Taylor -

As a reminder, you can find the legislatively required reports on this page:

- [redacted]
- See "IMPLEMENTATION" Tab
- I did a quick sort and here is what I found due by October 1 that was assigned to the Budget Team
- Some of these might already be done. I'm just providing information on what I have insight into.

The following reports are due to the Legislature by October 1, 2022:

- For those reports ready for EDO review, a google doc link has been included.
- For those reports that do not have a google doc included, these reports are due to EDO no later than this FRIDAY, September 23 (to give EDO at least one week for review).

As a reminder, these reports are legislatively required. Some of them are recurring reports that have individual citations in code. Other reports are required as intent language passed in various budget bills this year.

If you feel you were incorrectly identified as being responsible for the report, please send a message to me, your ELT-level supervisor, and the staff member you feel should be responsible.

Please make these a priority so we can meet these legislative deadlines.

Marc,

I see the report my program is responsible for is complete and referenced in the Google Link column, which is wonderful. I wanted to let you know that we have now hired our Epidemiology Manager for the HEART Program. This position will be responsible for this and future reports. Our Epi Manager is Taylor Hoj. I have copied Taylor on this message and he may also be reached directly at THoj@Utah.gov.

I am, of course, always happy to help however I can. Please let me know if you have any questions or if you need anything further from me.

Thank you!

Hi Marc,

As Tyler mentioned, I will be responsible for these performance measure items in the future. I reached out to DHHS Budget last month regarding this legislative item and provided them with the performance measure information. I've also taken the liberty of adding it to column L of the IMPLEMENTATION sheet in the DHHS Legislative Items Due_2022 Google Sheet document.

I will also forward to you the exchange I had with DHHS Budget about this performance measure last month, and please let me know if you have any questions or need any additional information.

Thanks,

Taylor

Marc,
I should maybe know this better than I do.... Do all of these items require written reports? Or is a report out to the committee sufficient, if a report out is scheduled? (thinking about the item on the Culture Audit, as an example).

Thank you,
HB

Guest opinion: Accountability is more than a political slogan

The role of the District Attorney is to faithfully execute the law and to secure justice for the community. The DA is a public safety official and must accept accountability for any decision not to faithfully execute the law. The DA's office has only screened 35% of sexual assault cases referred to the office. A recent investigative report found the DA's office had declined to charge domestic violence offenders with felonies in the "interest of justice."

The current DA has implemented several de-prosecution policies while in office. De-prosecution is the decision of a DA not to prosecute crimes regardless of the crime having actually been committed. Within his internal policies, Gill instructs prosecutors to dismiss a case when the prosecutor subjectively "believes the defendant is innocent, regardless of the evidence presented." Increased homicide rates are strongly correlated with de-prosecution policies. Salt Lake County has seen a 46% increase in homicide since 2019, that's 16% above the national average during that same time.

In the case of a wayward DA, the governor cannot hold the office accountable, and neither can any other elected or appointed official. The duty of holding the DA accountable falls squarely on the shoulders of the voters. (Read More)

Lee leads letter calling for clean Continuing Resolution

Sen. Mike Lee (R-UT) led a letter addressed to his Senate colleagues urging them to adopt a "clean" Continuing Resolution (CR) free of additional spending and extraneous policy riders. The letter also calls for the CR to carry over into the 118th Congress.

The letter reads in part, "Failure to stand strong against lame-duck spending and caving to the Democrats will likely worsen inflation, prolong the current economic recession, and advance policies contained in the Biden administration's progressive wish list." (Read More)

Situational Analysis | Sept 21, 2022

It's Wednesday and both International Day of Peace and World Gratitude Day. They go well together.

Be in the Know

- Ironically, on this International Day of Peace, Putin ordered a partial mobilization of reserve troops with relevant combat and service experience, in an escalation of the war he is losing in Ukraine. Additionally, professional soldiers will no longer be allowed to terminate their contracts. It is the first mobilization of troops in Russia since WWII. Putin also threatened (again) to use nuclear weapons and announced his support for the referendums to "annex" four regions of Ukraine. Pro-Kremlin analysts and officials have said that if the territories are formally annexed, any further Ukrainian military action on those areas could be considered an attack on Russia itself.

Rapid Roundup

- Best drives to see fall leaves in Utah; Spotify has audiobooks now - here's how to access over 300,000 titles; no longer the happiest state in the Union 😞; Zion, Bryce Canyon, other local national parks having a "fee-free" day to encourage volunteering; Utah is in the top five states with the highest percentage of eligible student loan borrowers who could see $20K wiped off their debt; and "Up Close" with Shawn Bradley.

On the Hill today

- 8:30 am: Economic Development and Workforce Services; Judiciary; Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice; Natural Resources, Agriculture, and Environment; Revenue and Taxation; Transportation
- 1:15 pm: Business and Labor; Education; Government Operations; Health and Human Services; Political Subdivisions; Public Utilities, Energy, and Technology
- 4:00 pm: Senate floor time

The Hinckley Report, PBS Utah's weekly political roundtable, airs Fridays at 7PM. Hosted by Jason Perry and produced in partnership with the Hinckley Institute of Politics on the University of Utah campus, the program provides insight and analysis of the most pressing political issues facing our state.

Romney welcomes $5.5 million investment from bipartisan infrastructure bill to advance wildfire resilience in Utah

U.S. Senator Romney (R-UT) today welcomed an announcement from the Department of the Interior that it has invested more than $5.5 million in fiscal year 2022 funding from the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act to advance wildfire resilience work and support fuels management projects in Utah on 24,490 acres of land across the state. This is part of $103 million allocated by the Department earlier this year to reduce wildfire risk, mitigate impacts, and rehabilitate burned areas. The additional funding will help complete fuels treatments on nearly 2 million acres nationwide this fiscal year, a substantial increase over the prior year. (Read More)

USBE seeks feedback on Student Health and Risk Prevention (SHARP) survey

The Utah State Board of Education is asking Utah residents to respond to a short survey focused on the state's Student Health and Risk Prevention (SHARP) survey, which is given every two years, to students in grades 6, 8, 10, and 12.

Information from the survey will be used to help inform the October 6 Utah State Board of Education meeting where the board will be determining whether to support the 2023 SHARP survey administration. (Read More)

Improving Health Equity With Data

Health equity is a top priority for many health agencies. Public health leaders can use performance management systems to advance health equity goals by systematically collecting and monitoring data to track results and identify opportunities for improvement.

On the latest episode of the Public Health Review podcast, ASTHO senior executive consultant Nicole Alexander-Scott (alumni-RI), Harry Chen (alumni-VT), and Montana's state health improvement coordinator, Anna Bradley, discuss how the current equity efforts can integrate with established performance management practices. Listen to the episode to learn more.

State and Territorial Health Policies Strengthening Emergency Preparedness Efforts

Public health has been grappling with an onslaught of challenges, such as COVID-19, monkeypox, increasing firearm homicide, and widespread heat waves. In the wake of such emergencies, public health preparedness is more critical than ever.

State and territorial preparedness policy priorities could indicate potential areas of focus for federal agencies as they work to re-invigorate preparedness and better meet current challenges. Check out those priorities in this week's Health Policy Update.

It's Friday and National Great American Pot Pie Day. Great dinner choice while watching the Hinckley Report tonight.

Congratulations and best wishes to SUU President Mindy Benson on her inauguration today.

Condolences to the family and friends of former legislator David Cox, who passed away yesterday. Funeral details will be forthcoming.

Be in the Know

- New polling by the Deseret News and Hinckley Institute of Politics shows a tightening Senate race with Senator Mike Lee at 36%, challenger Evan McMullin at 34%, and 16% undecided. 45% of Utah voters disapprove of the job Lee is doing, while 40% approve. The survey also showed that Lee has higher support among men and voters over age 40 while McMullin has more support among women and voters under age 40. In the meantime, as the campaigns enter the final weeks, the attack ads are ramping up.

Rapid Roundup

- Hanna Seariac at the Deseret News has the secret to making the best pumpkin chocolate chip cookies; you can access Utah's national parks for free Saturday in celebration of National Public Lands Day; Hurricane Fiona could be Canada's strongest-ever storm and finally, an ancient burial cave found on a beach in Israel "looks like an 'Indiana Jones' film set"

Polls, Campaigns and Political Cash

New polls and campaign filings suggest how candidates are faring ahead of the midterms. Plus, Utah has a billion-dollar surplus. Dennis Romboy, Michelle Quist, and Marty Carpenter join host Jason Perry on The Hinckley Report this Friday at 7:00 pm to discuss how the economy will influence spending.

Utah ranks among top states in delivering digital government services

The state of Utah has been a leader in delivering online government services and information for many years. That position was reinforced by the most recent rankings for state digital government services.

The Center for Digital Government ranked Utah second overall in the 2022 State Government Experience Awards. The Awards recognize progress and innovation in the delivery of online services in government at the state and local level. Utah has finished in the top three of the Center's rankings every year the state has been eligible since 2006, and even claimed the top ranking in 2007, 2009, 2017, and 2018. (Read More)

The legislative report under 26-7-14 is required every other year starting in 2021. The last report was for 2021 so the next report is not due until 2023. Additionally, there is no new information to provide from the last report. I have attached the report that was submitted last year, below.

Marc, I tried to get into and would like to make edits in several of these reports, and they aren't set up to provide edit or comment access---are you able to fix this? (like the SUID report, the first tobacco item (compliance checks), the birth certificate report, and the AI/AN report---there may be others that I didn't try)

Thank you,

Same. Please grant access to these reports so we can do the necessary review as quickly as possible given the timeline.

Have these reports gone through PAE for review for editing? There are several line edits I find myself making. It would be good to have a line editor review these reports. If they don't have that capability, let me know. We may need to find an editor in the department.

Situational Analysis | Sept 26, 2022

[redacted]

It's Monday and National Family Day. 😊

Shanah Tovah to our friends who are celebrating Rosh Hashanah.

Rapid Roundup

- 8 places to view Utah's colorful foliage this fall; a new baby giraffe at Hogle Zoo (mama was pregnant 15 months....); Albert Pujols hits his 700th home run; Jupiter is coming its closest to Earth in decades and will be big and bright tonight; and fall allergies are here (ugh).

Monday Musings

The fourth quarter of 2022 begins on Saturday. It barely seems possible that we've arrived here so quickly. I swear, the years seem to be going faster and faster.

Fall is a really great time to make goals, and, somewhat counter-intuitively, it can be a season of growth. Fall is the season for planting bulbs that will be nourished underground during the winter. Trees may drop their leaves in the colder temperatures, but growth and regeneration are occurring within the tree and deep within their roots. Maybe there's something we can learn from trees and bulbs. Sometimes growth and change are not visible, especially to the casual observer.

From businesses to football to our personal lives, the 4th quarter can have a big impact. What are you workin on this quarter? (Read More)

Curtis backs plan on energy independence, strengthen economy

Following the unveiling of the "Commitment to America" by House Republican leadership in Washington County, Pennsylvania, Congressman Curtis (UT-03) issued the following statement:

"If there is anything we have learned in the past few years here in Washington, particularly since the invasion of Ukraine, it's that we cannot spend our way out of our problems and we must come together to find solutions," said Rep. Curtis. "We must lead as a country through energy independence and innovation to help meet our needs and reduce worldwide emissions. Utahns know the value of forward-thinking policy and this commitment emphasis that value."

My apologies. I thought when I sent the original email that it had a pop-up to give everyone access. I'll go through and do that now.

Tracy, to your question, it is my understanding that the assigned Comms team members should also be part of the OU review process. We will build that into the PowerDMS system once we get that up and going. I'll also emphasize that with ELT.

Just to round back on this, I worked with PIO to get permission to edit the Reports Template. Along with a few minor formatting items, we've added a note to the page to remind staff about font size/line spacing and let them know about the expected workflow of reviews before these get to EDO. Hopefully this clarity with mean less items for us to address during our reviews.

Below is a table of the latest batch of Legislative Required Reports. Please conclude your review by COB next Friday (September 30th) so I can turn them into the legislature on time.

We are still waiting for the links to three reports. I have Cc'd those staff and their immediate supervisors so they can reply to this thread with those links once they are ready for EDO review. The three reports are:

- The Legislature intends that the Department of Health and Human Services report by October 1, 2022 to the Social Services Appropriations Subcommittee on the cost and likely impact of suggested interventions to reduce the number of sudden unexplained infant deaths.
- The Legislature intends that the Department of Health and Human Services report by October 1, 2022 to the Social Services Appropriations Subcommittee on options to expand Medicaid Graduate Medical Education funding by reviewing what other states have done on: (1) How many settings in Utah other than hospital settings that could be eligible?, (2) What new providers of third party match not currently participating could qualify?, (3) Estimates of costs for new match money where General Fund match would be required and options for related programs where match might be transferred, and (4) interest of new third party match providers in participating.
- Violent incidents and fatalities involving substance abuse; drug overdose deaths; and recommendations for prevention

SUBJECT: Veteran suicides more than double VA reports, says new study

Situational Analysis | Sept 27, 2022

Good Tuesday morning to ya. It's National Day of Forgiveness, a practice that can go a long way in solving the problem of contempt.

Be in the Know

- Veteran suicides may be higher than federal estimates, according to a new study done by America's Warrior Partnership in partnership with the University of Alabama and Duke University. They reviewed census death data from eight states over a 4-yr period and found thousands of "suspected or confirmed suicides not included in federal calculations." AWP hopes to expand the research to more states and records in the next few years as part of its Operation Deep Dive initiative. Almost simultaneously, the VA released its annual report on veteran suicide and found that the rates dropped to the lowest level since 2006, to an average of 17 suicides per day. AWP's numbers are 24 per day. Additionally, when including "self-injury mortality" (SIM), attributed predominately to overdose deaths, the rate jumps to 44 per day, more than double the what the VA reports. Both organizations agree that the goal of reducing suicides is critically important.

- Hurricane Ian hit Cuba early this morning and Florida is bracing for a Category 4 storm by tomorrow. There is a "100% chance" of damaging winds and water along Florida's west coast. Tampa and St. Petersburg could get their first direct hit by a major hurricane in 100 years.

Rapid Roundup

- Snowden gets Russian citizenship; lumber prices are (finally!) back to pre-COVID levels; VP Harris will travel to Korea's DMZ; overnight officer-involved shooting leaves suspect dead and South Salt Lake officer injured; and James Earl Jones is retiring - who will voice Darth Vader now??

The Hinckley Report, PBS Utah's weekly political roundtable, airs Fridays at 7PM. Hosted by Jason Perry and produced in partnership with the Hinckley Institute of Politics on the University of Utah campus, the program provides insight and analysis of the most pressing political issues facing our state.

Guest Opinion: Business community outlines federal priorities

by Derek Miller

Utah's congressional delegation ranks among the best when it comes to turning legislative priorities into policy. Our representatives secure important committee assignments in Congress and are known for working together to serve all Utahns. Most importantly, they listen to their constituents and let that input guide the work they do for Utah in the halls of Congress.

Each year, the Salt Lake Chamber goes through a collaborative process to distill down a set of business priorities built around advancing opportunity and securing prosperity for our state. Business leaders are once again traveling to Washington, D.C. to present these priorities to our congressional leaders and discuss ways to bring Utah solutions to benefit the country.

As our nation comes out of the pandemic we stand at a crossroads between pursuing prosperity or mitigating decline. Inflation continues to rattle markets and consumers, with renewed supply chain disruptions exacerbated by international conflict. The need for congressional leadership has never been more important. (Read more to learn about the business community's priorities regarding inflation, energy, cybersecurity, AI, immigration reform and fair trading practices.)

News Releases

SL Chamber to present business community's federal priorities to congressional delegation

The Salt Lake Chamber is leading a delegation of business executives and community leaders to our nation's Capitol. The Chamber will meet with members of Utah's congressional delegation to discuss the business community's federal priorities for the next year. The annual trip resumed last year after a hiatus due to the pandemic, executives and leaders are excited to attend events and in-person meetings and connect with federal staff.

"The Salt Lake Chamber and our federal delegation remain committed to promoting the values and collaboration that make Utah an economic success," said Derek Miller, president and CEO of the Salt Lake Chamber and Downtown Alliance. "These priorities cover a range of critical issues around energy reliability and sustainability, housing affordability, infrastructure, taming inflation, and other topline business priorities to make our state stronger. We look forward to working with elected officials to be responsive to challenges and committed to securing greater prosperity for our communities." (Read More)

Republican Senators urge House Republicans to support antitrust reform package

Sen. Mike Lee (R-UT), joined by Sens. Tom Cotton (R-AR), and Chuck Grassley (R- IA), urged their colleagues in the House to support passage of an antitrust reform package consisting of the State Antitrust Enforcement Venue Act, the Merger Filing Fee Modernization Act, and the Foreign Merger Subsidy Disclosure Act. The bills would protect antitrust enforcement by state attorneys general, modernize the Hart-Scott-Rodino merger filing fees, and require merging parties to disclose subsidies from certain foreign governments, respectively. Curtis & Lowenthal celebrate National Clean Energy Week

Today, Rep. John Curtis (R-UT) and Rep. Alan Lowenthal (D-CA) submitted a resolution declaring the week of September 26 through September 30, 2022, as "National Clean Energy Week." The bipartisan resolution kicks off a weeklong of activities highlighting clean energy innovation and help solve the world's most pressing challenges.

"It is an honor to be working with Rep. Lowenthal and recognize Congress role in harnessing the power of free market and government collaboration to create jobs, expand our economy, strengthen America's national security, and preserve our environment," said Congressman Curtis. "Regardless of party, we can all agree that less emissions are better than more emissions." (Read More)

SUBJECT: Thinking Outside The Medicaid Redetermination Box
FROM: "Jack Lewis" <jack.lewis@intellaegis.com>
TO: "Marc Watterson" <mwatterson@utah.gov>
DATE: 28/09/2022 05:30

Hi Marc,

We have the Medicaid Redetermination solution you've been looking for!

In March 2022, CMS issued the guidelines linked below for Medicaid eligibility redetermination once the PHE ends.

CMS requirements specifically state the following:

A state must make a reasonable effort to locate the beneficiary for purposes of confirming state residency and determining continuing eligibility.

"A state may not terminate coverage if the state does not receive a response to the request for confirmation of a new address received through return mail" (Exhibit C graphic 1)

"During the 12-month unwinding period, all states must begin the renewal process by checking available information and data sources to attempt to redetermine eligibility without contacting the beneficiary and requesting documentation to obtain reliable information when eligibility cannot be renewed based on available information, as appropriate." (CMS, pg. 9, sec. C)

"States may expand the number and type of data sources used during the ex parte process as well as create a data source hierarchy to prioritize sources that provide the most recent and reliable data" (pg. 34 paragraph 2)

https://www.medicaid.gov/federal-policy-guidance/downloads/sho22001.pdf

masterQueue is a contact management system that integrates multiple data sources that help states easily meet these requirements by checking off the CMS mandates and suggestions above, and more, all in one cost-effective platform.

Find out how we are helping the state of Colorado meet CMS guidelines by visiting our website and listening to an interview with the COO from the state of Colorado, or visit the link below and schedule a 15-minute phone call with us.

Situational Analysis | Sept 29, 2022

It's Thursday and VFW Day. It is the nation's oldest combat veterans service organization and was started in 1899 by 13 Spanish-American war veterans.

Be in the Know

- Hurricane Ian came ashore near Fort Meyers, Florida as a Category 4 storm, lashing the coast with heavy winds, rain and flooding. Ian was downgraded to a tropical storm overnight. A hospital in Port Charlotte had its roof ripped off while the bottom floor flooded. Currently, 2.5 million are without power. The only bridge connecting Sanibel Island, a barrier island that is home to approximately 6500 people, has collapsed. At least one death has been reported. A still dangerous Ian is now headed towards Georgia and South Carolina. Nick Underwood, an aerospace engineer has flown into the eye of a hurricane 76 times. His roughest flight so far? Ian.

Rapid Roundup

- A wagon wheel on the line as BYU vs USU kicks off tonight at 6 pm; 'Gangsta's Paradise' rapper Coolio has died at age 59; purple is the new M&M color; our collective personalities changed during the pandemic (which reminds me of a great book: "Personality Isn't Permanent" - worth the read).

Trail Mix with Derek Brown

Derek Brown, currently lobbying with Lincoln Hill Partners, began his working life as a pianist for an evangelical church. Along the trail to his current position, he became an attorney, worked in DC, become a Utah legislator and was the volunteer chair of the Utah Republican Party. And more…..

[redacted]

Voter Motivation and Key Endorsements

With the November election approaching, new polling reveals the biggest issues motivating Utah voters. Kate Bradshaw and Frank Pignanelli join host Jason Perry on The Hinckley Report this Friday at 7:00 pm to discuss how these numbers and new endorsements could impact the U.S. Senate race.

Aside from the Medicaid items (pregnancy and postpartum) I'm not sure a clear list of items has been communicated to us. At least, not that I can remember or find in messages (IM, text, or email). Situational Analysis | Oct. 4, 2022

It's Tuesday and National Taco Day. The ultimate Taco Tuesday.

Yom Kippur, the holiest day in Judaism, begins this evening.

Be in the Know

- The 2022 American Family Survey has been released. This year's survey has 3 important stand-outs: rising economic tension, the "nuance and complexity" of abortion attitudes and the interplay between school policy and parental roles. The American Family Survey is an annual nationwide survey between the Deseret News and the Center for the Study of Elections and Democracy at Brigham Young University. Principal investigators are Christopher F. Karpowitz & Jeremy C. Pope.

Rapid Roundup

- That's a lot of pumpkin pie! A new US record has been set for heaviest pumpkin grown: 2554 pounds; Fat Bear Week has arrived; The Onion files an amicus brief (no, really); a shortage of butter just as "butter boards" gain in popularity; more 80° weather on the way;

The Hinckley Report, PBS Utah's weekly political roundtable, airs Fridays at 7PM. Hosted by Jason Perry and produced in partnership with the Hinckley Institute of Politics on the University of Utah campus, the program provides insight and analysis of the most pressing political issues facing our state.

News Releases

Romney names Mandee Grant as new Utah State Director

U.S. Senator Mitt Romney (R-UT) has named Mandee Grant to serve as his next Utah State Director. Grant previously served as Senator Romney's Business Outreach Director, where she worked closely with business owners, economic development directors, chamber presidents, and business and community leaders throughout the state.

Prior to her position as Business Outreach Director with Senator Romney's team, Grant spent more than 25 years in the private sector working as a strategy consultant to Fortune 100 companies. A California native, she received her Master's Degree in Public Administration from the University of Southern California. (Read More)

Owens co-sponsors legislation to help veterans secure VA home loans

Yesterday, Rep. Burgess Owens (UT-04) co-sponsored the VA Loan Informed Disclosure (VALID) Act of 2022, bipartisan legislation to help ensure America's veterans have the tools and resources to access home loans and attain homeownership.

"America's veterans and their families have sacrificed so much to preserve our freedoms," said Rep. Owens. "Unfortunately, these brave men and women face far too many hurdles to access the benefits and care they have earned. I am proud to support the VALID Act of 2022 to keep veterans informed of their loan options and do all we can to help these heroes after they return home from service." (Read More)

Utah Taxpayers Association statement on Proposition 2 in Orem: Vote YES

After extensive research and analysis, the Utah Taxpayers Association wanted to provide the taxpayers of Orem with accurate information that will hopefully inform them as they vote on Proposition 2. The Association has gathered information from the Utah County Assessor, the Utah State Tax Commission, the Utah State Board of Education and the Office of the Legislative Fiscal Analyst...

With the proper taxable property values in the proposed district and conservative estimates of state funding and federal funding, it is reasonable to conclude that an Orem school district would very likely have sufficient revenue to support itself without the need for a property tax increase. In fact, an independent feasibility study was conducted that came to this conclusion. By our own calculations, if higher taxes were needed, any near term increase would be very modest. If the cities of Lindon and Vineyard were added to the new district eventually as well, the tax base would be even stronger. Finally, in a smaller district that was Orem-centric, Orem taxpayers could better hold the new school board accountable for any proposed bonds or changes in tax rates...Orem taxpayers are justified in seeking more local control over their contribution to education, and the Utah Taxpayers Association urges Orem taxpayers to vote in favor of Proposition 2. (Read More)

Tracy -

From my conversation with Krisann, I understand that the LG has had initial conversations with select lawmakers and our next steps for each items are as follows:

- Postpartum
  - Continue to follow up with Kennedy (Paul)
- Caregiver Compensation
  - Follow up DHHS staff (Angie Pinna and Tonya Hales) and Harper on needed changes to code
- Data Privacy
  - Wait to hear back from the LG on whether McCay or Cullimore will take this on
  - Follow up with them once she has decided (Marc)
- Health Care Coverage in Child Support Orders
  - Follow up with Weiler (Marc)

Please let me know if this is correct.

Situational Analysis | Oct. 5, 2022

[redacted]

It's Wednesday and World Teachers' Day. 🍎 A huge thanks to them for the work they do.

Be in the Know

- Job opening in the US fell by 10% in August, in a sign that the labor market is starting to cool. Layoffs were up slightly and the percentage of workers who quit last month held steady at 2.7%.
- New York Yankees' Aaron Judge hit his 62nd home run of the season last night, surpassing Roger Maris' record for month home runs in a single season in American League history, and the seventh most in MLB history.

Rapid Roundup

- Loretta Lynn dead at age 90; the national debt passed $31 trillion, a new record; he investigation into the disappearance of 19-year-old Dylan Rounds is now being considered a "possible homicide;" the SLC downtown Hilton has 40,000 bees on its roof - on purpose; Blair Jensen, a welding teacher in Riverton, won a $50,000 national teaching prize 👏 👏 ; Logan City School District votes to cover student lunches; OPEC plans to cut oil production to boost prices. I guess they aren't high enough yet.

The Hinckley Report, PBS Utah's weekly political roundtable, airs Fridays at 7PM. Hosted by Jason Perry and produced in partnership with the Hinckley Institute of Politics on the University of Utah campus, the program provides insight and analysis of the most pressing political issues facing our state.

Utah's educational gender gap

by Holly Richardson

New research and a resulting policy brief from the Utah Women and Leadership Project looked at Utah's educational achievement gender gap. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, women are earning more bachelor's degrees than men across the country, 20.6% to 19.8%. Our overall rates are higher in Utah, and nearly even between men and women, with 23.0% of Utah women earning a bachelor's degree and 22.6% of Utah men. Nationally, 12.4% of men are earning graduate degrees, while 13% of women earn graduate degrees. Utah inverts the national trend of women earning more graduate degrees than men, with only 9.3% of Utah women and 14.1% of Utah men earning graduate degrees.

It matters. In Utah, "at every educational level, men earn more than women who have achieved a higher level of education: men with a high school diploma earn more than women with an associate's degree, men with a bachelor's earn more than women with a graduate degree, and men's prospective postgraduate salaries are higher than women's." Education level and income are both tied to rates of domestic abuse in Utah — the higher the education level and/or the higher the income, the lower the reported rates of domestic abuse. News Releases

Gov. Cox appoints John Luthy to the Utah Court of Appeals

Utah Gov. Spencer J. Cox has appointed John D. Luthy to the Utah State Court of Appeals. Judicial appointments are subject to confirmation by the Utah Senate.

Luthy is a Cache Valley native and has been practicing law since 2003. Currently, Luthy serves as Cache County Attorney, overseeing criminal prosecution in Cache County. Prior to that, he served as chief civil deputy county attorney in Cache County and was an attorney in private practice at Peck Hadfield Baxter & Moore in Logan and Suitter Axland in Salt Lake City. In addition, Luthy taught legal research, analysis and writing and advanced legal writing at the University of South Carolina School of Law. (Read More)

Utah Senate requests public comment on Utah Court of Appeals nominee

The Utah Senate Judicial Confirmation Committee is seeking public comment on John D. Luthy, who Gov. Spencer J. Cox nominated to serve as a Utah State Court of Appeals judge.

Those who desire to comment should contact the Utah Senate Judicial Confirmation Committee electronically or by mail at the Office of Legislative Research and General Counsel by 4:00 p.m. Wednesday, October 19, 2022. Electronic comments can be emailed to senatejudicialnominees@le.utah.gov. Written comments can be mailed to the Utah Senate Judicial Confirmation Committee at the Utah State Capitol, Suite W210, PO Box 145210, Salt Lake City, Utah 84114-5210. Gov. Spencer J. Cox presents Award for Excellence to state employees

Twenty-three state employees were recipients of the Governor's Award for Excellence. Gov. Spencer J. Cox presented the awards during a ceremony Tuesday afternoon at the Kearns Mansion. The awards are an annual event designed to recognize the contributions of state employees in the categories of innovation and efficiency, energy and environment, heroism, leadership, and outstanding public service. The award recipients were selected as examples of distinguished service and dedication to the citizens of Utah.

The Governor's Award for Excellence was created in 2007 as a way to recognize the outstanding work of state employees and honor their achievements. (Read More)

Salt Lake County Mayor and Council pass joint resolution opposing gondola in favor of common-sense solutions

Salt Lake County Mayor Wilson and the County Council passed a joint resolution recommending that the Utah Department of Transportation (UDOT) eliminate the gondola from consideration and instead adopt the Common-Sense Solutions Approach, citing it as the more fiscally conservative and environmentally sound option.

Dozens of Salt Lake County residents spoke against the gondola at the Salt Lake County Council work meeting.

"Instead of constructing 23 sky-scraper-sized gondola towers that will devastate the majestic views of the canyon, UDOT should pursue common-sense solutions that invest in more practical, adaptable, and less invasive transportation strategies," said Salt Lake County Mayor Wilson. (Read More)

Owens backs legislation to make Republican tax cuts permanent

Rep. Burgess Owens (UT-04) co-sponsored the TCJA Permanency Act,legislation to make permanent tax cuts for individuals and small businesses originally enacted as part of the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act (TCJA) of 2017.

Without Congressional action, 23 different provisions of the 2017 Republican tax law are set to expire after 2025. According to the Tax Foundation, "most taxpayers will see a tax hike unless some or all provisions are extended." (Read More)

TODAY at 3 PM ET White House Call on the Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization Decision

Partners,

Today, the Supreme Court expressly took away a Constitutional right from the American people.

Join Administration officials for a call at 3pm ET TODAY to hear more about the Supreme Court's ruling and the fight ahead.

- DATE: TODAY, Friday 6/24/22
- TIME: 3pm ET
- REGISTRATION: https://pitc.zoomgov.com/webinar/register/WN_aiGU4ScyQwahxYLHRv2X0A

This call is closed to the press, and this invitation is non-transferable.

Earlier today, the President and Attorney General made clear that the Administration will defend a woman's bedrock right to travel from her home to a state that allows abortion. In addition, the President directed the Department of Health and Human Services to ensure critical abortion medications are available to the fullest extent possible.

President Biden Announces Actions In Light of Today's Supreme Court Decision on Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization

Today, President Biden announced actions that his Administration is taking to protect women who will face the grave consequences of today's Supreme Court decision. This decision expressly took away a Constitutional right from the American people that it had recognized for nearly 50 years – a woman's right to choose, free from government interference.

This decision will have devastating consequences in the lives of women around the country.

The President made clear that the only way to secure a woman's right to choose is for Congress to restore the protections of Roe as federal law. Until then, he has announced two actions the Administration is taking to protect women.

Protecting the Right to Seek Medical Care

As the Attorney General made clear, women must remain free to travel safely to another state to seek the care they need.

A person has the right to travel between states for whatever reason they want – it is no one else's business – especially the government's. If a woman lives in a state that restricts abortion, the Supreme Court's decision does not prevent her from traveling from her home to a state that allows it.

If any state or local official tries to interfere with women exercising this basic right, the Biden Administration will fight that deeply un-American attack.

Protecting Access to Medication

The President directed the Secretary of Health and Human Services to protect women's access to critical medications for reproductive health care that are approved by the Food and Drug Administration—including essential preventive health care like contraception and medication abortion.

More than 20 years ago, the FDA approved mifepristone to safely end an early pregnancy; this drug is also commonly used to treat miscarriages. The American Medical Association and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists wrote to President Biden and Vice President Harris, asking the federal government to protect access to this care. In the face of threats from state officials saying they will try to ban or severely restrict access to medication for reproductive health care, the President

Biden-Harris Administration Actions In Light of Today's Supreme Court Decision on Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization

President Biden
@POTUS
United States government official

Today is a very solemn moment for the United States.

The Supreme Court expressly took away a Constitutional right from the American people that it had already recognized. They simply took it away. That's never been done to a right that is so important to so many Americans.

Hello,

Thank you Dave. It's certainly a timely question. We had a meeting to discuss the agenda for Tuesday. Our main focus is to discuss whether ulipristal (Ella) emergency contraceptio be included in the oral contraceptive orders that were approved earlier. I believe it fits in the definition from Utah Code 26-64 or we could certainly discuss the possibility of includ separate protocol. Plan B is available without a prescription while ulipristal is prescription only. There are some advantages to ulipristal in that it can be taken up to 5-days after unprotected intercourse vs. 3-days for Plan B. There is some information that indicates ulipristal is a better option for pediatric patients but I'm not sure the specific reason.

I added Dr. Hoffman to the email (but I believe she is out of town) because the DOH was involved in creation of the current protocol.

Let me know if you believe there is more that the Board of Pharmacy should discuss regarding this topic.

Best,

Carrie

Thank you, Dave.

I am realizing that I have done a poor job of informing you that Jennifer has left DOPL and Lisa Martin was recently hired to take her place. Lisa is copied, as is Larry Marx. We sho have you meet her soon, as we should also do with Adam and the UPhA. I am sorry that we haven't yet done this. This is one of many areas where I can work to improve our training as for Lisa, she is excellent and has our full confidence.

As for the ruling, we have also been dealing with this matter today and this week with a couple of media and other requests. I am copying Margaret Busse and Deputy Director Jaco since your issue is another that I did not consider.

Below is included what we said to the media, as it related to those who perform abortions. My best guess is that similar principles would apply with pharmacists, not relating to gene liability, but licensing requirements:

Thank you for reaching out. From a professional licensing perspective, there is not a change expected based on the SCOTUS decision. According to state law, an a can only be performed when certain requirements are met, by a licensed physician, and at a licensed facility.

When physicians apply for a license, they are required to indicate whether they perform abortions and if so, where they are performed. In accordance with state law, information is shared with the Utah Department of Health and Human Services to aid in their licensing of facilities.

In terms of enforcement, the abortion statute is in the criminal code. UDOH is (and would still be) required to report any violation of state law to DOPL. However, the Division relies on the court system for a criminal conviction in order to decide what disciplinary action (if any) is necessary. Often, arrests are reported to us by law enforcement or prosecutors. In those cases, DOPL will work with the licensed professional on a limitation order, which would order the professional to cease certain professional practices pending the resolution of their criminal charge(s).

Thank you for raising this issue, Dave, both with us and the Board. You have always been a great partner in our work.

Please let us know if you have any questions. And let's set up a time for you to visit with Lisa soon.

I think the question my members have and would be interested in the BoP's opinion is…

Based on the current language contained in SB 174 (from the 2020 session) – which will now be triggered by the overruling of Roe v. Wade – Could a pharmacist / pharmacy be sub discipline from DOPL and/or criminal penalties if they dispense an abortifacient pursuant to a prescription written by a licensed physician. Drugs that induce an abortion are clearly covered by the statute but who will ultimately be responsible if a drug is given to an individual, who does not meet all of the requirement of the statute, is a bit ambiguous. I think clear that the physician would be "on the hook". I think it is less clear how a pharmacist / pharmacy would be handled. My thought is that if DOPL and the Board feel like there is so potential liability for pharmacists / pharmacies that our organization would work to clarify the statute to exempt pharmacists / pharmacies from liability provided they dispensed t as written by the physician.

I think a discussion with the board would be timely based on today's events. Let me know your thoughts.

Hello,

Thank you Dave. I'll ask for additional guidance from Mark, Margaret, or Deborah regarding how much authority the Board has to weigh in on the determination of whether a pharmacist/pharmacy could be subject to discipline from SB 174 or do we need to seek an official opinion from the AG.

To my untrained eye, so much depends on when we could attest to knowing that the administration of the abortifacient is "after implantation of a fertilized ovum".

(1) (a) "Abortion" means:
(i) the intentional termination or attempted termination of human pregnancy after implantation of a fertilized ovum through a medical procedure carried out by a physician or through a substance used under the direction of a physician;
(ii) the intentional killing or attempted killing of a live unborn child through a medical procedure carried out by a physician or through a substance used under the direction of a physician; or
(iii) the intentional causing or attempted causing of a miscarriage through a medical procedure carried out by a physician or through a substance used under the direction of a physician.

Best,

Carrie

I think the question my members have and would be interested in the BoP's opinion is…

Based on the current language contained in SB 174 (from the 2020 session) – which will now be triggered by the overruling of Roe v. Wade – Could a pharmacist / pharmacy be sub discipline from DOPL and/or criminal penalties if they dispense an abortifacient pursuant to a prescription written by a licensed physician. Drugs that induce an abortion are clearly covered by the statute but who will ultimately be responsible if a drug is given to an individual, who does not meet all of the requirement of the statute, is a bit ambiguous. I think clear that the physician would be "on the hook". I think it is less clear how a pharmacist / pharmacy would be handled. My thought is that if DOPL and the Board feel like there is so potential liability for pharmacists / pharmacies that our organization would work to clarify the statute to exempt pharmacists / pharmacies from liability provided they dispensed t as written by the physician.

I think a discussion with the board would be timely based on today's events. Let me know your thoughts.

Hello,

Thank you Dave. It's certainly a timely question. We had a meeting to discuss the agenda for Tuesday. Our main focus is to discuss whether ulipristal (Ella) emergency contraceptio be included in the oral contraceptive orders that were approved earlier. I believe it fits in the definition from Utah Code 26-64 or we could certainly discuss the possibility of includ separate protocol. Plan B is available without a prescription while ulipristal is prescription only. There are some advantages to ulipristal in that it can be taken up to 5-days after unprotected intercourse vs. 3-days for Plan B. There is some information that indicates ulipristal is a better option for pediatric patients but I'm not sure the specific reason.

I added Dr. Hoffman to the email (but I believe she is out of town) because the DOH was involved in creation of the current protocol.

Let me know if you believe there is more that the Board of Pharmacy should discuss regarding this topic.

Thank you, Dave.

as for Lisa, she is excellent and has our full confidence.

As for the ruling, we have also been dealing with this matter today and this week with a couple of media and other requests. I am copying Margaret Busse and Deputy Director Jaco since your issue is another that I did not consider.

Below is included what we said to the media, as it related to those who perform abortions. My best guess is that similar principles would apply with pharmacists, not relating to gene liability, but licensing requirements:

Thank you for reaching out. From a professional licensing perspective, there is not a change expected based on the SCOTUS decision. According to state law, an a can only be performed when certain requirements are met, by a licensed physician, and at a licensed facility.

When physicians apply for a license, they are required to indicate whether they perform abortions and if so, where they are performed. In accordance with state law, information is shared with the Utah Department of Health and Human Services to aid in their licensing of facilities.

In terms of enforcement, the abortion statute is in the criminal code. UDOH is (and would still be) required to report any violation of state law to DOPL. However, the Division relies on the court system for a criminal conviction in order to decide what disciplinary action (if any) is necessary. Often, arrests are reported to us by law enforcement or prosecutors. In those cases, DOPL will work with the licensed professional on a limitation order, which would order the professional to cease certain professional practices pending the resolution of their criminal charge(s).

Thank you for raising this issue, Dave, both with us and the Board. You have always been a great partner in our work.

Please let us know if you have any questions. And let's set up a time for you to visit with Lisa soon.

S.B. 174 Abortion Prohibition Amendments Now in Effect

SALT LAKE CITY – In accordance with state statute, the Legislative Branch's general counsel determined S.B. 174 Abortion Prohibition Amendments meets the legal requirements to take effect, following the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling regarding abortion.

In 2020, the Utah Legislature passed S.B. 174, prohibiting all elective abortions in Utah, except in rare circumstances involving rape, incest or medical emergency, contingent on the U.S. Supreme Court ruling.

On June 24, 2022, the U.S. Supreme Court issued a ruling that overturned Roe v. Wade, giving states the right to choose their abortion regulations. The U.S. Supreme Court's official opinion was sent to the Legislature's general counsel to determine if Utah's statute may take effect.

Members of the Legislative Management Committee (LMC) have been notified and the bill is now in effect. Utah code is updated to reflect the changes.

Attached is the official communication from the legislative general counsel informing LMC that the bill is in effect. The letter also addresses H.B. 166 (2019) Down Syndrome Nondiscrimination Abortion Act.

Our position is that we would only take action after someone is criminally convicted (including a plea, no contest, etc)

The reason is that Utah's abortion law is a criminal law, not a civil/administrative law. DOPL and the Board have no rule making authority to determine the elements of the crime. Prosecutors and defense attorneys will argue their points in front of a judge. Then DOPL will likely only consider the outcome of a criminal process.

I don't think that DOPL or the Board are in an appropriate position to opine on the applicability of criminal law to specific situations. When I read Dave's email, I didn't understand that the Board would be opining on the law, but simply hearing from concerned stakeholders about the issue generally and whether any licensing issues exist.

Is this your understanding? I want to ensure we listen to you and others and consider possible issues that we have not considered. Everyone is obviously experiencing the effects of change on a significant issue.

Mark

That's correct Mark. I am primarily wanting to see if the BoP sees any potential licensing issues and I also just generally think there are a bunch of really smart people on the BoP a would be curious if they think there is ambiguity in the current law.

Our position is that we would only take action after someone is criminally convicted (including a plea, no contest, etc)

The reason is that Utah's abortion law is a criminal law, not a civil/administrative law. DOPL and the Board have no rule making authority to determine the elements of the crime. Prosecutors and defense attorneys will argue their points in front of a judge. Then DOPL will likely only consider the outcome of a criminal process.

I don't think that DOPL or the Board are in an appropriate position to opine on the applicability of criminal law to specific situations. When I read Dave's email, I didn't understand Board would be opining on the law, but simply hearing from concerned stakeholders about the issue generally and whether any licensing issues exist.

Is this your understanding? I want to ensure we listen to you and others and consider possible issues that we have not considered. Everyone is obviously experiencing the effects o change on a significant issue.

Wade – Could a pharmacist / pharmacy be s to discipline from DOPL and/or criminal penalties if they dispense an abortifacient pursuant to a prescription written by a licensed physician. Drugs that induce an abortion are c covered by the statute but who will ultimately be responsible if a drug is given to an individual, who does not meet all of the requirement of the statute, is a bit ambiguous. I thi clear that the physician would be "on the hook". I think it is less clear how a pharmacist / pharmacy would be handled. My thought is that if DOPL and the Board feel like there is potential liability for pharmacists / pharmacies that our organization would work to clarify the statute to exempt pharmacists / pharmacies from liability provided they dispense drug as written by the physician.

Hello,

Thank you Dave. It's certainly a timely question. We had a meeting to discuss the agenda for Tuesday. Our main focus is to discuss whether ulipristal (Ella) emergency contracept could be included in the oral contraceptive orders that were approved earlier. I believe it fits in the definition from Utah Code 26-64 or we could certainly discuss the possibility including a separate protocol. Plan B is available without a prescription while ulipristal is prescription only. There are some advantages to ulipristal in that it can be taken up to 5 after unprotected intercourse vs. 3-days for Plan B. There is some information that indicates ulipristal is a better option for pediatric patients but I'm not sure the specific reason

I added Dr. Hoffman to the email (but I believe she is out of town) because the DOH was involved in creation of the current protocol.

Let me know if you believe there is more that the Board of Pharmacy should discuss regarding this topic.

Best,

Carrie

Thank you, Dave.

I am realizing that I have done a poor job of informing you that Jennifer has left DOPL and Lisa Martin was recently hired to take her place. Lisa is copied, as is Larry Marx. We s have you meet her soon, as we should also do with Adam and the UPhA. I am sorry that we haven't yet done this. This is one of many areas where I can work to improve our train But as for Lisa, she is excellent and has our full confidence.

As for the ruling, we have also been dealing with this matter today and this week with a couple of media and other requests. I am copying Margaret Busse and Deputy Director Ja Hart, since your issue is another that I did not consider.

Below is included what we said to the media, as it related to those who perform abortions. My best guess is that similar principles would apply with pharmacists, not relating to g liability, but licensing requirements:

Thank you for reaching out. From a professional licensing perspective, there is not a change expected based on the SCOTUS decision. According to state law, ar abortion can only be performed when certain requirements are met, by a licensed physician, and at a licensed facility.

When physicians apply for a license, they are required to indicate whether they perform abortions and if so, where they are performed. In accordance with state la information is shared with the Utah Department of Health and Human Services to aid in their licensing of facilities.

In terms of enforcement, the abortion statute is in the criminal code. UDOH is (and would still be) required to report any violation of state law to DOPL. However, t Division relies on the court system for a criminal conviction in order to decide what disciplinary action (if any) is necessary. Often, arrests are reported to us by law enforcement or prosecutors. In those cases, DOPL will work with the licensed professional on a limitation order, which would order the professional to cease certa professional practices pending the resolution of their criminal charge(s).

Thank you for raising this issue, Dave, both with us and the Board. You have always been a great partner in our work.

Please let us know if you have any questions. And let's set up a time for you to visit with Lisa soon.

Best,

While t was passed in 2020, it is only triggered once the Supreme Court (or the 10th Circuit COA) overturn Roe (well this just happened). I don't believe it was the intent of the Utah legislature to place liability on pharmacists / pharmacies but I do think the law, as drafted, is ambiguous. I am planning to be in attendance at the board meeting and ask you know I am never shy about offering my two cents. Thanks for all you both do to keep the board operating like a well oiled machine.

Team:

Today, the Supreme Court of the United States released a 213-page opinion overturning the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision. With its opinion today, the Supreme Cou says that there is no longer a fundamental right to abortion. Decisions about what is and isn't allowed is now up to the states.

Quoting from the intro to the opinion: Abortion presents a profound moral issue on which Americans hold sharply conflicting views. Some believe fervently that a huma person comes into being at conception and that abortion ends an innocent life. Others feel just as strongly that any regulation of abortion invades a woman's right to control her own body and prevents women from achieving full equality. Still others in a third group think that abortion should be allowed under some but not all circumstances, and those within this group hold a variety of views about the particular restrictions that should be imposed.

Abortion is by no means a simple issue. Please remember that your co-workers have a range of feelings and personal opinions about this. We need to be extra cautious in the workplace about expressing our personal opinions because there are differing beliefs. As a reminder, you may not use official state resources to express personal views on this decision.
Please be extra sensitive to the thoughts of others, including co-workers. We will continue to monitor employee and building safety.

In official capacities, if you are contacted about the law by partners or the public, please direct inquiries to DHHS@utah.gov. Until we can provide further clarification, please do not engage with the general public about how the law is going to be interpreted.

We are continuing to analyze the potential impacts from the Supreme Court's decision.

Here are the facts we know right now as they pertain to Utah and the Utah Department of Health and Human Services:

- In the 2020 General Session, the Utah Legislature passed SB 174, which we were notified this evening, is now in effect, following a report from legislative general counse to the Legislative Management Committee.
  The bill lists some specific responsibilities of DHHS.

And now... the rest of this fabulous, and very late, email!

- Thank you to the 530+ of you who tuned in live to our All Hands Q&A on Thursday. If you missed it, you can watch the replay here.

- This week, we'd also like to make your acquaintance with the Office of Recovery Services, led by the trusty Liesa Stockdale. You might know them as the "child support office," b that's not all they do: https://youtu.be/Q2imWsc7btk

- Martha is on the move!

  We are so excited to host a traveling exhibit on Dr. Martha Hughes Cannon at our MASOB and Cannon Health buildings over the next 2 weeks. The exhibit starts this Friday, June 24, through June 30. Then, the exhibit will be moved to the Cannon Health building on July 1, which also happens to be the 165th anniversary of Dr. Cannon's birth AND our new agency's birthday!

  The exhibit will be at the Cannon building until July 8. We will also be holding a media event honoring the life of Dr. Cannon and celebrating the birth of our new agency on July 1 at the Utah Capitol. We are thrilled to begin this new journey with each of you and honor those who have come before us.

- Nate Checketts… thank you!

  With the upcoming merger, comes a handful of leadership changes, including a new role for Utah Department of Health Executive Director Nate Checketts. Under DHHS, Nate wil become a department deputy director over our Health Administration section. Recently, Gov. Cox and Lt. Gov. Henderson, recognized Nate for his work to lead the pandemic response while maintaining effective leadership to oversee the management of the Department of Health's responsibilities. They said he is a model public servant reflecting the values of humility, selflessness and steady leadership. Nate is pictured here with his wife, Ginger.

- Congratulations are also in order to Caitlyn Jasumback and Rachelle Boulton! Both were recognized at the Council of State and Territorial Epidemiologists conference. Caitlyn w a finalist for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Award for Outstanding Epidemiology Practice in Addressing Racial and Ethnic Disparities for her work "Does Discrimination Influence Prevention Healthcare Among Under Served Population?" Rachelle was awarded CSTE's Distinguished Leader Award. This is a huge honor for both of them!! People from around the nation are envious of our data systems and informatics

- Mental and physical health

  During our all-hands call and during Gov. Cox's employee town hall this week, we received questions about the leave hours that are available for taking care of our mental health. Please take advantage of these benefits.

  As of Jan. 1, 2022, Gov. Cox granted 4 hours of admin leave to address mental health issues, to be used during the calendar year.

  Starting July 1, our department will make 4 hours available for the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 2023.

  We have also worked with Blomquist Hale to hire an individual who can be available to be a mental health resource.

  Keep in mind that you may also use 4 hours of leave for wellness and health checkups. Please talk to your supervisor before using this leave.

  Tracy also reminded us that we can use any accumulated sick leave for mental or physical health time off.

- ECO Passes
  We're conscious of the cost of fuel. We make UTA ECO Passes available for free to all employees. If you apply, you need to use them at least 15 times per quarter. Please contact your finance officer to sign up. Please see our FAQ document to get started:ECO Pass FAQs

P.S.
Tracy's Open Door hours are most Fridays, for all staff from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. Please reach out to Trudy Ellis (trudyellis@utah.gov) to request time on Tracy's schedule.

Today I'm handing The Morning to my colleagues to break down the Supreme Court decision striking down Roe v. Wade. I'll be back next Saturday. — Melissa Kirsch

By Ian Prasad Philbrick

Good morning. The Supreme Court's abortion ruling will transform American life and politics.

Anti-abortion advocates celebrate outside the Supreme Court yesterday. Shuran Huang for The New York Times

‘No such right’

The Supreme Court has overturned the constitutional right to an abortion in America.

The court’s decision issued yesterday is the culmination of a generational conservative campaign to strike down Roe v. Wade, the 1973 Supreme Court ruling that established abortion rights. The three conservative justices whom Donald Trump appointed to the court supplied the votes to finally do so.

“The Constitution makes no reference to abortion, and no such right is implicitly protected by any constitutional provision,” Justice Samuel Alito wrote for the majority.

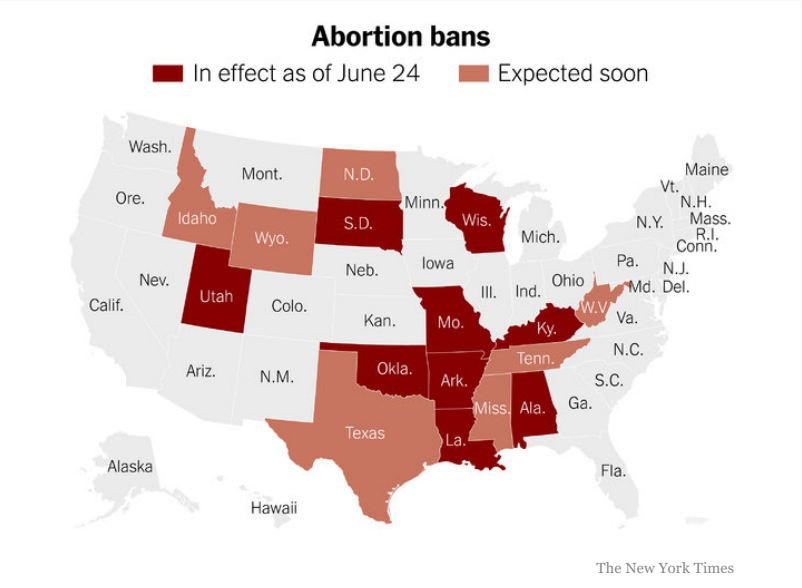
Roe’s fall is a political and social earthquake, one that Americans alternately celebrated and mourned. “I cannot think of a precedent for this in our modern history, where you have an individual civil right that people depend on that has been rolled back after 50 years,” said my colleague Emily Bazelon, who writes about abortion access and the court.

