plaintiffs' complaint supersede that discretion. See Webster, 108 S. Ct. at 2052 (in determining whether certain decisions were committed to the discretion of the Director of the CIA, the Supreme Court examined not only to the general purpose of the National Security Act, but also the specific provisions under which plaintiffs sued). OCLSA sets forth the machinery by which oil and gas leasing must take place while the Secretary maintains some discretion in how to operate that machinery. However, the presently challenged actions stem from non-discretionary duties that OCSLA imposes upon the Secretary and BOEM and are therefore not "committed to agency discretion by law."

Like OCSLA, the MLA similarly juxtaposes the words "may" and "shall," [28] committing some decisions to the discretion of the Secretary but also imposing non-discretionary duties. The MLA explicitly provides that the Secretary "shall" hold lease sales "for each State where eligible lands are available at least quarterly…" 30 U.S.C. § 226(b)(1)(A). Thus, when eligible lands are available, BLM must hold quarterly lease sales. Id.; See also W. Energy All. v. Jewell, 16-0912, 2017 WL 3600740, at *7 (D.N.M. Jan. 13, 2017). Notably, plaintiffs allege that there were eligible lands available. Doc. 1, p. 37, ¶ 111. Accepting plaintiffs' allegation as true, we can only conclude that the Secretary's decision to cancel the onshore leases when eligible lands were available was not one "committed to agency discretion by law."

Based on the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint, we have determined that the challenged actions herein, including the Secretary's decision to implement the pause, the Rescission of Lease Sale 257, the delay of Lease Sale 258, and the cancellation of onshore leases meet all four [28] See, e.g., 30 U.S.C. § 226(b)(1)(B): "The national minimum acceptable bid shall be $2 per acre for a period of 2 years from December 22, 1987. Thereafter, the Secretary, subject to paragraph (2)(B), may establish by regulation a higher national minimum acceptable bid for all leases based upon [certain findings]." (emphasis added) requirements for APA review. Since judicial review is proper, we now look to the sufficiency of plaintiffs' claims brought under specific provisions of the APA.

b. Unreasonable Delay: Count I

The APA requires a reviewing court to "compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed." 5 U.S.C. § 706(1). A claim under this provision may only proceed "where a plaintiff asserts that an agency failed to take a discrete agency action that it is required to take." Louisiana v. United States, 948 F.3d 317, 323 (5th Cir. 2020) (quoting Norton v. S. Utah Wilderness All., 124 S. Ct. 2373, 2380 (2004) (emphasis in original)). This limitation means that if a discrete agency action "is not demanded by law," a court may not compel the action under § 706(1). Id.

Plaintiffs allege in Count I that acting in reliance on EO 14008, BOEM unlawfully and unreasonably rescinded Lease Sale 257 and delayed Lease Sale 258, and additionally unreasonably and unlawfully withheld and delayed the remaining lease sales in the Five-Year Program. Doc. 1, p. 43, ¶¶ 129-132. We have already determined that the delays and cancellations of specific sales were final and discrete agency actions. See supra Part II(B)(3)(a)(iii). The question remains as to whether the Secretary was required to hold Lease Sales 257 and 258 and the remainder of the lease sales under the current Five-Year Program.

As plaintiffs allege, the current Program set forth the schedule of offshore lease sales to occur throughout the five-year period. Doc. 1, pp. 19-20, ¶¶ 56-60. While the Secretary may "revise and reapprove" the Program at any time, any significant revisions must be "in the same manner as originally developed." 43 U.S.C. § 1344(e). The Secretary and BOEM complied with none of the required procedures for revision of the program set forth in § 1344(f).[29] As such, we find that BOEM was required to hold the scheduled lease sales. Per plaintiffs' allegations, BOEM's delays contravened OCSLA's requirements without providing any rationale for its decisions and were therefore "unlawful" or "unreasonable" by definition. Doc. 1, p. 30, ¶ 83 and p. 32, ¶ 88. Plaintiffs have sufficiently plead that BOEM unlawfully or unreasonably delayed and withheld the Five-Year Program's scheduled lease sales. Thus, they state an APA claim under § 706(1).

[29] See supra fn. 8.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

c. Failure to Employ Notice and Comment: Counts II and VIII.

The APA provides that a reviewing court shall "hold unlawful and set aside agency action … found to be … without observance of procedure required by law." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(D). The APA requires rules to undergo notice and comment unless they are exempt. Texas, 2021 WL 2096669 at *42 (S.D. Tex. Feb. 23, 2021).

An exemption to APA's notice and comment requirement applies under 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(A) when a rule is interpretive, a general statement of policy, or a rule of agency organization, procedure, or practice. "In contrast, if a rule is 'substantive,' the exemption is inapplicable, and the full panoply of notice-and-comment requirements must be adhered to scrupulously. The APA's notice and comment exemptions must be narrowly construed." Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 171 (5th Cir. 2015), as revised (Nov. 25, 2015) (internal citations omitted). To determine whether the rule is substantive or interpretive, the inquiry is twofold: "whether the rule (1) 'impose[s] any rights and obligations' and (2) 'genuinely leaves the agency and its decision-makers free to exercise discretion.'" Id. (citing Pros. & Patients for Customized Care v. Shalala, 56 F.3d 592, 595 (5th Cir. 1995). "If a statement denies the decisionmaker discretion in the area of its coverage ... then the statement is binding, and creates rights or obligations." Id. "While mindful but suspicious of the agency's own characterization, we ... focus[ ] primarily on whether the rule has binding effect on agency discretion or severely restricts it." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(internal quotations omitted). Additionally, "[a]n agency pronouncement will be considered binding as a practical matter if it either appears on its face to be binding, or is applied by the agency in a way that indicates it is binding." Id. (quoting Gen. Elec. Co. v. E.P.A., 290 F.3d 377, 383 (D.C. Cir. 2002)).

Plaintiffs allege in Count II that the Rescission of Lease Sale 257 and delay of Lease Sale 258 was each a "substantive rule that was required to undergo notice-and-comment rulemaking," and BOEM's decision to forgo notice and opportunity for public comment violated the APA. Doc. 1, p. 27, ¶ 77, pp. 31-32, ¶ 86, p. 44, ¶¶ 134-141. Plaintiffs also contend that the "OCSLA Leasing Moratorium" was also a substantive rule requiring notice and comment procedures before its issuance. Id., p. 44, ¶ 136. Additionally, Count VIII alleges that the BLM's cancellation of the onshore leases failed to employ the notice and comment period required under § 553. Id., pp. 47-48, ¶¶ 164-167. Plaintiffs urge that because the OCSLA and MLA leasing "moratoriums" do not fit the exemption under § 553, the court should vacate and enjoin the decisions of BLM and BOEM to cancel and delay the sales. Id., p. 44, ¶ 141 and p. 48, ¶ 167.

We find here that Rescission of Lease Sale 257 and delay of Lease Sale 258 were substantive rules since they determined legal rights and obligations. As discussed in our analysis at Part II(B)(3)(a)(iii), those actions affect the statutory rights of plaintiffs to collect proceeds from the sales. While courts do consider the agency's own characterization of the action, this consideration is not dispositive. Gen. Elec., 290 F.3d at 382. Thus, government's ex post facto labelling of the rescission and delay as "interim" does not render those decisions interpretive rules. The original Notice to Rescind Lease Sale 257's only stated rationale was to comply with EO 14008, and provided "no analysis, no comment period, no reference to statutory factors, no reference to the Current Five-Year Program, and no consultation with States, Tribes, or local governments." Doc. 1, p. 26, ¶ 73. Similarly, the cancellation of the public comment period and subsequent delay of Lease Sale 258 relies solely on EO 14008. Id., pp. 31-32, ¶ 86. The abrupt cancellations offer no suggestion that BOEM may later reassess its decision. The mere reliance on EO 14008 and lack of independent rationale suggests that BOEM has no discretion in the decisions on Lease Sales 257 and 258.

Additionally, the imposition of the OCSLA and MLA "moratoriums" constitutes a substantive rule requiring the notice and comment procedures of § 553. Our inquiry here is more difficult because, to the plaintiffs' knowledge, the Secretary's reasoning and ultimate decision to implement EO 14008's pause was not committed to writing. The decision to implement EO 14008, however, is evident from the systematic cancellation and delay of lease sales in the months immediately following EO 14008. Despite the government's arguments that the Secretary has vast discretion in this area and its labelling of the pause as "interim," we must look to the government's actual treatment of the rule. Gen. Elec., 290 F.3d at 383. As to the OCSLA "moratorium," BOEM's notice of the cancelled and delayed leases refers solely to EO 14008 for its rationale. Doc. 1, p. 27, ¶ 73 and pp. 31-32, ¶ 86. As to the MLA "moratorium," various regional offices of BLM either provided no reasoning at all for the cancellations or, in only one case, stated that the cancellation was to "confirm the adequacy of underlying environmental analysis." Id., pp. 34-36, ¶¶ 100-110. The public record of the Secretary's implementation of the moratoriums offered no mechanism for the agency to exercise its discretion moving forward, only deferring to an executive order. Thus, the decisions appear to be binding on the agencies. Moreover, the "moratoriums" altered the existing obligations of federal officers to make the OCS and onshore federal lands available for lease. As such, we find the pause as applied to OCLSA and MLA leases was a substantive rule subject to the APA notice and comment requirements. We find that plaintiffs have stated a claim for relief under Counts II and VIII for the agencies' failures to employ requisite notice and comment periods.

d. Contrary to Law or in Excess of Authority: Counts III and V

The APA provides that a reviewing court shall "hold unlawful and set aside agency action" found to be "in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(C). This sort of claim "necessarily entails a firsthand judicial comparison of the claimed excessive action with the pertinent statutory authority." W. Union Tel. Co. v. F.C.C., 541 F.2d 346, 354 (3d Cir. 1976) (citing FPC v. Moss, 96 S. Ct. 1003 (1976)).

In Count III, plaintiffs contend that the Rescission of Lease Sale 257 and cancellation of Lease Sale 258's notice and comment procedures must be vacated and enjoined as "not being in accordance with the law" or "in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations" since the decision circumvented statutorily mandated procedures. Doc. 1, pp. 26-27, ¶ 76 and p. 45, ¶¶ 142-146. Plaintiffs also allege in Count V that the MLA leasing moratorium is contrary to law or "in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations" since the MLA commands the Secretary to hold lease sales "for each State where eligible lands are available at least quarterly." Id., p. 46, ¶¶ 151-155.

We have already discussed at length the duties imposed upon federal officials to conduct oil and gas lease sales. OCSLA requires the leasing of the OCS in accordance with a Five-Year Program developed with input from the states and submitted to the President and Congress before final approval. Moreover, OCSLA does not permit "significant" revisions of the plan without going through the same procedures. As such, we find that plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that DOI's cancellations and delays of the Five-Year Program's sales without adhering to the statutorily mandated process was contrary to law.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The MLA also imposes a nondiscretionary duty for BLM to hold quarterly lease sales when eligible lands are available. Since the plaintiffs allege that eligible lands were available, BLM would have cancelled the onshore leases in derogation of that statutory duty and in excess of its authority. We therefore find that plaintiffs have stated a claim under 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(C).

e. Arbitrary and Capricious: Counts IV and VII

The APA provides that a reviewing court shall "hold unlawful and set aside agency action found to be … arbitrary, capricious, [or] an abuse of discretion." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A). The law requires an agency to "examine the relevant data and articulate a satisfactory explanation for its action including a 'rational connection between the facts found and the choice made.'" Texas, 2021 WL 2096669 at *38 (S.D. Tex. Feb. 23, 2021) (quoting Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass'n of U.S., Inc. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 103 S. Ct. 2856, 2866 (1983)). An agency action is arbitrary and capricious if:

> the agency has relied on factors which Congress has not intended it to consider, entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem, offered an explanation for its decision that runs counter to the evidence before the agency, or is so implausible that it could not be ascribed to a difference in view or the product of agency expertise.

Texas v. EPA, 829 F.3d 405, 425 (5th Cir. 2016) (quoting Tex. Oil & Gas Ass'n v. EPA, 161 F.3d 923, 933 (5th Cir. 1998)). Moreover, a court must look to the agency's "stated rationale at the time of its decision" and must disregard any "post hoc rationalizations" of the agency action. Id. (quoting Luminant Generation Co. v. EPA., 675 F.3d 917, 925 (5th Cir. 2012)).

Count IV of the plaintiffs' complaint urges that the Rescission of Lease Sale 257 and cancellation of Lease Sale 258's comment period were "issued without any reasoning whatsoever and rely only upon Executive Order 14008, which itself provides no reasons. Both decisions also ignore the statutory factors, prior inconsistent agency positions, and reliance instances." Doc. 1, pp. 45-46, ¶ 149. In Count VII, the plaintiffs make the same allegations relative to the MLA leasing "moratorium." Id., p. 45, ¶¶ 142-146. They urge that the foregoing agency actions were arbitrary and capricious and must be vacated and enjoined under § 706(2)(A).

Here, the only rationales of BOEM and BLM at the time they issued their decisions to postpone and cancel the lease sales were either (1) none given; (2) reliance on EO 14008; or (3) in the case one of specific onshore lease sale,[30] environmental concerns. As discussed above in Part II(B)(3)(b)-(c), these agency decisions provided very limited rationale. The formal Notice to Rescind Lease Sale 257's only stated rationale was to comply with EO 14008, and provided "no analysis, no comment period, no reference to statutory factors, no reference to the Current Five-Year Program, and no consultation with States, Tribes, or local governments." Id., p. 26, ¶ 73. Similarly, the cancellation of the public comment period and subsequent delay of Lease Sale 258 relies solely on EO 14008. Id., pp. 31-32, ¶ 86. Plaintiffs contend, however, that mere reference to the executive order is insufficient rationale since the executive order itself "contains no analysis of the statute or previous rulemaking proceedings." Id., p. 28, ¶ 79. Section 208 of EO 14008 only states that pause is for "completion of a comprehensive review and reconsideration of Federal oil and gas permitting and leasing practices." Exec. Ord. 14008, Tackling the Climate Crisis at Home and Abroad, 86 Fed. Reg. 7619, 7624-25 (Jan. 27, 2021). As to BLM's postponements of the onshore leases, besides the BLM Wyoming Office, no BLM Office provided any reasoning for its decision. Doc. 1, pp. 35-36.

As plaintiffs allege, neither the agencies' public notices of the pause nor EO 14008 "examine relevant data" or "articulate a satisfactory explanation for its action." Texas, 2021 WL 2096669 at *38. We need not consider the government's "post hoc rationalizations" of its decision.

[30] Plaintiffs allege that BLM's Wyoming Office updated the posting for its March 2021 sale to note that lease sales "are postponed to confirm the adequacy of underlying environmental analysis." Doc. 1, p. 35, ¶ 105.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As such, we find that plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that the challenged actions are arbitrary and capricious and that they state claims under § 706(2)(A).

f. Summation of the APA Claims

Having determined that the plaintiffs' APA claims are subject to judicial review and that they have stated a claim as to all alleged APA violations, we recommend the court deny the defendants' Motion to Dismiss those claims.

III.
CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, IT IS RECOMMENDED that the court DENY defendants' Motions to Dismiss.

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(C) and Rule 72(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the parties have fourteen (14) days from receipt of this Report and Recommendation to file written objections with the Clerk of Court. Failure to file written objections to the proposed factual findings and/or the proposed legal conclusions reflected in this Report and Recommendation within fourteen (14) days of receipt shall bar an aggrieved party from attacking either the factual findings or the legal conclusions accepted by the District Court, except upon grounds of plain error. *See Douglass v. Good morning everyone,
I just wanted to share that our AGO Softball Team competed hard Friday afternoon and defeated the St. Louis County Prosecutor's Office in our first game. Unfortunately, we fell just short in the championship game to the Eastern District of MO US Attorney's Office. I was real proud of the squad that we were able to put together at the last minute on Friday and how hard everyone played in the blinding sun and dead heat.
A special shout-out goes out to those who participated alongside me - Jason Lewis, Verdina Pilipovic, Megen Campbell, Michael Schwalbert and his wife Jessica, former intern Jeff Suddy, Mik Ebert, and Cris Stevens. Thanks again to Rachael Houser for ordering new shirts. I hope that next year we can come out in greater numbers and take back the title!

Until next year, thanks.

All,
Tomorrow evening, the Missouri Attorney General's Office will play in a round-robin softball tournament against the Federal Public Defender's Office, St. Louis County Prosecutor's Office, U.S. Attorneys' Offices in the Eastern District of Missouri and Southern District of Illinois, and the St. Louis Circuit Attorney's Office.

Unfortunately, I have received a large amount of cancellations this afternoon. So, in order to avoid having to forfeit, I am once again putting out a call for people to play.

If you have not attended in the past, it is a great time in a relaxed atmosphere and a good opportunity to support the office and get to know your coworkers. We had a great turnout two years ago with players of all skill levels and spectators.

All are welcome to attend and cheer us on, but if you are interested in playing and have not already responded to me today, please let me know. Please email me separately without replying all, as this is being sent to the entire St. Louis. If not, no need to send regrets. If any Section Chiefs are able to help recruit, I would greatly appreciate it.

If you have any questions, there are more details below, or feel free to contact me directly. Thank you!

Happy Friday, everyone. A few updates. Apologies for all of the emails.

1. Softball Tournament is tentative at this point due to all of the rain and more expected this evening. The organizer is waiting to hear from the Parks Department as to whether we can play. I will send a follow-up email either way to let you all know. If we do play, please try to arrive by 4:00pm. We will have a first-round bye so I don't expect to play until 4:30pm, but there is a chance that some offices, perhaps those with a history of not showing up to court, may not show up to play, so we could play sooner.
2. If you ordered merchandise, it is available for pickup from Rachael Houser's office. Please go get it this morning or this afternoon.

Thanks!

All,
Tomorrow is the day! This casual event is open to both attorneys and support staff (so long as your schedule accommodates), and we would love to see as many people as possible come out. As of now, we have 11 people committed to playing, but we could definitely use more. So if you are on the fence, I urge you to come by even if you are in as bad of shape as I am currently. Especially if you identify as female, your presence would be greatly appreciated, as 4 females are required in the field at all times and the batting order must alternate men and women. If you have not already, please let me know if you are able to play!

If you have a ball glove or bat, please bring it with you. Parking is available in the park and also directly across Hampton on the side of Schnucks. I would encourage you to patronize the store if possible and put the receipt on your dashboard. Please do not park in the Walgreens lot.

If you ordered a t-shirt through the AGO Pop-Up Shop that Rachael Houser so graciously organized, those will arrive in the St. Louis office tomorrow morning after Rachael picks them up. If you did not order one, I would suggest wearing the blue AGO t-shirts we wore last time (pictured below) or any other shirt with a similar color.

There is a good possibility that it rains and storms tomorrow, unfortunately, so if the tournament is canceled, I will inform everyone as soon as I know, but I would still plan on playing at this point.

Any questions, please feel free to reach out!

Thanks,
Tim Weaks

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTRODUCTION

Who may regulate foreign and interstate commerce? The Constitution says Congress. U.S. CONST. ART. I, § 8. Defendants argue otherwise—at least when it comes to revoking a transnational pipeline's permit to cross the peaceful Canadian border. That power to destroy a massive commercial project with millions of reliant stakeholders resides in the President, they argue. The principal dispute here, then, involves fundamental questions about the Constitution's separation of powers—the sinews of our republican freedoms.[1] Defendants also argue the Court has no place in this dispute—that the President's action is unreviewable. But that is wrong as a matter of precedent and principle. The President is not above the law. See Trump v. Vance, 140 S. Ct. 2412 (2020).

These weighty constitutional questions are not theoretical. The Keystone XL Pipeline ("KXLP") is a lifeline for communities and industries across the Plaintiff States. Undisputed analyses from Defendants confirm that the States and their communities would glean millions of dollars in direct, indirect, and induced revenue from the KXLP's construction and operation.[2] The KXLP would steward the environment, boost our energy security, and strengthen poor and rural communities.

Hours into his tenure, President Biden revoked the KXLP cross-border permit, thereby eliminating the abundant benefits Plaintiffs and their citizens justifiably pinned on the project. If Defendants prevail, those losses may become permanent.

But this Court can and should stop this presidential power grab. If it grants Plaintiffs' relief, the KXLP project will revive. Removing the specter of capricious presidential power will incentivize TC Energy or another entity to complete and operate the pipeline. Yet without the regulatory certainty only this Court can provide, Executive Order 13990 will remain a "continuing and brooding presence" that will bar all attempts to resurrect the KXLP. Super Tire Eng'g Co. v. McCorkle, 416 U.S. 115, 122 (1974). The unconstitutional Order has harmed and continues to harm Plaintiffs, and this Court can stop it.

Congress expressly approved the KXLP in 2011—removing the matter from presidential discretion. But even if Congress had remained silent (it hasn't), the President lacks the independent power to cancel a cross-border pipeline project that raises no legitimate national security concerns. See Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 637 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring).

The President's Order is unconstitutional, and the motion to dismiss must fail.

ARGUMENT

STANDARDS OF REVIEW

To survive Defendants' 12(b)(1) motion, Plaintiffs need only demonstrate they have standing by preponderance of the evidence. S. Recycling, L.L.C. v. Aguilar, 982 F.3d 374, 379 (5th Cir. 2020). "Ultimately, a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction should be granted only if it appears certain that the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle plaintiff to relief." Ramming v. United States, 281 F.3d 158, 161 (5th Cir. 2001). Plaintiffs similarly survive Defendants' 12(b)(6) motion. See Romero v. City of Grapevine, 888 F.3d 170, 176 (5th Cir. 2018) ("a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face") (cleaned up). And Plaintiffs agree, this Court must consider certain documents outside the complaint. ECF 98 at 14. The Complaint's factual allegations and Defendants' uncontested economic analyses are more than sufficient to avoid dismissal.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

I. THIS COURT HAS JURISDICTION

A. This Case Is Not Moot.

This case is very much alive. The party seeking to moot a controversy faces a "heavy burden." Adarand Constructors v. Slater, 528 U.S. 216, 222 (2000) (per curiam). "[A] case 'becomes moot only when it is impossible for a court to grant any effectual relief whatever to the prevailing party.'" Chafin v. Chafin, 568 U.S. 165, 172 (2013) (emphasis added) (quoting Knox v. SEIU, Local 1000, 567 U.S. 298, 307 (2012)); see also Knox, 567 U.S. at 307–08 ("[A]s long as the parties have a concrete interest, however small, in the outcome of the litigation, the case is not moot.") (quoting Ellis v. Railway Clerks, 466 U.S. 435, 442 (1984). Defendants cannot meet that burden.

A favorable judgment will redress Plaintiffs' injuries. See Spencer v. Kemna, 523 U.S. 1, 7 (1998). It will certainly lead to the resurrection of the KXLP by TC Energy or another entity.[3] Until then, the Executive Order's looming presence will prevent the

[3] See Statement by National Security Advisor Jake Sullivan on the Need for Reliable and Stable Global Energy Markets, White House Briefing Room, Aug. 11, 2021, https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/statements-releases/2021/08/11/statement-by-national-security-advisor-jake-sullivan-on-the-need-for-reliable-and-stable-global-energy-markets/ ("Higher gasoline costs, if left unchecked, risk harming the completion and operation of the Keystone XL. See Super Tire, 416 U.S. at 122. For reasons the federal government has long acknowledged, this imposes costly, ongoing injuries on the States. But this Court can end those injuries; in fact, the only way to end those injuries—to ensure that the KXLP disburses its massive economic, employment, and environmental benefits to the States—is to issue a judicial declaration dispelling the fiction that the President can unilaterally regulate foreign and domestic commerce contrary to the will of Congress.

1. This Court Can Still Grant Effective Relief.

The Court can grant effective relief in this case by declaring the President's Order unlawful and enjoining Defendants from enforcing it. It's not a question of whether the "threatened injury [is] certainly impending," Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 409 (2013), but whether any "possible remedy" is available. See Church of Scientology of Cal. v. United States, 506 U.S. 9, 13 (1992). That remedy exists here.

Plaintiffs seek, inter alia, declaratory judgment that the unilateral cancellation of the KXLP cross-border permit was unlawful. But for Defendants' actions, that largely underground and completed segment traversing the U.S.-Canada border would enable ongoing global recovery. the KXLP to transport crude oil to vital U.S. refining centers. See ECF 71 at ¶ ¶ 61–77. Much of the KXLP is fully constructed and could again be operated by TC Energy or its competitors to transport hundreds of thousands of barrels of Canadian and American oil to the Gulf Coast. ECF 71 at ¶ ¶ 51, 59–60; cf. Dep't of Commerce v. New York, 139 S. Ct. 2551, 2566 (2019) (finding Article III satisfied where Plaintiffs' "theory of standing … relies … on the predictable effect of Government action on the decisions of third parties.").

In Dep't of Commerce, plaintiffs challenged the inclusion of a citizenship question on the decennial census questionnaire. Id. at 2563. They alleged that many noncitizens would refuse to complete the questionnaire due to fears about how the government would use the answers to the citizenship question. Id. at 2565–66. All the prospective injuries hinged on how the government's action (inserting the question) would predictably drive third party decisions (whether to complete the form). Id. at 2565–66. If those plaintiffs could obtain meaningful relief on that basis, the States can obtain relief here.

A project like the KXLP will unquestionably deliver significant financial returns for any company with the requisite capital resources. See ECF 71 at ¶ ¶ 40, 42, 66–77, 83–84. President Biden's requests to OPEC for increased production clearly show increased oil demand.[4] Once operational, the KXLP will not only supply that demand, it will stimulate the States' economies, augment tax revenues, promote energy security, and curb dependence on geopolitical competitors. See ECF 71 at ¶ ¶ 39–42, 56–84.

Recently, in an ongoing case related to President Trump's 2019 approval of the KXLP's cross-border permit, a Montana federal district court remarked that, "[t]his case … involves a physical pipeline that today sits under the ground at the U.S.-Canada border." Order on Mootness, Indigenous Environmental Network v. Biden, 4:19-cv-00028, at 11 (D. Mont. May 28, 2021). Despite the facts that the permitted segment is completely constructed, President Biden's order succeeded President Trump's, and that TC Energy has terminated its plans to complete and operate the KXLP, the district court refused to dismiss the challenge as moot. Instead, the court found there was still a "live controversy," id. at 10, because it could "order[] TC Energy to remove that pipeline from the ground." Id. at 11. Even though the pipeline isn't currently transporting oil, the court could still grant some relief to the plaintiffs. Similarly, here the live controversy surrounds whether the order prohibiting the existing pipeline from operating is lawful.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The executive order significantly claims sole constitutional authority for granting and revoking all cross-border pipeline permits. ECF 71 at ¶ 52. If the Court doesn't correct that constitutional error, it's unlikely the KXLP or any other transnational pipeline will ever transport heavy crude to refining centers in Texas and Louisiana. At the mercy of such unchecked and fickle Presidential power, no entity is likely to again invest the considerable resources necessary to build and operate this type of project. And even if a subsequent Administration re-issued the permit, the President's day-one revocation proves there is no certainty against arbitrary revocations in the future. Knowing the President could pull the plug at any time and that judicial recourse would be foreclosed is more than enough to deter reasonable investors from undertaking the project.

TC Energy has terminated its plans to complete and operate the project for precisely these reasons. The KXLP, however, is not dead. If the Court corrects the legal errors under which the Executive currently operates, some entity—perhaps even TC Energy—will resume the project, and its manifold benefits will flow to the States.

This case is not moot. If the Court grants Plaintiffs' requested relief, the KXLP will transport oil. And that's not wishful thinking—it's business reality. See Chafin, 568 U.S. at 172. In fact, this case becomes non-redressable only if the Court dismisses it.

2. In Any Event, this Case Meets a Traditional Mootness Exception.

Even if the Court concludes that TC Energy's recent termination announcement moots this controversy, this case presents "issues capable of repetition, yet evading review." Vieux Carre Prop. Owners, Residents & Assocs. v. Brown, 948 F.2d 1436, 1447 (5th Cir. 1991) (citation omitted). The exception applies when: (1) the challenged action is in its duration too short to be fully litigated prior to cessation or expiration, and (2) there is a reasonable expectation that the same complaining party will be subject to the same action again. Bayou Liberty Ass'n v. United States Army Corps of Eng'rs, 217 F.3d 393, 398 (5th Cir. 2000).

The durational requirement is met because the unique and high-stakes circumstances surrounding the President's Order has not allowed the "challenged action … to be fully litigated prior to its cessation or expiration." Lewis v. Cont'l Bank Corp., 494 U.S. 472, 481 (1990). TC Energy endured over a decade of permitting, environmental review, and litigation before it began construction of the KXLP. ECF 71 at ¶¶ 30–50. The company invested an estimated $9 billion in the pipeline.[5] But less than two years after it obtained the permit, President Biden abruptly revoked it, leaving TC Energy with a $1.81 billion first-quarter loss.[6] Its mounting losses were so severe that this case could not be litigated before the company was forced to discontinue the project.

[5] Kenneth Garger, Company Behind Keystone XL pipeline seeks $15 billion damages from US,

But the costly regulatory crucible TC Energy endured, basic rudiments of the oil industry, and common sense all lead to an obvious conclusion: no company with shareholders could long withstand the flippant revocation of a previously granted (and hard-fought) permit upon which the entire transnational project relies. When the government believes the President may monocratically dispatch multi-year, international, and inter-state commercial projects set to provide numerous benefits to the States based on two paragraphs of platitudinous rationale—or no rationale at all—then no such project is safe. Affected industries will eschew or abandon development projects. And the States will be left to suffer the results. Plaintiffs maintain strong, live interests in this litigation, and judicial review should not be withheld because Defendants' unlawful actions were brutally effective. See Bayou Liberty, 217 F.3d at 398 (expectation of future development made alleged harm capable of repetition); Vieux Carre, 948 F.2d at 1447–48 (same).

The KXLP bears similarity to other cases of short duration that evade review—labor strikes, pregnancy, and elections—where the circumstances "should not preclude challenge to state policies that have had their impact and that continue in force, unabated and unreviewed." Super Tire, 416 U.S. at 126–27 (labor strike); see also Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 125 (1973) (pregnancy); Storer v. Brown, 415 U.S. 724, 737 n.8 (1974) (election law). Suppose a company in 2025 obtained a new cross-border permit to operate the KXLP from a new administration, and that permit was revoked by a subsequent administration. That company—like TC Energy here—would face the task of honoring its fiduciary duties while sustaining a massive investment in a dormant project pending costly litigation. Business realities make the President's order one that evades review. See Bayou Liberty, 217 F.3d at 398; Vieux Carre, 948 F.2d at 1447–48.

There is also a reasonable expectation the States will be subjected to the same unlawful action again. See Spencer, 523 U.S. at 17. Plaintiffs need only show "a reasonable expectation that the challenged illegality will reoccur." Catholic Leadership Coalition of Texas v. Reisman, 764 F.3d 409, 422 (5th Cir. 2014) (quotations omitted).

The challenged illegality reoccurs every day as the Executive Order keeps the KXLP on ice. See Kingdomware Techs., Inc. v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1969, 1976 (2016) (Article III is satisfied when "it is reasonable to expect that the [defendant] will refuse to apply" the Plaintiff's interpretation of the law, and the Court's adoption of this interpretation will guide future transactions between the parties). At issue here is the fate of a physical pipeline, not an abstract concept. It is in the ground, near complete, poised to transport oil, and sure to generate revenue. ECF 71 at ¶ 51. If Plaintiffs' arguments prevail here, it is reasonable, likely, and logical that TC Energy or another entity will restart the KXLP. It's also worth noting that, unless the Court grants Plaintiffs' relief, the President could capriciously interfere with similar projects.

In Bayou Liberty, homeowners sued the Army Corps of Engineers for issuing a building permit to nearby retail stores. 217 F.3d at 395. Though the stores were completely constructed during the litigation, the Fifth Circuit concluded the case was not moot because there was an "expectation of future development in the … area that may create the types of problems with flooding and destruction … [plaintiffs] complained about." Id. at 398; see also Lopez v. City of Hous., 617 F.3d 336, 340 (5th Cir. 2010) (pertinent inquiry was whether city had formed a policy that it would follow in future similar circumstances that are likely to repeat). Should the Plaintiffs prevail, the government's ability to arbitrarily shutter the KXLP \ will be checked. But if not, both the KXLP and other similar projects will be surrendered to the tender mercies of regulatory whim.

Finally, the "capable of repetition yet evading review" exception was made for cases like this. See Super Tire, 416 U.S. at 122 (when case challenges governmental action, courts must broaden their considerations to determine whether "petitioners are adversely affected by government 'without a chance of redress'") (quoting Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. ICC, 219 U.S. 498, 515 (1911)); see, e.g., Reisman, 764 F.3d at 423 (focusing in election law cases on whether the issue will recur between the defendant and the other members of the public). The KXLP's many benefits cannot be realized unless a court declares it unlawful for the President to do as he did here. The States cannot be denied a forum simply because the unlawful government actions so severely damaged the initial project operator that it felt compelled to abandon its plans. In sum, this case should not be cut short because the challenged government action succeeded in driving one affected party from the regulated activity—at least temporarily.

3. The Court Can Grant Declaratory Relief.

Even if the case is mooted for purposes of injunctive relief, the Court may still grant declaratory relief. See Meltzer v. Bd. of Pub. Instruction, 548 F.2d 559, 571–72 (5th Cir. 1977). As the Fifth Circuit explained in Meltzer, requests for declaratory relief are evaluated under a lesser mootness standard than injunctive relief. 548 F.2d at 571; see also Familias Unidas v. Briscoe, 544 F.2d 182, 189 (5th Cir. 1976); Nash v. Texas, 632 F. Supp. 951, 964 (E.D. Tex. 1986) ("The Supreme Court has explicitly recognized that when declaratory relief is sought, mootness should not preclude review of a statute that will be enforced in the future against the complainants."). The States have shared KXLP's long, sordid regulatory journey—from endless administrative review to approval, to Presidential approval and now revocation. That treatment will continue absent judicial relief.

In Super Tire, employers challenged New Jersey's policy of awarding public assistance to their striking employees through a state welfare program. 416 U.S. at 116–17. When the strike ended with a new collective bargaining agreement, the Court ruled that the case was not moot for purposes of declaratory relief because "the challenged governmental activity in the present case is not contingent, has not evaporated or disappeared, and, by its continuing and brooding presence, casts what may well be a substantial adverse effect on the interests of the petitioning parties." Id. at 122.

Super Tire's rationale applies here. Plaintiffs challenge government decisions that affect the behavior of third parties. Like New Jersey's welfare policy after the labor strike, the Executive Order "has not evaporated or disappeared." Id. No entity may bring KXLP online without the declaratory relief Plaintiffs have requested. And that means the Executive Order continues to impose "substantial[ly] adverse effect[s] on the interests of the petitioning parties." Id. The States continue to lose out on the economic, employment, environmental, and energy benefits they were expecting from the Keystone XL. But unlike Super Tire—where the plaintiffs took the action that potentially mooted the case (by negotiating a new agreement with the third party)—Defendants' conduct here caused TC Energy to stop constructing and operating the KXLP. That distinction make's Super Tire's rationale even more applicable here.

The major constitutional questions in dispute and the Executive Order's ongoing consequences weigh heavily in plaintiffs' favor. In Connell v. Shoemaker, 555 F.2d 483 (5th Cir. 1977), rental property owners challenged an order prohibiting soldiers from leasing units owned or managed by the plaintiffs due to racism allegations. When the order lifted, the Fifth Circuit allowed the plaintiffs to continue seeking declaratory judgment because of the "continuing practical consequences" of the Army's policy. Id. at 486–87 (noting that plaintiffs had "interests in various businesses engaged in retail sales of goods and services directly to the public in the area adjacent to Fort Hood"). Also significant to the Court was that the case involved a constitutional question. Id. at 487. The Executive Order's practical consequences for the States are tangible and ongoing. Millions in revenue and economic benefits have disappeared and millions of barrels of oil per week are not flowing through the pipeline. ECF 71 at ¶¶ 3, 56–60. This case also raises the significant constitutional question of whether the President's Article II powers allow him to trump Congress's Article I foreign commerce powers and revoke the KXLP permit.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

For these reasons, this case still presents a live case and controversy.

B. Neither the President Nor the Agency Defendants Are Above the Law.

1. Judicial Review is Available under the APA.

Agency actions that implement an executive order are also reviewable under the APA. Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322, 1326–27 (D.C. Cir. 1996) ("[T]hat the Secretary's regulations are based on the President's Executive Order hardly seems to insulate them from judicial review under the APA, even if the validity of the Order were thereby drawn into question."); Hawaii v. Trump, 878 F.3d 662, 680–81 (9th Cir. 2017) (finding final agency action reviewable under the APA, despite the fact that it was implementing an executive proclamation), rev'd on other grounds, Trump v. Hawaii, 138 S. Ct. 2392 (2018).

"[A]gency action" under 5 U.S.C. § 706 "includes the whole or part of an agency rule, order, license, sanction, relief, or the equivalent or denial thereof, or failure to act … thereof." 5 U.S.C. § 551(13). This list is expansive. It is "meant to cover comprehensively every manner in which an agency may exercise its power." Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, 531 U.S. 457, 478 (2001). "[T]he Supreme Court has explained that "'failure to act,' is … properly understood as a failure to take an agency action—that is, a failure to take one of the agency actions (including their equivalents) earlier defined in § 551(13)."' Doe v. United States, 853 F.3d 792, 799–800 (5th Cir. 2017) (quoting Norton v. S. Utah Wilderness All., 542 U.S. 55, 62 (2004)).

The term "order" is defined as "the whole or a part of a final disposition, whether affirmative, negative, injunctive, or declaratory in form, of an agency in a matter other than rule making but including licensing." 5 U.S.C. § 551(6). And "'license' includes the whole or a part of an agency permit," § 551(8), while "'licensing' includes agency process respecting the grant, renewal, denial, revocation, suspension, annulment, withdrawal, limitation, amendment, modification, or conditioning of a license." § 551(9).

The Army Corps of Engineers' withdrawal of TC Energy's application for a permit is a failure to act on its application for a permit, and is therefore agency action reviewable by the Court. The withdrawal explicitly incorporated the Executive Order. See ECF 98-8. This Court may review the substantive validity of the withdrawal as it bases its decision on the Executive Order. See Doe v. Trump, No. 3:19-cv-1743-SI, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65441, at *1-4 (D. Or. Apr. 13, 2020) (reviewing validity of presidential proclamation by way of APA review of agency rule incorporating the proclamation); E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Trump, 932 F.3d 742, 770 (9th Cir. 2018) ("It is the substantive rule of decision, not the Rule itself, that the Organizations have challenged under the APA, and insofar as DOJ and DHS have incorporated the [presidential] Proclamation by reference into the Rule, we may consider the validity of the agency's proposed action, including its 'rule … or the equivalent.'") (quoting 5 U.S.C. § 551(13)).

That TC Energy "requested" "suspension" of consideration of its application—in response to the Army Corps pointing to the Executive Order, ECF 98-9—does not take the agency's termination of that process from the realm of final agency action. See, e.g., Air One Helicopters, Inc. v. Fed. Aviation Admin., 86 F.3d 880, 882 (9th Cir. 1996) (stating that "it is a common rule of judicial economy that we will not require a party to exhaust administrative procedures when exhaustion would be futile … Accordingly, we will treat

[the agency's letters denying action on application for registration of aircraft until applicant undertook some other action] as final agency action."); Friedman v. Fed. Aviation Admin., 841 F.3d 537, 542 (D.C. Cir. 2016) ("Where an agency has clearly communicated it will not reach a determination on a petitioner's submission due to petitioner's recalcitrance but simultaneously refuses to deny the petitioner's submission on those grounds, it has engaged in final agency action subject to this Court's review.").

Not only is the Army Corp's withdrawal an "agency action," it is "final." "Under the APA, an aggrieved party may file suit in a federal district court to obtain review of any final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court." Nat'l Ass'n of Mfrs. v. Dep't of Def., 138 S. Ct. 617, 626 (2018) (citing 5 U.S.C. § 704). "Congress rarely intends to prevent courts from enforcing its directives to federal agencies." Mach Mining, LLC v. E.E.O.C., 135 S. Ct. 1645, 1651 (2015) (quotations omitted). "For that reason, [the Supreme] Court applies a 'strong presumption' favoring judicial review of administrative action." Id. In APA cases, this presumption is "guided by the Supreme Court's interpretation of the APA's finality requirement as 'flexible' and 'pragmatic.'" Qureshi v. Holder, 663 F.3d 778, 781 (5th Cir. 2011) (quoting Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 149–50 (1967)).

Agency action is considered "final" under the APA where the action first, "mark[s] the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process," and second, is "one by which rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow." U.S. Army Corps of Eng'rs v. Hawkes Co., 136 S. Ct. 1807, 1813 (2016) (quotations omitted)

Defendants argue that the Army Corps' withdrawal of TC Energy's application is not final agency action because "the withdrawal does not mark the completion of the agency's decision-making process on the application, but is interlocutory in nature." ECF 98 at 24. While an intermediate step in an administrative process "cannot be viewed as a 'consummation' of agency decision making," Qureshi, 663 F.3d at 781, that is not the situation here. The Army Corps has not merely paused consideration of TC Energy's permit; it has "withdraw[n]" its application and required TC Energy to begin the process anew by "submit[ting] an updated application for this project in the future." ECF 98-8. "[A]dministrative inaction [that] has precisely the same impact on the rights of the parties as denial of relief" is final agency action despite the ability of TC Energy to submit a new application because "its actions suggest the [Army Corps] has made up its mind, yet it seeks to avoid judicial review by holding out a vague prospect of reconsideration." Friedman v. Fed. Aviation Admin., 841 F.3d 537, 543 (D.C. Cir. 2016); John Doe, Inc. v. Gonzalez, Civil Action No. 06-966 (CKK), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44402, at *43 (D.D.C. June 29, 2006), aff'd sub nom. John Doe, Inc. v. Drug Enf't Admin., 484 F.3d 561 (D.C. Cir. 2007) ("DEA's denial of Plaintiff's import permit application is not tentative; rather, the DEA has explicitly stated that the import permit request 'was being cancelled,'" and was therefore final agency action). This application process has been consummated, and legal consequences—the inability to perform the actions sought by the permit—flow from it.

Regardless, "discretion" to reverse course, by itself, is insufficient to convert an action that is final to one that is nonfinal. See Hawkes Co., 136 S. Ct. at 1814 ("The Corps may revise an approved [jurisdictional determination] within the five-year period based on 'new information.' That possibility, however, is a common characteristic of agency action, and does not make an otherwise definitive decision nonfinal.") (citation omitted); Sackett v. E.P.A., 566 U.S. 120, 127 (2012) ("The mere possibility that an agency might reconsider in light of 'informal discussion' and invited contentions of inaccuracy does not suffice to make an otherwise final agency action nonfinal.").

Defendants have resisted discovery to uncover any other final agency actions implementing the Executive Order, arguing that the Court should rule on their motion to dismiss on lack of subject matter jurisdiction due to there being no final agency action. The Magistrate Judge has ordered a stay on discovery pending resolution of the motion to dismiss. ECF 99.

However, even in pure APA cases where discovery is not the norm, courts permit discovery to support a claim of subject matter jurisdiction. Glenwood Springs Citizens' All. v. United States DOI, Civil Action No. 20-cv-00658-CMA, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44690, at *2–4 (D. Colo. Mar. 10, 2021) (ordering limited discovery in an APA case regarding the "factual question as to whether Defendants engaged in any action that would be subject to review under the APA"); Doe v. Nielsen, No. 18-cv-02349-BLF (VKD), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153199, at *7 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 7, 2018) (permitting limited jurisdictional discovery in an APA case where "discovery of the nature of the agency action issue is necessary in order for the parties and the Court to determine the scope of the administrative record to be produced"); Grand Canyon Tr. v. Williams, No. CV13-8045, 2013 WL 12176992, at *1 (D. Ariz. Sept. 9, 2013) (permitting written discovery for plaintiffs to develop facts to demonstrate final agency action).

It would be improper for the Court to dismiss Plaintiffs' APA claims on the ground that there is no final agency action, when Defendants have yet to produce an administrative record or respond to any discovery. Courts have demanded the production of the administrative record before deciding reviewability. Friends of the River v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng'rs, 870 F. Supp. 2d 966, 974–77 (E.D. Cal. 2012) (denying motion to dismiss APA claims before submission of administrative record because "[d]etermining whether the [challenged actions] are final agency actions in the instant case requires a review of the full administrative record because … 'the question of jurisdiction is dependent on the resolution of factual issues going to the merits' of [the] action.") (quoting Safe Air For Everyone v. Meyer, 373 F.3d 1035, 1040 (9th Cir. 2004)); Ctr. for Popular Democracy Action v. Bureau of the Census, No. 1:19-cv-10917 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 9, 2020) (granting motion to expedite production of administrative record before deciding reviewability); Doe # 1 v. Trump, 423 F. Supp. 3d 1040, 1046 (D. Ore. 2019) (holding that production of administrative record was appropriate because the court required the administrative record to determine whether the agency action is final).

Instead of producing the administrative record of, for example, the Army Corps' decision to withdraw TC Energy's application, Defendants have submitted as exhibits a facially incomplete set of correspondence between the agency and TC Energy that fails to include the precipitating communication from the agency. ECF 98-8, 98-9 (referring to a "letter dated March 2, 2021" from the Army Corps that is not in the record here). Agencies are not permitted to defend their actions under the APA by way of post-hoc rationalizations outside the contemporaneous administrative record. SEC v. Chenery Corp., 332 U.S. 194, 196 (1947); s*ee also Nat'l Urban League v. Ross, No. 20-CV-05799-*

LHK, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 165989, at *43 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 10, 2020) ("this Court cannot engage in APA review based on a new record made initially in the reviewing court, especially a declaration drafted for litigation, because the declaration would be an impermissible post hoc rationalization that does not reveal the agency's reasons for acting at the time of the action.") (cleaned up).

The Army Corps' withdrawal of TC Energy's application for a permit—based on the Executive Order making any subsidiary permits for the KXLP project futile—is a final agency action which the Court can review under the APA. Regardless, the Court should refuse to dismiss Plaintiffs' APA claims until examining the administrative record and any discovery on this issue.

2. The President is Not Immune from Constitutional Challenges.

Despite the Defendants' contrary claims, this Court may exercise jurisdiction over the President—he is not above the law. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974); United States v. Lee, 106 U.S. 196, 220 (1882) ("All the officers of the government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law, and are bound to obey it."). The Supreme Court has "long held" that federal courts "ha[ve] the authority to determine whether [the President] has acted within the law." Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681, 703 (1997). This authority includes the power to restrain unconstitutional presidential action through injunctive and declaratory relief. See id.

Defendants claim that no court has issued a permanent injunction against the President in his official capacity in the absence of agency co-defendants. See ECF 98 at 17–18. But just two years ago the Second Circuit affirmed a permanent injunction against President Trump for blocking Twitter followers.[7] See Knight First Amendment Inst. at Columbia Univ. v. Trump, 928 F.3d 226, 230 (2d Cir. 2019), vacated as moot, 141 S. Ct. 1220 (2021); see also District of Columbia v. Trump, 291 F. Supp. 3d 725, 752 (D. Md. 2018) ("[I]t would be exalting form over substance if the President's acts were held to be beyond the reach of judicial scrutiny when he himself is the defendant, but held within judicial control when he and/or the Congress has delegated the performance of duties to federal officials subordinate to the President and one or more of them can be named as a defendant.'") (quoting Nat'l Treasury Emps. Union v. Nixon, 492 F.2d 587, 613 (D.C. Cir. 1974), rev'd on other grounds, In re Trump, 928 F.3d 360, 364 (4th Cir. 2019)). Indeed, lower courts have "permitted plaintiffs to proceed against the President by nonstatutory review" and "even issued injunctions to the President in such suits."[8] As a practical matter, the President is most often named along with agency defendants—as he is here—because subordinate officers enforce his directives. So while it might be somewhat rare for courts to review purely presidential acts, it is not unprecedented. Such review is entirely appropriate here.

And the Defendants' 155-year-old chestnut doesn't convince otherwise. See Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 475, 499 (1867). Courts may—indeed should—proceed with prudence and circumspection when exercising jurisdiction over the President, but that doesn't give Presidents a judicial hall pass. See Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S.

731, 753–54 (1982). First, Johnson has been sharply narrowed, if not completely overruled.[9]

Second, the legitimate separation of powers concerns expressed in Johnson[10] have been diverted into different doctrinal terrain—namely absolute immunity, standing, and the political question doctrine. See, e.g., Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. at 756 (recognizing presidential immunity from damages liability); Ray, Prerogative to Accountability, supra, at 810.

Finally, Defendants lean on dicta from a plurality opinion in Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788 (1992). Although the Court has failed to define the entire constitutional landscape, it is evident from later cases that Johnson and Franklin do not insulate Presidents from review. See Dalton v. Specter, 511 U.S. 462, 469 (1994) ("In reaching our conclusion [in Franklin] , we noted that the 'President's actions may still be reviewed for [10] Johnson must also be placed in its unique historical context. Southern states sued to enjoin President Johnson from enforcing the Reconstruction Act. See Suing the President, supra, at 1693. In a follow-up case challenging the same law—this time against the President's subordinates—the Court still refused to reach the merits, concluding they raised nonjusticiable "political questions." *Georgia v. constitutionality.'") (quoting Franklin, 505 U.S. at 801); id. at 474 ("[A] ssum[ing] … that some claims that the President has violated a statutory mandate are judicially reviewable outside the framework of the APA.") (citing Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U.S. 654, 667 (1981)). To be sure, injunctive relief against the President is an "extraordinary" measure, but not novel. There is almost always a subordinate cabinet official that the court may enjoin. See, e.g., Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 583 (majority opinion);[11] But there are times—like this—where the President may be appropriately enjoined to stop a constitutional violation. See, e.g., Nat'l Treasury Emps., 492 F.2d at 615–16 (granting declaratory relief against the President for violating the Federal Pay Comparability Act). In such a case, this Court necessarily has authority to grant injunctive relief against the Chief Executive.

C. The Court Has Jurisdiction to Enter Relief Against Agency Defendants.

While presidential actions are not subject to review under the APA, Franklin, 505 U.S. at 801, they "may still be reviewed for constitutionality" by evaluating subordinate executive agency actions implementing them. Id. (citing Youngstown, 343 U.S. 579; Panama Ref. Co. v. Ryan, 293 U.S. 388, 405 (1935)).

Although Defendants argue that "Executive Order No. 13990 does not call for or contemplate any role for the Agency Defendants in the revocation" and that "the Executive Order is self-executing," ECF 98 at 19, this is contrary to how the Executive Branch functions and to the agency actions evident here. "Because the President almost never [11] See also Ray, Prerogative to Accountability, supra, at 763 (the Youngstown Court enjoined Commerce Secretary Sawyer "as a convenient way to reach the merits of the steel companies' challenge to President Truman's executive order without addressing the scope of Mississippi v. Johnson.").

personally executes his orders, injunctive relief against his subordinates" is the method to obtain review of the constitutionality of presidential actions.[12] President Biden will not be personally policing the border in Northern Montana for violations of the Executive Order. See N.L.R.B. v. Noel Canning, 573 U.S. 513, 523 (2014) (noting "the President's continuous need for the assistance of subordinates") (quotations omitted).

President Biden surely was able to promulgate the Executive Order without subordinate agency action—that is, he was able to issue the Executive Order himself (the issuance was "self-executing" in this sense). But any injunctive relief would be forward-looking against any future enforcement actions for violations of its commands, not against the promulgation of the Executive Order itself. Plaintiffs do not (and could not) seek relief against the Executive Order's issuance because courts do not wield a "writ of erasure" against adopted textual provisions, whether statutes or executive enactments.[13]

As with statutes, so it is with executive actions that have the force of law: this Court has no power to reverse the President's issuance of the Executive Order. The relevant "events" for purposes of injunctive relief are the current and future actions to enforce the Executive Order, whether through denials of permits or to penalize violations of the Order's prohibitions of the maintenance and operation of the Keystone XL Pipeline across the border. The Executive Order's issuance, solely by the President, is not the relevant target of judicial relief.

Federal courts have long exercised the power to enjoin federal officers from violating the Constitution or statutes. See Armstrong v. Exceptional Child Center, Inc., 575 U.S. 320, 327–28 (2015) (discussing "a long history of judicial review of illegal executive action, tracing back to England"). Plaintiffs have a cause of action "at equity." Green Valley Special Util. Dist. v. City of Schertz, 969 F.3d 460, 475 (5th Cir. 2020) (en banc).

As a result, even if the Court were to disagree with Plaintiffs' arguments relating to their APA claims, that would not affect their right to relief on their constitutional claim (Count I) or their claim that the Executive Order conflicts with a statute enacted by Congress (Count II). There is a long history of federal courts granting relief on such claims. See, e.g., American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U.S. 94, 108 (1902); Stark v. Wickard, 321 U.S. 288, 310 (1944). "Nothing in the subsequent enactment of the APA altered the McAnnulty doctrine of review. It does not repeal the review of ultra vires actions recognized long before, in McAnnulty." Dart v. United States, 848 F.2d 217, 224 (D.C. Cir. 1988). "When an executive acts ultra vires, courts are normally available to reestablish the limits on his authority." Id. Thus, Plaintiffs can bring a "non-statutory review action," 33 Charles Alan Wright, et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 8304 (2d ed.), and courts have authority to review federal executive action that violates constitutional or statutory commands. Chamber of Commerce of U.S. v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322, 1327–32 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As any injunctive relief looks forward to future agency action, these "non-statutory review" claims against the Cabinet Defendants here are not in any way dependent on the requirements of the APA, including that there be final agency action. See Simmat v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 413 F.3d 1225, 1233 n.9 (10th Cir. 2005) (allowing the plaintiff's constitutional claim to proceed even though he "appear[ed] to concede that his claim does not satisfy the APA's requirement of 'final agency action'").

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' injuries are not redressable because the Cabinet Defendants have no enforcement role regarding the Executive Order. ECF 98 at 19. But Plaintiffs have alleged that the Cabinet Defendants have regulatory responsibilities regarding the KXLP project that will necessarily require them to apply the Executive Order. See ECF 71 at ¶¶ 9–20. These allegations are sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss. See Make the Rd. New York v. Pompeo, 475 F. Supp. 3d 232, 252–53 (S.D.N.Y. 2020) (rejecting motion to dismiss for lack of standing on ground that agency defendants did not have responsibility for challenged actions because "Plaintiffs allege in their complaint, however, that HHS is responsible for implementing the [presidential] Proclamation … and that the Proclamation assigns to HHS a variety of responsibilities regarding its implementation and enforcement[.]" (citing Franklin, 505 U.S. at 828).

On this point, Defendants also cite inapposite cases involving State governments facing diffused law-enforcing power. ECF 98 at 21–22. President Biden is head of the Executive Branch, and the Cabinet Defendants are all subject to his direction, see U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 1; this is very different from cases where State executive officials were facing suits for injunctive relief where they had literally no control over those tasked with enforcing the challenged provision. See Okpalobi v. Foster, 244 F.3d 405, 422–26 (5th Cir. 2001) (en banc) (civil enforcement scheme enforced by private plaintiffs); 6th St. Bus. Partners LLC v. Abbott, No. 1:20-CV-706-RP, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130814, at *7 (W.D. Tex. July 24, 2020) (while Texas governor is "empower[ed] to promulgate executive orders, [he is not empowered] to enforce them.").

Furthermore, the Cabinet Defendants here have already taken action to implement the Executive Order. As part of the overall KXLP project, TC Energy had submitted an application for an Individual Permit under Section 10 of the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1899 and Section 404 of the Clean Water Act. See ECF 71 at ¶ 54. After President Biden's revocation of the cross-border permit in the Executive Order, the Army Corps of Engineers initiated communication with TC Energy on March 2, 2021, which TC Energy described as a "letter … request[ing] that TC Energy provide the Corps with clarification regarding the Project's current purpose and need in light of Executive Order 13990, which revoked the previously issued Presidential Permit that is required to construct and operate the project at the international border." ECF 98-9.

Taking the hint, TC Energy asked that the Corps to "suspen[d] . . . review of its application" while it evaluated the continued viability of the Keystone XL Pipeline project in light of the Executive Order. ECF 98-9. The Corps then informed TC Energy that it would not merely "suspend" its consideration of the permit application, but "decided to administratively withdraw [its] application for a Department of the Army permit while [TC Energy] continue[d] to consider [its] path forward," terminating the process and requiring it to start over with a new application, if desired. ECF 98-8.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Defendants dismiss this agency action as a mere "collateral consequence" of the Executive Order, rather than an example of its implementation. ECF 98 at 20. They reason that "[t]he Army Corps' suspension of its own administrative process was not a necessary step in the revocation of the permit for the border crossing [in the Executive Order]." ECF 98 at 21. But this reverses the causation here: Plaintiffs' claim is not that the Army Corps' withdrawal of the application somehow caused the temporally earlier Executive Order, or was a necessary subsequent action to make the Executive Order effective; rather, the claim is that the Army Corps implemented the Executive Order by acting based on it, with the clear implication that TC Energy seeking further permits for the KXLP project would be futile. This supports the common-sense intuition that the Executive Order will be implemented by the same agencies that have been involved in regulatory approvals for the KXLP project for over a decade. Defendants' apparent contention that subordinate executive officials will ignore the Executive Order when making subsidiary determinations for the KXLP project is not viable either in theory or in fact. Injunctive and declaratory relief against the Army Corps and the other Cabinet Defendants would prevent implementation of an unlawful Executive Order without raising the separation-of-powers concerns of direct relief against the President.

D. Plaintiffs Have Standing.

1. Plaintiffs Have Alleged Concrete and Particularized Injuries.

With the stroke of a pen, the President robbed Plaintiffs and their citizens of millions of dollars in tax revenue and income. Defendants' own analyses confirm that Plaintiffs have cognizable injuries because they will suffer numerous direct and indirect economic injuries as a result of Defendants' revocation of the permit for the KXLP. See Dep't of Commerce, 139 S. Ct. at 2565–66 (finding states' alleged injuries sufficiently concrete and particularized when they predicted a census undercount based on illegal third-party acts motivated by fears that were legally impossible to realize); El Paso Cty. v. Trump, 982 F.3d 332, 338 (5th Cir. 2020) ("Economic injury is a quintessential injury upon which to base standing.") (quotations omitted). Plaintiffs' standing theories are amply supported by Defendants' thorough economic analyses in the State Department's 2014 and 2019 FSEISs—which Defendants understandably make no attempt to refute. Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149, 158 (2014); ECF 71 at ¶¶ 39–42, 56–60. In sum, Plaintiffs' injuries are "concrete, particularized, and actual or imminent; fairly traceable to the defendant's challenged behavior; and likely to be redressed by a favorable ruling." Davis v. FEC, 554 U.S. 724, 733 (2008). The President's unlawful actions that have withheld the KXLP's economic and environmental benefits also give rise to standing under the special solicitude and parens patriae doctrines. See Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497 (2007).

a. The Executive Order Robs Plaintiffs of Specific Tax Revenues.

Defendants' actions are causing Plaintiffs to lose millions in direct tax revenue from the KXLP's construction and operation. Czyzewski v. Jevic Holding Corp., 137 S. Ct. 973, 983 (2017). As in Wyoming v. Oklahoma, 502 U.S. 437 (1992), Defendants' revocation "directly affects" Plaintiffs' "ability to collect" specific taxes, including franchise taxes, property taxes, and income taxes. Id. at 451; ECF 71 at ¶ 40–42, 56–58. Defendants misapply the Fifth Circuit's decision in El Paso. Unable to assert parens patriae standing as a local government, El Paso County merely asserted that "the economy of the county at large will be harmed, resulting in a reduction in general tax revenues for the county." Id. at 340. Here, however, Plaintiffs have alleged a "direct link between the state's status as a collector and recipient of revenues and the … action being challenged, such as the loss of a specific tax revenue to have standing." Id. at. 341 (quotations omitted).

Plaintiffs Texas and Louisiana will suffer a significant loss in direct revenue. ECF 71 at ¶ 61, 78. The Gulf Coast region is one of the world's largest refining hubs and the most important buyer-processor of heavy crude produced globally. ECF 71 at ¶ 65; 2019 FSEIS at S-4–5. Heavy crude—delivered from Western Canada via the KXLP—offers the Gulf Coast's refineries optimal profit margins. See ECF 71 at ¶¶ 61–77. Without the KXLP's provision of this heavy crude, refineries must process other grades of oil, which increases costs, diminishes profit margins, and yields lower franchise taxes that will lower Texas state revenues. See ECF 71 at ¶¶ 79–83.

Construction of the KXLP would directly support 42,100 jobs and create approximately $2 billion in earnings across multiple plaintiff states. See ECF 71 at ¶ 41; 2014 FSEIS at ES-19. Residents of Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Montana would get about 12,000 of those jobs. 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-17. The halt in KXLP construction and operation directly reduces tax revenues in Kansas, Nebraska, and Montana, which assess state income taxes. See, e.g., ECF 71 at ¶ 58. According to Defendants, the loss of taxes from construction materials and construction worker spending for basic living expenses such as food, housing, gasoline, and entertainment would cost South Dakota $46.5 million, Nebraska $16.5 million, and Kansas $2.7 million. 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-29–30.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Louisiana will also suffer significant revenue losses. ECF 71 at ¶ 78. The KXLP is the state's key to heavy crude and optimal refinery profits. See ECF 71 at ¶¶ 61–77; 2019 FSEIS at 1-20. Three of the six contractors building the KXLP were from the Gulf Coast Plaintiff states. ECF 71 at ¶ 77. Louisiana will now lose state corporation tax revenue based on the disappearance of this work. See, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 47:32, 47:601.

Once operational, the KXLP would generate tens of millions in direct tax revenue for several Plaintiffs. ECF 71 at ¶ 42. The 2014 FSEIS estimated that the KXLP would generate $55.6 million in annual property taxes across South Dakota, Nebraska, and Montana. ECF 71 at ¶ 56; 2014 FSEIS at ES-20. The Montana Department of Revenue now estimates "[i]n its first year of operation, the KXLP would generate an estimated $95,033,723 in property tax revenue across all jurisdictions in Montana." Ex. 1, Decl. of Doug Roehm at ¶ 11.[14] This includes "$15,343,164 in property tax revenue for the State of Montana in the first year of operation." Id. ¶ 11(a). Workers hired to permanently maintain the pipeline in certain states would also pay state income taxes. ECF 71 at ¶ 59; 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-31. These are the exact tax revenue damages required by El Paso to establish standing. See El Paso, 982 F.3d at 341.

b. Plaintiffs Have Special Solicitude Standing.

Plaintiffs are entitled to special solicitude to preserve their quasi-sovereign interests. See Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 159 (5th Cir. 2015) (Texas I); Texas v. United States, 328 F. Supp. 3d 662, 691 (S.D. Tex. 2018) (Texas III). Defendants' revocation [14] The Court may allow plaintiffs to submit affidavits furthering particularized allegations of fact in support of standing. See Lewis v. Knutson, 699 F.2d 230, 237 (5th Cir. 1983).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

harmed Plaintiffs' quasi-sovereign interests because it affected their rights of foreign and interstate commerce. See Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 520 (2007). Plaintiffs, therefore, have an Article III interest in maintaining the constitutional separation of powers as it relates cross-border pipeline permitting. See Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico ex rel. Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 607–08 (1982).

When they entered the Union, the States surrendered certain sovereign prerogatives, such as the right to regulate commercial relations with foreign powers and their sister States. See Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 519–20. The Fifth Circuit held that Texas and other states could challenge federal immigration policy because they "cannot establish their own classifications of aliens, just as Massachusetts cannot invade Rhode Island to force reductions in greenhouse gas emissions [and] cannot negotiate an emissions treaty with China or India." Texas I, 809 F.3d at 153 (citation omitted); see also id. at 152–53 (noting DAPA would cause Texas to lose millions of dollars). Plaintiffs, similarly, cannot negotiate a treaty with Canada or regulate the free flow of foreign commerce, including cross-border oil pipelines.

c. Plaintiffs Have Parens Patriae Standing.

"Parens patriae standing allows a state to sue a defendant to protect the interests of its citizens at large." Texas III, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 694 (citing Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 600–02). "[A]n established line of cases … have held that states may rely on the doctrine of parens patriae to maintain suits against the federal government." Texas v. United States, 86 F. Supp. 3d at 626 (Texas II) (citing Wash. Utilities and Transp. Comm'n v. F.C.C., 513 F.2d 1142 (9th Cir. 1975); Kansas ex rel. Hayden v. United States, 748 F. Supp. 797

(D. Kan. 1990); Abrams v. Heckler, 582 F. Supp. 1155 (S.D.N.Y. 1984)), aff'd, 809 F.3d 134 (5th Cir. 2015).

"[T]he State … must have a 'quasi-sovereign interest' in the litigation to sue in its parens patriae capacity." Hood ex rel. Miss. v. Microsoft Corp., 428 F. Supp. 2d 537, 542 (S.D. Miss. 2006) (citing Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 607). Quasi-sovereign interests fall into two categories: (1) "the health and well-being—both physical and economic—of its residents in general"; and (2) "not being discriminatorily denied its rightful status within the federal system." Id. at 542–43 (quoting Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 609).

Alfred L. Snapp does not, as Defendants claim, preclude parens patriae suits against the federal government. ECF 98 at 32. Like another court in this district noted, the language cited by Defendants in Alfred L. Snapp was dictum and the federal government was not a defendant in that case. See Texas III, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 696. And "[i]n Massachusetts v. EPA, the Court specifically rejected the argument that state parens patriae standing is categorically barred in suits against the federal government." Id. at 697 (citing Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 520 n.17). Massachusetts clarified that parens patriae standing is prohibited where a state seeks to "protect her citizens from the operation of federal statutes," but not where it wishes "to assert its rights under federal law." 549 U.S. at 520 n.17.

First, Plaintiffs satisfy the Massachusetts standard because they challenge the President's revocation decision as a violation of the Constitution's systems of enumerated and separated powers. The States, moreover, seek to vindicate on behalf of their citizens the presumption, absent a contrary Congressional regulation, in favor of the free flow of commerce with foreign nations and among the states. See ECF 71 at ¶¶ 89–90; Welton v.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Missouri, 91 U.S. 275, 282 (1875) ("The fact that Congress has not seen fit to prescribe any specific rules to govern inter-State commerce … is equivalent to a declaration that inter-State commerce shall be free and untrammelled."); see also Japan Line, Ltd. v. Cty. of L.A., 441 U.S. 434, 448 (1979) (federal uniformity is essential for foreign commerce).

Second, Plaintiffs satisfy the Massachusetts standard because they seek to vindicate the States' and their citizens' rights under a federal statute. "The [Massachusetts] Court suggested that this type of litigation, which 'turn[ed] on the proper construction of a congressional statute,' presented 'a question eminently suitable to resolution in federal court.'" Texas III, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 691 (quoting Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 516). Plaintiffs also rights under the Temporary Payroll Tax Cut Continuation Act of 2011, Pub. L. 112-78, 125 Stat. 1289–1290 (Dec. 23, 2011). The proper construction of Pub. L. 112-78 directly affects Plaintiffs and their citizens. Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 516.

Plaintiffs are entitled to special solicitude and parens patriae standing.

i. Economic and Physical Well-Being

Defendants' revocation will devastate the well-being of Plaintiffs' communities and economies. KXLP's construction and operation would create and sustain thousands of jobs, bolster energy independence, and infuse high-poverty areas with much needed local tax revenue. See ECF 71 at ¶ ¶ 31, 38–42, 56–60, 84.

Defendants' own analyses—which they don't contest—demonstrate that direct economic activity is dwarfed by the substantial indirect and induced economic activity associated with the KXLP. ECF 71 at ¶ ¶ 39–42; 2014 FSEIS at ES-19-20. This indirect activity includes all goods and services that would be purchased by contractors such as concrete, fuel, surveying, welding materials, and earth-moving equipment. 2014 FSEIS 4.10-14. Induced activity includes the spending of earnings that would be received by employees working for either contractors or for any supplier of goods and services, such as access road construction crews, welders, employees of pipe manufacturers, and food suppliers. ECF 71 at 39 (citing 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-14). Indirect and induced spending would total approximately $1.3 billion. 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-2.

These benefits would not end with construction. Once operational, the KXLP would generate tax revenue, jobs, and other economic benefits. ECF 71 at ¶¶ 39–42, 59–60. For example, for its first year of operation in Montana, the KXLP would generate: $30,202,721 in revenue paid directly to county governments; $5,070,018 in revenue for county schools; $27,784,235 in revenue for local schools; $2,234,333 in revenue for miscellaneous entities and fire districts; $5,499,483 for cities; and $8,899,769 in additional taxes and fees. Roehm Decl. at ¶ 11(b)-(g). These revenues would provide sorely needed resources to low income and rural areas. ECF 71 at ¶ 57. Several poor Montana counties would see their property tax revenues increase anywhere from 27% to 117%. ECF 71 at ¶ 57. South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas would see similar benefits. See 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-33–34. The Gulf States' general public revenues would grow over the short and long terms as well. See ECF 71 at ¶ 78. Plaintiffs and their communities would also gain tens of millions in annual tax revenue from the regulators, residents, and businesses that refine, transport, and export KXLP's crude oil. ECF 71 at ¶ 60.

Three smaller projects connected to the KXLP would affect numerous local economies. First, the Bakken Marketlink Project ("BMP") would transport North Dakota and Montana oil from the Bakken formation to the KXLP. Construction of the BMP would create an estimated 1,000 jobs and $59.4 million in earnings. 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-10. The BMP would deliver up to 100,000 bpd of oil to Oklahoma and the Gulf Coast. 2014 FSEIS at ES-9. Second, the Big Bend to Witten Transmission Line Project would provide reliable electricity for KXLP's continuing operation by constructing a new transmission line originating in South Dakota. 2014 ES at ES-9. This would create 1,100 jobs and $47.6 million in earnings. 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-10. Finally, electrical power for the KXLP would be obtained from local power providers. Electrical distribution lines and substations would create approximately 3,100 jobs and $137 million in earnings. 2014 FSEIS at 4.10-10. In Montana, the KXLP would have been the largest customer for several electrical co-ops, which would reduce rural consumers' energy bills. See Ex. 2, Decl. of Tary Hanson at ¶ 6; Ex. 3, Decl. of Michael Hoy at ¶ 7.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The KXLP would generate enormous benefits for Plaintiffs. But those benefits will never materialize if President Biden's Executive Order stands.

ii. Rightful status within the federal system

Each State "also has an interest in securing observance of the terms under which it participates in the federal system." Alfred L. Snapp, 458 U.S. at 607–08. "In the context of parens patriae actions," the Court has explained, "this means ensuring that the State and its residents are not excluded from the benefits that are to flow from participation in the federal system." Id. at 608. Under the Court's caselaw, states may vindicate Commerce Clause interests as parens patriae. For example, the Court said a state "need not wait for the Federal Government to vindicate the State's interest in the removal of barriers to the participation by its residents in the free flow of interstate commerce." Id. at 608.

As discussed above, under Massachusetts v. EPA, the President's decision to revoke the KXLP affected Plaintiffs' quasi-sovereign interests by halting a major foreign and interstate commercial project. See Texas II, 86 F. Supp. 3d at 625 (noting that parens patriae standing and special solicitude standing theories are "at least indirectly related"). And States have parens patriae standing to challenge violations of the Interstate Commerce Clause because they lack the power to control or interfere with interstate commerce. See, e.g., M*aryland v. Louisiana,* 451 U.S. 725, 739 (1981) (direct injury to plaintiff states from discriminatory tax was supported by the states' interest in protecting citizens from substantial economic injury). States, likewise, have the same interest in enforcing the Foreign Commerce Clause. By ratifying the Constitution, states ceded their authority to regulate foreign and interstate commerce to Congress, so they must have some orderly mechanism to challenge harmful commercial regulations propounded by the wrong constitutional actor. See Texas I, 809 F.3d at 153–54 (citing Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 519). Defendants' have violated the Commerce Clause and have resultantly inflicted substantial economic injuries on the plaintiffs, their communities, and their citizens.

2. Plaintiffs' Injuries are Redressable.

Finally, as discussed above, if this Court grants Plaintiffs' requested relief, it will redress Plaintiffs' injuries. Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 103 (1998). The KXLP—much of which is already constructed—would deliver strong returns for any company that chose to resume the project. But as a matter of business sense, no company with the requisite investment capital would ever revive the KXLP project—not as long as the President wields the unliteral authority to revoke permission for such projects without notice, process, or legitimate justification. See Dep't of Commerce, 139 S. Ct. at 2566. Doing so would likely violate the company's fiduciary responsibilities. That company would know that it could reasonably face the same fate as TC Energy.

The Fifth Circuit has found redressability under less-certain facts than this case. In Hanson v. Veterans Administration, 800 F.2d 1381 (5th Cir. 1986), a plaintiff claimed discriminatory appraisals undervalued his property, located in a racially mixed neighborhood. Id. at 1384. The $7,000 delta between the appraised value and contract price prevented plaintiff from securing necessary financing. Id. at 1385. Although it was uncertain whether a discrimination-free appraisal would result in a higher valuation, the Court found redressability because it "might permit [plaintiff] to purchase" the house. Id. at 1386 (emphasis added). Under that standard, and due to the clear economic benefits that would follow a favorable judgement, Plaintiffs' injuries are clearly redressable.[15]

Plaintiffs satisfy multiple theories of standing and this Court has jurisdiction to adjudicate these claims.

II. VENUE IS PROPER

Where, as here, "a defendant is an officer or employee of the United States," venue is proper "in any judicial district in which … the plaintiff resides [or where] a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred, or a substantial part of [15] Plaintiffs note that special solitude standing lessens their redressability burden. See Texas III, 328 F. Supp. 3d. at 691 (citing Texas I, 809 F.3d at 159); see also id. ("at the very least, it appears to shore up weaknesses presented by attenuated causation and redressability arguments") (citing Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 523).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

property that is the subject of the action is situated." 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1). In their First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs alleged that "[v]enue lies [in the Southern District of Texas] because Plaintiff the State of Texas is a resident of this judicial district, and a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to Plaintiff's claims occurred in this District." ECF 71 at ¶ 23.

Defendants attempt to bootstrap an argument against the standing of the State of Texas into the analysis of whether venue is proper in this District. ECF 98 at 37–38. This is erroneous for two reasons.

First, the conflation of standing with venue conflicts with the well-established rule that "venue [is] determined at the outset of litigation and [is] not affected by subsequent events." Smilde v. Snow, 73 F. App'x 24, 26 (5th Cir. 2003); see also Holmes v. Energy Catering Servs., L.L.C., 270 F. Supp. 2d 882, 885 n.1 (S.D. Tex. 2003) (concluding that "[u]nder section 1391, venue is determined when the suit is filed and is not affected by subsequent events such as the dismissal of a defendant, as occurred here"). Even if the Court found that Texas lacked standing, this would not affect the propriety of venue.

The cases cited by Defendants are inapposite. Defendants first cite Miller v. Albright, 523 U.S. 420 (1998). ECF 98 at 37. There, the district court found that venue was improper after the Texas-based plaintiff had already been dismissed for lack of standing. Miller, 523 U.S. at 426–27. Defendants state that of the nine justices, "none disputed the straightforward conclusion that venue was improper if the Texas plaintiff in fact lacked standing." ECF No. 98 at 37 n.15. But the propriety of the venue transfer was not before the Court, and the Texas-based plaintiff "never indicated any intent to challenge his dismissal from the suit." Miller, 523 U.S. at 448 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

Defendants also rely on Inst. of Certified Prac., Inc. v. Bentsen, 874 F. Supp. 1370 (N.D. Ga. 1994), for the proposition that venue is improper where the only plaintiff that resided in the district lacks standing. ECF 98 at 37. In that case, there were two plaintiffs, who the court labeled as "Institute" and "Shinn." Bentsen, 874 F. Supp. at 1371. Having found that Institute lacked standing, the court held that venue was improper with respect to Shinn because the "plaintiff cannot manufacture venue by adding the Institute as a party." Id. at 1372 (emphasis added). Bentsen cited Nat'l Distillers and Chemical Corp. v. Dep't. of Energy, 487 F. Supp. 34 (D. Del. 1980) in support; that case involved "a number of facts which strongly suggest that the transfer [of property] was made for the sole purpose of obtaining venue in this district," id. at 37, indicating the concerns of the Bentsen court. The district court in Miller also apparently faced collusive behavior. See Miller v. Christopher, 870 F. Supp. 1, 2 (D.D.C. 1994) (explaining that after the defendant moved to dismiss or transfer venue, the non-U.S. citizen plaintiff added her father, a Texas resident, as a co-plaintiff). There is no allegation of improper collusion here.[16]

Second, the Court need not even reach the question of whether Texas has standing because "[i]t is not necessary … for all Plaintiffs to demonstrate standing; rather, 'one party with standing is sufficient to satisfy Article III's case-or-controversy requirement.'"

[16] Consultation with a leading treatise confirms this reading of these two cases. In Wright and Miller's Federal Practice and Procedure, the only two instances listed for venue being improper under § 1391(e) in cases involving multiple plaintiffs is where (1) venue is based on the joinder of a plaintiff with a frivolous claim, or (2) a plaintiff has been improperly and collusively joined for the purpose of creating venue in the district. 14D Charles Alan Wright, et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3815 (4th ed.).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Texas II, 86 F. Supp. 3d at 616, aff'd, 809 F.3d 134 (5th Cir. 2015) (quoting Rumsfeld v. Forum for Academic and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 52 n.2 (2006)).

If "one of the Plaintiff States has standing, this Court need not analyze the standing of any other plaintiff." Texas v. United States, No. 1:18-CV-00068, 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133114, at *57 (S.D. Tex. July 16, 2021) (citing Town of Chester v. Laroe Ests., Inc., 137 S. Ct. 1645, 1651 (2017). As Defendants assert that "Texas in particular fails to establish its standing to sue," ECF 98 at 37 (emphasis added), presumably they believe the claims of other Plaintiffs are stronger. As explained earlier, Texas has adequately alleged its standing under Article III. But if Montana's standing is the clearest to evaluate, there is no need to analyze the standing of other Plaintiffs, including Texas. Defendants' attempt to conflate the standing analysis with that for venue should not be entertained.

III. EXECUTIVE ORDER 13990 Violates the Separation of Powers

President Biden's revocation of the KXLP permit in Executive Order 13990 improperly encroaches on Congress's Article I powers to regulate foreign and interstate commerce. Congress regulates cross-border commercial instrumentalities like transnational oil pipelines. Congress expressly authorized the KXLP in 2011. Congress has repeatedly signaled its approval of the project. Congress has never acquiesced to the President's contrary policy preferences regarding the KXLP. And even if Congress had remained silent on the issue, the President lacks the constitutional power to unilaterally revoke a duly authorized cross-border permit absent some legitimate national security justification. No such justifications exist. So the President's residual foreign affairs powers are neither implicated nor strong enough to justify the President's action here. And when the Executive Branch invades Congress's constitutional domain, the Court can and should restore proper constitutional balance.[17]

A. Congress Has Primacy Over Matters of Foreign Commerce

The Constitution vests the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce in Congress—not the President. U.S. CONST. art I, § 8, cl. 3. Congress's foreign commerce power is "exclusive and plenary." Bd. of Trustees v. United States, 289 U.S. 48, 56 (1933); see also Japan Line, 441 U.S. at 448 (suggesting that Congress's power over foreign commerce is greater than its domestic counterpart). The Foreign Commerce Clause "comprehend[s] every species of commercial intercourse between the United States and foreign nations. No sort of trade can be carried on between this country and any other, to which this power does not extend." Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1, 193–94 (1824); accord United States ex. rel. Turner v. Williams, 194 U.S. 279, 290 (1904); Henderson v. Mayor of New York, 92 U.S. 259, 270 (1875); United States v. Holliday, 70 U.S. 407, 417 (1865). As a constitutional matter, therefore, Congress possesses the authority to authorize, prohibit, and regulate a transnational oil pipeline cross-border permit.

The President is Commander-in-Chief and accordingly possesses certain implied Article II powers over foreign affairs. "The President is the sole organ of the nation in its external relations, and its sole representative with foreign nations." United States v. Curtiss-Wright Exp. Corp., 299 U.S. 304, 319 (1936). He has the sole power to negotiate treaties, nominate the Nation's ambassadors, engage in direct diplomacy, and recognize foreign governments. See Zivotofsky v. Kerry, 576 U.S. 1, 13–14 (2015). The President also has broad authority to protect national security. See Youngstown, at 343 U.S. at 645 (Jackson, J., concurring). Defendants rely on the President's implied foreign affairs powers to justify his action here.

[17] Plaintiffs drop their nondelegation claim. See ECF 98 at 58.

But this foreign affairs power does not swallow Congress's foreign commerce power. See Zivotofsky, 576 U.S. at 16 ("[M]any decisions affecting foreign relations—including decisions that may determine the course of our relations with recognized countries—require congressional action. Congress may 'regulate Commerce with foreign Nations ….'"; Medellin v. Texas, 552 U.S. 491, 524 (2008) ("The President's authority to act, as with the exercise of any governmental power, 'must stem either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself.'") (quoting Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 585) (majority opinion); Home Building & Loan Assn. v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398, 426 (1934) ("even the war power does not remove constitutional limitations safeguarding essential liberties"). The President's authority over foreign affairs is far from absolute and does not displace that of Congress—specifically when it relates to questions of foreign commerce.

But Defendants advance a near-absolute theory of Executive Power that would upend our constitutional order. And the President's unilateral revocation of the KXLP—which coopts commercial regulatory powers belonging to Congress—manifests that dangerous theory. In such instances, courts must enforce the separation of powers. See, e.g., Zivotofsky v. Clinton, 566 U.S. 189, 201(2012); Medellin, 552 U.S. at 523; Youngstown, 343 U. S. at 587; Panama Ref. Co., 293 U. S. at 433.

Courts generally use Justice Jackson's Youngstown framework when evaluating separation-of-powers challenges to Presidential action. See Medellin, 552 U.S. at 524 (discussing Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 635 (Jackson, J., concurring)). This framework recognizes that "[p]residential powers are not fixed but fluctuate, depending upon their disjunction or conjunction with those of Congress." Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 635. Here, Congress has spoken clearly, and that should resolve the question. But even if it failed to speak to the KXLP matter, the President may not annex Congress's Article I, § 8 powers and regulate foreign commerce as he, alone, sees fit.

B. Congress Expressly Authorized the Keystone XL Pipeline in 2011

"When the President takes measures incompatible with the expressed or implied will of Congress, his power is at its lowest ebb," and courts can sustain his actions "only by disabling the Congress from acting upon the subject." Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 637–38. Congress has expressly and impliedly approved the KXLP permit—an implement of foreign and interstate commerce—so the President's foreign affairs powers must yield.

After years of administrative delay, the State Department in November 2011 announced it could not complete the necessary review to make a decision on the KXLP permit until at least the first quarter of 2013.[18] One month later in response, Congress enacted Section 501 of the Temporary Payroll Tax Cut Continuation Act of 2011, Pub. L. 112–78, 125 Stat. 1289–90 (Dec. 23, 2011), which President Obama signed. Section 501 mandated that "not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the [18] President Obama touted Keystone's importance during a 2012 campaign event and suggested the delay in KXLP's approval was due to reviews of health and safety protocols. See Joe Wertz, What Obama's Cushing Visit Means for Oklahoma and the Keystone Pipeline, NPR (Mar. 23, 2012), https://stateimpact.npr.org/oklahoma/2012/03/23/what-obamas-cushing-visit-means-for-oklahoma-and-the-keystone-pipline/.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

President, acting through the Secretary of State, shall grant a permit under Executive Order No. 13337 ... for the Keystone XL pipeline project." Id. § 501(a). The only exception to this mandate was "if the President determines that the Keystone XL pipeline would not serve the national interest." Id. § 501(b)(1).

If he reached a negative national interest determination, Section 501 required the President to submit a report to Congress that "provides a justification for [the] determination including consideration of economic, employment, energy security, foreign policy, trade, and environmental factors" "not later than 15 days after the date of the determination." Id. § 501(b)(2). The statute then expressly dictated the "[e]ffect of no finding or action." Id. § 501(b)(3). If "a determination is not made … and no action is taken by the President … not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the permit for the Keystone XL pipeline … shall be in effect by operation of law." Id.

Neither the President nor the State Department made the requisite determination that the KXLP disserved the national interest, and neither submitted the required report to Congress within the prescribed timeframe. The State Department recommended that the President deny the application due to "the fact that the Department does not have sufficient time to obtain the information necessary to assess whether the project … is in the national interest."[19] On the other hand, the announcement admitted the State Department was unable to "determine that the Keystone XL would not serve the national interest." Id. Either way, the Department failed to produce a negative national interest determination and therefore didn't avail the administration of the exception Congress provided in § 501. Id. (emphasizing that the "denial" wasn't a national interest determination by "not preclude[ing] any subsequent permit application").

[19] Press Release, Denial of the Keystone XL Pipeline Application, U.S. Dep't of State, (Jan. 18, 2012), https://2009-2017.state.gov/r/pa/prs/ps/2012/01/181473.htm.

When President Obama accepted the State Department's recommendation, he painstakingly explained that his denial wasn't a negative national interest determination: "[t]his announcement is not a judgment on the merits of the pipeline, but the arbitrary nature of a deadline that prevented the State Department from gathering the information necessary to approve the project and protect the American people."[20] And as noted above, the President never submitted the negative national interest report to Congress. "We need more time" wasn't a statutory option.

The President failed to satisfy the terms of § 501(b). As a result, the KXLP permit was granted by operation of law. The Executive Order violates federal law because § 501 did not give the President power to revoke the KXLP. His only discretionary authority was set forth in § 501(b)(1). And the only conditions put on the permit were that the project comply with applicable federal laws and regulations. See § 501(c). Congress has constitutional authority over foreign commerce. Zivotofsky, 576 U.S. at 16; Gibbons, 22 U.S. at 193–94. The President's power over the KXLP consisted of Congress's delegation in § 501(b)(1). Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 637–38; United States v. Guy W. Capps, Inc., 204 F.2d 655 (4th Cir. 1953), aff'd on other grounds, 348 U.S. 296 (1955) (invalidating executive agreement regulating Canadian seed potato imports that conflicted with statute).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Executive Order 13990 is therefore contrary to law and unconstitutional.

C. Even Absent Pub. L. 112-78, The President Lacks the Power to Unilaterally Revoke this Oil Pipeline Cross-Border Permit.

"When the President acts in the absence of either a congressional grant or denial of authority, he can only rely upon his independent powers …." Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 637. There, "the validity of the President's action … hinges on a consideration of all the circumstances which might shed light on the views of the Legislative Branch." Dames & Moore, 453 U.S. at 668. Courts consider whether Congress has "enacted legislation, or even passed a resolution, indicating its displeasure with the" action. Id. at 687.

They also consider whether Congress has acquiesced in a "particular exercise of Presidential authority." Medellin, 552 U.S. at 528; see also id. at 531 (confining acquiescence inquiry to the "narrow set of circumstances" directly supported by past practice). But "past practice does not, by itself, create power." Medellin, 552 U.S. at 532. Past practice—when systematic, unbroken, and unquestioned—"can raise a presumption that the action ha[s] been taken in pursuance of [Congressional] consent." Id. 531 (cleaned up). Defendants here cannot establish this presumption, nor can they overcome Congress's express opposition to this specific exercise of power.

The Supreme Court has observed that "[t]he President is the sole organ of the nation in its external relations, and its sole representative with foreign nations." Curtiss-Wright, 299 U.S. at 319. But in the same breath the Court reaffirmed that the President's foreign affairs powers, "like every other governmental power, must be exercised in subordination to the applicable provisions of the Constitution." Id. at 320. And the Constitution empowers Congress to both regulate foreign commerce and declare war.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

U.S. CONST. art. II, § 8. So while the President may be the Nation's sole representative with foreign nations, he doesn't dictate foreign policy alone. Indeed, the President must even exercise his enumerated foreign affairs powers in concert with Congress. See id. § 2 (requiring Senate consent to make treaties and commission Ambassadors).

Reaffirming these structural limitations on executive power, the Court has repeatedly explained that "[t]he Executive is not free from the ordinary controls and checks of Congress merely because foreign affairs are at issue." Zivotofsky, 576 U.S. at 21. The Zivotofsky Court moreover noted "[i]t is essential that the congressional role in foreign affairs be understood and respected." Id.; id. at 16; California Bankers Ass'n v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 46 (1974) ("The plenary authority of Congress over both interstate and foreign commerce is not open to dispute …."; Turner v. Williams, 194 U.S. at 290 ("[T]he power to regulate commerce with foreign nations … includes the entrance of ships, the importation of goods, and the bringing of persons into the ports of the United States …."; License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. (5 Wall.) 462, 470 (1866) (Congress may grant licenses to engage in interstate and international commerce).

The Foreign Commerce Clause is designed, in part, to prevent discriminatory actions that prevent the free flow of commerce. See, e.g., Kraft Gen. Foods v. Iowa Dep't of Revenue & Fin., 505 U.S. 71, 81 (1992) (states may not discriminate against foreign commerce with compelling justification); Japan Line, 441 U.S. at 434. So Congress's inaction on foreign commercial regulation is not tantamount to acquiescence, but rather a conscious decision to promote the free flow of commerce. The same is true for interstate commerce. See Welton v. Missouri, 91 U.S. 275, 282 (1875) ("The fact that Congress has not seen fit to prescribe any specific rules to govern inter-State commerce … is equivalent to a declaration that inter-State commerce shall be free and untrammelled.").

But no such "dormant" authority allows Presidents to unilaterally revoke a cross-border oil pipeline in a time of peace. The KXLP is clearly a species of economic intercourse between nations. Both the history of the Foreign Commerce Clause and the relationship between Congress and the Executive Branch in this arena demonstrate that the President lacked the independent authority to revoke the KXLP permit.

Defendants argue that the President may act as he did because Congress has acquiesced to the Executive Branch's supervision of this subject matter—whether to permit or reject cross-border projects. ECF 98 at 44–48. Yet where a claim of executive power is "expressed in broad terms," but that same power has in practice been "exercised quite narrowly," courts will find Congressional acquiescence only where the claimed power has been both exercised by the executive and implicitly approved by the Congress. See Kent v. Dulles, 357 U.S. 116, 127–28 (1958). Defendants have not, and cannot identify "a systematic, unbroken, executive practice [of axing major international energy projects], long pursued to the knowledge of the Congress and never before questioned" "which may be treated as a gloss on 'Executive Power' vested in the President …." Dames & Moore, 453 U.S. at 686 (quotations omitted). Far from it.

1. History of the Foreign Commerce Power

a. The Constitutional Convention

The Framers entrusted Congress with the power to regulate foreign commerce, even when that regulation implicated other foreign affairs issues. Due to defects in the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Articles of Confederation, the Philadelphia delegates in 1787 were particularly concerned with who would determine foreign policy and regulate foreign commerce. See Michelin Tire Corp. v. Wages, 423 U.S. 276, 283 (1976) ("[A] compelling reason for the calling of the Constitutional Convention of 1787 … was the fact that the Articles [of Confederation] essentially left the individual States free to burden commerce both among themselves and with foreign countries very much as they pleased."). By design, the Foreign Commerce Clause empowered Congress to establish national uniformity over commerce with foreign nations so that the country could act as a single economic unit. See 1 THE DEBATES IN THE SEVERAL STATE CONVENTIONS ON THE ADOPTION OF THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION 114 (Jonathan Elliot ed., 2d ed. 1836) (draft resolution of James Madison). When a Convention proposal would have required a supermajority vote by Congress to regulate foreign commerce, James Madison fought it because it would have undermined Congress's ability to retaliate against discriminatory tariffs imposed by a foreign country. See JOURNAL OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION KEPT BY JAMES MADISON 629 (E.H. Scott ed., The Lawbook Exchange 2003). So even in areas where foreign commercial regulation and broader foreign policy issues overlapped, the Framers intended Congress—through the Foreign Commerce Clause—to hold the prevailing authority.

b. The Early Republic

Congress controlled foreign commercial affairs in the early Republic even as presidential power expanded. Almost from its inception the U.S. implemented trade law that guarded its economic security by restricting imports or exports with rival powers.[21] Yet President Washington "respected Congress's significant foreign affairs prerogatives" and "never … regulated foreign commerce."[22] Congress delegated broader powers to Presidents Adams, Jefferson, and Madison to wage economic warfare.[23]

Acting as an umpire, the Court in a series of cases upheld these congressional delegations, while checking executive impulses to expand their scope. See Little v. Barreme, 6 U.S. (2 Cranch) 170 (1804) (holding U.S. commander liable who seized a neutral ship in violation of a statute even though he had acted pursuant to a presidential order); accord Brown v. United States, 12 U.S. (8 Cranch) 110 (1814); The Cargo of the Brig Aurora v. United States, 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 382 (1813); Bas v. Tingy, 4 U.S. (4 Dall.) 37, 40–41 (1800). Courts in the early republic protected Congress's primacy over foreign commerce.

c. Cross-Border Instrumentalities

Defendants claim that—if history is guide—Presidents have mostly acted alone in approving or rejecting cross-border commercial instrumentalities. But their history is incomplete, at best.

Look no further than their portrayal of President Grant after Congress authorized the first international cable connecting Cuba and Florida in 1867. See ECF 98 at 4–5; 22 Op. Att'y Gen. 13, 15 (1898). A French company proposed laying a cable from France to the United States in 1869. Id. President Grant initially had reservations about the cable because the French government had given the company a monopoly on communications. See id. at 15–16. Inconvenient to Defendants' argument is that President Grant's own words confirm he recognized congressional primacy in the area of cross-border cables: "[I]n the absence of legislation by Congress I was unwilling, on the one hand, to yield to a foreign state the right to say that its grantees might land on our shores while it denied a similar right to our people to land on its shores; and, on the other hand, I was reluctant to deny to the great interests of the world and of civilization the facilities of such communication as were proposed." Id. at 16. Grant's predicament acknowledged that both action and inaction on the cable implicated Congress's foreign commerce power.

The company ultimately dropped the monopoly rights, but President Grant recognized that "[t]he right to control the conditions for the laying of a cable within the jurisdictional waters of the United States, to connect our shores with those of any foreign state, pertains exclusively to the Government of the United States, under such limitations and conditions as Congress may impose." Id. at 16. Grant's words and deeds respected Congress's command of foreign (and interstate) commerce.

The Executive Branch subsequently did not object to the landing of foreign cables in 1877, 1879, and 1884, observing in 1877 that the power to impose the limited conditions asserted by President Grant had "met the approval of Congress … indicated by the tacit acquiescence of the Congress, and by the expressed approval of individual members of that body …." 22 Op. Att'y Gen. at 19. In 1892 a French company again wanted to land a cable, this time in Virginia. Secretary of State Gresham agreed that because

"[t]here is no Federal legislation conferring authority upon the President to grant such permission, and in the absence of such legislation, Executive action … would have no binding force." Id. at 23; see also id. at 24 (Secretary of State Olney in 1895 confirming that "in the absence of Federal legislation conferring authority upon the Executive to grant permission, this Department has no power to act in the matter.").

It was not until the late nineteenth/early twentieth century that the Executive began asserting broader authority. See id. at 27; see also Granting of License for the Constr. of a Gas Pipe Line, 38 Op. Att'y Gen. 163 (1935). But all three branches of government still recognized Congress's authority in this area.

When President Woodrow Wilson permitted a pipeline running between the U.S. and Canada in 1919, he made clear that the permit was subject to any action "by the Congress … confirming, revoking, or modifying in whole or in part the conditions and terms upon which this consent is granted." HEARING REPORT, CABLE LANDING LICENSES, UNITED STATES SENATE, SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE 27 (1921).

Western Union in 1920 wished to extend a cable from Florida to a British affiliate offshore. The Executive Branch thought this violated the standard set by President Grant because the British affiliate was a monopoly owned by a foreign power and tried to block the company's action. Judge Augustus Hand noted that it was "most questionable whether the power of the President to regulate cable connection is expressed or implied in the Constitution." United States v. W. Union Tel. Co., 272 F. 311, 318 (S.D.N.Y. 1921), aff'd, 272 F. 893, 893 (2d Cir. 1921). Judge Hand pointed out that the President's broad assertion of power over foreign commerce would permit him to block imports such as opium, silk, steel, or even immigrants. Id. at 315; see also id. at 313 (rejecting "a failure by Congress to exercise its undoubted powers as proof that some other branch of the government has the right to do what Congress might readily have authorized").

Congress then passed the Kellogg Act, which delegated to the President power to make cable landing determinations subject to a statutory framework. See Act of May 27, 1921, ch. 12, 42 Stat. 8 (codified at 47 U.S.C. §§ 34–39); see id. §§ 34, 35. Congress likewise enacted regulatory schemes for miscellaneous transmission facilities via the Federal Water Power Act, 41 Stat. 1063 (1920) (codified as amended at 16 U.S.C. § 824(e); natural gas pipelines via the Natural Gas Act, 52 Stat 822 (1938) (codified as amended at 15 U.S.C. § 717b(a), (c)); and international bridges via the International Bridge Act of 1972, 86 Stat. 731 (1972) (codified at 33 U.S.C. § 535).

In all these examples, Congress instructed the President to regulate cross-border commercial instrumentalities pursuant to statutory authority. Yet Defendants portray these explicit and limited delegations as evidence that Congress has now acquiesced to the President's unilateral regulation of all cross-border concerns. See ECF 98 at 45–48. But that would have stark implications for the separation of powers—if Congress's specific delegations over certain cross-border facilities and commodities meant that it had abdicated its constitutional authority over all cross-border facilities and commodities. Congress has not, as a matter fact, instructed the President to regulate all cross-border commercial instrumentalities as he sees fit; it defies logic to interpret Congress's retention of authority as an abandonment of it. See W. Union Tel. Co., 272 F. at 313. Even if Congress had failed to regulate cross-border crude oil pipelines, the President would lack the power to unilaterally revoke the KXLP cross-border permit.

Defendants rely heavily on dicta from Chicago & Southern Air Lines. v. Waterman S.S. Corp., 333 U.S. 103 (1948), but for several reasons that case doesn't legitimize the President's unilateral revocation of the KXLP permit. First, Waterman's statements about the President's Commander-in-Chief powers were addressing national security concerns uniquely related to the rapid growth of commercial air travel after World War II. See id. at 108 (noting that "aerial navigation routes and bases should be prudently correlated with facilities and plans for our own national defenses") (emphasis added). It reasoned that air transportation "carr[ied] new threats" that made it fundamentally different from foreign commerce by rail, water, and vehicles, or communications by wire or radio. See id. at 106–08; see id. at 111 (noting that the President "has available intelligence services whose reports are not and ought not to be published to the world").[24]

But neither President Biden nor Congress has identified any national security concerns related to the KXLP or Canada, one of our closest allies and trading partners. The KXLP, moreover, enhances U.S. national security by securing energy from a reliable and stable ally. See 2019 FSEIS at S-5 (shortfalls in crude oil from Venezuela, Mexico and [24] Waterman also concluded that that the dispute's "national security" and "foreign relations" dimensions rendered it nonjusticiable as a political question. Id. at 111. But simply slapping those labels on a dispute doesn't make it unreviewable. See Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 211 (1962) ("[I]t is error to suppose that every case or controversy which touches foreign relations lies beyond judicial cognizance."); Zweibon v. Mitchell, 516 F.2d 594, 623 (D.C. Cir. 1975) ("[W]e see no reason to take the Waterman dicta as a Supreme Court statement that any issue that touches foreign affairs is to be immunized from judicial review, particularly when there are strong countervailing constitutional interests.").

other traditional suppliers increase U.S. energy security concerns).[25] Waterman, therefore, supports the Plaintiffs' position—the President may have a bigger role to play in controlling cross-border commercial instrumentalities when specific projects raise legitimate national security concerns. But that is not this case.

Finally, Waterman was decided primarily on statutory grounds. See Zweibon, 516 F.2d at 623. In his Youngstown concurrence, Justice Jackson—who authored Waterman—"[d]ismiss[ed] Waterman as an example of the 'wide definition of presidential powers under statutory authorization.'" Id. (quoting Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 636 n. 2).

To the extent Waterman speaks to this dispute, it favors Plaintiffs' position.

2. Congress Has Not Acquiesced to Presidential Power over the Keystone XL

Defendants' arguments depend largely on the theory of congressional acquiescence. As discussed above, there has been no historical acquiescence. But even zeroing in on the KXLP permit, specifically, it's impossible to conclude that Congress acquiesced to the President's revocation order. See Medellin, 552 U.S. at 528 (President must demonstrate "acquiescence in this particular exercise of Presidential authority").

Section 501 of the Payroll Protection Act conclusively proves Congress was not acquiescing to presidential power over the KXLP. See Part I(B), infra. But Congress [25] Having spurned our friendly neighbor's oil, President Biden now seeks it elsewhere. See Ken Thomas, White House Urges OPEC to Boost Oil Output Amid Covid-19 Economic Recovery, WALL ST. J. (Aug 11, 2011), https://www.wsj.com/articles/white-house-urges-opec-to-boost-oil-production-amid-covid-19-recovery-11628688236; David Blackmon, OPEC+ Predictably Rejects Biden Plea For More Oil Production, FORBES (Aug. 17, 2021), https://www.forbes.com/sites/davidblackmon/2021/08/17/opec-predictably-rejects-biden-plea-for-more-oil-production/?sh=58b6e52c2acd.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

subsequently continued to voice its support for the KXLP project. Dames & Moore, 453 U.S. at 687. Most forcefully—after President Obama's denied TC Energy's later application in 2015—Congress passed the Keystone Pipeline Approval Act (KPPA), which mandated that "[TC Energy] may construct, connect, operate, and maintain the pipeline and cross-border facilities described in the application filed on May 4, 2012." S. 1, 114th Cong., 1st Sess. §§ 1, 2(a) (2015). Several similar examples abound.[26]

Defendants illogically claim that these post-2011 examples provide no insight into Congressional intent because President Obama refused to sign them. ECF 98 at 54. But that theory merely reaffirms Defendants' monolithic view of presidential power. Of course, congressional actions short of enacted laws shed light on Congress's views when undertaking an acquiescence analysis. That's clear in the caselaw. Defendants cite Dames & Moore, but neglect to note that the Court in that case said that resolutions (which Presidents don't sign) were salient evidence of congressional intentions. See 453 U.S. at 687.

Dames & Moore also doesn't support Defendants' view that the President's independent constitutional powers give him plenary control over foreign affairs. At issue were executive orders authorized by the Trade With the Enemy Act following the 1979 seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. 453 U.S. at 659; see id. at 688 (finding significant that this involved a "major foreign policy dispute"). The limited holding concerned a narrow question of settlement of mutual claims by executive agreement between a hostile foreign government and the United States. See id. at 688 ("Finally, we re-emphasize the narrowness of our decision. We do not decide that the President possesses plenary power to settle claims, even as against foreign governmental entities."). The Court even warned against the constitutional danger of plenary power. See id. at 688 ("[the] sheer magnitude of such a power, considered against the background of the diversity and complexity of modern international trade, cautions against any broader construction of authority than is necessary.") (quotations omitted). The Court found significant that Congress was enacting legislation to implement the agreements at issue, id. at 680–81, and had done nothing to disapprove to the agreements. Id. at 687. This is not at all analogous to the KXLP. Congress has never given the President power to regulate cross-border pipelines. And even if it did, the President would still be subject to the statutory limitations.

(2013); North American Energy Access Act, H.R. 4348, 112th Cong., 2d Sess. § 201-204 (2012).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

There can be no serious argument that Congress has acquiesced to the President's revocation of the KXLP permit.

3. Revocation of a Duly Granted Permit Triggers Additional Constitutional Scrutiny

Defendants claim the President's discretion in revoking the permit is "unreviewable." ECF 98 at 55. But for the matter to fall within his unreviewable discretion, it must actually be a matter committed to him by the Constitution or Congress. When the President "'acts in absence of either a congressional grant or denial of authority' it enters what Justice Jackson called the "zone of twilight." Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 637 (Jackson, J., concurring). Even there, cross-border oil pipelines fall at an intersection between the Foreign Commerce Power in Article I and (potentially) the President's Commander-in-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Chief Power in Article II. Cf. Dames & Moore, 453 U.S. at 688. Due to this intersection, the courts necessarily cannot cede absolute discretion to the President.

Defendants claim that an international pipeline "implicates national security and foreign relations considerations" and that the President "has the authority to protect the Nation's territorial integrity and prevent intrusions at the border." ECF 98 at 38. If the KXLP implicates national security concerns, the Executive Order failed to mention them. The Executive Order merely asserts that "approval of the pipeline would undermine U.S. climate leadership by undercutting the credibility and influence of the United States in urging other countries to take climate action." Exec. Order 13990, 86 Fed. Reg. 7037. It even concedes the KXLP itself is a purely domestic consideration when it states, "Our domestic efforts must go hand in hand with U.S. diplomatic engagement." Id.

It certainly implicates foreign relations in some respect—TC Energy, a Canadian corporation, is seeking $15 billion from the U.S. because of the President's decision.[27] But again, to the extent the KXLP implicates some foreign relations considerations, those undefined, implied powers cannot supersede the enumerated Foreign Commerce power vested in Congress. See Zivotofsky, 576 U.S. at 16; Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 637–38. And Plaintiffs agree the President has authority to prevent border intrusions. But again, that authority stems from his Commander-in-Chief power, and the KXLP raises no legitimate national security concerns. If the President can invoke his "territorial integrity" power in a situation like this—without a bona fide national security rationale—then he can wrest the power to regulate foreign commerce at any time. Dames & Moore, 453 U.S. at 688. In that scenario—the one Defendants champion here—Congress's Foreign Commerce power is reduced to a paper tiger. See Baker, 369 U.S. at 211.

[27] Garger, supra.

The President could only lawfully revoke the KXLP permit by identifying some problem within his Article II capacities to solve. Simply asserting that the KXLP does not "comport[ ] with the national interest" does not suffice. ECF 98 at 39; Pub. L. 112-78 § 501(b)(2) (justification for national interest determination includes "consideration of economic, employment, energy security, foreign policy, trade, and environmental factors"). Perhaps it would if Canada was a hostile power, or the pipeline connected Alaska and Russia. Cf. Dames & Moore, 453 U.S. at 688 (finding significant that the issue involved "a major foreign policy dispute" with Iran); W*aterman*, 333 U.S. at 106–108, 111. Indeed, Article II may empower the President to temporarily halt landings of cross-border commercial instrumentalities to protect the national security and ensure compliance with applicable law. But after more than a decade of intensive government scrutiny and one White House approval, it's safe to say these are not good-faith bases for nixing the KXLP—which is why the President didn't bother mentioning them in the Order. There's no legitimate Article II basis for the President's revocation decision.

President Biden's sole rationale is that allowing KXLP to be completed would undermine U.S. leadership on climate change, but that is not a national security interest.[28] And given that President Biden recently (a) approved the Nord Stream 2 pipeline enabling Russia to transport natural gas directly to western Europe;[29] (b) requested in July [28] President Biden's decision ultimately weakens U.S. national security. See, e.g., Ariel Cohen, U.S. Loses, Russia and China Win With Keystone XL Closure, FORBES (June 10, 2021).

[29] Nord Stream 2 sanctions would be 'counter-productive' for European ties – Biden, REUTERS

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2021 that OPEC increase its oil production by 400,000 barrels per day;[30] and (c) made another request to OPEC for increased production on August 11,[31] it's unlikely any post hoc "national security" justification can survive even the lowest level of judicial scrutiny.

Practically, Defendants' argument that the global politics of climate change give the President carte blanche to commandeer Congress's foreign commerce powers lacks any intelligible limiting principle. If there are foreign affairs and national security concerns associated with climate change that trump Congress's power in this area, then what is to stop the President from invoking those same considerations to shut down interstate oil pipelines? See W. Union Tel. Co., 272 F. at 315. Defendants cannot be right, for that would signal a perilous concentration of power the Framers earnestly sought to prevent by giving Congress the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce.

But in the end, Executive Order 13990 didn't address national security or foreign affairs problems. The Order tellingly admits the revocation is an attempt to realigning domestic policy. 86 Fed. Reg. at 7037. Whatever the motives, it trammeled foreign and interstate commerce. And only Congress may do that. The President's revocation order is therefore unlawful and unconstitutional.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court should deny Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.

OPINION

KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge. To control the spread of COVID-19, the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services ("MDHHS") required that all persons five years of age and older wear a mask in indoor public settings, including while attending public and private K–12 schools. Plaintiffs Resurrection School, a Catholic elementary school in Lansing, Michigan, and two parents with children enrolled at the school, on behalf of themselves and their minor children, challenge the mask requirement as a violation of their free exercise of religion, equal protection, and substantive due process rights. Since Plaintiffs filed suit, MDHHS has rescinded almost all COVID-19 pandemic emergency orders, including the challenged mask requirement. We hold that Plaintiffs' challenge to the mask requirement is not moot, and we AFFIRM the district court's denial of Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction on the merits.

I. BACKGROUND

A. COVID-19 in Michigan

COVID-19 is a novel respiratory infection first discovered in December 2019. Since then, 925,377 Michigan residents have been diagnosed with COVID-19 and 20,076 Michigan residents have died from the disease. Mich. COVID-19 Dashboard, Cumulative Confirmed Cases and Deaths Among Confirmed Cases, https://www.michigan.gov/coronavirus/0,9753,7-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

406-98163_98173---,00.html (accessed Aug. 19, 2021). Although young children have been largely spared the worst of the disease's impact, six children ages 5–14 have died of COVID-19 in Michigan, Number of COVID-19, Pneumonia and Influenza Deaths by Age of Death, Michigan Occur[r]ences, MDHHS, https://www.mdch.state.mi.us/osr/Provisional/CvdTable2.asp (accessed Aug. 19, 2021), and 1,280 children ages 0-17 have been hospitalized with COVID-19, COVID Data Tracker, CDC, https://covid.cdc.gov/covid-data-tracker/#new-hospital-admissions (accessed Aug. 19, 2021). One-hundred-and-sixty-one children in Michigan who recovered from COVID-19 went on to develop Multisystem Inflammatory Syndrome in Children ("MIS-C"), a condition causing inflammation and damage to organs. MIS-C Data and Reporting, MDHHS, https://www.michigan.gov/coronavirus/0,9753,7-406-98163_98173_104661---,00.html (accessed Aug. 19, 2021); see also R. 16-2 (Vail Aff. ¶ 7) (Page ID #538) (describing MIS-C and other long-term complications of COVID-19 infection). Children infected with COVID-19 can spread the disease to their parents and grandparents, teachers and school staff, and other medically vulnerable Michiganders.

COVID-19 primarily spreads through airborne particles that accumulate in enclosed spaces with inadequate ventilation, respiratory droplets produced when a person coughs, sneezes, or talks, and occasionally through contact with objects contaminated with the virus. How COVID-19 Spreads, CDC (July 14, 2021), https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/prevent-getting-sick/how-covid-spreads.html. Individuals infected with COVID-19 can spread the disease while asymptomatic and pre-symptomatic, and many individuals infected with COVID-19 experience mild symptoms. See R. 14-6 Ex. 5 (Nathan Furukawa et al., Evidence Supporting Transmission of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome Coronavirus 2 While Presymptomatic or Asymptomatic, 26 Emerg. Infect. Dis. (July 2020)) (Page ID #297–303). These features make COVID-19 difficult to control. As a result, universal community use of masks is a widely accepted method to prevent the spread of COVID-19, Science Brief: Community Use of Cloth Masks to Control the Spread of SARS-CoV-2, CDC (May 7, 2021), https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/science/science-briefs/masking-science-sars-cov2.html, despite Plaintiffs' contentions to the contrary, R. 21 (First Amended Compl. ¶¶ 75–77) (Page ID #648–49).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Since Plaintiffs filed their lawsuit in October 2020, the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") has authorized three COVID-19 vaccines for emergency use, including one for use in persons twelve years of age and older. Different COVID-19 Vaccines, CDC (May 27, 2021), https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/vaccines/different-vaccines.html. Two of the vaccine manufacturers, Pfizer-BioNTech and Moderna, are testing their vaccines in children ages six months to eleven years old. Apoorva Mandavilli, In the U.S., Vaccines for the Youngest Are Expected This Fall, N.Y. TIMES (June 8, 2021), https://www.nytimes.com/2021/06/08/health/us-vaccines-children-fall.html. Although initially Pfizer-BioNTech hoped to apply for emergency authorization of the vaccine for children ages five to eleven years old in September, and Moderna sometime in the fall, id., the FDA has requested that the two vaccine manufacturers increase the size of their studies, which may delay the FDA's authorization of the vaccine for children younger than twelve, see Sheryl Gay Stolberg et al., At the F.D.A.'s Urging, Pfizer-BioNTech and Moderna Are Expanding Their Trials for Children 5 to 11, N.Y. TIMES (July 26, 2021), https://www.nytimes.com/2021/07/26/us/politics/fda-covid-vaccine-trials-children.html.

B. Michigan's Mask Requirement

Masks have been a significant part of Michigan's COVID-19 response, especially prior to the widespread availability of safe and effective vaccines. Beginning on April 27, 2020, Michigan required all persons "able to medically tolerate a face covering" to wear a face covering "when in any enclosed public space." E.O. 2020-59 § 15(a) (Apr. 24, 2020); see also E.O. 2020-147 § 1 (July 10, 2020) (reiterating that all persons ages five and older must wear a face covering in public except in limited circumstances or if medically unable to wear a face covering).

In preparation for the 2020–2021 school year, Governor Gretchen Whitmer issued the MI Safe Schools Roadmap ("Roadmap"), which outlined safety recommendations and requirements for K–12 schools. MI Safe Schools: Michigan's 2020-21 Return to School Roadmap (June 30, 2020), https://www.michigan.gov/documents/whitmer/MI_Safe_Schools_Roadmap_FINAL_695392_7.pdf. The Roadmap varied its prescriptions based on the prevalence of COVID-19 in the community and the grade of the students. Id. at 9.[1] The Roadmap strongly recommended, but did not require, students in grades K–5 to wear a face covering in the classroom so long as they did not come into contact with students in another class. MI Safe Schools, at 22; see also E.O. 2020-142 § (2)(b)(1)(E) (June 30, 2020) (incorporating requirement into an executive order).

On September 25, 2020, citing "the higher incidence of [COVID-19] cases among children in recent months," "the clear effectiveness of masking as mitigation strategy," and the "absence of a widespread vaccine," Whitmer issued an executive order mandating that children in grades K-5 also wear a face covering in classrooms. E.O. 2020-185 § 1 (Sept. 25, 2020). A few days later, the Michigan Supreme Court concluded that the 1945 law under which Whitmer had been issuing executive orders regarding the COVID-19 pandemic was an improper delegation of legislative power in violation of the Michigan Constitution. See In re Certified Questions from United States Dist. Ct., W. Dist. of Michigan, S. Div., 958 N.W.2d 1 (Mich. 2020). MDHHS then issued an order reinstating the requirement that children in grades K–5 wear a face covering in the classroom. 10/05/20 MDHHS Order §§ 2–3. MDHHS issued another near-identical order on October 9, 2020. 10/09/20 MDHHS Order. The Ingham County Health Department, which includes Lansing, also issued its own emergency order requiring all persons who leave their home or place of residence to wear a face covering, including children in grades K-5. Ingham Cnty. E.O. 2020-21 (Oct. 4, 2020); see also R. 16-2 Ex B. (Vail Aff. ¶¶ 13–22) (Page ID #539–41) (describing the Ingham County order). On October 23, 2020, the Ingham County Health Department rescinded its order after it confirmed that the MDHHS Orders included all requirements of the county order. Id. ¶ 23 (Page ID #541).

[1]The Roadmap corresponds to the MI Safe Start Plan, which adopted a six-phase approach to reopening the state based on the prevalence of disease. In Phase 1, a region is experiencing "[i]ncreasing number of new cases every day, likely to overwhelm the health system" and only critical infrastructure is permitted to remain open, whereas in Phase 6, the region has community immunity sufficient to minimize community spread and restrictions are lifted. MI Safe Start: A Plan to Re-engage Michigan's Economy, at 2 (May 7, 2020), https://www.michigan.gov/documents/whitmer/MI_SAFE_START_PLAN_689875_7.pdf. When a region is in at least Phase 4, the Roadmap permitted schools to reopen for in-person learning with certain safety protocols. MI Safe Schools, at 21. In practice, Michigan treated in-person K–12 instruction more permissively than the terms of the MI Safe Start Plan and the Roadmap. The MI Safe Start plan permitted schools to reopen for in-person instruction only in Phases 5 and 6, MI Safe Start, at 2, and MDHHS permitted K–8 schools to remain open for in-person instruction even when all regions were at the highest risk level, 11/15/20 MDHHS Order.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Since then, MDHHS has issued several orders slightly changing the circumstances for when a mask is required. The March 2, 2021 Order, which is the focus of the parties' briefing,[2] provides in relevant part:

> 7. Face mask requirement at gatherings.
>
> (a) All persons participating in gatherings are required to wear a face mask.
> (c) Except as provided elsewhere in this order, a person responsible for a business, store, office, government office, school, organized event, or other operation, or an agent of such person, must prohibit gatherings of any kind unless the person requires individuals in such gatherings (including employees) to wear a face mask, and denies entry or service to all persons refusing to wear face masks while gathered.
> (d) A person responsible for a business, store, office, government office, school, organized event, or other operation, or an agent of such person, may not assume that someone who enters the facility without a face mask falls within one of the exceptions specified in section 8 of this order, including the exception for individuals who cannot medically tolerate a face mask. An individual's verbal representation that they are not wearing a face mask because they fall within a specified exception, however, may be accepted.
> 8. Exceptions to face mask requirements. Although a face mask is strongly encouraged even for individuals not required to wear one (except for children under the age of 2), the requirement to wear a face mask in gatherings as required by this order does not apply to individuals who:
>
> (a) Are younger than 5 years old, outside of a child care organization or camp setting (which are subject to requirements set out in section 7(e));
> (b) Cannot medically tolerate a face mask;

[2]Defendants acknowledge that MDHHS has made "minor alterations" to the exceptions between the 10/09/20 MDHHS Order and the 03/02/21 MDHHS Order, and thus, refer to "the orders" collectively. Hertel & Nessel Br. at 8 n.6. For instance, during the winter surge in COVID-19 cases, MDHHS prohibited any non-essential personal care services that required removal of face masks, most organized sports, and indoor dining. 11/15/20 MDHHS Order. Accordingly, we use "MDHHS Orders" to refer to the orders leading up to the rescission of the mask requirement.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(c) Are eating or drinking while seated at a food service establishment or at a private residence;

(d) Are exercising outdoors and able to consistently maintain 6 feet of distance from others;

(e) Are swimming;

(f) Are receiving a medical or personal care service for which removal of the face mask is necessary;

(g) Are asked to temporarily remove a face mask for identification purposes;

(h) Are communicating with someone who is deaf, deafblind, or hard of hearing and whose ability to see the mouth is essential to communication;

(i) Are actively engaged in a public safety role, including but not limited to law enforcement, firefighters, or emergency medical personnel, and where wearing a face mask would seriously interfere in the performance of their public safety responsibilities;

(j) Are engaging in a religious service;

(k) Are giving a speech for broadcast or to an audience, provided that the audience is at least 12 feet away from the speaker; or

(l) Are participating in a testing program specified in MDHHS's document entitled Guidance for Athletics issued February 7, 2021, and are engaged in practice or competition where the wearing of a mask would be unsafe.

03/02/21 MDHHS Order. In accordance with Mich. Comp. Laws § 333.2261, "violation of this order is a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or a fine of not more than $200.00, or both." Id. § 10(e). Further, MDHHS promulgated emergency rules stating that a violation of the MDHHS Orders carries "a penalty of up to $1,000 for each violation or day that a violation continues." MDHHS Emergency Rules (Oct. 20, 2020).

On May 14, 2021, in response to CDC guidance that fully vaccinated persons no longer need to wear a mask in most settings, MDHHS added fully vaccinated persons to the list of exceptions to the mask requirement. 05/14/2021 MDHHS Order. One month later, MDHHS rescinded almost all COVID-19 pandemic emergency orders, including the challenged mask requirement, because of the reduction in COVID-19 test positivity rates, case rates, hospitalizations, and deaths, the availability of COVID-19 vaccines, the availability of therapeutics, such as monoclonal antibodies, and warmer weather. 06/17/21 MDHHS Order. The 06/17/21 MDHHS Order became effective June 22, 2021. Id.

MDHHS's rescission coincided with summer break, which leaves open the question of what restrictions MDHHS may impose for the 2021–2022 school year. MDHHS's interim guidance for schools recommends that schools use multiple prevention strategies, including face masks, to limit transmission in school. MDHHS, Interim Recommendations for Operating Schools Safely When There Is COVID-19 Community Transmission (June 25, 2021), https://www.michigan.gov/documents/coronavirus/COVID-19_Guidance_for_Operating_Schools_Safely_728838_7.pdf.

Other public-health authorities have weighed in on mitigation measures for in-person education for the 2021–22 school year. In consideration of new evidence regarding the B.1.617.2 (Delta) coronavirus variant, the CDC's guidance for K–12 schools now recommends that all persons wear a mask indoors at school regardless of vaccination status. Guidance for COVID-19 Prevention in K-12 Schools, CDC (updated Aug. 5, 2021), https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/community/schools-childcare/k-12-guidance.html. The American Academy of Pediatrics ("AAP") also recommends that all students and staff—regardless of whether they are fully vaccinated against COVID-19—wear a mask indoors at school as a "necessary measure[] to limit the community spread of SARS-CoV-2 to ensure schools can remain open and safe for all students." COVID-19 Guidance for Safe Schools, Am. Acad. Pediatrics (last updated July 18, 2021), available at https://services.aap.org/en/pages/2019-novel-coronavirus-covid-19-infections/clinical-guidance/covid-19-planning-considerations-return-to-in-person-education-in-schools/. Masks, according to the AAP, are part of a "multi-pronged, layered approach" that together "will make in-person learning safe and possible." Id.

Some states and localities have adopted universal mask requirements in line with public health authorities' recommendations. See, e.g., Kalamazoo Cnty. Health Dep't 08/18/2021 Order (requiring that children in grades K–6 and those providing services to children in grades K–16 wear a mask in school settings); Ky. E.O. 2021-585 (Aug. 10, 2021); Cal. Div. Pub. Health (May 12, 2021), https://coronavirus.delaware.gov/schools-and-students/school-updates/ (same). Other states have recommended, but not required, students in grades K–12 to wear masks in school. See, e.g., Ohio Dep't Pub. Health (July 26, 2021), https://coronavirus.ohio.gov/static/responsible/schools/K-12-Schools-Guidance.pdf.

Despite the CDC's and the AAP's guidance and the decisions of other states to impose mask requirements in school, Whitmer has stated that she does not expect MDHHS to issue a mask requirement or other pandemic orders "in the near future and maybe not ever." Dave Boucher & Kristen Jordan Shamus, Whitmer: No New State Mask Rule Expected Despite Updated CDC Guidance, DET. FREE PRESS (July 27, 2021), https://www.freep.com/story/news/health/2021/07/27/whitmer-no-new-state-mask-rule-despite-updated-cdc-guidance/5385179001/. Hertel has indicated that she "expect[s] and encourage[s] schools when they go back to have mask requirements for kids younger than 12 and those who haven't been vaccinated." MDHHS Director: State Urging Schools to Have Mask Mandates for Kids Under 12, Those Not Vaccinated, WXYZ-Det. C. Plaintiffs' Lawsuit

On October 22, 2020, Plaintiffs filed a complaint in the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Michigan. Plaintiffs allege that the MDHHS Orders violate their rights to free exercise, equal protection, substantive due process, freedom of speech, and freedom of association. R. 1 (Compl. ¶¶ 135–41, 163–85) (Page ID #22–23, 27–30). In addition to these constitutional claims, Plaintiffs argued that the 10/05/20 MDHHS Order is an unlawful exercise of authority under Michigan law and violates the Michigan constitution's separation of powers and non-delegation clauses. Id. ¶¶ 142–62 (Page ID #24–26).

The declaration submitted by the principal of Plaintiff Resurrection School, Jacob Allstott, attests that MDHHS's mask requirement for students in grades K–5 violates Resurrection School's sincerely held religious beliefs because it interferes with the school's religiously oriented disciplinary policies and prevents younger students from partaking fully in a Catholic education.[3] R. 8-1 (Allstott Decl. ¶¶ 41–58) (Page ID #178–80). The declarations submitted by the Plaintiff parents assert that their children find masks uncomfortable and distracting from their religious education, and that the mask requirement conflicts with "the right [as a parent] to choose a school for them which corresponds to their own convictions." R. 8-2 (Mianecki Decl. ¶ 59) (Page ID #190) (quoting Catechism of the Catholic Church ("CCC") § 2229); R. 8-3 (Smith Decl. ¶ 40) (Page ID #197–98).

Plaintiff Christopher Mianecki attests that wearing a mask in the classroom "interferes with [his children's] ability to engage in their elementary school classroom and its Catholic, religious teachings." R. 8-2 (Mianecki Decl. ¶ 52) (Page ID #189). He provides specific examples of how the requirement that children wear masks in the classroom affects his three children who are enrolled at Resurrection School. He states that wearing a mask negatively impacts his children's focus, id. ¶ 33 (Page ID #187), "diverts [their] attention away from the lesson taught in class," id. ¶ 36 (Page ID #187), and "negatively affect[s] [their] ability to breathe effectively," id. ¶ 38 (Page ID #187).

Plaintiff Stephanie Smith states that her child, F.S., is unable to wear a mask because he "suffer[s] from breathing issues," R. 8-3 (Smith Decl. ¶ 8) (Page ID #194), and "is highly susceptible to respiratory infections that quickly turn into additional infections such as bronchitis," Id. ¶ 9 (Page ID #194). Despite Smith's observation that F.S. is unable to wear a mask because of his health conditions, F.S.'s pediatrician determined that F.S. did not qualify for a medical exemption.[4] Id. ¶ 11 (Page ID #194). As a result, Smith is "educating F.S. at home where he is not mandated to wear a mask, and F.S. is on a long-term absence from his Catholic

[3]In the initial complaint, Plaintiffs also argued that "[i]n accordance with the teachings of the Catholic faith, Resurrection School believes that every human has dignity and is made in God's image and likeness. Unfortunately, a mask shields our humanity. And because God created us in His image, we are masking that image." R. 1 (Compl. ¶ 22) (Page ID #5).

[4]The MDHHS Orders exempted children who "[c]annot medically tolerate a face mask" from complying with the face mask requirements. 03/02/21 MDHHS Order § 8(b). The MDHHS Orders clarify that "[a]n individual's verbal representation that they are not wearing a face mask because they fall within a specified exception . . . may be accepted." Id. § 7(d). Organizations may choose to require documentation that an individual cannot medically tolerate a face mask. See, e.g., Diocese of Lansing, Return to Learn: Phase 4 Plan, https://www.dioceseoflansing.org/education/phase-4-plan (requiring that students and staff obtain a "written and signed verification by a physician" in order not to wear a mask while at school).

Plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order ("TRO") and a preliminary injunction seeking to enjoin Defendants from enforcing the 10/05/20 MDHHS Order against Resurrection School and the other plaintiffs. R. 7 (Pls.' Mot. for TRO & Prelim. Inj.) (Page ID #65–70). The district court denied Plaintiffs' expedited ex parte motion for a TRO, concluding that Plaintiffs could not establish that they would experience irreparable harm without the order because they had unreasonably delayed in filing for emergency ex parte injunctive relief.[6] R. 11 (Order Denying Mot. for TRO at 3–4) (Page ID #207–08). Defendants then filed motions to dismiss, R. 13 (Gordon & Nessel Joint Mot. to Dismiss) (Page ID #215–18); R. 15 (Vail & Siemon, Mot. to Dismiss) (Page ID #475–76), and responses in opposition to Plaintiffs' request for a preliminary injunction, R. 18 (Gordon & Nessel, Resp. in Opp. to Pls.' Mot. for TRO & Prelim. Inj.) (Page ID #565–60); R. 19 (Vail & Siemon, Resp. in Opp. to Pls.' Mot. for TRO & Prelim. Inj.) (Page ID #602–04).

After Defendants responded to Plaintiffs' initial complaint and motion for a TRO and preliminary injunction, Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint. R. 21 (First Am. Compl.) (Page ID #636–68). The First Amended Complaint narrowed Plaintiffs' claims to violations of free exercise, equal protection, and substantive due process, and the Michigan constitutional and state-law claims. Id. The district court determined that the amended complaint did not render Defendants' motions to dismiss moot and required Plaintiffs to respond to the motions to dismiss. R. 23 (12/10/20 Order) (Page ID #692).

[5]We are troubled by public statements suggesting that Resurrection School did not require students in grades K–5 to wear masks during the entire school year, Cody Butler, Federal Appeals Court to Hear Arguments over Michigan Mask Mandate, WILX-Lansing (July 20, 2021), https://www.wilx.com/2021/07/20/federal-appeals-court-hear-arguments-over-michigan-mask-mandate/, when they have made contrary representations to this court and the district court.

[6]The district court noted that Whitmer and MDHHS issued executive orders requiring individuals over the age of five to wear a face covering indoors on July 17, 2020 and July 29, 2020 respectively, and thus, the "Plaintiffs cannot rely on the October 2, 2020 Opinion from the Michigan Supreme Court as the critical event." R. 11 (Order at 4) (Page ID #208).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The district court denied Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. Resurrection Sch. v. Gordon, 507 F. Supp. 3d 897 (W.D. Mich. 2020). Applying Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020) (order), the district court determined that Plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on the merits of their free-exercise challenge to the 10/05/2020 MDHHS Order. Id. at 900–01. First, the district court found that the 10/05/2020 MDHHS Order was neither motivated by animus against people of faith or a specific faith nor limited to regulating only religious activity. Id. at 901. The district court then determined that the order was neutral and generally applicable because it "require[d] all individuals over the age of five to wear a face mask in public. This requirement is in place whether they are attending a religious school, a secular school, running errands, or participating in some other facet of daily life." Id. at 901–02. The exceptions to the order are "narrow and discrete," and "apply to public schools and private schools equally, and they apply to secular schools and religious schools equally." Id. at 902. Thus, the district court concluded that Plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on the merits of their free exercise claim. Id.

The district court dismissed Plaintiffs' claim that the Order violated their equal-protection rights by permitting individuals to remove their face covering in certain circumstances, because "[t]here is nothing in the face-mask requirement that treats similarly situated groups of individuals different." Id. As for Plaintiffs' state-law claims, the district court declined to address this "novel question of state law for the first time" at this stage of litigation. Id. Although the district court did not address Plaintiffs' substantive-due-process claim by name, it concluded at the end that "Plaintiffs have failed to establish a lik[e]lihood of success on the merits on any of their claims." Id. (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs timely appealed. R. 25 (Not. of Appeal) (Page ID #700–01). Defendants move to dismiss the appeal as moot because MDHHS has rescinded the mask requirements. No. 20-2256, R. 34 (Hertel & Nessel Mot. to Dismiss Appeal as Moot); No. 20-2256, R. 37 (Siemon & Vail Mot. to Dismiss Appeal as Moot). Plaintiffs oppose the motion. No. 20-2256, R. 38 (Pls.' Resp. Mot. to Dismiss Appeal as Moot).

The district court had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331, and we have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

II. ANALYSIS

A. Mootness

Defendants argue that we lack jurisdiction because Plaintiffs' claims are moot. "[A] case is moot when the issues presented are no longer 'live' or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome." Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 496 (1969). "We do not have the power to adjudicate disputes that are moot, and '[t]he mootness inquiry must be made at every stage of a case.'" Hanrahan v. Mohr, 905 F.3d 947, 960 (6th Cir. 2018) (quoting McPherson v. Mich. High Sch. Athletic Ass'n, Inc., 119 F.3d 453, 458 (6th Cir. 1997) (en banc)). There are two relevant exceptions to the mootness doctrine. First, voluntary cessation of the challenged conduct does not moot a case unless it is "absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur." United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Exp. Ass'n, 393 U.S. 199, 203 (1968). Second, a case will not become moot if the injury is "capable of repetition, yet evading review." Fed. Election Comm'n v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 462 (2007). Plaintiffs argue that their case should proceed under both exceptions, and we address both in turn.

1. Voluntary Cessation

"A defendant's voluntary cessation of allegedly unlawful conduct ordinarily does not suffice to moot a case." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Env't Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 174 (2000). Where the defendant voluntarily ceases the challenged conduct, the defendant must establish that: "there is no reasonable expectation that the alleged violation will recur"; and (2) "interim relief or events have completely and irrevocably eradicated the effects of the alleged violation."[7] Thomas v. City of Memphis, 996 F.3d 318, 324 (6th Cir. 2021) (quoting Speech First v. Schlissel, 939 F.3d 756, 767 (6th Cir. 2019)). We caution that "[t]he burden of demonstrating mootness 'is a heavy one.'" County of Los Angeles v. Davis, 440 U.S. 625, 631 (1979) (quoting United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 633 (1953)).

[7]The second requirement is not at issue here.

We generally treat "cessation of the allegedly illegal conduct by government officials . . . with more solicitude . . . than similar action by private parties." Mosley v. Hairston, 920 F.2d 409, 415 (6th Cir. 1990) (quoting Ragsdale v. Turnock, 841 F.2d 1358, 1365 (7th Cir. 1988)). "This [voluntary cessation] exception properly applies only when a recalcitrant legislature clearly intends to reenact the challenged regulation." Ky. Right to Life, Inc. v. Terry, 108 F.3d 637, 645 (6th Cir. 1997); see also Bench Billboard Co. v. City of Cincinnati, 675 F.3d 974, 981 (6th Cir. 2012) ("[S]elf-correction [by government officials] provides a secure foundation for a dismissal based on mootness so long as it appears genuine." (quoting Mosley, 920 F.2d at 415)).