Yesterday’s ruling won’t end the abortion debate, but it will fundamentally alter it. Today’s newsletter explains what the decision means, and what may follow.

Immediate impact

The ruling promptly shifted the political fight over abortion to the state level. That was, Alito wrote, one of the court’s aims: “The authority to regulate abortion must be returned to the people and their elected representatives.” (Here’s an annotated version of the ruling, which largely tracked the draft that leaked to Politico last month.)

Roe’s fall immediately triggered abortion bans in Kentucky, Louisiana and South Dakota. Missouri, Arkansas and other states did the same within hours. In total, more than 20 states appear set to outlaw all or nearly all abortions. (This tracker shows the status of abortion access in all 50 states.)



The New York Times

For the roughly half of Americans who live in those states, getting an abortion will become even more difficult. For women in Mississippi, for example, Illinois may become the closest state in which to legally obtain one.

More liberal states began moving in the opposite direction. In Massachusetts, Gov. Charlie Baker, a moderate Republican, signed an executive order protecting medical providers who perform abortions for out-of-state residents. The Democratic governors of California, Oregon and Washington issued a joint statement promising to protect access to abortion and contraception.

The ruling may have a less dramatic effect on overall abortion rates. Some experts estimate that overturning Roe could reduce the number of legal abortions in the U.S. by as little as 13 percent. That's because abortion was already heavily restricted in red states and more people living in them oppose the practice, as The Times's Claire Cain Miller and Margot Sanger-Katz have explained.

But Roe's fall will likely reduce abortion access most for lower-income women and Black and Hispanic women, many of whom lack the resources to travel out of state to obtain one.

The next fronts

The ruling is also likely to send the abortion debate into new territory. "There are all these knock-on ramifications, which we don't know the answer to yet," Emily said.

One is the question of medical abortion pills. About half of legal abortions in the U.S. occur by medication, which is generally safe and effective, rather than a surgical procedure. Texas and Louisiana have made it a crime to mail the pills in the states, and other states could follow. "Then the question is, what kind of penalties are they imposing, and how are they going to enforce that law?" Emily said. "Do they want to open people's mail and start surveilling people?"

Abortion rights supporters in Knoxville, Tenn., yesterday. Jessica Tezak for The New York Times

States that ban abortion could also seek to punish medical providers in other states who perform abortions for women who live in states where abortion is illegal, or who instruct patients remotely about how to obtain or take abortion pills. President Biden said that his administration would act to protect access to the pills, which the F.D.A. regulates, and to protect women who want to travel to get an abortion.

The ruling could also reverberate to other precedents grounded in the same right to privacy that reinforced Roe. Though Alito cautioned that the ruling should not be seen as going beyond abortion, one justice in the majority — Clarence Thomas — wrote separately that the court should also overturn protections on access to contraception, same-sex relations and same-sex marriage.

"We have no idea how many votes there are for that," Emily said. "Thomas was the only one ready to come out and say it today, but that doesn't mean there aren't five votes."

A 6-to-3 Ruling Ends 50 Years of Federal Abortion Rights

CULTURE CALENDAR

By Gilbert Cruz
Culture Editor

📺 "Only Murders in the Building" (Tuesday): One of last fall's joys was the first season of this hit Hulu mystery-comedy, which starred Steve Martin, Martin Short and Selena Gomez as residents of a fancy Manhattan apartment building who start a true-crime podcast in an attempt to solve a neighbor's murder. The trio's chemistry was delightful and the supporting cast (Tina Fey, Nathan Lane) equally star-studded. I'm delighted that Season 2 is here just in time for summer.

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Dane Tashima for The New York Times. Food Stylist: Barrett Washburne.

By Tejal Rao

Edna Lewis's Peach Cobbler

A summer run-in with perfectly ripe, still-somewhat-firm peaches is reason enough to make this juicy peach cobbler from Edna Lewis. The key to its crust, particularly if you're baking in a hot kitchen, is freezing the fat you choose to work with, whether it's lard or vegetable shortening, and chilling the dough between steps. Save the trimmings: Tucking dough scraps into the mix of ripe peaches and grated nutmeg means the fruit thickens and takes on more flavor as it bubbles in the oven. I happen to think it's best once it's cooled to room temperature, but it's almost impossible to wait that long.

Tejal Rao writes the Veggie newsletter. A selection of New York Times recipes is available to all readers. Please consider a Cooking subscription for full access.

REAL ESTATE

What you get for $625,000: a Tudor Revival in Portland, Ore.; a bungalow in Baton Rouge, La.; or a two-family home in Savannah, Ga.

The hunt: She wanted a West Village rental. Which one did she choose? Play our game.

The rental market: Renters are facing the return of evictions, soaring inflation and record-high rents. Some couples are moving in together to split the costs. Does living in New York mean renting forever? Even some homeowners are renting now, selling before the market cools but waiting to buy again.

LIVING

Vue Orleans offers tech-forward presentations of history and culture. Sara Essex Bradley for The New York Times

What's nouveau?: A Mexican tasting menu, a "tropical roadhouse" and a Four Seasons hotel are among the new attractions in New Orleans.

All about aroids: Fans of Monstera and Philodendron are getting to know other plants in the Arum family.

Wash your hands: Yes, there are germs in public restrooms, but there are simple ways to protect yourself.

Chillable reds: White wines and rosés aren't the only options when it's hot.

GAME OF THE WEEKEND

Los Angeles Dodgers vs. Atlanta Braves, M.L.B.: Two of the best teams in the National League meet this weekend. The Dodgers, a perennial World Series contender, have slipped in recent weeks, while the Braves went on a 14-game winning streak. Freddie Freeman, the Dodgers' new first baseman, spent 12 years with the Braves and led them to a World Series win last year. This will be his first time back in Atlanta. 7 p.m. Eastern tomorrow on ESPN.

For more

- The Dodgers lost most of their elite pitching rotation from last season. They're just as good this year.
- For fans of New York's teams, this season has the potential to be the best ever.

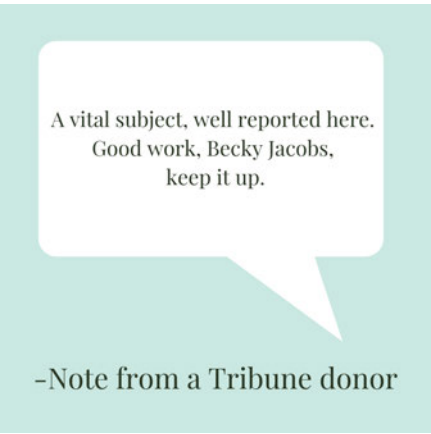
This week's Supreme Court decision to overturn Roe v. Wade put policies made at the state level in hyperfocus.

The Tribune had you covered on Friday, from what happened at the state capitol to how faith leaders in Utah responded to which rights women in Utah now have and do not have.

The Salt Lake Tribune is providing free access to critical stories about abortion as a resource.

In the weeks ahead, we'll focus on helping you understand how a woman in Utah can receive an abortion that is legal, on potential recruiting ramifications for businesses in need of tech sector employees and on who our state supreme court judges are, as their influence continues to grow in the wake of recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

We'll continue to elevate perspectives of Utah women, sharing stories that many find comfort and inspiration in.



The Tribune is fortunate to have reporter Becky Jacobs, who focuses on women's issues in Utah, on our team. And we know this decision is important to many people. We will continue reporting on how decisions made by public officials impact Utahns.

The Morning

June 26, 2022

By Ian Prasad Philbrick

Good morning. For many people on Capitol Hill, the Jan. 6 hearings are personal.

Rioters storm the Capitol during the Jan. 6 attack. Erin Schaff/The New York Times

In the room

The House Jan. 6 committee's hearings have revealed unseen footage, unheard testimony and new details about Donald Trump's efforts to overturn the 2020 presidential election. They've also stirred painful memories for those who experienced the attack firsthand. I asked my colleague Emily Cochrane, who's covered Congress since 2018 and was inside the Capitol on Jan. 6, about how the hearings have landed.

How did Jan. 6 change Capitol Hill?

The Capitol is like a little city. It doesn't matter if you're a lawmaker, a staff member, a police officer, a reporter, someone who works in the cafeteria or the person who delivers the mail: You end up spending a good portion of your life there. And to see it breached in that manner, to see this mob come in, to see the violence, to see them disrespect a place you've come to respect, is difficult. A lot of people are wrestling with that as these hearings go on, publicly and privately.

How do these hearings differ from others you've covered?

Obviously, the substance is extraordinary. But they're also produced in a way that congressional hearings normally aren't: the videos, the tightly worded statements, the teasers of what's to come. They're structured like television episodes.

They also present much more of a seamless narrative because the Republicans aren't participating, with the exception of two handpicked by Speaker Nancy Pelosi. Most congressional hearings are so polarized, with questions designed to tease out political points rather than information. Here, there's none of that partisan bickering. They're just dropping new information and speeding right along.

Emily Cochrane, front, in glasses, and other reporters interview Senator John Cornyn of Texas at the Capitol. Jason Andrew for The New York Times

We've all seen big congressional hearings on TV. What's it like to be in the room?

The hearings are generally somber. The videos of the attack were hard to watch during the first hearing, particularly for people who were in the House chamber on Jan. 6. The hearing I attended, about the behind-the-scenes efforts to tell Trump he'd lost the election, wasn't as visceral, but when Liz Cheney made the reference to "an apparently inebriated Rudy Giuliani," there was some chuckling.

During breaks, particularly after emotional testimony, people who are in the back watching often make a point of thanking the witnesses and checking in with each other.

Who's been there watching?

Lawmakers, police officers, aides, people who want to witness history, essentially, or who experienced the riot personally. The House chaplain has been there regularly. There's the "Gallery Group" — they're Democratic House members who were trapped in the upper gallery of the House chamber during the attack. At least a couple have been at every hearing. Their presence is a reminder of how personal this is.

You hid with them during the attack, right?

I was on the opposite side of the chamber. At one point, I was behind a chair with other reporters because they had stopped the evacuation, and I wasn't sure if the chamber was going to be breached. We could see rioters on the other side of the door.

Eventually, Capitol Police resumed the evacuation. I'm still not sure why — I think they felt they had stopped enough rioters for lawmakers to leave safely — but all of a sudden, the people in front of me started moving again, climbing over chairs and banisters, so I did the same.

We were eventually able to leave the chamber, and, as we did, we merged into one evacuation line with the lawmakers across from us.

It must be difficult to watch videos and hear testimony that dredge up memories of the attack.

The hearings are bringing many people back to the rawness of the day. People have found coping mechanisms — they've talked to therapists, they've checked in with others. The Gallery Group lawmakers stay in touch. An informal Capitol Hill support group started meeting more frequently. I've had people ask me how I'm doing, and I've reached out to a couple others. These aren't the easiest hearings to cover, but then you compartmentalize and do your job.

You and your colleagues have written about how the attack prompted a spike in threats against lawmakers, led some congressional staffers to quit and caused others to push for a union. How did it bring about these big changes?

Capitol Hill has never been an easy place to work. It's unpredictable. The hours are long. The workload is intense. When you layer on the pandemic, the mad dash to get legislation through and everything that happened on the 6th, they all put the jobs in perspective for lawmakers and their aides. For them, there are now questions like, do you want to stay on Capitol Hill where you had this traumatic experience? Can you work with the Republicans in Congress who have downplayed what happened that day?

Congressional staffers keep Capitol Hill running. When someone picks up a phone to threaten a lawmaker, the person on the other end is not the lawmaker. It's a staff member, probably a junior staff member, sitting on the phone, listening to threats and reporting them to police. It's not a part of the job you sign up for. Unionization has been batted around for a while, but Jan. 6 helped push it to the forefront. People are more open to it.

President Biden Signs the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act into Law

Yesterday, President Biden signed into law the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act, historic legislation that will reduce gun violence and save lives.

The President has worked on this issue his entire career, and knows both how hard it is and what it takes – he was there 30 years ago, the last time this country passed meaningful gun safety laws.

We have lost too many to gun violence. When the President traveled to Uvalde, he heard a clear message: do something. Yesterday, we did.

[redacted]

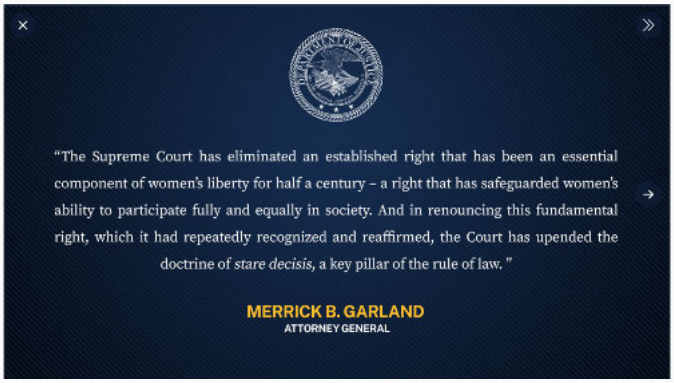
This bill doesn't do everything the President wanted want it to, but it does include actions he has long called for and that will save lives:

- It funds crisis intervention, including red flag laws to keep guns out of the hands of people who are a danger to themselves and to others.
- It finally closes what's known as the "boyfriend loophole," so if you assault your girlfriend or boyfriend you can't buy or own a gun.
- It requires young people aged 18-21 to undergo enhanced background checks.
- It includes the first federal law that makes gun trafficking and straw purchases distinct federal crimes.
- It clarifies who needs to register as a federally licensed gun dealer and run background checks before selling a gun.
- And it provides historic funding to address the youth mental health crisis in this country, especially the trauma experienced by survivors of gun violence.
- And it invests in anti-violence programs to work directly with people who are most likely to commit gun crimes or become victims of gun crimes.

At a time when it seems impossible to get anything done in Washington, bipartisan lawmakers and President Biden delivered for the American people.

And the President believes that if we can reach a compromise on guns, we ought to be able to reach compromise on other critical issues, from veteran's health care to cutting-edge American innovation and more.

Remarks on the Supreme Court Decision to Overturn Roe v. Wade



The Supreme Court expressly took away a Constitutional right from the American people. New extreme state laws will jeopardize the health of millions of women without exceptions for rape or incest.

The President and his administration will use its lawful powers to protect women's right to travel and access medication.

The Supreme Court of the United States expressly took away a Constitutional right from the American people that it had already recognized. It's never been done. And as a result, the health and lives of women are now at risk. The Administration will use its lawful power, but Congress must act. And the American people can have the final word and act with their vote.

President Biden Calls for a Three-Month Federal Gas Tax Holiday

The price of gas is up dramatically around the world, and by almost $2 per gallon in America, since Putin began amassing troops on the border of Ukraine. President Biden understands that high gas prices pose a significant challenge for working families. That's why he has taken action in recent months to boost the supply of oil and gas, including an historic release from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, and encouraging oil companies and refiners to boost capacity and output to get more supply on the market.

President Biden has called on Congress and states to take additional legislative action to provide direct relief to American consumers who have been hit with Putin's Price Hike. Specifically, he is calling on Congress to suspend the federal gas tax for three months, through September, without taking any money away from the Highway Trust Fund. And he is calling on states to take similar action to provide some direct relief, whether suspending their own gas taxes or helping consumers in other ways.

Federal Gas Tax Holiday

Right now, the federal government charges an 18 cent tax per gallon of gasoline and a 24 cent tax per gallon of diesel. Those taxes fund critical highways and public transportation, through the Highway Trust Fund. But in this unique moment, with gas prices near $5 a gallon on average across the country, President Biden is calling on Congress to suspend the gas tax for three months – until the end of September – to give Americans a little extra breathing room as they deal with the effects of Putin's war in Ukraine.

The President is also calling on Congress to make sure that a gas tax holiday has no negative effect on the Highway Trust Fund. With our deficit already down by a historic $1.6 trillion this year, the President believes that we can afford to suspend the gas tax to help consumers while using other revenues to make the Highway Trust Fund whole for the roughly $10 billion cost. This is consistent with legislation proposed in the Senate and the House to advance a responsible gas tax holiday.

President Biden understands that a gas tax holiday alone will not, on its own, relieve the run up in costs that we've seen. But the President believes that at this unique moment when the war in Ukraine is imposing costs on American families, Congress should do what it can to provide working families breathing room.

State and Local Action

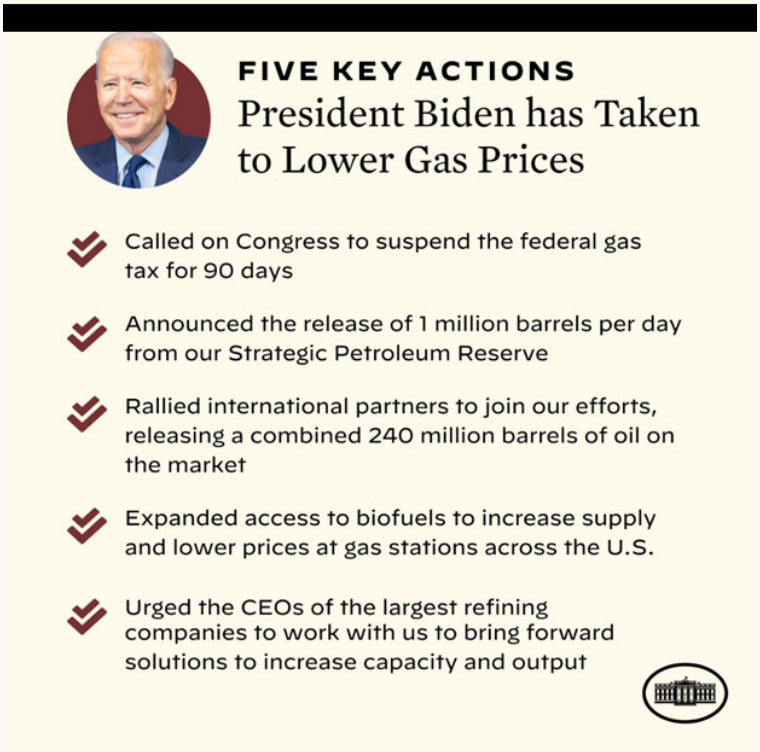
In addition to federal gas tax relief, the President is calling on state and local governments to provide additional consumer relief. Already, some states and local governments have acted: for example, in Connecticut and New York, governors temporarily suspended their gas taxes, and in Illinois and Colorado, governors delayed planned tax and fee increases. And, around the country, in states like Michigan and Minnesota, states and local leaders are considering a number of forms of consumer relief – from temporary suspensions and pauses on state sales tax on gas to consumer rebates and relief payments. The President believes more states and local governments should do so.

Ongoing Actions to Blunt the Impact of the Putin Price Hike

These announcements follow a series of actions the President has taken to lower gas prices for American families.

- The President announced the release of a record 1 million barrels per day from our Strategic Petroleum Reserve, which just last week a leading oil market analyst confirmed has been critical to keeping prices from rising even more.
- He rallied international partners to join us, releasing a combined 240 million barrels of oil on the market.
- He expanded access to biofuels like E15—gasoline that uses a 15 percent ethanol blend—to increase supply and lower prices at thousands of gas stations across the country.
- He and his Administration are engaging with oil and refining companies to ask them to work with the Administration to bring forward concrete solutions that increase refinery capacity and output. Secretary Granholm is meeting with these CEOs this week.

Already, the United States produced more oil under the first year of this Administration than it did under the first two years of the prior Administration, and is on track to set new records next year. At the same time, the President understands that our efforts to increase energy production in the near-term must be coupled with medium- and long-term efforts to transition our economy away from fossil fuels produced by autocrats and to clean energy.



Biden Administration Launches New Federal-State Offshore Wind Partnership to Grow American-Made Clean Energy

This week, the White House joined with eleven governors from up and down the East Coast to launch a new Federal-State Offshore Wind Implementation Partnership that will accelerate the growing offshore wind industry. The partnership will support efforts to provide Americans with cleaner and cheaper energy, create good-paying jobs, and make historic investments in new American energy supply chains, manufacturing, shipbuilding, and servicing.

As a first step of this Partnership, the White House and governors are announcing commitments to collaborate on expanding key elements of the offshore wind supply chain, from manufacturing facilities to port capabilities to workforce development. The Administration is also announcing steps to advance a National Offshore Wind Supply Chain Roadmap and designating offshore wind vessels as Vessels of National Interest to facilitate more offshore wind construction.

After years of Americans facing energy uncertainty, President Biden has taken decisive action to jumpstart the American offshore wind industry. He set a bold goal of deploying 30 gigawatts (GW) of offshore wind by 2030, enough to power 10 million homes with clean energy, support 77,000 jobs, and spur $12 billion per year in private investment in offshore wind projects. Since then, the Biden Administration has approved the first large-scale projects, established new wind energy areas, and held record-breaking wind auctions—signature achievements that advance the President's commitment to tackle the climate crisis and strengthen American energy security.

These bold actions have unleashed historic private sector investments to expand an American-made wind energy supply chain. In 2021 alone, investors announced $2.2 billion in new funding, including commitments to develop nine major manufacturing facilities to produce the foundations, towers, cables, and blades of offshore wind turbines. Supplier contracts to provide materials and services to offshore wind projects more than doubled. And historic project labor agreements are helping to grow a diverse union workforce and support training programs.

More opportunities are ahead, including an estimated $109 billion revenue opportunity across the offshore wind supply chain this decade, and East Coast Governors are laying the groundwork to seize them. Having already set commitments to procure nearly 40 GW of offshore wind, these states are providing a strong demand signal for clean energy that will lower energy costs for American families while protecting them from volatile fossil fuel price spikes. Collaboration between state and federal governments already is helping to create good-paying jobs and establish a durable domestic supply chain to facilitate the responsible development of America's world-class offshore wind resource. The Biden-Harris Administration is committed to further partnering with states to maximize benefits to American workers and communities.

Biden-Harris Adminsitration Announces New Part Raises & Supports for Wildland Firefighter Workforce From Bipartisan Infrastructure Law

Our nation's wildland firefighters safeguard vital benefits for communities across the nation: protecting our nation's critical infrastructure, defending lives and private property from the risk of catastrophic wildfire, preserving forests so they can help us combat climate change, and protecting landscapes that contain cultural and natural resources of significance and value to Tribes, provide habitat to fish and wildlife, and serve as a source of drinking water for more than 60 million people. Investing in our wildland firefighting workforce is a matter of national security as there are more than 460 million acres of land at moderate to very high risk from wildfire this year, and the number of acres burned in 2021 is the highest on record.

For decades, Federal wildland firefighters have faced the challenges of longer, more severe fire years with pay that has lagged behind their counterparts. Shifting development patterns, land and fire management decisions, and climate change have turned fire "seasons" into fire "years" in which increasingly destructive fires are exceeding available Federal firefighting resources. Federal firefighters also lack an official, uniform occupational series and a clear path for career advancement through the Federal government.

The Biden-Harris Administration has announced a series of bold steps to increase pay, create new mental wellness and health supports, and establish a new wildland fire management job series for federal firefighters. These unprecedented actions on behalf of the wildland firefighter workforce are funded by $600 million from President Biden's Bipartisan Infrastructure Law. These measures are a significant step forward that will deliver an immediate, temporary pay raise to Federal wildland firefighters across the nation, and sets Federal agencies on a path to continue working with stakeholders towards an updated, competitive, and equitable pay structure, along with a support system that will address the many challenges that have plagued our wildland firefighter workforce for decades.

INCREASING PAY

Under President Biden's 2021 initiatives to support federal wildland firefighters and ensure they receive a minimum of $15 per hour, more than 11,300 firefighters received pay increases last year at a cost of $24.3 million. This increase in the minimum wage was a critical first step for the dignity and respect of all Federal employees. Over the coming summer months, the Administration is implementing a new set of temporary pay increases that will put retroactive pay (from October 1, 2021) into wildland firefighter pockets increasing their bi-weekly pay, up to the lesser of $20,000 or 50% of their annual base salary through September 2023. The Federal agencies will begin processing these payments in the coming weeks, with additional payments to occur throughout July and into August. The $600 million in the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law serves as a bridge for two years as the Administration works with Congress on longer-term reforms.

CREATING NEW SUPPORTS FOR FIREFIGHTERS

During a visit to the National Interagency Fire Center (NIFC) last week, Secretary of the Interior Deb Haaland announced the establishment of an interagency wildland firefighter health and wellbeing program. Wildland firefighters work in incredibly stressful environments that can take a significant toll on their overall health and wellbeing, as well as on those who love them. Standing up a targeted interagency effort to provide trauma-informed mental health care is critical. The Bipartisan Infrastructure Law directs the Departments of the Interior (DOI) and Agriculture (USDA) to increase focus on wildland firefighters' physical and mental wellbeing. The newly established joint DOI- U.S. Forest Service program will address mental health needs, including post-traumatic stress disorder care for permanent, temporary, seasonal and year-round wildland firefighters at both agencies, along with addressing environmental hazards to minimize on-the-job exposure for wildland firefighters. The joint program will also connect existing efforts and establish year-round prevention and mental health training for wildland firefighters and create critical incident stress management staffing response.

The Forest Service along with each of DOI's wildland fire management bureaus — the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Bureau of Land Management, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and National Park Service — will also add staffing capacity specifically to focus on mental health and employee support efforts for firefighters.

The Bipartisan Infrastructure Law also provides increased support to the Joint Fire Science Program, an interagency partnership with USDA's U.S. Forest Service that funds wildfire science research projects. A total of $3.1 million will be used to support research towards a better understanding of firefighter mental health, landscape resiliency, and other climate-related studies on the beneficial uses of prescribed fire, carbon storage, and greenhouse gas and smoke emissions.

IMPROVING RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION

Because the pay increase under the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law is temporary, the Biden-Harris Administration supports a new firefighter pay structure that is both sufficiently competitive and equitable to address longstanding nationwide recruitment and retention challenges and consider the longer work shifts, pressures and risks associated with these jobs. The Administration is committed to working with Congress to secure much needed investments and to grow this critical workforce. The costs in firefighter turnover brought about by not having an adequately compensated and supported firefighting workforce will far exceed the amount needed to invest in them.

ESTABLISHING NEW WILDLAND FIRE MANAGEMENT OCCUPATIONAL SERIES

The U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has taken the necessary step of creating the Wildland Fire Management occupational series established under the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law. No such series has existed for 50 years. The new occupational series better identifies Federal firefighters with the work they do. It defines the duties of wildland firefighters and is responsive to the calls of firefighters and their unions to provide opportunities for career advancement. It also gives a boost to recruiting, as agencies can now post clear job opportunity announcements that specifically target people interested in wildland firefighting jobs. And it will help with retention, as our wildland firefighter workforce will benefit from a clear career path with detailed requirements for advancement, providing wildland firefighters with a job title and description that more accurately reflects their contributions.

Agencies will implement the new series in the coming months, though current Federal firefighters will be able to choose whether to opt-in to the new Wildland Fire Management series or stay in their current occupations. Once fully implemented, the series will provide a solid foundation for recruitment and retention, further strengthening our wildland firefighter workforce and contributing to the fire safety of communities across our Nation.

President Biden's Maternal Health Blueprint Delivers for Women, Mothers, and Families

On Friday, the White House released the Biden-Harris Administration's Blueprint for Addressing the Maternal Health Crisis, a whole-of-government approach to combatting maternal mortality and morbidity. For far too many mothers, complications related to pregnancy, childbirth, and postpartum can lead to devastating health outcomes — including hundreds of deaths each year. This maternal health crisis is particularly devastating for Black women, Native women, and women in rural communities who all experience maternal mortality and morbidity at significantly higher rates than their white and urban counterparts.

Under President Biden and Vice President Harris's leadership, this Administration is now taking the next step towards a future where the United States will be the best country in the world to have a baby. The Biden-Harris Administration is committed to cutting the rates of maternal mortality and morbidity, reducing the disparities in maternal health outcomes, and improving the overall experience during and after pregnancy for people across the country. This commitment will require bold, unprecedented action through a whole-of-government strategy.

To start, the Administration is calling on Congress to improve and expand coverage by closing the Medicaid coverage gap and requiring continuous Medicaid coverage for 12 months postpartum, as well as making the significant investments included in the President's FY23 budget to reduce maternal morbidity and mortality.

The Administration also recognizes that addressing the maternal health crisis in the United States requires immediate action. That is why, in addition to urging Congressional action, the White House has mobilized over a dozen federal agencies to develop the White House Blueprint for Addressing the Maternal Health Crisis. The Blueprint outlines five priorities to improve maternal health and outcomes in the United States:

• Increasing access to and coverage of comprehensive high-quality maternal health services, including behavioral health services.
• Ensuring women giving birth are heard and are decisionmakers in accountable systems of care.
• Advancing data collection, standardization, harmonization, transparency, and research
• Expanding and diversifying the perinatal workforce.

• Strengthening economic and social supports for people before, during, and after pregnancy.

Title IX 50th Anniversary

Statement by President Joe Biden on the 50th Anniversary of Title IX

"Over the last fifty years, our nation has made monumental progress in advancing equity and equality for all students, including by narrowing gender gaps in sports, expanding opportunities in science and technology fields, and protecting students from sex discrimination, including sex-based harassment and sexual violence.

This is what America is all about: possibilities. Millions of women and girls have benefited from the change that Title IX helped make possible. More women and girls are participating and excelling in countless fields—from professional sports, to science, math, and technology than ever before. Their leadership, achievements, and success bear out the legacy of countless women throughout history who fought hard for a place at the table and for equal opportunity in all fields.

Yet there is more work to do. As we look to the next fifty years, I am committed to protecting this progress and working to achieve full equality, inclusion, and dignity for women and girls, LGBTQI+ Americans, all students, and all Americans.

My Administration will continue to fight tirelessly to realize the promise of Title IX—that every person deserves an opportunity to pursue their education free from discrimination and realize their full potential."

U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) Announces Notice of Funding Opportunity to Address Unsheltered Homelessness

The Biden Administration through the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) released a first-of-its-kind package of resources to address unsheltered homelessness and homeless encampments, including funds set aside specifically to address homelessness in rural communities.

The $365 million package includes grant funds along with additional vouchers that will enhance communities' capacity to humanely and effectively address unsheltered homelessness by connecting vulnerable individuals and families to housing, health care, and supportive services. This Initiative for Unsheltered and Rural Homelessness being made available by HUD strongly promotes partnerships with health care organizations, public housing authorities and mainstream housing providers, and people with lived experience and expertise of homelessness.

Specifically, the package includes:

- $322 million in Continuum of Care Program grants through a Special Notice of Funding Opportunity to fund homeless outreach, permanent housing, supportive services, and other costs as part of a comprehensive community approach to solve unsheltered homelessness, including a set-aside of $54.5 million specifically for rural communities. These grants will fund projects for three-years, after which they will be eligible for renewal through the annual Continuum of Care program competition.
- $43 million to fund approximately 4,000 new incremental vouchers will be allocated via a separate notice to public housing authorities with a priority to those that are partners in comprehensive community approaches to solve homelessness. These vouchers can serve households experiencing or at-risk of homelessness; those fleeing or attempting to flee domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking; and veterans and families that include a veteran family member that meets one of the proceeding criteria. Congress has provided HUD with waiver authorities to facilitate lease-up for vulnerable households.

The Morning

June 27, 2022

SUPPORTED BY Airtable

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. After abortion, how is the Supreme Court likely to change American society next?

The impatient, ambitious five

Protesting for abortion rights in Brooklyn last month. Gabriela Bhaskar/The New York Times

My colleague Adam Liptak, who covers the Supreme Court, describes the five Republican-appointed justices besides Chief Justice John Roberts as "an impatient, ambitious majority."

They have largely rejected Roberts's more cautious approach of deciding cases narrowly and shifting the law slowly. The five instead prefer to set American law as they believe it should be set, even when they must overrule longstanding precedent. To do otherwise, they believe, is dishonest.

After the court overturned Roe v. Wade on Friday, one obvious question was: What other legal changes might soon be coming? Initial attention has focused on the possibility that the court may soon restrict L.G.B.T. rights, contraception access or interracial marriage. All those issues involve some of the same logic that led to the abortion decision, as both Justice Clarence Thomas and the three liberal justices pointed out in their writings accompanying the decision.

But those are not actually the hot-button issues that the court is likely to consider next. In today's newsletter, I want to focus on the divisive decisions that are more likely to come soon. One of those rulings could happen today; the court is scheduled to announce some of its final rulings of the term shortly after 10 a.m. Eastern.

Kavanaugh's position

The first reason to doubt that the court is on the verge of overturning the constitutional right to same-sex marriage, interracial marriage or contraception access comes straight from Friday's abortion ruling. In a separate concurrence explaining his vote, Justice Brett Kavanaugh — one of the impatient, ambitious five — explicitly signaled that those other rights were safe.

In his 12-page concurrence, Kavanaugh wrote that he wanted to address "how this decision will affect other precedents involving issues such as contraception and marriage." He then listed four cases dealing with those issues, including the 2015 ruling establishing a right to same-sex marriage. "Overruling Roe does not mean the overruling of those precedents, and does not threaten or cast doubt on those precedents," Kavanaugh explained.

Unless Kavanaugh changes his mind — or Roberts decides to overturn those precedents — there is no majority to do so. For now, only Thomas has said that he favors revisiting the earlier cases. "I don't think there are five votes for overturning any of those decisions," Adam Liptak said on a weekend episode of "The Daily."

The second reason to think that other divisive issues will come first is that the court has already announced many of the cases it will hear next year. They tend to involve other topics — namely affirmative action, election laws and business regulation.

Affirmative action

It's an issue that seems likely to define the court's next term in the way that abortion did this term. The court has agreed to hear two cases, one challenging the use of race in admissions at a public university (the University of North Carolina) and one at a private university (Harvard).

I have been writing about this subject for the past two decades, and university officials I've spoken with are far more worried that the court will outlaw their current admissions approach than they were during the run-up to previous Supreme Court cases. If that happens, the number of Black students at selective colleges seems especially likely to decline.

The Harvard campus in March. Kayana Szymczak for The New York Times

The core argument for affirmative action is simple: In a society where racism and racial inequities remain defining problems, ignoring race in admissions or hiring decisions is fundamentally unfair.

Yet affirmative action — at least as it has typically been practiced in the U.S. — tends to be unpopular. When the policy appears on the ballot in state referendums, it usually loses, even in liberal states like California. (Poll questions, depending on their wording, point in contradictory directions.)

One problem may be that traditional affirmative action has put nearly all of its focus on race, with little to no weight on economic class. That approach has probably hurt the policy's support among many white, Asian and even Latino voters. Its thin popular support, in turn, would make it easier for conservative justices to ban a policy they have long opposed.

“The way to stop discrimination on the basis of race is to stop discriminating on the basis of race,” Roberts once wrote.

Is there any chance the court will stop short of outlawing affirmative action? Sure. Many corporate executives and military leaders support the policy, and they could plausibly sway the justices. But most court watchers consider that outcome improbable.

In a 2003 ruling upholding affirmative action, Justice Sandra Day O’Connor — a more moderate Republican appointee — suggested that she thought the policy might no longer be necessary “25 years from now.” If the court scraps the policy in 2023, the current impatient, ambitious majority would be only five years ahead of O’Connor’s timetable.

And two more

Two other contentious subjects on the court’s docket are election law and business regulation. On both, the court — including Roberts — has recently leaned strongly to the political right.

Election laws. The court has already agreed to hear a case about whether Alabama can draw a congressional map that packs many Black voters into a single congressional district, effectively diluting their political power. About 27 percent of Alabama’s residents are Black, and the state has seven House districts.

The court may also decide to hear a case that could limit the ability of state courts to review how state legislatures draw districts and otherwise oversee elections. Adam Liptak recently wrote an article that explains why the issue is so important — especially when many Republican legislators have signaled a willingness to overturn election results.

Business regulation. Even before President Donald Trump’s three appointees shifted the court to the right, it tended to take a laissez-faire approach, limiting Congress’s ability to regulate corporate behavior. The current court may go even further, especially on climate policy, and rule that federal agencies cannot limit pollution unless Congress has given them specific authority to do so.

The court will hear one case involving the Clean Water Act in October and will likely issue a ruling involving the E.P.A. this week. I’ll go into more detail on this subject once that ruling is announced.

More on abortion

- Anti-abortion activists are pushing more states to adopt bans and prohibit traveling for abortions, while opponents have pledged to fight so-called trigger laws in court.
- The Jackson Women’s Health Organization, the only clinic in Mississippi, was at the center of the case that overturned Roe. It will close in a few days.
- In Opinion, Pamela Paul writes that America’s most exceptional trait is its lack of mercy. And Ross Douthat argues that abortion opponents have a longer-term battle to win.

Our position is that we would only take action after someone is criminally convicted (including a plea, no contest, etc)

The reason is that Utah's abortion law is a criminal law, not a civil/administrative law. DOPL and the Board have no rule making authority to determine the elements of the crime. Prosecutors and defense attorneys will argue their points in front of a judge. Then DOPL will likely only consider the outcome of a criminal process.

I don't think that DOPL or the Board are in an appropriate position to opine on the applicability of criminal law to specific situations. When I read Dave's email, I didn't understand tha the Board would be opining on the law, but simply hearing from concerned stakeholders about the issue generally and whether any licensing issues exist.

Is this your understanding? I want to ensure we listen to you and others and consider possible issues that we have not considered. Everyone is obviously experiencing the effects of change on a significant issue.

> Based on the current language contained in SB 174 (from the 2020 session) – which will now be triggered by the overruling of Roe v. Wade – Could a pharmacist / pharmacy be subject to discipline from DOPL and/or criminal penalties if they dispense an abortifacient pursuant to a prescription written by a licensed physician. Drugs that induce an abortion are clearly covered by the statute but who will ultimately be responsible if a drug is given to an individual, who does not meet all of the requirement of the statute, is a bit ambiguous. I think it is clear that the physician would be "on the hook". I think it is less clear how a pharmacist / pharmacy would be handled. My thought is that if DOPL and the Board feel like there is some potential liability for pharmacists / pharmacies that our organization would work to clarify the statute to exempt pharmacists / pharmacies from liabilit provided they dispensed the drug as written by the physician.

Subject: RE: Board of Rx - Discussion Item

Hello,

Thank you Dave. It's certainly a timely question. We had a meeting to discuss the agenda for Tuesday. Our main focus is to discuss whether ulipristal (Ella) emergency contraception could be included in the oral contraceptive orders that were approved earlier. I believe it fits in the definition from Utah Code 26-64 or we could certainly discuss the possibility of including a separate protocol. Plan B is available without a prescription while ulipristal is prescription only. There are some advantages to ulipristal in that it can be taken up to 5-da after unprotected intercourse vs. 3-days for Plan B. There is some information that indicates ulipristal is a better option for pediatric patients but I'm not sure the specific reason.

I added Dr. Hoffman to the email (but I believe she is out of town) because the DOH was involved in creation of the current protocol.

Let me know if you believe there is more that the Board of Pharmacy should discuss regarding this topic.

Best,

Carrie

External Sender: Be aware! Read with care!

Thank you, Dave.

I am realizing that I have done a poor job of informing you that Jennifer has left DOPL and Lisa Martin was recently hired to take her place. Lisa is copied, as is Larry Marx. We should have you meet her soon, as we should also do with Adam and the UPhA. I am sorry that we haven't yet done this. This is one of many areas where I can work to improve our training! But as for Lisa, she is excellent and has our full confidence.

As for the ruling, we have also been dealing with this matter today and this week with a couple of media and other requests. I am copying Margaret Busse and Deputy Director Jacol Hart, since your issue is another that I did not consider.

Below is included what we said to the media, as it related to those who perform abortions. My best guess is that similar principles would apply with pharmacists, not relating to gene liability, but licensing requirements:

Thank you for reaching out. From a professional licensing perspective, there is not a change expected based on the SCOTUS decision. According to state law, an abortion can only be performed when certain requirements are met, by a licensed physician, and at a licensed facility.

When physicians apply for a license, they are required to indicate whether they perform abortions and if so, where they are performed. In accordance with state law, this information is shared with the Utah Department of Health and Human Services to aid in their licensing of facilities.

In terms of enforcement, the abortion statute is in the criminal code. UDOH is (and would still be) required to report any violation of state law to DOPL. However, the Division relies on the court system for a criminal conviction in order to decide what disciplinary action (if any) is necessary. Often, arrests are reported to us by law enforcement or prosecutors. In those cases, DOPL will work with the licensed professional on a limitation order, which would order the professional to cease certain professional practices pending the resolution of their criminal charge(s).

Thank you for raising this issue, Dave, both with us and the Board. You have always been a great partner in our work.

Please let us know if you have any questions. And let's set up a time for you to visit with Lisa soon.

Best,

Mark Steinagel | Division Director

Carrie and Jen,

With the Supreme Court ruling overturning Roe v. Wade today it may be worthwhile to discuss, in Tuesday's board meeting, Utah's abortion law (SB 174 – passed in the 2020 General Session https://le.utah.gov/~2020/bills/sbillenr/SB0174.pdf) and the possible implications for pharmacists / pharmacies that dispense Plan B type drugs.

While the law was passed in 2020, it is only triggered once the Supreme Court (or the 10th Circuit COA) overturn Roe (well this just happened). I don't believe it was the intent of the Utah legislature to place liability on pharmacists / pharmacies but I do think the law, as drafted, is ambiguous. I am planning to be in attendance at the board meeting and as you both know I am never shy about offering my two cents. Thanks for all you both do to keep the board operating like a well oiled machine.

Hi Joe - thanks for sharing this. One thing that I think may draw additional questions is the concept of "severe brain abnormality" and just wonder if it might help to add that extra bit about it excluding such conditions as Down Syndrome... just a thought

David Litvack (DHS), 2022-06-27 10:31:04
Thanks Joe! I think the information looks good. I just went back and looked over our FAQ document, but just want to confirm that all of the information being provided in the proposed instagram has been confirmed and finalized.

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-06-27 10:48:03
Hi David, yes, all information was verified and approved.

Tonya, at this time, we would like to leave out information about Down syndrome. I think there's a tim for it, but I think we would prefer to be reactive in case those questions come up.

David Litvack (DHS), 2022-06-27 10:51:17
Thank you Joe! I think it would be good to document the requests for information we are getting in case we get any questions from stakeholders on why we are putting this information out there now. I hope that makes sense.

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-06-27 10:53:10
Thank you! I will try to chase that down.

Michelle Hofmann, 2022-06-27 12:23:21
Joe...on the 5th graphic regarding contraception, can we anchor to the medical community and state law rather than the medical community alone? In general nothing prevents state law from diverging on recommnedations from the medical community and I think it is important to call out this alignment that currently exists.

The New York Times
The Morning

June 28, 2022

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. The governor's race in Oregon shows how Democrats could be in trouble in November.

[redacted]

President Biden's unpopularity is only one of his party's problems this year. T.J. Kirkpatrick for The New York Times

Unexpected losses

The midterm polls continue to look bad for the Democratic Party. Yes, it's possible that events — like, say, the overturning of Roe v. Wade — will help the party do better in November than analysts expect. For now, though, 2022 is looking like another wave election in which the president's party will suffer big losses.

In a wave election, major surprises are possible. In 2018, for example, Republicans lost every House seat in Orange County, Calif., which had long been a symbol of suburban conservatism. In 1994, the Democratic speaker of the House, Tom Foley, shockingly lost his own district to a political neophyte.

Unless the polls improve for Democrats, they could find themselves suffering similarly unexpected losses in November. By definition, it's hard to predict these surprises in advance. But even blue states and districts that are normally safe may not be this year.

[redacted]

Today, my colleague Reid Epstein offers a portrait of one such campaign: the governor's race in Oregon. It has its own characteristics, including a third-party candidate, but many of the political themes in Oregon are also present across the country.

Biden, crime, gas prices

By Reid J. Epstein

Almost nobody in Oregon seems to be happy.

In Portland, just 8 percent of residents think their city is on the right track, according to a May poll from Oregon Public Broadcasting. East of the Cascade Mountains, nine counties are so fed up with Democratic control of the state that they have voted to leave the state to join Idaho.

Only Democrats have served as Oregon's governor since 1987, but the party, weighed down by soaring gas prices, inflation and President Biden's unpopularity, is in so much trouble in this year's midterm elections that even deep-blue Oregon is suddenly competitive.

Portland, like many other cities in the U.S., has seen a rise in homelessness and violent crime. Visiting the city's downtown in recent years has been an exercise in navigating its sprawling homeless encampments — an issue that polling shows is top of mind for the state's voters. And homicides jumped to at least 90 last year, from 36 in 2019.

Gov. Kate Brown, a Democrat in her final term, is America's least-popular governor, according to Morning Consult polling. Biden's approval rating is 15 points under water, despite his having won the state by 16 percentage points.

In much of the country, that's all Republicans need to say to fire up their voters: Joe Biden, crime and gas prices.

An independent challenge

Amid their political headwinds, Oregon Democrats have doubled down.

For governor, the party nominated Tina Kotek, a former state House speaker widely seen as a status quo candidate who would maintain Oregon's progressive direction. Last year, she sponsored legislation that limited Oregon cities' ability to remove homeless people's tents from public spaces.

In typical lousy Democratic years, Oregon Democrats have overcome dissatisfaction with the party. But things are so bad now that the party has splintered: Betsy Johnson, a veteran Democratic state legislator, quit the legislature and left her party to mount an independent campaign for governor.

Johnson, a helicopter pilot whose signature Liz Claiborne eyeglasses are embedded in her campaign logo, has raised far more money than both Kotek and the Republican nominee, Christine Drazan. Johnson has also earned an array of high-profile endorsements from members of both parties. Much of her fund-raising has come from Oregon's corporate moguls, including more than $1 million from the Nike founder Phil Knight.

Portland's homelessness crisis is animating Johnson's campaign. One of her TV ads shows her driving around the city's encampments. "No more tent cities," she says. When I spoke with her, Johnson didn't mince words: "You can see the deterioration of the beautiful City of Roses, now the city of roaches," she said.

Democrats say they believe Johnson will take more votes from the Republican base than from their own. But they are spending as if she is a real threat, creating a PAC to attack her as an obstacle to environmental progress and gun control. (Shortly after the Sandy Hook massacre, Johnson told a group of high school students that she owned a machine gun. She told me it was "a Cold War artifact" and said she still had it.)

The G.O.P. nominee, Drazan, is anti-abortion and pro-Trump, a change from the moderates Oregon Republicans have nominated for governor in recent years. Her campaign believes she could win the three-way race with just 40 percent of the vote — the same percentage Donald Trump took in 2020. Some Republicans in Washington, D.C., believe Drazan has a better shot of winning than their candidates in traditional battleground states like Michigan and Pennsylvania do.

Kotek and Johnson favor abortion rights — a position they both stressed following Friday's Supreme Court decision striking down Roe v. Wade. Johnson served on the board of the local Planned Parenthood chapter, while Kotek passed legislation in 2017 that expanded state-funded abortion access.

No sure thing

Kotek is still the favorite to win. Oregon Democrats have significant structural advantages — there are just more of them than anyone else. But it's not a sure thing, and Democrats are sweating the result for the first time in years.

When we spoke last week, Kotek tried to steer the discussion toward issues where she is aligned with Oregon's progressive voters: environmental protections, gun control and minimum wage increases, all of which Johnson has opposed. Kotek dismissed Johnson as an elected gadfly who accomplished little during her two decades in the Oregon Legislature.

But in doing so, she sounded an awful lot like another well-credentialed Democrat who seemed to be in a race the party couldn't lose.

"You could do what Donald Trump did and say, 'Trust me,' like Betsy Johnson," Kotek said. "Or you can vote for the person who actually has a track record of accomplishment to make sure people have what they need. So I think that at the end of day, people are going to go with that."

The next four months will determine whether she's right.

ARTS AND IDEAS

What is America's sound?

Classical music is not a form native to the United States — much of the canon predates the country's existence — but American composers have found ways to make it their own. Often, that comes from fusing classical with America's great musical innovation, jazz.

In The Times, Seth Colter Walls reviews three new albums that merge classical and jazz to present their own vision of American music (each features some variation of "America" in the title). His favorite: "What Is American" by PUBLIQuartet, an experimental string quartet.

The Morning

June 29, 2022

By David Leonhardt and Ian Prasad Philbrick

Good morning. Trump and his top aides knew that the Jan. 6 rally was likely to turn violent.

Cassidy Hutchinson, a former White House aide, during the hearing yesterday. Doug Mills/The New York Times

‘Let the people in’

How much did President Donald Trump and his top advisers know ahead of the Jan. 6 attack about the potential for violence? Until the past few weeks, the answer to that question had been unclear.

But the Jan. 6 committee hearings have removed much of the doubt: Trump and his aides knew that the rally he held near the White House that day was likely to escalate into an attack on the Capitol.

Yesterday, testimony from Cassidy Hutchinson — a former aide to the White House chief of staff — offered the clearest evidence yet that Trump knew violence was possible. He learned early on Jan. 6 that some rally attendees were armed, but wanted security to let them in, Hutchinson said. “They’re not here to hurt me,” she recalled him saying.

Hutchinson also said yesterday that:

- Mark Meadows, Trump’s chief of staff at the time and Hutchinson’s boss, told her on Jan. 2 that “things might get real, real bad on Jan. 6.”
- The White House knew that the Proud Boys, a far-right group with a recent history of political violence, planned to be in Washington on Jan.

6. Hutchinson heard the group discussed before Trump's rally, when Rudy Giuliani was present, and Giuliani said on Jan. 2 that Jan. 6 would be "a great day."

- Tony Ornato, another aide, told Meadows and Trump before the attack that some Trump supporters had come to hear his speech outside the White House armed with knives, bear spray and other weapons.
- Trump wanted the Secret Service to let armed supporters into his rally. "Take the f-ing mags away," Hutchinson overheard Trump say, referring to the magnetometers used to screen attendees. "They can march to the Capitol from here. Let the people in."
- Trump wanted to join the protesters at the Capitol after his speech. After learning he was instead being driven back to the White House, Hutchinson testified, Trump cursed at his security detail and tried to wrest the steering wheel from his driver. Trump denied the story yesterday, and Secret Service officials said agents would testify that he did not reach for the wheel.

President Donald Trump speaking to supporters on Jan. 6, 2021. Pete Marovich for The New York Times

Most of Hutchinson's testimony, which was under oath, referred to conversations she witnessed or to events that other Trump aides described to her. "Hutchinson is joining the lineup of explosive witnesses to appear at congressional hearings," The Times's Carl Hulse wrote, comparing her to Oliver North, who testified about the Iran-contra scandal, and John Dean, who testified about Watergate.

(Our colleague Maggie Haberman profiles Hutchinson here.)

The committee will hold more hearings in the coming weeks, and other details will no doubt emerge. But the fundamental story of Jan. 6 is clear: A United States president who lost re-election was aware of — and encouraged — a violent attack on the Capitol intended to prevent the transfer of power to his opponent, the election's victor. Afterward, most members of that defeated president's party decided not to hold him accountable for doing so. Instead, with rare exceptions, they largely ignored or even repeated his lies about the election.

There is also reason to believe that Trump or other Republicans may attempt to overturn a future election. Altogether, it represents the most serious threat to American democracy in many decades.

More on the hearing

- The committee described phone calls to witnesses, made by Trump allies, that it suggested were meant to intimidate the witnesses.
- Hutchinson testified that Trump, enraged by a denial from his attorney general that the election was stolen, threw his lunch against a White House wall. (The Times's Peter Baker catalogs Trump's rage in the final days of his presidency.)
- The committee played video of Mike Flynn, Trump's former national security adviser, taking the Fifth Amendment after Representative Liz Cheney asked him if he believed in the peaceful transfer of political power.
- Meadows and Giuliani sought presidential pardons for their role in Jan. 6.
- A lawyer for Ginni Thomas, the wife of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, said she would not testify to the committee.
- Yesterday's session played like the Watergate hearings as punched up by the writers' room of "24," our TV critic writes.
- Hutchinson reminds us that being a public servant means stepping up to do hard things, Times Opinion's Michelle Cottle writes. Bret Stephens asks if the hearings will finally bring down the cult of Trump.
- The case for prosecuting Trump just got stronger, David French of The Dispatch argues. (Legal experts told The Times that Hutchinson's testimony raised the likelihood that Trump would face criminal charges.)

THE LATEST NEWS

Election Night

Voting in Queens yesterday. Gabby Jones for The New York Times

- Kathy Hochul easily won the Democratic nomination for New York governor.
- Darren Bailey, a far-right Illinois state senator whose campaign Democrats boosted, won the Republican primary to challenge Gov. J.B. Pritzker.
- In the Republican Senate primary in Colorado, Joe O'Dea, a construction company owner who favors some abortion access, beat a rival who attended Jan. 6.

- Representative Rodney Davis, an Illinois Republican, lost his primary to Mary Miller, a Trump-backed congresswoman who once spoke approvingly of Hitler.
- Mike Flood, a G.O.P. state senator, beat the Democratic candidate Patty Pansing Brooks in a Nebraska special House election to replace Jeff Fortenberry, a Republican who was convicted of lying to the F.B.I.
- Representative Sean Casten, a moderate, defeated Representative Marie Newman, a progressive, in the Democratic primary in a newly drawn House district in Illinois.
- Here are more results.

Abortion

- A federal court allowed Tennessee to ban abortions after about six weeks of pregnancy, while a Texas judge temporarily blocked a total statewide abortion ban.
- Wisconsin Democrats sued the state's Legislature seeking to remove an abortion ban from the 1800s.
- Xavier Becerra, President Biden's secretary of health and human services, said the administration would ensure women have access to abortion pills.
- "Disorienting": Women who support abortion rights reflected on the shock of the past few days.
- Illinois is set to become an island of abortion access. Can its clinics meet the demand?

War in Ukraine

Farmland after Russian bombings in the Donetsk region yesterday. Tyler Hicks/The New York Times

- Turkey dropped its opposition to NATO membership for Sweden and Finland, clearing the way for their entry. At a summit in Madrid today, the alliance will formally invite the two countries to join.
- Women attacked by Russian soldiers near Kyiv want justice. But Ukrainian officials face daunting challenges in prosecuting the crimes.
- Biden led his Group of 7 counterparts to agree to cap the price of Russian oil, a move that could prompt the Kremlin to further restrict supply.

The Virus

- An F.D.A. panel recommended that vaccine makers create shots targeting the Omicron variant.
- Two Omicron subvariants, BA.4 and BA.5, have become the dominant forms of the virus in the U.S.

MORNING READS

From left, Marlene Napp, Liliana Bernhardt, Jack Bernhardt, and Lisa Napp at home in Hillsborough, N.C. The family is trying to cut costs. Cornell Watson for The New York Times

Cutting corners: How are families adjusting to inflation? Downgraded vacations, less takeout.

Lost: USB sticks with data on 460,000 people were misplaced during a night of drinking.

Quench: Fruits and veggies are a great way to stay hydrated.

Short trips: These getaways are just 100 miles from Seattle, New York or Chicago.

Shopping guide: Invest in a tablecloth.

Advice from Wirecutter: The best beach umbrella.

Lives Lived: Margaret Keane painted images of sad, big-eyed children trapped in dystopian worlds. For years, her husband said he had painted them — false claims that a "paint-off" in court ultimately demolished. Keane died at 94.

ARTS AND IDEAS

Taika Waititi has a lot on his plate. Dana Scruggs for The New York Times

Constantly creating

Taika Waititi might be the busiest man in Hollywood. He was behind the camera of the new Marvel movie “Thor: Love and Thunder” as director and co-writer. He was in front of it for the HBO pirate comedy series “Our Flag Means Death,” playing Blackbeard. He’s a voice in the new Pixar film “Lightyear.” He is creating two projects for Netflix based on “Charlie and the Chocolate Factory.”

Waititi’s secret to managing the workload: not thinking about it. “If I was to step back and look at all of the things I’m doing, I’d probably have a panic attack,” he told The Times’s Dave Itzkoff. “I know there’s too many things. I know I’m doing a lot. I just have to keep pivoting every couple of hours.”

PLAY, WATCH, EAT

What to Cook

Andrew Scrivani for The New York Times

This crowd-pleasing potato cake takes on whatever seasoning or toppings you want.

What to Listen to

What to Read

Davey Davis’s new novel, “X,” is a queer noir set in a troubling near-future world.

This is interesting. It doesn't address our exact legal issue with Medicaid but we will continue to evaluate it. I also did not see AG Garland's letter on medication so that link is alsc helpful.

Just sharing as an FYI - Brown & Peisch (B&P) is Utah Medicaid's external consulting legal firm. One of the things B&P do as part of the contract we have with them, is to periodically send out general legal "advisories" about Medicaid-related issues.

Attached is the advisory we received from B&P today regarding the SCOTUS decision impact on state Medicaid programs.

SUBJECT: The Morning: A powerful court
FROM: The New York Times <nytdirect@nytimes.com>
TO: mhofmann@utah.gov
DATE: 30/06/2022 04:25

The New York Times
The Morning

June 30, 2022

Today, we look at another example of American exceptionalism — this one involving the role that the courts play in shaping politics and society. — David Leonhardt

By German Lopez

Good morning. In other advanced democracies, the courts are more restrained.

[redacted]

The Supreme Court's structure allows for few checks on the justices' power. Pete Marovich for The New York Times

A global outlier

By now, most of us are used to U.S. Supreme Court rulings that bring big changes to American life — on abortion, guns, same-sex marriage and more. This morning may bring another sweeping ruling, on climate change.

But the Supreme Court's power is strange in a global context. The highest-level courts in other rich democracies tend to be less dominant. Elsewhere, courts can still overturn laws and restrict the government's reach, but they often face sharper limits on their decisions.

There are two major reasons that the U.S. Supreme Court is unusual, and today's newsletter will explain them. First, the court's structure allows for few checks on the justices' power: They have lifetime tenure, and other branches of government have few ways to overturn a ruling. Second, the dysfunction of the rest of the U.S. government, especially Congress, has created a vacuum that the Supreme Court fills.

Unchecked judges

Supreme Court justices remain on the bench for life or until they choose to retire. In other countries, there are term or age limits: Judges on Germany's federal constitutional court, for example, serve for 12 years or until age 68, whichever is sooner.

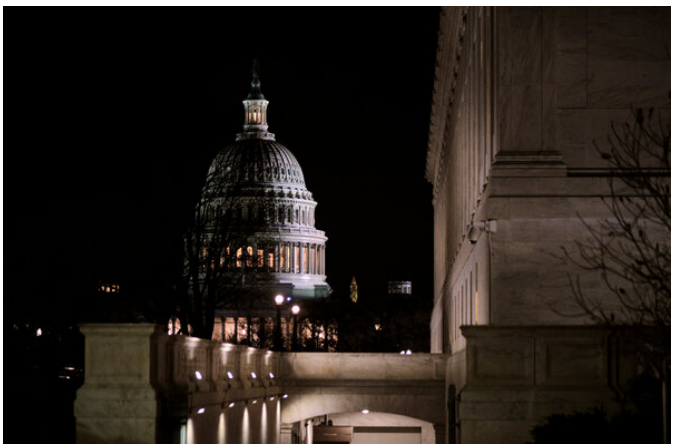
The U.S. model means the current court's makeup of six conservatives and three liberals is likely to remain in place for years if not decades. And if justices are careful about timing their retirements to benefit their ideological side, it could last even longer. As a result, future elections and public opinion can end up having little influence on the court.

In other countries, limited terms and mandatory retirement ages create opportunities for more recently elected lawmakers to remake the highest courts and keep them in check. "There is some accountability," said Tom Ginsburg of the University of Chicago Law School. "If a court is too out of control, there is pressure to rein it back in."

The U.S. also makes it more difficult to overrule a court's decisions. A two-thirds vote from both the House and the Senate, or approval from two-thirds of state legislatures, initiates a constitutional amendment. Then three-fourths of the states must ratify the amendment. This has only been successfully done 17 times in the more than 230 years since the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were ratified — and never since 1992.

In other countries, legislators can more easily overrule the courts. Canada's Parliament can pass laws that ignore court rulings, although such laws must be reapproved every five years. British courts are so weak that their decisions act more as recommendations than orders, said Kim Lane Scheppele, a legal expert at Princeton University.



In the U.S., each part of the lawmaking process is a potential veto point for bills. T.J. Kirkpatrick for The New York Times

Political dysfunction

The U.S. Supreme Court is also empowered by the frequent gridlock across the rest of the federal government. For example, Congress could pass a federal law guaranteeing access to abortion in the first trimester, which most Americans favor. Or Congress could pass laws giving the E.P.A. clearer authority to deal with climate change. Neither has happened.

Congress's struggles demonstrate a broader problem: The U.S. has built so many checks into its political system that it has become what political scientist Francis Fukuyama calls a "vetocracy." Each part of the lawmaking process, from the House to the Senate to the White House, is a potential veto point for bills. Then there are additional barriers — like the Senate filibuster, which requires 60 of 100 senators to pass most legislation.

The many veto points make it difficult for even the party that controls both Congress and the White House, as the Democrats now do and the Republicans did in 2017 and 2018, to get much done. The courts fill the void.

Other advanced democracies tend to have simpler parliamentary systems. So when a political party or coalition wins an election, it can quickly pass laws to act on its promises.

“When courts wind up doing so much of the work, it is often precisely because the parliament is broken,” Scheppele said.

A conservative system

Many Republicans argue they are simply playing by the rules set by the Constitution, and that liberals complain because they don’t like the results. (Senator Mitch McConnell made a longer version of this case in a recent interview with The Times.)

But the rules do inherently favor McConnell’s side. The liberal vision for America requires passing laws to make major changes — already difficult in the political system. The Supreme Court adds another veto point, further bolstering a small-c conservative process. That is why much of the Democratic agenda now focuses on political and judicial reforms. (Jamelle Bouie, a Times Opinion columnist, goes into more detail here.)

Yet the conservative process also makes those political and judicial reforms difficult to enact. So for the foreseeable future, the Supreme Court is likely to play a sweeping role in American life.

F.B.I. steps into an art case

In February, the Orlando Museum of Art opened a show featuring 25 never-before-seen paintings by Jean-Michel Basquiat. But a Times article by Brett Sokol cast doubt on their authenticity: One had been painted on a FedEx box with a typeface that hadn't been used until 1994, six years after Basquiat's death.

Last week, the F.B.I. raided the museum and seized the paintings. And on Tuesday night, the museum's board removed its director and chief executive, Aaron De Groft, who has publicly insisted the paintings are genuine.

According to an F.B.I. affidavit, De Groft threatened an expert who expressed qualms after assessing the artworks. "Shut up," De Groft allegedly wrote in an email. "Stop being holier than thou."

The Morning

[redacted]

July 1, 2022

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. The Supreme Court seems unconcerned with climate change.

A coal-fired power plant in Thompsons, Texas. Tamir Kalifa for The New York Times

‘A blow’

The Supreme Court has made it harder for the country to fight the ravages of climate change.

In a 6-to-3 decision yesterday, the court limited the Environmental Protection Agency’s ability to prevent power plants from releasing climate-warming pollution. The court ruled that Congress had not given the agency the authority to issue the broad regulations that many climate experts believe could make a major difference — the kind of regulations that many Biden administration officials would have liked to implement.

Today’s newsletter will walk you through what the decision means — and also clarify what it does not mean (because some of the early commentary exaggerated the decision’s meaning). The bottom line is that the ruling is significant, but it does not eliminate the Biden administration’s ability to reduce greenhouse gas pollution.

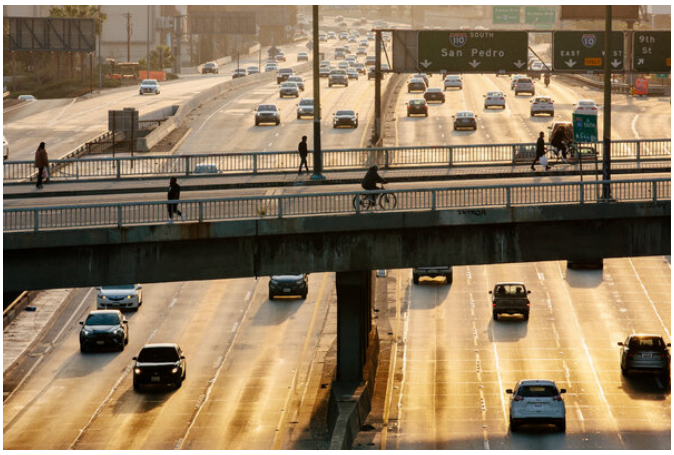
Amy Westervelt, a climate journalist, summarized the decision by writing: “Not good, but also not as bad as it could have been. It’s pretty narrow.” Romany Webb of the Sabin Center for Climate Change Law at Columbia University called the ruling “a blow, but it is nowhere near the worst-case scenario.”

The trouble, many scientists say, is that climate change presents such an enormous threat to the world — and the need to reduce the pace of warming is so urgent — that any ruling that makes the task harder is worrisome. Extreme storms, heat waves, droughts and wildfires are already becoming more common. Some species are facing potential extinction. Glaciers are melting, and sea levels are rising.

Yet the U.S. has made only modest progress combating climate change through federal policy in recent years. The Trump administration largely denied the problem and reversed Obama administration policies intended to slow global warming. The Biden administration has failed to pass its ambitious climate agenda because of uniform Republican opposition and Democratic infighting. Now the Supreme Court has made the job more difficult, too.

What's still possible

The Biden administration had hoped to issue a major rule requiring electric utilities to reduce carbon dioxide emissions, essentially forcing them to replace coal and gas-fired plants with clean forms of electricity, like wind, solar and nuclear. The justices ruled that when Congress passed the Clean Air Act in 1970, it did not intend to give the E.P.A. such broad authority.



The E.P.A. can still regulate greenhouse gases from vehicles. Kendrick Brinson for The New York Times

The E.P.A. can still regulate power plants after the ruling, but more narrowly than before: The agency can push power plants to become more efficient, for example. "The way to significantly reduce greenhouse emissions from power plants is to shut down the power plants — and replace them with something cleaner," my colleague Coral Davenport said. "And that's off the table."

After yesterday, the E.P.A.'s most significant policy tools appear to involve other industries. The agency can still regulate greenhouse gases from vehicles, the nation's largest source of such emissions — although the ruling and the potential for future lawsuits may make the agency more cautious than it otherwise would be.

On Twitter, Michael Gerrard, an environmental law expert at Columbia University, listed other ways that government agencies could continue to address climate change, including: federal rules applying to newly built power plants; federal rules on leakage from oil and gas production; state and local rules in many areas; and private sector efforts to become more energy efficient, often subsidized by the government.

"One battle is lost (unsurprisingly, given this Supreme Court)," Gerrard wrote, "but the war against climate change very much goes on."

Chief Justice John Roberts wrote the majority opinion. T.J. Kirkpatrick for The New York Times

More on the climate

The ruling is the latest sign that the Republican Party is unconcerned about climate change. The six justices in the majority were all Republican appointees; the three dissenters were all Democratic appointees.

Adam Liptak, The Times's Supreme Court correspondent, wrote: "Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr., writing for the majority, only glancingly alluded to the harms caused by climate change. Justice Elena Kagan began her dissent with a long passage detailing the devastation the planet faces, including hurricanes, floods, famines, coastal erosion, mass migration and political crises."

The math just got harder. This decision made it less likely that the U.S. would reach the climate targets that Biden has set. And if the U.S. misses its targets, the world will likely miss its target, as The Times's Climate Forward newsletter explains. (Sign up here.)

Cities and states are trying to fill the gap. Local governments are accelerating their efforts to cut greenhouse gas emissions, in some cases bridging partisan divides.

More lawsuits may be coming. Many of the plaintiffs from this climate case have brought a case trying to keep the E.P.A. from moving the nation toward a greater use of electric vehicles.

The ruling may matter beyond climate policy. Corporations in other industries will likely use this ruling to argue that some of their own regulations should also be blocked.

More on the Court:

- The court agreed to hear a case that could reshape the 2024 election, potentially giving state legislatures the power to set voting rules that state courts can't overturn.
- In a 5-to-4 ruling, the justices said the Biden administration could end a Trump-era immigration program that required asylum seekers to await approval in Mexico.
- Here are the court's other major decisions this term.
- Ketanji Brown Jackson became the first Black woman to serve as a justice.
- The court's importance has overwhelmed the norms that used to insulate it from politics, Ezra Klein of Times Opinion argues.

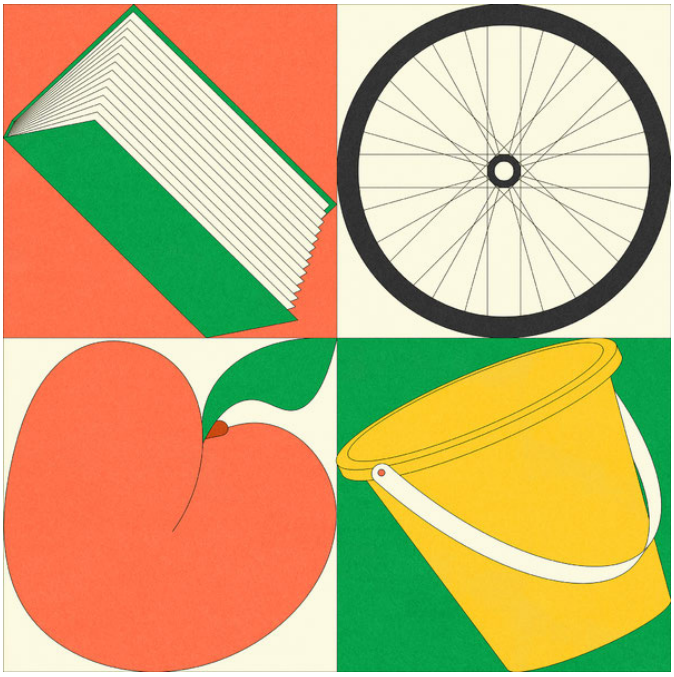
The New York Times
The Morning

July 2, 2022

By Melissa Kirsch

Good morning. It's a holiday weekend. Here are some ideas for how to spend it.

[redacted]



Allie Sullberg

Taking off

The most reliable way I've found to discover books I love is by seeking out the recommendations of writers whose work I admire. So when I saw that Patrick Radden Keefe, the author of the riveting "Empire of Pain," was discussing his favorite writers in The Times Book Review, I broke out my note-taking app to add Emmanuel Carrère's "The Adversary" to my ever-lengthening list of titles to read.

It's a holiday weekend here in the U.S., and I'll be spending at least part of it reading, outside if the weather permits, indoors before a fan if it doesn't. If you're lucky, you've been able to get away, perhaps to somewhere nearby that doesn't use too much gas, like our reporter who recently spent two days cycling around Shelter Island.

Wherever you find yourself, take advantage of the long days. I like to do two-in-ones in summer, days with two distinct chapters before nightfall. These are the days when you can arrive at the beach at noon and still have plenty of light by which to grill when you get home.

Here's your menu. Start with a rum punch or nimbu pani, move on to skirt steak and vegetables. Corn on the cob, obviously. Macaroni, pasta, potato salads. Edna Lewis's peach cobbler for dessert. Invite the neighbors, if you like. Ask them to bring the coleslaw.

I've been eagerly awaiting the film adaptation of Lawrence Osborne's "The Forgiven," about a couple who accidentally kill a stranger while driving to a lavish weekend-long party in Morocco. It opens this weekend. If you'd prefer something less intense, "Marcel the Shell With Shoes On" looks charming.

The last two episodes of the fourth season of "Stranger Things" just dropped, but if you're a fan, you've probably already watched them. You might not have seen "Naked Mole Rat Gets Dressed: The Underground Rock Experience," an animated musical special from the children's book author Mo Willems. And there's Wimbledon, even though Serena won't be playing.

I've been seeking podcast recommendations for when I'm doing chores and running errands, so this list of podcasts to make you feel good arrived right on time. "You Are Good," an exploration of movies through the feelings they provoke, co-hosted by Sarah Marshall of the late “You’re Wrong About” podcast sounds right up my street. I’ll listen to it while I make the cobbler.

What new podcast have you loved recently? Tell me about it and we might feature your recommendation in The Morning. Be sure to include your full name and location.

CULTURE CALENDAR

Culture Editor

🎬 "Thor: Love and Thunder" (July 8): The most recent Marvel blockbuster, "Doctor Strange in the Multiverse of Madness," was weird and dark. This one, directed by the ascendant Taika Waititi, is funny and colorful. It really does take all kinds. A tip: You might want to rewatch the second Thor film, 2013's "The Dark World," to remind yourself why Natalie Portman is even in these movies.

📺 Macy's 4th of July Fireworks Spectacular (July 4): Oh, say, can you see a nearly half-century-old tradition celebrating America's birthday in over-the-top fashion? Why yes you can! Tune into NBC at 8 p.m. Eastern on Monday, and lower the volume if your dog's in the room.

📚 "Girls They Write Songs About" (Out now): The friends we make in our 20s — that formative decade when work and family life have yet to fully tame us — often see us at our most irresponsible moments. The two friends in this Carlene Bauer novel have many of those as they meet cute and hard in late '90s New York City before undergoing decades of, as the critic Molly Young writes, "enchantment, disenchantment and re-enchantment." Anyone with long-term friends can relate.

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Andrew Scrivani for The New York Times

By Melissa Clark

Barbecued Chicken

Barbecued chicken may be a Fourth of July cliché, but only because it's pretty perfect, a crowd-pleaser with its mahogany, sticky-crisp skin and smoky, savory meat. And Sam Sifton's not-too-sweet version is the recipe I keep coming back to. He smartly calls for thinning the barbecue sauce with water before using it to baste the chicken on the grill. This keeps the sugars in the sauce from burning and the meat from drying out. While he suggests using chicken legs and thighs, I've added bone-in, skin-on breasts, and they've worked nicely. (Just be careful not to overcook them.) Then, break out your favorite icy beverage, and don't forget to look up — at fireworks, fireflies or the summer sky turning pinkish at dusk.

A selection of New York Times recipes is available to all readers. Please consider a Cooking subscription for full access.

GAME OF THE WEEKEND

Chicago Sky forward Candace Parker last month. M. Anthony Nesmith/Icon Sportswire, via Getty Images

Phoenix Mercury vs. Chicago Sky, W.N.B.A.: This game is a rematch of last year’s W.N.B.A. finals. The Sky won that series, and this year they once again look like one of the league’s best teams. The veteran forward Candace Parker, who grew up near Chicago, recently recorded her third triple-double — the most in W.N.B.A. history. The Mercury’s season, meanwhile, has been defined by the absence of their all-star center Brittney Griner, who has been detained in Russia since February. 1 p.m. Eastern today, on ESPN.

For more:

- The U.S. is loaded with women's basketball talent. But the W.N.B.A.'s small size — it has just 12 teams — makes it hard to go pro.
- The latest on Griner: Russia may seek a prisoner exchange for a notorious arms dealer known as the "Merchant of Death."

The New York Times
The Morning

July 3, 2022

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. At the end of a momentous Supreme Court term, we go behind the scenes.

[redacted]

Climate activists gathered at the Supreme Court on Thursday. Anna Rose Layden for The New York Times

An unhappy place

A few weeks ago, I asked Adam Liptak — The Times's Supreme Court correspondent — to preview the major cases that would make up the end of the court's term. Adam was prophetic, correctly forecasting every big ruling. Today, he returns to the newsletter, answering my questions about the behind-the-scenes atmosphere at the court.

David: The last few months have been among the most unusual in the Court's modern history — a major leak followed by an abortion decision that, as you've written, will change American life in major ways. Inside the court, do you think things also feel different?

Adam: The Supreme Court's building has been closed to the public since the beginning of the pandemic. Then, not long after the leak in early May of a draft of the opinion that overruled Roe v. Wade, the courthouse was surrounded by an eight-foot fence. Always cloistered and remote, the court is now impenetrable.

The release of the decision in the abortion case highlighted another way in which the court has withdrawn from public scrutiny. For unexplained reasons, the justices have stopped announcing their decisions from the bench, abandoning a tradition that is both ceremonial and illuminating. In the old days, the author of the majority opinion would give a quick and conversational summary of the ruling that could be extremely valuable for a reporter on deadline and, by extension, for members of the public trying to understand a decision.

[redacted]

More important yet were oral dissents, reserved for decisions that the justices in the minority believed were profoundly mistaken. In ordinary times, one or more of the three liberal justices who dissented in the abortion case would have raised their voices in protest. These days, the court makes do with posting PDFs of its decisions, robbing the occasion of ceremony, drama and insight.

The nine justices in 2021. Erin Schaff/The New York Times

So the lawyers who argued the cases and the reporters covering the court find out about decisions the same way everybody else does — by refreshing their browsers. But the justices have returned to the courtroom for arguments, haven't they?

Yes, they have taken a different approach with arguments. After hearing them by telephone for much of the pandemic, the justices returned to the bench in October. Reporters with Supreme Court press credentials were allowed to attend and the public could listen to live-streamed audio on the court's website. It is not clear why opinions could not be announced in similar fashion.

I haven't been to the courthouse since the last argument of the current term, on April 27, when Chief Justice John Roberts grew emotional in saying farewell to a retiring colleague, Justice Stephen Breyer. But there is every reason to think that the leak, the investigation it prompted, the controversy over Justice Clarence Thomas's failure to recuse himself from a case that intersected with his wife's efforts to overturn the election and the justices' very real security concerns have made the court an unhappy place.

In remarks in May, not long after the leak, Justice Thomas reflected on how things had changed at the court since an 11-year stretch without changes in its membership before the arrival of Chief Justice Roberts in 2005. "This is not the court of that era," Justice Thomas said, adding: "We actually trusted each other. We may have been a dysfunctional family, but we were a family."

A less collegial court seems like it could be especially problematic for the three liberal justices. There are now five Republican-appointed justices who are even more conservative than Roberts. If the court is a less collaborative place, I would imagine it gives the justices in the minority — both the liberals and, in some cases, Roberts — less ability to shape decisions.

Yes, though it's possible to overstate the power of collegiality. Justices cast votes based on the strength of the relevant arguments and the desired outcomes, not on how likable their colleagues are.

The justices say there is no vote-trading across cases, and I believe them. On the other hand, there are certainly negotiations within cases. It seems tolerably clear, for instance, that Justices Breyer and Elena Kagan shifted positions in one part of the 2012 case that upheld a key portion of the Affordable Care Act to make certain they would secure Chief Justice Roberts's vote on another part.

Justices may well be prepared to narrow or reshape a draft opinion that seeks to speak for a five-justice majority in exchange for a vote. But once the author has gotten to five, the value of another potential vote plummets. It is that dynamic that must worry the court's liberals.

Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson was sworn in on Thursday. U.S. Supreme Court Via Reuters

On Thursday, Justice Breyer officially retired and helped swear in his replacement, Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson. How do the justices typically welcome a new member?

When a new justice joins the Supreme Court, tradition requires the second-most junior justice to arrange a little party. In 2006, for instance, when Justice SamuelAlito came on board, that task fell to Justice Breyer, who knew his new colleague to be a Phillies fan. Before dessert was served, Justice Breyer introduced a special guest: the Phillie Phanatic, the team's mascot.

This year, Justice Amy Coney Barrett is the second-most junior justice and will presumably be in charge of the welcoming celebration for Justice Jackson.

And now that the court is on a break until October, what do the justices usually do?

They often teach courses in exotic places. In 2012, for instance, after voting to uphold the Affordable Care Act, Chief Justice Roberts left for Malta to teach a two-week class on the history of the Supreme Court. "Malta, as you know, is an impregnable island fortress," he said. "It seemed like a good idea."

More about Adam Liptak: He started his Times career as a copy boy in 1984, fetching coffee for editors and occasionally writing. After law school and a stint at a Wall Street law firm, he returned to the paper in 1992, joining its corporate legal department before moving to the newsroom as a reporter a decade later. He reads a lot and plays a lot of poker.

More on the court

- The Supreme Court's latest term was its most conservative since 1931, as these graphics by Alicia Parlapiano demonstrate.
- Dysfunction in Congress has given the court inordinate power, Adam writes.

NEWS

The Latest

- Russia claimed to have seized Lysychansk, a prize city in Ukraine's east, and blamed Ukraine for explosions that rocked a Russian border town. Here's the latest.
- Ukrainian men volunteered to protect their homes. Now, many of these untrained soldiers are dying on the other side of the country.
- For months, Russia has pummeled Ukrainian civilians — and offered excuses to dodge responsibility.
- The investigation into Russian war crimes, by Ukrainian and international agencies, may be the largest in history.
- The rising price of fuel is hitting poorer countries especially hard, with many residents struggling to keep the lights on or cook food.

Other Big Stories

- The school police chief in Uvalde, Texas, resigned from the city council amid continued outrage over officers' slow response to the school shooting.
- A cohort of young women — many of them Christian, some of them progressive — are fighting against abortion.
- Holiday headache: Thousands of flights were delayed as travel reaches prepandemic levels.
- Tropical Storm Colin is bringing heavy rain to the Carolinas.

FROM OPINION

- Restricting abortion access will hurt rich women, too, says Elizabeth Spiers.
- The far right and far left both think women don't count, Pamela Paul argues.
- Margaret Renkl fears for American democracy. She's reclaiming the flag anyway.

The Sunday question: Is Roe's fall transforming the midterms?

Commentary's Noah Rothman has doubts, arguing that crime and inflation remain voters' top concerns. CNN's Harry Enten thinks the ruling could lift Democrats in state-level races, whose winners will shape whether abortion is legal.

Is this meant to be a complete list of available resources for pregnant individuals or parents with newborns? Families with children of any age?

There are definitely resources missing, but I'm not sure what the goal of this document is. I know Marc you mentioned wanting to share this with legislators and constituents.

DCFS worked with 211 Utah to create a website with parent resources, including crisis nurseries, respite care, etc. https://uw.org/211/family-strengthening/

Was this a legislative request? I want to be able to efficiently support you all on Tuesday, especially with the deadline. Any clarity will help me put something together, and loop in DCFS if needed for assistance. Thank you!

One program I did not see listed is the Newborn Safe Haven Program. This program is currently run out of PAE. DCFS plays a significant role once a parent leaves a newborn at a hospital (or other designated location).

Do we want to add this program to the resource list?

Good afternoon. This morning's newsletter had technical problems that made the Q. and A. hard to read, so we are sending it again.

Climate activists gathered at the Supreme Court on Thursday. Anna Rose Layden for The New York Times

An unhappy place

A few weeks ago, I asked Adam Liptak — The Times's Supreme Court correspondent — to preview the major cases that would make up the end of the court's term. Adam was prophetic, correctly forecasting every big ruling. Today, he returns to the newsletter, answering my questions about the behind-the-scenes atmosphere at the court.

David: The last few months have been among the most unusual in the Court's modern history — a major leak followed by an abortion decision that, as you've written, will change American life in major ways. Inside the court, do you think things also feel different?

Adam: The Supreme Court's building has been closed to the public since the beginning of the pandemic. Then, not long after the leak in early May of a draft of the opinion that overruled Roe v. Wade, the courthouse was surrounded by an eight-foot fence. Always cloistered and remote, the court is now impenetrable.

The release of the decision in the abortion case highlighted another way in which the court has withdrawn from public scrutiny. For unexplained reasons, the justices have stopped announcing their decisions from the bench, abandoning a tradition that is both ceremonial and illuminating. In the old days, the author of the majority opinion would give a quick and conversational summary of the ruling that could be extremely valuable for a reporter on deadline and, by extension, for members of the public trying to understand a decision.

More important yet were oral dissents, reserved for decisions that the justices in the minority believed were profoundly mistaken. In ordinary times, one or more of the three liberal justices who dissented in the abortion case would have raised their voices in protest. These days, the court makes do with posting PDFs of its decisions, robbing the occasion of ceremony, drama and insight.

The nine justices in 2021. Erin Schaff/The New York Times

So the lawyers who argued the cases and the reporters covering the court find out about decisions the same way everybody else does — by refreshing their browsers. But the justices have returned to the courtroom for arguments, haven't they?

Yes, they have taken a different approach with arguments. After hearing them by telephone for much of the pandemic, the justices returned to the bench in October. Reporters with Supreme Court press credentials were allowed to attend and the public could listen to live-streamed audio on the court's website. It is not clear why opinions could not be announced in similar fashion.

I haven't been to the courthouse since the last argument of the current term, on April 27, when Chief Justice John Roberts grew emotional in saying farewell to a retiring colleague, Justice Stephen Breyer. But there is every reason to think that the leak, the investigation it prompted, the controversy over Justice Clarence Thomas's failure to recuse himself from a case that intersected with his wife's efforts to overturn the election and the justices' very real security concerns have made the court an unhappy place.

In remarks in May, not long after the leak, Justice Thomas reflected on how things had changed at the court since an 11-year stretch without changes in its membership before the arrival of Chief Justice Roberts in 2005. "This is not the court of that era," Justice Thomas said, adding: "We actually trusted each other. We may have been a dysfunctional family, but we were a family."

A less collegial court seems like it could be especially problematic for the three liberal justices. There are now five Republican-appointed justices who are even more conservative than Roberts. If the court is a less collaborative place, I would imagine it gives the justices in the minority — both the liberals and, in some cases, Roberts — less ability to shape decisions.

Yes, though it's possible to overstate the power of collegiality. Justices cast votes based on the strength of the relevant arguments and the desired outcomes, not on how likable their colleagues are.

The justices say there is no vote-trading across cases, and I believe them. On the other hand, there are certainly negotiations within cases. It seems tolerably clear, for instance, that Justices Breyer and Elena Kagan shifted positions in one part of the 2012 case that upheld a key portion of the Affordable Care Act to make certain they would secure Chief Justice Roberts's vote on another part.

Justices may well be prepared to narrow or reshape a draft opinion that seeks to speak for a five-justice majority in exchange for a vote. But once the author has gotten to five, the value of another potential vote plummets. It is that dynamic that must worry the court's liberals.

Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson was sworn in on Thursday. U.S. Supreme Court Via Reuters

On Thursday, Justice Breyer officially retired and helped swear in his replacement, Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson. How do the justices typically welcome a new member?

When a new justice joins the Supreme Court, tradition requires the second-most junior justice to arrange a little party. In 2006, for instance, when Justice SamuelAlito came on board, that task fell to Justice Breyer, who knew his new colleague to be a Phillies fan. Before dessert was served, Justice Breyer introduced a special guest: the Phillie Phanatic, the team's mascot.

This year, Justice Amy Coney Barrett is the second-most junior justice and will presumably be in charge of the welcoming celebration for Justice Jackson.

And now that the court is on a break until October, what do the justices usually do?

They often teach courses in exotic places. In 2012, for instance, after voting to uphold the Affordable Care Act, Chief Justice Roberts left for Malta to teach a two-week class on the history of the Supreme Court. "Malta, as you know, is an impregnable island fortress," he said. "It seemed like a good idea."

More about Adam Liptak: He started his Times career as a copy boy in 1984, fetching coffee for editors and occasionally writing. After law school and a stint at a Wall Street law firm, he returned to the paper in 1992, joining its corporate legal department before moving to the newsroom as a reporter a decade later. He reads a lot and plays a lot of poker.

More on the court

- The Supreme Court's latest term was its most conservative since 1931, as these graphics by Alicia Parlapiano demonstrate.
- Dysfunction in Congress has given the court inordinate power, Adam writes.

The Morning

By Melissa Kirsch

Good morning. A chosen family can offer love and support that aren't defined by biological kinship.

[redacted]

Allie Sullberg

All in the family

Today, as we observe the Fourth of July holiday in the U.S., I'm thinking about the permutations of family, the people we invite to the cookout, the ones we'll be watching the fireworks with. Perhaps you'll be with your parents and siblings, your kids, your kids' kids. Perhaps you'll gather with close friends, with neighbors, reunite with your pandemic pod.

Last week marked the conclusion of Pride Month in the United States. Pride is broadly a celebration of L.G.B.T.Q. rights, but for many members of queer communities, it's also a celebration of their chosen family.

Chosen families are created outside the structures of (and often in place of) the traditional nuclear family. In the case of the Bickersons, a group of about 10 to 20 queer women, most of whom live near Asheville, N.C., this means raucous Thanksgivings, fishing trips and three-day birthday celebrations. It's also meant working on one another's homes, helping each other get sober and providing love and support when one of the group is ill.

"We didn't have to censor," one member of the Bickersons, Lenny Lasater, told The Times. "We were real, we were honest, and we could expect to be met with compassion and understanding."

When a family of origin is absent or unsupportive, a chosen family is essential. And even if your biological family is intact, cultivating close, supportive relationships with neighbors, friends and colleagues can provide welcome kinship, as many of us found during the pandemic. The pandemic pod was a temporary chosen family, born of necessity. People who might otherwise never have fetched groceries for one another or shared strategies for locating toilet paper, let alone discussed issues of life and death, were suddenly one another's confidantes.

Once you've known the rewards of that sort of unexpected intimacy, it seems silly that any chosen family should be temporary. While people, at varying speeds and comfort levels, move on from the most pod-intensive stages of the pandemic, is there any reason the love, the interdependence, the podsgivings shouldn't continue?

The beauty of the chosen family is that you opt into it. There's freedom in that, an opportunity to cocreate a community that suits your values. Take the Old Gays, a group of "grandfluencers" who live in a house together in the California desert and create videos for their 7.6 million TikTok followers. "As you get into old age, moving into a nursing home is what's expected, and many older people buy into that plan," said Robert Reeves, a member of the group. "What we're doing, through the strength of our friendships and our mutual support, is changing the course of the way one lives their life."

Do you have a chosen family? Tell me about it. In the meantime, enjoy the holiday.

ARTS AND IDEAS

A street-food classic's moment

There's no such thing as too much fried chicken. The variation currently taking the U.S. by storm: Taiwanese fried chicken, marinated in soy sauce, rice wine and five-spice powder.

Chefs are reimagining the street-food staple. They're tucking Taiwanese fried chicken into sandwiches and steamed buns, serving it atop sliced white bread with pickles and drenching it with sauces in acknowledgment of regional American specialties, Cathy Erway writes in The Times.

"It symbolizes Taiwanese cuisine, obviously, but for me, it brings back memories," said the chef David Kuo, who is based in Los Angeles. "Eating something with bones in front of the TV was the ultimate fun."

This was the legislative request and yes, it should be as comprehensive as possible. I told Rep. Peterson we would have it for her early this week. She made the request on June 23 so this should be ready to be send soon. Thank you!

Tracy,

The Republican women in the legislature have been discussing how we best support women prior to a pregnancy, through a pregnancy, and after they give birth. We were hoping you could help us highlight existing programs the state provides for these scenarios. We do not want to duplicate existing services and we want to amplify what already exists. If you also hav observations about where you see gaps, we would welcome your thoughts. I have copied the Republican women, and would ask you to reply all.

Thank you, we appreciate your help.

There are definitely resources missing, but I'm not sure what the goal of this document is. I know Marc you mentioned wanting to share this with legislators and constituents.

DCFS worked with 211 Utah to create a website with parent resources, including crisis nurseries, respite care, etc. https://uw.org/211/family-strengthening/

Was this a legislative request? I want to be able to efficiently support you all on Tuesday, especially with the deadline. Any clarity will help me put something together, and loop DCFS if needed for assistance. Thank you!

Do we want to add this program to the resource list?

I have also bee asked to help patients who have adverse reactions which are and sometimes are not acknowledged by their physicians. This impacts the ability to achieve effective care.

Does Utah have detailed data on adverse events happening locally? How often is the data on events and trends updated? Where can I find a detailed and updated consent form? Does the Health Department have a training program for medical professionals where they learn how to handle expected adverse events and get patients the help they need? How is the Health Department monitoring informed consent? What honest information regarding the pros and cons of these shots are being provided to the public as ha been done with other pharmaceutical products?

Thank you for your time and attention to this matter.

Thanks, Nate; I received the same email from Ms Munson Fri night and was planning to follow-up tomorrow; I think it is wise to have a consistent message. I agree Dr. Nolen would be well-suited to reply. I can follow-up with her on the two you received tomorrow, unless a different approach is recommended.

I think it would be a good idea to build a FAQ/retain an inventory of responses for reference, perhaps, in case we continue receiving these inquiries, and to ensure the Immunizations Program is aware-they may be receiving/responding as well; I will forward them on tomorrow to Rich and Cindy and let them know we are asking Dr. Nolen to repl

The New York Times
The Morning

[redacted]

July 5, 2022

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. The midterm campaigns for the House and the Senate are shaping up quite differently.

A bluer picture

The midterm polls continue to look dark for Democrats, as we explained in a newsletter last week. Inflation and Covid disruptions, as well as the normal challenges that a presidents's party faces in midterms, are weighing on the party. As a result, the Republicans are heavily favored to retake control of the House.

But the situation in the Senate looks different, my colleague Blake Hounshell points out.

There are 10 potentially competitive Senate races this year, according to the Cook Political Report, and Democrats need to win at least five of them to keep Senate control. Democrats are favored in two of those 10 races (New Hampshire and Colorado) and Cook rates another five (Arizona, Georgia, Nevada, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin) as tossups.

If Democrats keep the Senate without the House, they still would not be able to pass legislation without Republican support. But Senate control nonetheless matters. It would allow President Biden to appoint judges, Cabinet secretaries and other top officials without any Republican support, because only the Senate needs to confirm nominees.

I'm turning over the rest of today's lead item to Blake, who will preview the campaign for Senate control.

Senate Democrats are starting to see the opportunity to retain the Senate after the midterms. Tom Brenner for The New York Times

By Blake Hounshell
Editor, On Politics

When asked to share their candid thoughts about the Democrats' chances of hanging onto their House majority in the coming election, party strategists often use words that cannot be printed in a family newsletter.

But a brighter picture is coming together for Democrats on the Senate side. There, Republicans are assembling what one top strategist laughingly described as an "island of misfit toys" — a motley collection of candidates the Democratic Party hopes to portray as out of the mainstream on policy, personally compromised and too cozy with Donald Trump.

These vulnerabilities have led to a rough few weeks for Republican Senate candidates in several of the most competitive races:

- Arizona: Blake Masters, a venture capitalist who secured Trump's endorsement and is leading the polls in the Republican primary, has been criticized for saying that "Black people, frankly" are responsible for most of the gun violence in the U.S. Other Republicans have attacked him for past comments supporting "unrestricted immigration."
- Georgia: Herschel Walker, the G.O.P. nominee facing Senator Raphael Warnock, acknowledged being the parent of three previously undisclosed children. Walker regularly inveighs against absentee fathers.
- Pennsylvania: Dr. Mehmet Oz, who lived in New Jersey before announcing his Senate run, risks looking inauthentic. Oz recently misspelled the name of his new hometown on an official document.
- Nevada: Adam Laxalt, a former state attorney general, said at a pancake breakfast last month that "Roe v. Wade was always a joke." That's an unpopular stance in socially liberal Nevada, where 63 percent of adults say abortion should be mostly legal.
- Wisconsin: Senator Ron Johnson made a cameo in the Jan. 6 hearings when it emerged that, on the day of the attack, he wanted to hand-deliver a fraudulent list of electors to former Vice President Mike Pence.

Republicans counter with some politically potent arguments of their own, blaming Democrats for rising prices and saying that they have veered too far left for mainstream voters.

In Pennsylvania, for instance, Lt. Gov. John Fetterman, the Democratic Senate nominee, supports universal health care, federal marijuana legalization and criminal justice reform. Republicans have been combing through his record and his past comments to depict him as similar to Bernie Sanders, the self-described Democratic socialist.

Candidate vs. candidate

One factor working in the Democrats' favor is the fact that only a third of the Senate is up for re-election, and many races are in states that favor Democrats.

Another is the fact that Senate races can be more distinct than House races, influenced less by national trends and more by candidates' personalities. The ad budgets in Senate races can reach into the hundreds of millions of dollars, giving candidates a chance to define themselves and their opponents.

Democrats are leaning heavily on personality-driven campaigns, promoting Senator Mark Kelly in Arizona as a moderate, friendly former astronaut and Senator Catherine Cortez Masto of Nevada as a fighter for abortion rights, retail workers and families.

"Senate campaigns are candidate-versus-candidate battles," said David Bergstein, a spokesman for the Democrats' Senate campaign arm. "And while Democratic incumbents and candidates have developed their own brands, Republicans have put forward deeply, deeply flawed candidates." Bergstein isn't objective, but that analysis has some truth to it.

There are about four months until Election Day, an eternity in modern American politics. As we've seen from the Supreme Court's abortion ruling and from the explosive allegations that emerged in the latest testimony against Trump, the political environment can shift quickly.

If the election were held today, polls suggests that Democrats would be narrowly favored to retain Senate control. Republican elites are also terrified that voters might nominate Eric Greitens, the scandal-ridden former governor, for Missouri's open Senate seat, jeopardizing a seat that would otherwise be safe.

But the election, of course, is not being held today, and polls are fallible, as we saw in 2020. So there's still a great deal of uncertainty about the outcome. Biden's approval rating remains low, and inflation is the top issue on voters' minds — not the foibles of individual candidates.

For now, Democrats are pretty pleased with themselves for making lemonade out of a decidedly sour political environment.

More politics

- Conservative talk radio hosts promote false claims about election fraud, stoking mistrust about the results of the midterms.
- The U.S. ambassador to Mexico has a cozy relationship with Mexico's president. Some American officials fear it's gone too far.
- Trump has long been able to keep his intentions under wraps, but recent testimony revealed a man willing to do almost anything to hang onto power.

This has been an excerpt from On Politics, an in-depth, five-day-a-week newsletter that's available exclusively to Times subscribers. Try it out for four weeks.

Illinois Shooting

After a mass shooting in Highland Park, Ill., yesterday. Mary Mathis for The New York Times

- A gunman killed six people from a rooftop at a Fourth of July parade in Highland Park, a Chicago suburb.
- A 22-year-old man is in custody. Here's what we know.
- The attack was not the only shooting over a violent holiday weekend.
- Why does the U.S. have so many mass shootings? Mostly because people have so many guns, as a recent edition of this newsletter explained.

Abortion

- Many moderate women have been drifting away from Democrats. The party hopes that the fight for abortion rights will drive them back.

- As the U.S. grapples with the Supreme Court's decision overruling Roe v. Wade, a question lurks: Why are the risks of pregnancy rarely discussed?
- Here's the latest on which abortion laws are in effect and which are blocked.

Other Big Stories

- "I'm terrified I might be here forever": The W.N.B.A. star Brittney Griner wrote to Biden to ask for help in being freed from prison in Russia.
- The U.S. said the bullet that killed the Palestinian American journalist Shireen Abu Akleh was too damaged to trace definitively but probably came from Israeli military lines.
- Updated Covid vaccines are coming. The shots won't be available until the fall.

Opinions

Christian nationalists gutted abortion rights. American democracy is next, says Katherine Stewart.

Americans live in fear of gun violence, and fear is a breeding ground for autocracy, Patti Davis, Ronald Reagan's daughter, writes.

Beer and body slams

Craft beer and wrestling are starting to become a tag team, as crowds around the U.S. sip hazy ales and cheer on the action inside the ring.

"Spandex-clad wrestlers with stage names like Manbun Jesus, Rex Lawless and Casanova Valentine performed body slams and leaped off ropes, egging on spectators and occasionally inflicting performative injury with arm twists and traffic barrels," Joshua M. Bernstein writes in The Times about a recent event in Brooklyn.

"It's like going to the movies, but it's a real-life performance and you get to drink," one wrestler said. "What's better than that?"

There are definitely resources missing, but I'm not sure what the goal of this document is. I know Marc you mentioned wanting to share this with legislators and constituents.

Tracy,

The Republican women in the legislature have been discussing how we best support women prior to a pregnancy, through a pregnancy, and after they give birth. We were hoping yo could help us highlight existing programs the state provides for these scenarios. We do not want to duplicate existing services and we want to amplify what already exists. If you also have observations about where you see gaps, we would welcome your thoughts. I have copied the Republican women, and would ask you to reply all.

Thank you, we appreciate your help.

There are definitely resources missing, but I'm not sure what the goal of this document is. I know Marc you mentioned wanting to share this with legislators and constituents.

Top Stories: Avenues 'cottages' rezone approved despite heavy pushback

Hi all,

Thanks for the great meeting tonight! I've attached some resources here with other state legislation that may be helpful, as well as the press release for the certification board. O
Prop 109 is also worth looking at and is an interesting case study for moving forward with psilocybin assisted therapy.

For our next meeting we identified prioritizing:

-exclusion criteria. Who is NOT a good candidate
-indications for psilocybin and MDMA. Dose ranges that seem reasonable.
-familiarization with other major players: MAPS, CIIS. How much do we agree / adhere to their existing standards and guidelines?
-reflection on pathways for access
-familiarization with other existing legislation in process.

Cheers,
Ben

The New York Times
The Morning

July 6, 2022

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. We look at three scenarios for the war in Ukraine.

[redacted]

A resident of Sloviansk, Ukraine, amid a destroyed bazaar. Mauricio Lima for The New York Times

Victory, stalemate, defeat

Avril Haines, the U.S. director of national intelligence, recently outlined three plausible scenarios in Ukraine.

In the first, Russia's continuing progress in eastern Ukraine would break Ukrainians' will to fight and allow the Russian military to take over even more of the country. This outcome is Vladimir Putin's new goal after being defeated in his initial attempt to oust Ukraine's government.

In the second scenario — the most likely one, Haines said (during a public appearance in Washington last week) — Russia would dominate the east but would not be able to go much farther. The two countries would fall into a stalemate that Haines described as "a grinding struggle."

In the third scenario, Ukraine would halt Russia's advance in the east and also succeed in launching counterattacks. Ukraine has already regained some territory, especially in the southern part of the country, and some military experts expect a broader offensive soon.

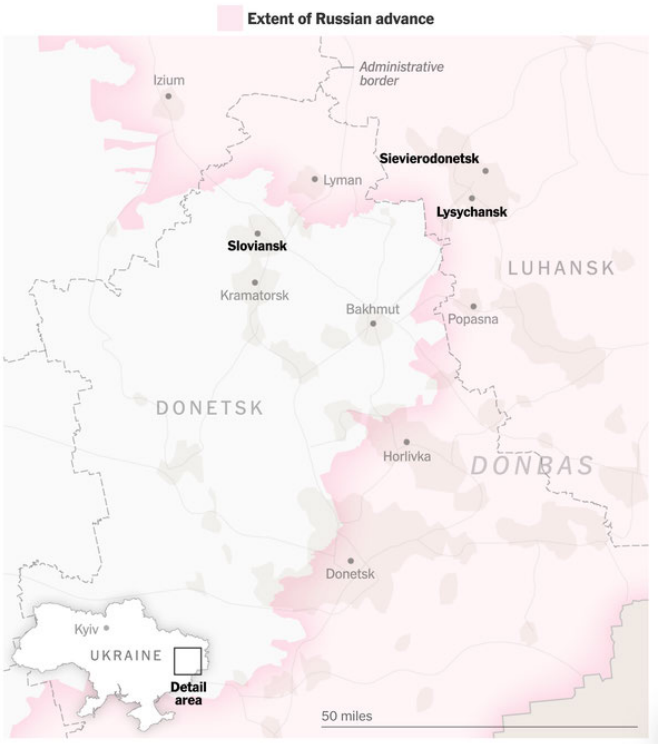
Today's newsletter provides an update on the war by examining a few questions that will help determine which of these three scenarios becomes most likely.

Temporary or permanent

Has the tide definitively turned or are Ukrainian forces about to have more success?

[redacted]

The most recent phase of the war has gone well for Russia. The eastern part of Ukraine, known as the Donbas region, has two provinces — Luhansk and Donetsk. Russia now controls virtually all of Luhansk and about 60 percent of Donetsk, according to Thomas Bullock, an analyst for Janes, a company specializing in intelligence issues.



Russian advance as of July 3. | Source: Institute for the Study of War | By Josh Holder

Yesterday, Russian forces increased their shelling near Bakhmut, a city in Donetsk that's an important Ukrainian supply hub. Russia used a similar tactic in Luhansk to clear Ukrainian forces and civilians before taking over cities.