Plaintiffs argue, and Defendants acknowledge, that because Defendants' "discretion to effect the change lies with one agency or individual, . . . significantly more than the bare solicitude itself is necessary to show that the voluntary cessation moots the claim," Speech First, 939 F.3d at 768. Hertel & Nessel Reply at 4; Pls.' Resp. at 7. Although MDHHS, like the Defendants in Speech First, retains the sole authority to change the mask requirements, this case is distinguishable from Speech First because MDHHS rescinded the challenged orders in response to "changing circumstances." Defendants Hertel & Nessel offer evidence that the policy change was genuine, including that the policy change reflects increased access and eligibility for vaccines, that Michigan joins other states in rescinding their mask requirements,[8] and that MDHHS rescinded almost all COVID-19 orders, not merely the orders at issue here.

Although the Supreme Court has addressed mootness in the context of COVID-19 restrictions, the factual circumstances are distinguishable from those present here. In Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn v. Cuomo, 141 S. Ct. 63, 68–69 (2020), the Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs' challenge to a state COVID-19 pandemic order limiting attendance at religious services was not moot even though the state had relaxed the attendance limitations in response to [8]Defendants note that as of July 2021 thirty-one states have rescinded their mask requirements. Hertel & Nessel Reply at 5 n.4 (citing Andy Markowitz, State-by-State Guide to Face Mask Requirements, AARP (July 12, 2021), available at https://www.aarp.org/health/healthy-living/info2020/states-mask-mandates-coronavirus html.). This argument cuts both ways because many states have imposed mask requirements for K–12 instruction, see Part I.B, and some states and localities have recently reimposed broad indoor mask requirements following a new surge in COVID-19 cases, see Nev. Exec. Directive. 047 (July 27, 2021) (requiring mask usage by all persons in areas with substantial or high transmission of COVID-19); La. Procl. No. 2021-137 (Aug. 2, 2021) (implementing a statewide mask mandate).

declining COVID-19 cases. The Court reasoned that the plaintiffs "remain under a constant threat" that the state will reimpose attendance limits without notice and "bar individuals in the affected area from attending services before judicial relief can be obtained." Id. at 68. The state health department assigned areas to different risk categories based on the severity of the COVID-19 outbreak, and imposed defined restrictions on activity. Id. at 66. The state continued to use this framework, meaning that the plaintiffs remained at risk of restrictions on attendance at religious services if the number of COVID-19 cases, deaths, and hospitalizations increased. Id. at 68. Here, Defendants do not presently use a similar framework for imposing mask requirements and other pandemic restrictions. To the contrary, Defendants at present have rescinded all pandemic restrictions.

Similarly, in Tandon v. Newsom, 141 S. Ct. 1294 (2021) (per curiam), the Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs' challenge to the state COVID-19 pandemic order limiting gatherings, including gatherings for at-home religious activities, was not moot even though the defendants altered the guidance during litigation. The Court explained that > even if the government withdraws or modifies a COVID restriction in the course of litigation, that does not necessarily moot the case. And so long as a case is not moot, litigants otherwise entitled to emergency injunctive relief remain entitled to such relief where the applicants "remain under a constant threat" that government officials will use their power to reinstate the challenged restrictions.

Id. at 1297 (quoting Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, 141 S. Ct. at 68). In concluding that plaintiffs' challenge was not moot, the Court noted that "the previous restrictions remain in place until April 15th, and officials with a track record of 'moving the goalposts' retain authority to reinstate those heightened restrictions at any time." Id. (quoting S. Bay United Pentecostal Church v. Newsom, 141 S. Ct. 716, 720 (2021) (statement of Gorsuch, J.)).

The Tandon Court's conclusion rested on its perception that state officials had a "track record" of altering COVID-19 guidance, and that it had previously "summarily rejected the Ninth Circuit's analysis of California's COVID restrictions on religious exercise" four times. 141 S. Ct. at 1297. In contrast here, Defendants have been consistent in their approach to mask requirements. For the 2020–21 school year, excluding a few weeks at the beginning of the school year, Defendants required students in grades K–5 to wear masks in the classroom.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MDHHS altered its mask requirements only in May 2021 in response to the CDC's guidance that individuals who were vaccinated are unlikely to transmit COVID-19, and MDHHS eliminated the mask requirements in June 2021 in response to sustained decreases in the number of COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths and the wide availability of safe and effective vaccines.

As for our own circuit, in an unpublished case reviewing a COVID-19 public-health order, we declined to apply the voluntary-cessation exception to mootness where the Governor replaced an executive order with a recommendation. Pleasant View Baptist Church v. Beshear, 838 F. App'x 936, 938 (6th Cir. 2020) (order); cf. Maryville Baptist Church, Inc. v. Beshear, 977 F.3d 561, 566 (6th Cir. 2020) (per curiam) (remanding to the district court to permit it to consider "whether these cases have become moot in light of the Governor's new orders"). In distinguishing the case from Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, we emphasized that "there, unlike here, the challenged order remained in force subject to the apparent whims of the Governor, to whom a presumption of regularity did not apply." Pleasant View Baptist Church, 838 F. App'x at 939.[9]

In some ways, Defendants' argument that their rescission of the challenged MDHHS orders moots Plaintiffs' claims is stronger than the one accepted in Pleasant View Baptist Church. In Pleasant View Baptist Church, we relied on the Governor's public statements that he would rely on recommendations instead of mandates, which he made prior to the widespread availability of effective vaccines. MDHHS's rescission of the challenged orders, by contrast, reflects widespread availability of and increased eligibility for effective COVID-19 vaccines. On the other hand, Pleasant View Baptist Church involved school closures, which are a more onerous public health measure than requiring that students wear masks at school. In fact, MDHHS and other public-health authorities recommend that all persons wear masks in school to ensure that schools can maintain in-person learning. See, e.g., MDHHS, Interim Recommendations for Operating Schools Safely When There Is COVID-19 Community Transmission (June 25, 2021), https://www.michigan.gov/documents/coronavirus/COVID-

[9]Plaintiffs suggest without explanation that "Tandon adopted a different analysis from Pleasant View Baptist Church and a different standard." Pls.' Resp. at 12. Plaintiffs' argument is unavailing. The Tandon Court arrived at a different conclusion regarding mootness than we did in Pleasant View Baptist Church because the Court was responding to the distinct facts of that case, not because it applied a different standard.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

19_Guidance_for_Operating_Schools_Safely_728838_7.pdf. ("Schools can layer multiple prevention strategies developed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) to prevent transmission within school buildings, reduce disruptions to in-person learning, and help protect the people who are not fully vaccinated, which currently includes all children under the age of 12 years.").

We conclude that Defendants cannot meet the heavy burden of establishing that it is "absolutely clear" that they will not reimpose a mask requirement, especially for children younger than twelve who cannot be vaccinated. We do not doubt the sincerity of MDHHS's statements that they have no intention to reimpose a mask requirement like the one challenged by Defendants. We also recognize that the rescission of all pandemic orders, including the mask requirement, is unique because it reflects the wide availability of safe and effective vaccines. At the same time, the FDA has not yet authorized their use in persons younger than twelve, the group comprising students in grades K–5. MDHHS has previously reimposed certain pandemic emergency orders and tightened mask requirements in response to increasing COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths. Considering the very real possibility that MDHHS may be faced again with escalating COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths, we hold that Defendants have not met their "heavy burden" of showing that it is "absolutely clear" that they will not reimpose impose a mask requirement, including for children in grades K–5 receiving in-person instruction. Defendants' rescission of the challenged MDHHS Orders does not moot Plaintiffs' claims.

2. Capable of Repetition, Yet Evading Review

Plaintiffs' claims further come within the exception to the mootness doctrine for actions that are "capable of repetition, yet evading review." Pls.' Resp. at 10–14. This exception is limited "to situations where: '(1) the challenged action was in its duration too short to be fully litigated prior to its cessation or expiration; and (2) there was a reasonable expectation that the same complaining party would be subjected to the same action again.'" Chirco v. Gateway Oaks, L.L.C., 384 F.3d 307, 309 (6th Cir. 2004) (quoting Weinstein v. Bradford, 423 U.S. 147, 148 (1975)). As the party asserting this exception, Plaintiffs bear the burden of proof. Lawrence

v. Blackwell, 430 F.3d 368, 371 (6th Cir. 2005). Plaintiffs satisfy both requirements for this exception.

Plaintiffs have satisfied the first prong. Although Plaintiffs filed their complaint and motion for a preliminary injunction in October 2020, the school year ended prior to when this case could reach the court of appeals. It is true that Plaintiffs did not take advantage of opportunities to expedite our review of the case.[10] Nonetheless, the Supreme Court has found periods of up to two years to be too short to be fully litigated. See, e.g., Kingdomware Techs., Inc. v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1969, 1976 (2016) (holding that a procurement contract that expires in two years does not permit judicial review); Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson Cnty., 274 F.3d 377, 390–91 (6th Cir. 2001) (holding that two years to challenge to a local ordinance prohibiting individuals with a sex-crime history to work for a sexually oriented business was too short in duration). Specific to the educational context, we have held, albeit in an unpublished decision, that an individualized education program lasting a school year is too short in duration to litigate to conclusion. Woods v. Northport Pub. Sch., 487 F. App'x 968, 980 (6th Cir. 2012).

Plaintiffs also satisfy the second requirement of the "capable of repetition, yet evading review" exception. This is in part because the standard is a forgiving one. "Recurrence of the issue need not be more probable than not; instead, the controversy must be capable of repetition." Barry v. Lyon, 834 F.3d 706, 715 (6th Cir. 2016). This standard provides that "the chain of potential events does not have to be air-tight or even probable to support the court's finding of non-mootness." Id. at 716.

[10]Plaintiffs note that "[t]he District Court's decision resulted in nine months of orders that stripped Appellants from their sincerely held right to religious exercise, equal protection of the law, and substantive due process." Pls.' Resp. at 13. But Plaintiffs are at least partly responsible for delays in this litigation. Plaintiffs delayed in filing their complaint in federal court until October 22, 2020 and their emergency motion for a TRO or preliminary injunction until October 27, 2020, even though Governor Whitmer issued her initial executive order requiring that students in grades K–5 wear masks on September 25, 2020, E.O. 2020-185 § 1 (Sept. 25, 2020), and MDHHS issued its first order on October 5, 2020, 10/05/20 MDHHS Order §§ 2–3. Plaintiffs also failed to take advantage of opportunities to expedite the litigation. For instance, Plaintiffs could have filed a motion for an injunction pending appeal, as other parties challenging COVID-19 pandemic orders have done, see, e.g., Monclova Christian Acad. v. Toledo-Lucas Cnty. Health Dep't, 984 F.3d 477, 479 (6th Cir. 2020) (granting the plaintiffs' motion for an injunction pending appeal fifteen days after the district court denied their request for a preliminary injunction and twenty-four days after the plaintiffs filed their complaint), or requested expedited briefing or expedited consideration of their appeal.

Although Defendants provide ample reasons—namely the availability of and expanded eligibility for COVID-19 vaccines—that a mandatory requirement that students in grades K–5 wear masks in the classroom is unlikely, that is not the standard. Rather, we look to whether the controversy is capable of repetition. MDHHS acknowledged in its order rescinding the mask requirements that "the COVID-19 pandemic continues to constitute an epidemic in Michigan." 06/17/21 MDHHS Order. Both the CDC's and MDHHS's guidance recommend that students in grades K–12 wear masks in the classroom. This is sufficient to establish that Plaintiffs' claims are capable of repetition, yet evading review.

True, in the election context, we have determined that lawsuits challenging election procedures in light of the COVID-19 pandemic and attendant restrictions are not capable of repetition, yet evading review. Most recently in Thompson v. DeWine, -- F.4th --, 2021 WL 3183692 (6th Cir. July 28, 2021), we held that the plaintiffs' challenge to the signature requirements for ballot initiatives was moot as to the 2021 election. In Thompson, the plaintiffs argued that "COVID-19 remains a 'full blown crisis' hampering their efforts to gather signatures for 2021 initiatives," and thus their challenge fell under the capable of repetition, yet evading review exception to the mootness doctrine. Id. at *4. We concluded, however, that "advancements in the COVID-19 vaccine and treatment" made COVID-19 unlikely to threaten seriously the plaintiffs' ability to collect signatures for the 2021 ballot initiatives. Id.; see also Memphis A. Philip Randolph Inst. v. Hargett, 2 F.4th 548, 560 (6th Cir. 2021) ("Fortunately, because of advancements in COVID-19 vaccinations and treatment since this case began, the COVID-19 pandemic is unlikely to pose a serious threat during the next election cycle." (citing Trends in Number of COVID-19 Cases and Deaths in the US Reported to CDC, by State/Territory, Ctrs. for Disease Control & Prevention, https://covid.cdc.gov/covid-data-tracker/#trends_dailytrendscases (June 15, 2021)).[11]

These election cases, however, are distinguishable from the present case. First, our decisions in those cases were contingent on the availability of COVID-19 safe and effective

[11]Unfortunately, the daily number of COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths has since trended significantly upwards. Trends in Number of COVID-19 Cases and Deaths in the US Reported to CDC, by State/Territory, CDC, https://covid.cdc.gov/covid-data-tracker/#trends_dailytrendscases (accessed on Aug. 2, 2021).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

vaccinations and treatment, which are presently authorized for use by persons old enough to vote and sign petitions for ballot initiatives, but not for children in grades K–5. Second, in-person instruction meaningfully differs from participation in the electoral process in a way that increases the risk of contracting and transmitting COVID-19. Whereas participating in the electoral process is a "discrete, individualized, often brief activit[y]," in-person classroom instruction involves "indoor gatherings occurring for hours a day on a daily basis." Hertel & Nessel Br. at 36. Finally, although COVID-19 may not pose a serious enough disruption to the electoral process, it may still pose a significant enough problem to compel MDHHS to mandate that persons, especially individuals not yet able to be vaccinated, wear masks. Accordingly, we conclude that Plaintiffs' claim is not moot and turn to the merits of their challenge.

B. Standard of Review

We review for abuse of discretion a district court's denial of a preliminary injunction. Chabad of S. Ohio & Congregation Lubavitch v. City of Cincinnati, 363 F.3d 427, 432 (6th Cir. 2004). "While the ultimate decision to grant or deny a preliminary injunction is reviewed for an abuse of discretion, we review the district court's legal conclusions de novo and its factual findings for clear error." Obama for Am. v. Husted, 697 F.3d 423, 428 (6th Cir. 2012). We have cautioned that "[t]his standard of review is 'highly deferential' to the district court's decision." Certified Restoration Dry Cleaning Network, L.L.C. v. Tenke Corp., 511 F.3d 535, 541 (6th Cir. 2007) (quoting Leary v. Daeschner, 228 F.3d 729, 739 (6th Cir. 2000)). To summarize, "[w]e 'review the District Court's legal rulings de novo' (including its First Amendment conclusion), 'and its ultimate conclusion [as to whether to grant the preliminary injunction] for abuse of discretion.'" Platt v. Bd. of Comm'rs on Grievances & Discipline of Ohio Sup. Ct., 769 F.3d 447, 454 (6th Cir. 2014) (quoting McCreary County v. ACLU of Ky., 545 U.S. 844, 867 (2005)).

In determining whether to grant a preliminary injunction, we consider four factors: "(1) whether the movant has a strong likelihood of success on the merits; (2) whether the movant would suffer irreparable injury absent the injunction; (3) whether the injunction would cause substantial harm to others; and (4) whether the public interest would be served by the issuance of an injunction." Bays v. City of Fairborn, 668 F.3d 814, 818–19 (6th Cir. 2012). Where, as in this case, Plaintiffs "seek[] a preliminary injunction on the basis of a potential constitutional violation, 'the likelihood of success on the merits often will be the determinative factor.'" Obama for Am., 697 F.3d at 436 (quoting Jones v. Caruso, 569 F.3d 258, 265 (6th Cir. 2009)). Accordingly, we focus our attention on whether Plaintiffs can establish a likelihood of success on the merits.

C. Free-Exercise Challenge

Plaintiffs argue that MDHHS's Orders violate their sincerely held religious beliefs because they require students in grades K–5 at religious schools to wear a face covering. We do not question the sincerity of Plaintiffs' beliefs that wearing a mask in the classroom violates their Catholic faith. Hernandez v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 490 U.S. 680, 699 (1989) ("It is not within the judicial ken to question the centrality of particular beliefs or practices to a faith, or the validity of particular litigants' interpretations of those creeds."). Defendants largely do not question the sincerity of the Plaintiffs' religious objection to wearing a mask in the classroom.[12]

We begin with the familiar framework for free-exercise claims. Where a challenged law is neutral and of general applicability and has merely an "incidental effect" on Plaintiffs' religious beliefs, Defendants need not show a compelling governmental interest. Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 531 (1993); see also Emp. Div., Dep't of Hum. Res. of Oregon v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 878 (1990) (holding that if burdening the exercise of religion is "merely the incidental effect of a generally applicable and otherwise valid provision, the First Amendment has not been offended."). Where the challenged law does not meet these requirements, Defendants must show that the policy is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest. Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, 508 U.S. at 531–32. This rule, in part, reflected practical concerns with requiring governments to satisfy the stringent standard of establishing a compelling interest for "all actions thought to be religiously commanded." Smith, [12]Defendants Vail and Siemon contend in their brief that "Appellants do not cite to any sources to support their position that the Catholic faith or Catholic theology is in any way opposed to the use of prophylactic masks during a global pandemic," Vail & Siemon Br. at 6, or "provide any examples of ways in which masks interfere with or burden their religious beliefs," id. at 19. Plaintiffs' objections to masks admittedly are confusing and at times, digress into secular, rather than religious concerns. Nevertheless, a plaintiff's "religious beliefs need not be acceptable, logical, consistent, or comprehensible to others in order to merit First Amendment protection." Thomas v. Rev. Bd. of Ind. Emp. Sec. Div., 450 U.S. 707, 714 (1981).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

494 U.S. at 888. Requiring governments to show more than a rational basis for a law of neutral and general applicability would:

> open the prospect of constitutionally required religious exemptions from civic obligations of almost every conceivable kind—ranging from compulsory military service, to the payment of taxes; to health and safety regulation such as manslaughter and child neglect laws, compulsory vaccination laws, drug laws, and traffic laws; to social welfare legislation such as minimum wage laws, child labor laws, animal cruelty laws, environmental protection laws, and laws providing for equality of opportunity for the races.

Id. at 888–89 (citations omitted).

A law, of course, is not neutral and of general applicability if it discriminates on its face. Hartmann v. Stone, 68 F.3d 973, 976, 978 (6th Cir. 1995). Relatedly, "[a] law might be motivated by animus toward people of faith in general or one faith in particular." Roberts v. Neace, 958 F.3d 409, 413 (6th Cir. 2020) (per curiam). Even if a law appears neutral and is devoid of animus, it is not neutral and of general applicability if it is "riddled with exemptions." Ward v. Polite, 667 F.3d 727, 738 (6th Cir. 2012).

We considered the intersection between religious schools and COVID-19 orders in Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020). In Beshear, the plaintiffs argued that a Kentucky order that temporarily prohibited in-person instruction at public and private K–12 schools violated their free-exercise rights. We concluded, in a published opinion, that the plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on their claims that the order violated the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment, and thus stayed the district court's preliminary injunction. Id. at 511. First, we determined that the order was "neutral and of general applicability" because it "applies to all public and private elementary and secondary schools in the Commonwealth, religious or otherwise." Id. at 509. Accordingly, the order "need not be justified by a compelling governmental interest." Id. Thus, deferring to "the Governor's determination regarding the health and safety of the Commonwealth at this point in time," we concluded that the plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on the merits of their free-exercise challenge. Id. at 510. The Supreme Court denied the plaintiffs' petition for a writ of certiorari without reaching the merits of the case because of the "timing and the impending expiration of the Order." Danville Christian Acad., Inc. v. Beshear, 141 S. Ct. 527, 528 (2020).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In the present case, the district court applied Beshear and correctly concluded that because the requirement to wear a facial covering applied to students in grades K–5 at both religious and non-religious schools, it was neutral and of general applicability. We agree with the district court's application of Beshear.

Plaintiffs argue that a subsequent case, Monclova Christian Academy v. Toledo-Lucas County Health Department, 984 F.3d 477 (6th Cir. 2020) (order), conflicts with the district court's order here. In Monclova Christian Academy, the panel concluded that a county health-department order requiring all schools in the county to close for in-person learning was subject to strict scrutiny. Although the order temporarily prohibiting in-person education applied to public and religious K–12 schools alike, the panel construed the relevant comparator as secular businesses such as "gyms, tanning salons, office buildings, and the Hollywood Casino" that the health order had permitted to remain open, not non-religious K–12 schools. Id. at 482. Accordingly, the panel held that health order was not neutral and of general applicability and applied strict scrutiny to the challenged order. Applying this standard, the panel concluded that the health-department order was not narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest and granted plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. Following the framework of Monclova Christian Academy, Plaintiffs argue that the district court erred by failing to compare MDHHS's interest in requiring that students in grades K–5 wear masks in the classroom with MDHHS's interest in allowing persons not to wear masks in certain, secular circumstances. Pls.' Br. at 30.

Beshear and Monclova Christian Academy, however, seemingly conflict with one another. Indeed, the panel in Monclova Christian Academy recognized that Beshear could pose an issue but contended that the decision in Beshear did not consider the "broader question" of "whether an order closing public and parochial schools violates the Clause if it leaves other comparable secular actors less restricted than the closed parochial schools." Id. at 481. Thus, according to the panel in Monclova Christian Academy, it was free to consider in the first instance whether the relevant comparators were secular actors regulated by the specific order or a broader set of secular businesses. Id. As Plaintiffs and amici here suggest, Monclova Christian Academy's interpretation of Beshear is incorrect. Amici Br. at 9. In Beshear, we did consider whether the appropriate comparator was other non-religious schools or other non-school entities and held that the former was the appropriate comparator. The plaintiffs and amici in Beshear argued at the district court and in their appellate briefs that the law was not neutral and of general applicability because it prohibited in-person education at K–12 religious schools while permitting secular activities to continue. See, e.g., Pls.-Appellees' Resp. Mot. for Stay Pending Appeal, at 3–5, Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020); Brief for Pleasant View Baptist Church et al. as Amici Curiae Supporting Respondents, at 5–10, Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020); Brief for Multiple Private Kentucky Religious Schools as Amici Curiae Supporting Respondents, at 9–12, Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020). Accordingly, as this issue was "brought to the attention of the court" and "ruled upon" in the earlier case, we must follow Beshear rather than Monclova Christian Academy. United States v. Lucido, 612 F.3d 871, 876 (6th Cir. 2010) (quoting Rinard v. Luoma, 440 F.3d 361, 363 (6th Cir. 2006)); see also United States v. Jarvis, 999 F.3d 442, 445–46 (6th Cir. 2021) ("Forced to choose between conflicting precedents, we must follow the first one.").

Tandon v. Newsom, 141 S. Ct. 1294 (2021), does not compel a different comparator. In Tandon, the Supreme Court concluded that the plaintiffs were likely to succeed on the merits of their free-exercise challenge to a California order limiting all gatherings in homes, religious and non-religious, to three households. Id. at 1297. "[G]overnment regulations are not neutral and generally applicable, and therefore trigger strict scrutiny under the Free Exercise Clause, whenever they treat any comparable secular activity more favorably than religious exercise." Id. at 1296. In concluding that the restriction was not neutral and of general applicability, the Court noted that "California treats some comparable secular activities more favorably than at-home religious exercise, permitting hair salons, retail stores, personal care services, movie theaters, private suites at sporting events and concerts, and indoor restaurants to bring together more than three households at a time." Id. (emphasis added). Identifying a comparable secular activity for religious schools other than a public or private nonreligious school is difficult. Schools educating students in grades K–5 are unique in bringing together students not yet old enough to be vaccinated against COVID-19 in an indoor setting and every day.[13] Accordingly, the proper comparable secular activity in this case remains public and private nonreligious schools.

Even under this broader conception of comparable secular activity, the MDHHS orders are not so riddled with secular exceptions as to fail to be neutral and generally applicable. The exceptions to the MDHHS Orders were narrow and discrete. First, many of the exceptions, such as medical intolerance to mask use, eating and drinking, swimming, or receiving a medical treatment during which a mask cannot be worn, are "inherently incompatible with" wearing a mask. Hertel & Nessel Br. at 30. Contact sports where participants cannot safely remain masked must adhere to a testing protocol. 03/02/2021 MDHHS Order § 6(a)(2). Here, Plaintiffs seek to exempt children in grades K–5 at religious schools from having to wear a mask during an activity in which wearing a mask is possible, albeit undesirable for Plaintiffs. Second, almost all exceptions to the MDHHS Orders—aside from children younger than five years old and those medically unable to wear a mask—are short in duration and lower risk (medical and personal care services requiring removal of a mask; voting). Hertel & Nessel Br. at 30–31. Some of the exceptions have a stringent social distancing requirement (public speaking with twelve feet of distance) or are outdoors where the risk of COVID-19 transmission is reduced (outdoor, physically distanced exercise). Id. at 33. Third, The MDHHS Orders also exempt activities that are necessary to fulfill "equally important obligations to its citizens' health and safety" (firefighters, police officers, and emergency medical personnel "actively engaged in a public safety role . . . where wearing a face mask would seriously interfere in the performance of their public safety responsibilities," 03/02/21 MDHHS Order § 8(i) (emphasis added)). Hertel & Nessel Br. at 33–34. By contrast, as Defendants aptly describe it, "plaintiffs' activity comprises all-day, indoor mixing of the same groups of people, five days a week for months on end." Id. at 33. Thus, unlike in Monclova Christian School, where the challenged order exempted an array of secular activities that the panel viewed as posing a greater risk than in-person instruction, the exceptions to the MDHHS Orders are narrow and largely limited to activities of lesser risk than in-person instruction.

[13]Perhaps the only other comparable secular activity, childcare organizations, were subject to the same requirement that children ages five years and older wear a mask. 03/02/21 MDHHS Order § 7(e).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Finally, all exceptions to the MDHHS Orders were available to Plaintiffs if they had chosen to engage in that activity. Hertel & Nessel Br. at 27. Plaintiffs were able to remove their face coverings to eat lunch at school, swim during physical education class, participate in Mass at school, engage in distanced public speaking on a religious topic, or exercise outdoors while physically distanced during recess. Id. Under the MDHHS orders, persons medically unable to wear a face covering, such as Smith's son, could go without a face covering at school. Because the MDHHS Orders are not so riddled with exceptions for comparable secular activities as to render the mask requirement not neutral and of general applicability, we review the MDHHS Orders for whether the state has a rational basis.

Other cases cited by Plaintiffs do not change this standard. At oral argument, Plaintiffs argued that the Supreme Court's recent decision in Fulton v. City of Philadelphia, 141 S. Ct. 1868 (2021), pronounced a different standard. In Fulton, the Supreme Court concluded that the city's refusal to contract with Catholic Social Services for the provision of foster care because the agency's religious beliefs prevented it from certifying same-sex couples violated the organization's free-exercise rights. Id. at 1882. The Fulton majority's narrow holding focused on a contract provision that permitted the commissioner of the city's Department of Human Services to grant exemptions to the non-discrimination clause in her "sole discretion." Id. at 1878. The contract's grant of unfettered discretion meant that the non-discrimination clause was not neutral and of general applicability, and thus, was subject to strict scrutiny. Id. at 1881. Although the plaintiffs and some of the concurring justices asked that the Court reconsider Smith, the majority declined to do so because the city's policy was not neutral and of general applicability, and thus, fell outside the scope of Smith. Id. at 1876–77.

Plaintiffs cite the Supreme Court's recent decision in Our Lady of Guadalupe School v. Morrissey-Berru, 140 S. Ct. 2049, 2055 (2020), for the principle that "[t]he First Amendment protects the right of religious institutions 'to decide for themselves, free from state interference, matters of church government as well as those of faith and doctrine,'" (quoting Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church in N. Am., 344 U.S. 94, 116 (1952)). Pls.' Br. at 26. Plaintiffs' reliance on Our Lady of Guadalupe School is misplaced. In Our Lady of Guadalupe School, the Supreme Court concluded that a form of immunity from employment-discrimination claims brought by certain employees, the ministerial exception, extended to two teachers who taught religion and participated in religious activities. Id. at 2066. The Supreme Court, however, emphasized that religious institutions' ability to decide "matters of church government" and "faith and doctrine," "does not mean that religious institutions enjoy a general immunity from secular laws." Id. at 2060. MDHHS Orders requiring all persons ages five and older to wear a mask in public—including in the classroom—is not comparable to infringing on the school's authority to select their ministers and religious educators. Thus, Our Lady of Guadalupe School provides no help to Plaintiffs.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Plaintiffs' citation to Thomas v. Review Board of Indiana Employment Security Division, 450 U.S. 707 (1981), is also misplaced. According to Plaintiffs, Thomas compels us to "defer[] [to] Plaintiffs' understanding of their own religious beliefs" and not conclude that "any burden to Plaintiffs' religious beliefs was 'incidental.'" Pls.' Br. at 22 (quoting Resurrection Sch. v. Gordon, 507 F. Supp. 3d 897, 902 (W.D. Mich. 2020)). Thomas, however, stands for the proposition that we should defer to a plaintiff's characterization of her opposition to a law as religious. Thomas, 450 U.S. at 714.

Plaintiffs also argue that we should apply strict scrutiny to MDHHS's Orders because the orders violate both their free-exercise rights and their rights as parents to direct the education of their children. Pls.' Br. at 32.[14] This hybrid-rights theory stems from dicta in Smith explaining that a plaintiff may establish a violation of the Free Exercise Clause by showing that a neutral and generally applicable law violates "the Free Exercise Clause in conjunction with other constitutional protections." 494 U.S. at 881.

Although some circuits have recognized hybrid-rights claims, we have consistently declined to recognize hybrid-rights claims. For instance, in Kissinger v. Board of Trustees of Ohio State University, College of Veterinary Medicine, 5 F.3d 177 (6th Cir. 1993), we [14]In support of this hybrid-rights argument, Plaintiffs cite language from the Supreme Court's order in Danville Christian Academy declining to grant Plaintiffs' application for a writ of certiorari. Pls.' Br. at 32 ("Even if this Court were to deem Defendants' orders generally applicable, which they are not, Plaintiffs' free exercise claim also requires heightened scrutiny because the 'application of a neutral, generally applicable law to religiously motivated action implicates the right of parents to direct the education of their children.'" (quoting Danville Christian Acad., 141 S. Ct. at 528)). Plaintiffs' reference is misleading, because the Supreme Court was merely repeating an argument raised by amici, not assessing the merits of this argument.

considered the merits of a veterinary student's claim that her college's policy of requiring students to dissect animals violated the Free Exercise Clause and other constitutional provisions. We declined to apply strict scrutiny to her hybrid claim, reasoning that "[w]e do not see how a state regulation would violate the Free Exercise Clause if it implicates other constitutional rights but would not violate the [F]ree Exercise Clause if it did not implicate other constitutional rights." Id. at 180. Simply put, this outcome would be "completely illogical." Id. "[T]herefore, at least until the Supreme Court holds that legal standards under the Free Exercise Clause vary depending on whether other constitutional rights are implicated," we explained that we would "not use a stricter legal standard than that used in Smith to evaluate generally applicable, exceptionless state regulations under the Free Exercise Clause." Id. Since then, we have consistently declined to recognize a hybrid-rights theory. See Pleasant View Baptist Church, 838 F. App'x at 940–41 (Donald, J., concurring) (collecting cases). We decline to recognize a hybrid-rights claim here.

Applying rational-basis review, we hold that the MDHHS Orders are rationally related to a legitimate government interest. To satisfy rational-basis review, Defendants must show "only that the regulation bear[s] some rational relation to a legitimate state interest." Craigmiles v. Giles, 312 F.3d 220, 223 (6th Cir. 2002). Here, Defendants had a legitimate state interest in controlling the spread of COVID-19 in Michigan. Plaintiffs apparently concede this point, acknowledging that "COVID-19 poses real challenges and concerns to everyone and requires a robust response." Pls.' Br. at 4. Further, Defendants cite more than ample evidence that requiring masks in the school setting minimizes the spread of COVID-19. See Hertel & Nessel Br. at 4–5; Vail & Siemon Br. at 8; R. 16-2 (Aff. of Vail) (Page ID #535–62). Although Plaintiffs question the effectiveness of masks, even they admit that "masks serve a purpose when students cannot socially distance and do not object to (and, indeed, enforce) mask wearing in the hallways and common areas of the school." Pls.' Br. at 5–6.

We conclude that the MDHHS Orders do not violate the Free Exercise Clause because the MDHHS Orders are neutral and of general applicability and satisfy rational-basis review.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

D. Equal-Protection Claim

Plaintiffs argue that the MDHHS Orders violate the Equal Protection Clause because the Orders exempt certain secular activities but not religious education, and, alternatively, because the Orders lack a rational basis. Plaintiffs also fault the district court for failing to cite caselaw explaining why the MDHHS Orders satisfy the Equal Protection Clause.

To establish an equal-protection violation, "a plaintiff must adequately plead that the government treated the plaintiff 'disparately as compared to similarly situated persons and that such disparate treatment either burdens a fundamental right, targets a suspect class, or has no rational basis.'" Ctr. for Bio-Ethical Reform, Inc. v. Napolitano, 648 F.3d 365, 379 (6th Cir. 2011) (quoting Club Italia Soccer & Sports Org., Inc. v. Charter Township of Shelby, 470 F.3d 286, 299 (6th Cir. 2006)). We have explained that "[t]he threshold element of an equal protection claim is disparate treatment; once disparate treatment is shown, the equal protection analysis to be applied is determined by the classification used by government decision-makers." Scarbrough v. Morgan Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 470 F.3d 250, 260 (6th Cir. 2006).

Plaintiffs' equal-protection challenge is confusing, is largely a repackaging of its free-exercise argument, and is ultimately meritless. First, Plaintiffs fail to satisfy this threshold requirement of showing that the state has treated similarly situated persons differently than Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs argue that the MDHHS Orders result in "disparate treatment" because they permit persons to remove their masks while engaging in certain secular activities and in religious worship in a house of worship, while requiring students in grades K–5 at religious schools to wear masks. This is a free-exercise challenge, not an equal-protection challenge. Seemingly recognizing that this is a free-exercise challenge, Plaintiffs open their argument by stating that "the challenged measures burden Plaintiffs' fundamental rights to the free exercise of religion under the First Amendment in violation of the equal protection guarantee of the Fourteenth Amendment." Pls.' Br. at 34. Further, there is no "disparate treatment" because the MDHHS Orders did not distinguish between certain groups of children. The MDHHS Orders required all children ages five and older to wear masks in public, subject to a few universal exceptions that were available to Plaintiffs.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Plaintiffs' argument that the requirement that children ages five years and older wear masks in the classroom lacks any rational basis is equally unavailing. Although unclear from the brief, Plaintiffs appear to argue that the MDHHS Orders lack any rational basis because the Orders exempted activities that Plaintiffs perceive as riskier than the in-person education of students in grades K–5. Pls.' Br. at 34. One could also include Plaintiffs' general belief that masks do not work to limit the transmission of COVID-19 within this argument. Id. at 5. As discussed in Part II.C, however, the MDHHS Orders satisfy rational-basis review. Accordingly, we conclude that Plaintiffs' equal-protection claim fails.

E. Substantive-Due-Process Claim

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that the MDHHS Orders violate their substantive-due-process rights. "Where a particular Amendment 'provides an explicit textual source of constitutional protection' against a particular sort of government behavior, 'that Amendment, not the more generalized notion of "substantive due process," must be the guide for analyzing these claims.'" Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 273 (1994) (quoting Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395 (1989)); see also Kiser v. Kamdar, 831 F.3d 784, 791 (6th Cir. 2016) (declining to consider the plaintiff's substantive-due-process challenge because it was really a commercial-speech case).

Plaintiffs' challenge to the MDHHS Orders lies in the First Amendment's Free Exercise Clause, and thus, their substantive-due-process claim is duplicative. The district court admittedly did not explicitly address the merits of Plaintiffs substantive-due-process claim. We nonetheless conclude that Plaintiffs' substantive-due-process claim is without merit.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we hold that Plaintiffs' challenge to the mask requirement for children in grades K–5 in all schools in Michigan is not moot. We AFFIRM the district court's denial of Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CONCURRING IN PART AND DISSENTING IN PART

SILER, Circuit Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part. I concur with the majority's conclusions on mootness, in part A of the opinion. However, I dissent on the merits on the primary issue, that is, whether the district court correctly denied the petition for the granting of a preliminary injunction.

I do not quarrel with the fact that the district court had the authority to deny the motion for preliminary injunction under the facts of this case, but it did not have the benefit of the more recent case Tandon v. Newsom, 141 S. Ct. 1294 (2021). It also did not have the benefit of the decision in Monclova Christian Academy v. Toledo-Lucas County Health Department, 984 F.3d 477 (6th Cir. 2020), which was handed down later in the same month that the district court made its ruling. Monclova held that in cases such as this, the court should look at all comparators, not just the public schools. Id. at 480. The district court here compared the restrictions in this matter with those followed in Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020). Yet Monclova is more consistent with Tandon than Beshear. The court did not consider other comparable secular activities beyond the public schools. I feel it is a mistake for this court to uphold the denial of the preliminary injunction on the interpretation from Tandon without giving the district court an opportunity to consider it in light of all the evidence before it. Therefore, I would remand to the district court to review the case in light of the decision in Tandon.

OPINION

KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge. To control the spread of COVID-19, the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services ("MDHHS") required that all persons five years of age and older wear a mask in indoor public settings, including while attending public and private K–12 schools. Plaintiffs Resurrection School, a Catholic elementary school in Lansing, Michigan, and two parents with children enrolled at the school, on behalf of themselves and their minor children, challenge the mask requirement as a violation of their free exercise of religion, equal protection, and substantive due process rights. Since Plaintiffs filed suit, MDHHS has rescinded almost all COVID-19 pandemic emergency orders, including the challenged mask requirement. We hold that Plaintiffs' challenge to the mask requirement is not moot, and we AFFIRM the district court's denial of Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction on the merits.

I. BACKGROUND

A. COVID-19 in Michigan

COVID-19 is a novel respiratory infection first discovered in December 2019. Since then, 925,377 Michigan residents have been diagnosed with COVID-19 and 20,076 Michigan residents have died from the disease. Mich. COVID-19 Dashboard, Cumulative Confirmed Cases and Deaths Among Confirmed Cases, https://www.michigan.gov/coronavirus/0,9753,7-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

406-98163_98173---,00.html (accessed Aug. 19, 2021). Although young children have been largely spared the worst of the disease's impact, six children ages 5–14 have died of COVID-19 in Michigan, Number of COVID-19, Pneumonia and Influenza Deaths by Age of Death, Michigan Occur[r]ences, MDHHS, https://www.mdch.state.mi.us/osr/Provisional/CvdTable2.asp (accessed Aug. 19, 2021), and 1,280 children ages 0-17 have been hospitalized with COVID-19, COVID Data Tracker, CDC, https://covid.cdc.gov/covid-data-tracker/#new-hospital-admissions (accessed Aug. 19, 2021). One-hundred-and-sixty-one children in Michigan who recovered from COVID-19 went on to develop Multisystem Inflammatory Syndrome in Children ("MIS-C"), a condition causing inflammation and damage to organs. MIS-C Data and Reporting, MDHHS, https://www.michigan.gov/coronavirus/0,9753,7-406-98163_98173_104661---,00.html (accessed Aug. 19, 2021); see also R. 16-2 (Vail Aff. ¶ 7) (Page ID #538) (describing MIS-C and other long-term complications of COVID-19 infection). Children infected with COVID-19 can spread the disease to their parents and grandparents, teachers and school staff, and other medically vulnerable Michiganders.

COVID-19 primarily spreads through airborne particles that accumulate in enclosed spaces with inadequate ventilation, respiratory droplets produced when a person coughs, sneezes, or talks, and occasionally through contact with objects contaminated with the virus. How COVID-19 Spreads, CDC (July 14, 2021), https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/prevent-getting-sick/how-covid-spreads.html. Individuals infected with COVID-19 can spread the disease while asymptomatic and pre-symptomatic, and many individuals infected with COVID-19 experience mild symptoms. See R. 14-6 Ex. 5 (Nathan Furukawa et al., Evidence Supporting Transmission of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome Coronavirus 2 While Presymptomatic or Asymptomatic, 26 Emerg. Infect. Dis. (July 2020)) (Page ID #297–303). These features make COVID-19 difficult to control. As a result, universal community use of masks is a widely accepted method to prevent the spread of COVID-19, Science Brief: Community Use of Cloth Masks to Control the Spread of SARS-CoV-2, CDC (May 7, 2021), https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/science/science-briefs/masking-science-sars-cov2.html, despite Plaintiffs' contentions to the contrary, R. 21 (First Amended Compl. ¶¶ 75–77) (Page ID #648–49).

Since Plaintiffs filed their lawsuit in October 2020, the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") has authorized three COVID-19 vaccines for emergency use, including one for use in persons twelve years of age and older. Different COVID-19 Vaccines, CDC (May 27, 2021), https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/vaccines/different-vaccines.html. Two of the vaccine manufacturers, Pfizer-BioNTech and Moderna, are testing their vaccines in children ages six months to eleven years old. Although initially Pfizer-BioNTech hoped to apply for emergency authorization of the vaccine for children ages five to eleven years old in September, and Moderna sometime in the fall, id., the FDA has requested that the two vaccine manufacturers increase the size of their studies, which may delay the FDA's authorization of the vaccine for children younger than twelve, see Sheryl Gay Stolberg et al., At the F.D.A.'s Urging, Pfizer-BioNTech and Moderna Are Expanding Their Trials for Children 5 to 11, N.Y. B. Michigan's Mask Requirement

Masks have been a significant part of Michigan's COVID-19 response, especially prior to the widespread availability of safe and effective vaccines. Beginning on April 27, 2020, Michigan required all persons "able to medically tolerate a face covering" to wear a face covering "when in any enclosed public space." E.O. 2020-59 § 15(a) (Apr. 24, 2020); see also E.O. 2020-147 § 1 (July 10, 2020) (reiterating that all persons ages five and older must wear a face covering in public except in limited circumstances or if medically unable to wear a face covering).

In preparation for the 2020–2021 school year, Governor Gretchen Whitmer issued the MI Safe Schools Roadmap ("Roadmap"), which outlined safety recommendations and requirements for K–12 schools. MI Safe Schools: Michigan's 2020-21 Return to School Roadmap (June 30, 2020), https://www.michigan.gov/documents/whitmer/MI_Safe_Schools_Roadmap_FINAL_695392_7.pdf. The Roadmap varied its prescriptions based on the prevalence of COVID-19 in the community and the grade of the students. Id. at 9.[1] The Roadmap strongly recommended, but did not require, students in grades K–5 to wear a face covering in the classroom so long as they did not come into contact with students in another class. MI Safe Schools, at 22; see also E.O. 2020-142 § (2)(b)(1)(E) (June 30, 2020) (incorporating requirement into an executive order).

On September 25, 2020, citing "the higher incidence of [COVID-19] cases among children in recent months," "the clear effectiveness of masking as mitigation strategy," and the "absence of a widespread vaccine," Whitmer issued an executive order mandating that children in grades K-5 also wear a face covering in classrooms. E.O. 2020-185 § 1 (Sept. 25, 2020). A few days later, the Michigan Supreme Court concluded that the 1945 law under which Whitmer had been issuing executive orders regarding the COVID-19 pandemic was an improper delegation of legislative power in violation of the Michigan Constitution. See In re Certified Questions from United States Dist. Ct., W. Dist. of Michigan, S. Div., 958 N.W.2d 1 (Mich. 2020). MDHHS then issued an order reinstating the requirement that children in grades K–5 wear a face covering in the classroom. 10/05/20 MDHHS Order §§ 2–3. MDHHS issued another near-identical order on October 9, 2020. 10/09/20 MDHHS Order. The Ingham County Health Department, which includes Lansing, also issued its own emergency order requiring all persons who leave their home or place of residence to wear a face covering, including children in grades K-5. Ingham Cnty. E.O. 2020-21 (Oct. 4, 2020); see also R. 16-2 Ex B. (Vail Aff. ¶¶ 13–22) (Page ID #539–41) (describing the Ingham County order). On October 23, 2020, the Ingham County Health Department rescinded its order after it confirmed that the MDHHS Orders included all requirements of the county order. Id. ¶ 23 (Page ID #541).

[1]The Roadmap corresponds to the MI Safe Start Plan, which adopted a six-phase approach to reopening the state based on the prevalence of disease. In Phase 1, a region is experiencing "[i]ncreasing number of new cases every day, likely to overwhelm the health system" and only critical infrastructure is permitted to remain open, whereas in Phase 6, the region has community immunity sufficient to minimize community spread and restrictions are lifted. MI Safe Start: A Plan to Re-engage Michigan's Economy, at 2 (May 7, 2020), https://www.michigan.gov/documents/whitmer/MI_SAFE_START_PLAN_689875_7.pdf. When a region is in at least Phase 4, the Roadmap permitted schools to reopen for in-person learning with certain safety protocols. MI Safe Schools, at 21. In practice, Michigan treated in-person K–12 instruction more permissively than the terms of the MI Safe Start Plan and the Roadmap. The MI Safe Start plan permitted schools to reopen for in-person instruction only in Phases 5 and 6, MI Safe Start, at 2, and MDHHS permitted K–8 schools to remain open for in-person instruction even when all regions were at the highest risk level, 11/15/20 MDHHS Order.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Since then, MDHHS has issued several orders slightly changing the circumstances for when a mask is required. The March 2, 2021 Order, which is the focus of the parties' briefing,[2] provides in relevant part:

> 7. Face mask requirement at gatherings.
>
> (a) All persons participating in gatherings are required to wear a face mask.
> (b) As a condition of gathering for the purpose of transportation, transportation providers must require all staff and patrons to use face masks, and must enforce physical distancing among all patrons to the extent feasible.
> (c) Except as provided elsewhere in this order, a person responsible for a business, store, office, government office, school, organized event, or other operation, or an agent of such person, must prohibit gatherings of any kind unless the person requires individuals in such gatherings (including employees) to wear a face mask, and denies entry or service to all persons refusing to wear face masks while gathered.
> (d) A person responsible for a business, store, office, government office, school, organized event, or other operation, or an agent of such person, may not assume that someone who enters the facility without a face mask falls within one of the exceptions specified in section 8 of this order, including the exception for individuals who cannot medically tolerate a face mask. An individual's verbal representation that they are not wearing a face mask because they fall within a specified exception, however, may be accepted.
> 8. Exceptions to face mask requirements. Although a face mask is strongly encouraged even for individuals not required to wear one (except for children under the age of 2), the requirement to wear a face mask in gatherings as required by this order does not apply to individuals who:
>
> (a) Are younger than 5 years old, outside of a child care organization or camp setting (which are subject to requirements set out in section 7(e));
> (b) Cannot medically tolerate a face mask;

[2]Defendants acknowledge that MDHHS has made "minor alterations" to the exceptions between the 10/09/20 MDHHS Order and the 03/02/21 MDHHS Order, and thus, refer to "the orders" collectively. Hertel & Nessel Br. at 8 n.6. For instance, during the winter surge in COVID-19 cases, MDHHS prohibited any non-essential personal care services that required removal of face masks, most organized sports, and indoor dining. 11/15/20 MDHHS Order. Accordingly, we use "MDHHS Orders" to refer to the orders leading up to the rescission of the mask requirement.

(c) Are eating or drinking while seated at a food service establishment or at a private residence;

(d) Are exercising outdoors and able to consistently maintain 6 feet of distance from others;

(e) Are swimming;

(f) Are receiving a medical or personal care service for which removal of the face mask is necessary;

(g) Are asked to temporarily remove a face mask for identification purposes;

(h) Are communicating with someone who is deaf, deafblind, or hard of hearing and whose ability to see the mouth is essential to communication;

(i) Are actively engaged in a public safety role, including but not limited to law enforcement, firefighters, or emergency medical personnel, and where wearing a face mask would seriously interfere in the performance of their public safety responsibilities;

(j) Are engaging in a religious service;

(k) Are giving a speech for broadcast or to an audience, provided that the audience is at least 12 feet away from the speaker; or

(l) Are participating in a testing program specified in MDHHS's document entitled Guidance for Athletics issued February 7, 2021, and are engaged in practice or competition where the wearing of a mask would be unsafe.

03/02/21 MDHHS Order. In accordance with Mich. Comp. Laws § 333.2261, "violation of this order is a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or a fine of not more than $200.00, or both." Id. § 10(e). Further, MDHHS promulgated emergency rules stating that a violation of the MDHHS Orders carries "a penalty of up to $1,000 for each violation or day that a violation continues." MDHHS Emergency Rules (Oct. 20, 2020).

On May 14, 2021, in response to CDC guidance that fully vaccinated persons no longer need to wear a mask in most settings, MDHHS added fully vaccinated persons to the list of exceptions to the mask requirement. 05/14/2021 MDHHS Order. One month later, MDHHS rescinded almost all COVID-19 pandemic emergency orders, including the challenged mask requirement, because of the reduction in COVID-19 test positivity rates, case rates, hospitalizations, and deaths, the availability of COVID-19 vaccines, the availability of therapeutics, such as monoclonal antibodies, and warmer weather. 06/17/21 MDHHS Order. The 06/17/21 MDHHS Order became effective June 22, 2021. Id.

MDHHS's rescission coincided with summer break, which leaves open the question of what restrictions MDHHS may impose for the 2021–2022 school year. MDHHS's interim guidance for schools recommends that schools use multiple prevention strategies, including face masks, to limit transmission in school. MDHHS, Interim Recommendations for Operating Schools Safely When There Is COVID-19 Community Transmission (June 25, 2021), https://www.michigan.gov/documents/coronavirus/COVID-19_Guidance_for_Operating_Schools_Safely_728838_7.pdf.

Other public-health authorities have weighed in on mitigation measures for in-person education for the 2021–22 school year. In consideration of new evidence regarding the B.1.617.2 (Delta) coronavirus variant, the CDC's guidance for K–12 schools now recommends that all persons wear a mask indoors at school regardless of vaccination status. Guidance for COVID-19 Prevention in K-12 Schools, CDC (updated Aug. 5, 2021), https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/community/schools-childcare/k-12-guidance.html. The American Academy of Pediatrics ("AAP") also recommends that all students and staff—regardless of whether they are fully vaccinated against COVID-19—wear a mask indoors at school as a "necessary measure[] to limit the community spread of SARS-CoV-2 to ensure schools can remain open and safe for all students." COVID-19 Guidance for Safe Schools, Am. Acad. Pediatrics (last updated July 18, 2021), available at https://services.aap.org/en/pages/2019-novel-coronavirus-covid-19-infections/clinical-guidance/covid-19-planning-considerations-return-to-in-person-education-in-schools/. Masks, according to the AAP, are part of a "multi-pronged, layered approach" that together "will make in-person learning safe and possible." Id.

Some states and localities have adopted universal mask requirements in line with public health authorities' recommendations. See, e.g., Kalamazoo Cnty. Health Dep't 08/18/2021 Order (requiring that children in grades K–6 and those providing services to children in grades K–16 wear a mask in school settings); Ky. E.O. 2021-585 (Aug. 10, 2021); Cal. Div. Pub. Health (May 12,

Other states have recommended, but not required, students in grades K–12 to wear masks in school. See, e.g., Ohio Dep't Pub. Health (July 26, 2021), https://coronavirus.ohio.gov/static/responsible/schools/K-12-Schools-Guidance.pdf.

Despite the CDC's and the AAP's guidance and the decisions of other states to impose mask requirements in school, Whitmer has stated that she does not expect MDHHS to issue a mask requirement or other pandemic orders "in the near future and maybe not ever." Dave Boucher & Kristen Jordan Shamus, Whitmer: No New State Mask Rule Expected Despite Updated CDC Guidance, DET. FREE PRESS (July 27, 2021), https://www.freep.com/story/news/health/2021/07/27/whitmer-no-new-state-mask-rule-despite-updated-cdc-guidance/5385179001/. Hertel has indicated that she "expect[s] and encourage[s] schools when they go back to have mask requirements for kids younger than 12 and those who haven't been vaccinated." MDHHS Director: State Urging Schools to Have Mask Mandates for Kids Under 12, Those Not Vaccinated, WXYZ-Det. C. Plaintiffs' Lawsuit

On October 22, 2020, Plaintiffs filed a complaint in the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Michigan. Plaintiffs allege that the MDHHS Orders violate their rights to free exercise, equal protection, substantive due process, freedom of speech, and freedom of association. R. 1 (Compl. ¶¶ 135–41, 163–85) (Page ID #22–23, 27–30). In addition to these constitutional claims, Plaintiffs argued that the 10/05/20 MDHHS Order is an unlawful exercise of authority under Michigan law and violates the Michigan constitution's separation of powers and non-delegation clauses. Id. ¶¶ 142–62 (Page ID #24–26).

The declaration submitted by the principal of Plaintiff Resurrection School, Jacob Allstott, attests that MDHHS's mask requirement for students in grades K–5 violates Resurrection School's sincerely held religious beliefs because it interferes with the school's religiously oriented disciplinary policies and prevents younger students from partaking fully in a

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Catholic education.[3] R. 8-1 (Allstott Decl. ¶¶ 41–58) (Page ID #178–80). The declarations submitted by the Plaintiff parents assert that their children find masks uncomfortable and distracting from their religious education, and that the mask requirement conflicts with "the right [as a parent] to choose a school for them which corresponds to their own convictions." R. 8-2 (Mianecki Decl. ¶ 59) (Page ID #190) (quoting Catechism of the Catholic Church ("CCC") § 2229); R. 8-3 (Smith Decl. ¶ 40) (Page ID #197–98).

Plaintiff Christopher Mianecki attests that wearing a mask in the classroom "interferes with [his children's] ability to engage in their elementary school classroom and its Catholic, religious teachings." R. 8-2 (Mianecki Decl. ¶ 52) (Page ID #189). He provides specific examples of how the requirement that children wear masks in the classroom affects his three children who are enrolled at Resurrection School. He states that wearing a mask negatively impacts his children's focus, id. ¶ 33 (Page ID #187), "diverts [their] attention away from the lesson taught in class," id. ¶ 36 (Page ID #187), and "negatively affect[s] [their] ability to breathe effectively," id. ¶ 38 (Page ID #187).

Plaintiff Stephanie Smith states that her child, F.S., is unable to wear a mask because he "suffer[s] from breathing issues," R. 8-3 (Smith Decl. ¶ 8) (Page ID #194), and "is highly susceptible to respiratory infections that quickly turn into additional infections such as bronchitis," Id. ¶ 9 (Page ID #194). Despite Smith's observation that F.S. is unable to wear a mask because of his health conditions, F.S.'s pediatrician determined that F.S. did not qualify for a medical exemption.[4] Id. ¶ 11 (Page ID #194). As a result, Smith is "educating F.S. at home where he is not mandated to wear a mask, and F.S. is on a long-term absence from his Catholic

[3]In the initial complaint, Plaintiffs also argued that "[i]n accordance with the teachings of the Catholic faith, Resurrection School believes that every human has dignity and is made in God's image and likeness. Unfortunately, a mask shields our humanity. And because God created us in His image, we are masking that image." R. 1 (Compl. ¶ 22) (Page ID #5).

[4]The MDHHS Orders exempted children who "[c]annot medically tolerate a face mask" from complying with the face mask requirements. 03/02/21 MDHHS Order § 8(b). The MDHHS Orders clarify that "[a]n individual's verbal representation that they are not wearing a face mask because they fall within a specified exception . . . may be accepted." Id. § 7(d). Organizations may choose to require documentation that an individual cannot medically tolerate a face mask. See, e.g., Diocese of Lansing, Return to Learn: Phase 4 Plan, https://www.dioceseoflansing.org/education/phase-4-plan (requiring that students and staff obtain a "written and signed verification by a physician" in order not to wear a mask while at school).

Plaintiffs moved for a temporary restraining order ("TRO") and a preliminary injunction seeking to enjoin Defendants from enforcing the 10/05/20 MDHHS Order against Resurrection School and the other plaintiffs. R. 7 (Pls.' Mot. for TRO & Prelim. Inj.) (Page ID #65–70). The district court denied Plaintiffs' expedited ex parte motion for a TRO, concluding that Plaintiffs could not establish that they would experience irreparable harm without the order because they had unreasonably delayed in filing for emergency ex parte injunctive relief.[6] R. 11 (Order Denying Mot. for TRO at 3–4) (Page ID #207–08). Defendants then filed motions to dismiss, R. 13 (Gordon & Nessel Joint Mot. to Dismiss) (Page ID #215–18); R. 15 (Vail & Siemon, Mot. to Dismiss) (Page ID #475–76), and responses in opposition to Plaintiffs' request for a preliminary injunction, R. 18 (Gordon & Nessel, Resp. in Opp. to Pls.' Mot. for TRO & Prelim. Inj.) (Page ID #565–60); R. 19 (Vail & Siemon, Resp. in Opp. to Pls.' Mot. for TRO & Prelim. Inj.) (Page ID #602–04).

After Defendants responded to Plaintiffs' initial complaint and motion for a TRO and preliminary injunction, Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint. R. 21 (First Am. Compl.) (Page ID #636–68). The First Amended Complaint narrowed Plaintiffs' claims to violations of free exercise, equal protection, and substantive due process, and the Michigan constitutional and state-law claims. Id. The district court determined that the amended complaint did not render Defendants' motions to dismiss moot and required Plaintiffs to respond to the motions to dismiss. R. 23 (12/10/20 Order) (Page ID #692).

[5]We are troubled by public statements suggesting that Resurrection School did not require students in grades K–5 to wear masks during the entire school year, Cody Butler, Federal Appeals Court to Hear Arguments over Michigan Mask Mandate, WILX-Lansing (July 20, 2021), https://www.wilx.com/2021/07/20/federal-appeals-court-hear-arguments-over-michigan-mask-mandate/, when they have made contrary representations to this court and the district court.

[6]The district court noted that Whitmer and MDHHS issued executive orders requiring individuals over the age of five to wear a face covering indoors on July 17, 2020 and July 29, 2020 respectively, and thus, the "Plaintiffs cannot rely on the October 2, 2020 Opinion from the Michigan Supreme Court as the critical event." R. 11 (Order at 4) (Page ID #208).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The district court denied Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. Resurrection Sch. v. Gordon, 507 F. Supp. 3d 897 (W.D. Mich. 2020). Applying Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020) (order), the district court determined that Plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on the merits of their free-exercise challenge to the 10/05/2020 MDHHS Order. Id. at 900–01. First, the district court found that the 10/05/2020 MDHHS Order was neither motivated by animus against people of faith or a specific faith nor limited to regulating only religious activity. Id. at 901. The district court then determined that the order was neutral and generally applicable because it "require[d] all individuals over the age of five to wear a face mask in public. This requirement is in place whether they are attending a religious school, a secular school, running errands, or participating in some other facet of daily life." Id. at 901–02. The exceptions to the order are "narrow and discrete," and "apply to public schools and private schools equally, and they apply to secular schools and religious schools equally." Id. at 902. Thus, the district court concluded that Plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on the merits of their free exercise claim. Id.

The district court dismissed Plaintiffs' claim that the Order violated their equal-protection rights by permitting individuals to remove their face covering in certain circumstances, because "[t]here is nothing in the face-mask requirement that treats similarly situated groups of individuals different." Id. As for Plaintiffs' state-law claims, the district court declined to address this "novel question of state law for the first time" at this stage of litigation. Id. Although the district court did not address Plaintiffs' substantive-due-process claim by name, it concluded at the end that "Plaintiffs have failed to establish a lik[e]lihood of success on the merits on any of their claims." Id. (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs timely appealed. R. 25 (Not. of Appeal) (Page ID #700–01). Defendants move to dismiss the appeal as moot because MDHHS has rescinded the mask requirements. No. 20-2256, R. 34 (Hertel & Nessel Mot. to Dismiss Appeal as Moot); No. 20-2256, R. 37 (Siemon & Vail Mot. to Dismiss Appeal as Moot). Plaintiffs oppose the motion. No. 20-2256, R. 38 (Pls.' Resp. Mot. to Dismiss Appeal as Moot).

The district court had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331, and we have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1).

II. ANALYSIS

A. Mootness

Defendants argue that we lack jurisdiction because Plaintiffs' claims are moot. "[A] case is moot when the issues presented are no longer 'live' or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome." Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 496 (1969). "We do not have the power to adjudicate disputes that are moot, and '[t]he mootness inquiry must be made at every stage of a case.'" Hanrahan v. Mohr, 905 F.3d 947, 960 (6th Cir. 2018) (quoting McPherson v. Mich. High Sch. Athletic Ass'n, Inc., 119 F.3d 453, 458 (6th Cir. 1997) (en banc)). There are two relevant exceptions to the mootness doctrine. First, voluntary cessation of the challenged conduct does not moot a case unless it is "absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur." United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Exp. Ass'n, 393 U.S. 199, 203 (1968). Second, a case will not become moot if the injury is "capable of repetition, yet evading review." Fed. Election Comm'n v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 462 (2007). Plaintiffs argue that their case should proceed under both exceptions, and we address both in turn.

1. Voluntary Cessation

"A defendant's voluntary cessation of allegedly unlawful conduct ordinarily does not suffice to moot a case." Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Env't Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 174 (2000). Where the defendant voluntarily ceases the challenged conduct, the defendant must establish that: "there is no reasonable expectation that the alleged violation will recur"; and (2) "interim relief or events have completely and irrevocably eradicated the effects of the alleged violation."[7] Thomas v. City of Memphis, 996 F.3d 318, 324 (6th Cir. 2021) (quoting Speech First v. Schlissel, 939 F.3d 756, 767 (6th Cir. 2019)). We caution that "[t]he burden of demonstrating mootness 'is a heavy one.'" County of Los Angeles v. Davis, 440 U.S. 625, 631 (1979) (quoting United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 633 (1953)).

[7]The second requirement is not at issue here.

We generally treat "cessation of the allegedly illegal conduct by government officials . . . with more solicitude . . . than similar action by private parties." Mosley v. Hairston, 920 F.2d 409, 415 (6th Cir. 1990) (quoting Ragsdale v. Turnock, 841 F.2d 1358, 1365 (7th Cir. 1988)). "This [voluntary cessation] exception properly applies only when a recalcitrant legislature clearly intends to reenact the challenged regulation." Ky. Right to Life, Inc. v. Terry, 108 F.3d 637, 645 (6th Cir. 1997); see also Bench Billboard Co. v. City of Cincinnati, 675 F.3d 974, 981 (6th Cir. 2012) ("[S]elf-correction [by government officials] provides a secure foundation for a dismissal based on mootness so long as it appears genuine." (quoting Mosley, 920 F.2d at 415)).

Plaintiffs argue, and Defendants acknowledge, that because Defendants' "discretion to effect the change lies with one agency or individual, . . . significantly more than the bare solicitude itself is necessary to show that the voluntary cessation moots the claim," Speech First, 939 F.3d at 768. Hertel & Nessel Reply at 4; Pls.' Resp. at 7. Although MDHHS, like the Defendants in Speech First, retains the sole authority to change the mask requirements, this case is distinguishable from Speech First because MDHHS rescinded the challenged orders in response to "changing circumstances." Defendants Hertel & Nessel offer evidence that the policy change was genuine, including that the policy change reflects increased access and eligibility for vaccines, that Michigan joins other states in rescinding their mask requirements,[8] and that MDHHS rescinded almost all COVID-19 orders, not merely the orders at issue here.

Although the Supreme Court has addressed mootness in the context of COVID-19 restrictions, the factual circumstances are distinguishable from those present here. In Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn v. Cuomo, 141 S. Ct. 63, 68–69 (2020), the Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs' challenge to a state COVID-19 pandemic order limiting attendance at religious services was not moot even though the state had relaxed the attendance limitations in response to [8]Defendants note that as of July 2021 thirty-one states have rescinded their mask requirements. Hertel & Nessel Reply at 5 n.4 (citing Andy Markowitz, State-by-State Guide to Face Mask Requirements, AARP (July 12, 2021), available at https://www.aarp.org/health/healthy-living/info2020/states-mask-mandates-coronavirus html.). This argument cuts both ways because many states have imposed mask requirements for K–12 instruction, see Part I.B, and some states and localities have recently reimposed broad indoor mask requirements following a new surge in COVID-19 cases, see Nev. Exec. Directive. 047 (July 27, 2021) (requiring mask usage by all persons in areas with substantial or high transmission of COVID-19); La. Procl. No. 2021-137 (Aug. 2, 2021) (implementing a statewide mask mandate).

declining COVID-19 cases. The Court reasoned that the plaintiffs "remain under a constant threat" that the state will reimpose attendance limits without notice and "bar individuals in the affected area from attending services before judicial relief can be obtained." Id. at 68. The state health department assigned areas to different risk categories based on the severity of the COVID-19 outbreak, and imposed defined restrictions on activity. Id. at 66. The state continued to use this framework, meaning that the plaintiffs remained at risk of restrictions on attendance at religious services if the number of COVID-19 cases, deaths, and hospitalizations increased. Id. at 68. Here, Defendants do not presently use a similar framework for imposing mask requirements and other pandemic restrictions. To the contrary, Defendants at present have rescinded all pandemic restrictions.

Similarly, in Tandon v. Newsom, 141 S. Ct. 1294 (2021) (per curiam), the Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs' challenge to the state COVID-19 pandemic order limiting gatherings, including gatherings for at-home religious activities, was not moot even though the defendants altered the guidance during litigation. The Court explained that > even if the government withdraws or modifies a COVID restriction in the course of litigation, that does not necessarily moot the case. And so long as a case is not moot, litigants otherwise entitled to emergency injunctive relief remain entitled to such relief where the applicants "remain under a constant threat" that government officials will use their power to reinstate the challenged restrictions.

Id. at 1297 (quoting Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, 141 S. Ct. at 68). In concluding that plaintiffs' challenge was not moot, the Court noted that "the previous restrictions remain in place until April 15th, and officials with a track record of 'moving the goalposts' retain authority to reinstate those heightened restrictions at any time." Id. (quoting S. Bay United Pentecostal Church v. Newsom, 141 S. Ct. 716, 720 (2021) (statement of Gorsuch, J.)).

The Tandon Court's conclusion rested on its perception that state officials had a "track record" of altering COVID-19 guidance, and that it had previously "summarily rejected the Ninth Circuit's analysis of California's COVID restrictions on religious exercise" four times. 141 S. Ct. at 1297. In contrast here, Defendants have been consistent in their approach to mask requirements. For the 2020–21 school year, excluding a few weeks at the beginning of the school year, Defendants required students in grades K–5 to wear masks in the classroom.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MDHHS altered its mask requirements only in May 2021 in response to the CDC's guidance that individuals who were vaccinated are unlikely to transmit COVID-19, and MDHHS eliminated the mask requirements in June 2021 in response to sustained decreases in the number of COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths and the wide availability of safe and effective vaccines.

As for our own circuit, in an unpublished case reviewing a COVID-19 public-health order, we declined to apply the voluntary-cessation exception to mootness where the Governor replaced an executive order with a recommendation. Pleasant View Baptist Church v. Beshear, 838 F. App'x 936, 938 (6th Cir. 2020) (order); cf. Maryville Baptist Church, Inc. v. Beshear, 977 F.3d 561, 566 (6th Cir. 2020) (per curiam) (remanding to the district court to permit it to consider "whether these cases have become moot in light of the Governor's new orders"). In distinguishing the case from Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, we emphasized that "there, unlike here, the challenged order remained in force subject to the apparent whims of the Governor, to whom a presumption of regularity did not apply." Pleasant View Baptist Church, 838 F. App'x at 939.[9]

In some ways, Defendants' argument that their rescission of the challenged MDHHS orders moots Plaintiffs' claims is stronger than the one accepted in Pleasant View Baptist Church. In Pleasant View Baptist Church, we relied on the Governor's public statements that he would rely on recommendations instead of mandates, which he made prior to the widespread availability of effective vaccines. MDHHS's rescission of the challenged orders, by contrast, reflects widespread availability of and increased eligibility for effective COVID-19 vaccines. On the other hand, Pleasant View Baptist Church involved school closures, which are a more onerous public health measure than requiring that students wear masks at school. In fact, MDHHS and other public-health authorities recommend that all persons wear masks in school to ensure that schools can maintain in-person learning. See, e.g., MDHHS, Interim Recommendations for Operating Schools Safely When There Is COVID-19 Community Transmission (June 25, 2021), https://www.michigan.gov/documents/coronavirus/COVID-

[9]Plaintiffs suggest without explanation that "Tandon adopted a different analysis from Pleasant View Baptist Church and a different standard." Pls.' Resp. at 12. Plaintiffs' argument is unavailing. The Tandon Court arrived at a different conclusion regarding mootness than we did in Pleasant View Baptist Church because the Court was responding to the distinct facts of that case, not because it applied a different standard.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

19_Guidance_for_Operating_Schools_Safely_728838_7.pdf. ("Schools can layer multiple prevention strategies developed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) to prevent transmission within school buildings, reduce disruptions to in-person learning, and help protect the people who are not fully vaccinated, which currently includes all children under the age of 12 years.").

We conclude that Defendants cannot meet the heavy burden of establishing that it is "absolutely clear" that they will not reimpose a mask requirement, especially for children younger than twelve who cannot be vaccinated. We do not doubt the sincerity of MDHHS's statements that they have no intention to reimpose a mask requirement like the one challenged by Defendants. We also recognize that the rescission of all pandemic orders, including the mask requirement, is unique because it reflects the wide availability of safe and effective vaccines. At the same time, the FDA has not yet authorized their use in persons younger than twelve, the group comprising students in grades K–5. MDHHS has previously reimposed certain pandemic emergency orders and tightened mask requirements in response to increasing COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths. Considering the very real possibility that MDHHS may be faced again with escalating COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths, we hold that Defendants have not met their "heavy burden" of showing that it is "absolutely clear" that they will not reimpose impose a mask requirement, including for children in grades K–5 receiving in-person instruction. Defendants' rescission of the challenged MDHHS Orders does not moot Plaintiffs' claims.

2. Capable of Repetition, Yet Evading Review

Plaintiffs' claims further come within the exception to the mootness doctrine for actions that are "capable of repetition, yet evading review." Pls.' Resp. at 10–14. This exception is limited "to situations where: '(1) the challenged action was in its duration too short to be fully litigated prior to its cessation or expiration; and (2) there was a reasonable expectation that the same complaining party would be subjected to the same action again.'" Chirco v. Gateway Oaks, L.L.C., 384 F.3d 307, 309 (6th Cir. 2004) (quoting Weinstein v. Bradford, 423 U.S. 147, 148 (1975)). As the party asserting this exception, Plaintiffs bear the burden of proof. Lawrence

v. Blackwell, 430 F.3d 368, 371 (6th Cir. 2005). Plaintiffs satisfy both requirements for this exception.

Plaintiffs have satisfied the first prong. Although Plaintiffs filed their complaint and motion for a preliminary injunction in October 2020, the school year ended prior to when this case could reach the court of appeals. It is true that Plaintiffs did not take advantage of opportunities to expedite our review of the case.[10] Nonetheless, the Supreme Court has found periods of up to two years to be too short to be fully litigated. See, e.g., Kingdomware Techs., Inc. v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1969, 1976 (2016) (holding that a procurement contract that expires in two years does not permit judicial review); Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson Cnty., 274 F.3d 377, 390–91 (6th Cir. 2001) (holding that two years to challenge to a local ordinance prohibiting individuals with a sex-crime history to work for a sexually oriented business was too short in duration). Specific to the educational context, we have held, albeit in an unpublished decision, that an individualized education program lasting a school year is too short in duration to litigate to conclusion. Woods v. Northport Pub. Sch., 487 F. App'x 968, 980 (6th Cir. 2012).

Plaintiffs also satisfy the second requirement of the "capable of repetition, yet evading review" exception. This is in part because the standard is a forgiving one. "Recurrence of the issue need not be more probable than not; instead, the controversy must be capable of repetition." Barry v. Lyon, 834 F.3d 706, 715 (6th Cir. 2016). This standard provides that "the chain of potential events does not have to be air-tight or even probable to support the court's finding of non-mootness." Id. at 716.

[10]Plaintiffs note that "[t]he District Court's decision resulted in nine months of orders that stripped Appellants from their sincerely held right to religious exercise, equal protection of the law, and substantive due process." Pls.' Resp. at 13. But Plaintiffs are at least partly responsible for delays in this litigation. Plaintiffs delayed in filing their complaint in federal court until October 22, 2020 and their emergency motion for a TRO or preliminary injunction until October 27, 2020, even though Governor Whitmer issued her initial executive order requiring that students in grades K–5 wear masks on September 25, 2020, E.O. 2020-185 § 1 (Sept. 25, 2020), and MDHHS issued its first order on October 5, 2020, 10/05/20 MDHHS Order §§ 2–3. Plaintiffs also failed to take advantage of opportunities to expedite the litigation. For instance, Plaintiffs could have filed a motion for an injunction pending appeal, as other parties challenging COVID-19 pandemic orders have done, see, e.g., Monclova Christian Acad. v. Toledo-Lucas Cnty. Health Dep't, 984 F.3d 477, 479 (6th Cir. 2020) (granting the plaintiffs' motion for an injunction pending appeal fifteen days after the district court denied their request for a preliminary injunction and twenty-four days after the plaintiffs filed their complaint), or requested expedited briefing or expedited consideration of their appeal.

Although Defendants provide ample reasons—namely the availability of and expanded eligibility for COVID-19 vaccines—that a mandatory requirement that students in grades K–5 wear masks in the classroom is unlikely, that is not the standard. Rather, we look to whether the controversy is capable of repetition. MDHHS acknowledged in its order rescinding the mask requirements that "the COVID-19 pandemic continues to constitute an epidemic in Michigan." 06/17/21 MDHHS Order. Both the CDC's and MDHHS's guidance recommend that students in grades K–12 wear masks in the classroom. This is sufficient to establish that Plaintiffs' claims are capable of repetition, yet evading review.

True, in the election context, we have determined that lawsuits challenging election procedures in light of the COVID-19 pandemic and attendant restrictions are not capable of repetition, yet evading review. Most recently in Thompson v. DeWine, -- F.4th --, 2021 WL 3183692 (6th Cir. July 28, 2021), we held that the plaintiffs' challenge to the signature requirements for ballot initiatives was moot as to the 2021 election. In Thompson, the plaintiffs argued that "COVID-19 remains a 'full blown crisis' hampering their efforts to gather signatures for 2021 initiatives," and thus their challenge fell under the capable of repetition, yet evading review exception to the mootness doctrine. Id. at *4. We concluded, however, that "advancements in the COVID-19 vaccine and treatment" made COVID-19 unlikely to threaten seriously the plaintiffs' ability to collect signatures for the 2021 ballot initiatives. Id.; see also Memphis A. Philip Randolph Inst. v. Hargett, 2 F.4th 548, 560 (6th Cir. 2021) ("Fortunately, because of advancements in COVID-19 vaccinations and treatment since this case began, the COVID-19 pandemic is unlikely to pose a serious threat during the next election cycle." (citing Trends in Number of COVID-19 Cases and Deaths in the US Reported to CDC, by State/Territory, Ctrs. for Disease Control & Prevention, https://covid.cdc.gov/covid-data-tracker/#trends_dailytrendscases (June 15, 2021)).[11]

These election cases, however, are distinguishable from the present case. First, our decisions in those cases were contingent on the availability of COVID-19 safe and effective

[11]Unfortunately, the daily number of COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths has since trended significantly upwards. Trends in Number of COVID-19 Cases and Deaths in the US Reported to CDC, by State/Territory, CDC, https://covid.cdc.gov/covid-data-tracker/#trends_dailytrendscases (accessed on Aug. 2, 2021).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

vaccinations and treatment, which are presently authorized for use by persons old enough to vote and sign petitions for ballot initiatives, but not for children in grades K–5. Second, in-person instruction meaningfully differs from participation in the electoral process in a way that increases the risk of contracting and transmitting COVID-19. Whereas participating in the electoral process is a "discrete, individualized, often brief activit[y]," in-person classroom instruction involves "indoor gatherings occurring for hours a day on a daily basis." Hertel & Nessel Br. at 36. Finally, although COVID-19 may not pose a serious enough disruption to the electoral process, it may still pose a significant enough problem to compel MDHHS to mandate that persons, especially individuals not yet able to be vaccinated, wear masks. Accordingly, we conclude that Plaintiffs' claim is not moot and turn to the merits of their challenge.

B. Standard of Review

We review for abuse of discretion a district court's denial of a preliminary injunction. Chabad of S. Ohio & Congregation Lubavitch v. City of Cincinnati, 363 F.3d 427, 432 (6th Cir. 2004). "While the ultimate decision to grant or deny a preliminary injunction is reviewed for an abuse of discretion, we review the district court's legal conclusions de novo and its factual findings for clear error." Obama for Am. v. Husted, 697 F.3d 423, 428 (6th Cir. 2012). We have cautioned that "[t]his standard of review is 'highly deferential' to the district court's decision." Certified Restoration Dry Cleaning Network, L.L.C. v. Tenke Corp., 511 F.3d 535, 541 (6th Cir. 2007) (quoting Leary v. Daeschner, 228 F.3d 729, 739 (6th Cir. 2000)). To summarize, "[w]e 'review the District Court's legal rulings de novo' (including its First Amendment conclusion), 'and its ultimate conclusion [as to whether to grant the preliminary injunction] for abuse of discretion.'" Platt v. Bd. of Comm'rs on Grievances & Discipline of Ohio Sup. Ct., 769 F.3d 447, 454 (6th Cir. 2014) (quoting McCreary County v. ACLU of Ky., 545 U.S. 844, 867 (2005)).

In determining whether to grant a preliminary injunction, we consider four factors: "(1) whether the movant has a strong likelihood of success on the merits; (2) whether the movant would suffer irreparable injury absent the injunction; (3) whether the injunction would cause substantial harm to others; and (4) whether the public interest would be served by the issuance of an injunction." Bays v. City of Fairborn, 668 F.3d 814, 818–19 (6th Cir. 2012). Where, as in this case, Plaintiffs "seek[] a preliminary injunction on the basis of a potential constitutional violation, 'the likelihood of success on the merits often will be the determinative factor.'" Obama for Am., 697 F.3d at 436 (quoting Jones v. Caruso, 569 F.3d 258, 265 (6th Cir. 2009)). Accordingly, we focus our attention on whether Plaintiffs can establish a likelihood of success on the merits.

C. Free-Exercise Challenge

Plaintiffs argue that MDHHS's Orders violate their sincerely held religious beliefs because they require students in grades K–5 at religious schools to wear a face covering. We do not question the sincerity of Plaintiffs' beliefs that wearing a mask in the classroom violates their Catholic faith. Hernandez v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 490 U.S. 680, 699 (1989) ("It is not within the judicial ken to question the centrality of particular beliefs or practices to a faith, or the validity of particular litigants' interpretations of those creeds."). Defendants largely do not question the sincerity of the Plaintiffs' religious objection to wearing a mask in the classroom.[12]

We begin with the familiar framework for free-exercise claims. Where a challenged law is neutral and of general applicability and has merely an "incidental effect" on Plaintiffs' religious beliefs, Defendants need not show a compelling governmental interest. Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 531 (1993); see also Emp. Div., Dep't of Hum. Res. of Oregon v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 878 (1990) (holding that if burdening the exercise of religion is "merely the incidental effect of a generally applicable and otherwise valid provision, the First Amendment has not been offended."). Where the challenged law does not meet these requirements, Defendants must show that the policy is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest. Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, 508 U.S. at 531–32. This rule, in part, reflected practical concerns with requiring governments to satisfy the stringent standard of establishing a compelling interest for "all actions thought to be religiously commanded." Smith, [12]Defendants Vail and Siemon contend in their brief that "Appellants do not cite to any sources to support their position that the Catholic faith or Catholic theology is in any way opposed to the use of prophylactic masks during a global pandemic," Vail & Siemon Br. at 6, or "provide any examples of ways in which masks interfere with or burden their religious beliefs," id. at 19. Plaintiffs' objections to masks admittedly are confusing and at times, digress into secular, rather than religious concerns. Nevertheless, a plaintiff's "religious beliefs need not be acceptable, logical, consistent, or comprehensible to others in order to merit First Amendment protection." Thomas v. Rev. Bd. of Ind. Emp. Sec. Div., 450 U.S. 707, 714 (1981).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

494 U.S. at 888. Requiring governments to show more than a rational basis for a law of neutral and general applicability would:

> open the prospect of constitutionally required religious exemptions from civic obligations of almost every conceivable kind—ranging from compulsory military service, to the payment of taxes; to health and safety regulation such as manslaughter and child neglect laws, compulsory vaccination laws, drug laws, and traffic laws; to social welfare legislation such as minimum wage laws, child labor laws, animal cruelty laws, environmental protection laws, and laws providing for equality of opportunity for the races.

Id. at 888–89 (citations omitted).

A law, of course, is not neutral and of general applicability if it discriminates on its face. Hartmann v. Stone, 68 F.3d 973, 976, 978 (6th Cir. 1995). Relatedly, "[a] law might be motivated by animus toward people of faith in general or one faith in particular." Roberts v. Neace, 958 F.3d 409, 413 (6th Cir. 2020) (per curiam). Even if a law appears neutral and is devoid of animus, it is not neutral and of general applicability if it is "riddled with exemptions." Ward v. Polite, 667 F.3d 727, 738 (6th Cir. 2012).

We considered the intersection between religious schools and COVID-19 orders in Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020). In Beshear, the plaintiffs argued that a Kentucky order that temporarily prohibited in-person instruction at public and private K–12 schools violated their free-exercise rights. We concluded, in a published opinion, that the plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on their claims that the order violated the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment, and thus stayed the district court's preliminary injunction. Id. at 511. First, we determined that the order was "neutral and of general applicability" because it "applies to all public and private elementary and secondary schools in the Commonwealth, religious or otherwise." Id. at 509. Accordingly, the order "need not be justified by a compelling governmental interest." Id. Thus, deferring to "the Governor's determination regarding the health and safety of the Commonwealth at this point in time," we concluded that the plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on the merits of their free-exercise challenge. Id. at 510. The Supreme Court denied the plaintiffs' petition for a writ of certiorari without reaching the merits of the case because of the "timing and the impending expiration of the Order." Danville Christian Acad., Inc. v. Beshear, 141 S. Ct. 527, 528 (2020).

In the present case, the district court applied Beshear and correctly concluded that because the requirement to wear a facial covering applied to students in grades K–5 at both religious and non-religious schools, it was neutral and of general applicability. We agree with the district court's application of Beshear.

Plaintiffs argue that a subsequent case, Monclova Christian Academy v. Toledo-Lucas County Health Department, 984 F.3d 477 (6th Cir. 2020) (order), conflicts with the district court's order here. In Monclova Christian Academy, the panel concluded that a county health-department order requiring all schools in the county to close for in-person learning was subject to strict scrutiny. Although the order temporarily prohibiting in-person education applied to public and religious K–12 schools alike, the panel construed the relevant comparator as secular businesses such as "gyms, tanning salons, office buildings, and the Hollywood Casino" that the health order had permitted to remain open, not non-religious K–12 schools. Id. at 482. Accordingly, the panel held that health order was not neutral and of general applicability and applied strict scrutiny to the challenged order. Applying this standard, the panel concluded that the health-department order was not narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest and granted plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. Following the framework of Monclova Christian Academy, Plaintiffs argue that the district court erred by failing to compare MDHHS's interest in requiring that students in grades K–5 wear masks in the classroom with MDHHS's interest in allowing persons not to wear masks in certain, secular circumstances. Pls.' Br. at 30.

Beshear and Monclova Christian Academy, however, seemingly conflict with one another. Indeed, the panel in Monclova Christian Academy recognized that Beshear could pose an issue but contended that the decision in Beshear did not consider the "broader question" of "whether an order closing public and parochial schools violates the Clause if it leaves other comparable secular actors less restricted than the closed parochial schools." Id. at 481. Thus, according to the panel in Monclova Christian Academy, it was free to consider in the first instance whether the relevant comparators were secular actors regulated by the specific order or a broader set of secular businesses. Id. As Plaintiffs and amici here suggest, Monclova Christian Academy's interpretation of Beshear is incorrect. Amici Br. at 9. In Beshear, we did consider whether the appropriate comparator was other non-religious schools or other non-school entities and held that the former was the appropriate comparator. The plaintiffs and amici in Beshear argued at the district court and in their appellate briefs that the law was not neutral and of general applicability because it prohibited in-person education at K–12 religious schools while permitting secular activities to continue. See, e.g., Pls.-Appellees' Resp. Mot. for Stay Pending Appeal, at 3–5, Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020); Brief for Pleasant View Baptist Church et al. as Amici Curiae Supporting Respondents, at 5–10, Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020); Brief for Multiple Private Kentucky Religious Schools as Amici Curiae Supporting Respondents, at 9–12, Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020). Accordingly, as this issue was "brought to the attention of the court" and "ruled upon" in the earlier case, we must follow Beshear rather than Monclova Christian Academy. United States v. Lucido, 612 F.3d 871, 876 (6th Cir. 2010) (quoting Rinard v. Luoma, 440 F.3d 361, 363 (6th Cir. 2006)); see also United States v. Jarvis, 999 F.3d 442, 445–46 (6th Cir. 2021) ("Forced to choose between conflicting precedents, we must follow the first one.").

Tandon v. Newsom, 141 S. Ct. 1294 (2021), does not compel a different comparator. In Tandon, the Supreme Court concluded that the plaintiffs were likely to succeed on the merits of their free-exercise challenge to a California order limiting all gatherings in homes, religious and non-religious, to three households. Id. at 1297. "[G]overnment regulations are not neutral and generally applicable, and therefore trigger strict scrutiny under the Free Exercise Clause, whenever they treat any comparable secular activity more favorably than religious exercise." Id. at 1296. In concluding that the restriction was not neutral and of general applicability, the Court noted that "California treats some comparable secular activities more favorably than at-home religious exercise, permitting hair salons, retail stores, personal care services, movie theaters, private suites at sporting events and concerts, and indoor restaurants to bring together more than three households at a time." Id. (emphasis added). Identifying a comparable secular activity for religious schools other than a public or private nonreligious school is difficult. Schools educating students in grades K–5 are unique in bringing together students not yet old enough to be vaccinated against COVID-19 in an indoor setting and every day.[13] Accordingly, the proper comparable secular activity in this case remains public and private nonreligious schools.

Even under this broader conception of comparable secular activity, the MDHHS orders are not so riddled with secular exceptions as to fail to be neutral and generally applicable. The exceptions to the MDHHS Orders were narrow and discrete. First, many of the exceptions, such as medical intolerance to mask use, eating and drinking, swimming, or receiving a medical treatment during which a mask cannot be worn, are "inherently incompatible with" wearing a mask. Hertel & Nessel Br. at 30. Contact sports where participants cannot safely remain masked must adhere to a testing protocol. 03/02/2021 MDHHS Order § 6(a)(2). Here, Plaintiffs seek to exempt children in grades K–5 at religious schools from having to wear a mask during an activity in which wearing a mask is possible, albeit undesirable for Plaintiffs. Second, almost all exceptions to the MDHHS Orders—aside from children younger than five years old and those medically unable to wear a mask—are short in duration and lower risk (medical and personal care services requiring removal of a mask; voting). Hertel & Nessel Br. at 30–31. Some of the exceptions have a stringent social distancing requirement (public speaking with twelve feet of distance) or are outdoors where the risk of COVID-19 transmission is reduced (outdoor, physically distanced exercise). Id. at 33. Third, The MDHHS Orders also exempt activities that are necessary to fulfill "equally important obligations to its citizens' health and safety" (firefighters, police officers, and emergency medical personnel "actively engaged in a public safety role . . . where wearing a face mask would seriously interfere in the performance of their public safety responsibilities," 03/02/21 MDHHS Order § 8(i) (emphasis added)). Hertel & Nessel Br. at 33–34. By contrast, as Defendants aptly describe it, "plaintiffs' activity comprises all-day, indoor mixing of the same groups of people, five days a week for months on end." Id. at 33. Thus, unlike in Monclova Christian School, where the challenged order exempted an array of secular activities that the panel viewed as posing a greater risk than in-person instruction, the exceptions to the MDHHS Orders are narrow and largely limited to activities of lesser risk than in-person instruction.

[13]Perhaps the only other comparable secular activity, childcare organizations, were subject to the same requirement that children ages five years and older wear a mask. 03/02/21 MDHHS Order § 7(e).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Finally, all exceptions to the MDHHS Orders were available to Plaintiffs if they had chosen to engage in that activity. Hertel & Nessel Br. at 27. Plaintiffs were able to remove their face coverings to eat lunch at school, swim during physical education class, participate in Mass at school, engage in distanced public speaking on a religious topic, or exercise outdoors while physically distanced during recess. Id. Under the MDHHS orders, persons medically unable to wear a face covering, such as Smith's son, could go without a face covering at school. Because the MDHHS Orders are not so riddled with exceptions for comparable secular activities as to render the mask requirement not neutral and of general applicability, we review the MDHHS Orders for whether the state has a rational basis.

Other cases cited by Plaintiffs do not change this standard. At oral argument, Plaintiffs argued that the Supreme Court's recent decision in Fulton v. City of Philadelphia, 141 S. Ct. 1868 (2021), pronounced a different standard. In Fulton, the Supreme Court concluded that the city's refusal to contract with Catholic Social Services for the provision of foster care because the agency's religious beliefs prevented it from certifying same-sex couples violated the organization's free-exercise rights. Id. at 1882. The Fulton majority's narrow holding focused on a contract provision that permitted the commissioner of the city's Department of Human Services to grant exemptions to the non-discrimination clause in her "sole discretion." Id. at 1878. The contract's grant of unfettered discretion meant that the non-discrimination clause was not neutral and of general applicability, and thus, was subject to strict scrutiny. Id. at 1881. Although the plaintiffs and some of the concurring justices asked that the Court reconsider Smith, the majority declined to do so because the city's policy was not neutral and of general applicability, and thus, fell outside the scope of Smith. Id. at 1876–77.

Plaintiffs cite the Supreme Court's recent decision in Our Lady of Guadalupe School v. Morrissey-Berru, 140 S. Ct. 2049, 2055 (2020), for the principle that "[t]he First Amendment protects the right of religious institutions 'to decide for themselves, free from state interference, matters of church government as well as those of faith and doctrine,'" (quoting Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church in N. Am., 344 U.S. 94, 116 (1952)). Pls.' Br. at 26. Plaintiffs' reliance on Our Lady of Guadalupe School is misplaced. In Our Lady of Guadalupe School, the Supreme Court concluded that a form of immunity from employment-discrimination claims brought by certain employees, the ministerial exception, extended to two teachers who taught religion and participated in religious activities. Id. at 2066. The Supreme Court, however, emphasized that religious institutions' ability to decide "matters of church government" and "faith and doctrine," "does not mean that religious institutions enjoy a general immunity from secular laws." Id. at 2060. MDHHS Orders requiring all persons ages five and older to wear a mask in public—including in the classroom—is not comparable to infringing on the school's authority to select their ministers and religious educators. Thus, Our Lady of Guadalupe School provides no help to Plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs' citation to Thomas v. Review Board of Indiana Employment Security Division, 450 U.S. 707 (1981), is also misplaced. According to Plaintiffs, Thomas compels us to "defer[] [to] Plaintiffs' understanding of their own religious beliefs" and not conclude that "any burden to Plaintiffs' religious beliefs was 'incidental.'" Pls.' Br. at 22 (quoting Resurrection Sch. v. Gordon, 507 F. Supp. 3d 897, 902 (W.D. Mich. 2020)). Thomas, however, stands for the proposition that we should defer to a plaintiff's characterization of her opposition to a law as religious. Thomas, 450 U.S. at 714.

Plaintiffs also argue that we should apply strict scrutiny to MDHHS's Orders because the orders violate both their free-exercise rights and their rights as parents to direct the education of their children. Pls.' Br. at 32.[14] This hybrid-rights theory stems from dicta in Smith explaining that a plaintiff may establish a violation of the Free Exercise Clause by showing that a neutral and generally applicable law violates "the Free Exercise Clause in conjunction with other constitutional protections." 494 U.S. at 881.

Although some circuits have recognized hybrid-rights claims, we have consistently declined to recognize hybrid-rights claims. For instance, in Kissinger v. Board of Trustees of Ohio State University, College of Veterinary Medicine, 5 F.3d 177 (6th Cir. 1993), we [14]In support of this hybrid-rights argument, Plaintiffs cite language from the Supreme Court's order in Danville Christian Academy declining to grant Plaintiffs' application for a writ of certiorari. Pls.' Br. at 32 ("Even if this Court were to deem Defendants' orders generally applicable, which they are not, Plaintiffs' free exercise claim also requires heightened scrutiny because the 'application of a neutral, generally applicable law to religiously motivated action implicates the right of parents to direct the education of their children.'" (quoting Danville Christian Acad., 141 S. Ct. at 528)). Plaintiffs' reference is misleading, because the Supreme Court was merely repeating an argument raised by amici, not assessing the merits of this argument.

considered the merits of a veterinary student's claim that her college's policy of requiring students to dissect animals violated the Free Exercise Clause and other constitutional provisions. We declined to apply strict scrutiny to her hybrid claim, reasoning that "[w]e do not see how a state regulation would violate the Free Exercise Clause if it implicates other constitutional rights but would not violate the [F]ree Exercise Clause if it did not implicate other constitutional rights." Id. at 180. Simply put, this outcome would be "completely illogical." Id. "[T]herefore, at least until the Supreme Court holds that legal standards under the Free Exercise Clause vary depending on whether other constitutional rights are implicated," we explained that we would "not use a stricter legal standard than that used in Smith to evaluate generally applicable, exceptionless state regulations under the Free Exercise Clause." Id. Since then, we have consistently declined to recognize a hybrid-rights theory. See Pleasant View Baptist Church, 838 F. App'x at 940–41 (Donald, J., concurring) (collecting cases). We decline to recognize a hybrid-rights claim here.

Applying rational-basis review, we hold that the MDHHS Orders are rationally related to a legitimate government interest. To satisfy rational-basis review, Defendants must show "only that the regulation bear[s] some rational relation to a legitimate state interest." Craigmiles v. Giles, 312 F.3d 220, 223 (6th Cir. 2002). Here, Defendants had a legitimate state interest in controlling the spread of COVID-19 in Michigan. Plaintiffs apparently concede this point, acknowledging that "COVID-19 poses real challenges and concerns to everyone and requires a robust response." Pls.' Br. at 4. Further, Defendants cite more than ample evidence that requiring masks in the school setting minimizes the spread of COVID-19. See Hertel & Nessel Br. at 4–5; Vail & Siemon Br. at 8; R. 16-2 (Aff. of Vail) (Page ID #535–62). Although Plaintiffs question the effectiveness of masks, even they admit that "masks serve a purpose when students cannot socially distance and do not object to (and, indeed, enforce) mask wearing in the hallways and common areas of the school." Pls.' Br. at 5–6.

We conclude that the MDHHS Orders do not violate the Free Exercise Clause because the MDHHS Orders are neutral and of general applicability and satisfy rational-basis review.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

D. Equal-Protection Claim

Plaintiffs argue that the MDHHS Orders violate the Equal Protection Clause because the Orders exempt certain secular activities but not religious education, and, alternatively, because the Orders lack a rational basis. Plaintiffs also fault the district court for failing to cite caselaw explaining why the MDHHS Orders satisfy the Equal Protection Clause.

To establish an equal-protection violation, "a plaintiff must adequately plead that the government treated the plaintiff 'disparately as compared to similarly situated persons and that such disparate treatment either burdens a fundamental right, targets a suspect class, or has no rational basis.'" Ctr. for Bio-Ethical Reform, Inc. v. Napolitano, 648 F.3d 365, 379 (6th Cir. 2011) (quoting Club Italia Soccer & Sports Org., Inc. v. Charter Township of Shelby, 470 F.3d 286, 299 (6th Cir. 2006)). We have explained that "[t]he threshold element of an equal protection claim is disparate treatment; once disparate treatment is shown, the equal protection analysis to be applied is determined by the classification used by government decision-makers." Scarbrough v. Morgan Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 470 F.3d 250, 260 (6th Cir. 2006).

Plaintiffs' equal-protection challenge is confusing, is largely a repackaging of its free-exercise argument, and is ultimately meritless. First, Plaintiffs fail to satisfy this threshold requirement of showing that the state has treated similarly situated persons differently than Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs argue that the MDHHS Orders result in "disparate treatment" because they permit persons to remove their masks while engaging in certain secular activities and in religious worship in a house of worship, while requiring students in grades K–5 at religious schools to wear masks. This is a free-exercise challenge, not an equal-protection challenge. Seemingly recognizing that this is a free-exercise challenge, Plaintiffs open their argument by stating that "the challenged measures burden Plaintiffs' fundamental rights to the free exercise of religion under the First Amendment in violation of the equal protection guarantee of the Fourteenth Amendment." Pls.' Br. at 34. Further, there is no "disparate treatment" because the MDHHS Orders did not distinguish between certain groups of children. The MDHHS Orders required all children ages five and older to wear masks in public, subject to a few universal exceptions that were available to Plaintiffs.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Plaintiffs' argument that the requirement that children ages five years and older wear masks in the classroom lacks any rational basis is equally unavailing. Although unclear from the brief, Plaintiffs appear to argue that the MDHHS Orders lack any rational basis because the Orders exempted activities that Plaintiffs perceive as riskier than the in-person education of students in grades K–5. Pls.' Br. at 34. One could also include Plaintiffs' general belief that masks do not work to limit the transmission of COVID-19 within this argument. Id. at 5. As discussed in Part II.C, however, the MDHHS Orders satisfy rational-basis review. Accordingly, we conclude that Plaintiffs' equal-protection claim fails.

E. Substantive-Due-Process Claim

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that the MDHHS Orders violate their substantive-due-process rights. "Where a particular Amendment 'provides an explicit textual source of constitutional protection' against a particular sort of government behavior, 'that Amendment, not the more generalized notion of "substantive due process," must be the guide for analyzing these claims.'" Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 273 (1994) (quoting Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395 (1989)); see also Kiser v. Kamdar, 831 F.3d 784, 791 (6th Cir. 2016) (declining to consider the plaintiff's substantive-due-process challenge because it was really a commercial-speech case).

Plaintiffs' challenge to the MDHHS Orders lies in the First Amendment's Free Exercise Clause, and thus, their substantive-due-process claim is duplicative. The district court admittedly did not explicitly address the merits of Plaintiffs substantive-due-process claim. We nonetheless conclude that Plaintiffs' substantive-due-process claim is without merit.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we hold that Plaintiffs' challenge to the mask requirement for children in grades K–5 in all schools in Michigan is not moot. We AFFIRM the district court's denial of Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CONCURRING IN PART AND DISSENTING IN PART

SILER, Circuit Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part. I concur with the majority's conclusions on mootness, in part A of the opinion. However, I dissent on the merits on the primary issue, that is, whether the district court correctly denied the petition for the granting of a preliminary injunction.

I do not quarrel with the fact that the district court had the authority to deny the motion for preliminary injunction under the facts of this case, but it did not have the benefit of the more recent case Tandon v. Newsom, 141 S. Ct. 1294 (2021). It also did not have the benefit of the decision in Monclova Christian Academy v. Toledo-Lucas County Health Department, 984 F.3d 477 (6th Cir. 2020), which was handed down later in the same month that the district court made its ruling. Monclova held that in cases such as this, the court should look at all comparators, not just the public schools. Id. at 480. The district court here compared the restrictions in this matter with those followed in Commonwealth v. Beshear, 981 F.3d 505 (6th Cir. 2020). Yet Monclova is more consistent with Tandon than Beshear. The court did not consider other comparable secular activities beyond the public schools. I feel it is a mistake for this court to uphold the denial of the preliminary injunction on the interpretation from Tandon without giving the district court an opportunity to consider it in light of all the evidence before it. Therefore, I would remand to the district court to review the case in light of the decision in Tandon.

Civil case - School Desegregation. Four Arkansas school district sought modification of decades-old desegregation orders so that they could be exempt from newly passed amendments to the Arkansas school choice law. The district court granted the motions and modified the desegregation orders to explicitly limit the transfer of students between school districts; the State appealed the modifications, and this court affirmed; the State sought rehearing and the U.S., participating in the case for the first time, asked the court to reconsider the matter; additional briefing was then permitted. Held: The district court erred in finding that the repeal of Arkansas's 1989 school choice act and the subsequent adoption of the 2017 amendments to a 2015 act significantly changed Arkansas law in a manner allowing for modification of the consent decrees; because no vestige of discrimination traces back to interdistrict school transfers, the district court abused its discretion in expanding the consent decrees to prohibit such transfers. For the court's prior opinion vacating defendant's conviction on one of two counts alleging using and carrying a firearm during a crime of violence, vacating his entire sentence and remanding the matter for resentencing on the remaining counts under the sentencing package doctrine, see U.S. v. McArthur, 850 F.3d 925 (8th Cir. 2017); on remand, a new sentence was imposed and McArthur again appealed, with this court concluding that 18 U.S.C. Sec. 924(c)(3)(B)'s residual clause was unconstitutionally vague and that his conviction for carrying and using a firearm in relation to a drug trafficking crime must be vacated; the matter was again remanded for resentencing under the sentencing package doctrine, See U.S. v. McArthur, 784 F. App'x 459 (8th Cir. 2019). Following resentencing, McArthur appeals the application of certain sentencing enhancements. Held: (1) the district court did not err in making its drug quantity calculation; (2) the court did not clearly err in applying an enhancement under Guideline Sec. 2D1.1(b)(12) for maintaining a stash house; and (3) the court did not clearly err in imposing an enhancement under Guidelines Sec. 2D1.1(b)(14)(E) for committing the offenses as part of pattern of criminal conduct engaged in as a livelihood.

Jurisdictional Statement

This is an appeal from the final order and judgment of the Circuit Court of Cole County entered on April 20, 2020. Following this Court's order allowing Appellants to file a Notice of Appeal by Special Order pursuant to Rule 81.07(a), the Notice of Appeal was filed on September 23, 2020.

This case does not involve any issues within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Missouri. Pursuant to Missouri Constitution, article 5, section 3, the Court of Appeals has jurisdiction over this appeal. The judgment from which the appeal is taken was entered within the territorial jurisdiction of the Western District of the Court of Appeals. § 474.050.

Statement of Facts and Procedural Background

On June 8, 2017, Appellants, Missouri State Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the League of Women Voters of Missouri, filed a Petition seeking injunctive and declaratory relief with respect to Missouri Revised Statute § 115.427. That statute, which went into effect on June 1, 2017, drastically reduced voters' options for identifying themselves in order to vote in person. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., 17AC-CC00309 (19th Jud. Cir. Ct.).[1] On December 6, 2017, the trial court granted Respondents' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings and dismissed Appellants' Petition for failure to state a claim. Id.

After this Court reversed that decision, the case was reinstated in November 2018 and proceeded at the trial court in case number 17AC-CC00309-01. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., WD81484; D83-84. On June 18, 2019, Appellants filed their Third Amended Petition. D98-106. After trial on the merits, the trial court dismissed the Third Amended Petition for lack of standing, mootness, and/or ripeness. The trial court did not address the merits of Plaintiffs' claims, but nonetheless dismissed the Petition with prejudice. That jurisdictional, or justiciability, dismissal with prejudice was error and is the issue in this appeal.

In Count I of the Third Amended Petition, Appellants asserted that § 115.427.1 cannot be enforced under § 115.427.6(3) because insufficient state funds were appropriated from the general revenue to properly implement § 115.427.1. D98 pp. 19-23. In Count II, Appellants asserted that the requirement in § 115.427.5 was violated by the failure to provide the public accurate and non-misleading "Advance Notice" about the law restricting the options for identifying oneself at the polls. D98 pp. 24-26.

The court held a bench trial from August 19 - 23, 2019. Thereafter, on April 20, 2020, the circuit court entered its final judgment, dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing and mootness, and dismissing Count II with prejudice as moot and not ripe in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo. banc 2020). D165.

On May 19, 2020, Appellants moved the court to amend its judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice. D166. The trial court did not rule on this post-trial motion. Appellants then filed a notice of appeal on August 26, 2020. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., WD83987. However, the parties then disputed whether the post-trial motion was authorized, which would have delayed the date upon which the judgment became final for appeal. Appellants then filed a motion to file a notice of appeal by special order, which was sustained. Appellants' Notice of Appeal was filed on September 23, 2020.

Argument

This appeal presents a discrete question of law: when a circuit court finds that it lacks subject-matter jurisdiction in a case because of a lack of standing, mootness, or ripeness, should it dismiss with or without prejudice? The answer is clear: when a circuit court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to resolve a dispute's underlying merits, it should dismiss claims without prejudice. See Charron v. State, 257 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) ("[T]he trial court erred in dismissing Appellant's petition with prejudice because the dismissal was for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Pursuant to our authority under Rule 84.14, we modify the judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice."); Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits."); Am. Indus. Res., Inc. v. T.S.E. Supply Co., 708 S.W.2d 806, 808–09 (Mo. App. E.D. 1986) ("Inasmuch as the trial court did not have jurisdiction … the dismissal is without prejudice to any further action appellant may wish to take"); see also Asberry v. Bannes-Shaughnessy, 734 S.W.2d 250, 252 (Mo. App. E.D. 1987) (explaining that the burden of proof on a motion for lack of subject matter jurisdiction "is lower since it is not a decision on the merits, the dismissal is without prejudice and because any action taken by a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction is void").

Whether a trial court dismisses a claim with or without prejudice is significant. "[D]ismissal with prejudice bars the assertion of the same cause of action or claim against the same party." Rule 67.01. Accord Empire Dist. Elec. Co. v. Coverdell, 588 S.W.3d

225, 237 (Mo. App. S.D. 2019). On the other hand, "[d]ismissal without prejudice is usually not an adjudication on the merits of the claim and does not affect the plaintiff's right to refile the action." Sexton v. Jenkins & Assocs., 152 S.W.3d 270, 273 (Mo. banc 2004). In certain circumstances, not applicable here, Appellants acknowledge that "a dismissal without prejudice may be considered a judgment on the merits of issues, such as jurisdiction, that are actually litigated and decided." Id. In this appeal, Appellants do not challenge the trial court's factual findings. Instead, Appellants assert only that the trial court erred in dismissing their claims with prejudice, thus preventing any chance they may have to vindicate their rights if they gain standing, the case is no longer moot, and the issues become ripe for adjudication.

The Missouri Constitution confers jurisdiction upon the circuit courts over "cases and matters." Mo. Const. art. V, sec. 14(a). "Article V of the Missouri Constitution governs subject-matter jurisdiction, which is the court's authority to render a judgment in a particular category of case." Peachtree Apartments v. Pallo, 317 S.W.3d 189, 192 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010); see also Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) ("Subject-matter jurisdiction concerns 'the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought 'and exists only when the court 'has the right to proceed to determine the controversy or question in issue between the parties, or grant the relief prayed.'" (citations omitted)). The Missouri Constitution "requires a case to be justiciable in order for the circuit court to have subject-matter jurisdiction over it." Id.; see also B.S. v. State, 966 S.W.2d 343, 344 (Mo. App. E.D. 1998).

Appellants do not dispute that a trial court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to decide the merits of a case where: (1) the plaintiff lacks standing; (2) the case is moot and no exception applies; or (3) the case is not ripe. But where the circuit court dismisses a case on one or more of these jurisdictional issues, it ought to do so without prejudice because any decision on the merits is inappropriate.

Point I

The circuit court erred in dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for lack of standing should be dismissed without prejudice, in that standing is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

While this Court "give[s] deference to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). Here, the issue on appeal is purely a question of law. Appellants do not dispute the underlying facts. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 22 (noting that, "[g]enerally, the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion[; h]owever, where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo"). The review here is straightforward because Appellants do not dispute the trial court's finding that they lack standing, only the court's act of dismissing the claims with prejudice based on that finding.

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve the issue, Appellants tried to resolve it with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion to amend the judgment to reflect dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v. Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

This Court has routinely found that a dismissal for lack of standing is a dismissal for want of subject matter jurisdiction. See, e.g., Chastain v. Geary, 539 S.W.3d 841, 848 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017) ("[T]he court does not have subject matter jurisdiction to decide substantive issues if the party lacks standing."); Doss v. Brown, 419 S.W.3d 784, 787 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012) ("A trial court does not have subject matter jurisdiction if a petitioner lacks standing to bring the action."); Querry v. State Highway & Transp. Comm'n, 60 S.W.3d 630, 637 (Mo. App. W.D. 2001) (same).

"Subject-matter jurisdiction concerns the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought and exists only when the court has the right to proceed to determine the controversy or question in issue between the parties, or grant the relief prayed." Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 21 (internal quotation omitted). "A dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits." § 510.150. Here, there should have been no adjudication on the merits where dismissal was for a lack of standing because "[w]hether considered a claim for lack of subject matter jurisdiction or lack of authority, a court, in disposing of a case for lack of standing, cannot reach the merits."[2]

[2] In Borges, this Court noted that "[i]t remains an open question whether a lack of standing implicates the court's jurisdiction or merely the court's authority, but we need not decide this issue given that this case should have been dismissed under either theory." 358 S.W.3d at 183. Like Borges, that issue need not be decided here; the solution in the present case is simply to dismiss the claim without prejudice because the Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012); see also W. Cas. & Surety Co. v. Kansas City Bank & Trust Co., 743 S.W.2d 578, 580 (Mo. App. W.D. 1988) ("If [appellant] lacked standing, then its petition was subject to dismissal because it failed to establish the requisite subject matter jurisdiction. It must also follow that the trial court, lacking subject matter jurisdiction, could not enter a judgment on the merits for the [respondent].").

"Because standing is jurisdictional in nature, a dismissal for lack of standing is not 'on the merits' for res judicata purposes." Healthcare Servs. of the Ozarks, Inc. v. Copeland, 198 S.W.3d 604, 612 (Mo. banc 2006). Consequently, a dismissal for lack of standing should be without prejudice. See, e.g., Borges, 358 S.W.3d at 183-84 ("[O]nce it determined that [Plaintiffs] lacked standing, the trial court was without authority to reach any substantive claim, and, thus, dismissal should have been entered . . . . Therefore, we affirm the circuit court's finding that [Plaintiffs] lacked standing and enter the order the circuit court should have entered, dismissing without prejudice [Plaintiffs'] petition."); Eaton v. Doe, 563 S.W.3d 745, 750 (Mo. App. E.D. 2018) ("[B]ecause we have concluded the dismissal is due to a lack of standing, we modify the dismissal to be without prejudice, rather than with prejudice . . . . We affirm the judgment of the trial court as modified.").[3] trial court could not reach the merits if its dismissal was because Appellants lacked standing.

[3] The limited exception in which the Missouri Supreme Court has affirmed a dismissal for lack of standing with prejudice is distinguishable. See Mo. Coal. for Env't v.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

State, 579 S.W.3d 924, 928 (Mo. banc 2019) (affirming dismissal with prejudice for lack of standing where plaintiffs conceded lack of taxpayer standing and where the Court held standing was not created by a statute). Plaintiffs' standing in that case could not be cured because it was foreclosed as a matter of law. There is no such lack of standing here. Appellants' lack of associational standing under the circuit court's order would be cured if individual Plaintiff members are denied their right to vote upon presenting themselves at the polls without a photo ID. D165 p. 2 ("The potential injured party would have to first, timely present himself to the polls and second, be eligible to vote. One cannot claim to be injured by a photo ID requirement unless they [are] otherwise eligible to vote, actually try to vote…but [are] not allowed to vote for a lack of a photo ID."). *See W. [4] Appellants also acknowledge other cases include an unchallenged dismissal with prejudice on the basis of standing. Those cases, however, do not provide guidance because the issue of the denial being with (as opposed to without) prejudice was not raised or discussed. See Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 124 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018); Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017); *Mo. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Point II

The circuit court erred in dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice based on mootness because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for mootness should be dismissed without prejudice, in that mootness is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

As noted supra, although the Court defers "to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). "A circuit court does not have subject-matter jurisdiction under [a]rticle V, section 14(a) to adjudicate a case that is not justiciable because it has become moot." Peachtree Apartments v. Pallo, 317 S.W.3d 189, 192 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010). The issue before this Court is purely a question of law and thus subject to de novo review. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 22 (noting that, "[g]enerally, the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion[; h]owever, where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo").

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve this issue for appeal, Appellants did attempt to resolve this issue with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion seeking to have the judgment amended to reflect a dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

A dismissal for mootness is a dismissal for want of subject-matter jurisdiction and as such should be without prejudice. See, e.g., Rosenfeld v. Thoele, 28 S.W.3d 446, 451 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000) ("Moot cases should generally be dismissed, as the circuit court lacks subject matter jurisdiction."); B.S. v. State, 966 S.W.2d 343, 344-45 (Mo. App. E.D. 1998) ("Because plaintiffs 'cause of action was moot, it was not justiciable and the trial court did not have subject matter jurisdiction over it."); see also Jackson Cty. Bd. of Election Comm'rs ex rel. Brown v. City of Lee's Summit, 277 S.W.3d 740, 744 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) (raising mootness sua sponte after explaining that "[p]arties cannot . . . confer subject matter jurisdiction upon a court"). When courts lack subject matter jurisdiction to resolve the merits of a dispute, the claims should be dismissed without prejudice. Compare § 510.150 ("A dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits."), with Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits."); Charron v. State, 257 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) ("[T]he trial court erred in dismissing Appellant's petition with prejudice because the dismissal was for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Pursuant to our authority under Rule 84.14, we modify the judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Accordingly, because the law is clear that dismissal for mootness cannot be on the merits and thus must be without prejudice, appellate courts routinely modify such judgments. See Friends of the San Luis, Inc. v. Archdiocese of St. Louis, 312 S.W.3d 476, 485 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010) ("We remand the cause to the circuit court with instructions to vacate its judgment and to dismiss [Plaintiffs'] petition without prejudice due to the mootness of the controversy"); Defenses, 35 Mo. Prac., Cont., Eq. & Stat. Actions Handbook § 24:9 ("Moot cases should be dismissed without prejudice.").

The trial court erred in dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice for mootness, and this Court should enter judgment dismissing Counts I and II without prejudice.

Point III

The circuit court erred in dismissing Count II with prejudice based on ripeness because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for ripeness should be dismissed without prejudice, in that ripeness is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

While this Court "give[s] deference to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). Here, the issue on appeal—whether a claim that is not ripe should be dismissed with or without prejudice—is purely a question of law and is subject to de novo review.

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve this issue for appeal, Appellants did attempt to resolve this issue with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion seeking to have the judgment amended to reflect a dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v. Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

Ripeness implicates the justiciability of a claim and therefore any dismissal should not reach the merits of the case. As noted, however, "[a] dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits." § 510.150. Because the trial court cannot reach the merits if it determines a claim is not ripe for adjudication, dismissals on ripeness grounds have been modified by appellate courts, including the Missouri Supreme Court, to dismissals without prejudice. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 29 ("[B]ecause the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, and because the controversy is not ripe for review, the judgment of dismissal is modified to one without prejudice."); Schweich v. Nixon, 408 S.W.3d 769, 779 (Mo. banc 2013) ("While the lack of standing and ripeness does not implicate the merits of the Auditor's claims as to his own appropriation, it does preclude relief in this action. Accordingly, pursuant to Rule 84.14, this Court will issue the ruling that the trial court should have entered. The Auditor's claims are dismissed without prejudice."); see also Schultz v. Warren Cty., 249 S.W.3d 898, 902 (Mo. App. E.D. 2008) ("[B]ecause the controversy was not ripe for judicial review, the circuit court's judgment is one without prejudice . . . . The circuit court's judgment of dismissal is hereby modified to explicitly state that the dismissal is due to lack of ripeness and is one without prejudice.").

In addition, modifying the trial court's judgment to dismissal without prejudice on Count II is particularly warranted in this case as a prudential matter. The court made clear that Appellants 'request for mandatory injunctive relief could be cured and would become ripe if the Secretary of State failed to provide adequate advance notice to the public under the terms of the Priorities USA injunction:

> The Court finds that the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required, given the findings made and instructions given to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA. The Secretary of State is still obligated to provide advance notice in a manner calculated to generally inform the public. The original manner in which he tried to fulfill that obligation was found to be > deficient. The question of whether or not the Secretary's subsequent information campaigns avoid this deficiency is not yet ripe.

D165 pp. 5-6.

Should the Secretary of State fail to provide sufficient required advance notice, including by making inaccurate statements regarding the narrowing of identification options for voters in Missouri, Appellants should not be barred from seeking the appropriate mandatory injunctive relief in the future. Brinson v. Whittico, M.D., 793 S.W.2d 632, 634 (Mo. App. E.D. 1990) ("The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. Because the trial court deemed the lawsuit premature, it may either dismiss the lawsuit without prejudice or may allow the lawsuit to pend until ripe for adjudication.").

Thus, the circuit court erred in dismissing Count II with prejudice based on ripeness, and this Court should enter judgment dismissing Count II without prejudice.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Conclusion

Because Appellants' claims were dismissed based on jurisdictional grounds of standing and mootness and justiciability grounds of ripeness, the trial court should have dismissed the claims without prejudice. Appellants request that this Court, pursuant to its authority under Rule 84.14, dispose finally of the case by entering the judgment the trial court should have entered and dismiss Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition without prejudice.

INTRODUCTION

The circuit court correctly issued a final judgment ruling that Plaintiffs lack standing to bring an insufficient-appropriations claim under Missouri's voter-identification law, that all of their claims are moot in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448, 461 (Mo. banc 2020), and that their statutory claims about insufficient advance notice of Missouri's voter identification requirements are not ripe. On appeal, Plaintiffs do not argue the merits of any of those determinations. Rather, they contend only that the trial court erred in dismissing their claims with prejudice. For three principal reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's with-prejudice dismissals and thereby reinforce the prevailing rule that trial courts have discretion to dismiss claims with or without prejudice based on the circumstances present in a case.

First, Plaintiffs apply the wrong standard of review of a trial court's decision to dismiss cases with or without prejudice; this Court should review for abuse of discretion and not exercise de novo review. See Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193, 198 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992) ("This court will not disturb the trial court's dismissal with prejudice absent a finding of a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court."); cf. Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) (de novo review of the merits of the dismissal may be appropriate where "the facts are uncontested.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, under the correct standard of review, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing. The trial court issued its judgment after a weeklong trial on Plaintiffs' third amended petition, the judgment references evidence elicited at trial, and the parties contested the facts of Plaintiffs' standing to bring the case. It would be futile, and it would prejudice Respondents, to transform the trial court's judgment into a mere dismissal without prejudice and allow Plaintiffs to bring the same suit again.

Third, the trial court correctly dismissed, with prejudice, Counts I and II as moot and Count II as unripe because there is no realistic probability that Plaintiffs can cure those problems in light of the Supreme Court's permanent injunctions in Priorities USA. Plaintiffs have not appealed the merits of the mootness question, and thus they have conceded that issue. It would be futile to allow them to bring their suit again, and nothing in Missouri law mandates that dismissals for mootness be without prejudice. The trial court also correctly dismissed Count II as unripe. Count II is purely a statutory claim where all the relief requested was provided in the Priorities USA injunctions based on the facts Plaintiffs pleaded, and Plaintiffs have not identified subsequent Voter ID advertising that violates those injunctions.

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's judgment dismissing Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition with prejudice.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Backed by a constitutional amendment ("Voter ID Amendment") approved by popular vote, in 2016 the State adopted its current voter identification statute that allows for voting with both photo and non-photo forms of identification. § 115.427, RSMo (the "Voter ID Law"). After a constitutional challenge to certain aspects of the Voter ID Law's requirements, the Missouri Supreme Court largely upheld the statute last year in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo. banc 2020). But the Court affirmed a trial court's declaration that the statute's affidavit requirement for some non-photo forms of identification was unconstitutional. And it upheld the lower court's injunctions against disseminating certain advertising materials about the Voter ID Law, including "materials with the graphic that voters will be asked to show a photo identification card without specifying other forms of identification which voters may also show," Id. at 460–61, and "materials which represent that a photo identification card is required to vote," (D165, p.5).

A. The Third Amended Petition's claims and early procedural history.

Plaintiffs in this case are two organizations and one individual Missouri voter. They filed the original Petition in June 2017, and the case has previously been before this Court in an earlier stage of litigation. See State Conference of Nat'l Ass'n for Advancement of Colored People v. State, 563 S.W.3d 138 (Mo.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

App. W.D. 2018) (hereinafter "NAACP I"). After this Court remanded the case to the circuit court for further proceedings, Plaintiffs filed their Third Amended Petition after a lower court's ruling in Priorities USA but before the Supreme Court's opinion. (D98).

In Count I, Plaintiffs brought a statutory claim seeking declaratory and injunctive relief that the personal identification requirements in the Voter ID Law may not be enforced due to insufficient legislative appropriations in fiscal years 2017 to 2019. (D98, p.23). In Count II, they sought various prohibitory and mandatory injunctions against advertising materials under § 115.427.5 of the Voter ID Law. (D98, pp.24–26). Specifically, in Count II Plaintiffs asked the trial court to:

> A. Issue an injunction barring the Secretary of State from telling the public that there is a photo ID requirement and/or from instructing poll workers to ask for photo IDs when voters come to the polls;
> B. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to provide public notice that there is no photo ID required for voting in Missouri;
>
> C. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to provide correct information to the public about the non-photo options;
>
> D. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to take down misleading advertisements that are still being used or made available to the public;
>
> E. Allow such other and further relief as is proper under the circumstances.

(D98, p.26).

The trial court presided over a weeklong trial in August 2019, where the court heard the testimony of several witnesses and admitted into evidence the parties' joint stipulated facts and exhibits. (D120–121). The parties did not stipulate to Plaintiffs' standing to bring the case. (Id.; D117). Respondents denied the Third Amended Petition's allegations that Plaintiffs have standing (D117, ¶¶14–18), raised lack of standing as an affirmative defense (id. at p. 7), and argued in their post-trial brief that Plaintiffs lack standing based on the evidence.

B. The parties brief the effect of the Priorities USA decision.

On January 14, 2020, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Priorities USA. The next day, the trial court asked the parties to submit memoranda concerning the effect of Priorities USA on this case. (D159). For Plaintiffs' appropriations claim in Count I, Respondents argued that it was moot because the Priorities USA decision already provided the only relief sought by Plaintiffs: a declaration and injunction that the Voter ID Law's identification requirements cannot be enforced. (D162, p.3). As to Plaintiffs' statutory claims in Count II regarding insufficient advance notice of the Voter ID Law's personal identification requirements, Respondents argued that Priorities USA also mooted these claims. Priorities USA upheld permanent injunctions against those very requirements, "any proposed negative relief was already granted," and "[n]either [§ 115.427.5] nor the order require additional notice campaigns or any of the other remedies Plaintiffs propose." (D162, p.4-6).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Plaintiffs responded to Respondents' Priorities USA arguments, contending that Count I is not moot because their relief requested—an order "directing that voters cannot be asked to show a Photo ID at the polls"—is not encompassed by Priorities USA. (D160 at p.3). For Count II, Plaintiffs agreed that "the Priorities USA remedial order prevents further dissemination of such misleading information," but they contended that it "does not affirmatively correct the existing misimpression." (D160, p.2). They asserted that the Voter ID Law's "obligation to provide advance notice necessarily requires the provision of accurate and non-misleading information." (Id.). In other words, Plaintiffs disagreed that Priorities USA precluded their claims in this case for a mandatory injunction to promote corrective advertisements.

C. The trial court's final judgment and post-judgment developments.

On April 20, 2020, the trial court issued a final judgment holding that Plaintiffs lacked standing to bring their claims in Count I, that Count I is moot under Priorities USA, and that Count II is both moot and not ripe under Priorities USA. (D165).

As to Count I, the trial court discussed what evidence a plaintiff must show to demonstrate injury under the photo ID requirement: "the potential injured party would have to first, timely present himself to the polls and second, be eligible to vote." (Id. at p.2). In a footnote, the court highlighted evidence actually introduced at trial regarding the ability of voters to vote with non-photo forms of identification. (Id. at n.5). The court held that the two organization plaintiffs lack associational standing and organizational standing, and it further held that taxpayer standing is not a theory on which the individual plaintiff here, Christine Dragonette, can base a claim for insufficient appropriations. (Id. at p.3). The court alternatively found that the injunctions upheld in Priorities USA render Count I moot, because the case held that the photo identification requirement "may not be enforced." (Id.).

As to Count II, the trial court compared the injunctions upheld in Priorities USA with the relief requested in this case. (Id. at p.4–6). The court held that "the prohibitory injunctions of Priorities USA [are] essentially the same as prayed for in this case[.]" (Id. at p.5). Referring to Plaintiffs' request for an injunction that the Secretary of State affirmatively issue correct advertisements, the court reasoned that "the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required given the findings made and instructions provided to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA." (Id.). The court also held that Count II is not ripe to the extent it is based on advertisements not yet promoted. (Id. at p.6).

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - April 05, 2021 - 04:43 PM

On May 19, 2020, Plaintiffs filed a motion to modify the judgment to transform the dismissals with prejudice to dismissals without prejudice. (D166). The trial court did not rule on that motion, and Plaintiffs eventually appealed the trial court's judgment under special order by the Court permitting a late notice of appeal. (D167, D168).

ARGUMENT

I. The circuit court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment after trial that dismissed with prejudice Plaintiffs' claims in Count I for lack of standing. (Responding to Point Relied On I).

A. This Court should review the trial court's dismissal with prejudice for abuse of discretion.

The correct standard of review is one for abuse of discretion, and not de novo review as Plaintiffs contend. Generally, an appellate court "will not disturb the trial court's dismissal with prejudice absent a finding of a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court." Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193, 198 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992) (citing Smith v. City of De Soto, 634 S.W.2d 204, 205 (Mo. App. 1982)). Application of this standard is universal in every district of the Court of Appeals. See id.; Peet v. Randolph, 103 S.W.3d 872, 876 (Mo. App. E.D. 2003) (reviewing for abuse of discretion trial court's with-prejudice dismissal of a case based on plaintiff's failure to prosecute); Saidawi v. Giovanni's Little Place, Inc., 987 S.W.2d 501, 505 (Mo. App. E.D. 1999) (holding "[t]here is no absolute right to amend a petition" and finding no abuse of discretion of the lower court's with-prejudice dismissal based on failure to state a claim); Allen v. City of Greenville, MO, 336 S.W.3d 508, n.3 (Mo. App. S.D. 2011) (noting the court would have applied abuse of discretion review to the lower court's prejudice determination if the appellant had raised it on appeal).

An exception to that rule may apply when the question on appeal is whether the dismissal itself was proper and "the facts are uncontested." Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) (applying de novo review to the merits of the dismissal decision). But this case does not fall within any known exception to the general rule for several reasons, and Plaintiffs misapply the holding in Mo. Soybean Ass'n.

First, Plaintiffs have not appealed the trial court's decision on standing—they appeal only the dismissal being with prejudice. The trial court issued a final judgment after the trial, and the issue of Plaintiffs' standing was a preserved issue for trial. (See D117, Respondents' Answer and Affirmative Defenses, pp.15-16). The trial court did not rule on a motion to dismiss where the court would have assumed Plaintiffs' "averments in their petition are true." Cmty. Care Ctr. of Lemay v. Missouri Health Facilities Review Comm., 92 S.W.3d 232, 234 (Mo. App. W.D. 2002) (reviewing de novo the merits of a lower court's grant of a motion to dismiss for lack of standing); *cf. Mo. 102 S.W.3d at 21 (procedural history indicates the case was decided after a trial or hearing on a combined motion to dismiss and for summary judgment).[1]

Unlike a motion to dismiss, where the facts are uncontested, or a summary judgment motion, where there can be no disputed material facts, Respondents contested Plaintiffs' lack of standing. The issue here is not "purely a question of law" as in Mo. Soybean Ass'n. Respondents denied the Third Amended Petition's allegations that Plaintiffs have standing, and Respondents raised lack of standing as an affirmative defense. (D117). Respondents also raised the issue in their post-trial brief, highlighting the lack of evidence Plaintiffs submitted at trial to support their standing. And in its final judgment the trial court referenced evidence introduced at trial as to Plaintiffs' standing. (D165, n.5).

Second, Missouri Supreme Court Rule 67.03 also supports giving the trial court discretion to issue a judgment with prejudice, stating that "Any involuntary dismissal shall be without prejudice unless the court in its order for dismissal shall otherwise specify." Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 67.03 (emphasis added).

[1] In addition to Mo. Soybean Ass'n, other cases cited by Plaintiffs in their brief also considered dismissals without prejudice upon a motion to dismiss. E.g., Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004). Furthermore, other cases rested on the specific language of a previous version of Rule 67.03 or did not state a standard of review at all. E.g., Am. Indus. Res., Inc. v. T.S.E. Supply Co., 708 S.W.2d 806, 808–09 (Mo. App. E.D. 1986).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The plain language of the Rule contemplates a court's discretion to specify the prejudicial effect of its dismissal.

Finally, review for abuse of discretion makes sense because it is the standard that governs review of denials of leave to amend a petition. Gohlston v. Lightfoot, 825 S.W.2d 864, 869 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992). In those situations, "the denial of amendment is presumed correct and the burden is on the proponent to show an abuse of discretion." Id. Dismissals with prejudice are analogous to denials of leave to amend a petition because both effectively prohibit a party to re-plead claims in a future action. There is no principled distinction between these two conceptually similar determinations for purposes of applying a standard of review.

For all these reasons, this Court should apply the abuse of discretion standard and confirm that Plaintiffs carry the burden to show that the trial court abused its discretion in dismissing each count of the Third Amended Petition with prejudice.

B. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I due to Plaintiffs' lack of standing.

The argument section of Plaintiffs' first point on appeal is virtually devoid of legal argument, instead consisting almost exclusively of parenthetical quotations from case law. Because they apply the wrong standard of review, Plaintiffs do not argue how the trial court abused its discretion for issuing a final judgment holding that they lack standing.

Under the abuse of discretion standard, "[d]iscretion means the option that the trial judge has in doing or not doing that which a litigant does not have the absolute right to demand." Jennings v. City of Kansas City, 812 S.W.2d 724, 735 (Mo. App. W.D. 1991). "Abuse of that discretion means an untenable judicial act that defies reason and works an injustice. . . . [or] [w]hen the trial court's ruling clearly offends the logic of the circumstances or when it becomes arbitrary and unreasonable." Id. Under the appropriate standard, the trial court soundly exercised its discretion.

First, because the circuit court held a trial where evidence was presented on Plaintiffs' lack of standing, it was proper for the court to decide the standing question on the merits and issue a final judgment. The trial court's decision was properly denominated a "judgment" and it became final 30 days after it was issued. Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 81.05(a)(1). Nothing about issuing a final judgment after trial is arbitrary and unreasonable, or is an injustice against Plaintiffs. During the multiple years of litigation in this case, including a trip to this Court in NAACP I, Plaintiffs amended their original Petition three times and had ample opportunity to develop a case with a party possessing standing.[2]

[2] Plaintiffs do not raise on appeal the merits of the trial court's judgment on standing, mootness, or ripeness. The decision below was a final judgment, the Second, amending the trial court's final judgment to simply a dismissal order without prejudice would undermine the work of the parties and the courts in multi-year litigation, which reached a trial on the merits and resulted in a final judgment.[3] It would reward Plaintiffs the benefit of liberal re-pleading rules that accompany a dismissal without prejudice by allowing them to re-plead the same cause of action while remaining plaintiffs to that case. And it would effectively announce a rule that no Missouri case supports—that courts must always dismiss a case without prejudice due to lack of standing, even if denominated as final judgment after a contested trial. This would destabilize a customary practice in Missouri's appellate courts of affirming dismissals with prejudice, and it is not necessary in this case. See, e.g., Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 124 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018); Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017); Mo. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Oneok, Inc., 318 S.W.3d 134, 139 (Mo. App. W.D. 2009).

finality of which was addressed in Respondents' opposition to Plaintiffs' filing of a late notice of appeal. The finality of the judgment was necessarily affirmed by this Court's special order allowing Plaintiffs to file a late notice of appeal. Plaintiffs have elected not to appeal the merits of the judgment, and so they have forfeited those claims on appeal. E.g., Eckel v. Eckel, 540 S.W.3d 476, n.17 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018) (an issue not presented in a point relied on is not preserved for review); see also Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 84.04(d).

[3] This Court's opinion in NAACP I, 563 S.W.3d at 142–47, thoroughly discusses the procedural history of this case and the claims Plaintiffs raised in their original, first amended, and second amended petitions.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Third, this Court should reject any argument Plaintiffs make that they can cure their pleading defects regarding standing and therefore a without-prejudice dismissal is appropriate. Plaintiffs do not squarely argue they can or will cure this defect. Instead they allude to it in a footnote in their brief as a possibility if the two organizational plaintiffs identify members who present themselves at the polls without a photo ID and suffer an injury from the Voting ID Law. (App. Br. at n.3). Plaintiffs amended their Petition three times and had over two years of litigation to find at least one member of their organizations who has standing to bring their claims. They failed to do so. But even if the organizational plaintiffs did find such an individual in their ranks, the theory of their case—and likely the factual allegations and evidence—would presumably be the same. The circuit court's judgment below is final and as such has the appropriate preclusive affect under the doctrines of collateral estoppel and res judicata. The extent of that

Lastly, the trial court held that Priorities USA mooted any of the pleaded claims for relief in Count I. Because Plaintiffs did not raise the merits of the mootness decision on appeal and the decision below is a final judgment, they have forfeited raising the same claims in the same form again. It would thus be futile for this Court to modify the trial court's judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice.

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's exercise of discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing.

II. The trial court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment that dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot or unripe. (Responding to Points Relied On II and III).

A. This Court should review the trial court's final judgment on mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion.

As with the trial court's final judgment disposing of Plaintiffs' claims in Count I with prejudice, this Court should review the trial court's with-prejudice dismissals as to mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion. Plaintiffs again cite the incorrect standard of review in light of the claims they actually raised on appeal. De novo review might be appropriate if Plaintiffs had contested the merits of the dismissals themselves, not merely whether the trial erred in dismissing Plaintiffs' claims with prejudice. De novo review was applied in Mo. Soybean Ass'n because the Court reviewed the substantive question of whether the trial court properly dismissed the underlying claim as unripe and for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction, not whether the trial court erred by doing so with or without prejudice. 102 S.W.3d at 22 ("a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo."). Plaintiffs here have not appealed the trial court's mootness or ripeness determinations. Thus, the general rule of reviewing for abuse of discretion applies. See Williams, 841 S.W.2d at 198.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

B. The trial court properly dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot because there is no realistic chance Plaintiffs can cure the mootness of their claims.

Plaintiffs have elected not to appeal the merits of the trial court's decision to dismiss Counts I and II as moot in light of Priorities USA. They have therefore forfeited that issue on appeal. Assuming, as this Court therefore must, that the trial court did properly dismiss Plaintiffs' claims as moot, the trial court appropriately exercised its discretion by dismissing them with prejudice.

The principal rationale for dismissing cases without prejudice is that it permits a party to bring another action for the same cause, if it is not otherwise barred. See Mahoney v. Doerhoff Surgical Servs., Inc., 807 S.W.2d 503, 506 (Mo. banc 1991). "Ordinarily, when an action is dismissed without prejudice, a plaintiff may cure the dismissal by filing another suit in the same court." Osuji v. Missouri Dept. of Social Services, Div. of Family Services, 34 S.W.3d 251, 253 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000). As other courts have held, "where the pleading's deficiencies 'cannot be cured by re-pleading, because [the claims fail] as a matter of law,' dismissal with prejudice may be appropriate." Timber Point Properties III, LLC v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2014 WL 7005195, at *1 (W.D. Mo. Dec. 10, 2014) (quoting Rickmyer v. Browne, 995 F.Supp.2d 989, 1019

(D.Minn.2014)); see also McLean v. United States, 566 F.3d 391, 400 (4th Cir. 2009) ("Courts, including this one, have held that when a complaint is incurable through amendment, dismissal is properly rendered with prejudice and without leave to amend.")); McKesson HBOC, Inc. v. New York State Common Ret. Fund, Inc., 339 F.3d 1087, 1096 (9th Cir. 2003) (dismissal with prejudice is appropriate where "deficiencies in [plaintiff's] claims cannot be cured by amendment").

There is no principled reason why a similar rule does not apply in Missouri for with-prejudice dismissals for mootness. Indeed, this same rationale inspires the analysis of a denial of leave to amend a petition, which is conceptually similar to dismissals with prejudice. See Gohlston, 825 S.W.2d at 869; Bratt v. Cohn, 969 S.W.2d 277, 284 (Mo. App. W.D. 1998) (denial of plaintiffs' motion to file second amended petition was not an abuse of discretion because it "did not cure the deficiencies of their first amended petition."). Nothing in Missouri law mandates dismissal without prejudice when the court's basis is mootness.

Plaintiffs have not argued on appeal how a subsequent lawsuit could cure the mootness problems found by the trial court in light of Priorities USA. And because Plaintiffs have not raised that argument, they have forfeited it. As in their first point on appeal, the argument section of their second point on appeal consists almost exclusively of parenthetical quotations from cases, not substantive legal argument. The Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA affirmed the lower court's permanent injunctions, which—as the trial court below properly found, and which is not contested by Plaintiffs on appeal—encompasses the very relief Plaintiffs sought in this case. (D165, p.5).

The cases Plaintiffs cite in their brief are inapposite. For example, in Friends of the San Luis, Inc. v. Archdiocese of St. Louis, 312 S.W.3d 476 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010), the trial court made no determination as to mootness; instead, mootness came after the trial court's ruling, and the trial court dismissed the case with prejudice for lack of standing. Id. at 477. The parties addressed the merits of the post-decision mootness question on appeal and the appellate court thus considered it on the merits. Id. at 483. The appellate court's decision discussed the various public-interest reasons why it vacated the lower court's standing decision and held the controversy should be dismissed without prejudice due to mootness, including because the respondent on appeal did not oppose that remedy. Id. at 485. None of those unique circumstances are present here, and Friends of the San Luis certainly does not announce a rule that circuit court dismissals due to mootness must always be without prejudice.

Deciding whether a case should be dismissed with or without prejudice is within the sound discretion of the court deciding the mootness question. Plaintiffs have failed to appeal the merits of the trial court's mootness decision. And they have altogether failed to argue in their brief how they might obtain relief in a future, re-pleaded cause of action based on appropriations for Voter ID Law advertising that is not encompassed by the permanent injunctive relief ordered in Priorities USA.

This Court should therefore affirm the trials court's decision dismissing as moot Counts I and II with prejudice.

C. The trial court properly dismissed Count II with prejudice as unripe.

The trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing Count II with prejudice as unripe. Though this Court can affirm the trial court's dismissal of Count II as moot and therefore avoid ruling on Appellants' third point on appeal, there are independent and sufficient grounds to affirm the trial court's dismissal with prejudice of Count II as unripe.

The Supreme Court in Priorities USA affirmed lower-court injunctions concerning the Secretary of State's advertising the Voter ID Law. As the trial court in this case held, "[t]he Secretary of State is still obligated to provide advance notice in a manner calculated to generally inform the public." (D165, p.5). No party has filed suit complaining of the Secretary's subsequent advertising efforts or compliance with the Priorities USA decision.

If a party has any good-faith allegations that the Secretary of State's Office has not complied with the permanent injunctions in Priorities USA, those allegations might support a claim for which a party can bring a new action. But Plaintiffs' claims in Count II rest on an entirely separate theory than that potential cause of action. In Count II, Plaintiffs alleged that expenditures on advertising resulted in incorrect and misleading advertising and that the Secretary of State's Office did not issue appropriate corrective advertising. (D98, pp.24–26). Count II is a strict statutory claim, resting solely on § 115.427.5 of the Voter ID Law. The Supreme Court in Priorities USA already analyzed claims for violations of that same statute similar to Plaintiffs' claims in Count II. Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 459–61.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As the trial court here found, the permanent injunctions in Priorities USA encompass essentially the same relief Plaintiffs sought on their advertising claims and "the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required, given the findings made and instructions given to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA." (D165, pp. 5–6). In mentioning mandatory injunctions, the trial court was necessarily referring to the relief sought by Plaintiffs in Count II to issue new, corrective advertising (D98, p.26). The trial court was correct in ruling that the Priorities USA decision forecloses any relief that Plaintiffs actually requested in Count II of the Third Amended Petition based § 115.427.5, and Plaintiffs do not challenge the correctness of that portion of the judgment below.

To the extent Plaintiffs bring a future cause of action based on similar facts due to advertising of the Voter ID Law, any such allegations likely cannot be premised § 115.425.7. Plaintiffs did not plead claims premised on the Priorities USA injunctions even though the trial court's decision in that case was issued prior to the Third Amended Petition's filing. To that end, even though the Third Amended Petition cites Priorities USA in Count II, it narrows the Count's focus to a "violation of the statute." (D98, p.26). Claims for relief requested in a future lawsuit based on the same facts alleged in the Third Amended Petition but premised on § 115.427.5 and not the Priorities USA permanent injunctions are not yet ripe, nor can they ever be ripe. Priorities USA forecloses the relief Plaintiffs requested based on the facts and theory of the case they pleaded. There exists a hypothetical claim based on Priorities USA's permanent injunctions that may eventually be ripe, but that is not the claim in Count II of the Third Amended Petition here.

For these reasons, it would be futile to allow Plaintiffs to re-plead the same cause of action under § 115.427.5, for the same relief, and based on future—but presently unripe—facts. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing with prejudice Count II as unripe.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, this Court should affirm the circuit court's decision.

Argument

I. De novo is the correct standard of review in this case, and Appellants do not misapply the holding in Missouri Soybean Association v. Missouri Clean Water Commission, 102 S.W.3d 10 (Mo banc. 2003).

The issue presented here is purely a question of law, the underlying facts are uncontested, and the correct standard of review in this case is de novo. See Appellants' Opening Br. at pp. 14–15, 18–19, 21.

The cases relied on by Respondents do not alter the conclusion that review of whether dismissal should have been with prejudice is de novo. In Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992), the case was dismissed with prejudice on a motion for judgment on the pleadings because the court found that the plaintiff failed to sufficiently plead claims alleging a violation of due process and conversion. Id. at 194–97.[1] In upholding the dismissal with prejudice as to the due process claim, this Court noted that "[w]hen a trial court concludes that pleadings do not state a cause of action, and when adequate opportunity to amend has been provided, it is not error for the trial court to dismiss with prejudice." Id. Williams does not support abuse-of-discretion review here. In this case, the dismissal was not based upon a finding that Appellants failed to state a claim, nor was the opportunity to amend provided but not utilized. Williams did not address a dismissal based on standing, mootness, or ripeness—the grounds for dismissal here. While Respondents note that the Williams court relied on

[1] The dismissal of the conversion claim was reversed and that claim was remanded to allow for further development of the facts so that the plaintiff could attempt to prove his claim against the City. Williams, 841 S.W.2d at 197; see also id. n.3.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Smith v. City of De Soto, 634 S.W.2d 204 (Mo. App. W.D. 1982), Smith too is a case where the court dismissed a case with prejudice for failure to state a claim—there because the plaintiff "cite[d] no authority to support his contention a municipal corporation may be held liable in quantum meruit." Id. at 204–05 (noting that the law states the contrary). Like in Williams, the plaintiff in Smith sought a dismissal without prejudice so that he could amend his petition. This Court affirmed the dismissal with prejudice noting that, in the context of that case, the defendant should not have to respond to additional amended petitions because as a legal matter it would be impossible to cure the legal defect that resulted in dismissal. Smith, 634 S.W.2d at 205.

In Peet v. Randolph, 103 S.W.3d 872, 874 (Mo. App. E.D. 2003), the plaintiff sought specific performance of a real estate contract. After a summary judgment ruling for defendants, followed by an appeal and remand, the case was then ultimately dismissed with prejudice for failure to prosecute. Id. There, the trial court believed that the plaintiff failed to reasonably explain his failure to take any action for nearly a year following the remand and noted that it was plaintiff's responsibility to file a motion. Id. In finding that the court abused its discretion, the Eastern District noted that, while dismissal for failure to prosecute is typically within the trial court's judicial discretion, because of the "lack of a local rule delineating the plaintiff's responsibilities on remand, the lack of any scheduling conference or schedule on remand, this Court's mandate that a trial be held, and the plaintiff's readiness to proceed to trial, the trial court clearly abused its discretion in dismissing this case." Id. at 876–78 (further noting that no dismissal was appropriate, with or without prejudice, reinstating the cause of action, and ordering that it be reassigned to a new trial judge). There, again, the dismissal was not based on standing, mootness, or ripeness. A case with such different facts is not authority to depart from de novo review on the question of law presented in this appeal.

Saidawi v. Giovanni's Little Place, Inc., 987 S.W.2d 501, 504–05 (Mo. App. E.D. 1999), also involves a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. In reversing the dismissal with prejudice of three counts but affirming the dismissal of a fourth count, the Eastern District found that plaintiff had failed to plead sufficient facts to allege the necessary elements of a prima facie tort and noted that "[t]here is no absolute right to amend a petition." Id. at 505. In Allen v. City of Greenville, 336 S.W.3d 508, 511 (Mo. App. S.D. 2003), the dismissal again followed from a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. The Southern District reviewed the underlying decision to dismiss de novo and, in a footnote citing Saidawi and Williams, stated that whether to dismiss with or without prejudice, while not raised as a point on appeal, would be within the discretion of the trial court. Id. at 512, 512 n.3. In many cases the decision might be within the court's discretion. In this case, however, the court lacked such discretion and the dismissal should be reviewed de novo.

Unlike the cases relied upon by Respondents, there is no dispute here as to whether Appellants' petition stated a claim or whether they prosecuted their case. This case concluded after a week-long trial that included multiple witnesses—including significant expert testimony—and extensive post-trial briefing. Although the trial court did dismiss this case with prejudice, it never reached the merits of Appellants' claims, nor could it have. The dismissal was based only on standing (Count I), mootness (Counts I and II), and ripeness (Count II). Each of these is a requirement for the circuit court's jurisdiction or authority to decide the case or justiciability, not the merits of the case itself.

"[T]he authority to render judgment in a particular case is … the definition of subject matter jurisdiction …." Webb v. Wyciskalla, 275 S.W.3d 249, 254 (Mo banc. 2003). This case is simply not like the cases relied on by Respondents. And while Missouri Soybean Association v. Missouri Clean Water Commission, 102 S.W.3d 10 (Mo banc. 2003), examined whether a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief claim could be brought at all, it is similar to the present case in that the facts were uncontested, it discussed the court's jurisdiction and authority to hear the case, and the issue on appeal was purely one of law. This Court should not depart from Missouri Soybean Association by holding that the abuse-of-discretion standard has universal application in all cases involving the review of a lower court's decision to dismiss a case with prejudice.

In Missouri Soybean Association, the lower court dismissed the case with prejudice for a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. Id. at 14. There, like here, the parties did not dispute the underlying facts of the case (concerning state inclusion of rivers on a list of impaired waters that is then submitted to the EPA and triggers specific programs designed to improve the water quality), so the appeal centered on whether the plaintiffs could even bring a declaratory judgment action seeking injunctive relief challenging the promulgation of the list as rulemaking. Id. at 14–23. Whether the circuit court had the authority to adjudicate the case was a question of subject-matter jurisdiction. More specifically, the issue was whether plaintiffs were properly challenging "the validity of a rule or the threatened application of such a rule" under § 536.050.1 such that the lower court would have the authority (i.e., subject-matter jurisdiction) to hear a declaratory judgment action. Id. at 22. If they were, then the court would have the power to render a declaratory judgment. If the promulgation of the list was not rulemaking, the court had no authority over the case—i.e., it lacked subject-matter jurisdiction.

While noting that, "[g]enerally the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion[,]" the court went on to find that "where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo." Id. at 22. Ultimately, the Missouri Supreme Court found that the promulgated list was not a rule and therefore "the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction pursuant to section 536.050.1 to render the sought-after declaratory judgment." Id. at 25–26 (noting further that because "the appellants could not even predict the effect such a declaratory judgment would have[,] … it would thus "not have a 'conclusive effect' or 'lay to rest the parties' controversy'" as is required by the general principles underlying declaratory judgment actions). Additionally, the supreme court noted that "the authority of the courts of this State to render declaratory judgments must be used and operate within the limits of the constitutional powers and duties of the courts" and, "[o]ne such limit is the traditional doctrine of ripeness, which, when applied in this case, also commands dismissal of the appellants' actions." Id. at 26. In closing, the supreme court concluded that, because the challenged list promulgated by the defendants "is not a rule and the inclusion of the Rivers not rulemaking, and because the controversy cannot be resolved by declaratory judgment and is not ripe for adjudication, the judgment of dismissal is affirmed. However, because the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, and because the controversy is not ripe for review, the judgment of dismissal is modified to one without prejudice." Id. at 29 (emphasis added) (citing Rule 84.14).

Therefore, while dismissals may be reviewed for an abuse of discretion in certain contexts, that standard of review is not appropriate in this particular case, just as it was not appropriate in Missouri Soybean Association. This Court is not being asked to determine whether the dismissal itself was appropriate under the circumstances; it is instead being asked to decide a pure question of law: should the dismissal have been with or without prejudice when that dismissal was based solely on standing, mootness, and ripeness—i.e., the jurisdiction or authority of a circuit court and the justiciability of the claims raised.

In any event, even if this Court were to review the dismissal with prejudice for an abuse of discretion, the circuit court erred. Under that standard, this Court must reverse the circuit court's ruling "'if it is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to shock the sense of justice and indicates a lack of careful consideration.'" State ex rel. Scherschel v. City of Kansas City, 470 S.W.3d 391, 397 (Mo. App. W.D. 2015) (quoting Burnett v. Kansas City Sch. Bd., 237 S.W.3d 237, 238–39 (Mo. App. W.D. 2007)); see also Peet, 103 S.W.3d at 876–77 ("Judicial discretion is abused when the trial court's ruling is clearly against the logic of the circumstances then before the court and is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to show a lack of careful consideration and shock the sense of justice.").

Moreover, "[a]n abuse of discretion occurs where the [trial] court rests its conclusion on clearly erroneous factual findings or erroneous legal conclusions." Minn. Citizens Concerned for Life, Inc. v. Swanson, 692 F.3d 864, 870 (8th Cir. 2012) (en banc); see also Sandusky Wellness Center, LLC v. Medtox Scientific, Inc., 821 F.3d 992, 995 (8th Cir. 2016) ("A district court abuses its discretion if, as relevant here, it commits an error of law."). In reviewing questions of law, this Court "reviews the trial court's determination independently, without deference to that court's conclusions." Pearson v. Koster, 367 S.W.3d 36, 43–44 (Mo. banc 2012) (quotation and citation omitted). As supported by the discussion, infra, not only was dismissing the claims with prejudice here unreasonable considering the bases for dismissal were a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and non-justiciability but dismissing with prejudice under these circumstances was an erroneous legal conclusion because the circuit court had no authority to reach the merits of the case.

Rule 67.03 is irrelevant to the issues in this appeal. Although the rule states that an involuntary dismissal is "without prejudice unless the court in its order for dismissal shall otherwise specify[,]" this does not authorize a court to reach the merits of a case when it otherwise lacks jurisdiction or authority to do so. A circuit court does not have the discretion to overstep in this manner. Additionally, a trial court's decision to deny a party's request to amend a petition—a ruling that would be properly reviewed for an abuse of discretion—is, once again, easily distinguishable from a case like this one, where a circuit court improperly reaches the merits of a case despite lacking jurisdiction or authority to do so based upon standing, ripeness, and mootness. And, as discussed, infra, standing could be achieved and the circumstances could change in such a way that the claims become ripe and no longer moot.

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - May 04, 2021 - 06:37 PM

To obtain judgment on the merits in any case, plaintiffs must have standing, the case must not be moot (or, if moot, it must meet an exception), and the case must be ripe. In other words, standing, mootness, and ripeness are prerequisites for a court to reach the merits of a case.[2] See, e.g., Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58,

[2] As this Court has noted, "[i]t remains an open question whether a lack of standing implicates the court's jurisdiction or merely the court's authority, but we need not decide this issue given that this case should have been dismissed under either theory." Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012) ("affirm[ing] the circuit court's finding that Borges and Johnson lacked standing and enter[ing] the order the circuit court should have entered, dismissing without prejudice Borges and Johnson's petition" pursuant to Rule 84.14). Presumably, in Borges, this Court was alluding to the recent discussion of jurisdiction versus authority in Webb v. Wyciskalla, 275 S.W.3d 249, 253 (Mo. banc 2009), where the Missouri Supreme Court noted that "[s]ubject-matter jurisdiction, in contrast to personal jurisdiction, is not a matter of a state court's power over a person, but the court's authority to render a judgment in a particular category of case." (noting that, unlike federal courts, the circuit courts in Missouri "have original jurisdiction over all cases and matters, civil and criminal"). "[T]he authority of a court to render judgment in a particular case is, in actuality, the definition of subject matter jurisdiction…." Id. at 254.

While the law surrounding jurisdiction versus authority continues to evolve in court decisions, the issue need not be reached here. Under either theory, dismissal for standing, mootness, or ripeness should be without prejudice.

In Borges, before recognizing that the issue may be one of authority and not jurisdiction, this Court recognized that "[i]n the past, we have found that if a party lacks standing sufficient to maintain an action, the court necessarily does not have jurisdiction over the claims presented." Id. (citing W. Cas. & Surety Co. v. Kansas City Bank & Trust Co., 743 S.W.2d 578, 580 (Mo. App. W.D.1988) ("If [appellant] lacked standing, then its petition was subject to dismissal because it failed to establish the requisite subject matter jurisdiction. It must also follow that the trial court, lacking subject matter jurisdiction, could not enter a judgment on the merits for the [respondent]."). "Therefore, a claim that a party lacks standing has generally been treated as a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Rule 55.27(a)(1)." Id. (citing State ex rel. Christian Health

63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits.").

II. Dismissal of Count I for lack of standing should be without prejudice because standing could be achieved and the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits.

The underlying facts in this case are uncontested. It makes no difference in this appeal that Appellants asserted that they had standing below and maintained that argument through the post-trial filings. In this appeal, Appellants have elected not to dispute the circuit court's ultimate finding that they lack standing to bring Count I. However, it remains true that, "once the circuit court determined that they lacked standing, it was without jurisdiction to reach the merits of their claims." Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012). A plaintiff without standing "presents no legally justiciable issue," and therefore, "the trial court should have dismissed the[] petition without prejudice." Id. at 184. Thus, while dismissal of a claim where a plaintiff lacks standing is appropriate, what is not appropriate is a dismissal with prejudice that, by definition, reaches the merits of the claim.

"A dismissal with prejudice constitutes an adjudication on the merits and 'bars the assertion of the same cause of action or claim against the same party.'" Doe v. Visionaire Corp., 13 S.W.3d 674, 676 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000) (quoting Rule 67.01). As such, courts do not have any "discretion" to reach the merits of a case where plaintiffs lack standing. Here, the circuit court erred in making a dismissal with prejudice. However, the circuit court did not abuse any discretion, because it had no discretion to abuse under the circumstances.

Amending the dismissal to one without prejudice would not undermine any aspect of this case. While Appellants agree that everyone worked very hard to litigate this case over the span of several years, including a week-long trial and two appeals to this Court, that is simply the nature of litigation. It is not always fast or easy. Moreover, here, standing is curable and could be achieved in the future. The court's determination that these particular plaintiffs did not have standing under the circumstances does not preclude Appellants from ever having standing in the future. This further distinguishes this case from one where a decision related to standing might be based upon undisputed facts but where those facts failed to state a claim at all.

Here, even the circuit court recognized that "[s]tanding is a jurisdictional matter antecedent to the right of relief." D165 p. 2. The circuit court found that, to have standing to challenge the insufficient funding of § 115.427 in a manner that would preclude enforcement, a person who is eligible to vote would have to timely appear at the polls, try to vote, and be turned away for lack of a proper photo identification. Id. If a member of the organizational plaintiffs suffered this harm, according to the circuit court's order, the organization would have associational standing. Additionally, Missouri courts could—and arguably should—begin to embrace organizational standing, just as federal courts have for decades. See Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363 (1982). Thus, standing to raise the claims is achievable and plaintiffs, with their thousands of members, should not be forever barred because the circuit court found they lacked standing at the time of the trial.

Amending the judgment to a dismissal without prejudice in this case would not destabilize any purported "customary practice" of appellate courts affirming dismissals with prejudice where the issue involved a party's standing. And, if it is a customary practice of appellate courts in this state to affirm dismissals with prejudice based solely upon a lack of standing then that practice should be revisited given the legal error involved and dangerous precedent it sets and the many decisions indicating that a court should not reach the merits of a case when the plaintiffs lack standing.

The cases relied on by Respondents to support this argument are inapposite. In all three of the cited cases, the dismissals were based upon the pleadings, the review of the dismissal itself was de novo, and the plaintiffs argued only that their pleadings were sufficient to demonstrate standing but did not raise the issue of whether the dismissal should be with or without prejudice. Therefore, none of the cases include any discussion or point of error related to the fact that the cases were denied with prejudice. In Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 117 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018), and Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017), the plaintiffs argued that they pleaded sufficient facts to establish standing to challenge violations of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) and did not raise any argument related to the petitions being denied with prejudice. In both cases, this Court looked at the sufficiency of the pleadings to determine if the plaintiffs pled injuries establishing standing for an FCRA claim. Campbell, 561 S.W.3d at 120–21; see also Corozzo, 531 S.W.3d at 572. Likewise, in Missouri Public Service Commission v. Oneok, Inc., 318 S.W.3d 134, 137 (Mo. App. W.D. 2009), the appeal followed a lower court's dismissal for lack of standing based upon the allegations in the petition and no error was asserted relating to the dismissal being with prejudice. This Court should not premise its decision in the present case on previous cases where a dismissal with prejudice based on standing was affirmed but where the "with prejudice" distinction was not raised by a party or discussed by this Court.

Moreover, the decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo banc. 2020), does not change the standing argument or foreclose the possibility that a plaintiff or member of a plaintiff organization could subsequently satisfy standing requirements. Count I of the third amended petition alleged that § 115.427.1 could not be enforced pursuant to § 115.427.6(3). There has been no change to the identification requirements in § 115.427.1 or the funding requirements in § 115.427.6(3), namely that "[a]ll costs associated with the implementation of this section shall be reimbursed from the general revenue of this state by an appropriation for that purpose. If there is not a sufficient appropriation of state funds, then the personal identification requirements of subsection 1 of this section shall not be enforced." Pursuant to the circuit court's holding, standing could still be achieved regardless of the Priorities USA decision (i.e., a person who is eligible to vote would have to timely appear at the polls, try to vote, and be turned away for lack of a proper photo identification). The Priorities USA decision is limited to § 115.427.2(1) and .3 (i.e., the affidavit requirement). At any future election, even though the Priorities USA decision requires the acceptance of non-photo forms of identification without a signed affidavit, a poll worker could still require a voter to present photo identification and turn them away if they do not. Section 115.427.1 still states that voters "shall establish their identity and eligibility to vote at the polling place by presenting a form of personal identification to elected officials." As long as that subsection remains in effect, poll workers could ask voters to present those types of photo identifications at the polls and this incorrect request could be based on the State's insufficient funding to implement the law.[3]

It is not futile to do as the law requires and amend the dismissal here to one without prejudice when the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to enter a dismissal with prejudice. If the dismissal with prejudice was to be affirmed, Appellant organizations and their members who do achieve standing would be forever barred from challenging the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3)—relief that was not granted in Priorities USA.

[3] See, e.g., Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 454 (noting that, "election officials did not understand the affidavit requirement[,]" one voter was "informed by an election official that she would need to obtain photo identification to vote in the next election[,]" and another voter "was told he could not vote despite presenting his over registration card – an acceptable form of non-photo identification under option two").

III. Dismissal of Counts I and II for mootness and Count II as being unripe should be without prejudice because there is a realistic chance that both counts will no longer be moot in the future and Count II will become ripe; the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits after finding the claims to be moot and unripe.

Like a case where there is no standing, a moot or unripe case is not justiciable. In other words, the circuit court should not have reached the merits by dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice for mootness (Counts I and II) and being unripe (Count II). Appellants could be eligible to bring a claim at a future date if the issues were no longer moot and ripe for a lawsuit, but Appellants will be forever barred if this Court affirms the dismissal with prejudice.

Count I challenged the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3). Those specific identification (§ 115.427.1) and funding (§ 115.427.6(3)) requirements have never changed. Priorities USA held only that the affidavit requirement found in § 115.427.2(1) and .3 is an unconstitutional burden on the fundamental right to vote. While the Priorities USA court enjoined portions of § 115.427 relating specifically to the affidavit requirement, including "the dissemination of materials indicating photo identification is required to vote[,]" 591 S.W.3d at 451, Appellants' potentially broader challenge to the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3) should not be forever barred on this basis.

Regarding mootness, the circuit court seemed to hold that by eliminating the affidavit requirement, the circuit court in Priorities USA also enjoined the strict photo-identification requirements of § 115.427.1 "as a practical matter," D165 pp. 3–4, thus mooting any sufficient funding argument related to the enforcement of § 115.427.1 in this case. However, a mootness finding could change regardless of the affidavit requirement. In fact, Priorities USA supports a finding that it is likely a poll worker will not be properly informed as to how to implement the law and may require specific § 115.427.1 photo identification and then turn away a voter who does not have it, despite the injunction in that case. See, e.g., Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 454 (noting that, "election officials did not understand the affidavit requirement[,]" one voter was "informed by an election official that she would need to obtain photo identification to vote in the next election[,]" and another voter "was told he could not vote despite presenting his voter registration card – an acceptable form of non-photo identification under option two"). Thus, if an eligible voter were to go to a polling place to cast a ballot and a poll worker required that voter to present a specific form of photo identification and turned them away if they did not (i.e., they achieved standing), and if that voter (or the Appellant organization of which they are a member) alleged that the funding requirements of § 115.427.6(3) were not being met and therefore § 115.427.1 could not be enforced, a claim for relief would be stated and would not be mooted by Priorities USA. The funding requirements of § 115.427.6(3) continue to exist and it is well-established law that "requiring individuals to present photo identification to vote is unconstitutional." Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 458 (citing Weinschenk v. State, 203 S.W.3d 201, 219 (Mo. banc 2006)). Although Appellants do not challenge the circuit court determination that this case was mooted under the circumstances, the Priorities USA decision as to affidavits should not preclude Appellants from all such future claims.

Priorities USA was tried in late September and early October 2018 (first decision entered by the circuit court on October 23, 2018) and a final decision of the Missouri Supreme Court was issued on January 14, 2020 (rehearing denied January 30, 2020). This case was tried in August 2019 and a judgment dismissing Appellants' claims was signed April 20, 2020. Given the unique circumstances of the 2020 elections during the COVID-19 pandemic and the significant increase in voting absentee and by mail in Missouri, some of the scenarios that would present a live controversy may yet play out in future elections.

Count II of Appellant's petition alleged that the failure to provide correct information to the public, i.e., the "advance notice" requirement, resulted in a violation of § 115.427.5. Count II was not dismissed on standing grounds but only as being moot and unripe. In dismissing Count II, the circuit court found that the injunctive relief in Priorities USA mooted the need for the specific injunctive relief—albeit not precisely the same relief—requested in this case. See D165 pp. 5–6 (comparing the relief requested here and the injunction ordered in Priorities USA).[4] In making its ruling here, the circuit court noted that "the original manner in which [the State] tried to fulfill [the advance-notice] obligation was found to be deficient" in Priorities USA and then found that whether the State's "subsequent information campaigns avoid this deficiency is not yet ripe." D165 pp. 5–6. So, while the mootness determination at the time the circuit court ruled in April 2020 is not challenged here, as the circuit court acknowledged in its ripeness finding, Appellants' claim related to advance notice may resurface in the future if the Secretary of State continues to provide incorrect information to voters about all of § 115.427's requirements. In other words, while the Priorities USA court did enjoin the State from disseminating materials representing to the public that a photo identification card is required to vote, including materials with a specific graphic indicating voters will be asked for a photo identification card without specifying the other acceptable forms of identification that can be used to vote, that injunction in a case in which Appellants were not parties should not bar them from bringing a claim in the future if the advance notice provision of § 115.427.5 is violated. See Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 559–61; D165 p. 5.[5] As such, subsequent information campaigns by the State could make this issue ripe, in which case Appellants should be entitled to bring a suit.

The possibility of a future claim is further supported by the fact that, in Priorities USA, the prohibition on the dissemination of materials focused on a single advertisement—one of many used by the State—and the injunction was "limited in scope, as it enjoined the State from disseminating only those 'materials with the graphic that voters will be asked to show a photo identification card without specifying other forms of identification which voters may also show.'" 591 S.W.3d 460–61. Thus, while it is possible that this limited-in-scope injunction will stop the State from disseminating

[5] As noted by the supreme court in Priorities USA, a political science expert "testified that materials that are incomplete and fail to describe all the forms of identification permitted by section 115.427 cause voter confusion and decrease voter turnout." 591 S.W.3d at 460.

incorrect information about the requirements of § 115.427, it in no way guarantees that will be the case. Just because no party has yet brought a lawsuit does not mean that the claim will not become ripe. However, Appellants could not currently bring this claim even if it were to become ripe because they have been barred by the circuit court's dismissal with prejudice. The advance-notice requirement found in § 115.427.5 is ongoing and the State must comply with both the law's requirements and the injunction issued in Priorities USA. The Priorities USA decision should not be read to mean that the claim raised in this case would never become ripe in the future.

"The basic rationale of the ripeness doctrine is to 'prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements over administrative policies, and also to protect the agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.'" Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 26 (quoting Abbott Laboratories, Inc. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148–49 (1967) (overruled on other grounds)). "Filing a suit prematurely should not prevent a plaintiff from proceeding with an action when it becomes ripe." Brinson v. Whittico, 793 S.W.2d 632, 634 (Mo. App. E.D. 1990). "Thus, if an action is deemed premature and a trial court dismisses it for that reason, the action should be dismissed without prejudice." Id. (holding that, "[b]ecause the trial court deemed the lawsuit premature, it may either dismiss the lawsuit without prejudice or may allow the lawsuit to pend until ripe for adjudication."). Although an injunction was issued in Priorities USA, Appellants should not be forever barred from raising any claim related to advance notice under § 115.427.5, consistent with the trial court's acknowledgement that this issue could subsequently become ripe.

Conclusion

Because Appellants' claims were dismissed based on jurisdictional and justiciability grounds (standing, mootness, and ripeness), the trial court should have dismissed the claims without prejudice. Appellants request that this Court, pursuant to its authority under Rule 84.14, dispose finally of the case by entering the judgment the trial court should have entered and dismiss Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition without prejudice.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

The district court entered an intrusive and burdensome preliminary injunction that prohibits the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) from implementing interim immigration-enforcement priorities that have successfully focused scarce resources on the most pressing threats. In doing so, the court asserted sweeping authority to micromanage the government's enforcement efforts. The injunction's terms are legally unjustified and practically untenable. And they will immediately destabilize the Nation's immigration-enforcement apparatus, with potentially severe consequences for public safety, national security, and border security. The government respectfully requests that this Court stay the injunction pending appeal or until DHS issues final enforcement priorities, whichever is earlier. The undersigned counsel has been informed by DHS that it intends to issue those priorities by the end of September. The government further requests that the Court provide relief by 12:00 p.m. on Monday, August 30, when the preliminary injunction will take effect. If the Court denies the motion, the government respectfully requests a 7-day administrative stay to allow the Solicitor General to consider seeking relief from the Supreme Court

"A principal feature of" the Nation's immigration laws "is the broad discretion exercised by immigration officials." Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 396 (2012). This discretion derives from the Framers' constitutional design and from the immigration laws themselves. E.g., 6 U.S.C. § 202(5) (vesting the Executive with authority to "[e]stablish[] national immigration enforcement policies and priorities"). This authority reflects the reality that the Executive must allocate scarce resources among many aspects of immigration enforcement.

Earlier this year, DHS and ICE issued memoranda to guide agents' exercise of that discretion. The memoranda adopted interim priorities to focus limited resources on detaining and removing noncitizens who pose the greatest threat to public safety, national security, and border security. Texas and Louisiana challenged these priorities, contending that the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) requires the government to arrest and detain every noncitizen whom the INA classifies as a "criminal alien[]," 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c), and to arrest and detain every noncitizen with a final order of removal during the 90-day removal period, id. § 1231(a)(2). The district court improperly accepted both those arguments, as well as plaintiffs' procedural challenges under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), Add.105-44.

A stay is warranted because plaintiffs are unlikely to prevail on the merits. At the outset, their claims are not amenable to judicial review. Plaintiffs lack standing to challenge the interim priorities. And the priorities are otherwise unreviewable because enforcement decisions are committed to agency discretion by law and because the priorities are not final agency action. Moreover, plaintiffs are not within the zone of interests of the statutory provisions they seek to enforce. Even if plaintiffs could clear these hurdles, their claims would fail on the merits. Neither § 1226(c) nor § 1231(a)(2) eliminates the government's enforcement discretion. Indeed, Congress has never appropriated sufficient resources to permit DHS and ICE to fulfill these supposed statutory mandates. With respect to the APA, the district court improperly disregarded the agencies' reasoning and substituted its policy judgment for the agencies'.

Leaving the injunction in place would irreparably harm the government and the public. The injunction prohibits the government from implementing a policy that has successfully focused enforcement on the most pressing threats to national security, border security, and public safety. Conversely, plaintiffs' principal asserted injury is that the priorities will cause some unspecified fiscal injury. This injury, which is insufficient even to support standing or give rise to a cause of action under the APA, cannot justify the damage that the injunction will inflict upon the United States and the public.

STATEMENT

A. Statutory Background

The INA, 8 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq., sets forth procedures for removal of noncitizens. The process generally begins when DHS initiates a removal proceeding, id. § 1229(a), a discretionary decision that requires DHS to consider the enforcement priorities that Congress has authorized the Secretary to establish, cf. 6 U.S.C. § 202(5). An immigration judge determines whether the noncitizen is removable and, if so, whether to enter a removal order. 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(1)(A); see 8 C.F.R. § 1240.12. The noncitizen can obtain administrative and judicial review of such an order.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The INA also sets forth the framework for arresting and detaining a noncitizen present in the United States "pending a decision on whether [he] is to be removed." 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a). That provision "distinguishes between two different categories of aliens." Jennings v. Rodriguez, 138 S. Ct. 830, 837 (2018). Section 1226(a) applies generally to all removable noncitizens and allows the government "to issue warrants for their arrest and detention pending removal proceedings." Id. at 846. Section 1226(c) provides that DHS "shall take into custody any alien," 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1), who "falls into one of several enumerated categories involving criminal offenses and terrorist activities," Jennings, 138 S. Ct. at 837, and "may release [such] an alien . . . only if" a specified condition not relevant here is satisfied, 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(2).

Once an order of removal becomes administratively final and other conditions are satisfied, the noncitizen can be removed by DHS. Section 1231 sets a "removal period" of 90 days and provides that the Secretary generally shall detain and remove the noncitizen during that period. 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a).

Both § 1226 and § 1231 contain provisions insulating the Secretary's enforcement of those sections from judicial review. Section 1226 states that the Secretary's "discretionary judgment regarding the application of this section shall not be subject to review" and that "[n]o court may set aside any action or decision" taken under that section "regarding the detention or release of any alien." 8 U.S.C. § 1226(e). And § 1231 provides that "[n]othing" in that section "shall be construed to create any substantive or procedural right or benefit that is legally enforceable by any party against the United States or its agencies or officers or any other person." Id. § 1231(h).

The Executive has broad authority to administer and enforce the Nation's immigration laws. Reno v. American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm. (AADC), 525 U.S. 471, 483-84 (1999); 6 U.S.C. § 202(5). For decades, the Executive has exercised its enforcement discretion to prioritize which noncitizens to arrest, detain, or remove, and no administration has ever arrested, detained, and pursued removal of every noncitizen who could be covered by §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Nor has Congress ever appropriated funds sufficient to allow the Executive to do so.

B. Factual Background

This appeal concerns two memoranda that establish interim priorities to guide DHS's and ICE's enforcement decisions.

1. The DHS Memorandum

The first memorandum was issued by DHS on January 20, 2021. Add.161 (DHS Memorandum). The memorandum called for a "Department-wide review of policies and practices concerning immigration enforcement" and adopted interim enforcement priorities pending that review. Add.163. It recognized that, "[d]ue to limited resources, DHS cannot respond to all immigration violations or remove all persons unlawfully in the United States" but instead must adopt "sensible priorities" to "implement civil immigration enforcement." Id. Accordingly, the memorandum urged components to focus enforcement on noncitizens whose apprehension is "necessary to protect the national security of the United States"; individuals apprehended "while attempting to unlawfully enter the United States on or after," or who were not present in the country before, November 1, 2020; and "[i]ndividuals incarcerated within federal, state, and local prisons and jails . . . who have been convicted of an 'aggravated felony'" as defined by 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) and who pose a threat to public safety. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Importantly, "nothing" in the memorandum "prohibits the apprehension or detention of" noncitizens "who are not identified as priorities." Add.164. Furthermore, the priorities "are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any" enforceable "right or benefit." Add.165. The interim priorities will "remain in effect until superseded by revised priorities developed in connection with the review" discussed above. Add.164. The issuance of those final priorities will render the preliminary injunction moot.

2. The ICE Memorandum

ICE issued the second memorandum, implementing the DHS Memorandum and offering further guidance with respect to the removal priorities, on February 18, 2021. Add.167 (ICE Memorandum). The memorandum recognized that "ICE operates in an environment of limited resources," and that, as a result, "ICE has always prioritized, and necessarily must prioritize, certain enforcement and removal actions over others." Add.169. The memorandum further explained that ICE's mission has been rendered "particularly complex" due to "several other factors," including ongoing litigation, health and safety needs, foreign-relations concerns, and other legal requirements. Id. "[T]o most effectively achieve" its mission to protect "national security, border security, and public safety" in light of these factors, ICE determined that it was necessary to "exercise its well-established prosecutorial discretion." Add.170. The memorandum instructed officers to focus enforcement on the categories of noncitizens specified in the DHS memorandum. Add.171-72. The memorandum also stated that, at ICE's request, DHS had expanded the public-safety category to include "qualifying members of criminal gangs and transnational criminal organizations." Add.168.

Like the DHS Memorandum, the ICE Memorandum does not "prohibit the arrest, detention, or removal of any noncitizen." Add.170. It simply requires preapproval of enforcement actions against individuals who fall outside the presumed priorities unless an exigency makes preapproval "impracticable"—in which case approval may be requested after the action. Add.173.

C. Prior Proceedings

On August 19, 2021, the court entered a nationwide preliminary injunction prohibiting the agencies from implementing the priorities. Add.1. In the same order, the district court also imposed onerous reporting requirements. See infra p. 22. The government appealed the preliminary injunction to this Court. Dkt. 81. The government also asked the district court to stay the injunction pending appeal and to enter an administrative stay while the court considered the government's stay motion.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Dkt. 82. The district court declined to stay the injunction pending appeal but entered a seven-day administrative stay to allow this Court to consider the government's motion. Dkt. 90.

ARGUMENT

In determining whether to grant a stay, this Court considers "(1) whether the stay applicant has made a strong showing that he is likely to succeed on the merits; (2) whether the applicant will be irreparably injured absent a stay; (3) whether issuance of the stay will substantially injure the other parties interested in the proceeding; and (4) where the public interest lies." Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 426 (2009) (quotation omitted). In cases involving the government, the harm to the government and the public interest merge. Id. at 435. Every factor strongly favors staying the preliminary injunction pending appeal.

I. The Government Is Likely To Prevail On The Merits.

The government's appeal is likely to result in vacatur of the preliminary injunction because plaintiffs' challenges to the interim priorities are not amenable to judicial review. Even if they were, plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that the priorities are unlawful.

A. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Unreviewable.

1. Plaintiffs lack standing to sue. Notwithstanding that a litigant "lacks a judicially cognizable interest in the prosecution or nonprosecution of another," Linda R.S. v. Richard D., 410 U.S. 614, 619 (1973), the district court found standing (Add.20-

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

46). The court first stated that the interim priorities would result in the release into plaintiffs' borders of an unspecified number of noncitizens whom the court believed would otherwise be detained or removed, and that some subset of these noncitizens might then commit crimes. Relying on that predicate, the court found that the States would spend money to detain released noncitizens who later reoffend. Add.27-28 (stating that Texas spends an average of approximately $60 daily per inmate). The court also found that such crimes would harm plaintiffs' "quasi-sovereign" "parens patriae" interest in protecting their citizens. Id. at 33-34.

This analysis fails at every step. To begin, the court identified no evidence that the memoranda will have the "certainly impending" effect of increasing criminal activity. Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 409 (2013) (emphasis in original) (quotation omitted); see California v. Texas, 141 S. Ct. 2104, 2117 (2021) (standing is "ordinarily substantially more difficult to establish" when the asserted injury rests on "the decision of an independent third party") (quotation omitted). The court relied (Add.23, 38-39) on anecdotes about particular noncitizens whom DHS has not detained and on generalized assertions about recidivism. But that does not support the counterintuitive proposition that crime will rise as a result of priorities that focus enforcement on noncitizens who pose the greatest risks to national security, border security, and public safety. Indeed, the record confirms that the agency's efforts to target the most dangerous noncitizens are succeeding. Add.181-82. And given ICE's limited detention resources, detaining all individuals covered by §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)—a group that includes not just every individual in the removal period regardless of criminal history but also many individuals still in the removal process with only nonviolent criminal convictions—may preclude the agency from detaining more serious threats to public safety, such as gang members or noncitizens who have been charged but not yet convicted of violent offenses.

The court likewise failed to substantiate its conclusion that any marginal increase in criminal activity would cause harm to plaintiffs, much less that the incidental effects of federal enforcement decisions are judicially cognizable. The court cited no evidence that either State has incurred or will imminently incur any financial cost. Indeed, the district court's finding that Texas's "budget for detention facilities has been set months or years in advance," Add.45 (quotation omitted), belies its conclusion that the priorities will require Texas to spend more money. And the court's reliance on plaintiffs' alleged parens patriae injury cannot be reconciled with the settled principle that a State cannot assert any such injury against the United States. See Massachusetts v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447, 485-86 (1923).

2. a. Plaintiffs' claims are also unreviewable as a statutory matter. The decisions that they challenge are "committed to agency discretion by law." 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2). Decisions about how to allocate limited resources—particularly in the enforcement context—are "generally committed to an agency's absolute discretion." Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 831 (1985). Such decisions require the "complicated balancing of a number of factors" within the agency's expertise, including "whether agency resources are best spent on this violation or another" and "whether the particular enforcement action requested best fits the agency's overall policies." Id.

Those concerns "are greatly magnified in the deportation context." Crane v. Johnson, 783 F.3d 244, 247 n.6 (5th Cir. 2015) (quotation omitted). Congress has charged the Executive with deciding "whether it makes sense to pursue removal at all," Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 396 (2012), and allows the Executive "to abandon the endeavor" at "each stage" of the removal process, AADC, 525 U.S. 471, 483 (1999). That is because, in addition to the usual factors governing the exercise of discretion, immigration policy can "affect trade, investment, tourism, and diplomatic relations for the entire Nation." Arizona, 567 U.S. at 395; accord Jama v. ICE, 543 U.S. 335, 348 (2005) (explaining that removal decisions touch on "our relations with foreign powers" and implicate the "customary policy of deference to the President in matters of foreign affairs") (quotation omitted).

The district court ruled (Add.61-81) that §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) withdraw the Executive's enforcement discretion because both provisions use the word "shall." Add.70-81. But enforcement discretion has "long coexisted with apparently mandatory arrest statutes." Town of Castle Rock v. Gonzales, 545 U.S. 748, 760-61 (2005). The "deep-rooted nature of law-enforcement discretion" persists "even in the presence of seemingly mandatory legislative commands." Id. The Supreme Court has thus rejected the idea that enforcement discretion can be eliminated simply because a statute uses the word "shall." Id. at 761; see City of Chicago v. Morales, 527 U.S. 41, 47 n.2, 62 n.32 (1999); Heckler, 470 U.S. at 835. A "stronger indication" of congressional intent is required before a court may hold that Congress circumscribed Executive authority. Gonzales, 545 U.S. at 761.

The INA evinces no such intent. To the contrary, the traditional tools of statutory interpretation confirm that Congress did not intend either § 1226(c) or § 1231(a)(2) as a judicially enforceable mandate. Most obviously, the INA precludes enforcement decisions under both provisions from judicial review. See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1226(e), 1231(h). And any inference that Congress intended those provisions to be judicially enforceable is further undermined by the fact that each is itself contingent on a separate discretionary exercise of the Secretary's authority: § 1226(c) authorizes detention of the described noncitizens only "pending the outcome of removal proceedings," Jennings v. Rodriguez, 138 S. Ct. 830, 838 (2018), while § 1231(a)(2) authorizes detention only following a final order of removal. But the decisions whether to initiate and pursue removal proceedings, to seek a final order of removal, and to take steps to execute that order are themselves separate, discretionary, unreviewable decisions of the Secretary. Cf. AADC, 525 U.S. at 483.

Other INA provisions likewise confirm Congress's desire to "protect[] the Executive's discretion from the courts" and in particular from "attempts to impose judicial constraints upon prosecutorial discretion." AADC, 525 U.S. at 485-86, 485 n.9 (discussing 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g)). And Congress's appropriations decisions further undermine the district court's reasoning. Congress has consistently declined to appropriate enough funds to allow the Executive to detain all noncitizens described in §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). For example, ICE estimates that approximately 1.2 million noncitizens in the United States are subject to a final order of removal. Add.185. Many more noncitizens are subject to detention under other INA provisions. Yet Congress has only appropriated enough funds to operate approximately 34,000 detention beds nationwide. Add.179.

The cases cited by the district court (Add.64-69) do not hold that §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) eliminate the Executive's enforcement discretion. None involved a challenge to the Executive's exercise of enforcement discretion, and none presented the question whether either provision creates a judicially enforceable duty. E.g., Johnson v. Guzman-Chavez, 141 S. Ct. 2271 (2021) (addressing which provision of the INA governs detention of certain noncitizens). It is improper to "extend[] a judicial decision beyond its holding, parsing the opinion as if it were a statute." Mays v. Chevron Pipe Line Co., 968 F.3d 442, 448 (5th Cir. 2020).

b. Plaintiffs' claims are also not cognizable because they fall outside the zone of interests of §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). That inquiry asks whether Congress intended for a particular plaintiff to invoke a "particular provision of law" to challenge agency action, Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 175-76 (1987), or whether, instead, that plaintiff's "interests are so marginally related to or inconsistent with the purposes implicit in the statute that it cannot reasonably be assumed that Congress intended to permit the suit, Clarke v. Securities Indus. Ass'n, 479 U.S. 388, 399 (1987).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As noted, third parties do not have a cognizable interest in the removal of a noncitizen, and the incidental financial effects of federal enforcement decisions on plaintiffs are not judicially cognizable under the INA. Nothing in §§ 1226(c) and § 1231(a)(2) suggests that Congress intended to permit States to rely on them to challenge federal immigration enforcement decisions that incidentally impact State finances.

c. Finally, plaintiffs' claims are unreviewable because the interim priorities are not final agency action. 5 U.S.C. § 704. An action is "final" only if, among other things, it determines legal "rights or obligations." Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 178 (1997) (quotation omitted). The interim priorities do not "require" any State or noncitizen "to do anything" and do not "prohibit" any State or noncitizen "from doing anything." National Mining Ass'n v. McCarthy, 758 F.3d 243, 252 (D.C. Cir. 2014). They simply offer guidance to federal officers charged with exercising enforcement discretion in individual cases.

In concluding otherwise, the court suggested (Add.57-58) that the priorities altered legal obligations by directing line-level officers to make enforcement decisions that the court concluded were incompatible with the court's interpretations of §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Those interpretations are mistaken, as explained above. But the court's reasoning is also mistaken because an action with no legal effect "on regulated entities" does not become final simply because it provides "instruction[s] to [agency] staff." National Mining Ass'n, 758 F.3d at 250-52. And here, the priorities confer no rights or obligations on third parties. Finally, the court emphasized (Add.59-61) that any noncitizen spared from enforcement action as a result of the memoranda could become eligible for Emergency Medicaid or for release into the United States. But those speculative downstream consequences are the result of the independent operation of other sources of law, not "direct and appreciable legal" consequences of the memoranda, Bennett, 520 U.S. at 178.

B. The Interim Priorities Are Lawful And Reasonable.

Even assuming that the interim priorities are reviewable, the district court's reasons for finding them unlawful do not withstand scrutiny.

1. First, the district court ruled (Add.105) that the interim priorities violate §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). As explained, however, those provisions do not override the Executive's immigration-enforcement discretion. See supra pp. 11-14. Even if they did impose mandatory obligations, the interim priorities would not violate them. Section 1226(c) only authorizes the detention of a noncitizen "pending the outcome of removal proceedings," Jennings, 138 S. Ct. at 838, and nothing in the memoranda purports to provide officials authority to release a noncitizen subject to that provision once they have exercised their antecedent discretion to pursue removal proceedings against and arrest him. More generally, the memoranda do not forbid the arrest, detention, or removal of any noncitizen. They simply require line-level officers to obtain supervisory approval to pursue enforcement against other-priority targets. Add.170, 173. The record confirms that preapproval has regularly been granted for various individuals whose detention or removal constitutes a justified allocation of limited resources. Add.177-78.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2. Next, the district court erroneously concluded (Add.105-27) that the interim priorities lacked a rational connection between the facts found and the decision made. But that connection is apparent on the face of the memoranda. The memoranda explained that the agencies have "limited resources," Add.163, and that such resources have become further constrained by concerns arising from the pandemic and by foreign-relations considerations, Add.169. The agencies therefore directed limited resources to those actions that maximize the agencies' ability to "protect[] national security, border security, and public safety." Add.163. That straightforward explanation is all the APA requires.

The district court also concluded (Add.116-27) that the agency failed to consider the States' policy concerns and policy alternatives. As noted, however, DHS and ICE justified the priorities in terms of the relevant factors—the agencies' overarching duty to protect national security, border security, and public safety. And the court did not explain why any particular policy disagreement or policy alternative was significant enough to warrant special discussion. Cf. Motor Vehicle Mfs. Ass'n of the U.S. v. State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 51 (1983) (holding that the APA does not "require an agency to consider all policy alternatives in reaching [a] decision").

3. Finally, the district court concluded (Add.127-44) that the interim priorities were subject to notice-and-comment requirements. But the priorities are "general statements of policy" exempt from such requirements. 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(3)(A). An agency action is a general statement of policy if it does not "impose any rights and obligations" and if it leaves "the agency and its decisionmakers free to exercise discretion" in individual cases. Professionals & Patients for Customized Care v. Shalala, 56 F.3d 592, 595 (5th Cir. 1995) (quotation omitted). The interim priorities do not create any rights or obligations nor do they compel or prohibit any action by any noncitizen or State. They also preserve multiple levels of discretion. DHS and ICE can revoke or amend the priorities at any time. And the priorities do not eliminate individual officers' authority to pursue noncitizens outside the priority categories. They simply urge officers to "exercise their discretion thoughtfully" and to consider "all relevant facts and circumstances" before expending scarce resources on nonpriority targets. Add.170.

II. The Remaining Factors Overwhelmingly Favor A Stay.

The government and the public will be irreparably injured if the preliminary injunction is not stayed pending appeal. These irreparable injuries outweigh the insubstantial harms that plaintiffs claim they will suffer as a result of the interim priorities. In recent years, the Supreme Court has repeatedly stayed broad injunctions against the Executive's immigration policies. E.g., Mayorkas v. Innovation Law Lab, No. 19-1212 (U.S. Mar. 11, 2020); Department of Homeland Sec. v. New York, No. 19A785

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

(U.S. Jan. 27, 2020); Barr v. East Bay Sanctuary Covenant, No. 19A230 (U.S. Sept. 11, 2019); Trump v. Sierra Club, No. 19A60 (U.S. July 26, 2019). This Court should do the same here.

The preliminary injunction is "an improper intrusion by a federal court into the workings of a coordinate branch of the Government." INS v. Legalization Assistance Project, 510 U.S. 1301, 1305-06 (1993) (O'Connor, J., in chambers). The injunction usurps the Executive's constitutional and statutory authority by preventing the government from allocating scarce resources to the most serious offenders. Making matters worse, the district court has also required the government to submit monthly reports with respect to every noncitizen who would be covered by §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2); to document the reasons behind every nonenforcement decision; and to retain the name of each individual officer responsible for those decisions. Add.158-59. No authority supports this extraordinary aggrandizement of judicial power at the Executive's expense.

The injunction is especially pernicious because it forbids the government from implementing a policy with proven results. As DHS and ICE anticipated when issuing the memoranda, the priorities have allowed the agencies to respond "in real time to pressing operational needs," Add.182. For example, ICE was able to "re-task[] several field operations teams" and over 300 officers to help states and localities "address increasing activity along the Southwest Border." Id. The priorities have also allowed the agencies to focus on "arresting and detaining the most dangerous noncitizens." Add.180. From February through July 2021, the government processed just under 26,000 administrative arrests, nearly 20% of which involved noncitizens convicted of aggravated felonies. Add.181. By contrast, from February through July 2020, the government processed just over 39,000 administrative arrests, only 8% of which involved noncitizens convicted of aggravated felonies. Id. In other words, the government was able to increase its total arrests of such felons by approximately two-thirds.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

More generally, upholding the injunction could destabilize the Nation's entire immigration-enforcement apparatus. Congress has not appropriated enough funds to detain every noncitizen who could come within the scope of §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Another nationwide injunction has further resulted in the reduction of the government's available immigration-detention resources by directing ICE to enforce compliance with its Pandemic Response Requirements, which require that facilities make efforts to reduce populations to 75% of facility-capacity to enable social distancing, meaning that ICE can now operate only 26,800 detention beds. Add.179. As of August 20, 2021, 95% of those beds are occupied. Add.180. It is therefore unclear how DHS and ICE could comply with the court's injunction without adopting some other set of enforcement priorities. Yet the injunction orders the agencies to generate new guidance without any direction as to how the agencies should reconcile their enforcement efforts and limited resources with the injunction—and after holding that the previous set of priorities was both insufficiently explained and improperly promulgated without notice-and-comment rulemaking. To the extent that the court's reasoning implies that the only acceptable priorities require arresting and detaining every noncitizen who would be covered by §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), compliance would be impossible and counterproductive.

It would be particularly problematic to allow the preliminary injunction to take effect while this appeal is pending because the DHS is nearing completion of its final priorities, which will likely render this case moot before this appeal is concluded. The consequent whipsawing between priorities regimes that will occur if the preliminary injunction is permitted to take effect will further cause confusion among DHS's workforce and undermine the agency's ability to effectively protect the Nation's safety.

The harms that the injunction inflicts on the United States and the public dwarf any incidental effect of the priorities on plaintiffs. The district court's finding of irreparable harm rests entirely on allegations that are insufficient even to satisfy Article III. See supra pp. 9-11. Even if those alleged harms were judicially cognizable, the notion that plaintiffs will suffer sufficient irreparable financial losses from a temporary stay to overcome the United States' countervailing interests is without merit.

Finally, even assuming plaintiffs were likely to succeed on some of their claims, that would not justify the relief granted. First, "[r]emand, not vacatur," and certainly not an injunction, is the appropriate remedy when (as here) there is "a serious possibility that the agency will be able to substantiate its decision given an opportunity to do so." Texas Ass'n of Mfrs. v. U.S. Consumer Prod. Safety Comm'n, 989 F.3d 368, 389-90 (5th Cir. 2021). And remand without vacatur is particularly appropriate here because, as explained above, other forms of relief "would be disruptive." Central & S.W. Servs., Inc. v. U.S. EPA, 220 F.3d 683, 692 (5th Cir. 2000). Second, the nationwide scope of the district court's injunction is inappropriate. Such universal relief contravenes core principles of Article III and of equity requiring that relief be tailored to redressing a plaintiff's specific injury and cannot be justified on the record in this case. Cf. Town of Chester v. Laroe Estates, Inc., 137 S. Ct. 1645, 1650 (2017).

Finally, the district court also imposed onerous reporting requirements, purportedly "[t]o ensure compliance" with the injunction's terms. Add.158. Those requirements direct the government to file monthly reports providing the number of known noncitizens covered by § 1226(c) or § 1231(a)(2) who were not detained in the previous month and each covered noncitizen's address and (if applicable) the crime for which he was detained. Id. And the government must also make and retain contemporaneous records of the rationale for each nondetention decision and the deciding official. Id. Although the district court indicated today that it intends to modify those requirements, see Dkt. 90, it has not done so yet. The district court also stated today that the reporting requirements are not part of the injunction. But the government is unaware of any authority that would support imposing such requirements unless they were incident to the injunction. Because there is no justification for the reporting requirements independent of the injunction, we ask the Court to stay those requirements as well.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

CONCLUSION

The government respectfully requests that this Court stay the injunction pending appeal or until DHS issues final enforcement priorities, which DHS has informed undersigned counsel it intends to issue by the end of September. The government further requests that the Court provide relief by 12:00 p.m. on Monday, August 30, when the preliminary injunction will take effect.

3 (1996). That observation comes from a Senate Judiciary Committee Report addressing the problem of alien criminality in the United States. Similarly, the Supreme Court has stated "deportable criminal aliens who remain[] in the United States often commit[] more crimes before being removed." Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 518, 123 S.Ct. 1708, 1715, 155 L.Ed.2d 724 (2003) (citing Hearing on H.R. 3333 before the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 101st Cong., 1st Sess., 54, 52 (1989)). These observations, among others, led to the wholesale reform of our Nation's immigration laws in the 1990s.

Now, over two decades later, the States of Texas and Louisiana (the "States") seek to have the Executive Branch (the "Government")[1] adhere to two federal immigration statutes passed during that wholesale reform. The States want the Government to comply with 8 U.S.C. §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), which provide that the Government "shall" detain certain aliens when they are released from custody or during their removal period, respectively.[2] More specifically, the States move for a preliminary injunction to prohibit the Government from implementing two recent immigration memoranda which allegedly instruct Executive Branch officials to violate these laws.[3] (Dkt. No. 18).

[1] The term "Government" used throughout this Memorandum Opinion and Order refers to the United States, the agencies, and the individuals sued in their official capacity.

[2] Under Section 1226(c), "the Attorney General shall take into custody" certain aliens who have either committed specified offenses or who are otherwise deemed deportable "when the alien is released" from custody. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) (emphasis added). Likewise, Section 1231(a)(2) provides, "the Attorney General shall detain the alien" "during [the alien's] removal period." 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2) (emphasis added).

[3] The States also seek an injunction compelling the Government to comply with the detention mandates in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). (Dkt. No. 18).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT
MO-AG-22-0644-A-003966

These immigration memoranda, issued on January 20 and February 18, 2021 (the "Memoranda"), purport to "prioritize" certain categories of aliens for enforcement action. (Dkt. No. 1-1); (Dkt. No. 1-2). The States point out that the priority categories enumerated in these Memoranda omit certain others—namely, aliens convicted of serious drug offenses, aliens convicted of crimes of moral turpitude, and aliens subject to a final order of removal. The States argue that federal law requires the Government to take custody of aliens falling within these overlooked categories, and the Memoranda are grinding these required detentions to a halt. Unsurprisingly, the Government disagrees and argues that the Executive Branch is simply acting within its discretion.

This case involves the intersection of several areas of administrative and immigration law. But more fundamentally, the claims made in this case implicate the separation-of-powers framework set forth in our Nation's Constitution. Put simply, the Government has instructed federal officials that "shall detain" certain aliens means "may detain" when it unambiguously mean must detain. Thus, the Court inquires whether the Executive Branch may direct officials to enforce a law enacted by Congress in a way that is contrary to the plain language of the law. That inquiry yields a clear answer: it may not. The Executive Branch may not instruct its officers to enforce a statute in a manner contrary to the law itself. Util. Air Regul. Grp. v. EPA, 573 U.S. 302, 327, 134 S.Ct. 2427, 2446, 189 L.Ed.2d 372 (2014) ("Under our system of government, Congress makes laws and the President, acting at times through agencies . . . , faithfully executes them. The power of executing the laws [however] . . . does not include a power to revise clear statutory terms that turn out not to work in practice." (citing U.S. Const. art. II, § 3) (cleaned up)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Having considered the pleadings, the record, and the applicable law, the Court finds the States have satisfied the requirements for a preliminary injunction. Accordingly, the States' Motion is GRANTED.[4]

I. BACKGROUND

At first glance, the background facts of this case are straightforward. The Government issued two memoranda concerning civil immigration enforcement which the States claim violate two immigration laws. But upon closer examination, the actions of the Government and the claims by the States are strikingly complex. Congress did not design our Nation's immigration laws on a whim. Therefore, to place this case in its proper context and facilitate understanding of the function of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), the Court begins by briefly detailing some of the history behind those statutes.[5]

---

[4] In this Memorandum Opinion and Order, the Court does not address the States' likelihood of success on claims that the Memoranda are unlawful because they violate: (1) the Agreements between Texas and Louisiana and the Department of Homeland Security ("DHS"); and (2) the Constitution's requirement that the President "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." (Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 122–31). In withholding a ruling on these claims, the Court is mindful that to succeed on their Motion, the States need only demonstrate a substantial likelihood of success on "at least one" claim, which they have. See Texas v. United States, 86 F. Supp. 3d 591, 672 (S.D. Tex. 2015), aff'd, 809 F.3d 134 (5th Cir. 2015), aff'd by an equally divided court, ____ U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2271, 195 L.Ed.2d 638 (2016) (mem.). Moreover, given the significance of the substantial interests at stake in this case, the Court finds it to be in the interest of justice to rule after all Parties have an opportunity to make a complete presentation on the merits of these claims. See id. at 677. Similarly, the Court defers ruling on the States' request for an injunction to compel agency action unlawfully withheld pursuant to Section 706(1) of the Administrative Procedure Act. See footnote 61; see also (Dkt. No. 1 at 28); (Dkt. No. 18 at 26).

A. HISTORY OF SECTIONS 1226(C) AND 1231(A)(2)

The United States has long welcomed and benefited from immigration.[6] The Nation has, however, borne costs due to illegal immigration and the criminal conduct of illegal aliens. See Juliet Stumpf, The Crimmigration Crisis: Immigrants, Crime, and Sovereign Power, 56 Am. U. L. Rev. 367, 380–81 (2006). Congress in the 1990s was not blind to those concerns. As a legislative report from 1995 mentions, "[a]lthough immigrants to the United States have been, and continue to be, predominantly hard working and law abiding, there appears to be a growing criminal class among immigrants, especially among those here illegally." S. Rep. No. 104-48, at 7 (1995). Indeed, Congress directly linked illegal immigration with crime. The same legislative report provides:

> The fact that many criminal aliens have entered the U.S. illegally helps explain why so many aliens are involved in crime[.] [T]heir illegal situation conveys an "outlaw" status, often leading them into the shadowy realms of criminal lifestyles. The point was made succinctly in Congressional testimony by a former Commissioner of the INS, "[t]hose entering the United States illegally have no legitimate sponsors and are prohibited from holding jobs. Thus, criminal conduct may be the only way to survive."

Id. at 5.

Yet throughout much of its history, the United States had neither the means nor the ability to curb illegal immigration or alien criminality. Indeed, "[f]or much of this country's history there has been no comprehensive body of immigration law and no laws at all addressing criminal aliens." Id. at 10. Despite the enactment of the Immigration and Nationality Act in 1952—and numerous immigration bills signed into law in the subsequent decades—these issues were "dealt with . . . mostly as an afterthought." Id. at 12. Prior to the 1990s, "no major immigration legislation ha[d] focused exclusively on the problem of criminal aliens." Id. And although there were attempts to solve the problem of illegal immigration and alien criminality, change happened in a "piecemeal fashion." Id. It is unsurprising, therefore, that the time leading up to the enactment of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) has been regarded by the Supreme Court as a time of "wholesale failure by [the Executive Branch] to deal with increasing rates of criminal activity by aliens." Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1714 (citations omitted); see also Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 698, 121 S.Ct. 2491, 2503, 150 L.Ed.2d 653 (2001). The Executive Branch's failures at that time led to costs and consequences borne by the states, the citizens of this country, and its legal immigrants. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 518–21, 123 S.Ct. at 1714–16; S. Rep. No. 104-48, at 1–2 (1995).

Congress's observations led to significant statutory reform in the federal detention of criminal aliens. Following numerous reports about the high rate of abscondment and recidivism among criminal aliens and the corresponding costs and negative effects, "Congress enacted 8 U.S.C. § 1226, requiring the Attorney General to detain a subset of deportable criminal aliens pending a determination of their removability." Demore, 538 U.S. at 521, 123 S.Ct. at 1716. Section 1226(c)(1) reads:

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

> The Attorney General shall take into custody any alien who—
>
> (A) is inadmissible by reason of having committed any offense covered in section 1182(a)(2) of this title,
>
> (B) is deportable by reason of having committed any offense covered in section 1227(a)(2)(A)(ii), (A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D) of this title,
>
> (C) is deportable under section 1227(a)(2)(A)(i) of this title on the basis of an offense for which the alien has been sentence[d][7] to a term of imprisonment of at least 1 year, or
> (D) is inadmissible under section 1182(a)(3)(B) of this title or deportable under section 1227(a)(4)(B) of this title,
> when the alien is released, without regard to whether the alien is released on parole, supervised release, or probation, and without regard to whether the alien may be arrested or imprisoned again for the same offense.

8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1) (emphases added) (footnote added). And to buttress this detention mandate, Congress in Subsection (2) provided detailed instructions on the narrow circumstances under which the Attorney General could release a detained illegal alien.

> The Attorney General may release an alien described in paragraph (1) only if the Attorney General decides pursuant to section 3521 of Title 18 that release of the alien from custody is necessary to provide protection to a witness, a potential witness, a person cooperating with an investigation into major criminal activity, or an immediate family member or close associate of a witness, potential witness, or person cooperating with such an investigation, and the alien satisfies the Attorney General that the alien will not pose a danger to the safety of other persons or of property and is likely to appear for any scheduled proceeding. A decision relating to such release shall take place in accordance with a procedure > that considers the severity of the offense committed by the alien.

[7] The text of the statute says "sentence;" however, the Court notes it should probably be "sentenced."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Id. § 1226(c)(2) (emphases added).

Congress's efforts to protect the states, citizens, and legal immigrants from criminal illegal aliens through the INA during the 1990s were not confined to Section 1226(c). Through other statutes, too, "Congress explicitly expanded the group of aliens subject to mandatory detention." Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 698, 121 S.Ct. at 2503 (citing Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, § 439(c), 110 Stat. 1277; Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, Div. C, §§ 303, 305, 110 Stat. 3009–585, 3009–598 to 3009–599; 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c); and 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)). That expansion is evident in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2), which outlines the Attorney General's discretion regarding the detention of illegal aliens who have been ordered removed:

> During the removal period, the Attorney General shall detain the alien. Under no circumstance during the removal period shall the Attorney General release an alien who has been found inadmissible under section 1182(a)(2) or 1182(a)(3)(B) of this title or deportable under section 1227(a)(2) or 1227(a)(4)(B) of this title.

8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2) (emphases added).

In view of the historical context and text of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), Congress designed these two provisions to curtail the effects of illegal immigration and the concomitant concerns of alien criminality. But, as the Senate Judiciary Committee Report mentioned earlier admits, these statutory policies are futile if the "laws cannot be enforced." S. Rep. No. 104-249, at 3 (1996).

B. DETENTIONS IN PRACTICE

Previously, in Texas v. United States, the Court provided an in-depth overview of the immigration removal process. ____ F. Supp. 3d ____, ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *4–9 (S.D. Tex. Feb. 23, 2021) (hereinafter "Texas I"). That discussion touched upon parts of the detention process for aliens subject to removal proceedings, id. at *5, and aliens subject to final orders of removal, id. at *8–9. Given the specific focus on detentions in this Motion for Preliminary Injunction, it is appropriate to more fully discuss the detention process for aliens subject to Sections 1226 and 1231.

To start, the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009-546, created a uniform procedure for deporting aliens or denying them entry into the United States. The detention and removal process under Section 240 of the Immigration and Nationality Act ("240 proceedings") commences when DHS files a Notice to Appear ("NTA") against an alien or noncitizen—who are designated as "respondents"—in immigration court. Matter of S-O-G- & F-D-B-, 27 I. & N. Dec. 462, 465 (2018); see 8 C.F.R. § 1003.14; Jennifer Williams, The Potential Implications of the Supreme Court's Decision in Pereira v. Sessions on Prosecutions for Illegal Reentry Under 8 U.S.C. § 1326, 67 DOJ J. Fed. L. & Prac. 141 (2019); see also (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. Nos. 82 at 12, 82-1 at 5, 83 at 14). Federal law then gives the Attorney General—and immigration judges by extension of DOJ's internal organizational structure—discretion on whether such an alien may continue to be detained during the proceedings or released on bond or conditional parole pursuant to Section 1226(a). 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

For criminal aliens, however, the start of the process is a bit different. Such aliens are taken into custody by officers within the Executive Branch (i.e., Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE") agents) in generally three ways: an ICE arrest; in execution of detainers after a local police stop, see 8 C.F.R. § 287.7(a) (2011); or after completion of incarceration for a prior criminal conviction, see 8 C.F.R. § 287.5(c) (2016). See Gerard Savaresse, When Is When?: 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) and the Requirements of Mandatory Detention, 82 Fordham L. Rev. 285, 302 (2013). Of the three, immigration detainers are particularly important:

> The Executive branch uses immigration detainers to control the release of non-citizens from state prisons and local jails. When federal immigration officials learn that a state or local law enforcement agency has custody of a non-citizen targeted for immigration proceedings or investigation, they issue a detainer to give notice to state or local officials that the federal government intends to take custody of the non-citizen upon release. The form detainer notice issued by federal immigration officials directs the recipient that federal regulations require the recipient agency to detain the non-citizen for a brief period of time after the non-citizen would otherwise be released from custody.[8] Absent the ability to issue detainers, immigration enforcement officials would have to be present at the gates of the state or local detention facility to apprehend the non-citizen upon release.

C. THE JANUARY 20 MEMORANDUM

More than two decades after Congress changed the way this country approached the issues of illegal immigration and alien criminality, the current Administration set forth its views advocating a different approach from its predecessor. See Revision of Civil Immigration Enforcement Policies and Priorities, Exec. Order No. 13,993, 86 Fed. Reg. 7051 (Jan. 20, 2021) ("[The current] Administration will reset the policies and practices for enforcing civil immigration laws to align enforcement with [certain] values and priorities." (emphasis added)).

Once the current Administration assumed power on January 20, 2021, it wasted no time issuing its first memorandum on civil immigration enforcement (the "January 20 Memorandum"). (Dkt. No. 1-1). The January 20 Memorandum, signed by Acting DHS Secretary David Pekoske, announced changes to the enforcement of the Nation's immigration laws. (Dkt. No. 1-1). The January 20 Memorandum begins by acknowledging the current issues the federal government is encountering in enforcing immigration laws, noting the United States "faces significant operational challenges at the southwest border as it is confronting the most serious global public health crisis in a century." (Id. at 2). The January 20 Memorandum goes on to say, "in light of those unique circumstances," DHS must substantially increase "resources to the border in order to ensure safe, legal and orderly processing, to rebuild fair and effective asylum procedures that respect human rights and due process, to adopt appropriate public health guidelines and protocols, and to prioritize responding to threats to national security, public safety, and border security." (Id.) In Section A, the January 20 Memorandum calls for a "Department-wide review of policies and practices concerning immigration enforcement[.]" (Id. at 3). In Section B, the January 20 Memorandum articulates "interim enforcement priorities [that] shall go into effect on February 1, 2021 and remain in effect until superseded by revised priorities developed in connection with the" Department-wide review. (Id. at 3–4). Pending completion of the Department-wide review, the January 20 Memorandum lists three DHS enforcement priorities:

> 1) National security. Individuals who have engaged in or are suspected of terrorism or espionage, or whose apprehension, arrest and/or custody is otherwise necessary to protect the national security of the United States.
> 2) Border security. Individuals apprehended at the border or ports of entry while attempting to unlawfully enter the United States on or after November 1, 2020, or who were not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020.
> 3) Public safety. Individuals incarcerated within federal, state, and local prisons and jails released on or after the issuance of this memorandum who have been convicted of an "aggravated felony," as that term is defined in section 101(a)(43) of the Immigration and Nationality Act > at the time of conviction, and are determined to pose a threat to public safety.

(Id. at 3). The January 20 Memorandum then qualifies its prioritization scheme by stating, "[w]hile resources should be allocated to the priorities enumerated above, nothing in this memorandum prohibits the apprehension or detention of individuals unlawfully in the United States who are not identified as priorities herein." (Id. at 4).

In Section C, the January 20 Memorandum orders a temporary pause on removals of noncitizens, with some exceptions.[10] (Id. at 4–5). Specifically, the January 20 Memorandum directs "an immediate pause on removals of any noncitizen with a final order of removal . . . for 100 days[.]" (Id. at 4). The January 20 Memorandum justifies this pause by pointing to DHS's "limited resources," which it claims "must be prioritized to . . . provide sufficient staff and resources to enhance border security and conduct immigration and asylum processing at the southwest border fairly and efficiently" and

> 2) Was not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020; or > 3) Has voluntarily agreed to waive any rights to remain in the United States, provided that he or she has been made fully aware of the consequences of waiver and has been given a meaningful opportunity to access counsel prior to signing the waiver; or to "comply with COVID-19 protocols to protect the health and safety of DHS personnel and those members of the public with whom DHS personnel interact." (Id.). Further, the January 20 Memorandum states, the pause is necessary for DHS to "ensure that [its] removal resources are directed to [its] highest enforcement priorities." (Id.).

This Court partially enjoined the January 20 Memorandum on January 26 with a temporary restraining order, Texas v. United States, ____ F. Supp. 3d ____, 2021 WL 247877 (S.D. Tex. Jan. 26, 2021), and again on February 23 with a preliminary injunction, Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d ____, 2021 WL 2096669. Specifically, this Court enjoined Section C of the January 20 Memorandum, which paused removals of aliens with a final order of removal for 100 days. Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *52. In doing so, this Court explicitly left intact Section B of the January 20 Memorandum, which enumerates DHS's "enforcement priorities" going forward. (Id.). Section B is a subject of this litigation. (Dkt. No. 1-1 at 3–4).

D. THE FEBRUARY 18 MEMORANDUM

On February 18, 2021, five days before the preliminary injunction was signed in Texas I, ICE Acting Director Tae D. Johnson issued the February 18 Memorandum to all ICE employees. (Dkt. No. 1-2). The February 18 Memorandum became "effective[] immediately" and controls to the extent it conflicts with the January 20 Memorandum. (Id. at 2). Designed to implement Section B of the January 20 Memorandum,[11] the February 18 Memorandum broadly delineates six "revisions":

[11] The January 20 Memorandum provides that "the Acting Director of ICE shall issue operational guidance on the implementation of these priorities." (Dkt. No. 1-1 at 4).

> 1) authorization to apprehend presumed priority noncitizens in at-large enforcement actions without advance approval;
> 2) the inclusion of current qualifying members of criminal gangs and transnational criminal organizations as presumed enforcement priorities;
> 3) authorization to apprehend without prior approval other presumed priority noncitizens who are encountered during enforcement operations;
> 4) how to evaluate whether a noncitizen who is not a presumed priority nevertheless poses a public safety threat and should be apprehended;
> 5) the further delegation of approval authority; and
> 6) the importance of providing advance notice of at-large enforcement actions to state and local law enforcement.

(Id. at 2–3).

Relevant to this case, the February 18 Memorandum lists three "criteria defining cases that are presumed to be priorities." (Id. at 5). The first priority category is national security.

> A noncitizen is presumed to be a national security enforcement and removal priority if: 1) he or she has engaged in or is suspected of engaging in terrorism or terrorism-related activities; 2) he or she has engaged in or is suspected of engaging in espionage or espionage-related activities; or 3) his or her apprehension, arrest, or custody is otherwise necessary to protect the national security of the United States.

(Id.) (emphasis in original). The second priority category is border security.

> A noncitizen is presumed to be a border security enforcement and removal priority if: 1) he or she was apprehended at the border or a port of entry while attempting to unlawfully enter the United States on or after November 1, 2020; or 2) he or she > was not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020.

(Id.) (emphasis in original). And the final priority category is public safety.

> A noncitizen is presumed to be a public safety enforcement and removal priority if he or she poses a threat to public safety and: 1) he or she has been convicted of an aggravated felony as defined in section 101(a)(43) of the INA; or 2) he or she has been convicted of an offense for which an element was active participation in a criminal street gang, as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 521(a), or is not younger than 16 years of age and intentionally participated in an organized criminal gang or transnational criminal organization to further the illegal activity of the gang or transnational criminal organization.

(Id. at 5–6) (emphasis in original).

In addition to the three enforcement priorities, the February 18 Memorandum explains, "[o]fficers and agents need not obtain preapproval for enforcement or removal actions that meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases"—i.e., the three enforcement priorities—"beyond what existing policy requires and what a supervisor instructs." (Id. at 6). By contrast, preapproval is required for enforcement or removal actions that do not fall under the three enforcement priorities. (Id. at 7). But there are certain exceptions. The February 18 Memorandum, for example, posits that there are circumstances when "the demands of public safety will make it impracticable to obtain preapproval for an at-large enforcement action." (Id.). But this is "generally . . . limited to situations where a noncitizen poses an imminent threat to life or an imminent substantial threat to property." (Id.).

E. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The States filed this case on April 6, 2021. (Dkt. No. 1). In its six-count Complaint, the States allege the January 20 and February 18 Memoranda are unlawful because they violate:

1) the Administrative Procedure Act's ("APA") proscription of actions that are "not in accordance with law" and "in excess of . . . authority" by transgressing a statutory duty of DHS to detain certain individuals pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) (Count I) and 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(2) (Count II);[12]

2) the APA's proscription of actions that are "arbitrary [and] capricious" (Count III);[13]

3) the APA's requirement that agency rules be subject to notice and comment (Count IV);[14]

4) the Agreement between the States and DHS (Count V);[15] and

5) the Constitution's requirement that the President "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" (Count VI).

(Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 94–131).

On April 27, 2021, the States filed a Motion for Preliminary Injunction moving to enjoin the implementation and enforcement of the January 20 and February 18

Memoranda. (Dkt. No. 18 at 43). The Government filed a Response in opposition, (Dkt. No. 42), to which the States filed a Reply. (Dkt. No. 51). Several amicus briefs have also been filed in support of and in opposition to the Motion. (Dkt. No. 25); (Dkt. No. 48); (Dkt. No. 49). The Motion is now ripe for review.

II. JURISDICTION AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

Before addressing the merits, this Court must consider the threshold issues of whether the States have standing to bring this action and whether the APA allows this Court to review the Memoranda challenged by the States. The States contend they have standing, and their claims are reviewable. (Dkt. No. 18 at 35–40). The Government disagrees. (Dkt. No. 48 at 22–36). Based on the following, the Court finds the States have standing and their claims are reviewable.

A. STANDING

Article III of the Constitution confines judicial power to "Cases" and "Controversies." U.S. Const. art. III, § 2. "For a legal dispute to qualify as a genuine case or controversy, at least one plaintiff must have standing to sue." Dep't of Com. v. New York, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 139 S.Ct. 2551, 2565, 204 L.Ed.2d 978 (2019). A plaintiff has standing to sue only where it satisfactorily shows it "(1) suffered an injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendant, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision." Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 578 U.S. 856, ____, 136 S.Ct. 1540, 1547, 194 L.Ed.2d 635 (2016) (citing Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2136, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992); *FW/PBS, Inc. v. Cir. 2017). In short, injury, traceability, and redressability comprise the "irreducible constitutional minimum" of standing. Spokeo, 578 U.S. at ___, 136 S. Ct. at 1547 (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560, 112 S.Ct. at 2136).

Under certain circumstances, states like Texas and Louisiana are not "normal litigants." Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 518, 127 S.Ct. 1438, 1454, 167 L.Ed.2d 248 (2007). Where a state alleges a defendant violated a congressionally accorded procedural right which affected the state's "quasi-sovereign" interests, that state is afforded "special solicitude" in its quest to establish standing. Id. at 520–21, 127 S.Ct. at 1454–55; Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 151–55 (5th Cir. 2015) , aff'd by an equally divided court, ____ U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2271, 195 L.Ed.2d 638 (2016) (mem.) (hereinafter "Texas DAPA"). Specifically, a state armed with special solicitude can more easily satisfy the traceability and redressability elements of the traditional standing inquiry. Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 520–21, 127 S.Ct. at 1454–55; Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 151–55.

Here, the States assert they have standing under the traditional inquiry and because they are owed special solicitude. (Dkt. No. 18 at 35–37). The Government counters that the States fail all three prongs of the traditional inquiry, and they are not entitled to special solicitude because they do not assert a proper quasi-sovereign interest. (Dkt. No. 42 at 22–25 & n.5). Based on the following, the Court finds the States have satisfied the traditional inquiry and, regardless, are owed special solicitude which would satisfy any doubts.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1. Injury in Fact

The States' first task is to establish an injury in fact. A plaintiff satisfies that burden where it shows it suffered "an invasion of a legally protected interest" that is "concrete," "particularized," and "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Spokeo, 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1548 (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560, 112 S.Ct. at 2136). An alleged injury is sufficiently concrete if it is "de facto," meaning it "actually exist[s]" and is not merely "abstract." Id. (alteration added) (citations omitted). An alleged injury is sufficiently particularized if it "affect[s] the plaintiff in a personal and individual way." Id. (alteration added) (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 n.1, 112 S.Ct. at 2136 n.1). And lastly, an alleged injury is sufficiently actual or imminent, respectively, if the plaintiff suffers "continuing, present adverse effects" or demonstrates he "will soon expose himself to the injury" through "concrete plans" demonstrating his injury is "certainly impending." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 564 & n.2, 112 S.Ct. at 2138 & n.2 (emphases in original) (citations omitted).

The States assert the Memoranda will injure two basic interests: their financial interests and their interest as parens patriae in protecting their citizens from criminal aliens. (Dkt. No. 35–37). As it pertains to their financial interests, the States claim the Memoranda will require them to spend more on detention facilities and several public benefits and services. (Id. at 35–36). Regarding the States' interest as parens patriae, the States allege the Memoranda will result in an increase in crime from aliens within their borders, thus harming their citizenries' physical and economic well-being. (Id. at 37).

Case 2:21-cv-00067-Document 78 Filed on 08/19/21 in TXSD Page 23 of 26

The Government does not seriously refute the Memoranda will result in "a drop" in immigration enforcement actions. (Dkt. No. 42 at 23). Nor could it. For example, Texas has put forth undisputed evidence that, during just the first two months following the issuance of the January 20 Memorandum, ICE rescinded detainers for 68 aliens housed within Texas's detention facilities. (Dkt. No. 19-3 at 5). That's 68 more rescinded detainers than during the same period the year prior. (Id. at 3, 8) (showing no detainers were dropped from January 20, 2020, to March 20, 2020). Of note, the list includes aliens who were convicted of possessing over fifty pounds of a narcotic, manufacturing over 400 grams of methamphetamine, theft, intoxication assault with a vehicle, and the sexual assault of a child. (Id. at 6–7). And at least six had received a final order of removal. (Id. at 5). Importantly, current ICE officials "attribute" the Government's sharp decline in maintaining detainers "to the new 'enforcement priorities' established by the [M]emoranda during the Biden Administration."[16] (Dkt. No. 46 at ¶ 17).

Rather than challenge the suffocating effect of the Memoranda on federal detentions of criminal aliens, the Government counters that any drop in detentions is of

[16] This statement comes directly from the Chief of Staff of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice. (Dkt. No. 46 at 2). It is unclear whether the "ICE officials" quoted by the Chief of Staff made this statement in a capacity excluding the statement from the rule against hearsay. See Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2). But even if hearsay, this Court may rely on the statement at the preliminary injunction phase. See Sierra Club, Lone Star Chapter v. FDIC, 992 F.2d 545, 551 (5th Cir. 1993) ("[A]t the preliminary injunction stage, the procedures in the district court are less formal, and the district court may rely on otherwise inadmissible evidence, including hearsay evidence."). The Government has made no showing that this testimony is otherwise unreliable, and the Court finds none itself. Rather, the sworn affidavit from the Chief of Staff under penalty of perjury possesses sufficient indicia of reliability as to the statement of the ICE officials. The Court therefore accepts as fact, at the preliminary injunction phase, the testimony of the Chief of Staff regarding the statement of current ICE officials.

no real consequence to the States. It argues, even if the Memoranda cause detentions to decline, the States' theories of injury rely on a "speculative chain of events involving independent actions by third parties." (Dkt. No. 42 at 23). Specifically, the Government asserts the States would incur increased financial expenses and exposure to crime only if two conditions are satisfied: (1) the aliens who would have otherwise been detained commit crimes or choose to use public benefits and services; and (2) those aliens do so at a higher rate than the noncitizens who are removed as a result of the Memoranda. (Id. at 23–24).

The Government's concern over the causal chain of events involving third-party action is noteworthy but out-of-turn. These concerns pertain to the "fairly traceable" prong of the traditional standing inquiry. See Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2565–66 (finding "traceability . . . satisfied" where the plaintiffs' theory "relies . . . on the predictable effect of Government action on the decisions of third parties"); Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 156–60 (finding a plaintiff–state's financial injury was "fairly traceable" to the independent conduct of third-party aliens); see also California v. Texas, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 141 S.Ct. 2104, 2116–17 (2021) (finding "an individual's decision to enroll [in] Medicaid" was not "fairly traceable" to the Affordable Care Act's "minimum essential coverage provision" (alteration added)). Therefore, although the Government's third-party causation concerns will need to be addressed, the Court reserves its analysis on those issues for discussion of the traceability of the States' alleged injuries. For now, the Court inquires whether the States have presented a cognizable injury to their financial interests or interests as parens patriae. See also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 564 & n.2, 112 S.Ct. at 2138 & n.2

(explaining "imminence" is shown where a plaintiff "will soon expose himself to the injury" through "concrete plans" demonstrating his injury is "certainly impending" (emphases in original) (citations omitted)); cf. Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2565 (sidestepping the reliance of the plaintiff-states' "future" injuries upon independent decisions of third-party aliens to underreport in a census and holding the injuries were sufficiently "concrete and imminent" because the plaintiff–states demonstrated, "if noncitizen households are undercounted by as little as 2%[,] . . . they will lose out on federal funds that are distributed on the basis of state population" (emphasis added)). They have.

a. Financial Injuries

Between the States, Texas marshals the lion's share of state-specific evidence concerning injury. Compare (Dkt. Nos. 19-5–19-9) with (Dkt. No. 19-12). The Court therefore focuses its attention on Texas's evidence. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 155 (same). Texas's alleged financial injury affects three categories of its public fisc: Texas's detention system, public education services, and healthcare-related costs. (Dkt. No. 18 at 35–36). Texas asserts that in these three categories it will incur unanticipated costs due to the "rushed implementation" of the Memoranda which "deprived [it] of the ability to adjust[] [its] policies in light of the federal shift." (Id. at 41).

To begin, Texas has alleged injury to a legally protected interest. See Spokeo, 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1548. Texas complains it will incur additional costs to its public fisc because of an unlawful and sudden shift in federal immigration policy. (Dkt. No. 18 at 35). Theories of injury to state or local financial interests predicated on the actions of the federal government are not novel. See, e.g., Clinton v. City of N.Y., 524 U.S. 417, 430–31, 118 S.Ct. 2091, 2099, 141 L.Ed.2d 393 (1998) (finding sufficient for standing purposes a local government's claim to suffering injury to its "borrowing power, financial strength, and fiscal planning"); Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 152–53 (finding sufficient for standing purposes several states' claims to suffering injury to their public fiscs); see also Sch. Dist. of City of Pontiac v. Sec'y of the U.S. Dep't of Educ., 584 F.3d 253, 261–62 (6th Cir. 2009). And such financial harm is particularly acute in the context of federal immigration enforcement, where states have "an interest in mitigating the potentially harsh economic effects of sudden shifts in population." Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202, 228, 102 S.Ct. 2382, 2400, 72 L.Ed.2d 786 (1982) (emphasis added); see id. at n.23 (explaining, because the Constitution deprives states of any "direct interest in controlling entry into this country, . . . unchecked unlawful migration might impair the State's economy generally, or the State's ability to provide some important service"); Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 152–54; see also Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 397, 132 S.Ct. 2492, 2500, 183 L.Ed.2d 351 (2012) (acknowledging states "bear[] many of the consequences of unlawful immigration"); DHS v. Regents of the U. of Cal., ____ U.S. ____, ____, 140 S.Ct. 1891, 1913, 207 L.Ed.2d 353 (2020) (finding a sudden shift in the government's immigration policy was arbitrary and capricious in part because the government "failed to address whether there was legitimate reliance" on the former immigration policy (quotation omitted)). In sum, the financial injuries incurred by states from "sudden shifts" in their population due to federal immigration policies are not nebulous. Plyler, 457 U.S. at 228, 102 S.Ct. at 2400. Rather, they are among the "serious and well recognized" vintage of legally protected interests. Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 521, 127 S.Ct. at 1455. By requesting equitable relief from the impact of the Memoranda on its public fisc, then, Texas appropriately seeks judicial shelter.

The remaining inquiries as to Texas's alleged financial injury concerns whether it is sufficiently concrete, particularized, and actual or imminent. Spokeo, 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1548. The Government does not contest that Texas's alleged injury is particularized to Texas, and the Court finds that it is. Texas can therefore establish an injury in fact for its financial injury if it is both concrete and actual or imminent.

Texas asserts a financial injury in the form of added costs to its detention system. Texas states the Memoranda will lead to an unanticipated rise in criminal activity from aliens the federal government would otherwise detain. (Dkt. No. 18 at 15–16, 35–36). On average, Texas spends $62.34 per day per inmate in its detention facilities. (Dkt. No. 19-6 at 3–4). In 2018, Texas detained 8,951 criminal aliens for a total of 2,439,110 days, costing $152,054,117.[17] (Id.). If even one alien not detained due to the Memoranda recidivates, Texas's costs "will increase" in accordance with its current cost per inmate. (Id. at 4); cf. Dep't. of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2565.

The Court finds Texas's claimed injury from unanticipated detention costs is sufficiently concrete and imminent. The harm is concrete because Texas incurs real financial costs in detaining criminal aliens. And the harm is imminent because Texas

[17] As the Court discusses infra, the federal government reimbursed Texas for a miniscule fraction of its costs for detaining criminal aliens as part of a statutorily mandated program that seeks to help states with the burden of incarcerating criminal aliens. See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A).

currently operates a detention system holding criminal aliens and plans to continue doing so in the future.[18]

b. Parens Patriae Injury

In addition to its financial injury, the States assert they have been injured in their interests as parens patriae. (Dkt. No. 18 at 37). The Government counters that the States are precluded from bringing a parens patriae action against the federal government. (Dkt. No. 42 at 24 & n.5). Based on the following, the Court concludes the States properly lay claim to a parens patriae injury.

"Parens patriae means literally 'parent of the country.'" Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, ex rel., Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 600, 102 S.Ct. 3260, 3265, 73 L.Ed.2d 995 (1982) (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 1003 (5th ed. 1979)). The concept derives from the English constitutional system. Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal., 405 U.S. 251, 257, 92 S.Ct. 885, 888, 31 L.Ed.2d 184 (1972). As that system developed, the Crown retained certain "duties and powers" referred to as the "royal prerogative." Id. (citation omitted). For example, as the "father of the country," the King served as the guardian of persons with legal disabilities. Id. (internal quotations omitted). When the United States achieved independence, "the prerogatives of the crown devolved upon the people of the States." Wheeler v. Smith, 50 U.S. (9 How.) 55, 78, 13 L.Ed. 44 (1850). That is, "[t]he State, as a sovereign," became "the parens patriae." Id. Like the King before them, the states were now responsible for acting "in the interests of humanity" and "for the prevention of injury to those who cannot protect themselves." Late Corp. of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. United States, 136 U.S. 1, 57, 10 S.Ct. 792, 808, 34 L.Ed. 478 (1890).

[18] Because the States have put forth sufficient evidence to demonstrate a concrete and imminent injury regarding Texas's detention costs and parens patriae, see infra II.A.1., the Court need not address the States' alleged financial injuries arising from unanticipated education and healthcare-related expenses.

Once vested in the states, the scope of a parens patriae action under American law "greatly expanded." Hawaii, 405 U.S. at 257, 92 S.Ct. at 889. The first such expansion is noteworthy. Coincidentally, in a previous dispute between the States in this case, Louisiana sought through a parens patriae action to enjoin Texas from continuing a trade embargo that was allegedly injuring Louisiana's economy. Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U.S. 1, 3–4, 11–12, 20 S.Ct. 251, 251–52, 254, 44 L.Ed. 347 (1900). Texas's lead health official had cinched the spigot on all commerce flowing between the city of New Orleans and the State of Texas "under the guise of a quarantine against yellow fever." Id. at 11, 20 S.Ct. at 254. A standing issue arose because Louisiana had simultaneously invoked the Supreme Court's original jurisdiction, which required a "controversy arising directly between" the states as sovereigns, and asserted an interest as parens patriae, which had traditionally been a tool for a state to vindicate "the grievances of particular individuals" within its borders. Id. at 16, 20 S.Ct. at 256. To reconcile this seeming conflict, the Court determined Louisiana had properly stated an interest as parens patriae in protecting "her citizens at large" from economic harm due to Texas's quarantine regulations. Id. at 19, 20 S.Ct. at 257. This interest, reasoned the Court, stemmed in part from the fact that Louisiana, as a state, held no right under the Constitution to regulate "the freedom of interstate commerce." Id. Although the Supreme Court ultimately held Louisiana lacked standing for other reasons, id. at 22–23, 20 S.Ct. at 258–59, the case is considered the first to expand the notion of parens patriae to a state's interest in protecting its citizens' interests broadly. See Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602, 102 S.Ct. at 3266.

Perhaps unsurprisingly, the concept of a parens patriae action to vindicate the rights of a state's citizens-at-large proved popular. See id. at 603, 102 S.Ct. at 3266–67 (listing cases brought by various states during the early 20th century). And not long after Louisiana v. Texas, Justice Holmes referred to a state's interests in such broader matters as "quasi-sovereign" interests. See Georgia v. Tenn. Copper Co., 206 U.S. 230, 237, 27 S.Ct. 618, 619, 51 L.Ed. 1038 (1907). The term stuck. See, e.g., North Dakota v. Minnesota, 263 U.S. 365, 374, 44 S.Ct. 138, 139, 68 L.Ed. 342 (1923); Georgia v. Pa. R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 447, 450, 65 S.Ct. 716, 721, 722, 89 L.Ed. 1051 (1945). And before long, the doctrine evolved to the point that the Supreme Court determined quasi-sovereign interests to be not simply a branch of traditional parens patriae actions, but the sine qua non of parens patriae actions. See Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602, 102 S.Ct. at 3266. ("[T]o have [parens patriae] standing, the State must express a quasi-sovereign interest[.]" (alteration and emphasis added)).

But lending this workable term to the abstract concept of a state's interest in its citizenry did not resolve all questions regarding parens patriae standing. Namely, the referent "quasi-sovereign interest," without more, proved useless in settling whether a state's injury is sufficiently "concrete" for purposes of Article III standing. Id. After all, a quasi-sovereign interest itself is nothing more than a "judicial construct" that does "not lend itself to a simple or exact definition." Id. at 601, 102 S.Ct. at 3265. On its surface, the term clearly was crafted to help distinguish from a state's "sovereign interests, proprietary interests, or private interests." Id. at 602, 102 S.Ct. at 3266. And an inch deeper, the term represented "a set of interests that the State has in the well-being of its populace." Id. But those broad contours alone, absent further granularity, "risk[ed] being too vague to survive the standing requirements" of the Constitution. Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Recognizing this concreteness issue, the Supreme Court in Alfred L. Snapp & Son took it upon itself to hammer out, as best it could, the notion of a quasi-sovereign interest. 458 U.S. 592, 102 S.Ct. 3260. While at once conceding that "the articulation of such interests is a matter for case-by-case development," the Supreme Court nevertheless provided "two general categories" into which characteristics of a true quasi-sovereign interest may fall.

"First, a State has a quasi-sovereign interest in the health and well-being—both physical and economic—of its residents in general. Second, a state has a quasi-sovereign interest in not being discriminatorily denied its rightful status within the federal system." Id. at 607, 102 S.Ct. at 3269. Regarding the first category, the Supreme Court further elaborated, "[o]ne helpful indication in determining whether an alleged injury to the health and welfare of its citizens suffices to give the state standing to sue as parens patriae is whether the injury is one that the state, if it could, would likely attempt to address through its sovereign lawmaking powers." Id. And regarding the latter, the Supreme Court explained, "federal statutes creating benefits or alleviating hardships create interests that a State will obviously wish to have accrue to its residents." Id.

Building on this rubric, the Fifth Circuit has concluded that a state's claim to a "quasi-sovereign" interest for standing purposes is sufficient when the state seeks to "protect[] its citizens from criminal activity." Castillo v. Cameron County, 238 F.3d 339, 351

(5th Cir. 2001) (citing Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602, 102 S.Ct. at 3260). In Castillo, Texas sought to overturn a federal district court's injunction which permitted a local County Sheriff to refuse to incarcerate alleged parole violators to reduce the county's jail population. 238 F.3d at 343–47. To prove standing in that circumstance, Texas was required to show, among other things, it had a "personal stake" in the outcome. Id. at 350–51. The panel held that Texas satisfied this showing in part by alleging a valid quasi-sovereign interest in protecting its citizens from criminal activity. Id. at 351. As a result of the injunction, the panel explained, "parole violators who should be incarcerated remain[ed] free, potentially increasing the level of criminal activity." Id. Although fully aware that "the concept of quasi-sovereign standing 'risks being too vague to survive the standing requirements of Article III,'" the panel found that Texas's interest in protecting its citizens from increased criminal activity "[fell] within the category of 'a quasi-sovereign interest in the health and well-being—both physical and economic—of its residents in general.'" Id. (quoting Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602, 102 S.Ct. 3260).

Bearing these principles in mind, the Court now turns to the States' basis for parens patriae standing in this case. The States assert a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizens' physical and economic well-being "from crime caused by [the Government's] failure to detain criminal aliens." (Dkt. No. 18 at 37). As it pertains to "criminal activity" in general, Castillo resolves that the States here possess a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizens. 238 F.3d at 351.

As it pertains to the criminal activity of "aliens" specifically, the States' interests are perhaps stronger than the circumstances presented in Castillo. Whereas in Castillo the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

State of Texas sought to protect its citizens from criminal activity in an area of law over which the State retained extensive authority—the procedure for detaining alleged parole violators—here the States retain no authority over the detention of criminal aliens upon their release from state prison and during the pendency of their removal proceedings. That is, the injury to the States' quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizens from criminal aliens is especially severe here because the States' hands are tied, in effect, when it comes to federal immigration policy. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 (conferring upon Congress the Power "[t]o establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization"); Arizona, 567 U.S. at 394–95, 132 S.Ct. at 2498 (holding that a state law "authorizing state officers to decide whether an alien should be detained for being removable . . . violates the principle that the removal process is entrusted to the discretion of the Federal Government" (citations omitted)).

By seeking relief for an injury to their populace from which they have no constitutional mode of recourse, the States align themselves with the rationale employed by the Supreme Court to support the first expansion of parens patriae standing in Louisiana v. Texas. Just as Louisiana once sought "vindication of the freedom of interstate commerce" that was "not committed" to it by the Constitution, here the States seek protection from an effect of a federal immigration policy that the States possess no constitutional authority to change.[19] Louisiana, 176 U.S. at 19, 20 S.Ct. at 257; see also Snapp, [19] The fact that an expansion of parens patriae to citizens-at-large in Louisiana v. Texas was determined in a case involving the Supreme Court's original jurisdiction does not restrict the scope of quasi-sovereign interests in non-original jurisdiction cases. If anything, the opposite is (continue)

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

458 U.S. at 608, 102 S.Ct. at 3269. Accordingly, the Court holds that the States possess a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizens-at-large from the criminal activity of aliens subject to mandatory detention under federal law.

The Government contends that the States nevertheless are barred from bringing a parens patriae action "against the federal government." (Dkt. No. 42 at 24). For this proposition the Government relies exclusively upon Massachusetts v. Mellon, where the Supreme Court denied parens patriae standing to a state suing the federal government to protect its citizens from the "operation of" a federal statute called the Maternity Act. 262 U.S. 447, 479, 485–86, 43 S.Ct. 597, 598, 600, 67 L.Ed. 1078 (1923). A critical feature of the Supreme Court's rationale was that the state had not identified any "rights of the state falling within the scope of the judicial power," such as "quasi sovereign rights." Id. at 485, 43 S.Ct. at 600. These twin aspects of Mellon—the challenge to the "operation of federal statutes" and the state's lack of an identifiable "right"— were later acknowledged by the Supreme Court as the defining characteristics of its bar on parens patriae actions vis-à-vis the federal government. See Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 520 n.17, 127 S.Ct. at 1455 n.17; Georgia, 324 U.S. at 447, 65 S.Ct. at 721 (holding that Georgia could bring a parens patriae action to protect a quasi-sovereign interest because, unlike Mellon, it did not seek "to protect her citizens from the operation of federal statutes" and it possessed "rights . . . based on federal [anti-trust] laws" (emphasis added)). And a long train of federal courts true. See Snapp, 458 U.S. at 603 n.12, 102 S.Ct. at 3267 n.12; id. at 611–12, 102 S.Ct. at 3270–71 (Brennan, J., concurring) (explaining on constitutional grounds that the Court might be more "restrictive" as to the types of interests a state can assert in a parens patriae action when the Court's original jurisdiction is invoked as compared to typical federal suits).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

have applied or mirrored the Supreme Court's careful circumscription of Mellon to hold that a state may bring a parens patriae action against the federal government where it does not challenge the operation of a federal statute and it asserts a proper right. See, e.g., Texas v. United States, 328 F. Supp. 3d 662, 696–98 (S.D. Tex. 2018); See Texas v. United States, 86 F. Supp. 3d 591, 625–28 (S.D. Tex. 2015), aff'd, 809 F.3d 134 (5th Cir. 2015), aff'd by an equally divided court, ____ U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2271, 195 L.Ed.2d 638 (2016) (mem.); New York v. Sebelius, No. 1:07-cv-1003, 2009 WL 1834599, at *12–13 (N.D.N.Y. June 22, 2009); Puerto Rico Pub. Hous. Auth. v. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., 59 F. Supp. 2d 310, 326 (D.P.R. 1999); Kansas v. United States, 748 F. Supp. 797, 802 (D. Kan. 1990); City of New York v. Heckler, 578 F. Supp. 1109, 1122–25 (E.D.N.Y. 1984); Abrams v. Heckler, 582 F. Supp. 1155, 1159 (S.D.N.Y. 1984).

The parens patriae injury set forth by the States safely navigates this well-trodden distinction from the Mellon rule. The States do not challenge the operation of any federal statute. Rather, they primarily challenge the Executive Branch's putative refusal to enforce certain immigration statutes which, they claim, should benefit their citizenries. (Dkt. No. 1 at 21–24). The States allege that the Executive Branch's policy of non-enforcement infringes upon rights they derive from the APA. (Id. at 21–27). Specifically, the States claim that the federal government's policy creating a categorical refusal to enforce certain immigration statutes is an unlawfully withheld agency action, contrary to law, arbitrary and capricious, procedurally defunct, and constitutionally injurious. By asserting these federal statutory rights, the States have not presented this Court with "abstract questions of political power." Cf. Mellon, 262 U.S. at 485, 43 S.Ct. at 600. Rather, the States have demonstrated concrete injuries to their quasi-sovereign interests as parens patriae. See Castillo, 238 F.3d at 351; see also Snapp, 458 U.S. at 608, 102 S.Ct. at 3269; Louisiana, 176 U.S. at 19, 20 S.Ct. at 257; see also Texas, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 697–98 (finding the state had "demonstrated a concrete injury to its quasi-sovereign interest in the economic well-being of its citizens" in a parens patriae action against the federal government (quotation omitted)). The Court therefore concludes that the States have demonstrated a cognizable parens patriae injury.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2. Traceability

The States must next establish a "fairly traceable link" between their injuries and the Government's allegedly unlawful action. They can establish this link with "no more than de facto causality." Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2566 (quoting Block v. Meese, 793 F.2d 1303, 1309 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (Scalia, J.)). That is to say, a federal plaintiff need not demonstrate that the defendant's actions are "the very last step in the chain of causation." Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 169–70, 117 S.Ct. 1154, 1164, 137 L.Ed.2d 281 (1997); see also Davis v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 554 U.S. 724, 734–35, 128 S.Ct. 2759, 2769, 171 L.Ed.2d 737 (2008).

Both States' injuries depend on the future behavior of criminal aliens whom the Government would otherwise detain. Regarding Texas's detention costs injury, the States argue the Memoranda will cause a significant number of criminal aliens who otherwise would have been detained by the federal government to be detained again or longer in Texas. (Dkt. No. 18 at 16, 18, 35–37). Regarding the States' parens patriae injury, the States urge that the Memoranda will lead to a significant number of criminal aliens who would otherwise have been detained by the federal government causing harm—both physical and economic—to their respective citizenries. (Id. at 37). Thus, at their core, both States' injuries depend upon criminal aliens behaving unlawfully in the future.

The Government contends that whether the aliens who would have otherwise been taken into custody will commit crimes is speculative. (Dkt. No. 42 at 23). The Government further contends that, even if the States can make this showing, they must also prove that those aliens would commit crimes at a higher rate than the aliens who are removed because of the Memoranda. (Id.).

Regarding the Government's first concern, the Supreme Court has traditionally denied standing wherever the traceable link between the government's action and the plaintiff's injury depends in part on the future behavior of third parties. See Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 413, 133 S.Ct. 1138, 1150, 185 L.Ed.2d 264 (2013) ("[W]e have been reluctant to endorse standing theories that require guesswork as to how independent decisionmakers will exercise their judgment."). This tradition is especially firm where, as here with the States' asserted injuries, it is alleged that the third parties' future behavior will be unlawful. See City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 105, 103 S.Ct. 1660, 1666–67, 75 L.Ed.2d 675 (1983).

That said, the Supreme Court embraces standing theories dependent on third parties' future behavior under certain circumstances. In Department of Commerce, for instance, the Supreme Court traced a governmental action to aliens' future unlawful behavior where evidence established a likelihood that aliens have "historically" behaved in a certain manner. ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2566. This type of evidence, the Supreme Court concluded, demonstrated that traceability was not "mere speculation," but rather, the product of a "predictable effect of Government action on the decisions of third parties." Id. (citations omitted). Similarly, in Davis v. Federal Election Commission, the Supreme Court traced a governmental action to the future behavior of the plaintiff's political opponent where evidence showed that "most candidates" had behaved in a certain manner and there was "no indication" the opponent would do otherwise. 554 U.S. at 734–35, 128 S.Ct. at 2769; see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 156 (finding a traceable link between DAPA and aliens' likelihood of obtaining driver's licenses where driving was a "practical necessity" for residents of the state). From these cases, it becomes apparent that an injury may be traced through third-party behavior to governmental action where the plaintiff demonstrates individuals similarly situated to the third party have a propensity to engage in the relevant behavior.

Considering this principle, the link between the States' alleged harm and the Memoranda is virtually unassailable. As mentioned, the undisputed evidence demonstrates that the Memoranda are already causing a dramatic increase in the volume of criminal aliens released into the public. The States further present evidence suggesting that criminal aliens, as a group, have a strong propensity to recidivate. (Dkt. No. 18 at 15–16). Indeed, the States submit evidence from a Texas Sheriff's Office showing that a group of 209 recently held criminal alien inmates with detainers had a recidivism rate of 73.68%. (Dkt. No. 19-5 at 3). The States also submit a 2018 study from the United States Department of Justice's Bureau of Justice Statistics showing that state offenders generally recidivate at 44% within the first year following release, 68% within the first three, 79% within the first six, and 83% within the first nine. (Dkt. No. 19-20 at 1). And these weren't one-time recidivists. The same study shows, during the nine-year period following release, there were on average five arrests per released prisoner. (Id.).

This foregoing evidence confirms what the Supreme Court and Congress have long acknowledged: "deportable criminal aliens who remain[] in the United States often commit[] more crimes before being removed." Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1715 (citing Hearing on H.R. 3333 before the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 101st Cong., 1st Sess., 54, 52 (1989)); see also Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 713–14, 121 S.Ct. at 2511 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (warning of the "risk to the community posed by the mandatory release" of criminal aliens when accounting for "statistical studies showing high recidivism rates for released aliens").

These facts and precedents should come as no surprise to the Government. Congress and the Executive have long provided financial aid to states to ameliorate the strain criminal aliens place on state detention facilities. Through the State Criminal Alien Assistance Program ("SCAAP"), the federal government partially reimburses states for costs associated with detaining criminal aliens.[20] (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2–4). For example, in 2018 the federal government through SCAAP reimbursed Texas $14,657,739 of the total $152,054,117 Texas spent on detaining criminal aliens. (Id. at 4). Although amounting to less than 10% of Texas's actual costs in 2018, SCAAP payments demonstrate that the federal government has long acknowledged that states like Texas incur financial harm as a direct result of the unlawful behavior of criminal aliens.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In sum, the States present evidence of criminal alien and state felon recidivism through a Texas Sheriff and the DOJ's own dataset, Supreme Court precedent citing the congressional record making similar findings as to criminal aliens, and the existence of the SCAAP program. Considering this substantial evidence, the Court is not persuaded that the link between the States' injuries and criminal aliens being released is "speculative" as the Government suggests. The Court finds that criminal aliens "historically" recidivate. See Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2566.

Next, the Government asserts that the risk of criminal aliens committing further crimes is insufficient for the States to trace their injuries to the Memoranda. (Dkt. No. 42 at 23). Rather, the Government hypothesizes that "it is possible" the Memoranda's reprioritization "will result in a net reduction in crimes." (Id.). This argument fails in three respects.

First, evidence already in the record demonstrates that the Government is not just refusing to detain its newly deprioritized categories of criminal aliens, but even the "prioritized" variety. For instance, in Texas alone, some of the 68 individuals whose detainers were dropped were serving time for an "aggravated felony," a supposedly prioritized category. Compare (Dkt. No. 19-3 at 6–7) with 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) (defining "aggravated felony" under the INA).

Second, the Government provides no support for its contention that its enforcement of the prioritized categories of criminal aliens will exceed any decline in enforcement of the deprioritized categories. The Government's subjective belief cannot overcome the States' evidence demonstrating to the contrary.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT
MO-AG-22-0644-A-004004

Finally, even if the Government could demonstrate that increased enforcement in the prioritized categories might displace a drop in the total number of detained aliens resulting from the deprioritized categories, this "offset" would be irrelevant as a matter of law. The "standing analysis is not an accounting exercise." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 156 (internal quotation omitted). Absent a "tight[] nexus" between the alleged "benefits" and the "costs" of the Memoranda, there can be no "offset." Id. Here, other than what it noted in the Memoranda, the Government makes no showing that the resources it previously used for enforcement of the deprioritized categories are now being allocated to boost enforcement of the prioritized categories. And the evidence put forward by the States regarding a drop in enforcement actions—even for prioritized aliens—makes that "possibility" unlikely. Accordingly, there is no connection between the results of enforcement of prioritized categories and the results of enforcement of deprioritized categories.

The Court further notes that the number of aliens who would otherwise be detained in the entire United States is relevant to estimating the impact of the Memoranda on the States in this case. The Fifth Circuit made clear in Texas DAPA that injury to a state can flow from the fact that aliens are "free to move among states." 809 F.3d at 188. Indeed, the States proffer evidence showing that "more than 50,000 noncitizens moved into Texas from another U.S. State in 2019." (Dkt. No. 18 at 42) (citing Dkt. No. 19-21); see also (Dkt. No. 51 at 35) (citing Dkt. Nos. 19-21–19-23). Given the Fifth Circuit's acknowledgement of this interstate migration principle and the data provided by the States, the prospect that criminal illegal aliens falling within the deprioritized categories of the Memoranda who are not detained elsewhere in the Nation could move to the States' territories—thereby amplifying their injuries—is not mere "conjecture," as the Government posits. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 61).

Considering the foregoing, the Court holds that the States have established a traceable link between their injuries and the challenged Memoranda. The Memoranda are already leading to an increased volume of criminal aliens released into Texas who otherwise should have been detained by the federal government. Criminal aliens and state offenders have a demonstrable propensity to recidivate. The Memoranda will therefore cause a traceable injury to the States' financial and parens patriae interests.

3. Redressability

The States must next demonstrate that their requested relief would remedy their harm. The "redressability" element of the standing to sue doctrine requires a plaintiff to demonstrate "a substantial likelihood that the requested relief will remedy the alleged injury in fact." El Paso Cnty. v. Trump, 982 F.3d 332, 341 (5th Cir. 2020) (cleaned up). The States' request for relief does that.

The States request two forms of injunctive relief. First, they ask this Court to restrain the Government from "enforcing and implementing the policies described" in Section B of the January 20 Memorandum and the February 18 Memorandum. (Dkt. No. 18-1 at 2). This Court will refer to this requested relief as the "negative injunction." Second, the States ask this Court to order the Government to comply with "the mandatory duty" to "take into custody" and "detain" aliens covered by 8 U.S.C. §§ 1226(c)(1) and 1231(a)(2), respectively, and to "refrain from releasing" aliens covered by Section 1226(c)(1) except as permitted by Section 1226(c)(2). (Id.). The Court will refer to this requested relief as the "positive injunction." The positive injunction relates directly to the States' Count I claim that the Government is "unlawfully withholding and unreasonably delaying agency action" pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 706(1). (Dkt. No. 1 at 23). The States further seek to implement both the negative and positive injunctions nationwide. (Dkt. No. 18-1 at 2).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Assuming, as the Court must for purposes of standing, that the States are "correct on the merits of [their] claims," either form of requested relief is substantially likely to remedy the States' alleged injuries. Texas v. EEOC, 933 F.3d 433, 447 (5th Cir. 2019). Regarding the requested positive injunction, it is perhaps self-evident that an order compelling the federal government to take criminal aliens into custody and detain them pursuant to the relevant statutes would relieve the States from harm they anticipate from the criminal behavior of criminal aliens. Requiring an agency action, the withholding of which is causing injury, will logically alleviate that injury. Notably, the Government offers no clear argument to the contrary regarding the benefit of a positive injunction. (Dkt. No. 42 at 25).

But even if the Court were to grant only the requested negative injunction, then, too, the States are substantially likely to obtain reprieve. Namely, the federal government would be required to act in conformance with the standards set by Congress in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) as interpreted by this Court. The Government does not quibble with the notion that, under Congress's standards, the States' injuries would be redressed. Rather, the Government argues that, if the Memoranda are enjoined, the States are unable to show that "the resulting prioritization scheme" will "result in a decrease in crime levels" within the States' boundaries. (Dkt. No. 42 at 25) (emphasis added). The Government's argument misses the mark for two reasons.

First, this argument suggests the Memoranda were issued in a vacuum in which no prior policy concerning the detention of criminal aliens ever existed. Of course, such a suggestion is demonstrably false: the Government's own affidavits demonstrate that the United States has "had policies guiding such exercise since as early as 1909." (Dkt. No. 42-6 at 6); (Dkt. No. 42-5 at 8).

Second, the Court's concern over redressability in an APA case such as this cuts not to the executive-level policy which would be applied in the absence of the faulty one, but rather, whether Congress's express standards—both for the immigration laws challenged and the procedural standards allegedly discarded—if followed, would provide the States recourse. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 161. By nullifying the constraints flowing from the Memoranda's "prioritization," this Court would require that agency to return to or pursue a specific standard for exercising its discretion within the bounds set by Congress. The States have supplied evidence demonstrating that in times past, such an exercise of discretion led to significantly fewer criminal aliens who are not in custody and roaming their streets. (Dkt. No. 19-3 at 5). The Government's inability to refute this evidence is telling. It suggests that conformance with the strictures set by Congress in Sections 1226(c) or 1231(a)(2) as practiced prior to the issuance of the Memoranda would result in a reduction of the volume of criminal aliens moving freely within the interior of the States.

Accordingly, the Court finds that, regardless of which form it takes, the injunctions sought by the States would redress their injuries flowing from the Memoranda. The States have standing under the traditional inquiry.

4. Special Solicitude

Even if the States could not satisfy the traditional standing inquiry, they are entitled to special solicitude which also enables them to satisfy the standing requirement. The Supreme Court in Massachusetts v. EPA determined that states are owed special solicitude wherever they assert a congressionally bestowed procedural right and the governmental action at issue affects the state's quasi-sovereign interests. 549 U.S. at 519–20, 127 S.Ct. at 1454–55. The Fifth Circuit has acknowledged that the holding in Massachusetts applies to procedural claims under the APA. Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 152–55. Specifically, the Fifth Circuit in Texas DAPA granted the state special solicitude where it sought judicial review of an immigration policy memorandum which imposed "direct, substantial pressure" on a state's "lawmaking authority"—that is, pressure to change its laws subsidizing driver's licenses for aliens. Id.

The States are likewise owed special solicitude here. The States seek judicial review of immigration policy memoranda which they allege constitute final agency action, and they assert that the resulting policies cause injury to Texas's public fisc because its budget for detention facilities "has been set months or years in advance." (Dkt. No. 18 at 41). Additionally, and as discussed above, the States have shown they possess a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizenries from the unlawful activity of criminal aliens. The Government's sole argument in opposition is that special solicitude still requires an injury in fact. (Dkt. No. 42 at 24–25 n.7). But this argument falls short because, as detailed in this Memorandum Opinion and Order, see supra II.A.1., the States have demonstrated an injury in fact. Accordingly, the States have satisfied their burden to demonstrate they are entitled to special solicitude in the standing inquiry.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In Massachusetts, a state armed with special solicitude was permitted to establish causation between the EPA's decision not to regulate certain greenhouse gas emissions and the state's interest in protecting its physical territory. 549 U.S. at 523–24, 127 S.Ct. at 1456–57. As detailed above, the links between the States' injuries and the Memoranda here are not perceptibly frailer than in Massachusetts and likely are firmer. See also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 572 n.7, 112 S.Ct. at 2142 n.7 ("The person who has been accorded a procedural right to protect his concrete interests can assert that right without meeting all the normal standards for redressability and immediacy."). The States have standing under the special solicitude inquiry. Accordingly, the Court finds it has jurisdiction to consider the States' claims.[21]

[21] In sum, having concluded that the States have standing, the Court must exercise jurisdiction. See Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U.S. (6 Wheat.) 264, 404, 5 L.Ed. 257 (1821) (noting that federal courts "have no more right to decline the exercise of jurisdiction which is given, than to usurp that which is not given"); see also Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 126, 134 S.Ct. 1377, 1386, 188 L.Ed.2d 392 (2014) (resolving doctrinal tension that had developed with a federal court's "virtually unflagging" obligation to "hear and decide cases within its jurisdiction" (internal quotation omitted)).

B. JUDICIAL REVIEW

The Court must next determine whether the States' claims are reviewable before turning to the merits of the Motion. Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 128, 134 S.Ct. at 1387–88. In so doing, the Court narrows the focus to the States' APA claims. The APA imposes four general requirements that must be satisfied before a federal court can review agency action. See Bennett, 520 U.S. 154, 117 S.Ct. 1154. To start, no statute may bar judicial review. Id. at 175, 117 S.Ct. at 1167; 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1). Next, the new guidance outlined in the February 18 Memorandum must constitute a "final agency action." Bennett, 520 U.S. at 175, 117 S.Ct. at 1167; 5 U.S.C. § 704. Third, the new guidance must not be "committed to agency discretion by law." Bennett, 520 U.S. at 175, 117 S.Ct. at 1167; 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2). Finally, the States must show that their injuries are within the "zone of interests" to be protected by the statutes allegedly violated by the Government. Bennett, 520 U.S. at 163, 117 S.Ct. at 1161; 5 U.S.C. § 702. The Court finds that the States have met each of these requirements.

1. Statutory Bars to Judicial Review

Under the APA, an action may not proceed when another statute precludes judicial review. 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1). With respect to immigration, Congress enacted "many provisions . . . aimed at protecting the Executive's discretion from the courts[.]" Reno v. Am.-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm., 525 U.S. 471, 486, 119 S.Ct. 936, 945, 142 L.Ed.2d 940 (1999). Banking on this, the Government contends that Sections 1252, 1231(h), and 1226(e) protect the Executive Branch's discretion from the States' claims before this Court. (Dkt. No. 42 at 30–35). The Court will address each in turn.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

First, the Government makes the same arguments it articulated in Texas I that 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(5) and (b)(9) bar judicial review of the States' APA claims. (Id. at 30–31); see also (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 27).[22] The States disagree arguing that the provisions are irrelevant to this case because they apply "only with respect to review of an order of removal under subsection (a)(1)." (Dkt. No. 51 at 27–28) (quotations omitted). As in Texas I, the Court agrees with the States and incorporates by reference its decision on the issue in that case. ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *29–30 & n.42; see also Nielsen v. Preap, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 139 S.Ct. 954, 962, 203 L.Ed.2d 333 (2019) (holding that Section 1252(b)(9) does not preclude judicial review of respondents' challenge to the Government's detention authority under Section 1226 because respondents "are not asking for review of an order of removal; they are not challenging the decision to detain them in the first place or to seek removal as opposed to the decision to deny them bond hearings; and they are not even challenging any part of the process by which their removability will be determined" (quotations omitted)); J.E.F.M. v. Lynch, 837 F.3d 1026, 1031 (9th Cir. 2016) ("[W]hile [Sections 1252(a)(5) and 1252(b)(9)] limit how immigrants can challenge their removal proceedings, they are not jurisdiction-stripping statutes that, by their terms, foreclose all judicial review of agency actions. Instead, the provisions channel judicial review over final orders of removal to the courts of appeals." (emphases added)).

[22] Section 1252(a)(5) provides in relevant part: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law (statutory or non-statutory), including section 2241 of Title 28, or any other habeas corpus provision, and sections 1361 and 1651 of such title, a petition for review filed with an appropriate court of appeals in accordance with this section shall be the sole and exclusive means for judicial review of an order of removal entered or issued under any provision of this chapter, except as provided in subsection (e)." 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(5).

Section 1252(b)(9) states in part: "Judicial review of all questions of law and fact, including interpretation and application of constitutional and statutory provisions, arising from any action taken or proceeding brought to remove an alien from the United States under this subchapter shall be available only in judicial review of a final order under this section." 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9).

Next, the Government, again repeating its stance in Texas I, argues that any of the States' claims brought under Section 1231 are precluded from judicial review by Subsection (h). (Dkt. No. 42 at 34); see also (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 30–32). Section 1231(h) provides that "[n]othing in this section shall be construed to create any substantive or procedural right or benefit that is legally enforceable by any party against the United States or its agencies or officers or any other person." 8 U.S.C. § 1231(h). In this case, the Government rehashes its prior argument in Texas I that the meaning of "party" in Section 1231(h) includes the States. This time around, it argues that because Black's Law Dictionary defines the word "party" as "one by or against whom a lawsuit is brought," the Court was in error when it concluded that "party" in that section narrowly means "alien in a removal proceeding." (Id. at 34–35); see also Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *23–28. For their part, the States unsurprisingly agree that the Court got it right the first time around and succinctly agrees with the Court's disposition. (Dkt. No. 51 at 28–29). The Court agrees with the States.

Although the Government is correct in arguing that "party" may have a broad dictionary definition, statutory construction is more complex. On the surface, the plain meaning of "party" in Section 1231(h)—even when accounting for the dictionary definition—could refer to (1) any party to the removal proceedings or (2) any party to any proceeding. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *24. This potential for multiple meanings of "party" in Section 1231(h) does not necessarily render the text ambiguous; if "all but one of the meanings" of the word party in Section 1231(h) can be "ordinarily eliminated by context," that remaining meaning is correct.[23] Deal v. United States, 508 U.S. 129, 132–33, 113 S.Ct. 1993, 1996–97, 124 L.Ed.2d 44 (1993) (superseded by statute on other grounds). The well-established process for interpreting a text with potential ambiguity focuses on "text, context, structure, and history." See Texas v. EPA, 983 F.3d 826, 836 (5th Cir. 2020). "Statutory language has meaning only in context." Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *24 (quoting Graham Cnty. Soil & Water Conservation Dist. v. U.S. ex rel. Wilson, 545 U.S. 409, 415, 125 S.Ct. 2444, 2449, 162 L.Ed.2d 390 (2005)). While a dictionary can illuminate the "core meanings of a term," "the meanings of common words (which typically have multiple definitions) must be determined in the context in which they appear." Texas, 983 F.3d at 837 n.2 (quoting Antonin Scalia & Bryan A. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 418–19 (2012)). In short, the Court in Texas I conducted an in-depth analysis of the term "party," the statute, and the history of the statutory scheme and, having done so, the Court determined that "party" in Section 1231(h) means "alien in a removal proceeding." See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *23–28. The Government has offered nothing to convince the Court that its analysis and conclusion in Texas I were in error.

[23] The Court in Texas I held that Section 1231(h) was unambiguous. ___ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *26 & n.4. Hence, the Court did not find Chevron deference applied to the Government's preferred interpretation of Section 1231(h). Id. The Court adopts that reasoning by reference here. The Court additionally notes that the Government, like in Texas I, fails to invoke any claim to Chevron deference with respect to Section 1231(h) in its Response to this Motion.

Thus, the Court adopts its prior reasoning and conclusion in Texas I with respect to Section 1231(h).

Lastly, the Government contends that Section 1226(e) bars the States' claims as they relate to Section 1226(c). (Dkt. No. 42 at 32–33). Section 1226(e) provides:

> The Attorney General's discretionary judgment regarding the application of this section shall not be subject to review. No court may set aside any action or decision by the Attorney General under this section regarding the detention or release of any alien or the grant, revocation, or denial of bond or parole.

8 U.S.C. § 1226(e). The Government insists that determinations under Section 1226(c) are discretionary because the federal government "may detain a noncitizen under § 1226—under either subsection (a) or subsection (c)—only 'pending a decision' on removal." (Dkt. No. 42 at 32). According to the Government, "[d]etention authority is thus contingent on the Secretary's separate, predicate, and discretionary decision to commence removal proceedings in the first instance, by issuing a notice to appear." (Id.) (citations omitted).

Voicing their disagreement, the States allege that Subsection (e) is irrelevant to the action since it applies only to discretionary decisions to detain individual aliens and not to lawsuits on the Government's detention authority. (Dkt. No. 18 at 39); (Dkt. No. 51 at 28). And because Section 1226(c) imposes a mandatory duty to detain, as the States argue, it follows that Section 1226(e) does not apply to Subsection (c). (Id.); see infra II.B.3.a. The Court agrees with the States.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Supreme Court has clearly stated that Subsection (e)'s limitation "applies only to 'discretionary' decisions about the 'application' of § 1226 to particular cases." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 962 (emphasis added). Section 1226(e), therefore, "does not block lawsuits over 'the extent of the Government's detention authority under the 'statutory framework' as a whole.'" Id. (quoting Jennings v. Rodriguez, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 138 S.Ct. 830, 841, 200 L.Ed.2d 122 (2018) (quoting Demore, 538 U.S. at 517, 123 S.Ct. at 1714)). Indeed, "Section 1226(e) . . . deals with challenges to operational decisions, rather than to the legislation establishing the framework for those decisions." Parra v. Perryman, 172 F.3d 954, 957 (7th Cir. 1999). So, for instance, Subsection (e) poses no hurdle for a respondent who challenges the statutory framework that permits his detention without bail under Section 1226. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 517, 123 S.Ct. at 1714. Section 1226(e) does not preclude challenges to the Government's alleged authority to detain certain aliens without a bond hearing under Sections 1225(b), 1226(a), and 1226(c). Jennings, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 839, 841. It also does not bar habeas corpus petitions. See Parra, 172 F.3d at 957. Further, Subsection (e) does not prevent plaintiffs from questioning whether the Government has the power under Section 1226(c) to detain certain aliens despite failing to detain the aliens immediately after they were released as required by Section 1226(c). Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 961–62; see also infra II.B.4. Thus, Section 1226(e) does not prohibit parties from "disput[ing] the extent of the statutory authority that the Government claims." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 962 (emphasis added).

Here, the States' claims against the Government clearly "dispute the extent of the statutory authority that the Government claims." See id. In their Complaint, the States allege the Government does not have any discretion under Section 1226(c) to determine whether certain aliens must be detained when released from custody. See (Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 35, 37–38, 94–101); see also (Dkt. No. 18 at 39). In effect, "the general extent of the Government's authority under § 1226(c) is precisely the issue here." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 962. Thus, "because the extent of the Government's detention authority is not a matter of 'discretionary judgment,' 'action,' or 'decision,'" this case "falls outside of the scope of § 1226(e)." Jennings, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 841.

Accordingly, the Court concludes Sections 1252(a)(5) and (b)(9), 1231(h), and 1226(e) do not preclude the States' claims. There are no statutory bars to reviewing these claims.

2. Final Agency Action

The Court next considers whether the enforcement priorities set forth in the January 20 and February 18 Memoranda constitute "final agency action" subject to judicial review. See 5 U.S.C. § 704 ("Agency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review."). "Under the APA, an aggrieved party may file suit in a federal district court to obtain review of any final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court." Nat'l Ass'n of Mfrs. v. Dep't of Def., ____ U.S. ____, ____, 138 S.Ct. 617, 626, 199 L.Ed.2d 501 (2018) (citing 5 U.S.C. § 704) (internal quotations omitted). The States and the Government agree on the standard used to determine whether an agency action is

"final." See (Dkt. No. 18 at 37–38); (Dkt. No. 42 at 26). That standard requires two conditions to be satisfied. See U.S. Army Corps of Eng'rs v. Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. 1129, ____, 136 S.Ct. 1807, 1813, 195 L.Ed.2d 77 (2016). "First, the action must mark the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process—it must not be of a merely tentative or interlocutory nature. And second, the action must be one by which rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow." Id. (citing Bennett, 520 U.S. at 177–78, 117 S.Ct. at 1168). The Parties disagree whether the Memoranda constitute final agency action. (Dkt. No. 18 at 37–38); (Dkt. No. 42 at 26–28). The Court finds that they do for the following reasons.

a. The Consummation of the Agency's Decision-Making Process

The first condition that must be satisfied for a court to find that an agency's action is final is that the action constitutes "the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process." Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1813. A consummation of this decision-making process is present when the action is "definitive [in] nature" rather than "advisory in nature." Id. The Court finds the Memoranda easily satisfy this condition.