"The Kremlin is sending the message that their overall plans haven't changed and that everything is going according to plan," Anton Troianovski, The Times's Moscow bureau chief, said. In a sign of confidence in the Kremlin, Russian media have recently been reporting plans for holding referendums in the captured territories and formally annexing them, Anton added.

But Ukraine does continue to benefit from an influx of sophisticated weapons from the West. And there is some reason to wonder whether Ukrainian troops will soon be able to make better use of those weapons than they have so far.

In the initial phase of the war, the U.S., E.U. and other Ukrainian allies were sending relatively simple weapons, like the shoulder-fired missile systems known as Javelins. Those weapons helped Ukraine defend territory from small groups of Russian forces. More recently, the West has sent more powerful artillery — like the HIMARS, a truck-based rocket system — meant to help Ukraine withstand the massive buildup of Russian troops in the east.

Training somebody to use a Javelin can take just a few hours, my colleague Julian Barnes points out. Training troops to use a HIMARS can take days or weeks — as does transporting them to the battlefield. In coming weeks, Julian said he would be watching to see whether Ukraine would be able to use its growing supply of HIMARS to inflict more damage on Russian troops.

No Russian draft

Is Russia running out of troops?

Two recent developments have offered reason to wonder. First, Russia has had to turn to outside troops — like those from the Wagner Group, a private company — to replenish their units, as my colleague Thomas Gibbons-Neff explained in his recent analysis of the war. Second, Putin ordered some of the troops involved in recent victories in the Donbas region to rest, suggesting that those units were exhausted.

"American officials and outside analysts both agree if Russia wants to move beyond the Donbas, they will need to take a step they have been unwilling to do: a mass mobilization," Julian said. "Russia will need to conduct a military draft, recall soldiers who previously served and take politically painful steps to rebuild their force. So far, Putin has been unwilling to do so."

Russia has many more resources than Ukraine, including soldiers and weapons. But Russia's resources do have limits, especially if Putin is unwilling to spend political capital on a mass mobilization.

These limits raise the prospect that Ukraine can hold Russia's gains to the east and slowly exhaust Russian troops with counterattacks and internal resistance — as well as Western economic sanctions. That situation, in turn, could lead Putin to accept an eventual cease-fire that leaves most of Ukraine intact.

"That will not be a perfect victory," Julian said, "but it might be realistic."

Shell shock

But is Ukraine running out of troops even faster?

Both sides appear to be suffering a similarly high rate of casualties — hundreds per day. As a result, Ukraine has had to rely increasingly on troops with little training.

The surviving troops are also at risk of psychological damage. The method of fighting in the east — an unceasing exchange of artillery — resembles the trench warfare of World War I, which gave rise to the term “shell shock,” my colleague Thomas notes.

“During the artillery shelling, all you can do is lay in the shelter and wait for the shelling to end,” one Ukrainian commander told The Times. “Some people get mentally damaged because of such shelling. They are found to be psychologically not ready for whatever they encounter.”

As uncertain as the future may be in Ukraine, the present is clearly dire, as Haines acknowledged when outlining the three scenarios last week. “In short,” she said, “the picture remains pretty grim.”

Related commentary: “The best way to prevent the next war is to defeat him in this one,” The Economist magazine writes, referring to Putin.

Fashion's shock factor

Clothing used to have the ability to jolt viewers with concepts that today feel quaint, like a flash of flesh or an absurd idea. At this summer's Paris couture shows, fashion houses have attempted to prove that their industry still has the ability to shock.

One effort has stood out, writes Vanessa Friedman, The Times's chief fashion critic: Iris van Herpen, whose use of 3-D printers and laser cutters make her clothes look like organic life-forms. "They rewrite the physics of dress and reimagine the body without erasing it, not in a cartoonish way but in an utterly convincing way," Vanessa writes.

Media question: Regarding a medical professional who is supposed to verify that a rape has been reported to police before performing an abortion... Has there been any uniform, state-wide guidance issued to medical professionals and law enforcement from the department regarding how the verification process should work? The law currently in effect has this same requirement, KSL says. So they are moving forward with some reporting on this today.

Dear Erik Christensen;

My name is Laura Munson. I am an RN in Utah. I have questions regarding data on adverse reactions to the different Covid Vaccines. Many patients want to know which reactions are most likely in each of the options, the prevalence of such reactions per age group and underlying patient medical conditions, including pregnancy. I have also been asked to help patients who have adverse reactions which are and sometimes are not acknowledged by their physicians. This impacts the ability to achieve effective care.

Does Utah have detailed data on adverse events happening locally? How often is the data on events and trends updated? Where can I find a detailed and updated consent form? Does the Health Department have a training program for medical professionals where they learn how to handle expected adverse events and get patients the help they need? How is the Health Department monitoring informed consent? What honest information regarding the pros and cons of these shots are being provided to the public as has been done with other pharmaceutical products?

Thank you for your time and attention to this matter.

Sincerely,
Laura Munson RN

The New York Times
The Morning

July 7, 2022

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. The people who claim widespread election fraud have made little effort to put together a logical argument.

Representative Marjorie Taylor Greene with a "Stop the Steal" face mask last year. Anna Moneymaker for The New York Times

Internal inconsistencies

More than 100 Republican nominees for statewide office or Congress this year have falsely claimed that election fraud helped defeat Donald Trump in 2020. Almost 150 members of Congress — more than half of the Republicans serving there — went so far as to vote to overturn the 2020 election result.

These claims of election fraud have become the mainstream Republican position. In some places, winning a nomination virtually requires making such statements. In other places, the claims appear to carry little political cost, at least in the primaries. And very few elected Republicans have been willing to denounce the falsehoods.

Given the prominence of the issue, it's jarring to see how little effort its proponents have put into making an argument on behalf of their claims. They have offered no good evidence, because there is not any. They have also failed to offer even a logically consistent argument. Consider:

If anything, the rare examples of cheating from 2020 tend to involve Trump supporters. Prosecutors charged three registered Republicans living at The Villages, a Florida retirement community, with voting more than once in the presidential election. One of them has since pleaded guilty: he both voted in Florida and cast an absentee ballot in Michigan.

Trump and his allies have never explained how other Republicans could have done so well if fraud were widespread. In the 2020 House elections, Republicans gained 14 seats. In the Senate, Democrats did win a 50-50 split, but the party lost races in Maine, Montana and North Carolina that it had hoped to win. In the 2021 elections, Republicans did well again, winning the governor's race in Virginia. It's hardly a picture consistent with Democratic election rigging.

During the 2022 primaries, most Republican candidates have accepted the results without claiming fraud. That's been true even of candidates who lost their races, as my colleagues Reid Epstein and Nick Corasaniti have reported. Examples include Representative Madison Cawthorn in North Carolina; Representative Mo Brooks in the Senate primary in Alabama; and two Trump-backed candidates in Georgia. When Trump supporters lose to other Republicans, they generally accept defeat.

Loyalty, not logic

Of course, the claims of voter fraud are not going away. If Trump runs again, he will probably allege cheating in any election that he loses. At least some other Republicans now seem likely to do the same, perhaps in response to close or unexpected losses in 2022.

A "Stop the Steal" protester in 2020. Anna Moneymaker for The New York Times

But the lack of any substantive argument to back up these claims suggests that even some of the people making them may not believe them. The claims have instead become a way for many Republicans to show loyalty to their party and to signal that they consider Democrats to be inherently illegitimate holders of power.

Sometimes, these signals are tinged with racism, as Brandon Tensley of CNN has noted: The fraud claims often involve cities with heavily Black or Latino populations, like Detroit, Philadelphia and Milwaukee. Rudy Giuliani, for example, alleged — without any evidence — that residents of Camden, N.J. (roughly 90 percent of whom are Black or Latino) illegally vote in Philadelphia (which, unlike Camden, is in a swing state). In Alabama, Brooks has said fraud occurs largely in Birmingham and other heavily Democratic cities.

The spread of such lies has left many historians and political scientists anxious about the future of American democracy. There is no shortage of subjects on which Democrats and Republicans can reasonably — even passionately or angrily — disagree: How much should the country restrict abortion? What about gun use? Or immigration? How high should taxes or government benefits be?

All those issues are valid matters of debate in a democracy. When one side loses a struggle, it can look for ways to regroup and win the next one.

But a concerted campaign to delegitimize political opponents — through falsehoods and without much of an attempt at logical argument — is something quite different. It's an attempt not to win a democratic contest but to avoid one.

Pharmacists have be added to the EUA as eligible prescribers for paxlovid. Can they qualify for reimbursement under the Medicaid COVID uninsured program for the evaluation required to prescribe? Can they qualify for the dispensing fees?

Jennifer Strohecker, 2022-07-07 11:57:34
Yes

Jennifer Strohecker, 2022-07-07 11:57:43
We are setting up our policy now

Michelle Hofmann (DHHS), 2022-07-07 11:58:00
What about for Medicaid recipients?

Jennifer Strohecker, 2022-07-07 11:59:21
Oh i see what you are asking for. Can they prescribe... yes. Do they get paid for the evaluation? We are researching which codes to use and will consider opening them (an will be attending the call tomorrow to get further guidance).

Jennifer Strohecker, 2022-07-07 11:59:33
Any med dispensed has a dispensing fee. Yes

Jennifer Strohecker, 2022-07-07 12:00:02
Not sure what you mean about Medicaid recipients... can they GET the drug from a pharmacist under this new EUA?

Michelle Hofmann (DHHS), 2022-07-07 12:02:32
rmiacists are eligible for if they evaluate and treat. For the unininsured it sounds like you are working on maybe bringing them into the uninsured program. For private insurers, I am less clear if they can be reimbursed for the evaluation. I am wondering if they can get reimbursed for evaluating Medicaid recipients whether the recipient ends up qualifying or not.

Pharmacists!

Michelle Hofmann (DHHS), 2022-07-07 12:10:27
I will see if I can determine that.

Jennifer Strohecker, 2022-07-07 12:10:32
I think we will get guidance on the call tomorrow

Good morning. We look at where most of America's gun violence happens.

Everyday violence

Since a gunman killed seven people at a Chicago suburb's July 4 parade, more than 160 people have died from other gun homicides across the country. In Chicago alone, at least 10 people were killed in multiple shootings during the holiday weekend.

These everyday killings received far less attention than the mass murder at the parade. But they are the standard for American gun violence: More than 95 percent of gun homicides this year have been shootings with one to three victims.

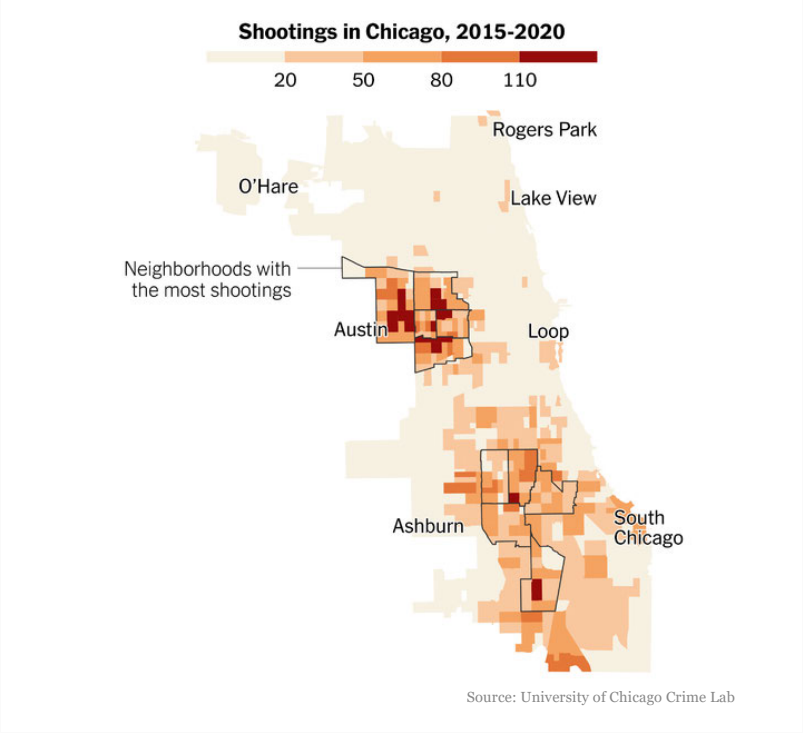
[redacted]

Today, we want to help you understand where and why most everyday gun violence happens. We're going to focus on Chicago, because it has one of the country's highest murder rates and because a local group — the University of Chicago Crime Lab — keeps detailed data. But the trends in Chicago are also present in many other places.

One crucial point is that violence tends to be highly concentrated: A small sliver of blocks — just 4 percent in Chicago, for example — can account for a majority of shootings in a city or a county.

Many of the people in these blocks live in terror. The sound of gunshots is common, sometimes coming multiple times a day. Parents worry that their kids could be next, and young people fear for their own lives. As Jomarria Vaughn, a 24-year-old Chicagoan, told this newsletter: "I'm scared. I have my guard up all day."

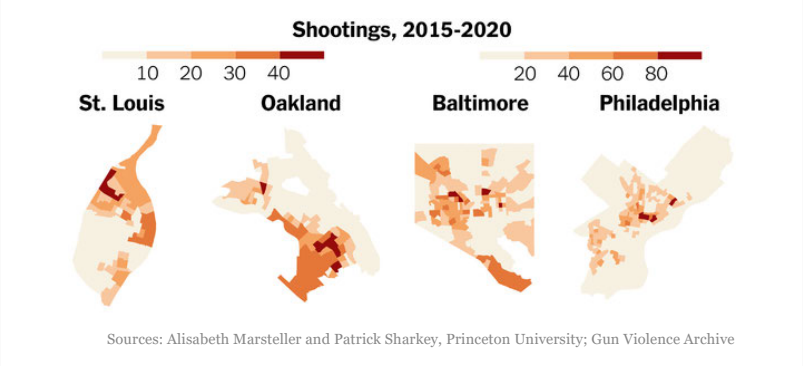
This map of shootings in Chicago shows the concentration. Shootings are rare in much of the city, particularly on the wealthier North Side, but not on the poorer West and South Sides.



Source: University of Chicago Crime Lab

This concentration is not exclusive to Chicago. Across the U.S., neighborhoods that contained just 1.5 percent of the population accounted for 26 percent of gun homicides, a 2017 analysis by The Guardian found.

Here is a look at four other cities, with data provided by the Princeton University researchers Alisabeth Marsteller and Patrick Sharkey:

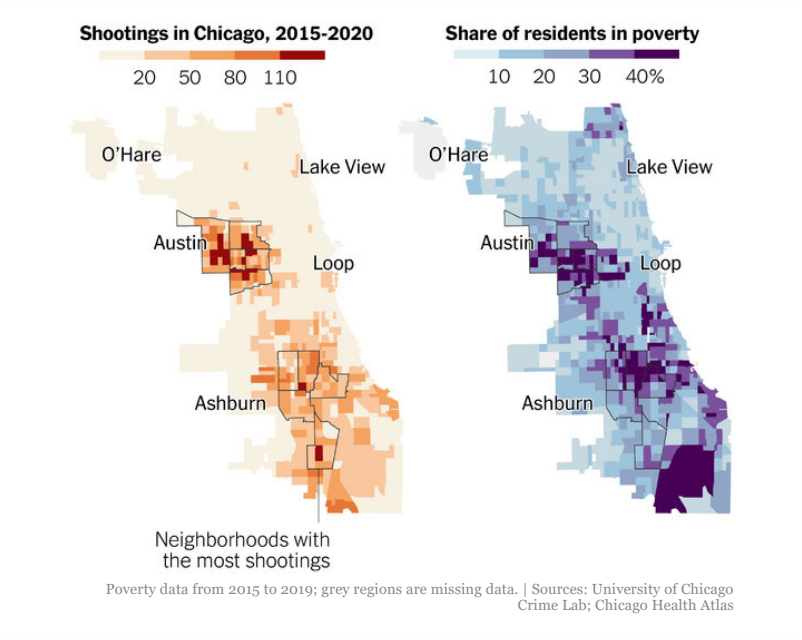


Sources: Alisabeth Marsteller and Patrick Sharkey, Princeton University; Gun Violence Archive

Poverty and violence

There are several factors behind the concentration of violence. A major one is poverty.

In Chicago, violence and poverty closely overlap, as these maps demonstrate:



Poverty data from 2015 to 2019; grey regions are missing data. | Sources: University of Chicago Crime Lab; Chicago Health Atlas

Experts have long debated why violence and poverty are linked. Is it something specific to poverty, such as insufficient housing or jobs? Is it the environment that poverty fosters, in which people are stressed and desperate — and more likely to act out?

One theory, cited by Sharkey, blames the breakdown of "collective efficacy." That might sound academic, but the concept is straightforward: When society's institutions have unraveled, people feel that they are on their own. They are then less likely to watch over one another or come together to address common interests.

By reducing social trust, concentrated poverty hurts communities' ability to enforce norms against violent behavior. And when people are left unchecked and feel they have nothing to lose, they are more likely to take extreme measures, such as violence, to solve their problems.

The past few years may help you understand this dynamic even if you're not poor. Many Americans felt a hit to their own collective efficacy because of the Covid pandemic, George Floyd's murder and its aftermath, and the polarized political atmosphere. Sure enough, murders and other violent crimes increased during this period.

A spiral downward

It is difficult to talk about gun violence without talking about race, because Black Americans are most likely to be the victims of shootings. Poverty explains part of the disparity, since Black people are more likely to be poor. But individual poverty is not the full explanation.

Black Americans are also less likely to live in communities with strong institutional support. Exclusionary housing policies and discrimination have pushed Black Americans into segregated neighborhoods. Both governments and the private sector then neglected these neighborhoods, leaving people without good schools, banks, grocery stores and institutions.

This kind of economic neglect, which experts refer to as disinvestment, fosters violence. These maps show the correlation in Chicago between shootings and a lack of banks:

"Many" represents at least a third of the population. | Sources: University of Chicago Crime Lab; Bank Branch Locator

The relationship also goes the other way, Roseanna Ander, executive director of the Crime Lab, told us: Violence can perpetuate disinvestment. Business owners do not want their shops, restaurants and warehouses in violent neighborhoods. People do not want to live in places where gunshots are fired daily. And governments shift resources away from places that officials deem lost causes. It is a vicious cycle.

A greater understanding of this spiral in recent years has driven activists and policymakers to address not just violence itself but its root causes, too. The Chicago mayor's office told us it had adopted a broader approach to combating violence, focused on boosting businesses, local clubs, mental health care and other social supports, on top of traditional policing work. As this newsletter has explained before, most experts support an all-of-the-above strategy to crime, involving both the police and alternative approaches.

But this work is difficult and, even if it succeeds, takes money and time — years or decades to rebuild long-neglected communities. Until then, the people in these neighborhoods will likely suffer the worst of American gun violence.

The future of opera

Yuval Sharon, 42, is a visionary opera director who has worked around the world and who won a MacArthur Foundation "genius" grant in 2017. His boldest venture to date may be his decision to become the artistic director of Detroit Opera, Mark Binelli writes in The Times Magazine: "Sharon has already radically elevated Detroit Opera's status in the larger cultural ecosystem."

In April, Sharon directed "La Bohème" for Detroit Opera, and he wasn't interested in putting it on in a traditional way. His version unfolded in reverse order, opening with Act IV, in which Mimì dies, and ending with Act I, in which she and her lover, Rodolfo, first meet.

"Detroit has died and been reborn so many times that Sharon's reworking of the classic felt like an oblique nod to the city," Mark writes. It also helps show what modern opera can be. "The future of American opera unfolding in Detroit was not a plot twist I saw coming," Mark writes.

Dr. Hofmann -

We have put together information related to the pharmacist dispensing of emergency contraception (Ella) and depo (overview, sample protocols and orders) in this google drive: [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted] Top Stories: Avenues 'cottages' rezone approved despite heavy pushback

Discussion points:

The current language of both SB184 (standing order) and HB178 (Pharmacist prescribing) define "self-administered hormonal contraceptives" as follows: "Self-administered hormonal contraceptive includes an oral hormonal contraceptive, a hormonal vaginal ring, and a hormonal contraceptive patch."

Emergency Contraception - The Ella website notes that Ella is a progesterone agonist/antagonist emergency contraceptive.

DEPO - Subcutaneous depot medroxyprogesterone acetate (DMPA-SC): The states that we identified as offering DMPA through pharmacies do so through pharmacist administration of the injection. The CDC recommends allowing for self-administration, but note: "Although the FDA label states that DMPA-SC is only to be administered by a healthcare professional, health care providers might prescribe an FDA-approved drug for off-label use (including administering a drug in a different way, such as self-administration) when medically indicated, as determined by the health care provider, for their patient."

The language in current Utah code may be contradictory to adding either the injectable or Ella to the standing order or allowing for pharmacist prescribing. Your clinical/medical insight is needed to determine if either fits the definition of "self administered hormonal contraceptive".

Please let us know if you need any additional information or have questions.

Thank you,
Laurie

Hello Laurie and Lynne, I have no doubt you all, like us, have be caught in the whirlwind of the last week with the SCOTUS decision.

I wanted to follow up on our last conversation and to share the presentation that we prepared to present to the board of pharmacy. I have also forwarded the correspondence with Rep. Ray Ward (below) clarifying the appropriateness of including oral Emergency Contraception in the interpretation of self-administered, hormonal contraception in the standing order.

I have also shared our community facing document on EC in English, we have a Spanish version available as well-to support any updates you may want to include in the UDOH website.

Please let me know if there are additional resources we share and ways we can support each other.

Take care,

Hello Jessica and Chris,

Thanks for sending me over that email.

I agree with what you have laid out here and that the intent of the bill was to include all self-administered hormonal contraceptive medications, which would then include oral contraception that can be taken as emergency contraception. Given the safety and efficacy of both oral levonorgestrel and ulipristal acetate (a.k.a Ella), it is an appropriate interpretation of the code to include both of these as self-administered hormonal contraception.

I hope this is helpful and happy to answer any additional questions that might come up.

Subject: EC as "self-administered, hormonal contraception"

Dear Representative Ward, MD,
Thank you for all you have done to support contraceptive access in Utah. As our ASCENT Center works to ensure all Utahns have access to contraception, pharmacies and clini remain vital points of access for individuals seeking contraception. It is our hope to keep pharmacists, providers, and administrators up-to-date with best practices and current clinical guidelines.

Under the tenants of the “Pharmacy Practice Act,” Utah Code Section 58-17b-101, et seq. (the “Act”), the “Family Planning Access Act,” Utah Code Section 26-62-101, et seq. (th “FPAA”) and Utah Administrative Code R433-200 (the “Rule”) pharmacists are able to dispense "self-administered hormonal contraceptives."

A question that has been brought to our attention is whether oral emergency contraceptives (EC), which includes oral levonorgestrel and oral ulipristal acetate fall into the catego of "self-administered hormonal contraceptives." From a scientific and pharmacological standpoint, the answer is "yes," as these are oral hormonal medications that are self-administered for contraceptive purposes. and do not interfere with an existing pregnancy.

In hopes that we can stay clear and consistent in our communication we would like to confirm this interpretation and ensure that this in inline with the intent of the original legislation. I have cc'd Chris Sheared, who is on the Board of Pharmacy and can share with his colleagues who might be interested as well.

Thank you again for all your work as a clinician-policymaker,

Jess Sanders and the ASCENT team

The Morning

July 9, 2022

By Melissa Kirsch

Good morning. You need not travel far to experience the delights of summer.

Rosie Barker

Close to home

A friend texted me last weekend from a departure lounge in Kennedy Airport. “Um three hours and counting …” she wrote of her L.A.-bound flight’s delay.

She’d been expecting it, given the scheduling snarls and trip cancellations that have plagued travelers lately. But the reality was frustrating nonetheless: precious hours of a long-awaited vacation spent browsing trail mix selections in Hudson News, searching the terminal for a charging station.

I congratulated myself for not planning a big trip over the holiday, opting for the beach close to home. I used an app to find the cheapest gas I could, and packed lunch instead of buying it. It wasn’t a far-flung adventure, but it was easy and enjoyable nonetheless.

If you find yourself grounded by air travel complications or loath to venture too far from home because of the price of gasoline or unpredictable variants, you still have options. My colleagues on the Travel desk have recommendations for some pretty excellent trips within 100 miles of major cities.

In Bellingham, Wash., 90 miles from Seattle, one can spend a few days hiking, biking and feasting on oysters. Outside Atlanta, a weekend of wine tasting in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains beckons. There are hidden spots in Chicagoland’s suburbs that are perfect for camping. In Ojai, “an electromagnetic vortex of good energy” 80 miles from Los Angeles, you’ll find otherworldly sunsets and the world’s largest outdoor bookstore.

In Brooklyn, where I live, $2.75 will get you a ticket on NYC Ferry, whose six daily routes service all five boroughs and, through Sept. 11, Governors Island (where you can glamp overnight, if you’d like).

Earlier in the pandemic, I wrote a newsletter for The Times about how to lead a full and cultured life at home, or close to it. I'd thought that, as pandemic restrictions eased, there'd be less need for such counsel, and dreamed that the world would fling open its gates and all of us, too-long cooped-up, would come cartwheeling through. Continuing complications hadn't figured into the fantasy.

Something I realized, thinking and writing for a year and a half about what to do while you're at home, is that these activities don't have to be consolation prizes. There's as much wonder and delight to be found nearby as there is at the other end of a long plane trip. You don't have to look far to find it.

Last weekend, at the beach, I watched a bunch of children stand agape as four laughing gulls hovered a few feet above them for what felt like minutes. A group of friends downed tequila shots then cranked up Beyoncé's "Break My Soul" and danced. The air was warm but it was breezy. There was hardly any traffic on the drive home.

CULTURE CALENDAR

By Gilbert Cruz
Culture Editor

📺 "Better Call Saul" (July 11): I didn't put much stock in this show. How could a prequel (not even a sequel, a prequel!) to one of the most gripping and addictive shows of the modern era feel like anything but a cynical attempt to keep the “Breaking Bad” product on the streets. But as “Saul” begins its final six-episode run, it’s a pleasure to admit that the series has carved out its own unique space in the TV pantheon.

🎧 “Love, Damini,” Burna Boy (Out now): New backyard barbecue music alert! On the sixth album from the Nigerian superstar and purveyor of Afrofusion, the “surfaces are glossy and reassuring,” our pop critic Jon Pareles writes, and “the inner workings are slyly playful.”

“Where the Crawdads Sing” (July 15): Daisy Edgar-Jones, of Hulu’s “Normal People” (that’s the one about sexy, sad young Irish people) stars in another book adaptation. The 2018 novel “Crawdads” is, as we wrote, a “combination of murder mystery, lush nature writing, romance and a coming-of-age survival story.” That’s far from franchise fare, but it arrives with its own robust fanbase, having dominated the best-seller list for years.

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Jessica Emily Marx for The New York Times

By Melissa Clark

Classic French Toast

Most of the year, maple syrup and loads of butter are the ideal toppings for French toast. But now, at the height of berry season, a handful of strawberries, blackberries or raspberries stirred into the syrup lend a dash of summery color and plenty of verve. Feel free to use any wilting, weeping berries at the back of the fridge; their sweet juices will be absorbed by syrup and butter and suffuse every bite. Julia Moskin’s wonderful classic French toast recipe calls for only briefly dipping slices of fresh bread like challah or brioche into the custard, so you don’t need to plan for hourslong soaking. When your oozing berries are calling, a speedy batch of French toast is the best reply.

Ons Jabeur vs. Elena Rybakina, Wimbledon final: Jabeur, a native of Tunisia, is the first Arab or African woman to reach a Grand Slam singles final in the modern era. Like Roger Federer, to whom she has long been compared, Jabeur excels at a range of shots: approaches, overhead smashes, deft drop volleys. Her opponent, Elena Rybakina, was born in Moscow but a few years ago switched her home country to Kazakhstan — which has allowed her to get around Wimbledon's ban on Russian athletes, imposed after the invasion of Ukraine. 9 a.m. Eastern today, ESPN.

Jen and I spoke today and we can pull Medicaid data to confirm the exceedingly low uptake of contraceptive prescribing by pharmacists. We will continue to flesh out policy levers that might be able to be pulled. This may be something Krisann could help us more rapidly get our heads around if she has capacity.

The Morning

By Ian Prasad Philbrick

Good morning. A pro-Trump congresswoman's victory in a historically Democratic region of Texas helps explain why Latino voters are shifting rightward.

[redacted]

Representative Mayra Flores at the Capitol after being sworn in last month. Shuran Huang for The New York Times

The G.O.P.'s 'wildest dream'

Latino voters have recently shifted toward the Republican Party. Most still vote for Democrats, but the margin has shrunk.

One sign of the shift is in Texas' majority-Latino 34th Congressional District, which recently elected Mayra Flores, a conservative Republican, to serve out the remaining term of a Democrat who resigned in March. To put Flores's election in context of the larger shift, today's newsletter talks with Jennifer Medina, a Times reporter who writes about national politics and profiled Flores this week.

Ian: How did you meet Flores?

Jennifer: I met her almost a year and a half ago when I went to the Rio Grande Valley, in South Texas, to try to understand why Latino voters there swung toward Donald Trump in 2020. I came across a whole group of women who drove a lot of the change. They'd organized "Trump Trains" and done Hispanic outreach for the Republican Party. A lot of them, including Flores, were married to Border Patrol agents and used that as the source of their energy and support for Trump.

Flores won her special election last month pretty easily, despite being a first-time candidate running in a historically Democratic district. She seems to symbolize Republican hopes that Latinos will increasingly support the party. How was she received in Washington?

She was treated like a rock star. After her swearing-in, she did a press conference with Kevin McCarthy and other Republicans. The placard on the lectern said "Historic." Republicans have been criticized for being anti-immigrant, obviously, and here's a woman who not only is an immigrant but who worked in the fields alongside her parents as a farmworker.

Flores has described herself as Democrats' worst nightmare, but she was also Republicans' wildest dream. She's the first Mexican-born woman in Congress, and the Republican Party completely embraced her.

Flores has voiced conspiratorial views, suggesting that the Jan. 6 attack was a "setup." You repeatedly asked her whether President Biden won the 2020 election, and she kept responding that he was "the worst president." Was that awkward?

I don't think it was a surprise to her that I asked. I think she'd been asked that question before, knew what she wanted to say and stuck to the script. I gave her multiple opportunities to clarify. I actually said, "I'm not trying to be cute, I'm really trying to understand." She said, "That's my statement."

Flores told you she voted for Barack Obama in 2008, but grew disillusioned with Democrats and enthusiastically backed Trump. Have voters in her district similarly shifted?

Flores won a low-turnout election, so we're talking about a smallish slice of voters. But, almost by definition, she received support from people who voted Democrat in the past.

I met a retired couple who, unlike many of her most ardent supporters, were devoted Catholics, not evangelicals. They were warm and inviting, and I sat on their couch for an hour listening to their political trajectory. They had voted for Hillary Clinton in 2016 and considered themselves moderates. But the husband, especially, had started to feel like undocumented immigrants were getting welfare benefits that they shouldn't, and that Democrats were increasingly hostile to anybody who was anti-abortion. They voted for Trump in 2020 and felt like Flores represented what they wanted to see: somebody fed up with Democrats and willing to criticize them loudly.

You describe Flores's district, which borders Mexico, as "politically liberal yet culturally conservative." What does that mean?

It's a place where law enforcement is revered. For a lot of people, law enforcement — not only the police, but also the Border Patrol and sheriffs — is the best path to the middle class. Churches are crowded on Sundays. A lot of small evangelical churches have opened up and are growing. You see American flags on the backs of cars or in front of houses and businesses.

People are connected to their families. They get together often. Many residents see those ideals reflected more in the Republican Party than in the Democratic Party. Flores's slogan — "God, family, country" — spoke to a lot of voters.

Immigration seems like a complex issue there. Flores is an immigrant who campaigned on border security, and many of her voters have family who at some point crossed the border.

A lot of them trace their ancestry back to Mexico. The border is in their everyday lives. To hear Flores tell it, the border is in disarray, though not everybody in her district thinks that way. People who support her and support Trump make a big distinction between legal and illegal immigration. They say a version of, "Nobody who's coming in now is doing it the right way. People should get in line and do it the way we did it."

They also couch their support for closing the border or putting up a border wall in terms of human trafficking, drugs and gangs. There's a sense that Mexico and the border are more dangerous now. But a lot of people I talked to, including Republicans, have empathy for immigrants. Even if they despise current policy, there's a notion of "We want to help them."

Latino voters' rightward shift isn't just a South Texas phenomenon. What other factors play a role nationally?

This is the question that I'm constantly trying to figure out. You can't overgeneralize. What's true about Mexican Americans in the Rio Grande Valley may not be true about Latino voters in New Mexico, South Florida, Virginia or Pennsylvania. In Florida, there's anti-socialism sentiment. The border is an issue elsewhere.

But I think a lot of it has to do with religion. A growing segment of Hispanic evangelicals feels much more tied to the evangelical movement than to any sort of Latino political identity.

SUBJECT: The Morning: Our first poll of the 2022 midterms

The New York Times
The Morning

July 11, 2022

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. The Times has released its first poll of the 2022 midterm cycle.

[redacted]

Dueling weaknesses

President Biden after a trip to Cleveland last week. Haiyun Jiang/The New York Times

In 2016, when The New York Times's pollsters asked Americans whether they planned to vote for Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump, more than 10 percent said they would not support either one. They said that they would instead vote for a third-party candidate or not vote at all.

Four years later, the situation was different. Joe Biden was a more popular nominee than Clinton had been, while some of Trump's skeptics had come around to supporting him. Less than 5 percent of voters told pollsters that they didn't plan to vote for either major party nominee.

This morning, The Times is releasing its first poll of the 2022 midterm campaign. And one of the main messages is that Americans again seem to be as dissatisfied with the leading candidates as they were in 2016. "This felt like a poll from 2016, not from 2020," Nate Cohn, The Times's chief political analyst, told me.

[redacted]

Source: New York Times/Sienna College | By Marco Hernandez

The poll included a question about whether people would vote for Biden or Trump in 2024 if the two ended up being the nominees again. The question did not present any options other than Biden and Trump — yet 10 percent of respondents volunteered that they did not plan to support either one. The share was even higher among voters under 35 and lower among older voters.

Similarly unpopular

This level of dissatisfaction is a reflection of the huge, dueling weaknesses of the two parties.

The Democratic Party has two core problems. First, Biden's job approval rating is only 33 percent (similar to Trump's worst ratings during his presidency), partly because of frustration over inflation and the continuing disruptions to daily life stemming from the pandemic. Second, Democrats' priorities appear out of step with those of most Americans.

Congressional Democrats have spent much of the past year bickering, with a small number of moderates blocking legislation that would reduce drug prices, address climate change and take other popular steps. Many Democrats — both politicians and voters, especially on the party's left flank — also seem more focused on divisive cultural issues than on most Americans' everyday concerns, like inflation.

"The left has a set of priorities that is just different from the rest of the country's," Nate said. "Liberals care more about abortion and guns than about the economy. Conservative concerns are much more in line with the rest of the country."

On the other hand, Nate points out, "Republicans have serious problems of their own."

Trump remains the party's dominant figure — and he is roughly as unpopular as Biden. The two men's personal favorability ratings are identical in the Times poll: 39 percent. Many voters, including independents and a noticeable minority of Republicans, are offended by the events of Jan. 6 and Trump's role in them.

Republicans also face some vulnerabilities from the recent Supreme Court decisions. The court has issued aggressive rulings, including overturning Roe v. Wade, that take policy to the right of public opinion on some of the same issues where many Democrats are to the left of it.

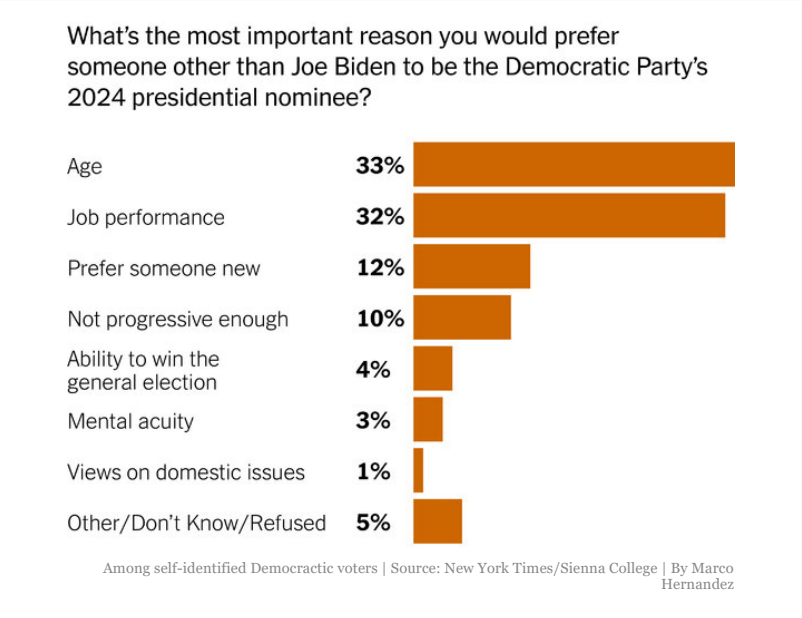
If not Biden ...

All of this leads to a remarkable combination of findings from the poll. Biden looks like the weakest incumbent president in decades; 61 percent of Democrats said they hoped somebody else would be the party's 2024 nominee, with most of them citing either Biden's age or performance. Yet, when all voters were asked to choose between Biden and Trump in a hypothetical matchup, Biden nonetheless held a small lead over Trump, 44 percent to 41 percent.



Other polls — by YouGov and Harris, for example — suggest Biden would fare better against Trump than Vice President Kamala Harris would. These comparisons are a reminder that Biden won the nomination in 2020 for a reason: He is one of the few nationally prominent Democrats who doesn't seem too liberal to many swing voters. Biden, in short, is a wounded incumbent in a party without obviously stronger alternatives.

There is still a long time between now and the 2024 election, of course. Perhaps Biden's standing will improve, or another Democrat — one who wins a tough race this year, for instance, like Stacey Abrams or Senator Raphael Warnock in Georgia — will emerge as a possibility. Perhaps Ron DeSantis, Mike Pence or another Republican will defeat Trump for the nomination. Perhaps Biden or Trump (or both) will choose not to run.

The level of voter dissatisfaction also raises the possibility that a third-party candidate could attract enough support to influence the outcome, Nate adds.

For now, though, each party's biggest strength appears to be the weakness of its opponent.

Related: My colleague Shane Goldmacher has more details and analysis on Biden's approval rating. In the coming days, The Times will be releasing other results from the poll, including on the Republican Party, the midterm races and more.

Vanessa Braganza's decoding process. Tom Jamieson for The New York Times

A decoded cipher

A scholar claims she has uncovered a hidden message from Catherine of Aragon, the first of Henry VIII's eight wives, Jennifer Schuessler writes in The Times.

The scholar, Vanessa Braganza, became fascinated with the sketch of a pendant that featured a dense tangle of letters. Using a process akin to "early modern Wordle," Braganza says, she deciphered the image, which spells out the names of Henry and Catherine.

What makes it particularly interesting, Braganza argues, is that the pendant was likely commissioned not by the king, but by Catherine herself, as a way of asserting her place in history as Henry was preparing to divorce her. "It really helps us understand Catherine as a really defiant figure," she says.

The Morning

July 12, 2022

SUPPORTED BY Airtable

By David Leonhardt

Good morning. On the day of his funeral service, we consider the full legacy of Shinzo Abe.

A tribute to Shinzo Abe, Japan's longest-serving prime minister. Kimimasa Mayama/EPA, via Shutterstock

A complex nationalist

Shinzo Abe could sometimes look like yet another one of the world's modern breed of nationalist leaders, alongside Viktor Orban in Hungary, Vladimir Putin in Russia, Xi Jinping in China and Donald Trump in the U.S.

Abe came from a family of Japanese nationalist politicians, including a grandfather whom the U.S. accused of war crimes during World War II. Abe himself downplayed Japan's wartime atrocities and spoke of the importance of patriotism and "traditional values." Above all, he pushed his country to shed its post-1945 pacifism and become more militaristic.

Yet for all his nationalism, Abe — Japan's longest-serving prime minister, who remained a power broker until his assassination last week — was fundamentally different from Putin, Xi and most of the other new nationalists. They have set out to undermine democracy around the world and expand autocracy. Abe, by contrast, tried to use Japanese nationalism mostly in the service of strengthening a global alliance of democracies.

"Abe is often described as a nationalist," David Frum wrote in The Atlantic. "He deserves to be remembered instead as one of the great internationalists of his era, the leading architect of collective security in the Indo-Pacific region."

Today's newsletter considers Abe's full legacy. It's a legacy with relevance far beyond Japan, including for the war in Ukraine and the larger struggle between autocracies like Russia and China and democracies like the U.S., the European Union and Japan.

‘We must change’

The clearest way to understand Abe’s approach to international affairs is through his most prominent goal: to make Japan comfortable with using military force.

He fought for years to change the pacifist constitution that the U.S. imposed on Japan after World War II. He failed, but nonetheless made strides toward the larger goal. During his tenure, the country increased military spending, created a national security council and changed the law so that Japanese troops could fight alongside allies overseas.

None of these measures had seemed necessary in the late 20th century. The U.S. handled security on behalf of Japan and much of Western Europe while those countries recovered from wartime devastation. As the cliché put it, the U.S. was the world’s policeman.

But many American voters and politicians have tired of this role lately. It’s expensive, and the U.S. economy isn’t as dominant as it once was. Americans — in both political parties — have also questioned why their fellow citizens often seem to be the ones risking their lives in faraway countries. These reasons help explain why both Trump and President Biden favored withdrawal from Afghanistan and why Biden has vowed not to send Americans to fight in Ukraine.

A less assertive U.S. means that one of two scenarios is likely to replace the so-called Pax Americana of the late 20th century. Either authoritarian leaders will feel emboldened to become more aggressive, as Putin did in Ukraine and Xi has signaled he might in Taiwan. Or other parts of the democratic alliance — the E.U., Japan, South Korea, India, Australia and Canada, among others — will have to fill some of the vacuum.

Abe wanted to make the second scenario a reality, partly because of his concern about China’s rising power and boldness. “Since the Obama administration, the American military no longer acts as the world’s policeman,” Abe told The Economist this spring. “I still believe America must take the lead,” he added. But, he said, “we must change our attitude of leaving all military matters to America. Japan must take responsibility for peace and stability and do our utmost by working together with America to achieve it.”

Russia’s invasion of Ukraine helped him make this case. As Motoko Rich, The Times’s Tokyo bureau chief, explained to me, Abe gave a recent interview to a Japanese publication noting that Germany was increasing its military spending, and he called on Japan to do likewise. “No country fights alongside a nation that is not defending itself,” he said.

His efforts at alliance-building extended to economic policy. He popularized the phrase “a free and open Indo-Pacific,” and he forged ahead with a trans-Pacific trade pact — meant largely to counter China’s rise — even after Trump withdrew the U.S. from it.

“Abe’s legacy is a world better prepared to confront China,” Josh Rogin wrote in The Washington Post. In The Times, Tobias Harris, a biographer of Abe, wrote, “He saw his country as engaged in a fierce competition among nations and believed that a politician’s duty, first and foremost, was to ensure the security and prosperity of his people.”

His full legacy

To be sure, the uglier parts of Abe’s nationalism damaged his efforts at alliance-building. His attempts to whitewash history — by changing school textbooks, for example, and downplaying Japan’s wartime brutality — created frictions with allies like South Korea, whose citizens were among the victims.

“His personal vision for rewriting Japanese history, of a glorious past, created a real problem in East Asia which will linger,” Alexis Dudden, a University of Connecticut historian, told The New Yorker. “It also divided Japanese society even further over how to approach its own responsibility for wartime actions carried out in the name of the emperor.”

Over all, though, Abe was a force for democratic internationalism. He recognized that the U.S. military dominance of the 20th century was unsustainable. A great question of the early 21st century is which other countries will assert themselves enough to shape the global order. Abe believed the world would be better off if Japan — democratic and prosperous — was a large part of the answer.

The alternative is probably a world with more authoritarianism and less respect for individual rights. “Japan alone cannot balance China’s military power, so Japan and America must cooperate to achieve a balance,” Abe said. “The U.S.-Japan alliance is vital for America too.”

State's trigger law will continue to be blocked

By BECKY JACOBS | The Salt Lake Tribune

Utah's abortion trigger law will remain on the books under a judge's ruling Monday and will not be enforced at least until the court case is finished working its way through the courts.

The trigger law would have banned all abortions except for a few limited circumstances.

"I believe that the people that enacted this statute, that signed it into law about this controversial, explosive charge," 3rd District Judge Andrew Stone said before announcing his decision. "But when you're talking about the rights of a woman to control her own body, I'm sold. I'm sorry, there are serious questions that 'have to be litigated' and that's why I'm granting the injunction. Stay in place 14 days and then we'll go from there."

Stone said he would grant Planned Parenthood's request for a preliminary injunction that was argued in court Monday. Before that ruling Monday afternoon, lawyers for Planned Parenthood Association of Utah and the state argued in state court about whether the trigger law should continue to be blocked.

"We're grateful that the state, absent new action, remains legal and available in Utah," Karrie Galloway, president and CEO of Planned Parenthood Association of Utah, said in a statement Monday after the hearing. "The past few weeks since the Supreme Court's decision have been incredibly challenging for our patients and our staff, and we're relieved that abortion will remain legal and accessible in Utah for the time being."

Planned Parenthood Main Center is located in Salt Lake City. A judge's order put Utah's abortion trigger law on hold while a lawsuit works through the courts.

Good morning. Despite Biden's low approval ratings, Democrats are roughly tied with Republicans in the midterm polls. We explain why.

A Latinos for Trump demonstration in Miami in 2020. Mario Cruz/EPA, via Shutterstock

A tight race

My colleague Nate Cohn, The Times's chief political analyst, has spent a lot of time thinking about the changing politics of economic class in the U.S. College graduates used to favor Republicans, while blue-collar voters favored Democrats. Increasingly, though, the opposite is true.

The social liberalism of Democrats — on immigration, marijuana, L.G.B.T. rights, affirmative action, abortion and more — has simultaneously attracted progressive college graduates and repelled more culturally conservative working-class voters. If you're trying to figure out why Latino voters have shifted right in the past few years, even during the Trump presidency, this dynamic offers an explanation.

In this year's midterm elections, the changing politics of class may get supercharged, Nate notes. Why? Look at the stories in the news. Many working-class voters are frustrated over inflation and other economic disruptions, making them unhappy with the Biden administration and Democrats. Many college graduates are angry about the recent decisions from a Supreme Court dominated by Republican appointees.

These attitudes are evident in the first New York Times/Siena College poll of the midterm cycle: Among registered voters who never attended college, Republicans lead by almost 20 percentage points. Among college graduates, Democrats lead by almost 30 points. One startling comparison is that Democrats lead by almost as much among white college graduates as among all voters of color.

To give you a clearer sense for what these patterns mean for the likely outcome of the November midterms — and which party will control the House and the Senate for the next two years — I'm turning over the rest of today's lead item to Nate.

By Nate Cohn
Domestic Correspondent for The Upshot

With President Biden's approval rating sagging into the low 30s and nearly 80 percent of voters saying the country is headed in the wrong direction, the ingredients would seem to be in place for a Republican landslide in this year's midterm elections.

But the first Times/Siena survey of the cycle shows something else: a close, competitive race for Congress.

Overall, voters prefer Democrats to control Congress over Republicans by one point among registered voters, 41 to 40 percent. Once we exclude those people who are unlikely to vote, Republicans lead by one point, 44 to 43 percent.

It's a pretty surprising result, given the circumstances. Analysts have all but written off the Democrats in the race for House control, not only because Biden's ratings are so poor but also because there's a long history of the president's party getting pummeled in midterm elections. These factors help explain why FiveThirtyEight's statistical forecast gives the Republicans an 88 percent chance of winning House control.

But the Times/Siena poll is not alone in showing a competitive race at this stage. Since the court's decision to overturn Roe v. Wade, most polls have shown a tight race on the so-called "generic ballot," which asks whether voters would prefer Democrats or Republicans to control Congress. The race has shifted about three points in the Democrats' direction, compared with surveys by the same pollsters before the court's ruling.

At least for the moment, conservative policy victories — on abortion, climate policy, religious rights and gun laws — and a spate of mass shootings seem to have insulated Democrats. State polls have also looked good for Democrats. The party has led just about every poll of a hotly contested Senate race over the last few months, including polls of Republican-held states like Pennsylvania and Ohio.

If all this good polling for the Democrats reminds you of a story you've heard before, there is a reason. The polls have overestimated Democratic support for much of the last decade, partly because polls have a harder time reaching working-class voters, who have been trending Republican. It's hard not to wonder whether the good news for Democrats might simply be a harbinger of yet another high-profile misfire.

It could also mean that the Democrats are at a high-water mark that will not last. Republicans will try to make the races a referendum on the president, and only 23 percent of undecided voters in the Times/Siena poll approve of Joe Biden's performance. If inflation remains high this year, as many economists expect, undecided voters might have further reason to break against the Democrats.

Americans are paying more for groceries. Alisha Jucevic for The New York Times

The general election campaign might be especially helpful to the Republican Senate candidates coming out of bruising primary elections. It's understandable why Republican voters who just voted against damaged or flawed candidates — like J.D. Vance in Ohio and Dr. Mehmet Oz in Pennsylvania — may be reluctant to embrace these candidates immediately. Yet that could change when the race focuses on partisan issues and the stakes of congressional control, reminding these voters why they are Republicans.

For the moment, the Democrats are benefiting from a favorable news environment. The recent Supreme Court rulings, the mass shootings and even the Jan. 6 hearings have focused national attention on a relatively favorable set of issues for Democrats. For them to stay competitive, they might need to keep those issues in the limelight until November.

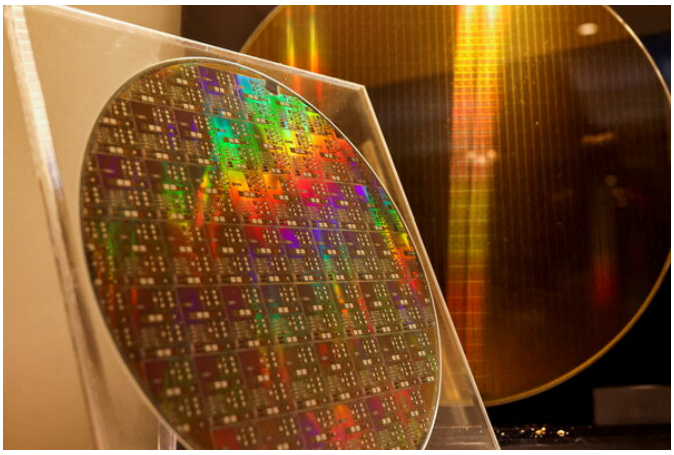
Good morning. The military relies on advanced semiconductors. The U.S. doesn't make any.

[redacted]



Chips on display in Taiwan. Ann Wang/Reuters

'A very dangerous situation'

The most advanced category of mass-produced semiconductors — used in smartphones, military technology and much more — is known as 5 nm. A single company in Taiwan, known as TSMC, makes about 90 percent of them. U.S. factories make none.

The U.S.'s struggles to keep pace in semiconductor manufacturing have already had economic downsides: Many jobs in the industry pay more than $100,000 a year, and the U.S. has lost out on them. Longer term, the situation also has the potential to cause a national security crisis: If China were to invade Taiwan and cut off exports of semiconductors, the American military would be at risk of being overmatched by its main rival for global supremacy.

For these reasons, a bipartisan group of senators and the Biden administration negotiated a bill last summer that included $52 billion to jump-start the domestic semiconductor industry, as well as other measures to help the U.S. compete economically with China. The bill would offer the kind of semiconductors subsidies that other countries — including China, South Korea, Japan, India and Germany — provide. Without such subsidies, companies like Intel and Broadcom would probably choose to build new factories outside the U.S.