As an initial matter, the text of the February 18 Memorandum indicates the Memoranda are the consummation of DHS's decision-making process. It states, "[t]his interim guidance is effective immediately." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2) (emphasis added). Moreover, the February 18 Memorandum states, "[i]t applies to all U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) Directorates and Program Offices, and it covers enforcement actions, custody decisions, the execution of final orders of removal, financial expenditures, and strategic planning." (Id.) (emphasis added). The immediacy and definite nature of the application of this guidance to all enforcement actions and custody decisions made by all ICE Directorates and Program Offices strongly suggest the agency's decision is final. See Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1813.

The Government attempts to overcome these indicia of final agency action by arguing "the Secretary retains the discretion to change or abandon these policies at any time[.]" (Dkt. No. 42 at 27). This argument stems from the February 18 Memorandum, which states, "[t]his interim guidance will remain in effect until Secretary Mayorkas issues new enforcement guidelines," which will occur "only after consultation with the leadership and workforce of ICE, U.S. Customs and Border Protection, and other Department of Homeland Security (Department) agencies and offices." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2). The Government's argument is unpersuasive. The mere fact that an agency says an action is not final because it maintains "discretion" to alter a policy is insufficient to render an action nonfinal. See Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1814 ("The Corps may revise an approved [jurisdictional determination] within the five-year period based on 'new information.' That possibility, however, is a common characteristic of agency action, and does not make an otherwise definitive decision nonfinal." (citation omitted)); Sackett v. EPA, 566 U.S. 120, 127, 132 S.Ct. 1367, 1372, 182 L.Ed.2d 367 (2012) ("The mere possibility that an agency might reconsider in light of 'informal discussion' and invited contentions of inaccuracy does not suffice to make an otherwise final agency action nonfinal.").

Here, the Government's insinuation that agency action is not final simply because the agency says so, would produce the absurd result of precluding judicial review of any policy that the agency says is not final. Indeed, if such a rule were followed, then an agency could avoid judicial review of its action in perpetuity simply by labeling its action as "interim" or "temporary" and stating that the agency maintains the ability to repeal or revise it in the future. In fact, this case demonstrates how an agency could potentially tie the judiciary's hands if the agency's action is not final simply because the agency says it is not.

In this case, the February 18 Memorandum took effect immediately upon issuance. (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2). The Memorandum states it would "remain in effect until Secretary Mayorkas issues new enforcement guidelines." (Id.). It also states Secretary Mayorkas "anticipate[d] issuing these guidelines in less than 90 days," meaning the new guidance would be issued before May 19, 2021. (Id.). But that did not happen. See (Dkt. No. 63 at 3–4). In fact, in a separate challenge to the February 18 Memorandum, the Government represented to the district court that it "currently expect[s] that the Secretary will issue new immigration priorities in the beginning of July." Arizona v. Dep't of Homeland Sec., No. 2:21-cv-00186-SRB, 2021 WL 2787930 (D. Ariz. June 7, 2021), Dkt. No. 85 at 2. Once again, the new guidance was not released. See (Dkt. No. 63 at 3–4). The Government now projects "the Secretary will issue new immigration enforcement priorities by the end of August or the beginning of September." (Dkt. No. 63 at 3–4). Notably, the Government "caution[s] that this is only [its] current expectation." (Id. at 4) (emphasis added). In other words, the Government's expectation could once again change, and the issuance of the new guidance could be delayed even longer. Thus, a purely subjective definition of nonfinality would be awfully convenient for the Government—but that is not what the law provides. Rather, because the agency-wide application of this guidance has an immediate and definite nature, it objectively demonstrates the agency's decision is indeed final. See Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1813. The Court therefore finds that the Memoranda satisfy the first condition.

b. Rights, Obligations, and Legal Consequences

The second condition that must be satisfied for a court to find that an agency's action is final is that the challenged action must be one by which rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow. See Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1813. The Government argues the Memoranda do not satisfy this condition because the Memoranda do not change DHS's legal obligation to enforce the law in the manner prescribed in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). (Dkt. No. 42 at 26–28). The Government also argues the Memoranda do not "change any person's legal status, confer any legal benefits, or have any 'legal consequences.'" (Id. at 27). Stated differently, the Government contends the Memoranda do not affect the rights or obligations of the States, aliens, or any other person or entity. In support, the Government points to the February 18 Memorandum, which states that the Memorandum does not "create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law." (Id. at 27) (citing (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 8)). But once again, what the Memoranda say and do are different. The Court finds the Memoranda satisfy the second condition.

First, the Government's assertion that the Memoranda do not alter DHS's legal obligations to detain certain aliens under Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) is demonstrably false. In deciphering the meaning of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) below, see infra

II.B.3.a., the Court goes to great lengths to discuss what obligations those statutory provisions create for DHS. In sum, Section 1226(c) obligates DHS to detain all aliens who fall within the ambit of that provision when they are "released" from state custody. Section 1231(a)(2) requires DHS to detain all aliens with final orders of removal "during the removal period."

The Memoranda require something quite different. Specifically, the February 18 Memorandum effectively substitutes a prioritization scheme in place of the enforcement mandates set forth in these statutory provisions. This new scheme creates two categories of aliens who are required to be detained: priorities and nonpriorities. See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4–7). It also sets forth a requirement that ICE agents obtain preapproval to detain aliens who are deemed nonpriorities. (Id. at 7). The plain meaning of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) allows for neither this specific prioritization scheme nor its preapproval process; they simply require DHS to detain all aliens described therein at a certain time or for a specific duration. Because the Memoranda require DHS to enforce the law in a different way than what Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) prescribe, the Memoranda constitute a change in DHS's legal obligations. Such a change weighs in favor of classifying the Memoranda as final agency action. See Texas, 86 F. Supp. 3d at 648–49 (finding that DAPA is a final agency action, in part, because "[a]s evidenced by the mandatory language throughout the DAPA Memorandum requiring USCIS and ICE to take certain actions, the Secretary's Directive clearly establishes the obligations of the DHS and assigns specific duties to offices within the agency").

Next, the Government contends the Memoranda do not alter the rights or obligations of the States or aliens in the country. The Court disagrees. Based on the record before the Court, the Memoranda affect Texas's legal obligation to provide Emergency Medicaid to certain noncitizens. "Emergency Medicaid is a federally required program jointly funded by the federal government and the states." (Dkt. No. 19-7 at ¶ 7) (emphases added). Illegal aliens are eligible to participate in this program. See (Id.); 8 U.S.C. § 1611(b)(1)(A). An alien in Texas who is eligible for Emergency Medicaid and presently in state custody can benefit from the program after being released.[24] Texas is therefore legally obligated to bear part of the cost of Emergency Medicaid for aliens who qualify for the program and are not detained by ICE after being released from state custody.

But as should be clear by now, not all aliens released from state incarceration are returned to society. And that is because of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Again, pursuant to Section 1226(c), DHS is required to detain all aliens who have committed certain serious offenses as soon as they are released from state custody. And per Section 1231(a)(2), DHS is required to detain certain aliens during their removal period. Instead, because of the Memoranda, DHS is no longer detaining all of these aliens as soon as they are released from state custody or during their removal periods. Texas will therefore have a legal obligation to share the cost of providing Emergency Medicaid to aliens who qualify for the program and, under the Memoranda, are not detained by ICE after being released from state custody.[25]

As for the rights of aliens, another district court has already concluded the Memoranda affect the rights of certain aliens presently detained. See Hussein S.M. v. Garland, No. CV 21-348 (JRT/TNL), 2021 WL 1986125, at *3 (D. Minn. May 18, 2021). As this Court noted in Texas I, "an [alien] who has been detained for six months may be entitled to release if 'it has been determined that there is no significant likelihood of removal in the reasonably foreseeable future.'" ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *31 (quoting Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 701, 121 S.Ct. at 2505). In Hussein S.M., a detained alien with a final of order of removal filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from detention. 2021 WL 1986125, at *1. The district court granted the petition, relying on the civil immigration enforcement priorities set forth in the

[25] The Court is also concerned that the Memoranda affect the States' legal obligation to provide a public-school education to certain noncitizens following their release from juvenile detention. For example, Texas is required by both federal and state law to provide noncitizen children with a public-school education. See generally Plyler, 457 U.S. 202, 102 S.Ct. 2382 (holding that a Texas statute that withheld state funds for educating children who were not "legally admitted" was unconstitutional); see also LeClerc v. Webb, 419 F.3d 405, 416 (5th Cir. 2005) ("In . . . Plyler, the [Supreme] Court employed a heightened level of rational basis review to invalidate a Texas law that denied primary public education to children of illegal aliens."); Texas v. United States, 106 F.3d 661, 666 (5th Cir. 1997) ("[T]he State's public education expenditures for the children of undocumented aliens are required by the equal protection clause[.]" (citing Plyler, 457 U.S. 202, 102 S.Ct. 2382)). This obligation would necessarily include juveniles released from the custody of the Texas Juvenile Justice Department ("TJJD") who are not detained by ICE because of the Memoranda. See (Dkt. No. 19-9 at ¶ 7) ("As Chapter 25, Texas Education Code, requires a child to attend school and as Plyler . . . prohibits denying undocumented children of illegal immigrants the right to attend public school, to the extent ICE does not take custody of non-citizen juveniles set to be released from TJJD custody, it is my understanding that those non-citizen juveniles who have not already received their General Educational Development or high school diploma attend Texas public schools after being released."). The Court is interested in further briefing on this issue at the next stage of this litigation.

January 20 Memorandum and later reaffirmed in the February 18 Memorandum. Id. at *3. Because the alien in Hussein S.M. did not fall within one of the priority groups, the district court found "his removal is unlikely to be imminent despite ongoing removal enforcement." Id. (emphasis added). In short, Hussein S.M. demonstrates the Memoranda directly affect an alien's right to be free from prolonged detention. The Court therefore concludes the Memoranda affect the rights of and have significant legal consequences for detained aliens with final orders of removal.

In sum, the Court finds the Memoranda are the consummation of DHS's decision-making process and determine certain rights and legal obligations. Therefore, the Court concludes the Memoranda constitute final agency action under Section 704 of the APA.[26]

3. Committed to Agency Discretion by Law

In determining whether an agency action is reviewable, the Court must also determine whether the "agency action is committed to agency discretion by law." 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2). Accordingly, the Court now inquires whether the implementation of the new guidelines found in the Memoranda is "committed" to the Government's discretion by law.

The APA embodies a "basic presumption of judicial review." Lincoln v. Vigil, 508 U.S. 182, 190, 113 S.Ct. 2024, 2030, 124 L.Ed.2d 101 (1993) (quoting Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 140, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 1511, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967)). But this is "just" a [26] A district court in Florida concluded the February 18 Memorandum is unreviewable under the APA because it did not constitute final agency action. Florida. v. United States, No. 8:21-CV-541-CEH-SPF, 2021 WL 1985058, at *9 (M.D. Fla. May 18, 2021). The Court respectfully disagrees with this conclusion for the reasons set forth herein.

presumption. Lincoln, 508 U.S. at 190, 113 S.Ct. at 2030. "'[R]eview is not to be had' in those rare circumstances where the relevant statute 'is drawn so that a court would have no meaningful standard against which to judge the agency's exercise of discretion.'" Id. at 191, 113 S.Ct. at 2031 (quoting Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 830, 105 S.Ct. 1649, 1655, 84 L.Ed.2d 714 (1985)). Where there is no meaningful standard to apply, "the statute ('law') can be taken to have 'committed' the decisionmaking to the agency's judgment absolutely." Lincoln, 508 U.S. at 191, 113 S.Ct. at 2031 (quoting Heckler, 470 U.S. at 830, 105 S.Ct. at 1655).

One category of administrative decisions that courts "traditionally have regarded as 'committed to agency discretion'" is relevant to this discussion. Id. (citation omitted). Namely, "an agency's decision not to institute enforcement proceedings." Id. (citing Heckler, 470 U.S. at 831, 105 S.Ct. at 1655–56). Non-enforcement decisions, however, are only "presumptively unreviewable." Heckler, 470 U.S. at 832–33, 105 S.Ct. at 1656. The Supreme Court has outlined a narrow but clear roadmap to overcoming that presumption and a second, less–traveled path. As for the first: "the presumption may be rebutted where the substantive statute has provided guidelines for the agency to follow in exercising its enforcement powers." Id. As for the second: it may be "justifiably . . . found that the agency has 'consciously and expressly adopted a general policy' that is so extreme as to amount to an abdication of its statutory responsibilities." Id. at 833 n.4, 105 S.Ct. at 1656 n.4 (quoting Adams v. Richardson, 480 F.2d 1159, 1162 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (en banc)). Although the Supreme Court has not (yet) found this latter type of "abdication," it has nevertheless instructed that any such inquiry should focus on "the statute conferring authority on the agency," which "might indicate that such decisions were not 'committed to agency discretion.'" Heckler, 470 U.S. at 833 n.4, 105 S.Ct. at 1656 n.4; see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 166–67.

In this case, the Government argues the States' claims are unreviewable because the new guidelines contained in the February 18 Memorandum are committed to agency discretion by law. More precisely, the Government argues: (1) the substantive statutes in question, Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), do not set out the specific mandatory duties the States assert, that is, the duty to detain certain aliens subject to those two sections; (2) even if these statutes establish mandatory duties, the new guidelines "simply establish[] enforcement priorities" since they do "not direct ICE officials to cease detaining any particular noncitizen subject to either § 1226(c) or § 1231(a)(2)"; and (3) assuming the first two arguments fail, the Executive Branch may, in effect, dispense with a congressional mandate because "[t]he exercise of prosecutorial discretion is inherent to the Executive power that the Constitution confers on the President." (Dkt. No. 42 at 28–30). Opposing the Government's suppositions, the States contend that, although the Government wields tremendous discretion in this area of immigration law, Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) limit this discretion by mandating the detention of certain aliens when they are released or during the removal period. (Dkt. No. 51 at 29–30). The Court now turns to each of these arguments.

a. Whether "Shall" Means "Must"

The Government first argues that "shall" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) does not impose any mandatory duties or guidelines for the Government to follow. The Court

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

disagrees. Under Section 1226(c), "the Attorney General shall take into custody" certain aliens who have either committed specified offenses or who are otherwise deemed deportable under the INA "when the alien is released" from custody. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) (emphasis added). Likewise, Section 1231(a)(2) provides, "the Attorney General shall detain the alien" "during [the alien's] removal period." 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2) (emphasis added).

Recent Supreme Court precedent establishes "shall" means "must" in these sections. In Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, the Supreme Court noted "detention is mandatory" during an alien's removal period, as prescribed by Section 1231(a)(2). ____ U.S. ____, ____, 141 S.Ct. 2271, 2281 (2021) (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)). And under Section 1226(c), "detention is mandatory and release is permitted in very limited circumstances" "[f]or certain criminal aliens and aliens who have connections to terrorism." Id. at ____ n.2, 141 S.Ct. at 2280 n.2 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)). In light of Guzman Chavez, it seems there is no dispute that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) are mandatory.

This is not surprising. Guzman Chavez's holding follows the well-established principle that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) mandate the detention of certain aliens at specific points in time. See Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 959 (finding under Section 1226(c) certain criminal aliens "must be arrested when 'they are released' from custody on criminal charges and . . . must be detained without a bond hearing until the question of their removal is resolved" (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)) (emphasis added)); Jennings, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 835 ("§ 1226(c) makes clear that detention of aliens within its Lucero*, 680 F.3d 375, 377, 381 (4th Cir. 2012) ("Section 1226(c) requires the mandatory federal detention, without the possibility of bond, of certain deportable criminal aliens 'when' those aliens are released from other custody." (emphases added)); Rodney v. Mukasey, 340 F. App'x 761, 764 & n.3 (3d Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (interpreting "shall" in Section 1231(a)(2) to mean the Attorney General "must" detain the alien for a certain period (emphasis added)); Khotesouvan v. Morones, 386 F.3d 1298, 1300 (9th Cir. 2004) (observing that, in Demore, the Supreme Court "approved the mandatory detention of a criminal alien during removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) even in the absence of an individualized finding that the alien was unlikely to appear for his removal hearing if released on bond" (emphasis added)); Prieto-Romero v. Clark, 534 F.3d 1053, 1059 & n.4 (9th Cir. 2008) (noting that detention under Section 1231(a)(2) is mandatory); Nyonton v. Brackett, No. 18-CV-481-PB, 2019 WL 1082203, at *2 (D.N.H. Mar. 7, 2019) (holding Section 1231(a)(2) is "crystal clear" in mandating the detention of aliens subject to Section 1231, especially with respect to individuals "who have been found inadmissible because of a controlled substance violation"); Louisaire v. Muller, 758 F. Supp. 2d 229, 235 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (explaining that, while Section 1226(a) provides ICE with the discretion to detain any alien pending a decision in removal proceedings, "[a]liens who have been convicted of certain enumerated offenses, however, including drug crimes . . . are subject to mandatory detention" pursuant to Sections 1226(c)(1)(B), 1227(a)(2)(B), and INA § 126(c) (emphasis added)).

Accordingly, the Court concludes, following Guzman Chavez and the foregoing overwhelming precedent, the word "shall" means "must" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Consequently, the Government is required to detain certain criminal aliens and aliens with final orders of removal at certain points in time to comply with those statutes.

Despite the Supreme Court's clear interpretation of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), the Government nevertheless argues that Guzman Chavez and, by extension, all other related court rulings are irrelevant here. The Government contends Guzman Chavez "did not address the Department of Homeland Security's discretion whether to detain individuals covered by 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) and 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)." (Dkt. No. 67 at 1). "Rather," according to the Government, Guzman Chavez "addressed under which authority certain individuals were detained and whether such individuals were entitled to bond hearings." (Id.). In short, the Government argues the Court should disregard Guzman Chavez's statements on Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)—and the numerous court holdings that precede Guzman Chavez—because those were not central to the case's holding and thus were dicta that need not be followed. The Court disagrees.

Guzman Chavez's treatment of Sections 1226 and 1231 were central to its holding. The case's key question was whether certain aliens could be released on bond while petitioning for relief from removal. That question was necessarily answered by analyses of both sections—analyses that included looking at the mandatory nature of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)'s detention provisions. The respondents in Guzman Chavez—aliens who were detained following their unlawful reentrance into the United States after previously being removed—sought release on bond while they were pursuing relief from removal. Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2280. The respondents argued that Section 1226, which generally conferred discretion to the Government to detain aliens, provided them an avenue to be released on bond. Id. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2283–84. However, the Government in that action contended that Section 1231, which mandates detention of aliens with orders of removal, applied to the respondents, effectively requiring their detention to be without bond. Id.; see also Brief for Petitioner, Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 2271 (2021) (No. 19-897), 2020 WL 4938065. The Supreme Court was thus required to determine which INA provision applied to the respondents. This task necessitated a finding as to whether, and in what circumstances, detention was mandatory under the relevant statutes. See Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2280–82.

Guzman Chavez ultimately held Section 1231 applies to the respondents since they had effectively been ordered removed through the reinstatement of their previous orders of removal. See id. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2287–91. In reaching this conclusion, the Supreme Court compared Section 1226, which, again, applies to the arrest and detention of an alien "pending a decision on whether the alien is to be removed from the United States," id. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2281, with Section 1231, which applies to an alien ordered removed, id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In the Supreme Court's discussion of Section 1226, it noted "DHS," pursuant to that provision, "may arrest and detain the alien," pending that alien's removal decision. Id. Such an alien "may generally apply for release on bond or conditional parole." Id. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court probed further, stating "there is one exception" to this general rule: for certain criminal aliens, "detention is mandatory" under Section 1226(c). Id. at ____ n.2, 141 S.Ct. at 2280 n.2 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)) (emphasis added). Like Section 1226(c)'s exception, the Supreme Court stated Section 1231's detention is "mandatory" precisely because of Section 1231(a)(2). Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2281 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)). Thus, Guzman Chavez's interpretation of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) as mandating detention was essential to the case's holding.

Tellingly, the Government itself admitted during briefing in Guzman Chavez that Section 1226(c) imposed a mandatory duty to detain certain criminal aliens.[27] The Government explained, although "Section 1226(a) makes detention discretionary," "a separate provision, Section 1226(c), makes an exception to that general rule, providing that the government 'shall' take into custody and not release certain criminal aliens." Brief for Petitioner, 2020 WL 4938065, at *5 (No. 19-897) (emphasis added). The Government also argued in its reply brief that the Supreme Court's "intervention" in Guzman Chavez would "determine[] whether Section 1226(c)—which provides for the mandatory detention of certain criminal aliens—applies to aliens who have reinstated orders of removal and are in withholding-only proceedings." Reply Brief for Petitioner, Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 2271 (2021) (No. 19-897) 2020 WL 3124376, at *7 (emphasis added). Likewise, with respect to Section 1231(a)(2), the Government stated it had "long read" the statute "to require the detention of terrorist and criminal aliens." Reply Brief for Petitioner, Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 2271 (2021) (No. 19-897) 2020 WL 7249055, at *17 & footnote (emphases added). Thus, in conjunction with Guzman Chavez, the Court takes the Government at its word and finds "shall" means "must" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) with respect to the detention of certain criminal aliens.

Second, even if the clear principles delineated in Guzman Chavez, Preap, Zadvydas, and the like are dicta, they are persuasive, nonetheless. As the Fifth Circuit has noted, "[i]t is well established in this circuit that, although we are 'not bound by dicta, even of [this court,] [d]icta of the Supreme Court are, of course, another matter.'" Peake v. Ayobami (In re Ayobami), 879 F.3d 152, 154 n.3 (5th Cir. 2018) (quoting Campaign for S. Equal. v. Bryant, 791 F.3d 625, 627 n.1 (5th Cir. 2015)).[28] Thus, the Court follows the Fifth Circuit [28] Likewise, the Eleventh Circuit concluded, "dicta from the Supreme Court is not something to be lightly cast aside." Schwab v. Crosby, 451 F.3d 1308, 1325 (11th Cir. 2006) (collecting cases with similar findings) (quoting Peterson v. BMI Refractories, 124 F.3d 1386, 1392 n.4 (11th Cir. 1997)). Indeed, "Supreme Court dicta have a weight that is greater than ordinary judicial dicta as prophecy of what that Court might hold," so this Court cannot "blandly shrug them off because they were not a holding." See United States v. Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d 1122, n.17 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (citations omitted). Other circuits agree. See McCoy v. Mass. Inst. of Tech., 950 F.2d 13, 19 (1st Cir. 1991) ("[F]ederal appellate courts are bound by the Supreme Court's considered dicta almost as firmly as by the Court's outright holdings, particularly when, as here, a dictum is of recent vintage and not enfeebled by any subsequent statement."); *United States v. and its sister circuits and defers to Guzman Chavez, Preap, Zadvydas, and other related Supreme Court precedent even if the statements on Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) in those cases were dicta, as the Government contends. The Court is not free to treat Supreme Court dicta as cavalierly as the Government suggests. Accordingly, the Court applies the caselaw discussed above and holds that the "shall" found in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) means "must," imposing on the Government a duty to detain certain criminal aliens and those with final orders of removal when released and during the removal period, respectively.

Arguments about dicta aside, the Court's own statutory interpretation of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) also leads to the conclusion that "shall" means "must" in those sections. See Scalia & Garner, supra, at 53 ("Every application of a text to particular circumstances entails interpretation." "The task of statutory interpretation begins and, if possible, ends with the language of the statute." Trout Point Lodge, Ltd. v. Handshoe, 729 F.3d 481, 486 (5th Cir. 2013). "When the language is plain, [the court] 'must enforce the statute's plain meaning, unless absurd.'" Id. (quoting In re Nowlin, 576 F.3d 258, 261–62 (5th Cir. 2009)); *see also BedRoc Ltd. v. (quoting Conn. Nat'l Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 253–54, 112 S.Ct. 1146, 1149, 117 L.Ed.2d 391 (1992))). "A statute is ambiguous if it is susceptible of more than one accepted meaning." United Servs. Auto. Ass'n v. Perry, 102 F.3d 144, 146 (5th Cir. 1996). Multiple accepted meanings do not exist merely because a statute's "authors did not have the forethought expressly to contradict any creative contortion that may later be constructed to expand or prune its scope." Moore v. Hannon Food Serv., Inc., 317 F.3d 489, 497 (5th Cir. 2003). Thus, as before, regarding interpreting Section 1231(h), the Court must initially determine whether "all but one of the meanings" of the word "shall" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) is "ordinarily eliminated by context." Deal, 508 U.S. at 132–33, 113 S.Ct. at 1996–97.

For this analysis, the Court applies "the traditional means of statutory interpretation, which include the text itself, its history, and its purpose." Bellum v. PCE Constructors, Inc., 407 F.3d 734, 739 (5th Cir. 2005) (citation omitted). Put differently, the Court must initially "look first to the word's ordinary meaning," Schindler Elevator Corp. v. United States ex rel. Kirk, 563 U.S. 401, 407, 131 S.Ct. 1885, 1891, 179 L.Ed.2d 825 (2011), since "[s]tatutory language has meaning only in context." Graham Cnty., 545 U.S. at 415, 125 S.Ct. at 2449 (citing Leocal v. Ashcroft, 543 U.S. 1, 9, 125 S.Ct. 377, 382, 160 L.Ed.2d 271 (2004)). Only "when traditional methods of statutory construction fail to reveal a provision's meaning" may the Court "conclude that it is ambiguous." Perry, 102 F.3d at 147.

"[T]he word 'shall' usually connotes a requirement." Maine Cmty. Health Options v. United States, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 140 S.Ct. 1308, 1320, 206 L.Ed.2d 764 (2020); see also Scalia & Garner, supra, at 112 ("When drafters use shall and may correctly, the traditional rule holds—beautifully."). The Supreme Court has nonetheless cautioned, "[a]s against the government, the word 'shall,' when used in statutes, is to be construed as 'may,' unless a contrary intention is manifest." Railroad Co. v. Hecht, 95 U.S. 168, 170, 24 L.Ed. 423 (1877).

This need for legislative intent to demonstrate "shall" should be construed as "must" against the government is present in Supreme Court jurisprudence. In Texas I, this Court identified Town of Castle Rock v. Gonzales, 545 U.S. 748, 125 S.Ct. 2796, 162 L.Ed.2d 658 (2005), a Supreme Court case upon which the Government relies, (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 82 at 19); (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 25–26, 34); (6:21-cv-16, Dkt. No. 42 at 36–38), as an apt example of the need for legislative intent to determine that "shall" connotes a requirement. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *33. In Castle Rock, the respondent claimed her due process rights were violated because a police department refused to enforce restraining orders despite language printed on the orders themselves stating that an "officer shall arrest" a restrained person where probable cause of a violation was evident. 545 U.S. at 754, 759, 125 S.Ct. at 2802, 2805. The Supreme Court, however, found "the presence of seemingly mandatory legislative commands" like "shall" could not automatically impose a "true mandate" against the police. Id. at 760–61, 125 S.Ct. at 2805–06. What was needed—and lacking in Castle Rock—was "some stronger indication" from the legislature. Id. at 761, 125 S.Ct. at 2806. Such an "indication" was not present because the "shall" used in the restraining orders was "not perceptibly more mandatory than" other state statutes using the word "shall" where the police force was traditionally accorded discretion. Id.; see also Chicago v. Morales, 527 U.S. 41, 61–62 n.32, 119 S.Ct. 1849, 1861 n.32, 144 L.Ed.2d 67 (1999) (noting that interpreting "shall" as mandatory in the context of police action "flies in the face of common sense that all police officers must use some discretion in deciding when and where to enforce city ordinances").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

With the foregoing in mind, this Court in Texas I previously explained how a "stronger indication" from Congress may be gleaned. In Richbourg Motor Co. v. United States and Escoe v. Zerbst, the Supreme Court noted one "indication" sufficient to conclude that the word "shall" in a statute imposes an obligation upon the Government is present when the statute's manifest purpose is to protect the public or private interests of innocent third parties. See Richbourg Motor Co. v. United States, 281 U.S. 528, 533–34, 50 S.Ct., 385, 387–88, 74 L.Ed. 1016 (1930); Escoe v. Zerbst, 295 U.S. 490, 494, 55 S.Ct. 818, 820, 79 L.Ed. 1566 (1935); see also Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *34. The Court finds it appropriate to reiterate its explanations of these cases here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In Richbourg Motor Co., the Supreme Court expressly found reason to avoid the rule in Hecht where a statute provided that an officer "shall" take possession of a vehicle used in the act of transporting liquor. 281 U.S. at 533–34, 50 S.Ct. at 387–88. After noting that the statute in question was "in form mandatory throughout," the Court explained it "detail[ed] . . . successive steps to be taken, which, if followed, [led] unavoidably to forfeiture under that section . . . , with the important consequence of protecting the interests of innocent third persons." Id. (emphasis added). These qualities of the relevant text, the Supreme Court explained, "suggests a definite purpose to make the protection effective" by imposing a mandatory duty. Id.

Five years after Richbourg Motor Co., the Supreme Court in Escoe concluded that any doubt regarding the mandatory nature of a statutory "shall" is "dispelled when we pass from the words alone to a view of ends and aims." 295 U.S. at 492–93, 55 S.Ct. at 819–20 (emphasis added). In Escoe, the relevant statute appeared to require a trial court to bring a probationer to court to revoke his probation. Id. The Supreme Court determined, because it was "[c]lear[] [that] the end and aim of an appearance before the court must be to enable an accused probationer to explain away the accusation," the presentment of the probationer was "necessary, or so the Congress must have thought, to protect the individual against malice or oppression." Id. at 493, 55 S.Ct. at 820. Thus, Escoe concluded the "shall" in the relevant statute was "mandatory in meaning as well as mandatory in form." Id. at 494, 55 S.Ct. at 820. Leaving no doubt, the Supreme Court stated, "[s]tatutes are not [optional] when to put them in that category would result in serious impairment of the public or the private interests that they were intended to protect." Id.; see also Ralpho

v. Bell, 569 F.2d 607, 627–28 & n.149 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (applying Escoe to "prefer a construction" of mandatory language in a statute guiding governmental officials' discharge of duties "that bestows the benefits of the Act on those for whom it was chiefly intended").

Given the caselaw, the key in this case is whether Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) demonstrate a purpose to protect public or private interests. If so, the word "shall," as used in both sections, would connote a requirement against the Government in the manner envisioned by Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe. Based on the following, the Court finds that the statutes do indeed demonstrate such a purpose.

The Supreme Court in Demore clearly explains that the purpose of Section 1226(c) was to protect third-party interests: that of the states, citizens, and legal immigrants of this country. Essentially, Section 1226(c) was enacted "against a backdrop of wholesale failure by the INS [ICE's predecessor] to deal with increasing rates of criminal activity by aliens." Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1714. "INS' near-total inability to remove deportable criminal aliens imposed" overpopulation in federal and state prisons, caused monetary costs, took away immigration opportunities that could have been provided to others, and increased crime in the Nation's communities. Id. at 518–20, 123 S.Ct. at 1714–15. Crucially, "Congress also had before it evidence that one of the major causes of the INS' failure to remove deportable criminal aliens was the agency's failure to detain those aliens during their deportation proceedings." Id. at 519, 123 S.Ct. at 1715. Before Section 1226, "[t]he Attorney General at the time had broad discretion to conduct individualized bond hearings and to release criminal aliens from custody during their removal proceedings when those aliens were determined not to present an excessive flight risk or threat to society." Id. (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a) (1982 ed.)). Thus, to alleviate these issues, Congress "enacted 8 U.S.C. § 1226, requiring the Attorney General to detain a subset of deportable criminal aliens pending a determination of their removability." Id. at 521, 123 S.Ct. at 1716 (emphasis added). Given Demore's findings, the purpose of Section 1226 is to protect the public and private interests of third parties, namely, the states, the citizens, and legal immigrants of the United States.

Considering the context and purpose of Section 1226, it is no wonder why Subsection (c) "subtract[s]," from the discretion given to the Government in Section 1226(a). See Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 966. In fact, it does more than that. Subsection (c) also subtracts from the general "broad discretion" that the Attorney General originally had prior to the enactment of Section 1226. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 521, 123 S.Ct. at 1716. "Shall" in Section 1226(c), therefore, must be construed to mean "must."

Like Section 1226(c), Section 1231(a)(2) was enacted to protect public and private interests of the states and the people of the United States. As the Supreme Court noted in Zadvydas, "protecting the community from dangerous aliens" is a "statutory purpose" of that section. 533 U.S. at 697, 121 S.Ct. at 2502. What's more, Section 1231 "is part of a statute that has as its basic purpose effectuating an alien's removal," a purpose related to the community's protection. Id. Coupled with Demore's detailed explanation of the burdens criminal aliens impose on both the country and its people when the Government fails to deport them, 538 U.S. at 518–20, 123 S.Ct. at 1714–15, it is evident that Section 1231(a)(2)'s purpose was to similarly protect the states, the citizens, and legal immigrants' interests against the harmful effects the Government's failure to remove certain aliens would bring about.

Additionally, numerous federal courts—including this Court—have recognized other parts of Section 1231 use "shall" as a mandatory command. See Shuaibu v. Gonzales, 425 F.3d 1142, 1144 (8th Cir. 2005) (interpreting the "shall" in Section 1231(b)(1)(C) to mean the Attorney General "must" attempt to remove the alien to certain countries); Kim Ho Ma v. Ashcroft, 257 F.3d 1095, 1115 (9th Cir. 2001) (interpreting "shall" in Section 1231(a)(3) to mean all aliens ordered released "must" comply with supervision requirements); Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *32–37 (analyzing Section 1231(a)(1)(A) and holding the "shall" in that provision imposes a mandate on the Government to deport aliens with final orders of removal within 90 days). These interpretations of "shall" as mandatory in other parts of Section 1231 are yet further indication the "shall" in Section 1231(a)(2) bears the same meaning, because "a word or phrase is presumed to bear the same meaning throughout a text." Scalia & Garner, supra, at 170; see also Powerex Corp. v. Reliant Energy Servs., Inc., 551 U.S. 224, 232, 127 S.Ct. 2411, 2417, 168 L.Ed.2d 112 (2007) ("A standard principle of statutory construction provides that identical words and phrases within the same statute should normally be given the same meaning."). Thus, for all these reasons, the "shall" in Section 1231(a)(2) necessarily means must.

The Government does not disagree that Congress enacted Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) to protect public or private interests. Rather, the Government demurs that a statutory purpose of protecting third parties, as held in Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe, is not a "stronger indication," per Castle Rock, to make "shall" mandatory against any governmental actor. (Dkt. No. 42 at 36–38); see Richbourg, 281 U.S. at 533–34, 50 S.Ct., at 387–88; Escoe, 295 U.S. at 493–94, 55 S.Ct. at 820; Castle Rock, 545 U.S. at 761, 125 S.Ct. at 2806. In making this argument, the Government reasons that the "protection of a third party" rationale cannot serve as a stronger indication because, it claims, the very "statute [in Castle Rock] concerned enforcement of restraining orders entered to benefit a 'protected person.'" (Id. at 37–38) (emphasis omitted) (quoting Castle Rock, 545 U.S. at 758–59, 125 S.Ct. at 2804–05). In doing so, however, the Government ignores the Supreme Court's holdings in Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe. See (Id. at 36–39). In short, the Government implies that Castle Rock overruled Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe sub silentio. That argument fails.

As an initial matter, this Court cannot ignore Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe where the Supreme Court or the Fifth Circuit has not expressly instructed it to do so. See Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484, 109 S.Ct. 1917, 1921–22, 104 L.Ed.2d 526 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."); *Lopez v. 920, 925 (S.D. Tex. 1997) (Jack, J.))). The Court did not disregard those cases in Texas I, nor will it disregard them here.[29]

But even if the Court could ignore Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe, Castle Rock is easily distinguishable from this case. The state statute ostensibly mandating the police to enforce restraining orders in Castle Rock was drafted upon a background of "[a] well established tradition of police discretion" that "ha[d] long coexisted with apparently mandatory arrest statutes." Castle Rock, 545 U.S. at 760, 125 S.Ct. at 2805–06 (citing 1 ABA Standards for Criminal Justice 1-4.5, commentary, pp. 1–124 to 1–125 (2d ed. 1980)). A similar tradition is not present with respect to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). As explained above, it was precisely the federal government's "wholesale failure" "to deal

[29] The Court also notes that its decision in Texas I did not rely entirely on the protection of "public or private interests" rationale explained in Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe to support its finding of a "stronger indication" that the "shall" in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A) connoted a requirement. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *34–35. Instead, the Court performed a full statutory interpretation of the word "shall" in Section 1231(a)(1)(A) and relied on numerous precedents in the Fifth Circuit and sister circuits demonstrating the mandatory nature of that word. Id. at *33–38 (noting the Court had examined "the text, context, statutory history, and precedent demonstrating that 'shall' means must in section 1231(a)(1)(A)" (emphasis in original)). In contrast to that comprehensive analysis, the Government's current lone attack on the Court's prior synthesis of the rules from Hecht, Castle Rock, Richbourg Motor Co., and Escoe is lacking. Nevertheless, despite the in-depth analysis the Court undertook in Texas I, a district court in Arizona arrived at a different conclusion, holding that "shall" does not mean "must" in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A). Arizona, 2021 WL 2787930, at *9–10. That court's rationale was that the legislative intent required for Section 1231(a)(1)(A) to be mandatory—per Castle Rock—was not present. Id. The court based its holding on (a) the statutory scheme which apparently contemplated removals of aliens outside the 90-day period, (b) the Government's broad discretion to remove aliens at any stage of the removal process, and (c) some legislative history showing that the 90-day period contemplated in the section was intended to be "merely" a "target" date "rather than a statutory mandate." Id. Therefore, according to the Arizona court, "shall" did not mean "must" in Section 1231(a)(1)(A). Id. Like the Government in this case, the district court neither cited to nor discussed Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe. This Court respectfully disagrees with the court in Arizona and the Government, having thoroughly probed the statutory text, the purpose of the statutes, and legislative history of Sections 1231(a)(1)(A) in Texas I, and Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) in this Memorandum Opinion and Order.

with increasing rates of criminal activity by aliens" that prompted Congress to limit the Executive's discretion in such matters by enacting Section 1226. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1714. Such specific legislative intent, backed by Supreme Court acknowledgment, was not present in the statute interpreted in Castle Rock. Cf. 545 U.S. at 760–61, 125 S.Ct. at 2805–06.

Furthermore, the Government's contention that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) do not confer a mandatory duty against the Government goes against an analysis of the statutes' text within the whole statutory scheme. The Supreme Court has noted that "[t]he word 'may' customarily connotes discretion" and that such a "connotation is particularly apt where . . . 'may' is used in contraposition to the word 'shall.'" Jama v. Immigr. & Customs Enf't, 543 U.S. 335, 346, 125 S.Ct. 694, 703, 160 L.Ed.2d 708 (2005) (citing Haig v. Agee, 453 U.S. 280, 294 n.26, 101 S.Ct. 2766, 2775 n.24, 69 L.Ed.2d 640 (1981)). That principle proved crucial in Jama, where the Supreme Court held that because Section 1231(b)(2) of the INA states that the Attorney General "shall remove" an alien to a designated country, it would be inappropriate to read as mandatory another provision explaining that the Attorney General "may" disregard the designation if certain circumstances arise. Id. This principle applies to this case as well.

Section 1231(a)(2) states that the Attorney General "shall" detain certain aliens "during the removal period," which is defined to be a period of 90 days when an alien is ordered removed. 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)–(2). Before Section 1231(a)(2), Subsection (a)(1)(C) provides that the removal period "shall" be extended beyond 90 days if certain circumstances arise, and the alien "may" remain in detention during that extended period. Id. § 1231(a)(1)(C). Again, it would be absurd if Section 1231(a)(2)—with its use of "shall"—is read to provide merely discretionary authority to the Government to detain people during the removal period when Section 1231(a)(1)(C)—using "may"—clearly provides discretion to the Government to detain people after the initial 90-day removal period.

Likewise, Section 1226(c) clearly juxtaposes "may" and "shall" so that there is no ambiguity as to whether the "shall" used in 1226(c)(1) imposes a mandatory duty. Subsection (c)(1) states that the Attorney General "shall" detain certain aliens "when the alien is released." 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1). Just right after that, Subsection (c)(2) notes that the Attorney General "may" release aliens described in Subsection (c)(1) "only if" certain circumstances are present. Id. § 1226(c)(2). As such, for Subsection (c)(2) to have any meaning, Subsection (c)(1) must be read as a mandate: the Attorney General must detain aliens when released and such aliens may be released only if certain situations call for it. If Subsection (c)(1) is not interpreted in this way, then Subsection (c)(2)—the release provision—loses its significance. It would be superfluous for Congress to state how certain aliens may be released—per Subsection (c)(2)—if the Government was meant to initially have the discretion to decide which criminal aliens to detain in the first place. This analysis of the two statutes within the overall scheme indeed tracks how the Supreme Court and other federal courts have construed Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), as described more fully above.

b. Whether "Prioritization" Contravenes Congressional Mandates

Having concluded that "shall" means "must" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), the Court turns to the Government's second argument in support of its assertion that the new guidelines in the February 18 Memorandum are committed to agency discretion by law. That is, regardless of the relevant sections' mandatory nature, the new guidelines "simply establish[] enforcement priorities" because they do "not direct ICE officials to cease detaining any particular noncitizen." (Dkt. No. 42 at 28–29). Put differently, the Government argues that the guidelines do not actually stop detentions and, instead, merely prioritize who gets detained first. As a result, the Government concludes that the guidelines do not contravene the statutes. See (Id.). Thus, in essence, the Government argues that it has discretion to determine the timing of when certain aliens should be detained—if not the discretion to determine who gets detained. This argument fails as well.

Although the Government describes the February 18 Memorandum as only a reprioritization of immigration enforcement priorities, a review of the Memorandum itself establishes that it is more than that. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171–72 ("Although the DAPA Memo facially purports to confer discretion, the district court determined that nothing about DAPA genuinely leaves the agency and its employees free to exercise discretion." (cleaned up)). The new guidelines violate the statutory commands of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) which are: to detain certain aliens "when the alien is released," per Section 1226(c), or "during the removal period," per Section 1231(a)(2).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The Government opines that the February 18 Memorandum "directs 'officers and agents . . . to exercise their discretion thoughtfully' after consideration 'of all relevant facts and circumstances'" concerning the arrest, detention, or removal of criminal illegal aliens. (Dkt. No. 42 at 29) (alteration in original) (citing Dkt. No. 42-2 at 4). That statement demonstrates that the new guidelines wade into areas that are not committed to agency discretion. See (Id.). Because "shall" means "must" in Section 1226(c), the Executive Branch is required to detain criminal aliens who have committed "any offense covered in section 1182(a)(2)," "any offense covered in section 1227(a)(2)(A)(ii), (A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D)," or any alien who "is deportable under section 1227(a)(2)(A)(i)," "inadmissible under section 1182(a)(3)(B)," or "deportable under section 1227(a)(4)(B)." 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D) (emphases added). This leaves no room for the Executive's agent to "thoughtfully" exercise discretion. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 29). And crucially, to protect the public, Congress mandated that any alien falling under any of these categories must be detained "when the alien is released" from state custody. Id. Likewise, Section 1231(a)(2) requires both the detention of aliens who possess orders of removal and aliens who have been found "inadmissible under section 1182(a)(2)," "1182(a)(3)(B)," or "deportable under section 1227(a)(2) or 1227(a)(4)(B)."[30] Id. § 1231(a)(2). And, like Section 1226(c),

---

[30] In Texas I, the Government argued that Section 1231(a)(1)(A)'s use of the word "shall" could not have meant "must" because at least one other "shall" in Section 1231 is not mandatory (at least according to the Government). Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *35. That other "shall" is apparently in Section 1231(a)(2) which reads, as stated earlier: "During the removal period, the Attorney General shall detain the alien. Under no circumstance during the removal period shall the Attorney General release an alien who has been found inadmissible under [certain circumstances]." Id. The Government contended that reading "shall" as mandatory in the first sentence of Section 1231(a)(2) would make the second sentence (continue)

Congress in Section 1231(a)(2) mandated the timing of such detention: the aliens must be detained "during the removal period." Id.

Because of the clear mandates set forth in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), determining whether and when an alien should be detained is not a decision committed to agency discretion. And by prioritizing the detention of some aliens over others, the Government has effectively conferred upon itself discretion as to the timing of detention—discretion it does not have. Put differently, the Government has assumed a discretionary power that Congress has explicitly foreclosed. Such a maneuver is impermissible. See Util. Air Regul. Grp., 573 U.S. at 327, 134 S.Ct. at 2446 ("Under our system of government, Congress makes laws and the President, acting at times through agencies like EPA, 'faithfully execute[s]' them. The power of executing the laws necessarily includes both authority and responsibility to resolve some questions left open by Congress that arise during the law's administration. But it does not include a power to revise clear statutory terms that turn out not to work in practice." (alteration in superfluous. Id.; see also (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 82 at 21); (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 34). The Court found the argument unpersuasive, finding that there was a distinction between the two clauses. Id. As the Court held, the first clause of Section 1231(a)(2) mandates the act of detaining. Id. (citing Rodney, 340 F. App'x at 764). The second clause, on the other hand, prohibits the release of certain individuals. Id. Thus, the Attorney General may in some circumstances "release" those whom he has "detain[ed]." See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2). Section 1231 itself prescribes the conditions through which an alien—who is presumably presently detained—may pursue a "stay" and a "release." Id. § 1231(c)(2)(A), (C). In fact, it could easily be said that the prohibition on releasing certain aliens demonstrates that Congress assumed all aliens would be detained—because they "shall" be. Thus, the Court concluded in Texas I that the Government's "textual" argument failed. In this case, the Government briefly restates its argument from Texas I in an attempt to persuade the Court to change its disposition. Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *35; see also (Dkt. No. 42 at 39). The Court remains unpersuaded and adopts its prior conclusions from Texas I as discussed in this footnote.

"Congress does not draft legislation in the expectation that the Executive will blow through the deadlines it sets." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____ n.6, 139 S.Ct. at 969 n.6 (emphasis in original). In this case, Section 1226(c)'s "when . . . released" language "clarifies when the duty to arrest is triggered: upon release from criminal custody." Id. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 969. And as a logical extension of that reasoning, Section 1231(a)(2)'s "during the removal period" language also clarifies when a duty to arrest is triggered: when the alien is provided with a final order of removal.[31] See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)–(2). In sum, Congress has clearly specified when the duty to detain is triggered: when the alien is released as provided by Section 1226(c) and during the removal period for Section 1231(a)(2). When that duty to detain is triggered is not left for the agency to decide. Thus, choosing to detain certain aliens "when . . . released," see Section 1226(c), or "during the removal period," see Section 1231(a)(2), over others who are mandated to be detained at those specific points in time is not left to agency discretion. Indeed, it is a violation of the clear letter of the law. See Util. Air Regul. Grp., 573 U.S. at 327, 134 S.Ct. at 2446.

c. Whether the Executive may "Dispense" with Laws

Finally, the Government argues that the Memoranda are committed to agency discretion because "[t]he exercise of prosecutorial discretion is inherent to the Executive power that the Constitution confers on the President" and that such "discretion" is "greatly magnified" in the immigration law context. (Dkt. No. 42 at 29–30) (citing Reno, 525 U.S. at 490, 119 S.Ct. at 946). As this Court stated in Texas I, "whatever 'inherent authority' the Executive may have in the area of immigration, that authority—along with the executive Power—does not include the authority to 'suspend' or 'dispense with' Congress's exercise of legislative Powers in enacting immigration laws." ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *36. The Government's suggestion that the Executive's discretion is so significant that it may, in effect, dispense with laws has significant implications for the separation-of-powers system enshrined in the Constitution. The subject is therefore worth addressing, albeit briefly, at this early stage in the litigation. However grand the Executive's discretion might be in enforcing immigration laws, the Constitution does not empower the Executive to set forth a policy that, in effect, dispenses with a congressional immigration mandate.[32]

[32] This proposition does not include circumstances in which the President is asked to enforce a law that is unconstitutional or, more specifically, a law that usurps Executive authority. See Brett M. Kavanaugh, Our Anchor for 225 Years and Counting: The Enduring Significance of the Precise Text of the Constitution, 89 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1907, 1911 (2014); Steven G. Calabresi & Saikrishna B. Prakash, The President's Power to Execute the Laws, 104 Yale L.J. 541, 621–22 (1994). After all, the Constitution commands that, "[b]efore he enter on the Execution of his Office, [the President] shall take the following Oath or Affirmation: —'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.'" U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 8 (emphasis added). The Government, however, does not assert that Sections 1226(c) or 1231(a)(2) are unconstitutional. See (Dkt. No. 42).

Concern over the Executive's power to dispense with laws dates back to before the founding of this Nation. The Framers of the Constitution were well aware of how the English Crown had abused the dispensing power a century prior to the ratification of the Constitution. See Michael W. McConnell, The President Who Would Not Be King: Executive Power Under the Constitution 118 (2020) (concluding that the Framers addressed the royal "prerogatives of suspending or dispensing with the laws" in the Take Care Clause "[g]iven that the Committee [of Detail] explicitly dealt with virtually every one of the royal prerogatives, and especially the notorious prerogatives that had animated the overthrow of Charles I and James II"); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Steven G. Calabresi, Michael W. McConnell & Samuel L. Bray, The Constitution of the United States 317 (Robert C. Clark et al. eds., 2d ed. 2013) (opining that the President's duty to "'take care that the laws be faithfully executed' . . . means that the president is not permitted to dispense with or suspend statutes the way King James II did before the Glorious Revolution of 1688"); Robert J. Delahunty & John C. Yoo, Dream On: The Obama Administration's Nonenforcement of Immigration Laws, the DREAM Act, and the Take Care Clause, 91 Tex. L. Rev. 781, 797–98 & n.95, 804–09 (2013) (detailing how the "suspending power" was abused by English Monarchs, such as James II, and how that history influenced Americans in limiting "[t]he executive Power"); see also Randy Barnett & Evan Bernick, The Letter & The Spirit: A Unified Theory of Originalism, 107 Geo. prime example, King James II dispensed with the Test Acts,[33] which effectively barred Catholics from holding government or military office, "to create an enlarged standing army under the control of Catholic officers . . . and . . . put Catholic peers in key positions in the Privy Council and the government" because he did "[n]ot trust[] Protestant militias and gentry to protect him from rebellion[.]" McConnell, supra, at 116; see also Zachary S. Price, Enforcement Discretion and Executive Duty, 67 Vand. L. This decision angered many Englishmen[34] and played a significant role in igniting the Glorious Revolution, which resulted in William III and Mary II replacing James II on the throne. Delahunty & Yoo, supra, at 807. Although no longer on [33] Specifically, the First Test Act, enacted in 1673, "was designed to ensure that anyone holding public office, whether civil or military, would denounce the Roman Catholic doctrine of transubstantiation and receive the Anglican sacrament. Parliament's intention was to exclude Roman Catholics, who could not conscientiously take these tests, from holding public office more than temporarily." Delahunty & Yoo, supra, at 805–06. The Second Test Act, enacted in 1678, "made certain exceptions (including one for the King himself), but essentially continued this exclusionary policy." Id. at 806.

[34] This ire towards James II's use of the dispensing power is best captured in the English Bill of Rights, which says:

> Whereas the late King James the Second, by the assistance of divers evil counsellors, judges and ministers employed by him, did endeavour to subvert and extirpate the Protestant religion and the laws and liberties of this kingdom;

the throne, James II had already left his mark on the future powers of the Crown. Indeed, the English Bill of Rights of 1689 barred William III and Mary II and all future monarchs from suspending or dispensing with laws.[35]

By 1776, Americans had developed a similar sentiment about the dispensing power as had the English in 1689. See Price, supra, at 692. Notably, one of the grievances against King George III articulated in the Declaration of Independence[36] was that he "often withheld assent from laws passed by colonial legislatures unless the laws included a suspension clause allowing him to halt their execution." Brief for the Cato Institute, Professor Randy E. Barnett & Professor Jeremy Rabkin as Amici Curiae Supporting Respondents at 5–6, United States v. Texas, ____ U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2271, 195 L.Ed.2d 638 (2016) (mem) (per curiam) (citing Leonard Woods Labaree, Royal Government in America: A Study of the British Colonial System Before 1783, at 224–27, 256–68 (1934)). This "allowed the king not only to dispense with the implementation of statutes, but also to force changes to their content—an essentially legislative power." Id. at 5–6; see also Declaration of Independence ¶¶ 3–4.

[35] Specifically, the English Bill of Rights of 1689 provides: "[T]he pretended power of suspending the laws or the execution of laws by regal authority without consent of Parliament is illegal" and that "the pretended power of dispensing with laws or the execution of laws by regal authority, as it hath been assumed and exercised of late, is illegal." The Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M., c. 2 (1689).

> He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good; He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

Prior to the United States Constitution's ratification, states were aware of this sentiment and crafted state constitutions of their own that barred the Executive from exercising the suspending or dispensing power. See Price, supra, at 692 ("Drawing from this English model, several states during the American revolutionary period adopted constitutions including prohibitions on executive suspension of laws."); Steven G. By 1787, six states—Delaware, Maryland, Massachusetts, North Carolina, New Hampshire, and Virginia—had state constitutions containing provisions barring the Executive from exercising the suspending or dispensing power. See Del. Although the Constitution does not contain a provision of its own explicitly prohibiting the Executive from dispensing with laws,[38] it in no way sanctions such action by the Executive for at least two reasons. First, the Constitution separates power among three branches, vesting executive power exclusively in the President and legislative power exclusively in Congress. See U.S. Const. art. Cas. 1192, 1230 (C.C.D.N.Y. 1806) (stating that the President does not have the dispensing power, in part, because only Congress has "dominion" over the laws—i.e., the legislative power); see also Del. As such, the Executive does not possess this power. See Kendall, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) at 612–13 (stating that giving the President the dispensing power "would be clothing the President with a power entirely to control the legislation of congress, and paralyze the administration of justice" (emphasis added)); Smith, 27 F. Given this duty to take care that the laws are faithfully executed, the Constitution's system of separation-of-powers, and the treatment of the dispensing power in American history and tradition, the Court is hard pressed, at this early stage of the litigation, to see how the Government can suggest that the Constitution confers upon the Executive the "discretion" to ignore clear congressional commands contained in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). See Kendall, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) at 612–13 ("It was urged at the bar, that the postmaster general was alone subject to the direction and control of the President, with respect to the execution of the duty imposed upon him by this law, and this right of the President is claimed, as growing out of the obligation imposed upon him by the constitution, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. This is a doctrine that cannot receive the sanction of this court. It would be vesting in the President a dispensing power, which has no countenance for its support in any part of the constitution . . . . Accordingly, the Executive Branch, including its agencies, may not dispense with a clear congressional mandate under the guise of exercising "discretion."

d. The Memoranda are not Committed to Agency Discretion

In sum, the Court finds that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) impose mandatory detention at specific points in time for certain aliens. The Executive Branch may neither alter these statutory obligations through reprioritization nor dispense with them. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the detention of certain aliens subject to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) is not committed to agency discretion.

4. Zone of Interests

The States must next show that their injuries are within the "zones of interest" the two laws were intended to protect. Congress has placed limits on how the Executive may be sued for violating the law and who can do it. Congress, through the APA, has provided a cause of action for those seeking redress against the federal government for violating other federal laws. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 702, 706. But Congress has limited the availability of an APA cause of action to those who allege an injury that is "arguably" within the "zone of interests" to be protected or regulated by the relevant statutes. Collins v. Mnuchin, 938 F.3d 553, 573–74 (5th Cir. 2019), aff'd in part, vacated in part, rev'd in part sub nom. Collins v. Yellen, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 1761 (2021); see also Match-E-Be-Nash-She-Wish Band of Pottawatomi Indians v. Patchak, 567 U.S. 209, 224, 132 S.Ct. 2199, 2210, 183 L.Ed.2d 211 (2012) (hereinafter "Match-E") (quoting Ass'n of Data Processing Serv. Orgs., Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153, 90 S.Ct. 827, 830, 25 L.Ed.2d 184 (1970)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The zone of interests test is not "especially demanding" in the APA context. Collins, 938 F.3d at 574 (quoting Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 130, 134 S.Ct. at 1389). Indeed, the Supreme Court has "conspicuously included the word 'arguably' in the test to indicate that the benefit of any doubt goes to the plaintiff." Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 130, 134 S.Ct. at 1389 (quoting Match-E, 567 U.S. at 225, 132 S.Ct. at 2210). The zone of interests test "'forecloses suit only when a plaintiff's interests are so marginally related to or inconsistent with the purposes implicit in the statute that it cannot reasonably be assumed that' Congress authorized that plaintiff to sue." Collins, 938 F.3d at 574 (quoting Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 130, 134 S.Ct. at 1389).

Importantly, the relevant statute in whose zone of interests the plaintiff's injury must reside "is to be determined not by reference to the overall purpose of the Act in question," but rather, "by reference to the particular provision of law upon which the plaintiff relies." Bennett, 520 U.S. at 175–76, 117 S.Ct. at 1167. In other words, a court must review those "substantive provisions" of law that the plaintiff relies on for "the gravamen" of its complaint. Id.

In this case, the States essentially bring three APA claims asserting that the Government violated federal law: (1) the Memoranda are contrary to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) of the INA, (Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 94–107); (2) the policy set forth in the Memoranda is arbitrary and capricious, (id. at ¶¶ 108–17); and (3) the Government was required but failed to follow notice and comment procedures in issuing the Memoranda, (id. at ¶¶ 118–121).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As in Texas I, the Government solely—and narrowly—maintains that "the States do not come within the relevant zone-of-interests" because "no entity can enforce § 1231" because Subsection (h) bars any party from enforcing Section 1231 against the Government.[48] (Dkt. No. 42 at 35–36); see (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 30–32); Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *22–23. For their part, the States briefly address the Government's suppositions, arguing they "fit within the zone of interests both because [the Government is] wrong about Section 1231(h) and for the reasons this Court has already explained" in Texas I. (Dkt. No. 51 at 29) (citing Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *23–29). The Court agrees with the States.

For starters, the Government cannot refute the States' position that their injuries are within the zones of interests of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), particularly in light of this Court's discussions of Demore and Zadvydas concerning the development and purpose of Sections 1226 and 1231. See supra I.A, II.B.1 & II.B.3. This discussion makes clear that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)—and indeed the INA itself, see Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 163 & n.80—were enacted to protect and benefit the states, the citizens of this country, and the legal immigrants of the United States. See supra I.A, II.B.1 & II.B.3. As such, the injuries the States suffer due to the Memoranda, see supra II.A.1–4, fall within the relevant statutes' zones of interests. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 163 (finding that [48] In so doing, the Government essentially foregoes any zone-of-interest challenge on the States' other APA claims, that is, those based on Section 1226(c) and those which are arguably not based on any of the statutes in question (i.e., the arbitrary and capricious and notice and comment claims).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Texas satisfies the zone-of-interest test as a result of the same injuries that give Texas Article III standing).

The Government, indeed, does not dispute that the States' injuries fall within Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)'s zones of interests. Rather, the Government focuses its attention on Section 1231(h), in essence arguing that because Subsection (h) bars parties from enforcing Section 1231, any injury stemming from violations of the section does not fall within the statute's zone of interests. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 35–36). But, as explained earlier, Section 1231(h) does not bar the States' claims. See supra II.B.1; Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *29–30 & n.42. Thus, the Government's lone contention fails. The Court finds that the States' injuries fall within the zones of interest of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2).

III. DISCUSSION OF PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

Having determined the Court has jurisdiction over the action and nothing precludes judicial review under the APA, the Court now turns to the merits of the States' Motion for Preliminary Injunction.

A. LEGAL STANDARD

"A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right." Benisek v. Lamone, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 138 S.Ct. 1942, 1943, 201 L.Ed.2d 398 (2018) (quotation omitted). Indeed, the decision to grant a preliminary injunction is "to be treated as the exception rather than the rule." Miss. Power & Light Co. v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 760 F.2d 618, 621 (5th Cir. 1985). Thus, "[i]n each case, courts must balance the competing claims of injury and must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief." Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, 129 S.Ct. 365, 376, 172 L.Ed.2d 249 (2008) (quotation omitted). And in determining whether injunctive relief is proper, "courts of equity should pay particular regard for the public consequences in employing the extraordinary remedy of injunction." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A preliminary injunction "issue[s] only where (1) there is a substantial likelihood that the movant will prevail on the merits; (2) there is a substantial threat that irreparable harm will result if the injunction is not granted; (3) the threatened injury outweighs the threatened harm to the defendant; and (4) the granting of the preliminary injunction will not disserve the public interest." Clark v. Prichard, 812 F.2d 991, 993 (5th Cir. 1987). As such, "[t]he party seeking such relief must satisfy a cumulative burden of proving each of the four elements enumerated" in order for a preliminary injunction to be granted. Id.

Note, however, that "none of the four prerequisites has a fixed quantitative value." Texas v. Seatrain Int'l, S. A., 518 F.2d 175, 180 (5th Cir. 1975). "Rather, a sliding scale is utilized, which takes into account the intensity of each in a given calculus." Id. (citing Siff v. State Democratic Exec. Comm., 500 F.2d 1307 (5th Cir. 1974)). For instance, "a preliminary injunction does not follow as a matter of course from a plaintiff's showing" of the first element, "a likelihood of success on the merits." Benisek, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 1943–44 (emphasis added). Thus, federal courts must consider whether the movant has established the three other elements as well for a preliminary injunction to issue. Id. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 1944.

B. APPLICATION

1. Substantial Likelihood of Success on the Merits

a. Counts I & II: Contrary to Law

As described above, the Court determined that "shall" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) means "must." See supra II.B.3.a. This conclusion means that the Attorney General must detain certain aliens subject to those sections. The Court also found that both statutes mandate detention of certain aliens at specific points in time: for Section 1226(c), the Attorney General is required to detain certain aliens "when the alien is released from custody," while for Section 1231(a)(2), the Attorney General is obligated to detain certain aliens "during the removal period." The policy contained in the Memoranda effectively dispenses with these mandates by conferring discretion to the Government to independently decide who will be detained and when—if ever—detention of those individuals might occur. This guidance therefore is wholly contrary to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Thus, the States have demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success on Counts I & II.

b. Count III: Arbitrary and Capricious

The States argue that the Government's Memoranda establishing new guidelines and priorities for the detention of certain aliens are arbitrary and capricious because they "failed to consider important aspects of a problem." (Dkt. No. 18 at 28). Specifically, the States allege that the Memoranda: (1) "failed to consider the risks of recidivism among criminal aliens who are not detained;" (2) "ignore the effects non-detention will have on future removal efforts," especially on the costs that delays in deportation often produce and the rate of abscondment of released aliens; (3) "do not discuss the costs that [the new guidance] will impose on [the] States;" (4) "did not consider more limited policies that would have retained congressionally mandated detention of criminal aliens and those with final orders of removal;" and (5) "do[] not explain Defendants' choice[]"of prioritizing the detention of aliens who have aggravated felonies over others who have committed drug offenses and crimes of moral turpitude or those with final orders of removal. (Id. at 27–29). The Government disagrees with the States' contentions. Countering the States point-by-point, the Government argues that it "considered the relevant factors and reached a reasonable decision." (Dkt. No. 42 at 42–47). Reviewing these assertions, the Court finds the States have demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success in establishing that the policy set forth in the Memoranda is arbitrary and capricious as alleged in Count III.

The APA prohibits agency actions that are "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A). With that in mind, federal administrative agencies are required to engage in "reasoned decisionmaking." Allentown Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. NLRB, 522 U.S. 359, 374, 118 S.Ct. 818, 826, 139 L.Ed.2d 797 (1998) (internal quotation omitted). This necessarily means that "[n]ot only must an agency's decreed result be within the scope of its lawful authority, but the process by which it reaches that result must be logical and rational." Id. (emphasis added). More specifically, "the agency must examine the relevant data and articulate a satisfactory explanation for its action including a 'rational connection between the facts found and the choice made.'" *Motor Vehicle Mfrs. When final agency action is challenged as arbitrary and capricious, "[t]he reviewing court must consider whether the decision was based on a consideration of the relevant factors and whether there has been a clear error of judgment." Marsh v. Or. Nat. Res. Council, 490 U.S. 360, 378, 109 S.Ct. 1851, 1861, 104 L.Ed.2d 377 (1989) (internal quotations omitted). "Normally, an agency rule would be arbitrary and capricious if the agency has relied on factors which Congress has not intended it to consider, entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem, offered an explanation for its decision that runs counter to the evidence before the agency, or is so implausible that it could not be ascribed to a difference in view or the product of agency expertise." State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867. If a court finds that an administrative agency failed to engage in reasoned decision-making, the reviewing court "shall hold unlawful and set aside" such "agency action, findings, and conclusions" as arbitrary and capricious. 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

"Because the central focus of the arbitrary and capricious standard is on the rationality of the agency's 'decisionmaking,' rather than its actual decision, '[i]t is well-established that an agency's action must be upheld, if at all, on the basis articulated by the agency itself.'" United States v. Garner, 767 F.2d 104, 116–17 (5th Cir. 1985) (quoting State Farm, 463 U.S. at 50, 103 S.Ct. at 2870). As such, "the grounds upon which an administrative order must be judged are those upon which the record discloses that its

The administrative record need only "indicate[] the determinative reason for the final action taken," Camp v. Pitts, 411 U.S. 138, 143, 93 S.Ct. 1241, 1244, 36 L.Ed.2d 106 (1973), and courts may "uphold a decision of less than ideal clarity if the agency's path may reasonably be discerned." Bowman Transp., Inc. v. Arkansas–Best Freight Sys., Inc., 419 U.S. 281, 286, 95 S.Ct. 438, 442, 42 L.Ed.2d 447 (1974).

Finally, the Court is mindful that the arbitrary and capricious standard is "highly deferential." Garner, 767 F.2d at 116. Courts must "accord the agency's decision a presumption of regularity" and "are prohibited from substituting [the courts'] judgment for that of the agency." Id. (citation omitted). But "while the arbitrary and capricious standard of review is highly deferential, it is by no means a rubber stamp." Id. Based on [49] In a status conference with the Parties on July 2, 2021, the Court asked whether the Government intended to file the administrative record for review. The Government declined stating that it was unnecessary at this stage of the litigation. (July 2, 2021, Status Conference, 10:00–10:15 A.M.). For their part, the States did not oppose the Government's position, and, instead, told the Court that it could dispose of the pending Motion for Preliminary Injunction without the full administrative record in hand. Id. In effect, the Parties agreed that the full administrative record is not necessary for the Court to rule on the arbitrary and capricious claim at this time.

"A court is ordinarily limited to evaluating the agency's contemporaneous explanation in light of the existing administrative record." Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2556 (citing Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 435 U.S. 519, 98 S.Ct. 1197, 55 L.Ed.2d 460 (1978)). As such, the Court will limit its inquiry to the findings, conclusions, and explanations provided in the February 18 Memorandum for its review. In addition, because the Court is ruling on a motion for preliminary injunction, the Court merely needs to determine "if there is a substantial likelihood that" the States "will prevail on the merits" of their arbitrary and capricious claim. Prichard, 812 F.2d at 993. It follows, therefore, that the disposition of the arbitrary and capricious claim, at this stage, is not final. Indeed, for at least one other district court, the lack of an administrative record was not a barrier for that court to rule on an arbitrary and capricious claim at this stage. See Nat'l Fed'n of Indep. Bus. v. Perez, No. 5:16-CV-00066-C, 2016 WL 3766121, at *23 & n.8, 28–29 (N.D. Tex. June 27, 2016).

the following, the Memoranda fail to indicate that the Government engaged in reasoned decision-making, thereby rendering them arbitrary and capricious.

At their core, the Memoranda reprioritize certain classes of aliens for immigration enforcement action. In the February 18 Memorandum specifically, the Government states that it is establishing enforcement and removal guidelines with respect to immigration enforcement and removal priorities pursuant to the January 20 Memorandum.[50] See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 5). As discussed above, if a criminal illegal alien falls under a category deemed to be a priority, no preapproval is required for an enforcement or removal action. On the other hand, if the criminal illegal alien does not fall under any of the categories, an enforcement or removal action "will require preapproval." (Id. at 7). The Memorandum states that "ICE operates in an environment of limited resources," and thus, "ICE has always prioritized, and necessarily must prioritize, certain enforcement and removal actions over others." (Id. at 3). In addition to "resource constraints," "several other factors," according to the Memorandum, "render ICE's mission particularly complex." These factors include "ongoing litigation in various fora; the health and safety of the ICE workforce and those in its custody, particularly during the current COVID-19 pandemic; the responsibility to ensure that eligible noncitizens are able to pursue relief from removal under the immigration laws; and the requirements of, and relationships with, sovereign [50] To the extent the January 20 Memorandum's 100-day pause on removals and that Memorandum's corresponding administrative record are implicated in this action, the Court adopts its reasoning in Texas I and finds that the Government failed to engage in reasoned decision-making. ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *38–42. Thus, the Court adopts and incorporates by reference its prior decision that the January 20 Memorandum's 100-day pause is arbitrary and capricious.

nations, whose laws and expectations can place additional constraints on ICE's ability to execute final orders of removal." (Id.). Given these considerations, the Memorandum states that the Government "must exercise its well-established prosecutorial discretion and prioritize its limited resources to most effectively achieve that mission." (Id. at 4).

As described here, the February 18 Memorandum indeed enumerates quite a few factors that make the Government's "mission particularly complex" in this field. But the Memorandum itself does not directly state whether these factors were considered while the Government was actually formulating the guidance in question. Assuming they were considered and were the bases for the new guidance, see Pitts, 411 U.S. at 143, 93 S.Ct. at 1244, the February 18 Memorandum (along with its predecessor, the January 20 Memorandum) still does not demonstrate reasoned decision-making. The February 18 Memorandum does not disclose how or why any of these enumerated factual considerations are connected to the policies the Government ultimately pursued. In short, both Memoranda fail to establish any rational connection or logical link between any of these factors and the new guidance. See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2866.

First, the February 18 Memorandum does not offer even a brief explanation of how "ongoing litigation in various fora" affected the Government's decision-making in promulgating the new guidance. It is simply a vague and conclusory statement. Did the Government mean to say that Texas I or other pending cases were considered when crafting the new guidance? If so, how did the disposition of Texas I or other cases affect the reprioritization? Those questions have yet to be answered.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, the Government's stated responsibility and desire to ensure that eligible aliens may be afforded relief from removal is commendable but likewise lacks any rational connection with the new guidance. The new guidance reprioritizes the detention and deportation of criminal illegal aliens. But the February 18 Memorandum does not explain how or why prioritizing, for instance, the detention or deportation of "border security risks" (aliens who entered the country on or after November 1, 2020) over aliens who have drug offenses or crimes of moral turpitude would ensure that eligible noncitizens will obtain relief in their own removal proceedings. There does not seem to be any connection between reprioritizing the detention and removal of certain aliens to whether other aliens may be afforded legally authorized relief from deportation. The February 18 Memorandum does not shed light on this disconnect.

Third, although the Court acknowledges as a general matter that interactions and relationships with other sovereign nations "may place constraints" on the Government's ability to "execute final orders of removal," see (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4), there is no rational link between any of these factual constraints to the reprioritization scheme the Government has chosen to pursue. For example, do these international relationships make it more inefficient to deport aliens with drug offenses over so-called "national security risks" or "border security risks"? If so, what are the facts that justify such conclusions? Those questions are also unanswered. Like the considerations described above, the Memorandum does not state any facts or findings with respect to why international relations apparently factored in the Government's decision-making.

Lastly, the Government's written concern for the health and safety of ICE workers in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic is not rationally relevant to the new guidance. Will COVID-19 infections among the ICE workforce be substantially reduced if the Government prioritizes the deportation of one category of criminal illegal aliens over another? How does reprioritization alleviate those health concerns, if any? On these points the February 18 Memorandum is, unfortunately, silent.

The Court further notes that, out of all these considerations, the cursory use of the COVID-19 pandemic to justify the new guidance comes across as implausible. Throughout the last year, institutions, including federal and state governments, have used the pandemic to rationalize policies found to be unlawful or unconstitutional. See, e.g., Chrysafis v. Marks, ____ U.S. ____, 2021 WL 3560766 (U.S. Aug. 12, 2021) (enjoining the part of New York's COVID Emergency Eviction and Foreclosure Prevention Act that precluded landlords from contesting a tenant's self-certification of financial hardship on the grounds that "no man can be a judge in his own case" (quoting In re Murchison, 349 U.S. 133, 136, 75 S.Ct. 623, 99 L.Ed. 942 (1955))); Tandon v. Newsom, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 1294, 209 L.Ed.2d 355 (2021) (per curiam) (enjoining California officials from enforcing occupancy limits on at-home religious exercise in response to COVID-19 when other policies treated comparable secular activities that did not pose a lesser risk of transmission more favorably); Roman Cath. Diocese v. Cuomo, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 63, 208 L.Ed.2d 206 (2020) (per curiam) (enjoining the Governor of New York from enforcing occupancy limits on religious services in response to COVID-19 that would have violated the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment); Capitol Hill Baptist Church v. Bowser,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

496 F. Supp. 3d 284, 289 (D.D.C. 2020) (finding that the District's COVID-19-related prohibition of religious gatherings of more than 100 people, even those with appropriate precautions, substantially burdens the plaintiff's exercise of religion in violation of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act). And now the Government has added immigration to the mix.

The Government used the pandemic to reason that the January 20 Memorandum's 100-day pause on removals—the precursor to the February 18 Memorandum—was borne out of reasoned decision-making. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *40. But, as the Court noted in Texas I, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Centers for Disease Control and Prevention ("CDC"), on October 13, 2020, authorized the CDC Director "to suspend the right to introduce persons into the United States" because of the COVID-19 pandemic. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *40 & n.46 (citing CDC, Order Suspending Introduction of Certain Persons Where a Communicable Disease Exists, (Mar. 20, 2020), available at https://bit.ly/3736Lue (updated Oct. 2020)). The relevant CDC Order "applies to persons traveling from Canada or Mexico (regardless of their country of origin) who would otherwise be introduced into a congregate setting in a land or coastal Port of Entry (POE) or Border Patrol station at or near the United States borders with Canada or Mexico, subject to [certain] exceptions." Id. Considering the CDC Order, the Government's new guidance is puzzling. The new guidance effectively introduces and keeps more people—specifically, criminal illegal aliens—in the Nation's communities. But, per the CDC Order, the COVID-19 pandemic would likely justify a different course of action. Throughout this time, the Government has not introduced any further papers or discussed anything in the February 18 Memorandum that show it is following different health guidelines related to COVID-19 that speak to the safety of introducing aliens into the country and its communities. The February 18 Memorandum likewise does not grapple with or otherwise explain how the new guidelines are consistent with these CDC policies. Thus, like in Texas I, the Government's consideration of the COVID-19 pandemic not only is implausibly connected to the new guidance, it also "runs counter to the evidence before the agency." See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867. In other words, the Government cannot use the pandemic as a blanket reason—devoid of explanation—to justify its choices, especially when these choices run afoul of another agency's published health directives.[51]

"[A]gency action must be based on non-arbitrary, relevant factors." Judulang v. Holder, 565 U.S. 42, 55, 132 S.Ct. 476, 485, 181 L.Ed.2d 449 (2011) (internal quotation omitted) (emphasis added). In this case, the factors apparently considered in the February 18 Memorandum and its predecessor, the January 20 Memorandum, are, after a thorough review, arbitrary and irrelevant to the new guidance. The link between the new guidance and the factors enumerated are so contradictory to the evidence and "implausible" that the States' challenge cannot be said to be differing policy preferences

[51] The Court acknowledges it could be argued that, considering the transmissibility of COVID-19, the Executive Branch has chosen to detain fewer aliens to minimize the spread of the virus in detention facilities where it could not ensure proper safety precautions. But it could also be argued (and the CDC Report the Court describes above strongly suggests) that allowing certain aliens—those who would be detained but for the Memoranda—to be released within communities during the pandemic would exacerbate COVID-19's community spread. Regardless, the Memoranda fail to logically link the Executive Branch's bare COVID-19 justifications to the new guidance such that the Court can conclude the Memoranda were borne of reasoned decision making.

Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA*, 870 F.2d 177, 251 (5th Cir. 1989))); Sierra Club v. EPA, 939 F.3d 649, 664 (5th Cir. 2019) ("The agency must 'articulate a satisfactory explanation for its action including a EPA*, 920 F.3d 999, 1013 (5th Cir. 2019) (noting the Court must "ensure that the agency examined the relevant data and articulated a satisfactory explanation for its action, and assess whether the agency's decision was based on a consideration of the relevant factors" (quoting 10 Ring Precision, Inc. v. Jones, 722 F.3d 711, 723 (5th Cir. 2013) (cleaned up)). Thus, the Court finds that the Government failed to engage in the reasoned decision-making required by law.

What's more, while the Government argues it actually did consider certain relevant factors in crafting the new guidelines (thus engaging in reasoned decision-making), the Court finds that the Government's briefs actually establish that it did not consider those factors. To begin with, "[p]ost hoc rationalizations offered by the Government's counsel are irrelevant." Univ. of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Ctr. v. Dep't of Health & Hum. Servs., 985 F.3d 472, 475 (5th Cir. 2021) (citing State Farm, 463 U.S. at 50, 103 S.Ct. [at 2870]). Therefore, this Court finds it inappropriate to consider each of the Government's arguments in their briefing that were not included in the Memoranda. Even assuming they were relevant, however, the Government's in-brief explanations are meritless.

First, the Government states that it considered the prospect of recidivism when crafting the new guidance found in the February 18 Memorandum. (Dkt. No. 42 at 44). Specifically, the Government alleges that "DHS weighed the threat to public safety from criminal noncitizens reoffending in prioritizing certain noncitizens for removal." (Id.). In support, the Government cites to passages from the February 18 Memorandum that, according to the Government, (a) "focused on the degree of threat to public safety" the "different criminal noncitizens presented," which, apparently, is akin to considering the risk of recidivism; and (b) allowed immigration officers, in making "individualized determinations" for enforcement and removal, to "consider public interest factors, which include the risk of recidivism." See (Id. at 44). These points miss the mark entirely.

With respect to the first, the Government's decision to "focus[] on the degree of threat to public safety" establishes that the Government either did not consider the risk of recidivism or created a policy contrary to the evidence before it. In their claim, the States argue that, in choosing which policy to pursue, the Government did not consider the risks of recidivism of all criminal aliens. See (Dkt. No. 18 at 44). Indeed, the Supreme Court has stated that "deportable criminal aliens who remained in the United States"—notably not a certain subset or category of such aliens—"often committed more crimes before being removed." Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1715 (emphasis added); see also Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 713–714, 121 S.Ct. at 2511 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (discussing rates of recidivism for released criminal aliens and their threat to public safety, noting the "high recidivism rates for released aliens"). Despite the Supreme Court's recognition of the risks deportable criminal aliens pose, the February 18 Memorandum requires prioritization of criminal aliens who both pose a threat to public safety and have had a prior aggravated felony conviction or criminal gang affiliation. See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 5–6). The States correctly point out that by prioritizing certain aliens, the Memorandum "omit[s] aliens" who are solely "threats to public safety," in other words, potential recidivists. (Dkt. No. 51 at 14). Nothing in the February 18 Memorandum explains that criminal illegal aliens who are only "threats to public safety" are at a much lower risk of recidivism compared to criminal aliens who have had prior felonies or criminal gang convictions. Put differently, the new guidelines do not establish that the Government considered recidivism since the reprioritization leaves so many other "deprioritized" criminal illegal aliens free to recidivate—to harm the public. And crucially, the Government has not rebutted or clarified the well-established concept that all criminal illegal aliens or "deportable aliens pose high risks of recidivism." See Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1715. Instead, the February 18 Memorandum, without any support or evidence, implements new guidelines stemming from an idea that it is merely some criminal illegal aliens—those with aggravated felonies and criminal gang affiliations—who have a much higher risk of recidivism. Such a conclusion is without any foundation in the record and shows that the Government either failed to consider recidivism as a factor in its decision-making or it explained its decision in a manner which contradicts the evidence before it. See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867.

Moreover, it is irrelevant whether immigration officers have the capability, pursuant to the February 18 Memorandum, to "consider public interest factors" that "could" include the risk of recidivism. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 44). Arbitrary and capricious review calls for the Court to examine the rationality of agency decision-making and not the actual decision. Garner, 767 F.2d 104 at 116. Even if the new guidelines give some leeway to immigration officers to consider "public interest factors," this does not establish that the Government considered the risk of recidivism when crafting the new guidelines. As the Government frankly admits, the Memoranda "do not use the term

'recidivism'" anywhere. (Dkt. No. 42 at 44). The February 18 Memorandum is, thus, devoid of any references to recidivism or other statements tending to show that the risk of recidivism that criminal illegal aliens pose was considered when drafting the new policy.

Second, the Government asserts that it has limited resources and must prioritize certain enforcement and removal actions under Section 1226(c). (Id. at 45). But, as the States point out, this contention "dodges the key issue" of whether the Government actually considered the effects of the new guidelines to costs of delaying deportations and the overall rate of abscondment of criminal illegal aliens. (Dkt. No. 51 at 15); (Dkt. No. 18 at 27–28). The costs of the non-detainment of criminal aliens are substantial. For instance, in the past, "when the vast majority of deportable criminal aliens were not detained during their deportation proceedings, many filed frivolous appeals in order to delay their deportation." Demore, 538 U.S. at 530 n.14, 123 S.Ct. at 1721 n.14. Even "[c]ourt ordered release" itself "cannot help but encourage dilatory and obstructive tactics by aliens." Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 713, 121 S.Ct. 2491 (Kennedy, J., dissenting). "An alien ordered deported also has less incentive to cooperate or to facilitate expeditious removal when he has been released, even on a supervised basis, than does an alien held at an [ICE] detention facility." Id. And following this line, a Senate Report from 1995 noted that "[d]elays" in deportation "can earn criminal aliens more than work permits and wages—if they delay long enough they may even obtain U.S. citizenship." S. Rep. No. 104–48, at 2 (1995). The costs from non-detainment rival the costs of abscondment. The same Senate Report found that "[o]ver 20 percent of nondetained criminal aliens fail to appear for deportation proceedings." Id. This Court, as well, found the rate of abscondment to be substantial even for aliens who have been "thoroughly vetted" in order for them to be placed in an "alternative to detention program." Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *19. Even in light of these effects and costs, the February 18 Memorandum is silent on whether these were considered while crafting the new guidelines. The Court, therefore, finds that the Government failed to consider this relevant factor.

Third, the Government argues that, with regard to the additional costs the States will incur, "the States are wrong to argue that DHS was required to expressly evaluate the costs to each State," and, regardless, the Government "did consider how the Priority Framework would impact public safety . . . which should reduce the costs from crime to the States." (Dkt. No. 42 at 45–46). Rephrased, the Government argues that state costs and expenses are not relevant factors, but, nevertheless, the February 18 Memorandum indirectly considered them since it factored in the new guidelines' impact to public safety. The Government is incorrect on both issues.

State costs and expenses are, indeed, relevant factors. That was the case in Texas I, see ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *41, and the Government takes issue with the Court's prior holding, see (Dkt. No. 42 at 46 & n.16). Thus, to be clear, a more descriptive analysis of the caselaw is in order.

As stated earlier, an "agency rule would be arbitrary and capricious" if the relevant agency "entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem." State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867. The Supreme Court has noted that immigration "ha[s] a discernable impact on traditional state concerns," owing to the fact that

"unchecked unlawful migration might impair the State's economy generally, or the State's ability to provide some important service." Plyler, 457 U.S. at 228, n.23, 102 S.Ct. at 2400, n.23 (citing DeCanas v. Bica, 424 U.S. 351, 354–56, 96 S.Ct. 933, 935–36, 47 L.Ed.2d 43 (1976)). Indeed, immigration policy is important to the states since they "bear[] many of the consequences of unlawful immigration." Arizona, 567 U.S. at 397, 132 S.Ct. at 2500. Obviously, as Plyler noted, some of those problematic consequences stem from a newly promulgated immigration policy's effect on the state's economy and its services; in other words, state costs and expenses. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 153 (holding that Texas had standing to challenge the federal government's DAPA policy in part because the policy "would have a major effect on the states' fiscs, causing millions of dollars of losses in Texas alone" and "would enable beneficiaries to apply for driver's licenses, and many would do so, resulting in Texas's injury"). In Regents, for instance, the Supreme Court held that the federal government's recission of its DACA policy was arbitrary and capricious in part because the government failed to consider the loss of state and local tax revenue stemming from the policy's rescission. ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1914. Along with a few other concerns, the Supreme Court characterized the loss of local and state tax revenue as "noteworthy," but "not necessarily dispositive." Id. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court found that the federal government needed to consider that factor—along with many others—and weigh them all together to ultimately decide whether to retain DACA or not. Id. As in this case, "[m]aking that difficult decision was the agency's job, but the agency failed to do it." Id.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Further, the Supreme Court has indicated that, in the context of immigration policy, an agency's approach to decision-making "must be tied, even if loosely, to the purposes of the immigration laws or the appropriate operation of the immigration system." Judulang, 565 U.S. at 55, 132 S.Ct. at 485. One broad purpose of immigration law and policy is to minimize the costs and expenses related to the presence of illegal aliens in the country. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 530 n.14, 123 S.Ct. at 1721 n.14 (noting that "prior to the enactment of 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)," a vast majority of deportable criminal aliens were free during their deportation proceedings and many filed frivolous appeals to delay deportation); Hernandez-Avalos v. INS, 50 F.3d 842, 847 (10th Cir. 1995) (noting 8 U.S.C. § 1252(i) (1986) was enacted "to ease financial burdens on federal, state and local prisons resulting from lengthy detention of aliens awaiting deportation"); Giddings v. Chandler, 979 F.2d 1104, 1109 (5th Cir. 1992) (noting that the main purpose of Section 1252(i) was to "reduc[e] prison overcrowding and cost to the government"); Prieto v. Gluch, 913 F.2d 1159, 1165 (6th Cir. 1990) (explaining that Section 1252(i) was enacted because there was a concern in Congress with prison overcrowding in "local and State jails"). While the Government is correct that immigration policy "affect[s] trade, investment, tourism, and diplomatic relations," among other things, see (Dkt. No. 42 at 46, n.16) and Arizona, 567 U.S. 387 at 395, 132 S.Ct. at 2498, that list of considerations is not exhaustive. Therefore, the Court finds the Government's argument that it need not consider the States' costs and expenses stemming from the new guidelines to be without merit.

Likewise, the Court finds that the Memoranda did not consider the States' costs and expenses even though, according to the Government, DHS considered the new guidelines' impact to public safety. In fact, the Memoranda did not consider or failed to substantially consider the new guidelines' effects on public safety. Indeed, both Memoranda are devoid of explanation as to how or why prioritizing the detention or deportation of some criminal illegal aliens, while effectively delaying the detention or deportation of and releasing so many other criminal illegal aliens, positively impact public safety. Moreover, the Memoranda provide no indication that any relevant data or facts were considered in ultimately concluding that the public will be safer by releasing more criminal illegal aliens into communities from detention while fewer are detained or deported. See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2866 (explaining that an agency "must examine the relevant data" in order to explain its policy choices).

Additionally, even if the Government did consider public safety, the Memoranda—and the February 18 Memorandum most crucially—do not state or explain how that consideration connects with concerns regarding state costs and expenses. The Government in its brief argues that, by focusing its "limited resources" on enforcement actions against "the most significant threats to public safety," the Memoranda "should reduce the costs from crime to the States." (Dkt. No. 42 at 46). Leaving aside that the new guidelines practically provide for the non-detention of many criminal illegal aliens who are not within the ambit of any of the prioritized categories, the Government's assertion still fails. "[T]he grounds upon which an administrative order must be judged are those upon which the record discloses that its action was based." Chenery, 318 U.S. at 87, 63 S.Ct. at 459. And the Memoranda bear no thought or indication as to whether the new prioritization scheme minimizes and limits state costs due to crime.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Next, the Government argues that, contrary to the States' allegations, DHS "need not 'consider all policy alternatives in reaching [its] decision.'" (Dkt. No. 42 at 46) (citing State Farm, 463 U.S. at 51, 103 S.Ct. at 2870). Instead, the Government states that "it need only 'consider the alternative[s] that are within the ambit of the existing [policy].'" (Id.) (quoting Regents, ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1913). In this case, per the Government, "the States fail to identify a single policy alternative" that would be "within the ambit of existing policy," or would otherwise be "obvious," "significant and viable." (Id.) (citing Nat'l Shooting Sports Found., Inc. v. Jones, 716 F.3d 200, 215 (D.C. Cir. 2013)). The Court disagrees with the Government's contentions.

The States do propose that, instead of the prioritization scheme found in the February 18 Memorandum, the Government should have considered policies "that would have retained congressionally mandated detention of criminal aliens and aliens with final orders of removal." (Dkt. No. 18 at 28). The foregoing is simply asking that the Government follow the law.[52] Of course, such policies are "within the ambit of existing policy." After all, the February 18 Memorandum states that its reprioritization scheme "covers enforcement actions, custody decisions, the execution of final orders of removal, financial expenditures, and strategic planning," (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2), and congressional statutes mandating the detention of aliens go to the explicit focus of the [52] Not only that, the States' proposed limited policies are "obvious," "significant," and "viable" to this Court. See Jones, 716 F.3d at 215. It is incredibly obvious that a "reprioritization policy" that still effectuates and follows the law on detention and removals is more limited than the new guidelines. And surely, following laws should be significantly viable for the Executive Branch given it is required by the Constitution to enforce such laws. U.S. Const. art. II, §§ 1, 3.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Memorandum. See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 51, 103 S.Ct. at 2871. But despite all this, the February 18 Memorandum never considered the limited policies the States proposed. It failed to discuss how a policy enabling the Government to detain all criminal illegal aliens subject to congressional mandates compares with the opted-for guidelines. It did not even state whether the new guidelines even considered any other policy. In short, the Government did not grapple with or provide any alternatives when it was required to do so. See Regents, ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1913 ("State Farm teaches that when an agency rescinds a prior policy its reasoned analysis must consider the 'alternative[s]' that are 'within the ambit of the existing [policy].'" (citing State Farm, 463 U.S. at 51, 103 S.Ct. 2856) (emphasis added)). "That omission alone" makes the new guidelines arbitrary and capricious. Regents, ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1913.

Lastly, the States argue that the February 18 Memorandum failed to rationally explain why criminal illegal aliens who have committed aggravated felonies or who are affiliated with criminal gangs are prioritized over other criminal illegal aliens and aliens with final orders of removal. (Dkt. No. 18 at 29). The Government responds that the Memorandum "provides a clear, rational justification for prioritizing" such aliens. (Dkt. No. 42 at 43–44). As the Government writes, "the former category presumptively presents a more significant threat to public safety." (Id.). In mandating the detention of criminal aliens convicted of serious drug offenses, crimes of moral turpitude, and some other specified offenses, see 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c), as well as aliens with final orders of removal during the removal period, see 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2), Congress did not differentiate among certain "types" or "categories" of deportable and detainable persons.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

These laws plainly mandate the detention of all the deportable criminal aliens subject to the relevant statutes. The new guidelines directly go against these congressional mandates, opting instead to prioritize certain criminal illegal aliens' detention and deportation over others because of an assertion that such aliens "presumptively present[] a more significant threat to public safety" than "one million noncitizens with final orders of removal," (Dkt. No. 42 at 44), and—necessarily—other criminal aliens with convictions for drug offenses or crimes of moral turpitude. But the February 18 Memorandum does not ground this otherwise unsupported assertion. It does not even explain or state how it considered, compared, and ultimately concluded that criminal illegal aliens of a certain category must be prioritized over others. Despite Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), nowhere in the February 18 Memorandum do the new guidelines even contemplate the prioritization of these "other" criminal illegal aliens. As the States correctly surmise, "[t]he very reason the February 18 Memorandum provides for prioritizing aggravated felonies also supports prioritizing drug offenses, crimes of moral turpitude, and final orders of removal." (Dkt. No. 18 at 29). Without more explanation grounded on relevant data and facts, it is unknown why the priorities were implemented in that way. The new guidance, therefore, indeed appears to be the product of arbitrary and capricious decision-making.

In sum, the Government's failure to rationally explain and connect the basis for the new guidance, along with the Government's failure to consider certain relevant factors and alternative policies, establish that there is a substantial likelihood that the reprioritization is an arbitrary and capricious policy. As the above discussion shows, the

Government certainly did not engage in reasoned decision-making as required by the APA. The Court therefore finds that the States have established a substantial likelihood of success on this claim.

c. Count IV: Notice and Comment Rulemaking

The States' next claim is similar to one Texas raised in Texas I. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *42–47. In Texas I, this Court enjoined Section C of the January 20 Memorandum, in part, because Section C did not undergo notice and comment as required by the APA. See id. In this case, the States ask this Court to enjoin Section B of the January 20 Memorandum and the February 18 Memorandum for the same reason. The States argue that "[t]he January 20 and February 18 Memoranda are subject to notice and comment rulemaking because they are substantive or legislative rules." (Dkt. No. 18 at 30). The Government disagrees, raising nearly identical arguments to those it raised in Texas I. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 47). Namely, the Government contends that the Memoranda are exempt from the APA's notice and comment requirement as "general statement[s] of policy" or, alternatively, as "procedural rules." (Id.). For the following reasons, the Court disagrees with the Government's characterizations of the Memoranda and finds that the States have a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of their procedural APA claim.

Rulemaking under 5 U.S.C. § 553

As in Texas I, no Party disputes that the Memoranda are rules of some kind and, therefore, that the rulemaking provisions of the APA apply.[53] See (Dkt. No. 18); (Dkt. No. 42); see also ___ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *42. Nor does any Party contend that the Memoranda underwent any notice and comment. (Id.). The question, then, is whether the Memoranda are the type of rules that should have undergone notice and comment but did not.

The Court begins with an overview of the APA's notice and comment requirement and the exceptions thereto. The APA requires rules to undergo notice and comment unless they are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 553.[54] Section 553 sets forth two such categories of exemptions to the notice and comment requirement, one of which is relevant to this case. Id. § 553(b). That category exempts "interpretative rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization, procedure, or practice" from notice and comment. Id. § 553(b)(A) (emphases added). Thus, if an agency proposes a rule that is either a general

[53] "'[R]ule' means the whole or a part of an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or describing the organization, procedure, or practice requirements of an agency[.]" 5 U.S.C. § 551(4).

[54] Specifically, the APA requires that "[g]eneral notice of proposed rule making shall be published in the Federal Register, unless persons subject thereto are named and either personally served or otherwise have actual notice thereof in accordance with law." Id. § 553(b) (emphasis added). And that notice shall contain "(1) a statement of the time, place, and nature of public rule making proceedings; (2) reference to the legal authority under which the rule is proposed; and (3) either the terms or substance of the proposed rule or a description of the subjects and issues involved." Id. The APA also requires an agency to "give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making," id. § 553(c), and that the "publication or service of a substantive rule shall be made not less than 30 days." Id. § 553(d).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

statement of policy or a procedural rule, the agency is not required to conduct notice and comment on the proposed rule. See id.

The Fifth Circuit has made clear that exemptions to the notice and comment requirement "must be narrowly construed." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171. A narrow reading of the exemptions safeguards the vital interests notice and comment is intended to protect. See Dep't of Lab. v. Kast Metals Corp., 744 F.2d 1145, 1153 n.17 (5th Cir. 1984) ("Section 553 was enacted to give the public an opportunity to participate in the rule-making process. It also enables the agency promulgating the rule to educate itself before establishing rules and procedures which have a substantial impact on those who are regulated." (quotations omitted)). Indeed, notice and comment ensures that those affected by a proposed rule have a voice in the rule-making process and assist the agency in crafting rules that better account for the costs and benefits of agency action. See id. at 1153. But see id. ("Inevitably, in determining whether the APA requires notice and comment rulemaking, the interests of agency efficiency and public input are in tension.").

In harmony with the Fifth Circuit's warning to narrowly construe exemptions to APA's procedural strictures, the Supreme Court has recognized that states like Louisiana and Texas offer important perspectives on illegal immigration issues. See Arizona, 567 U.S. at 397, 132 S.Ct. at 2500 ("The pervasiveness of federal regulation does not diminish the importance of immigration policy to the States."); see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 163. States can assist an agency in crafting rules addressing important immigration issues. Mindful of the importance of notice and comment in this context, the Court now considers whether the reprioritization scheme contained within the Memoranda is exempt from the notice and comment requirement as either a general statement of policy or as a procedural rule.

General Statement of Policy

The Court first considers whether the Memoranda are general statements of policy. If so, notice and comment is not required. Prof'ls & Patients for Customized Care v. Shalala, 56 F.3d 592, 595 (5th Cir. 1995); see also 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(A). "In analyzing whether an agency pronouncement is a statement of policy or a substantive rule, the starting point is the agency's characterization of the rule." Shalala, at 596. As in Texas I, the Court would likely be convinced that the Memoranda are general statements of policy if it could rely on the Government's characterization of the Memoranda alone. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *43. Both the Government in its brief and the Memoranda themselves declare that the Memoranda are mere statements of policy. (Dkt. No. 42 at 47–49); (Dkt. No. 19-1); (Dkt. No. 19-2). Indeed, the January 20 Memorandum explicitly declares that it "should be considered Department-wide guidance[.]" (Dkt. No. 19-1 at 2) (emphasis added). The January 20 Memorandum also states that the "guidelines and priorities" contained therein "are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party[.]" (Id. at 5).

The February 18 Memorandum contains similar language. It begins by declaring that it "establishes interim guidance[.]" (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2) (emphasis added). The February 18 Memorandum goes on to say that "[t]hese guidelines and priorities are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party in any administrative, civil, or criminal matter." (Id. at 8).

But an agency's characterization of its rule is just that—its own characterization. Indeed, "[a]gencies have never been able to avoid notice and comment simply by mislabeling their substantive pronouncements. On the contrary, courts have long looked to the contents of the agency's action, not the agency's self-serving label, when deciding whether statutory notice-and-comment demands apply." Azar v. Allina Health Servs., ____ U.S. ____, ____, 139 S.Ct. 1804, 1812, 204 L.Ed.2d 139 (2019) (emphasis in original). The Fifth Circuit, too, cautions courts to be "mindful but suspicious of the agency's own characterization." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171 (quotation omitted). The Fifth Circuit therefore demands more of a district court than simply taking an agency at its word when determining whether the challenged rule is a general statement of policy or a substantive rule requiring notice and comment. See Shalala, 56 F.3d at 596 ("The label that the particular agency puts upon its given exercise of administrative power is not, for [this court's] purposes, conclusive; rather, it is what the agency does in fact.").

Specifically, the Fifth Circuit instructs district courts to also "evaluate two criteria to distinguish policy statements from substantive rules: whether the rule (1) impose[s] any rights and obligations and (2) genuinely leaves the agency and its decision-makers free to exercise discretion." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171 (quotation omitted).[55] The Fifth

[55] The Fifth Circuit and the D.C. Circuit have emphasized that "unless a pronouncement acts prospectively, it is a binding norm. Thus . . . a statement of policy may not have a present effect[.]" Shalala, 56 F.3d at 595; Am. Hosp. Ass'n v. Bowen, 834 F.2d 1037, 1046 (D.C. Cir. 1987). (continue)

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Circuit has acknowledged that "[t]here is some overlap in the analysis of those prongs because if a statement denies the decisionmaker discretion in the area of its coverage . . . then the statement is binding and creates rights or obligations." Id. (cleaned up). Moreover, these "criteria" are merely intended to guide a court in "fathom[ing] the interpretative/legislative distinction." Cmty. Nutrition Inst. v. Young, 818 F.2d 943, 946 (D.C. Cir. 1987). In other words, "[t]hese factors are not treated like different elements of a cause of action, both of which must be proved; but instead a matter of judgment is involved in distinguishing between rules however discretionary in form, that effectively circumscribe administrative choice." Texas, 328 F. Supp. at 730 (citing Am. Bus Ass'n v. United States, 627 F.2d 525, 530 (D.C. Cir. 1980)).[56] The Court now weighs these criteria to determine whether the Memoranda are general statements of policy or substantive rules requiring notice and comment.

The Court first considers whether the Memoranda impose any rights or obligations. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171. In doing so, the Court is mindful that "a substantive rule—or a legislative-type rule, is one that affects individual rights and

Here, the February 18 Memorandum states that "[t]his interim guidance is effective immediately." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2) (emphasis added).

The Fifth Circuit cautions, however, that the "binding effect, not the timing, . . . is the essence of criterion one." Shalala, 56 F.3d at 595 (emphasis added). Thus, the "[m]ere pronouncements of what the agency intends, whether for the present or for the future, which do not have a binding effect, are properly classified as interpretative rules." Cmty. Nutrition Inst., 818 F.2d at 946 n.4. This caveat is of no consequence here because the Court finds that the Memoranda have a binding effect due to their effect on the rights and obligations described.

[56] In describing the criteria for determining whether a rule is a general statement of policy or a substantive rule requiring notice and comment, the Fifth Circuit has relied on the D.C. Circuit. See Shalala, 56 F.3d at 595 nn.15–16 (citing Cmty. Nutrition Inst., 818 F.2d at 943, and Am. Bus Ass'n, 627 F.2d at 529).

obligations." Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 302, 99 S.Ct. 1705, 1718, 60 L.Ed.2d 208 (1979) (citation and quotation omitted) (cleaned up). "This characteristic is an important touchstone for distinguishing those rules that may be 'binding' or have the 'force of law.'" Id. (citation omitted).

At the outset, it is worth noting that the Court has extensively described how the Memoranda affect rights and obligations in its analysis on whether the Memoranda constitute final agency action. See supra II.B.2. As a review, the Memoranda affect rights and obligations in at least three ways. First, the February 18 Memorandum commands that DHS abdicate its obligations under Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) to detain all aliens within the ambit of those provisions and that the detention occur at or for a specified time. Compare §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) with (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4–7).

Second, the Memoranda also create financial obligations for Texas that would not have existed but for the Memoranda. Based on the record, Texas will be required by law to bear some of the cost of providing Emergency Medicaid to eligible aliens who fall within the ambit of Sections 1226(c) or 1231(a)(2). See supra II.B.2.b. The legal obligation to provide these aliens with these services would not exist if deprioritized aliens were taken into federal custody at the time of their release from state custody as mandated by Section 1226(c), or if they were detained during the removal period, as required by Section 1231(a)(2).

Finally, as described above, the Memoranda affect the rights of some aliens already in detention. See supra II.B.2.b. As another court has already found, the Memoranda make a nonpriority alien's removal "unlikely to be imminent." See Hussein S.M., 2021

WL 1986125, at *3. This status, in turn, entitles certain aliens to release from detention. See id.; see also Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 701, 121 S.Ct. at 2505. That is an effect on rights.

For these reasons, the Court finds that the Memoranda affect the rights and obligations of those within the Memoranda's regulatory sphere—DHS, the states, and certain aliens. This consideration weighs against finding that the Memoranda are general statements of policy.

Next, the Court considers whether the Memoranda give the agency and its decisionmakers sufficient discretion to be considered a general statement of policy. They do not.

"General statements of policy" are those "statements issued by an agency to advise the public prospectively of the manner in which the agency proposes to exercise a discretionary power." Lincoln, 508 U.S. at 197, 113 S.Ct. at 2034 (quotations omitted). The Fifth Circuit has described the inquiry for determining whether a rule gives an agency and its decisionmakers sufficient discretion to be classified as a general statement of policy:

> The key inquiry . . . is the extent to which the challenged policy leaves the agency free to exercise its discretion to follow or not to follow that general policy in an individual case, or on the other hand, whether the policy so fills out the statutory scheme that upon application one need only determine whether a given case is within the rule's criteria. As long as the agency remains free to consider the individual facts in the various cases that arise, then the agency action in question has not established a binding norm.

Shalala, 56 F.3d at 596–97 (citing Ryder Truck Lines, Inc. v. United States, 716 F.2d 1369, 1377 (11th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 927, 104 S.Ct. 1707, 80 L.Ed.2d 181 (1984)). Applying this inquiry to the Memoranda, the Court is of the opinion that the amount of discretion they afford is insufficient for them to be classified as general statements of policy.

The core feature of the Memoranda is their prioritization of immigration enforcement actions for some classes of aliens to the exclusion of others. The Memoranda state explicitly that "[e]nforcement and removal actions [against aliens who fall within] the [priority groups] described . . . are presumed to be a justified allocation of ICE's limited resources." See, e.g., (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4–6) (alterations added) (emphasis added). And although the February 18 Memorandum purports to say that actions against nonprioritized aliens "may also be justified" and that "the interim priorities do not require or prohibit the arrest, detention, or removal of any noncitizen," an agent's discretion in this regard appears so constrained as to be illusory. (Id. at 4). Specifically, the February 18 Memorandum stipulates that "[a]ny civil immigration enforcement or removal actions that do not meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases will require preapproval from the [Field Office Director (FOD)] or [Special Agent in Charge (SAC)]." (Id. at 7) (emphasis added). The preapproval constraint greatly constricts the normal discretion ICE agents enjoy while exercising their statutory and regulatory duties on behalf of the agency. See (Dkt. No. 19-4 at ¶ 29) ("This policy requires field agents to obtain special permission before engaging in routine enforcement."); cf. 8 U.S.C. § 1357; 8 C.F.R. § 287.5. Put differently, agents now need the approval of a FOD or SAC to conduct otherwise routine enforcement operations. (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7); (Dkt. No. 19-4 at ¶ 29).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Moreover, the Memorandum details a mandatory process for receiving such preapproval. Indeed, "[i]n deciding to undertake an enforcement action or removal, the agent or officer must consider, in consultation with his or her leadership, the nature and recency of the noncitizen's convictions, the type and length of sentences imposed, whether the enforcement action is otherwise an appropriate use of ICE's limited resources, and other relevant factors." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7) (emphasis added). "In requesting . . . preapproval, the officer or agent must raise a written justification through the chain of command, explaining why the action otherwise constitutes a justified allocation of limited resources, and identify the date, time, and location the enforcement action or removal is expected to take place." (Id.) (emphases added). In other words, an agent or officer seeking to detain an alien or conduct other enforcement actions is required to consider certain factors in determining whether to conduct the proposed enforcement action, put this justification in writing, work this written justification through a chain of command and, most importantly, wait for approval to conduct what would otherwise be a routine enforcement action. See (Id.); (Dkt. No. 19-4 at ¶ 29).

If this cumbersome preapproval requirement and process were not enough in general to limit the agents' usual discretion, the February 18 Memorandum goes even further by expressly describing two specific scenarios in which an agent's decision-making power is greatly reduced. First, the February 18 Memorandum states that "[t]he approval to carry out an enforcement action against a particular noncitizen will not authorize enforcement actions against other [nonprioritized] noncitizens encountered during an operation."[57] (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7). Simply put, the February 18 Memorandum flatly denies agents the ability to exercise discretion over non-preapproved, nonprioritized aliens "during an operation." Second, the February 18 Memorandum limits agency discretion in detaining and conducting other enforcement actions against nonpriority aliens where exigent circumstances exist. See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7). To be sure, the Memorandum allows for detention of, and other enforcement actions against, nonpriority aliens without preapproval when obtaining such preapproval would be "impracticable." (Id.). And while the Memorandum acknowledges that "it is impossible to preconceive all such circumstances" in which obtaining preapproval may be impracticable, it nevertheless states that circumstances where obtaining preapproval is impracticable "generally will be limited to situations where a noncitizen poses an imminent threat to life or an imminent substantial threat to property." (Id.) (emphasis added). Yet, even in these circumstances, the February 18 Memorandum requires approval, albeit after the enforcement action is conducted. (Id.). Specifically, the agent is required, within 24 hours of the enforcement action having been conducted, to "explain the exigency, where and when the enforcement activity took place, and whether the [57] Specifically, the February 18 Memorandum states: "The approval to carry out an enforcement action against a particular noncitizen will not authorize enforcement actions against other noncitizens encountered during an operation if those noncitizens fall outside the presumption criteria identified above." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7). In such circumstances, "[a]n approval to take an enforcement action against any other noncitizen encountered who is not a presumed priority must be separately secured as described above." (Id.).

noncitizen is currently detained." (Id. at 7 n.7).[58] Once again, in a situation in which the agent's discretion is likely at its zenith—where exigent circumstances exist—the February 18 Memorandum severely restricts the agent's ability to exercise it.

In light of these policies, it is perhaps no surprise that the States provide evidence suggesting that ICE agents and officers will treat the Memorandum as a list of instructions rather than mere guidance. See (Dkt. No. 19-4 at ¶ 36). Specifically, a former Acting Director of ICE with more than 32 years of service in the agency testified that, "[a]s a practical matter, ICE officers are likely to treat the 'priorities' as categorical rules rather than presumptions to be rebutted on a case-by-case basis." (Id. at ¶ 29). Also unsurprisingly, there is evidence in the record tending to show that these "categorical rules" in the February 18 Memorandum are already hampering enforcement actions and will continue to deter agents and officers from exercising their discretion in determining whether to conduct enforcement actions in the future. See (Dkt. No. 19-3 at 3–8); (Dkt. No. 46 at ¶ 17); cf. Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 173 (assessing how DAPA has been applied in practice in determining whether it conferred sufficient discretion to be considered a general policy statement).

In addition to limiting the discretion of individual ICE agents and officers, the Memoranda also restrict the discretion of entire ICE field offices. See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 6); (Dkt. No. 42-2 at 6). Specifically, the February 18 Memorandum states that "ICE will require field offices to coordinate their operations and obtain preapproval for enforcement and removal actions that do not meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases." (Id.). In other words, the Memoranda not only require individual agents and officers to receive preapproval before conducting enforcement actions against aliens falling outside the three priority groups; they also appear to bind the field offices themselves to the preapproval process delineated in the February 18 Memorandum.

[58] And "when the location of a proposed or completed enforcement action is a courthouse, . . . or a sensitive location, . . . that should be explicitly highlighted in the request." (Id. at 7 n.7) (citations omitted).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

For these reasons, the Court finds that the amount of discretion that the February 18 Memorandum confers to the agency and its decisionmakers in conducting routine enforcement actions weighs against classifying the Memorandum as a general statement of policy. Weighing this factor along with the rights and obligations affected, the Court concludes that the Memoranda do not constitute a general statement of policy.

Procedural Rule

Even if the February 18 Memorandum is not a general statement of policy, it may nevertheless be exempt from notice and comment if it is a rule "of agency organization, procedure, or practice." 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(A); see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176. The Government does not assert that the February 18 Memorandum is a rule of DHS organization or practice; rather, the Government contends that it is one of agency procedure. (Dkt. No. 42 at 47–50). The Fifth Circuit employs two tests to determine whether a rule is one of agency procedure. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176–77; see also Texas, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 728. Here, both tests yield the same conclusion: the Memoranda do not constitute a procedural rule that is exempt from the APA's notice and comment requirement.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The first test used by the Fifth Circuit to determine whether a rule is procedural is the "substantial impact test." See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176. This test "is the primary means by which [the court] look[s] beyond the label 'procedural' to determine whether a rule is of the type Congress thought appropriate for public participation." Id. (citing Kast Metals, 744 F.2d at 1153). "An agency rule that modifies substantive rights and interests can only be nominally procedural, and the exemption for such rules of agency procedure cannot apply." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176 (quoting Kast Metals Corp., 744 F.2d at 1153).

In making this determination, the question is not "whether the rule is 'substantive' or 'procedural,' but rather whether the rule will have a 'substantial impact' on those regulated." Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Johnson, 22 F.3d 616, 620 (5th Cir.), modified on reh'g, 36 F.3d 89 (5th Cir. 1994), for text, see No. 93-1377, 1994 WL 484506 (5th Cir. Sept. 7, 1994). This distinction makes good sense, as "the notice and comment provisions 'were designed to assure fairness and mature consideration of rules of general application,'" Phillips Petroleum Co., 22 F.3d at 620 (quoting NLRB v. Wyman–Gordon Co., 394 U.S. 759, 764, 89 S.Ct. 1426, 1429, 22 L.Ed.2d 709 (1969)), and to "afford an opportunity for 'the agency promulgating the rule to educate itself before establishing rules and procedures which have a substantial impact on those regulated.'" Phillips Petroleum Co., 22 F.3d at 620 (quoting Texaco, Inc. v. Federal Power Comm'n, 412 F.2d 740, 744 (3d Cir. 1969)).

In determining whether the rule will have a "substantial impact" on those regulated, the Court may consider whether the rule creates legal or financial obligations for the plaintiff and whether the rule restricts the discretion of agency officials. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176 (concluding DAPA "undoubtedly [satisfies the substantial impact] test—conferring lawful presence on 500,000 illegal aliens residing in Texas forces the state to choose between spending millions of dollars to subsidize driver's licenses and amending its statutes"); Phillips Petroleum Co., 22 F.3d at 620 (concluding the rule at issue was not procedural because, in part, "[t]he rule narrowly restrict[ed] the discretion of MMS officials in determining the value of NGLP's" and "[i]t foreclose[d] other valuation methods by prescribing binding valuation criteria"); see also Texas, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 728 (concluding DACA is not a procedural rule, having found it "undoubtedly satisfies [the substantial impact] test because it has forced the states to spend money on various social services costs, which are clearly modif[ications] of substantive rights" (quotation omitted)). If the rule has a substantial impact on "the regulated industry, or an important class of the members or the products of that industry," then "notice and opportunity for comment should first be provided" because "[t]he exemption of § 553(b)(A) from the duty to provide notice by publication does not extend to those procedural rules that depart from existing practice and have a substantial impact on those regulated." Phillips Petroleum Co., 22 F.3d at 620.

Considering these criteria, the Memoranda satisfy the substantial impact test. First, as discussed above, the Memoranda affect at least one of Texas's legal obligations. See supra II.B.2.b. Specifically, they affect Texas's legal and financial obligations to partially fund Emergency Medicaid to aliens who fall within the ambit of Sections 1226(c) or 1231(a)(2) but, pursuant to the Memoranda, are not detained by ICE when they are released from state custody or during the removal period. The Memoranda also have a substantial impact because, as just described, they limit the discretion exercised by ICE field offices, agents, and officers. In sum, the February 18 Memorandum mandates a process for ICE field offices and agents to follow for obtaining preapproval to detain aliens the Memoranda deem to be nonpriorities. This mandatory policy restricts DHS from exercising discretion and conducting routine enforcement actions against aliens the Memoranda classify as nonpriorities. This curtailment of agency discretion in conducting routine civil immigration enforcement actions is yet another substantial impact the Memoranda have on those they regulate.

Finally, the Memoranda have a substantial impact on certain aliens already in detention. As discussed above, see supra II.B.2.b, and as another district court's ruling demonstrates, the Memoranda make certain nonpriority aliens' removal "unlikely to be imminent," thus entitling some of those aliens to be released from detention. Hussein S.M., 2021 WL 1986125, at *3; Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 701, 121 S.Ct. at 2505. Considering the many ways the Memoranda affect rights and obligations, it is clear that the Memoranda have a substantial impact and, therefore, the substantial impact test weighs against classifying the Memoranda as procedural rules.

The second test for determining whether a rule is procedural asks the Court to weigh two considerations. First, the Court must consider the "effect on those interests ultimately at stake in the agency proceeding." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176 (citing Nat'l Sec. Couns. v. CIA, 931 F. Supp. 2d 77, 107 (D.D.C. 2013)) (quotation omitted). "Hence, agency rules that impose 'derivative,' 'incidental,' or 'mechanical' burdens upon regulated individuals are considered procedural, rather than substantive." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176 (citing Nat'l Sec. Couns., 931 F. Supp. 2d at 107). This consideration clearly weighs against characterizing the Memoranda as procedural rules, given that the Court has already found that the Memoranda affect the rights and obligations of Texas, DHS, and certain aliens. See supra II.B.2.b.

Second, the Court must assess whether the Memoranda affect the substantive standards by which DHS determines whether to detain certain aliens. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176–77 ("[R]ules are generally considered procedural so long as they do not 'change the substantive standards by which the [agency] evaluates' applications which seek a benefit that the agency has the power to provide." (quotation omitted)). Here, the Memoranda alter the substantive standards by which DHS determines whether and when to detain certain aliens by departing from the plain statutory requirements in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) and effectively replacing them with new standards for making such determinations. As discussed above, Section 1226(c) requires DHS to detain aliens falling within the ambit of that provision when they are released from state custody. See supra II.B.3.a. Section 1231(a)(2) requires DHS to detain an alien with a final order of removal during the removal period. See supra II.B.3.a. The Memoranda, however, require DHS to do something different, setting forth a prioritization scheme that declares some aliens falling within the ambit of Section 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) as enforcement "priorities" and others also falling within those same statutory categories as "nonpriorities." See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4–7). And to detain nonpriorities, the February 18 Memorandum requires ICE agents to obtain preapproval. See (Id. at 7). No such prioritization scheme or preapproval process exists in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Rather, these provisions plainly require DHS to detain all aliens who meet the enumerated statutory criteria and that DHS detain them at or during the time stated in the provisions. See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1226(c), 1231(a)(2). Thus, the Memoranda change the "substantive standards by which [DHS] evaluates" whether or not to detain an alien who falls within the ambit of Section 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 177 ("DAPA establishes the substantive standards by which the agency evaluates applications which seek a benefit that the agency purportedly has the power to provide—a critical fact requiring notice and comment." (cleaned up)). Therefore, this test also weighs against classifying the Memoranda as procedural rules.

Texas Has Met Its Burden on Its Procedural APA Claim

In sum, the Court finds that the Memoranda do not constitute a rule that is exempt from the notice and comment requirements of Section 553. The Memoranda are not general statements of policy because they have a binding effect insofar as they presently affect certain rights and obligations and do not afford sufficient discretion to DHS and its decisionmakers. Likewise, the Memoranda are not procedural rules because they have a significant impact on DHS, the states, and certain aliens. Therefore, the Court finds Texas has shown a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of its procedural APA claim.

2. Irreparable Harm

In addition to demonstrating a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, the States must demonstrate "a substantial threat of irreparable injury if the injunction is not issued." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 150. Put another way, the States must show they are "likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief." Winter, 555 U.S. at 20, 129 S.Ct. at 374 (emphasis added). For an injury to be sufficiently "irreparable," the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

States need only show the injury "cannot be undone through monetary remedies." Burgess v. FDIC, 871 F.3d 297, 304 (5th Cir. 2017) (quoting Deerfield Med. Ctr. v. City of Deerfield Beach, 661 F.2d 328, 338 (5th Cir. 1981)).

The States argue their injuries are irreparable because they will incur financial costs that are unrecoverable. (Dkt. No. 18 at 40–41); (Dkt. No. 51 at 31). The States also argue they will suffer irreparable harm because non-detention will result in increased crime. (Id.). In response, the Government contends there is no irreparable harm because "there is not a significant impact on the States." (Dkt. No. 42 at 50). The Court concludes the States have demonstrated they are likely to suffer irreparable harm for the following reasons.

As discussed in this Court's standing analysis, the States have presented evidence demonstrating the Memoranda cause financial harm in the form of increased costs for detention facilities. See supra II.A.1.a. The States have also demonstrated the Memoranda harm their interests as parens patriae because of an increase in criminal activity resulting from the Memoranda's implementation. See supra II.A.1.b. The Court found these two injuries were concrete, imminent, and traceable to the Memoranda. The Court also concludes the threat of injuries to the States is "likely" as that term is used by the Supreme Court. See Winter, 555 U.S. at 20, 129 S.Ct. at 374.

There is also no indication the States can recover for their injuries. Indeed, there is no immediately discernable theory under which a state can "pierce the federal government's usual sovereign immunity or contrive a remedial cause of action sufficient to recover from its budgetary harm." Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *47. To that point, no Party has suggested the States can recover any of their likely financial injuries here. And the Fifth Circuit rebuffed an attempt by Texas in the late 1990s to force the federal government to pay medical, educational, and criminal justice expenditures caused by immigration. See Texas, 106 F.3d at 663–64 ("The State of Texas and its political subdivisions . . . appeal a Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) dismissal of their complaint seeking declaratory and injunctive relief which would require that the United States pay the educational, medical, and criminal justice expenses allegedly incurred as a result of the presence of undocumented or illegal aliens in Texas. Concluding that the complaint raises questions of policy rather than colorable claims of constitutional or statutory violations, we affirm."). Thus, any financial injury is irreparable. See Burgess, 871 F.3d at 304.

As for injuries to the States' interests as parens patriae, the Supreme Court has determined that "law enforcement and public safety interests" can constitute irreparable harm. See Maryland v. King, 567 U.S. 1301, 1303, 133 S.Ct. 1, 3, 183 L.Ed.2d 667 (2012) (granting a stay of a judgment after finding Maryland experienced ongoing irreparable harm because it was enjoined from effectuating a statute that assisted government officials in investigating crimes and arresting violent offenders). Here, law-enforcement and public-safety interests underlie the States' parens patriae injuries. Accordingly, the States have demonstrated they are "likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief." See Benisek, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 1944.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

3. The Balance of Equities and the Public's Interest

Having concluded the States have satisfied the first two elements for obtaining a preliminary injunction, the Court must now determine whether "the threatened injury outweighs any harm that may result from the injunction to the non-movant" and whether "the injunction will not undermine the public interest." Valley v. Rapides Parish Sch. Bd., 118 F.3d 1047, 1051, 1056 (5th Cir. 1997); accord Gonzales v. Mathis Indep. Sch. Dist., 978 F.3d 291, 294 (5th Cir. 2020). Federal courts have considered the balance-of-equities and public-interest elements together as they overlap considerably. Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187; Franciscan All., Inc. v. Burwell, 227 F. Supp. 3d 660, 694 n.36 (N.D. Tex. 2016). And because the Government is the nonmoving party, these two elements "merge." Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 435, 129 S.Ct. 1749, 1762, 173 L.Ed.2d 550 (2009); accord Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187.

In weighing the equities, a court "must balance the competing claims of injury and must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief." Winter, 555 U.S. at 24, 129 S.Ct. at 376. As for determining whether an injunction will undermine the public interest, a court should consider the public interests that may be injured and those that may be served by granting or denying a preliminary injunction. See Sierra Club v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng'rs, 645 F.3d 978, 997–98 (8th Cir. 2011) (citing Davis v. Mineta, 302 F.3d 1104, 1116 (10th Cir. 2002), abrogated on other grounds by Dine Citizens Against Ruining Our Env't v. Jewell, 839 F.3d 1276 (10th Cir. 2016); All. for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127, 1138 (9th Cir. 2011)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The States argue the Government has no interest in the implementation and enforcement of the unlawful policy contained in the Memoranda. (Dkt. No. 18 at 41–42). The States contend the public interest is furthered when the Executive Branch follows congressional mandates. See (Id. at 42); (Dkt. No. 51 at 31–32). In response, the Government characterizes any injunction as a restraint on "core Article II authority" which "outweighs any harm to the States and undermines the public interest." (Dkt. No. 42 at 55). In the Government's view, an injunction would inhibit its ability to prioritize limited resources, cause confusion within the Executive Branch, and impede any effort to draft final guidance. (Id. at 55–56). The Government also contends the public interest is served when it has the ability "to prioritize national security, border security, and public safety." (Id. at 57). Considering these arguments, the Court finds the States have the upper hand.

Notably, without a preliminary injunction, the States will be "threatened with substantial harm" to their state budgets and interests as parens patriae. See Burwell, 227 F. Supp. 3d at 694. As discussed earlier, the Court is unpersuaded by the Government's claim that the States' injuries are "speculative." See (Dkt. No. 42 at 22–23). Instead, the Court has found the States' injuries from costs relating to detention facilities and increased criminal activity are traceable to the implementation of the Memoranda. See supra II.A.2.

Although the States face substantial harm from the implementation of the Memoranda, the Government nevertheless attempts to show that the harm it faces is worse. The Government, however, postulates harms "that are less substantial" and

"vague." See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 186. Specifically, the Government makes much of an injunction's supposed harm to the Executive Branch's authority. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 55–56). Although it is true that the Executive Branch retains vast discretion in immigration enforcement, see Arizona, 567 U.S. at 396, 132 S.Ct. at 2499; Reno, 525 U.S. at 490, 119 S.Ct. at 946, that discretion ebbs when Congress sets forth a statutory mandate. Indeed, "[i]t is undisputed that Congress may mandate that the Executive Branch detain certain noncitizens during removal proceedings or before removal." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 973 (Kavanaugh, J., concurring) (emphasis added). Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) do just that: they require the Executive Branch to detain certain aliens at or for a specified time.[59] Any harm to the Government is therefore exaggerated and should be addressed to Congress.

The Government next complains that an injunction would create inefficiency because it would inhibit the Executive Branch's ability to prioritize limited resources.[60] (Dkt. No. 42 at 55–56). The Court is unpersuaded. First, in at least one case, the Fifth Circuit has concluded that any inefficiency resulting from an injunction inhibiting the Executive's ability to prioritize certain immigration-enforcement actions is "outweighed

[59] The Government implicitly invokes prosecutorial discretion with respect to any harm an injunction may cause its Article II authority. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 55). This argument does not warrant much discussion. Indeed, the Court has already extensively discussed the extent of the Executive's discretion in enforcing a law when a clear congressional mandate is in place. See supra II.B.3.

[60] Relatedly, the Government argues that an injunction would harm it by dismantling the two-step process ICE currently undergoes to determine whether to detain an alien in state custody. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 56). Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) already mandate which aliens must be detained and the time at or for which the Government must detain the alien.

by the major financial losses [that] states face." See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187. Here, the Court, in its standing analysis, has already found the Memoranda will result in significant financial losses for the States. See supra II.A.1.a. Second, the Government overestimates the effect of an injunction on the Executive's limited resources. Rather than dictate the use of resources, the injunction precludes the Executive Branch from instructing officials to act in a manner contrary to a clear congressional mandate. In other words, the Government remains free to expend its resources in a lawful manner.

To this point, "the public is served when the law is followed," Daniels Health Scis., L.L.C. v. Vascular Health Scis., L.L.C., 710 F.3d 579, 585 (5th Cir. 2013), and the public will be served if the Executive Branch is enjoined from implementing and enforcing a policy that instructs officials to violate a congressional command. See League of Women Voters of United States v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 12 (D.C. Cir. 2016) ("There is generally no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful agency action."); Blackie's House of Beef, Inc. v. Castillo, 659 F.2d. 1211, 1221 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (collecting cases) ("[T]he public interest in enforcement of the immigration laws is significant."); cf. Nken, 556 U.S. at 436, 129 S.Ct. at 1762 ("There is always a public interest in prompt execution of removal orders[.]"). The public interest is particularly strong here because, as fully described earlier, Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) are statutes that Congress enacted for the benefit of the United States, its citizens, and its legal immigrants. See supra I.A.; Demore, 538 U.S. at 518–21, 123 S.Ct. at 1714–16; Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 697, 121 S.Ct. at 2502.

Finally, the Government argues an injunction would result in confusion inside the Executive Branch because immigration officials will be left with little to no guidance on how to exercise their enforcement discretion. (Dkt. No. 42 at 56). Relatedly, the Government also theorizes that injunctive relief would impede its effort to draft final guidance. (Id. at 56–57). These arguments are puzzling because, with or without an injunction in place, the Government is free to craft new guidance or instruct Executive Branch officials to act in a certain manner so long as such guidance and instructions comport with the law (i.e., congressional mandates).

Given the discussion above, the Court concludes the potential harms to the States arising out of the Memoranda outweigh any potential harms to the Government. The Court also concludes the public interest is served, rather than undermined, by an injunction. Thus, the States have satisfied all four elements for a preliminary injunction.

C. SCOPE OF RELIEF

The States have satisfied the standard for a preliminary injunction. This conclusion raises two additional inquiries: the geographic scope of the injunction as well as the nature of the injunctive remedy. The Court addresses each in turn.

1. Geographic Scope

The States request a nationwide injunction. (Dkt. No. 18 at 42–43). The Court has expressed its substantial skepticism of nationwide injunctions. Texas, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 247877, at *6–7; see also Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *50–51. Indeed, nationwide injunctions of executive actions are an area of fierce disagreement in the courts and in legal academia. See id. But, as with any case, this Court is bound by applicable Fifth Circuit precedent in determining whether a nationwide scope for an injunction is appropriate. That precedent explains that a federal district court, under "appropriate circumstances," has authority "to issue a nationwide injunction." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 188. One such appropriate circumstance is when a nationwide injunction is necessary is to ensure uniformity in immigration policies as prescribed by federal law. Id. at 187–88; see also E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Garland, 994 F.3d 962, 987 (9th Cir. 2020) ("[C]ases implicating immigration policy have a particularly strong claim for uniform, nationwide relief." (citation omitted)). Another such circumstance is when "there is a substantial likelihood that a geographically-limited injunction would be ineffective because [the] beneficiaries [of the unlawful policy] would be free to move among states." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 188.

The Court finds both circumstances exist here. First, the Memoranda affect national immigration policy, which is designed to be uniform. See id. at 187–88. Second, given what has been detailed in the Court's standing analysis, a geographically limited injunction is insufficient to protect the States from irreparable harm because aliens not detained pursuant to the Memoranda in other states are able to move to Texas and Louisiana. See supra II.A.2 & II.A.3; see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 188. The States submitted evidence showing that "more than 50,000 noncitizens moved into Texas from another U.S. State in 2019." (Dkt. No. 18 at 42) (citing Dkt. No. 19-21); see also (Dkt. No. 51 at 35) (citing Dkt. Nos. 19-21–19-23). Accordingly, a nationwide injunction is appropriate. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187–88; see also Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *50–51.

The Government offers a handful of arguments in opposition to issuing a nationwide injunction. None carry the day.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

First, the Government argues nationwide relief is inappropriate because lawsuits concerning the Memoranda in other jurisdictions have been unsuccessful. (Dkt. No. 42 at 60). This misses the point. In determining the appropriate scope of an injunction, the Court's task is to fashion a remedy that prevents the plaintiffs in this case from suffering irreparable harm. See ODonnell v. Harris County, 892 F.3d 147, 163 (5th Cir. 2018) ("When crafting an injunction, district courts are guided by the Supreme Court's instruction that 'the scope of injunctive relief is dictated by the extent of the violation established.'" (quoting Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 702, 99 S.Ct. 2545, 2558, 61 L.Ed.2d 176 (1979)); see also Dep't of Homeland Sec. v. New York, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 140 S.Ct. 599, 600, 206 L.Ed.2d 115 (2020) (Gorsuch, J., concurring in the grant of a stay) ("Equitable remedies, like remedies in general, are meant to redress the injuries sustained by a particular plaintiff in a particular lawsuit. When a district court orders the government not to enforce a rule against the plaintiffs in the case before it, the court redresses the injury that gives rise to its jurisdiction in the first place." (emphasis added)); ODonnell v. Goodhart, 900 F.3d 220, 224 (5th Cir. 2018) ("The district court must narrowly tailor an injunction to remedy the specific action which gives rise to the order." (emphasis added) (quoting John Doe # 1 v. Veneman, 380 F.3d 807, 818 (5th Cir. 2004))). In concluding the States are entitled to injunctive relief, this Court has determined, based on Fifth Circuit precedent and the record before it, that a nationwide injunction is appropriate to prevent the States from suffering irreparable harm.

Next, the Government argues nationwide relief is generally ill-advised because, in effect, any attempt by the Government to create a new federal policy is thwarted by "a single successful challenge" to the policy, even if other challenges to the policy are unsuccessful. (Dkt. No. 42 at 60) (quoting Dep't of Homeland Sec., ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 601 (Gorsuch, J., concurring in the grant of a stay)). Frankly, the Court shares these concerns. Nonetheless, the Court, in fashioning a proper remedy, is bound by precedent, see Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187–88, and "must narrowly tailor an injunction to remedy the specific action which gives rise to the order," Goodhart, 900 F.3d at 224 (emphasis added) (quoting Veneman, 380 F.3d at 818); see also Dep't of Homeland Sec., ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 600 (Gorsuch, J., concurring in the grant of a stay). The Court therefore finds the Government's argument unpersuasive.

Third, the Government attempts to distinguish this case from Texas DAPA and Texas I by asserting that this case involves individual detention decisions rather than a blanket policy pausing enforcement actions against aliens. (Dkt. No. 42 at 60). To be sure, individual enforcement decisions are "inherently discretionary and non-uniform," Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *51, but the States are not challenging individual enforcement decisions. Rather, the States, like the plaintiffs in Texas DAPA and Texas I, are challenging a blanket policy. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 146–49; Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *30. Specifically, the States are challenging the Memoranda, which implement and enforce a blanket policy regarding the detention of certain aliens—a policy that contravenes congressional mandates. Accordingly, the Government's argument that this case is distinguishable from Texas I and Texas DAPA falls short.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Finally, the Government argues that, because the States' injuries are supposedly premised on detainers in Texas and Louisiana, an injunction limited in geographic scope to the boundaries of those two states will sufficiently protect them from any irreparable harm they may suffer due to the Memoranda. (Dkt. No. 42 at 60–61). The Court disagrees for two reasons. First, the Government incorrectly asserts that the States' injuries are premised on detainers when the States' injuries are, in fact, premised on the increased costs to their detention systems and their interests as parens patriae. See (Dkt. No. 1 at 15–16); (Dkt. No. 18 at 15–16, 18, 35–37). Second, in arguing that the geographic scope of the injunction should be limited to the boundaries of Texas and Louisiana, the Government ignores that, if aliens are not detained in other states, those aliens can migrate to Texas and Louisiana thus causing them harm. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 188 (recognizing that "there is a substantial likelihood that a geographically-limited injunction would be ineffective because" the beneficiaries of the unlawful policies "would be free to move among states"). Indeed, the evidence produced in this case regarding the migration patterns of aliens to Texas and from other states buttresses this point. See supra II.A.2 & II.A.3; (Dkt. No. 19-21 at 5–7); (Dkt. No. 19-22 at 5–7, 14); (Dkt. No. 19-23 at 2). The Government's argument is therefore meritless.