But the Senate's semiconductor bill still has not become law. The House spent months negotiating its own bill, passing one in February. Since then, the House and Senate have failed to resolve the differences between the two bills, and

The standoff has become another example of dysfunctional congressional politics weakening the U.S.'s global standing.

There is a broad consensus — among many experts, President Biden, an overwhelming majority of Democrats in Congress and a meaningful number of Republicans — that the federal government should act. But it still has not.

Today's newsletter looks at the debate over the bills and the recent efforts to find a solution before Congress leaves for its August recess.

The Biden administration wants Congress to pass a semiconductor bill. Doug Mills/The New York Times

Corporate welfare?

The strongest substantive argument against the subsidies is that they are a handout to the semiconductor industry. The bills would use taxpayer dollars to benefit large companies that already can make a profit on the products they sell.

In economic terms, this argument makes a lot of sense. But geopolitics matter, too. Political leaders in other countries have already decided to offer subsidies for semiconductor manufacturing, because they want some of this manufacturing to take place in their countries.

If the U.S. does not also offer subsidies, it may continue to struggle to attract factories. Already, the U.S. market share of all semiconductor manufacturing has fallen to about 12 percent from 37 percent three decades ago.

Pat Gelsinger, the chief executive of Intel, has said that a typical factory costs about $10 billion to build, and subsidies from some countries cover 30 percent to 50 percent of that cost. China's subsidies cover closer to 70 percent. "It is not economically viable for us to compete in the world market if everyone else that we're competing with is seeing 30 to 50 percent lower cost structures," Gelsinger said.

Senator Rob Portman, an Ohio Republican who helped write the Senate bill, has acknowledged that it runs counter to the free-market philosophy he usually prefers. But, Portman explained at the Aspen Ideas Festival last month, "if we are continuing with blinders on to follow a political philosophy that seems to make sense generally but doesn't work in the practical world, I think we end up with a much less competitive economy and a national security risk."

Biden and his top aides agree. "We are now in a very dangerous situation in which we are utterly reliant on Taiwan for the vast, vast majority of our most advanced semiconductors, which are the exact kind of semiconductors you need for military equipment," Commerce Secretary Gina Raimondo told me. "You cannot be a global superpower if you don't make any of these."

What China wants

Why, then, haven't the Senate and House agreed on the bill?

House Democrats added provisions to the Senate bill that Republicans did not like, such as additional money for worker retraining. House Democratic leaders seem willing to remove most of these from the final bill, but it remains unclear whether the two parties can agree on a compromise.

McConnell — despite being one of 19 Senate Republicans who voted for the original bill — also appears to be wavering. He sent a tweet on June 30 suggesting that he might block a semiconductor bill if Democrats continued trying to pass a separate bill, on climate change and drug prices, that Republicans oppose.

McConnell may have been posturing, hoping to intimidate House Democrats into dropping the provisions in its version of the semiconductor bill. On the other hand, his history suggests that he might be willing to defeat a policy he would otherwise favor for the sake of making a Democratic president look weak.

To help the bill's chances, Chuck Schumer, the Senate Democratic leader, held a classified briefing for all senators yesterday. At it, Raimondo and Avril Haines, Biden's director of national intelligence, discussed the U.S. military's current dependence on Taiwan. Major corporations are also lobbying for the bill, as my colleague Catie Edmondson notes. "So many powerful industries badly want this bill to pass, from the chip makers to defense contractors to manufacturers," she said.

There is still one vocal opponent of the bill: the Chinese government. Its state media has criticized the idea as "bullying" and part of a "Cold War mentality." In recent decades, no country's share of semiconductor manufacturing has increased as rapidly as China's.

Today, we look at the causes of homelessness in the U.S. — David Leonhardt

By German Lopez

Good morning. America's homelessness crisis is getting worse.

A housing shortfall

America's homelessness problem has the makings of an acute crisis.

Shelters across the U.S. are reporting a surge in people looking for help, with wait lists doubling or tripling in recent months. The number of homeless people outside of shelters is also probably rising, experts say. Some of them live in encampments, which have popped up in parks and other public spaces in major cities from Washington, D.C., to Seattle since the pandemic began.

And inflation is compounding the problem: Rent has increased at its fastest rate since 1986, putting houses and apartments out of reach for more Americans.

The crisis means more people do not know where they will sleep tonight. Living in the streets, people are exposed to more crime, violence and bad weather, including extreme heat. They can lose their job in the chaos of homelessness, and they often struggle to find another one without access to the internet or a mailing address. "There's a certain posture that you take when you are homeless," Ivan Perez, who lived in a tent in Los Angeles, told The Times. "You lose your dignity."

Homelessness has become a particularly bad political problem for the Democrats who govern big cities, where it is most visible. It has played a role in recent elections, like the recall of San Francisco's district attorney last month. More Americans now say they worry a great deal about homelessness compared with the years before the pandemic.

The origins of the current homelessness crisis go back decades — to policies that stopped the U.S. from building enough housing, experts said. Seven million extremely low-income renters cannot get affordable homes, according to the National Low Income Housing Coalition.

Today's newsletter will look at how the country got to this point.

Single-family housing construction in Charlotte, N.C. Travis Dove for The New York Times

Supply and demand

No factor matters more to homelessness than access to housing. Poverty, mental illness, addiction and other issues do play roles, but they are less significant.

Many cities and states in the Midwest and South, for example, have higher rates of mental illness, poverty or addiction than other parts of the U.S., but they have similar or lower rates of homelessness. “What explains regional variation is housing market conditions,” said Gregg Colburn, a housing expert at the University of Washington.

Housing researchers use the example of musical chairs: Imagine there are 10 people for nine chairs. One person, weighed down by poor health, does not make it to a chair. Is the problem that person’s health or the lack of chairs?

Homelessness, then, is a supply-and-demand problem. Without enough housing, not everyone has a place to live. And the homes that do exist cost more as people compete for limited supply. So more people are priced out, and more end up homeless.

Policy failures

Policymakers have made the crisis worse, instituting laws and zoning rules that limit the number of available homes.

Consider California. Los Angeles County allocates 76 percent of its residential land to single-family housing, while the San Francisco Bay Area allocates 85 percent. Historically, this has made it difficult to build more housing: Most plots are reserved for only one family, instead of duplexes or apartment buildings that can house many more.

Homeowners also often protest proposed housing, effectively blocking it. They fear that more housing, particularly for low-income families, will change the makeup of their communities or reduce the value of their homes.

In San Francisco, for example, protests recently stopped a project to convert a 131-room Japantown hotel into housing units for homeless people.

The combination of zoning rules and local protests has added to a housing deficit year after year, as growing populations have outpaced new homes built. Now, California has 23 available affordable homes for every 100 extremely low-income renters — among the worst rates of any state.

What’s next

Some cities and states have begun confronting the issue. California and Oregon passed laws in recent years to effectively end single-family zoning. But homelessness took decades to get to this level, and it will probably take years to fully address.

And while homelessness is largely associated with Democratic-run cities in Democratic-run states, that appears to be changing as more Americans flock to the Sun Belt and the West. If traditionally red states in these areas repeat the same mistakes as their coastal counterparts, they could set themselves up for a crisis in the future.

Superhero fatigue?

Some 29 Marvel Cinematic Universe movies have premiered since 2008 — an average of almost two per year. In those 14 years, critics predicted that audiences would eventually get tired of superhero movies. In The Times, one media analyst warned of "superhero fatigue" in 2011. Asked about it last year, a quarter of U.S. adults said they enjoyed superhero movies but were getting tired of them.

But that sentiment is not reflected at the box office. "Thor: Love and Thunder" opened last weekend and earned $302 million worldwide, grossing more in its U.S. debut than previous Thor movies. Earlier this year, "Doctor Strange in the Multiverse of Madness" made $954 million worldwide. And 2021's "Spider-Man: No Way Home" finished its run at $1.9 billion.

Next up: "Black Panther: Wakanda Forever" this November. Its 2018 predecessor made $1.3 billion.

SUBJECT: UMA MediByte: Utah Abortion Trigger Law on Hold

Utah Abortion Trigger Law on Hold

Utah's abortion trigger law will continue to be on hold, a judge ruled Monday, siding with arguments made by Planned Parenthood Association of Utah. Third District Judge Andrew Stone has granted a preliminary injunction requested by the organization.

The judge said the injunction will be in place until Planned Parenthood's lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of the trigger law is resolved. Utah's trigger law would have banned abortions in Utah, except in limited circumstances. Read more.

UMA's policy statement in response to the Roe v Wade decision is as follows:

> "While UMA doesn't specifically support elective abortion, UMA opposes legislation that puts any restrictions on physicians' discussions and treatment options. We support legislation that seeks to reverse previous limitations or oppose future limitations placed by legislative bodies on elective abortion (including rape and incest) prior to 13 weeks or medical termination for maternal health complications, fetal anomalies, and non-viability regardless of estimated gestational age."

UMA is currently evaluating Utah's trigger law and how it will affect Utah patients and practices. UMA will inform members of new developments as they arise.

Proposed 2023 Physician Fee Schedule Cuts Reimbursement - Again

A HealthLeaders Media (7/8) analysis said physicians "face costly cuts to Medicare reimbursements in the 2023 Physician Fee Schedule proposed rule by CMS." This "newly released proposed rule features a decrease of $1.53 to the calendar year (CY) 2022 conversion factor of $34.61, resulting in a conversion factor of $33.08 for CY 2023." The article added, "Physician groups have expressed their displeasure and frustration with the proposed rule, suggesting that the cuts" are as damaging to patients as they are to physicians.

In a statement from the American Medical Association, AMA President Jack Resneck Jr., M.D., said, "It is immediately apparent that the rule not only fails to account for inflation in practice costs and COVID-related challenges to practice sustainability, but also includes a significant and damaging across-the-board reduction in payment rates."

Meanwhile, MedPage Today (7/8) reported "proposed changes related to expansion of behavioral health, cancer screenings, dental care, and patient access to ACOs [accountable care organizations] will likely be more warmly accepted by physicians and patients alike."

The 2023 proposed cuts follow a 1% Medicare physician pay cut that went into effect on July 1st, despite organized medicine's opposition.

HHS Pushes EMTALA in re: Abortion

This week HHS Secretary Becerra sent a letter to all hospitals and health care providers reminding them of their obligation to comply with EMTALA. The Secretary's letter clarifies that EMTALA requirements preempt any state laws that restrict access to stabilizing medical treatment, including abortion procedures and other treatments that may result in the termination of a pregnancy.

CMS also released an updated guidance to hospitals reinforcing that EMTALA requirements apply to all hospitals in all states regardless of the state law to the contrary.

CMS also held a conference call with stakeholders on these communications. There were a number of questions about preemption. CMS officials repeatedly stated that EMTALA would preempt state law and would be a defense for criminal prosecutions. This issue will likely end up in the courts.

BHI Immersion Program Available

The BHI Collaborative, a partnership between the AMA and seven other leading physician organizations, is launching a new, free initiative this Fall – The BHI Immersion Program – designed to provide enhanced technical assistance to physician practices on how to effectively implement Behavioral Health Integration (BHI).
Selected practices will participate (at no cost to them) in a 12-month curriculum designed and taught by industry experts. Upon completion, practices will be able to:

- Identify the best approach for delivering integrated care (including telehealth) for their practice and patients
- Determine internal staffing needs (including preparation, training, or qualifications) along with outside partnerships
- Design a workflow(s) with processes and protocols that works best for their practice
- Bill/receive payment to sustain delivery of integrated care services
- Establish short- and long-term goals of success, including measurable improvement targets and indicators

Sub-variant BA.5 Surging Across U.S.

The Washington Post (7/10) reports the Omicron subvariant BA.5 "has quickly become dominant in the United States, and thanks to its elusiveness when encountering the human immune system, is driving a wave of cases across the country." Now, "the risk of reinfections has increased because newly emergent subvariants are better able to evade the front line defense of the immune system, and there is essentially no effort at the community level to limit transmission."

In other COVID news, Bloomberg (7/11) reports, "The U.S. government will once again extend the COVID-19 public health emergency, continuing measures that have given millions of Americans special access to health insurance and telehealth services." HHS "has repeatedly renewed the emergency since it was originally declared in January 2020, with the most recent extension set to expire July 15." This "next extension is expected to take effect Friday, according to a person familiar with the matter."

Celebration of Bipartisan Safer Communities Act Signing

The White House @WhiteHouse

Today, decades of thoughts and prayers gave way to action.

The Bipartisan Safer Communities Act will save the lives of our children and our loved ones.

[redacted]

Statement by President Joe Biden on Climate Change

"Action on climate change and clean energy remains more urgent than ever.

So let me be clear: if the Senate will not move to tackle the climate crisis and strengthen our domestic clean energy industry, I will take strong executive action to meet this moment. My actions will create jobs, improve our energy security, bolster domestic manufacturing and supply chains, protect us from oil and gas price hikes in the future, and address climate change. I will not back down: the opportunity to create jobs and build a clean energy future is too important to relent.

Health care is also critical. After decades of fierce opposition from powerful special interests, Democrats have come together, beaten back the pharmaceutical industry and are prepared to give Medicare the power to negotiate lower drug prices and to prevent an increase in health insurance premiums for millions of families with coverage under the Affordable Care Act. Families all over the nation will sleep easier if Congress takes this action. The Senate should move forward, pass it before the August recess, and get it to my desk so I can sign it.

This will not only lower the cost of prescription drugs and health care for families, it will reduce the deficit and help fight inflation.

I want to thank Leader Schumer for his dogged and determined effort to produce the strongest possible bill to bring down costs, reduce the deficit, and combat the climate crisis while boosting our energy security – even offering significant compromises to try to reach an agreement. I also want to thank Speaker Pelosi for her leadership – thanks to her hard work, the House passed a strong bill on climate change and reducing costs last year. Now, Congress must act quickly and get legislation to my desk to deliver for American families."

Recent Administration Action on Reproductive Rights

- The President's Executive Order Protecting Access to Reproductive Health Services: On 7/8/22, the President issued an Executive Order outlining actions to safeguard access to reproductive health care services, including abortion and contraception; protect the privacy of patients and their access to accurate information; promote the safety and security of patients, providers, and clinics; and coordinate the implementation of Federal efforts.

- Protecting Emergency Medical Care: On 7/11/22, HHS issued guidance affirming that the Emergency Medical Treatment Active Labor Act (EMTALA) protects providers that offer abortion services in emergency situations. Secretary Becerra also issued a letter to providers making clear that federal law preempts state law restricting access to abortion in emergency situations.

- Guidance to Retail Pharmacies: On 7/13/22, HHS issued guidance to roughly 60,000 U.S. retail pharmacies to remind them of their obligations under federal civil rights laws to ensure access to comprehensive reproductive health care services. The guidance makes clear that as recipients of federal financial assistance, pharmacies are prohibited under law from discriminating on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, age, and disability in their programs and activities. This includes supplying medications; making determinations regarding the suitability of a prescribed medication for a patient; and advising patients about medications and how to take them.

- DOJ Reproductive Rights Task Force: On 7/12/22, the DOJ announced a Reproductive Rights Task Force, which will monitor and evaluate state and local actions that infringe on federal protections relating to the provision or pursuit of reproductive care, impair women's ability to seek reproductive care where it's legal, impair individuals' ability to inform and counsel each other about the reproductive care that is available in other states, ban medication abortion, or impose criminal or civil liability on federal employees who provide legal reproductive health services.

- Protecting Privacy and Sensitive Health Data

    - The FTC: On 7/12/22, the FTC committed to fully enforcing the law against illegal use and sharing of highly sensitive data, including location and health information contained in fertility and period tracking data. The FTC urged companies to consider that sensitive data is protected by numerous state and federal laws, claims that data is "anonymous" are often deceptive, and the FTC has a track record of cracking down on companies that misuse consumer data.

    - HHS: On 6/29/22, HHS issued guidance to address how the HIPAA Privacy Rule protects the privacy of individuals' protected health information, including information related to reproductive health care. The guidance helps ensure doctors and other medical providers and health plans know that, with limited exceptions, they are not required – and in many cases, are not permitted – to disclose patients' private information, including to law enforcement. HHS also issued a how-to guide for consumers on steps they can take to make sure they're protecting their personal data on mobile apps.

- Defending the Right to Travel: On 6/24/22, President Biden reaffirmed the Attorney General's statement that women must remain free to travel safely to another state to seek the care they need. President Biden committed his administration to defending "that bedrock right."

- Calling for the Establishment of Abortion Rights into Federal Law: President Biden continues to call on Congress to codify the right to abortion into federal law. On 6/30/22, the President said he would support changing the filibuster rules to codify Roe v. Wade into law. On 7/12/22, the White House released Statements of Administration Policy on H.R. 8296 –Women's Health Protection Act of 2022 and H.R. 8297 – Ensuring Access to Abortion Act of 2022.

- ReproductiveRights.gov: The Administration launched ReproductiveRights.gov, a website on people's right to access reproductive health care, including birth control, abortion services, other preventive health services, and health insurance coverage.

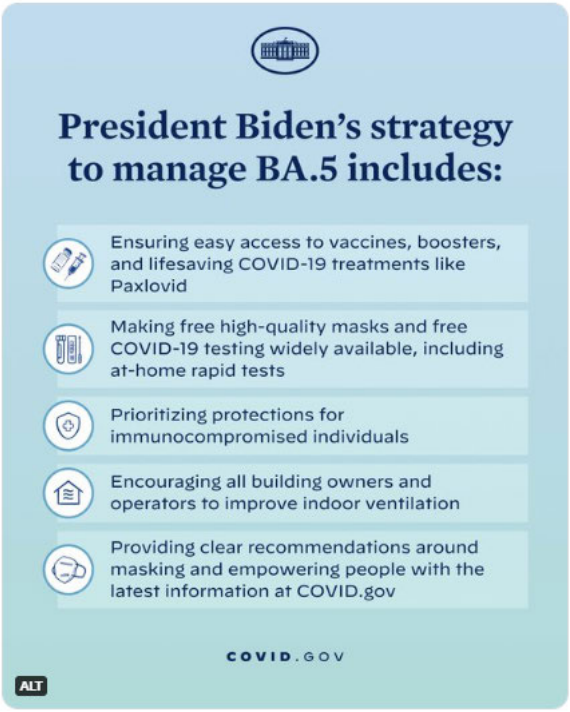
My team and I have been monitoring the BA.5 variant of COVID-19 for months. We're prepared, and we know how to manage this moment with the vaccines, treatments, and other tools we have made widely available.



President Biden visit to Israel

President Biden
@POTUS
United States government official

Every chance I get to work with Israel is a blessing. With my visit, I reaffirmed the United States' ironclad commitment to Israel's security and launched new technology partnerships.

May Israel and the U.S. continue to prosper together for the benefit of the world.

USDA Makes It Easier for American Farmers to Grow Food, Ease Burdens for American Families

This week, the Biden Administration announced additional steps it's taking to support U.S. farmers in their work to stabilize food prices and feed Americans and the world amidst continuing challenges such as the COVID-19 pandemic, supply chain disruptions, and the invasion of Ukraine by Russia. The U.S. Department of Agriculture is reducing the economic risk of raising two crops on the same land in one year, making it easier for U.S. farmers to grow food in America, increase food supply, and lower food costs for American families. This action is part of a broader set of commitments made earlier this year by President Biden and Secretary Vilsack to increase domestic food production amid potential global food shortages related to the invasion of Ukraine.

To reduce the risk of raising two crops on the same land in one year – a practice known as double cropping - USDA's Risk Management Agency (RMA) is expanding double crop insurance opportunities in over 1,500 counties where double cropping is viable. "In May, I joined President Biden at the O'Connor farm in Kankakee, Illinois, to announce a series of actions to help farmers do what they do — grow food for American families and the rest of the world.

This week, USDA is making good on one of those commitments and making it easier to plant double crops and sharing some of the financial risk by making crop insurance more available in over 1,500 counties," said Secretary Vilsack. "We live in a challenging time, but I put my trust in the American farmer and U.S. agriculture to help keep the food we need affordable and available. The Biden administration and USDA will continue to find ways to ease burdens on American farmers and lower costs for American families such as expanded double crop options through crop insurance."

UMA House of Delegates Meeting

September 9-10 (Full day on the 9th, Half day on the 10th)
Thanksgiving Point, Lehi, Utah

Dear Dr. Hofmann,

The 2022 UMA House of Delegates (HOD) is fast approaching and we are calling for UMA members to participate as delegates. We anticipate many resolutions that will establish policy and will set the UMA stance on vital issues going forward. We anticipate debates on the Roe v. Wade issue, possible gun law stances, collective negotiating, any qualified physician or facility debates, etc. Once the House establishes policy, the UMA Board and Staff work to comply with that policy, so it is very important that your voice is heard in our HOD.

There are delegate seats open in the following categories:
- county medical societies / component sections
- recognized specialty societies
- chartered large practice groups / solo or small practice section

We can very likely fit you into one of these categories. Please contact Paige (paige@utahmed.org) or Kelly (kelly@utahmed.org) at the UMA office to become a delegate. Delegate designation deadline is August 15th, so don't delay if you are interested.

HOTEL INFORMATION & BOOKING at UMA Special Rate - 2 hotels to choose from

SpringHill Suites Lehi at Thanksgiving Point - $134/night
2447 W Executive Parkway, Lehi, UT 84043 (walking distance to event).

Courtyard Lehi at Thanksgiving Point - $139/night
2801 W Club House Drive, Lehi, UT 84043(~1 mile from event)
801-768-1174 (Ask for Brooklyn or Skye)

Hotel Reservation Deadline - August 25th - BOOK NOW ONLINE
Cancellation possible up to 48 hours prior to event date

The Utah Medical Association is the largest single entity in Utah that represents and speaks to the needs of all Utah physicians and their patients, before the legislature and to the public. The UMA House of Delegates meeting is where you can make your opinions known about medical issues important to you.

The UMA House of Delegates meeting is where UMA members, as delegates –
- represent their specialty, county, or group organizations, and along with their other professional colleagues, discuss issues of importance to them, including practice issues, public health, the future of medicine, etc.
- through the resolution process, make policy and set the agenda UMA will follow for the next year
- through the resolution process, approve UMA's legislative focus for the year
- elect UMA officers including delegates to the AMA House of Delegates
- consider and make any needed changes to the Bylaws of the Association

Please consider making your voice heard as a delegate at this year's HOD. We look forward to working with you. Contact the UMA office (801-747-3500) if you need any additional information or to become a delegate.

Thank you,
Utah Medical Association Board of Directors

aIL?

Jennifer Strohecker (DHHS), 2022-07-26 10:43:04
sorry...do we know if pharmacists are prescribing?

Michelle Hofmann (DHHS), 2022-07-26 10:43:45
Paxlovid or the HB 178 drugs?

HB178

Michelle Hofmann (DHHS), 2022-07-26 10:46:32
They cited the pandemic as a barrier and we discussed that having the infrastructure there will set us off on the right foot as we come out of COVID-19. They need more time. The other issue is that many are still operating under their own CPAs so it won't flag that the pharmacists are the ones managing these in the Medicaid system. Payment remains the dominant issue with lack of sufficient clinical information for decision-maiking (speaking to paxlovid on this one) runner up.

Stigma Around Substance Use During Pregnancy: A Louisiana Response

Opioid use disorder during pregnancy contributes to maternal death and poor birth outcomes. Although prenatal care can reduce these effects, pregnant individuals may delay care due to concerns about stereotyping and stigmatizing by providers.

Joseph Kanter, MD, MPH, (SHO-LA) and Amy Ladley, PhD, discuss Louisiana's approach to reducing stigma and fears of criminalization around opioid use in pregnant and postpartum individuals, and the importance of partnerships. Learn more in this new episode of the Public Health Review podcast.

Update for Clinicians on Monkeypox in People with HIV, Children and Adolescents, and People who are Pregnant o Breastfeeding

Summary
As of July 29, 2022, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and state and local public health partners are reporting 5,189 cases of Monkeypox virus infections in the States across 47 states, Washington, D.C., and Puerto Rico. CDC is also reporting multiple outbreaks of monkeypox have also been reported globally in 72 countries that do not nor report monkeypox activity. On Friday, July 22, CDC reported the first two cases of monkeypox in children in the United States during the current outbreak.

This Health Alert Network (HAN) Health Update serves to alert clinicians to clinical considerations for preventing, diagnosing, and managing monkeypox in people with HIV, children adolescents, and people who are pregnant or breastfeeding.

Background
Since May 2022, CDC has been urging healthcare providers in the United States to be on alert for patients who have rash illnesses consistent with monkeypox. People with HIV, ind who are immunocompromised, children, adolescents, and people who are pregnant or breastfeeding may be at risk for increased disease severity and adverse health outcomes ass with monkeypox infection. Clinicians should be familiar with unique clinical considerations for monkeypox in these patient populations. A broad diagnostic approach is encouraged to distinguish Monkeypox virus infection from other causes of fever and rash illness. Testing should be performed on persons for whom monkeypox is suspected based on clinical pres or epidemiologic criteria. Clinicians should consult their state or territorial health department (State Contacts) or CDC through the CDC Emergency Operations Center (770-488-710 soon as monkeypox is suspected.
CDC has issued clinical considerations for monkeypox infection in multiple populations including: people with HIV, children and adolescents, and people who are pregnant or breast These newly released clinical considerations complement existing clinical guidance for managing monkeypox and provide information on signs and symptoms of Monkeypox virus in pre- and post-exposure prophylaxis; treatment; and infection control in these populations.

Recommendations and Information for Healthcare Providers on Monkeypox in People with HIV
In the current outbreak, available international summary surveillance data in the CDC-issued clinical considerations for people with HIV indicate 30-51% HIV prevalence among pers with monkeypox for whom HIV status was known. It is currently unknown whether HIV infection affects a person's risk of acquiring Monkeypox virus infection and developing disease exposure.

Persons with advanced and uncontrolled HIV might be at higher risk for severe or prolonged monkeypox disease. Therefore, prophylaxis (e.g., vaccination), medical treatment and close monitoring are a priority for this population. Compared with other persons with monkeypox, case reports among persons with inadequately treated HIV who have CD4 counts per mm^3 reported higher rates of secondary bacterial infection, more prolonged illness (and thereby also longer period of infectiousness), as well as a higher likelihood of a confluen partially confluent rash, rather than discrete lesions. In contrast, recent reports of patients with HIV infection and monkeypox who are on effective antiretroviral therapy (ART) have n deaths or evident excess hospitalizations to date. Providers should consider both viral suppression and CD4 count in weighing the risk of severe outcomes from monkeypox for any with HIV.

The rash of monkeypox can be confused with other rash illnesses that are considered in people with HIV, including herpes zoster (shingles), scabies, molluscum contagiosum, herp syphilis, chancroid, lymphogranuloma venereum, allergic skin rashes, and drug eruptions. Immunocompromised persons, including persons with advanced, untreated or inadequate suppressed HIV, may present with an atypical rash, including a disseminated rash that may make diagnosis more challenging.

Prevention of monkeypox and infection control practices in the home or healthcare setting are the same regardless of peoples' HIV status. Post-exposure prophylaxis (PEP) and antiviral treatments, including tecovirimat, are available for persons exposed to monkeypox or with Monkeypox virus infection. The safety and immunogenicity of JYNNEOS, a live, n replicating viral vaccine, has been specifically established in people with HIV; however, immunogenicity among persons with HIV who have CD4 counts below 100 cells/mm^3 or who virologically suppressed remains unknown. ACAM2000, a replicating viral vaccine, should not be given to people with HIV (regardless of immune status). Antiviral treatments for mo have few interactions with antiretroviral therapy. ART and opportunistic infection prophylaxis should be continued in all people with HIV who develop monkeypox.

Recommendations and Information for Healthcare Providers on Monkeypox in Children and Adolescents
Limited pediatric data on infection with the Congo Basin clade of Monkeypox virus suggest increased risk of severe disease in children younger than 8 years of age. Rare complicati monkeypox include abscess, airway obstruction due to severe lymphadenopathy, cellulitis, corneal scarring, encephalitis, keratitis, pneumonia, and sepsis. The West African clade o Monkeypox virus involved in the current outbreak typically causes less severe disease than the Congo Basin clade.
Monkeypox virus can spread to children through contact with infectious body fluids (e.g., lesion exudates and respiratory secretions) of people or animals or through contact with fon may occur in households and other close contact settings. The number of monkeypox cases among children in the United States is currently low; however, CDC acknowledges that expanding U.S. outbreak and the possible risk for transmission in households and other settings may result in additional pediatric cases. Pediatric providers should be familiar with prevention, recognition, and testing considerations for monkeypox in children and adolescents.
Families should be counseled about preventing the spread of Monkeypox virus between children, caregivers, and household members in the home, including avoidance of contact w persons who have monkeypox, the body fluids of an infected person, and fomites (e.g., clothing, towels, bedding); wearing a well-fitting mask or respirator by the person with monke and the contact (for children over 2 years of age) when interaction is unavoidable; and minimizing the number of caregivers for children with monkeypox. Particular attention should made to keep children with monkeypox from scratching lesions or touching their eyes to prevent auto-inoculation and more severe illness. Caregivers should cover areas of broken with bandages to the extent possible and avoid direct skin-to-skin contact with the rash.
Children and adolescents who are close contacts of a person with monkeypox (e.g., household contact, other family member, caregiver, or friend) should be evaluated for illness and offered post-exposure prophylaxis with JYNNEOS or ACAM2000 (for children older than 12 months) or treatment when indicated. Monkeypox should be considered when children o adolescents present with signs or symptoms that could be consistent with the disease, especially if epidemiologic criteria are present. The rash of monkeypox can be confused with rash illnesses that are commonly considered in children including varicella (chickenpox); hand, foot, and mouth disease; measles; scabies; molluscum contagiosum; herpes; allergic rashes and syphilis (including congenital syphilis); and drug eruptions.
Data are limited on the effectiveness of PEP for children who have been exposed to monkeypox or treatment for children with illness, and no vaccines or other products are currentl licensed for monkeypox prevention or treatment in children or adolescents. However, PEP should not be withheld from children or adolescents who are otherwise eligible. Decisions whether to offer PEP should take into account the patient's degree of exposure and the patient's individual risk of severe disease.

Prophylactic therapeutics that can be administered include vaccination, Vaccinia immune globulin, and antiviral medication. For almost all children and adolescents, vaccination is th preventive treatment that should be administered. Immune globulin or antivirals may also be considered for infants under 6 months of age, given their immature immune systems an possible decreased responses to vaccination.

Tecovirimat is currently being used as the first-line treatment for infection with Monkeypox virus, including for children and adolescents with severe disease or underlying medical co that may increase risk for severe disease and those with complications from monkeypox. Individual risks and benefits must be considered prior to initiating tecovirimat. Other treatm such as Vaccinia immune globulin may be considered in unusual circumstances.

In pediatric inpatient care settings, infection control procedures for children with monkeypox infection should also consider the child's age and caregiving needs; family and caregive preferences; the extent, severity, and course of the child's illness; and risks for severe monkeypox disease in exposed caregivers (e.g., pregnancy or immunocompromising conditio

Recommendations and Information for Healthcare Providers on Monkeypox in People who are Pregnant or Breastfeeding
Data regarding Monkeypox virus infection during pregnancy are limited. It is unknown if pregnant people are more susceptible to acquiring Monkeypox virus infection or if illness is n severe during pregnancy. Other poxviruses cause more severe infection during pregnancy. Monkeypox virus can be transmitted to the fetus during pregnancy and to the newborn by contact during and after birth. There are few case reports of spontaneous pregnancy loss and stillbirth, preterm delivery, and neonatal monkeypox infection; the frequency and circumstances for these outcomes are unknown. Whether Monkeypox virus is present in breast milk is unknown; however, it may be transmitted through close contact during breast

Prevention measures for monkeypox infection are similar for pregnant and non-pregnant people. Pre- or post-exposure prophylaxis should be offered to people who are pregnant or breastfeeding. When pre- or post-exposure prophylaxis by vaccination is chosen, JYNNEOS, a live, non-replicating viral vaccine, can be used. ACAM2000, a replicating viral vaccine should not be used in people who are pregnant or breastfeeding.

During pregnancy, the cause of fever may be difficult to differentiate from other infections, such as intraamniotic infection (chorioamnionitis), until the monkeypox rash appears. Pregnant patients with rashes initially considered characteristic of dermatoses of pregnancy (e.g., polymorphic eruption of pregnancy) or of more common infections (e.g., varicella zoster or sexually transmitted infections) should be carefully evaluated for a monkeypox rash, and submission of specimens of lesions for monkeypox diagnosis should be considered, especially if the patient has any epidemiologic risk factors for monkeypox infection.

While most adults with Monkeypox virus infection experience self-limiting infection and recover within 2–4 weeks, pregnant and breastfeeding people should be prioritized for medical treatment, if needed, due to the probable increased risk of severe disease during pregnancy, risk of transmission to the fetus during pregnancy or to the newborn by close contact during and after birth, and risk of severe infection in newborns. Treatment for Monkeypox virus infection should be offered to people who are pregnant or breastfeeding. The risks and benefits of treatment options should be discussed with the patient.

Recommendations for infection prevention and control of monkeypox in healthcare settings are the same for pregnant and non-pregnant patients. Newborns born to people with monkeypox should be placed in isolation, and healthcare personnel should follow infection prevention and control recommendations. Patients with monkeypox should be counseled about measures to prevent risk of transmission of Monkeypox virus to their newborn from close contact and breastfeeding.

Update for Clinicians on Monkeypox in People with HIV, Children and Adolescents, and People who are Pregnant or Breastfeeding

Summary
As of July 29, 2022, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and state and local public health partners are reporting 5,189 cases of Monkeypox virus infections in the United States across 47 states, Washington, D.C., and Puerto Rico. CDC is also reporting multiple outbreaks of monkeypox have also been reported globally in 72 countries that do not normally report monkeypox activity. On Friday, July 22, CDC reported the first two cases of monkeypox in children in the United States during the current outbreak.
This Health Alert Network (HAN) Health Update serves to alert clinicians to clinical considerations for preventing, diagnosing, and managing monkeypox in people with HIV, children, adolescents, and people who are pregnant or breastfeeding.

Background
Since May 2022, CDC has been urging healthcare providers in the United States to be on alert for patients who have rash illnesses consistent with monkeypox. People with HIV, individuals who are immunocompromised, children, adolescents, and people who are pregnant or breastfeeding may be at risk for increased disease severity and adverse health outcomes associated with monkeypox infection. Clinicians should be familiar with unique clinical considerations for monkeypox in these patient populations. A broad diagnostic approach is encouraged to distinguish Monkeypox virus infection from other causes of fever and rash illness. Testing should be performed on persons for whom monkeypox is suspected based on clinical presentation or epidemiologic criteria. Clinicians should consult their state or territorial health department (State Contacts) or CDC through the CDC Emergency Operations Center (770-488-7100) as soon as monkeypox is suspected.
CDC has issued clinical considerations for monkeypox infection in multiple populations including: people with HIV, children and adolescents, and people who are pregnant or breastfeeding. These newly released clinical considerations complement existing clinical guidance for managing monkeypox and provide information on signs and symptoms of Monkeypox virus infection; pre- and post-exposure prophylaxis; treatment; and infection control in these populations.

Recommendations and Information for Healthcare Providers on Monkeypox in People with HIV
In the current outbreak, available international summary surveillance data in the CDC-issued clinical considerations for people with HIV indicate 30-51% HIV prevalence among persons with monkeypox for whom HIV status was known. It is currently unknown whether HIV infection affects a person's risk of acquiring Monkeypox virus infection and developing disease after exposure.
Persons with advanced and uncontrolled HIV might be at higher risk for severe or prolonged monkeypox disease. Therefore, prophylaxis (e.g., vaccination), medical treatment and close monitoring are a priority for this population. Compared with other persons with monkeypox, case reports among persons with inadequately treated HIV who have CD4 counts ≤350 per mm3 reported higher rates of secondary bacterial infection, more prolonged illness (and thereby also longer period of infectiousness), as well as a higher likelihood of a confluent or partially confluent rash, rather than discrete lesions. In contrast, recent reports of patients with HIV infection and monkeypox who are on effective antiretroviral therapy (ART) have noted no deaths or evident excess hospitalizations to date. Providers should consider both viral suppression and CD4 count in weighing the risk of severe outcomes from monkeypox for any patient with HIV.

herpes, syphilis, chancroid, lymphogranuloma venereum, allergic skin rashes, and drug eruptions. Immunocompromised persons, including persons with advanced, untreated or inadequately suppressed HIV, may present with an atypical rash, including a disseminated rash that may make diagnosis more challenging.

Prevention of monkeypox and infection control practices in the home or healthcare setting are the same regardless of peoples' HIV status. Post-exposure prophylaxis (PEP) and antiviral treatments, including tecovirimat, are available for persons exposed to monkeypox or with Monkeypox virus infection. The safety and immunogenicity of JYNNEOS, a live, non-replicating viral vaccine, has been specifically established in people with HIV; however, immunogenicity among persons with HIV who have CD4 counts below 100 cells/mm3 or who are not virologically suppressed remains unknown. ACAM2000, a replicating viral vaccine, should not be given to people with HIV (regardless of immune status). Antiviral treatments for monkeypox have few interactions with antiretroviral therapy. ART and opportunistic infection prophylaxis should be continued in all people with HIV who develop monkeypox.

Recommendations and Information for Healthcare Providers on Monkeypox in Children and Adolescents

Limited pediatric data on infection with the Congo Basin clade of Monkeypox virus suggest increased risk of severe disease in children younger than 8 years of age. Rare complications of monkeypox include abscess, airway obstruction due to severe lymphadenopathy, cellulitis, corneal scarring, encephalitis, keratitis, pneumonia, and sepsis. The West African clade of Monkeypox virus involved in the current outbreak typically causes less severe disease than the Congo Basin clade.

Monkeypox virus can spread to children through contact with infectious body fluids (e.g., lesion exudates and respiratory secretions) of people or animals or through contact with fomites, as may occur in households and other close contact settings. The number of monkeypox cases among children in the United States is currently low; however, CDC acknowledges that the expanding U.S. outbreak and the possible risk for transmission in households and other settings may result in additional pediatric cases. Pediatric providers should be familiar with prevention, recognition, and testing considerations for monkeypox in children and adolescents.

Families should be counseled about preventing the spread of Monkeypox virus between children, caregivers, and household members in the home, including avoidance of contact with persons who have monkeypox, the body fluids of an infected person, and fomites (e.g., clothing, towels, bedding); wearing a well-fitting mask or respirator by the person with monkeypox and the contact (for children over 2 years of age) when interaction is unavoidable; and minimizing the number of caregivers for children with monkeypox. Particular attention should be made to keep children with monkeypox from scratching lesions or touching their eyes to prevent auto-inoculation and more severe illness. Caregivers should cover areas of broken skin with bandages to the extent possible and avoid direct skin-to-skin contact with the rash.

Children and adolescents who are close contacts of a person with monkeypox (e.g., household contact, other family member, caregiver, or friend) should be evaluated for illness and offered post-exposure prophylaxis with JYNNEOS or ACAM2000 (for children older than 12 months) or treatment when indicated. Monkeypox should be considered when children or adolescents present with signs or symptoms that could be consistent with the disease, especially if epidemiologic criteria are present. The rash of monkeypox can be confused with other rash illnesses that are commonly considered in children including varicella (chickenpox); hand, foot, and mouth disease; measles; scabies; molluscum contagiosum; herpes; allergic skin rashes and syphilis (including congenital syphilis); and drug eruptions.

Data are limited on the effectiveness of PEP for children who have been exposed to monkeypox or treatment for children with illness, and no vaccines or other products are currently licensed for monkeypox prevention or treatment in children or adolescents. However, PEP should not be withheld from children or adolescents who are otherwise eligible. Decisions about whether to offer PEP should take into account the patient's degree of exposure and the patient's individual risk of severe disease.

Prophylactic therapeutics that can be administered include vaccination, Vaccinia immune globulin, and antiviral medication. For almost all children and adolescents, vaccination is the preventive treatment that should be administered. Immune globulin or antivirals may also be considered for infants under 6 months of age, given their immature immune systems and possible decreased responses to vaccination.

Tecovirimat is currently being used as the first-line treatment for infection with Monkeypox virus, including for children and adolescents with severe disease or underlying medical conditions that may increase risk for severe disease and those with complications from monkeypox. Individual risks and benefits must be considered prior to initiating tecovirimat. Other treatments such as Vaccinia immune globulin may be considered in unusual circumstances.

In pediatric inpatient care settings, infection control procedures for children with monkeypox infection should also consider the child's age and caregiving needs; family and caregiver preferences; the extent, severity, and course of the child's illness; and risks for severe monkeypox disease in exposed caregivers (e.g., pregnancy or immunocompromising conditions).

Recommendations and Information for Healthcare Providers on Monkeypox in People who are Pregnant or Breastfeeding

Data regarding Monkeypox virus infection during pregnancy are limited. It is unknown if pregnant people are more susceptible to acquiring Monkeypox virus infection or if illness is more severe during pregnancy. Other poxviruses cause more severe infection during newborn by close contact during and after birth. There are few case reports of spontaneous pregnancy loss and stillbirth, preterm delivery, and neonatal monkeypox infection; the frequency and circumstances for these outcomes are unknown. Whether Monkeypox virus is present in breast milk is unknown; however, it may be transmitted through close contact during breastfeeding.

Prevention measures for monkeypox infection are similar for pregnant and non-pregnant people. Pre- or post-exposure prophylaxis should be offered to people who are pregnant or breastfeeding. When pre- or post-exposure prophylaxis by vaccination is chosen, JYNNEOS, a live, non-replicating viral vaccine, can be used. ACAM2000, a replicating viral vaccine, should not be used in people who are pregnant or breastfeeding.

During pregnancy, the cause of fever may be difficult to differentiate from other infections, such as intraamniotic infection (chorioamnionitis), until the monkeypox rash appears. Pregnant patients with rashes initially considered characteristic of dermatoses of pregnancy (e.g., polymorphic eruption of pregnancy) or of more common infections (e.g., varicella zoster or sexually transmitted infections) should be carefully evaluated for a monkeypox rash, and submission of specimens of lesions for monkeypox diagnosis should be considered, especially if the person has any epidemiologic risk factors for monkeypox infection.

While most adults with Monkeypox virus infection experience self-limiting infection and recover within 2–4 weeks, pregnant and breastfeeding people should be prioritized for medical treatment, if needed, due to the probable increased risk of severe disease during pregnancy, risk of transmission to the fetus during pregnancy or to the newborn by close contact during and after birth, and risk of severe infection in newborns. Treatment for Monkeypox virus infection should be offered to people who are pregnant or breastfeeding. The risks and benefits of treatment options should be discussed with the patient.

Recommendations for infection prevention and control of monkeypox in healthcare settings are the same for pregnant and non-pregnant patients. Newborns born to people with monkeypox should be placed in isolation, and healthcare personnel should follow infection prevention and control recommendations. Patients with monkeypox should be counseled about measures to prevent risk of transmission of Monkeypox virus to their newborn from close contact and breastfeeding.

Team update

Team:

If you live or work near the Wasatch Front, you generally have plenty of doctors or hospitals to choose from. But in the rural parts of the state, it's a different story. Finding primary care can be a real challenge.

In this next installment of DHHS 101, Ashley Moretz, who directs our Office of Primary Care and Rural Health, talks about how his office is increasing primary care in and attracting medical providers to rural Utah to help those who are medically underserved. Get to know PCRH in this week's video.

And now... the email of the week!

- Do you have anything to declare?

  Conflict of interest forms.

  DHHS Policy 02-28 requires all DHHS employees to submit a conflict of interest form annually by July 1. Because this is a new policy that just went into effect on July 1, we're asking for all employees who haven't completed a conflict of interest form since April 30 to go into the DHHS Forms system and complete this by August 31. You will need to be logged into the VPN to access this if not at a DHHS location.

  Time to fill out new telework/telecommute/surge agreements

  If you are a telework eligible individual, we're asking that you complete a new telework agreement by August 31 using the DHHS Forms system. You will need to be logged into the VPN to access this if not at a DHHS location. For those of you that telework 50% or more of your time, you will need to fill out a "Telework Agreement" and the "DHHS Telework Alternate Worksite Safety Checklist." For those of you who telework less than 50% of your time you will need to fill out a "Telecommute Agreement" and the "DHHS Telework Alternate Worksite Safety Checklist." For those that wor full time from the office, but are surge eligible, you will need to fill out the "Telework Surge Agreement."

- Coming up!

  On Thursday, our Division of Aging and Adult Services (DAAS) will celebrate Utah centenarians with Gov. Cox and Lt. Gov. Henderson.

  Do you know someone who will be at least 100 years old next year? Let us know!

- Protect yourself

  We have learned of the first Utah mosquitoes carrying West Nile virus have been identified in Davis, Salt Lake, and Uintah counties. No human cases have been reported. Today, we're sharing with the media how to protect ourselves from mosquito bites:

  Wear long-sleeves, long pants, and socks while outdoors and use an insect repellent with 20%-30% DEET, which is safe to use during pregnancy. Repellents are not recommended for children younger than 2 months of age.
  The hours from dusk to dawn are peak biting times for many mosquitoes. Consider rescheduling outdoor activities that occur in the evening or early morning.
  Mosquitoes lay their eggs in standing water. Remove any puddles of water or standing water including in pet dishes, flower pots, wading and swimming pools, buckets, tarps, and tires.
  Report bodies of stagnant water to your local Mosquito Abatement District (MAD). Visit http://www.umaa.org/ for a list of MADs.
  Keep doors, windows, and screens in good condition and make sure they fit tightly.

- Reminder: Sign up for surge telework notifications

  If you are eligible for surge telework and want a notification from DHHS about upcoming surge telework days, please see the process for signing up for ar email to work or personal email addresses, or both!

  Here's how it will work:
  1. Opt in to getting an email at your personal and/or work email by filling out this Google form. (We are now up to 1,908 email addresses.)
  2. Former UDOH surge teleworkers were not automatically opted in and will need to fill out the form.
  3. Supervisors of surge teleworkers may opt in for these notifications, as well.
  4. We continue to evaluate various text message systems and the need for text messages in the department. Let us know how you feel in the same Google form.

Thank you for your interest in providing Tecovirimat (TPOXX) treatment. To onboard you as a provider, we need to go over some details and receive your agreement that you will follow all current and future guidelines set by the CDC, FDA, HHS, the Strategic National Stockpile (SNS), Utah Department of Health and Human Services and any other governing body that may set requirements for administration of TPOXX. You can reply to this email that you have read and agree to the information contained.

Currently, there is no treatment approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) for non-variola orthopoxvirus, including MPX. Although tecovirimat is FDA-approved for treatment of smallpox in adults and children, the approved indication is limited to smallpox. Therefore, this expanded access Investigational New Drug (IND), sponsored by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and authorized by FDA, is to allow access to and use of stockpiled tecovirimat for treatment of non-variola orthopoxvirus (NV-OPXV) infection in adults and children.

While the effectiveness of tecovirimat in treating human non-variola orthopoxvirus infections, including monkeypox, has not been evaluated, it may be reasonable to anticipate potential treatment benefit based on animal efficacy data that supported FDA-approval for smallpox treatment and limited clinical uses of tecovirimat in the treatment of NV-OPXV infected individuals to date.

All patient populations, who meet eligibility criteria, can receive tecovirimat treatment under this IND program (e.g., children and all adults including pregnant and nursing individuals, and prisoners). Other concomitant treatments and vaccination (e.g., ACAM2000, Jynneos) are allowed under this IND program for tecovirimat.

Tecovirimat treatment may be initiated for patients with laboratory confirmed non-variola orthopoxvirus infection or suspected infection based on known exposure(s) and/or clinical manifestations of disease. Patients with an initial negative OPXV test, but for whom both epidemiologic and clinic evidence suggests OPXV disease (particularly if clinical progression is worsening), should be re-tested but be treated with tecovirimat while results are pending. If results from re-testing confirm orthopoxvirus, patients should continue tecovirimat treatment. If results from re-testing are in agreement with the initial negative orthopoxvirus results, tecovirimat should be suspended in those patients.

Upon presentation, the patient should be thoroughly assessed per clinician's judgment to evaluate the potential need for tecovirimat. This may include a medical history, review of concomitant medications, and a physical examination with vital signs (e.g., weight, blood pressure, pulse, respiratory rate, temperature, and height). Clinical assessment and monitoring can be conducted in person or by telemedicine, whichever is feasible

Treating clinicians or their designees will be responsible for patient follow-up, monitoring, and reporting collected information to CDC. Th following report forms are required to be completed, retained, and/or returned to CDC:

- Obtain Informed Consent – prior to initiating tecovirimat treatment; provide a copy to the patient and retain a copy at the treating facility/institution. A copy does NOT need to be returned to CDC. Only if the signed informed consent forms cannot be maintained at the treating facility/institution, then they can be sent to CDC within 3 working days of tecovirimat initiation.
- Complete Form FDA 1572 and return to CDC within 3 working days of tecovirimat initiation.
- Patient Intake Form Please return to CDC within 3 working days of tecovirimat initiation. The form includes fields for:
  Medical history, baseline signs/symptoms, vital signs, concomitant medications
  Clinical laboratory parameters, if performed per treating clinician's clinical judgment depending on patient's underlying condition, then attach a copy of clinic laboratory results (e.g., hematology, chemistry, urinalysis).
- Clinical Outcome Form Please return to CDC within 3 working days of last patient follow-up. The form includes fields for:
  Progress of tecovirimat therapy and clinical outcomes, clinical labs (if performed based on clinical judgment depending on patient's underlying condition), and lesion/scab and serum samples (if collected).
  Occurrence of SAEs – if yes, reported by completing a fillable-PDF MedWatch Form and returning to CDC via email (regaffairs@cdc.gov) within 72 hours of awareness or sooner if possible. A fillable-PDF MedWatch Form can also be downloaded from MedWatch Forms for FDA Safety Reporting FDA.

Optional lesion photos: If feasible, take lesion photos at baseline prior to tecovirimat treatment, and post-treatment to follow lesion progression and healing during treatment. When submitting photos, please indicate date the photo was taken, the corresponding tecovirimat treatment day, patient name or MRN, and treating facility.

Methods of returning the above information are:

- Secure Share File for lesion photos and large file sizes (please zip multiple files and use filenames with patient identifier, hospital name, and date): https://centersfordiseasecontrol.sharefile.com/rr3941801ebcbd4002b4dfe98e314ec697
- Encrypted email: regaffairs@cdc.gov (personally identifiable information should not be emailed without encryption)
- Fax: 404-902-5921

For outpatients: If feasible, treating clinicians may provide a diary form for patients to complete at home daily and voluntarily return it directly to CDC.

For more information please review Expanded Access IND Protocol: Use of Tecovirimat (TPOXX®) for Treatment of Human Non-Variola Orthopoxvirus Infections in Adults and Children

The Morning

August 3, 2022

By German Lopez

Good morning. Monkeypox is not Covid, but there are good reasons to take precautions.

[redacted]

A painful illness

The viral disease monkeypox is spreading around the world. So far, there are more than 6,300 known cases in the U.S., almost entirely among gay and bisexual men. New York, California, Illinois and some cities have declared states of emergency, following the World Health Organization's own declaration of a global emergency.

The headlines are grim enough that you might be worried that monkeypox is like SARS or Covid: another virus that could disrupt or even threaten your life. The good news is monkeypox is much less contagious and much less likely to be deadly than Covid. There are also vaccines and treatments originally developed for smallpox that work on monkeypox.

But while monkeypox probably will not kill you, it can be excruciating enough that you want to avoid it nonetheless: It can cause pain that some patients compare to glass shards scraping against the skin. And although the virus is afflicting mostly gay and bisexual men now, that could change if it continues to spread unchecked. Nothing about the virus limits its spread to only men who have sex with men (not all of whom identify as gay or bisexual).

Today's newsletter explains what we know about monkeypox and what people can do to stay safe.

How bad is it?

Monkeypox produces symptoms that can range from unpleasant to painful, although they are rarely deadly. At least six deaths, out of 25,000 cases, have been reported in places where the virus was not known to exist before the current outbreak. The risk of death is higher for young children and people who are immunocompromised or pregnant.

The telltale symptom is sores, which can look like pimples or blisters. They can hurt, especially in sensitive areas like the genitals and anus.