Thus, for the foregoing reasons, the States are entitled to a nationwide injunction.

2. Remedy

As stated above, "the scope of injunctive relief is dictated by the extent of the violation established." ODonnell, 892 F.3d at 163 (quoting Califano, 442 U.S. at 702, 99 S.Ct. at 2558); see also Goodhart, 900 F.3d at 224 ("The district court must narrowly tailor an injunction to remedy the specific action which gives rise to the order." (quoting Veneman, 380 F.3d at 818)). Since the States have satisfied the four elements required for a preliminary injunction, the Court finds that it is appropriate to enjoin the Executive Branch from implementing and enforcing the Memoranda. Specifically, the Court enjoins (1) Section B of the January 20 Memorandum, and (2) the sections from the February 18 Memorandum entitled "Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Priorities" and "Enforcement and Removal Actions: Approval, Coordination, and Data Collection." (Dkt. No. 1-2 at 4–8). These sections implement and enforce a policy that directly contravenes congressional mandates. As stressed above, agency policies that contravene congressional mandates are unlawful—plain and simple. See Util. Air Regul. Grp., 573 U.S. at 327, 134 S.Ct. at 2446; Barnhart, 534 U.S. at 462, 122 S.Ct. at 956. Moreover, the States have met their burden to show a substantial likelihood that the Memoranda's policy prioritizing the detention of certain aliens over others is arbitrary and capricious and fails to comply with the APA's notice and comment requirement. The Court therefore enjoins the implementation and enforcement of these sections.[61]

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

IV. CONCLUSION

Although this case involves many issues of administrative and immigration law, its core concerns whether the Executive Branch may implement a policy that directly

---

[61] The States also request that the Court issue a positive injunction to compel agency action unlawfully withheld. (Dkt. No. 18 at 25–26); (Dkt. No. 51 at 33). The Government is opposed. (Dkt. No. 42 at 57–61). Under the APA, a "reviewing court shall . . . compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed." 5 U.S.C. § 706(1). The Court reserves ruling on this issue until later in the litigation.

conflicts with laws that Congress enacted. The answer is no. In the end, through all their detailed explanations of the Executive's seemingly unending discretion, the Government substantially undervalues the People's grant of "legislative Powers" to Congress.

Because the States have demonstrated that there is a substantial likelihood that portions of the Memoranda direct Executive Branch officials to act in a way that is contrary to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), those sections of the Memoranda cannot stand and are hereby enjoined. Additionally, the Court enjoins the sections of the Memoranda described above because the States have demonstrated a substantial likelihood that the policy concerning detention of certain aliens set forth in the Memoranda is arbitrary and capricious under the APA and the Memoranda fail to comply with the APA's notice and comment requirement.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS the States' Motion for Preliminary Injunction. (Dkt. No. 18). Therefore, it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. Defendants and all their respective officers, agents, servants, employees, attorneys, and other persons who are in active concert or participation with them are hereby ENJOINED and RESTRAINED from enforcing and implementing the policies described in:

    a. Section B of the January 20 Memorandum entitled "Interim Civil Enforcement Guidelines." (Dkt. No. 1-1 at 3–4);

    b. The section entitled "Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Priorities" in the February 18 Memorandum. (Dkt. No. 1-2 at 4–6); and

c. The section entitled "Enforcement and Removal Actions: Approval, Coordination, and Data Collection" in the February 18 Memorandum.[62] (Dkt. No. 1-2 at 6–8).

2. This Preliminary Injunction is granted on a nationwide basis and prohibits enforcement and implementation in every place the Government has jurisdiction to enforce and implement the January 20 and February 18 Memoranda.

3. This Preliminary Injunction shall remain in effect pending a final resolution of the merits of this case or until a further Order from this Court, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, or the United States Supreme Court.

To ensure compliance with this Preliminary Injunction, the Court further ORDERS the following:

1. By September 3, 2021, the Government must file with the Court the legal standard it is abiding by with respect to the detention of aliens covered by or subject to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D) given the Court's injunction of the Memoranda at issue in this lawsuit. The information should state with specificity what guidance, protocols, or standards control the detention of these aliens in light of the fact that the Memoranda have been enjoined.

2. By September 3, 2021, the Government must file with the Court the legal standard it is abiding by with respect to the detention of aliens covered by or subject to 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2) given the Court's injunction of the Memoranda at issue in this lawsuit. The information should state with specificity what guidance, protocols, or standards control the detention of aliens in light of the fact that the Memoranda have been enjoined.

3. Starting in September 2021, the Government must file with the Court on the 5th day of each month a report stating the number of aliens known to the Government, who are covered by or subject to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D), who were released from custody during the previous month, and whom ICE did not detain immediately upon their release.

[62] This Memorandum Opinion and Order does not prohibit the Government from carrying out or adhering to the February 18 Memorandum's subsections entitled "Notice of At-Large Enforcement Actions" and "Weekly Reporting of All Enforcement and Removal Actions."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

For each of these aliens, provide under seal the alien's last known residence or address and the offense for which the alien had been incarcerated.

Additionally, for each alien not detained, the Government shall make and retain a contemporaneous record of the reason why the alien was not detained and the individual who made that specific determination.

4. Starting in September 2021, the Government must file with the Court on the 5th day of each month a report stating the number of aliens in their removal period as defined in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1). Of those, provide the number who were not detained pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2).

For each of these aliens not detained, provide under seal the alien's last known residence or address.

Additionally, for each alien not detained, the Government shall make a contemporaneous record of the reason why the alien was not detained and the individual who made that specific determination.

This Memorandum Opinion and Order does not prohibit the Government from carrying out or adhering to the January 20 Memorandum's sections entitled "A. Comprehensive Review of Enforcement Policies and Priorities" and "D. No Private Right Statement."[63] This Memorandum Opinion and Order also does not prohibit the Government from carrying out or adhering to the February 18 Memorandum's sections entitled "Purpose," "Background," "Questions," and "No Private Right Statement."

No security bond is required under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(c).

It is SO ORDERED.

SUBJECT: Review of and Interim Revision to Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Policies and Priorities

This memorandum directs Department of Homeland Security components to conduct a review of policies and practices concerning immigration enforcement. It also sets interim policies during the course of that review, including a 100-day pause on certain removals to enable focusing the Department's resources where they are most needed. The United States faces significant operational challenges at the southwest border as it is confronting the most serious global public health crisis in a century. In light of those unique circumstances, the Department must surge resources to the border in order to ensure safe, legal and orderly processing, to rebuild fair and effective asylum procedures that respect human rights and due process, to adopt appropriate public health guidelines and protocols, and to prioritize responding to threats to national security, public safety, and border security.

This memorandum should be considered Department-wide guidance, applicable to the activities of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP), and U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A. Comprehensive Review of Enforcement Policies and Priorities

The Chief of Staff shall coordinate a Department-wide review of policies and practices concerning immigration enforcement. Pursuant to the review, each component shall develop recommendations to address aspects of immigration enforcement, including policies for prioritizing the use of enforcement personnel, detention space, and removal assets; policies governing the exercise of prosecutorial discretion; policies governing detention; and policies regarding interaction with state and local law enforcement. These recommendations shall ensure that the Department carries out our duties to enforce the law and serve the Department's mission in line with our values. The Chief of Staff shall provide recommendations for the issuance of revised policies at any point during this review and no later than 100 days from the date of this memo.

The memoranda in the attached appendix are hereby rescinded and superseded.

B. Interim Civil Enforcement Guidelines

Due to limited resources, DHS cannot respond to all immigration violations or remove all persons unlawfully in the United States. Rather, DHS must implement civil immigration enforcement based on sensible priorities and changing circumstances. DHS's civil immigration enforcement priorities are protecting national security, border security, and public safety. The review directed in section A will enable the development, issuance, and implementation of detailed revised enforcement priorities. In the interim and pending completion of that review, the Department's priorities shall be:

1. National security. Individuals who have engaged in or are suspected of terrorism or espionage, or whose apprehension, arrest and/or custody is otherwise necessary to protect the national security of the United States.
2. Border security. Individuals apprehended at the border or ports of entry while attempting to unlawfully enter the United States on or after November 1, 2020, or who were not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020.
3. Public safety. Individuals incarcerated within federal, state, and local prisons and jails released on or after the issuance of this memorandum who have been convicted of an "aggravated felony," as that term is defined in section 101(a) (43) of the Immigration and Nationality Act at the time of conviction, and are determined to pose a threat to public safety.

These priorities shall apply not only to the decision to issue, serve, file, or cancel a Notice to Appear, but also to a broad range of other discretionary enforcement decisions, including deciding: whom to stop, question, and arrest; whom to detain or release; whether to settle, dismiss, appeal, or join in a motion on a case; and whether to grant deferred action or parole. In addition, all enforcement and detention decisions shall be guided by DHS's ability to conduct operations and maintain custody consistent with applicable COVID-19 protocols.

While resources should be allocated to the priorities enumerated above, nothing in this memorandum prohibits the apprehension or detention of individuals unlawfully in the United States who are not identified as priorities herein. In order to ensure appropriate allocation of resources and exercise of prosecutorial discretion, the Acting Director of ICE shall issue operational guidance on the implementation of these priorities. This guidance shall contain a protocol for the Acting Secretary to conduct a periodic review of enforcement actions to ensure consistency with the priorities set forth in this memorandum. This guidance shall also include a process for the Director of ICE to review and approve of any civil immigration enforcement actions against individuals outside of federal, state or local prisons or jails.

These interim enforcement priorities shall go into effect on February 1, 2021 and remain in effect until superseded by revised priorities developed in connection with the review directed in section A.

C. Immediate 100-Day Pause on Removals

In light of the unique circumstances described above, DHS's limited resources must be prioritized to: (1) provide sufficient staff and resources to enhance border security and conduct immigration and asylum processing at the southwest border fairly and efficiently; and (2) comply with COVID-19 protocols to protect the health and safety of DHS personnel and those members of the public with whom DHS personnel interact. In addition, we must ensure that our removal resources are directed to the Department's highest enforcement priorities. Accordingly, and pending the completion of the review set forth in section A, I am directing an immediate pause on removals of any noncitizen[1] with a final order of removal (except as noted below) for 100 days to go into effect as soon as practical and no later than January 22, 2021.

The pause on removals applies to any noncitizen present in the United States when this directive takes effect with a final order of removal except one who:

1. According to a written finding by the Director of ICE, has engaged in or is suspected of terrorism or espionage, or otherwise poses a danger to the national security of the United States; or
2. Was not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020; or
3. Has voluntarily agreed to waive any rights to remain in the United States, provided that he or she has been made fully aware of the consequences of waiver

[1] "Noncitizen" as used in this memorandum does not include noncitizen nationals of the United States.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

and has been given a meaningful opportunity to access counsel prior to signing the waiver;[2] or

4. For whom the Acting Director of ICE, following consultation with the General Counsel, makes an individualized determination that removal is required by law.

No later than February 1, 2021, the Acting Director of ICE shall issue written instructions with additional operational guidance on the further implementation of this removal pause. The guidance shall include a process for individualized review and consideration of the appropriate disposition for individuals who have been ordered removed for 90 days or more, to the extent necessary to implement this pause. The process shall provide for assessments of alternatives to removal including, but not limited to, staying or reopening cases, alternative forms of detention, custodial detention, whether to grant temporary deferred action, or other appropriate action.

D. No Private Right Statement

These guidelines and priorities are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party in any administrative, civil, or criminal matter.

[2] A voluntary waiver encompasses noncitizens who stipulate to removal as part of a criminal disposition.

MEMORANDUM FOR: All ICE Employees

FROM: Tae D. Johnson
Acting Director

SUBJECT: Interim Guidance: Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Priorities

Purpose

This memorandum establishes interim guidance in support of the interim civil immigration enforcement and removal priorities that Acting Secretary Pekoske issued on January 20, 2021. Acting Secretary Pekoske issued the interim priorities in his memorandum titled, Review of and Interim Revision to Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Policies and Priorities (Interim Memo).

This interim guidance is effective immediately. It applies to all U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) Directorates and Program Offices, and it covers enforcement actions, custody decisions, the execution of final orders of removal, financial expenditures, and strategic planning.

This interim guidance will remain in effect until Secretary Mayorkas issues new enforcement guidelines. The Secretary has informed me that he will issue new guidelines only after consultation with the leadership and workforce of ICE, U.S. Customs and Border Protection, and other Department of Homeland Security (Department) agencies and offices. He anticipates issuing these guidelines in less than 90 days.

I have requested approval of certain revisions to the Interim Memo until the Secretary issues new enforcement guidelines. My requested revisions have been approved, and they are incorporated into this guidance. To the extent this guidance conflicts with the Interim Memo, this guidance controls. As you will read below, the revisions include, but are not limited to: (1) authorization to apprehend presumed priority noncitizens[1] in at-large enforcement actions without advance approval; (2) the inclusion of current qualifying members of criminal gangs and transnational criminal organizations as presumed enforcement priorities; (3) authorization to apprehend

[1] For purposes of this memorandum, "noncitizen" means any person as defined in section 101(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

without prior approval other presumed priority noncitizens who are encountered during enforcement operations; (4) how to evaluate whether a noncitizen who is not a presumed priority nevertheless poses a public safety threat and should be apprehended; (5) the further delegation of approval authority; and (6) the importance of providing advance notice of at-large enforcement actions to state and local law enforcement.

Section C of the Interim Memo has been enjoined. This memorandum does not implement, nor take into account, Section C. This memorandum implements Section B (Interim Civil Enforcement Guidelines).

Background

On January 20, 2021, President Biden issued Executive Order (EO) 13993, Revision of Civil Immigration Enforcement Policies and Priorities, 86 Fed. Reg. 7051 (Jan. 25, 2021), which articulated the Administration's baseline values and priorities for the enforcement of the civil immigration laws.

On the same day, Acting Secretary Pekoske issued the Interim Memo. The Interim Memo did four things. First, it directed a comprehensive Department-wide review of civil immigration enforcement policies. Second, it established interim civil immigration enforcement priorities for the Department. Third, it instituted a 100-day pause on certain removals pending the review. Fourth, it rescinded several existing policy memoranda, including two ICE-related memoranda, as inconsistent with EO 13993.[2] The Interim Memo further directed that ICE issue interim guidance implementing the revised enforcement priorities and the removal pause.

On January 26, 2021, the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas issued a temporary restraining order (TRO) enjoining the Department from enforcing and implementing the 100-day removal pause in Section C.

Like other national security and public safety agencies, ICE operates in an environment of limited resources. Due to these limited resources, ICE has always prioritized, and necessarily must prioritize, certain enforcement and removal actions over others.

In addition to resource constraints, several other factors render ICE's mission particularly complex. These factors include ongoing litigation in various fora; the health and safety of the ICE workforce and those in its custody, particularly during the current COVID-19 pandemic; the responsibility to ensure that eligible noncitizens are able to pursue relief from removal under the immigration laws; and the requirements of, and, relationships with, sovereign nations, whose laws and expectations can place additional constraints on ICE's ability to execute final orders of removal.

Accordingly, in executing its critical national security, border security, and public safety mission, the Department must exercise its well-established prosecutorial discretion and prioritize its limited resources to most effectively achieve that mission.

Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Priorities

In support of the interim priorities, the guidance established in this memorandum shall be applied to all civil immigration enforcement and removal decisions made after the issuance of this memorandum. The civil immigration enforcement and removal decisions include, but are not limited to, the following:[3]

- Deciding whether to issue a detainer, or whether to assume custody of a noncitizen subject to a previously issued detainer;
- Deciding whether to issue, reissue, serve, file, or cancel a Notice to Appear;
- Deciding whether to focus resources only on administrative violations or conduct;
- Deciding whether to stop, question, or arrest a noncitizen for an administrative violation of the civil immigration laws;
- Deciding whether to detain or release from custody subject to conditions;
- Deciding whether to grant deferred action or parole; and
- Deciding when and under what circumstances to execute final orders of removal.

For ease of reference, the interim priorities identified in the Interim Memo, and as revised by this guidance, are set forth below along with further explanation.

As a preliminary matter, it is vitally important to note that the interim priorities do not require or prohibit the arrest, detention, or removal of any noncitizen. Rather, officers and agents are expected to exercise their discretion thoughtfully, consistent with ICE's important national security, border security, and public safety mission. Enforcement and removal actions that meet the criteria described below are presumed to be a justified allocation of ICE's limited resources. Actions not reflected in the criteria described below may also be justified, but they are subject to advance review as outlined further below.

In determining whether to pursue an action that falls outside the criteria described below, all relevant facts and circumstances regarding the noncitizen should be considered. For instance, officers and agents should consider: whether there are criminal convictions; the seriousness and recency of such convictions, and the sentences imposed; the law enforcement resources that have been spent; whether a threat can be addressed through other means, such as through recourse to criminal law enforcement authorities at the federal, state, or local level, or to public health and other civil authorities at the state or local level; and, other relevant factors (including, for example, the mitigating factors identified on page 5).

[3] As discussed above, the Department is enjoined from enforcing the Immediate 100-Day Pause on Removals in the Interim Memo. This following interim guidance should not be read to permit implementation of Section C of the Interim Memo.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Criteria Defining Cases That Are Presumed to be Priorities

Priority Category 1: National Security. A noncitizen is presumed to be a national security enforcement and removal priority if:

1) he or she has engaged in or is suspected of engaging in terrorism or terrorism-related activities;
2) he or she has engaged in or is suspected of engaging in espionage or espionage-related activities;[4] or
3) his or her apprehension, arrest, or custody is otherwise necessary to protect the national security of the United States.

In evaluating whether a noncitizen's "apprehension, arrest, or custody is otherwise necessary to protect" national security, officers and agents should determine whether a noncitizen poses a threat to United States sovereignty, territorial integrity, national interests, or institutions. General criminal activity does not amount to a national security threat (as distinguished from a public safety threat) and is discussed below.

Priority Category 2: Border Security. A noncitizen is presumed to be a border security enforcement and removal priority if:

1) he or she was apprehended at the border or a port of entry while attempting to unlawfully enter the United States on or after November 1, 2020[5]; or
2) he or she was not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020.

To be clear, the border security priority includes any noncitizen who unlawfully entered the United States on or after November 1, 2020.

Priority Category 3: Public Safety. A noncitizen is presumed to be a public safety enforcement and removal priority if he or she poses a threat to public safety and:

1) he or she has been convicted of an aggravated felony as defined in section 101(a)(43) of the INA[6]; or [4] For purposes of the national security enforcement priority, the terms "terrorism or terrorism-related activities" and "espionage or espionage-related activities" should be applied consistent with (1) the definitions of "terrorist activity" and "engage in terrorist activity" in section 212(a)(3)(B)(iii)-(iv) of the INA, and (2) the manner in which the term "espionage" is generally applied in the immigration laws.

[5] The statutory mandates in Section 235 of the INA (regarding asylum seekers) continue to apply to noncitizens.

[6] This criterion tracks Congress's prioritization of aggravated felonies for immigration enforcement actions. Whether an individual has been convicted of an aggravated felony is a complex question that may involve securing and analyzing a host of conviction documents, many of which may not be immediately available to officers and agents. Even when all conviction documents are available, whether a conviction is for an aggravated felony may be a novel question under applicable law. Accordingly, in deciding whether a noncitizen has been convicted of an

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2) he or she has been convicted of an offense for which an element was active participation in a criminal street gang, as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 521(a), or is not younger than 16 years of age and intentionally participated in an organized criminal gang or transnational criminal organization to further the illegal activity of the gang or transnational criminal organization.

In evaluating whether a noncitizen currently "pose[s] a threat to public safety," officers and agents are to consider the extensiveness, seriousness, and recency of the criminal activity. Officers and agents are to also consider mitigating factors, including, but not limited to, personal and family circumstances, health and medical factors, ties to the community, evidence of rehabilitation, and whether the individual has potential immigration relief available.

Officers are to base their conclusions about intentional participation in an organized criminal gang or transnational criminal organization on reliable evidence and consult with the Field Office Director (FOD) or Special Agent in Charge (SAC) in reaching this conclusion.

Particular attention is to be exercised in cases involving noncitizens who are elderly or are known to be suffering from serious physical or mental illness. Similarly, particular attention is to be exercised with respect to noncitizens who have pending petitions for review on direct appeal from an order of removal; have filed only one motion to reopen removal proceedings, and such a motion either remains pending or is on direct appeal via a petition for review; or have pending applications for immigration relief and are prima facie eligible for such relief. In such cases, execution of removal orders should have a compelling reason and are to have approval from the FOD.

A civil enforcement or removal action that does not meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases will require preapproval as described below.

Enforcement and Removal Actions: Approval, Coordination, and Data Collection

To ensure compliance with this guidance and consistency across geographic areas of responsibility, and to facilitate a dialogue between headquarters and field leadership about the effectiveness of the interim guidance, ICE will require that field offices collect data on the nature and type of enforcement and removal actions they perform. In addition, ICE will require field offices to coordinate their operations and obtain preapproval for enforcement and removal actions that do not meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases. The data and coordination will inform the development of the Secretary's new enforcement guidance.

No Preapproval Required for Presumed Priority Cases

Officers and agents need not obtain preapproval for enforcement or removal actions that meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases, beyond what existing policy requires and what a supervisor instructs.

aggravated felony for purposes of this memorandum, officers and agents must have a good-faith belief based on either a final administrative determination, available conviction records, or the advice of agency legal counsel.

Preapproval for Other Priority Cases

Any civil immigration enforcement or removal actions that do not meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases will require preapproval from the FOD or SAC. In deciding to undertake an enforcement action or removal, the agent or officer must consider, in consultation with his or her leadership, the nature and recency of the noncitizen's convictions, the type and length of sentences imposed, whether the enforcement action is otherwise an appropriate use of ICE's limited resources, and other relevant factors. In requesting this preapproval, the officer or agent must raise a written justification through the chain of command, explaining why the action otherwise constitutes a justified allocation of limited resources, and identify the date, time, and location the enforcement action or removal is expected to take place.

The approval to carry out an enforcement action against a particular noncitizen will not authorize enforcement actions against other noncitizens encountered during an operation if those noncitizens fall outside the presumption criteria identified above. An approval to take an enforcement action against any other noncitizen encountered who is not a presumed priority must be separately secured as described above.

In some cases, exigent circumstances and the demands of public safety will make it impracticable to obtain preapproval for an at-large enforcement action. While it is impossible to preconceive all such circumstances, they generally will be limited to situations where a noncitizen poses an imminent threat to life or an imminent substantial threat to property. If preapproval is impracticable, an officer or agent should conduct the enforcement action and then request approval as described above within 24 hours following the action.[7]

As always, it is important that ICE endeavor to remove noncitizens with final removal orders who have remained in post-order detention for more than 90 days. ICE will continue to review such noncitizens' cases on a regular basis, consistent with existing law and policy. ICE will endeavor to remove such noncitizens consistent with legal requirements and national, border security, and public safety priorities.

Periodically, ICE receives requests to exercise some form of individualized discretion in the interests of law and justice. ICE will create and maintain a system by which personnel can evaluate these individualized requests.

Notice of At-Large Enforcement Actions

The execution of an at-large enforcement action should be preceded by notification to the relevant state and local law enforcement agency or agencies. This notification will advance public safety and help ensure that planned immigration enforcement actions do not improperly interfere with state and local law enforcement investigations and actions.

[7] Where approval is sought following the enforcement action due to exigent circumstances, the request shall explain the exigency, where and when the enforcement activity took place, and whether the noncitizen is currently detained. Additionally, when the location of a proposed or completed enforcement action is a courthouse, as defined in ICE Directive 11072.1: Civil Immigration Enforcement Actions Inside Courthouses (Jan. 10, 2018, or as superseded), or a sensitive location, as defined in ICE Directive No. 10029.2, Enforcement Actions at or Focused on Sensitive Locations (Oct. 24, 2011, or as superseded), that should be explicitly highlighted in the request.

Weekly Reporting of All Enforcement and Removal Actions

The Director will review all enforcement actions to ensure compliance with this guidance and consistency across geographic areas of responsibility and to facilitate a dialogue between headquarters and field leadership about the effectiveness of the interim priorities.

Each Friday, the Executive Associate Directors for Enforcement and Removal Operations and Homeland Security Investigations will compile and provide to the Office of the Director, the Office of the Deputy Director, and the Office of Policy and Planning (OPP), a written report: (1) identifying each enforcement action taken in the prior week, including the applicable priority criterion, if any; (2) providing a narrative justification of the action; and (3) identifying the date, time, and location of the action.

In addition, each Friday the Executive Associate Director for Enforcement and Removal Operations will provide to the Office of the Director, the Office of the Deputy Director, and OPP, a written report: (1) identifying each removal in the prior week, including the applicable priority criterion, if any; (2) providing a narrative justification of the removal; and (3) identifying the date, time, and location of the removal.

These reporting requirements will be assessed periodically during this interim period to ensure that they are both productive and manageable.

The weekly reports will be made available to the Office of the Secretary.

Questions

Questions regarding this interim guidance or the Interim Memo should be directed to OPP through the chain of command and Directorate or Program Office leadership. Answers to frequently asked policy questions will be published on OPP's inSight page on an ongoing basis. Please note, however, that case-specific questions should generally be addressed by Directorate or Program Office leadership.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
VICTORIA DIVISION

STATE OF TEXAS, STATE OF LOUISIANA Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, et al. Defendants.	)	No. 6:21-cv-00016

DECLARATION OF PETER B. BERG

I, Peter B. Berg, declare the following under 28 U.S.C. § 1746:

I. Personal Background

1. I am currently employed by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS), U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) as the Acting Deputy Executive Associate Director. I have held this position since October 4, 2020. As Acting Deputy Executive Associate Director, I oversee the mission of ERO's eight headquarters divisions: Enforcement, Removal, Non-Detained Management, Custody Management, Field Operations, ICE Health Service Corps, Law Enforcement Systems and Analysis, and Operations Support.

2. Prior to this position, I served as the Assistant Director for Field Operations beginning on June 21, 2020 and had been acting in that role since January 31, 2020. In these capacities, I was responsible for the oversight, direction, and coordination of immigration enforcement activities, programs, and initiatives carried out by ERO's 24 Field Offices and 188 sub-offices. I further managed ERO Headquarters components, including Domestic Operations, Special Operations, and Law Enforcement Systems and Analysis.

3. I have been a career law enforcement officer since 1996, serving in various capacities with both ICE and the former Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). Other leadership positions I have held within ICE include: Field Office Director and Deputy Field Office Director for the St. Paul Field Office, Acting Deputy Assistant Director for the ERO Headquarters Criminal Alien Division, and Acting Deputy Assistant Director for the ERO Headquarters Field Operations Division.

4. This declaration is based on my personal knowledge and experience as a law enforcement officer and information provided to me in my official capacity.

II. Overview of ERO

5. Following enactment of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, ICE was created from elements of several legacy agencies, including INS and the U.S. Customs Service. ICE is the principal investigative arm of DHS, and its primary mission is to promote homeland security and public safety through the enforcement of criminal and civil federal laws governing border control, customs, trade, and immigration. Within ICE, ERO oversees programs and conducts operations to identify and apprehend removable noncitizens, to detain these individuals when necessary, and to remove noncitizens with final orders of removal from the United States. ERO manages and oversees all aspects of the removal process within ICE, including domestic transportation, detention, alternatives to detention programs, bond management, supervised release, and removal to more than 170 countries around the world. As part of the removal process, ERO manages a non-detained docket of more than 3.2 million cases, which includes noncitizens currently in removal proceedings and those who have already received removal orders and are pending physical removal from the United States.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

III. Guidance for Immigration Enforcement and Removal Actions

6. On February 18, 2021, ICE's Acting Director, Tae D. Johnson, issued interim guidance titled, Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Priorities (Johnson Memorandum) (Feb. 18, 2021), which implements with revisions the priorities set forth in DHS's January 20, 2021 Memorandum titled, Review of and Interim Revision to Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Policies and Priorities (January 20 Memorandum). The Johnson Memorandum lays out a process to allocate ICE's limited law enforcement resources to achieve its mission by focusing on cases that fall within three "presumed priority" categories: national security, border security, and public safety.

7. Further, the Johnson Memorandum emphasizes that the priorities do not prohibit the arrest, detention, or removal of any noncitizen; to the contrary, the memorandum presumes and sets out a process with respect to actions involving cases that fall outside the three priority categories. As a result, under the Johnson Memorandum, ICE has continued to arrest and remove individuals who meet the three presumed priorities, as well as those who constitute "other priority cases." Under the memorandum, no immigration enforcement action or removal is categorically prohibited. Rather, actions that do not meet the presumed priority criteria require preapproval by the appropriate ERO Field Office Director or Homeland Security Investigations Special Agent in Charge except where exigent circumstances and public safety make preapproval impracticable. Pursuant to this guidance, ICE took approved enforcement actions against individuals with serious and violent pending criminal charges, non-aggravated felon sexual predators, individuals with a nexus to national security threats to the United States, individuals who are identified as members of Transnational Organized Crime groups, individuals with warrants from foreign governments identified by an INTERPOL issued "Red Notice," and individuals with a range of violent criminal convictions.

IV. Irreparable Harm to ICE from Issuance of the Preliminary Injunction

8. I have read and am familiar with the preliminary injunction issued by the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas in this case.

Inability to Prioritize Use of Finite Resources

9. On August 19, 2021, the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas enjoined DHS from enforcing and implementing the policies described in: Section B of the January 20 Memorandum entitled "Interim Civil Enforcement Guidelines." (Dkt. No. 1-1 at 3–4); the section entitled "Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Priorities" in the Johnson Memorandum. (Dkt. No. 1-2 at 4–6); and the section entitled "Enforcement and Removal Actions: Approval, Coordination, and Data Collection" in the Johnson Memorandum, with certain exceptions. (Dkt. No. 1-2 at 6–8). Implementing the terms of the injunction and the reporting requirements, discussed in more detail below, would be unreasonably and unduly burdensome, if not entirely impossible.

10. First, the number of noncitizens who likely would fall within the scope of the court's order and nationwide preliminary injunction significantly exceeds ICE's capacity to detain. In July of this calendar year alone, CBP apprehended a total of over 212,000 individuals seeking to cross the southwest border. See https://www.cbp.gov/newsroom/stats/cbp-enforcement-statistics/title-8-and-title-42-statistics (last visited August 19, 2021). Even with over 95,000 expelled pursuant to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's (CDC) Title 42 authorities, over 116,000 were processed under Title 8. Another 64,000 Title 8 cases were apprehended in March; 66,000 in April; 67,000 in May; and 83,000 in June. Given these numbers and the Department's important border security mission, ERO's detention population is increasingly occupied by recent border crossers apprehended by CBP and processed pursuant to Title 8 of the U.S. Code.

11. Enforcement actions against the entire population covered by the court's order and preliminary injunction would require ICE bedspace, personnel, and other resources that simply do not exist. ERO is currently appropriated sufficient funding for approximately 34,000 detention beds nationwide, including approximately 31,500 single adult beds and approximately 2,500 family unit beds, to support its mission to enforce immigration law. ICE's access to its full inventory of bedspace is severely limited due to various court orders limiting the intake of noncitizen detainees, an increase in detention facility contract terminations, detention facility contract modifications, and the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. Specifically, ICE's Pandemic Response Requirements (PRR) for its detention facilities, which are informed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's COVID-19 guidelines, require that facilities undertake efforts to reduce populations to approximately 75% capacity.[1] Last year, the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California issued a nationwide preliminary injunction recognizing the 75% capacity limit, and ordering ICE to maintain additional strict standards to reduce the risk of COVID-19 infection. See Fraihat v. ICE, 445 F.Supp.3d 709 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 20, 2020). In light of these mandates, ICE's currently available bedspace inventory is only approximately 26,800 beds.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

12. Due to this finite number of detention beds, to meet the Department's important mission, ERO must prioritize its detention resources to facilitate the detention of certain noncitizens, including those who are convicted criminals, public-safety threats, and/or recent border entrants. According to data last viewed on August 20, 2021, the currently-detained population of 25,596 noncitizens constitutes more than 95% of the approximately 26,800 currently available beds. The court's order and the preliminary injunction would make it impossible for ICE to prioritize the use of its finite detention resources to carry out its public safety and national security mission in a fair, consistent, and effective manner. Specifically, the injunction and the order would likely result in the release of noncitizens ICE has deemed priorities for removal.

13. Second, the order and the preliminary injunction could adversely impact the ability of ICE to take immediate enforcement action against noncitizens who pose a security threat or other real harm to U.S. communities. Indeed, implementation of ICE's interim priority structure has enabled the agency to focus resources on arresting and detaining the most dangerous noncitizens.

14. If ICE were required to arrest, take into custody, and detain all known noncitizens subject to detention under section 1226(c) or section 1231(a)(2) without the ability to prioritize the most serious offenders, it would significantly curtail ERO's ability to protect communities from public safety threats. And given the limited detention capacity described above, detaining such individuals may well prevent ICE from detaining other individuals not subject to detention under section 1226(c) or section 1231(a)(2), even where those individuals present a danger to the community or a flight risk.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

15. Third, compliance with the nationwide preliminary injunction would adversely impact ICE's ability to plan targeted enforcement operations focused on security or public safety threats. ICE's best understanding is that there are approximately 11 million noncitizens in the United States who do not have authorization to reside here. It is critical that ICE focuses its finite law enforcement resources on its public safety mission and targeted enforcement operations like Operation SOAR (Sex Offender Arrest and Removal), a coordinated enforcement operation that builds on ongoing efforts to arrest and remove noncitizen sex offenders from our communities. Historically, ICE has used targeted operations like Operation SOAR as a mechanism to focus agency resources on the most egregious offenders in the interest of public safety, even where those offenders may not be subject to the statutory provisions at issue in this case.

16. The Johnson Memorandum focuses agency resources on enforcement actions against the most serious offenders. From February 18, 2021, through July 31, 2021, ERO processed 25,916 administrative arrests. Almost 20% of those arrests were noncitizens convicted of aggravated felony offenses. For the same period in the year 2020, ERO processed 39,107 administrative arrests. However, less than 8% of those arrests were noncitizens convicted of aggravated felony offenses.

17. Fourth, compliance with the nationwide preliminary injunction would effectively eliminate the ability of the Secretary to "[e]stablish[] national immigration enforcement … priorities" consistent with 6 U.S.C. § 202(5).. The former INS, one of DHS's predecessor agencies, exercised prosecutorial discretion and had policies guiding such exercise since as early as 1909 to maximize use of scarce agency resources, to protect the United States from national security threats and to protect our citizens and communities from harm. See Department of

18. The implementation of the enforcement priorities set forth in the DHS January 20 Memorandum and the Johnson Memorandum has assisted ERO in re-deploying assets to meet the current threat and reality. Through effective prioritization of resources, ERO is better able to adjust in real time to pressing operational needs. For example, ERO re-tasked several field operations teams to assist CBP in responding to state and local requests for assistance in the Rio Grande Valley, Del Rio, and Tucson areas to address increasing activity along the Southwest Border. Additionally, to date, approximately 300 officers have been detailed to the Southwest Border to support CBP operations. The support ERO provides at the Southwest Border includes, but is not limited to: transporting; processing; enrollment in alternatives to detention; removals; bedspace management of those taken into custody, including those subject to expedited removal proceedings pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b); and transfers of those taken into custody. This support has significantly increased over the past few months.

19. This flexibility has enabled ERO to prioritize border security, consistent with the Johnson Memorandum, by focusing its resources on targeting noncitizens who recently unlawfully entered the United States, while also targeting serious criminal elements operating in the United States. Implementing the terms of the court's order and the preliminary injunction would likely force ERO to realign field teams and other assets to allocate limited time and resources on non-criminal and other lower priority targets. Such a reallocation would likely disrupt ERO's ability to have a meaningful impact on important border security efforts.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Lack of Clear Guidance for Nationwide Workforce

20. Absent clear priorities, ERO immigration officers may be left with only very general guidance—or without guidance at all—on the exercise of their discretion, leading to disparate prioritization across the country and a lack of consistency in enforcement actions. This could result in an undesirable shift in enforcement away from those who present the greatest risk to public safety and undermine public confidence in the nation's immigration enforcement efforts. Further, an attempt to initiate enforcement actions indiscriminately among this population, instead of against certain prioritized noncitizens, would not be an efficient or reasonable apportionment of ICE's limited resources and would likely prevent ICE from effectively focusing on those noncitizens who pose the greatest and most imminent threat to public safety.

Unduly Burdensome and Impossible Reporting Requirements

21. The court's order requires ICE to produce monthly reports stating the number of noncitizens known to be "covered by or subject to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A)-(D), who were released from custody during the previous month, and whom ICE did not detain immediately upon their release," and to include last known residence, the offense for which the noncitizen had been arrested, the reason why the noncitizen was not detained, and the individual who made that determination ("the 1226(c) reporting requirement"). The order further requires ICE to produce monthly reports stating the number of noncitizens "in their removal period as defined in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)," along with the number of those "who were not detained pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)," to include last known residence, the offense for which the noncitizen had been arrested, the reason why the noncitizen was not detained, and the individual who made that determination ("the 1231(a) reporting requirement").

22. ICE's ability to comply to the court's satisfaction with the 1226(c) reporting requirement, for instance, depends almost entirely on ICE's ability to determine whether a noncitizen is covered by or subject to § 1226(c) prior to a decision whether to take the noncitizen into custody, but that would be exceedingly burdensome or, in some instances, impossible to accomplish. When ICE receives information from a state or local law enforcement agency about a noncitizen in detention, the agency only needs probable cause of removability in order to lodge a detainer request. The probable cause standard constitutes neither a conclusive determination that a noncitizen is in fact removable nor a determination that the noncitizen may be covered by one of the statutes at issue in this case. It is only after ICE encounters the individual, assumes custody, and conducts an initial intake screening, that those formal determinations are currently made. In fact, in light of the complexities of the immigration laws, although a removability determination may be possible, a determination regarding the applicable detention authority may require obtaining and reviewing criminal records and ever-evolving developments in caselaw.

23. ICE's ability to determine whether a noncitizen in state or local custody would be covered by or subject to § 1226(c) is further limited by the fact that some states have enacted laws barring information sharing with ICE and/or prohibiting ICE access to facilities.

24. Additionally, even where ICE would be able to make determinations upfront that a noncitizen in state or local custody is covered by or subject to § 1226(c), ICE's ability to learn when a noncitizen may be released from custody is significantly limited in many jurisdictions. Many jurisdictions across the country neither honor ICE detainers nor notify ICE when inmates are released from custody. As of July 19, 2021, ICE had identified 463 jails or prisons that do not notify ICE prior to the release of a noncitizen, and 155 jails or prisons that provide notification to ICE prior to a noncitizen's release from custody but do not provide adequate hold time for ICE to take an individual into custody. For many cases in these jurisdictions, ICE is not aware when noncitizens are released from criminal custody and has no knowledge of their last known residence. Some jurisdictions have also significantly limited ICE's access to state and local databases, which would include some of the information being sought by the court.

25. The 1231(a) reporting requirement similarly poses significant burdens for ICE and may, depending upon the court's interpretation of the requirement, apply to a very large class of individuals. There are currently an estimated 1.2 million noncitizens in the United States who have been issued final orders of removal. If the 1231(a) reporting requirement is intended to include both noncitizens who were detained at the time the order of removal became administratively final and those who were not detained, providing updated information on this population every month would significantly strain ICE's capacity to manage and track statistical data for any other purpose, including its mandatory congressional reporting requirements, statutory FOIA obligations, and myriad reporting requirements in this and other litigation.

26. The requirement that ICE make contemporaneous records of the decision not to detain will impose a serious administrative burden on the line officers making those decisions. Because of the constraints on available bedspace, the number of noncitizens subject to detention under either § 1231(a)(2) or § 1226(c) who will not be detained will likely be significant. Under the terms of the order, the line officers will be required to document that decision, thus diverting them from other important duties, including other enforcement efforts.

27. Simply put, it would be impossible for ICE to accurately and completely comply with these requirements. And it would pose extraordinary burdens on ICE to attempt to do so. ICE simply does not collect and retain data in the way that the court has requested. Moreover, with respect to noncitizens against whom no enforcement action has been taken, ICE's databases and systems do not (and cannot) capture information pertaining to the detention authority that would have applied to those noncitizens. In other words, ICE can only track the detention authority of individuals who are presently in ICE custody. Even then, ICE systems are not designed to capture the level of granularity needed to accurately report the number of noncitizens subject to § 1226(c) mandatory custody or the subset of noncitizens subject to § 1231(a) custody authority for whom custody is mandatory.

This declaration is based upon my personal and professional knowledge, information obtained from other individuals employed by ICE, and information obtained from various records and systems maintained by DHS. I provide this declaration based on the best of my knowledge, information, belief, and reasonable inquiry for the above captioned case.

DECLARATION OF THOMAS HOMAN

1. My name is Thomas Homan I am over the age of eighteen and competent to testify to the matters addressed in this declaration. I make this declaration on the basis of my own personal and professional knowledge and experience, as well as information available to me in my positions in public service

2. I am the former Acting Director of the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS), a position I held from January 2017 to June 30, 2018.

3. I have over thirty-two years of experience working for ICE and its predecessor entity, the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). I am a 34-year veteran of law enforcement, having begun my career as a police officer in New York in 1983. In 1984, I became a U.S. Border Patrol Agent with the former Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) in Campo, California. In 1988, I became an INS Special Agent in Phoenix, Arizona, and was later promoted to Supervisory Special Agent and Deputy Assistant Director for Investigations. In 1999, I became the Assistant District Director for Investigations (ADDI) in San Antonio, Texas, and three years later transferred to the ADDI position in Dallas, Texas.

4. The INS was abolished by the Homeland Security Act of 2002, and ICE was created to perform many of its former enforcement functions, along with the investigative functions of the former U.S. Customs Service. Upon the creation of ICE in March 2003, I was named the Assistant Special Agent in Charge in Dallas, Texas. In August 2004, I was named the Deputy Special Agent in Charge (DSAC) in that same office. As DSAC, I directed the day-to-day operations of seven local offices, with more than 200 special agents and support personnel, conducting investigations related to terrorism, export enforcement, illicit financing, money laundering, human trafficking, intellectual property rights violations, and cybercrimes.

5. In March of 2009, I became Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) Assistant Director for Enforcement at ICE Headquarters. In that position, I was responsible for ICE's enforcement initiatives and components through which ERO identifies and arrests removable aliens, including the Criminal Alien Program, the National Fugitive Operations Program, Field Training, the 287(g) Program, the Law Enforcement Support Center (LESC), the Fugitive Operations Support Center (now the National Criminal Analysis and Targeting Center (NCATC)), the Detainee Enforcement and Processing Offenders by Remote Technology Center, and the Interoperability Response Centers. In October of the following year, I was promoted to Deputy Executive Associate Director for ERO, and in May 2013, I was promoted to Executive Associate Director for ERO, a position I held until January 2017.

6. From November 2017 to January 2018, I held the position of Deputy Director and Senior Official Performing the Duties of the Director, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, DHS. From January 2017 until June 30, 2018, I served as Acting Director of ICE. In both positions, I directly oversaw ICE's core operational programs, as well as the agency's managerial and administrative support functions. I also directed and oversaw ICE's day-to-day work of enforcing the nation's immigration and customs laws; investigating a wide range of domestic and international activities arising from the illegal movement of people and goods into, within, and outside of the United States and supporting the OPLA litigators who prosecute exclusion, deportation, and removal proceedings, including against national security threats, criminal aliens, and other aliens posing a threat to public safety. ICE employs more than 20,000 federal civil servants and contract staff in more than 400 offices within the United States and 50 foreign countries.

7. I previously provided a declaration in this case. In my declaration, I outlined my concerns about the impact and effects of the memorandum issued by Acting Director David Pekoske dated January 20, 2021, and the February 18, 2021 memorandum issued by Acting Director of ICE, Tae Johnson. I provided my declaration on April 25, 2021, and understand it was filed in this cause as Document 19-4.

8. I have been provided a copy of the stay motion and the accompanying affidavit of Peter Berg filed by the Department of Justice in this matter. I have profound disagreements with the assertions contained in Mr. Berg's affidavit.

9. In the stay motion, the Department of Justice says, "ICE lacks the resources, including appropriated funds and bedspace, to detain all noncitizens potentially implicated by the injunction, as well as to protect the public by detaining and removing those individuals DHS has already identified as presenting safety threats and as deemed necessary for border security." I disagree with that assertion.

10. ICE's budget is sufficient to maintain higher levels of enforcement to cover the necessary expenses. As an initial matter, ICE has benefited from a significant budget increase in the last decade compared to prior budget years. For example, in 2012 the enacted ICE budget was 5.8 billion, and in FY 2021 the enacted budget is $7.97 billion. That is nearly a $2.2 billion, or 37.4%, increase. And while the specific line item for detention funding has decreased, the ICE budget is at historic highs and those funds can be reallocated to fund additional detention capacity. This has occurred at various times in the past. Thus, in my opinion, ICE has sufficient resources to maintain higher levels of enforcement.

11. The Department of Justice's contrary belief seems to be based on a misunderstanding of ICE's budget. Mr. Berg declares that "ERO is currently appropriated sufficient funding for approximately 34,000 detention beds nationwide," but ICE can use additional funding within their budget for detention needs. Congress has authorized DHS to transfer funds from other portions of its budget to "custody operations." Using this authority, ICE and DHS can fund significantly more than the 34,000 detention beds that Mr. Berg mentions, in the event that became necessary.

12. ICE's ability to transfer funds in this way is not new. During my tenure, ICE commonly utilized that authority to fund additional detention capacity. In fact, it occurred in approximately eight of my last ten years of service at headquarters.

13. During both the Obama and Trump Administrations, officials concluded that ICE needed additional funding, beyond that specifically appropriated for detention, to detain aliens in the United States. In those circumstances, officials would transfer the necessary amount of money from other portions of the ICE or DHS budget where it was less urgently needed.

14. For example, ICE and DHS re-purposed millions of dollars of funds to support increased detention capacity during the migrant surge of 2014 and 2015.

15. Insofar as Mr. Berg suggests that ICE cannot detain more than 34,000 aliens at one time, the suggestion is incorrect.

16. ERO's Average Daily Population (ADP) measures the number of individuals in ICE custody on an average day during the fiscal year. In FY 2019, ERO's ADP was 50,165 and at times during that year, ERO's detention population exceeded 56,000. See https://www.ice.gov/features/ERO-2019. During that year the average length of stay for ICE's detained population was 34.3 days.

17. It is worth nothing that during the same period, FY 2019, ICE removed over 267,258 aliens and 56% of those were reportedly convicted of a crime. Even with the limitations imposed by the COVID-19 pandemic, there is no good reason ICE could not detain similar numbers of aliens again and increase detention capacity as needed.

18. In addition, ICE has multiple options for detention facilities. First, it operates some facilities itself. Second, it contracts with other governmental entities, including the U.S. Marshal Service and various local governments, to operate detention facilities that house aliens through intergovernmental service agreements. Third, ICE contracts with private providers, such as GEO Care and CoreCivic to increase detention capacity and bedspace to detain migrants. I have learned that both GEO Care and CoreCivic have the additional capacity to easily provide over 15,000 additional detention beds.

19. During the Biden Administration, ICE has canceled or reduced multiple contracts with other governmental entities and private providers. This includes providers who have been reliable long-term partners. As a result, those entities have detention capacity that ICE could use but is not currently using. Some of these providers were low-cost providers of detention capacity for ICE, so the loss of their facilities is particularly harmful to ICE's mission. ICE has flexibility to utilize multiple options to increase its potential detention capacity. In my opinion ICE has chosen not to maximize those options.

20. I have also reviewed Mr. Berg's claim that implementing the Court's "reporting requirements" "would be unreasonably and unduly burdensome, if not entirely impossible." I disagree with Mr. Berg's assertions and believe that he overstates the burden such a requirement imposes. ICE has existing advanced databases that can track the vast majority of information addressed by the Court.

21. In some cases, ICE may lack sufficient information to reach a definitive conclusion about whether an alien is covered by Section 1226(c) or Section 1231(a)(2), but that does not prevent ICE from reporting information about aliens it knows or reasonably believes to be covered by Section 1226(c) or Section 1231(a)(2). In my view, ICE can reasonably comply with the Court's reporting requirements.

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1746, I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

Executed on this 22nd day of August, 2021.

Why immigration detention beds became a new issue in Trump border wall fight

Democrats opposing President Trump's push for a border wall used this week's budget negotiations to launch an attempt to rein in his administration's deportation efforts, proposing to reduce the number of detention beds available for immigration arrests inside the United States.

Though the congressional deal struck late Monday omits a strict new cap Democrats had sought for immigrants detained within the United States — as opposed to at the border — it returns funding levels for detention beds maintained by the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency to 2018 levels. Lawmakers backing the proposal, amid calls by some Democrats to "abolish" U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, said they hoped a bed limit would force the agency to refocus its attention on violent criminals while backing off immigrants who lack legal status but have not committed serious offenses.

Before the deal scrapped the proposal, Trump administration officials had denounced the idea, saying a reduction in detention beds would hamstring ICE and force the release of thousands of criminals. Matthew Albence, ICE's deputy director, said he had never seen a proposal for such a cap during his 24-year career.

"It would be extremely damaging to public safety," Albence said.

But the Democrats' maneuver was not entirely unprecedented: It takes a little-known funding mechanism long-wielded by border hawks and tries to turn it against them.

Proponents of a more-rigorous approach to immigration enforcement have for more than a decade treated detention bed funding as a way to ensure a minimum number of immigration arrests. By tying funding levels to a specific number of beds — 40,500 per day last year — appropriators were able to establish an informal quota for enforcement activity. Unofficially known as the "bed mandate," Republican lawmakers typically pushed for as many beds as possible and encouraged ICE officials to fill them with potential deportees.

In their clash with the president over border wall funding, Democrats were working to use the bed

Despite a partial government shutdown that lasted nearly 35 days, President Trump's efforts to secure border wall funding fizzled last month. However, that has not stopped efforts that were already underway to shore up sections of the southern border in two Texas counties.

The Democrats' proposal aimed to cap the number of detention beds available for interior enforcement at 16,500 per day. Democrats also wanted to reduce the overall number of available beds to 35,400, far below the 52,000 that the Trump administration has requested.

"ICE has been overspending and overjailing," said Kerri Talbot, an advocate with Immigration Hub, a group that is backing the Democrats' proposal. "Democrats want controls on ICE because ICE is out of control."

President Barack Obama came under criticism during his first term from many Democrats and immigrant advocates when annual deportations reached levels that far exceed current totals. By his second term, ICE had developed a more tailored enforcement approach that targeted serious and violent offenders but gave greater latitude to immigrants who were otherwise law-abiding.

After Trump took office, ICE officials praised him for "taking the shackles off" and giving agents greater discretion to make arrests. Criminal violators remain the agency's priority, ICE officials say, but they also have sparked a backlash with arrests of immigrants with deep community ties, American children and well-established lives in the United States.

ICE arrests increased 11 percent last year, and the agency carried out 14 percent more deportations. But enforcement efforts have fallen far short of Trump's post-election promise to immediately remove 2 million to 3 million immigrants living in the United States illegally.

At a time when record numbers of Central American families have been showing up at the border, the number of people held in ICE custody has soared to nearly 50,000 per day, far above the number of beds Congress has funded.

Albence told reporters Monday his agency has paid for the additional beds by making the best use of its resources, but noted that ICE has an obligation to enforce immigration laws. A cap on interior enforcement would ask ICE "to ignore the very laws that Congress has already passed," he said.

"We cannot have a system whereby immigration enforcement is only effectuated against individuals once they commit a subsequent crime to their immigration violation," he said. "If they know there is no enforcement arm within the interior of the United States that is out there looking for them, you will continually have that pull factor and you will never secure the border."

GOP aides said after Monday's deal was reached that ICE would have enough money and flexibility to maintain its current detention levels and add more when needed.

Albence held a White House conference call hours after senior Trump adviser Stephen Miller had a separate call with the president's surrogates and supporters, telling them the Democrats "want illegals released" and "won't fund ICE officers," according to a person who listened to the briefing.

ICE relies on a network of government-run and privately operated detention centers to hold immigration violators in custody while awaiting deportation or a court hearing.

Costs for those beds vary widely, and some county jails in rural areas have converted sections of their facilities into immigration detention centers by offering rock-bottom rates to the federal government.

The number of beds funded annually by Congress is based on the average daily cost for one detainee, so the agency can also hold more people in custody by using less-expensive facilities.

John Sandweg, who was acting director of ICE under President Obama and who held other senior positions at the agency, said the debate showed the necessity of devising more sophisticated ways to assess the flight risk of immigration violators that wouldn't require locking them up.

Because the U.S. immigration court system prioritizes the cases of those held in custody over those who have been paroled, it can give lawmakers a misleading impression that the only way to ensure someone shows up in court is to keep them jailed.

"Detention is not the key to deportation," said Sandweg, adding that immigration violators should be treated more like criminal defendants, with a greater range of cost-effective parole options.

But Albence said that such alternatives are ineffective. He said 72 percent of immigrants in ICE custody are subject to "mandatory detention" because of serious criminal records, a pending deportation order or some other administrative restriction on their ability to qualify for parole or GPS monitoring.

DECLARATION OF

I, Monica Burke, declare the following under 28 U.S.C. § 1746:

1. I presently serve as Acting Assistant Director of Custody Management Division (CMD), Enforcement and Removal Operations, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS or Department). I have served in this capacity since August 2, 2021. I started my career at ICE in the Office of the Principal Legal Advisor, ERO Law Division (EROLD) in 2011. I was a Section Chief and Deputy Division Chief in EROLD. Prior to my current position, I was the Deputy Assistant Director for Custody Programs within CMD from March 2020 to August 2021.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

2. CMD provides policy and oversight for the administrative custody of ICE's highly transient and diverse population of immigration detainees. CMD is composed of two divisions – the Oversight Compliance and Acquisitions Division (OCAD) and the Custody Programs Division (CPD).
3. As the Assistant Director, I am responsible for the effective and proficient performance of these divisions and their various units, including the oversight of compliance with ICE's detention standards and conditions of confinement at ICE detention facilities generally. I am further responsible for managing ICE detention operations efficiently and effectively to provide for the safety, security, and care of an average of about 25,000 detainees daily at approximately 200 facilities nationwide.
4. This declaration is based on my personal knowledge and experience and information provided to me in my official capacity.
5. I have read and am familiar with the declaration of Thomas Homan submitted by Plaintiffs in this case.
6. If the court's order required ICE to arrest, take into custody, and detain all known noncitizens subject to detention under section 1226(c) or section 1231(a)(2) without the ability to prioritize the most serious offenders, ICE would need to contract and pay for orders of magnitude more detention beds than it currently possesses, especially when accounting for limitations required by the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic and pandemic guidance.
7. As an initial matter, reprogramming or transferring funds would not address the significant obstacles to identifying additional appropriate detention space. Over the past month, I have been working to identify additional beds and I am familiar with the many challenges associated with this effort. Finding and contracting for additional detention beds is a complicated process that requires several months per facility. First, ICE must identify available facilities. Second, ICE must conduct multiple preoccupancy inspections to ensure the facility is suitable for civil immigration detainees. Third, ICE negotiates with the detention provider and awards the contract that must be funded.

8. This process is complicated by the fact that detention providers are facing challenges in hiring appropriate staff, especially medical staff, and after staff are identified, ICE needs several weeks to ensure that they have appropriate clearances.

9. Notably, some facilities have terminated their contracts with ICE during the pandemic. Further, civil immigration detention requires a heightened standard of care and Congress has regularly required DHS to monitor facilities and discontinue agreements under certain circumstances. Available facilities are also impacted by state laws prohibiting ICE detention. Further, ICE detention space is limited by ongoing litigation that enjoins ICE from using some of its detention capacity.

10. Based on the funding and operational challenges, I believe that ICE cannot readily add sufficient bedspace to accommodate the orders of magnitude of additional noncitizens that would need to be detained were the court to order it.

11. Any significant reprogramming or transferring of funds would also damage other important DHS priorities and programs. This could include funds appropriated to support important programs like Fugitive Operations and the Transportation and Removal program. Beyond the custody sphere, there are many other significant programs within DHS and ICE that could be jeopardized by a court ordered mandate to reallocate funds without regard to the department's overall mission.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

This declaration is based upon my personal and professional knowledge, information obtained from other individuals employed by ICE, and information obtained from various records and systems maintained by DHS. I provide this declaration based on the best of my knowledge, information, belief, and reasonable inquiry for the above captioned case.

Signed on this 23rd day of August 2021.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

DREW B. TIPTON UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

1 "No matter how successful Congress might be in crafting a set of immigration laws that would—in theory—lead to the most long-term benefits to the American people, such benefits will not actually occur if those laws cannot be enforced." S. Rep. No. 104-249, at 3 (1996). That observation comes from a Senate Judiciary Committee Report addressing the problem of alien criminality in the United States. Similarly, the Supreme Court has stated "deportable criminal aliens who remain[ ] in the United States often commit[ ] more crimes before being removed." Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 518, 123 S.Ct. 1708, 1715, 155 L.Ed.2d 724 (2003) (citing Hearing on H.R. 3333 before the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 101st Cong., 1st Sess., 54, 52 (1989)). These observations, among others, led to the wholesale reform of our Nation's immigration laws in the 1990s.

Now, over two decades later, the States of Texas and Louisiana (the "States") seek to have the Executive Branch (the "Government")[1] adhere to two federal immigration statutes passed during that wholesale reform. The States want the Government to comply with 8 U.S.C. §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), which provide that the Government "shall" detain certain aliens when they are released from custody or during their removal period, respectively.[2] More specifically, the States move for a preliminary injunction to prohibit the Government from implementing two recent immigration memoranda which allegedly instruct Executive Branch officials to violate these laws.[3] (Dkt. No. 18).

These immigration memoranda, issued on January 20 and February 18, 2021 (the "Memoranda"), purport to "prioritize" certain categories of aliens for enforcement action. (Dkt. No. 1-1); (Dkt. No. 1-2). The States point out that the priority categories enumerated in these Memoranda omit certain others—namely, aliens convicted of serious drug offenses, aliens convicted of crimes of moral turpitude, and aliens subject to a final order of removal. The States argue that federal law requires the Government to take custody of aliens falling within these overlooked categories, and the Memoranda are grinding these required detentions to a halt. Unsurprisingly, the Government disagrees and argues that the Executive Branch is simply acting within its discretion.

2 This case involves the intersection of several areas of administrative and immigration law. But more fundamentally, the claims made in this case implicate the separation-of-powers framework set forth in our Nation's Constitution. Put simply, the Government has instructed federal officials that "shall detain" certain aliens means "may detain" when it unambiguously mean must detain. Thus, the Court inquires whether the Executive Branch may direct officials to enforce a law enacted by Congress in a way that is contrary to the plain language of the law. That inquiry yields a clear answer: it may not. The Executive Branch may not instruct its officers to enforce a statute in a manner contrary to the law itself. Util. Air Regul. Grp. v. EPA, 573 U.S. 302, 327, 134 S.Ct. 2427, 2446, 189 L.Ed.2d 372 (2014) ("Under our system of government, Congress makes laws and the President, acting at times through agencies ... , faithfully executes them. The power of executing the laws [however] ... does not include a power to revise clear statutory terms that turn out not to work in practice." (citing U.S. Const. art. II, § 3) (cleaned up)).

Having considered the pleadings, the record, and the applicable law, the Court finds the States have satisfied the requirements for a preliminary injunction. Accordingly, the States' Motion is GRANTED. [4]

I. BACKGROUND

At first glance, the background facts of this case are straightforward. The Government issued two memoranda concerning civil immigration enforcement which the States claim violate two immigration laws. But upon closer examination, the actions of the Government and the claims by the States are strikingly complex. Congress did not design our Nation's immigration laws on a whim. Therefore, to place this case in its proper context and facilitate understanding of the function of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), the Court begins by briefly detailing some of the history behind those statutes. [5]

A. HISTORY OF SECTIONS 1226(C) AND 1231(A)(2)

The United States has long welcomed and benefited from immigration. [6] The Nation has, however, borne costs due to illegal immigration and the criminal conduct of illegal aliens. See Juliet Stumpf, The Crimmigration Crisis: Immigrants, Crime, and Sovereign Power, 56 Am. U. L. Rev. 367, 380–81 (2006). Congress in the 1990s was not blind to those concerns. As a legislative report from 1995 mentions, "[a]lthough immigrants to the United States have been, and continue to be, predominantly hard working and law abiding, there appears to be a growing criminal class among immigrants, especially among those here illegally." S. Rep. No. 104-48, at 7 (1995). Indeed, Congress directly linked illegal immigration with crime. The same legislative report provides:

> 3 The fact that many criminal aliens have entered the U.S. illegally helps explain why so many aliens are involved in crime[.] [T]heir illegal situation conveys an "outlaw" status, often leading them into the shadowy realms of criminal lifestyles. The point was made succinctly in Congressional testimony by a former Commissioner of the INS, "[t]hose entering the United States illegally have no legitimate sponsors and are prohibited from holding jobs. Thus, criminal conduct may be the only way to survive."

Id. at 5.

Yet throughout much of its history, the United States had neither the means nor the ability to curb illegal immigration or alien criminality. Indeed, "[f]or much of this country's history there has been no comprehensive body of immigration law and no laws at all addressing criminal aliens." Id. at 10. Despite the enactment of the Immigration and Nationality Act in 1952—and numerous immigration bills signed into law in the subsequent decades—these issues were "dealt with ... mostly as an afterthought." Id. at 12. Prior to the 1990s, "no major immigration legislation ha[d] focused exclusively on the problem of criminal aliens." Id. And although there were attempts to solve the problem of illegal immigration and alien criminality, change happened in a "piecemeal fashion." Id. It is unsurprising, therefore, that the time leading up to the enactment of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) has been regarded by the Supreme Court as a time of "wholesale failure by [the Executive Branch] to deal with increasing rates of criminal activity by aliens." Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1714 (citations omitted); see also Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 698, 121 S.Ct. 2491, 2503, 150 L.Ed.2d 653 (2001). The Executive Branch's failures at that time led to costs and consequences borne by the states, the citizens of this country, and its legal immigrants. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 518–21, 123 S.Ct. at 1714–16; S. Rep. No. 104-48, at 1–2 (1995).

Congress's observations led to significant statutory reform in the federal detention of criminal aliens. Following numerous reports about the high rate of abscondment and recidivism among criminal aliens and the corresponding costs and negative effects, "Congress enacted 8 U.S.C. § 1226, requiring the Attorney General to detain a subset of deportable criminal aliens pending a determination of their removability." Demore, 538 U.S. at 521, 123 S.Ct. at 1716. Section 1226(c)(1) reads:

> The Attorney General shall take into custody any alien who —

> when the alien is released, without regard to whether the alien is released on parole, supervised release, or probation, and without regard to whether the alien may be arrested or imprisoned again for the same offense.

4 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1) (emphases added) (footnote added). And to buttress this detention mandate, Congress in Subsection (2) provided detailed instructions on the narrow circumstances under which the Attorney General could release a detained illegal alien.

> The Attorney General may release an alien described in paragraph (1) only if the Attorney General decides pursuant to section 3521 of Title 18 that release of the alien from custody is necessary to provide protection to a witness, a potential witness, a person cooperating with an investigation into major criminal activity, or an immediate family member or close associate of a witness, potential witness, or person cooperating with such an investigation, and the alien satisfies the Attorney General that the alien will not pose a danger to the safety of other persons or of property and is likely to appear for any scheduled proceeding. A decision relating to such release shall take place in accordance with a procedure that considers the severity of the offense committed by the alien.

Id. § 1226(c)(2) (emphases added).

Congress's efforts to protect the states, citizens, and legal immigrants from criminal illegal aliens through the INA during the 1990s were not confined to Section 1226(c). Through other statutes, too, "Congress explicitly expanded the group of aliens subject to mandatory detention." Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 698, 121 S.Ct. at 2503 (citing Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, § 439(c), 110 Stat. 1277; Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, Div. C, §§ 303, 305, 110 Stat. 3009–585, 3009–598 to 3009–599; 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c); and 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)). That expansion is evident in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2), which outlines the Attorney General's discretion regarding the detention of illegal aliens who have been ordered removed:

> During the removal period, the Attorney General shall detain the alien. Under no circumstance during the removal period shall the Attorney General release an alien who has been found inadmissible under section 1182(a)(2) or 1182(a)(3)(B) of this title or deportable under section 1227(a)(2) or 1227(a)(4)(B) of this title.

8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2) (emphases added).

In view of the historical context and text of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), Congress designed these two provisions to curtail the effects of illegal immigration and the concomitant concerns of alien criminality. But, as the Senate Judiciary Committee Report mentioned earlier admits, these statutory policies are futile if the "laws cannot be enforced." S. Rep. No. 104-249, at 3 (1996).

B. DETENTIONS IN PRACTICE

Previously, in Texas v. United States, the Court provided an in-depth overview of the immigration removal process. ____ F. Supp. 3d ____, ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *4–9 (S.D.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Tex. Feb. 23, 2021) (hereinafter "Texas I"). That discussion touched upon parts of the detention process for aliens subject to removal proceedings, id. at *5, and aliens subject to final orders of removal, id. at *8–9. Given the specific focus on detentions in this Motion for Preliminary Injunction, it is appropriate to more fully discuss the detention process for aliens subject to Sections 1226 and 1231.

5 To start, the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009-546, created a uniform procedure for deporting aliens or denying them entry into the United States. The detention and removal process under Section 240 of the Immigration and Nationality Act ("240 proceedings") commences when DHS files a Notice to Appear ("NTA") against an alien or noncitizen—who are designated as "respondents"—in immigration court. Matter of S-O-G- & F-D-B-, 27 I. & N. Dec. 462, 465 (2018); see 8 C.F.R. § 1003.14; Jennifer Williams, The Potential Implications of the Supreme Court's Decision in Pereira v. Sessions on Prosecutions for Illegal Reentry Under 8 U.S.C. § 1326, 67 DOJ J. Fed. L. & Prac. 141 (2019); see also (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. Nos. 82 at 12, 82-1 at 5, 83 at 14). Federal law then gives the Attorney General —and immigration judges by extension of DOJ's internal organizational structure—discretion on whether such an alien may continue to be detained during the proceedings or released on bond or conditional parole pursuant to Section 1226(a). 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a).

For criminal aliens, however, the start of the process is a bit different. Such aliens are taken into custody by officers within the Executive Branch (i.e., Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE") agents) in generally three ways: an ICE arrest; in execution of detainers after a local police stop, see 8 C.F.R. § 287.7(a) (2011); or after completion of incarceration for a prior criminal conviction, see 8 C.F.R. § 287.5(c) (2016). See Gerard Savaresse, When Is When?: 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) and the Requirements of Mandatory Detention, 82 Fordham L. Rev. 285, 302 (2013). Of the three, immigration detainers are particularly important:

> The Executive branch uses immigration detainers to control the release of non-citizens from state prisons and local jails. When federal immigration officials learn that a state or local law enforcement agency has custody of a non-citizen targeted for immigration proceedings or investigation, they issue a detainer to give notice to state or local officials that the federal government intends to take custody of the non-citizen upon release. The form detainer notice issued by federal immigration officials directs the recipient that federal regulations require the recipient agency to detain the non-citizen for a brief period of time after the non-citizen would otherwise be released from custody.[8] Absent the ability to issue detainers, immigration enforcement officials would have to be present at the gates of the state or local detention facility to apprehend the non-citizen upon release.

Christopher N. Lasch, Enforcing the Limits of the Executive's Authority to Issue Immigration Detainers, 35 Wm. Mitchell L. Rev. 164, 165 (2008) (footnote added) (citations omitted).[9]

6 In the past, ICE and DHS have been known to "screen" state prison and local jail populations for criminal aliens who may be subject to Section 1226(c). Id. at 177 (citing U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, Secure Communities: A Comprehensive Plan to Identify and Remove Criminal Aliens (Mar. 28, 2008), not available online (Aug. 2, 2021)). This screening takes place, at least in some circumstances, without cooperation from state and local authorities. See, e.g., State v. Reyes-Armenta, No. M2004-00419-CCA-R3-CD, 2004 WL 2804898, at *2 (Tenn. Crim. App. 2004) ("The codefendants were then taken to the Sumner County Jail for processing. The officers had made no attempt to contact federal immigration officials; however, Agent Robert Kinghorn, an immigration officer, happened to be at the Sumner County jail and issued detainers on the defendants."). Additionally, in the past, "DHS's practice appears to be to place a detainer as soon as DHS learns of a potentially deportable prisoner—in many cases before conviction, close in time to the alien's arrest." Lasch, supra, at 178.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Once the alien is in mandatory custody pursuant to Section 1226(c), an NTA may be issued, formally beginning the immigration removal proceedings. Mark Noferi, Cascading Constitutional Deprivation: The Right to Appointed Counsel for Mandatorily Detained Immigrants Pending Removal Proceedings, 18 Mich. J. Race & L. 63, 83 (2012). Because certain criminal aliens are required to be detained, a Notice of Custody Determination ("Form I-286") may also be issued. Id. (citing 8 C.F.R. § 231.1(g)(1) (2011)). The Form I-286 explains an ICE officer's determination that an alien is subject to mandatory detention because the alien falls within certain categories of Section 1226(c). Id. For such aliens, "the NTA's removal charge will commonly be the [Form I-286] charge justifying mandatory detention." Id.

While in detention, the criminal alien is entitled to a "Joseph hearing." Id. at 63, 85–86; see Matter of Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. 799 (BIA 1999). The hearing is the detainee's only chance to challenge the mandatory nature of his or her detention. Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. at 800; Noferi, supra, at 85–86; Savaresse, supra, at 303. The point of the Joseph hearing is to determine whether the detainee challenging mandatory detention was "properly included" within a mandatory detention category; that is, the categories enumerated in Section 1226(c). See Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. at 800; Savaresse, supra, at 303. If the detainee prevails, he or she is entitled to a bond determination. See Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. at 808–09.

The detention process is similar for aliens with final orders of removal, i.e., those who exhausted the removal proceedings and were found to be deportable. See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2). Criminal aliens who were initially detained under Section 1226(c) must remain in ICE custody as their removals are processed. See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1226(c)(2) and 1231(a)(2). As for the aliens with final orders of removal who are not currently in ICE custody, ICE sends a "Bag-and-Baggage" letter requiring the aliens to report to an ICE facility for detention and deportation. Qian Gao v. Gonzales, 481 F.3d 173, 175 (2d Cir. 2007); Bermudes-Cardenas v. Gonzales, 184 F. App'x 406, 407 (5th Cir. 2006) (per curiam). An alien who fails to report is classified by ICE and the circuit courts as a "fugitive." See, e.g., Giri v. Keisler, 507 F.3d 833, 834–36 (5th Cir. 2007). Once an alien is in custody, ICE takes the lead in coordinating their removal from the country. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *9.

C. THE JANUARY 20 MEMORANDUM

More than two decades after Congress changed the way this country approached the issues of illegal immigration and alien criminality, the current Administration set forth its views advocating a different approach from its predecessor. See Revision of Civil Immigration Enforcement Policies and Priorities, Exec. Order No. 13,993, 86 Fed. Reg. 7051 (Jan. 20, 2021) ("[The current] Administration will reset the policies and practices for enforcing civil immigration laws to align enforcement with [certain] values and priorities." (emphasis added)).

*7 Once the current Administration assumed power on January 20, 2021, it wasted no time issuing its first memorandum on civil immigration enforcement (the "January 20 Memorandum"). (Dkt. No. 1-1). The January 20 Memorandum, signed by Acting DHS Secretary David Pekoske, announced changes to the enforcement of the Nation's immigration laws. (Dkt. No. 1-1). The January 20 Memorandum begins by acknowledging the current issues the federal government is encountering in enforcing immigration laws, noting the United States "faces significant operational challenges at the southwest border as it is confronting the most serious global public health crisis in a century." (Id. at 2). The January 20 Memorandum goes on to say, "in light of those unique circumstances," DHS must substantially increase "resources to the border in order to ensure safe, legal and orderly processing, to rebuild fair and effective asylum procedures that respect human rights and due process, to adopt appropriate public health guidelines and protocols, and to prioritize responding to threats to national security, public safety, and border security." (Id.) In Section A, the January 20 Memorandum calls for a "Department-wide review of policies and practices concerning immigration enforcement[.]" (Id. at 3). In Section B, the January 20 Memorandum articulates "interim enforcement priorities [that] shall go into effect on February 1, 2021 and remain in effect until superseded by revised priorities developed in connection with the" Department-wide review. (Id. at 3–4). Pending completion of the Department-wide review, the January 20 Memorandum lists three DHS enforcement priorities:

1) National security. Individuals who have engaged in or are suspected of terrorism or espionage, or whose apprehension, arrest and/or custody is otherwise necessary to protect the national security of the United States.

2) Border security. Individuals apprehended at the border or ports of entry while attempting to unlawfully enter the United States on or after November 1, 2020, or who were not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020.

3) Public safety. Individuals incarcerated within federal, state, and local prisons and jails released on or after the issuance of this memorandum who have been convicted of an "aggravated felony," as that term is defined in section 101(a)(43) of the Immigration and Nationality Act at the time of conviction, and are determined to pose a threat to public safety.

(Id. at 3). The January 20 Memorandum then qualifies its prioritization scheme by stating, "[w]hile resources should be allocated to the priorities enumerated above, nothing in this memorandum prohibits the apprehension or detention of individuals unlawfully in the United States who are not identified as priorities herein." (Id. at 4).

In Section C, the January 20 Memorandum orders a temporary pause on removals of noncitizens, with some exceptions.[10] (Id. at 4–5). Specifically, the January 20 Memorandum directs "an immediate pause on removals of any noncitizen with a final order of removal ... for 100 days[.]" (Id. at 4). The January 20 Memorandum justifies this pause by pointing to DHS's "limited resources," which it claims "must be prioritized to ... provide sufficient staff and resources to enhance border security and conduct immigration and asylum processing at the southwest border fairly and efficiently" and to "comply with COVID-19 protocols to protect the health and safety of DHS personnel and those members of the public with whom DHS personnel interact." (Id.). Further, the January 20 Memorandum states, the pause is necessary for DHS to "ensure that [its] removal resources are directed to [its] highest enforcement priorities." (Id.).

This Court partially enjoined the January 20 Memorandum on January 26 with a temporary restraining order, Texas v. United States, ____ F. Supp. 3d ____, 2021 WL 247877 (S.D. Tex. Jan. 26, 2021), and again on February 23 with a preliminary injunction, Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d ____, 2021 WL 2096669. Specifically, this Court enjoined Section C of the January 20 Memorandum, which paused removals of aliens with a final order of removal for 100 days. Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *52. In doing so, this Court explicitly left intact Section B of the January 20 Memorandum, which enumerates DHS's "enforcement priorities" going forward. (Id.). Section B is a subject of this litigation. (Dkt. No. 1-1 at 3–4).

D. THE FEBRUARY 18 MEMORANDUM

8 On February 18, 2021, five days before the preliminary injunction was signed in Texas I, ICE Acting Director Tae D. Johnson issued the February 18 Memorandum to all ICE employees. (Dkt. No. 1-2). The February 18 Memorandum became "effective[ ] immediately" and controls to the extent it conflicts with the January 20 Memorandum. (Id. at 2). Designed to implement Section B of the January 20 Memorandum,[11] the February 18 Memorandum broadly delineates six "revisions":

1) authorization to apprehend presumed priority noncitizens in at-large enforcement actions without advance approval;

2) the inclusion of current qualifying members of criminal gangs and transnational criminal organizations as presumed enforcement priorities;

3) authorization to apprehend without prior approval other presumed priority noncitizens who are encountered during enforcement operations;

4) how to evaluate whether a noncitizen who is not a presumed priority nevertheless poses a public safety threat and should be apprehended;

5) the further delegation of approval authority; and

6) the importance of providing advance notice of at-large enforcement actions to state and local law enforcement.

(Id. at 2–3).

Relevant to this case, the February 18 Memorandum lists three "criteria defining cases that are presumed to be priorities." (Id. at 5). The first priority category is national security.

> A noncitizen is presumed to be a national security enforcement and removal priority if: 1) he or she has engaged in or is suspected of engaging in terrorism or terrorism-> related activities; 2) he or she has engaged in or is suspected of engaging in espionage or espionage-related activities; or 3) his or her apprehension, arrest, or custody is otherwise necessary to protect the national security of the United States.

(Id.) (emphasis in original). The second priority category is border security.

> A noncitizen is presumed to be a border security enforcement and removal priority if: 1) he or she was apprehended at the border or a port of entry while attempting to unlawfully enter the United States on or after November 1, 2020; or 2) he or she was not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020.

(Id.) (emphasis in original). And the final priority category is public safety.

> A noncitizen is presumed to be a public safety enforcement and removal priority if he or she poses a threat to public safety and: 1) he or she has been convicted of an aggravated felony as defined in section 101(a)(43) of the INA; or 2) he or she has been convicted of an offense for which an element was active participation in a criminal street gang, as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 521(a), or is not younger than 16 years of age and intentionally participated in an organized criminal gang or transnational criminal organization to further the illegal activity of the gang or transnational criminal organization.

(Id. at 5–6) (emphasis in original).

In addition to the three enforcement priorities, the February 18 Memorandum explains, "[o]fficers and agents need not obtain preapproval for enforcement or removal actions that meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases"—i.e., the three enforcement priorities—"beyond what existing policy requires and what a supervisor instructs." (Id. at 6). By contrast, preapproval is required for enforcement or removal actions that do not fall under the three enforcement priorities. (Id. at 7). But there are certain exceptions. The February 18 Memorandum, for example, posits that there are circumstances when "the demands of public safety will make it impracticable to obtain preapproval for an at-large enforcement action." (Id.). But this is "generally ... limited to situations where a noncitizen poses an imminent threat to life or an imminent substantial threat to property." (Id.).

E. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

9 The States filed this case on April 6, 2021. (Dkt. No. 1). In its six-count Complaint, the States allege the January 20 and February 18 Memoranda are unlawful because they violate:

1) the Administrative Procedure Act's ("APA") proscription of actions that are "not in accordance with law" and "in excess of ... authority" by transgressing a statutory duty of DHS to detain certain individuals pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) (Count I) and 8 U.S.C. 1231(a)(2) (Count II); [12]

2) the APA's proscription of actions that are "arbitrary [and] capricious" (Count III); [13]

3) the APA's requirement that agency rules be subject to notice and comment (Count IV); [14]

4) the Agreement between the States and DHS (Count V); [15] and

5) the Constitution's requirement that the President "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" (Count VI).

(Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 94–131).

On April 27, 2021, the States filed a Motion for Preliminary Injunction moving to enjoin the implementation and enforcement of the January 20 and February 18 Memoranda. (Dkt. No. 18 at 43). The Government filed a Response in opposition, (Dkt. No. 42), to which the States filed a Reply. (Dkt. No. 51). Several amicus briefs have also been filed in support of and in opposition to the Motion. (Dkt. No. 25);

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT
WESTLAW © 2021 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(Dkt. No. 48); (Dkt. No. 49). The Motion is now ripe for review.

II. JURISDICTION AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

Before addressing the merits, this Court must consider the threshold issues of whether the States have standing to bring this action and whether the APA allows this Court to review the Memoranda challenged by the States. The States contend they have standing, and their claims are reviewable. (Dkt. No. 18 at 35–40). The Government disagrees. (Dkt. No. 48 at 22–36). Based on the following, the Court finds the States have standing and their claims are reviewable.

A. STANDING

Article III of the Constitution confines judicial power to "Cases" and "Controversies." U.S. Const. art. III, § 2. "For a legal dispute to qualify as a genuine case or controversy, at least one plaintiff must have standing to sue." Dep't of Com. v. New York, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 139 S.Ct. 2551, 2565, 204 L.Ed.2d 978 (2019). A plaintiff has standing to sue only where it satisfactorily shows it "(1) suffered an injury in fact, (2) that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct of the defendant, and (3) that is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision." Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 578 U.S. 856, ____, 136 S.Ct. 1540, 1547, 194 L.Ed.2d 635 (2016) (citing Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2136, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992); FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 231, 110 S.Ct. 596, 608, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990)); see also Barber v. Bryant, 860 F.3d 345, 352 (5th Cir. 2017). In short, injury, traceability, and redressability comprise the "irreducible constitutional minimum" of standing. Spokeo, 578 U.S. at ___, 136 S. Ct. at 1547 (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560, 112 S.Ct. at 2136).

10 Under certain circumstances, states like Texas and Louisiana are not "normal litigants." Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 518, 127 S.Ct. 1438, 1454, 167 L.Ed.2d 248 (2007). Where a state alleges a defendant violated a congressionally accorded procedural right which affected the state's "quasi-sovereign" interests, that state is afforded "special solicitude" in its quest to establish standing. Id. at 520–21, 127 S.Ct. at 1454–55; Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 151–55 (5th Cir. 2015) , aff'd by an equally divided court, ____ U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2271, 195 L.Ed.2d 638 (2016) (mem.) (hereinafter "Texas DAPA"). Specifically, a state armed with special solicitude can more easily satisfy the traceability and redressability elements of the traditional standing inquiry. Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 520–21, 127 S.Ct. at 1454–55; Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 151–55.

Here, the States assert they have standing under the traditional inquiry and because they are owed special solicitude. (Dkt. No. 18 at 35–37). The Government counters that the States fail all three prongs of the traditional inquiry, and they are not entitled to special solicitude because they do not assert a proper quasi-sovereign interest. (Dkt. No. 42 at 22–25 & n.5). Based on the following, the Court finds the States have satisfied the traditional inquiry and, regardless, are owed special solicitude which would satisfy any doubts.

1. Injury in Fact

The States' first task is to establish an injury in fact. A plaintiff satisfies that burden where it shows it suffered "an invasion of a legally protected interest" that is "concrete," "particularized," and "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Spokeo, 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1548 (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560, 112 S.Ct. at 2136). An alleged injury is sufficiently concrete if it is "de facto," meaning it "actually exist[s]" and is not merely "abstract." Id. (alteration added) (citations omitted). An alleged injury is sufficiently particularized if it "affect[s] the plaintiff in a personal and individual way." Id. (alteration added) (quoting Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560 n.1, 112 S.Ct. at 2136 n.1). And lastly, an alleged injury is sufficiently actual or imminent, respectively, if the plaintiff suffers "continuing, present adverse effects" or demonstrates he "will soon expose himself to the injury" through "concrete plans" demonstrating his injury is "certainly impending." Lujan, 504 U.S. at 564 & n.2, 112 S.Ct. at 2138 & n.2 (emphases in original) (citations omitted).

The States assert the Memoranda will injure two basic interests: their financial interests and their interest as parens patriae in protecting their citizens from criminal aliens. (Dkt. No. 35–37). As it pertains to their financial interests, the States claim the Memoranda will require them to spend more on detention facilities and several public benefits and services. (Id. at 35–36). Regarding the States' interest as parens patriae, the States allege the Memoranda will result in an increase in crime from aliens within their borders, thus harming their citizenries' physical and economic well-being. (Id. at 37).

The Government does not seriously refute the Memoranda will result in "a drop" in immigration enforcement actions. (Dkt. No. 42 at 23). Nor could it. For example, Texas has put forth undisputed evidence that, during just the first two months following the issuance of the January 20 Memorandum, ICE rescinded detainers for 68 aliens housed within Texas's detention facilities. (Dkt. No. 19-3 at 5). That's 68 more rescinded detainers than during the same period the year prior. (Id. at 3, 8) (showing no detainers were dropped from January 20, 2020, to March 20, 2020). Of note, the list includes aliens who were convicted of possessing over fifty pounds of a narcotic, manufacturing over 400 grams of methamphetamine, theft, intoxication assault with a vehicle, and the sexual assault of a child. (Id. at 6–7). And at least six had received a final order of removal. (Id. at 5). Importantly, current ICE officials "attribute" the Government's sharp decline in maintaining detainers "to the new 'enforcement priorities' established by the [M]emoranda during the Biden Administration."[16] (Dkt. No. 46 at ¶ 17).

11 Rather than challenge the suffocating effect of the Memoranda on federal detentions of criminal aliens, the Government counters that any drop in detentions is of no real consequence to the States. It argues, even if the Memoranda cause detentions to decline, the States' theories of injury rely on a "speculative chain of events involving independent actions by third parties." (Dkt. No. 42 at 23). Specifically, the Government asserts the States would incur increased financial expenses and exposure to crime only if two conditions are satisfied: (1) the aliens who would have otherwise been detained commit crimes or choose to use public benefits and services; and (2) those aliens do so at a higher rate than the noncitizens who are removed as a result of the Memoranda. (Id. at 23–24).

The Government's concern over the causal chain of events involving third-party action is noteworthy but out-of-turn. These concerns pertain to the "fairly traceable" prong of the traditional standing inquiry. See Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2565–66 (finding "traceability ... satisfied" where the plaintiffs' theory "relies ... on the predictable effect of Government action on the decisions of third parties"); Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 156–60 (finding a plaintiff–state's financial injury was "fairly traceable" to the independent conduct of third-party aliens); see also California v. Texas, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 141 S.Ct. 2104, 2116–17 (2021) (finding "an individual's decision to enroll [in] Medicaid" was not "fairly traceable" to the Affordable Care Act's "minimum essential coverage provision" (alteration added)). Therefore, although the Government's third-party causation concerns will need to be addressed, the Court reserves its analysis on those issues for discussion of the traceability of the States' alleged injuries. For now, the Court inquires whether the States have presented a cognizable injury to their financial interests or interests as parens patriae. See also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 564 & n.2, 112 S.Ct. at 2138 & n.2 (explaining "imminence" is shown where a plaintiff "will soon expose himself to the injury" through "concrete plans" demonstrating his injury is "certainly impending" (emphases in original) (citations omitted)); cf. Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2565 (sidestepping the reliance of the plaintiff-states' "future" injuries upon independent decisions of third-party aliens to underreport in a census and holding the injuries were sufficiently "concrete and imminent" because the plaintiff–states demonstrated, "if noncitizen households are undercounted by as little as 2%[,] ... they will lose out on federal funds that are distributed on the basis of state population" (emphasis added)). They have.

a. Financial Injuries

Between the States, Texas marshals the lion's share of state-specific evidence concerning injury. Compare (Dkt. Nos. 19-5–19-9) with (Dkt. No. 19-12). The Court therefore focuses its attention on Texas's evidence. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 155 (same). Texas's alleged financial injury affects three categories of its public fisc: Texas's detention system, public education services, and healthcare-related costs. (Dkt. No. 18 at 35–36). Texas asserts that in these three categories it will incur unanticipated costs due to the "rushed implementation" of the Memoranda which "deprived [it] of the ability to adjust[ ] [its] policies in light of the federal shift." (Id. at 41).

To begin, Texas has alleged injury to a legally protected interest. See Spokeo, 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1548. Texas complains it will incur additional costs to its public fisc because of an unlawful and sudden shift in federal immigration policy. (Dkt. No. 18 at 35). Theories of injury to state or local financial interests predicated on the actions of the federal government are not novel. See, e.g., Clinton v. City of N.Y., 524 U.S. 417, 430–31, 118 S.Ct. 2091, 2099, 141 L.Ed.2d 393 (1998) (finding sufficient for standing purposes a local government's claim to suffering injury to its "borrowing power, financial strength, and fiscal planning"); Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 152–53 (finding sufficient for standing purposes several states' claims to suffering injury to their public fiscs); see also Sch. Dist. of City of Pontiac v. Sec'y of the U.S. Dep't of Educ., 584 F.3d 253, 261–62 (6th Cir. 2009). And such financial harm is particularly acute in the context of federal immigration enforcement, where states have "an interest in mitigating the potentially harsh economic effects of sudden shifts in population." Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202, 228, 102 S.Ct. 2382, 2400, 72 L.Ed.2d 786 (1982) (emphasis added); see id. at n.23 (explaining, because the Constitution deprives states of any "direct interest in controlling entry into this country, ... unchecked unlawful migration might impair the State's economy generally, or the State's ability to provide some important service"); Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 152–54; see also Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 397, 132 S.Ct. 2492, 2500, 183 L.Ed.2d 351 (2012) (acknowledging states "bear[ ] many of the consequences of unlawful immigration"); DHS v. Regents of the U. of Cal., ____ U.S. ____, ____, 140 S.Ct. 1891, 1913, 207 L.Ed.2d 353 (2020) (finding a sudden shift in the government's immigration policy was arbitrary and capricious in part because the government "failed to address whether there was legitimate reliance" on the former immigration policy (quotation omitted)). In sum, the financial injuries incurred by states from "sudden shifts" in their population due to federal immigration policies are not nebulous. Plyler, 457 U.S. at 228, 102 S.Ct. at 2400. Rather, they are among the "serious and well recognized" vintage of legally protected interests. Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 521, 127 S.Ct. at 1455. By requesting equitable relief from the impact of the Memoranda on its public fisc, then, Texas appropriately seeks judicial shelter.

12 The remaining inquiries as to Texas's alleged financial injury concerns whether it is sufficiently concrete, particularized, and actual or imminent. Spokeo, 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1548. The Government does not contest that Texas's alleged injury is particularized to Texas, and the Court finds that it is. Texas can therefore establish an injury in fact for its financial injury if it is both concrete and actual or imminent.

Texas asserts a financial injury in the form of added costs to its detention system. Texas states the Memoranda will lead to an unanticipated rise in criminal activity from aliens the federal government would otherwise detain. (Dkt. No. 18 at 15–16, 35–36). On average, Texas spends $62.34 per day per inmate in its detention facilities. (Dkt. No. 19-6 at 3–4). In 2018, Texas detained 8,951 criminal aliens for a total of 2,439,110 days, costing $152,054,117.[17] (Id.). If even one alien not detained due to the Memoranda recidivates, Texas's costs "will increase" in accordance with its current cost per inmate. (Id. at 4); cf. Dep't. of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2565.

The Court finds Texas's claimed injury from unanticipated detention costs is sufficiently concrete and imminent. The harm is concrete because Texas incurs real financial costs in detaining criminal aliens. And the harm is imminent because Texas currently operates a detention system holding criminal aliens and plans to continue doing so in the future.[18]

b. Parens Patriae Injury

In addition to its financial injury, the States assert they have been injured in their interests as parens patriae. (Dkt. No. 18 at 37). The Government counters that the States are precluded from bringing a parens patriae action against the federal government. (Dkt. No. 42 at 24 & n.5). Based on the following, the Court concludes the States properly lay claim to a parens patriae injury.

"Parens patriae means literally 'parent of the country.' " Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, ex rel., Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 600, 102 S.Ct. 3260, 3265, 73 L.Ed.2d 995 (1982) (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 1003 (5th ed. 1979)). The concept derives from the English constitutional system. Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal., 405 U.S. 251, 257, 92 S.Ct. 885, 888, 31 L.Ed.2d 184 (1972). As that system developed, the Crown retained certain "duties and powers" referred to as the "royal prerogative." Id. (citation omitted). For example, as the "father of the country," the King served as the guardian of persons with legal disabilities.

Id. (internal quotations omitted). When the United States achieved independence, "the prerogatives of the crown devolved upon the people of the States." Wheeler v. Smith, 50 U.S. (9 How.) 55, 78, 13 L.Ed. 44 (1850). That is, "[t]he State, as a sovereign," became "the parens patriae." Id. Like the King before them, the states were now responsible for acting "in the interests of humanity" and "for the prevention of injury to those who cannot protect themselves." Late Corp. of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. United States, 136 U.S. 1, 57, 10 S.Ct. 792, 808, 34 L.Ed. 478 (1890).

13 Once vested in the states, the scope of a parens patriae action under American law "greatly expanded." Hawaii, 405 U.S. at 257, 92 S.Ct. at 889. The first such expansion is noteworthy. Coincidentally, in a previous dispute between the States in this case, Louisiana sought through a parens patriae action to enjoin Texas from continuing a trade embargo that was allegedly injuring Louisiana's economy. Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U.S. 1, 3–4, 11–12, 20 S.Ct. 251, 251–52, 254, 44 L.Ed. 347 (1900). Texas's lead health official had cinched the spigot on all commerce flowing between the city of New Orleans and the State of Texas "under the guise of a quarantine against yellow fever." Id. at 11, 20 S.Ct. at 254. A standing issue arose because Louisiana had simultaneously invoked the Supreme Court's original jurisdiction, which required a "controversy arising directly between" the states as sovereigns, and asserted an interest as parens patriae, which had traditionally been a tool for a state to vindicate "the grievances of particular individuals" within its borders. Id. at 16, 20 S.Ct. at 256. To reconcile this seeming conflict, the Court determined Louisiana had properly stated an interest as parens patriae in protecting "her citizens at large" from economic harm due to Texas's quarantine regulations. Id. at 19, 20 S.Ct. at 257. This interest, reasoned the Court, stemmed in part from the fact that Louisiana, as a state, held no right under the Constitution to regulate "the freedom of interstate commerce." Id. Although the Supreme Court ultimately held Louisiana lacked standing for other reasons, id. at 22–23, 20 S.Ct. at 258–59, the case is considered the first to expand the notion of parens patriae to a state's interest in protecting its citizens' interests broadly. See Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602, 102 S.Ct. at 3266.

Perhaps unsurprisingly, the concept of a parens patriae action to vindicate the rights of a state's citizens-at-large proved popular. See id. at 603, 102 S.Ct. at 3266–67 (listing cases brought by various states during the early 20th century). And not long after Louisiana v. Texas, Justice Holmes referred to a state's interests in such broader matters as "quasi-sovereign" interests. See Georgia v. Tenn. Copper Co., 206 U.S. 230, 237, 27 S.Ct. 618, 619, 51 L.Ed. 1038 (1907). The term stuck. See, e.g., North Dakota v. Minnesota, 263 U.S. 365, 374, 44 S.Ct. 138, 139, 68 L.Ed. 342 (1923); Georgia v. Pa. R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 447, 450, 65 S.Ct. 716, 721, 722, 89 L.Ed. 1051 (1945). And before long, the doctrine evolved to the point that the Supreme Court determined quasi-sovereign interests to be not simply a branch of traditional parens patriae actions, but the sine qua non of parens patriae actions. See Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602, 102 S.Ct. at 3266. ("[T]o have [parens patriae] standing, the State must express a quasi-sovereign interest[.]" (alteration and emphasis added)).

But lending this workable term to the abstract concept of a state's interest in its citizenry did not resolve all questions regarding parens patriae standing. Namely, the referent "quasi-sovereign interest," without more, proved useless in settling whether a state's injury is sufficiently "concrete" for purposes of Article III standing. Id. After all, a quasi-sovereign interest itself is nothing more than a "judicial construct" that does "not lend itself to a simple or exact definition." Id. at 601, 102 S.Ct. at 3265. On its surface, the term clearly was crafted to help distinguish from a state's "sovereign interests, proprietary interests, or private interests." Id. at 602, 102 S.Ct. at 3266. And an inch deeper, the term represented "a set of interests that the State has in the well-being of its populace." Id. But those broad contours alone, absent further granularity, "risk[ed] being too vague to survive the standing requirements" of the Constitution. Id.

Recognizing this concreteness issue, the Supreme Court in Alfred L. Snapp & Son took it upon itself to hammer out, as best it could, the notion of a quasi-sovereign interest. 458 U.S. 592, 102 S.Ct. 3260. While at once conceding that "the articulation of such interests is a matter for case-by-case development," the Supreme Court nevertheless provided "two general categories" into which characteristics of a true quasi-sovereign interest may fall.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"First, a State has a quasi-sovereign interest in the health and well-being—both physical and economic—of its residents in general. Second, a state has a quasi-sovereign interest in not being discriminatorily denied its rightful status within the federal system." Id. at 607, 102 S.Ct. at 3269. Regarding the first category, the Supreme Court further elaborated, "[o]ne helpful indication in determining whether an alleged injury to the health and welfare of its citizens suffices to give the state standing to sue as parens patriae is whether the injury is one that the state, if it could, would likely attempt to address through its sovereign lawmaking powers." Id. And regarding the latter, the Supreme Court explained, "federal statutes creating benefits or alleviating hardships create interests that a State will obviously wish to have accrue to its residents." Id.

14 Building on this rubric, the Fifth Circuit has concluded that a state's claim to a "quasi-sovereign" interest for standing purposes is sufficient when the state seeks to "protect[ ] its citizens from criminal activity." Castillo v. Cameron County, 238 F.3d 339, 351 (5th Cir. 2001) (citing Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602, 102 S.Ct. at 3260). In Castillo, Texas sought to overturn a federal district court's injunction which permitted a local County Sheriff to refuse to incarcerate alleged parole violators to reduce the county's jail population. 238 F.3d at 343–47. To prove standing in that circumstance, Texas was required to show, among other things, it had a "personal stake" in the outcome. Id. at 350–51. The panel held that Texas satisfied this showing in part by alleging a valid quasi-sovereign interest in protecting its citizens from criminal activity. Id. at 351. As a result of the injunction, the panel explained, "parole violators who should be incarcerated remain[ed] free, potentially increasing the level of criminal activity." Id. Although fully aware that "the concept of quasi-sovereign standing 'risks being too vague to survive the standing requirements of Article III,' " the panel found that Texas's interest in protecting its citizens from increased criminal activity "[fell] within the category of 'a quasi-sovereign interest in the health and well–being—both physical and economic—of its residents in general.' " Id. (quoting Snapp, 458 U.S. at 602, 102 S.Ct. 3260).

Bearing these principles in mind, the Court now turns to the States' basis for parens patriae standing in this case. The States assert a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizens' physical and economic well-being "from crime caused by [the Government's] failure to detain criminal aliens." (Dkt. No. 18 at 37). As it pertains to "criminal activity" in general, Castillo resolves that the States here possess a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizens. 238 F.3d at 351.

As it pertains to the criminal activity of "aliens" specifically, the States' interests are perhaps stronger than the circumstances presented in Castillo. Whereas in Castillo the State of Texas sought to protect its citizens from criminal activity in an area of law over which the State retained extensive authority—the procedure for detaining alleged parole violators—here the States retain no authority over the detention of criminal aliens upon their release from state prison and during the pendency of their removal proceedings. That is, the injury to the States' quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizens from criminal aliens is especially severe here because the States' hands are tied, in effect, when it comes to federal immigration policy. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 (conferring upon Congress the Power "[t]o establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization"); Arizona, 567 U.S. at 394–95, 132 S.Ct. at 2498 (holding that a state law "authorizing state officers to decide whether an alien should be detained for being removable ... violates the principle that the removal process is entrusted to the discretion of the Federal Government" (citations omitted)).

By seeking relief for an injury to their populace from which they have no constitutional mode of recourse, the States align themselves with the rationale employed by the Supreme Court to support the first expansion of parens patriae standing in Louisiana v. Texas. Just as Louisiana once sought "vindication of the freedom of interstate commerce" that was "not committed" to it by the Constitution, here the States seek protection from an effect of a federal immigration policy that the States possess no constitutional authority to change.[19] Louisiana, 176 U.S. at 19, 20 S.Ct. at 257; see also Snapp, 458 U.S. at 608, 102 S.Ct. at 3269. Accordingly, the Court holds that the States possess a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizens-at-large from the criminal activity of aliens subject to mandatory detention under federal law.

15 The Government contends that the States nevertheless are barred from bringing a parens patriae action "against the federal government." (Dkt. No. 42 at 24). For this proposition the Government relies exclusively upon Massachusetts v. Mellon, where the Supreme Court denied parens patriae standing to a state suing the federal government to protect its citizens from the "operation of" a federal statute called the Maternity Act. 262 U.S. 447, 479, 485–86, 43 S.Ct. 597, 598, 600, 67 L.Ed. 1078 (1923). A critical feature of the Supreme Court's rationale was that the state had not identified any "rights of the state falling within the scope of the judicial power," such as "quasi sovereign rights." Id. at 485, 43 S.Ct. at 600. These twin aspects of Mellon—the challenge to the "operation of federal statutes" and the state's lack of an identifiable "right"—were later acknowledged by the Supreme Court as the defining characteristics of its bar on parens patriae actions vis-à-vis the federal government. See Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 520 n.17, 127 S.Ct. at 1455 n.17; Georgia, 324 U.S. at 447, 65 S.Ct. at 721 (holding that Georgia could bring a parens patriae action to protect a quasi-sovereign interest because, unlike Mellon, it did not seek "to protect her citizens from the operation of federal statutes" and it possessed "rights ... based on federal [anti-trust] laws" (emphasis added)). And a long train of federal courts have applied or mirrored the Supreme Court's careful circumscription of Mellon to hold that a state may bring a parens patriae action against the federal government where it does not challenge the operation of a federal statute and it asserts a proper right. See, e.g., Texas v. United States, 328 F. Supp. 3d 662, 696–98 (S.D. Tex. 2018); See Texas v. United States, 86 F. Supp. 3d 591, 625–28 (S.D. Tex. 2015), aff'd, 809 F.3d 134 (5th Cir. 2015), aff'd by an equally divided court, ____ U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2271, 195 L.Ed.2d 638 (2016) (mem.); New York v. Sebelius, No. 1:07-cv-1003, 2009 WL 1834599, at *12–13 (N.D.N.Y. June 22, 2009); Puerto Rico Pub. Hous. Auth. v. U.S. Dep't of Hous. & Urban Dev., 59 F. Supp. 2d 310, 326 (D.P.R. 1999); Kansas v. United States, 748 F. Supp. 797, 802 (D. Kan. 1990); City of New York v. Heckler, 578 F. Supp. 1109, 1122–25 (E.D.N.Y. 1984); Abrams v. Heckler, 582 F. Supp. 1155, 1159 (S.D.N.Y. 1984).

The parens patriae injury set forth by the States safely navigates this well-trodden distinction from the Mellon rule. The States do not challenge the operation of any federal statute. Rather, they primarily challenge the Executive Branch's putative refusal to enforce certain immigration statutes which, they claim, should benefit their citizenries. (Dkt. No. 1 at 21–24). The States allege that the Executive Branch's policy of non-enforcement infringes upon rights they derive from the APA. (Id. at 21–27). Specifically, the States claim that the federal government's policy creating a categorical refusal to enforce certain immigration statutes is an unlawfully withheld agency action, contrary to law, arbitrary and capricious, procedurally defunct, and constitutionally injurious. By asserting these federal statutory rights, the States have not presented this Court with "abstract questions of political power." Cf. Mellon, 262 U.S. at 485, 43 S.Ct. at 600. Rather, the States have demonstrated concrete injuries to their quasi-sovereign interests as parens patriae. See Castillo, 238 F.3d at 351; see also Snapp, 458 U.S. at 608, 102 S.Ct. at 3269; Louisiana, 176 U.S. at 19, 20 S.Ct. at 257; see also Texas, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 697–98 (finding the state had "demonstrated a concrete injury to its quasi-sovereign interest in the economic well-being of its citizens" in a parens patriae action against the federal government (quotation omitted)). The Court therefore concludes that the States have demonstrated a cognizable parens patriae injury.

2. Traceability

The States must next establish a "fairly traceable link" between their injuries and the Government's allegedly unlawful action. They can establish this link with "no more than de facto causality." Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2566 (quoting Block v. Meese, 793 F.2d 1303, 1309 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (Scalia, J.)). That is to say, a federal plaintiff need not demonstrate that the defendant's actions are "the very last step in the chain of causation." Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 169–70, 117 S.Ct. 1154, 1164, 137 L.Ed.2d 281 (1997); see also Davis v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 554 U.S. 724, 734–35, 128 S.Ct. 2759, 2769, 171 L.Ed.2d 737 (2008).

16 Both States' injuries depend on the future behavior of criminal aliens whom the Government would otherwise detain. Regarding Texas's detention costs injury, the States argue the Memoranda will cause a significant number of criminal aliens who otherwise would have been detained by the federal government to be detained again or longer in Texas. (Dkt. No. 18 at 16, 18, 35–37). Regarding the States' parens patriae injury, the States urge that the Memoranda will lead to a significant number of criminal aliens who would otherwise have been detained by the federal government causing harm—both physical and economic—to their respective citizenries. (Id. at 37). Thus, at their core, both States' injuries depend upon criminal aliens behaving unlawfully in the future.

The Government contends that whether the aliens who would have otherwise been taken into custody will commit crimes is speculative. (Dkt. No. 42 at 23). The Government further contends that, even if the States can make this showing, they must also prove that those aliens would commit crimes at a higher rate than the aliens who are removed because of the Memoranda. (Id.).

Regarding the Government's first concern, the Supreme Court has traditionally denied standing wherever the traceable link between the government's action and the plaintiff's injury depends in part on the future behavior of third parties. See Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 413, 133 S.Ct. 1138, 1150, 185 L.Ed.2d 264 (2013) ("[W]e have been reluctant to endorse standing theories that require guesswork as to how independent decisionmakers will exercise their judgment."). This tradition is especially firm where, as here with the States' asserted injuries, it is alleged that the third parties' future behavior will be unlawful. See City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 105, 103 S.Ct. 1660, 1666–67, 75 L.Ed.2d 675 (1983).

That said, the Supreme Court embraces standing theories dependent on third parties' future behavior under certain circumstances. In Department of Commerce, for instance, the Supreme Court traced a governmental action to aliens' future unlawful behavior where evidence established a likelihood that aliens have "historically" behaved in a certain manner. ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2566. This type of evidence, the Supreme Court concluded, demonstrated that traceability was not "mere speculation," but rather, the product of a "predictable effect of Government action on the decisions of third parties." Id. (citations omitted). Similarly, in Davis v. Federal Election Commission, the Supreme Court traced a governmental action to the future behavior of the plaintiff's political opponent where evidence showed that "most candidates" had behaved in a certain manner and there was "no indication" the opponent would do otherwise. 554 U.S. at 734–35, 128 S.Ct. at 2769; see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 156 (finding a traceable link between DAPA and aliens' likelihood of obtaining driver's licenses where driving was a "practical necessity" for residents of the state). From these cases, it becomes apparent that an injury may be traced through third-party behavior to governmental action where the plaintiff demonstrates individuals similarly situated to the third party have a propensity to engage in the relevant behavior.

Considering this principle, the link between the States' alleged harm and the Memoranda is virtually unassailable. As mentioned, the undisputed evidence demonstrates that the Memoranda are already causing a dramatic increase in the volume of criminal aliens released into the public. The States further present evidence suggesting that criminal aliens, as a group, have a strong propensity to recidivate. (Dkt. No. 18 at 15–16). Indeed, the States submit evidence from a Texas Sheriff's Office showing that a group of 209 recently held criminal alien inmates with detainers had a recidivism rate of 73.68%. (Dkt. No. 19-5 at 3). The States also submit a 2018 study from the United States Department of Justice's Bureau of Justice Statistics showing that state offenders generally recidivate at 44% within the first year following release, 68% within the first three, 79% within the first six, and 83% within the first nine. (Dkt. No. 19-20 at 1). And these weren't one-time recidivists. The same study shows, during the nine-year period following release, there were on average five arrests per released prisoner. (Id.).

17 This foregoing evidence confirms what the Supreme Court and Congress have long acknowledged: "deportable criminal aliens who remain[ ] in the United States often commit[ ] more crimes before being removed." Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1715 (citing Hearing on H.R. 3333 before the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 101st Cong., 1st Sess., 54, 52 (1989)); see also Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 713–14, 121 S.Ct. at 2511 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (warning of the "risk to the community posed by the mandatory release" of criminal aliens when accounting for "statistical studies showing high recidivism rates for released aliens").

These facts and precedents should come as no surprise to the Government. Congress and the Executive have long provided financial aid to states to ameliorate the strain criminal aliens place on state detention facilities. Through the State Criminal Alien Assistance Program ("SCAAP"), the federal government partially reimburses states for costs associated with detaining criminal aliens.[20] (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2–4). For example, in 2018 the federal government through SCAAP reimbursed Texas $14,657,739 of the total $152,054,117 Texas spent on detaining criminal aliens. (Id. at 4). Although amounting to less than 10% of Texas's actual costs in 2018, SCAAP payments demonstrate that the federal government has long acknowledged that states like Texas incur financial harm as a direct result of the unlawful behavior of criminal aliens.

In sum, the States present evidence of criminal alien and state felon recidivism through a Texas Sheriff and the DOJ's own dataset, Supreme Court precedent citing the congressional record making similar findings as to criminal aliens, and the existence of the SCAAP program. Considering this substantial evidence, the Court is not persuaded that the link between the States' injuries and criminal aliens being released is "speculative" as the Government suggests. The Court finds that criminal aliens "historically" recidivate. See Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2566.

Next, the Government asserts that the risk of criminal aliens committing further crimes is insufficient for the States to trace their injuries to the Memoranda. (Dkt. No. 42 at 23). Rather, the Government hypothesizes that "it is possible" the Memoranda's reprioritization "will result in a net reduction in crimes." (Id.). This argument fails in three respects.

First, evidence already in the record demonstrates that the Government is not just refusing to detain its newly deprioritized categories of criminal aliens, but even the "prioritized" variety. For instance, in Texas alone, some of the 68 individuals whose detainers were dropped were serving time for an "aggravated felony," a supposedly prioritized category. Compare (Dkt. No. 19-3 at 6–7) with 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) (defining "aggravated felony" under the INA).

Second, the Government provides no support for its contention that its enforcement of the prioritized categories of criminal aliens will exceed any decline in enforcement of the deprioritized categories. The Government's subjective belief cannot overcome the States' evidence demonstrating to the contrary.

Finally, even if the Government could demonstrate that increased enforcement in the prioritized categories might displace a drop in the total number of detained aliens resulting from the deprioritized categories, this "offset" would be irrelevant as a matter of law. The "standing analysis is not an accounting exercise." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 156 (internal quotation omitted). Absent a "tight[ ] nexus" between the alleged "benefits" and the "costs" of the Memoranda, there can be no "offset." Id. Here, other than what it noted in the Memoranda, the Government makes no showing that the resources it previously used for enforcement of the deprioritized categories are now being allocated to boost enforcement of the prioritized categories. And the evidence put forward by the States regarding a drop in enforcement actions—even for prioritized aliens—makes that "possibility" unlikely. Accordingly, there is no connection between the results of enforcement of prioritized categories and the results of enforcement of deprioritized categories.

18 The Court further notes that the number of aliens who would otherwise be detained in the entire United States is relevant to estimating the impact of the Memoranda on the States in this case. The Fifth Circuit made clear in Texas DAPA that injury to a state can flow from the fact that aliens are "free to move among states." 809 F.3d at 188. Indeed, the States proffer evidence showing that "more than 50,000 noncitizens moved into Texas from another U.S. State in 2019." (Dkt. No. 18 at 42) (citing Dkt. No. 19-21); see also (Dkt. No. 51 at 35) (citing Dkt. Nos. 19-21–19-23). Given the Fifth Circuit's acknowledgement of this interstate migration principle and the data provided by the States, the prospect that criminal illegal aliens falling within the deprioritized categories of the Memoranda who are not detained elsewhere in the Nation could move to the States' territories—thereby amplifying their injuries—is not mere "conjecture," as the Government posits. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 61).

Considering the foregoing, the Court holds that the States have established a traceable link between their injuries and the challenged Memoranda. The Memoranda are already leading to an increased volume of criminal aliens released into Texas who otherwise should have been detained by the federal government. Criminal aliens and state offenders have a demonstrable propensity to recidivate. The Memoranda will therefore cause a traceable injury to the States' financial and parens patriae interests.

3. Redressability

The States must next demonstrate that their requested relief would remedy their harm. The "redressability" element of the standing to sue doctrine requires a plaintiff to demonstrate "a substantial likelihood that the requested relief will remedy the alleged injury in fact." El Paso Cnty. v. Trump, 982 F.3d 332,

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

341 (5th Cir. 2020) (cleaned up). The States' request for relief does that.

The States request two forms of injunctive relief. First, they ask this Court to restrain the Government from "enforcing and implementing the policies described" in Section B of the January 20 Memorandum and the February 18 Memorandum. (Dkt. No. 18-1 at 2). This Court will refer to this requested relief as the "negative injunction." Second, the States ask this Court to order the Government to comply with "the mandatory duty" to "take into custody" and "detain" aliens covered by 8 U.S.C. §§ 1226(c)(1) and 1231(a)(2), respectively, and to "refrain from releasing" aliens covered by Section 1226(c)(1) except as permitted by Section 1226(c)(2). (Id.). The Court will refer to this requested relief as the "positive injunction." The positive injunction relates directly to the States' Count I claim that the Government is "unlawfully withholding and unreasonably delaying agency action" pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 706(1). (Dkt. No. 1 at 23). The States further seek to implement both the negative and positive injunctions nationwide. (Dkt. No. 18-1 at 2).

Assuming, as the Court must for purposes of standing, that the States are "correct on the merits of [their] claims," either form of requested relief is substantially likely to remedy the States' alleged injuries. Texas v. EEOC, 933 F.3d 433, 447 (5th Cir. 2019). Regarding the requested positive injunction, it is perhaps self-evident that an order compelling the federal government to take criminal aliens into custody and detain them pursuant to the relevant statutes would relieve the States from harm they anticipate from the criminal behavior of criminal aliens. Requiring an agency action, the withholding of which is causing injury, will logically alleviate that injury. Notably, the Government offers no clear argument to the contrary regarding the benefit of a positive injunction. (Dkt. No. 42 at 25).

But even if the Court were to grant only the requested negative injunction, then, too, the States are substantially likely to obtain reprieve. Namely, the federal government would be required to act in conformance with the standards set by Congress in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) as interpreted by this Court. The Government does not quibble with the notion that, under Congress's standards, the States' injuries would be redressed. Rather, the Government argues that, if the Memoranda are enjoined, the States are unable to show that "the resulting prioritization scheme" will "result in a decrease in crime levels" within the States' boundaries. (Dkt. No. 42 at 25) (emphasis added). The Government's argument misses the mark for two reasons.

19 First, this argument suggests the Memoranda were issued in a vacuum in which no prior policy concerning the detention of criminal aliens ever existed. Of course, such a suggestion is demonstrably false: the Government's own affidavits demonstrate that the United States has "had policies guiding such exercise since as early as 1909." (Dkt. No. 42-6 at 6); (Dkt. No. 42-5 at 8).

Second, the Court's concern over redressability in an APA case such as this cuts not to the executive-level policy which would be applied in the absence of the faulty one, but rather, whether Congress's express standards—both for the immigration laws challenged and the procedural standards allegedly discarded—if followed, would provide the States recourse. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 161. By nullifying the constraints flowing from the Memoranda's "prioritization," this Court would require that agency to return to or pursue a specific standard for exercising its discretion within the bounds set by Congress. The States have supplied evidence demonstrating that in times past, such an exercise of discretion led to significantly fewer criminal aliens who are not in custody and roaming their streets. (Dkt. No. 19-3 at 5). The Government's inability to refute this evidence is telling. It suggests that conformance with the strictures set by Congress in Sections 1226(c) or 1231(a)(2) as practiced prior to the issuance of the Memoranda would result in a reduction of the volume of criminal aliens moving freely within the interior of the States.

Accordingly, the Court finds that, regardless of which form it takes, the injunctions sought by the States would redress their injuries flowing from the Memoranda. The States have standing under the traditional inquiry.

4. Special Solicitude

Even if the States could not satisfy the traditional standing inquiry, they are entitled to special solicitude which also enables them to satisfy the standing requirement. The Supreme Court in Massachusetts v. EPA determined that states are owed special solicitude wherever they assert a congressionally bestowed procedural right and the governmental action at issue affects the state's quasi-sovereign interests. 549 U.S. at 519–20, 127 S.Ct. at 1454–55. The Fifth Circuit has acknowledged that the holding in Massachusetts applies to procedural claims under the APA. Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 152–55. Specifically, the Fifth Circuit in Texas DAPA granted the state special solicitude where it sought judicial review of an immigration policy memorandum which imposed "direct, substantial pressure" on a state's "lawmaking authority"—that is, pressure to change its laws subsidizing driver's licenses for aliens. Id.

The States are likewise owed special solicitude here. The States seek judicial review of immigration policy memoranda which they allege constitute final agency action, and they assert that the resulting policies cause injury to Texas's public fisc because its budget for detention facilities "has been set months or years in advance." (Dkt. No. 18 at 41). Additionally, and as discussed above, the States have shown they possess a quasi-sovereign interest in protecting their citizenries from the unlawful activity of criminal aliens. The Government's sole argument in opposition is that special solicitude still requires an injury in fact. (Dkt. No. 42 at 24–25 n.7). But this argument falls short because, as detailed in this Memorandum Opinion and Order, see supra II.A.1., the States have demonstrated an injury in fact. Accordingly, the States have satisfied their burden to demonstrate they are entitled to special solicitude in the standing inquiry.

20 In Massachusetts, a state armed with special solicitude was permitted to establish causation between the EPA's decision not to regulate certain greenhouse gas emissions and the state's interest in protecting its physical territory. 549 U.S. at 523–24, 127 S.Ct. at 1456–57. As detailed above, the links between the States' injuries and the Memoranda here are not perceptibly frailer than in Massachusetts and likely are firmer. See also Lujan, 504 U.S. at 572 n.7, 112 S.Ct. at 2142 n.7 ("The person who has been accorded a procedural right to protect his concrete interests can assert that right without meeting all the normal standards for redressability and immediacy."). The States have standing under the special solicitude inquiry. Accordingly, the Court finds it has jurisdiction to consider the States' claims. [21]

B. JUDICIAL REVIEW

The Court must next determine whether the States' claims are reviewable before turning to the merits of the Motion. Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 128, 134 S.Ct. at 1387–88. In so doing, the Court narrows the focus to the States' APA claims. The APA imposes four general requirements that must be satisfied before a federal court can review agency action. See Bennett, 520 U.S. 154, 117 S.Ct. 1154. To start, no statute may bar judicial review. Id. at 175, 117 S.Ct. at 1167; 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1). Next, the new guidance outlined in the February 18 Memorandum must constitute a "final agency action." Bennett, 520 U.S. at 175, 117 S.Ct. at 1167; 5 U.S.C. § 704. Third, the new guidance must not be "committed to agency discretion by law." Bennett, 520 U.S. at 175, 117 S.Ct. at 1167; 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2). Finally, the States must show that their injuries are within the "zone of interests" to be protected by the statutes allegedly violated by the Government. Bennett, 520 U.S. at 163, 117 S.Ct. at 1161; 5 U.S.C. § 702. The Court finds that the States have met each of these requirements.

1. Statutory Bars to Judicial Review

Under the APA, an action may not proceed when another statute precludes judicial review. 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(1). With respect to immigration, Congress enacted "many provisions ... aimed at protecting the Executive's discretion from the courts[.]" Reno v. Am.-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm., 525 U.S. 471, 486, 119 S.Ct. 936, 945, 142 L.Ed.2d 940 (1999). Banking on this, the Government contends that Sections 1252, 1231(h), and 1226(e) protect the Executive Branch's discretion from the States' claims before this Court. (Dkt. No. 42 at 30–35). The Court will address each in turn.

First, the Government makes the same arguments it articulated in Texas I that 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(5) and (b)(9) bar judicial review of the States' APA claims. (Id. at 30–31); see also (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 27). [22] The States disagree arguing that the provisions are irrelevant to this case because they apply "only with respect to review of an order of removal under subsection (a)(1)." (Dkt. No. 51 at 27–28) (quotations omitted). As in Texas I, the Court agrees with the States and incorporates by reference its decision on the issue in that case. ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *29–30 & n.42; see also Nielsen

v. Preap, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 139 S.Ct. 954, 962, 203 L.Ed.2d 333 (2019) (holding that Section 1252(b)(9) does not preclude judicial review of respondents' challenge to the Government's detention authority under Section 1226 because respondents "are not asking for review of an order of removal; they are not challenging the decision to detain them in the first place or to seek removal as opposed to the decision to deny them bond hearings; and they are not even challenging any part of the process by which their removability will be determined" (quotations omitted)); J.E.F.M. v. Lynch, 837 F.3d 1026, 1031 (9th Cir. 2016) ("[W]hile [Sections 1252(a)(5) and 1252(b)(9)] limit how immigrants can challenge their removal proceedings, they are not jurisdiction-stripping statutes that, by their terms, foreclose all judicial review of agency actions. Instead, the provisions channel judicial review over final orders of removal to the courts of appeals."(emphases added)).

21 Next, the Government, again repeating its stance in Texas I, argues that any of the States' claims brought under Section 1231 are precluded from judicial review by Subsection (h). (Dkt. No. 42 at 34); see also (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 30–32). Section 1231(h) provides that "[n]othing in this section shall be construed to create any substantive or procedural right or benefit that is legally enforceable by any party against the United States or its agencies or officers or any other person." 8 U.S.C. § 1231(h). In this case, the Government rehashes its prior argument in Texas I that the meaning of "party" in Section 1231(h) includes the States. This time around, it argues that because Black's Law Dictionary defines the word "party" as "one by or against whom a lawsuit is brought," the Court was in error when it concluded that "party" in that section narrowly means "alien in a removal proceeding." (Id. at 34–35); see also Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *23–28. For their part, the States unsurprisingly agree that the Court got it right the first time around and succinctly agrees with the Court's disposition. (Dkt. No. 51 at 28–29). The Court agrees with the States.

Although the Government is correct in arguing that "party" may have a broad dictionary definition, statutory construction is more complex. On the surface, the plain meaning of "party" in Section 1231(h)—even when accounting for the dictionary definition—could refer to (1) any party to the removal proceedings or (2) any party to any proceeding. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *24. This potential for multiple meanings of "party" in Section 1231(h) does not necessarily render the text ambiguous; if "all but one of the meanings" of the word party in Section 1231(h) can be "ordinarily eliminated by context," that remaining meaning is correct.[23] Deal v. United States, 508 U.S. 129, 132–33, 113 S.Ct. 1993, 1996–97, 124 L.Ed.2d 44 (1993) (superseded by statute on other grounds). The well-established process for interpreting a text with potential ambiguity focuses on "text, context, structure, and history." See Texas v. EPA, 983 F.3d 826, 836 (5th Cir. 2020). "Statutory language has meaning only in context." Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *24 (quoting Graham Cnty. Soil & Water Conservation Dist. v. U.S. ex rel. Wilson, 545 U.S. 409, 415, 125 S.Ct. 2444, 2449, 162 L.Ed.2d 390 (2005)). While a dictionary can illuminate the "core meanings of a term," "the meanings of common words (which typically have multiple definitions) must be determined in the context in which they appear." Texas, 983 F.3d at 837 n.2 (quoting Antonin Scalia & Bryan A. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 418–19 (2012)). In short, the Court in Texas I conducted an in-depth analysis of the term "party," the statute, and the history of the statutory scheme and, having done so, the Court determined that "party" in Section 1231(h) means "alien in a removal proceeding." See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *23–28. The Government has offered nothing to convince the Court that its analysis and conclusion in Texas I were in error. Thus, the Court adopts its prior reasoning and conclusion in Texas I with respect to Section 1231(h).

Lastly, the Government contends that Section 1226(e) bars the States' claims as they relate to Section 1226(c). (Dkt. No. 42 at 32–33). Section 1226(e) provides:

> The Attorney General's discretionary judgment regarding the application of this section shall not be subject to review. No court may set aside any action or decision by the Attorney General under this section regarding > the detention or release of any alien or the grant, revocation, or denial of bond or parole.

22 8 U.S.C. § 1226(e). The Government insists that determinations under Section 1226(c) are discretionary because the federal government "may detain a noncitizen under § 1226—under either subsection (a) or subsection (c)—only 'pending a decision' on removal." (Dkt. No. 42 at 32). According to the Government, "[d]etention authority is thus contingent on the Secretary's separate, predicate, and discretionary decision to commence removal proceedings in the first instance, by issuing a notice to appear." (Id.) (citations omitted).

Voicing their disagreement, the States allege that Subsection (e) is irrelevant to the action since it applies only to discretionary decisions to detain individual aliens and not to lawsuits on the Government's detention authority. (Dkt. No. 18 at 39); (Dkt. No. 51 at 28). And because Section 1226(c) imposes a mandatory duty to detain, as the States argue, it follows that Section 1226(e) does not apply to Subsection (c). (Id.); see infra II.B.3.a. The Court agrees with the States.

The Supreme Court has clearly stated that Subsection (e)'s limitation "applies only to 'discretionary' decisions about the 'application' of § 1226 to particular cases." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 962 (emphasis added). Section 1226(e), therefore, "does not block lawsuits over 'the extent of the Government's detention authority under the 'statutory framework' as a whole.' " Id. (quoting Jennings v. Rodriguez, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 138 S.Ct. 830, 841, 200 L.Ed.2d 122 (2018) (quoting Demore, 538 U.S. at 517, 123 S.Ct. at 1714)). Indeed, "Section 1226(e) ... deals with challenges to operational decisions, rather than to the legislation establishing the framework for those decisions." Parra v. Perryman, 172 F.3d 954, 957 (7th Cir. 1999). So, for instance, Subsection (e) poses no hurdle for a respondent who challenges the statutory framework that permits his detention without bail under Section 1226. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 517, 123 S.Ct. at 1714. Section 1226(e) does not preclude challenges to the Government's alleged authority to detain certain aliens without a bond hearing under Sections 1225(b), 1226(a), and 1226(c). Jennings, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 839, 841. It also does not bar habeas corpus petitions. See Parra, 172 F.3d at 957. Further, Subsection (e) does not prevent plaintiffs from questioning whether the Government has the power under Section 1226(c) to detain certain aliens despite failing to detain the aliens immediately after they were released as required by Section 1226(c). Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 961–62; see also infra II.B.4. Thus, Section 1226(e) does not prohibit parties from "disput[ing] the extent of the statutory authority that the Government claims." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 962 (emphasis added).

Here, the States' claims against the Government clearly "dispute the extent of the statutory authority that the Government claims." See id. In their Complaint, the States allege the Government does not have any discretion under Section 1226(c) to determine whether certain aliens must be detained when released from custody. See (Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 35, 37–38, 94–101); see also (Dkt. No. 18 at 39). In effect, "the general extent of the Government's authority under § 1226(c) is precisely the issue here." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 962. Thus, "because the extent of the Government's detention authority is not a matter of 'discretionary judgment,' 'action,' or 'decision,' " this case "falls outside of the scope of § 1226(e)." Jennings, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 841.

23 Accordingly, the Court concludes Sections 1252(a)(5) and (b)(9), 1231(h), and 1226(e) do not preclude the States' claims. There are no statutory bars to reviewing these claims.

2. Final Agency Action

The Court next considers whether the enforcement priorities set forth in the January 20 and February 18 Memoranda constitute "final agency action" subject to judicial review. See 5 U.S.C. § 704 ("Agency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review."). "Under the APA, an aggrieved party may file suit in a federal district court to obtain review of any final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court." Nat'l Ass'n of Mfrs. v. Dep't of Def., ____ U.S. ____, ____, 138 S.Ct. 617, 626, 199 L.Ed.2d 501 (2018) (citing 5 U.S.C. § 704) (internal quotations omitted). The States and the Government agree on the standard used to determine whether an agency action is "final." See (Dkt. No. 18 at 37–38); (Dkt. No. 42 at 26). That standard requires two conditions to be satisfied. See U.S. Army Corps of Eng'rs v. Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. 1129, ____, 136 S.Ct. 1807, 1813, 195 L.Ed.2d 77 (2016). "First, the action must mark the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process—it must not be of a merely tentative or interlocutory nature. And second, the action must be one by which rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow." Id. (citing Bennett, 520 U.S. at 177–78, 117 S.Ct. at 1168). The Parties disagree whether the Memoranda constitute final agency action. (Dkt. No. 18 at 37–38); (Dkt. No. 42 at 26–28). The Court finds that they do for the following reasons.

a. The Consummation of the Agency's Decision-Making Process

The first condition that must be satisfied for a court to find that an agency's action is final is that the action constitutes "the consummation of the agency's decisionmaking process." Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1813. A consummation of this decision-making process is present when the action is "definitive [in] nature" rather than "advisory in nature." Id. The Court finds the Memoranda easily satisfy this condition.

As an initial matter, the text of the February 18 Memorandum indicates the Memoranda are the consummation of DHS's decision-making process. It states, "[t]his interim guidance is effective immediately." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2) (emphasis added). Moreover, the February 18 Memorandum states, "[i]t applies to all U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) Directorates and Program Offices, and it covers enforcement actions, custody decisions, the execution of final orders of removal, financial expenditures, and strategic planning." (Id.) (emphasis added). The immediacy and definite nature of the application of this guidance to all enforcement actions and custody decisions made by all ICE Directorates and Program Offices strongly suggest the agency's decision is final. See Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1813.

The Government attempts to overcome these indicia of final agency action by arguing "the Secretary retains the discretion to change or abandon these policies at any time[.]" (Dkt. No. 42 at 27). This argument stems from the February 18 Memorandum, which states, "[t]his interim guidance will remain in effect until Secretary Mayorkas issues new enforcement guidelines," which will occur "only after consultation with the leadership and workforce of ICE, U.S. Customs and Border Protection, and other Department of Homeland Security (Department) agencies and offices." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2). The Government's argument is unpersuasive. The mere fact that an agency says an action is not final because it maintains "discretion" to alter a policy is insufficient to render an action nonfinal. See Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1814 ("The Corps may revise an approved [jurisdictional determination] within the five-year period based on 'new information.' That possibility, however, is a common characteristic of agency action, and does not make an otherwise definitive decision nonfinal." (citation omitted)); Sackett v. EPA, 566 U.S. 120, 127, 132 S.Ct. 1367, 1372, 182 L.Ed.2d 367 (2012) ("The mere possibility that an agency might reconsider in light of 'informal discussion' and invited contentions of inaccuracy does not suffice to make an otherwise final agency action nonfinal.").

24 Here, the Government's insinuation that agency action is not final simply because the agency says so, would produce the absurd result of precluding judicial review of any policy that the agency says is not final. Indeed, if such a rule were followed, then an agency could avoid judicial review of its action in perpetuity simply by labeling its action as "interim" or "temporary" and stating that the agency maintains the ability to repeal or revise it in the future. In fact, this case demonstrates how an agency could potentially tie the judiciary's hands if the agency's action is not final simply because the agency says it is not.

In this case, the February 18 Memorandum took effect immediately upon issuance. (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2). The Memorandum states it would "remain in effect until Secretary Mayorkas issues new enforcement guidelines." (Id.). It also states Secretary Mayorkas "anticipate[d] issuing these guidelines in less than 90 days," meaning the new guidance would be issued before May 19, 2021. (Id.). But that did not happen. See (Dkt. No. 63 at 3–4). In fact, in a separate challenge to the February 18 Memorandum, the Government represented to the district court that it "currently expect[s] that the Secretary will issue new immigration priorities in the beginning of July." Arizona v. Dep't of Homeland Sec., No. 2:21-cv-00186-SRB, 2021 WL 2787930 (D. Ariz. June 7, 2021), Dkt. No. 85 at 2. Once again, the new guidance was not released. See (Dkt. No. 63 at 3–4). The Government now projects "the Secretary will issue new immigration enforcement priorities by the end of August or the beginning of September." (Dkt. No. 63 at 3–4). Notably, the Government "caution[s] that this is only [its] current expectation." (Id. at 4) (emphasis added). In other words, the Government's expectation could once again change, and the issuance of the new guidance could be delayed even longer. Thus, a purely subjective definition of nonfinality would be awfully convenient for the Government—but that is not what the law provides. Rather, because the agency-wide application of this guidance has an immediate and definite nature, it objectively demonstrates the agency's decision is indeed final. See Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1813. The Court therefore finds that the Memoranda satisfy the first condition.

b. Rights, Obligations, and Legal Consequences

The second condition that must be satisfied for a court to find that an agency's action is final is that the challenged action must be one by which rights or obligations have been determined, or from which legal consequences will flow. See Hawkes Co., 578 U.S. at ____, 136 S.Ct. at 1813. The Government argues the Memoranda do not satisfy this condition because the Memoranda do not change DHS's legal obligation to enforce the law in the manner prescribed in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). (Dkt. No. 42 at 26–28). The Government also argues the Memoranda do not "change any person's legal status, confer any legal benefits, or have any 'legal consequences.' " (Id. at 27). Stated differently, the Government contends the Memoranda do not affect the rights or obligations of the States, aliens, or any other person or entity. In support, the Government points to the February 18 Memorandum, which states that the Memorandum does not "create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law." (Id. at 27) (citing (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 8)). But once again, what the Memoranda say and do are different. The Court finds the Memoranda satisfy the second condition.

First, the Government's assertion that the Memoranda do not alter DHS's legal obligations to detain certain aliens under Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) is demonstrably false. In deciphering the meaning of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) below, see infra II.B.3.a., the Court goes to great lengths to discuss what obligations those statutory provisions create for DHS. In sum, Section 1226(c) obligates DHS to detain all aliens who fall within the ambit of that provision when they are "released" from state custody. Section 1231(a)(2) requires DHS to detain all aliens with final orders of removal "during the removal period."

25 The Memoranda require something quite different. Specifically, the February 18 Memorandum effectively substitutes a prioritization scheme in place of the enforcement mandates set forth in these statutory provisions. This new scheme creates two categories of aliens who are required to be detained: priorities and nonpriorities. See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4–7). It also sets forth a requirement that ICE agents obtain preapproval to detain aliens who are deemed nonpriorities. (Id. at 7). The plain meaning of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) allows for neither this specific prioritization scheme nor its preapproval process; they simply require DHS to detain all aliens described therein at a certain time or for a specific duration. Because the Memoranda require DHS to enforce the law in a different way than what Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) prescribe, the Memoranda constitute a change in DHS's legal obligations. Such a change weighs in favor of classifying the Memoranda as final agency action. See Texas, 86 F. Supp. 3d at 648–49 (finding that DAPA is a final agency action, in part, because "[a]s evidenced by the mandatory language throughout the DAPA Memorandum requiring USCIS and ICE to take certain actions, the Secretary's Directive clearly establishes the obligations of the DHS and assigns specific duties to offices within the agency").

Next, the Government contends the Memoranda do not alter the rights or obligations of the States or aliens in the country. The Court disagrees. Based on the record before the Court, the Memoranda affect Texas's legal obligation to provide Emergency Medicaid to certain noncitizens. "Emergency Medicaid is a federally required program jointly funded by the federal government and the states." (Dkt. No. 19-7 at ¶ 7) (emphases added). Illegal aliens are eligible to participate in this program. See (Id.); 8 U.S.C. § 1611(b)(1)(A). An alien in Texas who is eligible for Emergency Medicaid and presently in state custody can benefit from the program after being released. [24] Texas is therefore legally obligated to bear part of the cost of Emergency Medicaid for aliens who qualify for the program and are not detained by ICE after being released from state custody.

But as should be clear by now, not all aliens released from state incarceration are returned to society. And that is because of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Again, pursuant to Section 1226(c), DHS is required to detain all aliens who have committed certain serious offenses as soon as they are released from state custody. And per Section 1231(a)(2), DHS is required to detain certain aliens during their removal period. Instead, because of the Memoranda, DHS is no longer detaining all of these aliens as soon as they are released from state custody or during their removal periods. Texas will therefore have a legal obligation to share the cost of providing Emergency Medicaid to aliens who qualify for the program and, under the Memoranda, are not detained by ICE after being released from state custody. [25]

26 As for the rights of aliens, another district court has already concluded the Memoranda affect the rights of certain aliens presently detained. See Hussein S.M. v. Garland, No. CV 21-348 (JRT/TNL), 2021 WL 1986125, at *3 (D. Minn. May 18, 2021). As this Court noted in Texas I, "an [alien] who has been detained for six months may be entitled to release if 'it has been determined that there is no significant likelihood of removal in the reasonably foreseeable future.' " ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *31 (quoting Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 701, 121 S.Ct. at 2505). In Hussein S.M., a detained alien with a final of order of removal filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from detention. 2021 WL 1986125, at *1. The district court granted the petition, relying on the civil immigration enforcement priorities set forth in the January 20 Memorandum and later reaffirmed in the February 18 Memorandum. Id. at *3. Because the alien in Hussein S.M. did not fall within one of the priority groups, the district court found "his removal is unlikely to be imminent despite ongoing removal enforcement." Id. (emphasis added). In short, Hussein S.M. demonstrates the Memoranda directly affect an alien's right to be free from prolonged detention. The Court therefore concludes the Memoranda affect the rights of and have significant legal consequences for detained aliens with final orders of removal.

In sum, the Court finds the Memoranda are the consummation of DHS's decision-making process and determine certain rights and legal obligations. Therefore, the Court concludes the Memoranda constitute final agency action under Section 704 of the APA. [26]

3. Committed to Agency Discretion by Law

In determining whether an agency action is reviewable, the Court must also determine whether the "agency action is committed to agency discretion by law." 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2). Accordingly, the Court now inquires whether the implementation of the new guidelines found in the Memoranda is "committed" to the Government's discretion by law.

The APA embodies a "basic presumption of judicial review." Lincoln v. Vigil, 508 U.S. 182, 190, 113 S.Ct. 2024, 2030, 124 L.Ed.2d 101 (1993) (quoting Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 140, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 1511, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967)). But this is "just" a presumption. Lincoln, 508 U.S. at 190, 113 S.Ct. at 2030. " '[R]eview is not to be had' in those rare circumstances where the relevant statute 'is drawn so that a court would have no meaningful standard against which to judge the agency's exercise of discretion.' " Id. at 191, 113 S.Ct. at 2031 (quoting Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 830, 105 S.Ct. 1649, 1655, 84 L.Ed.2d 714 (1985)). Where there is no meaningful standard to apply, "the statute ('law') can be taken to have 'committed' the decisionmaking to the agency's judgment absolutely." Lincoln, 508 U.S. at 191, 113 S.Ct. at 2031 (quoting Heckler, 470 U.S. at 830, 105 S.Ct. at 1655).

One category of administrative decisions that courts "traditionally have regarded as 'committed to agency discretion' " is relevant to this discussion. Id. (citation omitted). Namely, "an agency's decision not to institute enforcement proceedings." Id. (citing Heckler, 470 U.S. at 831, 105 S.Ct. at 1655–56). Non-enforcement decisions, however, are only "presumptively unreviewable." Heckler, 470 U.S. at 832–33, 105 S.Ct. at 1656. The Supreme Court has outlined a narrow but clear roadmap to overcoming that presumption and a second, less–traveled path. As for the first: "the presumption may be rebutted where the substantive statute has provided guidelines for the agency to follow in exercising its enforcement powers." Id. As for the second: it may be "justifiably ... found that the agency has 'consciously and expressly adopted a general policy' that is so extreme as to amount to an abdication of its statutory responsibilities." Id. at 833 n.4, 105 S.Ct. at 1656 n.4 (quoting Adams v. Richardson, 480 F.2d 1159, 1162 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (en banc)). Although the Supreme Court has not (yet) found this latter type of "abdication," it has nevertheless instructed that any such inquiry should focus on "the statute conferring authority on the agency," which "might indicate that such decisions were not 'committed to agency discretion.' " Heckler, 470 U.S. at 833 n.4, 105 S.Ct. at 1656 n.4; see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 166–67.

27 In this case, the Government argues the States' claims are unreviewable because the new guidelines contained in the February 18 Memorandum are committed to agency discretion by law. More precisely, the Government argues: (1) the substantive statutes in question, Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), do not set out the specific mandatory duties the States assert, that is, the duty to detain certain aliens subject to those two sections; (2) even if these statutes establish mandatory duties, the new guidelines "simply establish[ ] enforcement priorities" since they do "not direct ICE officials to cease detaining any particular noncitizen subject to either § 1226(c) or § 1231(a)(2)"; and (3) assuming the first two arguments fail, the Executive Branch may, in effect, dispense with a congressional mandate because "[t]he exercise of prosecutorial discretion is inherent to the Executive power that the Constitution confers on the President." (Dkt. No. 42 at 28–30). Opposing the Government's suppositions, the States contend that, although the Government wields tremendous discretion in this area of immigration law, Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) limit this discretion by mandating the detention of certain aliens when they are released or during the removal period. (Dkt. No. 51 at 29–30). The Court now turns to each of these arguments.

a. Whether "Shall" Means "Must"

The Government first argues that "shall" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) does not impose any mandatory duties or guidelines for the Government to follow. The Court disagrees. Under Section 1226(c), "the Attorney General shall take into custody" certain aliens who have either committed specified offenses or who are otherwise deemed deportable under the INA "when the alien is released" from custody. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) (emphasis added). Likewise, Section 1231(a)(2) provides, "the Attorney General shall detain the alien" "during [the alien's] removal period." 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2) (emphasis added).

Recent Supreme Court precedent establishes "shall" means "must" in these sections. In Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, the Supreme Court noted "detention is mandatory" during an alien's removal period, as prescribed by Section 1231(a)(2). ____ U.S. ____, ____, 141 S.Ct. 2271, 2281 (2021) (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)). And under Section 1226(c), "detention is mandatory and release is permitted in very limited circumstances" "[f]or certain criminal aliens and aliens who have connections to terrorism." Id. at ____ n.2, 141 S.Ct. at 2280 n.2 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)). In light of Guzman Chavez, it seems there is no dispute that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) are mandatory.

This is not surprising. Guzman Chavez's holding follows the well-established principle that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) mandate the detention of certain aliens at specific points in time. See Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 959 (finding under Section 1226(c) certain criminal aliens "must be arrested when 'they are released' from custody on criminal charges and ... must be detained without a bond hearing until the question of their removal is resolved" (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)) (emphasis added)); Jennings, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 835 ("§ 1226(c) makes clear that detention of aliens within its scope must continue 'pending a decision' on removal" (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)) (emphasis added)); Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 683, 121 S.Ct. at 2495 ("After entry of a final removal order and during the 90-day removal period, however, aliens must be held in custody." (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)) (emphasis in original)); Demore, 538 U.S. at 521, 123 S.Ct. at 1716 (noting Section 1226 "requir[ed] the Attorney General to detain a subset of deportable criminal aliens pending a determination of their removability" (emphasis added)); Hosh v. Lucero, 680 F.3d 375, 377, 381 (4th Cir. 2012) ("Section 1226(c) requires the mandatory federal detention, without the possibility of bond, of certain deportable criminal aliens 'when' those aliens are released from other custody." (emphases added)); Rodney v. Mukasey, 340 F. App'x 761, 764 & n.3 (3d Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (interpreting "shall" in Section 1231(a)(2) to mean the Attorney General "must" detain the alien for a certain period (emphasis added)); Khotesouvan v. Morones, 386 F.3d 1298, 1300 (9th Cir. 2004) (observing that, in Demore, the Supreme Court "approved the mandatory detention of a criminal alien during removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) even in the absence of an individualized finding that the alien was unlikely to appear for his removal hearing if released on bond" (emphasis added)); Prieto-Romero v. Clark, 534 F.3d 1053, 1059 & n.4 (9th Cir. 2008) (noting that detention under Section 1231(a)(2) is mandatory); Nyonton v. Brackett, No. 18-CV-481-PB, 2019 WL 1082203, at *2 (D.N.H. Mar. 7, 2019) (holding Section 1231(a)(2) is "crystal clear" in mandating the detention of aliens subject to Section 1231, especially with respect to individuals "who have been found inadmissible because of a controlled substance violation"); Louisaire v. Muller, 758 F. Supp. 2d 229, 235 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (explaining that, while Section 1226(a) provides ICE with the discretion to detain any alien pending a decision in removal proceedings, "[a]liens who have been convicted of certain enumerated offenses, however, including drug crimes ... are subject to mandatory detention" pursuant to Sections 1226(c)(1)(B), 1227(a)(2)(B), and INA § 126(c) (emphasis added)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

28 Accordingly, the Court concludes, following Guzman Chavez and the foregoing overwhelming precedent, the word "shall" means "must" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Consequently, the Government is required to detain certain criminal aliens and aliens with final orders of removal at certain points in time to comply with those statutes.

Despite the Supreme Court's clear interpretation of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), the Government nevertheless argues that Guzman Chavez and, by extension, all other related court rulings are irrelevant here. The Government contends Guzman Chavez "did not address the Department of Homeland Security's discretion whether to detain individuals covered by 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) and 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)." (Dkt. No. 67 at 1). "Rather," according to the Government, Guzman Chavez "addressed under which authority certain individuals were detained and whether such individuals were entitled to bond hearings." (Id.). In short, the Government argues the Court should disregard Guzman Chavez's statements on Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)—and the numerous court holdings that precede Guzman Chavez—because those were not central to the case's holding and thus were dicta that need not be followed. The Court disagrees.

Guzman Chavez's treatment of Sections 1226 and 1231 were central to its holding. The case's key question was whether certain aliens could be released on bond while petitioning for relief from removal. That question was necessarily answered by analyses of both sections—analyses that included looking at the mandatory nature of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)'s detention provisions. The respondents in Guzman Chavez—aliens who were detained following their unlawful reentrance into the United States after previously being removed—sought release on bond while they were pursuing relief from removal. Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2280. The respondents argued that Section 1226, which generally conferred discretion to the Government to detain aliens, provided them an avenue to be released on bond. Id. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2283–84. However, the Government in that action contended that Section 1231, which mandates detention of aliens with orders of removal, applied to the respondents, effectively requiring their detention to be without bond. Id.; see also Brief for Petitioner, Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 2271 (2021) (No. 19-897), 2020 WL 4938065. The Supreme Court was thus required to determine which INA provision applied to the respondents. This task necessitated a finding as to whether, and in what circumstances, detention was mandatory under the relevant statutes. See Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2280–82.

Guzman Chavez ultimately held Section 1231 applies to the respondents since they had effectively been ordered removed through the reinstatement of their previous orders of removal. See id. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2287–91. In reaching this conclusion, the Supreme Court compared Section 1226, which, again, applies to the arrest and detention of an alien "pending a decision on whether the alien is to be removed from the United States," id. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2281, with Section 1231, which applies to an alien ordered removed, id. In the Supreme Court's discussion of Section 1226, it noted "DHS," pursuant to that provision, "may arrest and detain the alien," pending that alien's removal decision. Id. Such an alien "may generally apply for release on bond or conditional parole." Id. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court probed further, stating "there is one exception" to this general rule: for certain criminal aliens, "detention is mandatory" under Section 1226(c). Id. at ____ n.2, 141 S.Ct. at 2280 n.2 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)) (emphasis added). Like Section 1226(c)'s exception, the Supreme Court stated Section 1231's detention is "mandatory" precisely because of Section 1231(a)(2). Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. at ____, 141 S.Ct. at 2281 (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)). Thus, Guzman Chavez's interpretation of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) as mandating detention was essential to the case's holding.

29 Tellingly, the Government itself admitted during briefing in Guzman Chavez that Section 1226(c) imposed a mandatory duty to detain certain criminal aliens.[27] The Government explained, although "Section 1226(a) makes detention discretionary," "a separate provision, Section 1226(c), makes an exception to that general rule, providing that the government 'shall' take into custody and not release certain criminal aliens." Brief for Petitioner, 2020 WL 4938065, at *5 (No. 19-897) (emphasis added). The Government also argued in its reply brief that the Supreme Court's "intervention" in Guzman Chavez would "determine[ ] whether Section 1226(c)—which provides for the mandatory detention of certain criminal aliens—applies to aliens who have reinstated orders of removal and are in withholding-only proceedings." Reply Brief for Petitioner, Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 2271 (2021) (No. 19-897) 2020 WL 3124376, at *7 (emphasis added). Likewise, with respect to Section 1231(a)(2), the Government stated it had "long read" the statute "to require the detention of terrorist and criminal aliens." Reply Brief for Petitioner, Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 2271 (2021) (No. 19-897) 2020 WL 7249055, at *17 & footnote (emphases added). Thus, in conjunction with Guzman Chavez, the Court takes the Government at its word and finds "shall" means "must" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) with respect to the detention of certain criminal aliens.

Second, even if the clear principles delineated in Guzman Chavez, Preap, Zadvydas, and the like are dicta, they are persuasive, nonetheless. As the Fifth Circuit has noted, "[i]t is well established in this circuit that, although we are 'not bound by dicta, even of [this court,] [d]icta of the Supreme Court are, of course, another matter.' " Peake v. Ayobami (In re Ayobami), 879 F.3d 152, 154 n.3 (5th Cir. 2018) (quoting Campaign for S. Equal. v. Bryant, 791 F.3d 625, 627 n.1 (5th Cir. 2015)).[28] Thus, the Court follows the Fifth Circuit and its sister circuits and defers to Guzman Chavez, Preap, Zadvydas, and other related Supreme Court precedent even if the statements on Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) in those cases were dicta, as the Government contends. The Court is not free to treat Supreme Court dicta as cavalierly as the Government suggests. Accordingly, the Court applies the caselaw discussed above and holds that the "shall" found in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) means "must," imposing on the Government a duty to detain certain criminal aliens and those with final orders of removal when released and during the removal period, respectively.

30 Arguments about dicta aside, the Court's own statutory interpretation of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) also leads to the conclusion that "shall" means "must" in those sections. See Scalia & Garner, supra, at 53 ("Every application of a text to particular circumstances entails interpretation." (emphasis added)).

"The task of statutory interpretation begins and, if possible, ends with the language of the statute." Trout Point Lodge, Ltd. v. Handshoe, 729 F.3d 481, 486 (5th Cir. 2013). "When the language is plain, [the court] 'must enforce the statute's plain meaning, unless absurd.' " Id. (quoting In re Nowlin, 576 F.3d 258, 261–62 (5th Cir. 2009)); see also BedRoc Ltd. v. United States, 541 U.S. 176, 183, 124 S.Ct. 1587, 1593, 158 L.Ed.2d 338 (2004) ("The preeminent canon of statutory interpretation requires [the court] to 'presume that [the] legislature says in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there.' " (quoting Conn. Nat'l Bank v. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 253–54, 112 S.Ct. 1146, 1149, 117 L.Ed.2d 391 (1992))). "A statute is ambiguous if it is susceptible of more than one accepted meaning." United Servs. Auto. Ass'n v. Perry, 102 F.3d 144, 146 (5th Cir. 1996). Multiple accepted meanings do not exist merely because a statute's "authors did not have the forethought expressly to contradict any creative contortion that may later be constructed to expand or prune its scope." Moore v. Hannon Food Serv., Inc., 317 F.3d 489, 497 (5th Cir. 2003). Thus, as before, regarding interpreting Section 1231(h), the Court must initially determine whether "all but one of the meanings" of the word "shall" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) is "ordinarily eliminated by context." Deal, 508 U.S. at 132–33, 113 S.Ct. at 1996–97.

For this analysis, the Court applies "the traditional means of statutory interpretation, which include the text itself, its history, and its purpose." Bellum v. PCE Constructors, Inc., 407 F.3d 734, 739 (5th Cir. 2005) (citation omitted). Put differently, the Court must initially "look first to the word's ordinary meaning," Schindler Elevator Corp. v. United States ex rel. Kirk, 563 U.S. 401, 407, 131 S.Ct. 1885, 1891, 179 L.Ed.2d 825 (2011), since "[s]tatutory language has meaning only in context." Graham Cnty., 545 U.S. at 415, 125 S.Ct. at 2449 (citing Leocal v. Ashcroft, 543 U.S. 1, 9, 125 S.Ct. 377, 382, 160 L.Ed.2d 271 (2004)). Only "when traditional methods of statutory construction fail to reveal a provision's meaning" may the Court "conclude that it is ambiguous." Perry, 102 F.3d at 147.

"[T]he word 'shall' usually connotes a requirement." Maine Cmty. Health Options v. United States, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 140 S.Ct. 1308, 1320, 206 L.Ed.2d 764 (2020); see also Scalia & Garner, supra, at 112 ("When drafters use shall and may correctly, the traditional rule holds—beautifully."). The Supreme Court has nonetheless cautioned, "[a]s against the government, the word 'shall,' when used in statutes, is to be construed as 'may,' unless a contrary intention is manifest." Railroad Co. v. Hecht, 95 U.S. 168, 170, 24 L.Ed. 423 (1877).

This need for legislative intent to demonstrate "shall" should be construed as "must" against the government is present in Supreme Court jurisprudence. In Texas I, this Court identified Town of Castle Rock v. Gonzales, 545 U.S. 748, 125 S.Ct. 2796, 162 L.Ed.2d 658 (2005), a Supreme Court case upon which the Government relies, (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 82 at 19); (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 25–26, 34); (6:21-cv-16, Dkt. No. 42 at 36–38), as an apt example of the need for legislative intent to determine that "shall" connotes a requirement. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *33. In Castle Rock, the respondent claimed her due process rights were violated because a police department refused to enforce restraining orders despite language printed on the orders themselves stating that an "officer shall arrest" a restrained person where probable cause of a violation was evident. 545 U.S. at 754, 759, 125 S.Ct. at 2802, 2805. The Supreme Court, however, found "the presence of seemingly mandatory legislative commands" like "shall" could not automatically impose a "true mandate" against the police. Id. at 760–61, 125 S.Ct. at 2805–06. What was needed—and lacking in Castle Rock—was "some stronger indication" from the legislature. Id. at 761, 125 S.Ct. at 2806. Such an "indication" was not present because the "shall" used in the restraining orders was "not perceptibly more mandatory than" other state statutes using the word "shall" where the police force was traditionally accorded discretion. Id.; see also Chicago v. Morales, 527 U.S. 41, 61–62 n.32, 119 S.Ct. 1849, 1861 n.32, 144 L.Ed.2d 67 (1999) (noting that interpreting "shall" as mandatory in the context of police action "flies in the face of common sense that all police officers must use some discretion in deciding when and where to enforce city ordinances").

31 With the foregoing in mind, this Court in Texas I previously explained how a "stronger indication" from Congress may be gleaned. In Richbourg Motor Co. v. United States and Escoe v. Zerbst, the Supreme Court noted one "indication" sufficient to conclude that the word "shall" in a statute imposes an obligation upon the Government is present when the statute's manifest purpose is to protect the public or private interests of innocent third parties. See Richbourg Motor Co. v. United States, 281 U.S. 528, 533–34, 50 S.Ct., 385, 387–88, 74 L.Ed. 1016 (1930); Escoe v. Zerbst, 295 U.S. 490, 494, 55 S.Ct. 818, 820, 79 L.Ed. 1566 (1935); see also Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *34. The Court finds it appropriate to reiterate its explanations of these cases here.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

In Richbourg Motor Co., the Supreme Court expressly found reason to avoid the rule in Hecht where a statute provided that an officer "shall" take possession of a vehicle used in the act of transporting liquor. 281 U.S. at 533–34, 50 S.Ct. at 387–88. After noting that the statute in question was "in form mandatory throughout," the Court explained it "detail[ed] ... successive steps to be taken, which, if followed, [led] unavoidably to forfeiture under that section ... , with the important consequence of protecting the interests of innocent third persons." Id. (emphasis added). These qualities of the relevant text, the Supreme Court explained, "suggests a definite purpose to make the protection effective" by imposing a mandatory duty. Id.

Five years after Richbourg Motor Co., the Supreme Court in Escoe concluded that any doubt regarding the mandatory nature of a statutory "shall" is "dispelled when we pass from the words alone to a view of ends and aims." 295 U.S. at 492–93, 55 S.Ct. at 819–20 (emphasis added). In Escoe, the relevant statute appeared to require a trial court to bring a probationer to court to revoke his probation. Id. The Supreme Court determined, because it was "[c]lear[ ] [that] the end and aim of an appearance before the court must be to enable an accused probationer to explain away the accusation," the presentment of the probationer was "necessary, or so the Congress must have thought, to protect the individual against malice or oppression." Id. at 493, 55 S.Ct. at 820. Thus, Escoe concluded the "shall" in the relevant statute was "mandatory in meaning as well as mandatory in form." Id. at 494, 55 S.Ct. at 820. Leaving no doubt, the Supreme Court stated, "[s]tatutes are not [optional] when to put them in that category would result in serious impairment of the public or the private interests that they were intended to protect." Id.; see also Ralpho v. Bell, 569 F.2d 607, 627–28 & n.149 (D.C. Cir. 1977) (applying Escoe to "prefer a construction" of mandatory language in a statute guiding governmental officials' discharge of duties "that bestows the benefits of the Act on those for whom it was chiefly intended").

Given the caselaw, the key in this case is whether Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) demonstrate a purpose to protect public or private interests. If so, the word "shall," as used in both sections, would connote a requirement against the Government in the manner envisioned by Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe. Based on the following, the Court finds that the statutes do indeed demonstrate such a purpose.

The Supreme Court in Demore clearly explains that the purpose of Section 1226(c) was to protect third-party interests: that of the states, citizens, and legal immigrants of this country. Essentially, Section 1226(c) was enacted "against a backdrop of wholesale failure by the INS [ICE's predecessor] to deal with increasing rates of criminal activity by aliens." Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1714. "INS' near-total inability to remove deportable criminal aliens imposed" overpopulation in federal and state prisons, caused monetary costs, took away immigration opportunities that could have been provided to others, and increased crime in the Nation's communities. Id. at 518–20, 123 S.Ct. at 1714–15. Crucially, "Congress also had before it evidence that one of the major causes of the INS' failure to remove deportable criminal aliens was the agency's failure to detain those aliens during their deportation proceedings." Id. at 519, 123 S.Ct. at 1715. Before Section 1226, "[t]he Attorney General at the time had broad discretion to conduct individualized bond hearings and to release criminal aliens from custody during their removal proceedings when those aliens were determined not to present an excessive flight risk or threat to society." Id. (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a) (1982 ed.)). Thus, to alleviate these issues, Congress "enacted 8 U.S.C. § 1226, requiring the Attorney General to detain a subset of deportable criminal aliens pending a determination of their removability." Id. at 521, 123 S.Ct. at 1716 (emphasis added). Given Demore's findings, the purpose of Section 1226 is to protect the public and private interests of third parties, namely, the states, the citizens, and legal immigrants of the United States.

32 Considering the context and purpose of Section 1226, it is no wonder why Subsection (c) "subtract[s]," from the discretion given to the Government in Section 1226(a). See Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 966. In fact, it does more than that. Subsection (c) also subtracts from the general "broad discretion" that the Attorney General originally had prior to the enactment of Section 1226. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 521, 123 S.Ct. at 1716. "Shall" in Section 1226(c), therefore, must be construed to mean "must."

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Like Section 1226(c), Section 1231(a)(2) was enacted to protect public and private interests of the states and the people of the United States. As the Supreme Court noted in Zadvydas, "protecting the community from dangerous aliens" is a "statutory purpose" of that section. 533 U.S. at 697, 121 S.Ct. at 2502. What's more, Section 1231 "is part of a statute that has as its basic purpose effectuating an alien's removal," a purpose related to the community's protection. Id. Coupled with Demore's detailed explanation of the burdens criminal aliens impose on both the country and its people when the Government fails to deport them, 538 U.S. at 518–20, 123 S.Ct. at 1714–15, it is evident that Section 1231(a)(2)'s purpose was to similarly protect the states, the citizens, and legal immigrants' interests against the harmful effects the Government's failure to remove certain aliens would bring about.

Additionally, numerous federal courts—including this Court—have recognized other parts of Section 1231 use "shall" as a mandatory command. See Shuaibu v. Gonzales, 425 F.3d 1142, 1144 (8th Cir. 2005) (interpreting the "shall" in Section 1231(b)(1)(C) to mean the Attorney General "must" attempt to remove the alien to certain countries); Kim Ho Ma v. Ashcroft, 257 F.3d 1095, 1115 (9th Cir. 2001) (interpreting "shall" in Section 1231(a)(3) to mean all aliens ordered released "must" comply with supervision requirements); Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *32–37 (analyzing Section 1231(a)(1)(A) and holding the "shall" in that provision imposes a mandate on the Government to deport aliens with final orders of removal within 90 days). These interpretations of "shall" as mandatory in other parts of Section 1231 are yet further indication the "shall" in Section 1231(a)(2) bears the same meaning, because "a word or phrase is presumed to bear the same meaning throughout a text." Scalia & Garner, supra, at 170; see also Powerex Corp. v. Reliant Energy Servs., Inc., 551 U.S. 224, 232, 127 S.Ct. 2411, 2417, 168 L.Ed.2d 112 (2007) ("A standard principle of statutory construction provides that identical words and phrases within the same statute should normally be given the same meaning."). Thus, for all these reasons, the "shall" in Section 1231(a)(2) necessarily means must.

The Government does not disagree that Congress enacted Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) to protect public or private interests. Rather, the Government demurs that a statutory purpose of protecting third parties, as held in Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe, is not a "stronger indication," per Castle Rock, to make "shall" mandatory against any governmental actor. (Dkt. No. 42 at 36–38); see Richbourg, 281 U.S. at 533–34, 50 S.Ct., at 387–88; Escoe, 295 U.S. at 493–94, 55 S.Ct. at 820; Castle Rock, 545 U.S. at 761, 125 S.Ct. at 2806. In making this argument, the Government reasons that the "protection of a third party" rationale cannot serve as a stronger indication because, it claims, the very "statute [in Castle Rock] concerned enforcement of restraining orders entered to benefit a 'protected person.' " (Id. at 37–38) (emphasis omitted) (quoting Castle Rock, 545 U.S. at 758–59, 125 S.Ct. at 2804–05). In doing so, however, the Government ignores the Supreme Court's holdings in Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe. See (Id. at 36–39). In short, the Government implies that Castle Rock overruled Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe sub silentio. That argument fails.

33 As an initial matter, this Court cannot ignore Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe where the Supreme Court or the Fifth Circuit has not expressly instructed it to do so. See Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484, 109 S.Ct. 1917, 1921–22, 104 L.Ed.2d 526 (1989) ("If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions."); Lopez v. City of Hous., Civil Action No. H-09-0420, 2009 WL 1456487, at *15 (S.D. Tex. May 22, 2009) (Lake, J.) ("[I]t is well established that a federal district court must generally apply an interpretation of law articulated by its circuit court of appeals." (quoting Perez v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 967 F. Supp. 920, 925 (S.D. Tex. 1997) (Jack, J.))). The Court did not disregard those cases in Texas I, nor will it disregard them here. [29]

But even if the Court could ignore Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe, Castle Rock is easily distinguishable from this case. The state statute ostensibly mandating the police to enforce restraining orders in Castle Rock was drafted upon a background of "[a] well established tradition of police discretion" that "ha[d] long coexisted with apparently mandatory arrest statutes." Castle Rock, 545 U.S. at 760, 125 S.Ct. at 2805–06 (citing 1 ABA Standards for Criminal Justice 1-4.5, commentary, pp. 1–124 to 1–125 (2d ed. 1980)). A similar tradition is not present with respect to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). As explained above, it was precisely the federal government's "wholesale failure" "to deal with increasing rates of criminal activity by aliens" that prompted Congress to limit the Executive's discretion in such matters by enacting Section 1226. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1714. Such specific legislative intent, backed by Supreme Court acknowledgment, was not present in the statute interpreted in Castle Rock. Cf. 545 U.S. at 760–61, 125 S.Ct. at 2805–06.

34 Furthermore, the Government's contention that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) do not confer a mandatory duty against the Government goes against an analysis of the statutes' text within the whole statutory scheme. The Supreme Court has noted that "[t]he word 'may' customarily connotes discretion" and that such a "connotation is particularly apt where ... 'may' is used in contraposition to the word 'shall.' " Jama v. Immigr. & Customs Enf't, 543 U.S. 335, 346, 125 S.Ct. 694, 703, 160 L.Ed.2d 708 (2005) (citing Haig v. Agee, 453 U.S. 280, 294 n.26, 101 S.Ct. 2766, 2775 n.24, 69 L.Ed.2d 640 (1981)). That principle proved crucial in Jama, where the Supreme Court held that because Section 1231(b)(2) of the INA states that the Attorney General "shall remove" an alien to a designated country, it would be inappropriate to read as mandatory another provision explaining that the Attorney General "may" disregard the designation if certain circumstances arise. Id. This principle applies to this case as well.

Section 1231(a)(2) states that the Attorney General "shall" detain certain aliens "during the removal period," which is defined to be a period of 90 days when an alien is ordered removed. 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)–(2). Before Section 1231(a)(2), Subsection (a)(1)(C) provides that the removal period "shall" be extended beyond 90 days if certain circumstances arise, and the alien "may" remain in detention during that extended period. Id. § 1231(a)(1)(C). Again, it would be absurd if Section 1231(a)(2)—with its use of "shall"—is read to provide merely discretionary authority to the Government to detain people during the removal period when Section 1231(a)(1)(C)—using "may"—clearly provides discretion to the Government to detain people after the initial 90-day removal period.

Likewise, Section 1226(c) clearly juxtaposes "may" and "shall" so that there is no ambiguity as to whether the "shall" used in 1226(c)(1) imposes a mandatory duty. Subsection (c)(1) states that the Attorney General "shall" detain certain aliens "when the alien is released." 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1). Just right after that, Subsection (c)(2) notes that the Attorney General "may" release aliens described in Subsection (c)(1) "only if" certain circumstances are present. Id. § 1226(c)(2). As such, for Subsection (c)(2) to have any meaning, Subsection (c)(1) must be read as a mandate: the Attorney General must detain aliens when released and such aliens may be released only if certain situations call for it. If Subsection (c)(1) is not interpreted in this way, then Subsection (c)(2)—the release provision—loses its significance. It would be superfluous for Congress to state how certain aliens may be released—per Subsection (c)(2)—if the Government was meant to initially have the discretion to decide which criminal aliens to detain in the first place. This analysis of the two statutes within the overall scheme indeed tracks how the Supreme Court and other federal courts have construed Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), as described more fully above.

b. Whether "Prioritization" Contravenes Congressional Mandates

Having concluded that "shall" means "must" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), the Court turns to the Government's second argument in support of its assertion that the new guidelines in the February 18 Memorandum are committed to agency discretion by law. That is, regardless of the relevant sections' mandatory nature, the new guidelines "simply establish[ ] enforcement priorities" because they do "not direct ICE officials to cease detaining any particular noncitizen." (Dkt. No. 42 at 28–29). Put differently, the Government argues that the guidelines do not actually stop detentions and, instead, merely prioritize who gets detained first. As a result, the Government concludes that the guidelines do not contravene the statutes. See (Id.). Thus, in essence, the Government argues that it has discretion to determine the timing of when certain aliens should be detained—if not the discretion to determine who gets detained. This argument fails as well.

35 Although the Government describes the February 18 Memorandum as only a reprioritization of immigration enforcement priorities, a review of the Memorandum itself establishes that it is more than that. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171–72 ("Although the DAPA Memo facially purports to confer discretion, the district court determined that nothing about DAPA genuinely leaves the agency and its employees free to exercise discretion." (cleaned up)). The new guidelines violate the statutory commands of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) which are: to detain certain aliens "when the alien is released," per Section 1226(c), or "during the removal period," per Section 1231(a)(2).

The Government opines that the February 18 Memorandum "directs 'officers and agents ... to exercise their discretion thoughtfully' after consideration 'of all relevant facts and circumstances' " concerning the arrest, detention, or removal of criminal illegal aliens. (Dkt. No. 42 at 29) (alteration in original) (citing Dkt. No. 42-2 at 4). That statement demonstrates that the new guidelines wade into areas that are not committed to agency discretion. See (Id.). Because "shall" means "must" in Section 1226(c), the Executive Branch is required to detain criminal aliens who have committed "any offense covered in section 1182(a)(2)," "any offense covered in section 1227(a)(2)(A)(ii), (A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D)," or any alien who "is deportable under section 1227(a)(2)(A)(i)," "inadmissible under section 1182(a)(3)(B)," or "deportable under section 1227(a)(4)(B)." 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D) (emphases added). This leaves no room for the Executive's agent to "thoughtfully" exercise discretion. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 29). And crucially, to protect the public, Congress mandated that any alien falling under any of these categories must be detained "when the alien is released" from state custody. Id. Likewise, Section 1231(a)(2) requires both the detention of aliens who possess orders of removal and aliens who have been found "inadmissible under section 1182(a)(2)," "1182(a)(3)(B)," or "deportable under section 1227(a)(2) or 1227(a)(4)(B)."[30] Id. § 1231(a)(2). And, like Section 1226(c), Congress in Section 1231(a)(2) mandated the timing of such detention: the aliens must be detained "during the removal period." Id.

36 Because of the clear mandates set forth in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), determining whether and when an alien should be detained is not a decision committed to agency discretion. And by prioritizing the detention of some aliens over others, the Government has effectively conferred upon itself discretion as to the timing of detention—discretion it does not have. Put differently, the Government has assumed a discretionary power that Congress has explicitly foreclosed. Such a maneuver is impermissible. See Util. Air Regul. Grp., 573 U.S. at 327, 134 S.Ct. at 2446 ("Under our system of government, Congress makes laws and the President, acting at times through agencies like EPA, 'faithfully execute[s]' them. The power of executing the laws necessarily includes both authority and responsibility to resolve some questions left open by Congress that arise during the law's administration. But it does not include a power to revise clear statutory terms that turn out not to work in practice." (alteration in original) (citation omitted) (citing U.S. Const. art. II, § 3)); Barnhart v. Sigmon Coal Co., 534 U.S. 438, 462, 122 S.Ct. 941, 956, 151 L.Ed.2d 908 (2002) (finding that an agency lacked authority "to develop new guidelines or to assign liability in a manner inconsistent with" an "unambiguous statute").

"Congress does not draft legislation in the expectation that the Executive will blow through the deadlines it sets." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____ n.6, 139 S.Ct. at 969 n.6 (emphasis in original). In this case, Section 1226(c)'s "when ... released" language "clarifies when the duty to arrest is triggered: upon release from criminal custody." Id. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 969. And as a logical extension of that reasoning, Section 1231(a)(2)'s "during the removal period" language also clarifies when a duty to arrest is triggered: when the alien is provided with a final order of removal.[31] See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)–(2). In sum, Congress has clearly specified when the duty to detain is triggered: when the alien is released as provided by Section 1226(c) and during the removal period for Section 1231(a)(2). When that duty to detain is triggered is not left for the agency to decide. Thus, choosing to detain certain aliens "when ... released," see Section 1226(c), or "during the removal period," see Section 1231(a)(2), over others who are mandated to be detained at those specific points in time is not left to agency discretion. Indeed, it is a violation of the clear letter of the law. See Util. Air Regul. Grp., 573 U.S. at 327, 134 S.Ct. at 2446.

c. Whether the Executive may "Dispense" with Laws

Finally, the Government argues that the Memoranda are committed to agency discretion because "[t]he exercise of prosecutorial discretion is inherent to the Executive power that the Constitution confers on the President" and that such "discretion" is "greatly magnified" in the immigration law context. (Dkt. No. 42 at 29–30) (citing Reno, 525 U.S. at 490, 119 S.Ct. at 946). As this Court stated in Texas I, "whatever 'inherent authority' the Executive may have in the area of immigration, that authority—along with the executive Power—does not include the authority to 'suspend' or 'dispense with' Congress's exercise of legislative Powers in enacting immigration laws." ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *36. The Government's suggestion that the Executive's discretion is so significant that it may, in effect, dispense with laws has significant implications for the separation-of-powers system enshrined in the Constitution. The subject is therefore worth addressing, albeit briefly, at this early stage in the litigation. However grand the Executive's discretion might be in enforcing immigration laws, the Constitution does not empower the Executive to set forth a policy that, in effect, dispenses with a congressional immigration mandate.[32]

37 Concern over the Executive's power to dispense with laws dates back to before the founding of this Nation. The Framers of the Constitution were well aware of how the English Crown had abused the dispensing power a century prior to the ratification of the Constitution. See Michael W. McConnell, The President Who Would Not Be King: Executive Power Under the Constitution 118 (2020) (concluding that the Framers addressed the royal "prerogatives of suspending or dispensing with the laws" in the Take Care Clause "[g]iven that the Committee [of Detail] explicitly dealt with virtually every one of the royal prerogatives, and especially the notorious prerogatives that had animated the overthrow of Charles I and James II"); Michael Stokes Paulsen, Steven G. Calabresi, Michael W. McConnell & Samuel L. Bray, The Constitution of the United States 317 (Robert C. Clark et al. eds., 2d ed. 2013) (opining that the President's duty to " 'take care that the laws be faithfully executed' ... means that the president is not permitted to dispense with or suspend statutes the way King James II did before the Glorious Revolution of 1688"); Robert J. Delahunty & John C. Yoo, Dream On: The Obama Administration's Nonenforcement of Immigration Laws, the DREAM Act, and the Take Care Clause, 91 Tex. L. Rev. 781, 797–98 & n.95, 804–09 (2013) (detailing how the "suspending power" was abused by English Monarchs, such as James II, and how that history influenced Americans in limiting "[t]he executive Power"); see also Randy Barnett & Evan Bernick, The Letter & The Spirit: A Unified Theory of Originalism, 107 Geo. L. J. 1, 20–21 (2018) (contending the Founding Fathers constructed the new American government as a fiduciary of We the People, "bound by fiduciary duties to honor the law, ... remain loyal to the public interest, ... and account for violations of these duties." (emphasis added) (citations and quotations omitted)). As a prime example, King James II dispensed with the Test Acts,[33] which effectively barred Catholics from holding government or military office, "to create an enlarged standing army under the control of Catholic officers ... and ... put Catholic peers in key positions in the Privy Council and the government" because he did "[n]ot trust[ ] Protestant militias and gentry to protect him from rebellion[.]" McConnell, supra, at 116; see also Zachary S. Price, Enforcement Discretion and Executive Duty, 67 Vand. L. Rev. 671, 691 (2014) ("King James enraged Protestants in Parliament by using his suspending and dispensing powers to exempt officials from statutory restrictions on office holding by Catholics and Protestant dissenters."); Delahunty & Yoo, supra, at 805–06 ("James began using his dispensing power extensively to override the Test Acts, filling offices with his fellow Roman Catholics."). This decision angered many Englishmen[34] and played a significant role in igniting the Glorious Revolution, which resulted in William III and Mary II replacing James II on the throne. Delahunty & Yoo, supra, at 807. Although no longer on the throne, James II had already left his mark on the future powers of the Crown. Indeed, the English Bill of Rights of 1689 barred William III and Mary II and all future monarchs from suspending or dispensing with laws.[35]

By 1776, Americans had developed a similar sentiment about the dispensing power as had the English in 1689. See Price, supra, at 692. Notably, one of the grievances against King George III articulated in the Declaration of Independence[36] was that he "often withheld assent from laws passed by colonial legislatures unless the laws included a suspension clause allowing him to halt their execution." Rabkin as Amici Curiae Supporting Respondents at 5–6, United States v. Texas, ____ U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2271, 195 L.Ed.2d 638 (2016) (mem) (per curiam) (citing Leonard Woods Labaree, Royal Government in America: A Study of the British Colonial System Before 1783, at 224–27, 256–68 (1934)). This "allowed the king not only to dispense with the implementation of statutes, but also to force changes to their content—an essentially legislative power." Id. at 5–6; see also Declaration of Independence ¶¶ 3–4.

38 Prior to the United States Constitution's ratification, states were aware of this sentiment and crafted state constitutions of their own that barred the Executive from exercising the suspending or dispensing power. See Price, supra, at 692 ("Drawing from this English model, several states during the American revolutionary period adopted constitutions including prohibitions on executive suspension of laws."); Steven G. Calabresi, Sarah E. Agudo & Kathryn L. Dore, State Bills of Rights In 1787 and 1791: What Individual Rights Are Really Deeply Rooted In American History and Tradition?, 85 S. Cal. L. Rev. 1451, 1534–35 (2012) (explaining that, at the time of the founding, "state constitutions ... had constitutional clauses restricting the power to suspend or dispense with laws to the legislature"); cf. Gordon S. Wood, The Origins of Vested Rights in the Early Republic, 85 Va. L. Rev. 1421, 1425–26 (1999) (noting that, "[i]n the 1760s and 1770s, during the crisis that eventually tore apart the British empire, the American colonists had this long English heritage of popular rights to draw upon," including the English Bill of Rights, which "declared illegal certain actions of the crown, including its dispensing with laws"). By 1787, six states—Delaware, Maryland, Massachusetts, North Carolina, New Hampshire, and Virginia—had state constitutions containing provisions barring the Executive from exercising the suspending or dispensing power. See Del. Const. of 1776 Decl. of Rights, § 7 ("That no power of suspending laws, or the execution of laws, ought to be exercised unless by the Legislature."); Md. Const. of 1776 Decl. of Rights, § VII ("That no power of suspending laws, or the execution of laws, unless by or derived from the Legislature, ought to be exercised or allowed."); Mass. Const. of 1780 pt. 1, art. XX ("The power of suspending the laws, or the execution of the laws, ought never to be exercised but by the legislature, or by authority derived from it, to be exercised in such particular cases only as the legislature shall expressly provide for."); N.H. Const. of 1784 pt. 1, art. XXIX ("The power of suspending the laws, or the execution of them, ought never to be exercised but by the Legislature, or by authority derived therefrom, to be exercised in such particular cases only as the Legislature shall expressly provide for."); N.C. Const. of 1776 Decl. of Rights, § V ("That all powers of suspending laws, or the execution of laws, by any authority, without consent of the Representatives of the people, is injurious to their rights, and ought not to be exercised."); Va. Const. of 1776 Bill of Rights, § 7 ("That all power of suspending laws, or the execution of laws, by any authority, without consent of the representatives of the people, is injurious to their rights and ought not to be exercised."); see also Calabresi, Agudo & Dore, supra, at 1534. This number soon grew to eight after Pennsylvania added a provision prohibiting the Executive from suspending or dispensing with laws to its constitution in 1790, and Vermont, which already had such a provision in its constitution, became a state in 1791.[37] See Pa. Const. of 1790 art. IX, § 12 ("That no power of suspending laws shall be exercised, unless by the legislature, or its authority."); Vt. Const. of 1786 Decl. of Rights, § XVII ("The power of suspending laws, or the execution of laws ought never to be exercised, but by the Legislature, or by authority derived from it, to be exercised in such particular cases only as the Legislature shall expressly provide for."); see also Calabresi, Agudo & Dore, supra, at 1535.

Although the Constitution does not contain a provision of its own explicitly prohibiting the Executive from dispensing with laws,[38] it in no way sanctions such action by the Executive for at least two reasons. First, the Constitution separates power among three branches, vesting executive power exclusively in the President and legislative power exclusively in Congress. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 1; U.S. Const. art. II, § 1; U.S. Const. art. III, § 1; *Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Acct. Dispensing of laws is, in effect, a legislative power. See Kendall v. U.S. ex rel. Stokes, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) 524, 612–13, 9 L.Ed. 1181 (1838); United States v. Smith, 27 F. Cas. 1192, 1230 (C.C.D.N.Y. 1806) (stating that the President does not have the dispensing power, in part, because only Congress has "dominion" over the laws—i.e., the legislative power); see also Del. Const. of 1776 Decl. of Rights, § 7; Md. Const. of 1776 Decl. of Rights, § VII; Mass. Const. of 1780 pt. 1, art. XX; N.H. Const. of 1784 pt. 1, art. XXIX; N.C. Const. of 1776 Decl. of Rights, § V; Va. Const. of 1776 Bill of Rights, § 7; Pa. Const. of 1790 art. IX, § 12; Vt. Const. of 1786 Decl. of Rights, § XVII. As such, the Executive does not possess this power. See Kendall, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) at 612–13 (stating that giving the President the dispensing power "would be clothing the President with a power entirely to control the legislation of congress, and paralyze the administration of justice" (emphasis added)); Smith, 27 F. 39 Second, the dispensing power conflicts with the Executive's duty to faithfully execute the laws. See U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. In vesting the executive power in the President,[39] the Constitution requires the President to channel that power to perform certain duties and prescribes how he or she is to carry out those duties.[40] See id. One of those duties, contained in the Take Care Clause, is that "he shall take Care[41] that the Laws be faithfully[42] executed[43] ...."[44] Id. (emphasis added) (footnotes added); see Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 689–90, 108 S.Ct. 2597, 2618, 101 L.Ed.2d 569 (1988) ("The analysis contained in our removal cases is designed ... to ensure that Congress does not interfere with the President's exercise of the 'executive power' and his constitutionally appointed duty to 'take care that the laws be faithfully executed' under Article II." " (emphasis added)); see also Seila L. LLC v. Consumer Fin. Prot. Bureau, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 140 S.Ct. 2183, 2228, 207 L.Ed.2d 494 (2020) (Kagan, J., concurring in part) ("To begin with, the provision—'he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed'—speaks of duty, not power." (emphasis added) (quoting U.S. Const. art. II, § 3)); Letter from George Washington to Alexander Hamilton[45] (Sept. 7, 1792) (on file with the National Archives) ("It is my duty to see the Laws executed: to permit them to be trampled upon with impunity would be repugnant to it; nor can the Government longer remain a passive spectator of the contempt with which they are treated." (emphasis added)); Letter from John Adams to Roger Sherman[46] (July 18, 1789) reprinted in 6 The Works of John Adams, Second President of The United States 427, 429–30 (Charles Francis Adams ed., 1851) (stating that it is the President's "duty to take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" (emphasis added)); Saikrishna B. Prakash, Faithless Execution, 133 Harv. L. Rev. Rev. 1907, 1911 (2014) ("To be sure, the President has the duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed." (emphasis added)).

40 Given this duty to take care that the laws are faithfully executed, the Constitution's system of separation-of-powers, and the treatment of the dispensing power in American history and tradition, the Court is hard pressed, at this early stage of the litigation, to see how the Government can suggest that the Constitution confers upon the Executive the "discretion" to ignore clear congressional commands contained in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). See Kendall, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) at 612–13 ("It was urged at the bar, that the postmaster general was alone subject to the direction and control of the President, with respect to the execution of the duty imposed upon him by this law, and this right of the President is claimed, as growing out of the obligation imposed upon him by the constitution, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. This is a doctrine that cannot receive the sanction of this court. It would be vesting in the President a dispensing power, which has no countenance for its support in any part of the constitution .... To contend that the obligation imposed on the President to see the laws faithfully executed, implies a power to forbid their execution, is a novel construction of the constitution, and entirely inadmissible." (emphasis added)); Little v. Barreme, 6 U.S. (2 Cranch) 170, 177–78 (1804) (stating that, because the President has the "high duty ... to 'take care that the laws be faithfully executed,' " he must enforce a law in accordance with congressional commands where Congress has "prescribed ... the manner in which [the] law shall be carried into execution"); Smith, 27 F. (emphases added)).

Instead, the Executive—and thus, the Attorney General or the Secretary of DHS—must exercise any discretion accorded to it by statute in the manner which Congress has prescribed. See Util. Air Regul. Grp., 573 U.S. at 327, 134 S.Ct. at 2446; Vigil, 508 U.S. at 193, 113 S.Ct. at 2032

("[A]n agency is not free simply to disregard statutory responsibilities: Congress may always circumscribe agency discretion to allocate resources by putting restrictions in the operative statutes."); Heckler, 470 U.S. at 832–34, 105 S.Ct. at 1656–57; see also Regents, ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1926 (Thomas, J., concurring in part) ("It is axiomatic that an administrative agency's power ... is limited to the authority granted by Congress." (alteration in original) (quoting Bowen v. Georgetown Univ. Hosp., 488 U.S. 204, 208, 109 S.Ct. 468, 471, 102 L.Ed.2d 493 (1988))). Accordingly, the Executive Branch, including its agencies, may not dispense with a clear congressional mandate under the guise of exercising "discretion."

d. The Memoranda are not Committed to Agency Discretion

In sum, the Court finds that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) impose mandatory detention at specific points in time for certain aliens. The Executive Branch may neither alter these statutory obligations through reprioritization nor dispense with them. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the detention of certain aliens subject to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) is not committed to agency discretion.

4. Zone of Interests

The States must next show that their injuries are within the "zones of interest" the two laws were intended to protect. Congress has placed limits on how the Executive may be sued for violating the law and who can do it. Congress, through the APA, has provided a cause of action for those seeking redress against the federal government for violating other federal laws. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 702, 706. But Congress has limited the availability of an APA cause of action to those who allege an injury that is "arguably" within the "zone of interests" to be protected or regulated by the relevant statutes. Collins v. Mnuchin, 938 F.3d 553, 573–74 (5th Cir. 2019), aff'd in part, vacated in part, rev'd in part sub nom. Collins v. Yellen, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 1761 (2021); see also Match-E-Be-Nash-She-Wish Band of Pottawatomi Indians v. Patchak, 567 U.S. 209, 224, 132 S.Ct. 2199, 2210, 183 L.Ed.2d 211 (2012) (hereinafter "Match-E") (quoting Ass'n of Data Processing Serv. Orgs., Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153, 90 S.Ct. 827, 830, 25 L.Ed.2d 184 (1970)).

41 The zone of interests test is not "especially demanding" in the APA context. Collins, 938 F.3d at 574 (quoting Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 130, 134 S.Ct. at 1389). Indeed, the Supreme Court has "conspicuously included the word 'arguably' in the test to indicate that the benefit of any doubt goes to the plaintiff." Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 130, 134 S.Ct. at 1389 (quoting Match-E, 567 U.S. at 225, 132 S.Ct. at 2210). The zone of interests test " 'forecloses suit only when a plaintiff's interests are so marginally related to or inconsistent with the purposes implicit in the statute that it cannot reasonably be assumed that' Congress authorized that plaintiff to sue." Collins, 938 F.3d at 574 (quoting Lexmark, 572 U.S. at 130, 134 S.Ct. at 1389).

Importantly, the relevant statute in whose zone of interests the plaintiff's injury must reside "is to be determined not by reference to the overall purpose of the Act in question," but rather, "by reference to the particular provision of law upon which the plaintiff relies." Bennett, 520 U.S. at 175–76, 117 S.Ct. at 1167. In other words, a court must review those "substantive provisions" of law that the plaintiff relies on for "the gravamen" of its complaint. Id.

In this case, the States essentially bring three APA claims asserting that the Government violated federal law: (1) the Memoranda are contrary to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) of the INA, (Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 94–107); (2) the policy set forth in the Memoranda is arbitrary and capricious, (id. at ¶¶ 108–17); and (3) the Government was required but failed to follow notice and comment procedures in issuing the Memoranda, (id. at ¶¶ 118–121).

As in Texas I, the Government solely—and narrowly—maintains that "the States do not come within the relevant zone-of-interests" because "no entity can enforce § 1231" because Subsection (h) bars any party from enforcing Section 1231 against the Government.[48] (Dkt. No. 42 at 35–36); see (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 30–32); Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *22–23. For their part, the States briefly address the Government's suppositions, arguing they "fit within the zone of interests both because [the Government is] wrong about Section 1231(h) and for the reasons this Court has already explained" in Texas I. (Dkt. No. 51 at 29) (citing Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *23–29). The Court agrees with the States.

For starters, the Government cannot refute the States' position that their injuries are within the zones of interests of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), particularly in light of this Court's discussions of Demore and Zadvydas concerning the development and purpose of Sections 1226 and 1231. See supra I.A, II.B.1 & II.B.3. This discussion makes clear that Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)—and indeed the INA itself, see Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 163 & n.80—were enacted to protect and benefit the states, the citizens of this country, and the legal immigrants of the United States. See supra I.A, II.B.1 & II.B.3. As such, the injuries the States suffer due to the Memoranda, see supra II.A.1–4, fall within the relevant statutes' zones of interests. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 163 (finding that Texas satisfies the zone-of-interest test as a result of the same injuries that give Texas Article III standing).

42 The Government, indeed, does not dispute that the States' injuries fall within Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2)'s zones of interests. Rather, the Government focuses its attention on Section 1231(h), in essence arguing that because Subsection (h) bars parties from enforcing Section 1231, any injury stemming from violations of the section does not fall within the statute's zone of interests. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 35–36). But, as explained earlier, Section 1231(h) does not bar the States' claims. See supra II.B.1; Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *29–30 & n.42. Thus, the Government's lone contention fails. The Court finds that the States' injuries fall within the zones of interest of Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2).

III. DISCUSSION OF PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

Having determined the Court has jurisdiction over the action and nothing precludes judicial review under the APA, the Court now turns to the merits of the States' Motion for Preliminary Injunction.

A. LEGAL STANDARD

"A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right." Benisek v. Lamone, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 138 S.Ct. 1942, 1943, 201 L.Ed.2d 398 (2018) (quotation omitted). Indeed, the decision to grant a preliminary injunction is "to be treated as the exception rather than the rule." Miss. Power & Light Co. v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 760 F.2d 618, 621 (5th Cir. 1985). Thus, "[i]n each case, courts must balance the competing claims of injury and must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief." Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, 129 S.Ct. 365, 376, 172 L.Ed.2d 249 (2008) (quotation omitted). And in determining whether injunctive relief is proper, "courts of equity should pay particular regard for the public consequences in employing the extraordinary remedy of injunction." Id.

A preliminary injunction "issue[s] only where (1) there is a substantial likelihood that the movant will prevail on the merits; (2) there is a substantial threat that irreparable harm will result if the injunction is not granted; (3) the threatened injury outweighs the threatened harm to the defendant; and (4) the granting of the preliminary injunction will not disserve the public interest." Clark v. Prichard, 812 F.2d 991, 993 (5th Cir. 1987). As such, "[t]he party seeking such relief must satisfy a cumulative burden of proving each of the four elements enumerated" in order for a preliminary injunction to be granted. Id.

Note, however, that "none of the four prerequisites has a fixed quantitative value." Texas v. Seatrain Int'l, S. A., 518 F.2d 175, 180 (5th Cir. 1975). "Rather, a sliding scale is utilized, which takes into account the intensity of each in a given calculus." Id. (citing Siff v. State Democratic Exec. Comm., 500 F.2d 1307 (5th Cir. 1974)). For instance, "a preliminary injunction does not follow as a matter of course from a plaintiff's showing" of the first element, "a likelihood of success on the merits." Benisek, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 1943–44 (emphasis added). Thus, federal courts must consider whether the movant has established the three other elements as well for a preliminary injunction to issue. Id. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 1944.

B. APPLICATION

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1. Substantial Likelihood of Success on the Merits

a. Counts I & II: Contrary to Law

As described above, the Court determined that "shall" in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) means "must." See supra II.B.3.a. This conclusion means that the Attorney General must detain certain aliens subject to those sections. The Court also found that both statutes mandate detention of certain aliens at specific points in time: for Section 1226(c), the Attorney General is required to detain certain aliens "when the alien is released from custody," while for Section 1231(a)(2), the Attorney General is obligated to detain certain aliens "during the removal period." The policy contained in the Memoranda effectively dispenses with these mandates by conferring discretion to the Government to independently decide who will be detained and when—if ever—detention of those individuals might occur. This guidance therefore is wholly contrary to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Thus, the States have demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success on Counts I & II.

b. Count III: Arbitrary and Capricious

43 The States argue that the Government's Memoranda establishing new guidelines and priorities for the detention of certain aliens are arbitrary and capricious because they "failed to consider important aspects of a problem." (Dkt. No. 18 at 28). Specifically, the States allege that the Memoranda: (1) "failed to consider the risks of recidivism among criminal aliens who are not detained;" (2) "ignore the effects non-detention will have on future removal efforts," especially on the costs that delays in deportation often produce and the rate of abscondment of released aliens; (3) "do not discuss the costs that [the new guidance] will impose on [the] States;" (4) "did not consider more limited policies that would have retained congressionally mandated detention of criminal aliens and those with final orders of removal;" and (5) "do[ ] not explain Defendants' choice[ ]"of prioritizing the detention of aliens who have aggravated felonies over others who have committed drug offenses and crimes of moral turpitude or those with final orders of removal. (Id. at 27–29). The Government disagrees with the States' contentions. Countering the States point-by-point, the Government argues that it "considered the relevant factors and reached a reasonable decision." (Dkt. No. 42 at 42–47). Reviewing these assertions, the Court finds the States have demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success in establishing that the policy set forth in the Memoranda is arbitrary and capricious as alleged in Count III.

The APA prohibits agency actions that are "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A). With that in mind, federal administrative agencies are required to engage in "reasoned decisionmaking." Allentown Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. NLRB, 522 U.S. 359, 374, 118 S.Ct. 818, 826, 139 L.Ed.2d 797 (1998) (internal quotation omitted). This necessarily means that "[n]ot only must an agency's decreed result be within the scope of its lawful authority, but the process by which it reaches that result must be logical and rational." Id. (emphasis added). More specifically, "the agency must examine the relevant data and articulate a satisfactory explanation for its action including a 'rational connection between the facts found and the choice made.' " Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass'n of U.S., Inc. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 463 U.S. 29, 43, 103 S.Ct. 2856, 2866, 77 L.Ed.2d 443 (1983) (quoting Burlington Truck Lines v. United States, 371 U.S. 156, 168, 83 S.Ct. 239, 245–46, 9 L.Ed.2d 207 (1962)) (emphasis added).

When final agency action is challenged as arbitrary and capricious, "[t]he reviewing court must consider whether the decision was based on a consideration of the relevant factors and whether there has been a clear error of judgment." Marsh v. Or. Nat. Res. Council, 490 U.S. 360, 378, 109 S.Ct. 1851, 1861, 104 L.Ed.2d 377 (1989) (internal quotations omitted). "Normally, an agency rule would be arbitrary and capricious if the agency has relied on factors which Congress has not intended it to consider, entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem, offered an explanation for its decision that runs counter to the evidence before the agency, or is so implausible that it could not be ascribed to a difference in view or the product of agency expertise." State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867. If a court finds that an administrative agency failed to engage in reasoned decision-making, the reviewing court "shall hold unlawful and set aside" such "agency action, findings, and conclusions" as arbitrary and capricious. 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

"Because the central focus of the arbitrary and capricious standard is on the rationality of the agency's 'decisionmaking,' rather than its actual decision, '[i]t is well-established that an agency's action must be upheld, if at all, on the basis articulated by the agency itself.' " United States v. Garner, 767 F.2d 104, 116–17 (5th Cir. 1985) (quoting State Farm, 463 U.S. at 50, 103 S.Ct. at 2870). As such, "the grounds upon which an administrative order must be judged are those upon which the record discloses that its action was based."[49] SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 87, 63 S.Ct. 454, 459, 87 L.Ed. 626 (1943). The administrative record need only "indicate[ ] the determinative reason for the final action taken," Camp v. Pitts, 411 U.S. 138, 143, 93 S.Ct. 1241, 1244, 36 L.Ed.2d 106 (1973), and courts may "uphold a decision of less than ideal clarity if the agency's path may reasonably be discerned." Bowman Transp., Inc. v. Arkansas–Best Freight Sys., Inc., 419 U.S. 281, 286, 95 S.Ct. 438, 442, 42 L.Ed.2d 447 (1974).

44 Finally, the Court is mindful that the arbitrary and capricious standard is "highly deferential." Garner, 767 F.2d at 116. Courts must "accord the agency's decision a presumption of regularity" and "are prohibited from substituting [the courts'] judgment for that of the agency." Id. (citation omitted). But "while the arbitrary and capricious standard of review is highly deferential, it is by no means a rubber stamp." Id. Based on the following, the Memoranda fail to indicate that the Government engaged in reasoned decision-making, thereby rendering them arbitrary and capricious.

At their core, the Memoranda reprioritize certain classes of aliens for immigration enforcement action. In the February 18 Memorandum specifically, the Government states that it is establishing enforcement and removal guidelines with respect to immigration enforcement and removal priorities pursuant to the January 20 Memorandum.[50] See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 5). As discussed above, if a criminal illegal alien falls under a category deemed to be a priority, no preapproval is required for an enforcement or removal action. On the other hand, if the criminal illegal alien does not fall under any of the categories, an enforcement or removal action "will require preapproval." (Id. at 7). The Memorandum states that "ICE operates in an environment of limited resources," and thus, "ICE has always prioritized, and necessarily must prioritize, certain enforcement and removal actions over others." (Id. at 3). In addition to "resource constraints," "several other factors," according to the Memorandum, "render ICE's mission particularly complex." These factors include "ongoing litigation in various fora; the health and safety of the ICE workforce and those in its custody, particularly during the current COVID-19 pandemic; the responsibility to ensure that eligible noncitizens are able to pursue relief from removal under the immigration laws; and the requirements of, and relationships with, sovereign nations, whose laws and expectations can place additional constraints on ICE's ability to execute final orders of removal." (Id.). Given these considerations, the Memorandum states that the Government "must exercise its well-established prosecutorial discretion and prioritize its limited resources to most effectively achieve that mission." (Id. at 4).

As described here, the February 18 Memorandum indeed enumerates quite a few factors that make the Government's "mission particularly complex" in this field. But the Memorandum itself does not directly state whether these factors were considered while the Government was actually formulating the guidance in question. Assuming they were considered and were the bases for the new guidance, see Pitts, 411 U.S. at 143, 93 S.Ct. at 1244, the February 18 Memorandum (along with its predecessor, the January 20 Memorandum) still does not demonstrate reasoned decision-making. The February 18 Memorandum does not disclose how or why any of these enumerated factual considerations are connected to the policies the Government ultimately pursued. In short, both Memoranda fail to establish any rational connection or logical link between any of these factors and the new guidance. See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2866.

45 First, the February 18 Memorandum does not offer even a brief explanation of how "ongoing litigation in various fora" affected the Government's decision-making in promulgating the new guidance. It is simply a vague and conclusory statement. Did the Government mean to say that Texas I or other pending cases were considered when crafting the new guidance? If so, how did the disposition of Texas I or other cases affect the reprioritization? Those questions have yet to be answered.

Second, the Government's stated responsibility and desire to ensure that eligible aliens may be afforded relief from removal is commendable but likewise lacks any rational connection with the new guidance. The new guidance reprioritizes the detention and deportation of criminal illegal aliens. But the February 18 Memorandum does not explain how or why prioritizing, for instance, the detention or deportation of "border security risks" (aliens who entered the country on or after November 1, 2020) over aliens who have drug offenses or crimes of moral turpitude would ensure that eligible noncitizens will obtain relief in their own removal proceedings. There does not seem to be any connection between reprioritizing the detention and removal of certain aliens to whether other aliens may be afforded legally authorized relief from deportation. The February 18 Memorandum does not shed light on this disconnect.

Third, although the Court acknowledges as a general matter that interactions and relationships with other sovereign nations "may place constraints" on the Government's ability to "execute final orders of removal," see (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4), there is no rational link between any of these factual constraints to the reprioritization scheme the Government has chosen to pursue. For example, do these international relationships make it more inefficient to deport aliens with drug offenses over so-called "national security risks" or "border security risks"? If so, what are the facts that justify such conclusions? Those questions are also unanswered. Like the considerations described above, the Memorandum does not state any facts or findings with respect to why international relations apparently factored in the Government's decision-making.

Lastly, the Government's written concern for the health and safety of ICE workers in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic is not rationally relevant to the new guidance. Will COVID-19 infections among the ICE workforce be substantially reduced if the Government prioritizes the deportation of one category of criminal illegal aliens over another? How does reprioritization alleviate those health concerns, if any? On these points the February 18 Memorandum is, unfortunately, silent.

The Court further notes that, out of all these considerations, the cursory use of the COVID-19 pandemic to justify the new guidance comes across as implausible. Throughout the last year, institutions, including federal and state governments, have used the pandemic to rationalize policies found to be unlawful or unconstitutional. See, e.g., Chrysafis v. Marks, ____ U.S. ____, 2021 WL 3560766 (U.S. Aug. 12, 2021) (enjoining the part of New York's COVID Emergency Eviction and Foreclosure Prevention Act that precluded landlords from contesting a tenant's self-certification of financial hardship on the grounds that "no man can be a judge in his own case" (quoting In re Murchison, 349 U.S. 133, 136, 75 S.Ct. 623, 99 L.Ed. 942 (1955))); Tandon v. Newsom, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 1294, 209 L.Ed.2d 355 (2021) (per curiam) (enjoining California officials from enforcing occupancy limits on at-home religious exercise in response to COVID-19 when other policies treated comparable secular activities that did not pose a lesser risk of transmission more favorably); Roman Cath. Diocese v. Cuomo, ____ U.S. ____, 141 S.Ct. 63, 208 L.Ed.2d 206 (2020) (per curiam) (enjoining the Governor of New York from enforcing occupancy limits on religious services in response to COVID-19 that would have violated the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment); Capitol Hill Baptist Church v. Bowser, 496 F. Supp. 3d 284, 289 (D.D.C. 2020) (finding that the District's COVID-19-related prohibition of religious gatherings of more than 100 people, even those with appropriate precautions, substantially burdens the plaintiff's exercise of religion in violation of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act). And now the Government has added immigration to the mix.

46 The Government used the pandemic to reason that the January 20 Memorandum's 100-day pause on removals—the precursor to the February 18 Memorandum—was borne out of reasoned decision-making. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *40. But, as the Court noted in Texas I, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Centers for Disease Control and Prevention ("CDC"), on October 13, 2020, authorized the CDC Director "to suspend the right to introduce persons into the United States" because of the COVID-19 pandemic. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *40 & n.46 (citing CDC, Order Suspending Introduction of Certain Persons Where a Communicable Disease Exists, (Mar. 20, 2020), available at https://bit.ly/3736Lue (updated Oct. 2020)). The relevant CDC Order "applies to persons traveling from Canada or Mexico (regardless of their country of origin) who would otherwise be introduced into a congregate setting in a land or coastal Port of Entry (POE) or Border Patrol station at or near the United States borders with Canada or Mexico, subject to [certain] exceptions." Id. Considering the CDC Order, the Government's new guidance is puzzling. The new guidance effectively introduces and keeps more people—specifically, criminal illegal aliens—in the Nation's communities. But, per the CDC Order, the COVID-19 pandemic would likely justify a different course of action. Throughout this time, the Government has not introduced any further papers or discussed anything in the February 18 Memorandum that show it is following different health guidelines related to COVID-19 that speak to the safety of introducing aliens into the country and its communities. The February 18 Memorandum likewise does not grapple with or otherwise explain how the new guidelines are consistent with these CDC policies. Thus, like in Texas I, the Government's consideration of the COVID-19 pandemic not only is implausibly connected to the new guidance, it also "runs counter to the evidence before the agency." See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867. In other words, the Government cannot use the pandemic as a blanket reason—devoid of explanation—to justify its choices, especially when these choices run afoul of another agency's published health directives. [51]

"[A]gency action must be based on non-arbitrary, relevant factors." Judulang v. Holder, 565 U.S. 42, 55, 132 S.Ct. 476, 485, 181 L.Ed.2d 449 (2011) (internal quotation omitted) (emphasis added). In this case, the factors apparently considered in the February 18 Memorandum and its predecessor, the January 20 Memorandum, are, after a thorough review, arbitrary and irrelevant to the new guidance. The link between the new guidance and the factors enumerated are so contradictory to the evidence and "implausible" that the States' challenge cannot be said to be differing policy preferences or views. See FCC v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., 556 U.S. 502, 515–16, 129 S.Ct. 1800, 1811, 173 L.Ed.2d 738 (2009) (explaining that when an agency's "new policy rests upon factual findings that contradict those which underlay its prior policy[,] or when its prior policy has engendered serious reliance interests that must be taken into account, [i]t would be arbitrary or capricious to ignore such matters," and "[i]n such cases it is not that further justification is demanded by the mere fact of policy change; but that a reasoned explanation is needed for disregarding facts and circumstances that underlay or were engendered by the prior policy" (internal citation omitted)); State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867 ("Normally, an agency rule would be arbitrary and capricious if the agency has relied on factors which Congress has not intended it to consider, entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem, offered an explanation for its decision that runs counter to the evidence before the agency, or is so implausible that it could not be ascribed to a difference in view or the product of agency expertise. The reviewing court should not attempt itself to make up for such deficiencies: 'We may not supply a reasoned basis for the agency's action that the agency itself has not given.' " (quoting Chenery, 332 U.S. at 196, 67 S.Ct. at 1577)); Huawei Techs. USA, Inc. v. Fed. Commc'ns Comm'n, 2 F.4th 421, 452 (5th Cir. 2021) (explaining that, when considering an agency's cost-benefit analysis in the scope of the arbitrary and capricious standard, the Court's "job 'is not to undertake [its] own economic study, but to determine whether the [agency] 'has established in the record a reasonable basis for its decision' " (quoting Chem. Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA, 870 F.2d 177, 251 (5th Cir. 1989))); Sierra Club v. EPA, 939 F.3d 649, 664 (5th Cir. 2019) ("The agency must 'articulate a satisfactory explanation for its action including a rational connection between the facts found and the choice made.' " (quoting State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2866)); Sw. Elec. Power Co. v. EPA, 920 F.3d 999, 1013 (5th Cir. 2019) (noting the Court must "ensure that the agency examined the relevant data and articulated a satisfactory explanation for its action, and assess whether the agency's decision was based on a consideration of the relevant factors" (quoting 10 Ring Precision, Inc. v. Jones, 722 F.3d 711, 723 (5th Cir. 2013) (cleaned up)). Thus, the Court finds that the Government failed to engage in the reasoned decision-making required by law.

47 What's more, while the Government argues it actually did consider certain relevant factors in crafting the new guidelines (thus engaging in reasoned decision-making), the Court finds that the Government's briefs actually establish that it did not consider those factors. To begin with, "[p]ost hoc rationalizations offered by the Government's counsel are irrelevant." Univ. of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Ctr. v. Dep't of Health & Hum. Servs., 985 F.3d 472, 475 (5th Cir. 2021) (citing State Farm, 463 U.S. at 50, 103 S.Ct. [at 2870]). Therefore, this Court finds it inappropriate to consider each of the Government's arguments in their briefing that were not included in the Memoranda. Even assuming they were relevant, however, the Government's in-brief explanations are meritless.

First, the Government states that it considered the prospect of recidivism when crafting the new guidance found in the February 18 Memorandum. (Dkt. No. 42 at 44). Specifically, the Government alleges that "DHS weighed the threat to public safety from criminal noncitizens reoffending in prioritizing certain noncitizens for removal." (Id.). In support, the Government cites to passages from the February 18 Memorandum that, according to the Government, (a) "focused on the degree of threat to public safety" the "different criminal noncitizens presented," which, apparently, is akin to considering the risk of recidivism; and (b) allowed immigration officers, in making "individualized determinations" for enforcement and removal, to "consider public interest factors, which include the risk of recidivism." See (Id. at 44). These points miss the mark entirely.

With respect to the first, the Government's decision to "focus[ ] on the degree of threat to public safety" establishes that the Government either did not consider the risk of recidivism or created a policy contrary to the evidence before it. In their claim, the States argue that, in choosing which policy to pursue, the Government did not consider the risks of recidivism of all criminal aliens. See (Dkt. No. 18 at 44). Indeed, the Supreme Court has stated that "deportable criminal aliens who remained in the United States"—notably not a certain subset or category of such aliens—"often committed more crimes before being removed." Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1715 (emphasis added); see also Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 713–714, 121 S.Ct. at 2511 (Kennedy, J., dissenting) (discussing rates of recidivism for released criminal aliens and their threat to public safety, noting the "high recidivism rates for released aliens"). Despite the Supreme Court's recognition of the risks deportable criminal aliens pose, the February 18 Memorandum requires prioritization of criminal aliens who both pose a threat to public safety and have had a prior aggravated felony conviction or criminal gang affiliation. See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 5–6). The States correctly point out that by prioritizing certain aliens, the Memorandum "omit[s] aliens" who are solely "threats to public safety," in other words, potential recidivists. (Dkt. No. 51 at 14). Nothing in the February 18 Memorandum explains that criminal illegal aliens who are only "threats to public safety" are at a much lower risk of recidivism compared to criminal aliens who have had prior felonies or criminal gang convictions. Put differently, the new guidelines do not establish that the Government considered recidivism since the reprioritization leaves so many other "deprioritized" criminal illegal aliens free to recidivate—to harm the public. And crucially, the Government has not rebutted or clarified the well-established concept that all criminal illegal aliens or "deportable aliens pose high risks of recidivism." See Demore, 538 U.S. at 518, 123 S.Ct. at 1715. Instead, the February 18 Memorandum, without any support or evidence, implements new guidelines stemming from an idea that it is merely some criminal illegal aliens—those with aggravated felonies and criminal gang affiliations—who have a much higher risk of recidivism. Such a conclusion is without any foundation in the record and shows that the Government either failed to consider recidivism as a factor in its decision-making or it explained its decision in a manner which contradicts the evidence before it. See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867.

48 Moreover, it is irrelevant whether immigration officers have the capability, pursuant to the February 18 Memorandum, to "consider public interest factors" that "could" include the risk of recidivism. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 44). Arbitrary and capricious review calls for the Court to examine the rationality of agency decision-making and not the actual decision. Garner, 767 F.2d 104 at 116. Even if the new guidelines give some leeway to immigration officers to consider "public interest factors," this does not establish that the Government considered the risk of recidivism when crafting the new guidelines. As the Government frankly admits, the Memoranda "do not use the term 'recidivism' " anywhere. (Dkt. No. 42 at 44). The February 18 Memorandum is, thus, devoid of any references to recidivism or other statements tending to show that the risk of recidivism that criminal illegal aliens pose was considered when drafting the new policy.

Second, the Government asserts that it has limited resources and must prioritize certain enforcement and removal actions under Section 1226(c). (Id. at 45). But, as the States point out, this contention "dodges the key issue" of whether the Government actually considered the effects of the new guidelines to costs of delaying deportations and the overall rate of abscondment of criminal illegal aliens. (Dkt. No. 51 at 15); (Dkt. No. 18 at 27–28). The costs of the non-detainment of criminal aliens are substantial. For instance, in the past, "when the vast majority of deportable criminal aliens were not detained during their deportation proceedings, many filed frivolous appeals in order to delay their deportation." Demore, 538 U.S. at 530 n.14, 123 S.Ct. at 1721 n.14. Even "[c]ourt ordered release" itself "cannot help but encourage dilatory and obstructive tactics by aliens." Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 713, 121 S.Ct. 2491 (Kennedy, J., dissenting). "An alien ordered deported also has less incentive to cooperate or to facilitate expeditious removal when he has been released, even on a supervised basis, than does an alien held at an [ICE] detention facility." Id. And following this line, a Senate Report from 1995 noted that "[d]elays" in deportation "can earn criminal aliens more than work permits and wages—if they delay long enough they may even obtain U.S. citizenship." S. Rep. No. 104–48, at 2 (1995). The costs from non-detainment rival the costs of abscondment. The same Senate Report found that "[o]ver

20 percent of nondetained criminal aliens fail to appear for deportation proceedings." Id. This Court, as well, found the rate of abscondment to be substantial even for aliens who have been "thoroughly vetted" in order for them to be placed in an "alternative to detention program." Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *19. Even in light of these effects and costs, the February 18 Memorandum is silent on whether these were considered while crafting the new guidelines. The Court, therefore, finds that the Government failed to consider this relevant factor.

Third, the Government argues that, with regard to the additional costs the States will incur, "the States are wrong to argue that DHS was required to expressly evaluate the costs to each State," and, regardless, the Government "did consider how the Priority Framework would impact public safety ... which should reduce the costs from crime to the States." (Dkt. No. 42 at 45–46). Rephrased, the Government argues that state costs and expenses are not relevant factors, but, nevertheless, the February 18 Memorandum indirectly considered them since it factored in the new guidelines' impact to public safety. The Government is incorrect on both issues.

State costs and expenses are, indeed, relevant factors. That was the case in Texas I, see ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *41, and the Government takes issue with the Court's prior holding, see (Dkt. No. 42 at 46 & n.16). Thus, to be clear, a more descriptive analysis of the caselaw is in order.

49 As stated earlier, an "agency rule would be arbitrary and capricious" if the relevant agency "entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem." State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2867. The Supreme Court has noted that immigration "ha[s] a discernable impact on traditional state concerns," owing to the fact that "unchecked unlawful migration might impair the State's economy generally, or the State's ability to provide some important service." Plyler, 457 U.S. at 228, n.23, 102 S.Ct. at 2400, n.23 (citing DeCanas v. Bica, 424 U.S. 351, 354–56, 96 S.Ct. 933, 935–36, 47 L.Ed.2d 43 (1976)). Indeed, immigration policy is important to the states since they "bear[ ] many of the consequences of unlawful immigration." Arizona, 567 U.S. at 397, 132 S.Ct. at 2500. Obviously, as Plyler noted, some of those problematic consequences stem from a newly promulgated immigration policy's effect on the state's economy and its services; in other words, state costs and expenses. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 153 (holding that Texas had standing to challenge the federal government's DAPA policy in part because the policy "would have a major effect on the states' fiscs, causing millions of dollars of losses in Texas alone" and "would enable beneficiaries to apply for driver's licenses, and many would do so, resulting in Texas's injury"). In Regents, for instance, the Supreme Court held that the federal government's recission of its DACA policy was arbitrary and capricious in part because the government failed to consider the loss of state and local tax revenue stemming from the policy's rescission. ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1914. Along with a few other concerns, the Supreme Court characterized the loss of local and state tax revenue as "noteworthy," but "not necessarily dispositive." Id. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court found that the federal government needed to consider that factor—along with many others—and weigh them all together to ultimately decide whether to retain DACA or not. Id. As in this case, "[m]aking that difficult decision was the agency's job, but the agency failed to do it." Id.

Further, the Supreme Court has indicated that, in the context of immigration policy, an agency's approach to decision-making "must be tied, even if loosely, to the purposes of the immigration laws or the appropriate operation of the immigration system." Judulang, 565 U.S. at 55, 132 S.Ct. at 485. One broad purpose of immigration law and policy is to minimize the costs and expenses related to the presence of illegal aliens in the country. See Demore, 538 U.S. at 530 n.14, 123 S.Ct. at 1721 n.14 (noting that "prior to the enactment of 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)," a vast majority of deportable criminal aliens were free during their deportation proceedings and many filed frivolous appeals to delay deportation); Hernandez-Avalos v. INS, 50 F.3d 842, 847 (10th Cir. 1995) (noting 8 U.S.C. § 1252(i) (1986) was enacted "to ease financial burdens on federal, state and local prisons resulting from lengthy detention of aliens awaiting deportation"); Giddings v. Chandler, 979 F.2d 1104, 1109 (5th Cir. 1992) (noting that the main purpose of Section 1252(i) was to "reduc[e] prison overcrowding and cost to the government"); Prieto v. Gluch, 913 F.2d 1159, 1165 (6th Cir. 1990) (explaining that Section 1252(i) was enacted because there was a concern in Congress with prison overcrowding in "local and State jails"). While the Government is correct that immigration policy "affect[s] trade, investment, tourism, and diplomatic relations," among other things, see (Dkt. No. 42 at 46, n.16) and Arizona, 567 U.S. 387 at 395, 132 S.Ct. at 2498, that list of considerations is not exhaustive. Therefore, the Court finds the Government's argument that it need not consider the States' costs and expenses stemming from the new guidelines to be without merit.

Likewise, the Court finds that the Memoranda did not consider the States' costs and expenses even though, according to the Government, DHS considered the new guidelines' impact to public safety. In fact, the Memoranda did not consider or failed to substantially consider the new guidelines' effects on public safety. Indeed, both Memoranda are devoid of explanation as to how or why prioritizing the detention or deportation of some criminal illegal aliens, while effectively delaying the detention or deportation of and releasing so many other criminal illegal aliens, positively impact public safety. Moreover, the Memoranda provide no indication that any relevant data or facts were considered in ultimately concluding that the public will be safer by releasing more criminal illegal aliens into communities from detention while fewer are detained or deported. See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 43, 103 S.Ct. at 2866 (explaining that an agency "must examine the relevant data" in order to explain its policy choices).

50 Additionally, even if the Government did consider public safety, the Memoranda—and the February 18 Memorandum most crucially—do not state or explain how that consideration connects with concerns regarding state costs and expenses. The Government in its brief argues that, by focusing its "limited resources" on enforcement actions against "the most significant threats to public safety," the Memoranda "should reduce the costs from crime to the States." (Dkt. No. 42 at 46). Leaving aside that the new guidelines practically provide for the non-detention of many criminal illegal aliens who are not within the ambit of any of the prioritized categories, the Government's assertion still fails. "[T]he grounds upon which an administrative order must be judged are those upon which the record discloses that its action was based." Chenery, 318 U.S. at 87, 63 S.Ct. at 459. And the Memoranda bear no thought or indication as to whether the new prioritization scheme minimizes and limits state costs due to crime.

Next, the Government argues that, contrary to the States' allegations, DHS "need not 'consider all policy alternatives in reaching [its] decision.' " (Dkt. No. 42 at 46) (citing State Farm, 463 U.S. at 51, 103 S.Ct. at 2870). Instead, the Government states that "it need only 'consider the alternative[s] that are within the ambit of the existing [policy].' " (Id.) (quoting Regents, ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1913). In this case, per the Government, "the States fail to identify a single policy alternative" that would be "within the ambit of existing policy," or would otherwise be "obvious," "significant and viable." (Id.) (citing Nat'l Shooting Sports Found., Inc. v. Jones, 716 F.3d 200, 215 (D.C. Cir. 2013)). The Court disagrees with the Government's contentions.

The States do propose that, instead of the prioritization scheme found in the February 18 Memorandum, the Government should have considered policies "that would have retained congressionally mandated detention of criminal aliens and aliens with final orders of removal." (Dkt. No. 18 at 28). The foregoing is simply asking that the Government follow the law.[52] Of course, such policies are "within the ambit of existing policy." After all, the February 18 Memorandum states that its reprioritization scheme "covers enforcement actions, custody decisions, the execution of final orders of removal, financial expenditures, and strategic planning," (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2), and congressional statutes mandating the detention of aliens go to the explicit focus of the Memorandum. See State Farm, 463 U.S. at 51, 103 S.Ct. at 2871. But despite all this, the February 18 Memorandum never considered the limited policies the States proposed. It failed to discuss how a policy enabling the Government to detain all criminal illegal aliens subject to congressional mandates compares with the opted-for guidelines. It did not even state whether the new guidelines even considered any other policy. In short, the Government did not grapple with or provide any alternatives when it was required to do so. See Regents, ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1913 ("State Farm teaches that when an agency rescinds a prior policy its reasoned analysis must consider the 'alternative[s]' that are 'within the ambit of the existing [policy].' " (citing State Farm, 463 U.S. at 51, 103 S.Ct. 2856) (emphasis added)). "That omission alone" makes the new guidelines arbitrary and capricious. Regents, ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 1913.

51 Lastly, the States argue that the February 18 Memorandum failed to rationally explain why criminal illegal aliens who have committed aggravated felonies or who are affiliated with criminal gangs are prioritized over other criminal illegal aliens and aliens with final orders of removal. (Dkt. No. 18 at 29). The Government responds that the Memorandum "provides a clear, rational justification for prioritizing" such aliens. (Dkt. No. 42 at 43–44). As the Government writes, "the former category presumptively presents a more significant threat to public safety." (Id.). In mandating the detention of criminal aliens convicted of serious drug offenses, crimes of moral turpitude, and some other specified offenses, see 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c), as well as aliens with final orders of removal during the removal period, see 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2), Congress did not differentiate among certain "types" or "categories" of deportable and detainable persons. These laws plainly mandate the detention of all the deportable criminal aliens subject to the relevant statutes. The new guidelines directly go against these congressional mandates, opting instead to prioritize certain criminal illegal aliens' detention and deportation over others because of an assertion that such aliens "presumptively present[ ] a more significant threat to public safety" than "one million noncitizens with final orders of removal," (Dkt. No. 42 at 44), and—necessarily—other criminal aliens with convictions for drug offenses or crimes of moral turpitude. But the February 18 Memorandum does not ground this otherwise unsupported assertion. It does not even explain or state how it considered, compared, and ultimately concluded that criminal illegal aliens of a certain category must be prioritized over others. Despite Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), nowhere in the February 18 Memorandum do the new guidelines even contemplate the prioritization of these "other" criminal illegal aliens. As the States correctly surmise, "[t]he very reason the February 18 Memorandum provides for prioritizing aggravated felonies also supports prioritizing drug offenses, crimes of moral turpitude, and final orders of removal." (Dkt. No. 18 at 29). Without more explanation grounded on relevant data and facts, it is unknown why the priorities were implemented in that way. The new guidance, therefore, indeed appears to be the product of arbitrary and capricious decision-making.

In sum, the Government's failure to rationally explain and connect the basis for the new guidance, along with the Government's failure to consider certain relevant factors and alternative policies, establish that there is a substantial likelihood that the reprioritization is an arbitrary and capricious policy. As the above discussion shows, the Government certainly did not engage in reasoned decision-making as required by the APA. The Court therefore finds that the States have established a substantial likelihood of success on this claim.

c. Count IV: Notice and Comment Rulemaking

The States' next claim is similar to one Texas raised in Texas I. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *42–47. In Texas I, this Court enjoined Section C of the January 20 Memorandum, in part, because Section C did not undergo notice and comment as required by the APA. See id. In this case, the States ask this Court to enjoin Section B of the January 20 Memorandum and the February 18 Memorandum for the same reason. The States argue that "[t]he January 20 and February 18 Memoranda are subject to notice and comment rulemaking because they are substantive or legislative rules." (Dkt. No. 18 at 30). The Government disagrees, raising nearly identical arguments to those it raised in Texas I. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 47). Namely, the Government contends that the Memoranda are exempt from the APA's notice and comment requirement as "general statement[s] of policy" or, alternatively, as "procedural rules." (Id.). For the following reasons, the Court disagrees with the Government's characterizations of the Memoranda and finds that the States have a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of their procedural APA claim.

Rulemaking under 5 U.S.C. § 553

As in Texas I, no Party disputes that the Memoranda are rules of some kind and, therefore, that the rulemaking provisions of the APA apply.[53] See (Dkt. No. 18); (Dkt. No. 42); see also ___ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *42. Nor does any Party contend that the Memoranda underwent any notice and comment. (Id.). The question, then, is whether the Memoranda are the type of rules that should have undergone notice and comment but did not.

The Court begins with an overview of the APA's notice and comment requirement and the exceptions thereto. The APA requires rules to undergo notice and comment unless they are exempt. See 5 U.S.C. § 553.[54] Section 553 sets forth two such categories of exemptions to the notice and comment requirement, one of which is relevant to this case. Id. § 553(b). That category exempts "interpretative rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization, procedure, or practice" from notice and comment. Id. § 553(b)(A) (emphases added). Thus, if an agency proposes a rule that is either a general statement of policy or a procedural rule, the agency is not required to conduct notice and comment on the proposed rule. See id.

52 The Fifth Circuit has made clear that exemptions to the notice and comment requirement "must be narrowly construed." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171. A narrow reading of the exemptions safeguards the vital interests notice and comment is intended to protect. See Dep't of Lab. v. Kast Metals Corp., 744 F.2d 1145, 1153 n.17 (5th Cir. 1984) ("Section 553 was enacted to give the public an opportunity to participate in the rule-making process. It also enables the agency promulgating the rule to educate itself before establishing rules and procedures which have a substantial impact on those who are regulated." (quotations omitted)). Indeed, notice and comment ensures that those affected by a proposed rule have a voice in the rule-making process and assist the agency in crafting rules that better account for the costs and benefits of agency action. See id. at 1153. But see id. ("Inevitably, in determining whether the APA requires notice and comment rulemaking, the interests of agency efficiency and public input are in tension.").

In harmony with the Fifth Circuit's warning to narrowly construe exemptions to APA's procedural strictures, the Supreme Court has recognized that states like Louisiana and Texas offer important perspectives on illegal immigration issues. See Arizona, 567 U.S. at 397, 132 S.Ct. at 2500 ("The pervasiveness of federal regulation does not diminish the importance of immigration policy to the States."); see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 163. States can assist an agency in crafting rules addressing important immigration issues. Mindful of the importance of notice and comment in this context, the Court now considers whether the reprioritization scheme contained within the Memoranda is exempt from the notice and comment requirement as either a general statement of policy or as a procedural rule.

General Statement of Policy

The Court first considers whether the Memoranda are general statements of policy. If so, notice and comment is not required. Prof'ls & Patients for Customized Care v. Shalala, 56 F.3d 592, 595 (5th Cir. 1995); see also 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(A). "In analyzing whether an agency pronouncement is a statement of policy or a substantive rule, the starting point is the agency's characterization of the rule." Shalala, at 596. As in Texas I, the Court would likely be convinced that the Memoranda are general statements of policy if it could rely on the Government's characterization of the Memoranda alone. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *43. Both the Government in its brief and the Memoranda themselves declare that the Memoranda are mere statements of policy. (Dkt. No. 42 at 47–49); (Dkt. No. 19-1); (Dkt. No. 19-2). Indeed, the January 20 Memorandum explicitly declares that it "should be considered Department-wide guidance[.]" (Dkt. No. 19-1 at 2) (emphasis added). The January 20 Memorandum also states that the "guidelines and priorities" contained therein "are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party[.]" (Id. at 5).

The February 18 Memorandum contains similar language. It begins by declaring that it "establishes interim guidance[.]" (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2) (emphasis added). The February 18 Memorandum goes on to say that "[t]hese guidelines and priorities are not intended to, do not, and may not be relied upon to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party in any administrative, civil, or criminal matter." (Id. at 8).

But an agency's characterization of its rule is just that—its own characterization. Indeed, "[a]gencies have never been able to avoid notice and comment simply by mislabeling their substantive pronouncements. On the contrary, courts have long looked to the contents of the agency's action, not the agency's self-serving label, when deciding whether statutory notice-and-comment demands apply." Azar v. Allina Health Servs., ____ U.S. ____, ____, 139 S.Ct. 1804, 1812, 204 L.Ed.2d 139 (2019) (emphasis in original). The Fifth Circuit, too, cautions courts to be "mindful but suspicious of the agency's own characterization." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171 (quotation omitted). The Fifth Circuit therefore demands more of a district court than simply taking an agency at its word when determining whether the challenged rule is a general statement of policy or a substantive rule requiring notice and comment. See Shalala, 56 F.3d at 596 ("The label that the particular agency puts upon its given exercise of administrative power is not, for [this court's] purposes, conclusive; rather, it is what the agency does in fact.").

53 Specifically, the Fifth Circuit instructs district courts to also "evaluate two criteria to distinguish policy statements from substantive rules: whether the rule (1) impose[s] any rights and obligations and (2) genuinely leaves the agency and its decision-makers free to exercise discretion." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171 (quotation omitted).[55] The Fifth Circuit has acknowledged that "[t]here is some overlap in the analysis of those prongs because if a statement denies the decisionmaker discretion in the area of its coverage ... then the statement is binding and creates rights or obligations." Id. (cleaned up). Moreover, these "criteria" are merely intended to guide a court in "fathom[ing] the interpretative/legislative distinction." Cmty. Nutrition Inst. v. Young, 818 F.2d 943, 946 (D.C. Cir. 1987). In other words, "[t]hese factors are not treated like different elements of a cause of action, both of which must be proved; but instead a matter of judgment is involved in distinguishing between rules however discretionary in form, that effectively circumscribe administrative choice." Texas, 328 F. Supp. at 730 (citing Am. Bus Ass'n v. United States, 627 F.2d 525, 530 (D.C. Cir. 1980)).[56] The Court now weighs these criteria to determine whether the Memoranda are general statements of policy or substantive rules requiring notice and comment.

The Court first considers whether the Memoranda impose any rights or obligations. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 171. In doing so, the Court is mindful that "a substantive rule—or a legislative-type rule, is one that affects individual rights and obligations." Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 302, 99 S.Ct. 1705, 1718, 60 L.Ed.2d 208 (1979) (citation and quotation omitted) (cleaned up). "This characteristic is an important touchstone for distinguishing those rules that may be 'binding' or have the 'force of law.' " Id. (citation omitted).

At the outset, it is worth noting that the Court has extensively described how the Memoranda affect rights and obligations in its analysis on whether the Memoranda constitute final agency action. See supra II.B.2. As a review, the Memoranda affect rights and obligations in at least three ways. First, the February 18 Memorandum commands that DHS abdicate its obligations under Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) to detain all aliens within the ambit of those provisions and that the detention occur at or for a specified time. Compare §§ 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) with (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4–7).

Second, the Memoranda also create financial obligations for Texas that would not have existed but for the Memoranda. Based on the record, Texas will be required by law to bear some of the cost of providing Emergency Medicaid to eligible aliens who fall within the ambit of Sections 1226(c) or 1231(a)(2). See supra II.B.2.b. The legal obligation to provide these aliens with these services would not exist if deprioritized aliens were taken into federal custody at the time of their release from state custody as mandated by Section 1226(c), or if they were detained during the removal period, as required by Section 1231(a)(2).

54 Finally, as described above, the Memoranda affect the rights of some aliens already in detention. See supra II.B.2.b. As another court has already found, the Memoranda make a nonpriority alien's removal "unlikely to be imminent." See Hussein S.M., 2021 WL 1986125, at *3. This status, in turn, entitles certain aliens to release from detention. See id.; see also Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 701, 121 S.Ct. at 2505. That is an effect on rights.

For these reasons, the Court finds that the Memoranda affect the rights and obligations of those within the Memoranda's regulatory sphere—DHS, the states, and certain aliens. This consideration weighs against finding that the Memoranda are general statements of policy.

Next, the Court considers whether the Memoranda give the agency and its decisionmakers sufficient discretion to be considered a general statement of policy. They do not.

"General statements of policy" are those "statements issued by an agency to advise the public prospectively of the manner in which the agency proposes to exercise a discretionary power." Lincoln, 508 U.S. at 197, 113 S.Ct. at 2034 (quotations omitted). The Fifth Circuit has described the inquiry for determining whether a rule gives an agency and its decisionmakers sufficient discretion to be classified as a general statement of policy:

> The key inquiry ... is the extent to which the challenged policy leaves the > agency free to exercise its discretion to follow or not to follow that general policy in an individual case, or on the other hand, whether the policy so fills out the statutory scheme that upon application one need only determine whether a given case is within the rule's criteria. As long as the agency remains free to consider the individual facts in the various cases that arise, then the agency action in question has not established a binding norm.

Shalala, 56 F.3d at 596–97 (citing Ryder Truck Lines, Inc. v. United States, 716 F.2d 1369, 1377 (11th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 927, 104 S.Ct. 1707, 80 L.Ed.2d 181 (1984)). Applying this inquiry to the Memoranda, the Court is of the opinion that the amount of discretion they afford is insufficient for them to be classified as general statements of policy.

The core feature of the Memoranda is their prioritization of immigration enforcement actions for some classes of aliens to the exclusion of others. The Memoranda state explicitly that "[e]nforcement and removal actions [against aliens who fall within] the [priority groups] described ... are presumed to be a justified allocation of ICE's limited resources." See, e.g., (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4–6) (alterations added) (emphasis added). And although the February 18 Memorandum purports to say that actions against nonprioritized aliens "may also be justified" and that "the interim priorities do not require or prohibit the arrest, detention, or removal of any noncitizen," an agent's discretion in this regard appears so constrained as to be illusory. (Id. at 4). Specifically, the February 18 Memorandum stipulates that "[a]ny civil immigration enforcement or removal actions that do not meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases will require preapproval from the [Field Office Director (FOD)] or [Special Agent in Charge (SAC)]." (Id. at 7) (emphasis added). The preapproval constraint greatly constricts the normal discretion ICE agents enjoy while exercising their statutory and regulatory duties on behalf of the agency. See (Dkt. No. 19-4 at ¶ 29) ("This policy requires field agents to obtain special permission before engaging in routine enforcement."); cf. 8 U.S.C. § 1357; 8 C.F.R. § 287.5. Put differently, agents now need the approval of a FOD or SAC to conduct otherwise routine enforcement operations. (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7); (Dkt. No. 19-4 at ¶ 29).

If this cumbersome preapproval requirement and process were not enough in general to limit the agents' usual discretion, the February 18 Memorandum goes even further by expressly describing two specific scenarios in which an agent's decision-making power is greatly reduced. First, the February 18 Memorandum states that "[t]he approval to carry out an enforcement action against a particular noncitizen will not authorize enforcement actions against other [nonprioritized] noncitizens encountered during an operation."[57] (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7). Simply put, the February 18 Memorandum flatly denies agents the ability to exercise discretion over non-preapproved, nonprioritized aliens "during an operation." Second, the February 18 Memorandum limits agency discretion in detaining and conducting other enforcement actions against nonpriority aliens where exigent circumstances exist. See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7). To be sure, the Memorandum allows for detention of, and other enforcement actions against, nonpriority aliens without preapproval when obtaining such preapproval would be "impracticable." (Id.). And while the Memorandum acknowledges that "it is impossible to preconceive all such circumstances" in which obtaining preapproval may be impracticable, it nevertheless states that circumstances where obtaining preapproval is impracticable "generally will be limited to situations where a noncitizen poses an imminent threat to life or an imminent substantial threat to property." (Id.) (emphasis added). Yet, even in these circumstances, the February 18 Memorandum requires approval, albeit after the enforcement action is conducted. (Id.). Specifically, the agent is required, within 24 hours of the enforcement action having been conducted, to "explain the exigency, where and when the enforcement activity took place, and whether the noncitizen is currently detained." (Id. at 7 n.7).[58] Once again, in a situation in which the agent's discretion is likely at its zenith—where exigent circumstances exist—the February 18 Memorandum severely restricts the agent's ability to exercise it.

In light of these policies, it is perhaps no surprise that the States provide evidence suggesting that ICE agents and officers will treat the Memorandum as a list of instructions rather than mere guidance. See (Dkt. No. 19-4 at ¶ 36). Specifically, a former Acting Director of ICE with more than 32 years of service in the agency testified that, "[a]s a practical matter, ICE officers are likely to treat the 'priorities' as categorical rules rather than presumptions to be rebutted on a case-by-case basis." (Id. at ¶ 29). Also unsurprisingly, there is evidence in the record tending to show that these "categorical rules" in the February 18 Memorandum are already hampering enforcement actions and will continue to deter agents and officers from exercising their discretion in determining whether to conduct enforcement actions in the future. See (Dkt. No. 19-3 at 3–8); (Dkt. No. 46 at ¶ 17); cf. Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 173 (assessing how DAPA has been applied in practice in determining whether it conferred sufficient discretion to be considered a general policy statement).

56 In addition to limiting the discretion of individual ICE agents and officers, the Memoranda also restrict the discretion of entire ICE field offices. See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 6); (Dkt. No. 42-2 at 6). Specifically, the February 18 Memorandum states that "ICE will require field offices to coordinate their operations and obtain preapproval for enforcement and removal actions that do not meet the above criteria for presumed priority cases." (Id.). In other words, the Memoranda not only require individual agents and officers to receive preapproval before conducting enforcement actions against aliens falling outside the three priority groups; they also appear to bind the field offices themselves to the preapproval process delineated in the February 18 Memorandum.

For these reasons, the Court finds that the amount of discretion that the February 18 Memorandum confers to the agency and its decisionmakers in conducting routine enforcement actions weighs against classifying the Memorandum as a general statement of policy. Weighing this factor along with the rights and obligations affected, the Court concludes that the Memoranda do not constitute a general statement of policy.

Procedural Rule

Even if the February 18 Memorandum is not a general statement of policy, it may nevertheless be exempt from notice and comment if it is a rule "of agency organization, procedure, or practice." 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(A); see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176. The Government does not assert that the February 18 Memorandum is a rule of DHS organization or practice; rather, the Government contends that it is one of agency procedure. (Dkt. No. 42 at 47–50). The Fifth Circuit employs two tests to determine whether a rule is one of agency procedure. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176–77; see also Texas, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 728. Here, both tests yield the same conclusion: the Memoranda do not constitute a procedural rule that is exempt from the APA's notice and comment requirement.

The first test used by the Fifth Circuit to determine whether a rule is procedural is the "substantial impact test." See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176. This test "is the primary means by which [the court] look[s] beyond the label 'procedural' to determine whether a rule is of the type Congress thought appropriate for public participation." Id. (citing Kast Metals, 744 F.2d at 1153). "An agency rule that modifies substantive rights and interests can only be nominally procedural, and the exemption for such rules of agency procedure cannot apply." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176 (quoting Kast Metals Corp., 744 F.2d at 1153).

In making this determination, the question is not "whether the rule is 'substantive' or 'procedural,' but rather whether the rule will have a 'substantial impact' on those regulated." Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Johnson, 22 F.3d 616, 620 (5th Cir.), modified on reh'g, 36 F.3d 89 (5th Cir. 1994), for text, see No. 93-1377, 1994 WL 484506 (5th Cir. Sept.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

7, 1994). This distinction makes good sense, as "the notice and comment provisions 'were designed to assure fairness and mature consideration of rules of general application,' " Phillips Petroleum Co., 22 F.3d at 620 (quoting NLRB v. Wyman–Gordon Co., 394 U.S. 759, 764, 89 S.Ct. 1426, 1429, 22 L.Ed.2d 709 (1969)), and to "afford an opportunity for 'the agency promulgating the rule to educate itself before establishing rules and procedures which have a substantial impact on those regulated.' " Phillips Petroleum Co., 22 F.3d at 620 (quoting Texaco, Inc. v. Federal Power Comm'n, 412 F.2d 740, 744 (3d Cir. 1969)).

In determining whether the rule will have a "substantial impact" on those regulated, the Court may consider whether the rule creates legal or financial obligations for the plaintiff and whether the rule restricts the discretion of agency officials. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176 (concluding DAPA "undoubtedly [satisfies the substantial impact] test—conferring lawful presence on 500,000 illegal aliens residing in Texas forces the state to choose between spending millions of dollars to subsidize driver's licenses and amending its statutes"); Phillips Petroleum Co., 22 F.3d at 620 (concluding the rule at issue was not procedural because, in part, "[t]he rule narrowly restrict[ed] the discretion of MMS officials in determining the value of NGLP's" and "[i]t foreclose[d] other valuation methods by prescribing binding valuation criteria"); see also Texas, 328 F. Supp. 3d at 728 (concluding DACA is not a procedural rule, having found it "undoubtedly satisfies [the substantial impact] test because it has forced the states to spend money on various social services costs, which are clearly modif[ications] of substantive rights" (quotation omitted)). If the rule has a substantial impact on "the regulated industry, or an important class of the members or the products of that industry," then "notice and opportunity for comment should first be provided" because "[t]he exemption of § 553(b)(A) from the duty to provide notice by publication does not extend to those procedural rules that depart from existing practice and have a substantial impact on those regulated." Phillips Petroleum Co., 22 F.3d at 620.

57 Considering these criteria, the Memoranda satisfy the substantial impact test. First, as discussed above, the Memoranda affect at least one of Texas's legal obligations. See supra II.B.2.b. Specifically, they affect Texas's legal and financial obligations to partially fund Emergency Medicaid to aliens who fall within the ambit of Sections 1226(c) or 1231(a)(2) but, pursuant to the Memoranda, are not detained by ICE when they are released from state custody or during the removal period. The Memoranda also have a substantial impact because, as just described, they limit the discretion exercised by ICE field offices, agents, and officers. In sum, the February 18 Memorandum mandates a process for ICE field offices and agents to follow for obtaining preapproval to detain aliens the Memoranda deem to be nonpriorities. This mandatory policy restricts DHS from exercising discretion and conducting routine enforcement actions against aliens the Memoranda classify as nonpriorities. This curtailment of agency discretion in conducting routine civil immigration enforcement actions is yet another substantial impact the Memoranda have on those they regulate.

Finally, the Memoranda have a substantial impact on certain aliens already in detention. As discussed above, see supra II.B.2.b, and as another district court's ruling demonstrates, the Memoranda make certain nonpriority aliens' removal "unlikely to be imminent," thus entitling some of those aliens to be released from detention. Hussein S.M., 2021 WL 1986125, at *3; Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 701, 121 S.Ct. at 2505. Considering the many ways the Memoranda affect rights and obligations, it is clear that the Memoranda have a substantial impact and, therefore, the substantial impact test weighs against classifying the Memoranda as procedural rules.

The second test for determining whether a rule is procedural asks the Court to weigh two considerations. First, the Court must consider the "effect on those interests ultimately at stake in the agency proceeding." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176 (citing Nat'l Sec. Couns. v. CIA, 931 F. Supp. 2d 77, 107 (D.D.C. 2013)) (quotation omitted). "Hence, agency rules that impose 'derivative,' 'incidental,' or 'mechanical' burdens upon regulated individuals are considered procedural, rather than substantive." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176 (citing Nat'l Sec. Couns., 931 F. Supp. 2d at 107). This consideration clearly weighs against characterizing the Memoranda as procedural rules, given that the Court has already found that the Memoranda affect the rights and obligations of Texas, DHS, and certain aliens. See supra II.B.2.b.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, the Court must assess whether the Memoranda affect the substantive standards by which DHS determines whether to detain certain aliens. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 176–77 ("[R]ules are generally considered procedural so long as they do not 'change the substantive standards by which the [agency] evaluates' applications which seek a benefit that the agency has the power to provide." (quotation omitted)). Here, the Memoranda alter the substantive standards by which DHS determines whether and when to detain certain aliens by departing from the plain statutory requirements in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) and effectively replacing them with new standards for making such determinations. As discussed above, Section 1226(c) requires DHS to detain aliens falling within the ambit of that provision when they are released from state custody. See supra II.B.3.a. Section 1231(a)(2) requires DHS to detain an alien with a final order of removal during the removal period. See supra II.B.3.a. The Memoranda, however, require DHS to do something different, setting forth a prioritization scheme that declares some aliens falling within the ambit of Section 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) as enforcement "priorities" and others also falling within those same statutory categories as "nonpriorities." See (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 4–7). And to detain nonpriorities, the February 18 Memorandum requires ICE agents to obtain preapproval. See (Id. at 7). No such prioritization scheme or preapproval process exists in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). Rather, these provisions plainly require DHS to detain all aliens who meet the enumerated statutory criteria and that DHS detain them at or during the time stated in the provisions. See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1226(c), 1231(a)(2). Thus, the Memoranda change the "substantive standards by which [DHS] evaluates" whether or not to detain an alien who falls within the ambit of Section 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 177 ("DAPA establishes the substantive standards by which the agency evaluates applications which seek a benefit that the agency purportedly has the power to provide—a critical fact requiring notice and comment." (cleaned up)). Therefore, this test also weighs against classifying the Memoranda as procedural rules.

Texas Has Met Its Burden on Its Procedural APA Claim

58 In sum, the Court finds that the Memoranda do not constitute a rule that is exempt from the notice and comment requirements of Section 553. The Memoranda are not general statements of policy because they have a binding effect insofar as they presently affect certain rights and obligations and do not afford sufficient discretion to DHS and its decisionmakers. Likewise, the Memoranda are not procedural rules because they have a significant impact on DHS, the states, and certain aliens. Therefore, the Court finds Texas has shown a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of its procedural APA claim.

2. Irreparable Harm

In addition to demonstrating a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, the States must demonstrate "a substantial threat of irreparable injury if the injunction is not issued." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 150. Put another way, the States must show they are "likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief." Winter, 555 U.S. at 20, 129 S.Ct. at 374 (emphasis added). For an injury to be sufficiently "irreparable," the States need only show the injury "cannot be undone through monetary remedies." Burgess v. FDIC, 871 F.3d 297, 304 (5th Cir. 2017) (quoting Deerfield Med. Ctr. v. City of Deerfield Beach, 661 F.2d 328, 338 (5th Cir. 1981)).

The States argue their injuries are irreparable because they will incur financial costs that are unrecoverable. (Dkt. No. 18 at 40–41); (Dkt. No. 51 at 31). The States also argue they will suffer irreparable harm because non-detention will result in increased crime. (Id.). In response, the Government contends there is no irreparable harm because "there is not a significant impact on the States." (Dkt. No. 42 at 50). The Court concludes the States have demonstrated they are likely to suffer irreparable harm for the following reasons.

As discussed in this Court's standing analysis, the States have presented evidence demonstrating the Memoranda cause financial harm in the form of increased costs for detention facilities. See supra II.A.1.a. The States have also demonstrated the Memoranda harm their interests as parens patriae because of an increase in criminal activity resulting from the Memoranda's implementation. See supra II.A.1.b. The Court found these two injuries were concrete, imminent, and traceable to the Memoranda. The Court also concludes the threat of injuries to the States is "likely" as that term is used by the Supreme Court. See Winter, 555 U.S. at 20, 129 S.Ct. at 374.

There is also no indication the States can recover for their injuries. Indeed, there is no immediately discernable theory under which a state can "pierce the federal government's usual sovereign immunity or contrive a remedial cause of action sufficient to recover from its budgetary harm." Texas I, ____F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *47. To that point, no Party has suggested the States can recover any of their likely financial injuries here. And the Fifth Circuit rebuffed an attempt by Texas in the late 1990s to force the federal government to pay medical, educational, and criminal justice expenditures caused by immigration. See Texas, 106 F.3d at 663–64 ("The State of Texas and its political subdivisions ... appeal a Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) dismissal of their complaint seeking declaratory and injunctive relief which would require that the United States pay the educational, medical, and criminal justice expenses allegedly incurred as a result of the presence of undocumented or illegal aliens in Texas. Concluding that the complaint raises questions of policy rather than colorable claims of constitutional or statutory violations, we affirm."). Thus, any financial injury is irreparable. See Burgess, 871 F.3d at 304.

59 As for injuries to the States' interests as parens patriae, the Supreme Court has determined that "law enforcement and public safety interests" can constitute irreparable harm. See Maryland v. King, 567 U.S. 1301, 1303, 133 S.Ct. 1, 3, 183 L.Ed.2d 667 (2012) (granting a stay of a judgment after finding Maryland experienced ongoing irreparable harm because it was enjoined from effectuating a statute that assisted government officials in investigating crimes and arresting violent offenders). Here, law-enforcement and public-safety interests underlie the States' parens patriae injuries. Accordingly, the States have demonstrated they are "likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief." See Benisek, ____ U.S. at ____, 138 S.Ct. at 1944.

3. The Balance of Equities and the Public's Interest

Having concluded the States have satisfied the first two elements for obtaining a preliminary injunction, the Court must now determine whether "the threatened injury outweighs any harm that may result from the injunction to the non-movant" and whether "the injunction will not undermine the public interest." Valley v. Rapides Parish Sch. Bd., 118 F.3d 1047, 1051, 1056 (5th Cir. 1997); accord Gonzales v. Mathis Indep. Sch. Dist., 978 F.3d 291, 294 (5th Cir. 2020). Federal courts have considered the balance-of-equities and public-interest elements together as they overlap considerably. Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187; Franciscan All., Inc. v. Burwell, 227 F. Supp. 3d 660, 694 n.36 (N.D. Tex. 2016). And because the Government is the nonmoving party, these two elements "merge." Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 435, 129 S.Ct. 1749, 1762, 173 L.Ed.2d 550 (2009); accord Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187.

In weighing the equities, a court "must balance the competing claims of injury and must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief." Winter, 555 U.S. at 24, 129 S.Ct. at 376. As for determining whether an injunction will undermine the public interest, a court should consider the public interests that may be injured and those that may be served by granting or denying a preliminary injunction. See Sierra Club v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng'rs, 645 F.3d 978, 997–98 (8th Cir. 2011) (citing Davis v. Mineta, 302 F.3d 1104, 1116 (10th Cir. 2002), abrogated on other grounds by Dine Citizens Against Ruining Our Env't v. Jewell, 839 F.3d 1276 (10th Cir. 2016); All. for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127, 1138 (9th Cir. 2011)).

The States argue the Government has no interest in the implementation and enforcement of the unlawful policy contained in the Memoranda. (Dkt. No. 18 at 41–42). The States contend the public interest is furthered when the Executive Branch follows congressional mandates. See (Id. at 42); (Dkt. No. 51 at 31–32). In response, the Government characterizes any injunction as a restraint on "core Article II authority" which "outweighs any harm to the States and undermines the public interest." (Dkt. No. 42 at 55). In the Government's view, an injunction would inhibit its ability to prioritize limited resources, cause confusion within the Executive Branch, and impede any effort to draft final guidance. (Id. at 55–56). The Government also contends the public interest is served when it has the ability "to prioritize national security, border security, and public safety." (Id. at 57). Considering these arguments, the Court finds the States have the upper hand.

Notably, without a preliminary injunction, the States will be "threatened with substantial harm" to their state budgets and interests as parens patriae. See Burwell, 227 F. Supp. 3d at 694. As discussed earlier, the Court is unpersuaded by the Government's claim that the States' injuries are "speculative." See (Dkt. No. 42 at 22–23). Instead, the Court has found the States' injuries from costs relating to detention facilities and increased criminal activity are traceable to the implementation of the Memoranda. See supra II.A.2.

60 Although the States face substantial harm from the implementation of the Memoranda, the Government nevertheless attempts to show that the harm it faces is worse. The Government, however, postulates harms "that are less substantial" and "vague." See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 186. Specifically, the Government makes much of an injunction's supposed harm to the Executive Branch's authority. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 55–56). Although it is true that the Executive Branch retains vast discretion in immigration enforcement, see Arizona, 567 U.S. at 396, 132 S.Ct. at 2499; Reno, 525 U.S. at 490, 119 S.Ct. at 946, that discretion ebbs when Congress sets forth a statutory mandate. Indeed, "[i]t is undisputed that Congress may mandate that the Executive Branch detain certain noncitizens during removal proceedings or before removal." Preap, ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 973 (Kavanaugh, J., concurring) (emphasis added). Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) do just that: they require the Executive Branch to detain certain aliens at or for a specified time.[59] Any harm to the Government is therefore exaggerated and should be addressed to Congress.

The Government next complains that an injunction would create inefficiency because it would inhibit the Executive Branch's ability to prioritize limited resources.[60] (Dkt. No. 42 at 55–56). The Court is unpersuaded. First, in at least one case, the Fifth Circuit has concluded that any inefficiency resulting from an injunction inhibiting the Executive's ability to prioritize certain immigration-enforcement actions is "outweighed by the major financial losses [that] states face." See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187. Here, the Court, in its standing analysis, has already found the Memoranda will result in significant financial losses for the States. See supra II.A.1.a. Second, the Government overestimates the effect of an injunction on the Executive's limited resources. Rather than dictate the use of resources, the injunction precludes the Executive Branch from instructing officials to act in a manner contrary to a clear congressional mandate. In other words, the Government remains free to expend its resources in a lawful manner.

To this point, "the public is served when the law is followed," Daniels Health Scis., L.L.C. v. Vascular Health Scis., L.L.C., 710 F.3d 579, 585 (5th Cir. 2013), and the public will be served if the Executive Branch is enjoined from implementing and enforcing a policy that instructs officials to violate a congressional command. See League of Women Voters of United States v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 12 (D.C. Cir. 2016) ("There is generally no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful agency action."); Blackie's House of Beef, Inc. v. Castillo, 659 F.2d. 1211, 1221 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (collecting cases) ("[T]he public interest in enforcement of the immigration laws is significant."); cf. Nken, 556 U.S. at 436, 129 S.Ct. at 1762 ("There is always a public interest in prompt execution of removal orders[.]"). The public interest is particularly strong here because, as fully described earlier, Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) are statutes that Congress enacted for the benefit of the United States, its citizens, and its legal immigrants. See supra I.A.; Demore, 538 U.S. at 518–21, 123 S.Ct. at 1714–16; Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 697, 121 S.Ct. at 2502.

61 Finally, the Government argues an injunction would result in confusion inside the Executive Branch because immigration officials will be left with little to no guidance on how to exercise their enforcement discretion. (Dkt. No. 42 at 56). Relatedly, the Government also theorizes that injunctive relief would impede its effort to draft final guidance. (Id. at 56–57). These arguments are puzzling because, with or without an injunction in place, the Government is free to craft new guidance or instruct Executive Branch officials to act in a certain manner so long as such guidance and instructions comport with the law (i.e., congressional mandates).

Given the discussion above, the Court concludes the potential harms to the States arising out of the Memoranda outweigh any potential harms to the Government. The Court also concludes the public interest is served, rather than undermined, by an injunction. Thus, the States have satisfied all four elements for a preliminary injunction.

C. SCOPE OF RELIEF

The States have satisfied the standard for a preliminary injunction. This conclusion raises two additional inquiries: the geographic scope of the injunction as well as the nature of the injunctive remedy. The Court addresses each in turn.

1. Geographic Scope

The States request a nationwide injunction. (Dkt. No. 18 at 42–43). The Court has expressed its substantial skepticism of nationwide injunctions. Texas, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 247877, at *6–7; see also Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *50–51. Indeed, nationwide injunctions of executive actions are an area of fierce disagreement in the courts and in legal academia. See id. But, as with any case, this Court is bound by applicable Fifth Circuit precedent in determining whether a nationwide scope for an injunction is appropriate. That precedent explains that a federal district court, under "appropriate circumstances," has authority "to issue a nationwide injunction." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 188. One such appropriate circumstance is when a nationwide injunction is necessary is to ensure uniformity in immigration policies as prescribed by federal law. Id. at 187–88; see also E. Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Garland, 994 F.3d 962, 987 (9th Cir. 2020) ("[C]ases implicating immigration policy have a particularly strong claim for uniform, nationwide relief." (citation omitted)). Another such circumstance is when "there is a substantial likelihood that a geographically-limited injunction would be ineffective because [the] beneficiaries [of the unlawful policy] would be free to move among states." Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 188.

The Court finds both circumstances exist here. First, the Memoranda affect national immigration policy, which is designed to be uniform. See id. at 187–88. Second, given what has been detailed in the Court's standing analysis, a geographically limited injunction is insufficient to protect the States from irreparable harm because aliens not detained pursuant to the Memoranda in other states are able to move to Texas and Louisiana. See supra II.A.2 & II.A.3; see also Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 188. The States submitted evidence showing that "more than 50,000 noncitizens moved into Texas from another U.S. State in 2019." (Dkt. No. 18 at 42) (citing Dkt. No. 19-21); see also (Dkt. No. 51 at 35) (citing Dkt. Nos. 19-21–19-23). Accordingly, a nationwide injunction is appropriate. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187–88; see also Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *50–51.

The Government offers a handful of arguments in opposition to issuing a nationwide injunction. None carry the day.

62 First, the Government argues nationwide relief is inappropriate because lawsuits concerning the Memoranda in other jurisdictions have been unsuccessful. (Dkt. No. 42 at 60). This misses the point. In determining the appropriate scope of an injunction, the Court's task is to fashion a remedy that prevents the plaintiffs in this case from suffering irreparable harm. See ODonnell v. Harris County, 892 F.3d 147, 163 (5th Cir. 2018) ("When crafting an injunction, district courts are guided by the Supreme Court's instruction that 'the scope of injunctive relief is dictated by the extent of the violation established.' " (quoting Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 702, 99 S.Ct. 2545, 2558, 61 L.Ed.2d 176 (1979)); see also Dep't of Homeland Sec. v. New York, ____ U.S. ____, ____, 140 S.Ct. 599, 600, 206 L.Ed.2d 115 (2020) (Gorsuch, J., concurring in the grant of a stay) ("Equitable remedies, like remedies in general, are meant to redress the injuries sustained by a particular plaintiff in a particular lawsuit. When a district court orders the government not to enforce a rule against the plaintiffs in the case before it, the court redresses the injury that gives rise to its jurisdiction in the first place." (emphasis added)); ODonnell v. Goodhart, 900 F.3d 220, 224 (5th Cir. 2018) ("The district court must narrowly tailor an injunction to remedy the specific action which gives rise to the order." (emphasis added) (quoting John Doe # 1 v. Veneman, 380 F.3d 807, 818 (5th Cir. 2004))). In concluding the States are entitled to injunctive relief, this Court has determined, based on Fifth Circuit precedent and the record before it, that a nationwide injunction is appropriate to prevent the States from suffering irreparable harm.

Next, the Government argues nationwide relief is generally ill-advised because, in effect, any attempt by the Government to create a new federal policy is thwarted by "a single successful challenge" to the policy, even if other challenges to the policy are unsuccessful. (Dkt. No. 42 at 60) (quoting Dep't of Homeland Sec., ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct.

at 601 (Gorsuch, J., concurring in the grant of a stay)). Frankly, the Court shares these concerns. Nonetheless, the Court, in fashioning a proper remedy, is bound by precedent, see Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 187–88, and "must narrowly tailor an injunction to remedy the specific action which gives rise to the order," Goodhart, 900 F.3d at 224 (emphasis added) (quoting Veneman, 380 F.3d at 818); see also Dep't of Homeland Sec., ____ U.S. at ____, 140 S.Ct. at 600 (Gorsuch, J., concurring in the grant of a stay). The Court therefore finds the Government's argument unpersuasive.

Third, the Government attempts to distinguish this case from Texas DAPA and Texas I by asserting that this case involves individual detention decisions rather than a blanket policy pausing enforcement actions against aliens. (Dkt. No. 42 at 60). To be sure, individual enforcement decisions are "inherently discretionary and non-uniform," Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *51, but the States are not challenging individual enforcement decisions. Rather, the States, like the plaintiffs in Texas DAPA and Texas I, are challenging a blanket policy. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 146–49; Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *30. Specifically, the States are challenging the Memoranda, which implement and enforce a blanket policy regarding the detention of certain aliens—a policy that contravenes congressional mandates. Accordingly, the Government's argument that this case is distinguishable from Texas I and Texas DAPA falls short.

Finally, the Government argues that, because the States' injuries are supposedly premised on detainers in Texas and Louisiana, an injunction limited in geographic scope to the boundaries of those two states will sufficiently protect them from any irreparable harm they may suffer due to the Memoranda. (Dkt. No. 42 at 60–61). The Court disagrees for two reasons. First, the Government incorrectly asserts that the States' injuries are premised on detainers when the States' injuries are, in fact, premised on the increased costs to their detention systems and their interests as parens patriae. See (Dkt. No. 1 at 15–16); (Dkt. No. 18 at 15–16, 18, 35–37). Second, in arguing that the geographic scope of the injunction should be limited to the boundaries of Texas and Louisiana, the Government ignores that, if aliens are not detained in other states, those aliens can migrate to Texas and Louisiana thus causing them harm. See Texas DAPA, 809 F.3d at 188 (recognizing that "there is a substantial likelihood that a geographically-limited injunction would be ineffective because" the beneficiaries of the unlawful policies "would be free to move among states"). Indeed, the evidence produced in this case regarding the migration patterns of aliens to Texas and from other states buttresses this point. See supra II.A.2 & II.A.3; (Dkt. No. 19-21 at 5–7); (Dkt. No. 19-22 at 5–7, 14); (Dkt. No. 19-23 at 2). The Government's argument is therefore meritless.

63 Thus, for the foregoing reasons, the States are entitled to a nationwide injunction.

2. Remedy

As stated above, "the scope of injunctive relief is dictated by the extent of the violation established." ODonnell, 892 F.3d at 163 (quoting Califano, 442 U.S. at 702, 99 S.Ct. at 2558); see also Goodhart, 900 F.3d at 224 ("The district court must narrowly tailor an injunction to remedy the specific action which gives rise to the order." (quoting Veneman, 380 F.3d at 818)). Since the States have satisfied the four elements required for a preliminary injunction, the Court finds that it is appropriate to enjoin the Executive Branch from implementing and enforcing the Memoranda. Specifically, the Court enjoins (1) Section B of the January 20 Memorandum, and (2) the sections from the February 18 Memorandum entitled "Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Priorities" and "Enforcement and Removal Actions: Approval, Coordination, and Data Collection." (Dkt. No. 1-2 at 4–8). These sections implement and enforce a policy that directly contravenes congressional mandates. As stressed above, agency policies that contravene congressional mandates are unlawful—plain and simple. See Util. Air Regul. Grp., 573 U.S. at 327, 134 S.Ct. at 2446; Barnhart, 534 U.S. at 462, 122 S.Ct. at 956. Moreover, the States have met their burden to show a substantial likelihood that the Memoranda's policy prioritizing the detention of certain aliens over others is arbitrary and capricious and fails to comply with the APA's notice and comment requirement. The Court therefore enjoins the implementation and enforcement of these sections. [61]

IV. CONCLUSION

Although this case involves many issues of administrative and immigration law, its core concerns whether the Executive Branch may implement a policy that directly conflicts with laws that Congress enacted. The answer is no. In the end, through all their detailed explanations of the Executive's seemingly unending discretion, the Government substantially undervalues the People's grant of "legislative Powers" to Congress.

Because the States have demonstrated that there is a substantial likelihood that portions of the Memoranda direct Executive Branch officials to act in a way that is contrary to Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2), those sections of the Memoranda cannot stand and are hereby enjoined. Additionally, the Court enjoins the sections of the Memoranda described above because the States have demonstrated a substantial likelihood that the policy concerning detention of certain aliens set forth in the Memoranda is arbitrary and capricious under the APA and the Memoranda fail to comply with the APA's notice and comment requirement.

64 For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS the States' Motion for Preliminary Injunction. (Dkt. No. 18). Therefore, it is hereby ORDERED that:

1. Defendants and all their respective officers, agents, servants, employees, attorneys, and other persons who are in active concert or participation with them are hereby ENJOINED and RESTRAINED from enforcing and implementing the policies described in:

   a. Section B of the January 20 Memorandum entitled "Interim Civil Enforcement Guidelines." (Dkt. No. 1-1 at 3–4);

   b. The section entitled "Civil Immigration Enforcement and Removal Priorities" in the February 18 Memorandum. (Dkt. No. 1-2 at 4–6); and

   c. The section entitled "Enforcement and Removal Actions: Approval, Coordination, and Data Collection" in the February 18 Memorandum.[62] (Dkt. No. 1-2 at 6–8).

2. This Preliminary Injunction is granted on a nationwide basis and prohibits enforcement and implementation in every place the Government has jurisdiction to enforce and implement the January 20 and February 18 Memoranda.

3. This Preliminary Injunction shall remain in effect pending a final resolution of the merits of this case or until a further Order from this Court, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, or the United States Supreme Court.

To ensure compliance with this Preliminary Injunction, the Court further ORDERS the following:

1. By September 3, 2021, the Government must file with the Court the legal standard it is abiding by with respect to the detention of aliens covered by or subject to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D) given the Court's injunction of the Memoranda at issue in this lawsuit. The information should state with specificity what guidance, protocols, or standards control the detention of these aliens in light of the fact that the Memoranda have been enjoined.

2. By September 3, 2021, the Government must file with the Court the legal standard it is abiding by with respect to the detention of aliens covered by or subject to 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2) given the Court's injunction of the Memoranda at issue in this lawsuit. The information should state with specificity what guidance, protocols, or standards control the detention of aliens in light of the fact that the Memoranda have been enjoined.

3. Starting in September 2021, the Government must file with the Court on the 5th day of each month a report stating the number of aliens known to the Government, who are covered by or subject to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A)–(D), who were released from custody during the previous month, and whom ICE did not detain immediately upon their release. For each of these aliens, provide under seal the alien's last known residence or address and the offense for which the alien had been incarcerated.

   Additionally, for each alien not detained, the Government shall make and retain a contemporaneous record of the reason why the alien was not detained and the individual who made that specific determination.

65 4. Starting in September 2021, the Government must file with the Court on the 5th day of each month a report stating the number of aliens in their removal period as defined in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1). Of those, provide the number who were not detained pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

> For each of these aliens not detained, provide under seal the alien's last known residence or address.
> Additionally, for each alien not detained, the Government shall make a contemporaneous record of the reason why the alien was not detained and the individual who made that specific determination.

This Memorandum Opinion and Order does not prohibit the Government from carrying out or adhering to the January 20 Memorandum's sections entitled "A. Comprehensive Review of Enforcement Policies and Priorities" and "D. No Private Right Statement."[63] This Memorandum Opinion and Order also does not prohibit the Government from carrying out or adhering to the February 18 Memorandum's sections entitled "Purpose," "Background," "Questions," and "No Private Right Statement."

No security bond is required under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(c).

It is SO ORDERED.

1 The term "Government" used throughout this Memorandum Opinion and Order refers to the United States, the agencies, and the individuals sued in their official capacity.

2 Under Section 1226(c), "the Attorney General shall take into custody" certain aliens who have either committed specified offenses or who are otherwise deemed deportable "when the alien is released" from custody. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) (emphasis added). Likewise, Section 1231(a)(2) provides, "the Attorney General shall detain the alien" "during [the alien's] removal period." 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2) (emphasis added).

3 The States also seek an injunction compelling the Government to comply with the detention mandates in Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2). (Dkt. No. 18).

4 In this Memorandum Opinion and Order, the Court does not address the States' likelihood of success on claims that the Memoranda are unlawful because they violate: (1) the Agreements between Texas and Louisiana and the Department of Homeland Security ("DHS"); and (2) the Constitution's requirement that the President "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." (Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 122–31). In withholding a ruling on these claims, the Court is mindful that to succeed on their Motion, the States need only demonstrate a substantial likelihood of success on "at least one" claim, which they have. See Texas v. United States, 86 F. Supp. 3d 591, 672 (S.D. Tex. 2015), aff'd, 809 F.3d 134 (5th Cir. 2015), aff'd by an equally divided court, ____ U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2271, 195 L.Ed.2d 638 (2016) (mem.). Moreover, given the significance of the substantial interests at stake in this case, the Court finds it to be in the interest of justice to rule after all Parties have an opportunity to make a complete presentation on the merits of these claims. See id. at 677. Similarly, the Court defers ruling on the States' request for an injunction to compel agency action unlawfully withheld pursuant to Section 706(1) of the Administrative Procedure Act. See footnote 61; see also (Dkt. No. 1 at 28); (Dkt. No. 18 at 26).

5 In outlining the extensive background and history involved in this case, the factual statements made herein (except where the Court is discussing a factual dispute) should be considered as findings of fact regardless of any heading or lack thereof. Similarly, the legal conclusions, except where the Court discusses the various competing legal theories and positions, should be taken as conclusions of law regardless of any label or lack thereof.

7 The text of the statute says "sentence;" however, the Court notes it should probably be "sentenced."

8 Federal regulations permit the temporary detention of certain incarcerated aliens at DHS's request for a period not to exceed 48 hours "in order to permit assumption of custody" of the detainee by DHS. 8 C.F.R. § 287.7(d). Note at least one state court determined that beyond the 48-hour mark, state authorities must release the incarcerated aliens "[i]f the federal government fails to apply federal law and take custody of [the criminal aliens] within the time limit set by federal regulations." Ochoa v. Bass, 2008 OK CR 11, ¶ 19, 181 P.3d 727, 733 (emphasis added).

9 The importance of detainers aside, note that "[t]here are certainly other mechanisms available to assist in implementing the federal apprehension of criminal aliens." Id. at 175. For instance, written agreements between the Executive Branch and states and local governments pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1357(g) may permit state and local law enforcement "to perform a function of an immigration officer in relation to the investigation, apprehension, or detention of aliens in the United States (including the transportation of such aliens across State lines to detention centers)." 8 U.S.C. § 1357(g). In another example, the Executive Branch may also enter an "inter-governmental service agreement" with local and state jails to authorize such detention centers to house prisoners on behalf of DHS. Lasch, supra, at 175.

10 The January 20 Memorandum excludes from the 100-day pause any alien with a final removal order who:

> 1) According to a written finding by the Director of ICE, has engaged in or is suspected of terrorism or espionage, or otherwise poses a danger to the national security of the United States; or
> 2) Was not physically present in the United States before November 1, 2020; or
> 3) Has voluntarily agreed to waive any rights to remain in the United States, provided that he or she has been made fully aware of the consequences of waiver and has been given a meaningful opportunity to access counsel prior to signing the waiver; or
> 4) For whom the Acting Director of ICE, following consultation with the General Counsel, makes an individualized determination that removal is required by law.

(Dkt. No. 1-1 at 4–5) (footnote omitted).

11 The January 20 Memorandum provides that "the Acting Director of ICE shall issue operational guidance on the implementation of these priorities." (Dkt. No. 1-1 at 4).