“I was scared to use the bathroom,” a recent monkeypox patient, Gabriel Morales, told The Times. He described the sores as feeling like “broken glass” in his body.

Other symptoms include fever, headache, muscle aches, swollen lymph nodes, chills and exhaustion. The disease typically lasts two to four weeks.

How does it spread?

Monkeypox mostly spreads through close physical contact, typically skin-to-skin touch. Most infections in the current outbreak have occurred through close contact during sex. The virus also can spread through contaminated surfaces, including clothes and bedding. Brief contact, like a handshake, is not usually enough to spread monkeypox. Unlike Covid, it does not seem to spread much through the air.

Nearly half of known U.S. cases have occurred in the first three states to declare emergencies: New York, California and Illinois.

So far, about 98 percent of cases worldwide are among men who have sex with men. Many of them have had multiple partners, sometimes strangers. Some early superspreader events were gay parties in Europe, which appeared to introduce the virus into the social networks of men who have sex with men.

Public health officials have struggled with acknowledging some of these factors, fearing that they could stigmatize gay and bisexual men. But part of a proper public health response is targeting the people most at risk and the riskiest activities, and that requires an honest assessment of what is happening.

What can you do?

Most people are not currently at serious risk of catching monkeypox, with the virus concentrated among gay and bisexual men for now. “Your risk depends on who you are,” my colleague Apoorva Mandavilli, who has covered the current outbreak since the first U.S. case was identified, told me.

To lower their risk, gay and bisexual men can try to make sure their male sex partners do not have monkeypox, watching out for sores. They can use a condom, which can at least reduce the chances of getting sores in sensitive areas. They can temporarily reduce their number of sexual partners or avoid riskier activities, such as anonymous sex and sex parties. Practicing good hygiene, like frequent hand-washing, can help, too.

Vaccines and tests for monkeypox also exist, although they are not widely available right now because of supply shortages and strict government rules about access.

If someone is infected, the C.D.C. recommends isolating at home and staying away from others if possible. But that can be very difficult with a disease that can last four weeks — another reason to prioritize prevention and slow the spread.

What are officials doing?

Public health officials are trying to make vaccines, treatments and testing more available. President Biden yesterday named a national monkeypox response coordinator to oversee those efforts.

But progress has been slow. As monkeypox spread in May and June, 300,000 vaccine doses owned by the U.S. sat in Denmark.

Officials are also trying to raise public awareness of monkeypox, given that it is a new virus to most Americans.

Their main goal now is to avoid a wider outbreak that makes monkeypox an endemic virus that spreads regularly across the U.S., like influenza. If monkeypox keeps spreading unchecked, it could eventually spill over to a broader population than gay and bisexual men, said Dr. Céline Gounder, a senior fellow at the Kaiser Family Foundation.

“It’s still containable,” she added. “But it is going to require more aggressive screening, testing and vaccination.”

The bottom line

Monkeypox is not typically fatal, but it still can cause painful disease and permanent scarring. The risk is not high for most people now, but that could change if the virus continues to spread. And the people who are at serious risk can take steps to stay safe and prevent the outbreak from getting worse.

Bipartisan Economic Experts and Former Treasury Secretaries Support The Inflation Reduction Act

Former Treasury Secretaries' Statement on Inflation Reduction Act

Five former Treasury secretaries — including Hank Paulson, who served under President George W. Bush — signed a statement strongly backing the "Inflation Reduction Act" brokered by Senate Majority Leader Chuck

[redacted]

Schumer and Sen. Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.).

Why it matters: The bipartisan support will help the White House and Democrats push back against the Republican contention that millions of Americans who make under $400,000 a year would see their taxes rise.

- The others who signed on are Robert Rubin and Larry Summers (President Clinton), Tim Geithner and Jacob Lew (President Obama).
- Senate votes are expected to begin later this week on the health, climate and tax plan.

"As former Treasury Secretaries of both Democratic and Republican Administrations," the statement says, "we support the Inflation Reduction Act which is financed by prudent tax policy that will collect more from top-earners and large corporations.

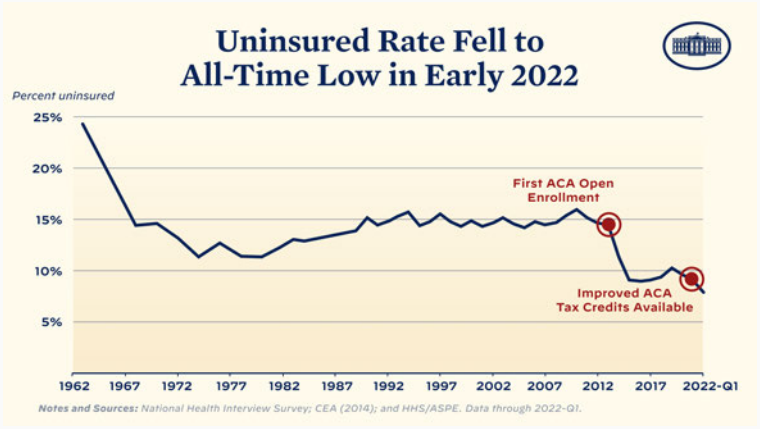
"Taxes due or paid will not increase for any family making less than $400,000/year. And the extra taxes levied on corporations do not reflect increases in the corporate tax rate, but rather the reclaiming of revenue lost to tax avoidance and provisions benefitting the most affluent.

The selective presentation by some of the distributional effects of this bill neglects benefits to middle-class families from reducing deficits, from bringing down prescription drug prices, and from more affordable energy. This legislation will help increase American competitiveness, address our climate crisis, lower costs for families, and fight inflation — and should be passed immediately by Congress."

Statement by President Biden on the July Jobs Report

Today, the unemployment rate matches the lowest it's been in more than 50 years: 3.5%. More people are working than at any point in American history. That's millions of families with the dignity and peace of mind that a paycheck provides. And, it's the result of my economic plan to build the economy from the bottom up and middle out. I ran for president to rebuild the middle class – there's more work to do, but today's jobs report shows we are making significant progress for working families.

Statement by President Joe Biden on All-Time Low Uninsured Rate



Every American has the right to the peace of mind that comes with access to affordable, quality health care. No one should worry about whether they can pay for their doctor or choose between paying rent and filing a prescription. Today, we are closer than ever to making that principle a reality. The lowest percentage of Americans are uninsured today – eight percent – in history.

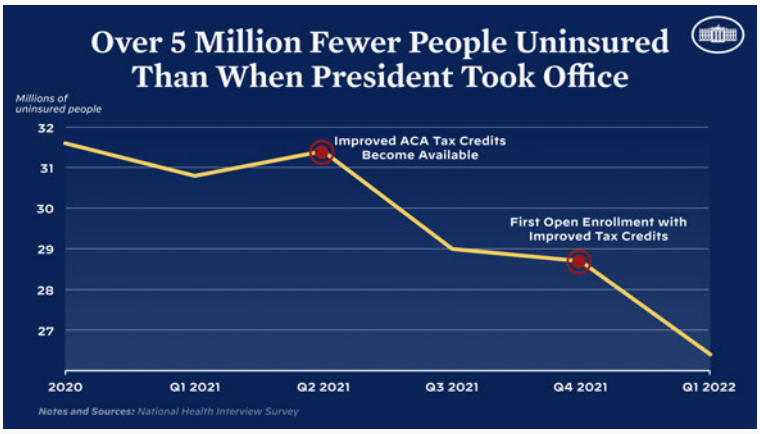
This progress did not happen by accident. More than 35 million Americans are enrolled in Affordable Care Act related coverage – the highest total on record. This includes over 21 million people who are enrolled in the ACA's expansion of Medicaid, coverage that is denied to nearly four million Americans who live in states that have refused to expand Medicaid. And, since the beginning of my Administration, 5 million more people have gained health insurance coverage – in significant part because of the improvements to the ACA in the American Rescue Plan.

When I ran for office, I said we needed to protect and build on the Affordable Care Act. The Inflation Reduction Act will do just that – it will lock in an average $800 a year savings in health insurance premiums for 13 million Americans and prevent 3 million Americans from becoming uninsured. I urge Congress to pass this legislation swiftly to lower health care costs and make health insurance coverage more accessible for families across the country.



Statement by President Joe Biden on Defeat of Kansas Ballot Measure Threatening Women's Right to Abortion

The Supreme Court's extreme decision to overturn Roe v. Wade put women's health and lives at risk. Tonight, the American people had something to say about it. Voters in Kansas turned out in record numbers to reject extreme efforts to amend the state constitution to take away a woman's right to choose and open the door for a state-wide ban. This vote makes clear what we know: the majority of Americans agree that women should have access to abortion and should have the right to make their own health care decisions.

Congress should listen to the will of the American people and restore the protections of Roe as federal law. While that is the only way to secure a woman's right to choose, my Administration will continue to take meaningful action to protect women's access to reproductive health care. We will continue to act where we can to protect women's reproductive rights and access to care. And, the American people must continue to use their voices to protect the right to women's health care, including abortion.

Statement by President Joe Biden on Senate Passage of the Bipartisan PACT Act

While we can never fully repay the enormous debt we owe to those who have worn the uniform, today, the United States Congress took important action to meet this sacred obligation. The bipartisan Sergeant First Class Heath Robinson Honoring Our PACT Act of 2022 is the biggest expansion of benefits for service-connected health issues in 30 years and the largest single bill ever to comprehensively address exposure to burn pits.

I called for this legislation in my State of the Union address, as part of my Unity Agenda to help bring together our nation. Congress has delivered a decisive and bipartisan win for America's veterans. I want to thank Chair Tester and Ranking Member Moran as well as Chair Takano and Ranking Member Bost for their tireless work to pass this major reform, and the courageous veterans and advocates whose tenacity and heart ensured this legislation got done.

For the millions of veterans who may have been exposed to harmful toxins, this bill means quicker access to health care services and other benefits. This could be the difference between life and death for many suffering from toxic related illnesses. For the spouse or child of a servicemember who died from toxic exposure, struggling to put their lives back together, this bill will be a lifeline. It means a monthly stipend for a surviving spouse and kids, and access to tuition benefits to help cover the cost of college. It means access to life insurance, home loan assistance, and help with health care. It matters.

I have long said we have a lot of obligations as a nation, but we have only one sacred obligation – to prepare and equip those we send to war and to take care of them and their families when they come home.

I look forward to signing this bill, so that veterans and their families and caregivers impacted by toxic exposures finally get the benefits and comprehensive health care they earned and deserve.

White House Releases Fact Sheets Highlighting President Biden's Bipartisan Infrastructure Law's Progress Nationwide

This week, the White House released updated fact sheets highlighting how President Biden's Bipartisan Infrastructure is delivering results for all 50 states, territories, the District of Columbia, and Tribal communities.

Eight months following the passage of the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law, the Biden-Harris Administration has made unprecedented investments in all 50 states and territories to build a better America that delivers for all communities. Since November 2021, President Biden and Vice President Harris have left no community behind in their efforts to rebuild America's infrastructure.

The Bipartisan Infrastructure Law is rebuilding our roads and bridges, replacing lead pipes to provide clean water, providing high-speed internet to every family in America, delivering cheaper and cleaner energy to households and businesses, and creating good-paying jobs. Since signing the law, the Biden-Harris Administration has hit the ground running to make major progress.

Below are individual fact sheets, which provide detailed information about announced and anticipated funding as well as signature projects:

Biden-Harris Administration Announces over $1 Billion in Project Selections Make Communities More Resilient to Climate Change and Extreme Weather Events

This week, Vice President Kamala Harris, Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro N. Mayorkas, and FEMA Administrator Deanne Criswell announced the selections for $1.16 billion in climate resilience funding through two competitive grant programs to help communities across the nation enhance climate and disaster resiliency.

The selections include large resilience projects funded by the Building

Resilient Infrastructure and Communities (BRIC) national competition and Flood Mitigation Assistance (FMA) community-wide flood mitigation projects. Selections are from Fiscal Year 2021 funding round with $1 billion made available through BRIC and $160 million made available for Flood Mitigation Assistance.

“Climate change poses a very real threat to the safety, security, and prosperity of the United States,” said Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro N. Mayorkas. “Its impacts are being felt in real time and are felt most acutely by the nation’s most vulnerable communities. While we can’t eliminate the threats we face as a nation, we can and must build our resilience against those threats – and that is why we are making this announcement today – because, together, we are building climate resilience.”

Biden-Harris Administration Updates on Monkeypox Efforts

Biden-Harris Administration Declares Monkeypox a Public Health Emergency

U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Xavier Becerra announced today that he will declare the ongoing spread of monkeypox virus in the United States a Public Health Emergency (PHE). This action will further strengthen and accelerate the Biden-Harris Administration’s response in recognition of the continued rapid transmission of monkeypox in the U.S. and globally, and to signal the seriousness and urgency with which the Administration is responding. The announcement comes on the heels of President Biden appointing Robert Fenton of the Federal Emergency Management Agency as White House National Monkeypox Response Coordinator and Dr. Demetre Daskalakis of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention as White House National Monkeypox Response Deputy Coordinator.

President Biden Announces Team to Lead Monkeypox Response

This week, President Biden named FEMA’s Robert Fenton as the White House National Monkeypox Response Coordinator and Dr. Demetre Daskalakis as the White House National Monkeypox Response Deputy Coordinator. Fenton and Daskalakis will lead the Administration's strategy and operations to combat the current monkeypox outbreak, including equitably increasing the availability of tests, vaccinations and treatments.

Robert Fenton currently serves as Regional Administrator for FEMA Region 9 in the American West, with nearly 50 million people in his area of responsibility. One of the Nation's most experienced and effective emergency management leaders, Robert Fenton has twice served as Acting Administrator of FEMA and led multiple challenging prevention, response and recovery operations throughout his long and distinguished career, including for natural disasters, disease outbreaks, and complex humanitarian operations.

Demetre Daskalakis, a leading public health expert, is currently Director of the CDC Division of HIV Prevention. Widely known as a national expert on health issues affecting the LGBGQIA+ communities, his clinical practice has focused on providing care for the underserved LGBTQIA+ communities. He previously oversaw management of infectious diseases for the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene, one of the largest departments in the nation – including in serving as incident commander for the City's COVID-19 response.

Public Service Loan Forgiveness (PSLF) Program

On October 6, 2021, the U.S. Department of Education announced a change to the Public Service Loan Forgiveness (PSLF) program rules for a limited time as a result of the COVID-19 national emergency. Millions of non-profit and government employees have federal student loans and may now be eligible for loan forgiveness or additional credit through the temporary changes, known as the Limited PSLF Waiver. Under normal PSLF rules, borrowers must make 120 payments on a Direct Loan while on a qualifying repayment plan and employed by a qualifying public service employer. Now, for a limited period of time, federal student loan borrowers may receive credit for past periods of repayment that would otherwise not qualify for PSLF. Borrowers can apply for the waiver at www.studentaid.gov/pslfwaiver.

The waiver will run through October 31, 2022. This means some borrowers will need to consolidate and/or submit a PSLF form – the single application used for a review of employment certification, payment counts, and processing of forgiveness – on or before October 31, 2022, to have previously ineligible payments counted. After October 31, 2022, normal PSLF rules will apply.

We encourage you to take action to help elevate the PSLF program amongst government employees.

Hi Marc,

When you say more time is needed to study cost sharing options, what exactly do you mean? Do you plan to study the issue more? Will you only study more if the subcommittee requests it? How much time and effort would be required to do more study and come to a clearer conclusion? Thanks for the attached report.

Sean, Russell, and Kimberly -

Please see the attached report from DHHS that was due to SSA by August 1, 2022:
- Net impact to the Spinal Cord and Brain Injury Rehabilitation Fund of implementing cost sharing

The Department has one other report due to SSA in the coming days that is still being finalized:
- Cost to implement a statewide support program, that would qualify for expenditures from the Opioid Litigation Settlement Restricted Account, for pregnant women with substance use disorder to receive various services (August 10)

Please let us know if you have any questions.

Hello Krisann,
Thank you for the outreach. We are live with pharmacist based prescribing of hormonal contraceptives in many states and our teams have a roadmap to expansion. We are currently not live in Utah since we cannot leverage our universal digital tool for the patient assessment.

Other states permit our clinical teams to create a digital assessment form that incorporates all of the questions that would be part of the state form and transfers them over to our digital tool. We understand that this action is not allowed in Utah, which has impeded our ability to provide this service.

I am out-of-office this week as well, and I would happily wish to connect and see if we can rectify this matter upon my return.
Sincerely,
John

Hi Theresa,

I don't know if we've met yet, I've worked with Larry in the past related to COVID-19. I hope all is well with you, I am working on a project for Department leadership unrelated to COVID and I'm wondering if you could provide me some insight for CVS regarding a particular issue.

It's related to the Utah Statewide Standing Order Pharmacist Dispensing of Hormonal Contraception and Utah Hormonal Contraceptive Self-Screenir Questionnaire. I have just a few questions I'm hoping you can respond to:

1. Does CVS participate in this program?
2. Why or why not?
3. Are there barriers that the State could help address?

Any other information or perspectives you have related to this issue would be greatly appreciated! I'm hoping you can respond by early next week if possible?

Hi Marc, my understanding is that since the SCI / BI Rehabilitation Fund is a payor of last resort, primary instances when cost-sharing occurs in Utah:

1. Medicaid / Medicare (as a result of job loss / insurance due to the injury)
2. Out-of-pocket

Typically participants of the SCI / BI Rehabilitation Fund exhaust all cost-sharing options prior to application for the SCI / BI Rehabilitation Funds. As a result, the data elements weren't historically tracked so it is difficult to determine the net impact of these cost-sharing efforts. If the subcommittee intends to look at the impact of the cost-sharing efforts over time, rather than th

Sean, Russell, and Kimberly -

Please see the attached report from DHHS that was due to SSA by August 1, 2022:
- Net impact to the Spinal Cord and Brain Injury Rehabilitation Fund of implementing cost sharing

The Department has one other report due to SSA in the coming days that is still being finalized:
- Cost to implement a statewide support program, that would qualify for expenditures from the Opioid Litigation Settlement Restricted Account, for pregnant women with substance use disorder to receive various services (August 10)

Please let us know if you have any questions.

SUBJECT: FEEDBACK NEEDED: Response to LFA Questions regarding LegislativeRequired Reports for SSA - August 1, 2022

Taking responses from Janae and Anna (as well as IM's) I've put together the following proposed response. OFO has typically taken the lead on responses to LFA Staff so perhaps this is a bit more pointed than a normal response (especially the last paragraph), so you all might want to weigh in on this before we send our official response back...

It is the Department's understanding that cost sharing means:

- "The share of costs covered by your insurance that you pay out of your own pocket. This term generally includes deductibles, coinsurance, and copayments, or similar charges, but it doesn't include premiums, balance billing amounts for non-network providers, or the cost of non-covered services." (Glossary, HealthCare.gov)

With that understanding, because the SCI / BI Rehabilitation Fund in Utah is a payor of last resort, we view the State as already participating in a cost-sharing program. Participants of the SCI BI Rehabilitation Fund exhaust all cost-sharing options prior to application for the SCI / BI Rehabilitation Funds. As a result, the data elements (unsure what we are referring to here) weren't historically tracked so it is difficult to determine the net impact of these cost-sharing efforts. If the subcommittee intends to look at the impact of the cost-sharing efforts over time, rather than th one-year provided, we will study the issue more. We have built in more measures to look at this over time, so a few years of collecting data would be helpful.

To make sure we are on the same page, could you share with us what the legislature considers to be Cost Sharing? It will be helpful for us all to work from the same definition and understanding of what would or would not constitute cost-sharing under this specific circumstance (SCI / BI Rehabilitation Fund). Is the legislature suggesting that the account be changed to start allowing people who can pay to have preference to the Fund as a potential means of allowing more insured persons to receive rehabilitation services? What effect would this have on tho who are least able to pay into the system? Would this not preclude many of them from receiving services as more funds are used to help those with some ability to pay (i.e "cost sharing")?

Thanks Marc, I like the response. In regards to the highlighted section referring to data elements - it is the additional data (measures) that the providers are now collecting from applicants. Let me know if more clarification is needed. Thanks all.

OFO has typically taken the lead on responses to LFA Staff so perhaps this is bit more pointed than a normal response (especially the last paragraph), so you all might want to weigh in on this before we send our official response back...

It is the Department's understanding that cost sharing means:

- "The share of costs covered by your insurance that you pay out of your own pocket. This term generally includes deductibles, coinsurance, and copayments, or similar charges, but doesn't include premiums, balance billing amounts for non-network providers, or the cost of non-covered services." (Glossary, HealthCare.gov)

With that understanding, because the SCI / BI Rehabilitation Fund in Utah is a payor of last resort, we view the State as already participating in a cost-sharing program. Participants of the SCI / BI Rehabilitation Fund exhaust all cost-sharing options prior to application for the SCI / BI Rehabilitation Funds. As a result, the data elements (unsure what we are referring to here) weren't historically tracked so it is difficult to determine the net impact of these cost-sharing efforts. If the subcommittee intends to look at the impact of the cost-sharing efforts over time, rather than the one-year provided, we will study the issue more. We have built in more measures to look at this over time, so a few years of collecting data would be helpful.

To make sure we are on the same page, could you share with us what the legislature considers to be Cost Sharing? It will be helpful for us all to work from the same definition and understanding of what would or would not constitute cost-sharing under this specific circumstance (SCI / BI Rehabilitation Fund). Is the legislature suggesting that the account be changed to start allowing people who can pay to have preference to the Fund as a potential means of allowing more insured persons to receive rehabilitation services? What effect would this have on those who are least able to pay into the system? Would this not preclude many of them from receiving services as more funds are used to help those with some ability to pay (i.e "cost sharing")?

Hi Nate- I'm not familiar with the CVS tool however the issue that does come to mind is whether the tool is available to minors such that it would provide contraceptives to minors without parer consent. See Utah Code 76-7-322. Public funds for provision of contraceptive or abortion services restricted.

Hello Krisann,
Thank you for the outreach. We are live with pharmacist based prescribing of hormonal contraceptives in many states and our teams have a roadmap to expansion. We are currently not live in Utah since we cannot leverage our universal digital tool for the patient assessment.

Other states permit our clinical teams to create a digital assessment form that incorporates all of the questions that would be part of the state form and transfers them over to our digital tool. We understand that this action is not allowed in Utah, which has impeded our ability to provide this service.

I am out-of-office this week as well, and I would happily wish to connect and see if we can rectify this matter upon my return.
Sincerely,
John

Hi Theresa,

I don't know if we've met yet, I've worked with Larry in the past related to COVID-19. I hope all is well with you, I am working on a project for Department leadership unrelated to COVID and I'm wondering if you could provide me some insight for CVS regarding a particular issue.

It's related to the Utah Statewide Standing Order Pharmacist Dispensing of Hormonal Contraception and Utah Hormonal Contraceptive Self-Screening Questionnaire. I have just a few questions I'm hoping you can respond to:

1. Does CVS participate in this program?
2. Why or why not?
3. Are there barriers that the State could help address?

Any other information or perspectives you have related to this issue would be greatly appreciated! I'm hoping you can respond by early next week if possible?

The diagnosis is acute in nature to describe the withdrawal symptoms an infant experiences. This is from the ICD-10 code clinical information:

- A constellation of signs and symptoms observable in a neonate that are consistent with maternal substance abuse or withdrawal while pregnant.
- Fetal and neonatal addiction and withdrawal as a result of the mother's dependence on drugs during pregnancy. Withdrawal or abstinence symptoms develop shortly after birth. Symptoms exhibited are loud, high-pitched crying, sweating, yawning and gastrointestinal disturbances.

That said, the diagnosis would typically stay in the child's medical record long-term to lend contextual information to any developmental issues that result from having had neonatal abstinence syndrome.

Does that make sense?

Thank you so much, Michelle. I am the program manager for the Baby Watch Early Intervention Program, and have a question about one of the diagnoses on our Baby Watch Early Intervention Program Approved Diagnosis List

My question regarding Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome (NAS). I know that there are often developmental impacts that may show up at various points during the child's development. My question is: Would this diagnosis be considered acute in nature (during the withdrawal period), or would it still be used long term as an underlying diagnosis for various health and development problems?

Please let me know if you need further clarification or would like to have a conversation.

Thank you again.

Warmly,

Top Stories: Avenues 'cottages' rezone approved despite heavy pushback

UMA Council of Trustees members and guests- This is a reminder of the Council meeting next Thursday, August 18 at 5p. Shortly, we'll send you the agenda, minutes from the last meeting, and other applicable meeting handouts.

One of the discussion items is the Dobbs decision (Roe v Wade). The discussion will be technical and will center around the reality of the decision and what it means in Utah.

We've received RSVPs from some of you, but would greatly appreciate hearing from everyone as to whether you can participate or not.
Zoom instructions are below.

Please let us know if you have any questions.

We hope to welcome you on the 18th.
Thank you.

PUBLIC HEALTH WEEKLY

August 11, 2022

A Grassroots Leader's Vision for the Future Community Health Workforce

Community Health Workers (CHWs) have played an integral role in educating, connecting, and treating vulnerable individuals throughout the COVID-19 pandemic.

ASTHO spoke with Denise Ocasio-Smith, executive director of the National Association of Community Health Workers, about the critical work of CHWs. She discusses their roles in marginalized communities, and how public health can partner with and support CHWs. Learn more about this critical workforce.

A Not-So-Sleepy Summer: Q&A with ASTHO Federal Government Affairs

The Congressional summer season has come to a close, and several key issues are left lingering on the table. Whether public health will receive supplemental funding for the monkeypox and COVID-19 responses remains uncertain, and the FY23 appropriations bill faces a long road before it can be passed.

Check out the latest updates on discussions and actions between the House and Senate in this week's Federal Healthy Policy Update.

SUBJECT: UMA MediByte: HOD to Debate Plethora of Issues

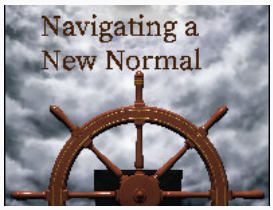
HOD to Debate Issues, Issues, Issues



This year's UMA House of Delegates (HOD) could be one of the busiest in many years as a plethora of Resolutions has already been submitted for consideration. Issues to be discussed will include contraception and abortion, board certification, gun safety training, collective negotiating, "any qualified physician" or "facility" debates, public health, prohibiting insurance payment takebacks, inland port environmental studies, obesity treatment and more.

Delegates will debate and establish or refine UMA policies on these issues. The UMA Board and staff will then work in compliance with adopted resolutions to influence legislation and public perceptions on the issues.

The best way to make sure your opinions are part of the debate is to serve as a delegate at the meeting. The HOD meeting will be held September 9th (full day) and 10th (half day) at Thanksgiving Point in Lehi, UT. The deadline to be named as a delegate is August 15th, so do not delay if you are interested.

See the Events section below for more information on becoming a UMA Delegate.

Medicaid Patients: Watch for Review Letter, Update Addresses

Utah Medicaid is asking physicians and other healthcare providers to encourage Medicaid patients to update their contact information so that when the Dept. of Workforce Services sends their review letter, it will reach the member and they can complete their renewal and avoid gaps in coverage.

Although Medicaid is required to continue coverage during a public health emergency (PHE), as soon as the PHE ends, many Medicaid members could lose coverage, especially if Medicaid is unable to contact them with their review letter. A communication toolkit (PowerPoint file) is available for those who can assist in getting this message to Medicaid patients.

More information and updates about the PHE Unwinding is available on the Utah Medicaid website.

Preventive Care Challenged in TX Lawsuit

NPR (8/9) reports, “The Affordable Care Act has survived many challenges in court, but the case of Kelley v. Becerra – now before a federal judge in Texas – threatens to undermine one of the most popular provisions in the law, which requires most health plans to provide coverage for preventive care with no copays.” And “if the judge rules in favor of the plaintiffs, access to free birth control, cancer screenings, vaccines, PrEP (HIV pre-exposure prophylaxis), counseling for alcohol misuse, diet counseling for people at higher risk of chronic disease, and many more preventive services would be in jeopardy, according to the nation's leading doctors' groups, which have sounded the alarm." AMA President Jack Resneck, Jr., M.D., said, "The lawsuit could cause millions of Americans, probably more than 150 million, to lose guaranteed access to preventive services. There's really a great deal at stake."

UnitedHealthcare to Cut Out-of-Pocket $ for Insulin, other Emergency Drugs

UnitedHealthcare plans to eliminate out-of-pocket costs in standard fully-insured group plans for insulin and several drugs used to treat emergencies, including epinephrine, glucagon, albuterol, and naloxone. This new standard offering will be available potentially as early as January 1, 2023.

"Eliminating out-of-pocket expenses for these critical medications can help reduce the burden of medical costs on consumers and encourage better medication adherence, reducing the risk of complications and expensive hospitalizations," said the company in a press release.

"We welcome this development and encourage the other major payors to match this common sense policy," said UMA CEO Michelle S. McOmber, MBA CAE.

Evusheld Available to Small Practices

Small physician practices now have a new pathway to access the COVID-19 pre-exposure drug Evusheld, and in smaller amounts. Practices also can benefit from a new helpline at 1-833-EVUSHLD (1-833-388-7453) for information on the monoclonal antibody treatment that helps prevent COVID-19 infection among immunocompromised patients at high risk of severe illness, and how to order it.

Individual providers and smaller sites of care that do not currently receive Evusheld through the HHS Health Partner Order Portal (or HPOP) distribution process can use the new pathway to order "small, limited quantities of the drug" directly from the manufacturer in amounts of one to three patient courses, said HHS.

Evusheld is one of several COVID-19 therapeutics available from the U.S. government at no cost.

Find the order form, hotline, and other information on this HHS website. Also, be sure to check out the Food and Drug Administration's revised dosing recommendations for Evusheld, which is authorized for people aged 12 and older and given as two consecutive intramuscular injections.

Greetings, Tracy has asked me to develop a policy recommendation to increase pharmacy participation in creating access to contraception for the Lieutenant Governor and Governor. There is some urgency, need to have something in 2-3 weeks. I'm also talking to DOPL so we can get an entire workgroup put together but wanted to get this on your calendars.
Jen, You are booked all week, is this time a possibility for you? Also, Tracy mentioned the new Pharmacy Director, I'm not sure who that is, can we include them as well and anyone else you think might make sense?

Greetings, Tracy has asked me to develop a policy recommendation to increase pharmacy participation in creating access to contraception for the Lieutenant Governor and Governor. There is some urgency, need to have something in 2-3 weeks. I'm also talking to DOPL so we can get an entire workgroup put together but wanted to get this on your calendars.

Jen, You are booked all week, is this time a possibility for you? Also, Tracy mentioned the new Pharmacy Director, I'm not sure who that is, can we include them as well and anyone else you think might make sense?

Greetings,

Our Executive Director, Tracy Gruber, has asked me to work with all of you to develop a solid policy recommendation for the Governor's Office aimed at increasing pharmacy participation in ar removing barriers to the existing programs (prescribing and standing order). In my initial research I identified a number of barriers and concerns but I'm looking to all of you as subject matter experts to really fill in the gaps and help us craft a solid policy recommendation.

This is time sensitive, we've been asked to come up with something in the next 2-3 weeks. I realize we likely need to include Carrie Dunford and others from the Board of Pharmacy but would like to meet with staff first.

I'm going to look for open times to set up a meeting, please let me know if what I send doesn't work for you.

Here are the barriers identified by my initial research which did include talking to some DHHS staff and the Regional Directors from Walgreens, CVS, and Krogers.

- Utah currently has two separate methods for obtaining hormonal contraception directly from a pharmacy: 1) Utah Standing Order Pharmacist Dispensing of Hormona Contraception 2) Utah Code 58-17b-625 allowing prescription of self-administered hormonal contraceptives by a pharmacist. There are many bureaucratic barriers to the approaches and a major lack of awareness by both the pharmacies (even ones enrolled with the Department for the standing order) and the public.
    - Having two different options may be confusing. Difficult to find all the correct information.
        - No funding or resources have been dedicated to this effort for marketing/awareness or staffing. Also confusion may exist between roles of DHHS and DOPL.

[redacted]

Standing order requirements may be a barrier.

Guidance for prescribing issued by DOPL includes requirements as well that may be a barrier.

Payment for the consultation. Patients must pay for the service out of pocket since most insurance companies don't recognize pharmacists as providers. This particularly becomes an issue when pharmacists assess a patient and identify that the patient must be referred. Then either the pharmacist has provided the service up to that point for fre or the patient pays for the assessment only to leave without a prescription, having to go to a different provider.

> Most pharmacies are set up to bill for pharmacy services only, not for medical billing so even if an insurer offers to pay for consultation services many pharmacies aren't set up to bill.

Pharmacists must enroll and take a training. Cost is $150-$250, then must submit this to Department of Health for standing order. They don't have to provide proof for prescribing to DHHS but not sure about DOPL. Utah Pharmacist Contraception Services Training Program .

Pharmacy consultation fees, required at the initial screening by most pharmacies that are aware of the programs and participate, averaged $30–40. Combined with the average cost of contraception ($20), out-of-pocket cost for uninsured patients averaged $50–60 for an initial 1-month supply. Unlike appointments with physicians, nurse practitioners, or physician assistants, pharmacist consultation fees are generally not covered by insurance. Even if the patient has insurance coverage for the medication, the consultation fees may be a barrier to service utilization.

> This issue is exacerbated for the uninsured, while the consultation/evaluation fees are almost always out of pocket when the service is available the actual contraceptic is an additional cost.
> This is of particular concern in rural communities that do not have clinics specializing in family planning such as Planned Parenthood where contraception may be obtained for free with a visit.

Staffing concerns from pharmacies. As with many industries and especially in healthcare, our pharmacies (Krogers) are suffering from staffing shortages and high turnover. Mostly pharmacy technicians but also pharmacists. This, coupled with the COVID vaccine demand, and looking ahead to flu vaccine season/COVID boosters, capacity is a concern.

Michelle Hofmann (DHHS), 2022-08-17 07:38:21
Can we possibly look for another time for the DOPL meeting on contraception access. I have an all day EDO retreat and feel like I need to be at the DOPL meeting.

Krisann Humphreys Bacon (DHHS), 2022-08-17 07:44:40
Yes, your and Jen's schedule are really booked, is there anything you can move in Wednesday the 24th?

Krisann Humphreys Bacon (DHHS), 2022-08-17 07:45:51
Looks like we could maybe do 1pm?

Krisann Humphreys Bacon (DHHS), 2022-08-17 07:49:18
We could try for 8am on Wednesday but Laurie doesn't get in the office until 8:30.

Michelle Hofmann (DHHS), 2022-08-17 08:07:09
Wed 24th I can do the 8:15 hold time or 2-3.

As we discussed the intention is to create one survey to send out regardless of if they currently participate or not; please send any recommended questions or direction of questions to assist in the creation of the survey.

Ashley- could we create questions that filter in one direction or another based upon their answers?

PUBLIC HEALTH WEEKLY

Letter to the White House Requesting Funding For a National Monkeypox Response

In response to HHS' recent declaration of the monkeypox outbreak as a public health emergency, ASTHO CEO Michael Fraser writes to the White House asking for increased resources to better support state, local, tribal, and territorial health agencies as they respond to the outbreak.

While health departments have been able to use COVID-19 supplemental funding as part of their monkeypox response, it has become increasingly clear that public health needs dedicated resources to launch an effective campaign against monkeypox. Learn more about the evolving response now.

Strategic Policies Protect Breastfeeding in Workplaces and Schools

The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends that infants be exclusively breastfed for the first six months of life and continue for one year while introducing solid foods.

Studies also show that Black, low-income, and other systemically marginalized families are disproportionately impacted by work environments without lactation accommodation.

Learn how states are strengthening workplace and school protections for breastfeeding and lactation in this week's Health Policy Update.

The Santa Fe Group recently convened former government public health leaders with current state health officials in need of leadership-level

Legal Considerations for Scaling Monkeypox Vaccination Efforts

Cases have been more than 17,000 cases of monkeypox virus across 50 states, Puerto Rico, and Washington, D.C. Public health officials from all levels of technical assistance and support. ASTHO developed this program with CDC to support state health officials as they face their biggest professional challenges.

In our new episode of the Public Health Review podcast, we learn about the work Greg Holzman (alumni-MT) and Paula Tran (SHO-WI) have done in Wisconsin to strengthen the statewide public health infrastructure.

Hi all,

Adding BettySue and Kendra as they also sent me this email.

As far as PE, local districts and charters do have internal policies on this issue and it would remain a local control issue unless something happens at the legislative level. For example, I received an email yesterday from Davis that they will not have PE or recess outside if the temps are over 100.

Their handbook (attached, pgs 78-79), states:

20220907_BarclaysSummerLTO

Heat Acclimatization

Before participating in the preseason practice period, all student-athletes should undergo a pre-participation medical examination administered by a qualified medical professional. The examination can identify predisposing factors related to a number of safety concerns, including the identification of youths at particular risk for exertional heat illness.

The heat-acclimatization period is defined as the initial 14 consecutive days of preseason practice for all student athletes. The goal of the acclimatization period is to enhance exercise heat tolerance and the ability to exercise safely and effectively in warm to hot conditions. This period should begin on the first day of practice or conditioning before the regular season. Any practices or conditioning conducted before this time should not be considered part of the heat-acclimatization period.

Regardless of the conditioning program and conditioning status leading up to the first formal practice, all student athletes (including those who arrive at preseason practice after the first day of practice) should follow the 14-day heat-acclimatization plan. During the preseason heat acclimatization period, if practice occurs on 6 consecutive days, student-athletes should have 1 day of complete rest (no conditioning, walk-throughs, practices, etc).

Days on which athletes do not practice due to a scheduled rest day, injury, or illness do not count toward the heat-acclimatization period. For example, an athlete who sits out the third and fourth days of practice during this time (e.g., Wednesday and Thursday) will resume practice as if on day 3 of the heat-acclimatization period when returning to play on Friday.

Definitions

A practice is defined as the period of time a participant engages in a coach-supervised, school approved, sport or coaching related physical activity. Each individual practice should last no more than three (3) hours. Warm-up, stretching, and cool down activities are part of the 3-hour practice time. Regardless of ambient temperature conditions, all conditioning and weight-room activities should be considered part of practice.

A walk-through is defined as a teaching opportunity with the athletes not wearing protective equipment (e.g., helmets, shoulder pads, catcher's gear, shin guards) or using other sport-related equipment (e.g., footballs, blocking sleds, pitching machines, soccer balls, marker cones). The walk-through is not part of the 3-hour practice period, can last no more than 1 hour per day, and does not include conditioning or weight-room activities.

A recovery period is defined as the time between the end of 1 practice or walk-through and the beginning of the next practice or walk-through. During this time, athletes should rest in a cool environment, with no sport or conditioning related activity permitted (e.g., speed or agility drills, strength training, conditioning, or walk-through). Treatment with the athletic trainer is permissible.

Requirements

A. Days 1 through 5 of the heat-acclimatization period consist of the first 5 days of formal practice. During this time, athletes may not participate in more than one (1) practice per day.

B. If a practice is interrupted by inclement weather or heat restrictions, the practice should recommence once conditions are deemed safe. Total practice time should not exceed 3 hours in any one (1) day.

C. A 1-hour maximum walk-through is permitted during days 1–5 of the heat-acclimatization period; how ever, a 3-hour recovery period should be inserted between the practice and walk-through (or vice versa).

D. During days 1–2 of the heat-acclimatization period, in sports requiring helmets or shoulder pads, a helmet is to be the only protective equipment permitted. During days 3–5, helmets and shoulder pads are permitted. Beginning on day 6, all protective equipment may be worn and full contact may begin.

i. On days 3–5, contact with blocking sleds and tackling dummies may be initiated.

ii. Full-contact sports: 100% live contact drills should begin no earlier than day 6.

E. A minimum of 1 rest day shall occur following 6 consecutive practice days.

F. Beginning no earlier than day 6 and continuing through day 14, double-practice days must be followed by a single-practice day. On single-practice days, 1 walk-through is permitted, separated from the practice by at least 3 hours of continuous rest. When a double-practice day is followed by a rest day, another double-practice day is permitted after the rest day.

G. On a double-practice day, neither practice shall exceed 3 hours in duration, nor shall student-athletes participate in more than 5 total hours of practice. Warm-up, stretching, cool-down, walk through, conditioning, and weight-room activities are included as part of the practice time. The two practices should be separated by at least 3 continuous hours in a cool environment.

Because the risk of exertional heat illnesses during the preseason heat-acclimatization period is high, it is strongly recommended that an athletic trainer be on site before, during, and after all practices.

I believe there are not any policies on this right now other than hydrate participants who are playing sports and having water available. I believe we should have a proactive voice in this to guide coaches and administrators as to being safe. Maybe it should come from the health department, USBE Health and P.E. as we are looking at PE classes also. Good question!

Good morning

Our directors are wondering if there are any heat related policies from USBE and/or UHSAA. There is a perception that the UHSAA is remarkably quiet on this issue, given the current hea wave. Is there a need for us to have a stronger, more proactive voice on this topic?

Any information/direction would be appreciated.

A brighter future for journalism and for our communities

Since 2019, The Salt Lake Tribune has partnered with Report For America to place reporters in our newsroom to cover untold stories in our community. Last year, over 370 Tribune donors contributed to our RFA reporters to make their reporting possible.

RFA alumna Becky Jacobs brought us hundreds of stories highlighting the issues Utah women face, such as the effects of the overturned Roe v. Wade Supreme Court decision. RFA alumnus Zak Podmore covered water and land use issues like the land/power struggles challenging San Juan County.

In 2021, Alixel Cabrera joined The Tribune to focus on reporting for the west side of the Salt Lake Valley. Alixel has written about pollution issues, west side population growth, and intimate stories of community members supporting each other.

In 2022, we welcomed two new Report for America team members: Bethany Baker and Leto Sapunar. Bethany is the first dedicated video journalist in the Tribune's history. Leto will tackle business and tech, focusing on sustainability and accountability.

In the coming days, you'll hear from The Tribune's RFA reporters and RFA alumni about the importance of their reporting and why they were called to action.

How can I help?

[redacted]

Report for America supports local journalism across the U.S. by focusing on topics and regions that are underserved. Report for America covers half of each reporter's salary.

As a nonprofit we can't continue this fight without you, the community we serve. The Tribune, like other RFA newsrooms, is seeking donations to support the balance.

Donate to our Report For America journalists here and keep the fight for truth and accountability alive.

Hi Steven,

Thanks for taking on week 5. Peter asked me to help out with the discussion post that week (although I know that is your week). I was thinking of either doing a discussion post on the pandem shortening life expectancy in Indigenous Communities (bringing in the data component--- I have an unpublished discussion post that has this prompt). However, I'm currently at a health analytics conference and they spoke about substance abuse programs for pregnant women - I thought this was also really interesting. Let me know which of those sounds better- of course we can chat tonight/Friday. Just wanted to give you a heads up on what I'm thinking.

See ya tonight for class,

Amalia

Hi Amalia –

Awesome. Thank you so much for taking the lead on the posts and proposing these two very interesting discussion! That's a tough call. High-Risk Moms is very topical to Peter's & work and interest right now. So, I'd like to see what you come up with. If you don't have time or not much is coming up around it, then let's go with the COVID Life Expectancy Disp discussion. Regardless, yes, let's chat more tonight!

Thanks again for the updated, Amalia, and for taking this on!

See everyone tonight!

Is this request one that we could fund with redirected funding and absorb the ongoing within existing budgets?

Thanks,

PUBLIC HEALTH WEEKLY

September 15, 2022

A Q&A with Anne Zink, ASTHO's New President

ASTHO is thrilled to welcome Anne Zink, MD, FACEP as our new president. Zink is a practicing emergency room physician and serves as the chief medical officer for the Alaska Department of Health.

In a conversation with ASTHO, she spoke about her hopes for the future of public health and her goals as president. Zink plans to focus her presidency on improving health information systems to empower the public, healthcare providers, and the public health workforce with the tools and information they need to promote individual and population health. Get all the details in this Q&A.

Leveraging State and Federal Policy to Reduce Maternal Illness and Death

There are significant disparities in pregnancy-related outcomes in the United States. The U.S. maternal mortality rate is higher than many other high-income countries and severe maternal morbidity continues to rise. Additionally, many people of color experience higher maternal mortality when compared to their white counterparts.

With many of these deaths considered preventable, state and federal policymakers are taking steps to improve health outcomes for pregnant people. Learn how in this week's Health Policy Update.

THIS WEEK'S HIGHLIGHTS

ASTHO Welcomes Its 80th President | On Sept. 13 at ASTHO's annual Assembly of Members meeting, Anne Zink, MD, FACEP (SHO-AK) began her term as the 80th president of ASTHO. She succeeds Nirav Shah, MD, JD, (SHO-ME) who has held the position since January 2021. We thank Dr. Shah for his service and leadership during one of the most difficult challenges public health has faced, and we look forward to Dr. Zink's term as president. Learn more in our latest press release.

ASTHO Names New Board Leadership | Also this week, ASTHO announced its other newly elected leaders, including Steven J. Stack, MD, MBA, (SHO-KY) president-elect, and Scott Harris, MD, MPH, (SHO-AL) secretary-treasurer. Visit here to learn more about ASTHO's leadership and governance.

Inaugural DELPH Cohort Graduates | The Diverse Executives Leading in Public Health (DELPH) program, co-created by ASTHO and the Satcher Health Leadership Institute at Morehouse School of Medicine, celebrated the graduation of its first cohort at ASTHO's 2022 Fall Leadership Summit. Sixteen scholars completed a 10-month long program focused on fine tuning their leadership skills, expanding their public health network, and connecting with colleagues focused on growth. Meet the graduating class and learn more about their accomplishments in the DELPH Magazine now.

New Article in the American Journal of Public Health | ASTHO and the University of Washington co-authored a new article on the growing climate crisis and what it will take to get state and territorial health agencies ready to respond to the effects of climate change on public health. Check out the full article for more.

Public Health Stretched Thin | ASTHO CEO Michael Fraser spoke with The Nation's Health about the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the regular functions of healthcare and public health, outside of managing the pandemic itself. Many critical functions were set aside and public health is racing to make up for lost time. Learn more about COVID-19's "health debt" now.

Improving Health Equity With Data

PUBLIC HEALTH REVIEW

Health equity is a top priority for many health agencies. Public health leaders can use performance management systems to advance health equity goals by systematically collecting and monitoring data to track results and identify opportunities for improvement.

On the latest episode of the Public Health Review podcast, ASTHO senior executive consultant Nicole Alexander-Scott (Rhode Island), Harry Chen (Alabama), and Montana's state health improvement coordinator Anna Bradley discuss how the current equity efforts can integrate with established performance management practices. Listen to the episode to learn more.

State and Territorial Health Policies Strengthening Emergency Preparedness Efforts

Public health has been grappling with an onslaught of challenges, such as COVID-19, monkeypox, increasing firearm homicide, and widespread flood waves. In the wake of such emergencies, public health preparedness is more critical than ever.

State and territorial preparedness policy priorities could indicate potential areas of focus for federal agencies as they work to reinvigorate preparedness and better meet current challenges. Check out those priorities in this week's Health Policy Update.

SUBJECT: UMA MediByte: Overdose Deaths Persist
FROM: "Utah Medical Association" <mark@utahmed.org>

Overdose Deaths Persist Despite Reduced Opioid Prescribing

Even as deaths from illicit drugs like fentanyl are rising, a new American Medical Association report shows a sharp decrease nationwide in opioid prescribing over the past decade. In Utah, opioid prescribing has decreased over 33% since 2012. Not only has the number of opioid prescriptions decreased, so has dosage strength, measured in morphine milligram equivalents.

Despite physicians' efforts nationwide, the study revealed spikes in overdoses and deaths related to illicitly manufactured fentanyl, methamphetamine, and cocaine.

Other News

Utah Medicaid Claims Delayed

Earlier this week, Utah Medicaid sent a notice informing Utah physicians and health care providers that all provider payments would be delayed due to problems with the claims processing system. No further information has been sent since the initial notice on Monday 9/19, but as new information becomes available, we will pass it along. In the meantime, Medicaid's customer service line is (801) 538-6155 or toll-free 1-800-662-9651.

Utah's Dept. of Health & Human Services (DHHS) recently noted that a new Medicaid claims payment system, originally planned for deployment in January 2023 will be delayed until April 2023, with training for physicians and other providers occurring in February and March, with a system freeze in March for transfer of data and processes from the old system to the new.

Nearly 10% of Americans suffer from depression

HealthDay (9/19) reports, “Nearly 10% of Americans suffer from depression, with the mood disorder increasing fastest among teens and young adults,” researchers concluded after examining data drawn from the 2015-2020 National Survey on Drug Use and Health. In fact, “between 2015 and 2020, incidence of depression reached 9% among Americans 12 and older,” while “among teens and young adults, the depression rate stood at 17% in 2020, the researchers found.” One researcher “said it’s possible that growing feelings of helplessness and economic distress are fueling depression, the leading mental health disorder in the nation,” and “the COVID-19 pandemic has only made mental health worse.” The findings were published online Sept. 19 in the American Journal of Preventive Medicine.

UMA Responds to Legislative Threat

UMA has publicly denounced the practice of threatening criminal prosecution of physicians for practicing their profession in conformity with current law. UMA was responding specifically to a letter signed by several Utah legislators last week which seems to threaten physicians with future prosecution for performing an abortion outside the bounds of Utah’s trigger law (which is currently stayed under an injunction), even if the practice is legal currently.

“The criminalization of medical practice is no trivial matter,” says UMA President Mark R. Greenwood, MD. “Physicians need to be able to rely on clear, established laws and regulations to help inform them as to what is permitted and how they can best serve their patients. Threats of retroactive prosecution if current law is someday altered because the trigger law goes into effect does not stand up to legal scrutiny.”

The Association recognizes there is some confusion regarding applicable laws since the recent Dobbs decision overturned Roe v Wade. UMA appreciates the Utah State Legislature’s Office of Legislative Research and General Counsel’s document entitled “Abortion in Utah After Dobbs” dated July 2022. The document clearly states that physicians are currently operating under law that is only slightly different than before the Dobbs decision, since HB 136 went into effect making elective abortions legal only up to 18 weeks instead of up to 20 weeks. The document also makes clear the preliminary injunction stays the enforcement of SB 174 (Utah’s trigger law) which would outlaw elective abortions altogether.

“Regardless of whether one supports or opposes the changes proposed to Utah law, physicians need clarity regarding what is and is not legal,” said Dr. Greenwood. “Ex post facto law is prohibited by the U.S. Constitution for good reason. All citizens have the right to pursue their lives and activities without the threat that they may be in legal jeopardy tomorrow for acts which are legal today.”

Marc, I tried to get into and would like to make edits in several of these reports, and they aren't set up to provide edit or comment access---are you able to fix this? (like the SUID report, the firs tobacco item (compliance checks), the birth certificate report, and the AI/AN report---there may be others that I didn't try)

Thank you,

Same. Please grant access to these reports so we can do the necessary review as quickly as possible given the timeline.

Have these reports gone through PAE for review for editing? There are several line edits I find myself making. It would be good to have a line editor review these reports. If they don't have tha capability, let me know. We may need to find an editor in the department.

Happy to provide any updates, Tracy. I'd say just keep your fingers crossed that this is what passes in December. Anything past December will be MUCH more difficult to get through Congress as most home visiting champions are retiring.

Heather asked a couple of other questions in chat today, so I'll provide my responses here so everyone can reference them later as needed (but don't hesitate to ask at any time! I can easily pull this information again):

Match Requirement:
If we are able to count our current funding, which is $522,000 annually, we will be fine to meet these requirements until FY2026. We would need $597,396 (or an increase of $75,396) by FY2026 and $987,752 by FY2027 (with a total increase from current funding levels of $390,356). However, based on this current bill, this would require us to shift our standard of service provision to meet the MIECHV standard (with the same required performance measures). That's definitely possible and since the match won't be required for a few years, we have a great running start. It will take work on our end to do, but the payoffs will be great in the long run, as we'll then be able to have a more robust picture of the impacts of visiting across the state (i.e. I want to do this anyway, regardless of home visiting's funding future).