13 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

14 5 U.S.C. § 553.

15 As this Court noted in Texas I, DHS, "U.S. Customs and Border Protection ..., U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement ..., and U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services ... entered into a Memorandum of Understanding Between Texas and DHS concerning certain aspects of the nation's immigration laws." ___ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *1; see also (Dkt. No. 1-3). "The Agreement was finalized on January 8, 2021—just 12 twelve days before the transition from the Trump Administration to the Biden Administration." Texas I, ___ F. Supp. 3d at____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *1; see also (Dkt. No. 1-3). DHS and the Louisiana Department of Justice entered into a nearly identical agreement, which was also finalized on January 8, 2021. (Dkt. No. 1-4).

16 This statement comes directly from the Chief of Staff of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice. (Dkt. No. 46 at 2). It is unclear whether the "ICE officials" quoted by the Chief of Staff made this statement in a capacity excluding the statement from the rule against hearsay. See Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2). But even if hearsay, this Court may rely on the statement at the preliminary injunction phase. See Sierra Club, Lone Star Chapter v. FDIC, 992 F.2d 545, 551 (5th Cir. 1993) ("[A]t the preliminary injunction stage, the procedures in the district court are less formal, and the district court may rely on otherwise inadmissible evidence, including hearsay evidence."). The Government has made no showing that this testimony is otherwise unreliable, and the Court finds none itself. Rather, the sworn affidavit from the Chief of Staff under penalty of perjury possesses sufficient indicia of reliability as to the statement of the ICE officials. The Court therefore accepts as fact, at the preliminary injunction phase, the testimony of the Chief of Staff regarding the statement of current ICE officials.

17 As the Court discusses infra, the federal government reimbursed Texas for a miniscule fraction of its costs for detaining criminal aliens as part of a statutorily mandated program that seeks to help states with the burden of incarcerating criminal aliens. See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A).

18 Because the States have put forth sufficient evidence to demonstrate a concrete and imminent injury regarding Texas's detention costs and parens patriae, see infra II.A.1., the Court need not address the States' alleged financial injuries arising from unanticipated education and healthcare-related expenses.

19 The fact that an expansion of parens patriae to citizens-at-large in Louisiana v. Texas was determined in a case involving the Supreme Court's original jurisdiction does not restrict the scope of quasi-sovereign interests in non-original jurisdiction cases. If anything, the opposite is true. See Snapp, 458 U.S. at 603 n.12, 102 S.Ct. at 3267 n.12; id. at 611–12, 102 S.Ct. at 3270–71 (Brennan, J., concurring) (explaining on constitutional grounds that the Court might be more "restrictive" as to the types of interests a state can assert in a parens patriae action when the Court's original jurisdiction is invoked as compared to typical federal suits).

20 Notably, the statutory basis for SCAAP resides near one of the detention statutes at issue in this case, 8 U.S.C. § 1231(i).

21 In sum, having concluded that the States have standing, the Court must exercise jurisdiction. See Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U.S. (6 Wheat.) 264, 404, 5 L.Ed. 257 (1821) (noting that federal courts "have no more right to decline the exercise of jurisdiction which is given, than to usurp that which is not given"); see also Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 126, 134 S.Ct. 1377, 1386, 188 L.Ed.2d 392 (2014) (resolving doctrinal tension that had developed with a federal court's "virtually unflagging" obligation to "hear and decide cases within its jurisdiction" (internal quotation omitted)).

22 Section 1252(a)(5) provides in relevant part: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law (statutory or non-statutory), including section 2241 of Title 28, or any other habeas corpus provision, and sections 1361 and 1651 of such title, a petition for review filed with an appropriate court of appeals in accordance with this section shall be the sole and exclusive means for judicial review of an order of removal entered or issued under any provision of this chapter, except as provided in subsection (e)." 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(5).

Section 1252(b)(9) states in part: "Judicial review of all questions of law and fact, including interpretation and application of constitutional and statutory provisions, arising from any action taken or proceeding brought to remove an alien from the United States under this subchapter shall be available only in judicial review of a final order under this section." 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9).

23 The Court in Texas I held that Section 1231(h) was unambiguous. ___ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *26 & n.4. Hence, the Court did not find Chevron deference applied to the Government's preferred interpretation of Section 1231(h). Id. The Court adopts that reasoning by reference here. The Court additionally notes that the Government, like in Texas I, fails to invoke any claim to Chevron deference with respect to Section 1231(h) in its Response to this Motion.

24 Indeed, even the Executive Branch in a website has stated that incarcerated individuals may apply for Medicaid coverage in their respective states and thereafter be eligible for benefits after release from custody. See HealthCare.gov, Health coverage for incarcerated people, https://www.healthcare.gov/incarcerated-people/.

25 The Court is also concerned that the Memoranda affect the States' legal obligation to provide a public-school education to certain noncitizens following their release from juvenile detention. For example, Texas is required by both federal and state law to provide noncitizen children with a public-school education. See generally Plyler, 457 U.S. 202, 102 S.Ct. 2382 (holding that a Texas statute that withheld state funds for educating children who were not "legally admitted" was unconstitutional); see also LeClerc v. Webb, 419 F.3d 405, 416 (5th Cir. 2005) ("In ... Plyler, the [Supreme] Court employed a heightened level of rational basis review to invalidate a Texas law that denied primary public education to children of illegal aliens."); Texas v. United States, 106 F.3d 661, 666 (5th Cir. 1997) ("[T]he State's public education expenditures for the children of undocumented aliens are required by the equal protection clause[.]" (citing Plyler, 457 U.S. 202, 102 S.Ct. 2382)). This obligation would necessarily include juveniles released from the custody of the Texas Juvenile Justice Department ("TJJD") who are not detained by ICE because of the Memoranda. See (Dkt. No. 19-9 at ¶ 7) ("As Chapter 25, Texas Education Code, requires a child to attend school and as Plyler ... prohibits denying undocumented children of illegal immigrants the right to attend public school, to the extent ICE does not take custody of non-citizen juveniles set to be released from TJJD custody, it is my understanding that those non-citizen juveniles who have not already received their General Educational Development or high school diploma attend Texas public schools after being released."). The Court is interested in further briefing on this issue at the next stage of this litigation.

26 A district court in Florida concluded the February 18 Memorandum is unreviewable under the APA because it did not constitute final agency action. Florida. v. United States, No. 8:21-CV-541-CEH-SPF, 2021 WL 1985058, at *9 (M.D. Fla. May 18, 2021). The Court respectfully disagrees with this conclusion for the reasons set forth herein.

27 As another Texas court said of a similar change in litigation position, "[b]ut that was then, and this is now." Texas v. United States, 340 F. Supp. 3d 579, 611 (N.D. Tex. 2018), aff'd in part, vacated in part, remanded, 945 F.3d 355 (5th Cir. 2019), rev'd and remanded sub nom. California v. Texas, 141 S.Ct. 2104 (2021).

28 Likewise, the Eleventh Circuit concluded, "dicta from the Supreme Court is not something to be lightly cast aside." Schwab v. Crosby, 451 F.3d 1308, 1325 (11th Cir. 2006) (collecting cases with similar findings) (quoting Peterson v. BMI Refractories, 124 F.3d 1386, 1392 n.4 (11th Cir. 1997)). Indeed, "Supreme Court dicta have a weight that is greater than ordinary judicial dicta as prophecy of what that Court might hold," so this Court cannot "blandly shrug them off because they were not a holding." See United States v. Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d 1122, n.17 (9th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (citations omitted). Other circuits agree. See McCoy v. Mass. Inst. of Tech., 950 F.2d 13, 19 (1st Cir. 1991) ("[F]ederal appellate courts are bound by the Supreme Court's considered dicta almost as firmly as by the Court's outright holdings, particularly when, as here, a dictum is of recent vintage and not enfeebled by any subsequent statement."); United States v. Bell, 524 F.2d 202, 206 (2d Cir. 1975) (considering that dicta "must be given considerable weight and cannot be ignored in the resolution of [a] close question"); Oyebanji v. Gonzales, 418 F.3d 260, 264–65 (3d Cir. 2005) ("[A]s a lower federal court, we are advised to follow the Supreme Court's 'considered dicta.' " (quoting McCoy, 950 F.2d at 19)); Wynne v. Town of Great Falls, 376 F.3d 292, 298 n.3 (4th Cir. 2004) ("[A]s we and our sister circuits have frequently noted, ... carefully considered language of the Supreme Court, even if technically dictum, generally must be treated as authoritative." (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Sierra Club v. EPA, 322 F.3d 718, 724 (D.C. Cir. 2003))); United States v. Marlow, 278 F.3d 581, 588 n.7 (6th Cir. 2002) (noting that lower courts are "obligated to follow Supreme Court dicta, particularly where there is not substantial reason for disregarding it, such as age or subsequent statements undermining its rationale" (citing Gaylor v. United States, 74 F.3d 214, 217 (10th Cir. 1996)));

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Nichol v. Pullman Standard, Inc., 889 F.2d 115, 120 n.8 (7th Cir. 1989) (noting that lower courts "should respect considered Supreme Court dicta"); McDonough v. Anoka County, 799 F.3d 931, 942 (8th Cir. 2015) ("[F]ederal courts ... are not 'free to limit Supreme Court opinions precisely to the facts of each case.' Instead, federal courts 'are bound by the Supreme Court's considered dicta almost as firmly as by the Court's outright holdings[.]' " (quoting City of Timber Lake v. Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, 10 F.3d 554, 557 (8th Cir. 1993))); Bangor Hydro–Elec. Co. v. FERC, 78 F.3d 659, 662 (D.C. Cir. 1996) ("It may be dicta, but Supreme Court dicta tends to have somewhat greater force-particularly when expressed so unequivocally.").

29 The Court also notes that its decision in Texas I did not rely entirely on the protection of "public or private interests" rationale explained in Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe to support its finding of a "stronger indication" that the "shall" in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A) connoted a requirement. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *34–35. Instead, the Court performed a full statutory interpretation of the word "shall" in Section 1231(a)(1)(A) and relied on numerous precedents in the Fifth Circuit and sister circuits demonstrating the mandatory nature of that word. Id. at *33–38 (noting the Court had examined "the text, context, statutory history, and precedent demonstrating that 'shall' means must in section 1231(a)(1)(A)" (emphasis in original)). In contrast to that comprehensive analysis, the Government's current lone attack on the Court's prior synthesis of the rules from Hecht, Castle Rock, Richbourg Motor Co., and Escoe is lacking. Nevertheless, despite the in-depth analysis the Court undertook in Texas I, a district court in Arizona arrived at a different conclusion, holding that "shall" does not mean "must" in 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A). Arizona, 2021 WL 2787930, at *9–10. That court's rationale was that the legislative intent required for Section 1231(a)(1)(A) to be mandatory—per Castle Rock—was not present. Id. The court based its holding on (a) the statutory scheme which apparently contemplated removals of aliens outside the 90-day period, (b) the Government's broad discretion to remove aliens at any stage of the removal process, and (c) some legislative history showing that the 90-day period contemplated in the section was intended to be "merely" a "target" date "rather than a statutory mandate." Id. Therefore, according to the Arizona court, "shall" did not mean "must" in Section 1231(a)(1)(A). Id. Like the Government in this case, the district court neither cited to nor discussed Richbourg Motor Co. and Escoe. This Court respectfully disagrees with the court in Arizona and the Government, having thoroughly probed the statutory text, the purpose of the statutes, and legislative history of Sections 1231(a)(1)(A) in Texas I, and Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) in this Memorandum Opinion and Order.

30 In Texas I, the Government argued that Section 1231(a)(1)(A)'s use of the word "shall" could not have meant "must" because at least one other "shall" in Section 1231 is not mandatory (at least according to the Government). Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *35. That other "shall" is apparently in Section 1231(a)(2) which reads, as stated earlier: "During the removal period, the Attorney General shall detain the alien. Under no circumstance during the removal period shall the Attorney General release an alien who has been found inadmissible under [certain circumstances]." Id. The Government contended that reading "shall" as mandatory in the first sentence of Section 1231(a)(2) would make the second sentence superfluous. Id.; see also (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 82 at 21); (6:21-cv-3, Dkt. No. 83 at 34). The Court found the argument unpersuasive, finding that there was a distinction between the two clauses. Id. As the Court held, the first clause of Section 1231(a)(2) mandates the act of detaining. Id. (citing Rodney, 340 F. App'x at 764). The second clause, on the other hand, prohibits the release of certain individuals. Id. Thus, the Attorney General may in some circumstances "release" those whom he has "detain[ed]." See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2). Section 1231 itself prescribes the conditions through which an alien—who is presumably presently detained—may pursue a "stay" and a "release." Id. § 1231(c)(2)(A), (C). In fact, it could easily be said that the prohibition on releasing certain aliens demonstrates that Congress assumed all aliens would be detained —because they "shall" be. Thus, the Court concluded in Texas I that the Government's "textual" argument failed. In this case, the Government briefly restates its argument from Texas I in an attempt to persuade the Court to change its disposition. Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *35; see also (Dkt. No. 42 at 39). The Court remains unpersuaded and adopts its prior conclusions from Texas I as discussed in this footnote.

31 For criminal aliens in state custody, the 90-day period does not start until they are released from state confinement. See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(B)(iii).

32 This proposition does not include circumstances in which the President is asked to enforce a law that is unconstitutional or, more specifically, a law that usurps Executive authority. See Brett M. Kavanaugh, Our Anchor for 225 Years and Counting: The Enduring Significance of the Precise Text of the Constitution, 89 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1907, 1911 (2014); Steven G. Calabresi & Saikrishna B. Prakash, The President's Power to Execute the Laws, 104 Yale L.J. 541, 621–22 (1994). After all, the Constitution commands that, "[b]efore he enter on the Execution of his Office, [the President] shall take the following Oath or Affirmation: —'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.' " U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 8 (emphasis added). The Government, however, does not assert that Sections 1226(c) or 1231(a)(2) are unconstitutional. See (Dkt. No. 42).

33 Specifically, the First Test Act, enacted in 1673, "was designed to ensure that anyone holding public office, whether civil or military, would denounce the Roman Catholic doctrine of transubstantiation and receive the Anglican sacrament. Parliament's intention was to exclude Roman Catholics, who could not conscientiously take these tests, from holding public office more than temporarily." Delahunty & Yoo, supra, at 805–06. The Second Test Act, enacted in 1678, "made certain exceptions (including one for the King himself), but essentially continued this exclusionary policy." Id. at 806.

34 This ire towards James II's use of the dispensing power is best captured in the English Bill of Rights, which says:

> Whereas the late King James the Second, by the assistance of divers evil counsellors, judges and ministers employed by him, did endeavour to subvert and extirpate the Protestant religion and the laws and liberties of this kingdom;
>
> By assuming and exercising a power of dispensing with and suspending of laws and the execution of laws without consent of Parliament[.]

The Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M., c. 1 (1689).

35 Specifically, the English Bill of Rights of 1689 provides: "[T]he pretended power of suspending the laws or the execution of laws by regal authority without consent of Parliament is illegal" and that "the pretended power of dispensing with laws or the execution of laws by regal authority, as it hath been assumed and exercised of late, is illegal." The Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M., c. 2 (1689).

36 These grievances are as follows:

> He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good; He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

Declaration of Independence ¶¶ 3–4.

37 Not all states ratified constitutions at the time of the founding. Indeed, "two states, Connecticut and Rhode Island, retained their Colonial Charters issued by King Charles II and did not try to write new state constitutions or declarations of rights" at this time. Calabresi, Agudo, & Dore, supra, at 1543; see also Narragansett Indian Tribe of R.I. v. State, 667 A.2d 280, 280 (R.I. 1995) ("Rhode Island's first constitution was adopted in 1842 ...."); Moore v. Ganim, 660 A.2d 742, 772 (Conn. 1995) (Peters, C.J., concurring) ("Of the thirteen original states, Connecticut was the second to last to adopt a written state constitution, failing to do so until 1818.").

38 In fact, "[a]t the Constitutional Convention, the delegates unanimously rejected a proposal to grant the President suspending authority." See Price, supra, at 693. The First Congress did, however, have an opportunity to bar the President from possessing such power in the Bill of Rights but failed to do so, "despite proposals from several state ratifying conventions that the Constitution be amended to include such a provision." Id. at 694. But "any negative inference from Congress's failure to act on these proposals seems weak." Id. Instead, "[i]t seems more likely that James Madison and other members of the First Congress failed to include an antisuspension provision in the Bill of Rights precisely because they thought the Constitution already made it clear enough that the President lacked such powers." Id.

39 "The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America." U.S. Const. art. II, § 1.

40 "He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States." U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

44 As stated above, the Court, at this time, declines to weigh in on the merits of the States' separate claim that the Memoranda violate the Take Care Clause. See footnote 4. However, the Court is interested in further briefing on this claim at the next stage of this litigation. In addition to any issues the Parties would like to bring to the Court's attention, the Parties should focus part of their briefing on whether the States can bring a Take Care Clause claim independent of or in conjunction with their APA claims.

47 https://constitutioncenter.org/interactive-constitution/interpretation/article-ii/clauses/348?aff_id=1000.

48 In so doing, the Government essentially foregoes any zone-of-interest challenge on the States' other APA claims, that is, those based on Section 1226(c) and those which are arguably not based on any of the statutes in question (i.e., the arbitrary and capricious and notice and comment claims).

49 In a status conference with the Parties on July 2, 2021, the Court asked whether the Government intended to file the administrative record for review. The Government declined stating that it was unnecessary at this stage of the litigation. (July 2, 2021, Status Conference, 10:00–10:15 A.M.). For their part, the States did not oppose the Government's position, and, instead, told the Court that it could dispose of the pending Motion for Preliminary Injunction without the full administrative record in hand. Id. In effect, the Parties agreed that the full administrative record is not necessary for the Court to rule on the arbitrary and capricious claim at this time.

"A court is ordinarily limited to evaluating the agency's contemporaneous explanation in light of the existing administrative record." Dep't of Com., ____ U.S. at ____, 139 S.Ct. at 2556 (citing Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 435 U.S. 519, 98 S.Ct. 1197, 55 L.Ed.2d 460 (1978)). As such, the Court will limit its inquiry to the findings, conclusions, and explanations provided in the February 18 Memorandum for its review. In addition, because the Court is ruling on a motion for preliminary injunction, the Court merely needs to determine "if there is a substantial likelihood that" the States "will prevail on the merits" of their arbitrary and capricious claim. Prichard, 812 F.2d at 993. It follows, therefore, that the disposition of the arbitrary and capricious claim, at this stage, is not final. Indeed, for at least one other district court, the lack of an administrative record was not a barrier for that court to rule on an arbitrary and capricious claim at this stage. See Nat'l Fed'n of Indep. Bus. v. Perez, No. 5:16-CV-00066-C, 2016 WL 3766121, at *23 & n.8, 28–29 (N.D. Tex. June 27, 2016).

50 To the extent the January 20 Memorandum's 100-day pause on removals and that Memorandum's corresponding administrative record are implicated in this action, the Court adopts its reasoning in Texas I and finds that the Government failed to engage in reasoned decision-making. ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *38–42. Thus, the Court adopts and incorporates by reference its prior decision that the January 20 Memorandum's 100-day pause is arbitrary and capricious.

51 The Court acknowledges it could be argued that, considering the transmissibility of COVID-19, the Executive Branch has chosen to detain fewer aliens to minimize the spread of the virus in detention facilities where it could not ensure proper safety precautions. But it could also be argued (and the CDC Report the Court describes above strongly suggests) that allowing certain aliens—those who would be detained but for the Memoranda—to be released within communities during the pandemic would exacerbate COVID-19's community spread. Regardless, the Memoranda fail to logically link the Executive Branch's bare COVID-19 justifications to the new guidance such that the Court can conclude the Memoranda were borne of reasoned decision making.

52 Not only that, the States' proposed limited policies are "obvious," "significant," and "viable" to this Court. See Jones, 716 F.3d at 215. It is incredibly obvious that a "reprioritization policy" that still effectuates and follows the law on detention and removals is more limited than the new guidelines. And surely, following laws should be significantly viable for the Executive Branch given it is required by the Constitution to enforce such laws. U.S. Const. art. II, §§ 1, 3.

53 " '[R]ule' means the whole or a part of an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or describing the organization, procedure, or practice requirements of an agency[.]" 5 U.S.C. § 551(4).

54 Specifically, the APA requires that "[g]eneral notice of proposed rule making shall be published in the Federal Register, unless persons subject thereto are named and either personally served or otherwise have actual notice thereof in accordance with law." Id. § 553(b) (emphasis added). And that notice shall contain "(1) a statement of the time, place, and nature of public rule making proceedings; (2) reference to the legal authority under which the rule is proposed; and (3) either the terms or substance of the proposed rule or a description of the subjects and issues involved." Id. The APA also requires an agency to "give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making," id. § 553(c), and that the "publication or service of a substantive rule shall be made not less than 30 days." Id. § 553(d).

55 The Fifth Circuit and the D.C. Circuit have emphasized that "unless a pronouncement acts prospectively, it is a binding norm. Thus ... a statement of policy may not have a present effect[.]" Shalala, 56 F.3d at 595; Am. Hosp. Ass'n v. Bowen, 834 F.2d 1037, 1046 (D.C. Cir. 1987). Here, the February 18 Memorandum states that "[t]his interim guidance is effective immediately." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 2) (emphasis added).
The Fifth Circuit cautions, however, that the "binding effect, not the timing, ... is the essence of criterion one." Shalala, 56 F.3d at 595 (emphasis added). Thus, the "[m]ere pronouncements of what the agency intends, whether for the present or for the future, which do not have a binding effect, are properly classified as interpretative rules." Cmty. Nutrition Inst., 818 F.2d at 946 n.4. This caveat is of no consequence here because the Court finds that the Memoranda have a binding effect due to their effect on the rights and obligations described.

56 In describing the criteria for determining whether a rule is a general statement of policy or a substantive rule requiring notice and comment, the Fifth Circuit has relied on the D.C. Circuit. See Shalala, 56 F.3d at 595 nn.15–16 (citing Cmty. Nutrition Inst., 818 F.2d at 943, and Am. Bus Ass'n, 627 F.2d at 529).

57 Specifically, the February 18 Memorandum states: "The approval to carry out an enforcement action against a particular noncitizen will not authorize enforcement actions against other noncitizens encountered during an operation if those noncitizens fall outside the presumption criteria identified above." (Dkt. No. 19-2 at 7). In such circumstances, "[a]n approval to take an enforcement action against any other noncitizen encountered who is not a presumed priority must be separately secured as described above." (Id.).

58 And "when the location of a proposed or completed enforcement action is a courthouse, ... or a sensitive location, ... that should be explicitly highlighted in the request." (Id. at 7 n.7) (citations omitted).

59 The Government implicitly invokes prosecutorial discretion with respect to any harm an injunction may cause its Article II authority. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 55). This argument does not warrant much discussion. Indeed, the Court has already extensively discussed the extent of the Executive's discretion in enforcing a law when a clear congressional mandate is in place. See supra II.B.3.

60 Relatedly, the Government argues that an injunction would harm it by dismantling the two-step process ICE currently undergoes to determine whether to detain an alien in state custody. See (Dkt. No. 42 at 56). Sections 1226(c) and 1231(a)(2) already mandate which aliens must be detained and the time at or for which the Government must detain the alien.

61 The States also request that the Court issue a positive injunction to compel agency action unlawfully withheld. (Dkt. No. 18 at 25–26); (Dkt. No. 51 at 33). The Government is opposed. (Dkt. No. 42 at 57–61). Under the APA, a "reviewing court shall ... compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed." 5 U.S.C. § 706(1). The Court reserves ruling on this issue until later in the litigation.

62 This Memorandum Opinion and Order does not prohibit the Government from carrying out or adhering to the February 18 Memorandum's subsections entitled "Notice of At-Large Enforcement Actions" and "Weekly Reporting of All Enforcement and Removal Actions."

63 This Court previously enjoined Section C of the January 20 Memorandum. See Texas I, ____ F. Supp. 3d at ____, 2021 WL 2096669, at *52.

Jurisdictional Statement

This is an appeal from the final order and judgment of the Circuit Court of Cole County entered on April 20, 2020. Following this Court's order allowing Appellants to file a Notice of Appeal by Special Order pursuant to Rule 81.07(a), the Notice of Appeal was filed on September 23, 2020.

This case does not involve any issues within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Missouri. Pursuant to Missouri Constitution, article 5, section 3, the Court of Appeals has jurisdiction over this appeal. The judgment from which the appeal is taken was entered within the territorial jurisdiction of the Western District of the Court of Appeals. § 474.050.

Statement of Facts and Procedural Background

On June 8, 2017, Appellants, Missouri State Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the League of Women Voters of Missouri, filed a Petition seeking injunctive and declaratory relief with respect to Missouri Revised Statute § 115.427. That statute, which went into effect on June 1, 2017, drastically reduced voters' options for identifying themselves in order to vote in person. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., 17AC-CC00309 (19th Jud. Cir. Ct.).[1] On December 6, 2017, the trial court granted Respondents' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings and dismissed Appellants' Petition for failure to state a claim. Id.

After this Court reversed that decision, the case was reinstated in November 2018 and proceeded at the trial court in case number 17AC-CC00309-01. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., WD81484; D83-84. On June 18, 2019, Appellants filed their Third Amended Petition. D98-106. After trial on the merits, the trial court dismissed the Third Amended Petition for lack of standing, mootness, and/or ripeness. The trial court did not address the merits of Plaintiffs' claims, but nonetheless dismissed the Petition with prejudice. That jurisdictional, or justiciability, dismissal with prejudice was error and is the issue in this appeal.

In Count I of the Third Amended Petition, Appellants asserted that § 115.427.1 cannot be enforced under § 115.427.6(3) because insufficient state funds were appropriated from the general revenue to properly implement § 115.427.1. D98 pp. 19-23. In Count II, Appellants asserted that the requirement in § 115.427.5 was violated by the failure to provide the public accurate and non-misleading "Advance Notice" about the law restricting the options for identifying oneself at the polls. D98 pp. 24-26.

The court held a bench trial from August 19 - 23, 2019. Thereafter, on April 20, 2020, the circuit court entered its final judgment, dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing and mootness, and dismissing Count II with prejudice as moot and not ripe in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo. banc 2020). D165.

On May 19, 2020, Appellants moved the court to amend its judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice. D166. The trial court did not rule on this post-trial motion. Appellants then filed a notice of appeal on August 26, 2020. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., WD83987. However, the parties then disputed whether the post-trial motion was authorized, which would have delayed the date upon which the judgment became final for appeal. Appellants then filed a motion to file a notice of appeal by special order, which was sustained. Appellants' Notice of Appeal was filed on September 23, 2020.

Argument

This appeal presents a discrete question of law: when a circuit court finds that it lacks subject-matter jurisdiction in a case because of a lack of standing, mootness, or ripeness, should it dismiss with or without prejudice? The answer is clear: when a circuit court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to resolve a dispute's underlying merits, it should dismiss claims without prejudice. See Charron v. State, 257 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) ("[T]he trial court erred in dismissing Appellant's petition with prejudice because the dismissal was for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Pursuant to our authority under Rule 84.14, we modify the judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice."); Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits."); Am. Indus. Res., Inc. v. T.S.E. Supply Co., 708 S.W.2d 806, 808–09 (Mo. App. E.D. 1986) ("Inasmuch as the trial court did not have jurisdiction … the dismissal is without prejudice to any further action appellant may wish to take"); see also Asberry v. Bannes-Shaughnessy, 734 S.W.2d 250, 252 (Mo. App. E.D. 1987) (explaining that the burden of proof on a motion for lack of subject matter jurisdiction "is lower since it is not a decision on the merits, the dismissal is without prejudice and because any action taken by a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction is void").

Whether a trial court dismisses a claim with or without prejudice is significant. "[D]ismissal with prejudice bars the assertion of the same cause of action or claim against the same party." Rule 67.01. Accord Empire Dist. Elec. Co. v. Coverdell, 588 S.W.3d

225, 237 (Mo. App. S.D. 2019). On the other hand, "[d]ismissal without prejudice is usually not an adjudication on the merits of the claim and does not affect the plaintiff's right to refile the action." Sexton v. Jenkins & Assocs., 152 S.W.3d 270, 273 (Mo. banc 2004). In certain circumstances, not applicable here, Appellants acknowledge that "a dismissal without prejudice may be considered a judgment on the merits of issues, such as jurisdiction, that are actually litigated and decided." Id. In this appeal, Appellants do not challenge the trial court's factual findings. Instead, Appellants assert only that the trial court erred in dismissing their claims with prejudice, thus preventing any chance they may have to vindicate their rights if they gain standing, the case is no longer moot, and the issues become ripe for adjudication.

The Missouri Constitution confers jurisdiction upon the circuit courts over "cases and matters." Mo. Const. art. V, sec. 14(a). "Article V of the Missouri Constitution governs subject-matter jurisdiction, which is the court's authority to render a judgment in a particular category of case." Peachtree Apartments v. Pallo, 317 S.W.3d 189, 192 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010); see also Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) ("Subject-matter jurisdiction concerns 'the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought 'and exists only when the court 'has the right to proceed to determine the controversy or question in issue between the parties, or grant the relief prayed.'" (citations omitted)). The Missouri Constitution "requires a case to be justiciable in order for the circuit court to have subject-matter jurisdiction over it." Id.; see also B.S. v. State, 966 S.W.2d 343, 344 (Mo. App. E.D. 1998).

Appellants do not dispute that a trial court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to decide the merits of a case where: (1) the plaintiff lacks standing; (2) the case is moot and no exception applies; or (3) the case is not ripe. But where the circuit court dismisses a case on one or more of these jurisdictional issues, it ought to do so without prejudice because any decision on the merits is inappropriate.

Point I

The circuit court erred in dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for lack of standing should be dismissed without prejudice, in that standing is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

While this Court "give[s] deference to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). Here, the issue on appeal is purely a question of law. Appellants do not dispute the underlying facts. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 22 (noting that, "[g]enerally, the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion[; h]owever, where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo"). The review here is straightforward because Appellants do not dispute the trial court's finding that they lack standing, only the court's act of dismissing the claims with prejudice based on that finding.

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve the issue, Appellants tried to resolve it with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion to amend the judgment to reflect dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v. Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

This Court has routinely found that a dismissal for lack of standing is a dismissal for want of subject matter jurisdiction. See, e.g., Chastain v. Geary, 539 S.W.3d 841, 848 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017) ("[T]he court does not have subject matter jurisdiction to decide substantive issues if the party lacks standing."); Doss v. Brown, 419 S.W.3d 784, 787 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012) ("A trial court does not have subject matter jurisdiction if a petitioner lacks standing to bring the action."); Querry v. State Highway & Transp. Comm'n, 60 S.W.3d 630, 637 (Mo. App. W.D. 2001) (same).

"Subject-matter jurisdiction concerns the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought and exists only when the court has the right to proceed to determine the controversy or question in issue between the parties, or grant the relief prayed." Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 21 (internal quotation omitted). "A dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits." § 510.150. Here, there should have been no adjudication on the merits where dismissal was for a lack of standing because "[w]hether considered a claim for lack of subject matter jurisdiction or lack of authority, a court, in disposing of a case for lack of standing, cannot reach the merits."[2]

[2] In Borges, this Court noted that "[i]t remains an open question whether a lack of standing implicates the court's jurisdiction or merely the court's authority, but we need not decide this issue given that this case should have been dismissed under either theory." 358 S.W.3d at 183. Like Borges, that issue need not be decided here; the solution in the present case is simply to dismiss the claim without prejudice because the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012); see also W. Cas. & Surety Co. v. Kansas City Bank & Trust Co., 743 S.W.2d 578, 580 (Mo. App. W.D. 1988) ("If [appellant] lacked standing, then its petition was subject to dismissal because it failed to establish the requisite subject matter jurisdiction. It must also follow that the trial court, lacking subject matter jurisdiction, could not enter a judgment on the merits for the [respondent].").

"Because standing is jurisdictional in nature, a dismissal for lack of standing is not 'on the merits' for res judicata purposes." Healthcare Servs. of the Ozarks, Inc. v. Copeland, 198 S.W.3d 604, 612 (Mo. banc 2006). Consequently, a dismissal for lack of standing should be without prejudice. See, e.g., Borges, 358 S.W.3d at 183-84 ("[O]nce it determined that [Plaintiffs] lacked standing, the trial court was without authority to reach any substantive claim, and, thus, dismissal should have been entered . . . . Therefore, we affirm the circuit court's finding that [Plaintiffs] lacked standing and enter the order the circuit court should have entered, dismissing without prejudice [Plaintiffs'] petition."); Eaton v. Doe, 563 S.W.3d 745, 750 (Mo. App. E.D. 2018) ("[B]ecause we have concluded the dismissal is due to a lack of standing, we modify the dismissal to be without prejudice, rather than with prejudice . . . . We affirm the judgment of the trial court as modified.").[3] trial court could not reach the merits if its dismissal was because Appellants lacked standing.

[3] The limited exception in which the Missouri Supreme Court has affirmed a dismissal for lack of standing with prejudice is distinguishable. See Mo. Coal. for Env't v.

State, 579 S.W.3d 924, 928 (Mo. banc 2019) (affirming dismissal with prejudice for lack of standing where plaintiffs conceded lack of taxpayer standing and where the Court held standing was not created by a statute). Plaintiffs' standing in that case could not be cured because it was foreclosed as a matter of law. There is no such lack of standing here. Appellants' lack of associational standing under the circuit court's order would be cured if individual Plaintiff members are denied their right to vote upon presenting themselves at the polls without a photo ID. D165 p. 2 ("The potential injured party would have to first, timely present himself to the polls and second, be eligible to vote. One cannot claim to be injured by a photo ID requirement unless they [are] otherwise eligible to vote, actually try to vote…but [are] not allowed to vote for a lack of a photo ID."). See W. Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Kan. City Bank & Tr. Co., 743 S.W.2d 578, 583 (Mo. App. W.D. 1988) (holding plaintiff was entitled to amend petition to cure defects with regard to standing).

[4] Appellants also acknowledge other cases include an unchallenged dismissal with prejudice on the basis of standing. Those cases, however, do not provide guidance because the issue of the denial being with (as opposed to without) prejudice was not raised or discussed. See Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 124 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018); Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017); *Mo. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Point II

The circuit court erred in dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice based on mootness because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for mootness should be dismissed without prejudice, in that mootness is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

As noted supra, although the Court defers "to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). "A circuit court does not have subject-matter jurisdiction under [a]rticle V, section 14(a) to adjudicate a case that is not justiciable because it has become moot." Peachtree Apartments v. Pallo, 317 S.W.3d 189, 192 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010). The issue before this Court is purely a question of law and thus subject to de novo review. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 22 (noting that, "[g]enerally, the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion[; h]owever, where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo").

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve this issue for appeal, Appellants did attempt to resolve this issue with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion seeking to have the judgment amended to reflect a dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

A dismissal for mootness is a dismissal for want of subject-matter jurisdiction and as such should be without prejudice. See, e.g., Rosenfeld v. Thoele, 28 S.W.3d 446, 451 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000) ("Moot cases should generally be dismissed, as the circuit court lacks subject matter jurisdiction."); B.S. v. State, 966 S.W.2d 343, 344-45 (Mo. App. E.D. 1998) ("Because plaintiffs 'cause of action was moot, it was not justiciable and the trial court did not have subject matter jurisdiction over it."); see also Jackson Cty. Bd. of Election Comm'rs ex rel. Brown v. City of Lee's Summit, 277 S.W.3d 740, 744 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) (raising mootness sua sponte after explaining that "[p]arties cannot . . . confer subject matter jurisdiction upon a court"). When courts lack subject matter jurisdiction to resolve the merits of a dispute, the claims should be dismissed without prejudice. Compare § 510.150 ("A dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits."), with Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits."); Charron v. State, 257 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) ("[T]he trial court erred in dismissing Appellant's petition with prejudice because the dismissal was for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Pursuant to our authority under Rule 84.14, we modify the judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Accordingly, because the law is clear that dismissal for mootness cannot be on the merits and thus must be without prejudice, appellate courts routinely modify such judgments. See Friends of the San Luis, Inc. v. Archdiocese of St. Louis, 312 S.W.3d 476, 485 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010) ("We remand the cause to the circuit court with instructions to vacate its judgment and to dismiss [Plaintiffs'] petition without prejudice due to the mootness of the controversy"); Defenses, 35 Mo. Prac., Cont., Eq. & Stat. Actions Handbook § 24:9 ("Moot cases should be dismissed without prejudice.").

The trial court erred in dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice for mootness, and this Court should enter judgment dismissing Counts I and II without prejudice.

Point III

The circuit court erred in dismissing Count II with prejudice based on ripeness because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for ripeness should be dismissed without prejudice, in that ripeness is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

While this Court "give[s] deference to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). Here, the issue on appeal—whether a claim that is not ripe should be dismissed with or without prejudice—is purely a question of law and is subject to de novo review.

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve this issue for appeal, Appellants did attempt to resolve this issue with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion seeking to have the judgment amended to reflect a dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v. Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

Ripeness implicates the justiciability of a claim and therefore any dismissal should not reach the merits of the case. As noted, however, "[a] dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits." § 510.150. Because the trial court cannot reach the merits if it determines a claim is not ripe for adjudication, dismissals on ripeness grounds have been modified by appellate courts, including the Missouri Supreme Court, to dismissals without prejudice. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 29 ("[B]ecause the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, and because the controversy is not ripe for review, the judgment of dismissal is modified to one without prejudice."); Schweich v. Nixon, 408 S.W.3d 769, 779 (Mo. banc 2013) ("While the lack of standing and ripeness does not implicate the merits of the Auditor's claims as to his own appropriation, it does preclude relief in this action. Accordingly, pursuant to Rule 84.14, this Court will issue the ruling that the trial court should have entered. The Auditor's claims are dismissed without prejudice."); see also Schultz v. Warren Cty., 249 S.W.3d 898, 902 (Mo. App. E.D. 2008) ("[B]ecause the controversy was not ripe for judicial review, the circuit court's judgment is one without prejudice . . . . The circuit court's judgment of dismissal is hereby modified to explicitly state that the dismissal is due to lack of ripeness and is one without prejudice.").

In addition, modifying the trial court's judgment to dismissal without prejudice on Count II is particularly warranted in this case as a prudential matter. The court made clear that Appellants 'request for mandatory injunctive relief could be cured and would become ripe if the Secretary of State failed to provide adequate advance notice to the public under the terms of the Priorities USA injunction:

> The Court finds that the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required, given the findings made and instructions given to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA. The Secretary of State is still obligated to provide advance notice in a manner calculated to generally inform the public. The original manner in which he tried to fulfill that obligation was found to be > deficient. The question of whether or not the Secretary's subsequent information campaigns avoid this deficiency is not yet ripe.

D165 pp. 5-6.

Should the Secretary of State fail to provide sufficient required advance notice, including by making inaccurate statements regarding the narrowing of identification options for voters in Missouri, Appellants should not be barred from seeking the appropriate mandatory injunctive relief in the future. Brinson v. Whittico, M.D., 793 S.W.2d 632, 634 (Mo. App. E.D. 1990) ("The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. Because the trial court deemed the lawsuit premature, it may either dismiss the lawsuit without prejudice or may allow the lawsuit to pend until ripe for adjudication.").

Thus, the circuit court erred in dismissing Count II with prejudice based on ripeness, and this Court should enter judgment dismissing Count II without prejudice.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Conclusion

Because Appellants' claims were dismissed based on jurisdictional grounds of standing and mootness and justiciability grounds of ripeness, the trial court should have dismissed the claims without prejudice. Appellants request that this Court, pursuant to its authority under Rule 84.14, dispose finally of the case by entering the judgment the trial court should have entered and dismiss Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition without prejudice.

STATEMENT OF FACTS 6

I. The circuit court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment after trial that dismissed with prejudice Plaintiffs' claims in Count I for lack of standing. (Responding to Point Relied On I). 11

A. This Court should review the trial court's dismissal with prejudice for abuse of discretion. 11

B. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I due to Plaintiffs' lack of standing. 14

II. The trial court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment that dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot or unripe. (Responding to Points Relied On II and III). 18

A. This Court should review the trial court's final judgment on mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion. 18

B. The trial court properly dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot because there is no realistic chance Plaintiffs can cure the mootness of their claims. 19

C. The trial court properly dismissed Count II with prejudice as unripe. 22

INTRODUCTION

The circuit court correctly issued a final judgment ruling that Plaintiffs lack standing to bring an insufficient-appropriations claim under Missouri's voter-identification law, that all of their claims are moot in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448, 461 (Mo. banc 2020), and that their statutory claims about insufficient advance notice of Missouri's voter identification requirements are not ripe. On appeal, Plaintiffs do not argue the merits of any of those determinations. Rather, they contend only that the trial court erred in dismissing their claims with prejudice. For three principal reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's with-prejudice dismissals and thereby reinforce the prevailing rule that trial courts have discretion to dismiss claims with or without prejudice based on the circumstances present in a case.

First, Plaintiffs apply the wrong standard of review of a trial court's decision to dismiss cases with or without prejudice; this Court should review for abuse of discretion and not exercise de novo review. See Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193, 198 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992) ("This court will not disturb the trial court's dismissal with prejudice absent a finding of a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court."); cf. Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) (de novo review of the merits of the dismissal may be appropriate where "the facts are uncontested.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, under the correct standard of review, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing. The trial court issued its judgment after a weeklong trial on Plaintiffs' third amended petition, the judgment references evidence elicited at trial, and the parties contested the facts of Plaintiffs' standing to bring the case. It would be futile, and it would prejudice Respondents, to transform the trial court's judgment into a mere dismissal without prejudice and allow Plaintiffs to bring the same suit again.

Third, the trial court correctly dismissed, with prejudice, Counts I and II as moot and Count II as unripe because there is no realistic probability that Plaintiffs can cure those problems in light of the Supreme Court's permanent injunctions in Priorities USA. Plaintiffs have not appealed the merits of the mootness question, and thus they have conceded that issue. It would be futile to allow them to bring their suit again, and nothing in Missouri law mandates that dismissals for mootness be without prejudice. The trial court also correctly dismissed Count II as unripe. Count II is purely a statutory claim where all the relief requested was provided in the Priorities USA injunctions based on the facts Plaintiffs pleaded, and Plaintiffs have not identified subsequent Voter ID advertising that violates those injunctions.

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's judgment dismissing Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition with prejudice.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Backed by a constitutional amendment ("Voter ID Amendment") approved by popular vote, in 2016 the State adopted its current voter identification statute that allows for voting with both photo and non-photo forms of identification. § 115.427, RSMo (the "Voter ID Law"). After a constitutional challenge to certain aspects of the Voter ID Law's requirements, the Missouri Supreme Court largely upheld the statute last year in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo. banc 2020). But the Court affirmed a trial court's declaration that the statute's affidavit requirement for some non-photo forms of identification was unconstitutional. And it upheld the lower court's injunctions against disseminating certain advertising materials about the Voter ID Law, including "materials with the graphic that voters will be asked to show a photo identification card without specifying other forms of identification which voters may also show," Id. at 460–61, and "materials which represent that a photo identification card is required to vote," (D165, p.5).

A. The Third Amended Petition's claims and early procedural history.

Plaintiffs in this case are two organizations and one individual Missouri voter. They filed the original Petition in June 2017, and the case has previously been before this Court in an earlier stage of litigation. See State Conference of Nat'l Ass'n for Advancement of Colored People v. State, 563 S.W.3d 138 (Mo.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

App. W.D. 2018) (hereinafter "NAACP I"). After this Court remanded the case to the circuit court for further proceedings, Plaintiffs filed their Third Amended Petition after a lower court's ruling in Priorities USA but before the Supreme Court's opinion. (D98).

In Count I, Plaintiffs brought a statutory claim seeking declaratory and injunctive relief that the personal identification requirements in the Voter ID Law may not be enforced due to insufficient legislative appropriations in fiscal years 2017 to 2019. (D98, p.23). In Count II, they sought various prohibitory and mandatory injunctions against advertising materials under § 115.427.5 of the Voter ID Law. (D98, pp.24–26). Specifically, in Count II Plaintiffs asked the trial court to:

> A. Issue an injunction barring the Secretary of State from telling the public that there is a photo ID requirement and/or from instructing poll workers to ask for photo IDs when voters come to the polls;
>
> B. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to provide public notice that there is no photo ID required for voting in Missouri;
>
> C. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to provide correct information to the public about the non-photo options;
>
> D. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to take down misleading advertisements that are still being used or made available to the public;
>
> E. Allow such other and further relief as is proper under the circumstances.

(D98, p.26).

The trial court presided over a weeklong trial in August 2019, where the court heard the testimony of several witnesses and admitted into evidence the parties' joint stipulated facts and exhibits. (D120–121). The parties did not stipulate to Plaintiffs' standing to bring the case. (Id.; D117). Respondents denied the Third Amended Petition's allegations that Plaintiffs have standing (D117, ¶¶14–18), raised lack of standing as an affirmative defense (id. at p. 7), and argued in their post-trial brief that Plaintiffs lack standing based on the evidence.

B. The parties brief the effect of the Priorities USA decision.

On January 14, 2020, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Priorities USA. The next day, the trial court asked the parties to submit memoranda concerning the effect of Priorities USA on this case. (D159). For Plaintiffs' appropriations claim in Count I, Respondents argued that it was moot because the Priorities USA decision already provided the only relief sought by Plaintiffs: a declaration and injunction that the Voter ID Law's identification requirements cannot be enforced. (D162, p.3). As to Plaintiffs' statutory claims in Count II regarding insufficient advance notice of the Voter ID Law's personal identification requirements, Respondents argued that Priorities USA also mooted these claims. Priorities USA upheld permanent injunctions against those very requirements, "any proposed negative relief was already granted," and "[n]either [§ 115.427.5] nor the order require additional notice campaigns or any of the other remedies Plaintiffs propose." (D162, p.4-6).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Plaintiffs responded to Respondents' Priorities USA arguments, contending that Count I is not moot because their relief requested—an order "directing that voters cannot be asked to show a Photo ID at the polls"—is not encompassed by Priorities USA. (D160 at p.3). For Count II, Plaintiffs agreed that "the Priorities USA remedial order prevents further dissemination of such misleading information," but they contended that it "does not affirmatively correct the existing misimpression." (D160, p.2). They asserted that the Voter ID Law's "obligation to provide advance notice necessarily requires the provision of accurate and non-misleading information." (Id.). In other words, Plaintiffs disagreed that Priorities USA precluded their claims in this case for a mandatory injunction to promote corrective advertisements.

C. The trial court's final judgment and post-judgment developments.

On April 20, 2020, the trial court issued a final judgment holding that Plaintiffs lacked standing to bring their claims in Count I, that Count I is moot under Priorities USA, and that Count II is both moot and not ripe under Priorities USA. (D165).

As to Count I, the trial court discussed what evidence a plaintiff must show to demonstrate injury under the photo ID requirement: "the potential injured party would have to first, timely present himself to the polls and second, be eligible to vote." (Id. at p.2). In a footnote, the court highlighted evidence actually introduced at trial regarding the ability of voters to vote with non-photo forms of identification. (Id. at n.5). The court held that the two organization plaintiffs lack associational standing and organizational standing, and it further held that taxpayer standing is not a theory on which the individual plaintiff here, Christine Dragonette, can base a claim for insufficient appropriations. (Id. at p.3). The court alternatively found that the injunctions upheld in Priorities USA render Count I moot, because the case held that the photo identification requirement "may not be enforced." (Id.).

As to Count II, the trial court compared the injunctions upheld in Priorities USA with the relief requested in this case. (Id. at p.4–6). The court held that "the prohibitory injunctions of Priorities USA [are] essentially the same as prayed for in this case[.]" (Id. at p.5). Referring to Plaintiffs' request for an injunction that the Secretary of State affirmatively issue correct advertisements, the court reasoned that "the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required given the findings made and instructions provided to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA." (Id.). The court also held that Count II is not ripe to the extent it is based on advertisements not yet promoted. (Id. at p.6).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

On May 19, 2020, Plaintiffs filed a motion to modify the judgment to transform the dismissals with prejudice to dismissals without prejudice. (D166). The trial court did not rule on that motion, and Plaintiffs eventually appealed the trial court's judgment under special order by the Court permitting a late notice of appeal. (D167, D168).

ARGUMENT

I. The circuit court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment after trial that dismissed with prejudice Plaintiffs' claims in Count I for lack of standing. (Responding to Point Relied On I).

A. This Court should review the trial court's dismissal with prejudice for abuse of discretion.

The correct standard of review is one for abuse of discretion, and not de novo review as Plaintiffs contend. Generally, an appellate court "will not disturb the trial court's dismissal with prejudice absent a finding of a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court." Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193, 198 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992) (citing Smith v. City of De Soto, 634 S.W.2d 204, 205 (Mo. App. 1982)). Application of this standard is universal in every district of the Court of Appeals. See id.; Peet v. Randolph, 103 S.W.3d 872, 876 (Mo. App. E.D. 2003) (reviewing for abuse of discretion trial court's with-prejudice dismissal of a case based on plaintiff's failure to prosecute); Saidawi v. Giovanni's Little Place, Inc., 987 S.W.2d 501, 505 (Mo. App. E.D. 1999) (holding "[t]here is no absolute right to amend a petition" and finding no abuse of discretion of the lower court's with-prejudice dismissal based on failure to state a claim); Allen v. City of Greenville, MO, 336 S.W.3d 508, n.3 (Mo. App. S.D. 2011) (noting the court would have applied abuse of discretion review to the lower court's prejudice determination if the appellant had raised it on appeal).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

An exception to that rule may apply when the question on appeal is whether the dismissal itself was proper and "the facts are uncontested." Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) (applying de novo review to the merits of the dismissal decision). But this case does not fall within any known exception to the general rule for several reasons, and Plaintiffs misapply the holding in Mo. Soybean Ass'n.

First, Plaintiffs have not appealed the trial court's decision on standing—they appeal only the dismissal being with prejudice. The trial court issued a final judgment after the trial, and the issue of Plaintiffs' standing was a preserved issue for trial. (See D117, Respondents' Answer and Affirmative Defenses, pp.15-16). The trial court did not rule on a motion to dismiss where the court would have assumed Plaintiffs' "averments in their petition are true." Cmty. Care Ctr. of Lemay v. Missouri Health Facilities Review Comm., 92 S.W.3d 232, 234 (Mo. App. W.D. 2002) (reviewing de novo the merits of a lower court's grant of a motion to dismiss for lack of standing); cf. Mo. Soybean Ass'n,

102 S.W.3d at 21 (procedural history indicates the case was decided after a trial or hearing on a combined motion to dismiss and for summary judgment).[1]

Unlike a motion to dismiss, where the facts are uncontested, or a summary judgment motion, where there can be no disputed material facts, Respondents contested Plaintiffs' lack of standing. The issue here is not "purely a question of law" as in Mo. Soybean Ass'n. Respondents denied the Third Amended Petition's allegations that Plaintiffs have standing, and Respondents raised lack of standing as an affirmative defense. (D117). Respondents also raised the issue in their post-trial brief, highlighting the lack of evidence Plaintiffs submitted at trial to support their standing. And in its final judgment the trial court referenced evidence introduced at trial as to Plaintiffs' standing. (D165, n.5).

Second, Missouri Supreme Court Rule 67.03 also supports giving the trial court discretion to issue a judgment with prejudice, stating that "Any involuntary dismissal shall be without prejudice unless the court in its order for dismissal shall otherwise specify." Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 67.03 (emphasis added).

[1] In addition to Mo. Soybean Ass'n, other cases cited by Plaintiffs in their brief also considered dismissals without prejudice upon a motion to dismiss. E.g., Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004). Furthermore, other cases rested on the specific language of a previous version of Rule 67.03 or did not state a standard of review at all. E.g., Am. Indus. Res., Inc. v. T.S.E. Supply Co., 708 S.W.2d 806, 808–09 (Mo. App. E.D. 1986).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - April 05, 2021 - 04:43 PM

The plain language of the Rule contemplates a court's discretion to specify the prejudicial effect of its dismissal.

Finally, review for abuse of discretion makes sense because it is the standard that governs review of denials of leave to amend a petition. Gohlston v. Lightfoot, 825 S.W.2d 864, 869 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992). In those situations, "the denial of amendment is presumed correct and the burden is on the proponent to show an abuse of discretion." Id. Dismissals with prejudice are analogous to denials of leave to amend a petition because both effectively prohibit a party to re-plead claims in a future action. There is no principled distinction between these two conceptually similar determinations for purposes of applying a standard of review.

For all these reasons, this Court should apply the abuse of discretion standard and confirm that Plaintiffs carry the burden to show that the trial court abused its discretion in dismissing each count of the Third Amended Petition with prejudice.

B. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I due to Plaintiffs' lack of standing.

The argument section of Plaintiffs' first point on appeal is virtually devoid of legal argument, instead consisting almost exclusively of parenthetical quotations from case law. Because they apply the wrong standard of review, Plaintiffs do not argue how the trial court abused its discretion for issuing a final judgment holding that they lack standing.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Under the abuse of discretion standard, "[d]iscretion means the option that the trial judge has in doing or not doing that which a litigant does not have the absolute right to demand." Jennings v. City of Kansas City, 812 S.W.2d 724, 735 (Mo. App. W.D. 1991). "Abuse of that discretion means an untenable judicial act that defies reason and works an injustice. . . . [or] [w]hen the trial court's ruling clearly offends the logic of the circumstances or when it becomes arbitrary and unreasonable." Id. Under the appropriate standard, the trial court soundly exercised its discretion.

First, because the circuit court held a trial where evidence was presented on Plaintiffs' lack of standing, it was proper for the court to decide the standing question on the merits and issue a final judgment. The trial court's decision was properly denominated a "judgment" and it became final 30 days after it was issued. Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 81.05(a)(1). Nothing about issuing a final judgment after trial is arbitrary and unreasonable, or is an injustice against Plaintiffs. During the multiple years of litigation in this case, including a trip to this Court in NAACP I, Plaintiffs amended their original Petition three times and had ample opportunity to develop a case with a party possessing standing.[2]

[2] Plaintiffs do not raise on appeal the merits of the trial court's judgment on standing, mootness, or ripeness. The decision below was a final judgment, the Second, amending the trial court's final judgment to simply a dismissal order without prejudice would undermine the work of the parties and the courts in multi-year litigation, which reached a trial on the merits and resulted in a final judgment.[3] It would reward Plaintiffs the benefit of liberal re-pleading rules that accompany a dismissal without prejudice by allowing them to re-plead the same cause of action while remaining plaintiffs to that case. And it would effectively announce a rule that no Missouri case supports—that courts must always dismiss a case without prejudice due to lack of standing, even if denominated as final judgment after a contested trial. This would destabilize a customary practice in Missouri's appellate courts of affirming dismissals with prejudice, and it is not necessary in this case. See, e.g., Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 124 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018); Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017); Mo. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Oneok, Inc., 318 S.W.3d 134, 139 (Mo. App. W.D. 2009).

finality of which was addressed in Respondents' opposition to Plaintiffs' filing of a late notice of appeal. The finality of the judgment was necessarily affirmed by this Court's special order allowing Plaintiffs to file a late notice of appeal. Plaintiffs have elected not to appeal the merits of the judgment, and so they have forfeited those claims on appeal. E.g., Eckel v. Eckel, 540 S.W.3d 476, n.17 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018) (an issue not presented in a point relied on is not preserved for review); see also Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 84.04(d).

[3] This Court's opinion in NAACP I, 563 S.W.3d at 142–47, thoroughly discusses the procedural history of this case and the claims Plaintiffs raised in their original, first amended, and second amended petitions.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - April 05, 2021 - 04:43 PM

Third, this Court should reject any argument Plaintiffs make that they can cure their pleading defects regarding standing and therefore a without-prejudice dismissal is appropriate. Plaintiffs do not squarely argue they can or will cure this defect. Instead they allude to it in a footnote in their brief as a possibility if the two organizational plaintiffs identify members who present themselves at the polls without a photo ID and suffer an injury from the Voting ID Law. (App. Br. at n.3). Plaintiffs amended their Petition three times and had over two years of litigation to find at least one member of their organizations who has standing to bring their claims. They failed to do so. But even if the organizational plaintiffs did find such an individual in their ranks, the theory of their case—and likely the factual allegations and evidence—would presumably be the same. The circuit court's judgment below is final and as such has the appropriate preclusive affect under the doctrines of collateral estoppel and res judicata. The extent of that

Lastly, the trial court held that Priorities USA mooted any of the pleaded claims for relief in Count I. Because Plaintiffs did not raise the merits of the mootness decision on appeal and the decision below is a final judgment, they have forfeited raising the same claims in the same form again. It would thus be futile for this Court to modify the trial court's judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice.

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's exercise of discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing.

II. The trial court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment that dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot or unripe. (Responding to Points Relied On II and III).

A. This Court should review the trial court's final judgment on mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion.

As with the trial court's final judgment disposing of Plaintiffs' claims in Count I with prejudice, this Court should review the trial court's with-prejudice dismissals as to mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion. Plaintiffs again cite the incorrect standard of review in light of the claims they actually raised on appeal. De novo review might be appropriate if Plaintiffs had contested the merits of the dismissals themselves, not merely whether the trial erred in dismissing Plaintiffs' claims with prejudice. De novo review was applied in Mo. Soybean Ass'n because the Court reviewed the substantive question of whether the trial court properly dismissed the underlying claim as unripe and for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction, not whether the trial court erred by doing so with or without prejudice. 102 S.W.3d at 22 ("a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo."). Plaintiffs here have not appealed the trial court's mootness or ripeness determinations. Thus, the general rule of reviewing for abuse of discretion applies. See Williams, 841 S.W.2d at 198.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

B. The trial court properly dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot because there is no realistic chance Plaintiffs can cure the mootness of their claims.

Plaintiffs have elected not to appeal the merits of the trial court's decision to dismiss Counts I and II as moot in light of Priorities USA. They have therefore forfeited that issue on appeal. Assuming, as this Court therefore must, that the trial court did properly dismiss Plaintiffs' claims as moot, the trial court appropriately exercised its discretion by dismissing them with prejudice.

The principal rationale for dismissing cases without prejudice is that it permits a party to bring another action for the same cause, if it is not otherwise barred. See Mahoney v. Doerhoff Surgical Servs., Inc., 807 S.W.2d 503, 506 (Mo. banc 1991). "Ordinarily, when an action is dismissed without prejudice, a plaintiff may cure the dismissal by filing another suit in the same court." Osuji v. Missouri Dept. of Social Services, Div. of Family Services, 34 S.W.3d 251, 253 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000). As other courts have held, "where the pleading's deficiencies 'cannot be cured by re-pleading, because [the claims fail] as a matter of law,' dismissal with prejudice may be appropriate." Timber Point Properties III, LLC v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2014 WL 7005195, at *1 (W.D. Mo. Dec. 10, 2014) (quoting Rickmyer v. Browne, 995 F.Supp.2d 989, 1019

(D.Minn.2014)); see also McLean v. United States, 566 F.3d 391, 400 (4th Cir. 2009) ("Courts, including this one, have held that when a complaint is incurable through amendment, dismissal is properly rendered with prejudice and without leave to amend.")); McKesson HBOC, Inc. v. New York State Common Ret. Fund, Inc., 339 F.3d 1087, 1096 (9th Cir. 2003) (dismissal with prejudice is appropriate where "deficiencies in [plaintiff's] claims cannot be cured by amendment").

There is no principled reason why a similar rule does not apply in Missouri for with-prejudice dismissals for mootness. Indeed, this same rationale inspires the analysis of a denial of leave to amend a petition, which is conceptually similar to dismissals with prejudice. See Gohlston, 825 S.W.2d at 869; Bratt v. Cohn, 969 S.W.2d 277, 284 (Mo. App. W.D. 1998) (denial of plaintiffs' motion to file second amended petition was not an abuse of discretion because it "did not cure the deficiencies of their first amended petition."). Nothing in Missouri law mandates dismissal without prejudice when the court's basis is mootness.

Plaintiffs have not argued on appeal how a subsequent lawsuit could cure the mootness problems found by the trial court in light of Priorities USA. And because Plaintiffs have not raised that argument, they have forfeited it. As in their first point on appeal, the argument section of their second point on appeal consists almost exclusively of parenthetical quotations from cases, not substantive legal argument. The Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA affirmed the lower court's permanent injunctions, which—as the trial court below properly found, and which is not contested by Plaintiffs on appeal—encompasses the very relief Plaintiffs sought in this case. (D165, p.5).

The cases Plaintiffs cite in their brief are inapposite. For example, in Friends of the San Luis, Inc. v. Archdiocese of St. Louis, 312 S.W.3d 476 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010), the trial court made no determination as to mootness; instead, mootness came after the trial court's ruling, and the trial court dismissed the case with prejudice for lack of standing. Id. at 477. The parties addressed the merits of the post-decision mootness question on appeal and the appellate court thus considered it on the merits. Id. at 483. The appellate court's decision discussed the various public-interest reasons why it vacated the lower court's standing decision and held the controversy should be dismissed without prejudice due to mootness, including because the respondent on appeal did not oppose that remedy. Id. at 485. None of those unique circumstances are present here, and Friends of the San Luis certainly does not announce a rule that circuit court dismissals due to mootness must always be without prejudice.

Deciding whether a case should be dismissed with or without prejudice is within the sound discretion of the court deciding the mootness question. Plaintiffs have failed to appeal the merits of the trial court's mootness decision. And they have altogether failed to argue in their brief how they might obtain relief in a future, re-pleaded cause of action based on appropriations for Voter ID Law advertising that is not encompassed by the permanent injunctive relief ordered in Priorities USA.

This Court should therefore affirm the trials court's decision dismissing as moot Counts I and II with prejudice.

C. The trial court properly dismissed Count II with prejudice as unripe.

The trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing Count II with prejudice as unripe. Though this Court can affirm the trial court's dismissal of Count II as moot and therefore avoid ruling on Appellants' third point on appeal, there are independent and sufficient grounds to affirm the trial court's dismissal with prejudice of Count II as unripe.

The Supreme Court in Priorities USA affirmed lower-court injunctions concerning the Secretary of State's advertising the Voter ID Law. As the trial court in this case held, "[t]he Secretary of State is still obligated to provide advance notice in a manner calculated to generally inform the public." (D165, p.5). No party has filed suit complaining of the Secretary's subsequent advertising efforts or compliance with the Priorities USA decision.

If a party has any good-faith allegations that the Secretary of State's Office has not complied with the permanent injunctions in Priorities USA, those allegations might support a claim for which a party can bring a new action. But Plaintiffs' claims in Count II rest on an entirely separate theory than that potential cause of action. In Count II, Plaintiffs alleged that expenditures on advertising resulted in incorrect and misleading advertising and that the Secretary of State's Office did not issue appropriate corrective advertising. (D98, pp.24–26). Count II is a strict statutory claim, resting solely on § 115.427.5 of the Voter ID Law. The Supreme Court in Priorities USA already analyzed claims for violations of that same statute similar to Plaintiffs' claims in Count II. Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 459–61.

As the trial court here found, the permanent injunctions in Priorities USA encompass essentially the same relief Plaintiffs sought on their advertising claims and "the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required, given the findings made and instructions given to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA." (D165, pp. 5–6). In mentioning mandatory injunctions, the trial court was necessarily referring to the relief sought by Plaintiffs in Count II to issue new, corrective advertising (D98, p.26). The trial court was correct in ruling that the Priorities USA decision forecloses any relief that Plaintiffs actually requested in Count II of the Third Amended Petition based § 115.427.5, and Plaintiffs do not challenge the correctness of that portion of the judgment below.

To the extent Plaintiffs bring a future cause of action based on similar facts due to advertising of the Voter ID Law, any such allegations likely cannot be premised § 115.425.7. Plaintiffs did not plead claims premised on the Priorities USA injunctions even though the trial court's decision in that case was issued prior to the Third Amended Petition's filing. To that end, even though the Third Amended Petition cites Priorities USA in Count II, it narrows the Count's focus to a "violation of the statute." (D98, p.26). Claims for relief requested in a future lawsuit based on the same facts alleged in the Third Amended Petition but premised on § 115.427.5 and not the Priorities USA permanent injunctions are not yet ripe, nor can they ever be ripe. Priorities USA forecloses the relief Plaintiffs requested based on the facts and theory of the case they pleaded. There exists a hypothetical claim based on Priorities USA's permanent injunctions that may eventually be ripe, but that is not the claim in Count II of the Third Amended Petition here.

For these reasons, it would be futile to allow Plaintiffs to re-plead the same cause of action under § 115.427.5, for the same relief, and based on future—but presently unripe—facts. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing with prejudice Count II as unripe.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, this Court should affirm the circuit court's decision.

Argument

I. De novo is the correct standard of review in this case, and Appellants do not misapply the holding in Missouri Soybean Association v. Missouri Clean Water Commission, 102 S.W.3d 10 (Mo banc. 2003).

The issue presented here is purely a question of law, the underlying facts are uncontested, and the correct standard of review in this case is de novo. See Appellants' Opening Br. at pp. 14–15, 18–19, 21.

The cases relied on by Respondents do not alter the conclusion that review of whether dismissal should have been with prejudice is de novo. In Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992), the case was dismissed with prejudice on a motion for judgment on the pleadings because the court found that the plaintiff failed to sufficiently plead claims alleging a violation of due process and conversion. Id. at 194–97.[1] In upholding the dismissal with prejudice as to the due process claim, this Court noted that "[w]hen a trial court concludes that pleadings do not state a cause of action, and when adequate opportunity to amend has been provided, it is not error for the trial court to dismiss with prejudice." Id. Williams does not support abuse-of-discretion review here. In this case, the dismissal was not based upon a finding that Appellants failed to state a claim, nor was the opportunity to amend provided but not utilized. Williams did not address a dismissal based on standing, mootness, or ripeness—the grounds for dismissal here. While Respondents note that the Williams court relied on

[1] The dismissal of the conversion claim was reversed and that claim was remanded to allow for further development of the facts so that the plaintiff could attempt to prove his claim against the City. Williams, 841 S.W.2d at 197; see also id. n.3.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Smith v. City of De Soto, 634 S.W.2d 204 (Mo. App. W.D. 1982), Smith too is a case where the court dismissed a case with prejudice for failure to state a claim—there because the plaintiff "cite[d] no authority to support his contention a municipal corporation may be held liable in quantum meruit." Id. at 204–05 (noting that the law states the contrary). Like in Williams, the plaintiff in Smith sought a dismissal without prejudice so that he could amend his petition. This Court affirmed the dismissal with prejudice noting that, in the context of that case, the defendant should not have to respond to additional amended petitions because as a legal matter it would be impossible to cure the legal defect that resulted in dismissal. Smith, 634 S.W.2d at 205.

In Peet v. Randolph, 103 S.W.3d 872, 874 (Mo. App. E.D. 2003), the plaintiff sought specific performance of a real estate contract. After a summary judgment ruling for defendants, followed by an appeal and remand, the case was then ultimately dismissed with prejudice for failure to prosecute. Id. There, the trial court believed that the plaintiff failed to reasonably explain his failure to take any action for nearly a year following the remand and noted that it was plaintiff's responsibility to file a motion. Id. In finding that the court abused its discretion, the Eastern District noted that, while dismissal for failure to prosecute is typically within the trial court's judicial discretion, because of the "lack of a local rule delineating the plaintiff's responsibilities on remand, the lack of any scheduling conference or schedule on remand, this Court's mandate that a trial be held, and the plaintiff's readiness to proceed to trial, the trial court clearly abused its discretion in dismissing this case." Id. at 876–78 (further noting that no dismissal was appropriate, with or without prejudice, reinstating the cause of action, and ordering that it be reassigned to a new trial judge). There, again, the dismissal was not based on standing, mootness, or ripeness. A case with such different facts is not authority to depart from de novo review on the question of law presented in this appeal.

Saidawi v. Giovanni's Little Place, Inc., 987 S.W.2d 501, 504–05 (Mo. App. E.D. 1999), also involves a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. In reversing the dismissal with prejudice of three counts but affirming the dismissal of a fourth count, the Eastern District found that plaintiff had failed to plead sufficient facts to allege the necessary elements of a prima facie tort and noted that "[t]here is no absolute right to amend a petition." Id. at 505. In Allen v. City of Greenville, 336 S.W.3d 508, 511 (Mo. App. S.D. 2003), the dismissal again followed from a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. The Southern District reviewed the underlying decision to dismiss de novo and, in a footnote citing Saidawi and Williams, stated that whether to dismiss with or without prejudice, while not raised as a point on appeal, would be within the discretion of the trial court. Id. at 512, 512 n.3. In many cases the decision might be within the court's discretion. In this case, however, the court lacked such discretion and the dismissal should be reviewed de novo.

Unlike the cases relied upon by Respondents, there is no dispute here as to whether Appellants' petition stated a claim or whether they prosecuted their case. This case concluded after a week-long trial that included multiple witnesses—including significant expert testimony—and extensive post-trial briefing. Although the trial court did dismiss this case with prejudice, it never reached the merits of Appellants' claims, nor could it have. The dismissal was based only on standing (Count I), mootness (Counts I and II), and ripeness (Count II). Each of these is a requirement for the circuit court's jurisdiction or authority to decide the case or justiciability, not the merits of the case itself.

"[T]he authority to render judgment in a particular case is … the definition of subject matter jurisdiction …." Webb v. Wyciskalla, 275 S.W.3d 249, 254 (Mo banc. 2003). This case is simply not like the cases relied on by Respondents. And while Missouri Soybean Association v. Missouri Clean Water Commission, 102 S.W.3d 10 (Mo banc. 2003), examined whether a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief claim could be brought at all, it is similar to the present case in that the facts were uncontested, it discussed the court's jurisdiction and authority to hear the case, and the issue on appeal was purely one of law. This Court should not depart from Missouri Soybean Association by holding that the abuse-of-discretion standard has universal application in all cases involving the review of a lower court's decision to dismiss a case with prejudice.

In Missouri Soybean Association, the lower court dismissed the case with prejudice for a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. Id. at 14. There, like here, the parties did not dispute the underlying facts of the case (concerning state inclusion of rivers on a list of impaired waters that is then submitted to the EPA and triggers specific programs designed to improve the water quality), so the appeal centered on whether the plaintiffs could even bring a declaratory judgment action seeking injunctive relief challenging the promulgation of the list as rulemaking. Id. at 14–23. Whether the circuit court had the authority to adjudicate the case was a question of subject-matter jurisdiction. More specifically, the issue was whether plaintiffs were properly challenging "the validity of a rule or the threatened application of such a rule" under § 536.050.1 such that the lower court would have the authority (i.e., subject-matter jurisdiction) to hear a declaratory judgment action. Id. at 22. If they were, then the court would have the power to render a declaratory judgment. If the promulgation of the list was not rulemaking, the court had no authority over the case—i.e., it lacked subject-matter jurisdiction.

While noting that, "[g]enerally the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion[,]" the court went on to find that "where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo." Id. at 22. Ultimately, the Missouri Supreme Court found that the promulgated list was not a rule and therefore "the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction pursuant to section 536.050.1 to render the sought-after declaratory judgment." Id. at 25–26 (noting further that because "the appellants could not even predict the effect such a declaratory judgment would have[,] … it would thus "not have a 'conclusive effect' or 'lay to rest the parties' controversy'" as is required by the general principles underlying declaratory judgment actions). Additionally, the supreme court noted that "the authority of the courts of this State to render declaratory judgments must be used and operate within the limits of the constitutional powers and duties of the courts" and, "[o]ne such limit is the traditional doctrine of ripeness, which, when applied in this case, also commands dismissal of the appellants' actions." Id. at 26. In closing, the supreme court concluded that, because the challenged list promulgated by the defendants "is not a rule and the inclusion of the

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - May 04, 2021 - 06:37 PM

Rivers not rulemaking, and because the controversy cannot be resolved by declaratory judgment and is not ripe for adjudication, the judgment of dismissal is affirmed. However, because the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, and because the controversy is not ripe for review, the judgment of dismissal is modified to one without prejudice." Id. at 29 (emphasis added) (citing Rule 84.14).

Therefore, while dismissals may be reviewed for an abuse of discretion in certain contexts, that standard of review is not appropriate in this particular case, just as it was not appropriate in Missouri Soybean Association. This Court is not being asked to determine whether the dismissal itself was appropriate under the circumstances; it is instead being asked to decide a pure question of law: should the dismissal have been with or without prejudice when that dismissal was based solely on standing, mootness, and ripeness—i.e., the jurisdiction or authority of a circuit court and the justiciability of the claims raised.

In any event, even if this Court were to review the dismissal with prejudice for an abuse of discretion, the circuit court erred. Under that standard, this Court must reverse the circuit court's ruling "'if it is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to shock the sense of justice and indicates a lack of careful consideration.'" State ex rel. Scherschel v. City of Kansas City, 470 S.W.3d 391, 397 (Mo. App. W.D. 2015) (quoting Burnett v. Kansas City Sch. Bd., 237 S.W.3d 237, 238–39 (Mo. App. W.D. 2007)); see also Peet, 103 S.W.3d at 876–77 ("Judicial discretion is abused when the trial court's ruling is clearly against the logic of the circumstances then before the court and is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to show a lack of careful consideration and shock the sense of justice.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Moreover, "[a]n abuse of discretion occurs where the [trial] court rests its conclusion on clearly erroneous factual findings or erroneous legal conclusions." Minn. Citizens Concerned for Life, Inc. v. Swanson, 692 F.3d 864, 870 (8th Cir. 2012) (en banc); see also Sandusky Wellness Center, LLC v. Medtox Scientific, Inc., 821 F.3d 992, 995 (8th Cir. 2016) ("A district court abuses its discretion if, as relevant here, it commits an error of law."). In reviewing questions of law, this Court "reviews the trial court's determination independently, without deference to that court's conclusions." Pearson v. Koster, 367 S.W.3d 36, 43–44 (Mo. banc 2012) (quotation and citation omitted). As supported by the discussion, infra, not only was dismissing the claims with prejudice here unreasonable considering the bases for dismissal were a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and non-justiciability but dismissing with prejudice under these circumstances was an erroneous legal conclusion because the circuit court had no authority to reach the merits of the case.

Rule 67.03 is irrelevant to the issues in this appeal. Although the rule states that an involuntary dismissal is "without prejudice unless the court in its order for dismissal shall otherwise specify[,]" this does not authorize a court to reach the merits of a case when it otherwise lacks jurisdiction or authority to do so. A circuit court does not have the discretion to overstep in this manner. Additionally, a trial court's decision to deny a party's request to amend a petition—a ruling that would be properly reviewed for an abuse of discretion—is, once again, easily distinguishable from a case like this one, where a circuit court improperly reaches the merits of a case despite lacking jurisdiction or authority to do so based upon standing, ripeness, and mootness. And, as discussed, infra, standing could be achieved and the circumstances could change in such a way that the claims become ripe and no longer moot.

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - May 04, 2021 - 06:37 PM

To obtain judgment on the merits in any case, plaintiffs must have standing, the case must not be moot (or, if moot, it must meet an exception), and the case must be ripe. In other words, standing, mootness, and ripeness are prerequisites for a court to reach the merits of a case.[2] See, e.g., Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58,

[2] As this Court has noted, "[i]t remains an open question whether a lack of standing implicates the court's jurisdiction or merely the court's authority, but we need not decide this issue given that this case should have been dismissed under either theory." Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012) ("affirm[ing] the circuit court's finding that Borges and Johnson lacked standing and enter[ing] the order the circuit court should have entered, dismissing without prejudice Borges and Johnson's petition" pursuant to Rule 84.14). Presumably, in Borges, this Court was alluding to the recent discussion of jurisdiction versus authority in Webb v. Wyciskalla, 275 S.W.3d 249, 253 (Mo. banc 2009), where the Missouri Supreme Court noted that "[s]ubject-matter jurisdiction, in contrast to personal jurisdiction, is not a matter of a state court's power over a person, but the court's authority to render a judgment in a particular category of case." (noting that, unlike federal courts, the circuit courts in Missouri "have original jurisdiction over all cases and matters, civil and criminal"). "[T]he authority of a court to render judgment in a particular case is, in actuality, the definition of subject matter jurisdiction…." Id. at 254.

While the law surrounding jurisdiction versus authority continues to evolve in court decisions, the issue need not be reached here. Under either theory, dismissal for standing, mootness, or ripeness should be without prejudice.

In Borges, before recognizing that the issue may be one of authority and not jurisdiction, this Court recognized that "[i]n the past, we have found that if a party lacks standing sufficient to maintain an action, the court necessarily does not have jurisdiction over the claims presented." Id. (citing W. Cas. & Surety Co. v. Kansas City Bank & Trust Co., 743 S.W.2d 578, 580 (Mo. App. W.D.1988) ("If [appellant] lacked standing, then its petition was subject to dismissal because it failed to establish the requisite subject matter jurisdiction. It must also follow that the trial court, lacking subject matter jurisdiction, could not enter a judgment on the merits for the [respondent]."). "Therefore, a claim that a party lacks standing has generally been treated as a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Rule 55.27(a)(1)." Id. (citing State ex rel. Christian Health

63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits.").

II. Dismissal of Count I for lack of standing should be without prejudice because standing could be achieved and the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits.

The underlying facts in this case are uncontested. It makes no difference in this appeal that Appellants asserted that they had standing below and maintained that argument through the post-trial filings. In this appeal, Appellants have elected not to dispute the circuit court's ultimate finding that they lack standing to bring Count I. However, it remains true that, "once the circuit court determined that they lacked standing, it was without jurisdiction to reach the merits of their claims." Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012). A plaintiff without standing "presents no legally justiciable issue," and therefore, "the trial court should have dismissed the[] petition without prejudice." Id. at 184. Thus, while dismissal of a claim where a plaintiff lacks standing is appropriate, what is not appropriate is a dismissal with prejudice that, by definition, reaches the merits of the claim.

"A dismissal with prejudice constitutes an adjudication on the merits and 'bars the assertion of the same cause of action or claim against the same party.'" Doe v. Visionaire Corp., 13 S.W.3d 674, 676 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000) (quoting Rule 67.01). As such, courts do not have any "discretion" to reach the merits of a case where plaintiffs lack standing. Here, the circuit court erred in making a dismissal with prejudice. However, the circuit court did not abuse any discretion, because it had no discretion to abuse under the circumstances.

Amending the dismissal to one without prejudice would not undermine any aspect of this case. While Appellants agree that everyone worked very hard to litigate this case over the span of several years, including a week-long trial and two appeals to this Court, that is simply the nature of litigation. It is not always fast or easy. Moreover, here, standing is curable and could be achieved in the future. The court's determination that these particular plaintiffs did not have standing under the circumstances does not preclude Appellants from ever having standing in the future. This further distinguishes this case from one where a decision related to standing might be based upon undisputed facts but where those facts failed to state a claim at all.

Here, even the circuit court recognized that "[s]tanding is a jurisdictional matter antecedent to the right of relief." D165 p. 2. The circuit court found that, to have standing to challenge the insufficient funding of § 115.427 in a manner that would preclude enforcement, a person who is eligible to vote would have to timely appear at the polls, try to vote, and be turned away for lack of a proper photo identification. Id. If a member of the organizational plaintiffs suffered this harm, according to the circuit court's order, the organization would have associational standing. Additionally, Missouri courts could—and arguably should—begin to embrace organizational standing, just as federal courts have for decades. See Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363 (1982). Thus, standing to raise the claims is achievable and plaintiffs, with their thousands of members, should not be forever barred because the circuit court found they lacked standing at the time of the trial.

Amending the judgment to a dismissal without prejudice in this case would not destabilize any purported "customary practice" of appellate courts affirming dismissals with prejudice where the issue involved a party's standing. And, if it is a customary practice of appellate courts in this state to affirm dismissals with prejudice based solely upon a lack of standing then that practice should be revisited given the legal error involved and dangerous precedent it sets and the many decisions indicating that a court should not reach the merits of a case when the plaintiffs lack standing.

The cases relied on by Respondents to support this argument are inapposite. In all three of the cited cases, the dismissals were based upon the pleadings, the review of the dismissal itself was de novo, and the plaintiffs argued only that their pleadings were sufficient to demonstrate standing but did not raise the issue of whether the dismissal should be with or without prejudice. Therefore, none of the cases include any discussion or point of error related to the fact that the cases were denied with prejudice. In Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 117 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018), and Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017), the plaintiffs argued that they pleaded sufficient facts to establish standing to challenge violations of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) and did not raise any argument related to the petitions being denied with prejudice. In both cases, this Court looked at the sufficiency of the pleadings to determine if the plaintiffs pled injuries establishing standing for an FCRA claim. Campbell, 561 S.W.3d at 120–21; see also Corozzo, 531 S.W.3d at 572. Likewise, in Missouri Public Service Commission v. Oneok, Inc., 318 S.W.3d 134, 137 (Mo. App. W.D. 2009), the appeal followed a lower court's dismissal for lack of standing based upon the allegations in the petition and no error was asserted relating to the dismissal being with prejudice. This Court should not premise its decision in the present case on previous cases where a dismissal with prejudice based on standing was affirmed but where the "with prejudice" distinction was not raised by a party or discussed by this Court.

Moreover, the decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo banc. 2020), does not change the standing argument or foreclose the possibility that a plaintiff or member of a plaintiff organization could subsequently satisfy standing requirements. Count I of the third amended petition alleged that § 115.427.1 could not be enforced pursuant to § 115.427.6(3). There has been no change to the identification requirements in § 115.427.1 or the funding requirements in § 115.427.6(3), namely that "[a]ll costs associated with the implementation of this section shall be reimbursed from the general revenue of this state by an appropriation for that purpose. If there is not a sufficient appropriation of state funds, then the personal identification requirements of subsection 1 of this section shall not be enforced." Pursuant to the circuit court's holding, standing could still be achieved regardless of the Priorities USA decision (i.e., a person who is eligible to vote would have to timely appear at the polls, try to vote, and be turned away for lack of a proper photo identification). The Priorities USA decision is limited to § 115.427.2(1) and .3 (i.e., the affidavit requirement). At any future election, even though the Priorities USA decision requires the acceptance of non-photo forms of identification without a signed affidavit, a poll worker could still require a voter to present photo identification and turn them away if they do not. Section 115.427.1 still states that voters "shall establish their identity and eligibility to vote at the polling place by presenting a form of personal identification to elected officials." As long as that subsection remains in effect, poll workers could ask voters to present those types of photo identifications at the polls and this incorrect request could be based on the State's insufficient funding to implement the law.[3]

It is not futile to do as the law requires and amend the dismissal here to one without prejudice when the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to enter a dismissal with prejudice. If the dismissal with prejudice was to be affirmed, Appellant organizations and their members who do achieve standing would be forever barred from challenging the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3)—relief that was not granted in Priorities USA.

[3] See, e.g., Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 454 (noting that, "election officials did not understand the affidavit requirement[,]" one voter was "informed by an election official that she would need to obtain photo identification to vote in the next election[,]" and another voter "was told he could not vote despite presenting his over registration card – an acceptable form of non-photo identification under option two").

III. Dismissal of Counts I and II for mootness and Count II as being unripe should be without prejudice because there is a realistic chance that both counts will no longer be moot in the future and Count II will become ripe; the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits after finding the claims to be moot and unripe.

Like a case where there is no standing, a moot or unripe case is not justiciable. In other words, the circuit court should not have reached the merits by dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice for mootness (Counts I and II) and being unripe (Count II). Appellants could be eligible to bring a claim at a future date if the issues were no longer moot and ripe for a lawsuit, but Appellants will be forever barred if this Court affirms the dismissal with prejudice.

Count I challenged the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3). Those specific identification (§ 115.427.1) and funding (§ 115.427.6(3)) requirements have never changed. Priorities USA held only that the affidavit requirement found in § 115.427.2(1) and .3 is an unconstitutional burden on the fundamental right to vote. While the Priorities USA court enjoined portions of § 115.427 relating specifically to the affidavit requirement, including "the dissemination of materials indicating photo identification is required to vote[,]" 591 S.W.3d at 451, Appellants' potentially broader challenge to the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3) should not be forever barred on this basis.

Regarding mootness, the circuit court seemed to hold that by eliminating the affidavit requirement, the circuit court in Priorities USA also enjoined the strict photo-identification requirements of § 115.427.1 "as a practical matter," D165 pp. 3–4, thus mooting any sufficient funding argument related to the enforcement of § 115.427.1 in this case. However, a mootness finding could change regardless of the affidavit requirement. In fact, Priorities USA supports a finding that it is likely a poll worker will not be properly informed as to how to implement the law and may require specific § 115.427.1 photo identification and then turn away a voter who does not have it, despite the injunction in that case. See, e.g., Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 454 (noting that, "election officials did not understand the affidavit requirement[,]" one voter was "informed by an election official that she would need to obtain photo identification to vote in the next election[,]" and another voter "was told he could not vote despite presenting his voter registration card – an acceptable form of non-photo identification under option two"). Thus, if an eligible voter were to go to a polling place to cast a ballot and a poll worker required that voter to present a specific form of photo identification and turned them away if they did not (i.e., they achieved standing), and if that voter (or the Appellant organization of which they are a member) alleged that the funding requirements of § 115.427.6(3) were not being met and therefore § 115.427.1 could not be enforced, a claim for relief would be stated and would not be mooted by Priorities USA. The funding requirements of § 115.427.6(3) continue to exist and it is well-established law that "requiring individuals to present photo identification to vote is unconstitutional." Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 458 (citing Weinschenk v. State, 203 S.W.3d 201, 219 (Mo. banc 2006)). Although Appellants do not challenge the circuit court determination that this case was mooted under the circumstances, the Priorities USA decision as to affidavits should not preclude Appellants from all such future claims.

Priorities USA was tried in late September and early October 2018 (first decision entered by the circuit court on October 23, 2018) and a final decision of the Missouri Supreme Court was issued on January 14, 2020 (rehearing denied January 30, 2020). This case was tried in August 2019 and a judgment dismissing Appellants' claims was signed April 20, 2020. Given the unique circumstances of the 2020 elections during the COVID-19 pandemic and the significant increase in voting absentee and by mail in Missouri, some of the scenarios that would present a live controversy may yet play out in future elections.

Count II of Appellant's petition alleged that the failure to provide correct information to the public, i.e., the "advance notice" requirement, resulted in a violation of § 115.427.5. Count II was not dismissed on standing grounds but only as being moot and unripe. In dismissing Count II, the circuit court found that the injunctive relief in Priorities USA mooted the need for the specific injunctive relief—albeit not precisely the same relief—requested in this case. See D165 pp. 5–6 (comparing the relief requested here and the injunction ordered in Priorities USA).[4] In making its ruling here, the circuit court noted that "the original manner in which [the State] tried to fulfill [the advance-notice] obligation was found to be deficient" in Priorities USA and then found that whether the State's "subsequent information campaigns avoid this deficiency is not yet ripe." D165 pp. 5–6. So, while the mootness determination at the time the circuit court ruled in April 2020 is not challenged here, as the circuit court acknowledged in its ripeness finding, Appellants' claim related to advance notice may resurface in the future if the Secretary of State continues to provide incorrect information to voters about all of § 115.427's requirements. In other words, while the Priorities USA court did enjoin the State from disseminating materials representing to the public that a photo identification card is required to vote, including materials with a specific graphic indicating voters will be asked for a photo identification card without specifying the other acceptable forms of identification that can be used to vote, that injunction in a case in which Appellants were not parties should not bar them from bringing a claim in the future if the advance notice provision of § 115.427.5 is violated. See Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 559–61; D165 p. 5.[5] As such, subsequent information campaigns by the State could make this issue ripe, in which case Appellants should be entitled to bring a suit.

The possibility of a future claim is further supported by the fact that, in Priorities USA, the prohibition on the dissemination of materials focused on a single advertisement—one of many used by the State—and the injunction was "limited in scope, as it enjoined the State from disseminating only those 'materials with the graphic that voters will be asked to show a photo identification card without specifying other forms of identification which voters may also show.'" 591 S.W.3d 460–61. Thus, while it is possible that this limited-in-scope injunction will stop the State from disseminating

[5] As noted by the supreme court in Priorities USA, a political science expert "testified that materials that are incomplete and fail to describe all the forms of identification permitted by section 115.427 cause voter confusion and decrease voter turnout." 591 S.W.3d at 460.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

incorrect information about the requirements of § 115.427, it in no way guarantees that will be the case. Just because no party has yet brought a lawsuit does not mean that the claim will not become ripe. However, Appellants could not currently bring this claim even if it were to become ripe because they have been barred by the circuit court's dismissal with prejudice. The advance-notice requirement found in § 115.427.5 is ongoing and the State must comply with both the law's requirements and the injunction issued in Priorities USA. The Priorities USA decision should not be read to mean that the claim raised in this case would never become ripe in the future.

"The basic rationale of the ripeness doctrine is to 'prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements over administrative policies, and also to protect the agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.'" Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 26 (quoting Abbott Laboratories, Inc. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148–49 (1967) (overruled on other grounds)). "Filing a suit prematurely should not prevent a plaintiff from proceeding with an action when it becomes ripe." Brinson v. Whittico, 793 S.W.2d 632, 634 (Mo. App. E.D. 1990). "Thus, if an action is deemed premature and a trial court dismisses it for that reason, the action should be dismissed without prejudice." Id. (holding that, "[b]ecause the trial court deemed the lawsuit premature, it may either dismiss the lawsuit without prejudice or may allow the lawsuit to pend until ripe for adjudication."). Although an injunction was issued in Priorities USA, Appellants should not be forever barred from raising any claim related to advance notice under § 115.427.5, consistent with the trial court's acknowledgement that this issue could subsequently become ripe.

Conclusion

Because Appellants' claims were dismissed based on jurisdictional and justiciability grounds (standing, mootness, and ripeness), the trial court should have dismissed the claims without prejudice. Appellants request that this Court, pursuant to its authority under Rule 84.14, dispose finally of the case by entering the judgment the trial court should have entered and dismiss Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition without prejudice.

Statement of Facts and Procedural Background

On June 8, 2017, Appellants, Missouri State Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the League of Women Voters of Missouri, filed a Petition seeking injunctive and declaratory relief with respect to Missouri Revised Statute § 115.427. That statute, which went into effect on June 1, 2017, drastically reduced voters' options for identifying themselves in order to vote in person. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., 17AC-CC00309 (19th Jud. Cir. Ct.).[1] On December 6, 2017, the trial court granted Respondents' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings and dismissed Appellants' Petition for failure to state a claim. Id.

After this Court reversed that decision, the case was reinstated in November 2018 and proceeded at the trial court in case number 17AC-CC00309-01. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., WD81484; D83-84. On June 18, 2019, Appellants filed their Third Amended Petition. D98-106. After trial on the merits, the trial court dismissed the Third Amended Petition for lack of standing, mootness, and/or ripeness. The trial court did not address the merits of Plaintiffs' claims, but nonetheless dismissed the Petition with prejudice. That jurisdictional, or justiciability, dismissal with prejudice was error and is the issue in this appeal.

In Count I of the Third Amended Petition, Appellants asserted that § 115.427.1 cannot be enforced under § 115.427.6(3) because insufficient state funds were appropriated from the general revenue to properly implement § 115.427.1. D98 pp. 19-23. In Count II, Appellants asserted that the requirement in § 115.427.5 was violated by the failure to provide the public accurate and non-misleading "Advance Notice" about the law restricting the options for identifying oneself at the polls. D98 pp. 24-26.

The court held a bench trial from August 19 - 23, 2019. Thereafter, on April 20, 2020, the circuit court entered its final judgment, dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing and mootness, and dismissing Count II with prejudice as moot and not ripe in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo. banc 2020). D165.

On May 19, 2020, Appellants moved the court to amend its judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice. D166. The trial court did not rule on this post-trial motion. Appellants then filed a notice of appeal on August 26, 2020. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., WD83987. However, the parties then disputed whether the post-trial motion was authorized, which would have delayed the date upon which the judgment became final for appeal. Appellants then filed a motion to file a notice of appeal by special order, which was sustained. Appellants' Notice of Appeal was filed on September 23, 2020.

Argument

This appeal presents a discrete question of law: when a circuit court finds that it lacks subject-matter jurisdiction in a case because of a lack of standing, mootness, or ripeness, should it dismiss with or without prejudice? The answer is clear: when a circuit court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to resolve a dispute's underlying merits, it should dismiss claims without prejudice. See Charron v. State, 257 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) ("[T]he trial court erred in dismissing Appellant's petition with prejudice because the dismissal was for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Pursuant to our authority under Rule 84.14, we modify the judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice."); Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits."); Am. Indus. Res., Inc. v. T.S.E. Supply Co., 708 S.W.2d 806, 808–09 (Mo. App. E.D. 1986) ("Inasmuch as the trial court did not have jurisdiction … the dismissal is without prejudice to any further action appellant may wish to take"); see also Asberry v. Bannes-Shaughnessy, 734 S.W.2d 250, 252 (Mo. App. E.D. 1987) (explaining that the burden of proof on a motion for lack of subject matter jurisdiction "is lower since it is not a decision on the merits, the dismissal is without prejudice and because any action taken by a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction is void").

Whether a trial court dismisses a claim with or without prejudice is significant. "[D]ismissal with prejudice bars the assertion of the same cause of action or claim against the same party." Rule 67.01. Accord Empire Dist. Elec. Co. v. Coverdell, 588 S.W.3d

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - February 02, 2021 - 03:27 PM

225, 237 (Mo. App. S.D. 2019). On the other hand, "[d]ismissal without prejudice is usually not an adjudication on the merits of the claim and does not affect the plaintiff's right to refile the action." Sexton v. Jenkins & Assocs., 152 S.W.3d 270, 273 (Mo. banc 2004). In certain circumstances, not applicable here, Appellants acknowledge that "a dismissal without prejudice may be considered a judgment on the merits of issues, such as jurisdiction, that are actually litigated and decided." Id. In this appeal, Appellants do not challenge the trial court's factual findings. Instead, Appellants assert only that the trial court erred in dismissing their claims with prejudice, thus preventing any chance they may have to vindicate their rights if they gain standing, the case is no longer moot, and the issues become ripe for adjudication.

The Missouri Constitution confers jurisdiction upon the circuit courts over "cases and matters." Mo. Const. art. V, sec. 14(a). "Article V of the Missouri Constitution governs subject-matter jurisdiction, which is the court's authority to render a judgment in a particular category of case." Peachtree Apartments v. Pallo, 317 S.W.3d 189, 192 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010); see also Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) ("Subject-matter jurisdiction concerns 'the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought 'and exists only when the court 'has the right to proceed to determine the controversy or question in issue between the parties, or grant the relief prayed.'" (citations omitted)). The Missouri Constitution "requires a case to be justiciable in order for the circuit court to have subject-matter jurisdiction over it." Id.; see also B.S. v. State, 966 S.W.2d 343, 344 (Mo. App. E.D. 1998).

Appellants do not dispute that a trial court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to decide the merits of a case where: (1) the plaintiff lacks standing; (2) the case is moot and no exception applies; or (3) the case is not ripe. But where the circuit court dismisses a case on one or more of these jurisdictional issues, it ought to do so without prejudice because any decision on the merits is inappropriate.

Point I

The circuit court erred in dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for lack of standing should be dismissed without prejudice, in that standing is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

While this Court "give[s] deference to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). Here, the issue on appeal is purely a question of law. Appellants do not dispute the underlying facts. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 22 (noting that, "[g]enerally, the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion[; h]owever, where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo"). The review here is straightforward because Appellants do not dispute the trial court's finding that they lack standing, only the court's act of dismissing the claims with prejudice based on that finding.

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve the issue, Appellants tried to resolve it with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion to amend the judgment to reflect dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v. Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

This Court has routinely found that a dismissal for lack of standing is a dismissal for want of subject matter jurisdiction. See, e.g., Chastain v. Geary, 539 S.W.3d 841, 848 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017) ("[T]he court does not have subject matter jurisdiction to decide substantive issues if the party lacks standing."); Doss v. Brown, 419 S.W.3d 784, 787 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012) ("A trial court does not have subject matter jurisdiction if a petitioner lacks standing to bring the action."); Querry v. State Highway & Transp. Comm'n, 60 S.W.3d 630, 637 (Mo. App. W.D. 2001) (same).

"Subject-matter jurisdiction concerns the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought and exists only when the court has the right to proceed to determine the controversy or question in issue between the parties, or grant the relief prayed." Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 21 (internal quotation omitted). "A dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits." § 510.150. Here, there should have been no adjudication on the merits where dismissal was for a lack of standing because "[w]hether considered a claim for lack of subject matter jurisdiction or lack of authority, a court, in disposing of a case for lack of standing, cannot reach the merits."[2]

[2] In Borges, this Court noted that "[i]t remains an open question whether a lack of standing implicates the court's jurisdiction or merely the court's authority, but we need not decide this issue given that this case should have been dismissed under either theory." 358 S.W.3d at 183. Like Borges, that issue need not be decided here; the solution in the present case is simply to dismiss the claim without prejudice because the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012); see also W. Cas. & Surety Co. v. Kansas City Bank & Trust Co., 743 S.W.2d 578, 580 (Mo. App. W.D. 1988) ("If [appellant] lacked standing, then its petition was subject to dismissal because it failed to establish the requisite subject matter jurisdiction. It must also follow that the trial court, lacking subject matter jurisdiction, could not enter a judgment on the merits for the [respondent].").

"Because standing is jurisdictional in nature, a dismissal for lack of standing is not 'on the merits' for res judicata purposes." Healthcare Servs. of the Ozarks, Inc. v. Copeland, 198 S.W.3d 604, 612 (Mo. banc 2006). Consequently, a dismissal for lack of standing should be without prejudice. See, e.g., Borges, 358 S.W.3d at 183-84 ("[O]nce it determined that [Plaintiffs] lacked standing, the trial court was without authority to reach any substantive claim, and, thus, dismissal should have been entered . . . . Therefore, we affirm the circuit court's finding that [Plaintiffs] lacked standing and enter the order the circuit court should have entered, dismissing without prejudice [Plaintiffs'] petition."); Eaton v. Doe, 563 S.W.3d 745, 750 (Mo. App. E.D. 2018) ("[B]ecause we have concluded the dismissal is due to a lack of standing, we modify the dismissal to be without prejudice, rather than with prejudice . . . . We affirm the judgment of the trial court as modified.").[3] trial court could not reach the merits if its dismissal was because Appellants lacked standing.

[3] The limited exception in which the Missouri Supreme Court has affirmed a dismissal for lack of standing with prejudice is distinguishable. See Mo. Coal. for Env't v.

State, 579 S.W.3d 924, 928 (Mo. banc 2019) (affirming dismissal with prejudice for lack of standing where plaintiffs conceded lack of taxpayer standing and where the Court held standing was not created by a statute). Plaintiffs' standing in that case could not be cured because it was foreclosed as a matter of law. There is no such lack of standing here. Appellants' lack of associational standing under the circuit court's order would be cured if individual Plaintiff members are denied their right to vote upon presenting themselves at the polls without a photo ID. D165 p. 2 ("The potential injured party would have to first, timely present himself to the polls and second, be eligible to vote. One cannot claim to be injured by a photo ID requirement unless they [are] otherwise eligible to vote, actually try to vote…but [are] not allowed to vote for a lack of a photo ID."). *See W. [4] Appellants also acknowledge other cases include an unchallenged dismissal with prejudice on the basis of standing. Those cases, however, do not provide guidance because the issue of the denial being with (as opposed to without) prejudice was not raised or discussed. See Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 124 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018); Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017); *Mo. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Point II

The circuit court erred in dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice based on mootness because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for mootness should be dismissed without prejudice, in that mootness is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

As noted supra, although the Court defers "to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). "A circuit court does not have subject-matter jurisdiction under [a]rticle V, section 14(a) to adjudicate a case that is not justiciable because it has become moot." Peachtree Apartments v. Pallo, 317 S.W.3d 189, 192 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010). The issue before this Court is purely a question of law and thus subject to de novo review. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 22 (noting that, "[g]enerally, the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion[; h]owever, where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo").

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve this issue for appeal, Appellants did attempt to resolve this issue with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion seeking to have the judgment amended to reflect a dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

A dismissal for mootness is a dismissal for want of subject-matter jurisdiction and as such should be without prejudice. See, e.g., Rosenfeld v. Thoele, 28 S.W.3d 446, 451 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000) ("Moot cases should generally be dismissed, as the circuit court lacks subject matter jurisdiction."); B.S. v. State, 966 S.W.2d 343, 344-45 (Mo. App. E.D. 1998) ("Because plaintiffs 'cause of action was moot, it was not justiciable and the trial court did not have subject matter jurisdiction over it."); see also Jackson Cty. Bd. of Election Comm'rs ex rel. Brown v. City of Lee's Summit, 277 S.W.3d 740, 744 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) (raising mootness sua sponte after explaining that "[p]arties cannot . . . confer subject matter jurisdiction upon a court"). When courts lack subject matter jurisdiction to resolve the merits of a dispute, the claims should be dismissed without prejudice. Compare § 510.150 ("A dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits."), with Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits."); Charron v. State, 257 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) ("[T]he trial court erred in dismissing Appellant's petition with prejudice because the dismissal was for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Pursuant to our authority under Rule 84.14, we modify the judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Accordingly, because the law is clear that dismissal for mootness cannot be on the merits and thus must be without prejudice, appellate courts routinely modify such judgments. See Friends of the San Luis, Inc. v. Archdiocese of St. Louis, 312 S.W.3d 476, 485 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010) ("We remand the cause to the circuit court with instructions to vacate its judgment and to dismiss [Plaintiffs'] petition without prejudice due to the mootness of the controversy"); Defenses, 35 Mo. Prac., Cont., Eq. & Stat. Actions Handbook § 24:9 ("Moot cases should be dismissed without prejudice.").

The trial court erred in dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice for mootness, and this Court should enter judgment dismissing Counts I and II without prejudice.

Point III

The circuit court erred in dismissing Count II with prejudice based on ripeness because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for ripeness should be dismissed without prejudice, in that ripeness is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

While this Court "give[s] deference to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). Here, the issue on appeal—whether a claim that is not ripe should be dismissed with or without prejudice—is purely a question of law and is subject to de novo review.

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve this issue for appeal, Appellants did attempt to resolve this issue with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion seeking to have the judgment amended to reflect a dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v. Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

Ripeness implicates the justiciability of a claim and therefore any dismissal should not reach the merits of the case. As noted, however, "[a] dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits." § 510.150. Because the trial court cannot reach the merits if it determines a claim is not ripe for adjudication, dismissals on ripeness grounds have been modified by appellate courts, including the Missouri Supreme Court, to dismissals without prejudice. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 29 ("[B]ecause the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, and because the controversy is not ripe for review, the judgment of dismissal is modified to one without prejudice."); Schweich v. Nixon, 408 S.W.3d 769, 779 (Mo. banc 2013) ("While the lack of standing and ripeness does not implicate the merits of the Auditor's claims as to his own appropriation, it does preclude relief in this action. Accordingly, pursuant to Rule 84.14, this Court will issue the ruling that the trial court should have entered. The Auditor's claims are dismissed without prejudice."); see also Schultz v. Warren Cty., 249 S.W.3d 898, 902 (Mo. App. E.D. 2008) ("[B]ecause the controversy was not ripe for judicial review, the circuit court's judgment is one without prejudice . . . . The circuit court's judgment of dismissal is hereby modified to explicitly state that the dismissal is due to lack of ripeness and is one without prejudice.").

In addition, modifying the trial court's judgment to dismissal without prejudice on Count II is particularly warranted in this case as a prudential matter. The court made clear that Appellants 'request for mandatory injunctive relief could be cured and would become ripe if the Secretary of State failed to provide adequate advance notice to the public under the terms of the Priorities USA injunction:

> The Court finds that the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required, given the findings made and instructions given to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA. The Secretary of State is still obligated to provide advance notice in a manner calculated to generally inform the public. The original manner in which he tried to fulfill that obligation was found to be > deficient. The question of whether or not the Secretary's subsequent information campaigns avoid this deficiency is not yet ripe.

D165 pp. 5-6.

Should the Secretary of State fail to provide sufficient required advance notice, including by making inaccurate statements regarding the narrowing of identification options for voters in Missouri, Appellants should not be barred from seeking the appropriate mandatory injunctive relief in the future. Brinson v. Whittico, M.D., 793 S.W.2d 632, 634 (Mo. App. E.D. 1990) ("The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. Because the trial court deemed the lawsuit premature, it may either dismiss the lawsuit without prejudice or may allow the lawsuit to pend until ripe for adjudication.").

Thus, the circuit court erred in dismissing Count II with prejudice based on ripeness, and this Court should enter judgment dismissing Count II without prejudice.

Conclusion

Because Appellants' claims were dismissed based on jurisdictional grounds of standing and mootness and justiciability grounds of ripeness, the trial court should have dismissed the claims without prejudice. Appellants request that this Court, pursuant to its authority under Rule 84.14, dispose finally of the case by entering the judgment the trial court should have entered and dismiss Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition without prejudice.

INTRODUCTION

The circuit court correctly issued a final judgment ruling that Plaintiffs lack standing to bring an insufficient-appropriations claim under Missouri's voter-identification law, that all of their claims are moot in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448, 461 (Mo. banc 2020), and that their statutory claims about insufficient advance notice of Missouri's voter identification requirements are not ripe. On appeal, Plaintiffs do not argue the merits of any of those determinations. Rather, they contend only that the trial court erred in dismissing their claims with prejudice. For three principal reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's with-prejudice dismissals and thereby reinforce the prevailing rule that trial courts have discretion to dismiss claims with or without prejudice based on the circumstances present in a case.

First, Plaintiffs apply the wrong standard of review of a trial court's decision to dismiss cases with or without prejudice; this Court should review for abuse of discretion and not exercise de novo review. See Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193, 198 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992) ("This court will not disturb the trial court's dismissal with prejudice absent a finding of a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court."); cf. Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) (de novo review of the merits of the dismissal may be appropriate where "the facts are uncontested.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, under the correct standard of review, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing. The trial court issued its judgment after a weeklong trial on Plaintiffs' third amended petition, the judgment references evidence elicited at trial, and the parties contested the facts of Plaintiffs' standing to bring the case. It would be futile, and it would prejudice Respondents, to transform the trial court's judgment into a mere dismissal without prejudice and allow Plaintiffs to bring the same suit again.

Third, the trial court correctly dismissed, with prejudice, Counts I and II as moot and Count II as unripe because there is no realistic probability that Plaintiffs can cure those problems in light of the Supreme Court's permanent injunctions in Priorities USA. Plaintiffs have not appealed the merits of the mootness question, and thus they have conceded that issue. It would be futile to allow them to bring their suit again, and nothing in Missouri law mandates that dismissals for mootness be without prejudice. The trial court also correctly dismissed Count II as unripe. Count II is purely a statutory claim where all the relief requested was provided in the Priorities USA injunctions based on the facts Plaintiffs pleaded, and Plaintiffs have not identified subsequent Voter ID advertising that violates those injunctions.

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's judgment dismissing Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition with prejudice.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Backed by a constitutional amendment ("Voter ID Amendment") approved by popular vote, in 2016 the State adopted its current voter identification statute that allows for voting with both photo and non-photo forms of identification. § 115.427, RSMo (the "Voter ID Law"). After a constitutional challenge to certain aspects of the Voter ID Law's requirements, the Missouri Supreme Court largely upheld the statute last year in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo. banc 2020). But the Court affirmed a trial court's declaration that the statute's affidavit requirement for some non-photo forms of identification was unconstitutional. And it upheld the lower court's injunctions against disseminating certain advertising materials about the Voter ID Law, including "materials with the graphic that voters will be asked to show a photo identification card without specifying other forms of identification which voters may also show," Id. at 460–61, and "materials which represent that a photo identification card is required to vote," (D165, p.5).

A. The Third Amended Petition's claims and early procedural history.

Plaintiffs in this case are two organizations and one individual Missouri voter. They filed the original Petition in June 2017, and the case has previously been before this Court in an earlier stage of litigation. See State Conference of Nat'l Ass'n for Advancement of Colored People v. State, 563 S.W.3d 138 (Mo.

App. W.D. 2018) (hereinafter "NAACP I"). After this Court remanded the case to the circuit court for further proceedings, Plaintiffs filed their Third Amended Petition after a lower court's ruling in Priorities USA but before the Supreme Court's opinion. (D98).

In Count I, Plaintiffs brought a statutory claim seeking declaratory and injunctive relief that the personal identification requirements in the Voter ID Law may not be enforced due to insufficient legislative appropriations in fiscal years 2017 to 2019. (D98, p.23). In Count II, they sought various prohibitory and mandatory injunctions against advertising materials under § 115.427.5 of the Voter ID Law. (D98, pp.24–26). Specifically, in Count II Plaintiffs asked the trial court to:

> A. Issue an injunction barring the Secretary of State from telling the public that there is a photo ID requirement and/or from instructing poll workers to ask for photo IDs when voters come to the polls;
>
> B. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to provide public notice that there is no photo ID required for voting in Missouri;
>
> C. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to provide correct information to the public about the non-photo options;
>
> D. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to take down misleading advertisements that are still being used or made available to the public;
>
> E. Allow such other and further relief as is proper under the circumstances.

(D98, p.26).

The trial court presided over a weeklong trial in August 2019, where the court heard the testimony of several witnesses and admitted into evidence the parties' joint stipulated facts and exhibits. (D120–121). The parties did not stipulate to Plaintiffs' standing to bring the case. (Id.; D117). Respondents denied the Third Amended Petition's allegations that Plaintiffs have standing (D117, ¶¶14–18), raised lack of standing as an affirmative defense (id. at p. 7), and argued in their post-trial brief that Plaintiffs lack standing based on the evidence.

B. The parties brief the effect of the Priorities USA decision.

On January 14, 2020, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Priorities USA. The next day, the trial court asked the parties to submit memoranda concerning the effect of Priorities USA on this case. (D159). For Plaintiffs' appropriations claim in Count I, Respondents argued that it was moot because the Priorities USA decision already provided the only relief sought by Plaintiffs: a declaration and injunction that the Voter ID Law's identification requirements cannot be enforced. (D162, p.3). As to Plaintiffs' statutory claims in Count II regarding insufficient advance notice of the Voter ID Law's personal identification requirements, Respondents argued that Priorities USA also mooted these claims. Priorities USA upheld permanent injunctions against those very requirements, "any proposed negative relief was already granted," and "[n]either [§ 115.427.5] nor the order require additional notice campaigns or any of the other remedies Plaintiffs propose." (D162, p.4-6).

Plaintiffs responded to Respondents' Priorities USA arguments, contending that Count I is not moot because their relief requested—an order "directing that voters cannot be asked to show a Photo ID at the polls"—is not encompassed by Priorities USA. (D160 at p.3). For Count II, Plaintiffs agreed that "the Priorities USA remedial order prevents further dissemination of such misleading information," but they contended that it "does not affirmatively correct the existing misimpression." (D160, p.2). They asserted that the Voter ID Law's "obligation to provide advance notice necessarily requires the provision of accurate and non-misleading information." (Id.). In other words, Plaintiffs disagreed that Priorities USA precluded their claims in this case for a mandatory injunction to promote corrective advertisements.

C. The trial court's final judgment and post-judgment developments.

On April 20, 2020, the trial court issued a final judgment holding that Plaintiffs lacked standing to bring their claims in Count I, that Count I is moot under Priorities USA, and that Count II is both moot and not ripe under Priorities USA. (D165).

As to Count I, the trial court discussed what evidence a plaintiff must show to demonstrate injury under the photo ID requirement: "the potential injured party would have to first, timely present himself to the polls and second, be eligible to vote." (Id. at p.2). In a footnote, the court highlighted evidence actually introduced at trial regarding the ability of voters to vote with non-photo forms of identification. (Id. at n.5). The court held that the two organization plaintiffs lack associational standing and organizational standing, and it further held that taxpayer standing is not a theory on which the individual plaintiff here, Christine Dragonette, can base a claim for insufficient appropriations. (Id. at p.3). The court alternatively found that the injunctions upheld in Priorities USA render Count I moot, because the case held that the photo identification requirement "may not be enforced." (Id.).

As to Count II, the trial court compared the injunctions upheld in Priorities USA with the relief requested in this case. (Id. at p.4–6). The court held that "the prohibitory injunctions of Priorities USA [are] essentially the same as prayed for in this case[.]" (Id. at p.5). Referring to Plaintiffs' request for an injunction that the Secretary of State affirmatively issue correct advertisements, the court reasoned that "the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required given the findings made and instructions provided to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA." (Id.). The court also held that Count II is not ripe to the extent it is based on advertisements not yet promoted. (Id. at p.6).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

On May 19, 2020, Plaintiffs filed a motion to modify the judgment to transform the dismissals with prejudice to dismissals without prejudice. (D166). The trial court did not rule on that motion, and Plaintiffs eventually appealed the trial court's judgment under special order by the Court permitting a late notice of appeal. (D167, D168).

ARGUMENT

I. The circuit court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment after trial that dismissed with prejudice Plaintiffs' claims in Count I for lack of standing. (Responding to Point Relied On I).

A. This Court should review the trial court's dismissal with prejudice for abuse of discretion.

The correct standard of review is one for abuse of discretion, and not de novo review as Plaintiffs contend. Generally, an appellate court "will not disturb the trial court's dismissal with prejudice absent a finding of a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court." Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193, 198 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992) (citing Smith v. City of De Soto, 634 S.W.2d 204, 205 (Mo. App. 1982)). Application of this standard is universal in every district of the Court of Appeals. See id.; Peet v. Randolph, 103 S.W.3d 872, 876 (Mo. App. E.D. 2003) (reviewing for abuse of discretion trial court's with-prejudice dismissal of a case based on plaintiff's failure to prosecute); Saidawi v. Giovanni's Little Place, Inc., 987 S.W.2d 501, 505 (Mo. App. E.D. 1999) (holding "[t]here is no absolute right to amend a petition" and finding no abuse of discretion of the lower court's with-prejudice dismissal based on failure to state a claim); Allen v. City of Greenville, MO, 336 S.W.3d 508, n.3 (Mo. App. S.D. 2011) (noting the court would have applied abuse of discretion review to the lower court's prejudice determination if the appellant had raised it on appeal).

An exception to that rule may apply when the question on appeal is whether the dismissal itself was proper and "the facts are uncontested." Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) (applying de novo review to the merits of the dismissal decision). But this case does not fall within any known exception to the general rule for several reasons, and Plaintiffs misapply the holding in Mo. Soybean Ass'n.

First, Plaintiffs have not appealed the trial court's decision on standing—they appeal only the dismissal being with prejudice. The trial court issued a final judgment after the trial, and the issue of Plaintiffs' standing was a preserved issue for trial. (See D117, Respondents' Answer and Affirmative Defenses, pp.15-16). The trial court did not rule on a motion to dismiss where the court would have assumed Plaintiffs' "averments in their petition are true." Cmty. Care Ctr. of Lemay v. Missouri Health Facilities Review Comm., 92 S.W.3d 232, 234 (Mo. App. W.D. 2002) (reviewing de novo the merits of a lower court's grant of a motion to dismiss for lack of standing); cf. Mo. Soybean Ass'n,

102 S.W.3d at 21 (procedural history indicates the case was decided after a trial or hearing on a combined motion to dismiss and for summary judgment).[1]

Unlike a motion to dismiss, where the facts are uncontested, or a summary judgment motion, where there can be no disputed material facts, Respondents contested Plaintiffs' lack of standing. The issue here is not "purely a question of law" as in Mo. Soybean Ass'n. Respondents denied the Third Amended Petition's allegations that Plaintiffs have standing, and Respondents raised lack of standing as an affirmative defense. (D117). Respondents also raised the issue in their post-trial brief, highlighting the lack of evidence Plaintiffs submitted at trial to support their standing. And in its final judgment the trial court referenced evidence introduced at trial as to Plaintiffs' standing. (D165, n.5).

Second, Missouri Supreme Court Rule 67.03 also supports giving the trial court discretion to issue a judgment with prejudice, stating that "Any involuntary dismissal shall be without prejudice unless the court in its order for dismissal shall otherwise specify." Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 67.03 (emphasis added).

[1] In addition to Mo. Soybean Ass'n, other cases cited by Plaintiffs in their brief also considered dismissals without prejudice upon a motion to dismiss. E.g., Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004). Furthermore, other cases rested on the specific language of a previous version of Rule 67.03 or did not state a standard of review at all. E.g., Am. Indus. Res., Inc. v. T.S.E. Supply Co., 708 S.W.2d 806, 808–09 (Mo. App. E.D. 1986).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - April 05, 2021 - 04:43 PM

The plain language of the Rule contemplates a court's discretion to specify the prejudicial effect of its dismissal.

Finally, review for abuse of discretion makes sense because it is the standard that governs review of denials of leave to amend a petition. Gohlston v. Lightfoot, 825 S.W.2d 864, 869 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992). In those situations, "the denial of amendment is presumed correct and the burden is on the proponent to show an abuse of discretion." Id. Dismissals with prejudice are analogous to denials of leave to amend a petition because both effectively prohibit a party to re-plead claims in a future action. There is no principled distinction between these two conceptually similar determinations for purposes of applying a standard of review.

For all these reasons, this Court should apply the abuse of discretion standard and confirm that Plaintiffs carry the burden to show that the trial court abused its discretion in dismissing each count of the Third Amended Petition with prejudice.

B. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I due to Plaintiffs' lack of standing.

The argument section of Plaintiffs' first point on appeal is virtually devoid of legal argument, instead consisting almost exclusively of parenthetical quotations from case law. Because they apply the wrong standard of review, Plaintiffs do not argue how the trial court abused its discretion for issuing a final judgment holding that they lack standing.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Under the abuse of discretion standard, "[d]iscretion means the option that the trial judge has in doing or not doing that which a litigant does not have the absolute right to demand." Jennings v. City of Kansas City, 812 S.W.2d 724, 735 (Mo. App. W.D. 1991). "Abuse of that discretion means an untenable judicial act that defies reason and works an injustice. . . . [or] [w]hen the trial court's ruling clearly offends the logic of the circumstances or when it becomes arbitrary and unreasonable." Id. Under the appropriate standard, the trial court soundly exercised its discretion.

First, because the circuit court held a trial where evidence was presented on Plaintiffs' lack of standing, it was proper for the court to decide the standing question on the merits and issue a final judgment. The trial court's decision was properly denominated a "judgment" and it became final 30 days after it was issued. Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 81.05(a)(1). Nothing about issuing a final judgment after trial is arbitrary and unreasonable, or is an injustice against Plaintiffs. During the multiple years of litigation in this case, including a trip to this Court in NAACP I, Plaintiffs amended their original Petition three times and had ample opportunity to develop a case with a party possessing standing.[2]

[2] Plaintiffs do not raise on appeal the merits of the trial court's judgment on standing, mootness, or ripeness. The decision below was a final judgment, the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, amending the trial court's final judgment to simply a dismissal order without prejudice would undermine the work of the parties and the courts in multi-year litigation, which reached a trial on the merits and resulted in a final judgment.[3] It would reward Plaintiffs the benefit of liberal re-pleading rules that accompany a dismissal without prejudice by allowing them to re-plead the same cause of action while remaining plaintiffs to that case. And it would effectively announce a rule that no Missouri case supports—that courts must always dismiss a case without prejudice due to lack of standing, even if denominated as final judgment after a contested trial. This would destabilize a customary practice in Missouri's appellate courts of affirming dismissals with prejudice, and it is not necessary in this case. See, e.g., Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 124 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018); Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017); Mo. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Oneok, Inc., 318 S.W.3d 134, 139 (Mo. App. W.D. 2009).

finality of which was addressed in Respondents' opposition to Plaintiffs' filing of a late notice of appeal. The finality of the judgment was necessarily affirmed by this Court's special order allowing Plaintiffs to file a late notice of appeal. Plaintiffs have elected not to appeal the merits of the judgment, and so they have forfeited those claims on appeal. E.g., Eckel v. Eckel, 540 S.W.3d 476, n.17 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018) (an issue not presented in a point relied on is not preserved for review); see also Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 84.04(d).

[3] This Court's opinion in NAACP I, 563 S.W.3d at 142–47, thoroughly discusses the procedural history of this case and the claims Plaintiffs raised in their original, first amended, and second amended petitions.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - April 05, 2021 - 04:43 PM

Third, this Court should reject any argument Plaintiffs make that they can cure their pleading defects regarding standing and therefore a without-prejudice dismissal is appropriate. Plaintiffs do not squarely argue they can or will cure this defect. Instead they allude to it in a footnote in their brief as a possibility if the two organizational plaintiffs identify members who present themselves at the polls without a photo ID and suffer an injury from the Voting ID Law. (App. Br. at n.3). Plaintiffs amended their Petition three times and had over two years of litigation to find at least one member of their organizations who has standing to bring their claims. They failed to do so. But even if the organizational plaintiffs did find such an individual in their ranks, the theory of their case—and likely the factual allegations and evidence—would presumably be the same. The circuit court's judgment below is final and as such has the appropriate preclusive affect under the doctrines of collateral estoppel and res judicata. The extent of that Lastly, the trial court held that Priorities USA mooted any of the pleaded claims for relief in Count I. Because Plaintiffs did not raise the merits of the mootness decision on appeal and the decision below is a final judgment, they have forfeited raising the same claims in the same form again. It would thus be futile for this Court to modify the trial court's judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - April 05, 2021 - 04:43 PM

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's exercise of discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing.

II. The trial court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment that dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot or unripe. (Responding to Points Relied On II and III).

A. This Court should review the trial court's final judgment on mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion.

As with the trial court's final judgment disposing of Plaintiffs' claims in Count I with prejudice, this Court should review the trial court's with-prejudice dismissals as to mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion. Plaintiffs again cite the incorrect standard of review in light of the claims they actually raised on appeal. De novo review might be appropriate if Plaintiffs had contested the merits of the dismissals themselves, not merely whether the trial erred in dismissing Plaintiffs' claims with prejudice. De novo review was applied in Mo. Soybean Ass'n because the Court reviewed the substantive question of whether the trial court properly dismissed the underlying claim as unripe and for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction, not whether the trial court erred by doing so with or without prejudice. 102 S.W.3d at 22 ("a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo."). Plaintiffs here have not appealed the trial court's

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

mootness or ripeness determinations. Thus, the general rule of reviewing for abuse of discretion applies. See Williams, 841 S.W.2d at 198.

B. The trial court properly dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot because there is no realistic chance Plaintiffs can cure the mootness of their claims.

Plaintiffs have elected not to appeal the merits of the trial court's decision to dismiss Counts I and II as moot in light of Priorities USA. They have therefore forfeited that issue on appeal. Assuming, as this Court therefore must, that the trial court did properly dismiss Plaintiffs' claims as moot, the trial court appropriately exercised its discretion by dismissing them with prejudice.

The principal rationale for dismissing cases without prejudice is that it permits a party to bring another action for the same cause, if it is not otherwise barred. See Mahoney v. Doerhoff Surgical Servs., Inc., 807 S.W.2d 503, 506 (Mo. banc 1991). "Ordinarily, when an action is dismissed without prejudice, a plaintiff may cure the dismissal by filing another suit in the same court." Osuji v. Missouri Dept. of Social Services, Div. of Family Services, 34 S.W.3d 251, 253 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000). As other courts have held, "where the pleading's deficiencies 'cannot be cured by re-pleading, because [the claims fail] as a matter of law,' dismissal with prejudice may be appropriate." Timber Point Properties III, LLC v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2014 WL 7005195, at *1 (W.D. Mo. Dec. 10, 2014) (quoting Rickmyer v. Browne, 995 F.Supp.2d 989, 1019

(D.Minn.2014)); see also McLean v. United States, 566 F.3d 391, 400 (4th Cir. 2009) ("Courts, including this one, have held that when a complaint is incurable through amendment, dismissal is properly rendered with prejudice and without leave to amend.")); McKesson HBOC, Inc. v. New York State Common Ret. Fund, Inc., 339 F.3d 1087, 1096 (9th Cir. 2003) (dismissal with prejudice is appropriate where "deficiencies in [plaintiff's] claims cannot be cured by amendment").

There is no principled reason why a similar rule does not apply in Missouri for with-prejudice dismissals for mootness. Indeed, this same rationale inspires the analysis of a denial of leave to amend a petition, which is conceptually similar to dismissals with prejudice. See Gohlston, 825 S.W.2d at 869; Bratt v. Cohn, 969 S.W.2d 277, 284 (Mo. App. W.D. 1998) (denial of plaintiffs' motion to file second amended petition was not an abuse of discretion because it "did not cure the deficiencies of their first amended petition."). Nothing in Missouri law mandates dismissal without prejudice when the court's basis is mootness.

Plaintiffs have not argued on appeal how a subsequent lawsuit could cure the mootness problems found by the trial court in light of Priorities USA. And because Plaintiffs have not raised that argument, they have forfeited it. As in their first point on appeal, the argument section of their second point on appeal consists almost exclusively of parenthetical quotations from cases, not substantive legal argument. The Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA affirmed the lower court's permanent injunctions, which—as the trial court below properly found, and which is not contested by Plaintiffs on appeal—encompasses the very relief Plaintiffs sought in this case. (D165, p.5).

The cases Plaintiffs cite in their brief are inapposite. For example, in Friends of the San Luis, Inc. v. Archdiocese of St. Louis, 312 S.W.3d 476 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010), the trial court made no determination as to mootness; instead, mootness came after the trial court's ruling, and the trial court dismissed the case with prejudice for lack of standing. Id. at 477. The parties addressed the merits of the post-decision mootness question on appeal and the appellate court thus considered it on the merits. Id. at 483. The appellate court's decision discussed the various public-interest reasons why it vacated the lower court's standing decision and held the controversy should be dismissed without prejudice due to mootness, including because the respondent on appeal did not oppose that remedy. Id. at 485. None of those unique circumstances are present here, and Friends of the San Luis certainly does not announce a rule that circuit court dismissals due to mootness must always be without prejudice.

Deciding whether a case should be dismissed with or without prejudice is within the sound discretion of the court deciding the mootness question. Plaintiffs have failed to appeal the merits of the trial court's mootness decision. And they have altogether failed to argue in their brief how they might obtain relief in a future, re-pleaded cause of action based on appropriations for Voter ID Law advertising that is not encompassed by the permanent injunctive relief ordered in Priorities USA.

This Court should therefore affirm the trials court's decision dismissing as moot Counts I and II with prejudice.

C. The trial court properly dismissed Count II with prejudice as unripe.

The trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing Count II with prejudice as unripe. Though this Court can affirm the trial court's dismissal of Count II as moot and therefore avoid ruling on Appellants' third point on appeal, there are independent and sufficient grounds to affirm the trial court's dismissal with prejudice of Count II as unripe.

The Supreme Court in Priorities USA affirmed lower-court injunctions concerning the Secretary of State's advertising the Voter ID Law. As the trial court in this case held, "[t]he Secretary of State is still obligated to provide advance notice in a manner calculated to generally inform the public." (D165, p.5). No party has filed suit complaining of the Secretary's subsequent advertising efforts or compliance with the Priorities USA decision.

If a party has any good-faith allegations that the Secretary of State's Office has not complied with the permanent injunctions in Priorities USA, those allegations might support a claim for which a party can bring a new action. But Plaintiffs' claims in Count II rest on an entirely separate theory than that potential cause of action. In Count II, Plaintiffs alleged that expenditures on advertising resulted in incorrect and misleading advertising and that the Secretary of State's Office did not issue appropriate corrective advertising. (D98, pp.24–26). Count II is a strict statutory claim, resting solely on § 115.427.5 of the Voter ID Law. The Supreme Court in Priorities USA already analyzed claims for violations of that same statute similar to Plaintiffs' claims in Count II. Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 459–61.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

As the trial court here found, the permanent injunctions in Priorities USA encompass essentially the same relief Plaintiffs sought on their advertising claims and "the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required, given the findings made and instructions given to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA." (D165, pp. 5–6). In mentioning mandatory injunctions, the trial court was necessarily referring to the relief sought by Plaintiffs in Count II to issue new, corrective advertising (D98, p.26). The trial court was correct in ruling that the Priorities USA decision forecloses any relief that Plaintiffs actually requested in Count II of the Third Amended Petition based § 115.427.5, and Plaintiffs do not challenge the correctness of that portion of the judgment below.

To the extent Plaintiffs bring a future cause of action based on similar facts due to advertising of the Voter ID Law, any such allegations likely cannot be premised § 115.425.7. Plaintiffs did not plead claims premised on the Priorities USA injunctions even though the trial court's decision in that case was issued prior to the Third Amended Petition's filing. To that end, even though the Third Amended Petition cites Priorities USA in Count II, it narrows the Count's focus to a "violation of the statute." (D98, p.26). Claims for relief requested in a future lawsuit based on the same facts alleged in the Third Amended Petition but premised on § 115.427.5 and not the Priorities USA permanent injunctions are not yet ripe, nor can they ever be ripe. Priorities USA forecloses the relief Plaintiffs requested based on the facts and theory of the case they pleaded. There exists a hypothetical claim based on Priorities USA's permanent injunctions that may eventually be ripe, but that is not the claim in Count II of the Third Amended Petition here.

For these reasons, it would be futile to allow Plaintiffs to re-plead the same cause of action under § 115.427.5, for the same relief, and based on future—but presently unripe—facts. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing with prejudice Count II as unripe.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, this Court should affirm the circuit court's decision.

I. De novo is the correct standard of review in this case, and Appellants do not misapply the holding in Missouri Soybean Association v. Missouri Clean Water Commission, 102 S.W.3d 10 (Mo banc. 2003). 5

II. Dismissal of Count I for lack of standing should be without prejudice because standing could be achieved and the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits. 13

III. Dismissal of Counts I and II for mootness and Count II as being unripe should be without prejudice because there is a realistic chance that both counts will no longer be moot in the future and Count II will become ripe; the circuit court had no jurisdicton or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits after finding the claims to be moot and unripe. 18

Argument

I. De novo is the correct standard of review in this case, and Appellants do not misapply the holding in Missouri Soybean Association v. Missouri Clean Water Commission, 102 S.W.3d 10 (Mo banc. 2003).

The issue presented here is purely a question of law, the underlying facts are uncontested, and the correct standard of review in this case is de novo. See Appellants' Opening Br. at pp. 14–15, 18–19, 21.

The cases relied on by Respondents do not alter the conclusion that review of whether dismissal should have been with prejudice is de novo. In Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992), the case was dismissed with prejudice on a motion for judgment on the pleadings because the court found that the plaintiff failed to sufficiently plead claims alleging a violation of due process and conversion. Id. at 194–97.[1] In upholding the dismissal with prejudice as to the due process claim, this Court noted that "[w]hen a trial court concludes that pleadings do not state a cause of action, and when adequate opportunity to amend has been provided, it is not error for the trial court to dismiss with prejudice." Id. Williams does not support abuse-of-discretion review here. In this case, the dismissal was not based upon a finding that Appellants failed to state a claim, nor was the opportunity to amend provided but not utilized. Williams did not address a dismissal based on standing, mootness, or ripeness—the grounds for dismissal here. While Respondents note that the Williams court relied on

[1] The dismissal of the conversion claim was reversed and that claim was remanded to allow for further development of the facts so that the plaintiff could attempt to prove his claim against the City. Williams, 841 S.W.2d at 197; see also id. n.3.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Smith v. City of De Soto, 634 S.W.2d 204 (Mo. App. W.D. 1982), Smith too is a case where the court dismissed a case with prejudice for failure to state a claim—there because the plaintiff "cite[d] no authority to support his contention a municipal corporation may be held liable in quantum meruit." Id. at 204–05 (noting that the law states the contrary). Like in Williams, the plaintiff in Smith sought a dismissal without prejudice so that he could amend his petition. This Court affirmed the dismissal with prejudice noting that, in the context of that case, the defendant should not have to respond to additional amended petitions because as a legal matter it would be impossible to cure the legal defect that resulted in dismissal. Smith, 634 S.W.2d at 205.

In Peet v. Randolph, 103 S.W.3d 872, 874 (Mo. App. E.D. 2003), the plaintiff sought specific performance of a real estate contract. After a summary judgment ruling for defendants, followed by an appeal and remand, the case was then ultimately dismissed with prejudice for failure to prosecute. Id. There, the trial court believed that the plaintiff failed to reasonably explain his failure to take any action for nearly a year following the remand and noted that it was plaintiff's responsibility to file a motion. Id. In finding that the court abused its discretion, the Eastern District noted that, while dismissal for failure to prosecute is typically within the trial court's judicial discretion, because of the "lack of a local rule delineating the plaintiff's responsibilities on remand, the lack of any scheduling conference or schedule on remand, this Court's mandate that a trial be held, and the plaintiff's readiness to proceed to trial, the trial court clearly abused its discretion in dismissing this case." Id. at 876–78 (further noting that no dismissal was appropriate, with or without prejudice, reinstating the cause of action, and ordering that it be reassigned to a new trial judge). There, again, the dismissal was not based on standing, mootness, or ripeness. A case with such different facts is not authority to depart from de novo review on the question of law presented in this appeal.

Saidawi v. Giovanni's Little Place, Inc., 987 S.W.2d 501, 504–05 (Mo. App. E.D. 1999), also involves a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. In reversing the dismissal with prejudice of three counts but affirming the dismissal of a fourth count, the Eastern District found that plaintiff had failed to plead sufficient facts to allege the necessary elements of a prima facie tort and noted that "[t]here is no absolute right to amend a petition." Id. at 505. In Allen v. City of Greenville, 336 S.W.3d 508, 511 (Mo. App. S.D. 2003), the dismissal again followed from a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. The Southern District reviewed the underlying decision to dismiss de novo and, in a footnote citing Saidawi and Williams, stated that whether to dismiss with or without prejudice, while not raised as a point on appeal, would be within the discretion of the trial court. Id. at 512, 512 n.3. In many cases the decision might be within the court's discretion. In this case, however, the court lacked such discretion and the dismissal should be reviewed de novo.

Unlike the cases relied upon by Respondents, there is no dispute here as to whether Appellants' petition stated a claim or whether they prosecuted their case. This case concluded after a week-long trial that included multiple witnesses—including significant expert testimony—and extensive post-trial briefing. Although the trial court did dismiss this case with prejudice, it never reached the merits of Appellants' claims, nor could it have. The dismissal was based only on standing (Count I), mootness (Counts I and II), and ripeness (Count II). Each of these is a requirement for the circuit court's jurisdiction or authority to decide the case or justiciability, not the merits of the case itself.

"[T]he authority to render judgment in a particular case is … the definition of subject matter jurisdiction …." Webb v. Wyciskalla, 275 S.W.3d 249, 254 (Mo banc. 2003). This case is simply not like the cases relied on by Respondents. And while Missouri Soybean Association v. Missouri Clean Water Commission, 102 S.W.3d 10 (Mo banc. 2003), examined whether a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief claim could be brought at all, it is similar to the present case in that the facts were uncontested, it discussed the court's jurisdiction and authority to hear the case, and the issue on appeal was purely one of law. This Court should not depart from Missouri Soybean Association by holding that the abuse-of-discretion standard has universal application in all cases involving the review of a lower court's decision to dismiss a case with prejudice.

In Missouri Soybean Association, the lower court dismissed the case with prejudice for a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction. Id. at 14. There, like here, the parties did not dispute the underlying facts of the case (concerning state inclusion of rivers on a list of impaired waters that is then submitted to the EPA and triggers specific programs designed to improve the water quality), so the appeal centered on whether the plaintiffs could even bring a declaratory judgment action seeking injunctive relief challenging the promulgation of the list as rulemaking. Id. at 14–23. Whether the circuit court had the authority to adjudicate the case was a question of subject-matter jurisdiction. More specifically, the issue was whether plaintiffs were properly challenging "the validity of a rule or the threatened application of such a rule" under § 536.050.1 such that the lower court would have the authority (i.e., subject-matter jurisdiction) to hear a declaratory judgment action. Id. at 22. If they were, then the court would have the power to render a declaratory judgment. If the promulgation of the list was not rulemaking, the court had no authority over the case—i.e., it lacked subject-matter jurisdiction.

While noting that, "[g]enerally the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion[,]" the court went on to find that "where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo." Id. at 22. Ultimately, the Missouri Supreme Court found that the promulgated list was not a rule and therefore "the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction pursuant to section 536.050.1 to render the sought-after declaratory judgment." Id. at 25–26 (noting further that because "the appellants could not even predict the effect such a declaratory judgment would have[,] … it would thus "not have a 'conclusive effect' or 'lay to rest the parties' controversy'" as is required by the general principles underlying declaratory judgment actions). Additionally, the supreme court noted that "the authority of the courts of this State to render declaratory judgments must be used and operate within the limits of the constitutional powers and duties of the courts" and, "[o]ne such limit is the traditional doctrine of ripeness, which, when applied in this case, also commands dismissal of the appellants' actions." Id. at 26. In closing, the supreme court concluded that, because the challenged list promulgated by the defendants "is not a rule and the inclusion of the

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - May 04, 2021 - 06:37 PM

Rivers not rulemaking, and because the controversy cannot be resolved by declaratory judgment and is not ripe for adjudication, the judgment of dismissal is affirmed. However, because the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, and because the controversy is not ripe for review, the judgment of dismissal is modified to one without prejudice." Id. at 29 (emphasis added) (citing Rule 84.14).

Therefore, while dismissals may be reviewed for an abuse of discretion in certain contexts, that standard of review is not appropriate in this particular case, just as it was not appropriate in Missouri Soybean Association. This Court is not being asked to determine whether the dismissal itself was appropriate under the circumstances; it is instead being asked to decide a pure question of law: should the dismissal have been with or without prejudice when that dismissal was based solely on standing, mootness, and ripeness—i.e., the jurisdiction or authority of a circuit court and the justiciability of the claims raised.

In any event, even if this Court were to review the dismissal with prejudice for an abuse of discretion, the circuit court erred. Under that standard, this Court must reverse the circuit court's ruling "'if it is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to shock the sense of justice and indicates a lack of careful consideration.'" State ex rel. Scherschel v. City of Kansas City, 470 S.W.3d 391, 397 (Mo. App. W.D. 2015) (quoting Burnett v. Kansas City Sch. Bd., 237 S.W.3d 237, 238–39 (Mo. App. W.D. 2007)); see also Peet, 103 S.W.3d at 876–77 ("Judicial discretion is abused when the trial court's ruling is clearly against the logic of the circumstances then before the court and is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to show a lack of careful consideration and shock the sense of justice.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Moreover, "[a]n abuse of discretion occurs where the [trial] court rests its conclusion on clearly erroneous factual findings or erroneous legal conclusions." Minn. Citizens Concerned for Life, Inc. v. Swanson, 692 F.3d 864, 870 (8th Cir. 2012) (en banc); see also Sandusky Wellness Center, LLC v. Medtox Scientific, Inc., 821 F.3d 992, 995 (8th Cir. 2016) ("A district court abuses its discretion if, as relevant here, it commits an error of law."). In reviewing questions of law, this Court "reviews the trial court's determination independently, without deference to that court's conclusions." Pearson v. Koster, 367 S.W.3d 36, 43–44 (Mo. banc 2012) (quotation and citation omitted). As supported by the discussion, infra, not only was dismissing the claims with prejudice here unreasonable considering the bases for dismissal were a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and non-justiciability but dismissing with prejudice under these circumstances was an erroneous legal conclusion because the circuit court had no authority to reach the merits of the case.

Rule 67.03 is irrelevant to the issues in this appeal. Although the rule states that an involuntary dismissal is "without prejudice unless the court in its order for dismissal shall otherwise specify[,]" this does not authorize a court to reach the merits of a case when it otherwise lacks jurisdiction or authority to do so. A circuit court does not have the discretion to overstep in this manner. Additionally, a trial court's decision to deny a party's request to amend a petition—a ruling that would be properly reviewed for an abuse of discretion—is, once again, easily distinguishable from a case like this one, where a circuit court improperly reaches the merits of a case despite lacking jurisdiction or authority to do so based upon standing, ripeness, and mootness. And, as discussed, infra, standing could be achieved and the circumstances could change in such a way that the claims become ripe and no longer moot.

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - May 04, 2021 - 06:37 PM

To obtain judgment on the merits in any case, plaintiffs must have standing, the case must not be moot (or, if moot, it must meet an exception), and the case must be ripe. In other words, standing, mootness, and ripeness are prerequisites for a court to reach the merits of a case.[2] See, e.g., Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58,

[2] As this Court has noted, "[i]t remains an open question whether a lack of standing implicates the court's jurisdiction or merely the court's authority, but we need not decide this issue given that this case should have been dismissed under either theory." Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012) ("affirm[ing] the circuit court's finding that Borges and Johnson lacked standing and enter[ing] the order the circuit court should have entered, dismissing without prejudice Borges and Johnson's petition" pursuant to Rule 84.14). Presumably, in Borges, this Court was alluding to the recent discussion of jurisdiction versus authority in Webb v. Wyciskalla, 275 S.W.3d 249, 253 (Mo. banc 2009), where the Missouri Supreme Court noted that "[s]ubject-matter jurisdiction, in contrast to personal jurisdiction, is not a matter of a state court's power over a person, but the court's authority to render a judgment in a particular category of case." (noting that, unlike federal courts, the circuit courts in Missouri "have original jurisdiction over all cases and matters, civil and criminal"). "[T]he authority of a court to render judgment in a particular case is, in actuality, the definition of subject matter jurisdiction…." Id. at 254.

While the law surrounding jurisdiction versus authority continues to evolve in court decisions, the issue need not be reached here. Under either theory, dismissal for standing, mootness, or ripeness should be without prejudice.

In Borges, before recognizing that the issue may be one of authority and not jurisdiction, this Court recognized that "[i]n the past, we have found that if a party lacks standing sufficient to maintain an action, the court necessarily does not have jurisdiction over the claims presented." Id. (citing W. Cas. & Surety Co. v. Kansas City Bank & Trust Co., 743 S.W.2d 578, 580 (Mo. App. W.D.1988) ("If [appellant] lacked standing, then its petition was subject to dismissal because it failed to establish the requisite subject matter jurisdiction. It must also follow that the trial court, lacking subject matter jurisdiction, could not enter a judgment on the merits for the [respondent]."). "Therefore, a claim that a party lacks standing has generally been treated as a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Rule 55.27(a)(1)." Id. (citing *State ex rel. 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits.").

II. Dismissal of Count I for lack of standing should be without prejudice because standing could be achieved and the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits.

The underlying facts in this case are uncontested. It makes no difference in this appeal that Appellants asserted that they had standing below and maintained that argument through the post-trial filings. In this appeal, Appellants have elected not to dispute the circuit court's ultimate finding that they lack standing to bring Count I. However, it remains true that, "once the circuit court determined that they lacked standing, it was without jurisdiction to reach the merits of their claims." Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012). A plaintiff without standing "presents no legally justiciable issue," and therefore, "the trial court should have dismissed the[] petition without prejudice." Id. at 184. Thus, while dismissal of a claim where a plaintiff lacks standing is appropriate, what is not appropriate is a dismissal with prejudice that, by definition, reaches the merits of the claim.

"A dismissal with prejudice constitutes an adjudication on the merits and 'bars the assertion of the same cause of action or claim against the same party.'" Doe v. Visionaire Corp., 13 S.W.3d 674, 676 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000) (quoting Rule 67.01). As such, courts do not have any "discretion" to reach the merits of a case where plaintiffs lack standing. Here, the circuit court erred in making a dismissal with prejudice. However, the circuit court did not abuse any discretion, because it had no discretion to abuse under the circumstances.

Amending the dismissal to one without prejudice would not undermine any aspect of this case. While Appellants agree that everyone worked very hard to litigate this case over the span of several years, including a week-long trial and two appeals to this Court, that is simply the nature of litigation. It is not always fast or easy. Moreover, here, standing is curable and could be achieved in the future. The court's determination that these particular plaintiffs did not have standing under the circumstances does not preclude Appellants from ever having standing in the future. This further distinguishes this case from one where a decision related to standing might be based upon undisputed facts but where those facts failed to state a claim at all.

Here, even the circuit court recognized that "[s]tanding is a jurisdictional matter antecedent to the right of relief." D165 p. 2. The circuit court found that, to have standing to challenge the insufficient funding of § 115.427 in a manner that would preclude enforcement, a person who is eligible to vote would have to timely appear at the polls, try to vote, and be turned away for lack of a proper photo identification. Id. If a member of the organizational plaintiffs suffered this harm, according to the circuit court's order, the organization would have associational standing. Additionally, Missouri courts could—and arguably should—begin to embrace organizational standing, just as federal courts have for decades. See Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363 (1982). Thus, standing to raise the claims is achievable and plaintiffs, with their thousands of members, should not be forever barred because the circuit court found they lacked standing at the time of the trial.

Amending the judgment to a dismissal without prejudice in this case would not destabilize any purported "customary practice" of appellate courts affirming dismissals with prejudice where the issue involved a party's standing. And, if it is a customary practice of appellate courts in this state to affirm dismissals with prejudice based solely upon a lack of standing then that practice should be revisited given the legal error involved and dangerous precedent it sets and the many decisions indicating that a court should not reach the merits of a case when the plaintiffs lack standing.

The cases relied on by Respondents to support this argument are inapposite. In all three of the cited cases, the dismissals were based upon the pleadings, the review of the dismissal itself was de novo, and the plaintiffs argued only that their pleadings were sufficient to demonstrate standing but did not raise the issue of whether the dismissal should be with or without prejudice. Therefore, none of the cases include any discussion or point of error related to the fact that the cases were denied with prejudice. In Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 117 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018), and Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017), the plaintiffs argued that they pleaded sufficient facts to establish standing to challenge violations of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) and did not raise any argument related to the petitions being denied with prejudice. In both cases, this Court looked at the sufficiency of the pleadings to determine if the plaintiffs pled injuries establishing standing for an FCRA claim. Campbell, 561 S.W.3d at 120–21; see also Corozzo, 531 S.W.3d at 572. Likewise, in Missouri Public Service Commission v. Oneok, Inc., 318 S.W.3d 134, 137 (Mo. App. W.D. 2009), the appeal followed a lower court's dismissal for lack of standing based upon the allegations in the petition and no error was asserted relating to the dismissal being with prejudice. This Court should not premise its decision in the present case on previous cases where a dismissal with prejudice based on standing was affirmed but where the "with prejudice" distinction was not raised by a party or discussed by this Court.

Moreover, the decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo banc. 2020), does not change the standing argument or foreclose the possibility that a plaintiff or member of a plaintiff organization could subsequently satisfy standing requirements. Count I of the third amended petition alleged that § 115.427.1 could not be enforced pursuant to § 115.427.6(3). There has been no change to the identification requirements in § 115.427.1 or the funding requirements in § 115.427.6(3), namely that "[a]ll costs associated with the implementation of this section shall be reimbursed from the general revenue of this state by an appropriation for that purpose. If there is not a sufficient appropriation of state funds, then the personal identification requirements of subsection 1 of this section shall not be enforced." Pursuant to the circuit court's holding, standing could still be achieved regardless of the Priorities USA decision (i.e., a person who is eligible to vote would have to timely appear at the polls, try to vote, and be turned away for lack of a proper photo identification). The Priorities USA decision is limited to § 115.427.2(1) and .3 (i.e., the affidavit requirement). At any future election, even though the Priorities USA decision requires the acceptance of non-photo forms of identification without a signed affidavit, a poll worker could still require a voter to present photo identification and turn them away if they do not. Section 115.427.1 still states that voters "shall establish their identity and eligibility to vote at the polling place by presenting a form of personal identification to elected officials." As long as that subsection remains in effect, poll workers could ask voters to present those types of photo identifications at the polls and this incorrect request could be based on the State's insufficient funding to implement the law.[3]

It is not futile to do as the law requires and amend the dismissal here to one without prejudice when the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to enter a dismissal with prejudice. If the dismissal with prejudice was to be affirmed, Appellant organizations and their members who do achieve standing would be forever barred from challenging the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3)—relief that was not granted in Priorities USA.

[3] See, e.g., Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 454 (noting that, "election officials did not understand the affidavit requirement[,]" one voter was "informed by an election official that she would need to obtain photo identification to vote in the next election[,]" and another voter "was told he could not vote despite presenting his over registration card – an acceptable form of non-photo identification under option two").

III. Dismissal of Counts I and II for mootness and Count II as being unripe should be without prejudice because there is a realistic chance that both counts will no longer be moot in the future and Count II will become ripe; the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits after finding the claims to be moot and unripe.

Like a case where there is no standing, a moot or unripe case is not justiciable. In other words, the circuit court should not have reached the merits by dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice for mootness (Counts I and II) and being unripe (Count II). Appellants could be eligible to bring a claim at a future date if the issues were no longer moot and ripe for a lawsuit, but Appellants will be forever barred if this Court affirms the dismissal with prejudice.

Count I challenged the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3). Those specific identification (§ 115.427.1) and funding (§ 115.427.6(3)) requirements have never changed. Priorities USA held only that the affidavit requirement found in § 115.427.2(1) and .3 is an unconstitutional burden on the fundamental right to vote. While the Priorities USA court enjoined portions of § 115.427 relating specifically to the affidavit requirement, including "the dissemination of materials indicating photo identification is required to vote[,]" 591 S.W.3d at 451, Appellants' potentially broader challenge to the enforcement of § 115.427.1 pursuant to § 115.427.6(3) should not be forever barred on this basis.

Regarding mootness, the circuit court seemed to hold that by eliminating the affidavit requirement, the circuit court in Priorities USA also enjoined the strict photo-identification requirements of § 115.427.1 "as a practical matter," D165 pp. 3–4, thus mooting any sufficient funding argument related to the enforcement of § 115.427.1 in this case. However, a mootness finding could change regardless of the affidavit requirement. In fact, Priorities USA supports a finding that it is likely a poll worker will not be properly informed as to how to implement the law and may require specific § 115.427.1 photo identification and then turn away a voter who does not have it, despite the injunction in that case. See, e.g., Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 454 (noting that, "election officials did not understand the affidavit requirement[,]" one voter was "informed by an election official that she would need to obtain photo identification to vote in the next election[,]" and another voter "was told he could not vote despite presenting his voter registration card – an acceptable form of non-photo identification under option two"). Thus, if an eligible voter were to go to a polling place to cast a ballot and a poll worker required that voter to present a specific form of photo identification and turned them away if they did not (i.e., they achieved standing), and if that voter (or the Appellant organization of which they are a member) alleged that the funding requirements of § 115.427.6(3) were not being met and therefore § 115.427.1 could not be enforced, a claim for relief would be stated and would not be mooted by Priorities USA. The funding requirements of § 115.427.6(3) continue to exist and it is well-established law that "requiring individuals to present photo identification to vote is unconstitutional." Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 458 (citing Weinschenk v. State, 203 S.W.3d 201, 219 (Mo. banc 2006)). Although Appellants do not challenge the circuit court determination that this case was mooted under the circumstances, the Priorities USA decision as to affidavits should not preclude Appellants from all such future claims.

Priorities USA was tried in late September and early October 2018 (first decision entered by the circuit court on October 23, 2018) and a final decision of the Missouri Supreme Court was issued on January 14, 2020 (rehearing denied January 30, 2020). This case was tried in August 2019 and a judgment dismissing Appellants' claims was signed April 20, 2020. Given the unique circumstances of the 2020 elections during the COVID-19 pandemic and the significant increase in voting absentee and by mail in Missouri, some of the scenarios that would present a live controversy may yet play out in future elections.

Count II of Appellant's petition alleged that the failure to provide correct information to the public, i.e., the "advance notice" requirement, resulted in a violation of § 115.427.5. Count II was not dismissed on standing grounds but only as being moot and unripe. In dismissing Count II, the circuit court found that the injunctive relief in Priorities USA mooted the need for the specific injunctive relief—albeit not precisely the same relief—requested in this case. See D165 pp. 5–6 (comparing the relief requested here and the injunction ordered in Priorities USA).[4] In making its ruling here, the circuit court noted that "the original manner in which [the State] tried to fulfill [the advance-notice] obligation was found to be deficient" in Priorities USA and then found that whether the State's "subsequent information campaigns avoid this deficiency is not yet ripe." D165 pp. 5–6. So, while the mootness determination at the time the circuit court ruled in April 2020 is not challenged here, as the circuit court acknowledged in its ripeness finding, Appellants' claim related to advance notice may resurface in the future if the Secretary of State continues to provide incorrect information to voters about all of § 115.427's requirements. In other words, while the Priorities USA court did enjoin the State from disseminating materials representing to the public that a photo identification card is required to vote, including materials with a specific graphic indicating voters will be asked for a photo identification card without specifying the other acceptable forms of identification that can be used to vote, that injunction in a case in which Appellants were not parties should not bar them from bringing a claim in the future if the advance notice provision of § 115.427.5 is violated. See Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 559–61; D165 p. 5.[5] As such, subsequent information campaigns by the State could make this issue ripe, in which case Appellants should be entitled to bring a suit.

The possibility of a future claim is further supported by the fact that, in Priorities USA, the prohibition on the dissemination of materials focused on a single advertisement—one of many used by the State—and the injunction was "limited in scope, as it enjoined the State from disseminating only those 'materials with the graphic that voters will be asked to show a photo identification card without specifying other forms of identification which voters may also show.'" 591 S.W.3d 460–61. Thus, while it is possible that this limited-in-scope injunction will stop the State from disseminating incorrect information about the requirements of § 115.427, it in no way guarantees that will be the case. Just because no party has yet brought a lawsuit does not mean that the claim will not become ripe. However, Appellants could not currently bring this claim even if it were to become ripe because they have been barred by the circuit court's dismissal with prejudice. The advance-notice requirement found in § 115.427.5 is ongoing and the State must comply with both the law's requirements and the injunction issued in Priorities USA. The Priorities USA decision should not be read to mean that the claim raised in this case would never become ripe in the future.

"The basic rationale of the ripeness doctrine is to 'prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements over administrative policies, and also to protect the agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.'" Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 26 (quoting Abbott Laboratories, Inc. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148–49 (1967) (overruled on other grounds)). "Filing a suit prematurely should not prevent a plaintiff from proceeding with an action when it becomes ripe." Brinson v. Whittico, 793 S.W.2d 632, 634 (Mo. App. E.D. 1990). "Thus, if an action is deemed premature and a trial court dismisses it for that reason, the action should be dismissed without prejudice." Id. (holding that, "[b]ecause the trial court deemed the lawsuit premature, it may either dismiss the lawsuit without prejudice or may allow the lawsuit to pend until ripe for adjudication."). Although an injunction was issued in Priorities USA, Appellants should not be forever barred from raising any claim related to advance notice under § 115.427.5, consistent with the trial court's acknowledgement that this issue could subsequently become ripe.

Conclusion

Because Appellants' claims were dismissed based on jurisdictional and justiciability grounds (standing, mootness, and ripeness), the trial court should have dismissed the claims without prejudice. Appellants request that this Court, pursuant to its authority under Rule 84.14, dispose finally of the case by entering the judgment the trial court should have entered and dismiss Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition without prejudice.

INTRODUCTION

This lawsuit strikes at the heart of the First Amendment's protection for church autonomy. The Supreme Court has long held that disgruntled clergy members cannot sue their churches over matters of church discipline or appointment to ecclesiastical office. See Bouldin v. Alexander, 82 U.S. (15 Wall.) 131, 139 (1872); Gonzalez v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Manila, 280 U.S. 1 (1929). Ever since, disgruntled clergy members have tried to evade this rule by repackaging ecclesiastical disputes as church property, breach of contract, or tort claims. Yet the result has been the same: Courts have repeatedly held that when a minister's claim implicates the authority of churches to handle matters of internal governance and selection of clergy, it is barred by the First Amendment. Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 724-25 (1976). That is this case.

Father Alexander Belya, the Plaintiff, was a Russian Orthodox Priest. He claims he was elected Bishop of Miami. But other priests and key leaders of the Russian Orthodox Church disagreed. As a matter of church procedure, they wrote a letter to church leaders asserting that Father Alexander had not been properly elected Bishop of Miami. The letter also called for investigation of serious allegations of priestly malfeasance, including breaking the seal of the confessional, manipulating parishioners, and financial improprieties. Church leadership responded with an investigation, concluded Father Alexander had not been elected bishop, and removed him from all priestly duties.

Father Alexander has now sued the Russian Orthodox Church and its leaders, alleging that the letter—an ecclesiastical communication contesting his supposed election and calling for his investigation—constitutes defamation. And he seeks millions of dollars in damages for his alleged "loss of standing" within the Russian Orthodox Church.

This lawsuit, on its face, is barred by the First Amendment in two ways. First, it violates the church autonomy doctrine, which prevents courts from interfering in "ecclesiastical hierarchies, church administration, and appointment of clergy." Rweyemamu v. Cote, 520 F.3d 198, 204-05 (2d Cir. 2008). Church autonomy also prevents courts from interfering in a church's right to "facilitate[] religious communication and religious dialogue" between a church and its flock, especially communications promoting transparency in the church community on matters of church leadership and discipline. Bryce v. Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Colo., 289 F.3d 648, 658 (10th Cir. 2002). Second, it violates the ministerial exception, which protects the church's "authority to select, supervise, and if necessary, remove a minister without interference by secular authorities." Our Lady of Guadalupe Sch. v. Morrissey-Berru, 140 S. Ct. 2049, 2060 (2020).

The district court declined to engage with these constitutional barriers, determining in three separate opinions that it had the authority to delve into the truth or falsity of Father Alexander's claims. But that means a court can weigh in on how a church communicates among its leadership and with its community about the selection of bishops. It also means allowing discovery of internal church documents, permitting depositions of church leadership—including Metropolitan Hilarion, the First Hierarch of the Church—about internal church procedures, judging the truth or falsity of church statements about disciplinary procedures, and ultimately passing judgment on Father Alexander's status within the church. These decisions are appealable under the collateral order doctrine because they deny the church the immunity from suit provided by the First Amendment. Without this Court's intervention, that immunity will be lost.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Finally, at a minimum, this Court should reverse the district court's order requiring the parties to immediately proceed to merits discovery before resolution of the Religion Clauses defenses. This Court has previously recognized that this path is appropriate, and other district and appellate courts to consider the question have uniformly required bifurcation to avoid church-state entanglement. And ruling otherwise would entangle civil courts in deeply sensitive matters by allowing disgruntled priests to depose their bishops any time a promotion doesn't go their way.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332. This Court has jurisdiction of this appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and the collateral order doctrine. Plaintiff's claims, however, challenge church discipline and governance, matters on which civil courts lack subject matter jurisdiction under the First Amendment of the Constitution.

The district court denied the motion to dismiss on May 19, 2021. On June 17, the Church timely filed a notice of appeal. On July 6, 2021, the district court denied the Church's Rule 59(e) motion to alter or amend the May 19 judgment. The Church timely amended its notice of appeal to include that order on July 16. On July 27, 2021, the district court denied the Church's motion to bifurcate discovery or stay the case pending this appeal. The Church timely amended its notice of appeal to include that order on August 13. Father Alexander's motion to dismiss this appeal for lack of jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 is fully briefed and pending in this Court.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

I. Is Father Alexander's suit arising from statements made during internal church disciplinary processes and regarding an ecclesiastical dispute barred by the church autonomy doctrine?

II. Is Father Alexander's suit as a minister against his former church implicating the church's selection and control of its ministers barred by the ministerial exception?

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

III. Are the district court's orders denying the motion to dismiss and the motion to bifurcate discovery immediately appealable under the collateral order doctrine?

IV. Did the district court err in refusing to limit discovery to resolution of the Religion Clauses defenses, and instead requiring the parties to start merits discovery?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case involves a dispute between a priest and his former church over his failed appointment to the ecclesiastical office of Vicar Bishop. The case below is No. 1:20-cv-6597 in the Southern District of New York, before U.S. District Judge Victor Marrero. The decisions appealed are from a denial of a motion to dismiss, JA.67; a denial of reconsideration of that ruling, JA.114; and a denial of a motion to bifurcate discovery or stay proceedings, JA.146. Defendants-Appellants have appealed those orders under the collateral order doctrine. JA.112, 143, 149.

Defendants. Defendants-Appellants are the Synod of Bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church Outside of Russia, along with individual clergy, a diocese, and other senior leaders of the church (collectively, "the Church" or "ROCOR"). The lead Appellant is the ruling bishop and First Hierarch of the Church, Metropolitan Hilarion, whose legal name is Hilarion Kapral.

ROCOR is part of the Russian Orthodox Church. Founded in 1920 following the 1917 Bolshevik revolution, ROCOR exists to promote "the overall spiritual nourishment of the Orthodox Russian flock in the diaspora[.]"[1] ROCOR's highest ecclesiastical body is the Sobor (Council) of Bishops. Regulations at ¶7; see Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral, 344 U.S. 94, 96 n.1 (1952) ("A sobor is a convention of bishops, clergymen and laymen with superior powers" and aids "church officials [to] rule their dioceses"). The Sobor is ROCOR's controlling body, meeting every two years to make the Church's laws, carry out its ministry, adjudicate its internal disputes, and elect bishops. Regulations at ¶¶7-8. The Sobor's president is Metropolitan Hilarion. Id. ¶8.

The defendant Synod of Bishops is the Sobor's executive organ. Id. ¶16. The Synod consists of Metropolitan Hilarion, two of his deputies, and four members of the Sobor. Id. As relevant here, the Synod is also charged with several ecclesiastical responsibilities, including investigation of "serious disruption" in a diocese; activities involving the appointment, transfer, release, and retirement of bishops between Sobors; conducting an appellate court to defrock clergy; resolving matters involving church property; and among other things, "the resolution of questions concerning various aspects of church life and church administration." Id. ¶¶19, 29.

Plaintiff. The Plaintiff-Appellee is Father Alexander Belya, an "Orthodox Christian archimandrite"—a monastic priest. JA.87. Father Alexander claims he was elected "by a majority of the Bishops" in the Church to the position of Bishop of Miami, Vicar of the Eastern Archdiocese of Florida, on December 6, 2018. JA.92.

According to the complaint, on September 3, 2019, after the Moscow leadership of the Church had recognized Father Alexander's supposed appointment as bishop, several ROCOR Clergy, including members of the Synod, wrote a letter (the Clergy Letter) to the Synod and Metropolitan Hilarion raising concerns about "irregular" aspects of the documents relating to Father Alexander's election as a bishop. JA.19-21. The documents with irregularities were letters allegedly sent by Metropolitan Hilarion and a Canadian archbishop to senior church officials regarding Father Alexander's candidacy and election to the bishopric. JA.19-20. The Clergy Letter also called on the Synod not to consider Father Alexander's candidacy in the future because of "the submission of so many serious complaints against him." JA.20. It described problems with Father Alexander's priestly performance, including him "breaking the seal of Confession," using "information obtained during Confession . . . for the purpose of denigrating parishioners and of controlling them," and failing to ensure proper accountability for church property and finances. JA.20. The Clergy Letter asked "the Synod to ascertain the circumstances of the confirmation of the non-existent 'election,'" and it closed by calling on Metropolitan Hilarion to conduct an investigation into these complaints and to suspend Father Alexander "from performing any clerical functions" in the meantime. JA.20-21.

As Father Alexander admits and the district court recognized, this letter—from a group of clergy to the governing Synod, contesting the supposed election of a bishop, describing problems of priestly performance, and requesting an ecclesiastical investigation—is the crux of Father Alexander's complaint and the source of each of the alleged "specific Defamatory Statements" at issue in this case. Mot. to Dismiss at 2, ECF 22-2; JA.71.[2]

Father Alexander's complaint discusses at length his alleged election, the Clergy Letter challenging that election, and the actions of the Church in response, see JA.91-99, including the Clergy Letter's alleged publication within the Church and, eventually, alleged publication on a website the Church uses to communicate with members and subsequent coverage by media outlets which cover the Church. JA.98.

The Clergy Letter was followed by a "public decree" from Metropolitan Hilarion instituting an investigation of Father Alexander and his activities and removing him from all ministerial duties. JA.99. Rather than submit to investigation or appeal internally, Father Alexander left the Church and sued for defamation. JA.99. Father Alexander claims damages for the loss of income from members leaving his congregation, and for "severely impaired reputation and standing" within the Russian Orthodox Church Outside of Russia. JA.105-06, 108.

Proceedings in the district court. Father Alexander brought this lawsuit on August 18, 2020, alleging, as relevant here, defamation, defamation per se, and defamation by innuendo against Metropolitan Hilarion and nearly a dozen clergy and senior leaders of the Church, as well as vicarious liability against the Eastern American Diocese and the Synod of Bishops.[3]

On November 24, 2020, the Church sought permission to file a motion to dismiss and requested a hearing. It argued, inter alia, that the First Amendment prohibits judicial interference in ecclesiastical disputes, particularly those over the nomination, election, and confirmation of bishops. JA.17. The Church attached the full Clergy Letter to its letter brief to demonstrate the ecclesiastical context of the communication. JA.19-21. Although it had not been attached to Father Alexander's complaint, the Church argued that it should be incorporated by reference because it was integral to all the claims and the complaint quoted it repeatedly.

The district court's practice rules limited both sides to letter briefs of no more than three pages. See Individual Practices of United States District Judge Victor Marrero II.B, https://perma.cc/77NM-KKLH. The district court denied the Church's three-page request and directed Father Alexander to respond with a letter brief and an amended complaint, JA.30, which Father Alexander filed as a proposed complaint on January 14, 2021, Dkt. 42-1. The Church replied via three-page letter brief on January 22, explaining that the first amended complaint had the same constitutional flaws and requesting dismissal. JA.35-37.

On May 19, the court construed the Church's November 24 letter brief as a motion to dismiss and denied the motion without permitting full briefing or oral argument. JA.84. The court held that the First Amendment does not bar Father Alexander's defamation claims because the suit "may be resolved by appealing to neutral principles of law." JA.77.

On June 16, 2021, the Church filed a timely Rule 59(e) motion to alter the judgment. Dkt. 51; Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e). On June 25, the Church filed a separate request that the district court certify its order for interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). Dkt. 54.

On July 6, the district court denied both motions in a single five-page order. JA.114-18. The court acknowledged that "the ministerial exception and the doctrine of ecclesiastical abstention" were "the controlling legal doctrines at issue," but reaffirmed its previous order denying the Religion Clauses as a defense and held that disputes "as to whether the factual situation presented fits into the ministerial exception or ecclesiastical abstention" warranted denying certification. JA.117.

The Church sought to limit any discovery to resolution of the ministerial exception and church autonomy defenses, or, alternatively, a stay pending this appeal. Dkt. 62. The court denied that motion and ordered the parties to promptly commence and complete merits discovery. JA.146-48; 142.

On June 17, the Church timely filed this collateral order appeal of the order denying the motion to dismiss. JA.112. On July 16, the Church amended its notice of appeal to include the July 6 order denying the Rule 59(e) motion. JA.143. On August 13, the Church amended its notice of appeal to include the July 27 order denying the motion for bifurcated discovery or stay. JA.149.

Proceedings in this Court. Father Alexander moved to dismiss this appeal on July 15, 2021, and that motion remains pending. On August 14, the Church filed a motion to stay district court proceedings to prevent the Church and its leadership from being required to undergo intrusive discovery and depositions regarding the events and communications surrounding the election, confirmation, and suspension of a Bishop.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Father Alexander's defamation claims strike at the heart of the church autonomy doctrine. They seek to punish the Church for ecclesiastical communications about its internal religious policies and decisions about choosing and disciplining its clergy. Adjudicating these claims would both violate the Church's right to choose its clergy and unconstitutionally entangle civil courts in ecclesiastical matters. Father Alexander's claims also call for intrusive discovery into the Church's decision-making process, including probing the mind of the highest Church officials regarding their decision to suspend a priest.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Father Alexander's defamation claims are also barred by the ministerial exception, because he is a priest challenging the manner in which his Church selected its bishops and controlled its clergy. Permitting his claims to proceed would undermine the ministerial exception's purpose of leaving the selection and control of ministers solely in the hands of their church.

This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal through the collateral order doctrine. As numerous courts have recognized, church autonomy is not only a defense to liability, but also a form of immunity protecting against entangling discovery and trial. Thus, the district court's orders rejecting the Religion Clauses defenses and speeding the case toward merits discovery and trial are subject to collateral order review. The district court's orders immediately expose the Church and its senior hierarchy to intrusive merits discovery, which will cause irreparable and unreviewable First Amendment harm if allowed to remain in place. The orders are accordingly conclusive as to the Church's claimed First Amendment immunity and entirely separate from the merits of Father Alexander's defamation claim.

Finally, the district court abused its discretion by denying bifurcation of discovery and ordering the parties to commence merits discovery before resolution of the Religion Clauses defenses.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The standard of review for orders on motions to dismiss and on the district court's interpretation of the Constitution is de novo. Garcia v. Does, 779 F.3d 84, 91 (2d Cir. 2015) (denial of qualified immunity on a motion to dismiss); Kreisberg v. HealthBridge Mgmt., LLC, 732 F.3d 131, 137 (2d Cir. 2013) (constitutional interpretation). The standard of review for the district court's denial of the motion to bifurcate discovery or stay proceedings is abuse of discretion. Moll v. Telesector Res. Grp., Inc., 760 F.3d 198, 204 (2d Cir. 2014). Abuse of discretion includes "errors of law." Id.

ARGUMENT

I. Father Alexander's claims are barred by the church autonomy doctrine.

For over a century, courts have recognized that the First Amendment's Religion Clauses protect against government interference in internal church affairs, guaranteeing a heightened "independence" for churches "from secular control or manipulation." Kedroff, 344 U.S. at 116. Under this "general principle of church autonomy," the Religion Clauses protect a religious organization's "independence in matters of faith and doctrine and in closely linked matters of internal government." Our Lady, 140 S. Ct. at 2061.[4] "State interference" in such matters would "obviously" violate the Free Exercise Clause, and "any attempt" by the judiciary to "dictate or even to influence such matters" is an equally clear violation of the Establishment Clause. Id. at 2060.

This principle especially applies to disputes over "church discipline [and] ecclesiastical government." Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 714-15. Those who "unite themselves to" a religious organization "do so with an implied consent to this government, and are bound to submit to it," "in all cases of ecclesiastical cognizance." Watson v. Jones, 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 679, 729 (1871). As relevant here, that includes a church's selection and discipline of its clergy, as well as church communications about those internal matters. See Gonzalez, 280 U.S. at 16 ("it is the function of the church authorities to determine what the essential qualifications of a chaplain are and whether the candidate possesses them"); Bryce, 289 F.3d at 659 ("internal ecclesiastical dispute and dialogue [are] protected by the First Amendment").

[4] The term "church" in church autonomy is used generically to mean religious institutions in any faith tradition. Courts have also used "religious autonomy" and "ecclesiastical abstention" to signify the doctrine.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Based solely on the allegations in the complaint, this Court cannot adjudicate Father Alexander's claims without adjudicating the Church's decision to investigate and discipline its own clergy, interfering in matters of religious doctrine and church policy. Doing so would violate the separation between church and state set by the church autonomy doctrine. The district court erred by holding otherwise.

A. The church autonomy doctrine can bar defamation claims.

The church autonomy doctrine has been held to bar civil authorities from intervening in a broad range of internal church matters involving governance of the Church, including clergy appointment and church discipline. Courts have specifically held that the church autonomy doctrine bars defamation and other tort claims based on communications about clergy appointment, church discipline, and church policies and doctrine.

"Church discipline and the composition of the church hierarchy are at the core of ecclesiastical concern," and courts thus routinely bar suits that interfere with churches' decisions involving clergy selection and discipline. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 717. For example, in Gonzalez, the plaintiff sued the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Manila for appointment to a chaplaincy under the terms of a trust, though "he was ineligible under the then existing canon law." 280 U.S. at 18. The Supreme Court held that since the chaplain's qualifications were "purely ecclesiastical,"

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

it must accept the decision of the Archbishop that the plaintiff was not qualified. Id. at 16.

The Supreme Court later elaborated on Gonzalez in its Milivojevich decision. There, the Court considered the Serbian Orthodox Church's decision to discipline and remove a bishop. 426 U.S. at 713. Instead of participating in the church's appeal process, the Bishop sued in Illinois state court, arguing that control of his diocese was a property matter that could be determined by neutral principles of law. Id. at 706-07. The Supreme Court held that even though the mother church's decision affected who had control over church property, "the civil courts must accept that consequence as the incidental effect of an ecclesiastical determination that is not subject to judicial abrogation." Id. at 720. It also found that the Illinois Supreme Court's "detailed review of the evidence" regarding the bishop's claims, including "conflicting testimony concerning internal church procedures," was "impermissible." Id. at 718.

Courts have long interpreted this line of cases to bar judicial interference in the selection or discipline of clergy. See, e.g., Rweyemamu, 520 F.3d at 204-05 ("Since at least the turn of the century, courts have declined to interfere with ecclesiastical hierarchies, church administration, and appointment of clergy." (cleaned up)); Bryce, 289 F.3d at 658 ("letter[] to other church leaders [that] discussed an internal church personnel matter and the doctrinal reasons for . . . proposed personnel decision" protected by church autonomy doctrine); Eglise

Baptiste Bethanie De Ft. Lauderdale, Inc. v. Seminole Tribe of Fla., 824 F. App'x 680, 683 (11th Cir. 2020) (claim rejected involving "whether [defendant] was the rightful successor to the church's leadership").

Recognizing the "independence from secular control" granted to churches in ecclesiastical matters, Kedroff, 344 U.S. at 116, courts "generally do not permit [defamation and other] tort claims arising from internal processes by which religious organizations discipline their members." Hubbard v. J Message Grp. Corp., 325 F. Supp. 3d 1198, 1214 (D.N.M. 2018); cf. Kreshik v. St. Nicholas Cathedral, 363 U.S. 190, 191 (1960) (rejecting common law claim seeking to transfer control of cathedral). Statements made by clergy as part of a disciplinary process and based on religious concerns "may be incorrect, but they are not actionable." Bryce, 289 F.3d at 658.

Those statements include criticism of religious leaders. For instance, in Moon v. Moon, the Southern District of New York considered a succession dispute following the death of the Unification Church's leader. 431 F. Supp. 3d 394, 400 (S.D.N.Y. 2019), aff'd as modified 833 F. App'x 876 (2d Cir. 2020). The plaintiff argued that statements made by church leadership "disput[ing] [his] proper authority to lead" the church were defamatory. Id. at 401. But in a decision affirmed by this Court, the district court held that it could not consider the "truth or falsity of statements concerning [parties'] purported religious standing." Id. at 413.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

And in In re Diocese of Lubbock, the Texas Supreme Court barred defamation claims based on public church discipline. A deacon of the Catholic Church brought defamation claims against a Catholic diocese for including his name on a public list of "clergy against whom credible allegations of sexual abuse of a minor" had been made. 624 S.W.3d 506, 510 (Tex. 2021). The deacon claimed neutral principles could apply to determine whether a woman "with a history of mental and emotional disorders" was a minor under canon law. Id. at 509, 514. When the lower courts were going to allow the claims to proceed, the Texas Supreme Court granted mandamus and held that even if the truth or falsity of the deacon's claim could be determined by a factfinder, the suit "ultimately challenge[d] the result of a church's internal investigation into its own clergy," and "[i]nvestigations that relate to the character and conduct of church leaders are inherently ecclesiastical" and off-limits to civil courts. Id. at 517-18.

For the reasons articulated in these cases, courts around the country have often barred defamation and other tort claims arising from communications about clergy appointment and church discipline. For example:

- Myhre v. Seventh-Day Adventist Church Reform Movement Am. Union Int'l Missionary Soc'y, 719 F. App'x 926, 928-29 (11th Cir. 2018) (tort claims against religious institution were barred because they "required an examination of doctrinal beliefs and internal church procedures");

B. The church autonomy doctrine bars Father Alexander's defamation claims.

In this case, Father Alexander's claims seek to penalize the church for "the incidental effect of an ecclesiastical determination," Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 720, namely: to deny him a bishopric and suspend his priestly duties. Civil courts do not have the authority to intervene in that ecclesiastical process and second-guess those determinations.

The district court erred by holding otherwise. After sharply limited briefing and no oral argument, the court addressed the church autonomy defenses at issue here in just two paragraphs, holding that the complaint "raise[d] secular inquiries" that did not involve "weighing matters of ecclesiastical concern." JA.77. Those inquiries included "whether . . . Defendants made the alleged statements, the truth of the alleged statements, [and] Defendants' knowledge of the alleged statements' falsity . . . ." Id. But each of those inquiries involves not just finding out "what occurred," JA.147; they render judgment upon the Church's very process of selecting and disciplining its clergy.

Father Alexander's claims interfere in that process and violate church autonomy in at least four ways: they interfere with church discipline, entangle the court in doctrine and Church policy, require adjudication of a minister's religious standing, and necessitate intrusive discovery.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

1. Father Alexander's claims interfere with Church discipline.

First, Father Alexander asks this Court to impose liability on the Church for two of its "ecclesiastical determinations" regarding clergy discipline: whether Father Alexander was properly appointed to be a bishop, and whether he was qualified for his ministry role.

The Clergy Letter is an internal church communication from diocesan leadership, including members of the ROCOR Synod, to the Synod and Metropolitan Hilarion, the church leadership responsible for disciplining and selecting clergy. The Letter pointed out "irregular" aspects of the documents submitted to demonstrate Father Alexander's alleged election and confirmation as a bishop, JA.19, and described problems with Father Alexander's priestly performance, including his "breaking the seal of Confession" and using "information obtained during Confession . . . for the purpose of denigrating parishioners and of controlling them," and a "total lack of financial (and other) accountability" and "a whole range of unseemly behavior . . . requiring specific investigation," JA.20. The Letter closed by asking the Metropolitan to conduct an investigation into these "serious complaints against him," including "the circumstances of the confirmation of the non-existent 'election'" to the bishopric, and to suspend Father Alexander "from performing any clerical functions" in the meantime. JA.20-21. As Father Alexander admits, Metropolitan Hilarion responded by suspending Father Alexander from his priestly duties pending an investigation. JA.99. For his part, Father Alexander chose not to pursue the Church investigation, but instead left ROCOR and filed this lawsuit. Id.

Holding the Church liable for statements made by its clergy regarding internal church processes and the character of other clergy would chill all manner of religious exercise across religious institutions. It would hinder religious organizations' ability to carry out their most basic functions, including selecting clergy, and would expose religious organizations to the "significant burden" of having to "predict which of its activities a secular court will consider religious." Corp. of Presiding Bishop v. Amos, 483 U.S. 327, 336 (1987). In response, religious organizations would either refrain from speaking altogether, or would refrain from implementing directives that require transparent communication between clergy and with the broader church. But the "church autonomy doctrine is rooted in protection of the First Amendment rights of the church to discuss church doctrine and policy freely," including on "internal church disciplinary procedures" and matters. Bryce, 289 F.3d at 658. Allowing this case to proceed further would uproot those rights.

Father Alexander attempts to cherry-pick parts of the Clergy Letter—concerning whether the election happened and the irregularities in the letters central to his appointment to bishop—that he claims a secular court can review. But even these narrowly quoted sections do not help him. As a part of an internal ecclesiastical process concerning both discipline and the church's selection of its leadership, the Clergy Letter cannot be divided up by secular and religious claims because "courts are ill-equipped" to determine whether a "dispute between a minister and his or her religious group is premised on religious grounds" as opposed to "secular considerations." Fratello v. Archdiocese of N.Y., 863 F.3d 190, 203 (2d Cir. 2017) (recognizing "judicial incompetence with respect to strictly ecclesiastical matters"). In holding otherwise, the district court "glosse[d] over core Establishment Clause issues" in "significant ways," including by "cross[ing] the permissible constitutional line and . . . defining 'Church policy, administration, and governance'" in a way that was inconsistent with the Church's own judgment of those matters. Penn v. N.Y. Methodist Hosp., 884 F.3d 416, 429 (2d Cir. 2018).

Further, the district court mistakenly considered only the portions of the Clergy Letter quoted in the complaint. JA.79 n.4. In doing so, it ignored the ecclesiastical context of the Letter omitted by Father Alexander, including charges of abuse of doctrine and Church policy. Because the complaint "relie[d] heavily" on the "terms and effect" of the Clergy Letter, the court should have considered it in its entirety. Nicosia v. Amazon.com, Inc., 834 F.3d 220, 230-31 (2d Cir. 2016).[5] [5] Father Alexander has never objected to consideration of the entire Clergy Letter. See Dkts. 39, 42, 45 (no opposition to attached Letter); 53 (no response to argument that court erred in ignoring it).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

But even the allegedly "secular" components Father Alexander points to relate to the entirely ecclesiastical determination of whether Father Alexander had been properly appointed as bishop. The Church's highest authority determined that he had not, which is a determination that "legal tribunals must accept . . . as binding on them." Kedroff, 344 U.S. at 113. For a court to intervene in that determination by parsing the communication involved in it would be to overturn the highest authority in the Church in a "matter[] of church government." Id. at 116.

In sum, Father Alexander's claims against Metropolitan Hilarion, the Eastern American Diocese, and the Synod are all premised on contesting their disciplinary decisions. Father Alexander attacks those decisions as intentionally erroneous ecclesiastical determinations of his status as bishop. See, e.g., JA.104 ("intentional and malicious conduct"). He wants not only a civil court's review of "ecclesiastical decisions made by a church body created to make those decisions," Byrd v. DeVeaux, No. 17-3251, 2019 WL 1017602, at *7 (D. Md. Mar. 4, 2019) (emphasis added), but also civil liability on the decision-making church bodies themselves. Neither is permissible.

2. Father Alexander's claims require courts to interpret Church policy and answer religious questions.

Father Alexander's claims require the court to answer religious questions, including those about the Church's internal religious procedure. They do so in three ways: they ask the court to interpret proper ROCOR ecclesiastical election procedures; they ask the court to determine Father Alexander's standing as a minister; and they ask the court to resolve matters of church membership and authority in order to determine damages.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

First, Father Alexander has repeatedly argued that the Clergy Letter will be shown false if he proves the authenticity of the Metropolitan's signature on the documents the Clergy Letter addresses. ECF 22-2 at 7. Not so. The Clergy Letter claims irregularities were present in letters sent from the Metropolitan regarding Father Alexander's election. Therefore, even if the signature were proper, that would not resolve the question of the irregularities in the letters. Thus, a court would still have to rule on the truth or falsity of the actual statements in the Clergy Letter in order to determine whether the appointment communications to Moscow were in fact "drawn up in an irregular manner." JA.19. And "irregularity" is determined by ROCOR and its policies, not civil courts.

Moreover, the irregularities actually identified by the Clergy Letter all involved matters of internal church procedure—including whether appointment communications "contain[ed] the appropriate citation from the decision of the Synod of the Bishops," whether the letter from Archbishop Gabriel was "issued" according to ROCOR custom, and whether it was properly produced "on the official letterhead of the Most Reverend Gabriel." JA.19-20. Whether the Church "complied with church laws and regulations" in executing and communicating about these procedures "is exactly the inquiry that the First Amendment prohibits." Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 713; see also Kavanagh v. Zwilling, 997 F. Supp. 2d 241, 252 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd, 578 F. App'x 24 (2d Cir. 2014) (defamation claim challenging press release describing church discipline would require the court to consider "the truth or falsity of the Catholic Church's characterization of its own law and doctrine"). Such "[r]eligious questions" must be "answered by religious bodies," not juries or judges. McCarthy v. Fuller, 714 F.3d 971, 976 (7th Cir. 2013).

As Father Alexander admits, and the district court recognized, the Clergy Letter is "the heart" of Father Alexander's complaint and each of the alleged "specific Defamatory Statements" are contained within it. ECF 22-2 at 2; see JA.71. Thus, because the heart of his claims turns on interpreting Church policy, his claims must fail.

Father Alexander alleges that one defendant—Archpriest Gan, the rector of St. Seraphim of Sarov Memorial Church and Chancellor of the ROCOR Synod—used the word "forgery" outside the Clergy Letter in a statement on St. Seraphim's website. JA.98. The church denies Father Alexander's account, but even taking it as true, his claims of publication implicate the Church's ability to communicate with its members about the status and character of its ministers. Indeed, "communication of the results of" an internal church investigation and disciplinary process "cannot be severed from" the religious requirements that invoke the investigation "in the first place." Diocese of Lubbock, 624 S.W.3d at 509.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

A church's efforts to maintain transparency with its membership through its own website and social media channels cannot be second-guessed by a court. And First Amendment defenses do not depend "on whether a publication goes beyond church walls but rather whether the substance and nature of the plaintiff's claims implicate ecclesiastical matters." Id. at 516.[6]

Second, Father Alexander ultimately asks this Court to adjudicate his "religious standing" as a minister. Moon, 431 F. Supp. 3d at 413. Father Alexander's complaint is built around his failed elevation from "an Orthodox Christian archimandrite" to the "Bishop of Miami." JA.87. Father Alexander admits that the whole purpose of the Clergy Letter was to contest his claimed "appointment as Bishop of Miami." JA.101-02. He likewise admits that the Clergy Letter was issued in response to a public statement by the Church just days earlier announcing "the decision of the ROCOR Synod appointing [Father] Alexander as Bishop of Miami," and was part of an effort by the Synod to "undo" this statement. JA.94-95. On that ground alone, his attempt to claim defamation from the [6] In any event, "forgery" under the Model Penal Code is defined as "the act of fraudulently altering, authenticating, issuing, or transferring a writing without appropriate authorization." Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019) (emphasis added). And whether the letters were authenticated, issued, or transferred with the "appropriate authorization" is a religious question governed by Church law.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Clergy Letter is inextricably intertwined with the Church's internal ministerial selection and his standing as a bishop.

Further, Father Alexander's complaint makes clear that he wishes the court to recompense him for losing standing in the eyes of his congregation based on whether his appointment to the role of bishop was correct. Father Alexander claims the Church's disciplinary action was "damaging to [his] reputation [as] a religious leader" because it was communicated to the Synod, "parishes, churches, monasteries, and other institutions within ROCOR," and to "parishioners in the Orthodox Christian community." JA.87, 97, 103. He alleges this resulted in him having "severely impaired . . . standing in the community" and a "drastic decrease of the membership in his church," and left him "no future within ROCOR and, more importantly, . . . unable to serve his parish as a ROCOR priest." JA.99, 105-06, 108. But this all goes to his "standing" as a "religious leader." Civil courts cannot adjudicate a priest's claims against his church over his diminished status as a religious leader. This is a quintessential "religious thicket." Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 719.

Third, Father Alexander asks the court to answer religious questions by claiming damages based on his "severely impaired reputation and standing" in the ROCOR community and the resulting "decrease of the membership in his church." JA.105-06.

Even if the court could award damages on those bases, it could not answer the religious questions asked by the damages claim. Father

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Alexander claims that he has lost income as a result of people leaving his church because of the Clergy Letter and its aftermath. But when it comes to a congregant's religious decision whether to attend church or give an offering, for a court to even consider "decreased giving and reduced membership in the Church . . . and how that translates into donations and attendance" would "impermissibly entangle the court in religious governance and doctrine." Lee v. Sixth Mount Zion Baptist Church, 903 F.3d 113, 121 (3d Cir. 2018).

Here, the Clergy Letter itself, in statements that Father Alexander does not challenge, identifies several religious reasons congregants might wish to leave his church unrelated to the allegedly defamatory statements: his "breaking of the seal of Confession," "his use of information obtained during Confession and confidential discussions for the purpose of denigrating parishioners and of controlling them," and his failure to organize his cathedral and monastery "according to the norms of the Russian Church Abroad." JA.20. How is a civil court supposed to determine which church members left because of the unchallenged statements in the letter, and which left because of the statements Father Alexander contests?

* * * *

In sum, if allowed to proceed, every stage of the litigation would entail inquiries into internal Church communications and decision-making, with damages based upon Father Alexander's reputation as a Bishop and predicted future earnings as a Bishop. Each jurisdictional fact alleged against the non-domiciliary defendants is based upon internal communications among church leadership, and each of the defamatory statements alleged was made in official communications among senior church leadership. JA.99-101. These inquiries are the antithesis of "purely secular," and they are not permitted by the First Amendment. Kavanagh, 997 F. Supp. 2d at 251.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

3. The discovery process necessary to adjudicate Father Alexander's claims will itself violate church autonomy.

Putting the Church through the discovery that will be necessary to resolve Father Alexander's claims will itself violate the Religion Clauses. The district court asserted that it has the ability to conduct a "fact-based inquiry into what occurred" without "pass[ing] judgment on the internal policies and or determinations of the" Church. JA.147. But in the inherently religious context of internal church discipline of church leaders, the "very process of inquiry" itself will "impinge on rights guaranteed by the Religion Clauses." NLRB v. Catholic Bishop, 440 U.S. 490, 502 (1979); see also Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 718 ("detailed review of the evidence" of church policy was "impermissible"). Indeed, it is well established that courts must "refrain from trolling through a person's or institution's religious beliefs." Colo. Christian Univ. v. Weaver, 534 F.3d 1245, 1261 (10th Cir. 2008) (McConnell, J.) (quoting Mitchell v. Helms, 530 U.S. 793, 828 (2000)).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT
MO-AG-22-0644-A-004426

This principle was illustrated in Whole Woman's Health v. Smith, where the Fifth Circuit accepted a collateral order appeal to prevent the Catholic Church from having to turn over internal documents in a civil lawsuit. 896 F.3d 362 (5th Cir. 2018). The Fifth Circuit held that courts should "protect the inner workings" of religious organizations and "maintain their internal organizational autonomy intact from ordinary discovery." Id. at 372, 374. For this reason, church autonomy defenses are "similar to a government official's defense of qualified immunity" and must be "resolved at the earliest possible stage of litigation" to "avoid excessive entanglement in church matters." Bryce, 289 F.3d at 654 & n.1; see Part III.A.1 infra.

Here, discovery beyond document production of the already-public documents mentioned in the complaint would entangle civils courts in internal Church deliberations, including:

- A deposition of Metropolitan Hilarion as to whether he "went along, consented to, authorized and participated in the scheme to deny his authorship of" letters, and his "willingness to falsely deny that he had authored the letters," JA.97, 101;
- Depositions of fellow ministers in the search for malice and hostility in their religious judgments regarding Father Alexander's election, see, e.g., JA.104;
- Depositions of clergy on such matters as Father Alexander's suspension, internal clergy communications, and the validity of Father Alexander's alleged election in the Synod; see, e.g., JA.99-101;

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

- Document requests involving internal church communications, including church discipline, church procedure, or church organization and polity, e.g., JA.94-96;
- Interrogatories demanding clergy opinions on internal church procedures; see, e.g., JA.95-97, 100; and
- Evidence regarding the "drastic decrease of the membership" in Father Alexander's church, JA.105.

This kind of entangling discovery is forbidden by the First Amendment. The Constitution bars the "onerous" burden of "depositions of fellow ministers and the search for a subjective motive behind the alleged hostility" to Father Alexander. Demkovich v. St. Andrew the Apostle Par., 3 F.4th 968, 983 (7th Cir. 2021) (en banc). It also forbids "attempting to parse the internal communications [of a church] and discern which are 'facts' and which are 'religious' [as] tantamount to judicially creating an ecclesiastical test in violation of the Establishment Clause." Whole Woman's Health, 896 F.3d at 373. And it does not permit investigation into damages flowing from reduced tithes and church membership related to religious leadership disputes. Lee, 903 F.3d at 121; Part I.B.2 supra.

If this case is allowed to proceed, it would proliferate defamation lawsuits between ministers and their churches where an employment claim would be barred. Following Father Alexander's footsteps, for instance, a Catholic nun could gain the right to depose her Archbishop, Cardinal, or even the Pope, by appointing herself to a mother superior role and suing the Vatican for de-recognizing her position in a church disciplinary document. Contra McCarthy, 714 F.3d at 976. That is not the kind of separation of church and state contemplated by the First Amendment.

C. The neutral principles doctrine does not apply in this case.

For the reasons explained above, Father Alexander's claims cannot be resolved by "neutral principles of law," as he claims and as the district court held. JA.32, 77. Where, as here, a lawsuit is brought by a minister against his Church for statements made as part of a disciplinary proceeding involving his candidacy and suitability as a bishop and priest, it cannot be removed from the realm of the Religion Clauses and brought into the secular jurisdiction of this Court.

The "neutral principles" doctrine was developed for church property disputes, and the Supreme Court has never applied it outside that context. Compare Jones v. Wolf, 443 U.S. 595 (1979) (applying neutral principles to property dispute), with Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church & Sch. v. EEOC, 565 U.S. 171 (2012) (no mention of neutral principles doctrine), and Our Lady, 140 S. Ct. 2049 (same). Indeed, even when a matter "affects the control of church property," the Supreme Court has explicitly rejected application of neutral principles to cases where the matter is one of "internal [church] discipline and government." Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 709, 724. In Milivojevich, for instance, the lower court held that it could determine the bishop's property claims based on neutral principles. Id. at 721. But the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the claims could not be resolved "without engaging in a searching and therefore impermissible inquiry into church polity." Id. at 723.

Many courts have recognized that "neutral principles" cannot be applied to religious disputes about internal church discipline and procedures. Indeed, even where "a civil court might be able to avoid questions of religious beliefs or doctrines," it cannot consider "questions of church discipline and the composition of the church hierarchy [that] are at the core of ecclesiastical concern." Crowder v. S. Baptist Convention, 828 F.2d 718, 726 (11th Cir. 1987).

Diocese of Lubbock is directly on point. There, the plaintiff deacon sued for defamation, claiming that neutral principles could apply to determine whether the church was factually incorrect to include his name on a list of "clergy credibly accused of sexual abuse of a minor." 624 S.W.3d at 509. The court squarely rejected this argument, finding that exercising jurisdiction over the dispute would "invade the Diocese's internal management decision to investigate its clergy consistent with its own norms and policies." Id. at 518. The neutral principles doctrine, the court held, must be "narrowly drawn to avoid inhibiting the free exercise of religion or imposing secular interests on religious controversies." Id. at 513 (citing Jones, 443 U.S. at 603-05; Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 710); see also Brazauskas, 796 N.E.2d at 294 (rejecting argument that the court could apply neutral principles to resolve defamation and other tort claims involving "communication" about church procedure).

So too here. The district court held that it could determine "what occurred" without "pass[ing] judgment on the internal policies or determinations" of the Church. JA.147. But in order for the litigation to proceed, the court must "pass judgment" on the truth or falsity of ecclesiastical judgments made by clergy in the church discipline process, "probe the mind of the church" through intrusive discovery about its internal procedures, Rayburn v. Gen. Conf. of Seventh-Day Adventists, 772 F.2d 1164, 1171 (4th Cir. 1985) (Wilkinson, J.), and ultimately decide whether the Church should be held liable for how it rejected Father Alexander's appointment as bishop and later removed him from ministry. None of those things can be done by neutral law and without violating the First Amendment.

II. Father Alexander's claims are barred by the ministerial exception.

This case presents a straightforward application of the ministerial exception. Neither of the more commonly disputed elements of the exception are in question: Father Alexander is undisputedly a minister, and the defendants are undisputedly a church and its senior hierarchy.

So the narrow issue here is whether the ministerial exception bars Father Alexander's defamation claims. It does.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

MO-AG-22-0644-A-004431

Courts have long and repeatedly recognized that defamation claims by a minister against a church can be barred, especially when they are intertwined with a church's selection or discipline of its ministers. Here, Father Alexander's claims are inextricably wrapped up in both the Church's decision whether to select him as a Bishop and its investigation and discipline of him. And Father Alexander's counterarguments are meritless.

A. The ministerial exception bars defamation claims that interfere with a church's selection and supervision of its ministers.

The ministerial exception is an aspect of the church autonomy doctrine that specifically safeguards churches' "authority to select, supervise, and if necessary, remove a minister without interference by secular authorities." Our Lady, 140 S. Ct. at 2060. This rule prohibits civil adjudication of a minister's claims against religious bodies that would interfere with "the authority to select and control who will minister to the faithful," since that is a "strictly ecclesiastical" matter for a religious body "alone" to decide. Hosanna-Tabor, 565 U.S. at 194-95 (quoting Kedroff). Thus, "where a defendant is able to establish that the ministerial exception applies, the 'First Amendment has struck the balance for us' in favor of religious liberty" and a civil claim is barred from proceeding. Fratello, 863 F.3d at 199 (quoting Hosanna-Tabor, 565 U.S. at 196).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

The rule is required by both Religion Clauses of the First Amendment. Adjudication of a civil claim that interferes in a ministerial relationship "infringes the Free Exercise Clause, which protects a religious group's right to shape its own faith and mission through its appointments," and it "also violates the Establishment Clause, which prohibits government involvement in such ecclesiastical decisions." Hosanna-Tabor, 565 U.S. at 188-89.

This foundation in both Clauses is related to its role in "ensur[ing] the separation of church and state," Fratello, 863 F.3d at 199, which means both church and state have independent interests in maintaining its vitality. That is, "this constitutional protection is not only a personal one" for a religious body; "it is a structural one" that is "imposed on the government by the Religion Clauses" and "categorically prohibits . . . governments from becoming involved in religious leadership disputes." Conlon v. InterVarsity Christian Fellowship/USA, 777 F.3d 829, 836 (6th Cir. 2015); accord Lee, 903 F.3d at 118 n.4 (the "exception is rooted in constitutional limits on judicial authority").

While some civil claims may survive this structural bar because they are unrelated to ministerial selection or control—such as a slip-and-fall on the church steps, Rweyemamu, 520 F.3d at 208—"any federal or state cause of action" that would "impinge on the Church's prerogative to choose its ministers" is barred. Werft v. Desert Sw. Ann. Conf., 377 F.3d 1099, 1100 n.1 (9th Cir. 2004) (emphasis added); see also id. at 1103 ("The ministerial exception does not apply solely to the hiring and firing of ministers, but also relates to the broader relationship between an organized religious institution and its clergy, termed the 'lifeblood' of the religious institution."). This is because such claims, "whatever their 'emblemata,'" will "inexorably entangle [courts] in doctrinal disputes." Rweyemamu, 520 F.3d at 208 (quoting Natal v. Christian & Missionary All., 878 F.2d 1575, 1577 (1st Cir. 1989)).

"However a suit may be labelled, once a court is called upon to probe into a religious body's selection and retention of clergymen, the First Amendment is implicated." Natal, 878 F.2d at 1576-78. Thus, the operative question is not whether the action sounds in tort, contract, or statute, but whether it "interferes with the internal governance of the church, depriving the church of control over the selection of those who will personify its beliefs." Hosanna-Tabor, 565 U.S. at 188.

Accordingly, courts have barred not only Title VII and other employment discrimination claims under the ministerial exception, as in Fratello, but also contract and tort claims. See, e.g., Lee, 903 F.3d at 122 (rejecting minister's contract claim against church; noting that "sister circuit courts have repeatedly" done the same); Friedlander v. Port Jewish Ctr., 347 F. App'x 654 (2d Cir. 2009) (barring contract claim); Bell v. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), 126 F.3d 328, 329 (4th Cir. 1997) (rejecting claims for "breach of contract and various torts"); Lewis v. Seventh Day Adventists Lake Region Conf., 978 F.2d 940 (6th Cir. 1992) (rejecting tort and contract claims). Indeed, such common-law claims are often part and parcel to a standard wrongful termination claim, all of which can be subject to the ministerial exception. 2 W. Cole Durham & Robert Smith, Religious Organizations and the Law § 14:54 (2020) ("Wrongful termination claims are often joined with claims of common law torts such as defamation and intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Courts have thus long and repeatedly applied the ministerial exception to bar defamation and similar claims. See Lee v. Sixth Mount Zion Baptist Church, No. 15-1599, 2017 WL 3608140, at *34 (W.D. Pa. Aug. 22, 2017), aff'd, 903 F.3d 113 (3d Cir. 2018) (collecting cases where courts have "clearly held that the ministerial exception applies to . . . defamation claims"). Thirty-five years ago, the Sixth Circuit rejected a defamation claim that was "really seeking civil court review of subjective judgments made by religious officials and bodies that he had become 'unappointable,'" reasoning that "secular authorities may not interfere with the internal ecclesiastical workings and disciplines of religious bodies." Hutchison v. Thomas, 789 F.2d 392, 393 (6th Cir. 1986). Three years later, the First Circuit affirmed a ruling barring libel and slander claims that were "inextricably intertwined" with an "ecclesiastical dispute" over a church's decision to terminate its minister. Natal v. Christian & Missionary All., No. 88-0676, 1988 WL 159169 (D.P.R. 1988), aff'd, 878 F.2d 1575 (1st Cir. 1989) (affirming the district court and praising its "opinion [a]s a scholarly piece of work").

Other federal courts and state supreme courts have consistently arrived at the same result ever since. Indeed, "most courts that have considered the question" have broadly concluded that "a pastor's defamation claims against a church and its officials" is barred. Cha v. Korean Presbyterian Church of Wash., 553 S.E.2d 511, 515 (Va. 2001) (collecting cases, rejecting defamation claim that would "substitute [the court's] secular judgment for a church's judgment . . . regarding the selection or retention of its pastor"). The basic rule is that where the "plaintiff's claims of . . . defamation are essentially tied to" a ministerial dispute, the claim is barred. Kraft v. Rector, Churchwardens & Vestry of Grace Church, No. 01-CV-7871, 2004 WL 540327, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 17, 2004). Thus:

- Ogle v. Church of God, 153 F. App'x 371, 375-76 (6th Cir. 2005) (rejecting defamation claim by minister arising from statements made as "part of church disciplinary proceedings" as "squarely within the class of cases" barred by the ministerial exception).

Nor could it be otherwise, since virtually all religious leadership disputes barred as employment actions could easily be re-cast as defamation cases. Cha, 553 S.E.2d at 516 ("[I]f our civil courts enter upon disputes between bishops and priests because of allegations of defamation . . . it is difficult to conceive the termination case which could not result in a sustainable lawsuit."). That would burden internal church management in ways the Religion Clauses forbid. "[T]he prospect of future investigations and litigation would inevitably affect to some degree" ministerial decisions, and pressure churches, synagogues, mosques, and temples to make those decisions "'with an eye to avoiding litigation or bureaucratic entanglement rather than upon the basis of their own personal and doctrinal assessments.'" EEOC v. Catholic Univ. of Am., 83 F.3d 455, 466-67 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (quoting Rayburn, 772 F.2d at 1171).

For instance, knowing that communications with and about ministers could be made the basis of a defamation case—to include being "deposed, interrogated, and haled into court," id.—cannot help influencing how church hierarchy chooses and controls the shepherds of its flock. Among other things, it will pressure religious bodies to either immediately terminate wayward ministers instead of rehabilitating them, or to overlook clergy misconduct for fear that disciplining problematic ministers will lead to lawsuits. Cha, 553 S.E.2d 511, 517 (noting "chilling effect" of defamation suits). This distortion of ministerial relationships, church doctrine, and discipline, is impermissible: "any attempt . . . even to influence such matters would constitute one of the central attributes of an establishment of religion." Our Lady, 140 S. Ct. at 2060.

B. The ministerial exception bars Father Alexander's defamation claims because they interfere with the Church's selection and control of its priests and bishops.

The ministerial exception bars Father Alexander's defamation claims. Indeed, this is a heartland case, meaning there's no need to "delineate the boundaries of the ministerial exception," because the claims here "easily f[all] within them." Fratello, 863 F.3d at 202 (quoting Rweyemamu, 520 F.3d at 209). There are three ways to see that adjudicating Father Alexander's claim would unconstitutionally interfere with the Church's internal ministerial selection and control.

First, the Clergy Letter at the "heart" of the complaint is a church disciplinary communication between the senior leadership of Father Alexander's church concerning whether to select him as bishop or to discontinue his priestly duties. ECF 22-2 at 2. Thus, the "heart" of his claims is literally a matter of ministerial "selection and control," which means that they concern issues that courts cannot adjudicate. See Part I.B.2 supra.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, proving up his claims will necessarily intrude into the minister-church relationship. The ministerial exception exists in part to prevent "Church personnel" from "becom[ing] subject to subpoena, discovery, cross-examination, [and] the full panoply of legal process designed to probe the mind of the church in the selection of its ministers." Rayburn, 772 F.2d at 1171. Compelling "depositions of fellow ministers" in "the search for a subjective motive" regarding ministerial decisions is an "onerous" and "prejudicial" burden the ministerial exception forbids. Demkovich, 3 F.4th at 982-83. But here, that's exactly the point: Father Alexander's claims seek to compel the deposition of the head of his former church, Metropolitan Hilarion, to try to prove that he "intentional[ly] and malicious[ly]" lied to prevent Father Alexander from becoming a bishop. JA.101-02, 104 (alleging the Metropolitan was "the key and willing participant" in the Clergy Letter, and "but for" him "the [Clergy] letter would not have gotten off the ground"). That he cannot do.

Third, the measure of damages Father Alexander claims is "loss of income, resulting from the drastic decrease of the membership in his church," JA.105-06, and the damage is based upon his standing and reputation within the church community. JA.105-08. "[A]n award of such relief would operate as a penalty on the Church for terminating an unwanted minister and would be no less prohibited by the First Amendment than an order overturning the termination." Hosanna-Tabor, 565 U.S. at 194.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Father Alexander is a minister who is suing his church for over $5,000,000 to penalize it for internal communications among senior church hierarchs about whether he was qualified to be appointed to one of the highest offices of the church. The ministerial exception bars such claims.

C. The district court erred by refusing to dismiss the complaint under the ministerial exception.

Father Alexander has argued that the district court "properly rejected" this defense because the ministerial exception only applies to employment discrimination claims, and only to paid employees of a church. ECF 22-2 at 8-10. He also suggests that "neutral principles" analysis should control. He is wrong.

First, as shown above, the ministerial exception has regularly been applied to bar common-law claims, including by this Court. Father Alexander cites no contrary case holding that the ministerial exception applies "only" to "employment discrimination claims." ECF 22-2 at 11. There are none. Indeed, the first Supreme Court ruling that barred courts from second-guessing a church's religious leadership decision arose in the context of a claim sounding in trust. Gonzalez, 280 U.S. at 16 (rejecting trust claim to chaplaincy position because "church authorities"—not government officials or judges—"determine what the essential qualifications of a chaplain are").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, the ministerial exception is not restricted to paid positions. While courts take into account various "considerations" to determine ministerial status, the "focus" is "primarily" on the religious functions they perform. Fratello, 863 F.3d at 205. None of the relevant considerations turn on whether the position is paid.

Further, limiting the First Amendment's protections only to formal paid employment would raise serious problems. It would once again turn fundamental church-state separation into a pleadings game, incentivizing plaintiffs to skip over their employers and instead sue any deeper-pocketed ministry partners that allegedly exercised religious influence over the employer.

Courts have avoided this obvious issue by routinely protecting non-employer ministries from similar suits. Fratello applied the exception in a suit against both the employer school and the non-employer archdiocese. Compare 863 F.3d at 192 ("Fratello was employed by St. Anthony's School"), with id. at 206 ("[T]he ministerial exception bars Fratello's . . . claims against the Archdiocese, the Church, and the School, all of which are religious groups within the meaning of the ministerial exception."). In Cannata v. Catholic Diocese of Austin, the Fifth Circuit relied on the ministerial exception to dismiss a suit against the employer church and the non-employer diocese. 700 F.3d 169 (5th Cir. 2012). And in Bell, the Fourth Circuit dismissed a lawsuit by a minister against religious denominations that contributed to his former religious employer. 126 F.3d at 332.[8] These outcomes are correct. Otherwise, in Fratello for example, the school would have been protected but the archdiocese would not, even though the core issue—whether a religious body must allow a particular person to hold a religiously significant role—is the same.

Father Alexander's paid-ministers-only rule would also risk "privileging religious traditions" with more formal employment structures "over those that are less formal." Our Lady, 140 S. Ct. at 2064. Moneyed religious bodies which could afford to pay their leaders would be protected, while the less well-heeled would be more vulnerable to suit by their unpaid deacons, elders, Sunday School teachers, and worship leaders. Moreover, leaders in many faith bodies are also volunteers, such as the bishops of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.[9] Thus, treating payment as dispositive would undermine "the purpose of the ministerial exception": ensuring religious organizations alone have "the authority to select and control" those who lead a church's faith. Penn, 884 F.3d at 423.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Third, neutral-principles doctrine is "simply not applicable" to claims that relate to a plaintiff's "status and employment as a minister of the church," including in the defamation context. Hutchison, 789 F.2d at 396. A minister's claims cannot generally "be resolved . . . by invoking 'neutral principles of law,'" since the inherently religious ministerial relationship makes inquiries "in themselves" too entangling and thus "forbidden by the First Amendment." Catholic Univ., 83 F.3d at 465-67; accord El-Farra, 226 S.W.3d at 795 (rejecting defamation claim under ministerial exception, finding that the "narrow" neutral-principles doctrine applies "only with regard to real-property disputes"). Hence this Court's ruling in Fratello that, in the employment discrimination context, courts cannot try to use neutral principles to navigate their way around "excessive entanglement . . . in [a] particular case," since courts are "ill-equipped to assess" such matters in the ministerial context. 863 F.3d at 202-03.

In sum, Father Alexander provides no reason for this Court to split from five circuits and state courts of last resort by setting entangling new precedent allowing ministers to sue their churches in defamation over internal church election and disciplinary communications. His claims are barred by the ministerial exception.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

III. This Court has jurisdiction over this appeal under the collateral order doctrine.

This Court has jurisdiction to hear appeals of "all final decisions of the district courts of the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 1291. This includes collateral orders resolving rights that are "too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause [of action] itself to require that appellate consideration be deferred." Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 546 (1949). For an order to be collateral, it must "[1] conclusively determine the disputed question, [2] resolve an important issue completely separate from the merits of the action, and [3] be effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment." Liberty Synergistics Inc. v. Microflo Ltd., 718 F.3d 138, 146 (2d Cir. 2013) (quoting Will v. Hallock, 546 U.S. 345, 349 (2006)).

Qualifying collateral orders include those that involve a party's "entitlement not to stand trial or face the other burdens of litigation," Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 526 (1985), and those that implicate compelling interests of a constitutional dimension, Opp'n to Mot. to Dismiss at 8, ECF 41 (collecting cases). Rights "originating in the Constitution" receive solicitude under the collateral order doctrine. Digit. Equip. Corp. v. Desktop Direct, 511 U.S. 863, 879 (1994); In re World Trade Ctr. Disaster Site Litig., 521 F.3d 169, 179 (2d Cir. 2008) (denials of "constitutional immunities" immediately appealable). This includes orders causing irreparable harm to First Amendment rights, such as rights to church autonomy. See ECF 41 at 9; Roman Catholic Archdiocese of San Juan v. Feliciano, 140 S. Ct. 696 (2020) (accepting interlocutory appeal in church autonomy case arising under 28 U.S.C. § 1258); McCarthy, 714 F.3d at 976 (immediate appeal permitted because "harm of . . . governmental intrusion into religious affairs would be irreparable").

This appeal falls squarely within the collateral order doctrine, as it involves the denial of a First Amendment immunity from discovery and trial. It thus fulfills all three criteria of the collateral order doctrine: The district court's orders denying dismissal and ordering merits discovery (1) irreparably harm the Church absent immediate review, making it effectively unreviewable after a final judgment; (2) conclusively reject the Church's immunity from merits adjudication under the church autonomy and ministerial exception doctrines; and (3) implicate the Church's constitutional right to autonomy in its internal religious affairs, an issue collateral to the merits.

A. The Church's First Amendment defenses will be effectively unreviewable after merits discovery.

The central characteristic of an appealable collateral order is that, if the order is not "reviewed before the proceedings terminate, it can never be reviewed at all." Mitchell, 472 U.S. at 525 (cleaned up). Here, the Church has raised defenses that are akin to an immunity in that they protect the Church not only from liability, but also from entanglement in merits litigation over its internal religious affairs. Now that these defenses have been denied and merits discovery ordered, only immediate appeal can avoid the constitutional injury the Church faces from the district court's refusal to dismiss this case and to limit discovery.

1. The Religion Clauses provide protections akin to immunity.

It is "well-settled" that denials of immunity from suit are proper collateral-order appeals. Coollick v. Hughes, 699 F.3d 211, 217 (2d Cir. 2012). The immunities are meant both "to avoid 'standing trial'" and "also to avoid the burdens of 'such pretrial matters as discovery.'" Behrens v. Pelletier, 516 U.S. 299, 308 (1996). Courts have recognized that the Religion Clauses provide protections to churches "similar to" such immunities. Bryce, 289 F.3d at 654; accord Skrzypczak v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Tulsa, 611 F.3d 1238, 1242 (10th Cir. 2010) (the "ministerial exception, like the broader church autonomy doctrine, can be likened 'to . . . qualified immunity'"). Like qualified immunity, church autonomy questions must be resolved "early in litigation" to avoid harm to the protected right. Bryce, 289 F.3d at 654 n.1; Lynch v. Ackley, 811 F.3d 569, 576 (2d Cir. 2016) (immunity "should be resolved 'at the earliest possible stage in litigation"). And like qualified immunity, the Religion Clauses' rule against interference in internal religious affairs provides "immunity from the travails of a trial and not just from an adverse judgment." McCarthy, 714 F.3d at 975.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Unlike qualified immunity, though, the legal interest is much stronger: the constitutional command that "courts avoid excessive entanglement in church matters." Bryce, 289 F.3d at 654 n.1. Obeying this command protects not just one but two "substantial public interest[s]" of "a high order." Will, 546 U.S. at 352-53. It protects both the church's Free Exercise interest in the autonomy of its religious affairs and the judiciary's Establishment Clause interest in avoiding improper entanglement in those affairs. Indeed, a "federal court" has an independent duty "not [to] allow itself to get dragged into a religious controversy," Tomic v. Catholic Diocese of Peoria, 442 F.3d 1036, 1042 (7th Cir. 2006), a duty which reflects the weighty constitutional "structural limitation[s]" that "categorically prohibit[]" the judiciary "from becoming involved in religious leadership disputes." Conlon, 777 F.3d at 836.

The "harm of such a governmental intrusion into religious affairs would be irreparable." McCarthy, 714 F.3d at 976. And the harm starts with "the beginnings of discovery" into the merits of a minister's claims, since those beginnings can have "prejudicial effects" on "rights guaranteed by the Religion Clauses." Demkovich, 3 F.4th at 982-83 (resolving certified interlocutory appeal); Rayburn, 772 F.2d at 1171 ("rights guaranteed by the Religion Clauses" limit courts from allowing discovery to "probe the mind of the church in the selection of its ministers"); see also Parts I & II supra. Thus, "the consequence of forced discovery" into internal religious affairs "is 'effectively unreviewable' on appeal from the final judgment." Whole Woman's Health, 896 F.3d at 367. For this reason, federal courts have found that this harm to church autonomy rights is just as irreparable as "the other types of case[s] in which the collateral order doctrine allows interlocutory appeals." McCarthy, 714 F.3d at 976; see also Liberty Synergistics, Inc., 718 F.3d at 150-51 (finding that harm to First Amendment rights from subjugation to litigation would be effectively unreviewable post-trial).[10]

State courts too have repeatedly found that "the denial of a religious institution's assertion of the ministerial exception . . . is appropriate for interlocutory appeal." Kirby v. Lexington Theological Seminary, 426 S.W.3d 597, 609 n.45 (Ky. 2014). This is because "once exposed to discovery and trial, the constitutional rights of the church to operate free of judicial scrutiny would be irreparably violated." United Methodist Church v. White, 571 A.2d 790, 793 (D.C. 1990); see also Dayner v. Archdiocese of Hartford, 23 A.3d 1192, 1199-1200 (Conn. 2011)

[10] See also Peter J. Smith & Robert W. Tuttle, Civil Procedure and the Ministerial Exception, 86 Fordham L. Rev. 1847, 1881 (2018) ("the ministerial exception closely resembles qualified immunity for purposes of the collateral-order doctrine," making "immediate appeal" appropriate); see also Mark E. Chopko & Marissa Parker, Still a Threshold Question: Refining the Ministerial Exception Post-Hosanna-Tabor, 10 First Amend. L. Rev. 233, 294 (2012) ("equitable consideration[s], coupled with the importance of the threshold constitutional question," warrant "immediate appeal").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

("[L]itigating a dispute that is subject to the ministerial exception would result in the entanglement of the civil justice system with matters of religious policy . . . ."). And the Supreme Court of Texas recently accepted and resolved an interlocutory appeal because allowing lower courts to "exercis[e] jurisdiction" over a defamation case challenging a church's publication of an internal investigation into clergy "would necessarily encroach on the church's ability to manage its internal affairs." Diocese of Lubbock, 624 S.W.3d at 518 (cleaned up).

2. The Church's Religion Clauses immunities will be irreparably lost absent immediate appeal.

The Church's Religion Clauses defenses thus fit neatly within this Court's recognition that "a later recognition of immunity" against enduring litigation cannot possibly "mitigate the harm" absent an immediate appeal. In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Returnable Dec. 16, 2015, 871 F.3d 141, 146 (2d Cir. 2017). And that is precisely the kind of "irreparable" harm the district court's orders will cause. McCarthy, 714 F.3d at 976. The district court denied the Church's Religion Clauses defenses, JA.84, refused to certify them for appeal, JA.118, denied a motion to bifurcate discovery to allow resolution of the Religion Clauses defenses, JA.146-48, and ordered the parties to complete merits discovery by the end of the year, JA.142. Meanwhile, Father Alexander insists that he is entitled to full discovery, including the ability to depose bishops and the Metropolitan. Dkt. 63. These are exactly the kinds of intrusion into internal religious governance on matters of church discipline and selection of clergy that the Seventh Circuit has just found—on interlocutory appeal—impermissible under the Religion Clauses. Demkovich, 3 F.4th at 983; see Part I.B.3 supra.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Thus, as with qualified immunity, the district court's orders are immediately appealable because the Church's "entitlement not to . . . face the . . . burdens of litigation" will be "effectively lost if a case is erroneously permitted to" proceed. Mitchell, 472 U.S. at 526.

B. The order below conclusively determined the Church's immunity from trial and merits discovery.

This Court has repeatedly recognized that, when a claimed immunity from suit applied, a court's denial of the immunity on a motion to dismiss conclusively determines the issue. See, e.g., Gingras v. Think Fin., Inc., 922 F.3d 112, 119-20 (2d Cir. 2019); Edrei v. Maguire, 892 F.3d 525, 531-32 (2d Cir. 2018); Garcia, 779 F.3d at 91. This is because where the "essence of the claimed right" at issue includes "a right not to face the . . . burdens of litigation," then "a denial of that right 'conclusively determines' the disputed issue by ensuring that 'the defendant must bear the burdens of discovery.'" Liberty Synergistics, 718 F.3d at 147 (cleaned up). As shown above, the district court's denial of the motion to dismiss conclusively foreclosed the Church's claimed immunity from merits discovery. Behrens, 516 U.S. at 308 ("denial of a motion to dismiss is conclusive as to this right."). And the combination of the court's denial of bifurcation and ordered merits discovery means this immunity will soon be irreparably lost.

C. The Church's immunity against merits discovery is collateral to the merits of Father Alexander's defamation claims.

Finally, an issue "is 'separate' from the merits" if "it turns on matters 'significantly different from the fact-related legal issues that likely underlie the plaintiff's claim on the merits.'" Liberty Synergistics, 718 F.3d at 148; see also Britt v. Garcia, 457 F.3d 264, 271-72 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding jurisdiction because the issue raised was a purely legal question that could be "decided with reference only to undisputed facts and in isolation from the remaining issues of the case"). Whether the Religion Clauses preclude Father Alexander's claims is "a pure question of law." Conlon, 777 F.3d at 833; see also Bryce, 289 F.3d at 654 (application of the church autonomy doctrine is a "question of law"). And the First Amendment's prohibition on "governmental intrusion into religious affairs" gives rise to an immunity that is "'conceptually distinct' from the merits." McCarthy, 714 F.3d at 975-76 (quoting Mitchell, 472 U.S. at 527). Because an immunity from trial inheres in these First Amendment defenses, they are separate "from the merits of the plaintiff's claim that his rights have been violated." Mitchell, 472 U.S. at 527-28.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

IV. The district court erred by failing to limit initial discovery to resolution of the Religion Clauses defenses.

The district court denied the Church's motion to limit initial discovery to resolution of the Religion Clauses defenses, and instead ordered the parties to commence and complete merits discovery before the end of the year. This order was an abuse of discretion and will cause irreparable harm both to the Church's First Amendment rights and the corresponding structural limitations on judicial authority.

As explained above in Parts I.B.3 and III.A.2, the Supreme Court "established the rule of Hosanna-Tabor" "precisely to avoid . . . judicial entanglement" such as "subjecting religious doctrine to discovery." Sterlinski v. Catholic Bishop of Chi., 934 F.3d 568, 570 (7th Cir. 2019). Thus, in cases where discovery is necessary to resolve Religion Clauses defenses, this Court has recognized that it is "appropriate[]" to "order[] discovery limited to" those defenses before allowing merits proceedings. Fratello, 863 F.3d at 198.

Other courts likewise routinely "limit discovery to the applicability of the ministerial exception" "[b]efore launching into potentially intrusive merits discovery about the firing—the very type of intrusion that the ministerial exception seeks to avoid." Sterlinski v. Catholic Bishop of Chi., No. 16 C 00596, 2017 WL 1550186, at *5 (N.D. Ill. May 1, 2017); see also Fratello v. Roman Catholic Archdiocese of N.Y., 175 F. Supp. 3d 152, 161 (S.D.N.Y. 2017) (court "directed the parties to engage in limited discovery on the [ministerial exception]"); Grussgott v. Milwaukee Jewish Day Sch. Inc., 260 F. Supp. 3d 1052, 1053 (E.D. Wis. 2017) ("Plaintiff was permitted to conduct limited discovery" on the ministerial exception defense); Collette v. Archdiocese of Chi., 200 F. Supp. 3d. 730, 735 (N.D. Ill. 2016) (where a ministerial exception defense is asserted, "the scope of the issue subject to discovery is narrow," limited to whether the role "was ministerial"); Herzog v. St. Peter Lutheran Church, 884 F. Supp. 2d 668, 671 (N.D. Ill. 2012) (allowing "limited discovery to determine whether the ministerial exception applies").[11] Requiring merits discovery before resolution of the threshold Religion Clauses defenses has been recognized as "result[ing] in a substantial miscarriage of justice." Presbyterian Church v. Edwards, 566 S.W.3d 175, 178 (Ky. 2018) (allowing merits discovery before resolving a church's ministerial exception defense).

---

[11] Stabler v. Congregation Emanu-El of the City of New York, No. 16 CIV.9601, 2017 WL 3268201, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. July 28, 2017) (authorizing discovery "limited to the ministerial exception defense" and specifically whether plaintiff performed religious functions); Sterlinski, 2017 WL 1550186, at *5 ("limit[ing] discovery to the applicability of the ministerial exception"); Lishu Yin v. Columbia Int'l Univ., No. 3:15-CV-03656, 2017 WL 4296428, at * 4 (D.S.C. Sept. 28, 2017) (same); Miller v. InterVarsity Christian Fellowship/USA, No. 09-CV-680, 2010 WL 2803123, at *2 (W.D. Wis. July 14, 2010) (same); Fassl v. Our Lady of Perpetual Help Roman Catholic Church, No. CIV.A. 05-CV-0404, 2005 WL 2455253, at *1 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 5, 2005) (court authorized "very limited discovery" as to whether job functions were ministerial in nature).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Against this uniform practice and such significant First Amendment considerations, neither Father Alexander nor the district court identified any reason, or any precedent, against delaying merits discovery until resolution of the threshold defenses. Rather, after briefing limited to three-page letters, the district court again deemed the matter adequately briefed and denied bifurcation based solely on its perceived ability to decide whether the Clergy Letter was defamatory without offending the "doctrine of ecclesiastical abstention." JA.147. As demonstrated above, that conclusion is incorrect. Further, it failed to consider the Church's additional argument under the ministerial exception for granting bifurcation.

Because allowing merits discovery to proceed will cause irreparable harm to First Amendment rights, and do so entirely unnecessarily, the district court abused its discretion. At a minimum, then, this Court should remand and require bifurcation.

CONCLUSION

The district court's decisions below should be reversed.

Statement of Facts and Procedural Background

On June 8, 2017, Appellants, Missouri State Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the League of Women Voters of Missouri, filed a Petition seeking injunctive and declaratory relief with respect to Missouri Revised Statute § 115.427. That statute, which went into effect on June 1, 2017, drastically reduced voters' options for identifying themselves in order to vote in person. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., 17AC-CC00309 (19th Jud. Cir. Ct.).[1] On December 6, 2017, the trial court granted Respondents' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings and dismissed Appellants' Petition for failure to state a claim. Id.

After this Court reversed that decision, the case was reinstated in November 2018 and proceeded at the trial court in case number 17AC-CC00309-01. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., WD81484; D83-84. On June 18, 2019, Appellants filed their Third Amended Petition. D98-106. After trial on the merits, the trial court dismissed the Third Amended Petition for lack of standing, mootness, and/or ripeness. The trial court did not address the merits of Plaintiffs' claims, but nonetheless dismissed the Petition with prejudice. That jurisdictional, or justiciability, dismissal with prejudice was error and is the issue in this appeal.

In Count I of the Third Amended Petition, Appellants asserted that § 115.427.1 cannot be enforced under § 115.427.6(3) because insufficient state funds were appropriated from the general revenue to properly implement § 115.427.1. D98 pp. 19-23. In Count II, Appellants asserted that the requirement in § 115.427.5 was violated by the failure to provide the public accurate and non-misleading "Advance Notice" about the law restricting the options for identifying oneself at the polls. D98 pp. 24-26.

The court held a bench trial from August 19 - 23, 2019. Thereafter, on April 20, 2020, the circuit court entered its final judgment, dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing and mootness, and dismissing Count II with prejudice as moot and not ripe in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo. banc 2020). D165.

On May 19, 2020, Appellants moved the court to amend its judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice. D166. The trial court did not rule on this post-trial motion. Appellants then filed a notice of appeal on August 26, 2020. See Mo. State Conf. of the NAACP, et al. v. Missouri, et al., WD83987. However, the parties then disputed whether the post-trial motion was authorized, which would have delayed the date upon which the judgment became final for appeal. Appellants then filed a motion to file a notice of appeal by special order, which was sustained. Appellants' Notice of Appeal was filed on September 23, 2020.

Argument

This appeal presents a discrete question of law: when a circuit court finds that it lacks subject-matter jurisdiction in a case because of a lack of standing, mootness, or ripeness, should it dismiss with or without prejudice? The answer is clear: when a circuit court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to resolve a dispute's underlying merits, it should dismiss claims without prejudice. See Charron v. State, 257 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) ("[T]he trial court erred in dismissing Appellant's petition with prejudice because the dismissal was for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Pursuant to our authority under Rule 84.14, we modify the judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice."); Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits."); Am. Indus. Res., Inc. v. T.S.E. Supply Co., 708 S.W.2d 806, 808–09 (Mo. App. E.D. 1986) ("Inasmuch as the trial court did not have jurisdiction … the dismissal is without prejudice to any further action appellant may wish to take"); see also Asberry v. Bannes-Shaughnessy, 734 S.W.2d 250, 252 (Mo. App. E.D. 1987) (explaining that the burden of proof on a motion for lack of subject matter jurisdiction "is lower since it is not a decision on the merits, the dismissal is without prejudice and because any action taken by a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction is void").

Whether a trial court dismisses a claim with or without prejudice is significant. "[D]ismissal with prejudice bars the assertion of the same cause of action or claim against the same party." Rule 67.01. Accord Empire Dist. Elec. Co. v. Coverdell, 588 S.W.3d

225, 237 (Mo. App. S.D. 2019). On the other hand, "[d]ismissal without prejudice is usually not an adjudication on the merits of the claim and does not affect the plaintiff's right to refile the action." Sexton v. Jenkins & Assocs., 152 S.W.3d 270, 273 (Mo. banc 2004). In certain circumstances, not applicable here, Appellants acknowledge that "a dismissal without prejudice may be considered a judgment on the merits of issues, such as jurisdiction, that are actually litigated and decided." Id. In this appeal, Appellants do not challenge the trial court's factual findings. Instead, Appellants assert only that the trial court erred in dismissing their claims with prejudice, thus preventing any chance they may have to vindicate their rights if they gain standing, the case is no longer moot, and the issues become ripe for adjudication.

The Missouri Constitution confers jurisdiction upon the circuit courts over "cases and matters." Mo. Const. art. V, sec. 14(a). "Article V of the Missouri Constitution governs subject-matter jurisdiction, which is the court's authority to render a judgment in a particular category of case." Peachtree Apartments v. Pallo, 317 S.W.3d 189, 192 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010); see also Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) ("Subject-matter jurisdiction concerns 'the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought 'and exists only when the court 'has the right to proceed to determine the controversy or question in issue between the parties, or grant the relief prayed.'" (citations omitted)). The Missouri Constitution "requires a case to be justiciable in order for the circuit court to have subject-matter jurisdiction over it." Id.; see also B.S. v. State, 966 S.W.2d 343, 344 (Mo. App. E.D. 1998).

Appellants do not dispute that a trial court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction to decide the merits of a case where: (1) the plaintiff lacks standing; (2) the case is moot and no exception applies; or (3) the case is not ripe. But where the circuit court dismisses a case on one or more of these jurisdictional issues, it ought to do so without prejudice because any decision on the merits is inappropriate.

Point I

The circuit court erred in dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for lack of standing should be dismissed without prejudice, in that standing is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

While this Court "give[s] deference to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). Here, the issue on appeal is purely a question of law. Appellants do not dispute the underlying facts. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 22 (noting that, "[g]enerally, the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion[; h]owever, where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo"). The review here is straightforward because Appellants do not dispute the trial court's finding that they lack standing, only the court's act of dismissing the claims with prejudice based on that finding.

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve the issue, Appellants tried to resolve it with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion to amend the judgment to reflect dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v. Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

This Court has routinely found that a dismissal for lack of standing is a dismissal for want of subject matter jurisdiction. See, e.g., Chastain v. Geary, 539 S.W.3d 841, 848 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017) ("[T]he court does not have subject matter jurisdiction to decide substantive issues if the party lacks standing."); Doss v. Brown, 419 S.W.3d 784, 787 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012) ("A trial court does not have subject matter jurisdiction if a petitioner lacks standing to bring the action."); Querry v. State Highway & Transp. Comm'n, 60 S.W.3d 630, 637 (Mo. App. W.D. 2001) (same).

"Subject-matter jurisdiction concerns the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought and exists only when the court has the right to proceed to determine the controversy or question in issue between the parties, or grant the relief prayed." Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 21 (internal quotation omitted). "A dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits." § 510.150. Here, there should have been no adjudication on the merits where dismissal was for a lack of standing because "[w]hether considered a claim for lack of subject matter jurisdiction or lack of authority, a court, in disposing of a case for lack of standing, cannot reach the merits."[2]

[2] In Borges, this Court noted that "[i]t remains an open question whether a lack of standing implicates the court's jurisdiction or merely the court's authority, but we need not decide this issue given that this case should have been dismissed under either theory." 358 S.W.3d at 183. Like Borges, that issue need not be decided here; the solution in the present case is simply to dismiss the claim without prejudice because the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Borges v. Mo. Pub. Entity Risk Mgmt. Fund, 358 S.W.3d 177, 183 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012); see also W. Cas. & Surety Co. v. Kansas City Bank & Trust Co., 743 S.W.2d 578, 580 (Mo. App. W.D. 1988) ("If [appellant] lacked standing, then its petition was subject to dismissal because it failed to establish the requisite subject matter jurisdiction. It must also follow that the trial court, lacking subject matter jurisdiction, could not enter a judgment on the merits for the [respondent].").

"Because standing is jurisdictional in nature, a dismissal for lack of standing is not 'on the merits' for res judicata purposes." Healthcare Servs. of the Ozarks, Inc. v. Copeland, 198 S.W.3d 604, 612 (Mo. banc 2006). Consequently, a dismissal for lack of standing should be without prejudice. See, e.g., Borges, 358 S.W.3d at 183-84 ("[O]nce it determined that [Plaintiffs] lacked standing, the trial court was without authority to reach any substantive claim, and, thus, dismissal should have been entered . . . . Therefore, we affirm the circuit court's finding that [Plaintiffs] lacked standing and enter the order the circuit court should have entered, dismissing without prejudice [Plaintiffs'] petition."); Eaton v. Doe, 563 S.W.3d 745, 750 (Mo. App. E.D. 2018) ("[B]ecause we have concluded the dismissal is due to a lack of standing, we modify the dismissal to be without prejudice, rather than with prejudice . . . . We affirm the judgment of the trial court as modified.").[3] trial court could not reach the merits if its dismissal was because Appellants lacked standing.

[3] The limited exception in which the Missouri Supreme Court has affirmed a dismissal for lack of standing with prejudice is distinguishable. See Mo. Coal. for Env't v.

State, 579 S.W.3d 924, 928 (Mo. banc 2019) (affirming dismissal with prejudice for lack of standing where plaintiffs conceded lack of taxpayer standing and where the Court held standing was not created by a statute). Plaintiffs' standing in that case could not be cured because it was foreclosed as a matter of law. There is no such lack of standing here. Appellants' lack of associational standing under the circuit court's order would be cured if individual Plaintiff members are denied their right to vote upon presenting themselves at the polls without a photo ID. D165 p. 2 ("The potential injured party would have to first, timely present himself to the polls and second, be eligible to vote. One cannot claim to be injured by a photo ID requirement unless they [are] otherwise eligible to vote, actually try to vote…but [are] not allowed to vote for a lack of a photo ID."). *See W. [4] Appellants also acknowledge other cases include an unchallenged dismissal with prejudice on the basis of standing. Those cases, however, do not provide guidance because the issue of the denial being with (as opposed to without) prejudice was not raised or discussed. See Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 124 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018); Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017); *Mo. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Point II

The circuit court erred in dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice based on mootness because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for mootness should be dismissed without prejudice, in that mootness is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

As noted supra, although the Court defers "to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). "A circuit court does not have subject-matter jurisdiction under [a]rticle V, section 14(a) to adjudicate a case that is not justiciable because it has become moot." Peachtree Apartments v. Pallo, 317 S.W.3d 189, 192 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010). The issue before this Court is purely a question of law and thus subject to de novo review. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 22 (noting that, "[g]enerally, the decision to dismiss for lack [of] subject-matter jurisdiction is a question of fact left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and it will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion[; h]owever, where, as here, the facts are uncontested, a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo").

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve this issue for appeal, Appellants did attempt to resolve this issue with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion seeking to have the judgment amended to reflect a dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

A dismissal for mootness is a dismissal for want of subject-matter jurisdiction and as such should be without prejudice. See, e.g., Rosenfeld v. Thoele, 28 S.W.3d 446, 451 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000) ("Moot cases should generally be dismissed, as the circuit court lacks subject matter jurisdiction."); B.S. v. State, 966 S.W.2d 343, 344-45 (Mo. App. E.D. 1998) ("Because plaintiffs 'cause of action was moot, it was not justiciable and the trial court did not have subject matter jurisdiction over it."); see also Jackson Cty. Bd. of Election Comm'rs ex rel. Brown v. City of Lee's Summit, 277 S.W.3d 740, 744 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) (raising mootness sua sponte after explaining that "[p]arties cannot . . . confer subject matter jurisdiction upon a court"). When courts lack subject matter jurisdiction to resolve the merits of a dispute, the claims should be dismissed without prejudice. Compare § 510.150 ("A dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits."), with Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 63–64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004) ("A dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be without prejudice because the court has no authority to decide the case on the merits."); Charron v. State, 257 S.W.3d 147, 155 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) ("[T]he trial court erred in dismissing Appellant's petition with prejudice because the dismissal was for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Pursuant to our authority under Rule 84.14, we modify the judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Accordingly, because the law is clear that dismissal for mootness cannot be on the merits and thus must be without prejudice, appellate courts routinely modify such judgments. See Friends of the San Luis, Inc. v. Archdiocese of St. Louis, 312 S.W.3d 476, 485 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010) ("We remand the cause to the circuit court with instructions to vacate its judgment and to dismiss [Plaintiffs'] petition without prejudice due to the mootness of the controversy"); Defenses, 35 Mo. Prac., Cont., Eq. & Stat. Actions Handbook § 24:9 ("Moot cases should be dismissed without prejudice.").

The trial court erred in dismissing Counts I and II with prejudice for mootness, and this Court should enter judgment dismissing Counts I and II without prejudice.

Point III

The circuit court erred in dismissing Count II with prejudice based on ripeness because Missouri law requires that claims dismissed for ripeness should be dismissed without prejudice, in that ripeness is a jurisdictional requirement that goes to the circuit court's subject matter jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review and Preservation of Error

While this Court "give[s] deference to the trial court's findings of fact, [it] review[s] all questions of law de novo." State v. West, 548 S.W.3d 406, 412–13 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018). Here, the issue on appeal—whether a claim that is not ripe should be dismissed with or without prejudice—is purely a question of law and is subject to de novo review.

The error was preserved for appeal. Although no post-trial motion was required to preserve this issue for appeal, Appellants did attempt to resolve this issue with the trial court before filing this appeal by filing a post-trial motion seeking to have the judgment amended to reflect a dismissal without prejudice. This Court should exercise its "authority to enter the judgment that should have been entered by the trial court." Boyd v. Boone Mgmt., Inc., 676 S.W.2d 24, 26 (Mo. App. W.D. 1984); see also Rule 84.14 ("The appellate court shall … give such judgment as the court ought to give. Unless justice otherwise requires, the court shall dispose finally of the case.").

B. Argument

Ripeness implicates the justiciability of a claim and therefore any dismissal should not reach the merits of the case. As noted, however, "[a] dismissal with prejudice operates as an adjudication upon the merits." § 510.150. Because the trial court cannot reach the merits if it determines a claim is not ripe for adjudication, dismissals on ripeness grounds have been modified by appellate courts, including the Missouri Supreme Court, to dismissals without prejudice. See Mo. Soybean Ass'n, 102 S.W.3d at 29 ("[B]ecause the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction, and because the controversy is not ripe for review, the judgment of dismissal is modified to one without prejudice."); Schweich v. Nixon, 408 S.W.3d 769, 779 (Mo. banc 2013) ("While the lack of standing and ripeness does not implicate the merits of the Auditor's claims as to his own appropriation, it does preclude relief in this action. Accordingly, pursuant to Rule 84.14, this Court will issue the ruling that the trial court should have entered. The Auditor's claims are dismissed without prejudice."); see also Schultz v. Warren Cty., 249 S.W.3d 898, 902 (Mo. App. E.D. 2008) ("[B]ecause the controversy was not ripe for judicial review, the circuit court's judgment is one without prejudice . . . . The circuit court's judgment of dismissal is hereby modified to explicitly state that the dismissal is due to lack of ripeness and is one without prejudice.").

In addition, modifying the trial court's judgment to dismissal without prejudice on Count II is particularly warranted in this case as a prudential matter. The court made clear that Appellants 'request for mandatory injunctive relief could be cured and would become ripe if the Secretary of State failed to provide adequate advance notice to the public under the terms of the Priorities USA injunction:

> The Court finds that the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required, given the findings made and instructions given to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA. The Secretary of State is still obligated to provide advance notice in a manner calculated to generally inform the public. The original manner in which he tried to fulfill that obligation was found to be > deficient. The question of whether or not the Secretary's subsequent information campaigns avoid this deficiency is not yet ripe.

D165 pp. 5-6.

Should the Secretary of State fail to provide sufficient required advance notice, including by making inaccurate statements regarding the narrowing of identification options for voters in Missouri, Appellants should not be barred from seeking the appropriate mandatory injunctive relief in the future. Brinson v. Whittico, M.D., 793 S.W.2d 632, 634 (Mo. App. E.D. 1990) ("The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. Because the trial court deemed the lawsuit premature, it may either dismiss the lawsuit without prejudice or may allow the lawsuit to pend until ripe for adjudication.").

Thus, the circuit court erred in dismissing Count II with prejudice based on ripeness, and this Court should enter judgment dismissing Count II without prejudice.

Conclusion

Because Appellants' claims were dismissed based on jurisdictional grounds of standing and mootness and justiciability grounds of ripeness, the trial court should have dismissed the claims without prejudice. Appellants request that this Court, pursuant to its authority under Rule 84.14, dispose finally of the case by entering the judgment the trial court should have entered and dismiss Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition without prejudice.

I. The circuit court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment after trial that dismissed with prejudice Plaintiffs' claims in Count I for lack of standing. (Responding to Point Relied On I). 11

A. This Court should review the trial court's dismissal with prejudice for abuse of discretion. 11

B. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I due to Plaintiffs' lack of standing. 14

II. The trial court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment that dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot or unripe. (Responding to Points Relied On II and III). 18

A. This Court should review the trial court's final judgment on mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion. 18

B. The trial court properly dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot because there is no realistic chance Plaintiffs can cure the mootness of their claims. 19

INTRODUCTION

The circuit court correctly issued a final judgment ruling that Plaintiffs lack standing to bring an insufficient-appropriations claim under Missouri's voter-identification law, that all of their claims are moot in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448, 461 (Mo. banc 2020), and that their statutory claims about insufficient advance notice of Missouri's voter identification requirements are not ripe. On appeal, Plaintiffs do not argue the merits of any of those determinations. Rather, they contend only that the trial court erred in dismissing their claims with prejudice. For three principal reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's with-prejudice dismissals and thereby reinforce the prevailing rule that trial courts have discretion to dismiss claims with or without prejudice based on the circumstances present in a case.

First, Plaintiffs apply the wrong standard of review of a trial court's decision to dismiss cases with or without prejudice; this Court should review for abuse of discretion and not exercise de novo review. See Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193, 198 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992) ("This court will not disturb the trial court's dismissal with prejudice absent a finding of a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court."); cf. Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) (de novo review of the merits of the dismissal may be appropriate where "the facts are uncontested.").

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, under the correct standard of review, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing. The trial court issued its judgment after a weeklong trial on Plaintiffs' third amended petition, the judgment references evidence elicited at trial, and the parties contested the facts of Plaintiffs' standing to bring the case. It would be futile, and it would prejudice Respondents, to transform the trial court's judgment into a mere dismissal without prejudice and allow Plaintiffs to bring the same suit again.

Third, the trial court correctly dismissed, with prejudice, Counts I and II as moot and Count II as unripe because there is no realistic probability that Plaintiffs can cure those problems in light of the Supreme Court's permanent injunctions in Priorities USA. Plaintiffs have not appealed the merits of the mootness question, and thus they have conceded that issue. It would be futile to allow them to bring their suit again, and nothing in Missouri law mandates that dismissals for mootness be without prejudice. The trial court also correctly dismissed Count II as unripe. Count II is purely a statutory claim where all the relief requested was provided in the Priorities USA injunctions based on the facts Plaintiffs pleaded, and Plaintiffs have not identified subsequent Voter ID advertising that violates those injunctions.

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's judgment dismissing Counts I and II of the Third Amended Petition with prejudice.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Backed by a constitutional amendment ("Voter ID Amendment") approved by popular vote, in 2016 the State adopted its current voter identification statute that allows for voting with both photo and non-photo forms of identification. § 115.427, RSMo (the "Voter ID Law"). After a constitutional challenge to certain aspects of the Voter ID Law's requirements, the Missouri Supreme Court largely upheld the statute last year in Priorities USA v. State, 591 S.W.3d 448 (Mo. banc 2020). But the Court affirmed a trial court's declaration that the statute's affidavit requirement for some non-photo forms of identification was unconstitutional. And it upheld the lower court's injunctions against disseminating certain advertising materials about the Voter ID Law, including "materials with the graphic that voters will be asked to show a photo identification card without specifying other forms of identification which voters may also show," Id. at 460–61, and "materials which represent that a photo identification card is required to vote," (D165, p.5).

A. The Third Amended Petition's claims and early procedural history.

Plaintiffs in this case are two organizations and one individual Missouri voter. They filed the original Petition in June 2017, and the case has previously been before this Court in an earlier stage of litigation. See State Conference of Nat'l Ass'n for Advancement of Colored People v. State, 563 S.W.3d 138 (Mo.

App. W.D. 2018) (hereinafter "NAACP I"). After this Court remanded the case to the circuit court for further proceedings, Plaintiffs filed their Third Amended Petition after a lower court's ruling in Priorities USA but before the Supreme Court's opinion. (D98).

In Count I, Plaintiffs brought a statutory claim seeking declaratory and injunctive relief that the personal identification requirements in the Voter ID Law may not be enforced due to insufficient legislative appropriations in fiscal years 2017 to 2019. (D98, p.23). In Count II, they sought various prohibitory and mandatory injunctions against advertising materials under § 115.427.5 of the Voter ID Law. (D98, pp.24–26). Specifically, in Count II Plaintiffs asked the trial court to:

> A. Issue an injunction barring the Secretary of State from telling the public that there is a photo ID requirement and/or from instructing poll workers to ask for photo IDs when voters come to the polls;
>
> B. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to provide public notice that there is no photo ID required for voting in Missouri;
>
> C. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to provide correct information to the public about the non-photo options;
>
> D. Issue an injunction directing the Secretary of State to take down misleading advertisements that are still being used or made available to the public;
>
> E. Allow such other and further relief as is proper under the circumstances.

(D98, p.26).

The trial court presided over a weeklong trial in August 2019, where the court heard the testimony of several witnesses and admitted into evidence the parties' joint stipulated facts and exhibits. (D120–121). The parties did not stipulate to Plaintiffs' standing to bring the case. (Id.; D117). Respondents denied the Third Amended Petition's allegations that Plaintiffs have standing (D117, ¶¶14–18), raised lack of standing as an affirmative defense (id. at p. 7), and argued in their post-trial brief that Plaintiffs lack standing based on the evidence.

B. The parties brief the effect of the Priorities USA decision.

On January 14, 2020, the Supreme Court issued its opinion in Priorities USA. The next day, the trial court asked the parties to submit memoranda concerning the effect of Priorities USA on this case. (D159). For Plaintiffs' appropriations claim in Count I, Respondents argued that it was moot because the Priorities USA decision already provided the only relief sought by Plaintiffs: a declaration and injunction that the Voter ID Law's identification requirements cannot be enforced. (D162, p.3). As to Plaintiffs' statutory claims in Count II regarding insufficient advance notice of the Voter ID Law's personal identification requirements, Respondents argued that Priorities USA also mooted these claims. Priorities USA upheld permanent injunctions against those very requirements, "any proposed negative relief was already granted," and "[n]either [§ 115.427.5] nor the order require additional notice campaigns or any of the other remedies Plaintiffs propose." (D162, p.4-6).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Plaintiffs responded to Respondents' Priorities USA arguments, contending that Count I is not moot because their relief requested—an order "directing that voters cannot be asked to show a Photo ID at the polls"—is not encompassed by Priorities USA. (D160 at p.3). For Count II, Plaintiffs agreed that "the Priorities USA remedial order prevents further dissemination of such misleading information," but they contended that it "does not affirmatively correct the existing misimpression." (D160, p.2). They asserted that the Voter ID Law's "obligation to provide advance notice necessarily requires the provision of accurate and non-misleading information." (Id.). In other words, Plaintiffs disagreed that Priorities USA precluded their claims in this case for a mandatory injunction to promote corrective advertisements.

C. The trial court's final judgment and post-judgment developments.

On April 20, 2020, the trial court issued a final judgment holding that Plaintiffs lacked standing to bring their claims in Count I, that Count I is moot under Priorities USA, and that Count II is both moot and not ripe under Priorities USA. (D165).

As to Count I, the trial court discussed what evidence a plaintiff must show to demonstrate injury under the photo ID requirement: "the potential injured party would have to first, timely present himself to the polls and second, be eligible to vote." (Id. at p.2). In a footnote, the court highlighted evidence actually introduced at trial regarding the ability of voters to vote with non-photo forms of identification. (Id. at n.5). The court held that the two organization plaintiffs lack associational standing and organizational standing, and it further held that taxpayer standing is not a theory on which the individual plaintiff here, Christine Dragonette, can base a claim for insufficient appropriations. (Id. at p.3). The court alternatively found that the injunctions upheld in Priorities USA render Count I moot, because the case held that the photo identification requirement "may not be enforced." (Id.).

As to Count II, the trial court compared the injunctions upheld in Priorities USA with the relief requested in this case. (Id. at p.4–6). The court held that "the prohibitory injunctions of Priorities USA [are] essentially the same as prayed for in this case[.]" (Id. at p.5). Referring to Plaintiffs' request for an injunction that the Secretary of State affirmatively issue correct advertisements, the court reasoned that "the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required given the findings made and instructions provided to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA." (Id.). The court also held that Count II is not ripe to the extent it is based on advertisements not yet promoted. (Id. at p.6).

On May 19, 2020, Plaintiffs filed a motion to modify the judgment to transform the dismissals with prejudice to dismissals without prejudice. (D166). The trial court did not rule on that motion, and Plaintiffs eventually appealed the trial court's judgment under special order by the Court permitting a late notice of appeal. (D167, D168).

ARGUMENT

I. The circuit court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment after trial that dismissed with prejudice Plaintiffs' claims in Count I for lack of standing. (Responding to Point Relied On I).

A. This Court should review the trial court's dismissal with prejudice for abuse of discretion.

The correct standard of review is one for abuse of discretion, and not de novo review as Plaintiffs contend. Generally, an appellate court "will not disturb the trial court's dismissal with prejudice absent a finding of a clear abuse of discretion by the trial court." Williams v. City of Kansas City, 841 S.W.2d 193, 198 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992) (citing Smith v. City of De Soto, 634 S.W.2d 204, 205 (Mo. App. 1982)). Application of this standard is universal in every district of the Court of Appeals. See id.; Peet v. Randolph, 103 S.W.3d 872, 876 (Mo. App. E.D. 2003) (reviewing for abuse of discretion trial court's with-prejudice dismissal of a case based on plaintiff's failure to prosecute); Saidawi v. Giovanni's Little Place, Inc., 987 S.W.2d 501, 505 (Mo. App. E.D. 1999) (holding "[t]here is no absolute right to amend a petition" and finding no abuse of discretion of the lower court's with-prejudice dismissal based on failure to state a claim); Allen v. City of Greenville, MO, 336 S.W.3d 508, n.3 (Mo. App. S.D. 2011) (noting the court would have applied abuse of discretion review to the lower court's prejudice determination if the appellant had raised it on appeal).

An exception to that rule may apply when the question on appeal is whether the dismissal itself was proper and "the facts are uncontested." Mo. Soybean Ass'n v. Mo. Clean Water Comm'n, 102 S.W.3d 10, 21 (Mo. banc 2003) (applying de novo review to the merits of the dismissal decision). But this case does not fall within any known exception to the general rule for several reasons, and Plaintiffs misapply the holding in Mo. Soybean Ass'n.

First, Plaintiffs have not appealed the trial court's decision on standing—they appeal only the dismissal being with prejudice. The trial court issued a final judgment after the trial, and the issue of Plaintiffs' standing was a preserved issue for trial. (See D117, Respondents' Answer and Affirmative Defenses, pp.15-16). The trial court did not rule on a motion to dismiss where the court would have assumed Plaintiffs' "averments in their petition are true." Cmty. Care Ctr. of Lemay v. Missouri Health Facilities Review Comm., 92 S.W.3d 232, 234 (Mo. App. W.D. 2002) (reviewing de novo the merits of a lower court's grant of a motion to dismiss for lack of standing); cf. Mo. Soybean Ass'n,

102 S.W.3d at 21 (procedural history indicates the case was decided after a trial or hearing on a combined motion to dismiss and for summary judgment).[1]

Unlike a motion to dismiss, where the facts are uncontested, or a summary judgment motion, where there can be no disputed material facts, Respondents contested Plaintiffs' lack of standing. The issue here is not "purely a question of law" as in Mo. Soybean Ass'n. Respondents denied the Third Amended Petition's allegations that Plaintiffs have standing, and Respondents raised lack of standing as an affirmative defense. (D117). Respondents also raised the issue in their post-trial brief, highlighting the lack of evidence Plaintiffs submitted at trial to support their standing. And in its final judgment the trial court referenced evidence introduced at trial as to Plaintiffs' standing. (D165, n.5).

Second, Missouri Supreme Court Rule 67.03 also supports giving the trial court discretion to issue a judgment with prejudice, stating that "Any involuntary dismissal shall be without prejudice unless the court in its order for dismissal shall otherwise specify." Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 67.03 (emphasis added).

[1] In addition to Mo. Soybean Ass'n, other cases cited by Plaintiffs in their brief also considered dismissals without prejudice upon a motion to dismiss. E.g., Seldomridge v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 140 S.W.3d 58, 64 (Mo. App. W.D. 2004). Furthermore, other cases rested on the specific language of a previous version of Rule 67.03 or did not state a standard of review at all. E.g., Am. Indus. Res., Inc. v. T.S.E. Supply Co., 708 S.W.2d 806, 808–09 (Mo. App. E.D. 1986).

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - April 05, 2021 - 04:43 PM

The plain language of the Rule contemplates a court's discretion to specify the prejudicial effect of its dismissal.

Finally, review for abuse of discretion makes sense because it is the standard that governs review of denials of leave to amend a petition. Gohlston v. Lightfoot, 825 S.W.2d 864, 869 (Mo. App. W.D. 1992). In those situations, "the denial of amendment is presumed correct and the burden is on the proponent to show an abuse of discretion." Id. Dismissals with prejudice are analogous to denials of leave to amend a petition because both effectively prohibit a party to re-plead claims in a future action. There is no principled distinction between these two conceptually similar determinations for purposes of applying a standard of review.

For all these reasons, this Court should apply the abuse of discretion standard and confirm that Plaintiffs carry the burden to show that the trial court abused its discretion in dismissing each count of the Third Amended Petition with prejudice.

B. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I due to Plaintiffs' lack of standing.

The argument section of Plaintiffs' first point on appeal is virtually devoid of legal argument, instead consisting almost exclusively of parenthetical quotations from case law. Because they apply the wrong standard of review, Plaintiffs do not argue how the trial court abused its discretion for issuing a final judgment holding that they lack standing.

Under the abuse of discretion standard, "[d]iscretion means the option that the trial judge has in doing or not doing that which a litigant does not have the absolute right to demand." Jennings v. City of Kansas City, 812 S.W.2d 724, 735 (Mo. App. W.D. 1991). "Abuse of that discretion means an untenable judicial act that defies reason and works an injustice. . . . [or] [w]hen the trial court's ruling clearly offends the logic of the circumstances or when it becomes arbitrary and unreasonable." Id. Under the appropriate standard, the trial court soundly exercised its discretion.

First, because the circuit court held a trial where evidence was presented on Plaintiffs' lack of standing, it was proper for the court to decide the standing question on the merits and issue a final judgment. The trial court's decision was properly denominated a "judgment" and it became final 30 days after it was issued. Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 81.05(a)(1). Nothing about issuing a final judgment after trial is arbitrary and unreasonable, or is an injustice against Plaintiffs. During the multiple years of litigation in this case, including a trip to this Court in NAACP I, Plaintiffs amended their original Petition three times and had ample opportunity to develop a case with a party possessing standing.[2]

[2] Plaintiffs do not raise on appeal the merits of the trial court's judgment on standing, mootness, or ripeness. The decision below was a final judgment, the

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Second, amending the trial court's final judgment to simply a dismissal order without prejudice would undermine the work of the parties and the courts in multi-year litigation, which reached a trial on the merits and resulted in a final judgment.[3] It would reward Plaintiffs the benefit of liberal re-pleading rules that accompany a dismissal without prejudice by allowing them to re-plead the same cause of action while remaining plaintiffs to that case. And it would effectively announce a rule that no Missouri case supports—that courts must always dismiss a case without prejudice due to lack of standing, even if denominated as final judgment after a contested trial. This would destabilize a customary practice in Missouri's appellate courts of affirming dismissals with prejudice, and it is not necessary in this case. See, e.g., Campbell v. Adecco USA, Inc., 561 S.W.3d 116, 124 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018); Corozzo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 531 S.W.3d 566, 572 (Mo. App. W.D. 2017); Mo. Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Oneok, Inc., 318 S.W.3d 134, 139 (Mo. App. W.D. 2009).

finality of which was addressed in Respondents' opposition to Plaintiffs' filing of a late notice of appeal. The finality of the judgment was necessarily affirmed by this Court's special order allowing Plaintiffs to file a late notice of appeal. Plaintiffs have elected not to appeal the merits of the judgment, and so they have forfeited those claims on appeal. E.g., Eckel v. Eckel, 540 S.W.3d 476, n.17 (Mo. App. W.D. 2018) (an issue not presented in a point relied on is not preserved for review); see also Mo. Sup. Ct. R. 84.04(d).

[3] This Court's opinion in NAACP I, 563 S.W.3d at 142–47, thoroughly discusses the procedural history of this case and the claims Plaintiffs raised in their original, first amended, and second amended petitions.

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

Electronically Filed - WESTERN DISTRICT CT OF APPEALS - April 05, 2021 - 04:43 PM

Third, this Court should reject any argument Plaintiffs make that they can cure their pleading defects regarding standing and therefore a without-prejudice dismissal is appropriate. Plaintiffs do not squarely argue they can or will cure this defect. Instead they allude to it in a footnote in their brief as a possibility if the two organizational plaintiffs identify members who present themselves at the polls without a photo ID and suffer an injury from the Voting ID Law. (App. Br. at n.3). Plaintiffs amended their Petition three times and had over two years of litigation to find at least one member of their organizations who has standing to bring their claims. They failed to do so. But even if the organizational plaintiffs did find such an individual in their ranks, the theory of their case—and likely the factual allegations and evidence—would presumably be the same. The circuit court's judgment below is final and as such has the appropriate preclusive affect under the doctrines of collateral estoppel and res judicata. The extent of that

Lastly, the trial court held that Priorities USA mooted any of the pleaded claims for relief in Count I. Because Plaintiffs did not raise the merits of the mootness decision on appeal and the decision below is a final judgment, they have forfeited raising the same claims in the same form again. It would thus be futile for this Court to modify the trial court's judgment to be a dismissal without prejudice.

For these reasons, this Court should affirm the trial court's exercise of discretion in issuing a final judgment dismissing Count I with prejudice for lack of standing.

II. The trial court properly exercised its discretion by issuing a final judgment that dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot or unripe. (Responding to Points Relied On II and III).

A. This Court should review the trial court's final judgment on mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion.

As with the trial court's final judgment disposing of Plaintiffs' claims in Count I with prejudice, this Court should review the trial court's with-prejudice dismissals as to mootness and ripeness for abuse of discretion. Plaintiffs again cite the incorrect standard of review in light of the claims they actually raised on appeal. De novo review might be appropriate if Plaintiffs had contested the merits of the dismissals themselves, not merely whether the trial erred in dismissing Plaintiffs' claims with prejudice. De novo review was applied in Mo. Soybean Ass'n because the Court reviewed the substantive question of whether the trial court properly dismissed the underlying claim as unripe and for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction, not whether the trial court erred by doing so with or without prejudice. 102 S.W.3d at 22 ("a question as to the subject-matter jurisdiction of a court is purely a question of law, which is reviewed de novo."). Plaintiffs here have not appealed the trial court's

AMERICAN OVERSIGHT

mootness or ripeness determinations. Thus, the general rule of reviewing for abuse of discretion applies. See Williams, 841 S.W.2d at 198.

B. The trial court properly dismissed with prejudice Counts I and II as moot because there is no realistic chance Plaintiffs can cure the mootness of their claims.

Plaintiffs have elected not to appeal the merits of the trial court's decision to dismiss Counts I and II as moot in light of Priorities USA. They have therefore forfeited that issue on appeal. Assuming, as this Court therefore must, that the trial court did properly dismiss Plaintiffs' claims as moot, the trial court appropriately exercised its discretion by dismissing them with prejudice.

The principal rationale for dismissing cases without prejudice is that it permits a party to bring another action for the same cause, if it is not otherwise barred. See Mahoney v. Doerhoff Surgical Servs., Inc., 807 S.W.2d 503, 506 (Mo. banc 1991). "Ordinarily, when an action is dismissed without prejudice, a plaintiff may cure the dismissal by filing another suit in the same court." Osuji v. Missouri Dept. of Social Services, Div. of Family Services, 34 S.W.3d 251, 253 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000). As other courts have held, "where the pleading's deficiencies 'cannot be cured by re-pleading, because [the claims fail] as a matter of law,' dismissal with prejudice may be appropriate." Timber Point Properties III, LLC v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2014 WL 7005195, at *1 (W.D. Mo. Dec. 10, 2014) (quoting Rickmyer v. Browne, 995 F.Supp.2d 989, 1019

(D.Minn.2014)); see also McLean v. United States, 566 F.3d 391, 400 (4th Cir. 2009) ("Courts, including this one, have held that when a complaint is incurable through amendment, dismissal is properly rendered with prejudice and without leave to amend.")); McKesson HBOC, Inc. v. New York State Common Ret. Fund, Inc., 339 F.3d 1087, 1096 (9th Cir. 2003) (dismissal with prejudice is appropriate where "deficiencies in [plaintiff's] claims cannot be cured by amendment").

There is no principled reason why a similar rule does not apply in Missouri for with-prejudice dismissals for mootness. Indeed, this same rationale inspires the analysis of a denial of leave to amend a petition, which is conceptually similar to dismissals with prejudice. See Gohlston, 825 S.W.2d at 869; Bratt v. Cohn, 969 S.W.2d 277, 284 (Mo. App. W.D. 1998) (denial of plaintiffs' motion to file second amended petition was not an abuse of discretion because it "did not cure the deficiencies of their first amended petition."). Nothing in Missouri law mandates dismissal without prejudice when the court's basis is mootness.

Plaintiffs have not argued on appeal how a subsequent lawsuit could cure the mootness problems found by the trial court in light of Priorities USA. And because Plaintiffs have not raised that argument, they have forfeited it. As in their first point on appeal, the argument section of their second point on appeal consists almost exclusively of parenthetical quotations from cases, not substantive legal argument. The Supreme Court's decision in Priorities USA affirmed the lower court's permanent injunctions, which—as the trial court below properly found, and which is not contested by Plaintiffs on appeal—encompasses the very relief Plaintiffs sought in this case. (D165, p.5).

The cases Plaintiffs cite in their brief are inapposite. For example, in Friends of the San Luis, Inc. v. Archdiocese of St. Louis, 312 S.W.3d 476 (Mo. App. E.D. 2010), the trial court made no determination as to mootness; instead, mootness came after the trial court's ruling, and the trial court dismissed the case with prejudice for lack of standing. Id. at 477. The parties addressed the merits of the post-decision mootness question on appeal and the appellate court thus considered it on the merits. Id. at 483. The appellate court's decision discussed the various public-interest reasons why it vacated the lower court's standing decision and held the controversy should be dismissed without prejudice due to mootness, including because the respondent on appeal did not oppose that remedy. Id. at 485. None of those unique circumstances are present here, and Friends of the San Luis certainly does not announce a rule that circuit court dismissals due to mootness must always be without prejudice.

Deciding whether a case should be dismissed with or without prejudice is within the sound discretion of the court deciding the mootness question. Plaintiffs have failed to appeal the merits of the trial court's mootness decision. And they have altogether failed to argue in their brief how they might obtain relief in a future, re-pleaded cause of action based on appropriations for Voter ID Law advertising that is not encompassed by the permanent injunctive relief ordered in Priorities USA.

This Court should therefore affirm the trials court's decision dismissing as moot Counts I and II with prejudice.

C. The trial court properly dismissed Count II with prejudice as unripe.

The trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing Count II with prejudice as unripe. Though this Court can affirm the trial court's dismissal of Count II as moot and therefore avoid ruling on Appellants' third point on appeal, there are independent and sufficient grounds to affirm the trial court's dismissal with prejudice of Count II as unripe.

The Supreme Court in Priorities USA affirmed lower-court injunctions concerning the Secretary of State's advertising the Voter ID Law. As the trial court in this case held, "[t]he Secretary of State is still obligated to provide advance notice in a manner calculated to generally inform the public." (D165, p.5). No party has filed suit complaining of the Secretary's subsequent advertising efforts or compliance with the Priorities USA decision.

If a party has any good-faith allegations that the Secretary of State's Office has not complied with the permanent injunctions in Priorities USA, those allegations might support a claim for which a party can bring a new action. But Plaintiffs' claims in Count II rest on an entirely separate theory than that potential cause of action. In Count II, Plaintiffs alleged that expenditures on advertising resulted in incorrect and misleading advertising and that the Secretary of State's Office did not issue appropriate corrective advertising. (D98, pp.24–26). Count II is a strict statutory claim, resting solely on § 115.427.5 of the Voter ID Law. The Supreme Court in Priorities USA already analyzed claims for violations of that same statute similar to Plaintiffs' claims in Count II. Priorities USA, 591 S.W.3d at 459–61.

As the trial court here found, the permanent injunctions in Priorities USA encompass essentially the same relief Plaintiffs sought on their advertising claims and "the specific mandatory injunctions requested are not required, given the findings made and instructions given to the Secretary of State in Priorities USA." (D165, pp. 5–6). In mentioning mandatory injunctions, the trial court was necessarily referring to the relief sought by Plaintiffs in Count II to issue new, corrective advertising (D98, p.26). The trial court was correct in ruling that the Priorities USA decision forecloses any relief that Plaintiffs actually requested in Count II of the Third Amended Petition based § 115.427.5, and Plaintiffs do not challenge the correctness of that portion of the judgment below.

To the extent Plaintiffs bring a future cause of action based on similar facts due to advertising of the Voter ID Law, any such allegations likely cannot be premised § 115.425.7. Plaintiffs did not plead claims premised on the Priorities USA injunctions even though the trial court's decision in that case was issued prior to the Third Amended Petition's filing. To that end, even though the Third Amended Petition cites Priorities USA in Count II, it narrows the Count's focus to a "violation of the statute." (D98, p.26). Claims for relief requested in a future lawsuit based on the same facts alleged in the Third Amended Petition but premised on § 115.427.5 and not the Priorities USA permanent injunctions are not yet ripe, nor can they ever be ripe. Priorities USA forecloses the relief Plaintiffs requested based on the facts and theory of the case they pleaded. There exists a hypothetical claim based on Priorities USA's permanent injunctions that may eventually be ripe, but that is not the claim in Count II of the Third Amended Petition here.

For these reasons, it would be futile to allow Plaintiffs to re-plead the same cause of action under § 115.427.5, for the same relief, and based on future—but presently unripe—facts. The trial court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing with prejudice Count II as unripe.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, this Court should affirm the circuit court's decision.

Argument 5

I. De novo is the correct standard of review in this case, and Appellants do not misapply the holding in Missouri Soybean Association v. Missouri Clean Water Commission, 102 S.W.3d 10 (Mo banc. 2003). 5

II. Dismissal of Count I for lack of standing should be without prejudice because standing could be achieved and the circuit court had no jurisdiction or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits. 13

III. Dismissal of Counts I and II for mootness and Count II as being unripe should be without prejudice because there is a realistic chance that both counts will no longer be moot in the future and Count II will become ripe; the circuit court had no jurisdicton or authority to adjudicate the case on the merits after finding the claims to be moot and unripe. 18

Certification of Service and of Compliance with Rule 84.06(b) and (c) 25