Who is best served by/benefits from home visiting?
It's important to remember that we must reference the evidence-base for home visiting (otherwise, we cannot guarantee the amazing outcomes and ROI that makes this a compelling service/intervention--it then would not fall under my program, as it would be more broad case management). I would suggest we move forward with the definition MIECHV uses, since we'll nee to increase all service provision to this standard as a result of the match requirement:

- Pregnant parents or families with a child age 5 and younger
- Priority should be given to families that meet at least one (1) of the following MIECHV Eligibility Criteria:
  - Low income (at or below 100% of the Federal Poverty Level)
  - Pregnant and under the age of 21
  - History of child abuse or neglect, or history of interactions with child welfare services
  - History of substance abuse or in need of substance abuse treatment
  - Tobacco use
  - Low student achievement
  - A child with developmental delays or disability
  - A household member who is serving or has served in the U.S. armed forces
- If the Home Visiting Program has an open caseload for enrollment, priority should be given to those who meet multiple MIECHV Eligibility Criteria.

The various home visiting models use more nuanced definitions, but I suggest we leave that to our contractors to work through, as they receive targeted technical assistance from model implementation specialists.

Optimal Coverage:

- Currently, we have funding and capacity to serve 2.6% of children under 5 living in poverty in Utah (611 families). If we could reach, at minimum, 10% of these children (2,317), I'd say we'd be doing a great job!
- However, because home visiting is a long-term intervention (2+ years, depending on the model), families only have to qualify (or meet the definition above) at the time of enrollment. Ideally, we should see changes to income and stressors over time, which would actually increase the need.
- We would also need to increase our intake and referral processes to account for expansion--we have to find these families somewhere and we need to strengthen our early childhood infrastructure to do this. I'm already talking to Help Me Grow Utah about how they can support this.

Estimated Costs & ROI:

- The following are current annual costs for PAT and NFP. Many programs supplement with local tax dollars, so adjustments for inflation are likely needed:
  - PAT: $5,880 per family
  - NFP: $6,935 per family
- The cost to serve 10% of children under 5 living in poverty in Utah would be around $15.5 million.
- With the proposed formula in MIECHV reauthorization, by FY2027, we would have $8.375 million--this would enable us to serve approximately 1,300 families, or 5.5% of children under living in poverty in Utah.
  - While 5.5% may be sufficient, the ROI for home visiting is very strong ($5.70 in savings for every $1 of taxpayer dollars spent). As a result, we should push to get closer to that 10%.
    - ROI for 5.5% (current projected funding): $47.738 million
    - ROI for 10%: $88.35 million
- Side note: As home visiting expands, the team at the state level will need to expand as well to ensure we're able to conduct appropriate contract monitoring processes. I currently have program specialists positions on my team. If we are to expand into each LHD, I would estimate we need 5-6.

Other Considerations:
While Heather didn't ask about this, I want to share some very important considerations to keep in mind for any home visiting expansion conversations that I may not be a part of:

- Voluntary Participation: Participation in evidence-based home visiting services requires at least 2 year commitment from families to ensure outcomes (depending upon the home visiting model used)--if families feel pressure to participate, this undermines the relationship-based approach of the service, thus undermining the ability of home visitors to impact parer child, and family outcomes.
- Sustainable funding is critical: I understand this is not always a guarantee for grand-funded work, but short-term or one-time funding undercuts contractors' ability to implement the model with fidelity, thus compromising the outcomes guaranteed by the evidence-base.

[redacted]

A bit of a history lesson: Utah received one-time competitive federal funding for home visiting back in 2014-ish. This had disastrous impacts for the field--programs had to close, people lost jobs, and stakeholder confidence in DOH and OHV was badly damaged (I still hear concerns about this 6 years later and am continuing to repair relationships across the state from this. Some LHDs have said they will never work with home visiting again!). This was a learning on the federal government's part as well and they no longer provide short-term funding for home visiting. Each MIECHV reauthorization is in 5-year increments and it is now exclusively formula-based and doesn't vary more than 5% each year to ensure sustainability of service provision. We should approach any funding opportunities for home visiting with the same mindfulness.

Let me know if you have any further questions.

Good morning,

I've been following the development of this bill closely and I've been waiting for you all to ask for my thoughts! Overall, this bill is really really great! Here are some quick bullet points of ho this will impact Utah:

- Maintenance of Effort: The maintenance of effort requirements will continue. However, this will be based on the past MOE, which is $0. This is incredibly beneficial for Utah, as th MOE requirement will be set for 5 years (the entire period of reauthorization).
- Needs Assessment: We will not need to update the needs assessment. While the current needs assessment quickly became outdated (it was completed in 2020), I believe we ha sufficient data in other areas of DFH to help inform home visiting expansion. I've been in conversations with the DRP program manager about how we can plug in one of their epidemiologists into our work a bit more!
- Reduction of administrative burden: The intense levels of administrative work and reporting for MIECHV is unlike many other federal grants. It's becoming a common complaint amongst MIECHV awardees and some states are starting to turn down this funding as a result. In this bill, they'll be working to reduce the hours by at least 15%. This has incredibl implications for Utah's home visiting team and the DFH finance team. Currently the admin work impedes our ability to fully dive into the significant amount of data we have to really push toward more meaningful outcomes.
- Virtual Home Visiting: As we've all learned virtual services are here to stay, but the current rules last only until the public health emergency ends. This means that we will be able better serve families in the ways that they want and better accommodate their needs and schedules.
- Match requirements: This is a big shift! Currently we do not have a match requirement for MIECHV. This proposal is 25% (or for every $3 in federal funds, the state must spend $ but it's tiered up over time (I'll explain below what that looks like for Utah). Regardless of whether this bill is passed or not, a match is very likely in the future for MIECHV. The following is not public, but was made available to state home visiting administrators via a membership organization called the Association of State and Tribal Home Visiting Initiative (ASTHVI--we're a member):
  - It's unclear if the match can be any state funds.
  - Any match will likely need to be for home visiting provided at the MIECHV standard of service provision (this includes all the data collection, screening, and reporting).
    - While this is a concern for some state administrators, I think this is actually a good thing. It will allow us to better report on the same metrics across the state to have a better sense of where we are. Currently, we collect very little data for state-funded home visiting.
  - New funding in this upcoming federal fiscal year will likely count for the match requirement.
    - This is great timing with all of the conversations happening with home visiting in the state right now!
- How much funding and what's Utah's share?: I received a memo from the Congressional Research Service, via ASTHVI, regarding the estimates of program funding with this current proposal. Again, I was told this is not publicly available, but okay to share it within my agency. Let me know if you'd like to see the full 11 page document, but here's the summary for us:
  - FY2021: (for comparison, this is our current annual award amount--MIECHV awards have 2 years of availability)
    - $3.162 million
  - FY2023:
    - Base Amount: $4.451 million
    - Match: $0
    - Required match spending from Utah: $0
    - Total: $4.451 million
  - FY2024: match requirement starts
    - Base Amount: $4.451 million
    - Match: $776,000
    - Required match spending from Utah: $258,758
    - Total: $5.227 million
  - FY2025:
    - Base Amount: $4.451 million
    - Match: $1.195 million
    - Required match spending from Utah: $398,264
    - Total: $5.646 million
  - FY2026:
    - Base Amount: $4.451 million
    - Match: $1.792 million
    - Required match spending from Utah: $597,396
    - Total: $6.243 million
  - FY2027:
    - Base Amount: $4.451 million
    - Match: $2.936 million
    - Required match spending from Utah: $987,752
    - Total: $7.387 million

Let me know if you have any more questions after reading through all of this. Happy to answer any and all that arise for you!

Please share your thoughts on this legislation when the Home Visiting Team has time to review it. Given the budget cycle for the state, we may need to determine whether we would ne additional MOE from Utah to try to draw down Utah's full allotment. Do you know how much Utah is eligible to receive with this new proposal?

Federal Home Visiting Reauthorization Bill Moves Forward

This week, leaders in both the House Ways and Means Committee and Energy and Commerce Committee introduced the Jackie Walorski Maternal and Child Home Visiting Reauthorization Act (H.R. 8876), which reauthorizes the Maternal, Infant, and Early Childhood Home Visiting (MIECHV) program. The bill passed out of the House Ways and Means Committee by a vote of 41-0 with one abstention.

It is essential to note that the MIECHV program is a mandatory program, and this bill proposes significant changes to its overall funding. After a careful review by the ASTHO government affairs team, we strongly encourage that state legislative staff and maternal and child health teams carefully review the bill text and summary. This legislation is complex with new maintenance of effort, state matching requirements for a new grant program, and changes to an administrative cap that could uniquely impact state and territorial federal home visiting programs.

The press release, summary of the legislation, section-by-section summary, and bill text are available for review.

Outlook: The full House of Representatives will consider the bill, then move it to the Senate. Offsetting the program's costs is yet to be addressed and is a priority for Congress. However, this legislation was approved with broad bipartisan support, and the government affairs team believes it may be signed into law before the end of the calendar year. Funding for the current MIECHV program expires at the end of the month. Advocates expect Congress to approve a short-term extension of MIECHV as part of the continuing resolution bill that needs to pass before Sept. 30.

Questions: Considering this bill proposes changes to the MIECHV program, if S/THOs have any questions or concerns, please contact Carolyn McCoy.

Detailed Summary:
Currently, the MIECHV program receives approximately $400 million per year.

[redacted]

- This legislation proposes an increase in base funding to $500 million for FY23-FY27. The minimum base grant for an entity is $1 million.
- Starting in FY24-FY27, federal matching grant funds—in addition to base funding—are available to every eligible entity, guided by a formula that will focus on the number of children under five in poverty if they comply with specific statutory requirements on an increasing scale:
  - FY24 $50 million.
  - FY25 $100 million.
  - FY26 $150 million.
  - FY27 $300 million.
- To draw down its full allotment of federal matching grant funds, an entity must provide non-federal funds above their maintenance of effort requirement such that 25% of the total spending consists of non-federal funds.
  - Unobligated matching funds can be redistributed to another entity that can contribute to the non-federal matching funds.
  - The ASTHO government affairs team recommends carefully reviewing the legislation to see what funds can contribute to this new matching requirement.
- New maintenance of effort requirement for states and territories is based on the lesser total of non-federal funds expended in 2019 or 2021. The entity is not eligible for base or matching grants if this is not met.
  - The secretary may allow a grace period for an entity to come into compliance.
- Phased-in additional federal matching funding starting in FY24 is part of the requirement for entities to be eligible for the new federal matching grants, which requires a 25% state match (i.e., for every $1 in state funds, there is a $3 federal contribution). The non-federal matching funds are not applied to the maintenance of effort requirement.
  - The minimum state matching funds are as follows:
    - FY23: Federal matching funds are not required.
    - FY24: $776,000.
    - FY25: $1,000,000.
    - FY26: $1,500,000.
    - FY27: $2,000,000.
  - If a state cannot reach the required amount, the secretary of HHS can proportionately reduce the federal matching amount for that fiscal year.
- Limits state administrative spending to 10% of grants and an exception for not more than 5% at the discretion of the secretary of HHS.
  - This applies to an entity that directly provides home visits to families and not through a sub-recipient.
  - The entity is expanding services to a new community and has been providing services for fewer than three years.
- Allows limited ability to conduct virtual home visits and requires entities to demonstrate that they have met specific conditions. Service delivery models must include at least one in-person visit a year to qualify for federal funding.
- Doubles the tribal set-aside (from 3% to 6%) starting in FY23.
- Dedicated funding (2% set aside) for workforce support, retention, and case management.
- Set aside funding for research, evaluation, administration, and technical assistance.
- Establishes an outcomes dashboard and annual report to Congress on the program.
- Requires HHS to work with partners to reduce administrative burden.
- Maintains a strong focus on evidence-based home visiting models and practices.

Just to round back on this, I worked with PIO to get permission to edit the Reports Template. Along with a few minor formatting items, we've added a note to the page to remind staff about font size/line spacing and let them know about the expected workflow of reviews before these get to EDO. Hopefully this clarity with mean less items for us to address during our reviews.

Tracy, to your question, it is my understanding that the assigned Comms team members should also be part of the OU review process. We will build that into the PowerDMS system once we get that up and going. I'll also emphasize that with ELT.

Thank you Elizabeth! This is incredibly helpful.

When I oversaw the Intergenerational Poverty Initiative, home visiting was a prime policy recommendation we supported each year but it just continually eroded and fewer and fewer families were able to receive the services and attain the benefits of this evidence-based intervention. I look forward to discussing this further.

Happy to provide any updates, Tracy. I'd say just keep your fingers crossed that this is what passes in December. Anything past December will be MUCH more difficult to get through Congress, as most home visiting champions are retiring.

Heather asked a couple of other questions in chat today, so I'll provide my responses here so everyone can reference them later as needed (but don't hesitate to ask at any time! I can easily pull this information again):

Match Requirement:
If we are able to count our current funding, which is $522,000 annually, we will be fine to meet these requirements until FY2026. We would need $597,396 (or an increase of $75,396) by FY2026 and $987,752 by FY2027 (with a total increase from current funding levels of $390,356). However, based on this current bill, this would require us to shift our standard of service provision to meet the MIECHV standard (with the same required performance measures). That's definitely possible and since the match won't be required for a few years, we have a great running start. It will take work on our end to do, but the payoffs will be great in the long run, as we'll then be able to have a more robust picture of the impacts of visiting across the state (i.e. want to do this anyway, regardless of home visiting's funding future).

Who is best served by/benefits from home visiting?

[redacted]

It's important to remember that we must reference the evidence-base for home visiting (otherwise, we cannot guarantee the amazing outcomes and ROI that makes this a compelling service/intervention--it then would not fall under my program, as it would be more broad case management). I would suggest we move forward with the definition MIECHV uses, since we'll need to increase all service provision to this standard as a result of the match requirement:

- Pregnant parents or families with a child age 5 and younger
- Priority should be given to families that meet at least one (1) of the following MIECHV Eligibility Criteria:
  - Low income (at or below 100% of the Federal Poverty Level)
  - Pregnant and under the age of 21
  - History of child abuse or neglect, or history of interactions with child welfare services
  - History of substance abuse or in need of substance abuse treatment
  - Tobacco use
  - Low student achievement
  - A child with developmental delays or disability
  - A household member who is serving or has served in the U.S. armed forces
- If the Home Visiting Program has an open caseload for enrollment, priority should be given to those who meet multiple MIECHV Eligibility Criteria.

The various home visiting models use more nuanced definitions, but I suggest we leave that to our contractors to work through, as they receive targeted technical assistance from model implementation specialists.

Optimal Coverage:

- Currently, we have funding and capacity to serve 2.6% of children under 5 living in poverty in Utah (611 families). If we could reach, at minimum, 10% of these children (2,317), I'd say we'd be doing a great job!
- However, because home visiting is a long-term intervention (2+ years, depending on the model), families only have to qualify (or meet the definition above) at the time of enrollment. Ideally, we should see changes to income and stressors over time, which would actually increase the need.
- We would also need to increase our intake and referral processes to account for expansion--we have to find these families somewhere and we need to strengthen our early childhood infrastructure to do this. I'm already talking to Help Me Grow Utah about how they can support this.

Estimated Costs & ROI:

- The following are current annual costs for PAT and NFP. Many programs supplement with local tax dollars, so adjustments for inflation are likely needed:
  - PAT: $5,880 per family
  - NFP: $6,935 per family
- The cost to serve 10% of children under 5 living in poverty in Utah would be around $15.5 million.
- With the proposed formula in MIECHV reauthorization, by FY2027, we would have $8.375 million--this would enable us to serve approximately 1,300 families, or 5.5% of children under 5 living in poverty in Utah.
  - While 5.5% may be sufficient, the ROI for home visiting is very strong ($5.70 in savings for every $1 of taxpayer dollars spent). As a result, we should push to get closer that 10%.
    - ROI for 5.5% (current projected funding): $47.738 million
    - ROI for 10%: $88.35 million
- Side note: As home visiting expands, the team at the state level will need to expand as well to ensure we're able to conduct appropriate contract monitoring processes. I currently have 2 program specialists positions on my team. If we are to expand into each LHD, I would estimate we need 5-6.

Other Considerations:

While Heather didn't ask about this, I want to share some very important considerations to keep in mind for any home visiting expansion conversations that I may not be a part of:

- Voluntary Participation: Participation in evidence-based home visiting services requires at least 2 year commitment from families to ensure outcomes (depending upon the home visiting model used)--if families feel pressure to participate, this undermines the relationship-based approach of the service, thus undermining the ability of home visitors to impact parent, child, and family outcomes.
- Sustainable funding is critical: I understand this is not always a guarantee for grand-funded work, but short-term or one-time funding undercuts contractors' ability to implement the model with fidelity, thus compromising the outcomes guaranteed by the evidence-base.
  - A bit of a history lesson: Utah received one-time competitive federal funding for home visiting back in 2014-ish. This had disastrous impacts for the field--programs had to close, people lost jobs, and stakeholder confidence in DOH and OHV was badly damaged (I still hear concerns about this 6 years later and am continuing to repair relationships across the state from this. Some LHDs have said they will never work with home visiting again!). This was a learning on the federal government's part as well and they no longer provide short-term funding for home visiting. Each MIECHV reauthorization is in 5-year increments and it is now exclusively formula-based and doesn't vary more than 5% each year to ensure sustainability of service provision. We should approach any funding opportunities for home visiting with the same mindfulness.

Let me know if you have any further questions.

Good morning,

I've been following the development of this bill closely and I've been waiting for you all to ask for my thoughts! Overall, this bill is really really great! Here are some quick bullet points of how this will impact Utah:

- Maintenance of Effort: The maintenance of effort requirements will continue. However, this will be based on the past MOE, which is $0. This is incredibly beneficial for Utah, as the MOE requirement will be set for 5 years (the entire period of reauthorization).
- Needs Assessment: We will not need to update the needs assessment. While the current needs assessment quickly became outdated (it was completed in 2020), I believe we have sufficient data in other areas of DFH to help inform home visiting expansion. I've been in conversations with the DRP program manager about how we can plug in one of the epidemiologists into our work a bit more!
- Reduction of administrative burden: The intense levels of administrative work and reporting for MIECHV is unlike many other federal grants. It's becoming a common complaint amongst MIECHV awardees and some states are starting to turn down this funding as a result. In this bill, they'll be working to reduce the hours by at least 15%. This has incredible implications for Utah's home visiting team and the DFH finance team. Currently the admin work impedes our ability to fully dive into the significant amount of data we have to really push toward more meaningful outcomes.
- Virtual Home Visiting: As we've all learned virtual services are here to stay, but the current rules last only until the public health emergency ends. This means that we will be able to better serve families in the ways that they want and better accommodate their needs and schedules.

[redacted]

- Match requirements: This is a big shift! Currently we do not have a match requirement for MIECHV. This proposal is 25% (or for every $3 in federal funds, the state must spend $1), but it's tiered up over time (I'll explain below what that looks like for Utah). Regardless of whether this bill is passed or not, a match is very likely in the future for MIECHV. Th following is not public, but was made available to state home visiting administrators via a membership organization called the Association of State and Tribal Home Visiting Initiatives (ASTHVI--we're a member):
    - It's unclear if the match can be any state funds.
    - Any match will likely need to be for home visiting provided at the MIECHV standard of service provision (this includes all the data collection, screening, and reporting).
        - While this is a concern for some state administrators, I think this is actually a good thing. It will allow us to better report on the same metrics across the state to hav a better sense of where we are. Currently, we collect very little data for state-funded home visiting.
    - New funding in this upcoming federal fiscal year will likely count for the match requirement.
        - This is great timing with all of the conversations happening with home visiting in the state right now!
- How much funding and what's Utah's share?: I received a memo from the Congressional Research Service, via ASTHVI, regarding the estimates of program funding with this current proposal. Again, I was told this is not publicly available, but okay to share it within my agency. Let me know if you'd like to see the full 11 page document, but here's the summary for us:
    - FY2021: (for comparison, this is our current annual award amount--MIECHV awards have 2 years of availability)
        - $3.162 million
    - FY2023:
        - Base Amount: $4.451 million
        - Match: $0
        - Required match spending from Utah: $0
        - Total: $4.451 million
    - FY2024: match requirement starts
        - Base Amount: $4.451 million
        - Match: $776,000
        - Required match spending from Utah: $258,758
        - Total: $5.227 million
    - FY2025:
        - Base Amount: $4.451 million
        - Match: $1.195 million
        - Required match spending from Utah: $398,264
        - Total: $5.646 million
    - FY2026:
        - Base Amount: $4.451 million
        - Match: $1.792 million
        - Required match spending from Utah: $597,396
        - Total: $6.243 million
    - FY2027:
        - Base Amount: $4.451 million
        - Match: $2.936 million
        - Required match spending from Utah: $987,752
        - Total: $7.387 million

Please share your thoughts on this legislation when the Home Visiting Team has time to review it. Given the budget cycle for the state, we may need to determine whether we would need additional MOE from Utah to try to draw down Utah's full allotment. Do you know how much Utah is eligible to receive with this new proposal?

Thanks.

Federal Home Visiting Reauthorization Bill Moves Forward

This week, leaders in both the House Ways and Means Committee and Energy and Commerce Committee introduced the Jackie Walorski Maternal and Child Home Visiting Reauthorization Act (H.R. 8876), which reauthorizes the Maternal, Infant, and Early Childhood Home Visiting (MIECHV) program. The bill passed out of the House Ways and Means Committee by a vote of 41-0 with one abstention.

It is essential to note that the MIECHV program is a mandatory program, and this bill proposes significant changes to its overall funding. After a careful review by the ASTHO government affairs team, we strongly encourage that state legislative staff and maternal and child health teams carefully review the bill text and summary. This legislation is complex with new maintenance of effort, state matching requirements for a new grant program, and changes to an administrative cap that could uniquely impact state and territorial federal home visiting programs.

The press release, summary of the legislation, section-by-section summary, and bill text are available for review.

Outlook: The full House of Representatives will consider the bill, then move it to the Senate. Offsetting the program's costs is yet to be addressed and is a priority for Congress. However, this legislation was approved with broad bipartisan support, and the government affairs team believes it may be signed into law before the end of the calendar year. Funding for the current MIECHV program expires at the end of the month. Advocates expect Congress to approve a short-term extension of MIECHV as part of the continuing resolution bill that needs to pass before Sept. 30.

Questions: Considering this bill proposes changes to the MIECHV program, if S/THOs have any questions or concerns, please contact Carolyn McCoy.

Detailed Summary:
Currently, the MIECHV program receives approximately $400 million per year.

- This legislation proposes an increase in base funding to $500 million for FY23-FY27. The minimum base grant for an entity is $1 million.
- Starting in FY24-FY27, federal matching grant funds—in addition to base funding—are available to every eligible entity, guided by a formula that will focus on the number of children under five in poverty if they comply with specific statutory requirements on an increasing scale:
  - FY24 $50 million.
  - FY25 $100 million.
  - FY26 $150 million.
  - FY27 $300 million.
- To draw down its full allotment of federal matching grant funds, an entity must provide non-federal funds above their maintenance of effort requirement such that 25% of the total spending consists of non-federal funds.
  - Unobligated matching funds can be redistributed to another entity that can contribute to the non-federal matching funds.
  - The ASTHO government affairs team recommends carefully reviewing the legislation to see what funds can contribute to this new matching requirement.
- New maintenance of effort requirement for states and territories is based on the lesser total of non-federal funds expended in 2019 or 2021. The entity is not eligible for base or matching grants if this is not met.
  - The secretary may allow a grace period for an entity to come into compliance.
- Phased-in additional federal matching funding starting in FY24 is part of the requirement for entities to be eligible for the new federal matching grants, which requires a 25% state match (i.e., for every $1 in state funds, there is a $3 federal contribution). The non-federal matching funds are not applied to the maintenance of effort requirement.
  - The minimum state matching funds are as follows:
    - FY23: Federal matching funds are not required.
    - FY24: $776,000.
    - FY25: $1,000,000.
    - FY26: $1,500,000.
    - FY27: $2,000,000.
  - If a state cannot reach the required amount, the secretary of HHS can proportionately reduce the federal matching amount for that fiscal year.
- Limits state administrative spending to 10% of grants and an exception for not more than 5% at the discretion of the secretary of HHS.
  - This applies to an entity that directly provides home visits to families and not through a sub-recipient.
  - The entity is expanding services to a new community and has been providing services for fewer than three years.
- Allows limited ability to conduct virtual home visits and requires entities to demonstrate that they have met specific conditions. Service delivery models must include at least one in-person visit a year to qualify for federal funding.
- Doubles the tribal set-aside (from 3% to 6%) starting in FY23.

- Dedicated funding (2% set aside) for workforce support, retention, and case management.
- Set aside funding for research, evaluation, administration, and technical assistance.
- Establishes an outcomes dashboard and annual report to Congress on the program.
- Requires HHS to work with partners to reduce administrative burden.
- Maintains a strong focus on evidence-based home visiting models and practices.

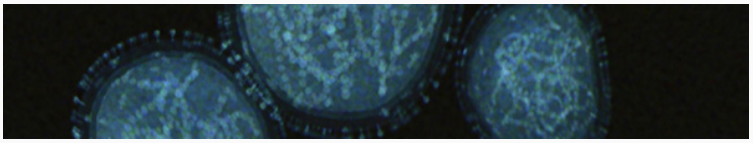
ARUP LABORATORIES

New Test Highlights

These highlighted new tests may help you provide improved patient care and save health system costs.



Orthopoxvirus/Monkeypox Infection Testing

ARUP's orthopoxvirus test has been optimized using state-of-the-art instrumentation and an automated specimen extraction process. These optimizations allow for reduced turnaround times and the ability to upscale testing capacity, if needed.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services has declared a public health emergency as a result of the ongoing outbreak of monkeypox. Healthcare providers should be on the alert for patients who manifest symptoms consistent with monkeypox. Testing should also be considered when a patient has had contact with someone with confirmed or probable monkeypox, when a patient has had close or intimate contact with a person in a community with high monkeypox activity, or when a patient has been in an area with confirmed cases of monkeypox.

3005716 Orthopoxvirus (includes monkeypox virus) by PCR

Impact on Patient Care

If the test result is positive, patients should take the necessary steps to protect themselves and others until they have completely recovered from the infection. Clinicians should consult their state health department if a monkeypox infection or exposure is suspected.

Two New Expanded Drug Profiles Offered

ARUP is now offering two new drug profiles that use liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry (LC-MS/MS) to detect 127 drugs and drug metabolites. The new profiles require a reduced specimen quantity, improved analytic sensitivity, and defined drug reporting thresholds.

3004833 Drug Profile, Expanded Targeted Panel by LC-MS/MS, Serum/Plasma

3005060 Drug Profile, Expanded Targeted Panel by LC-MS/MS, Urine
[This has replaced Drug Screen (Nonforensic), Urine, Qualitative 0090500.]

Impact on Patient Care

Multidrug analysis can be useful in situations in which the identity or class of the drug or drugs of interest is not known. Detection of drug exposure enables emergency medical care and clinical management as needed. The reduced specimen quantity requirement may be especially helpful for assessing pediatric patients for accidental overdoses/exposures.

Additional Education

For more information about ARUP's expanded drug profiles, see the Drug Profile, Expanded Targeted Panels Test Fact Sheet on ARUP Consult.

For more information about Emergency Toxicology, see the ARUP Consult topic. For more information about a comprehensive approach to clinical toxicology testing, see the ARUP Consult topic Clinical Toxicology topic.

New Multigene Lynch Syndrome Panel

ARUP's new Lynch syndrome panel utilizes massively parallel sequencing (MPS, also known as next generation sequencing [NGS]) and other molecular techniques to confirm a molecular diagnosis of Lynch syndrome in patients with suspected Lynch syndrome or those with a family history consistent with Lynch syndrome. ARUP's multigene MPS panel allows testing of all Lynch syndrome genes at the same time, which reduces the need for reflex serial testing of single mismatch repair (MMR) genes, thus enabling earlier diagnosis.

3001605 Lynch Syndrome Panel, Sequencing and Deletion/Duplication

Impact on Patient Care

Lynch syndrome is the most common form of inherited colorectal cancer (CRC). Patients with Lynch syndrome are also predisposed to other cancers such as endometrial, ovarian, stomach, and small bowel. Testing only the four MMR genes and the EPCAM deletion (known to cause Lynch syndrome), without testing additional CRC-related genes, can maximize the clinical yield. This testing approach can also minimize the burden on the physician and patient when variants of uncertain significance are detected in genes that are less well characterized for their association with Lynch syndrome.

Additional Education

For more information about the Lynch syndrome panel, see the Lynch Syndrome Panel Test Fact Sheet on ARUP Consult.

For more information about Lynch syndrome, also known as hereditary nonpolyposis colorectal cancer (HNPCC), see the ARUP Consult Lynch Syndrome topic.

New Pharmacogenetics Panel for Psychotropics

ARUP's new pharmacogenetics (PGx) panel for psychotropics assesses the genetic risk of abnormal drug metabolism for medications commonly prescribed by psychiatrists, such as psychostimulants, antidepressants, antipsychotics, anxiolytics, and other categories of drugs. The test includes two classes of genes, those with known gene-drug interactions that are supported by guidelines from the Clinical Pharmacogenetics Implementation Consortium (CPIC), Association for Molecular Pathology (AMP), or Dutch Pharmacogenetics Working Group (DPWG), and another set with level 3 evidence linking the genes to psychotropic medications according to PharmGKB. The test features a supplemental document that highlights how each gene can affect metabolism of each drug.

Pharmacogenetics Panel: Psychotropics

Impact on Patient Care

Germline pharmacogenetics (PGx) describes genetic variations associated with drug response that may predispose a patient to the risk for drug-related toxicity, nonstandard dose requirements, or a lack of therapeutic benefit. PGx testing can be considered before prescribing select drugs to detect clinically significant variants, aid in determining the proper medication and the right dose, reduce the high number of nonresponders (on average, 30–60% of patients), and prevent or reduce adverse drug reactions (ADRs). PGx testing may also be relevant when investigating an ADR, including therapeutic failure. Patients may benefit from PGx testing if they have not received relief from their current medication, they have a family or personal history of unexpected outcomes from certain medications, they take multiple medications, or they want to be proactive and determine their drug metabolism phenotype before taking a new medication.

Additional Education

For more information about PGx testing, see the Pharmacogenetics Panel for Psychotropics Test Fact Sheet on ARUP Consult.

For more information about PGx, see the ARUP Consult Germline Pharmacogenetics topic.

Information about how hospitals can save money by reducing the number of injuries or deaths due to drug reactions can be found on ARUP's Pharmacogenetics web page.

Noninvasive Prenatal Testing (NIPT)

NIPT is a first- or second-tier screening test for the most common fetal aneuploidy disorders (trisomy 13, trisomy 18, trisomy 21 [Down syndrome], Turner syndrome, sex chromosome aneuploidies [XXX, XXY, XYY].

3003043 Non-Invasive Prenatal Aneuploidy Screen by Cell-Free DNA Sequencing

Impact on Patient Care

NIPT is the most sensitive and specific screening test available for common chromosome aneuploidies. It is noninvasive, introduces no risk of miscarriage, and requires only one blood sample. Multiple professional guidelines support the use of NIPT as a screening test for all pregnant women. ARUP's noninvasive prenatal testing uses massively parallel whole genome sequencing and is powered by a fully automated workflow, reducing the risk of human error and enabling decreased turnaround times.

Newborn Drug Testing in Meconium by LC-MS/MS

Consider this testing in patients with a history of high-risk behavior (eg, history of substance use, misuse, or abuse), minimal or no prenatal care, unexplained obstetric events, or in infants with unexplained neurologic complications, unexpected intrauterine growth restrictions, or drug withdrawal symptoms.

3004583 Drug Detection Panel, Meconium, Qualitative

0092316 Drugs of Abuse Confirmation/Quantitation - Cannabinoids (Marijuana) - Meconium

Impact on Patient Care

Timely detection of in utero drug exposure is critical to detect and manage the symptoms associated with intoxication, and withdrawal syndrome, and the long-term social and medical needs of exposed neonates.
ARUP's neonatal drug testing options in test for 45 plus drugs and drug metabolites in meconium or umbilical cord tissue and use highly sensitive and specific qualitative liquid chromatography and tandem mass spectrometry (LC-MS/MS).

Antibody Testing for Paraneoplastic Neurologic Syndromes, Autoimmune Encephalitis, and Related Disorders

Order antibody testing for suspected paraneoplastic neurologic syndromes (PNSs) or related disorders to detect relevant antibodies and distinguish between similar disorders.

3004510 Amphiphysin Antibody, IgG, CSF

3004512 Dipeptidyl Aminopeptidase-Like Protein 6 (DPPX) Antibody, IgG by IFA With Reflex to Titer, CSF

3004517 Paraneoplastic Reflexive Panel, CSF

Impact on Patient Care

Antibody testing for PNSs and related conditions may aid in diagnosis, direct a focused search for cancer, differentiate autoimmune neurologic diseases from the neurotoxic effects of chemotherapy, enable the monitoring of immune responses of seropositive patients during cancer therapy, and detect early evidence of cancer recurrence in previously seropositive patients.
ARUP offers comprehensive panels for the evaluation of PNSs, neuromuscular junction disorders, and/or encephalitis in the presence or absence of malignancy, as well as directed panels that are more cost-effective. These options enable clinicians to choose the testing that best suits the clinical scenario. ARUP's tests include antibodies with significant clinical impact that cover an estimated 95–99% of disease cases.

New Research From ARUP and Others Provides Diagnostic Guidance on DDX41-Associated Myeloid Neoplasms

ARUP partnered with six different institutions to create pathogenic variant landscape mapping of inherited myeloid neoplasms. The research took a close look at the recently identified germline variant DDX41, a protein-coding gene found in inherited blood cancers, and resulted in guidelines on the diagnosis and clinical management of affected patients.

Study Coauthored by ARUP Expert Sheds Light on Emergency Department Workers' Risk of Getting COVID-19

Patricia Slev, PhD, section chief of Immunology at ARUP Laboratories, coauthored a study to identify the risk factors that emergency department healthcare personnel encountered while providing patient care before vaccination against COVID-19 was available. Slev provided expert guidance on appropriate molecular diagnostic and antibody tests provided by ARUP for the study.

New Equation to Assess Kidney Function Addresses Racial Disparity in Kidney Disease Diagnosis, Treatment

Through a multifaceted effort, ARUP has implemented a new Chronic Kidney Disease Epidemiology Collaboration (CKD-EPI) equation that eliminates a race coefficient from the previous iteration that was applied for individuals who self-identified as Black. Adoption of the change is based on scientific principles and statistics and is a step towards ensuring optimal outcomes for patients in all demographic groups.

Improving School Workforce Capacity to Address Youth Mental Health

The youth mental health crisis has created a need for state public health officials to work collaboratively to improve workforce capacity and strengthen prevention systems for youth.

ASTHO's School Behavioral Health Advisory Committee explored ways to improve youth mental health outcomes and found that the school system offers opportunities to strengthen systems of care. Learn more about the committee's considerations in this new brief article.

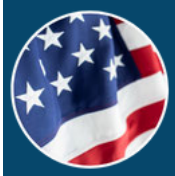
Legislative Alert: Summary of FY23 Continuing Resolution



This past Tuesday, Congressional leaders released the text of the Continuing Appropriations and Ukraine Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2023 (H.R. 6833), which is expected to be approved and signed into law before the end of the month. This continuing resolution provides funding for the federal government through Dec. 16—avoiding government shutdown—as well as several critical programs like home visitation for at-risk children and the 988 Lifeline.

Check out ASTHO's latest legislative alert for more details about the act and its impact on public health.

Hello,

Happy Friday. Attached is our phase 2 evidence review of MDMA-assisted therapy for the treatment of PTSD. Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns about the report.

We are still working on the psilocybin for depression evidence review. I'm hoping to put together some preliminary information (ie, our findings so far) before the Task Force meeting next week; I anticipate finishing that on Monday or Tuesday next week.

Pete, will you please share the MDMA report with the rest of the Task Force? I will also put a copy of it in the Task Force Ubox folder.

Best Regards,

Good morning.

Please see Rep. Peterson's email, on behalf of the women in the Legislature.

I think in order to get this information to them as quickly as possible, I think we just create a simple spreadsheet that has the name of the program, ages served and a brief summary of the program. I think you can indicate whether it is federal, state or both, in terms of funding. You can see in my email, I told them we would provide the most basic information so we can turn the request around quickly. We can always come back with number of people served and budget, which I suspect will be the next question.

I would like Marc or Paul to take lead on getting this started. I believe Marc is still out this week. I think if we can have this turned around as quickly as possible that would be great. It should not take a ton of work if this gets pushed down to the appropriate staff who know their programs best. We all know why timing is important for them.

Thanks!

Representative Peterson,

Thank you for reaching out to us. Our department does provide programs and resources to women who fit into these categories. We have programs from prenatal through early childhood, as well as programs for families who have children with disabilities.

We are happy to provide this information. For speed, we will simply provide the name of the program and a brief summary. That will allow us to get you the information quickly and then we can provide any additional information that may be helpful. Please let us know when you would like to receive the information. We will have our team begin working on it today.

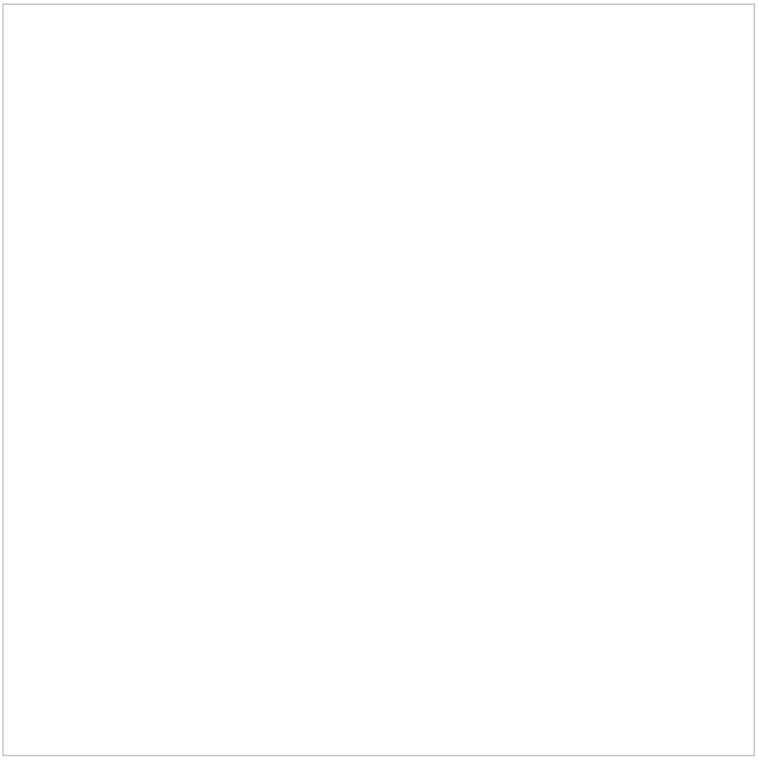
Vote!

We encourage every eligible voter to cast their ballot in the Tuesday, June 28 primary election. Your vote is your voice. So please vote and help us shape our great state. If you have any questions, visit vote.utah.gov.



Fireworks safety

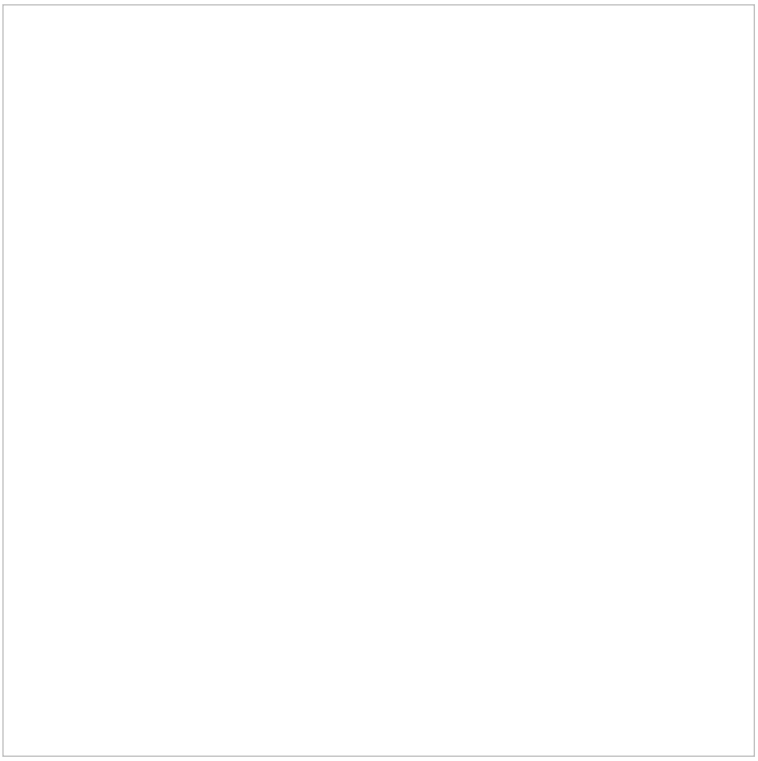
We met with firefighters and local officials to encourage Fire Sense as we head into fireworks season. Current drought conditions have made Utah a tinderbox and fire danger is extremely high statewide. In fact, 100% of the state is in drought and 83% of the state is in extreme drought or worse.

Firework sales begin today. If you choose to use fireworks this summer, please be smart and safe about it. Remember:

- Only use fireworks only during legal times and designated holidays.
- Keep a fire extinguisher and water nearby.
- Use fireworks away from dry grass — and never use them on state and federal lands, and all private lands outside cities and towns; and.
- Use extreme caution when lighting aerial fireworks.

You can always find the latest on fireworks safety and local restrictions at firemarshal.utah.gov/department-services/fireworks/.

We know that wildfires from fireworks are preventable. Last year, Utahns used good Fire Sense and cut human-caused wildfires by 51% — that's more than 500 fires that never started. As we gear up for summer celebrations, let's all stay vigilant and use good Fire Sense.



The Supreme Court's ruling

This administration has been dedicated to giving a voice to the most vulnerable in our society, including the unborn. We wholeheartedly support today's Supreme Court ruling and are encouraged to see abortion law will be left to elected state representatives.

As pro-life advocates, this administration is equally committed to supporting women and families in Utah. We all need to do more to support mothers, pregnant women, and children facing poverty and trauma.

Working together to keep Americans safe

We're heartbroken by recent gun violence, and we are committed to helping make a change.

We're proud to join a bipartisan group of governors who are coming together to make recommendations and identify solutions that give state and local leaders effective tools designed to stop mass shootings and instill confidence in our communities and schools.

Every state is unique, but we can all agree that there are common sense ways to keep our schools and communities safe in a manner consistent with the demands of the American people. Stay tuned for updates.

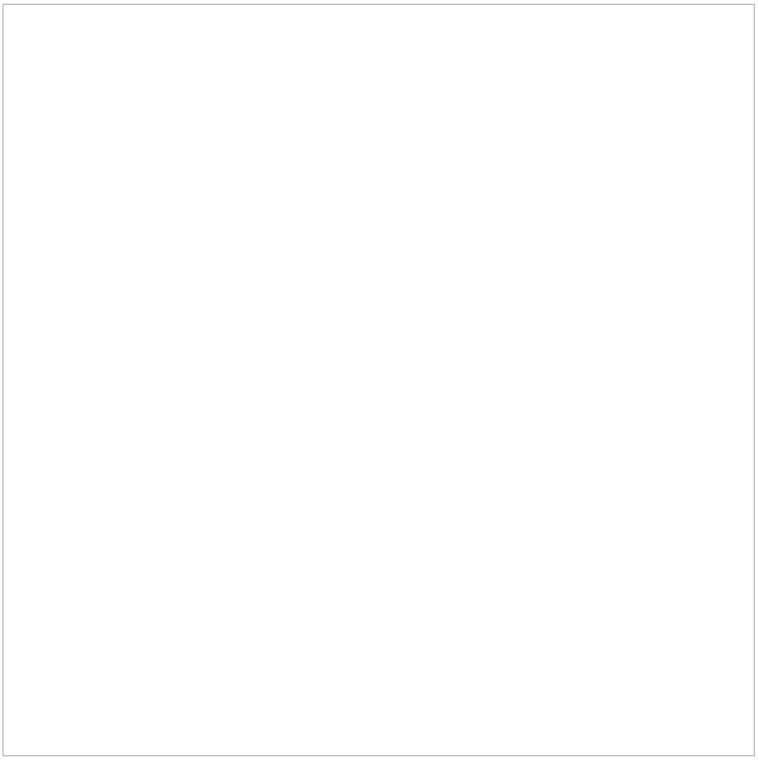
Recognizing Utah's Spirit of Service

Like so many Utahns, we know how important it is to give back, which is why we're thrilled to introduce the awardees of the inaugural Governor's Spirit of Service Awards. Out of more than 100 nominations, this year we honored:

- Cristina Diaz de Leon, who created Rancho Market COVID-19 vaccine clinics, advanced inclusion and cultural celebrations, empowered youth, led out on service projects, and strongly believed in "meeting people where they are". Unfortunately, she passed away from lung cancer on Jan. 22, 2022, and her family accepted the award in her honor.
- Artes de México en Utah, which creates cultural awareness, provides diverse perspectives, builds understanding and cross-cultural competence, helps the Latino-Hispanic youth connect with their roots and be proud of their multicultural heritage.
- The Little Lambs Foundation for Kids, which provides comfort kits for children placed into foster care, emergency shelters, and escaping domestic violence, Northern Utah's only direct service diaper bank, has distributed over 1.75 million diapers to Utah families.
- Andilynn Chambers, a 10-year-old with a very giving heart. She asks for donations rather than birthday gifts, and has donated more than 1,000 items to the local homeless shelters, domestic violence shelters, and The Christmas Box House.
- Lenise Peterman, the volunteer mayor of Helper. She was nominated for working tirelessly on behalf of her community, being a key volunteer for the city revitalization committee, writing grants for the city, securing key partnerships, and acting as a mentor to aspiring change-makers.
- Ruff Haven Crisis Sheltering Center, which works to prevent individuals from having to surrender their pets by providing shelter when someone is experiencing a crisis, temporary hardships, medical emergencies and more.
- Emily Rojo Mendoza, who tutors fellow Kearns HS students, helps at food banks, serves as the president of the My Kearns Evidence 2 Success Youth Council, has raised thousands of dollars for the local food pantries and the homeless youth resource center.

- Ken Vaughn III, who has been in a wheelchair for 20 years, is an active volunteer board member and webmaster for nonprofit Chairbound Sportsman, and helps fundraise and coordinate outdoor adventures for disabled persons.
- Moab Multicultural Center, which works to help the homeless find a place to sleep and make sure the less fortunate families in Moab get food for dinner.

These awardees are why Utah leads the nation in volunteerism and service work. You can read more about them here.



Opening Utah's new state corrections facility

This week marked a big moment for the Department of Corrections and Utah as we celebrated the largest construction project in our state's history: We officially cut the ribbon at the new Utah State Correctional Facility. We're proud of this effort to provide a safe and secure facility that's also conducive to recovery and rehabilitation.

What makes this building different? There's increased programming space for education, vocational training, and treatment; greater access to medical care and resources; and improved working environments for staff.

We applaud the individuals who have dedicated more than five years to this project: Jerry Jensen; Bryan Taylor; Capt. Matthew Coates; Lt. Bisera Habibija; Lt. Michael Millward; Elizabeth Brown; Steven Turley; and Mike Ambre.

We'd also like to thank the dedicated Department of Corrections staff. Corrections is not an easy career. It can be dangerous and thankless — and it can mean long hours. But it's a vital part of keeping us all safe. Inmates will be moving to the new facility from the Draper prison site in the coming weeks.

CDC authorizes COVID vaccines for children

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention issued recommendations for vaccinating children 5 years of age and younger against COVID-19, which clears the way for the nearly 241,000 Utah children to get vaccinated!

Additionally, the FDA has authorized both the Pfizer and Moderna mRNA vaccines for use with all ages (6 months and older) eligible for COVID-19 vaccinations. Previously, only the Pfizer vaccine was available for children younger than 18.

Vaccines for this youngest age group are on the way. According to the Utah Department of Health and Human Services, providers have already ordered 32,300 doses of the vaccines.

Providers such as local health departments, select pharmacies, and doctor's offices are offering vaccinations to the youngest Utahns over the next several days to weeks. For more information visit www.coronavirus.utah.gov/vaccine/ or call the COVID-19 hotline at 1-800-456-7707.

Good government in action

The town of Lynndyl in Millard County now has water, thanks to the quick action of state and local officials. Lynndyl has two wells powered by pumps. The state allocated $1.75 million to help the town build new drinking water infrastructure, but before that could happen, the pumps failed yesterday afternoon. The water shortage was not due to drought.

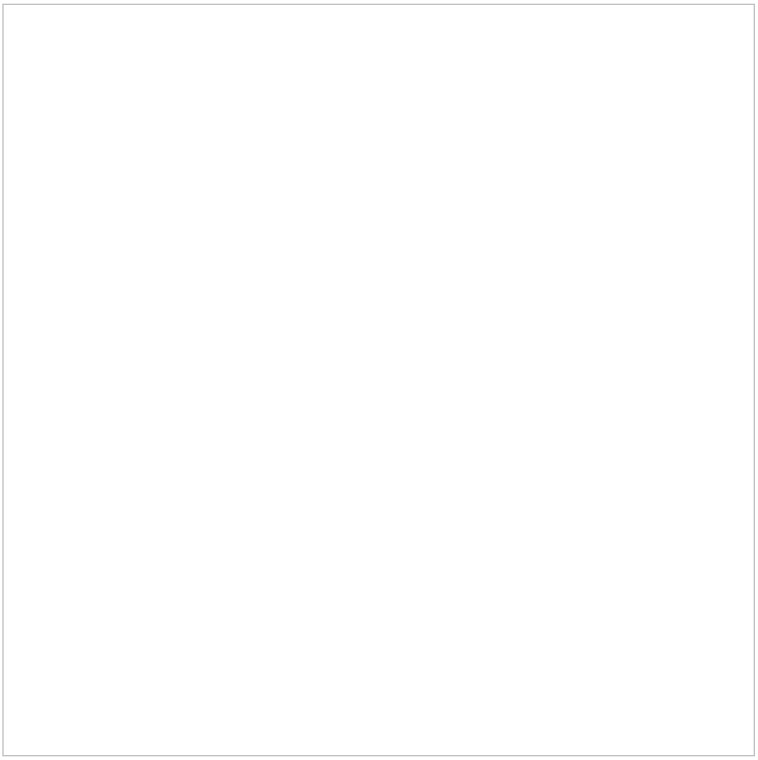
When the Department of Environmental Quality and Department of Public Safety got word, they reached out to work with Lynndyl and Delta City officials to expedite hauling water into the town and to see if the pumps could be fixed.

By 9 p.m., water was on the way with LiquaDry from the neighboring town of Abraham hauling water to Lynndyl. DEQ helped install a new pump and ensured the water was safe to drink.

In the meantime, the Governor's Office of Economic Opportunity is working with Millard County to secure $113,000 in emergency funds to keep the water flowing until the grant money comes through.

"After talking with Gov. Cox last night, everything ran more smoothly," Lynndyl Mayor Briar Proctor said. "A huge thank you to the surrounding cities, the state and everyone who helped us. It's been an overwhelming amount of help."

We're grateful to DEQ, DPS, Go Utah, Delta City, Lynndyl City, LiquaDry and Millard County for coordinating so quickly and efficiently to make sure this town of 120 has water. This is good government in action!

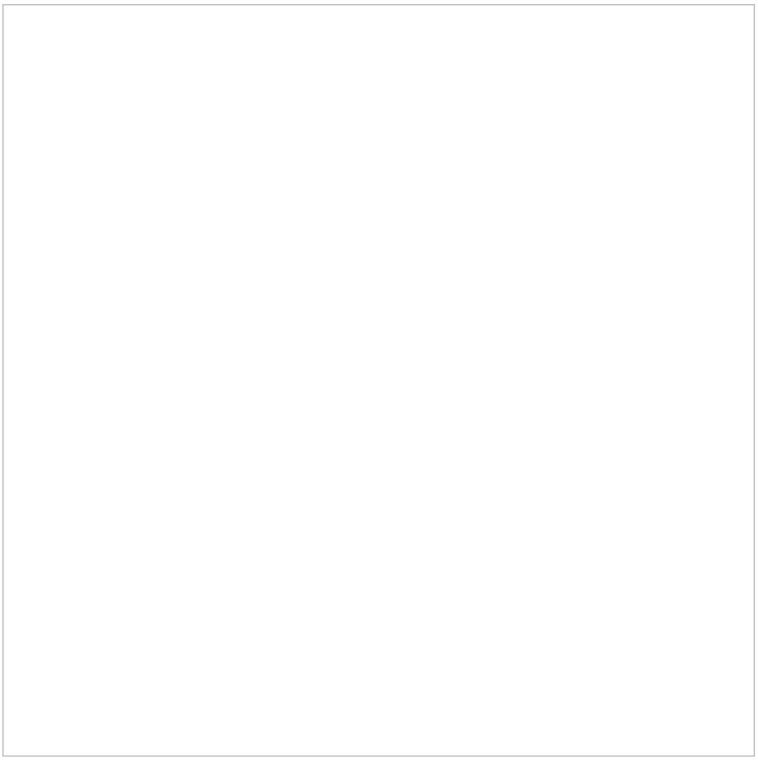


State flag design preview

We're excited by the enthusiasm around a new state flag! Lt. Gov. Henderson and members of the Utah State Flag Task Force got a sneak peek of some of the 5,000 flag designs that have been submitted by the public..

Finalists were not selected at the preview event.

The new state flag aspires to reflect on Utah's past while uniting us with new symbolism and a shared identity. Learn more about the process and timeline here.

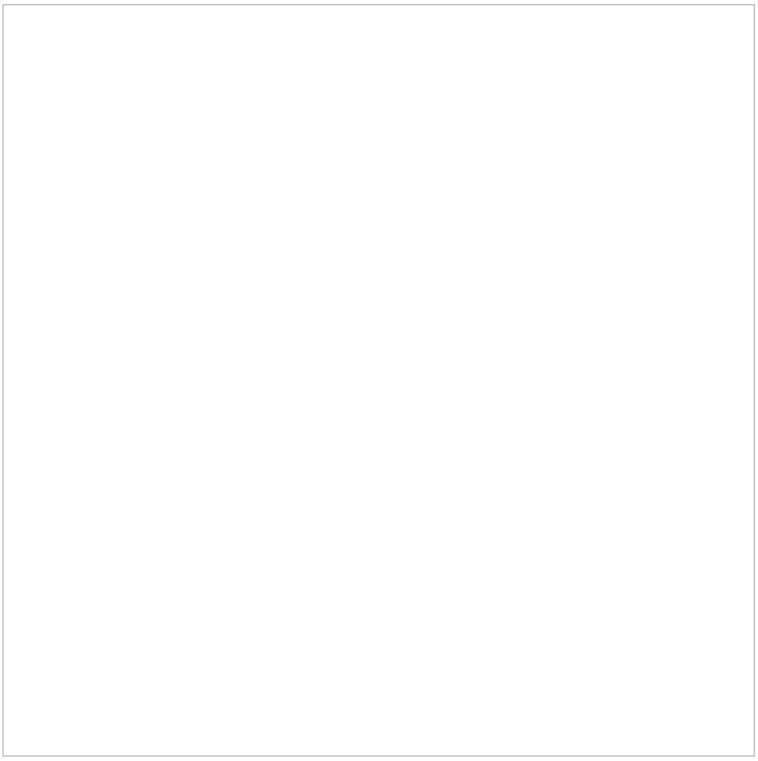


A discussion about America's future

We're looking forward to our discussion with author Jonathan Martin about his book, "This Will Not Pass."

The book explores how both of our political parties confronted a series of national traumas, including the coronavirus pandemic, the January 6 attack on the Capitol, and the political brinksmanship of President Biden's first year in the White House.

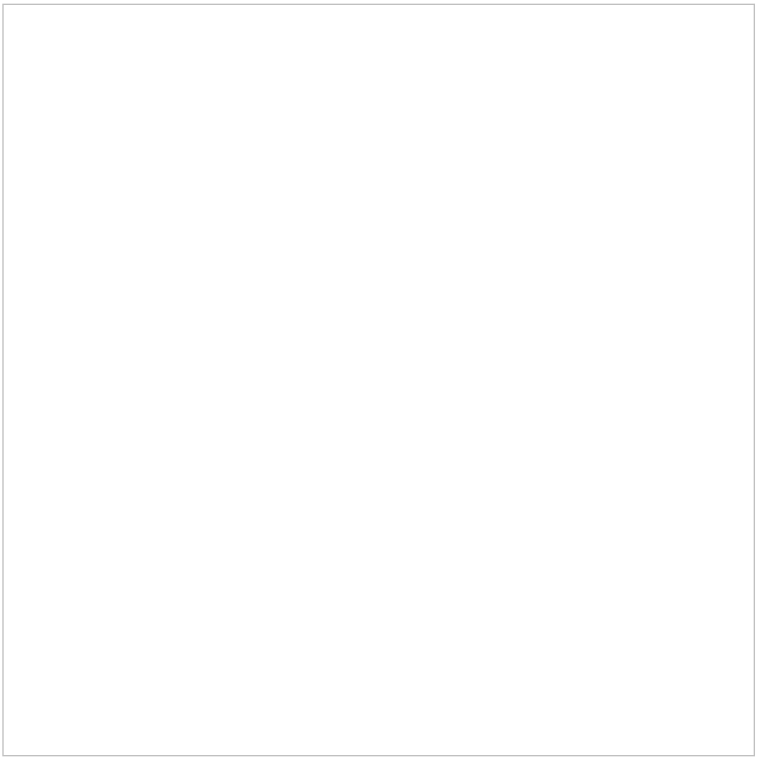
Join us for this free event at the Hinckley Institute of Politics at the University of Utah on Thursday, June 30, at 6:30 p.m. Hope to see you there!



Supporting local: Red Iguana 2

This week we were able to stop by Red Iguana 2 for a quick – and delicious — lunch. We especially loved the puntas de filete and queso.

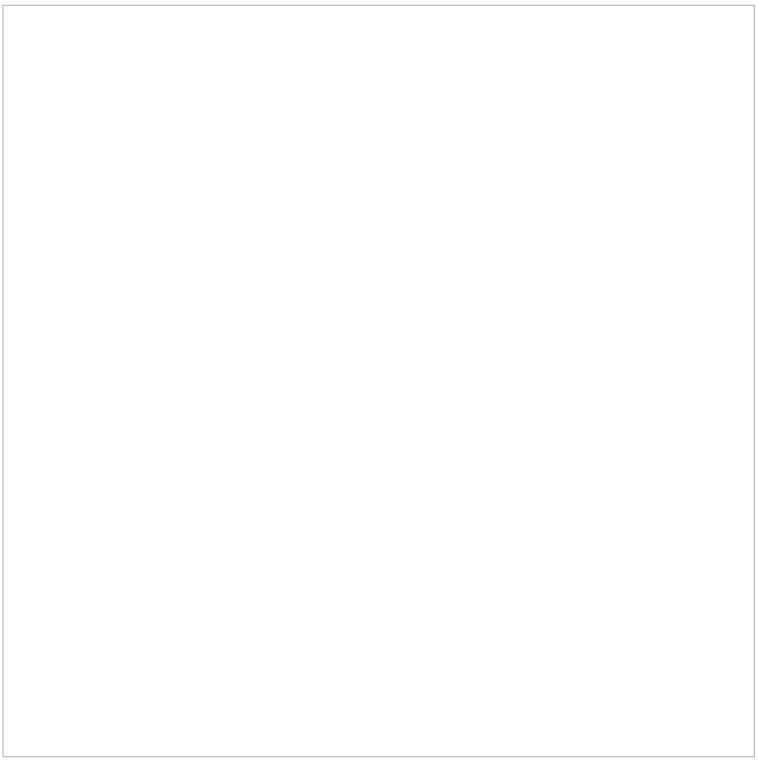
The Cardenas family has proudly served the Salt Lake Valley since 1965, and we're sure they'll be satisfying hungry patrons for decades to come. We're always happy to see small family businesses thriving. Let us know what your favorite local restaurant is here!



Meeting with faith leaders

Faith leaders are a central part of the fabric of our community. This week we met with 31 different faith leaders from across the state of Utah.

Faith groups strengthen and illuminate our relationship with a higher power, but they also maintain cultural traditions, reinforce moral values and create community. We can't thank each of them enough for their guidance, goodness, and charity.



ICYMI

- More good economic news: Salt Lake City was ranked No. 4 by the Wall Street Journal in its annual rankings of the hottest job markets in the country. Provo was ranked No. 2 in smaller metro areas.
- Yes, Utah experienced a tornado this past week. In fact, we've averaged two per year since 1950. The good news is that this one was in a remote part of Duchesne County resulting in no structural damage or injuries. If you find yourself facing a tornado, try to take shelter in a low place like a ditch or ravine. If indoors, get into a basement, or a room without windows.
- We had a fun opportunity to talk about a more hopeful version of politics with Vermont State Sen. Becca Balint and Slate host Amanda Ripley. Listen here!
- Lt. Gov. Henderson welcomed the Consul General of the Republic of Georgia to the Capitol on Tuesday. He said he had a “wonderful visit to Utah.”
- Courtesy of the Utah Office of Energy Development: Here are four energy saving tips to help you beat this summer heat!
- Preparing for a backcountry adventure can look a little different for each outing and individual, but the benefits of a well-planned trip help ensure safety in the wilderness. Find a few first hand tips from Escalante-based guide and search and rescue volunteer Rick Green here!
- We had yet another great jobs report. Our unemployment rate remains at a historic low, and our job growth is one of the best in the U.S. We’re proud of the hard-working Utahns who contribute to the most robust economy in the nation.

Coming up

- June 24: Join Utah First Lady Abby Cox at the Show Up for Summer Service kickoff event tonight from 4 p.m. to 9 p.m.! Connect with local nonprofits to find the perfect service opportunity for you and your family or friends to do this summer.
- June 28: The Primary Election is less than one week away! If you have any questions, contact your county clerk or go to www.vote.utah.gov.
- June 30: Join us for a lively discussion with author Jonathan Martin about his book, “This Will Not Pass.” This free event will be held at the Hinckley Institute of Politics at 6:30 p.m. No registration required.
- June 30: This is the last day to apply for a Utah Manufacturing Modernization Grant! This grant supports Utah businesses to modernize, establish, relocate, retain, or develop manufacturing in the state. The Legislature created the grant program to modernize Utah companies’ manufacturing, increase supply chain resilience, and lessen American dependence on foreign manufacturing.
- July 1: Lt. Gov. Henderson will join the leadership of the newly consolidated Utah Department of Health & Human Services to celebrate its new vision and to reflect on its origins, which date back to Utah’s first female state senator – suffragist, doctor and visionary – Martha Hughes Cannon.
- July 12: All Utah educators are invited to attend Show Up Utah’s free conference focused on professional and personal wellness. Learn more here.

Statement from CMS Administrator Chiquita Brooks-LaSure on Access to Reproductive Health Care:

A woman's right to make decisions about her health is essential. As we review today's Supreme Court decision, as the Administrator of the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services, I will do everything in my authority to ensure that people have the choice of when and how to start a family.

Today, more than 150 million people are served by Medicare, Medicaid and CHIP, and the Affordable Care Act, including more than 80 million women and girls. To you I say: CMS will continue working to maintain and expand access to the full range of reproductive health care services across the lifespan—that includes IUDs, emergency contraception, oral contraception, other forms of contraception, and abortion care within our legal authority. It is our fundamental value that reproductive health care is critical to ensuring that everyone can build healthy lives with economic security.

Origin for the request of program resources for women

I think you can indicate whether it is federal, state or both, in terms of funding. You can see in my email, I told them we would provide the most basic information so we can turn the request around quickly. We can always come back with number of people served and budget, which I suspect will be the next question.

Representative Peterson,

Thank you for reaching out to us. Our department does provide programs and resources to women who fit into these categories. We have programs from prenatal through early childhood, as well as programs for families who have children with disabilities.

We are happy to provide this information. For speed, we will simply provide the name of the program and a brief summary. That will allow us to get you the information quickly and then we can provide any additional information that may be helpful. Please let us know when you would like to receive the information. We will have our team begin working on it today.

Tracy,

The Republican women in the legislature have been discussing how we best support women prior to a pregnancy, through a pregnancy, and after they give birth. We were hoping you could help us highlight existing programs the state provides for these scenarios. We do not want to duplicate existing services and we want to amplify what already exists. If you also have observations about where you see gaps, we would welcome your thoughts. I have copied the Republican women, and would ask you to reply all.

Thank you, we appreciate your help.

HHS IEA - Office of Intergovernmental and External Affairs

Dear Emma,

FACT SHEET:
President Biden Announces Actions In Light of Today's Supreme Court Decision on Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization

Today, President Biden announced actions that his Administration is taking to protect women who will face the grave consequences of today's Supreme Court decision. This decision expressly took away a Constitutional right from the American people that it had recognized for nearly 50 years – a woman's right to choose, free from government interference.

This decision will have devastating consequences in the lives of women around the country.

The President made clear that the only way to secure a woman's right to choose is for Congress to restore the protections of Roe as federal law. Until then, he has announced two actions the Administration is taking to protect women.

Protecting the Right to Seek Medical Care

As the Attorney General made clear, women must remain free to travel safely to another state to seek the care they need.

A person has the right to travel between states for whatever reason they want – it is no one else's business – especially the government's. If a woman lives in a state that restricts abortion, the Supreme Court's decision does not prevent her from traveling from her home to a state that allows it.

If any state or local official tries to interfere with women exercising this basic right, the Biden Administration will fight that deeply un-American attack.

Protecting Access to Medication

The President directed the Secretary of Health and Human Services to protect women's access to critical medications for reproductive health care that are approved by the Food and Drug Administration—including essential preventive health care like contraception and medication abortion.

More than 20 years ago, the FDA approved mifepristone to safely end an early pregnancy; this drug is also commonly used to treat miscarriages. The American Medical Association and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists wrote to President Biden and Vice President Harris, asking the federal government to protect access to this care. In the face of threats from state officials saying they will try to ban or severely restrict access to medication for reproductive health care, the President directed the Secretary of Health and Human Services to identify all ways to ensure that mifepristone is as widely accessible as possible in light of the FDA's determination that the drug is safe and effective—including when prescribed through telehealth and sent by mail.

S.B. 174 Abortion Prohibition Amendments Now in Effect

SALT LAKE CITY – In accordance with state statute, the Legislative Branch's general counsel determined S.B. 174 Abortion Prohibition Amendments meets the legal requirements to take effect, following the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling regarding abortion.

In 2020, the Utah Legislature passed S.B. 174, prohibiting all elective abortions in Utah, except in rare circumstances involving rape, incest or medical emergency, contingent on the U.S. Supreme Court ruling.

On June 24, 2022, the U.S. Supreme Court issued a ruling that overturned Roe v. Wade, giving states the right to choose their abortion regulations. The U.S. Supreme Court's official opinion was sent to the Legislature's general counsel to determine if Utah's statute may take effect.

Members of the Legislative Management Committee (LMC) have been notified and the bill is now in effect. Utah code is updated to reflect the changes.

Attached is the official communication from the legislative general counsel informing LMC that the bill is in effect. The letter also addresses H.B. 166 (2019) Down Syndrome Nondiscrimination Abortion Act.

SUBJECT: A very late team update for (6.24.2022) Supreme Court ruling, meetMartha, learn about Recovery Services, plus some great awards and resourcesfor your mental health

Team update

Dear Team:

Today, the Supreme Court of the United States released a 213-page opinion overturning the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision. With its opinion today, the Supreme Court says that there is no longer a fundamental right to abortion. Decisions about what is and isn't allowed is now up to the states.

Quoting from the intro to the opinion: Abortion presents a profound moral issue on which Americans hold sharply conflicting views. Some believe fervently that a human person comes into being at conception and that abortion ends an innocent life. Others feel just as strongly that any regulation of abortion invades a woman's right to control her own body and prevents women from achieving full equality. Still others in a third group think that abortion should be allowed under some but not all circumstances, and those within this group hold a variety of views about the particular restrictions that should be imposed.

Abortion is by no means a simple issue. Please remember that your co-workers have a range of feelings and personal opinions about this. We need to be extra cautious in the workplace about expressing our personal opinions because there are differing beliefs. As a reminder, you may not use official state resources to express personal views on this decision.
Please be extra sensitive to the thoughts of others, including co-workers. We will continue to monitor employee and building safety.

In official capacities, if you are contacted about the law by partners or the public, please direct inquiries to DHHS@utah.gov. Until we can provide further clarification, please do not engage with the general public about how the law is going to be interpreted.

We are continuing to analyze the potential impacts from the Supreme Court's decision.

Here are the facts we know right now as they pertain to Utah and the Utah Department of Health and Human Services:

- In the 2020 General Session, the Utah Legislature passed SB 174, which we were notified this evening, is now in effect, following a report from legislative general counsel to the Legislative Management Committee.
  The bill lists some specific responsibilities of DHHS.

And now... the rest of this fabulous, and very late, email!

- Thank you to the 530+ of you who tuned in live to our All Hands Q&A on Thursday. If you missed it, you can watch the replay here.

- This week, we'd also like to make your acquaintance with the Office of Recovery Services, led by the trusty Liesa Stockdale. You might know them as the "child support office," but that's not all they do: https://youtu.be/Q2imWsc7btk

- Martha is on the move!

  We are so excited to host a traveling exhibit on Dr. Martha Hughes Cannon at our MASOB and Cannon Health buildings over the next 2 weeks. The exhibit starts this Friday, June 24, through June 30. Then, the exhibit will be moved to the Cannon Health building on July 1, which also happens to be the 165th anniversary of Dr. Cannon's birth AND our new agency's birthday!

  The exhibit will be at the Cannon building until July 8. We will also be holding a media event honoring the life of Dr. Cannon and celebrating the birth of our new agency on July 1 at the Utah Capitol. We are thrilled to begin this new journey with each of you and honor those who have come before us.

- Nate Checketts... thank you!

  With the upcoming merger, comes a handful of leadership changes, including a new role for Utah Department of Health Executive Director Nate Checketts. Under DHHS, Nate will become a department deputy director over our Health Administration section. Recently, Gov. Cox and Lt. Gov. Henderson, recognized Nate for his work to lead the pandemic response while maintaining effective leadership to oversee the management of the Department of Health's responsibilities. They said he is a model public servant reflecting the values of humility, selflessness and steady leadership. Nate is pictured here with his wife, Ginger.

- Congratulations are also in order to Caitlyn Jasumback and Rachelle Boulton! Both were recognized at the Council of State and Territorial Epidemiologists conference. Caitlyn was a finalist for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Award for Outstanding Epidemiology Practice in Addressing Racial and Ethnic Disparities for her work "Does Discrimination Influence Prevention Healthcare Among Under Served Population?" Rachelle was awarded CSTE's Distinguished Leader Award. This is a huge honor for both of them!! People from around the nation are envious of our data systems and informatics

- Mental and physical health
  During our all-hands call and during Gov. Cox's employee town hall this week, we received questions about the leave hours that are available for taking care of our mental health. Please take advantage of these benefits.

As of Jan. 1, 2022, Gov. Cox granted 4 hours of admin leave to address mental health issues, to be used during the calendar year.
Starting July 1, our department will make 4 hours available for the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 2023.
We have also worked with Blomquist Hale to hire an individual who can be available to be a mental health resource.
Keep in mind that you may also use 4 hours of leave for wellness and health checkups. Please talk to your supervisor before using this leave.
Tracy also reminded us that we can use any accumulated sick leave for mental or physical health time off.

- ECO Passes
  We're conscious of the cost of fuel. We make UTA ECO Passes available for free to all employees. If you apply, you need to use them at least 15 times per quarter. Please contact your finance officer to sign up. Please see our FAQ document to get started:ECO Pass FAQs

P.S.
Tracy's Open Door hours are most Fridays, for all staff from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. Please reach out to Trudy Ellis (trudyellis@utah.gov) to request time on Tracy's schedule.

Team update

Dear Team:

Today, the Supreme Court of the United States released a 213-page opinion overturning the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision. With its opinion today, the Supreme Court says that there is no longer a fundamental right to abortion. Decisions about what is and isn't allowed is now up to the states.

Quoting from the intro to the opinion: Abortion presents a profound moral issue on which Americans hold sharply conflicting views. Some believe fervently that a human person comes into being at conception and that abortion ends an innocent life. Others feel just as strongly that any regulation of abortion invades a woman's right to control her own body and prevents women from achieving full equality. Still others in a third group think that abortion should be allowed under some but not all circumstances, and those within this group hold a variety of views about the particular restrictions that should be imposed.

Abortion is by no means a simple issue. Please remember that your co-workers have a range of feelings and personal opinions about this. We need to be extra cautious in the workplace about expressing our personal opinions because there are differing beliefs. As a reminder, you may not use official state resources to express personal views on this decision.
Please be extra sensitive to the thoughts of others, including co-workers. We will continue to monitor employee and building safety.

In official capacities, if you are contacted about the law by partners or the public, please direct inquiries to DHHS@utah.gov. Until we can provide further clarification, please do not engage with the general public about how the law is going to be interpreted.

We are continuing to analyze the potential impacts from the Supreme Court's decision.

Here are the facts we know right now as they pertain to Utah and the Utah Department of Health and Human Services:

- In the 2020 General Session, the Utah Legislature passed SB 174, which we were notified this evening, is now in effect, following a report from legislative general counsel to the Legislative Management Committee.
  The bill lists some specific responsibilities of DHHS.

And now... the rest of this fabulous, and very late, email!

- Thank you to the 530+ of you who tuned in live to our All Hands Q&A on Thursday. If you missed it, you can watch the replay here.

- This week, we'd also like to make your acquaintance with the Office of Recovery Services, led by the trusty Liesa Stockdale. You might know them as the "child support office," but that's not all they do: https://youtu.be/Q2imWsc7btk

- Martha is on the move!

  We are so excited to host a traveling exhibit on Dr. Martha Hughes Cannon at our MASOB and Cannon Health buildings over the next 2 weeks. The exhibit starts this Friday, June 24, through June 30. Then, the exhibit will be moved to the Cannon Health building on July 1, which also happens to be the 165th anniversary of Dr. Cannon's birth AND our new agency's birthday!

  The exhibit will be at the Cannon building until July 8. We will also be holding a media event honoring the life of Dr. Cannon and celebrating the birth of our new agency on July 1 at the Utah Capitol. We are thrilled to begin this new journey with each of you and honor those who have come before us.

- Nate Checketts... thank you!

  With the upcoming merger, comes a handful of leadership changes, including a new role for Utah Department of Health Executive Director Nate Checketts. Under DHHS, Nate will become a department deputy director over our Health Administration section. Recently, Gov. Cox and Lt. Gov. Henderson, recognized Nate for his work to lead the pandemic response while maintaining effective leadership to oversee the management of the Department of Health's responsibilities. They said he is a model public servant reflecting the values of humility, selflessness and steady leadership. Nate is pictured here with his wife, Ginger.

- Congratulations are also in order to Caitlyn Jasumback and Rachelle Boulton! Both were recognized at the Council of State and Territorial Epidemiologists conference. Caitlyn was a finalist for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Award for Outstanding Epidemiology Practice in Addressing Racial and Ethnic Disparities for her work "Does Discrimination Influence Prevention Healthcare Among Under Served Population?" Rachelle was awarded CSTE's Distinguished Leader Award. This is a huge honor for both of them!! People from around the nation are envious of our data systems and informatics

[redacted] Fireworks, spotlighting service, and more

SALT LAKE CITY – In accordance with state statute, the Legislative Branch's general counsel determined S.B. 174 Abortion Prohibition Amendments meets the legal requirements to take effect, following the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling regarding abortion.

In 2020, the Utah Legislature passed S.B. 174, prohibiting all elective abortions in Utah, except in rare circumstances involving rape, incest or medical emergency, contingent on the U.S. Supreme Court ruling.

On June 24, 2022, the U.S. Supreme Court issued a ruling that overturned Roe v. Wade, giving states the right to choose their abortion regulations. The U.S. Supreme Court's official opinion was sent to the Legislature's general counsel to determine if Utah's statute may take effect.

Members of the Legislative Management Committee (LMC) have been notified and the bill is now in effect. Utah code is updated to reflect the changes.

Attached is the official communication from the legislative general counsel informing LMC that the bill is in effect. The letter also addresses H.B. 166 (2019) Down Syndrome Nondiscrimination Abortion Act.

Earlier today, the President and Attorney General made clear that the Administration will defend a woman's bedrock right to travel from her home to a state that allows abortion. In addition, the President directed the Department of Health and Human Services to ensure critical abortion medications are available to the fullest extent possible.

Hi Joe - thanks for sharing this. One thing that I think may draw additional questions is the concept of "severe brain abnormality" and just wonder if it might help to add that extra bit about it excluding such conditions as Down Syndrome... just a thought

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-06-27 10:48:03
Hi David, yes, all information was verified and approved.

Tonya, at this time, we would like to leave out information about Down syndrome. I think there's a time for it, but I think we would prefer to be reactive in case those questions come up.

David Litvack (DHS), 2022-06-27 10:51:17
Thank you Joe! I think it would be good to document the requests for information we are getting in case we get any questions from stakeholders on why we are putting this information out there now. I hope that makes sense.

Based on a Third Circuit Court of Appeals case that addresses the issue of the CMS Letters to State Medicaid Directors dated February 12, 1998, additional language has been added to the AG Draft Responses.

While we do not know how the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals would respond, the Third Circuit case is the only opinion addressing Tonya's question.

Nate and Tonya,

Based on a Third Circuit Court of Appeals case that addresses the issue of the CMS Letters to State Medicaid Directors dated February 12, 1998, additional language has been added to the AG Draft Responses.

Utah Department of Health & Human Services

Team update

Dear Team:

[redacted] Fireworks, spotlighting service, and more

Today, the Supreme Court of the United States released a 213-page opinion overturning the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision. With its opinion today, the Supreme Court says that there is no longer a fundamental right to abortion. Decisions about what is and isn't allowed is now up to the states.

Quoting from the intro to the opinion: Abortion presents a profound moral issue on which Americans hold sharply conflicting views. Some believe fervently that a human person comes into being at conception and that abortion ends an innocent life. Others feel just as strongly that any regulation of abortion invades a woman's right to control her own body and prevents women from achieving full equality. Still others in a third group think that abortion should be allowed under some but not all circumstances, and those within this group hold a variety of views about the particular restrictions that should be imposed.

Abortion is by no means a simple issue. Please remember that your co-workers have a range of feelings and personal opinions about this. We need to be extra cautious in the workplace about expressing our personal opinions because there are differing beliefs. As a reminder, you may not use official state resources to express personal views on this decision.
Please be extra sensitive to the thoughts of others, including co-workers. We will continue to monitor employee and building safety.

In official capacities, if you are contacted about the law by partners or the public, please direct inquiries to DHHS@utah.gov. Until we can provide further clarification, please do not engage with the general public about how the law is going to be interpreted.

We are continuing to analyze the potential impacts from the Supreme Court's decision.

Here are the facts we know right now as they pertain to Utah and the Utah Department of Health and Human Services:

- In the 2020 General Session, the Utah Legislature passed SB 174, which we were notified this evening, is now in effect, following a report from legislative general counsel to the Legislative Management Committee.
  The bill lists some specific responsibilities of DHHS.

And now... the rest of this fabulous, and very late, email!

- Thank you to the 530+ of you who tuned in live to our All Hands Q&A on Thursday. If you missed it, you can watch the replay here.

- This week, we'd also like to make your acquaintance with the Office of Recovery Services, led by the trusty Liesa Stockdale. You might know them as the "child support office," but that's not all they do: https://youtu.be/Q2imWsc7btk

- Martha is on the move!

  We are so excited to host a traveling exhibit on Dr. Martha Hughes Cannon at our MASOB and Cannon Health buildings over the next 2 weeks. The exhibit starts this Friday, June 24, through June 30. Then, the exhibit will be moved to the Cannon Health building on July 1, which also happens to be the 165th anniversary of Dr. Cannon's birth AND our new agency's birthday!

  The exhibit will be at the Cannon building until July 8. We will also be holding a media event honoring the life of Dr. Cannon and celebrating the birth of our new agency on July 1 at the Utah Capitol. We are thrilled to begin this new journey with each of you and honor those who have come before us.

- Nate Checketts... thank you!

[redacted]

With the upcoming merger, comes a handful of leadership changes, including a new role for Utah Department of Health Executive Director Nate Checketts. Under DHHS, Nate will become a department deputy director over our Health Administration section. Recently, Gov. Cox and Lt. Gov. Henderson, recognized Nate for his work to lead the pandemic response while maintaining effective leadership to oversee the management of the Department of Health's responsibilities. They said he is a model public servant reflecting the values of humility, selflessness and steady leadership. Nate is pictured here with his wife, Ginger.

- Congratulations are also in order to Caitlyn Jasumback and Rachelle Boulton! Both were recognized at the Council of State and Territorial Epidemiologists conference. Caitlyn was a finalist for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Award for Outstanding Epidemiology Practice in Addressing Racial and Ethnic Disparities for her work "Does Discrimination Influence Prevention Healthcare Among Under Served Population?" Rachelle was awarded CSTE's Distinguished Leader Award. This is a huge honor for both of them!! People from around the nation are envious of our data systems and informatics

- Mental and physical health
  During our all-hands call and during Gov. Cox's employee town hall this week, we received questions about the leave hours that are available for taking care of our mental health. Please take advantage of these benefits.
  As of Jan. 1, 2022, Gov. Cox granted 4 hours of admin leave to address mental health issues, to be used during the calendar year.
  Starting July 1, our department will make 4 hours available for the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 2023.
  We have also worked with Blomquist Hale to hire an individual who can be available to be a mental health resource.
  Keep in mind that you may also use 4 hours of leave for wellness and health checkups. Please talk to your supervisor before using this leave.
  Tracy also reminded us that we can use any accumulated sick leave for mental or physical health time off.

- ECO Passes
  We're conscious of the cost of fuel. We make UTA ECO Passes available for free to all employees. If you apply, you need to use them at least 15 times per quarter. Please contact your finance officer to sign up. Please see our FAQ document to get started:ECO Pass FAQs

Hello All,
Just sharing as an FYI - Brown & Peisch (B&P) is Utah Medicaid's external consulting legal firm. One of the things B&P do as part of the contract we have with them, is to periodically send out general legal "advisories" about Medicaid-related issues.

Attached is the advisory we received from B&P today regarding the SCOTUS decision impact on state Medicaid programs.

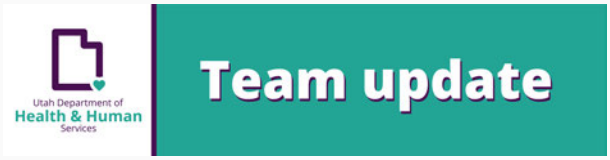
Subject: A very late team update for (6.24.2022) Supreme Court ruling, meet Martha, learn about Recovery Services, plus some great awards and resources for your mental health



Dear Team:

Today, the Supreme Court of the United States released a 213-page opinion overturning the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision. With its opinion today, the Supreme Court says that there is no longer a fundamental right to abortion. Decisions about what is and isn't allowed is now up to the states.

Quoting from the intro to the opinion: Abortion presents a profound moral issue on which Americans hold sharply conflicting views. Some believe fervently that a human person comes into being at conception and that abortion ends an innocent life. Others feel just as strongly that any regulation of abortion invades a woman's right to control her own body and prevents women from achieving full equality. Still others in a third group think that abortion should be allowed under some but not all circumstances, and those within this group hold a variety of views about the particular restrictions that should be imposed.

Abortion is by no means a simple issue. Please remember that your co-workers have a range of feelings and personal opinions about this. We need to be extra cautious in the workplace about expressing our personal opinions because there are differing beliefs. As a reminder, you may not use official state resources to express personal views on this decision.
Please be extra sensitive to the thoughts of others, including co-workers. We will continue to monitor employee and building safety.

In official capacities, if you are contacted about the law by partners or the public, please direct inquiries to DHHS@utah.gov. Until we can provide further clarification, please do not engage with the general public about how the law is going to be interpreted.

We are continuing to analyze the potential impacts from the Supreme Court's decision.

Here are the facts we know right now as they pertain to Utah and the Utah Department of Health and Human Services:

- In the 2020 General Session, the Utah Legislature passed SB 174, which we were notified this evening, is now in effect, following a report from legislative general counsel to the Legislative Management Committee.
  The bill lists some specific responsibilities of DHHS.

And now... the rest of this fabulous, and very late, email!

- Thank you to the 530+ of you who tuned in live to our All Hands Q&A on Thursday. If you missed it, you can watch the replay here.

- This week, we'd also like to make your acquaintance with the Office of Recovery Services, led by the trusty Liesa Stockdale. You might know them as the "child support office," but that's not all they do: https://youtu.be/Q2imWsc7btk

- Martha is on the move!

  We are so excited to host a traveling exhibit on Dr. Martha Hughes Cannon at our MASOB and Cannon Health buildings over the next 2 weeks. The exhibit starts this Friday, June 24, through June 30. Then, the exhibit will be moved to the Cannon Health building on July 1, which also happens to be the 165th anniversary of Dr. Cannon's birth AND our new agency's birthday!

  The exhibit will be at the Cannon building until July 8. We will also be holding a media event honoring the life of Dr. Cannon and celebrating the birth of our new agency on July 1 at the Utah Capitol. We are thrilled to begin this new journey with each of you and honor those who have come before us.

[redacted]

- Nate Checketts... thank you!

  With the upcoming merger, comes a handful of leadership changes, including a new role for Utah Department of Health Executive Director Nate Checketts. Under DHHS, Nate will become a department deputy director over our Health Administration section. Recently, Gov. Cox and Lt. Gov. Henderson, recognized Nate for his work to lead the pandemic response while maintaining effective leadership to oversee the management of the Department of Health's responsibilities. They said he is a model public servant reflecting the values of humility, selflessness and steady leadership. Nate is pictured here with his wife, Ginger.

- Congratulations are also in order to Caitlyn Jasumback and Rachelle Boulton! Both were recognized at the Council of State and Territorial Epidemiologists conference. Caitlyn was a finalist for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Award for Outstanding Epidemiology Practice in Addressing Racial and Ethnic Disparities for her work "Does Discrimination Influence Prevention Healthcare Among Under Served Population?" Rachelle was awarded CSTE's Distinguished Leader Award. This is a huge honor for both of them!! People from around the nation are envious of our data systems and informatics

- Mental and physical health

  During our all-hands call and during Gov. Cox's employee town hall this week, we received questions about the leave hours that are available for taking care of our mental health. Please take advantage of these benefits.

  - As of Jan. 1, 2022, Gov. Cox granted 4 hours of admin leave to address mental health issues, to be used during the calendar year.
  - Starting July 1, our department will make 4 hours available for the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 2023.
  - We have also worked with Blomquist Hale to hire an individual who can be available to be a mental health resource.
  - Keep in mind that you may also use 4 hours of leave for wellness and health checkups. Please talk to your supervisor before using this leave.
  - Tracy also reminded us that we can use any accumulated sick leave for mental or physical health time off.

- ECO Passes
  We're conscious of the cost of fuel. We make UTA ECO Passes available for free to all employees. If you apply, you need to use them at least 15 times per quarter. Please contact your finance officer to sign up. Please see our FAQ document to get started:ECO Pass FAQs

P.S.
Tracy's Open Door hours are most Fridays, for all staff from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. Please reach out to Trudy Ellis (trudyellis@utah.gov) to request time on Tracy's schedule.

SUBJECT: Some pro-life ideas to improve pregnancy related services.
FROM: Raymond Ward <rayward@le.utah.gov>
TO: "Tracy Gruber (DHS)" <tracygruber@utah.gov>, nate checketts<natechecketts@utah.gov>

Hi Tracy and Nate -

I hear from Neil Abercrombe that the Governor is interested in doing some things to provide better pregnancy related services to women in light of the trigger law.

It makes sense to me that from a pro-life viewpoint, we as a state ought to be interested in more than just eliminating abortion, but also in making sure that a pregnancy turns out well for her and her child.

If you guys in are sorting through possible policy recommendations, I wanted to put some of my top ones in your hopper for consideration. (And I will, of course, be bringing this up as best I can with my legislative colleagues as well)

Here are some things that I think would make things better for women and show actual action on the part of the state to being pro-life for women as they plan for and go through pregnancy and childbirth.

1. Raise the Income eligibility to be covered for pregnancy Medicaid to 200% of the poverty level. Currently women between 138 and 200 may really struggle to get coverage and pre-natal health care.
2. Provide 12 months of post partum coverage. The first year of the baby's life can be very chaotic. Getting health care for herself (including if desired to get back on highly effective birth control) can be impossible if we cut folks off of coverage 60 days after the birth of the child.
3. Cover family planning services up to 250% of the poverty level. This is similar to what was discussed a couple of years back in the legislature for the lower threshold of 100% of the poverty level. The stakes are much higher for a women if abortion is not an option for her, and she is not in a position to care for another child if she does get pregnant, so making it easier for lower income individuals to access birth control would be a good help to them.
4. Provide 12 months of continuous eligibility to children on Medicaid. We have discussed this several times in the legislature, but haven't every quite found the funding. Maybe now is the right time.
5. Apply for the CHIP "unborn child" option. This is for women who are not here legally, but their child when it is born, will be here legally, and entitled to Medicaid services. This allows for coverage during the pregnancy, so the baby has a better chance to be born health.
6. Set a minimum set of services that we want to have available across the state to women who have a substance use disorder. This could include peer support, or home visitation, or coverage of inpatient rehab. Currently the services of this nature that are available are very spotty across the state, mostly just available in Salt Lake County. This item - it we plan correctly - could be funded from the opioid settlement, and so wouldn't have to come from general fund.

I have attached a brief prepared by Dr. Jessica Sanders who is with the family planninc division at the University of Utah. (And I think she has presented at MCAC, so you might already have this.) In it you will see many of these same ideas, as well as some others.

I am not sure how this will play out, but I would love to be involved if we are discussing ways to make our healthcare services better for women surrounding pregnancy and childbirth related issues.

Thanks,

RW

This was the legislative request and yes, it should be as comprehensive as possible. I told Rep. Peterson we would have it for her early this week. She made the request on June 23 so this should be ready to be send soon. Thank you!

Tracy,

The Republican women in the legislature have been discussing how we best support women prior to a pregnancy, through a pregnancy, and after they give birth. We were hoping you could help us highlight existing programs the state provides for these scenarios. We do not want to duplicate existing services and we want to amplify what already exists. If you also have observations about where you see gaps, we would welcome your thoughts. I have copied the Republican women, and would ask you to reply all.

Thank you, we appreciate your help.

There are definitely resources missing, but I'm not sure what the goal of this document is. I know Marc you mentioned wanting to share this with legislators and constituents.

DCFS worked with 211 Utah to create a website with parent resources, including crisis nurseries, respite care, etc. https://uw.org/211/family-strengthening/

Was this a legislative request? I want to be able to efficiently support you all on Tuesday, especially with the deadline. Any clarity will help me put something together, and loop in DCFS if needed for assistance. Thank you!

One program I did not see listed is the Newborn Safe Haven Program. This program is currently run out of PAE. DCFS plays a significant role once a parent leaves a newborn at a hospital (or other designated location).

Do we want to add this program to the resource list?

[Heather - are you aware of any programs with the Division of Population Health that may need to be included here? I am not sure if Janae has already reviewed this document, but thought I would start by asking you]

Tracy,

The Republican women in the legislature have been discussing how we best support women prior to a pregnancy, through a pregnancy, and after they give birth. We were hoping you could help us highlight existing programs the state provides for these scenarios. We do not want to duplicate existing services and we want to amplify what already exists. If you also have observations about where you see gaps, we would welcome your thoughts. I have copied the Republican women, and would ask you to reply all.

Thank you, we appreciate your help.

There are definitely resources missing, but I'm not sure what the goal of this document is. I know Marc you mentioned wanting to share this with legislators and constituents.

DCFS worked with 211 Utah to create a website with parent resources, including crisis nurseries, respite care, etc. https://uw.org/211/family-strengthening/

Was this a legislative request? I want to be able to efficiently support you all on Tuesday, especially with the deadline. Any clarity will help me put something together, and loop in DCFS if needed for assistance. Thank you!

Sorry for the weekend e-mail, but I thought I better e-mail since your goal is to complete this document by COB Tuesday.

One program I did not see listed is the Newborn Safe Haven Program. This program is currently run out of PAE. DCFS plays a significant role once a parent leaves a newborn at a hospital (or other designated location).

Do we want to add this program to the resource list?

[Heather - are you aware of any programs with the Division of Population Health that may need to be included here? I am not sure if Janae has already reviewed this document, but thought I would start by asking you]

Thanks Nate,

Jen et al, I think we need to add, at a minimum, some information about the following items:

Medicaid - Early Periodic Screening Diagnosis and Treatment Program (EPSDT) - much of this coverage applies to pregnant women too.
Medicaid - Autism related services for EPSDT eligible individuals
Medicaid Home & Community Based Services (HCBS) waivers - Technology Dependent Waiver - Medically Complex Children's Waiver - DSPD waivers services children and youth with intellectual and developmental disabilities
Medicaid - School Based Services

Then - do we know if SUMH has contributed/would like to contribute anything to the document? I feel like there's been a fair amount of work about depression during and after pregnancy?

There may be other services or programs that should be added that haven't come to mind. Nate, are you okay if theyopulate the shared document they already have access to, and when they confirm their updates are complete, we can copy and paste to the other document?

David Litvack (DHS) Nate Checketts have joined the conversation, 2022-07-06 10:49:34

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-07-06 10:51:42
Media question: Regarding a medical professional who is supposed to verify that a rape has been reported to police before performing an abortion... Has there been any uniform, state-wide guidance issued to medical professionals and law enforcement from the department regarding how the verification process should work? The law currently in effect has this same requirement, KSL says. So they are moving forward with some reporting on this today.

David Litvack (DHS), 2022-07-06 10:59:31
Joe - I am not aware of any state-wide guidance. Would it be good to check with Dr. Hofmann, as well? Also, what current law is KSL referencing? Is it the law that just went into effect that was held-up in court?

Nate Checketts, 2022-07-06 11:10:03

[redacted]

DHHS does not have the statutory authority to provide direction to medical professionals or law enforcement regarding verification of rape before providing an abortion.

Nate Checketts, 2022-07-06 11:10:52
Possible that direction would come from DOPL and/or county prosecutors.

David Litvack (DHS), 2022-07-06 11:11:18
Great point Nate!

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-07-06 11:11:38
Thanks, Nate. But like David said, this requirement to verify isn't currently in state law, is it?

Nate Checketts, 2022-07-06 11:12:06
It's on hold for the two weeks

Nate Checketts, 2022-07-06 11:13:05
The law has been passed and legislative counsel has determined the law has been triggered. However, the judge has stayed the law for two weeks.

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-07-06 11:17:15
But that requirement wasn't in any previous abortion law, right?

Nate Checketts, 2022-07-06 11:20:34
Looks like there was some reporting language already in 76-7-331 but we would want AGs to check before saying something definitive

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-07-06 11:26:53
Thanks, Nate.

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-07-06 11:27:08
Definitely some different wording.

David Litvack (DHS), 2022-07-06 11:29:28
That is what I am looking at now; I agree with Nate, it does look like there is a current requirement for the physician (76-7-302 also) to verify a rape has been reported to law enforcement, but I am not finding any language about the how or if that is required to be reported to DHHS. Physicians are currently required to report to DHHS the "reason" for the abortion, but that does not specifically include verification that a rape has been reported to law enforcement.

David Litvack (DHS), 2022-07-06 11:29:43
I agree with Nate C's guidance to engage AGs office

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-07-06 14:17:25
I just chatted with Stephanie. [redacted]

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-07-06 14:19:14
This is basically what Stephanie said.

Joe Dougherty DHS, 2022-07-06 14:26:58
Just wanted you to be aware that you were on the same legal page!

Thank you for reaching out about your concerns. We appreciate your dedication as an advocate for your patients.

The Utah Department of Health and Human Services does not collect information about side effects of vaccines, instead information related to adverse events after vaccination is collected by VAERS (Vaccine Adverse Events Reporting System), which is managed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and Food and Drug Administration (FDA). The CDC website provides information about the most commonly observed side effects https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/vaccines/expect/after.html. The vast majority of people have either no or very mild symptoms post vaccine. This data showed that the Johnson and Johnson COVID-19 vaccine was associated with a slight increase in myocarditis in young men. Because of this data CDC no longer recommends Johnson and Johnson as the first line vaccine. You will find ANY significant side effect is exceedingly rare, with significant problems only occurring in a few people out of millions who received the vaccine.

It is the responsibility of the clinician to discuss the risk and benefits of any medical action with their patient, not just for COVID vaccines but for any procedure or treatment, and is not tracked by DHHS. There are no specific trainings or consent forms from DHHS. However, numerous training opportunities and informational sessions regarding the COVID-19 vaccine are offered by various groups are shared for those interested on our provider listserv email.

The overwhelming evidence shows that the COVID-19 vaccines are safe for all people unless they have a specific allergy to one of the components. This includes pregnant women and their fetuses. In contrast, the risk of COVID-19 infection is significant. We encourage you to work with your patients find which vaccine is right for them. The CDC provides information for people with specific medical problems https://www.cdc.gov/coronavirus/2019-ncov/vaccines/recommendations/specific-groups.html.

Thank you for your work and concern.

I have also been asked to help patients who have adverse reactions which are and sometimes are not acknowledged by their physicians. This impacts the ability to achieve effective care.

Does Utah have detailed data on adverse events happening locally? How often is the data on events and trends updated? Where can I find a detailed and updated consent form? Does the Health Department have a training program for medical professionals where they learn how to handle expected adverse events and get patients the help they need? How is the Health Department monitoring informed consent? What honest information regarding the pros and cons of these shots are being provided to the public as has been done with other pharmaceutical products?

Thank you for your time and attention to this matter.

A Message from Marc Harrison, MD on the Recent Supreme Court Decision

As we head into the holiday weekend, I would like to address the recent United States Supreme Court decision that ultimately overturned Roe v. Wade. The decision further empowers state legislatures to make their own laws governing pregnancy termination. This is already leading to new state laws across the country that will set new and different rules regarding abortion.

It's an issue that is deeply personal to many Americans, with passionate sentiments on all sides. I personally feel saddened by the division we're seeing play out on the news and in social media. Intermountain cannot resolve the deep cultural divide on this issue. But I ask that all caregivers continue to set the standard of civility and mutual understanding-recognizing and respecting we all have different personal opinions about this issue.

For health systems like ours, there's added confusion as to what it all means for our patients, our caregivers, and our communities. I'd like to address this uncertainty. Earlier this week, Intermountain's Chief Clinical Officer Dr. JP Valin provided an update on what this ruling means for caregivers who live in Idaho and Utah where new laws are taking effect. We will continue to be transparent and provide you with as much clarity as possible during this uncertain transition to a state-based approach to abortion laws.

For caregivers who specifically practice in the area of women's health, I've heard from many of you who are concerned about your potential legal liability as new state rules are enacted. As you all know, Intermountain has not performed elective abortions, yet pregnancy terminations have been performed for a host of clinical reasons. There are other clinical practices-around miscarriages, for example-where caregivers may be understandably confused as new laws are implemented. In addition to regularly informing you of these new policies, Intermountain will always support every caregiver who follows the law and practices evidence-based medicine.

What about our role in public policy making? Just as we have before, we will be passionate advocates for all our caregivers. In this case, especially those who practice in the area of women's health. This will include working with relevant authorities, including prosecutors and elected officials, in ensuring that as new changes are considered, they don't lead to unintended consequences that put our caregivers or patients at risk.

In conclusion, I want to promise you the following: We will always follow the law. We will always keep you informed. We will always have your back. This approach will continue to empower us to fulfill our mission of helping people live the healthiest lives possible.

Thank you for all you do for our patients. And please have a safe and fun holiday weekend.

- Washington – CMS approved Washington state's extension of Medicaid and CHIP coverage for 12 months after pregnancy under ARPA. As a result, up to an additional 12,000 people annually will now have access to Medicaid or CHIP coverage for a full year after pregnancy. With this approval, an estimated 265,000 Americans annually in 15 states and D.C. have gained access to 12 months of postpartum coverage through ARPA. As a reminder, SHVS published an issue brief that examines the ARPA postpartum coverage extension.

Thank you for the email and I'm sorry for the delayed response.

My preference would be for us to have one representative from DHHS. Do we know if this is a statutory requirement that DOH and DHS have a representative? If it's statutory, we need to let Marc Watterson (cc'd) know so that we can have the code changed to only specify the DHHS ED or designee. I don't think we need two representatives. Craig can represent the department as my designee. However, if the code requires one from DOH and one from DHS, Craig can serve as well as Al.

Since this overlaps with the Healthcare Administration Section, I cc'd Nate.

Please let me know what we find out and how I can support. I think someone needs to get in touch with USBE as soon as possible to let them know that we are comfortable with Craig serving while we try to sort out the legal requirements.

Hi Tracy!

I received this request from USBE. The executive director of the UDOH needs to either attend or designate someone to attend.

Craig PoVey, who manages the SHARP survey, has agreed to attend to represent DHS when we were previously split. I would recommend Leah Colburn from the OSUMH also attend as she supports youth and parents substance abuse programs. I'm happy to respond, but wanted to forward this along. I'm not sure if deputy directors wanted to attend, or if you wanted to keep it at the program level.

Hi Brook -

I am reaching out to you for help because we have been attempting to contact someone from DOH to be a part of the Underage Drinking Prevention Program Advisory Council as described in 53G-10-406(5). The statute requires USBE to include "the executive director of the Department of Health or the executive director's designee" as a part of the council. I am wondering if you can help us identify who at DHHS may be able to fulfill this requirement for us and help us contact them.

By way of background and context, the Botvin LifeSkills Training program was selected as the approved Underage Drinking and Substance Abuse Prevention program, and since that five-year contract will end June 30, 2023, the Utah State Board of Education is getting ready to put out another Request for Proposals (RFP). In preparation for the RFP process, we would like to bring the Underage Drinking Prevention Program Advisory Council together this summer so we can gather their input for the RFP.

USBE's Substance Use Prevention Specialist, Clarissa Stebbing (who is cc'd on this email), has reached out several times to different people in DOH trying to contact someone to fulfill this requirement and has not received any responses. She is trying to get the council put together so that she can get a summer meeting on the council members' schedules and move forward with the new RFP. We would like to be able to identify who is going to be on the council by the end of the week, if possible.

We are also wondering, now that UDOH and DHS have merged, do you think we still need to have someone who was part of UDOH as a participant on the council or can Craig Povey (who has already agreed to participate) serve as the representative for both roles?

Feel free to contact us with any questions or forward this email to someone who may be more appropriate to help us with this. I am just not sure who else to reach out to at this point. I would generally reach out to the DHS Education Liaison, but I have heard that the person that was formerly in that position has since left. Thanks in advance for any help you can provide.

Statue actually requires that we have four representatives on the Council:

(b)the executive director of the Department of Health or the executive director's designee;
(c)the director of the Division of Substance Abuse and Mental Health or the director's designee;
(d)the director of the Division of Child and Family Services or the director's designee;
(e)the director of the Division of Juvenile Justice Services or the director's designee;

It appears that the statute ((5)(a-g)) purposefully created the Advisory Council in a way that had a majority of the members with expertise in Underage Drinking and Substance Abuse Prevention. If we were to consolidate these four into just one, it would disrupt the make-up of the body and leave Superintendents and State School Board members without the full scope of subject matter experts statute tries to create.

I have added David and Heather to this thread to get their thoughts. It seems like Al's group has focused specifically on preventing maternal alcohol consumption. I'm not sure if that is the best fit as the aim of this Advisory Council is to help give input as the Program is taught to kids three different times:

- 4th or 5th grade
- 7th or 8th grade
- 9th or 10th grade

I'll let David and Heather chime in to see if Al or another staff from the "health prevention" side might be a best fit as the Executive Director's designee.
